HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 20, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MCMILLAN—REFERENCE TO REMARK IN DEBATE BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In committee on Wednesday I claimed that bonds were advertised in units of up to $1 million, and the Minister of Finance said, "How ridiculous can you become?" I have here a pamphlet from the Bank of Canada, authorized by the Minister of Finance, indicating that these bonds were available in units of up to $1 million.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, in referring to this matter of the issuance of bonds in denominations of $1 million as well as smaller denominations, used this to base a statement that the government was interested in obtaining borrowings from big interests. The fact is that the denominations in which the last bonds were issued are precisely the denominations which have prevailed in government issues for some years. It suits the convenience of some purchasers of bonds—insurance companies, banks and others—to take them in these larger denominations; but the denominations are precisely those which have prevailed for some years. There are smaller denominations as well as the larger ones, and we are glad to have the opportunity of doing business with everybody who wishes to buy Dominion of Canada bonds on the terms on which they are offered. There is no justification whatever for the statement made by the hon. member that this was an attempt to tailor this issue to larger interests.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will be in a position soon to announce the appointment of a commissioner of the R.C.M.P., and whether he can give the house an assurance that the appointment will be made from within the force?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that question should be appropriately asked of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have had indications of concern about this matter from other hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Athabasca. In reply I should say that no consideration whatsoever has been given, or is being given, to the appointment of someone from outside the force as commissioner; no consideration whatsoever. We expect in the immediate future to be making a recommendation for the appointment of a commissioner from within the R.C.M. police, and as soon as the recommendation has been dealt with an appropriate announcement will be made.

Mr. Pearson: The reason I asked the question of the Prime Minister was that the commissioner, as I understood it, has the status of a deputy minister; that therefore the appointment was to be made by order in council on the recommendation of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can understand that, but this matter comes particularly under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice, and I know the Leader of the Opposition will be very pleased at the answer which represents the viewpoint of the government.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF U.K. STATESMEN—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER CONSULTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell the house whether, following the important visit of Prime Minister Macmillan and Mr. Lloyd to the United States, arrangements have been made with the Canadian government for further consultations on the ministerial level, or what steps will be taken for further consultation on these very important questions?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the moment I have nothing to report in that connection. I outlined last evening something of the general situation. Of course this is a matter which is constantly before us, and we intend to exert every influence to the end that tensions may be relieved or diminished.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Argue: I wonder if the Prime Minister can say whether a report will be made to him following these important discussions, in any event?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is continued communication, Mr. Speaker, and this government is kept fully advised as to those things which are happening which are of world interest and are known to other allied countries.

TRADE

OIL—REPORTED CANADIAN EXEMPTION FROM U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is not now in a position to say that there was no foundation in fact for the story suggested the day before yesterday, and referred to by the Leader of the Opposition by way of interrogation, to the effect that the United States government was going to relax its mandatory curbs on Canadian oil imports on the ground of national security? Is it not a fact that there is now found to be no foundation for the story whatsoever?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can find no foundation in fact for the story.

SALT FISH—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position today to give the statement on salt fish marketing which he promised would be given before the Easter recess?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is a repetition of a question which was asked me on March 18, when I gave an assurance that I would make a statement on this matter before the house rises for the Easter recess.

Mr. Pickersgill: When does the minister propose to make it?

Mr. Fulton: Before the Easter recess.

AIR TRANSPORT

AUSTRALIA—STATEMENT RESPECTING RENEWAL OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last evening the hon. member for Laurier directed a question to me which will be found on page 2050 of Hansard. The question was as follows:

I should like to know if arrangements have been made or are being made to renew the commonwealth air agreement. The Prime Minister will probably remember that the late secretary of state for external affairs on two occasions said that the air agreement had been extended first to February 6 and later to March 11.

On February 6 and February 17 the house was informed that Canada was pressing for a continuation of air services between Australia and Canada which were endangered by technical considerations concerning the frequency and capacity of flights. Full discussion of the present bilateral air agreement will take place in Australia early in April, and my hope is that the Australian government, like the Canadian government, desires to maintain and perhaps extend this tangible and mutually beneficial link between the two countries. Meanwhile authority has been granted to extend the temporary permits for weekly flights while discussions take place.

LIVESTOCK

ONTARIO—COMPENSATION FOR ANIMALS LOST THROUGH RABIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister noticed in this morning's press a statement emanating from Toronto with respect to compensation for animals lost through rabies? If so, would the minister evaluate these reports and perhaps give the house any further information he has concerning this matter?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I saw this statement, and I may say that we have been carrying on negotiations with the Ontario department of agriculture with regard to working out a joint dominion, provincial and municipal form of assistance to those who have lost animals as a result of rabies. The federal Department of Agriculture will share in a county-provincial program to indemnify Ontario farmers who suffer heavy livestock losses from such epidemics. Other provinces which may wish to enter into a similar scheme would, of course, be eligible.

Responsibility for initiating the plan will rest with the county authorities. They will value the animals, pay the owners, and then will be eligible for reimbursement to the extent of 80 per cent of the amount paid, which will be shared equally by the province and the federal government. In short, the cost will be shared 20 per cent by the county, 40 per cent by the province and 40 per cent by the federal government.

Compensation will be paid on animals certified by federal veterinarians as having died from rabies on or after April 1, 1958. Maximum values for compensation purposes will be $250 for cattle, $100 for horses, and $40 for sheep, swine and goats. The livestock toll recorded from April 1, 1958, to February 28 this year included 1,149 cattle, 48 horses, 122 sheep, 19 hogs and 1 goat.

The indemnification program is not being undertaken as a disease control measure under the provisions of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. The arrangements will, however, help to offset heavy economic losses, and encourage farmers to report suspected rabies infection. This in turn will aid federal veterinarians in locating disease outbreaks and instituting control measures.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SIX NATIONS RESERVE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): In view of recent press reports I wonder whether the hon. lady, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, could report to the house on the peace negotiations she has been carrying on with the Six Nations Indians.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I think they were faithfully reported in the press. It is my hope that the matter has now been settled amicably. I cannot make any report with regard to prosecutions that are under way because, as the hon. member knows, they are being handled this morning in Brantford, but it is our expectation that these also will be handled in a manner that will meet with the approval of those concerned. The elected council will be meeting shortly and we will have a report from them, but my understanding of the situation is that all is now quiet on the Six Nations reserve.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. lady on her capacity to make peace, but I was a little disturbed and I think perhaps other hon. members were disturbed by a report that I heard about which I should like to ask the hon. lady, to the effect that she has directed the magistrate's court to give suspended sentences. I am sure the hon. lady would like an opportunity to deny that report.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, at no time did I see or hear any such report, and I would never have the temerity at any time to interfere with the courts. I did agree to suggest to the Minister of Justice that he might care to handle the matter in whatever manner was appropriate within his own department.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I should ask the hon. lady if she would not like an opportunity to correct the reports that were broadcast on the C.B.C. this morning.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to correct something that I have not seen nor heard.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES ON TREASURY BILLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement yesterday that our government's treasury bills are bearing an all-time high interest rate, namely 4.22 per cent, can the minister explain the reason for the growing spread between interest rates on United States and Canadian treasury bills, and is the government contemplating any action to reduce our bank rediscount rate so as to aid economic recovery and provide employment?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a very large order the hon. member is proposing. I do not see how it could possibly be dealt with in a short reply and I suggest that it be reserved for a more appropriate occasion.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order you have raised, I would suggest that this question about central bank rediscount rates is an important question and one that should be raised in the house. In addition to that, over a period of many years the Minister of Finance himself very frequently raised this very important question. While it may be true that the phrasing should have been more direct, that is for Your Honour to decide, but with great deference I would submit that the subject matter of the question is very much in order.

Mr. Speaker: I am dealing only with the question which was proposed. It was a series of questions, bringing in unemployment as well as interest rates, and I do not see that I could really allow that question to proceed as phrased.

Mr. Regier: In that case, Mr. Speaker, may I reword what I am after. I would ask the minister if the government is contemplating any moves that will halt our rapidly rising interest rates on government treasury bills.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member on reflection will realize that this is not the sort of matter that is dealt with on the orders of the day. So far as measures are concerned that would be of interest to people operating in the money markets, I think he will appreciate that we do not give out that kind of information publicly. As to matters pertaining to government policy, those will be made known to the house on the proper occasion.

INQUIRY AS TO AUTHORITY REQUIRED FOR BILINGUAL DOCUMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Secretary of State a question?

Could the Secretary of State tell this house if cabinet approval was required for the printing of bilingual House of Commons letterheads for the use of hon. members?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Racine: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question.

Is the issue of negotiable government instruments subject to the approval of the cabinet and of parliament?

Mr. Courtemanche: The answer is yes.

Mr. Caron: Oh no, it is not.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Secretary of State a question arising from the answer he gave a moment ago. Could he tell us if special legislation was needed for the issue of bilingual stamps, under Mr. Veniot, and the issue of bilingual money under the Mackenzie King administration?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member is asking questions about a matter on the order paper which is before the house for determination.

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Did he refer to bilingual stamps or bilingual cheques?

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, an answer was given to a question a while ago—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to address himself to the difficulty which I raised, namely that this matter is on the order paper for determination by the house.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. The question which the hon. member asked is not one which is now on the order paper. He was directing his question to bilingual stamps and bilingual money, and it was in reply to a question answered already by the Secretary of State. I therefore submit with deference that his question is in order.

Mr. Speaker: Then I withdraw the objection I raised. I thought the translation was perhaps faulty in referring to bilingual stamps, because I understand we have bilingual stamps.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point. In view of the earlier answer by the hon. Secretary of State, I wanted to know from him, because he has the relevant records on hand, if special legislation was needed for the issue of bilingual stamps under Mr. Veniot, and the issue of bilingual money under the Mackenzie King administration.

Some hon. Members: Under the Bennett government.

Mr. Caron: Under the Bennett administration there were two issues of coins, one in French and the other in English.

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall check the facts and inform the hon. member later.

AGRICULTURE

MAPLE PRODUCTS—INQUIRY AS TO STABILIZATION MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question.

Has the minister considered the possibility of stabilizing maple product prices?

(Text):

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question, and in reply would say that in 1958 there were extensive discussions between the groups producing maple sugar and maple products and the stabilization board. As a result of those discussions it was agreed that the Agricultural Products Co-Operative Marketing Act provided the most appropriate basis for dealing with marketing problems in the Quebec maple products industry, rather than putting those products under price supports under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED INTENTION OF FIREMEN TO STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he is aware of the press report this morning that the Canadian National Railways firemen intend to strike? If so, has he any comment to make on it?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I saw the report, Mr. Speaker, and I have no comment to make on it.

TORONTO—REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FREIGHT MARSHALLING YARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Cathers (York North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The Toronto press of March 12 carried stories of Canadian National plans for the creation of a large freight marshalling yard and new railway lines required to give access to this yard. Is the minister in a position to make a statement with regard to these proposals, and can he advise the house respecting the improvement in commuter services which can be made when these facilities have been completed?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. For some time now the Canadian National Railways has been studying its freight handling facilities serving metropolitan Toronto, and has included in its 1959 capital budget an item covering the acquisition of land required for the construction of a large marshalling yard in the township of Vaughan, together with necessary connecting trackage. Parliament in due course will be asked to pass enabling legislation.

With regard to commuter service, when the new yard and access lines have been built the present congestion in the approaches to the terminal area will be lessened, which should make physically possible additional commuter operations. The management of the railway has already initiated preliminary studies in anticipation of an approach on behalf of the Toronto area commuters, and is prepared to discuss with the authorities concerned the question of increasing its commuter operations in the greater Toronto area on the understanding that the railway will be able to recover from fares and otherwise the full costs of such services.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): May I ask a supplementary question. Did I understand the minister to say in his statement that if the municipalities concerned offered to subsidize this operation the railway would inaugurate additional commuter services?

Mr. Hees: That is correct.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY LIEUT. GEN. GRAHAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister read the news report in the Regina Leader-Post, dated March 16, headed "No Defence Is Claimed". I raise this question because it is a most disturbing news report. It states in part:

> The report, prepared by Lieutenant General Howard Graham, is also said to claim that the Canadian civil defence organization, for practical purposes, is non-existent.

Would the minister inform the house if there is a basis in fact for this news report?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not actually seen the news report referred to, but I can assure the hon. member that there is no basis in fact for such a statement.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a supplementary question, arising out of that posed by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Can the minister confirm whether or not it is true that part of the functions of civil defence, now under his authority, are to be transferred to the office of the privy council, and certain other portions of his responsibilities to the Minister of National Defence?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question on Wednesday last I said that a statement would be made in the house either by the end of this week or, at the very latest, in the first part of next week.

WATER RESOURCES

FRASER RIVER BOARD—INQUIRY AS TO REAPPOINTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and I regret that I was not able to give him notice of it. I wonder if the minister is able to indicate whether the Fraser river board will be reappointed so that it may continue its existence and activities beyond the end of this month which, under present arrangements, is the date upon which the board must cease to function.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): This matter is under discussion and negotiation between the two governments, and when this process has been completed an announcement will be made.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the minister has any hope that the negotiations or discussions will be completed before the end of this month. Could he give any indication of that?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, the minister is hoping that the negotiations can be completed by the end of this month.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—INQUIRY AS TO VISIT BY MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I may ask the minister from Newfoundland whether he was invited by the mayor of Bell Island to visit Newfoundland to discuss the impending lay-offs in the iron mines, and if so what his intentions are in this regard.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I did receive an invitation from the mayor of Bell Island, after he had thanked me for the services I had already given in connection with the matter. I might say that if the ferries are operating between Portugal Cove and Bell Island I intend to visit there during the Easter recess.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a supplementary question, may I ask the minister whether the lay-offs, which I believe were scheduled to take place tomorrow or the next day, are going to take place, or whether the minister has been successful in having them postponed?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure under what heading of the minister's responsibility this comes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might clarify it. The minister said he had received thanks from the mayor of Bell Island for services he had rendered. I was seeking to find out what the services were.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): If I may be permitted to reply, the mines are not going to close tomorrow.

[Mr. Howard.]

A. V. ROE COMPANY

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if the Prime Minister could bring the house up to date as to what progress has been made in obtaining additional contracts for the A. V. Roe industry, and more particularly what success he has encountered in doing those things which would provide more employment for the unemployed persons?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this is one of those questions that are totally inappropriate on the orders of the day.

Mr. Argue: I would ask the Prime Minister if he does not think the widespread unemployment in the Avro industry is an important matter upon which to rise on orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the impropriety of asking a question that is inappropriate on orders of the day justifies the kind of observation he has made.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Argue: I would remind the Prime Minister that the Minister of Finance, in the Prime Minister's absence on February 27, made a comprehensive statement of actions the government was taking with regard to unemployment in this industry. I suggest it is most appropriate to ask whether or not any further developments have taken place since that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is a question that is proper, and I have no hesitation in saying there has been further and continued consultation in respect of this matter, and there has been a canvass made with the principals of the company for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not available contracts might be assured to that company, and that is the position of affairs. The company is engaged in endeavouring to secure contracts which would be available or should be available to that company if it is able to meet the competition that exists.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING BETWEEN EMPLOYEES AND CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Prime Minister. I think last week he promised me an answer as far as the civil service commission was concerned and as to the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General in connection with the mail carriers. As the newspaper says today, there will be a large meeting again in connection with the civil service commission and the salaries of the postal employees. Possibly the Prime Minister could give us an answer as to who is going to see about the matter of those grievances, and who is going to try to settle them before it is too late.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I thank my hon. friend for the very courteous way in which he has presented a question that I should have answered the other day. However, I will let him have an answer on Monday, and I think that will satisfy him.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN INTERESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is a repetition of a question I asked on February 13. The fact that he took it as notice and has not answered it might indicate that it was not urgent. However, it dealt with shipping and trade and the question of United States subsidization of ships calling at Canadian ports in this coming season. The season is very close to us. Not only one line but another line is being considered in the United States for subsidization. I would ask the minister whether any consideration has been given to protecting Canadian shipping interests against this particular kind of subsidized competition.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will look back at the question that was put forward on February 13. I think the matter properly lies with another department, but we will give this matter consideration.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR APPOINTMENT OF JUDICIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICERS, ETC.—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-26, to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

The Chairman: The house in committee of supply on further supplementary estimates: Department of Labour, vote 751, found at page 5 of further supplementary estimates, the details on page 19. Shall vote 751 carry?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that we revert to vote No. 750, which was the one allowed to stand last night.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Special services—

750. To provide for expenses of the special services branch including expenses for the promotion of a program for combating seasonal unemployment, the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries and assistance to the provinces under agreements entered into with the provinces by the Minister of Labour with the approval of the governor in council, and the movement, reception, supervision and welfare of workers from outside Canada to work on farms and other essential employment where Canadian labour is not available to meet the need—further amount required, $100,000.

The Chairman: Shall vote 750 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister going to give the answers now?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I was asked questions last night concerning expenditures and commitments to date in connection with the publicity program undertaken with a view to assisting in meeting the problem of seasonal unemployment in the winter, in the light of recommendations made last summer by the national winter employment conference which was convened in Ottawa. The information as to expenditures and commitments to date is as follows. The amount actually expended to March 20 is $127,579.36. That amount was devoted to the following purposes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister just tell us what was the total of the vote?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The total amount proposed for the item will be $297,500. I have indicated that of that sum the amount expended to March 20 is $127,579.36. The balance required to March 31 is estimated at $169,920.64. I shall now give the breakdown of the amount actually expended to March 20.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am trying to get these figures accurately. If the minister would not mind an interruption, I should like to get confirmations of my understanding. He said that $127,000 had been spent.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: And that the vote was $297,500?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister tell us how much was spent out of the unforeseen vote?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I propose to do that. I am dealing now with the amount actually expended: newspaper publicity, $29,350.40; radio, $33,860.02; television, $31,507.64; films, $250; posters, streamers, stuffers, postal dies, recording tapes, etc., $32,611.36, making a total of $127,579.36. The commitments to the end of this month—that is the end of the fiscal year—including those sums actually expended amount to $295,000 at this present time. That sum is divided as follows: newspaper publicity, $121,000; radio, $38,500; television, $33,500; films, $8,000, and posters, streamers, stuffers, postal dies, recording tapes, advertising production costs, $94,000, making a total of $295,000.

This total of $297,500 estimated to be required to March 31 is proposed to be provided as follows. The sum of $62,300 was transferred within this item from surpluses from other allotments within the scope of the vote at the last session. That has left actual requirements of $235,200. I pointed out last night that in the main estimates an aggregate of $140,200 had been provided, and we are now proposing to add $95,000 to this sum by the present item.

The remaining question was as to the advertising agency which had been engaged for this purpose. That agency is the McKim agency of Toronto, and the expenditures to March 20 are $95,140.06 for their work in relation to the program. The expenditures for the publicity undertaken and arranged by them and the commitments to March 31 through that agency will amount to $242,500. The balance of the proposed aggregate appropriation is being spent by the department itself on outlays through the queen's printer, unemployment insurance offices, and media of that nature.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister tell me at what date the department first engaged the services of the McKim agency?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I cannot give my hon. friend the date on which they were retained for this particular purpose, but I will find out and communicate with him.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, may I ask what is the percentage on which McKim is working on this particular contract?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think my hon. friend is aware that advertising agencies do not make any charge or fee direct to the person who engages their services. In all these cases their services are recompensed by arrangements which they make with the medium with which they deal. There is a standard percentage, but that is no part of any agreement which the government has made with the agency.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I feel that this is a fundamental part of the cost. I understand that there are different rates not only for a single campaign but for different media within the campaign, and I am wondering whether any consideration has ever been given to checking or establishing a set rate for government work in that regard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government does not pay any fee for this service. It is standard practice in the advertising business, I am informed, that the regular charges are made by the various publicity media, in this case to the government, and the advertising agency simply collects its fee by arrangement with those who are proprietors of the media themselves.

Mr. Benidickson: Just to clarify this point, Mr. Chairman, if the minister would inform me, I understood he said that the figure of $295,000 would cover not only commitments but expenditures made in the past, and commitments to March 31 of course, under the items of newspapers, radio, TV, films, posters, and so on. Is that correct?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. The figure of $295,000 represents commitments made to March 31, including expenditures already made. This will leave $2,500 out of the $297,500 aggregate to take care of any possible additional commitments that might be made between now and the end of the month. But at the present time it would appear that the $295,000 will cover all commitments up to March 31 which have been entered into at this time.

Mr. Benidickson: The detail in the main estimates at page 258 presented the original forecast for newspaper, radio, film and other publicity as $140,200. The $295,000 which we refer to will be made up of this $140,200 plus the portion for that item which comes in this item for $100,000. Is that correct?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is the sum of $95,000 in this item for that purpose.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, $95,000 plus certain surplus funds which were not used for other functions within the item?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Benidickson: That being so, I did not understand when the minister said that under this item $95,000 had already been paid for services which were handled by the McKim agency. I took him to say that there would be additional commitments to be paid to this agency. Did I get him right that it was $242,000, or was it $142,000?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. The commitments through the McKim firm to March 31 of $242,500 of course include the expenditure already made through that firm to March 20 of $95,140.06.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister could tell us if all the moneys being spent or committed for newspaper advertising is spent in regard to newspapers printed in either the English or French languages?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not know that I quite follow my hon. friend's question. Is he asking me if it is all spent on newspapers which—

Mr. Hellyer: If I may put it another way, is any part of it being spent in other than English or French language newspapers?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will have to make inquiries about that. At the moment I do not think I can tell my hon. friend whether this type of advertising is confined to the larger dailies, which would mean English and French language newspapers, or whether any part of it has gone to the so-called ethnic press; but I will be glad to make inquiries about that and inform my hon. friend.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a rather hypothetical question and would like an opinion from the minister. I think it will be worth while to have some idea of the per capita cost of getting men back to work through such a campaign. If we accept the figure given I believe by the hon. member for Essex East, the winter work program has managed to employ approximately 30,000 people this winter. If the cost involved in putting 30,000 people to work is approximately $295,000, we have an approximate per capita cost of around $10 for each man put back to work under this winter work program.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My hon. friend very properly said his question was a hypothetical one, and I think it illustrates the danger of attempting to ask or deal with hypothetical questions. We are not dealing here with the government's own winter work program. We are dealing here with a publicity program that was undertaken by the government at the request of the national conference last summer, which included groups of employees, groups of employers and others, with a view to bringing home to Canadians in all walks of life the fact that there is work which can be done in the winter months, thus providing employment. It was hoped that people would address themselves to the desirability, and very often the advantages, of having work done in the winter rather than in the seasons when in times past it has been more customary for people to have that type of work done.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, what we are dealing with, of course, is the expenditure of money for the purpose of putting people to work in the winter. I would ask the minister if he feels that the expenditure in question, which I think now totals $158,000 or some such figure, has been justified by the results achieved.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Naturally as chairman of the treasury board I have made it my business to inquire of the Department of Labour as to whether in their view the results have been commensurate with the expenditure. There can be no doubt that in their view the results have thoroughly justified this expenditure. I emphasize that this expanded publicity program was strongly recommended by the national conference which met last summer. That conference felt that a great deal could be accomplished if, by a publicity campaign, every effort were made to bring home to the average individual as well as to potential employers of all kinds the desirability of doing in the winter months all the work that could be done during those months, taking into account climatic factors, often with advantage as compared with other seasons of the year.

No one can isolate the results which flow from any particular effort of this kind. No one can say that because we spent $10,000 in publicity, certain jobs are created. It would take an army of mathematicians to gather information and then collate it before a result of that kind could be achieved. But it certainly is the view of the Department of Labour that this expenditure has fully justified itself and fully vindicated the recommendations of the national conference which was held last year.

Mr. Fisher: While we are dealing with this subject I might mention one aspect of the campaign which gave a great deal of pleasure to certain people who live on the west side of Toronto. At the approaches to Royal York road there was one of those brilliant billboards in fluorescent red and blue saying "Do it Now." And on an accompanying billboard there was portrayed a very lithesome creature dressed in a glamorous satin gown and leaning back in a reclining posture. The impact of these two posters together delighted a great many people in that district, and gave one the impression that whoever was responsible for this particular piece of advertising was showing initiative.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Last night, discussing this item, I had occasion to mention that earlier this session a complaint had been registered against the manner in which some of the unemployed in certain sections of this country, notably in a particular constituency in Manitoba, were given the opportunity to take advantage of the government's limited winter work program. The particular item now before the committee, while it is not concerned with the winter work program in a formal sense is, as the minister has indicated, connected with it as being supplementary to that work. Since this matter was raised we have had no satisfactory explanation of the stories which have circulated with regard to the manner in which these jobs have been handed out in some cases. I have here a copy of the Winnipeg Free Press of January 12, 1959. The heading is "I Hand Out the Jobs, says Minnedosa Tory" and the article says, in part:

> Walter Weir, a prominent Minnedosa Progressive Conservative, says Nicholas Mandziuk, Conservative M.P. for Marquette riding, has given him the authority to hand out winter work jobs in Riding Mountain national park.
> Mr. Weir, Minnedosa florist and undertaker and Conservative campaign manager in the Minnedosa riding for the last provincial election, heads a constituency-wide organization which has processed at least 80 of the 125 men now working on winter projects in the park.
> Only a handful of the workers have been referred to the park by the Brandon employment office. Work projects in the park this winter are valued at $400,000.

If that story is true it certainly deserves some comment from the Minister of Labour or from the Minister of Finance who is now speaking on behalf of all government departments in presenting these estimates. For instance, here we have a story in the Toronto Star of February 19—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; the hon. gentleman is dealing with matters which, if they have any accuracy at all—and I am not making any comment on that at the moment—relate, I take it, to jobs provided by the government. This present item has nothing to do with jobs provided by the government. It is an item designed to provide sums for publicity to ask persons outside the government entirely to provide employment during the winter season. This has nothing to do with the government's employees at all, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman will have his opportunity at the proper time to raise his question. He will have his opportunity when the estimates of the Department of Labour are before the committee of supply, but his point has no relevance at all to the present item.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister may make his argument on procedure, as he did last night, and I am prepared to make mine. I take strong issue with this attempt on the part of the Minister of Finance to abridge the discussion of items which have relevance to this particular matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The chairman will rule whether or not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The item before the committee is a request for moneys to assist in the promotion of schemes designed to give work to men and women in this country, and I am now dealing with an allegation that some of the jobs made available as a result of a number of efforts, inincluding this particular promotional scheme—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not this scheme.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say that abuse and discrimination which are not in the national interest have resulted. That is the gist of this complaint, and the hon. gentleman does not further the passage of this estimate by taking this narrow procedural position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Can we have a ruling on the point of order, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: We are not discussing or debating employment by the government itself, or the giving of government jobs. We are discussing, as mentioned in the item, the expenses of the special services branch, including expenses for the promotion of a program for combating seasonal unemployment. This has nothing to do with the normal employment practices of the government, and consequently I suggest to the hon. member for Essex East that he delay his remarks until the estimates of the Department of Labour come before the committee, at which time the raising of the matters to which he has referred would be in order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have great confidence in your chairmanship of this committee, and I am not going to press the matter further. I take this position without in any way binding myself with regard to future action, for I find it difficult to accept this ruling.

In commenting upon your ruling I simply express regret at this time that the Minister of Finance takes the position that this is not a matter to which a reply should be given at once. Undoubtedly the reason is that the minister has not available the necessary information to make the kind of reply that should be made, information that would be available to him if he would meet the demands of the opposition and have the responsible ministers in their places replying to questions instead of the Minister of Finance undertaking to reply on behalf of every department of the government of our country.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Trinity asked a few moments ago about the placing of newspaper advertisements in newspapers published in languages other than English and French. I am informed that the advertising has been published in English and French newspapers and magazines.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister will recall that some time ago, over the objections of this side of the chamber, a starred question was made an order for return. That starred question asked among other things what was the total number of contracts given to the McKim advertising agency. I wonder if in view of the very large amount of business given it by this department the minister could tell us how much this company is receiving from other departments?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I have not that information. If it is a starred question I presume it will be asked in due course.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has been asked and made an order for return.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then it will be brought down in due course in accordance with the order of the house. I do not have that information here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister not think this is precisely the kind of information which surely should not have taken more than an hour of the time of his staff to assemble, and that should have been given to the committee before we were asked to vote this large sum of money to be spent by the McKim advertising agency?

Item agreed to.

Vocational training co-ordination—

751. To provide for carrying out the purposes of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act and agreements made thereunder; to authorize the Minister of Labour to enter into agreements with any province on terms approved by the governor in council to provide financial assistance to vocational schools, and training under youth training projects and to provide for the expenditures thereunder and under vocational training agreements entered into in previous years—payments to the provinces—further amount required, $854,856.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, last evening in reply to a question I asked the Minister of Finance, as reported at page 2064 of Hansard the hon. gentleman stated:

The fact is that Quebec does receive its full share.

I raised this question when we were discussing item No. 751. I would like to know if the minister is now in a position to tell us the exact amount received by the province of Quebec with respect to this item?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I have further information to give my hon. friend and the committee on this subject. As the statement on page 2064 of Hansard indicates, Quebec does receive its full share. These agreements under the Vocational Training Co-Ordination Act are of course available to all provinces.

Following last night's discussion I checked up particularly in regard to Quebec's participation in the plan. I find that Quebec entered into a ten-year agreement originally in 1945 which provided for both capital and operational expenditures. Quebec participated fully in that agreement and in the two-year extension in 1955-56 and 1956-57 which followed. A new five-year agreement called the vocational and technical training agreement No. 2 was entered into, in the fiscal year 1957-58, with all the other provinces, but I am told that Quebec did not sign this agreement. Therefore there are no expenditures for Quebec contemplated under the item unless the Quebec government should decide to come in now and sign the agreement. Quebec did have a small expenditure in the fiscal year 1957-58 under the training of persons to fit them for the armed forces, but there will be no expenditure in 1958-59 for Quebec as far as can presently be determined.

Mr. Denis: What is the actual amount that was received by Quebec in 1957-58?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the fiscal year 1957-58 it was $2,849, Mr. Chairman, for the training of persons to fit them for the armed forces.

Mr. Denis: It was not youth training.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, the training of persons to fit them for the armed forces.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell us how he reconciles the statement he made yesterday to the effect that Quebec does receive its full share? Are we to conclude from this that last evening the minister was speaking through his hat?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman, I was not wearing any hat last night. When I spoke last evening I was not aware of the fact that Quebec had not extended the agreement within the past year. As I have indicated, the payments to Quebec ran up to a year ago, the end of the fiscal year 1957-58. Unless the Quebec government should suddenly come in between now and the end of the present fiscal year it is indicated that there will be no payments accruing to Quebec during the present fiscal year. I do emphasize, however, that the terms of this act and the agreements for which it provides are open to the province of Quebec as they are to all other provinces. I stressed last night that all the provinces are on an equal footing in this respect.

Mr. Denis: In other words, when the minister said Quebec was receiving its full share, he meant after all zero, or that it was receiving nothing. It received nothing this year or in the previous year. In 1957-58 I believe the province received not one cent. I base this statement on an answer given by the Minister of Labour to the hon. member for Papineau on March 3. On that occasion the hon. gentleman inquired about the amounts paid to Quebec each year since 1942 to date under the provisions of the Vocational Training Co-Ordination Act. In reply the Minister of Labour said that nothing was received in the fiscal year 1957-58 for youth training, vocational training school assistance, apprenticeship training or for unemployed workers. Of course we have no unemployed workers in the province of Quebec, and we do not need any money from Ottawa.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That information is correct, Mr. Chairman, but may I point out that there are various headings under the schedule. This payment to the province of Quebec in the fiscal year 1957-58 came under a later item, the training of persons to fit them for the armed forces. The amount was $2,849.

Mr. Denis: But we are discussing item No. 751 referring to vocational training co-ordination.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It comes under that.

Mr. Denis: The question addressed to the Minister of Labour was under the same item, and his answer was that nothing was received by Quebec. On the other hand the Minister of Finance says there was a payment of a few thousand dollars out of a possible $8 million total. I think these hon. gentlemen should compare their figures before it is too late.

This is the third set of supplementary estimates we have had. I believe the present government is using supplementary estimates rather too freely with respect to somewhat large sums of money. I was reading Beauchesne's fourth edition yesterday with respect to supplementary estimates, and this is what I find in citation No. 240:

> Supplementary estimates, when treated as customary and as a matter of course, instead of being restricted to occasion of unforeseen contingencies, do more to destroy effectual parliamentary control than any other indirect method that could be devised.

And later:

> The introduction of supplementary estimates of any considerable amount is really a breach of contract between the government and parliament, for when this is done the budget statement is destroyed, and in effect a supplementary budget is set up.

These are the words of a gentleman who is supposed to know something about these matters. The sum of $1 million out of a total of $8 million represents more than one-tenth of the whole amount. Those who are looking for suggestions from this side of the house say that we never give any suggestions. Next year the Minister of Finance should see that these supplementary estimates are reduced to the minimum so that the government, the house and the country will know exactly the amount of money that we are called upon to vote. That might change the picture altogether. If a few items in the supplementary estimates for every department were calculated in the millions of dollars, instead of having a deficit of $700 million we might go over $1 billion. This is one suggestion I humbly submit to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I humbly receive the suggestion of the hon. member in the same spirit.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. I would like a vote on this item.

Mr. Chevrier: Call the yeas and nays.

Mr. Fisher: Before it goes to a vote I wish to ask the minister whether he can tell us from his intimate knowledge of provincial-federal relations that the reason Quebec is not taking advantage of this particular vote is its stand on autonomy and its general attitude toward those questions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have no specific communication as to the reasons the Quebec government has not seen fit to enter into the new five-year agreement.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I would like the yeas and nays to be recorded before this item is passed.

(Text):

I would like a vote called.

Mr. Chevrier: Question.

The Chairman: All those in favour of the item will please stand.

Item agreed to: Yeas, 91; nays, nil.

The Chairman: I declare the resolution carried.

Unemployment insurance commission—

752. Administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act, including expenditures incurred in connection with other duties and responsibilities assumed and carried out as required by the governor in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Labour in accordance with section 4 of the act—further amount required, $2,227,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is a matter on which the Minister of Finance ought to be able to say something in addition to the statement by the Minister of Labour. We are asked now to vote the salaries of the staff of the unemployment insurance commission, those who administer this act. I am sure the unemployment insurance fund is a matter that has been engaging the attention of the Minister of Finance, as it should engage the attention of this house. We know that when the present administration took office the fund was substantial. While we have not the latest figures, it would seem that as we approach the end of the fiscal year 1958-59 the fund may be very considerably reduced. While I suspect that in the amendments to which it has been giving consideration the government may use a method of bolstering the fund, the fact is that if we have unemployment next fall and winter on any comparable basis with the present winter and last fall we may find that there will not be sufficient money in the fund to provide assistance to those who qualify under the act for unemployment benefits.

This is a matter of the greatest importance. We know that from July 1, 1941, when the fund was started, to 1953, the balance in the fund at the end of the year was always higher than at the beginning, and it reached a total of $921 million at December 31, 1953. At the end of 1957 the fund was roughly $877,470,144.39. At the end of 1958 the fund stood at $625,363,366.21. Assuming that at the end of this fiscal year there will have been paid out roughly something between $350 million and $400 million, it is evident on these calculations that in the absence of a replenishment of the fund there would not be enough money next fall or next winter to take care of all unemployed people, assuming that unemployment was on the same comparative level as we have had now for the past two winters. It would therefore be a most anomalous position for the government, for this parliament and for the country to find themselves in, that having had a fund of almost $1 billion, the situation I have described could likely occur next fall and winter. We are certainly asking the Minister of Finance now to give us some indication as to whether or not that eventuality is possible. If it is, then the minister owes it to the house to indicate now, on this item, what are the government's intentions.

This is a matter of great consequence because the fund has been built up, as the Minister of Finance knows, largely as a result of the contributions made by employers and employees over the years. While the taxpayers generally in Canada have made a contribution, that contribution does not compare in any one year with the amounts contributed by the two basic contributors, namely the employee and the employer groups.

If the situation which I have pictured is valid, the government must accept responsibility for it. It will be recalled that last year the government brought forward further supplementary unemployment insurance benefits, and those benefits were paid out of the fund itself. I will admit that the government had a precedent at least for embarking on the principle of supplementary insurance benefits, because the preceding government had adopted the policy of providing benefits by way of supplementary payments in addition to the normal benefits. The difference between the practice followed by this administration and the preceding administration is that while we used moneys out of the fund for the purpose of paying these supplementary benefits, we replenished the fund every time there was any infringement made on the corpus of the fund. However, the supplementary benefits paid as a result of the policies recommended by hon. gentlemen opposite were paid out of the fund itself and there was no replenishment.

Now, it seems to us, as it seems to the employer and to the employee groups who have made representations to the government, that the moneys appropriated should come from the general taxpayers of the country, and the burden should not be imposed on employers and employees. If the fund is in the dangerous state to which I have referred, this will have been contributed to in part by the failure of the government to replenish the fund along the line I have indicated. If the situation is that the fund will be down so low as to warrant the possible conclusion at which I have arrived, assuming of course that there will be a high level of unemployment next winter and next fall, then the government should at the earliest opportunity indicate to the house what its intentions are.

The government advised the country in the speech from the throne that it proposed to bring in certain amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. We have been pressing for those amendments ever since the beginning of the session. We had hoped even the other day to elicit from the Minister of Labour some assurance that the government's policy with regard to these amendments would be made known before we recessed, in order that we might have an opportunity to see if these amendments would in any way bring assistance to the thousands who are out of work in our country.

I ask the Minister of Finance now to tell us what is the present state of the fund. What steps are going to be taken by the government to maintain the integrity of the fund? I ask whether or not those steps are capable of providing for an emergency, which we all hope will not eventuate, in 1959-60; but if it eventuates those steps must be such as would provide these benefits for those who have qualified as a result of their contributions as a matter of right, and not simply as a matter of relief as a result of the charitable instincts of the people of Canada.

This is a matter of the greatest importance. We have been proud, since 1941, of the Unemployment Insurance Act and of its great social consequence. We have referred with pride to the strength of the fund which now, as a result of the unemployment in our country, has reached what could be, in the absence of certain corrective measures, a dangerous point. I ask the Minister of Finance to give us an assurance with regard to this matter at the earliest moment.

Mr. Herridge: Before the Minister of Finance replies, although I do not wish to take too much of the time of the committee I do want to say that we in this group are interested in this question in the same way as the hon. member for Essex East is interested. We would like to hear the answers to the questions he has raised, and we agree as to the importance of this matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This item relates to the cost of administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act. It has no bearing whatever on the fund. The fund is created under the act by contributions, and appears in the estimates each year as a statutory item. This item that is now before the committee has nothing to do with the financing of the fund itself at all.

My hon. friend knows quite well that the information he is asking cannot be given to the house until the legislation is introduced. I have no intention whatever of standing here today and outlining the terms of any legislation that may be introduced. The house is aware of the statement made in the speech from the throne that amendments to the act will be forthcoming. Certainly it would be highly improper, not only inappropriate but improper, to answer the questions of the hon. member for Essex East in that regard, because this item relates purely and simply to the cost of administration of the act.

As hon. members will see on reference to the details of the estimates on page 19, it is almost entirely a matter of salaries. There are some three other items, but this additional amount required is made up very largely of the salaries of employees of the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not going to press the minister to give us the details of legislation which has not been presented to the house. I did not ask for that. What I asked was whether or not the government was taking corrective steps, through these amendments, by way of further contributions to be made or further categories of employees to be included. I just wanted some indication in a general way.

I certainly do have a right and I think we have a right in this house, to ask the minister about the state of the fund. We are now asked to vote salaries and wages to the extent of $1,762,000 for these employees in the unemployment insurance commission. If it is not proper to ask under this supplementary item as to the state of the fund, then I certainly do not understand the elementary practices and procedures of this house. My hon. friend could retort, of course, that that is evident. Surely when we have to vote salaries for the staff of the unemployment insurance commission it is proper to ask the Minister of Finance how much money now reposes in the fund, so we can gain some idea as to the state in which the fund will be in the ensuing fiscal year, 1959-60. That is the question I asked of the Minister of Finance, and I would hope he will not be reluctant to give us that information at once.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the statistics on the fund are issued from time to time, and no one knows that better than the hon. gentleman. They appear in the Labour Gazette from month to month. I do not pretend to have here any figures later than the last published figures.

I emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that the vote we are discussing has nothing whatever to do with the amount standing to the credit of the fund. Everyone knows that the fund has been drawn upon to meet unemployment; that is the purpose of the fund. My hon. friend asked me for a statement as to what measures the government proposes to take to replenish the fund. I shall have to ask my hon. friend to wait for the announcement of those measures in due course. We are here dealing, Mr. Chairman, with the amount required to provide for the administration of this fund to March 31. My friend is asking me for a statement on future policy as applied to the next succeeding fiscal year or years. I must confine myself to the matter that is before the house and, Mr. Chairman, there is not a cent in this item that has any bearing whatever on the size of the fund.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the Minister of Finance tell me where I can get the figures on the fund with reference to expenditures made since January 15, 1959?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, I presume from time to time such information will be available. My hon. friend has been at this long enough to know you cannot just have the figures issued immediately, and the unemployment insurance commission publishes these figures as they become available.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend said month by month.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As they become available.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He said every month.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I referred to the Labour Gazette, but there are other publications as well. My hon. friend is aware of that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I simply want to leave this matter by saying it is important and serious. I regret that the Minister of Finance cannot satisfy us as to the present state of the fund. This is a matter that is engaging the interest of many people in this country at this time, and the reply made by the minister will certainly not be very heartening.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have a figure at the end of January, 15 days later than the period mentioned by my hon. friend. The sum standing to the credit of the fund, as I am informed, at January 31, 1959 was $586,990,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): So my fears are right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Your fears are never right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, yes, they are.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Martin bureau of statistics again!

Mr. Robichaud: The minister has just stated that a large part of this appropriation will be used to pay salaries and wages under the unemployment insurance commission. In fact, on page 19 it is shown that $1,762,000 will be used for salaries and wages. Can the minister tell us whether part of this money will also be used to pay salaries or commissions of special agents who have been appointed recently by the unemployment insurance commission? In fact 46 agents were appointed, 23 of whom were recommended by the local office managers, 22 by the Minister of Labour and one by a local postmaster. Can the minister tell us what part of this item will be used to pay the salary or commission of these agents?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not aware of the persons to whom my hon. friend refers. However, I point out to him that this item is for the payment of those persons in the civil service who are employees of the unemployment insurance commission. As to the persons referred to by my hon. friend, I have not heard of them. If he will give me more information about them I shall be glad to obtain that information and send it to him.

Mr. Robichaud: I think the minister will find—I have not the date here but I think it was February 27—that in a reply to a question which I addressed to the Minister of Labour the house was informed that 46 agents had been appointed under the unemployment insurance commission. The commission must require funds in order to pay these agents. We want to find out whether they are going to be paid from part of this appropriation which we are being asked to vote today. I think we have the right to know what is the estimate of the department or of the commission for the payment of such agents.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I shall be glad to obtain that information for my hon. friend and convey it to him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to allow this vote to pass without making one or two observations about what I believe to have been a failure of the government and a failure of the Minister of Labour —and I am very sorry that he is not here when I am saying this—to honour a commitment which was made to one class of persons who are covered by the unemployment insurance commission. I am not going to take the time of the committee to read the letter which I wrote to the Prime Minister on October 21, 1958 about the fishermen in Newfoundland, covered by unemployment insurance, whose plight was serious because of a complete failure of the fishery in many parts of the east coast last summer; and which plight in my letter I suggested could have been dealt with through the agency of the unemployment insurance commission. However, I want to draw the attention of the committee to the reply I received from the Prime Minister on October 28, in which he said:

I wish to acknowledge your letter of October 21st concerning the situation among the cod fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland.

I assure you that the matter is being looked into thoroughly by my colleagues the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Fisheries, to whom I have forwarded copies of your letter.

As hon. members know, the Prime Minister was absent from the country from that time on until about Christmas. On December 1, when the fishermen who had enough stamps would have qualified for unemployment insurance, I wrote again to the Minister of Labour, from whom I have had nothing but a bare acknowledgement up to this time, to ask him what had happened to this commitment of the Prime Minister that this matter was going to be considered by his colleagues. This matter was, I might say, of real urgency to a class of persons who were promised by the Prime Minister about a year ago—and I have in my hand a complete report of a speech which the Prime Minister made at Charlottetown on this very subject—that no one would suffer. I wrote to the Minister of Labour on December 1 as follows:

On October 28, the Prime Minister acknowledged the letter I wrote to him on October 21, about the inability of the fishermen in Newfoundland to qualify for unemployment insurance because of the failure this year of the cod fishery. Mr. Diefenbaker assured me that the matter was being looked into thoroughly by his colleagues, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Fisheries.

December 1, as you are aware, is the first day on which seasonal benefits can be paid under the unemployment insurance law and I am sure most of the fishermen who, through no fault of their own, cannot qualify for seasonal benefits will be greatly disappointed that no decision has yet been announced by the government about the suggestion for emergency "crop failure" benefits I made in my letter.

I am sure you realize, as I know the Minister of Fisheries who has been in Newfoundland does, that the need is urgent and that many fishermen have already been obliged to accept relief.

The method of meeting the problem suggested in my letter would be simple to administer and fair to the fishermen, but if the method is not acceptable to the government, I strongly urge that action be taken in some other way to meet this pressing need.

The government has seen fit to make $200 available to every grain farmer whether he needs it or not. There can be no question of the need of the fishermen and one way to meet their problem would be a straight payment across the board to them as is being made to the farmers.

Whatever the method, there is urgent need for action now to prevent actual suffering—

That is the suffering the Prime Minister promised us would not exist while he was Prime Minister; and he promised it right across this country only a year ago when he was seeking the support of the people.

—and I appeal to the government to act without delay.

I am sending copies of this letter to the Acting Prime Minister and to the Minister of Fisheries.

Of course both ministers were extremely polite in acknowledging my letter. I appreciate their courtesy and I thank them for it. But apparently that is all that happened, because on the second day of the session, as reported at page 16 of Hansard for January 16, 1959 I asked the Prime Minister this question:

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is going to take any action to relieve the distress caused by the failure of the cod fishery in Newfoundland, about which he will recall I wrote him last October, and which he advised me the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Fisheries were looking into urgently?

I stress the word "urgently", Mr. Speaker. This is a fair sample of what the present government understands by that word "urgently". The Prime Minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, the answer is still applicable.

Then I added:

I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister realize that half the fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland have been forced on relief because of the failure of the government to act?

The Prime Minister, with his usual courtesy, gave no reply to that question. Then on January 20, as reported at page 77 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Labour a question supplementary to questions that were asked by several other hon. members, including the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Essex East, with regard to labour conditions and to which I think the answers were uniformly unsatisfactory. I asked this question:

May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not true that fishermen are not included this year—

That was in the figures the minister was giving.

—and is the minister's answer that no consideration is being given to a reduction in the number of stamps required also applicable to fishermen; because the minister will recall that he told me the opposite quite recently.

The minister told me in his letter that the matter was under consideration, and he then came into the house and in an offhand way said it was not being considered at all.

Mr. Starr: In the first part of his question the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is again confused.

I was not confused, sir; I knew perfectly well what I was asking. I think it was the minister who was somewhat confused, because he was referring to the national registration figures in which the fishermen were not included. I do not know yet what that means, and I do not think the minister knew, nor do I think he could explain today. Then the minister went on:

> Everyone seeking work is included in these dominion bureau of statistics figures, and the qualification period for unemployment insurance also applies to fishermen.
> Mr. Pickersgill: In other words the government has ceased—
> Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not going to enter into a debate on this matter.

Of course I did then, as I always do, Mr. Chairman, comply with the direction of the Chair. Then I continued:

> No, I simply want to clarify the minister's answer. The question I was going to ask the minister—
> Some hon. Members: Sit down.

No doubt the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi was amongst those who said "Sit down", showing the respect that some hon. members have for the rights of free speech in this chamber.

> Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a supplementary question?
> Mr. Pickersgill: I have a supplementary question, and it is this. Did I understand the minister to say consideration is no longer being given to a reduction in the number of stamps required by fishermen for unemployment insurance?
> Mr. Starr: I said, sir, no consideration is being given to reducing the 15 stamps that are required for seasonal benefits at the moment, and that includes everyone.

On January 16 the Prime Minister said the matter was still being considered. On January 20 the Minister of Labour said no consideration was being given to it. I wanted to ask the Minister of Labour if he had been in his place in the chamber, as he ought to have been when asking for $2½ million more to administer the unemployment insurance commission, instead of leaving it to the Minister of Finance who seems to be equally uniformed about all the estimates he is bringing before us, to tell us precisely what happened between January 16, when the Prime Minister said the matter was still being considered, and January 20 when the Minister of Labour said no consideration was being given to the matter at all.

If the Minister of Finance cannot reply to that question perhaps the minister from Newfoundland, who is a member of the cabinet, though his interventions on behalf of Newfoundland in this chamber have not been very frequent since he was returned to this parliament, would care to tell us what happened between January 16 and 20. What consideration did the government give, as the Prime Minister promised, or was this just another of those promises? I think we are entitled to know what happened between January 16, when the Prime Minister said this matter was being considered, and January 20 when the Minister of Labour said that no consideration was being given to the matter.

Perhaps the minister would like to tell us right away what it was. Perhaps the minister would like to tell us why there was no consideration when over $40 million was voted for the grain growers, which we supported and which we in this party voted for, those who represent fishing ridings as well as everyone else; let there be no mistake that we voted for it, because we realized that there was a difficult situation in the prairie provinces. We voted for it even though we thought it was a bad way to do it, because we thought something needed to be done. But here in the fisheries was a situation where something needed to be done even more urgently, where the need was far greater; but all we get from the Minister of Labour is the statement that no consideration is being given. I repeat, no consideration is being given.

I think before we are asked to vote another $2½ million, because of the shocking estimating which has been done by someone, either by the Department of Labour or the minister, we ought to know what is being done in this connection. They reduced this item in the main estimates by nearly $1 million in order perhaps to show that what they were asking for was not as great as they knew they would need. Now they come and ask for $2½ million more, which is a fine example of careful and accurate estimating such as has been very characteristic of the Minister of Finance.

But I do not want to be diverted from my main point, which is this. I would like the Minister of Finance or the minister from Newfoundland to tell us what consideration was given to these proposals which the Prime Minister promised would be considered, and what reason the government had for rejecting them and saying that the fishermen, who had a failure of their crop which drove about half of them on to relief, were not deserving of any consideration. Presumably the government decided they were not suffering, and so the Prime Minister's promise of a year ago did not apply to them. I would like to tell the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the minister from Newfoundland that the fishermen of that province are not going to forget this neglect.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 752 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is not the minister going to answer?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend knows perfectly well that we are dealing here not with the terms under which persons qualify for the payment of unemployment insurance out of the fund: we are dealing with an item which pertains simply to the cost of administration, an intem for which the government bears the expense. This is very largely a matter of additional salaries required for the staff of the unemployment insurance commission. The hon. gentleman is raising a question pertaining to the persons who qualify for the payment of unemployment insurance out of the fund.

That is an entirely different matter. We have not that subject before us, and there will be proper opportunity during the course of this session to discuss the matter he is seeking to raise. The estimates of the Department of Labour for the next fiscal year will be before the house and there will be legislation to amend to Unemployment Insurance Act, as has been indicated already in the course of this discussion. My hon. friend will between those two pieces of business certainly have his opportunity to discuss this question. But, Mr. Chairman, the point has no bearing whatever on the matter of administration of the fund, which is a separate item and is handled under the law in a quite different way. The government bears the entire cost of administration, whereas payments out of the fund are dealt with in accordance with the terms of the legislation, and the fund is provided by contributions from three sources, of which the government is only one and, indeed, the smallest.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rise to complain once again of the replies we are receiving from the Minister of Finance. He has said and continues to say that there will be an opportunity before the end of this session for hon. members to put questions of this sort to the ministry, when replies will be given. He does not seek to strengthen his position by arguing that under this item this question could not properly be put. He simply says there will be ample opportunity later on for replies to be given to these questions.

The real difficulty which confronts us arises out of the fact that the minister persists in making replies for all departments, himself. If he had acceded to our suggestion last night, a suggestion which he himself put forward so frequently and vigorously when he was sitting on this side, namely that this practice of the Minister of Finance should not be pursued, he would not be in the present difficulty.

The fact is that the answer to the question put by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not within my hon. friend's knowledge. Therefore he is obliged to give the answer he has just given. My hon. friend ought to bring the Minister of Labour now into the house, if he is available, to make a reply. We are now shortly going to recess. Hon. members are going back to their constituencies. We will not be back here for a couple of weeks. This is a matter of great moment and consequence to the fishermen of Newfoundland, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has pointed out. And what reply is given to us? We are told "Oh, put your questions some other time; we will give you an answer when we bring in amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act."

Mr. Chairman, these amendments may not come in until the dying days of the session, yet this is a subject which was raised by an hon. member of this committee in a letter to the Prime Minister; and the Prime Minister, in replying to that question, said the matter was receiving consideration. This is the subject with regard to which the Minister of Finance now tells us "Put your questions at some other time."

The hon. member is putting the question now, and he is entitled to receive from the government an answer to the question. If the Minister of Finance cannot answer the question himself he ought to ask his colleagues, some of whom are in this chamber and anxious to make replies. When we come to deal with the estimates of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, I know the minister of northern affairs is going to ask the Minister of Finance to allow him to make replies, as the Minister of Agriculture did last night by implication and by glances, appealing to the Minister of Finance to allow him to reply to the questions asked. And I know that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, the genial minister who looks at me now is not going to be happy if the reply on behalf of that department is given by my beloved and ubiquitous friend the Minister of Finance.

The trouble in which the hon. gentleman finds himself in dealing with all these estimates is an obvious one: he is seeking to reply on behalf of each minister, and in consequence we have been getting unsatisfactory and inadequate answers to our questions, of which there is no better example than the reply which the minister gave to the impassioned and able speech made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not entirely subscribe to everything which was said by my hon. friend from Essex East.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that hon. members opposite should wait for just a second, because if the hon. member for Essex East was right when he said that the Minister of Finance did not have the information which would enable him to reply to my question, which asked what the government did about this matter, it means, since the Minister of Finance is a member of the government, that the government did nothing about it, and that the Prime Minister broke his word. I should like an assurance from the Minister of Finance that this question was brought before the cabinet and considered by the government as the Prime Minister promised on January 16. If the minister remains silent everyone is entitled to draw the conclusion that the Prime Minister's statement was not correct; that this consideration was not given at all, as promised on January 16, and that the Prime Minister's statement was not correct. I think the Minister of Finance should seek to clear the Prime Minister's name in connection with this matter.

Mr. Robichaud: The Minister of Finance does not seem to be aware that special agents have been employed under the unemployment insurance commission, and it is our understanding that part of this fund being voted today will cover the salaries of these agents—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I clear up that point; I have the information now. No part of this supplementary item is for the purpose indicated, namely the payment of salaries to these agents. Their remuneration is taken care of under provision made in the main item. The hon. member will find that at page 264 in the main estimates for 1958-59, in the item for professional and special services. There is no addition for this purpose in the supplementary item now before the committee.

Mr. McMillan: This seems quite a large amount and all of it, except about $500,000, is for extra wages. Does this additional sum represent extra salaries and wages paid to people already employed, or have we taken on a number of additional employees? Could the minister give us a breakdown of this figure?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This requirement arises out of an increased work load. The item, as the hon. member will see by reference to page 19 of the details, is for $1,762,000 in respect of salaries and wages. The increased work load has accounted for much of this. Some of it has been accounted for by salary revisions, but the bulk is accounted for by the increased work load. A great deal of the increased staff requirement has been provided on a casual basis.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister could tell us how much of this extra cost is due to the cancellation of the Avro Arrow program?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): None, sir.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister could tell us how many additional persons have been taken on in the metropolitan Toronto area in the last 60 days?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I cannot give that information now, but if the hon. member is interested I shall be glad to obtain it and convey it to him. Out of the existing staff the commission arranged for representatives to go into the Avro plant immediately after the general dismissals ordered by the company in order to provide on the site service.

Mr. Hellyer: Is the minister sure that they were all from existing staffs? The existing staffs were not able to keep up with all the work they had on hand before this shutdown, and surely the commission would have engaged additional staff in order to avoid falling further into arrears.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I know that those who were sent in were experienced personnel, but I shall be glad to obtain the information which the hon. member requires.

Mr. Robichaud: This amount of $425,000 for office stationery and supplies and equipment is a large sum. Can the minister give us some details?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. Part of this arises from the purchase of office equipment of a mechanical nature. I may say that the cost of mechanization is $135,000, which means that part of this increase—the balance of $262,000—is due to the building up of depleted stocks and because of the claims load which has of necessity meant the requisition of supplies.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item No. 752 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Item agreed to.

LEGISLATION

House of Commons—

756. Special grant to the Canadian North Atlantic Treaty Organization Parliamentary Association for Canada's share of the cost of the Atlantic congress to be held in 1959 and the expenses of Canadian parliamentary delegates attending the congress, $20,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister explain what this grant is for?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there is to be held in London in June a special meeting to mark the 10th anniversary of the inception of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and by arrangement made at the last meeting of the representatives of the various NATO parliamentary associations in Paris several months ago a decision was taken to hold this special gathering under NATO parliamentary association auspices in London this spring. Each country is selecting delegates. Indeed there is to be quite extended participation by the other members of the alliance. In our case the item proposes to appropriate $20,000 to pay Canada's share of the contribution toward the expenses of the conference and also to provide for the expenses of a delegation composed of members of this house and members of the other place to represent Canada at the conference.

Mr. Chevrier: How many delegates will be going from Canada? While I am on my feet I wish to ask another question. Does the government make provision for representation of the other parties on such a delegation? In this case what is the representation and how is it divided in that respect?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The representation will be worked out on an interparty basis as representation is always worked out at the conferences under NATO parliamentary association auspices and for commonwealth parliamentary conferences. It is expected that there will also be a number of interested or representative citizens from the other countries attending, and indeed it is hoped by those who are organizing the conference that a number of representative Canadians will also attend this conference but not at government expense. The representation will be worked out in the usual manner among the parties. This item will not provide anything toward the expenses of delegates other than members of parliament and the other place.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the minister be attending?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not expect to, Mr. Chairman.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Hellyer: I thought the minister might want to get away somewhere after bringing down his budget.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no, Mr. Chairman, I expect to stay here and enjoy the company of my hon. friend.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister took a big trip last year.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

A—Department—

Surveys and mapping branch—

757. Topographical surveys — construction or acquisition of equipment—further amount required, $20,500.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, will the minister explain what the equipment is for this service and the topographical surveys mentioned in this vote?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is for field survey equipment instruments which were destroyed in a fire. This is a replacement.

Item agreed to.

758. Canadian hydrographic service—administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $477,492.

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could offer some explanation of this vote?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend will see by reference to page 20 of the details that this item of $477,492 is for two purposes. The sum of $221,292 is for salaries and wages, and the sum of $256,200 is for repairs and upkeep of ships and boats which are in use in the hydrographic service. My hon. friend is perhaps particularly interested in the second portion of the item. This sum of $256,200 is to provide for the conversion of the ship the William J. Stewart and the completion of the annual overhaul and fitting during the 1958 winter season of the four hydrographic vessels based on the east coast.

Mr. Dumas: I understand that this work is usually carried on in the spring in the month of April. Does this represent a change of policy on the part of the government?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The work was advanced to provide employment during the winter.

Mr. Chevrier: Does this vote of $477,000 exclusively refer to the ship and the crew on the hydrographic ship? Is it for the operation of the ship, the maintenance of the crew and so forth?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman. I have drawn attention to the fact that this item is broken into two parts. The first, a sum of $221,292, is for salaries and wages applicable to the hydrographic service in general. The second part, $256,200 is for the conversion of the ship, the William J. Stewart and the completion of the annual overhaul and fitting of the four hydrographic vessels.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the first part of the vote apply to the crews on the ships?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am informed that it does not. The increase in the sum required for wages and salaries is due to the fact that there has been a slowdown in turnover and there have not been vacancies arising in the service.

Mr. Chevrier: I take it that the $256,200 applies exclusively to the hydrographic ships and to the maintenance and operation of the crews. If that is the case it seems to be a small amount for that purpose because the William J. Stewart is a big ship.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is a further amount required, as my hon. friend will appreciate.

Item agreed to.

General—

760. Purchases of air photography and the expenses of the interdepartmental committee on air surveys, including purchases of equipment—further amount required, $2,300,000.

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Chairman, would the minister explain this vote. In the main estimates under a similar heading we voted an amount of $1,900,000 and now we have this supplementary estimate for $2,300,000 which is a large sum.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. This work of air photography was carried on under favourable conditions and very excellent progress was made. It was found to be desirable and economical that it should proceed at an accelerated pace. It is going to cost us less money in the end to do it that way. By March 31 the companies under contract with the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys will have completed work totalling $2,300,000 for which no funds are available in the existing vote.

Mr. Dumas: Over and above what was voted?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Dumas: The minister said it would cost less money in the end. I understand this work is done under contract. How can it cost less money? I believe the price is based on a square mile basis so surely the price would be the same.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. There is an economy in more constant flying. That is the reason it was found to be more economical to expedite and accelerate the aerial photographic program.

Mr. Dumas: Economy to the companies who are on contract?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And the government.

Mr. Dumas: Can the minister tell the committee to which companies this amount will be paid? I understand three companies are concerned.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Spartan Air Services, Photographic Air Surveys and Aero Surveys. These are the main contractors.

Mr. Dumas: I think there are three, Spartan Airways, Aero Surveys and Photographic Service. Can the minister tell the committee how much will be paid to each of those companies?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I shall be glad to obtain that information for my hon. friend.

Mr. Chevrier: How are these contracts awarded? Is it done by public tender or by allocation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will obtain that information.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think this is rather an astonishing illustration of the abuse of supplementary estimates. The minister seemed sympathetic to some of the remarks that were made this morning by the hon. member for St. Denis, and if he was sincere in his appearance of approval of the legal authorities cited by the hon. member I would think that he would want to avoid a repetition of this type of thing in the future. I draw the minister's attention to the fact that the original item, which actually was presented to the house very late owing to the fact that we had an election, was not as large as this item. Usually the main estimates and the intentions of the government with respect to spending are decided upon in December and in a normal year are probably submitted to the House of Commons in January. Last year the main estimates were presented to the house on May 13. Now, shortly after the fiscal year had been entered upon this administration, if it had had respect for the House of Commons and its rights with respect to spending authority, would have known something about this accelerated program. I draw to the attention of the committee the fact that the original estimate, based upon the best information that apparently the administration could sincerely and properly present to the house on May 13, was an item of $1,900,000. If we had had only one additional presentation to this house in the meantime of administrative proposals for expenditure, perhaps there might be some excuse for the ministry coming forward within two weeks of the termination of the fiscal year with an additional supplementary proposal for an expenditure that is almost 20 per cent larger than the original proposal. That surely is contempt of parliament and of its traditional rights with respect to expenditure.

If these things had been foreseen when the first supplementary estimates were presented on June 2 last session, surely the minister would have seen that this vote probably was likely to be inadequate. He presented additional supplementary estimates to the house on August 30, 1958. No indication of this particular item was given to the house at that time. On January 30 of this year we had supplementary estimates No. 2. Nothing was said about this item. Within two weeks of the expiry of the fiscal year, parliament is asked to approve an item that is almost 20 per cent larger than the cost of the program as originally estimated. How can that amount be possibly expended in the next two weeks? In other words, we must be bound to assume that this government, with its supercolossal majority, is simply operating on the basis of giving commitments to those companies and others and saying, "You just carry on and finance through the banks, and so on; we are sure and confident that within the dying days of the current fiscal year we can with our majority, and regardless of conditions, make sure that this money is voted".

The Minister of Finance must explain whether or not he knew on January 30, when supplementary estimates No. 2 were presented, that this item, by commitment or otherwise, was being very considerably exceeded, based on the original estimate tabled in the house on May 13 of last year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman is wide of the mark, far wide of the mark, as he has been so often.

Mr. Chevrier: Don't lose your temper, just stick to the facts.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is a statement of fact. I have already explained how this item came to be increased. The program which had been embarked upon was a program to extend over a period of years. We found, owing to extraordinarily favourable weather conditions prevailing in the Arctic last year, that the program could, to advantage and economy, be accelerated last year.

Now, as to the knowledge of this, of course there are lots of matters in those final supplementaries that were within knowledge in January but are inappropriate items to be brought down then because these are matters that have to be adjusted as of March 31, and have to be complete. Therefore, this particular one, like a good many others that are presented now, is an item of which we knew well that the amount provided in the main estimates was going to be exceeded, but we have to come this much closer to the end of the fiscal year to be able to estimate it with precision, and that is the reason we have this situation before us today.

I referred to the extraordinarily favourable conditions which developed last year. This is illustrated in accrual to the public advantage and economies because those contracts with the three companies concerned were contracts which, while there are certain basic guarantees, nevertheless did offer the government the opportunity of effecting economies by accelerating the program under the extraordinarily favourable conditions prevailing. That is the explanation, and the full explanation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, that is by no means a full explanation because the pertinent question I put to the minister was: when he last presented supplementary estimates to the house on January 30, did he not know the extent of this increase in possible expenditure on this item as compared with a year ago? I might forgive him for not referring to it on August 30; but surely he is disregarding the rights of this house in the matter of the appropriation of money if on January 30, when he came with supplementary estimates, he omitted any reference to this item. That is the essential question that the minister must answer.

We in the House of Commons feel that on a general basis—and the minister held these views when he was on this side and I do not think anybody on the other side will disagree with this—one of our primary functions is the right to pass upon expenditures and generally, unless something is unforeseen, we have the right to discuss and debate a projected program prior to the incurring of a liability by the crown. The very opposite has occurred in this instance. There is not anybody in the house, I think, who would want the crown commitment to be repudiated. In consequence of that, we are presented with items for expenditures after the commitment has been made, and particularly when that could have been prevented by a reasonable regard for the rights of the House of Commons on the part of the administration, we feel offended.

Now, I say to the minister, if he knew last year that these flying conditions were such that the crown could embark on a program of this kind, as he says economically and advantageously, why should he present supplementary estimates on January 30 with no reference made to this program? In other words, the rights of the opposition to criticize or to suggest reasons as to whether or not that program should be amended or perhaps not embarked upon are completely lost because there is no one in any part of the house who, after a commitment has been made by the government, would want the government to repudiate its commitment. However, we are put in that position because these commitments have been made and there is not anybody who thinks for a moment that $2,300,000 is going to be spent in the next two months of this fiscal year on this matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I think I can claim to be as concerned as any member in this house about preserving the rights of all members of the House of Commons in relation to their responsibility to maintain control over public expenditures. We come to the study of supplementary estimates, Mr. Chairman, in a situation of this kind where what is asked of the house is the approval of a further amount required on the basis of a program having already been approved in principle. When the house has approved an item in the main estimates, it is approval in principle.

Now, this program of aerial photography was approved in principle in this house. The main estimate appears in the details of the volume of estimates approved by the house. This particular program having been approved in principle proceeded last summer, and as I indicated it proceeded under extraordinarily favourable conditions, conditions much more favourable than those that we or the companies could have foreseen. Then, this program went far beyond the end of the session of parliament which ended on September 7. Now, so far as January last is concerned, it would not have made any difference so far as the actual incurring of the expenditure is concerned because the work was done during the favourable flying season. It was a matter of amending and working out agreements with the companies concerned for the payments to be made. The house, therefore, is in just as good a position now as it would have been in January. There is absolutely nothing in the point the hon. member is making with regard to January.

The items brought down in January were items which were ascertained at that time. This is like a good many of the other items, and there are many in these supplementary estimates, that were not fully ascertained at that time.

Mr. Benidickson: This is a very strange form of argument on the part of the Minister of Finance. Really I am satisfied, knowing him as I do, that on reflection for another year he will not agree with what he has said at this moment. I do not think he will agree it is the proper practice to not advise the House of Commons at the earliest possible stage of his knowledge that it is desirable to overexpend on an item that, in principle or otherwise, has been approved by the House of Commons. There are many of us in this House of Commons who would, in our individual capacity, decide it would be desirable and proper for us to make an expenditure of, shall we say, $1 million for a certain purpose. However, if we were told that our expenditures, individually or otherwise, were to be 120 per cent beyond what we had approved at a certain stage, I think that we probably would be giving the matter second thoughts. I say that in connection with a matter of this kind these second thoughts are denied the house because the commitment has been made and practically completed, although payments probably have not been made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My hon. friend is not at all right in talking about commitments. I think that is where he is leading himself astray. These companies have proceeded with this work. They are offering to sell the results of their aerial photography to the government, and we consider that it is very good business to purchase them. So far as commitment is concerned, the commitment rests upon a decision of this house and if the house does not approve, then these companies will just have to wait until next year for us to buy the results of their work.

My friend is quite wrong in talking about a commitment when he is talking about the matter of the purchase of the results of this aerial photography work. If the house does not want to buy it, all right, but there are advantages to the department in having the results of this photographic work earlier than would otherwise be the case. There are economies in proceeding on this basis. My friend is quite wrong in talking about a commitment. We are asking the committee to authorize us to purchase the results of this photographic work today.

Mr. Benidickson: This is another example of how the Minister of Finance seems to underestimate the wit and understanding of a great number of other members of this house. I happen to know, because flying is an important industry in the constituency I represent, that none of the flying companies of the financial standing of these that were named would go ahead with a project of this kind. They have not got the resources to do it; they have not got the bank backing to do it, and it is just another example of the fatuous remarks that are so often made by the Minister of Finance.

It is difficult for the committee to believe that one of his colleagues has not encouraged these companies to go ahead and that the government would purchase these services. There is not anybody in this house, including I think most of the backbenchers on the government side, who would think for a moment that these companies would go ahead. It is not their business to go ahead and supply information of this kind without having a customer in sight. There is only one customer in sight in this country in connection with matters of this kind and that is the government of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, my friend is not getting away with remarks like that. He started out talking about commitments and said commitments should not be made without approval of the committee. I said there is no commitment. The committee has this opportunity to pass on the matter now. It is true that these companies are not in a strong financial position, but the companies thought it was good business to take advantage of these conditions.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the minister mean by the last statement he has just made that there was no assurance given by any department of government to these three companies, or any one of these three companies, that they are to do certain aerial surveys on behalf of the government of Canada, because if his answer is no, I will be tremendously surprised.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The answer is no.

Mr. Habel: You are the only one in the house; where are the other ministers?

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister would show the house all the contracts or letters or memoranda that exist between the government departments and any one of these three companies? Surely, none of these three companies would undertake the aerial photography of any part of our northern country without some written assurance by some department of government that they would be compensated for that work.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am informed that there was no commitment given to these companies. They were up there, conditions were favourable and they knew they had an opportunity to go ahead with what was expected originally to be a six-year program. They took advantage of favourable conditions to proceed with this work, to accelerate it and make savings for all concerned thereby.

I am quite sure their hope in proceeding that way was that payment would be accelerated. That is why, having accelerated the program, they come forward and offer the government the advantage of the work they have done and we recommend to the house that advantage be taken of it.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the minister has recently been in private business. If he had been, he would want more than a hope of being paid before he started on an expenditure of that type.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question since this item is one that concerns his department. I should like to know from him whether or not any of these companies—and they have been mentioned here as photographic air surveys—have been given any undertaking by officers of his department or by himself that they would get aerial contracts or that they could assume that they would receive contracts for topographical aerial surveys of Canada?

An hon. Member: Ask permission to answer first.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I get an answer from the minister?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): In the first place, Mr. Chairman, this is not in my department but in that of mines and technical surveys. In the second place, the answer is no.

Mr. Benidickson: We know that we had the minister with us a short time ago before our luncheon recess. I am surprised that he is not here to assist the Minister of Finance at the moment. In addition—and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources can deny it if I am wrong—it is my recollection that on all matters of this kind there is an interdepartmental committee so that when the government makes a purchase of this kind it will be an enterprise that will redound to the utmost benefit of as many as possible departments of the government. My understanding is that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is represented on this interdepartmental committee. I am sure that the officials of that department would report to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Perhaps the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is the acting minister of mines and technical surveys and therefore has a fairly good knowledge of this particular item.

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire from the minister who are the members of the interdepartmental committee dealing with this matter?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These are the departments that are represented on the committee: mines and technical surveys, northern affairs and national resources and national defence.

Mr. Denis: This situation reminds me of the one which arose before noon when the same question arose. I note that the citation in Beauchesne's parliamentary rules and forms is against the decision of the present government. May I be permitted to read part of this article which I did not use before noon. It applies perfectly to this case. I am quoting from paragraph 240 which reads as follows:

> Supplementary estimates . . . may be presented either:
> (I) for a further grant to a service already sanctioned and voted for,—
> Which is not the case here.
> —or (II) for a grant for a further occasion of expenditure arising where the estimates were presented:—
> Which is not the case here.
> —(a) for expenditure newly imposed on the executive by statute;—
> Which is not the case here.
> —(b) to such an unexpected emergency.

As far as the control of parliament is concerned, about which hon. members opposite were so fussy when they were in opposition, when they talked so much against the former government about freedom of speech and the sovereignty of parliament, it is my opinion that they do not practice what they preached while they were in opposition. In this particular case they doubled the amount of the original estimates. Does the Minister of Finance not think that he is going a little bit too far as far as this item is concerned?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Minister of Finance thinks it is good business to take advantage of this opportunity to make some economies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In this case he is fortified in that view by the fact that this contract contemplating a six-year program of air photography was fully disclosed to the committee which reviewed the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys at the last session. This information was brought to the attention of all hon. members.

To listen to some hon. gentlemen opposite one would think that this kind of situation is something brand new in experience. The fact is that this is not the first year we have had a program of aerial photography; that is far from being the case. There have been occasions—and not just one of them—where under the previous government favourable photographic conditions developed and a program of aerial photography and survey was accelerated in the same way as it was accelerated this past year. A great deal of smoke has been raised about this matter by hon. members opposite. There is nothing strange or unusual about it. These companies under that contract go up into the north and when the favourable conditions prevail they go ahead and do more than one-sixth of the total work; and they are quite prepared—indeed they are anxious—to sell to the government, in accordance with the terms of the contract, the benefits of that accelerated work. That is what is involved here. It is not a case of a commitment. It is not a case where the government has gone out and spent money or committed money without the approval of parliament at all. That is not the situation. This is a case where, with the fruits of an accelerated program available, the government is recommending to the house that the fruits of that program be purchased now; and, as I have indicated, this will be advantageous to all concerned and we think it good business to do it in this way.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister says it is not the case of a commitment. He said that in his closing remarks. But in his opening remarks he said it was a question of taking advantage of the opportunity to make economies. If the minister and the government are taking advantage of the opportunity of making economies, then there must be some understanding between these companies and the government. The question I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is a member of this interdepartmental committee, is this; and may I say that I wish he would pay attention to the question I am going to ask him. As he answered "no" to the question I put to him a moment ago, I now put this question to him. By that answer does he mean that no documents of any kind have been exchanged between these companies and the government or between these companies and any member of the interdepartmental committee, for future commitments or engagement of these services?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall vote 760 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Chairman, I want an answer to my question.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Chevrier: I think I am entitled—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Was the hon. member going to ask something?

Mr. Chevrier: No. I was going to insist on an answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There are no commitments. I have made inquiry and I am informed that there is no commitment but that one of these companies has gone so far with this program that it will be in financial difficulties if we do not take advantage of this opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But that is not the only reason. This is very good business for the government. We wish to see this work carried on and we wish to take advantage of the opportunity which has been presented to us.

I was asked earlier how the contracts with these companies were entered into. The main contract with these companies was arrived at by tender, but certain changes were negotiated in relation to photography in the Arctic archipelago. The contract to date involves certain payments. This present item will permit payments to the Spartan company of $1,325,000, and the photographic surveys company, $735,000. The balance of the item now submitted is for photography still to be examined and approved. The third company, Aero Surveys, has some work done but they did not participate to the extent that the other two companies did in the accelerated program.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, it follows from the answer which the minister has given that work has been ordered and commitments have been made to the extent of $1,325,000 for Spartan and $735,000 for Aero Surveys. If that is the case, then it looks to me as if there has been a commitment without an appropriation by parliament, and I therefore come back to my earlier question. I asked the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question, and I did not direct it to the Minister of Finance because the Minister of Finance is not a member of the interdepartmental committee. The Minister of Finance told me a moment ago that the three members of the interdepartmental committee on this committee were the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, I did not say "ministers". I said that they were the three departments which were represented on the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: That is quite right; I stand corrected to that extent, that the departments of mines, northern affairs and defence were members of this committee. Surely the minister who is sitting in his seat and who represents the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and who is a member of that committee, is in a position to answer the question which I asked a moment ago? The question I asked was this: When the minister made his answer to me that there was no commitment, does he mean there was no document of any kind exchanged between any of these three companies and the government?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, if this will make the hon. member for Laurier any happier, there is an interdepartmental committee and we discuss policy matters of this sort; but I know nothing of any exchange of documents. I imagine they would be handled by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys if there were.

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has insisted on trying to tell the committee that the government will make some saving by having this done much earlier than it was supposed to be done. I understand this is done under contract and the companies will be paid the same amount as if they had taken six years to do the job, so there are no savings by the government. I noticed in the minutes of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters that there was a question put on page 195 of the report of the meeting of Monday, March 16 last, by one member in regard to this item as follows:

—you mean that 50 per cent of the contract is completed?

We were told that 50 per cent of the contract was completed, so Mr. Pack of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys said:

Speaking generally, but not for each company. Generally speaking, 50 per cent is completed. It was considered as to whether or not we should hold the companies to the six-year plan or whether in view of the success which they had had we should take a more realistic approach.

As a result, we have now amended the contracts officially. It is our hope that the government will see fit to provide us with a rather large supplementary estimate by the end of this month which will completely reimburse the three companies concerned or the value of all of the photography they have done up until last October.

But this will not be any saving to the government. Of course, we are happy that this job will be completed much sooner than it was supposed to be completed, but early last fall the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys knew that 50 per cent of the job was completed, and as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River said, this amount could have been provided in the supplementary estimates of January last.

Mr. Caron: Furthermore, it was said a while ago that the committee speaks of contracts, and if there is a contract there must be a commitment. The minister says there was no commitment, but the committee speaks of a contract with this company.

Mr. Dumas: The minister mentioned an amount of $1,900,000 in the main estimates. Was that $1,900,000 voted to pay those three companies? Was that the full amount covering this job in the Arctic?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The sum was not provided entirely or exclusively for the work in the Arctic archipelago. Some of it was for work on the mainland.

Mr. Denis: Am I right in understanding from what the minister has said that the amount he just mentioned of $2,300,000 would be allocated? There would be no public tenders asked because, if the work is done, how can the minister then ask for tenders? There would be no tenders at all; is that right?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think my hon. friend followed what I have been saying. There were original contracts awarded to these three firms to undertake this work on a six-year basis.

Mr. Denis: For what amount?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The total amount ran to something like $6 million. That was the total program. I am, of course, giving round figures now, according to my recollection. It was expected at one time when the contract was entered into that this would work out on a fairly uniform annual basis, but for the reasons I have indicated the work was expedited. My hon. friend asks about tenders for this work. These were the three companies which were successful as a result of the tenders and were assigned the work. Therefore it is a question of operating within the original contractual arrangements between the parties following the original tender.

Mr. Dumas: How many companies tendered for these contracts?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I cannot give my friend the answer, but he knows perhaps better than I do the fact that there are not likely to be many companies in a position to undertake this work in that area. I cannot give him the answer to that question offhand. I can look it up and see if there were any others, but it would not surprise me if these were the only companies that tendered, and the work was shared among them.

Mr. Cardin: Despite the very valiant efforts of the Minister of Finance to answer the questions which have been asked, there seems to be in some minds, certainly in mine, a great deal of confusion as to whether or not there was any commitment. I wonder if I might make the suggestion to the minister that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys come in, because I understand that is under his department and I am sure he would be in a position to answer the question we really want to ask.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am giving to the committee the information which I have. That is the information I have on this subject. I have given the answer to this question on three occasions, now.

Mr. Chevrier: Much as we like the Minister of Finance in the circumstances we would prefer to hear the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Caron: I think we need still more clarification. First of all, the minister said that there was no commitment at all, and then a while ago he said tenders have been asked for and contracts given. Is there not something of a commitment, when the government has asked for tenders and given a contract?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is thinking of something quite different.

Mr. Caron: How can the minister say such things to the committee? When he was sitting on this side of the house he was the first to protest if he did not get the information he required. Now he refuses to give us the information which we need before we can vote on this item. Instead he tries to pass on all kinds of answers which are not true.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member is now reaching a point where I must ask him to reflect on what he is saying. I was asked whether there were any commitments with respect to the amounts the house is now asked to approve. I have given the answer. There were no commitments. The hon. member is now talking about something quite different. I think this is about the sixth time I have said this, and I had hoped we would not need to go over the same ground again. I made it quite clear that these firms went into the Arctic under the terms of a contract. They have now gone beyond the work which was contemplated and they offer the results of this work to the government, and we now ask that authorization be given so that we may have the results of that survey work now, without waiting.

Mr. Caron: If the Minister of Finance had said that some time ago we might have had an idea what he meant.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said it a dozen times.

Mr. Caron: Now the minister has explained what he means by commitments and what he means by tenders and what he means by contracts. I admit that my English is not as good as that of some hon. members, but the terms contract, commitment and tenders have something very similar about them.

Mr. Stearns: Could the minister tell us for how many years all the government aerial photography work has been divided among these three companies?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The year 1958 was the second year of the contracts with the three companies.

Mr. Stearns: Do I understand that before that time, for the past 15 or 20 years, these three firms were the only ones which had been able to provide this service to the country?

Mr. Fleming (Eglington): I am afraid my information does not extend back over that period of time.

Mr. Pearson: One other question, and I think this will probably summarize our views on this matter: is it a fact that this amount is being asked for in connection with work which is now largely completed, and that if this appropriation is not passed, one of the companies which is doing this work without remuneration would perhaps go into bankruptcy.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We were informed that the company, having gone so far, would be in a shaky position and might have difficulty in continuing to complete the balance of the work over the remaining period. Naturally, as I said earlier, the government is interested in seeing this task completed. We do not wish this work to fail to reach completion if we can avoid it, and it happens that there are other advantages to us, now, as I have indicated in entering on this proposed basis.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

I was asked earlier about the number of companies which tendered, and my recollection, or conjecture, was correct. These three companies were the only ones to tender originally, and the work was divided among them.

Mr. Hellyer: Is the minister now informing the house that there are no savings as such to the government if we pay for the services now as opposed to paying in the next fiscal year, but that the saving is, in fact, accruing to the company?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There will, of course, be advantage to the companies in being paid now for the work already done instead of their having to wait a year or two years until that work catches up with the period contemplated under the original contract. There is also an advantage to the treasury in having the work completed earlier than the contract date.

Mr. Hellyer: The minister referred to other advantages, and I wondered what they were.

Mr. Dinsdale: All the time during which this discussion has been taking place my memory has been trying to recall a similar discussion which took place on a similar item back in 1955. I have now obtained a copy of Hansard for that year. I find, also, that the same discussion took place in 1956. The question propounded in 1955 related to the following item:

> Payments to Royal Canadian Air Force and commercial companies for air photography, and to defray the expenses of and the purchase of equipment by the interdepartmental committee on air surveys—further amount required, $1,200,000.

It seems to me that this item is similar to the item we are discussing at the present moment.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a question? Did that discusssion take place during consideration of the main estimates or of the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Dinsdale: As I understand it, it was on the supplementary or the further supplementary estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: What was the date?

Mr. Dinsdale: March 25, 1955. I think it is a further supplementary estimate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Those are the final supplementary estimates in March, just before the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. Dinsdale: The question asked was precisely the question which has been raised by members of the opposition here this afternoon, and in reply the former minister of finance, Mr. Harris, said:

As I think hon. members know, we have been carrying out a program of aerial photography in Canada, and estimates are made in advance of the amount of work expected to be done during the coming flying season. Last year happened to be a particularly good year in some parts and not so good in others. The contract for the photography was carried out not entirely to the extent that had been expected. In addition to that aerial photography, however, the people concerned were able to take photographs not of the area that had been set out but of other areas, and when they completed their work the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys realized that the photography that was being offered at that moment was of an area which they would have on their program in a few years and they might as well acquire it now. That accounts for the fact that they purchased this additional amount of aerial photography during 1954-55.

So it seems there is precedent.

Mr. Pearson: I doubt whether a precedent is established, but even if it is, the questions asked by the opposition in those days were perfectly reasonable ones. Fortunately for the government, the minister at that time knew the answers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am struck by the similarity of the answer given by Mr. Harris in March 1955 to the answers given today by the Minister of Finance, and I am more than interested to recall, Mr. Chairman, that in that debate the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was parliamentary assistant to the minister of finance.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the Minister of Finance this afternoon has a better understanding of the technique of getting estimates through the committee than he previously displayed. I wish to suggest to him that one way of rendering it extremely difficult to get his estimates through is to suggest that the questions being brought up by the opposition are raised as smoke. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris indicated that this was something that exercised the minds of members of the Conservative party when they were in opposition. This is something about which they wanted more early information. When they spoke about these things the public had every reason to believe that should they ever form the administration they would practice what they preached at that time. Instead of that the minister will not admit that parliament is not being treated with proper respect when he presented to the committee on January 30 supplementary estimates without making reference to this point. That was the question I raised.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris did not indicate and I do not recall whether we had supplementary estimates in the session to which he referred prior to the presentation of this item on March 25 but I do submit that the Minister of Finance indicated that work had been done. Indeed, he said that most of it had been done due to favourable conditions last summer. He then went on to abuse the opposition by simply raising smoke that had no significance.

At this time I invite the minister to admit that this is not a wise practice. I should like to know if he is still of the opinion he advertised, as did the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, when they were on this side of the house and if he would give an undertaking that in another year he would avoid as much as possible bringing in at a later stage than he could have brought in proposed estimates for the committee of supply. I believe that is the essential point.

The other matter is that the minister has very noticeably retracted from the position he originally took.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not at all.

Mr. Benidickson: I refer to the fact that he talked originally of economies in connection with what is being proposed under this item. After the hon. member for Villeneuve reported on information that was available in the committee on mines and resources the minister changed his tune.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He did nothing of the kind.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister now talks in terms of advantages. He does not mean the kind of advantage which I would imagine is the chief advantage. However, he spoke of an advantage rather than an economy, introducing a new word. I think there would be some advantage in getting this information for Canada earlier than would be provided for if it were lengthened for a six-year term. That is not what the committee was told.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is what the committee was told.

Mr. Benidickson: If the hon. member will examine his Hansard he will find he emphasized there was an economy that would accrue in connection with this extra appropriation. That has not proven to be the case. The work was done on contract. Certainly the minister's final description was more appropriate when he referred to an advantage.

If the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and the Minister of Finance were speaking sincerely when on this side of the chamber they indicated to the country that things would be different if they sat to the right of the Speaker, I suggest that next year we will not have from the Minister of Finance at the end of the fiscal year appropriations in the supplementary estimates that are 120 per cent of the original estimate presented to the committee.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, if I may be allowed a further word on that point I would say I believe the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has implied that I went further in my observations and indicated that I was unhappy with this procedure. That is not indicated by the Hansard record. I was merely inquiring about the additional expenditures. If I had read further I would have noted that Mr. Harris went on to explain that the procedure was in the interest of economy and we came to the conclusion that it was justifiable under the circumstances. We were a very reasonable and constructive opposition.

Mr. Denis: By reading further down the hon. gentleman would have observed that the then leader of the Conservative party criticized the situation at that time.

Mr. Dinsdale: No, that was the end of the discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, there is one little point the hon. member for Brandon-Souris brought up on which I should like to comment. I have just been listening to this discussion which seemed to me to develop from the explanation given by the minister. The minister is now taking great credit to himself for having parroted Mr. Harris' explanation which Mr. Harris understood, but there seems to be this difference. I may not have understood correctly and if I am wrong I, of course, unlike the minister am always perfectly willing to admit it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are a great man.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris read Mr. Harris' explanation that in some areas the weather was not good and therefore it was not possible to carry out photography in some areas under contract but that in other areas not covered by contract photography was undertaken and this vote was for the purpose of buying the photographs taken in areas not covered by the contract. I just heard the reading of this and had no previous knowledge of it but I believe that is the sense of what the hon. member read. If I understood the Minister of Finance he did not tell us that. He said there was such extraordinarily good weather everywhere that a whole lot was done. There does seem to have been a specific contract in 1955 in the case to which Mr. Harris referred for a specific area. What is there in this case? What is there in the original contract? If the minister had complied with the request of the hon. members for Trinity and Laurier an hour ago and produced the original contract and read it to us no doubt the committee would not have had to ask all the questions that have been asked.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

A—Department—

National health branch—

762. Administration of the Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act—further amount required, $47,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, this vote involves a jurisdiction that is shared by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice has been declaring policy which traditionally has generally been reposed in the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I refer particularly to the treatment of drug addicts.

The Minister of Justice has made no less than two statements that have come to my attention through the press in the last few months indicating that the government was giving consideration to the setting up of treatment centres for drug addicts. Can the Minister of Finance say whether or not any of this money is to be used for that purpose, directly or indirectly? What is the government's policy? Does it propose to establish treatment centres on its own or in co-operation with the provinces or does it simply propose to give financial assistance to the provinces for this purpose? I have in mind particularly the situation in British Columbia where there has been displayed a more than ordinary interest in this matter. Does the Minister of Finance think that his great knowledge of the problems of the government of Canada will enable him to give an answer to this all-important question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there is no provision in this item for treatment centres. This additional sum is required to pay legal fees, court costs and other services as clearly appears on page 20 of the details. This arises out of a higher level of enforcement activity during the year.

The committee will, I think, be interested to know that in 1958 there were 522 convictions under the Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act as compared with 454 in 1957 and 391 in 1956.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, that reply, such as it is, is acceptable but the reply of the minister indicates the weakness of the procedure of which he now wishes to be recognized as the author, namely that the Minister of Finance in connection with all these matters shall reply to questions on behalf of all his colleagues.

The point made by the Minister of Justice was that instead of using lawyers and courts for the purpose of punishing drug addicts, consideration might be given to the use of these facilities for determining whether or not in individual cases the punishment should consist of confinement in prison or whether it should consist of assigning the person concerned to a hospital for special treatment. I do not expect the Minister of Finance to answer this question, which assumes a certain amount of special training and knowledge which, in the face of his great and onerous responsibilities, he cannot be expected to acquire; but it does indicate the unsatisfactory procedure which the minister pursued last night and is pursuing today in persisting, notwithstanding the obvious discomfort of which he has been the victim.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; on the contrary, I have been completely comfortable.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that he is completely comfortable. His imperturbability is admirable, but I must say that this imperturbability does not in any way satisfy the legitimate demands of those of us in the house who are asking questions. The only way we could get a satisfactory answer would be to permit the minister to continue in his imperturbable state, but to have associated with that the superior departmental knowledge of his colleagues who might reply to these various questions. How satisfactory it would be if the Minister of National Health and Welfare was in his seat today and the Minister of Justice, to supplement information which the Minister of Finance quite obviously has not been able to give. What the Minister of Finance has is certain answers to certain obvious questions. He has given a partial reply now, but we have had a continuous exhibition since last night of the weakness of this procedure. Questions have been put on northern affairs and, even with the minister sitting by, there has not been a full invitation to that minister to reply. Last night we had the Minister of Agriculture so anxious to take part in this debate but denied that opportunity—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a wonderful act you are putting on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —by the Minister of Finance. Then, we have the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, who is always so eager to give the house information, sitting in his seat here but denied likewise the opportunity. I am sure the Minister of Transport would have been happy to answer many of the questions dealing with aerial photography and surveys.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It has nothing to do with his department.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, it has.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, it has.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is only because of my long association with the Minister of Finance, for whom I have the highest personal regard, and whose advancement not only in government but in public life is as dear to me as it is to another classmate, the hon. member for Laurier, and others who want to see the hon. gentleman enshrined in Canadian history, that I ask him hereafter to recognize the limitations of his great capacities, limitations that deny us and the people of Canada the kind of information without which it is not possible successfully to prosecute our respective duties in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, my dear and hon. friend never put on a better act in his life than he has put on this afternoon.

Item agreed to.

Welfare branch—

763. Welfare branch administration—further amount required, $18,500.

Mr. Broome: I would like to make a couple of observations under this item, particularly as to whether the Department of National Health and Welfare are carrying out investigations into whether there might be the possibility of pensions being paid to pensioners outside of the country? I know there are tremendous administrative problems involved, particularly in connection with safeguards to ensure that the eligible pensioner is the only person who receives the pension cheque and, if the pensioner dies, the pension is stopped. There must be means by which the various departments of government that have pensions that are paid outside of this country control this problem now. I am sure it is a problem that would be within the administrative capacity of the department to solve.

I also note the fact that the residence qualifications have been reduced to 10 years. I can readily see that a person could come here, work 10 years, be eligible for a pension payment and then leave the country, if pensions were paid to Canadian citizens outside the country. But I would point out to the department that it is not necessary to tie the same Canadian residence rule to the right to draw the pension outside the country as it is to the right to draw the pension within the country. The right to draw a pension outside the country could be made to depend upon 20 years' residence. This might be something that would not be acceptable to everybody.

There is also the fact that when pensions are paid outside of the country, particularly when they are paid in commonwealth countries, those countries would obtain Canadian currency which would return to this country in the form of an increase in foreign trade. The department might start to consider some of the problems involved so that if and when the government does consider it is something to be put before the house, the department would be ready to take care of their problems.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have sat here very quietly for a number of hours, but I cannot resist rising to compliment the hon. member for Vancouver South on supporting a long time policy of this group, namely the payment of old age security cheques outside Canada to Canadian citizens who are entitled to that consideration. I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that he is able to influence his colleagues in the Progressive Conservative party and that the members of the cabinet will listen to the voice of some of their members from British Columbia. I find that the members from that province are a few steps ahead of some of their colleagues from central and eastern Canada. I do urge the minister to bring those representations of the hon. member for Vancouver South to the particular attention of the cabinet so that early consideration may be given to his request, based on our long time policy.

Item agreed to.

764. Reduction in the amount owing by the old age security fund pursuant to section 11 of the Old Age Security Act in an amount equal to the amount of outstanding temporary loans made by the Minister of Finance to the fund before the 1st day of April, 1959, estimated at, $184,000,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, there are two points arising out of this important vote. First of all, the other day the government tabled at long last the Clark report, which consisted of an examination of the old age and survivors program in the United States. It will be remembered that this report had its genesis in the observation made by the Prime Minister during the course of an election that he favoured the United States system either in supplement of what we already had under our universal old age security system or as a replacement.

[Mr. Broome.]

It would be very interesting if the Minister of Finance would tell us whether or not the government has yet perused the two volumes prepared by Dr. Clark; whether or not, as a result of all the factual information given in that report, the government has been able yet to arrive at a policy; whether or not the Prime Minister has had a confirmation of his election judgments and when we may expect the government to take action or not to take action. After all, we were promised this in 1958. The report was to be ready in four months and although it has taken over 14 months to get the report, in view of the fact that the Department of National Health and Welfare has practically all of his information now within its resources, perhaps the Minister of Finance would be able to give us information of its policy in the matter of the United States old age survivors program.

The second observation I should like to make is with regard to the amount contained in the supplementary estimates of $184 million for old age security. Now, this item represents a reduction of the deficit in the old age security fund. It is a lower estimate than that provided for the prospective deficit of the fund. The Minister of Finance, when he presented his budget on June 17, 1958, said at page 1240 of Hansard:

—We shall also be required to meet the increased deficit in the old age security fund which will be about $190 million in this fiscal year.

The actual deficit up to the end of January, 1959 was $158.8 million, and in recent months the deficit has been running at a rate slightly in excess of $15 million monthly. It therefore follows that the original estimate which the Minister of Finance made of $190 million is very close to reality. I, therefore, ask the minister, why is the government making a provision of $184 million, at least $6 million less than the prospective deficit and the deficit which he, himself, predicted? I am sure that the minister must have a reason. It is true that this is a statutory item and that there will be no refusal to pay this money to the old age security pensioners whether or not we pass this item in its present amount of $184 million. This amount seems to be short of what will ultimately be required. It does seem the minister owes the house an explanation as to why he has not fulfilled his own prognostication because this amount is short by at least $6 million.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The report submitted by Dr. Clark is under examination and government policy in regard to that subject will be announced at the proper time. In so far as the amount is concerned, the figure of $184 million represents the estimate of the deficit at March 31, 1959 in respect of the present fiscal year. We are in a position, naturally, to make a more precise estimate in March than we were in June. It happens that now we find the estimate is likely to be $6 million less than appeared to be required when the budget was brought down on June 17.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It could not be because the minister, anticipating the introduction of his budget, is hoping to be able to portray at that time a smaller figure of government expenditures, knowing full well of course that he will always be able, under the statutory authority that exists, to provide additional moneys for the old age pensioners at a later date. The minister could easily take the position in regard to statutory items, that we shall only ask, up until the end of the fiscal year, for a certain amount, and when we bring in the budget we will refer only to the actual expenditures. Could it be that kind of consideration was in the mind of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend has a great time in dreaming up bogeymen. I can only repeat to him that at this time the best estimate that we can give the committee, based upon the best advice available, is that the deficit in this fund for the present fiscal year will be $184 million, not $190 million.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

National parks branch—

765. National parks and historic sites services—administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $284,279.

Mr. Fisher: On February 18 in this house the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, on page 1146 of Hansard, said this in relation to information on the hiring of employees for national parks:

> The information is in the possession of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. He tells me that he is prepared to stand up in the house and, if it is required, bring the whole matter to the attention of the house. I am going to ask him to do that in view of the statements made and questions asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

It seems to me that this is the proper place for us to remind the minister and the member for Brandon-Souris of the obligation to make this explanation of the particular hiring practices which agitated the house for some time a few months ago.

Mr. Robichaud: While the hon. member for Brandon-Souris is taking time to reflect upon whether or not he is going to give an answer, I may say that I notice the amount for this item is $284,279, and that is quite a substantial amount to be requested in supplementary estimates. In looking over the details, I find that $13,506 is directed toward payments for telephones and telegrams. Can the minister give us a further explanation of the reason for requiring $13,506 for telephones and telegrams for this branch when the amount in the main estimates was only $25,130? Would the minister think the increase of 50 per cent might be represented in the increased telegrams sent out by the department to confirm the appointment of employees who had been appointed to national parks through political partisanship?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, I am afraid my friend has misconjectured again. This increase arises out of the expanded works programs, including the winter works projects. This has necessitated a large volume of rapid communications, that is to say, communications by telephone and telegram in order to avoid delays in the work. In addition to that new telephones have been installed since April 1, and there has been a recent increase in the rates charged.

Mr. Fisher: The main estimates for the department have been passed so far as national parks are concerned, and I certainly doubt that they would have been passed at the time if we had not had that assurance from the minister that we would get an explanation later from the member for Brandon-Souris. I would very much welcome that explanation at this time.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am quite happy to oblige the hon. member for Port Arthur. I am very interested in his morbid curiosity about this matter. I think I can dispose of it in a very brief reply. I believe the former member for Dauphin could enlighten the hon. member on this score if he would care to write a letter to him. Actually, as I read the discussion that took place around this subject on the occasion referred to by the hon. member, it seemed to me that the minister of northern affairs has given the necessary details. As to any additional information I might give, all I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that there is no problem. The hiring is being done through the national employment service.

I might give a little background information on that score. We took the initiative in this regard early last October when the winter works projects for national parks in Manitoba were announced. The minister was in communication with us. In the city of Brandon we have a very active winter works campaign committee. As a matter of fact that committee undertook and completed the most successful winter employment activities of any similar committee across the country.

Our unemployment picture was much better this year than it was last year. In an organization meeting at the end of November, I believe it was, we discussed this matter of the plan for winter works projects, and I informed the members of the committee, and it is so inscribed in the minutes of that meeting, that I would have this matter dealt with on my return to Ottawa.

We returned to Ottawa early in January, and within a week of parliament assembling we had met with the minister of northern affairs and the necessary instructions had gone out regularizing the employment activities for Riding Mountain national park. I think that pretty well completes the story so far as I am concerned.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the hon. member a question that was posed last February by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. Did the hon. member for Brandon-Souris make these representations to the minister acquiescing in a new scheme before or after this publicity in January or the complaint of the Brandon winter employment committee in December?

Mr. Dinsdale: Quite. We first began to deal with this matter in October. It came before the winter work committee in November. At that time I indicated that one of my first duties in Ottawa would be to clear up any difficulties remaining, and that was done at the earliest possible moment. The hon. member has referred to a news story which appeared first as a radio story over radio and television station CKX and it was later repeated in the Winnipeg Free Press under the byline of James Struthers. Mr. Struthers is news editor of the radio and television station in Brandon.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member has just referred to this committee in Brandon which he says in respect of these matters is working satisfactorily and is a reputable committee. But as reported at page 1144 of Hansard the minister had this to say about a committee in Brandon which presumably is the one to which my hon. friend now refers in such glowing terms. The minister said:

> It is not new to us to have a group of people as in the city of Brandon deliberately set out to build up a news story, as they did, and to get it published in the newspapers and over the radio in Winnipeg, with the sole purpose of trying to smear a government which has made an effort to increase the standards of employment in the parks. With that information I think the house can take for granted the opinion which we hold of this group of men who deliberately set out to do such a thing.
> Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister a question? Can he tell the committee who composes the group of men he talks about?

The minister said that when the hon. member for Brandon-Souris was in his seat he would inform the house about this group and who were in the party in Brandon. That is the group presumably to which the hon. member has now referred in glowing terms.

Mr. Dinsdale: I should not like to leave that impression on the record. The winter work committee has nothing to do with the committee referred to by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I rather suspect he was referring to the Liberal executive in Brandon which became involved in these discussions. I am not going to interject that note into the discussion here this afternoon but certain statements were made in the press from that source. I would presume that was the committee referred to by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It had nothing whatever to do with the winter work committee which is a voluntary group of citizens who give of their time without remuneration in order to relieve the seasonal slump in employment that has been a part of our Canadian economic picture, mostly arising from severe winter weather conditions.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, we were talking at that time on February 18 about winter employment and about arrangements for the hiring of men in connection with this particular park. Surely there was no question in the mind of the minister that when this report was made it was made to a committee in Brandon which was concerned with that activity. If the minister was thinking of some other committee, he should at least be a little bit more careful in his words in the House of Commons on matters of this kind. He cast a serious reflection on a committee which he did not designate by name but which in our minds was a committee dealing with unemployment problems. Now the hon. member, some weeks later, said it was not that committee at all that the minister was talking about but that it was some other committee. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that at least the minister should be more careful in his references to these matters.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. Surely the Leader of the Opposition would do the committee the courtesy of reading his second question on that day and my answer which I will read for the record. It is to be found at page 1146 of Hansard and is as follows:

> I am almost positive that it is not the body known as the winter employment committee.

I think this reflection he has made on my remarks on that occasion, insinuating that I left the impression that this was the winter work committee, is improper and not pleasing to make in this chamber.

Mr. Pearson: I will read whatever the minister wants me to read on this matter. I do not want to do him an injustice. I asked him a question as follows:

> May I ask the minister a question? Can he tell the committee who composes the group of men he talks about?

I have already put that on record. He answered that question in this way:

> Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris is not in his seat. He knows the story and when the apropriate time comes possibly I will ask him to tell the house just exactly who were in that party, who they are and what positions they hold in the Liberal party.

Mr. Chairman, we were talking at that time in this house about a committee in Brandon dealing with winter employment. If the minister had in mind some other group of Liberal politicians in Brandon he should have made it perfectly clear that he was distinguishing between that group and any citizens committee. I am not doing him any injustice at all when I say that he left in our minds at that time the impression that that was the committee about which he was talking, but the hon. member now has said that it was not.

Mr. Dinsdale: On that point, Mr. Chairman, may I say that it is unfortunate that I was not in my place when this subject came up for discussion previously. Had I been in my place I am sure that this misunderstanding would not have occurred. As a matter of fact, I was in Manitoba taking part in a series of brotherhood banquets in connection with the activities of the Canadian council of Christians and Jews. I think this might be the appropriate note—I refer to the note of brotherhood—on which to conclude this discussion here this afternoon.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Everyone knows that there is no one who embodies in his own person the concept of brotherhood more effectively than does the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. But apparently some of his colleagues have a different conception of brotherhood. In their case it does not extend to the brotherhood of man as apparently it did on the occasion of which the hon. gentleman spoke in Brandon under the auspices of the organization to which he referred.

Mr. Dinsdale: We invited the hon. member to be with us.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, my hon. friend is quite right, he invited me to go with him. If I had gone, undoubtedly he and I might have expressed the same concept of brotherhood which might not have been fully acceptable to some persons. I ask the hon. member—because he is the senior member from Manitoba, I believe—if he cannot enlighten us on another aspect of the grievance to which in principle the Leader of the Opposition has now directed our attention. When the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River spoke on February 18 he had a number of grievances in this respect. I referred to this particular question myself when I spoke on the address and I mentioned it last night, hoping that we would get some response from the Minister of Finance. But the Minister of Finance who, as I say, is heavily charged with other matters, could not give us an answer to this question. He looked knowingly at the seat—which was vacant last night—occupied by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris who undoubtedly was away on responsible business. It may have been a brotherhood meeting; I do not know. Then he looked over at the hon. member for Marquette. Undoubtedly he too last night was, as he is now, engaged in the furtherance of brotherhood. But the particular grievance which the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River had in mind, and which I had in mind last night and have now in mind, is the situation which prevailed in another Manitoba riding. That situation was brought to our attention by an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press dated January 12, 1959, and the heading of it was "I Hand Out the Jobs says Minnedosa Tory". This article appeared also in the Winnipeg Tribune of January 14 and it bears this headline: "Three M.P.'s Pick Needy for Park Project Jobs".

Is it true that a Conservative member of parliament who has no hesitation in designating himself as a Tory, says, "I hand out the jobs"; if that is the situation in Brandon, surely the hon. genleman when he next speaks on brotherhood ought to go into other ridings and speak on brotherhood there, because jobs should be given not only to Tories but to all Canadian citizens.

Mr. Dinsdale: I must add a further word, Mr. Chairman, following the hon. member's comment. I did take pains to investigate the story to which he has referred, and I was informed that much of the information in that story with reference to the three members who handed out jobs was not derived from the source indicated, that is, from Mr. Weir, but was based on an inside knowledge of what used to take place in that area.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member confirm or deny the accuracy of a report that the labour council in Brandon, which is not, presumably, a Liberal organization, had forwarded a protest to Walter Dinsdale over the current method of allocating labour for winter work at Riding Mountain national park?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I did receive the protest. That protest arose over the story which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press, but which was first reported both on radio and television early in January. The Brandon labour council based their protest entirely on those stories and the facts contained in the story were not entirely correct as I have indicated. I checked the situation when I was back in the west and all the information was not given. All the details were not given by the man concerned, and it indicated some inside information from other sources. Where that inside information came from I do not know and I am not going to impute any motives, but it was not obtained from the source indicated in the story.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member says he got no such protest?

Mr. Dinsdale: I said I did receive such a protest based on the story.

Mr. Pearson: In other words, the member did receive a protest from the labour council in regard to allocating labour in this area, irrespective of the basis of the story, and it was a protest from the labour council of Brandon. The hon. member also said that the words attributed to Mr. Weir, which appeared in more than one newspaper, are not accurate; but they were quotations attributed to Mr. Weir?

Mr. Dinsdale: That is the information I have, that all the details of that story were not quite accurate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the hon. member for Brandon-Souris if Mr. Weir has ever publicly denied that story?

Mr. Dinsdale: I cannot say whether he has or not. My only basis of knowledge would be to see such denial in the public press, and I have never seen it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the hon. member one other question. I do not want to do him an injustice but did I understand him to say in his earlier statement that Mr. Weir had been appointed to give out these jobs before the present government came into office? I think he said that he found this was the practice before the present government came into office. Is he suggesting that Mr. Weir was doing this before the present government came into office, or how did Mr. Weir come to be doing it?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, we are now beating old straw because I have read the Hansard report of the discussion back in February, and I believe that information was all placed on the record by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I have been a member for Brandon-Souris since 1951, and I do know that the only employment area in Manitoba that operated outside the national employment service was that which operated in connection with the hiring of casual or seasonal employees at Clear Lake. That is why I suggested to my hon. friend from Fort William that if he would communicate with the former member for Dauphin he would be able to receive some enlightenment on certain aspects of this matter, because we used to try to resolve the difficulty. We could not resolve the difficulty in the first year of office of the new government. The old practice continued, and I was very unhappy about it. We took the initiative and the matter is now resolved. All the hiring is done through the national employment service, and quite recently even the Liberal association at Brandon made the statement to the press that everything was rosy in the garden in this respect.

Mr. Fisher: Then can the member state flatly that the bad old Liberal ways of doing things in this particular area are gone, and as far as he is concerned gone forever?

Mr. Dinsdale: This was the last resort and it has gone.

Mr. Fisher: Did the member in northern Manitoba who was associated with him act in the way the Liberals used to?

Mr. Dinsdale: No. I have a press statement from the manager of the local employment office in Brandon to this effect:

> Mr. Bain said a meeting to discuss Riding Mountain hiring methods was recently held in Ottawa at the instigation of local M.P. Walter Dinsdale. He said Mr. Dinsdale is quite concerned over charges that men are being hired for the project because of their political affiliation.

He said that steps were being taken to see that the national employment office is in charge of placing all workers hired at the Riding Mountain national park. That story appeared in the press some weeks ago.

Mr. Fisher: Just in closing, Mr. Chairman, since I brought this matter up originally and have been back to it several times over with other people as well, I would like to apologize if it has resulted in any embarrassment to the member. I would like to remind the hon. member that we have had several instances in my own riding which made me suspicious of this particular thing, especially in so far as the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport are concerned. It was that suspicion which led me to question him; it was no reflection on him at all.

Forestry branch—

Forestry operations division—

767. Contributions to the provinces for assistance in forest inventory, reforestation and forest fire protection in accordance with agreements that have been or may be entered into by Canada and the provinces—further amount required, $190,000.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in this vote, the contributions to the provinces for assistance in forest inventory, reforestation and forest fire protection in accordance with agreements that have been or may be entered into by Canada and the provinces. Here is another further amount of $190,000 required, $150,000 with respect to forest inventory, and $40,000 with respect to reforestation. We support this increase wholeheartedly, and we support the policy wholeheartedly. But in view of the fact that there are agreements made with the provinces with respect to expenditures on forest inventory and reforestation, could the minister inform the house if this extra money is required because there have been more agreements signed, or is it because various provinces have undertaken more work in this connection this year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is the latter, Mr. Chairman. The provinces have gone ahead with projects approved under the terms of the federal-provincial forestry agreements involving increased expenditure for the provinces.

Mr. Herridge: One other question. I am very interested in this question because I have seen some of the inventories being taken. What does the federal department do to make certain that the inventories in question have been undertaken in the way designated by the agreement?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of course, Mr. Chairman, it is the responsibility of the federal government, the department concerned, to satisfy itself that the expenditures made by the provinces for which reimbursement is claimed from the federal government have been properly made in accordance with the provisions of the agreements.

Mr. Herridge: In that connection, does the federal government have an official or an inspector make a check on the area concerned with respect to the inventory? In what way does the department receive an assurance that the area with which the inventory is concerned has been completely covered, and that the inventory has been scientifically secured?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there are, I am informed, no federal inspectors on the ground. This is done by aerial survey, and the aerial surveys are closely checked by federal officers.

Mr. Herridge: This may be partly done by aerial surveys, but I have been with parties who have been conducting ground surveys of the timber stands, so this work must be done partly by air and partly by ground survey teams. I have been with parties conducting these checks.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know whether in respect to this item there was any agreement entered upon with the province of Quebec concerning a forest inventory and forest fire protection.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The province of Quebec is not a party to the agreement in respect of the forest inventory and reforestation and it is these two matters which are covered by the further amount required.

Mr. Deschatelets: Does that mean that the province of Quebec is the only province which does not benefit from these grants?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The province of Newfoundland is not a party to either of these programs. The province of New Brunswick is a party to one, namely forest inventory, and the province of Prince Edward Island to one, namely reforestation. Alberta is a party to one, namely the inventory. The other five provinces are parties to both agreements.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the minister inform the house if at any time since this government came to power there has been any communication with the authorities of the province of Quebec in respect to these grants either by letter, telephone or telegram?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is an agreement with the province of Quebec in respect to forest fire protection, but the agreement does not extend to the two categories here mentioned, namely forest inventory and reforestation. One cannot say that in any discussions between officials this matter may not have come up, but we are not aware of any official communication on behalf of the government of the province in relation to the two matters now under discussion.

Mr. Deschatelets: Will you permit me a few comments at this point, Mr. Chairman? We are dealing here with one aspect of the fiscal relations between Ottawa and Quebec, and the reason we are pressing for an agreement to be reached concerning all these grants, including those covered by this item 767, is because, first of all, these grants are badly needed and, secondy, because the Minister of Finance himself, as well as the 50 Conservative members from Quebec, have made a firm commitment with the citizens of the province of Quebec to solve the difficulties arising out of the negative stand taken by the premier of Quebec in his dealings with the federal government.

We now have evidence that nothing has been done to solve these problems, and we also have evidence that all the other provinces are benefiting from these grants. It therefore appears to us that in spite of these promises the situation is perhaps worse than it has ever been, and for this reason—that there is now more confusion because of the fact that there are now 50 Quebec Conservative members who are seeking their instructions from Mr. Duplessis—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not think the hon. member can continue along those lines.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like you to point out now, Mr. Chairman, on what basis and under what rule the statement which has just been made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont is out of order, because I think—

The Deputy Chairman: Because the hon. member imputed motives and because he is referring to a provincial matter.

Mr. Chevrier: He has not imputed motives. He has said what he thinks of the attitude of the premier of another province, and making that statement cannot be interpreted as an imputation of motives.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely, if I may add a word, after the display we had from the Prime Minister on Monday about the premier of another province, the chairman is not going to deny to a humble backbencher the right to refer to the premier of Quebec.

The Deputy Chairman: I did not stop the hon. member for referring to him—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is the point not this? It is a question of whether it is or is not a breach of the privileges of the house to say that any hon. member in his actions here is simply doing what somebody outside the house has told him to do. We have had this matter up before, and my understanding is that it has been ruled to be a breach of privilege to say that hon. members in their actions here are simply doing what they are told to do by someone outside.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member did not refer to any individual member. If he had done so it might have been different. He referred to 50 or 51 members, and I do not think the rule is the same in these circumstances. Certainly there was no imputation or motive to the premier of the province, and I think that is what the chairman had in mind.

Mr. Deschatelets: In my remarks I had in mind, of course—and this is a fact which cannot be denied—that when a question connected with federal grants to the province of Quebec has arisen we have seen in many instances 20 or 25 Quebec Conservative members leave the house in order to avoid taking a stand.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Highly improper!

The Deputy Chairman: I do not see that has any relevance at all to this question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is wrong with the statement that has just been made by the hon. gentleman? He has stated as a matter of fact that a number of representatives from the province of Quebec seated on the government benches decided not to join in a particular vote. That is a fact.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A highly improper statement!

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What can be wrong in the hon. member saying so? He is making an argument and he is adducing certain facts in support of that argument. The chairman has just told him he cannot do it. We can be called to order but we have the right to argue the point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: What the Chair is saying is that what the hon. member is talking about is not relevant to vote 767.

Mr. Chevrier: But it is, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, is not this the fact: there is a plain rule of this committee that no hon. member may reflect upon the vote of another hon. member? That is precisely what is involved here The hon. member who has been speaking as you correctly said, if I may say so, is talking about something quite apart from what is now under discussion and he has no right to reflect on the vote of any hon. member on any subject.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, no one is reflecting on a vote. The remarks that have been made refer to the refusal of certain hon. members to vote but there is no reflection on the vote of any hon. members.

Mr. Pickersgill: Shirking their duty.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this point. There seems to be a complete misapprehension about this question. There appears to be an apprehension on the part of some hon. members that this item is not a matter upon which certain hon. members from the province of Quebec have made a decision by their vote. As the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont stated a moment ago it is a matter purely within dominion-provincial relations. This is a matter in which, as the minister has said, the province of Quebec has refused to accept grants. Therefore, surely the hon. member has the right to discuss that question and in discussing it to say what the views of the premier of that province are and what the views of certain hon. members who support the premier of that province are. That is what the hon. member was seeking to do and in that respect I submit he was in order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, we are dealing here with two matters and only two, namely forest inventory and reforestation. This does not permit any hon. member to launch into a discussion of dominion-provincial fiscal relations.

Mr. Chevrier: But it does.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It permits discussion, Mr. Chairman, of the relations between the dominion and the provinces only in respect of forest inventories and reforestation and not the relations between the dominion and the provinces with regard to any other matter.

Mr. Chevrier: I agree.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Standing order 35 is what I was referring to. It reads in part, as follows:

> No member may reflect upon any vote of the house, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

In his remarks the hon. member was talking about votes that had been taken, as I understood it.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I have only one further comment to make on this matter. It is my belief that the point I am raising concerns one aspect of the fiscal relations between Ottawa and the province of Quebec. I hope the minister will not think we are raising these issues simply because Quebec is involved because our stand in this matter of fiscal relations has been clearly indicated over the years. We have always believed and still believe that under the British North America Act not only are the provinces equal but that all the provinces are entitled to an equal share of the wealth of this country. Because many of my hon. friends opposite have taken the commitment not to accept and indeed to talk against these federal grants it is our intention when this discussion is over to ask you to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister why it is that the province of Quebec is not participating in this vote?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government of that province has chosen not to do so, just as some other provinces have chosen not to. The statement was made a moment ago that Quebec was the only province in that category, but it is not at all. There are five of the ten provinces which have chosen not to participate in one or both of these two programs.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister able to say why the province of Quebec has decided not to participate in these programs?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, may I ask what provinces do receive benefit under the vote?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I gave the list of those that do not and I suppose we could arrive at the others by subtraction. Those that come in on both programs are British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Nova Scotia.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the minister not concede the fact that this particular vote is a portion of the larger question of dominion-provincial relations as between the federal government and the province of Quebec?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): For the purpose of discussing this item, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Batten: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if he would give us the breakdown of the $190,000 showing the amount received by each province now benefiting from this grant?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will give my hon. friend the totals which are in the combined main and supplementary votes:

FOREST INVENTORIES

British Columbia	$454,696
Alberta	104,411
Saskatchewan	16,987
Manitoba	32,378
Ontario	195,350
New Brunswick	10,500
Nova Scotia	25,623

REFORESTATION

British Columbia	26,000
Saskatchewan	2,875
Manitoba	15,000
Ontario	185,550
Prince Edward Island	16,310

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a rather technical question in connection with this vote. It is currently being discussed that the basis of forest fire regulations in Ontario is going to be changed and that some onus will be taken off the pulp and paper companies who have certain leases. Is that going to have any effect on the agreements the provinces have with the federal government in so far as contributions toward forest fire protection is concerned?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that this question could be asked more properly either in the standing committee or when my estimates are before the house. I should like to have my officials here when I answer it. I know there is a connection but it would take too long to obtain an answer at this moment.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, in answer to a question I asked a few moments ago the Minister of Finance listed five provinces and in answer to a subsequent question he indicated seven provinces. There appears to be a conflict in the two answers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not at all, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member was not in his place when I went over this.

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry, but I was in my place.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have already explained the nature of these two programs. There are two programs that are involved here. In going over this some time earlier I pointed out that there are two provinces that do not participate in either of the two programs, Quebec and Newfoundland. I pointed out that there are three provinces which participate in only one program. The province of Alberta participates in the inventory program but not in the reforestation program. The province of New Brunswick participates in the inventory program but not in the reforestation program. The province of Prince Edward Island participtates in the reforestation program but not in the inventory program. What I was saying is that there are five provinces that participate in both and there are five that do not participate in one or other of the programs or both.

Mr. McIlraith: In other words the minister is now explaining that his previous answer to my question was not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not at all.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item agreed to: Yeas, 67; nays, nil.

[Mr. Fisher.]

PRIVY COUNCIL

Special—

768. Expenses pertaining to the visit to Canada in 1959 of Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, including authority, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act or any other act but subject to the approval of treasury board, to appoint and to pay persons to be engaged temporarily in connection therewith, $33,000.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, can the minister explain what preliminary expenses have run as high as the amount he is asking for here? I understand the royal visit will take place several months hence. Is the minister able to explain to the committee what kind of flag will be flown when Her Majesty as queen of Canada is aboard the yacht in a Canadian river?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the answer to the first question is that the expenditures to March 31, 1959, consist of pay and allowances for army personnel, salaries, professional and special services, travelling expenses, printing, stationery and supplies and sundries. The total is $33,000. The anwer to the second question I think should come from someone other than myself in due time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I should like the minister to tell us something about the arrangements that are going to be made. I know that so far as the hon. member for Fort William and myself are concerned we would like to know something about the arrangements for the royal party coming into our area, for example. We do not want suddenly to discover on the day that we have to get permission from the defeated Conservative candidate to appear on the scene. Has the minister any information in this regard?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, there is no more information than has already been given to the house and the public. Detailed arrangements, of course, cannot be made known until the time more closely approaches.

Mr. Herridge: Let me come to the assistance of the minister who is a privy councillor. I want to inform him that the royal yacht Britannia is a unit of the royal navy and will fly flags required by admiralty regulations.

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY

769. Distribution of official documents—further amount required, $13,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have one question to ask the minister on this item. How much of this $13,000 was expended on the distribution of the "Canadian Economic Outlook for 1958"?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not possible, Mr. Chairman, for me to break this amount down into small segments. Actually, the item relates to other expenditures than the actual printing. It consists of freight, express and cartage, postage, advertising, office stationery, supplies and equipment.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

773. Expenses incurred by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in constructing and supervising construction of married quarters, rental housing, schools and related services on behalf of the Department of National Defence—further amount required, $270,000.

Mr. Garland: According to the reference, the details are on page 22, but there are fewer details on page 22 than are listed in the item itself. Can the minister explain where this is to be expended?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As the item indicates, Mr. Chairman, this relates to expenses incurred by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in constructing and supervising construction of married quarters, rental housing, schools and related services on behalf of the Department of National Defence. The fact is that the construction work has exceeded what was originally anticipated. This is the whole sum and substance of the item. We are faced with increased costs.

Mr. Garland: Can the minister give us some details as to where this overexpenditure occurred?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, it is not confined to any one place; this is in the entire program.

Mr. Garland: Can the minister say whether any part of this money or of the general vote was devoted to the development at Moosonee? There was a story in the Financial Post, I believe, some weeks ago —

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can tell my hon. friend the answer is no.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this additional amount required because the estimates made originally for the cost of those buildings were inaccurate and they have had to be exceeded?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the program is larger. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has, on the instructions of the government, gone ahead with this program of constructing more houses and has incurred higher costs.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it more houses or is it higher costs? That is the point of my question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Both. I should like to enlarge on the answer. The program was enlarged. The Department of National Defence required more houses and this program was enlarged, the government having in mind the provision of winter work as well.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister tell us whether some of those additional houses were to be built for those members of the Royal Canadian Air Force who were to fly the Arrow?

Mr. Garland: Can the minister clarify this. Is it in fact for construction or simply for administration?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is reimbursement to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for its administrative expenses in supervising on behalf of the Department of National Defence this larger program in the construction of houses.

Mr. Garland: Then it is not construction at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My hon. friend asked me how the item arose. It arises out of the enlarged program, more expensive program of construction, undertaken at the request of the Department of National Defence, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is entitled to be reimbursed for its increased administrative expenses as a result of this enlarged program carried out on behalf of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Pearson: Then this $270,000 is not for the construction of more houses; it is not for extra costs that go into the construction of those houses; it is only for extra costs of administration in respect of the new program?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The cost of the construction of the houses themselves is provided in the estimates of the Department of National Defence. This is the repayment to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the services it rendered as an administrative agent.

Mr. Garland: One more point, I notice in the 1957-58 estimates the item of $720,000 was reduced; in other words, there was a reduction of $280,000. Now we find a third supplementary increase of $270,000. What was the reason for the original reduction?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The program of construction which was contemplated when that main item was drawn and put before the house was not as large a program as was carried out at the request of the Department of National Defence. It was to meet needs on the part of the Department of National Defence, plus a desire to provide work so far as possible.

Mr. Pearson: I wonder if the minister could give us any information as to where this new defence housing construction is taking place for which this amount is required for additional administrative costs? We are cutting down on our national defence expenditure, so I wonder why this increase in national defence housing?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is all over the country. It is not in just one place; the program was stepped up.

Mr. Bourget: Surely if the minister is right in saying that the program has been enlarged he must know where it has been enlarged and where the construction is taking place.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is in all parts of Canada.

Mr. Garland: The minister gave me a sort of fast no on my question about Moosonee. I would not want him to conclude from my question, which perhaps was not too informative, that I was referring to the port project or anything of that kind. This was a proposed expenditure which the Financial Post reported would be made on behalf of the Department of National Defence. I wondered if the minister had had an opportunity to confer with his officials about this?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is nothing in this item for the construction of married quarters at Moosonee or arising out of the construction of married quarters at Moosonee.

Item agreed to.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Land and Air Services—

774. Operation and maintenance of divisions—further amount required, $494,000.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister is in a position to tell us how it is that the original estimates were out by this rather large amount. I note that travelling and removal expenses, especially, were miscalculated by $140,000. This is an item that one would expect would be fairly standard and very easily predicted ahead of time. The item for clothing was miscalculated by $100,000, and the item for repairs and upkeep of equipment, by $110,000. It would seem to indicate there has been a serious accident to one of the buildings or something of that nature. Is the minister in a position to offer any explanation of these three items, travelling and removal expenses, clothing and repairs and upkeep of equipment?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These several items, as indeed the entire item, are attributable broadly to increased activities on the part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The increase in travelling and removal expenses of $140,000 is the provision for expenses of members of the force on investigations and patrols throughout the country. There has been an increase this year in the number of investigations and that has automatically resulted in an increase in travelling expenses. There has been an increase in the strength of the force and that also has contributed to this result.

The item of $100,000 for clothing arises from the same reason. The third item, repairs and upkeep of equipment of $110,000, is distributed over all the equipment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and represents an increase for the supply of motor transport, inland and water transport, radio equipment and miscellaneous equipment.

Mr. Badanai: The minister just made a statement that there has been an increase in the force. Could the minister tell us the number of additional members in the force?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The authorized establishment for 1958-59 was increased by 367. This does not mean that the increase resulted all at once because, as the hon. gentleman is aware, recruitment is carried on gradually.

Mr. Cardin: There was an increase of $3,197,000 in the main estimates for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police introduced earlier. There is an additional $494,000 in the supplementary estimates, making a total of over $3.5 million increase for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Has there been any substantial increase in the force that would correspond to this rather large increase?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, I just gave the figures.

Mr. Pearson: When the minister was on this side the things that used to arouse him most easily and bring his critical faculties to the fore most vigorously when he accused the government of waste and extravagance were items concerning informational material or what he called propaganda. We have already passed an increase under this item. The item for telephones, telegrams and other communication services was the other to arouse him. This is the third time this afternoon we have had an increase in regard to telephones, telegrams and other communication services. This increase in the supplementary estimates is $30,000. Is not the minister, as chairman of the treasury board, worried about the increased cost of these governmental services, telephones and telegrams, which used to worry him so greatly in other times?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This particular increase is attributable to the increased activities of the force.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Patent and Copyright Office—

776. Patent division—further amount required, $198,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before this carries, I should like to ask the minister if this division is completely self-sufficient now?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In what respect does my hon. friend mean self-sufficient?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister will probably recall that when I was Secretary of State I introduced legislation to increase the fees with a view to making the persons who received this service pay for it instead of the taxpayers. I wondered whether or not that result had been achieved.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I cannot give my hon. friend a conclusive answer on that. I shall be glad to check on the balance and communicate with him.

Mr. Pickersgill: The companies item passed before I could get up, so would the minister do the same for the companies division?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

777. Departmental administration—further amount required, $76,600.

Mr. McIlraith: In the details on page 23 relating to this item there appears an item for salaries of $18,000. I should like to ask the minister if this is an increase for a particular salary or does it represent a shortage in the general item of salaries for the department?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This item results from a fuller recruitment program and the addition of the position of associate deputy minister.

Mr. McIlraith: If this position of associate deputy minister is provided for out of this item, how much is the salary?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The annual rate for that position is $16,500. This, of course, is for a portion of the year and the balance applies to the recruitment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would you call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Chairman. Notwithstanding what my colleague has said, may I say that we are prepared to carry on with these supplementary estimates.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I thank my hon. friend for that suggestion, and may I say this to the committee: We have about 15 items left, and I think they are not difficult ones. They are not the sort that are likely to detain the committee long. May I point out to the committee that we have to take account of the fact that the appropriation bill has to be passed before the recess next Wednesday. Then, we have the other place to consider. Unless we are able to get this bill passed here and over to the other place to be dealt with next week, it does not look as though it would be possible to have the appropriation bill passed before the recess, and therefore very grave difficulties will result as I am sure all hon. members are aware. I would add to the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier, for which I thank him, a request to the committee that we carry on and see whether we cannot complete these remaining items today.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee cannot carry on itself. However, if it is agreeable, I shall report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the house is prepared to give unanimous consent to reverting to the business with which it was dealing in committee at five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent the house will revert to committee of supply.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Marine services—

780. Ship channel service—St. Lawrence and Saguenay rivers—Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $259,574.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to make an inquiry here. I am sorry the Minister of Transport is not in his seat. I presume he is unavoidably absent. I think he should be here during the consideration of these estimates. After all, when I look at the list of them, I find that they are practically one-fifth of the estimates of the whole department. I consider that as being something fairly substantial. The question that comes to my mind is this. Does the government intend to open the St. Lawrence ship channel from Quebec to Montreal during the winter season?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a matter for the future. I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend that information. However, I shall be glad to communicate his question to the Minister of Transport when he returns to Ottawa and the reply will be communicated to my hon. friend.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a few remarks to make on this matter. I had hoped to make them when the Minister of Transport was in his seat because I consider them to be of fairly serious import.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do they arise on this particular item?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): After all, this is just a clean-up to March 31.

Mr. Chevrier: They arise out of consideration of the St. Lawrence ship channel which is a channel 35 feet in depth extending from Montreal to 30 miles below Quebec and which I know very well. I make these remarks now because there will be no other opportunity to make them until the general estimates are up for consideration or until the matters concerning the Department of Transport are up for discussion. I have reference to the situation which obtained when all of these foreign ships, because of the freeze-up, were caught in the Lachine canal and then were taken down the St. Lawrence ship channel. While the officers who were responsible for operating the icebreakers deserve commendation—and I am thinking now of the captain of the D'Iberville, the captain of the Ernest Lapointe and the captain of a third vessel, which vessels were responsible for keeping open the ship channel —I think that Canada received quite a black eye from the manner in which this operation was performed. I would be the last one to lay any blame on former officers of a department over which I presided for some nine years. I do not intend to do that. What I intend to say here is this. While those who operated the icebreakers deserve a great deal of commendation, there was on this occasion a tremendous lack of coordination as between the various divisions of the Department of Transport. I have reference to the St. Lawrence ship channel service, the canal services and other divisions of the Department of Transport and the national harbours board. My purpose in saying this is that because of the long time it took to get these ships through the St. Lawrence ship channel—the item that is under discussion now—Canada has received much bad publicity. It has received this black eye in foreign countries that will be operating ships into the St. Lawrence and the great lakes through the St. Lawrence seaway which will be open to navigation soon.

The question uppermost in the minds of those people is this. Why is it that this incident had to happen and what assurance have we that in the future it will not happen again? I have a suggestion to make. It is not a new one. It has been made before but I think it should be given careful consideration. The first suggestion I make is that the St. Lawrence ship channel which we are discussing now should be widened. Engineers who have had it under their responsibility for years have been recommending to the government and to the Department of Transport the widening of this channel. That is the first suggestion that I am prompted to make under this item.

The next suggestion that comes to my mind is that there should be additional icebreakers in order to protect from flooding the areas surrounding metropolitan Montreal. When the water in the Montreal harbour reaches elevation 40, that is the elevation at which flooding in the Montreal area begins to cause a great deal of anxiety. This danger occurs only during the period when the discharge capacity of the river has been reduced by reason of the peculiar ice and temperature conditions which obtain in that area from December to April of each year. The experience in the Department of Transport has been that the earlier icebreakers get to work, the better it is for prevention of these flooding conditions.

There are studies which have been made in the department. There is a study which was made in 1947 by a board of engineers which was established for the purpose of considering power and navigation development in the Lachine section, and also studies were made as to ice conditions in the Montreal harbour and in the St. Lawrence ship channel. A study of those conditions was made to ascertain whether or not in the operation of the ship channel, which as the house knows is a separate division of the Department of Transport, it could be possible to avoid once and for all the flooding, these inundations, which take place on both sides of the river because of the frazil ice in the whole of the Laprairie basin.

As the committee knows, where the Mercier bridge crosses the St. Lawrence river there is a very narrow neck of the river, and because of the tremendous amount of water which comes down during the non-navigation period there is created a condition which is tantamount to an ice-making plant. This ice has the capacity and the strength to pile up and cause tremendous damage. So that it is important that the ship channel which we are discussing now is kept open during the non-navigation season. The officials of the Department of Transport have done their best over the years to make recommendations in accordance therewith to the department, and over that period of years the department has seen to it that more and stronger ice-breakers were constructed in order to avoid this serious and dangerous situation.

So that with respect to this item, the two suggestions which I would like to make are: One, the widening of the ship channel to a minimum width of 800 feet and, second, the addition of more icebreakers to operate in the channel so that the ship channel would be kept open not only from Quebec to Sorel but all the way up from Sorel to Montreal.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member whether he thinks we should use icebreakers to keep the St. Lawrence open for navigation to the detriment of the winter business of ports such as Saint John?

Mr. Chevrier: I expected that question, Mr. Chairman, and I am glad the hon. member asked it. If the hon. member had listened to what I said, he would have seen I was dealing exclusively with the question of inundation and flooding. I did not discuss the other. But since my hon. friend wants to know what I would say with reference to the second part of his question, I would add this, that because of the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway it has been estimated that the traffic will be trebled in that area. That being so, I have no doubt that the port councils and authorities of the ports of Saint John and Halifax, which associations and groups are alert, will want to make sure a substantial portion of this traffic accrues to them.

Railway and Steamship Services—

781. Payments to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made by the company to the Minister of Finance, to be applied by the company in payment of the deficits, certified by the auditors of the company, arising in the operations in the calendar year 1958—further amounts required—Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals, $24,689.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what plans the government has in mind, since we are now discussing the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminal, to build a causeway between the mainland and Prince Edward Island. The minister will remember that is a matter of extreme concern to the house. It was a matter which was discussed on more than one occasion, and was, I believe, recommended to the royal commission on economic prospects. I would like to know whether the government has any plans in this respect and when these will be made known?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the subject is under study. As I think my hon. friend is aware, engineers have been retained to make a study.

Mr. Chevrier: Then still dealing with the item, notwithstanding the study which is being made, I would like to know whether or not the hon. minister is aware that the services which now operate between Prince Edward Island and the mainland are quite inadequate? My question is, what provision pending this study of the causeway is being made by the government for an additional service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, because the present car ferry services are certainly not adequate?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This item provides for the deficit in the operation of the present Prince Edward Island car ferry service. The operating revenues have increased, but the operating expenses have increased substantially more than the revenues.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the government intend to build another ferry pending the consideration which will be given to the causeway? As my hon. friend knows, the study of the causeway and even a recommendation favourable to a causeway would take a matter of quite some time. I am not able to say, but it would certainly take a matter of years. What is going to happen to the service in the meantime? Is consideration being given therefore to the construction of an additional ferry?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, no step has been taken with reference to any possible increase in the service, pending the report of the engineers on this present survey. The government will be guided by the reports which are received at this preliminary stage of the engineering study.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to delay this, but here the two questions are entirely separate and apart. One is the construction of a causeway from the mainland to Prince Edward Island; meanwhile the present ferry services are not adequate, and it may be that the causeway will not be built for several years if at all. What is being done by the government in the meantime? Is provision being made for the construction of an additional ferry?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We hope to have guidance in approaching that problem from the preliminary reports of the engineers who are studying the causeway proposal.

Item agreed to.

Strait of Canso—

783. Transportation improvements and facilities—further amount required, $54,500.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. minister explain what this item is for? It is a large item, $54,500 for transportation improvements and facilities. The Canso causeway has been completed now for quite a number of years, and it occurs to me that perhaps we might have an explanation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This item is required to clear up some outstanding claims for compensation arising out of the construction of the causeway. As the hon. member indicated, it was completed. Actually, on April 1, 1957 it was deemed to be completed, but there have been some outstanding claims which required to be settled, and this item provides for them.

Mr. Bourget: There is an item for auto ferry vessel for service between Pelee island and the mainland, Ontario. Could the minister tell us where this auto ferry vessel was built, and if tenders were asked for the building of that ferry?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is my hon. friend on No. 784, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: No. 783.

Mr. Bourget: The details are on page 24, and it is the fourth item, "Auto ferry vessel for service between Pelee island and the mainland, Ontario".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That pertains to the next item, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

784. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels and equipment as listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects—further amount required, $1.

Mr. Bourget: Can I now have an answer to my question, since we are on item 784?

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All of these transport services are called by tender.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister says this has been done by tender. Has this ship not been built by the government for the purpose of operating between Pelee island and the mainland?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The contract for the construction of this auto ferry vessel is under negotiation at the present time with the Erieau Shipbuilding and Drydock Company Limited of Erieau. The lowest price quoted was $448,000. The ship will be a twin screw vessel designed to carry 300 passengers and 14 automobiles.

Mr. Chevrier: I take it that a contract has been awarded to this company.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: And I understand, further, that this ship will be turned over to private enterprise for operation between the mainland and Pelee island.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, there will be a call for tenders for rendering that service.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. I want to take that a step further, because following the call for tenders the government will enter into a contract either through the Department of Transport or through the maritime commission for the operation of this service. Does the minister think that this is an appropriate policy to follow? Here is a government-owned ship. Why does the government not operate the ship rather than turn it over to private enterprise for operation, after having built it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is the way the operation was carried on previously. The ship had been operated before under just such an arrangement in the hon. gentleman's time when he was minister of transport. That ship proved unseaworthy and it is being replaced by the ship I have mentioned. The arrangement as to the operation which obtained hitherto was felt to be the best in the circumstances, and it is proposed to continue in the same way.

Mr. Chevrier: Indeed it was, and I thank the minister for his answer. The point I wanted to make was that when we were in office we were criticized from this side of the house for following this arrangement. That is why I had hoped to see the Minister of Transport here, because while he was not, as far as I remember, among those who criticized this policy and this former contract, there were certainly a number of members who did so most bitterly from this side of the house, and I am glad to see that now the hon. gentlemen opposite having the responsibility of office they follow exactly the same policy as was laid down in former days.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope the Minister of Finance will use his good offices to see that there is no delay in this matter, because this ship will serve to link the mainland of Essex county with Pelee island, the most southerly point of Canada and possibly, as the hon. member for Essex West may agree, the most favoured spot in the whole country.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If this ship will take the hon. gentleman for a ride I will do my best to expedite its construction.

Newfoundland coastal services—

785. Construction or acquisition of passenger-cargo vessels and equipment—further amount required including authority for expenditures on harbour facilities, $1.

Mr. Cardin: This item concerns the construction or acquisition of passenger cargo vessels and equipment. Has a contract been awarded for the construction of such a vessel or vessels, and will the ships when completed belong to the Department of Transport?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As the hon. member is aware the Newfoundland coastal services are operated on behalf of the government by Canadian National Railways. This present item of $1 is designed to authorize the expenditure from this vote of moneys for the purpose of the construction of a wharf and freight shed at Corner Brook and a wharf extension and freight shed at Lewisporte, both in Newfoundland.

Mr. Cardin: So there is no question of the construction of a ship?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not in this additional authority.

Mr. Cardin: Why, then, does the minister use such words in this item as "the construction or acquisition of passenger cargo vessels"? Why not simply say that this is for the construction of a wharf and sheds, if that is all the department is doing?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is the standard wording.

Mr. Cardin: It is confusing, though.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance is a little confused today.

Item agreed to.

786. Yarmouth, Nova Scotia-Bar Harbour, Maine, U.S.A., ferry service—deficit 1958—further amount required, $38,346.

Mr. Chevrier: I see this is in respect of a deficit on the operation of the Yarmouth-Bar Harbour ferry. Would the minister care to tell the committee how the profit and loss position of this ferry operation is working out? I remember that when it was announced in the house under the previous administration a statement was given, either by myself or by my successor, as to what the financial position was likely to be, having in mind the traffic which was expected at the time, and my recollection is that a small profit was expected or, perhaps, it was a small loss. I do not think that this is too much out of line, but I wonder if the minister could clear this up.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The operation is showing an improvement financially. The net deficit in 1956 was $304,000. In the year 1957—perhaps I could give round figures—it was $278,000, and in 1958, $203,000. There has been a steady improvement, but the result this year is not quite as good as had been expected when the first estimate was made.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the anticipated over-all deficit for this year 1959? This item, as I understand it, is, in part, for 1959.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, this is 1958.

Mr. Chevrier: Does it not run up to March 31, 1959?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In this particular case the deficit is calculated by the calendar year. The operation of the service is carried out on a calendar year basis.

Item agreed to.

787. Payment to Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the minister of transport, made by the company to the minister of finance, in the amount of the deficit, certified by the auditors of the company, in the operations of the company in the calendar year 1958—further amount required, $361,954.

Mr. Chevrier: This item concerns the vessels of the Canadian National Steamships and I think the minister should give us a report on the position of these vessels. There were eight such ships. They were rendered idle by a strike almost two years ago and then, as the minister knows, the flag was transferred with the approval of the government to one of the countries of the West Indian Federation. Then the ships were retransferred to Canada in order to facilitate their operation by crews from the federation. I understand that did not take place. Still later these ships were sold to a company operating under a flag other than that of Canada.

We are now being asked to vote $361,954. I would like to know first of all what this amount is for because the ships have not been operated for two years. I would also like to know what happened to the ships because although they have been sold they are still in Halifax with the exception of one which I am told is in Baltimore. Third, I am interested in knowing what has been the result of these two transfers, the transfer to the federation and the retransfer back to Canada. What has this transfer of flag accomplished? It seems to me if we are being asked to vote this large sum of money we should receive answers to those questions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this item is designed to pay the expenses that were incurred during the past year. It is within the knowledge of all hon. members that the ships were not operated and there was consequently no operating revenue. There were expenses, however, of a rather substantial nature. They resulted in a net operating loss, representing expenses incurred of $1,114,726, to which must be added interest on government loans of $37,228, arriving at a net deficit of $1,151,954. Of that sum $790,000 had been provided in the main and supplementary estimates and consequently this further supplementary estimate of $361,954 is required to complete the payment of the expenses for the year 1958.

Mr. Chevrier: What I fail to understand is this. If the ships have not been operating for two years how can there be this deficit? I can understand how there would be a deficit for the first year that the ships were not in operation but they have not been in operation for a period of over 20 months, almost two years. I fail to understand why there should be this deficitory position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There were layup expenses and wages of the officers of the ship who were aboard. I can give my hon. friend a breakdown. The actual layup expenses aggregate $750,534. I can give the expenses in detail if the hon. gentleman wishes. Details of expenses are as follows:

Wages of Officers Standing By	$ 253,778
Fuel	80,051
Provisions	19,853
Supplies	46,986
Insurance	97,723
Port and Shore Salaries and Expenses	239,252
Sundry Expenses	12,981
TOTAL	$ 750,534
Depreciation on vessels	$ 174,187
Management and office expenses	147,571
Pensions	39,237
All other expenses	3,197
TOTAL	$1,114,726

Mr. Chevrier: Could I have answers to my other two questions?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With respect to the second point I have no information as to the physical whereabouts of the vessels. My hon. friend has indicated that the information he has is correct. I have no further or other information on that point.

On the third point, I have no further information as to subsequent transactions following the sale by the Canadian National Steamships.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I ask the minister how many men were involved in this transaction? In other words how many men were employed on these ships? How many officers were employed? What arrangements were made to find employment for both the officers and the men?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I have not got the precise number of officers that were engaged. I understand that all the officers of the ships carried on. Whether any men in addition to the officers were included, I do not know. If my hon. friend wishes that information I shall be glad to obtain it for him from Canadian National Steamships.

The other question raised by the hon. member was as to what provision is being made for these officers. They are being absorbed into the Department of Transport as openings occur.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister says that the officers were carried on but that is a mistatement of fact. I have correspondence from a number of officers who have not been carried on and who have been complaining very bitterly.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are we speaking of different periods? I was speaking of the period of the layup. I thought my hon. friend was asking about the number of persons carried on the payroll in the period of layup. I gave a figure for wages to officers standing by of $253,778. I thought that was the period to which my hon. friend was directing his question but apparently I misunderstood him.

Mr. Chevrier: I was directing my attention to this. How many officers and men were employed on the Canadian National Steamships—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): At what period?

Mr. Chevrier: Now. They have lost their jobs. I thought this item referred to March 31, 1959 but the minister tells me it relates to the calendar year 1958. What has happened to the officers and men during the whole of 1958 when the ships were sold? It is a fact that these crews were laid off and so were the officers. What has been done by the Canadian National Steamships or the Department of Transport to find employment for both the officers and the crew?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The officers were carried on up until the date of the sale by Canadian National Steamships and the appropriation for their salary is the figure I gave. Now, when the ships were sold—

Mr. Chevrier: Which was about a year ago.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Approximately. I think it was less than a year ago. From the time of that sale, as I have indicated, the Department of Transport has been absorbing the officers as vacancies and openings have occurred in the service of the department.

Mr. Chevrier: What about the crews which numbered 2,000 to 3,000 men?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does the hon. member mean the striking crew?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I mean the men who manned these seven or eight ships. What happened to them?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does my hon. friend refer to the crews who were on strike?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have no informaas to how they are engaged at present.

Mr. Spencer: I think they are probably still on strike.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend does not seem to be too interested in their welfare judging from that remark.

Mr. Spencer: Why do you say that?

Mr. Chevrier: Here are men who have been without work for over two years because of the policy of the government. The government, instead of maintaining those ships in accordance with the recommendation made by the Canadian National Steamships several years ago, over a five-year period, refused to accept that recommendation and instead transferred the flag to a Panamanian country. That is what has caused all the difficulty. Several thousand men are out of work, plus the officers. I am sorry to have to challenge the answer which the minister gave me because I submit to him with deference that it is not correct. I have in my office many letters from officers of those ships who state that they have had their employment severed with the Canadian National Steamships and they have found no work in the Department of Transport.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say they had all been absorbed by the Department of Transport. I said they were being absorbed by the department as vacancies occur. That is the policy of the department.

Mr. Chevrier: That is the policy of the department but it has not worked out. That is the point I am trying to make. Notwithstanding the fact the minister says they are being absorbed, I would like to know how many are being absorbed. First of all, I should like to know how many officers there were, how many have been absorbed and how many are left without employment at the moment?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I recall a statement being made in this house by my colleague the Minister of Transport to the effect that eventually all of those officers would be absorbed by the Department of Transport. It is a matter of their being absorbed as vacancies in the department arise.

Mr. Chevrier: I recall that statement very well also and I have had to write your colleague, the Minister of Transport, to point out a number of cases such as I referred to earlier where there has been no absorption and where it has not been possible to find vacancies. After all, where are the vacancies going to be, if not on the ships of the Department of Transport, and there are not seven or eight ships in the Department of Transport which will require all of these officers. I am not going to insist on it now but I think we should be entitled to a statement from the Minister of Finance as to the number of officers, mates and the like, on the Canadian National Steamships who have been absorbed in the Department of Transport. I think the minister will find that there are not nearly as many as he thinks and not nearly as many as the Minister of Transport expected at the time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We shall be glad to obtain that information. I think I can recall to my hon. friend that there are more ships of the Department of Transport coming into commission this year and it may be that the situation in this respect will improve considerably, perhaps sooner than he thinks.

Mr. Chevrier: While I am on this subject I want to make another reference to the Canadian National Steamships. By the decision which the government made it has reduced substantially, or reduced almost to nil, the deepsea fleet of Canada. I remember what was said by the Minister of Public Works when he was on this side of the house and what he said after the 1957 election out in his constituency. He made no bones about the fact that the position of the present government certainly would not be the same as that of the former government. I want to register here a complaint only about the fact that the deap-sea ships of Canada have gone down instead of up, and the merchant fleet of our country has been decreasing notwithstanding the fact that a minister of the crown said that that would not be so, and notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of Public Works, when he sat on this side of the house, singled me out on more than one occasion and attacked me personally on more than one occasion because of the fact that the government of the day was not doing a thing to see to it that Canada, a country of our importance, was not subsidizing deep-sea ships.

Item agreed to.

788. Canadian National Railways deficit, 1958—Amount required to provide for payment to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made by the national company to the Minister of Finance, and to be applied by the national company in payment of the system deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) arising in the calendar year 1958, subject to recovery therefrom of accountable advances made to the national company from the consolidated revenue fund, $51,591,424.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): I would like to say a few words on this item. I would prefer, of course, that the Minister of Transport was in his place, but he must have a good reason to be absent. In the name of many public bodies in my riding and of the whole Saguenay-lake St. John region I have tried to obtain from the Canadian National Railways management the operating figures for the last two or three years between Montreal and Chicoutimi and between Quebec and Chicoutimi. I have had correspondence myself with a couple of senior officials of the Canadian National Railways and finally, I was told—I have a letter on my desk dated March 19—that this information cannot be given out to the public because they are afraid it would help their competitors. The Canadian National Railways has no competitors in the region. The Canadian National Railways give us a good service but they have no competitors. The reason the people are asking for these figures is that they feel we should have urgent repairs made to the line from Montreal to Chicoutimi and from Quebec to Chicoutimi. These repairs are urgently needed.

I should like to speak a little longer on this item but I shall wait until the estimates of the Department of Transport are before the committee to make a clearer explanation to the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, this is a pretty big item. I know that on a supplementary item the minister cannot be expected to go into all the details. However, it is a pretty substantial deficit and while it has been discussed in general I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to point out the highlights of the amount.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, glady, Mr. Chairman. I think the committee will be pleased to know that the operating picture presented by the Canadian National Railways for the year 1958 is slightly better than was expected a year earlier, and while the deficit is quite substantial, namely $51,591,424, it is, I am glad to say, nevertheless actually less than was anticipated some months ago.

The statement follows the usual form and I recall to the attention of members of the committee that the Canadian National Railways, with their senior officers, will be appearing, quite soon after the Easter recess, before the special committee annually appointed by the house to review the report and operations of the system and there will be opportunity then for hon. members to ask questions and obtain information in detail.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the house will be happy to learn that the financial position of the railway is better than was anticipated prior to the end of the year; but that leads me to a number of other questions on this item which is substantial and of great importance. The railway policy of the government as effected by its agency the Canadian National Railways and the Minister of Finance, being responsible for these moneys and being responsible for this vote whether it be in the statute that comes before the house each year, will be in even a better position to answer than the Minister of Transport himself. The question I ask is this: What additional lines are anticipated during the year 1959 through the instrumentality of the Canadian National Railways?

There have been a number of lines which have been of special interest to all members on this side of the house. I cannot speak for all of them. They have already mentioned their interest in them, but I do know that representations were made when we were in office and since the new administration has been in office, for the construction of a line from my hon. friend's area, the member for Lapointe from lake St. John and/or Murray bay, down along the north shore of the St. Lawrence to Seven Islands. I have mentioned the hon. member for Lapointe. There have been representations made to the government for the construction of a line in the Gaspe peninsula.

I am sure that when these representations are made the Minister of Finance is always on the delegation to consider them, and is in a position to tell us, perhaps more effectively than other ministers might, of the policy of the government with reference to these. I hope the minister will not simply rise and say that the policy will be announced in due course. I would not expect an answer like that under these circumstances because I know that these lines were under active consideration when we were in office, and I hope that they are still under active consideration. I would appreciate it if, under this vote which is for $51 million, the minister would go beyond the ordinary answer of government policy being announced in due course, and make a statement which I am sure the whole house would appreciate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I regret that I am not in a position to make a comment on policy in reference to particular lines that are proposed to be constructed. There will be an opportunity for that, as that is the sort of subject that is always discussed in the special committee later in the session.

Mr. Benidickson: Unfortunately I have not, in the last few years, been privileged to be a member of the committee to which the representatives of the Canadian National attend. The Minister of Finance will recall that on January 21 I raised the question of the revision of the Canadian National pension schedule. It seemed obvious that the matter I raised there, which did involve discussions between management and the unions, was not of such consequence that the Minister of Transport was informed about it. He replied on January 22. However, I would imagine that if a revision of the pension scheme of sufficient consequence to involve the expenditure of money were contemplated, it would come to the notice of the Minister of Finance.

He of course remembers the great interest that was always taken by the Prime Minister in this particular matter. He always asserted that the Canadian National management was prepared to revise the schedule, but that the then minister of finance was standing in the way. I wonder whether at the present time the Minister of Finance is close to any representations from the management or from the employees, advocating a revision, particularly in the minimum pension, as has been discussed on many occasions in the past by the present Prime Minister?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I take it my hon. friend is referring to the pension scheme now in effect for the employees who are actually engaged in the service of the company, and not the question of the pensions of employees who were retired some years ago. I can say to my hon. friend, if that is the purport of his question, no representations concerning the present pension provisions have come to my attention affecting employees presently engaged in the operations of the company.

Mr. Benidickson: My understanding is that pension arrangements between the present employees and management would be arranged between themselves. My understanding is that it is as the minister has indicated, the group of retired pensioners who always had the great interest of the Prime Minister when he was sitting on this side of the house. I am rather surprised when the Minister of Finance says he has received no representations concerning this group. I thought perhaps the Prime Minister would have consulted him about them because revision could not take place in connection with this group, as I recall it, even if the directorate of the Canadian National was prepared to accept the recommendations, without reference to the government who would have to deal with it by order in council.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think my hon. friend has not interpreted my answer correctly. I said that I was referring to pensions in effect now for employees engaged in the service of the company. I have had no representations in regard to that group. The other group is in an entirely different category, namely, those employees who have been retired some years ago under the previous pension provision.

Item agreed to.

789. Reimbursement of the Department of Transport stores account for the value of stores which have become obsolete, unserviceable, lost or destroyed, $32,738.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask whether this is being done in accordance with a statute? Is there a statute covering the replacement of these stores?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, this is done in accordance with regulations made under authority of section 60, subsection (2), of the Financial Administration Act.

Item agreed to.

790. Expenses of an inquiry into the coasting trade of Canada authorized under the Inquiries Act, including the payment, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, of honoraria or allowances as may be authorized by the treasury board to officers, clerks or employees permanently employed in the civil service for services rendered by them in connection with the inquiry—further amount required, $2,710.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister say whether the recommendations of the royal commission on coastal trading, which is covered here, are still under consideration, and what the government is going to do about them?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They are still under consideration.

Item agreed to.

Telecommunications division—

791. Radio aids to air and marine navigation—administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $305,000.

Mr. Herridge: This is a very large supplementary item, $305,000. Could the minister inform the house, generally, where these additional aids to air and marine navigation are installed?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): While this is a large sum, Mr. Chairman, it is small when compared with the total item involved. The amount in this item is to provide payment for services supplied by Computing Devices of Canada Limited in the operation and maintenance by the company of four Decca navigation systems of the company at Quebec, Halifax, Clarenville, Newfoundland, and Corner Brook, as radio aids to marine navigation from October 1, 1958 to the end of this month.

Item agreed to.

796. Reimbursement of the northwest communication system stores account for the value of stores losses incurred in the disposal of surplus equipment, $5,900.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask here under what authority are these stores being destroyed? Is there a statute in this case?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is done in pursuance of the Financial Administration Act. It is a matter of accounting within the consolidated revenue fund.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Soldier Settlement and Veterans Land Act—

808. Purchase of land and permanent improvements; cost of permanent improvements to be effected; removal of encumbrances; stock and equipment; and for protection of security under the Veterans Land Act—further amount required, $1,209,000.

Mr. Herridge: Can the minister inform the house just what that money is going to be applied to?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is simply to provide an additional amount for the purposes for which the main estimate was voted. It is to provide for an additional number of veterans who are taking advantage of the provisions of the act.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad to hear that.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, the sum of $284,942,864 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill C-36, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1959.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Speaker: By leave, now.

Mr. Benidickson: May I ask the Minister of Finance this question? If we had second reading of the bill at this stage, could he assure the house that it would be dealt with in the other place today?

Mr. Green: May I explain that situation, Mr. Speaker? The other place is standing by. They will require an hour to consider the bill. In addition, the Chief Justice is standing by. If we could get this bill through within a few moments, I would suggest that the house adjourn until seven o'clock in order to give the other house an opportunity to consider the bill. Out of consideration for the members of the house I think it would be wise if we could follow this procedure.

Mr. Chevrier: We have been extremely cooperative so far.

Mr. Green: Oh, yes.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had a half-hour speech to make on this bill but in view of what the hon. member said, perhaps we could carry on with it.

Mr. Green: We are doubly grateful.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Minister of Finance unanimous consent to move the second reading of the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Herridge: Will the minister assure the house that the language in this bill is that in the usual appropriation bill?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. The bill follows the usual form of the appropriation acts. There are four clauses to the bill and then follow as a schedule all of the items which have been passed in the committee.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2, 3 and 4 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me to do so, I should like to thank all members of the house for their co-operation which has enabled us to complete the passing of this bill now.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the Leader of the house what the business will be for Monday and Tuesday. I hope he can tell us what it will be for Wednesday as well because the house adjourns on Wednesday.

Mr. Green: Monday will be a private members' day. On Tuesday we intend to commence with the resolution concerning parliamentary secretaries, which is No. 7 on today's order paper; then the resolution which is No. 8 on today's order paper, that concerning freight rates; then second reading of the bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act, which is item No. 3 on today's order paper; then the resolution concerning the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, which is item No. 9 on today's order paper.

Mr. Chevrier: Will we go on with that business on Wednesday if it is uncompleted on Tuesday?

Mr. Green: With the resolutions carried there would, of course, be second readings of the bills. We would therefore go on with those on Wednesday.

Mr. McCleave: I have a supplementary question. Can the house leader inform us what will be the business at seven o'clock?

Royal Assent

Mr. Green: I had suggested that the house should recess until seven o'clock tonight. It is necessary for us to have a quorum here for royal assent.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent shall this sitting be suspended, to convene again this day at the call of the chair?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The bell will indicate the call of the chair.

At 6.10 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 7.12 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CIVIL DEFENCE

STATEMENT ON REARRANGEMENT OF RESPONSIBILITIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that the government asked Lieutenant General Howard Graham to review the state of the civil defence program throughout Canada. General Graham's confidential report made some weeks ago has been reviewed, and the arrangements for responsibility for civil defence discussed in the light of it and of further studies given to the subject by both military and civilian advisers.

We have had to consider these civil defence arrangements as part of the whole plan to be prepared for nuclear war, both on the military side and in various fields where it is now necessary to be ready on the civilian side as well, taking into account the best advice we can get on the nature of the situation which would face us in the event of war. As a result of this review the government proposes to transfer certain of the responsibilities for civil defence functions in so far as the dominion is concerned, and to offer to assume directly certain responsibilities hitherto assumed by the provinces and the municipalities.

The principal change proposed is that the army should undertake primary and direct responsibility for a number of the technical civil defence functions heretofore carried on by civil defence organizations at provincial and municipal levels. These will include warning of attack, the location and monitoring of explosions and radioactive fall-out, the assessment of damaged areas, the decontamination and clearing of such areas, and the rescue of the injured in such areas.

These are difficult and frequently dangerous tasks, requiring trained and disciplined forces and much technical equipment. In the intense early phase of a nuclear war they are likely to be more important and urgent than other tasks on which the army in Canada would be engaged. Consequently we think they are suitable functions for the army to assume, with some aid in particular tasks from the other services. The army will need for this purpose not only its own reserve force but also the assistance of various local auxiliaries, which it will be expected to arrange with provincial and local authorities and others able to help.

The major humanitarian tasks of providing medical and hospital services for the injured and sick, public health measures and emergency billeting and other accommodation for those who must leave their homes, and emergency feeding and other welfare services, should remain, we believe, the direct responsibility of provincial authorities in war as they are in peace, but with increased assistance both financial and technical from the dominion. This assistance would remain the responsibility of the Department of National Health and Welfare. The proper organization, in peacetime, of such emergency arrangements to be ready immediately on the outbreak of war in all localities where they are apt to be needed is a very formidable task, and should be undertaken with determination and vigour. I believe the provinces and local groups are best able to do it. They have the experience, the qualified staff and the local knowledge.

We shall be quite prepared to agree that the provincial and local facilities, both of equipment and personnel, whose costs we may share for civil defence purposes should also be made available to meet the humanitarian requirements of peacetime disasters as well.

Certain other emergency tasks falling within the civil defence field are also clearly best discharged by provincial or local authorities, notably the control of traffic and the preservation of law and order. We shall be prepared to offer increased support for special expenditures incurred in making preparation for such services in war, subject to parliamentary approval. In the two examples cited the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will administer such assistance, and provide as well whatever technical and general advice it can.

Provincial and local costs of approved civil defence projects will henceforth receive assistance to the extent of 75 per cent instead of 50 per cent as heretofore; and this division will apply to projects in the fields of interest of national health and welfare, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and to other provincial and local projects.

The emergency measures organization, attached to the privy council office, to which reference was made on a number of occasions by myself, will co-ordinate the work of other agencies in the field of civil defence measures and planning as it already does in respect of other civilian measures to prepare for war. Federal responsibilities not allocated to other departments or services will be assumed by this organization, although in general the intention is that this will remain a small, central unit and any substantial operating responsibilities will be assigned to others. Liaison with provincial governments on particular functions will be the responsibility of those dealing with such functions, but the emergency measures organization will be charged with general responsibility for contact with the provincial authorities.

I shall be writing to provincial premiers to set forth the federal proposals in more detail, and I shall then table a copy of these letters. It is the intention to arrange discussions with provincial ministers on the general subject of civil defence before we proceed to implement the foregoing proposals. I should like to take this opportunity to emphasize that this government believes that civil measures to prepare for the possibility of nuclear war must be taken as seriously as are military measures. Civil defence can serve a deterrent purpose by demonstrating to a potential aggressor that Canada is determined to survive even a nuclear war and carry on as an organized society and united nation in the face of the utmost perils and hardships.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the statement the Prime Minister has given the house has been asked for on a number of occasions during this session of parliament by various members sitting in the opposition. We have not had a statement on civil defence since the Minister of National Health and Welfare made a short statement when he introduced his main estimates in the last session of parliament. As a result a long interval has elapsed since this government seized the opportunity to make a statement on this very important and difficult matter. It is no wonder that municipalities, notably the metropolitan area of Toronto, the city of Ottawa and other communities, have complained about the lack of a statement of policy by the government of Canada.

While we welcome the statement the Prime Minister has just given the house, I am sure the municipalities and the provincial governments will find the statement does not reveal the kind of detail for which they have been asking from the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who up to today has had the very difficult responsibility of administrating civil defence in Canada of course in co-operation with the provinces and the municipalities.

The situation the Prime Minister has outlined apparently does not take into account developments, notably in the United States, which were announced yesterday at Battle Creek in the matter of co-ordinating of civil defence in the United States. Emphasis is given in that country, in the face of the growing exigencies of the moment, to private and public shelters. We can only hope that with the assignment of some of the functions to the office of the privy council and to the armed forces, this will mean, as a result of the transfer of some functions to the Minister of National Defence, that we might expect a clarification from the government with regard to the emphasis now given to shelters in the United States.

By the announcement now made the army is to be given certain functions which it is said have heretofore not been assigned to the armed forces. I am sure the Prime Minister would not want to convey the impression that the armed forces have not, under the Minister of National Health and Welfare and pursuant to the authority of the militia act, carried out functions in the matter of civil defence. In this connection we were guided in this country during the last few years by the experience in Britain where, under their arrangements, mobile army units were provided with authority to assist the civil defence authorities in the prosecution of their assignments. We are now told that such matters as warning of attack, matters having to do with radioactive fall-out, the right of re-entry into damaged areas, are to be pursued by the armed forces.

Nothing is said, of course, in the statement made by the Prime Minister of the amendment made yesterday by Senator Anderson in the United States with regard to the error of the AEC in the matter of strontium 90 and the extent to which it lingers in the air, an amendment which could have the most serious consequences for mankind if that error were to take on additional forms. It is noteworthy, however, that in the statement made yesterday by Senator Anderson, commenting with regard to the conclusions of the AEC, it was not thought that as a result of the quicker dispatch to the ground of strontium 90 there would be any appreciable increase in the danger to human health. I presume nevertheless that the statement made a few weeks ago in the house by the Minister of National Health and Welfare still stands.

Nothing has been said by the Prime Minister that would indicate that there has been a real change, apart from the exceptions I have already noted, in the functions of the armed forces in the matter of civil defence except that they are to be carried out by virtue of receiving their authority presumably from the Minister of National Defence himself although the Prime Minister, so far as I can recall from the statement he read, did not say so specifically.

I note that the hospital and welfare services are to continue under the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This is as it should be and as I expected it would be, for obviously that department is best equipped to deal in a co-operative way with the provinces and the municipalities in the matter of medical and welfare care as part of the civil defence program.

The Prime Minister gives notice of the government's intention to provide, within certain categories of effort, increased financial assistance to the provinces, but I was not clear whether this also applied directly to the municipalities or whether this was an arrangement to be worked out by the provincial governments themselves. Such matters as traffic control and others that normally might be expected to reside with the provinces are to continue as before. In this connection the Prime Minister indicated that further use would be made of the police. One wonders whether or not this really represents an innovation, because under existing civil defence arrangements—and I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare will agree with me—the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as indeed the armed forces of our country and certainly the militia under the militia act, are available by law and practice to the provincial governments in the discharge of civil defence functions.

The percentage of financial assistance to the provinces for certain phases of effort is now to be increased from 50 to 75 per cent. One wonders, however, whether that applies to the whole co-ordinated program of the federal government and the provinces. Under the arrangement which prevailed before these transfers of duties were announced, certain financial burdens were assumed by the three levels of government. With respect to the great proportion of civil defence obligations the federal government assumed 100 per cent. We presume that in the matter of certain supplies the 100 per cent arrangement will continue as heretofore.

Certain functions are now to be turned over to the office of the privy council. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare will attest, this matter was under consideration prior to June of 1957, and the step now taken is in principle one which I am sure will commend itself to the house. The Prime Minister has indicated his view as head of the government of Canada that civil defence is a matter to be taken seriously.

All hon. members will acknowledge, of course, the very difficult assignment that is now reposed in the three divisions of the federal government, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of National Defence, and the office of the privy council, whose duties and the results of whose duties likewise, I presume, will be reported to this house by the Prime Minister. If that is not the case we have yet to be told which minister will be responsible for reporting to the house and exercising ministerial jurisdiction over the co-ordinating role of the office of the privy council.

Nothing is said, of course, in the statement made by the Prime Minister as to the views of the government regarding the matter of evacuation. It will be remembered that when this matter was last discussed the present Minister of National Defence, who acted as spokesman for the then opposition in the matter of civil defence, basically, I think, agreed with the general position taken by the civil defence authorities as of two years ago with regard to evacuation. Great events have taken place since that time. The intercontinental ballistic missile is now a fact. The Soviet union has successfully launched projects involving the use of intercontinental ballistic missiles. What effect does this new scientific advance in war mean in terms of the policy of the government with regard to evacuation? Does evacuation continue, in the opinion of the government, to be its policy under, of course, now admittedly certain restricted circumstances?

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the house will welcome the statement in so far as it delineates the transfer of functions that has now taken place from the ministry of health and welfare to the two other departments of the government. But I am sure it would be both the Prime Minister's view and that of every hon. member in this house that this announcement today will not clearly establish the future character of civil defence in Canada. We will want to know what is to be the position of the civil defence council made up of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his opposite numbers in the ten provincial governments. Is that council to continue? Is it going to have the same power which it had previously, or is it going to be subjected to the limitations involved in the transfer of functions from one minister to the two other departments? How many civil defence workers are there now in Canada? There were, as of June, 1957 some 250,000. Does that number still prevail? These and other questions remain to be answered; nevertheless, notwithstanding this fact, we welcome this belated announcement of this phase of government policy.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): After listening to the lengthy, comprehensive but rather tortuous statement of the hon. member for Essex East I am not too certain at this time whether I should be replying to the statement by the Prime Minister or to the lengthy statement of the hon. Member for Essex East.

The question of civil defence is a rather controversial one in Canada today because there are a great many well informed people who have asked whether or not civil defence is in fact possible with the tremendous advance in military weapons. We are pleased that the government has had a further study made of this question, and is reporting its action to the house based on that study.

I suggest to the Prime Minister and the government that a further study of this all-important question should be made by the House of Commons itself, and I would think that a small committee of this house might well be established at this session to continue the study that has already been made in other quarters of this vital question. I have no doubt that the provincial governments and the municipalities, in spite of some questions by some municipalities in the past, will give to the government and its various departments full co-operation in this very important field. The provinces and the municipalities will welcome the additional financial assistance that is being provided.

I think any future study that is made of this important question should include the effects of strontium 90, as well as the effects of fall-out and radiation. I feel that from such a study might come recommendations important to the survival of the human race.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, based on his statement on civil defence. In view of the fact that there are some unorganized communities of 1,000 or more in population which have excellent fire brigades and water protection, would they be included in the term "local" in reference to assistance to local communities?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion seems an appropriate one, and it would be a matter for consideration by the minister.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce that Deputy Commissioner Charles Edward Rivett-Carnac has today been appointed commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Such an appointment would perhaps not normally be announced in the house, but in view of the particular circumstances and the general interest in the matter I thought it would be appropriate on this occasion to make the announcement here. This appointment and the retirement of Commissioner Nicholson will both have effect on April 1.

Commissioner Rivett-Carnac has had a most distinguished career with the R.C.M. Police and brings to his position the benefit of full experience in all the problems and requirements of the field divisions, as well as a thorough knowledge of the administrative and command problems at headquarters.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is an unfortunate and regrettable situation that required this appointment. The decision taken by the government last week, however, brought about that situation and this vacancy. That being the case, Mr. Speaker, I can think of no one more suitable than Deputy Commissioner Rivett-Carnac to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of a commissioner who has served Canada so well, a man of great courage and integrity. Mr. Speaker, the reported offences against law and order in Newfoundland over the week end emphasize the desirability of filling this vacancy quickly, and I am glad this has been done.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the announcement by the Minister of Justice, and we are quite certain from the minister's own knowledge and his usual good judgment that he has made an appropriate replacement as commissioner of the R.C.M. police.

LIVESTOCK

HOGS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT PRICES

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Agricultural Stabilization Act provides for the announcement of support prices on an annual basis. The existing support price for hogs expires at the end of this month. Therefore I am now announcing that the existing price of $25 per 100 pounds, basis Toronto and Montreal, warm dressed weight, for A grade carcasses, with appropriate prices for other markets, will continue in effect until September 30. For the period

October 1, 1959 to March 31, 1960, the support price will be at the mandatory level, which is 80 per cent of the ten-year average or $23.65 per 100 pounds, basis Toronto and Montreal.

As is well known, hog marketings in 1958, and more particularly during the last quarter of 1958 and in 1959 to date, have been running at unusually high levels. This has resulted in hog prices over the past six months remaining at or close to the support level. It has also resulted in a considerable accumulation of pork products by the stabilization board. There is good reason to believe that one of the important factors behind the increased production of hogs is the development of so-called vertical integration, financed or sponsored in one way or another by large commercial organizations. The assured price under the existing stabilization program appears to have been an important factor in the greatly accelerated production under this type of operation.

I have therefore directed the stabilization board and officers of the department actively to explore the method of providing price support for hogs by means of a payment to producers, commonly described as a deficiency payment, rather than by an undertaking to purchase the product as at the present time. Under this alternative method the price of hogs would not be supported in the market, but producers would be paid the difference between the actual average price received and the prescribed support price. This method would make it possible to withhold payments from commercial organizations operating under the so-called vertical integration plan, and to limit payments to any individual to a specific number of hogs delivered.

I am sure that all who have knowledge of hog production and marketing procedures will agree that before radical changes are made an administratively sound plan must be developed. Consequently I cannot at this moment state when the proposed change can be put into effect. However, I wish to assure the house that every effort will be made to complete the necessary studies and put the alternative plan into effect at the earliest possible date.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the house will have listened with great interest, I think, to the statement of the minister, and there will be an opportunity very shortly when we resume consideration of his estimates to debate that statement. I gathered from the statement that the government have felt that the policy previously adopted in this matter was unrealistic in the figure the minister has given for hog support prices, and that they have felt that this figure represents an incentive payment. They have now taken steps, in their wisdom, to correct that situation by introducing a new principle in respect of this product, that of deficiency payments. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, we on this side get some satisfaction out of the fact that the government has adopted the policy put forward in our national convention resolution, where we advocated deficiency payments when required.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to hog prices is most disappointing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: Hon. members on the government side of the house can snicker and giggle if they wish, but the hog producers of this country will not look kindly on an announcement which states that the floor price beginning October 1 will drop from $25 to $23.65 a hundredweight. This is not the kind of policy we had expected from the government in view of its oft repeated promises given to agricultural producers of their fair share of the national income and of support prices based on parity.

I had thought previously, Mr. Speaker, that when the government undertook to announce support prices at the height of the production season, those support prices would be announced at an earlier date to allow farmers to gauge their production for the period covered by the support prices. The minister, who is a hog raiser himself, knows that a great many plans are already under way for the production of hogs this year, and that the quantity of hogs which will be going on to Canadian markets in the current year has now, for all practical purposes, been decided. This therefore is an announcement of a reduction at a time when the farmer has no opportunity to adjust his production to this lower price.

This is a demonstration we believe, Mr. Speaker, once again of the drastic results that will flow from the government having failed to give fair prices to the western grain producers. We all realize that in desperation western grain producers have transferred a very large part of what was normally strictly grain production to the production of livestock. The increased marketing of hogs from the prairie region is perhaps one of the reasons why the minister has announced this reduction in hog prices. Without an over-all, comprehensive policy for agriculture I am afraid this may be but a forerunner of additional and drastic announcements by the minister which will mean a further deterioration in the position of agriculture.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER OF BUSINESS AS SET OUT ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Speaker: Notices of motions for production of papers. No. 5; Mr. Fisher.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreeable to the hon. member for Port Arthur?

Mr. Fisher: I should like an explanation as to why this should stand.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): After motions, the next item as I see it on my order paper is introduction of bills; then, first reading of Senate public bills, and then government notices of motions.

Mr. Speaker: We must have different order papers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mine is dated Monday, March 23.

Mr. Speaker: The next order of business after motions is: private members' day, fifth allotted Monday—notices of motions for the production of papers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have an order paper for Monday, March 23. It says:

Daily routine of business:—Presenting reports by standing and special committees; motions; introduction of bills; first reading of Senate public bills; government notices of motions.

Mr. Speaker: There are no bills to be introduced today. That is why there is no item set down.

Mr. Fulton: Look at standing order No. 15.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Under the provisions of standing order No. 26, Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of urgent national importance, namely the serious unemployment situation as revealed today in a joint release of the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics which has not shown any decrease in unemployment as forecast by the government. This is a matter which bears with increasing severity on certain regions of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I have felt that the question of unemployment, which is a continuing one, can scarcely be brought forward under rule 26. The circumstance alleged by the hon. member for Essex East, namely a joint release by the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics, scarcely alters the situation, in my opinion, to a point where the house should be asked to interrupt its ordinary business. That is my present disposition, but before disposing of the matter I do not want to overlook any sound argument tending to show that this question should be debated today and that we should interrupt our normal business for this purpose.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since Your Honour has asked for sound arguments, may I have the honour of being the first to indicate the sound arguments which we on this side of the house have in mind to justify, in Your Honour's judgment, the presentation of this motion at this particular time.

The government through the Minister of Labour on August 16 last in a debate in this house indicated that the unemployment situation in Canada was improving, and that we could expect to see a gradual amelioration of the problem from that time onward. The fact is that this morning the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics issued a monthly report which reveals that the number of persons without jobs and seeking work was estimated to be 537,000 in February, a figure virtually unchanged from January. This situation means that Canada has a higher percentage of unemployed workers than any other country in the western world, and it would seem to us—

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is carrying on with the debate. He is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I think the point is well taken that the hon. member is really proceeding as though the motion had been allowed. The point is this. What difference is there between this Monday and last Monday, when a motion could have been moved by way of want of confidence to deal with this unemployment situation? As a matter of fact I recall now that it could not have been moved because the subject has already been debated this session. I am not sure how the hon. member could overcome these obstacles, both that we have had debates so directly pointed toward the unemployment situation that I doubt whether a new want of confidence motion could be permitted on this subject, and second, as the hon. member has just remarked, that there is no change in the figures; we are dealing with a continuing situation.

I feel the hon. gentleman should not attempt to debate the subject matter, but if he has any sound argument in support of debating this question at this particular time, indicating why it has become a matter which would justify the interruption of our ordinary business, I feel he should address himself to this point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, I think the argument of urgency must lie in the facts as they seem to present themselves to us, but I do not intend to labour that point. However, we now have in our possession, as of a few hours ago, a further report from the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics which indicates that despite government assurances with regard to unemployment in this country the situation is not improving and in the result, when we add up the national figure on the basis of the categories of unemployed included in the dominion bureau of statistics figures, a very serious situation confronts the country. The urgency lies in the fact that the problem continues, as the monthly bulletin indicates, to be as severe as it was in the preceding month. That situation confronting us at this moment when we are about to recess for a period of ten days warrants, I submit with great respect and confidence, the house giving consideration at this time to ways and means by which the government could deal with this problem.

This matter has not been pursued by way of specific motion during this session. There was an amendment on going into supply providing that the government should give consideration to calling a dominion-provincial conference so that this question and fiscal matters could be discussed, but both fiscal and unemployment questions were referred to in that amendment as the kind of question which would justify the holding of such a conference, and the kind of question that might be discussed at that conference.

I submit there is no problem of greater emergency in our country at this time than the fact that we have almost half a million people out of work. This problem persists in spite of government policy and in spite of government assurances of amelioration. I would urge upon Your Honour the consideration that if ever there was a motion that came within the terms of standing order 26 it is this particular motion, which justifies our asking the government to give an opportunity at this time of examining its policies and finding why there is no improvement in a situation that affects so many thousands of our people in all parts of Canada. The new fact has emerged that as a result of statistics introduced in another parliament in the commonwealth we have learned that Canada has a higher measure of unemployment than any other—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My hon. friend is simply going ahead to make his speech. I point out that the rules are perfectly clear. Standing order 26, subsection 6, paragraph (c) provides:

> 26. 6(c) the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session.

The original amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition during the course of the debate on the speech from the throne on January 19, as reported at page 52 of Hansard, was in the following words:

> We respectfully affirm that Your Excellency's advisers, by reason of contradictory and confused policies; as well as lamentable indecision in dealing with grave national problems such, for example, as those concerned with mounting unemployment, no longer merit the confidence of this house.

In addition there was a subamendment moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West, to a motion to go into supply, as reported at page 871 of Hansard of February 10, in the following words:

> That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding thereafter the following words:
> "and should present for consideration of such conference federal proposals:
> (a) to assume complete responsibility for the welfare of the employable unemployed.
> (b) to ensure employment opportunities to all Canadians willing and able to work—

The motion made today by the hon. member for Essex East contains these words:

> —which has not shown any significant decrease.

My hon. friend has reference to the general unemployment situation. If the hon. gentleman can move to adjourn the house on the basis of figures which happen to have been published today, then he could move to adjourn the house every day that figures are brought down; for instance, two weeks from now or four weeks from now and so on right through the session. I submit that this rule is intended to prevent this type of development.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Public Works has raised a point of order which I have heard. I believe I have heard all I need to hear from that hon. gentleman or any hon. member of the house for that matter, because it is quite clear to me that this is not a motion that can be sustained.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to the question of whether or not this is a motion of urgency and whether or not there exists a situation which is different from that which might obtain had action been taken by the government.

On that question only I should like to draw to your attention the fact that this is a matter of urgency because the house now has information it did not have before. It is only within the last few hours that it has been possible to obtain information concerning what the situation is, and the situation is undoubtedly serious. I would also point out that this week the house is going to adjourn until April 6, at which time we will be approaching the period when seasonal benefits under the unemployment insurance provision will be running out. Because of the continuing unemployment problem many will be unable to obtain unemployment insurance benefits. In view of this fact I submit it is only a logical conclusion to everyone that this is a matter of urgency that should be discussed.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members appreciate, it is not my function to say whether or not this is an urgent, important or critical matter. I do not for one moment take the position that it is not, but I do find that we have discussed this very problem throughout the session. In addition to the discussions which have been mentioned by the Minister of Public Works the hon. member who moved this motion moved an amendment on February 9 calling for a federal-provincial conference to discuss unemployment and fiscal relations.

In the absence of some marked change that has been sudden and which presents another problem from that which we have considered, it appears to me I could not allow the ordinary procedure of this house to be interrupted, which is what the hon. member is asking to do.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR LATEST STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he any up to date figures on the unemployment situation as it exists in Canada?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to inform the house that the latest joint release of the dominion bureau of statistics and the Department of Labour shows a general improvement in the labour situation across Canada. The February figure for persons without jobs and seeking work shows a drop of 1,000 from January. Since it comes at this time of the year, Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging evidence of a trend which has been developing for some weeks. The February figure of 537,000 job seekers represents 26,000 fewer looking for work than at this time last year. At the same time, 152,000 more persons are working. In view of the dire predictions that have been made in some quarters may I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this government can take immense pride—

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Starr: I have some very important figures—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before he finishes, perhaps the minister would let me advise him that I have not permitted a debate on this subject. I hope he will keep within the ruling.

Mr. Starr: I do not think these figures are debatable, sir. I think all of us in the house can take great pride in the fact that 152,000 more persons are working this year than at this time last year.

In percentages of those seeking work, the figure is 8.8 per cent of the labour force as at mid-February. In January it was 8.9 per cent. Last February the seeking-work figure was 9.4 per cent of the labour force. It is on its way down. By comparing the picture in February we find that it is much more encouraging than it was even in the month of January. In January, unemployment was still up 98,000 over December and 11,000 over a year earlier. Employment was 142,000 lower than in December. This, I am very happy to say, Mr. Speaker, has been checked and reversed. Unemployment is down and employment is up very substantially.

When we turn to last year we find that for February, unemployment had jumped up 232,000 over the previous year. We find that it had jumped by 35,000 over the previous month, and it was at this time, Mr. Speaker, that the predictions that I referred to were made. However, the situation is now that we had 9,000 more people at work in February than in January and 152,000 more than in February last year, with a labour force 126,000 greater.

The national unemployment registrations were, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I find that if not a specific debate at least a general debate is arising. I leave it to hon. members whether the minister should continue his answer at this length, and I would ask him to terminate it—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think it would be the wish of the house to allow the minister to complete his statement on the understanding, of course, that we on this side will have the same right and opportunity that we hope now arises, in view of the fact that the minister has already made a fairly comprehensive statement.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has not asked for leave to revert to motions to make such a statement. If he does, I will ask the house whether it wishes to give him the opportunity.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister a few questions? Would the minister like to revert to motions to make his statement?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the minister derive much encouragement, as he said he did, from the fact that 8.8 per cent of the labour force is without jobs and seeking work? Does he think that this situation having regard to the employed force in Canada, represents a result which warrants that encouragement, particularly when we compare the 8.8 per cent with the corresponding figure of 2.5 per cent in Great Britain? Does he think this indicates that their 550,000 unemployed in a country of 48 million is comparable with our 537,000 in a country of 17 million people?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I get reports from the dominion bureau of statistics, I get reports from the national employment service offices, and I also get reports through the press as to the situation in Great Britain. Unfortunately I am in somewhat of a dilemma at times because I am unable to get the Martin B.S. figures—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: I was referring to the "Martin bureau of statistics". In answering the hon. member's question may I say that I get a great deal of satisfaction from the fact that the trend has been reversed, from the fact that two months earlier than has been the case in other years, unemployment is showing a decrease rather than an increase. I take a great deal of pride in that, Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that the things this government has done have brought about this change.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would add to our information on this very important matter by giving us the comparable percentage figure in the United States.

Mr. Starr: I have not got those figures with me—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is 6.1 per cent.

Mr. Starr: —but I know that hon. members opposite have these figures. I think they are very much disturbed by this release because it did not show another increase as they expected.

Mr. Pearson: Does the minister not realize that we are indeed disturbed by these figures, and deeply disturbed because the comparable figures in the United States are so much lower?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, this government—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he say whether or not it is a fact that registrations at the national employment service offices for the month of February show an increase of 16,000 compared with the previous reported period of January 15, 1959?

Mr. Starr: In answer to that question I want to advise the hon. member that registrations at the national employment service offices in March show a decrease of 65,707 from a year ago, or 7.6 per cent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister, in view of his reply, if the figures he gave out this morning are inaccurate when they show that as of January 15, 1959 there were 775,658 compared with 791,210 as of February 19, 1959?

Mr. Starr: The figures I gave the hon. member in reply were more up to date.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If they are more up to date, will the minister explain why he issued this morning the figures I have just given to the house? What the hon. gentleman has done is not to take the people of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and this parliament into his confidence with regard to these figures.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the procedure followed in the compilation of these figures is the same as was established by hon. members opposite when they formed the government, and we are not changing it one bit. In mid-February the dominion bureau of statistics figure is given and so, in comparison, is the mid-February figure of national employment service registrations, but as the head of the department I get up to date figures every week.

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF FEDERAL WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister given further consideration to the possibility of extending the emergency winter work program?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): That matter is still being given consideration.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

EIDERDOWN COLLECTION AND DISPOSAL

Motion No. 74—Mr. Fisher:

For a copy of the return made to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources showing the number of pounds of eiderdown collected and the disposal thereof for 1956, 1957 and 1958, as required by the permit issued by the Canadian wildlife service on the 13th day of April, 1956, to Fernand Boucher and Andre Grenier, 3551 Park avenue, Montreal, Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON REVISION OF TERMS OF UNION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that March 31 is the 10th anniversary of the union of Newfoundland with Canada I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether before that date the government will announce its intention to carry out the recommendations of the McNair commission report?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an announcement can be expected before that date.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUMMIT CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF MEETING IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacques Flynn (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As it is mentioned in today's news that a summit conference will take place in the middle of the summer, would the Prime Minister be kind enough to tell the house if there is a possibility that such a conference may be held in Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, certainly it would be a source of gratification to the Canadian people if the summit conference were held in Canada. There are available at the Citadel in the city of Quebec those facilities which I believe would render a summit conference in that city not only feasible but appropriate. Since Canada is located between the two major countries, namely the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A., and has close affiliation with the United Kingdom and France, I am sure that Canadians as a whole would welcome the holding of this conference in this country.

I did suggest Canada as a suitable place for the holding of that conference to Mr. Macmillan when he was here recently.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY RESPECTING SENDING OF POLICE REINFORCEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the further disturbances over the past week end in western Newfoundland, is it now the intention of the minister to send R.C.M.P. reinforcements to western Newfoundland?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have had no report with regard to this disturbance which would indicate that the situation is different from what it was when it was referred to earlier by the Prime Minister in his statement to this house.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TELEGRAM FROM MAYOR OF ST. JOHN'S

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Is it true that the minister received representations from the mayor of St. John's indicating that, because of the failure of the federal government to carry out its contract, the city of St. John's was seriously denuded of police?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I had a telegram from the mayor of St. John's some two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, to which I replied, and I have had no further representations.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister be willing to table this communication?

Mr. Fulton: Well, I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether one should table every telegram which is received, and every reply. They do not seem to me to cast any further light on the matter than that contained in the question put to the minister. I have had such representations, and I have sent a reply.

Mr. Pickersgill: I request the minister to make the information available to parliament.

Mr. Fulton: Very well. If the house will consent, Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to table the telegram.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER ON POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he is now able to advise the house as to when he will table the white paper on defence.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): The answer that I gave on March 10 still applies today.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Will the minister not do his best to see that this white paper is in the possession of hon. members before the Easter recess, so that it may be studied during the recess?

Mr. Pearkes: Since my estimates cannot be brought down before the Easter recess it is quite impossible to get the white paper out to members before the Easter recess.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER AT MEETING OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question. Is he aware of the meeting of post office employees held in Ottawa yesterday? Was he invited to that meeting and has he any comment to make on it?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the meeting that was held yesterday. I was invited, but unfortunately it was impossible for me to attend. My comment today is exactly the same as I made to the hon. member for St. Denis on February 10 and again on February 24, when I pointed out to him that the matters under discussion were the concern of the civil service commission at this point.

Mr. Denis: May I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. As the Postmaster General says this matter comes under the civil service commission, which comes under the control of the minister, may I ask him if he is aware of the meeting held in Ottawa yesterday by post office employees, and if he has any comment to make.

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the meeting in Ottawa yesterday, and I have no comment to make.

Mr. Denis: May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Is he in a position at this time to keep one promise, the promise he made to answer today the question I have just asked the Secretary of State and the Postmaster General? When there is some hardship so far as the post office employees are concerned, there must be somebody in the government who is responsible.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no one can but pay tribute to the hon. gentleman for the affability he always displays when he asks his questions. I have been waiting for the opportunity to answer the question which I undertook to answer the other day. A similar question was asked by the hon. member on March 10 and on an earlier date, February 24, a question of like import was asked of the Postmaster General. At that time the Postmaster General replied:

> —these are matters which come, in the first instance, under the responsibility of the civil service commission. It is not possible for an individual minister to establish wages for his employees or deal with the other factors which have been discussed at these meetings.

That was part of the answer he gave. I should like to draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that I have at all times laid stress on the independent position of the civil service commission, and that that independent position must be scrupulously maintained and recognized. In a letter to one of the civil service organizations, the civil service association of Canada, in October, 1958 I pointed out that the civil service commission represents neither the employees nor the government as an employer. The responsibilities of the commission in regard to the matter of salaries are clearly set out in the Civil Service Act. It is realized that the decisions of the commission on salary matters have not always met with full agreement, but at all times the various organizations have expressed their utmost confidence in the commission.

Some representations were addressed to me by the federated association of letter carriers and the Canadian postal employees association and, relying on the premise I have already stated, I forwarded those letters to the civil service commission. The civil service commission has informed me that it will take into consideration the representations of these associations concerning salaries, compensation, overtime and the like.

I wish to say that in reviewing salaries of civil servants the pay research bureau of the civil service commission takes into consideration all classes of the service. For that reason I take it that any individual group of employees will not be dealt with separately by the commission.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Would the Prime Minister inform the house when he proposes to appoint a chairman of the civil service commission?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am hoping, Mr. Speaker, that an appointment will be made very soon.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO ERECTION OF NEW BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Douglas Jung (Vancouver Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. As the minister is doubtless aware, the C.B.C. radio and T.V. studios in Vancouver are at present situated in three different locations. With a view to increasing administrative efficiency and reducing production costs, as well as to create employment, would the minister advise whether the C.B.C. has given, or will give, consideration to the erection in Vancouver of a building which would house all the radio and T.V. facilities of the C.B.C.?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The hon. member was good enough to speak to me about this last week, so I was able to make inquiry of the C.B.C. The answer is that there is undoubtedly a need for the centralization of activities in Vancouver. However, the same need exists in other cities, notably in Toronto and Montreal. In view of these circumstances, some time ago the corporation acquired some land for the purpose of constructing buildings some time in the future. There are no immediate plans for carrying out such construction at this time.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Does the minister know if the C.B.C. presently hold lands in Toronto upon which it intends to build a central building in the near future?

Mr. Nowlan: The C.B.C. owns land in Toronto and it also leases several properties, as the hon. member knows; I think some 20 in all. However, the C.B.C. has not acquired any land for the immediate purpose of further construction.

TRADE

SALT FISH—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker, if he would endeavour to make a statement on salt fish marketing tomorrow in order to give hon. members an opportunity to study it in case they should wish to raise questions about this matter which is so important to the east coast.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

URANIUM—ALLEGED PURCHASE BY JAPAN FROM SOUTH AFRICA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): A week ago last Thursday I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question about the reported sale of six tons of uranium oxide by South Africa to Japan without a bilateral agreement. He said he would look into the matter.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I said in reply to the question at that time that I had no evidence that South Africa had sold uranium to Japan. Subsequently information reached us that this was done. I am not just sure what the quantity is—oh, it is 6½ tons of uranium oxide which were exported from South Africa to Japan, and a guarantee was given by Japan that the uranium oxide would only be used for peaceful purposes.

Mr. Pearson: I also asked the minister on the previous occasion whether the policy being followed by certain uranium exporters in this matter, that is of selling without bilateral agreements, will affect the policy of the Canadian government in selling any uranium only within such bilateral agreement.

Mr. Churchill: We have this matter under serious consideration, but we are working closely with the international agency that is concerned with atomic energy and the sale of uranium. The question of setting up safeguards is closely linked to the bilateral agreements between uranium producers and those who require that metal. At the moment we are holding to the bilateral agreements with the necessary safeguards.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

March 19—House in committee on Bill S-11, an act to incorporate the Evangelical Mennonite Conference. (Without amendment)—Mr. Jorgenson.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): In view of the absence of the sponsor of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I would move that it be referred to the committee together with all the divorce bills standing on the order paper for reference to the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the private bills standing on the order paper for consideration in committee of the whole be referred to the committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): I believe there are about five private bills mixed up with these divorce bills, and I would assume that they would be taken in proper order.

Mr. Speaker: Well, then, has the hon. member any objection to taking items 1 to 30 in one motion?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I think we should have an explanation of No. 1, and after that we can take them down to item 31.

Mr. Speaker: Well, then, the motion is that I do leave the chair.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE EVANGELICAL MENNONITE CONFERENCE

The house in committee on Bill S-11, to incorporate the Evangelical Mennonite Conference—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak very briefly on this bill, which comes appropriately before us as we move into the holiest season of the year, that is Easter. It is perhaps appropriate that at this time we consider this measure in committee and, subsequently, give it third reading. I am not familiar with the precise nature of the religious community that is being established by this bill. I believe the hon. member for Lisgar will have a few words to say on that point in a few moments.

Since I stand for the sponsor of the bill, I should like to assure the committee that the bill has been given proper consideration in the other place and by the miscellaneous private bills committee, where the sponsor was pleased to attend and explain the provisions. I think I should say further that the 19 or 20 clauses in this particular bill are in the standard form for setting up these religious associations.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I should like to add to what the hon. gentleman has said concerning this bill that the purpose is to set up a central administrative body to administer the funds of the various congregations of this church, over and above that needed on the local level. It will co-ordinate the efforts of these congregations and enable the larger ones to assist the smaller ones in getting established. It will also facilitate the distribution of church funds collected for missionary work in foreign fields. I think this is the same procedure that is used by the majority of churches of all faiths in this country. This measure will greatly assist this religious body in furthering its work amongst the people of that faith.

CONGREGATION OF THE SISTERS OF THE FAMILY OF BORDEAUX

Mr. Jacques Flynn (Quebec South) moved the second reading of Bill S-14, to incorporate the Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Family of Bordeaux.

He said:

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to incorporate, under the federal parliament authority, the Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Family of Bordeaux. It is a Roman Catholic congregation, established in Canada in 1904 and which, since that time, has concerned itself with hospital care and education, mainly in the province of Quebec.

The congregation seeks a federal charter because it is considering extension of its activities beyond the province of Quebec.

I said just now that that congregation, Mr. Speaker, is concerned with hospital care. In fact, it operates several hospitals, one in Ville Saint-Laurent, another in Saint-Paul-l'Ermite, one in Quebec, which is well known —Notre-Dame-de-l'Espérance hospital—one at Amqui, one at Seven Islands and, finally, another one at Blanc-Sablon, in Labrador.

In the field of education, that congregation operates several schools in the Matapedia valley, in addition to Indian schools in Roman River, Labrador, and at Blanc-Sablon. It also operates, at Ville-Saint-Laurent a training school for certified nurses who provide home nursing care.

In view of the above, I need hardly point out that the activities of that congregation are extensive and based on the loftiest altruistic motives. That is why I feel sure that this bill, which has already been considered in detail by the Senate, will be approved by the house.

Mr. J.-Alfred Belzile (Matapedia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to take up a few minutes of the house's time, as did my colleague the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn), to express support of Bill S-14 which he has just introduced.

The basic purpose of Bill S-14 is to allow a Canadian religious order the right to incorporate under the name of Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Family of Bordeaux.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, the passing of this bill should contribute to give the congregation legal uniformity by allowing it to incorporate. In view of the fact that the Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Family, which heretofore was also known as the Sisters of Hope, are now operating missions in my constituency, including a maternity hospital at Amqui, county seat of Matapedia, and primary schools in the parishes of Saint-Vianney, Sainte-Irene, Saint-Alexandre-des-Lacs, and Lac-Humqui, it can safely be assumed that within a few years, they will be in a position to expand their present activities to an even greater degree, and thus to render even greater services to society in the hospital and educational fields.

For all those reasons, as well as others that would be too long to mention, it is with great pleasure that I support Bill S-14.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

CANADIAN GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka) (for Mr. Fleming, Okanagan-Revelstoke) moved the second reading of Bill S-13 respecting the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is relatively simple. It is intended to remove the "ceiling" on the amount of real property which the Canadian general council of the boy scouts association may hold. As a former member of the scout organization, both as a scout and as a leader, I am very pleased to have the opportunity of moving the second reading of this bill on behalf of the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke

(Mr. Fleming) who is unavoidably absent. That hon. member, who was to have moved the bill, has a long history of association with the boy scout organization and was only recently awarded the medal of merit by that organization.

The Canadian general council of the boy scouts association was incorporated by chapter 130 of the statutes of 1914 which received the royal assent on June 12, of that year. Section 8 of that act authorized the association to receive, hold and dispose of real estate, but added a proviso that the amount should not exceed the value of $50,000. On reading over the debates which took place in connection with that bill back in 1914 I find that some hon. members at that time wondered why the amount was so large. Looking at the matter in retrospect, taking into consideration the way in which the boy scout movement has grown and developed, we realize that this amount was totally inadequate and that at the present time it is quite unrealistic. In support of the need for this authority to hold additional real estate I should like to give the house a few facts with regard to the organization. Many of them are well known, but I think this would be an appropriate time and place to reflect on the advance made by this organization since 1914 and on the need for allowing them to hold increased capital.

It is 45 years since this association became an incorporated body. The dramatic growth of the movement to its present membership of nearly 256,000 has given ample proof of the effectiveness of the program which the association has undertaken. Unlike so many other organizations, the scouts do not confine their activities to urban districts and municipalities. They have reached out into remote hamlets in every part of this country. The association has extended its work until it has reached the Eskimos and the Indians in our northern territory. I myself became a boy scout through the medium of a little known portion of the movement called "The Lone Scouts" organized in areas where there were not enough boys or leaders available for a group to be formed. We formed small groups of three or four boys with a councillor or an assistant, and a great many boys bebecame scouts by joining the lone scouts organization.

The movement is of particular value in a country of such racial and religious diversification as Canada. The ranks are open to boys of every faith and of every racial background. The emphasis is on duty to God and loyalty to country and this is of immense importance in a country where we are trying to weld together into a single Canadian people citizens who come from every continent and who claim every country as a birthplace or country of origin. The appeal of the scout movement is not only to groups of differing religious or racial background. The movement also serves the blind, the deaf, the crippled, and the mentally retarded. It gives young lads in these unfortunate circumstances an interest in life—a feeling that they have something in common with other boys who have the normal advantages. A great work is done in such special troops.

The organization does not forget the military personnel. It has organized troops in Europe and in overseas bases to such effect that nearly 1,000 boys belong to the scout organization at army and air force bases in France and Germany. The boy scout program is offered to organizations interested in the development of good citizenship in this country, and it is interesting to note that 50 different organizations sponsor boy scouts groups—churches, service clubs, home and school organizations among them. In fact, almost every organization which is concerned with the welfare of youth and of Canada is either sponsoring a scout group or giving one active support.

Many of our leading citizens have been members of the scout organization, including, I am told the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and several members of his cabinet, many hon. members of this house and a number of hon. senators from the other place. I have spoken to a number of hon. members of this chamber in connection with the scout movement while this bill was in preparation, and almost every one of those to whom I spoke said he had been a member of the scout organization in his youth. My neighbour, the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Anderson) tells me he was the first wolf cub in Galt, and that was quite a few years ago. Leaders of religious, educational and many other groups in Canada have not only belonged to this organization but continue to support it. Today, more than a quarter of a million boys are receiving training under more than 25,000 dedicated leaders whose only reward is the knowledge that they are making good citizens for this country. Because of its system of sponsorship and its ability to take its program to the smallest communities in Canada, the boy scout association is serving more boys than all the other youth character training agencies combined.

Much is said today about juvenile delinquency. This is a phrase which I do not much like, but it has become part of the nomenclature of social welfare work in Canada and I suppose we must accept it.

The scout organization has done a great deal in a positive rather than a negative way to prevent juvenile delinquency and to advance the cause of the development of good citizens in Canada.

In all frankness I must point out to the house that this bill has a retroactive effect. It is feared that the limit provided in the original act of incorporation has now been exceeded many times. The organization feels that to remove any doubt as to its title to various lands it holds retroactive effect must be given. There were similar associations organized at about the same time most of which had a similar limitation on the real estate held and several have already been required to come back to parliament to ask that the ceiling be lifted.

I do not wish to burden the house with details of the real estate held by the boy scouts association but I shall simply state that in the early days an attempt was made to record centrally all real estate that the association owned or that was held for it. As the movement grew such central recording became impossible. Scout groups in some cases own their own premises. In some cases the title is taken in the name of the central board. In still other cases the title is taken in the name of trustees. It is therefore difficult to know exactly how much real estate is held but it exceeds many times at this moment the amount originally authorized.

Most provinces have their own offices and campsites. The Canadian general council owns its own headquarters, property on which a new headquarters is to be built, and a property in the Gatineau that will provide income. I have great pleasure in moving second reading of this bill.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to have the opportunity this afternoon to say a few words in support of this measure introduced by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken). As the hon. member pointed out to us the purpose of this amendment is to repeal the financial limitations that were placed on the Canadian general council of the Boy Scouts association at the time of its incorporation. I do not think we should be surprised that a measure of this nature has come before us today when we realize that this organization was incorporated some 45 years ago and when we consider prices in those days as compared with current prices.

As the hon. member also pointed out, the limitation initially imposed has unfortunately probably already been exceeded and therefore the bill includes a retroactive feature in order to cover the operations of the organization. I believe that can be explained not only by the great expansion of the association but by the increased value of property and other developments that have occurred since the time of the incorporation of the association.

In reviewing discussions that occurred at the time of the original incorporation the question of the financial limitation was one of the two main points that were raised.

The other was the fear that was expressed about this being a military organization which perhaps arose because of the association of Lord Baden-Powell with the army. However, I believe that fear has been dispelled and every hon. member of this house will agree that the boy scouts association has made an extremely notable contribution to the welfare of the youth of this country. One of its purposes throughout the years is to make good citizens of our youngsters. I believe it has been highly successful in this respect and to that extent it may have had some connection with the army because many of the chaps who were members of the organization went on to serve their country faithfully during the war.

Preparation for military service was not, however, the primary purpose of the organization. The association has made a great contribution to almost every aspect of our national life. While we are speaking here of the Canadian boy scouts association it could also be noted that there are groups in some 57 nations and therefore they play their part in building up better international relations throughout the world.

In terms of legislation this bill appears to be of a minor character but the amendments it embodies are of great importance to the association in helping them carry out their activities. At this time I feel it is fitting that we should pay tribute to the many thousands of leaders who have devoted their time and energy to directing boy scout groups throughout the years. As the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka mentioned, most hon. members of this house have been associated with the boy scouts in one way or another throughout the years and are perhaps particularly aware of the values arising from the organization. We all know from our own experience that in most efforts of this kind it is difficult to find people who will devote their time and energy year after year to the work being carried on. Sometimes organizations of this kind are started and later fall by the wayside through lack of volunteer support. For that reason I wish to pay tribute to those selfless individuals who have devoted their time to serving as leaders of these groups thoughout the years.

Because of the association of many hon. members of this house with boy scouts over the course of time it is perhaps fitting that we pay tribute at this moment to the contribution made by the late Lord Baden-Powell. In closing my remarks I should like to draw to our minds a statement he made in what he intended to be his last message to boy scouts throughout the world which I believe sets out many of the concepts of that organization as he conceived them in his mind. It might be well for us to reflect upon them and to bring them again to our own minds at this time. I wish to read a portion of the last statement he made to the organization, commencing approximately half-way and continuing to the end:

> I have had a most happy life and I want each one of you to have as happy a life too.
> I believe that God has put us in this jolly world to be happy and enjoy life. Happiness doesn't come from being rich, nor merely from being successful in your career, nor by self-indulgence. One step toward happiness is to make yourself healthy and strong while you are a boy, so that you can be useful and so you can enjoy life when you are a man.
> Nature study will show you how full of beautiful and wonderful things God has made the world for you to enjoy. Be contented with what you have got and make the best of it. Look on the bright side of things instead of the gloomy one.
> But the real way to get happiness is by giving out happiness to other people. Try and leave this world a little better than you found it and when your turn comes to die, you can die happy in feeling that at any rate you have not wasted your time but have done your best.
> "Be prepared" in this way, to live happy and die happy—stick to your scout promise always—even after you have ceased to be a boy—and God help you to do it.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all hon. members are very glad to see the necessity of this amendment contained in this bill. To a great extent it shows that the assets of the boy scouts association have grown in this country in the last 45 years. The corollary, of course, is the great growth of the organization itself.

The two hon. members who have preceded me supported this bill and pointed out many things which are complimentary to the boy scouts association. I do not wish to repeat what they said but there are some further observations I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members and indirectly to the country at large. Like the previous speakers, I was a member of the boy scouts organization and I have no hesitation in being a strong protagonist of the movement. First of all, I think the boy scouts organization can be a great help in the world at the present time not only from the national point of view but from the international point of view; this affects us all very much.

As we all know, no country in the world lives unto itself today. We are not an island. The international character of the boy scouts has already been pointed out. It is organized in 57 different countries of the world and it does a very great deal to bring about international understanding among different races, cultures and religions at an early age in people's lives. This is a very important thing, Mr. Speaker. When we get older habit patterns and prejudice are set in our minds. If we can form the right habit patterns and the right attitude and feeling toward people in other countries at an early age those habit patterns are not easy to change. This is one of the great contributions of the boy scout movement.

Every year they have international jamborees and young people from 12 to 18 years of age have the opportunity to associate with people of the same age in other parts of the world. It is a wonderful opportunity to create mutual understanding which lasts all through people's lives.

We all have great interest in the work of the United Nations and in our ultimate aspirations toward one world. I can think of no organization that does more to further those aspirations of everyone in general, as I have already said, at the proper age level, than does the boy scouts.

I do not think I could add to what has already been said regarding the fine work that the organization does for Canada itself. I believe the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka pointed out the excellent work the organization does to prevent young people falling into the trap of juvenile delinquency. As our society changes, and particularly as it changed during world war II and after, we find that quite often both parents go to work instead of just the proverbial breadwinner, the father of the family. Because of this factor in our society at the present time some of the discipline and training formerly given at home are not given there perhaps to the same extent as they were in the past. The fine character building and disciplinarian training that the young people get in the boy scouts organization help to give them moral values which they must have later in life. It also provides them with the necessary disciplinary training.

In other countries of the world, Mr. Speaker, in most other NATO countries, as a matter of fact, compulsory military service for teenagers at some period during that time of life provides a great deal of the discipline. Of course, in other countries with which we are not associated, such as the totalitarian countries, military training of one sort or another goes on for a much longer period. However,

I think that the boy scouts movement, without having any of the disagreeable or detrimental aspect of military training, does much to provide the necessary discipline at an early age which stands people in good stead later on in life.

One other observation I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that Canada is a particularly suitable country for the boy scouts movement to work in. When I say this, I have particular reference to the geography and the climate of Canada. We have a great country, full of lakes and rivers, a fine country for outdoor living. The training of young people in the boy scouts movement will be a great help to them in later years, not only from the disciplinarian point of view or from the character-building point of view but from the point of view of being able to enjoy the leisure time which is now becoming more and more available in our economic system. Because of the work of the trade unions and the general attitude of people throughout the country those who toil now have more leisure time and the big problem is to know and understand how to appreciate properly one's leisure time. Instead of sitting watching television programs people at an early age are learning to appreciate the out of doors with the accompanying pleasure, enjoyment, relaxation and piece of mind that come from appreciating the out of doors. This training is given well in the boy scouts movement.

It has always been a pleasure to me to see the recognition that the federal government has given to the boy scouts, chiefly because of its work in citizenship. In the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration each year a grant of $15,000 is given to assist the movement. In 1955, when the world scout jamboree was held in Niagara Falls, the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) recognized this by producing a commemorative stamp on that occasion.

I should like to say a word in regard to the girl guides association, which is the sister or counterpart movement of the boy scouts. It does the same kind of work and everything that has been said about the boy scouts also applies to the girl guides. The federal government gives the girl guides the same recognition by also providing a grant of $15,000 a year. In 1960 the girl guides movement will be celebrating its fiftieth anniversary in Canada. I know this movement is anxious to have a commemorative stamp struck in honour of this occasion and I hope that at that time the Postmaster General will give the girl guides the same treatment as he gave the boy scouts.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak very briefly in this debate.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

A matter of principle, of course, appears here and it has to do with the amount of property that can be owned by the Canadian boy scouts organization. This is not a new thing in this parliament. This is at least the second occasion this year on which a group or an association has had to come before us and ask that the amount of property they could hold be greatly increased. It does perhaps seem paradoxical that an organization whose motto is "Be Prepared", and which was founded almost 50 years ago when the nation was much smaller, and when $50,000 did seem like a large sum to members of parliament, could not think of this. As a consequence, I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill one question. Exactly what amount of property does the organization have? Can he give us a breakdown at least of the major items held by the Boy Scouts Association?

Mr. Aiken: I am ready to answer the question if no one else wishes to speak.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), who is detained elsewhere, would have been very happy to say a word of tribute to the boy scouts association. This particular bill affords the opportunity of saying that we recognize the great inspiration and training given not only to the boys of our country but the boys of the commonwealth and boys in so many countries of the world. The boy scouts association, since the days of its founder, Lord Baden-Powell, has made a contribution to the unification of the commonwealth in its respective countries in spirit as well, of course, as providing our sons with incentives and inspirations that mean so much to the healthy development of the boys of our country and the boys of the world.

When one thinks that Baden-Powell served in South Africa under that great public servant, Alfred Milner, one realizes the influence of Milner on the then Colonel Powell. One also thinks of the great influence of Baden-Powell himself on countless numbers of young men who have served their generations and their countries as a result of the initial experience gained by them as boy scouts. Like so many other members I join, in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition who is at another meeting, in praising the work of this organization and I take advantage of this particular measure to say these words of approval in the hope that in some small way they will reflect the unity of conviction that prevails in the house with regard to the great work of the boy scouts.

Finally, mention was made by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) of the girl guides. What one has said about the boy scouts one could say about them. I am happy to join with him, particularly because he comes from my section of the province, in the proposal he made for recognition of their anniversary by some action which, as he suggested, could more appropriately be taken by the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton). If the Leader of the Opposition were in his seat he would have said these words but I am sure he would have said them much better.

Mr. Pickersgill: As an old boy scout and as the minister in better days—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I must recognize the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Howard Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, it is most certainly not my intention to take up too much of the time of the house but, like many other members, I represent a constituency where the boy scouts are doing most active and useful work. However, that is not my main purpose in rising at this time. My real reason for wishing to say a few words lies in the fact that I would be more than remiss if I did not bring to the attention of the house the fact that the boy scout movement in Canada includes not only the great host of boy scouts from coast to coast but also includes a great number of sea scouts.

I do not wish to pretend for a single moment that I am a prime example of the sea scout movement, but, in supporting Bill S-13, I should like to take this opportunity to say that the sea scouts association exemplifies all the qualities of leadership that have been mentioned by other speakers this afternoon. I should like to point out, the sea scouts organization prepared many boys for active service in the navy during the second world war. I should also like to voice my word of thanks as an old sea scout to the scouting movement and commend the bill to the most serious attention of the house. I am grateful for the opportunity to say a few words this afternoon.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, evidently not only was I prepared but I was too well prepared. As hon. members know, the motto of the boy scouts is "Be Prepared". I have always taken this seriously all my life and I think it is one of the best mottoes in the world. I also think that the boy scouts are one of the best organizations in the world. My only excuse for taking a minute or two of the time of the house this afternoon is that I was, as minister of citizenship and immigration and as Mr. Harris was before me, very much interested in promoting this work through the department, and I have no doubt that the hon. lady who now presides over the department also is.

Unfortunately—in fact, doubly unfortunately—I did not have the advantage that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) had of being a sea scout. That would undoubtedly have stood me in good stead in later life. Unfortunately, I was brought up 2,000 miles from the sea and in the days before the Hudson Bay Railway was built even if one was quite prepared to be a sea scout it was rather hard in Manitoba. I believe that has been repaired now by including the Red river as part of the sea. But the sea scouts are, of course, a very important branch of the boy scouts, particularly on our coasts, and there is no doubt that they have added vastly to the value of the organization.

I should like to join with other members who have already spoken in saying that I hope the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) will yield to persuasion and commemorate the anniversary of the girl guides with a stamp. I hope he will not regard it as a lobby, which seems to be very unfashionable with the government these days, but merely the gentle persuasion of the devoted women who have given their time to this organization.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to support this bill, especially in view of the outstanding role played by the boy scout movement in the world and because here in Canada, all provinces are fortunate in having one or more branches of this world-wide organization.

Boy scouts play a significant role in the province of Quebec, more particularly in the federal constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. The city of Joliette has a boy scout organization which is an asset to the town of Joliette and to the constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Scouting in Canada provides useful training; it teaches the young the spirit of sacrifice, of devotion to the community and trains him to be a better citizen.

I am glad to support this bill which will contribute to the growth of scouting in Canada.

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak briefly in support of Bill S-13 having to do with the boys scouts association. It was my privilege to act as chairman of the boys scouts in Elmira for over 13 years and I have seen this group benefit greatly from this very important work. In our community there are thousands of boys who belong to the scout movement. I believe that today we have between 6 million and 7 million boys all over the world in this great movement. Scouting and religion have a very close affinity. The rules of the association provide that every scout must belong to some religious organization and faithfully carry out his religious duties.

Scouting carries with it many promises. The wolf cub promises to do his best, to do his duty to God and the Queen; to keep the law of the wolf cub pack and to do a good turn to somebody every day. The wolf cub gives in to the old wolf, but does not give in to himself. The boy scout promise is:

On my honour I promise that I will do my best—
To do my duty to God, and the Queen,
To help other people at all times,
To obey the scout law.

Now, the scout law is as follows:

(i) A scout's honour is to be trusted.
(ii) A scout is loyal to the Queen, his country, his scouters, his parents, his employers and those under him.
(iii) A scout's duty is to be useful and to help others.
(iv) A scout is a friend to all and a brother to every other scout.
(v) A scout is courteous.
(vi) A scout is a friend to animals.
(vii) A scout obeys the orders of his parents, patrol leader, or scoutmaster without question.
(vii) A scout smiles and whistles under all difficulties.
(x) A scout is clean in thought, word and deed.

These promises, Mr. Speaker, when carried out are of great benefit to our country.

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in giving my humble support to this bill in favour of Canadian scouts. By his activities and participation in youth movements a scout is always a comfort to his parents.

Scouting is a training school which affords a young boy opportunities for contact with his fellow-scouts, and the instruction, education and training he receives in this association with them cannot fail to be very profitable to him as it has to others who, in the past, have had the good fortune to belong to that organization. Canada, therefore, can only benefit from the part these boys are playing in its growth and development. This youth training organization also allows young boys, from all countries, on the occasion of international jamborees, to become aware of their power and of the part they will be called upon to play later in society. Moreover, as a result of the contacts they make during those meetings, they are able to work in some measure for the preservation of peace which, unfortunately, is too often in jeopardy.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I consider this legislation most appropriate and would not miss this opportunity to pay tribute to the scouts of my riding of Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere. They all know they will have to work hard to ensure not only their own welfare but that of all their fellow-citizens, for scout training has already proven its worth; indeed out of the ranks of scouts have come many men who have made their mark in politics and in government.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the hon. member speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): In closing the debate, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I was very pleased to find so many hon. members taking part and paying tribute to the scout organization in Canada. When I opened the debate I mentioned that apparently many members had been members of the scout organization during their lifetime. During the course of the debate it was revealed that almost all the members had either been scouts, scout leaders or actively interested in the organization. I find also that two or three of our hon. members have been awarded a medal by the scouts, and amongst them is the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser).

There was one question asked by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) relating to the amount of real estate which the organization now holds. I think the house will be rather startled, Mr. Speaker, when I give these figures which I have in this file, especially in view of the fact that originally only $50,000 was allotted. The figures which I will give may not be entirely accurate because, as I stated, some of the real estate is held in trust for local groups and does not stand in the name of the national organization. However, I would give this list, which is in general terms.

In Vancouver, there are buildings to the value of $100,000 and campsites, $30,000. In Edmonton, there are two buildings totalling in value $40,000 and two campsites, $145,000. In Calgary, there is a building valued at $15,000 and a campsite valued at $25,000. In Regina, the building is valued at $20,000; Saskatoon, a building valued at $15,000; in Winnipeg, a campsite valued at $15,000; at Gimli, a campsite valued at $25,000; in Toronto, a building valued at $150,000 and 9 campsites totalling $150,00; in Haliburton, campsites, $30,000; in Hamilton, a building valued at $75,000 and a campsite, $25,000; in Oshawa, a campsite valued at $400,000; in Ottawa, a campsite, $50,000; a second campsite at $15,000. In Ottawa, there is also a building valued at $180,000 and two properties valued together at $85,000; Montreal, a building valued at $100,000, four campsites $150,000; Halifax, a campsite valued at $25,000, and in Charlottetown a campsite valued at $75,000.

According to my calculation, Mr. Speaker, the total of these items is $1,442,500. It will be readily seen from these figures that the retroactive feature of this bill is a most essential part of it.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

CO-OPERATIVE FIRE AND CASUALTY COMPANY

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon) moved the second reading of Bill S-15, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and pleasure for me to present this bill to the house at this time. For many years my family has been associated with the co-operative movement in western Canada. My father, Frank Jones, was one of those who was associated with Robert MacKay of Melfort, C. G. Davidson of Lloydminster, Warren L. Hart of Landis, Jock Wilson of Davidson, J. H. Robson of Feudal, and Jack Sample of Landis in providing some of the early stimulus to the development of the consumer co-operative movement in the west. As hon. members know, the co-operative movement is divided into two branches, the producers' co-operative movement and the consumers' co-operative movement, both making an important contribution to the welfare of this country.

The company in question is closely associated with both sides of the co-operative movement. For example, Mr. Speaker, on reference to the main statute we see that the principles of the consumer co-operative movement are recognized. Section 8 of the incorporating act of June 30, 1951 provides:

> Each holder of an insurance policy or policies issued by the company who is not in default in respect of his cash premium or assessment on his premium note, shall be a member of the company and shall have one vote.

In line with the general co-operative principles, qualification of directors is set out in the main statute in section 7:

> Any policy holder who holds a policy or policies of insurance of the company to the amount at least one thousand dollars, and who is not in default in respect of his cash premium or his premium note or any instalment or assessment on his premium note and who has paid in cash all liabilities incurred by him to the company shall be eligible to be elected as a director, but he shall cease to be such director if the amount of his insurance as aforesaid becomes reduced below the sum of one thousand dollars.

That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that the eligibility for position as a director in this company is such that almost any person who becomes a policy holder in this co-operative company may become a director.

I would now like to make some brief reference to some of those who started this company in 1951.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to curtail a brief reference if the hon. member thinks it relevant, but the principle of the bill seems to be a very limited one. The act is for the purpose of increasing from 3 to 6 per cent the rate of interest which may be allowed on money contributed or paid under guarantee, and I doubt if any wide excursion into the affairs of co-operatives, or even of this company, would be warranted.

Mr. Jones: Of course, Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to do that at this time; I merely wanted to give the background in order that hon. members could appreciate the nature of the co-operative whose incorporating statute we are being asked to amend, and in order that they might be assured of the responsible nature of the people who head this co-operative when request is made to this house for such amendment. I can assure hon. members that this request has been very seriously considered by people who have had wide experience not only in the co-operative world but also in the general world of business.

As all members know, this amendment was passed by the other place. The present officers of this co-operative are as follows: President, R. H. Milliken; vice-president, W. M. McEwen; manager, G. Lloyd Matheson; secretary, W. B. Melvin; and treasurer, H. J. Pinch. May I mention briefly some of the directors who will be known to members of this house. They are Mr. R. Stanley—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I really do not think it is relevant to this debate to give the names of directors or members.

Mr. Jones: —and there are others, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members may be assured of the serious nature of the request for this amendment. The change, as Mr. Speaker has already noted, is a relatively limited one set forth in the explanatory notes, namely that in view of the improved financial position of the company and the general rising interest rates over the last number of years since the company was formed in 1951 it was felt in fairness to the contributing guarantors that the maximum rate payable should be increased. The suggestion is to increase the rate from 3 to 6 per cent per annum. The rate of 6 per cent has been selected to avoid further amendments to the statute.

Hon. members might be interested to note those who have contributed to this guarantee fund which is referred to in the section to which amendment is sought come from all across this country, from British Columbia to the east coast. This guarantee fund which has been established under the section now amounts to $572,150. The contributors are not only private persons but also other co-operatives. For example, some of the contributors are: Maritime Co-op Services, Manitoba Pool Elevators, Federated Co-operative Limited, Alberta Livestock Co-operative, Central Alberta Dairy Pool, and there are other co-operatives in each province right across the country.

At the present time the company is doing increasing business across the nation—in Alberta, in British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan. Many earlier years of hard work resulted last year in a favourable financial position being established at a time when trade in general in this particular line of endeavour had been difficult. In the words of the superintendent of insurance, the company has done amazingly well in a tough period.

I point out to hon. members who may wish to have further information that this particular co-operative is not one of the co-operatives which enjoy tax relief under section 68 of the Income Tax Act. This company has the same status for income tax purposes as every other Canadian fire and casualty insurance company; it pays taxes on its net income for the year at the regularly prescribed rates; it is not a marketing or producer co-operative as defined in section 73 of the Income Tax Act.

Having made these general remarks, I hope the house will see fit to approve the passage of this bill through second reading in order that this amendment, which will be favourable to this co-operative—a section of the great co-operative enterprise of this country—may go forward.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

FOOTHILLS PIPE LINES LIMITED

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East) moved the second reading of Bill S-16, respecting the Foothills Pipe Lines Limited.

[Mr. Jones.]

He said: This is a bill to incorporate Foothills Pipe Lines Limited into a dominion company with its head office in Calgary. The foothill areas in the province of Alberta, like some other areas in this province, have a wet or sour type of gas as opposed to the dry type of gas, the usual type we have been dealing with. In this sour type of gas there are large amounts of hydrocarbon and hydrogen sulphide besides the natural gas. These products are separated from the natural gas.

When the production of gas in the province was a small operation and mostly involved the dry type of gas, it was quite possible for the small producer to extract and store the hydrocarbons and hydrogen sulphides, but the production of gas has now increased to the point where it is no longer feasible to do this. When the hidden production potential is considered it is obvious that new methods of handling must be devised, if we are not largely to lose the sales of these by-products. Furthermore, markets must be found outside Alberta for the sale of these by-products of gas. After a great deal of investigation, the economic and research statisticians feel that the cheapest method of handling is by pipe line to those parts of the country where it can be utilized in that area or shipped by boat to markets elsewhere—rail is much too expensive to carry these by-products.

There are various areas to which it would appear feasible to pipe. First, there is the great lakes areas of Fort William, Superior and Milwaukee. This would tap a market from these distributing centres of approximately two million tons. Second, there is the Pacific coast area, where the market is expected to reach between 250,000 tons and 350,000 tons. The third area would be the Chicago and St. Paul area now largely supplied from Texas and Oklahoma. This is an expanding market, and there are good prospects of selling these by-products there, particularly the lighter hydrocarbons—propane, butane and pentane. The propane will largely be used for heating and cooking, the butane for cooking and upgrading gasolines, and the pentane as a low grade gasoline.

Hon. members may ask: how can sulphur be shipped as a liquid in a pipe? It is done by compressing the gas into liquid hydrogen sulphide. It is obvious that hydrogen sulphide will be transported by separate pipe and that the hydrocarbons—propane, butane and methane—could be transported in the same pipe. The question might arise: why not ship by freight? First, the freight rates would be too high. Second, the necessary equipment would be too costly and, third, the cars would likely have to dead-head back to their starting point. Another question might occur in the minds of hon. members. They might ask: why not use the present pipe lines? The answer of the gas interests is that the existing pipe lines would not be able to carry these products because they would contaminate natural gas or oil.

The starting point for this dual pipe line would likely be just outside Edmonton at Pine Creek. It is proposed that this pipe line be operated under the name of Foothills Pipe Line Limited. This would be a company sponsored by Pembrina Pipe Lines Limited of Alberta, a Canadian company with assets of over $26 million. The Foothills Pipe Line Company will be a subsidiary of Pembrina. It is proposed to incorporate this company at five million shares of $5 par value. This will be the first pipe line of its kind built in Canada, though there are examples of similar pipe lines in the United States where the by-products of gas are being successfully marketed.

It is for this reason that I would ask that this bill be referred to the committee where it can be looked into clause by clause with the experts who will be able to answer the various questions that may arise. I therefore move that Bill S-16 be passed to the committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SERVICE TO CHURCHILL CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give early consideration to the advisability of suggesting the installation of a television service by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the populated areas of the constituency of Churchill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and pleasure for me to have the opportunity of introducing the resolution that is before the house at this time. I introduce it with a feeling of deep responsibility because I am keenly aware of the importance of television service to the people in the area I represent and the great interest they have in this question.

At the outset I wish to emphasize the degree of interest that has developed and which is continuing to grow in the Churchill constituency with respect to the question of television service. Indeed, I feel that words alone cannot adequately convey to the house the degree of interest of the people there and I am sure that if some hon. gentlemen had the opportunity of visiting my constituency they would very quickly appreciate the intensity of interest in this question on the part of the people there.

I wish to make clear that I realize there are certain procedures to be followed with respect to areas interested in obtaining television service and with respect to licences being granted to individuals to operate stations and I and many others in my constituency have already complied with these requirements. Through consultation with officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation I learned that representations for television service and licensing should be sent to the C.B.C. Such applications and representations are turned over to the Department of Transport for perusual and after having been considered from an engineering point of view they are sent to the board of broadcast governors for consideration. The board publicizes the application in the Canada Gazette with four weeks notice concerning the hearing of the application. Representations may be made from various parts of Canada. The board then recommends what may be done.

I have personally complied with this procedure and practically every town council, service club and other group in the Churchill constituency has forwarded representations to the C.B.C. or to me for forwarding to that body but as yet no commitment has been made. It is for this reason that I welcome this opportunity of bringing to the attention of this house and the government the sincere desire of the people in that area to have some consideration in this regard as quickly as possible.

In the Churchill constituency there are between 45,000 and 50,000 people and it would not be possible to extend services at this time to people throughout the entire area because some settlements are in outlying regions and it would of course take some time to extend the service to those areas. The resolution before us, however, deals mainly with the desire for having television service extended to the populated areas of the constituency. The most heavily populated areas are the district of Swan River, The Pas and Flin Flon. In addition to the number of people in the Churchill constituency to whom I made reference there are upwards of 70,000 people who could also be served by television coverage in that area because there are adjoining places which would naturally benefit from the passing into the Churchill constituency.

In order to demonstrate the vast amount of interest in this question that prevails in the Churchill constituency I might state that we have three weekly newspapers in the area and two daily newspapers in one of the towns. There are not too many towns or cities in western Canada that have two daily newspapers. Although these two dailies are not very large, each and every day they bring to the attention of the people the views and happenings in and around Flin Flon. Not a day goes by but that one sees in either the daily or weekly papers reference to the interest of the people in the district in acquiring television service. This has been the case for the last 16 or 18 months.

One representative headline reads:

The television picture for Flin Flon is far from clear at present.

In a recent issue of the newspaper published in The Pas, Manitoba, the entire editorial section on the second page was devoted exclusively to the subject of television. This particular one deals with the ill-fated test of low-power relay in the area. It says:

It seems that regardless of the outcome of the tests, the final answer to television or no television will rest with the C.B.C.

This is so in the case of the people at The Pas and Flin Flon and it may well also be so in the case of Dauphin. Even if the C.B.C. does agree to do something, when will it happen? All of the newspapers are much the same. Each and every one of them has television as one of its main interests. I hold in my hand a newspaper which has a reference to T.V. tests on the front page, and again they are referring to those low-power relay tests which were recently carried out in Manitoba. A great many people were discouraged because they thought that television was possibly coming into the area. Therefore, hon. members can appreciate their feeling when they learned that it was a failure. Every one of the papers that I pick up, Mr. Speaker, has television all over the front page. Another one says in a headline that Brandon is interested in putting television into northern Manitoba. Across the page it says, "Yorkton also has a Plan"; that is, a plan for putting television into northern Manitoba. Part of an editorial in the Northern Mail says:

The outcome is like the attitude that has up to now been expressed over T.V.

They were referring to the royal tour of next year. We hoped that Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Philip would be coming to northern Manitoba. All of the papers deal with the matter in the same way.

I have many more papers here. Each and every one of them talks about television. I have numerous petitions. I notice that when petitions have been sent to Ottawa recently in regard to other representations we see a great many pictures of them in the paper and one thing and another. These are only a few that have come to my office during the last few days. There are hundreds and hundreds of names on them. However, most of them have been sent directly to the C.B.C. itself. These have come to me and the people are asking me to turn them over to the C.B.C. for consideration.

I might also say, that I have resolutions asking for television passed by the Flin Flon town council, the Flin Flon chamber of commerce, the Swan River chamber of commerce, The Pas chamber of commerce, The Pas town council, the village of Bowsman, Bowsman chamber of commerce, the village of Minitonas, and many others. All through the area, Mr. Speaker, those people are spending a great deal of their time and effort to convince the C.B.C. that television is very much desired in that area.

I should also like to point out that there are other reasons why those people should be given consideration. Throughout the years the people of the populated parts of Canada have expected other people to go into the north and pioneer, and that has been done. Many of the people in this area are the original pioneers, or the descendants of the original pioneers, in that area and they are getting to the stage now where they feel that some of the amenities of life which are lacking in the area should be given to them as quickly as possible. I think that television in northern Manitoba ties in with the northern development plan. If we are to keep skilled key workers in industry in the north we must give them every consideration. I know of many families that have left our area simply because there is no television for them and their families. Many of them have used that as their main reason for leaving. If we are to develop the north then we must give every consideration we can to the provision of television for the people.

Many of the people in my area know what the C.B.C. policy has been in regard to new extensions in other areas. Many of the people seem to think we should have it because we have the microwave system already constructed by the Manitoba telephone system. I agree that that is a major step forward, but I should like to point out to the house, as I have tried to point out to the people, that the C.B.C. plan of operation has not been to construct those microwave lines themselves. They have under contract the Trans-Canada Communications system, which constructed the trans-Canada microwave system along with the Bell Telephone Company. The C.B.C. also allows those people to deal with various provincial telephone companies which have microwave systems and are willing to equip them with television facilities and will rent them out on an annual rental fee basis. This is what the C.B.C. have been doing so far; but we do, as I say, have a microwave system in the north now.

Many of the people also believe that the obligation of the crown corporation is to serve areas where private enterprise does not seem too interested to come in. Some feel that the C.B.C. must have the lucrative areas. There are two schools of thought. Personally, I think the C.B.C. should give more attention to servicing the areas which private enterprise has not shown a great deal of interest in and possibly make a further change in their plans in the lucrative areas. I say this, because section 8 of the Canadian Broadcasting Act says:

> The corporation shall carry on a national broadcasting service within Canada and for that purpose may:
> (a) maintain and operate broadcasting stations;
> (b) establish, subject to approval of the governor in council, such stations as the corporation may from time to time consider necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act.

I say that subparagraph (b) relates to the first part. It says that the corporation shall carry on a national broadcasting service within Canada. It is my feeling that in order to carry on adequately a national broadcasting service, those areas that private enterprise have not shown too much interest to go into should be given full and possibly even first consideration.

We come now to the matter of private enterprise in our area. I might say that their activities have been very welcome as far as most of us are concerned but at the present time I think they are adding a certain amount of confusion to the issue. In talking about private enterprise I should like to start by saying that a year ago apparently there was no interest on the part of private enterprise in going into the area. However, times have changed.

A little over a year ago a firm named Northwest Electronics Limited came into the area and tried to interest people in the installation by the firm of a low power relay system. These people went to Flin Flon but were not able to do too much there. They had a promotional idea involving the setting up of the equipment and turning it over to a community organization. The idea did not take fire at all. I could not see it myself because it was too much of a promotional venture.

However, just before the last provincial election this firm made a deal of some kind with the former Manitoba government under which the company would endeavour to put television into the Dauphin area and if they were successful they were going to go into Churchill to try to interest people there. Perhaps I might refer to an editorial in the Winnipeg Tribune of February 26, 1959 dealing with the activities of this company. The editorial reads as follows:

> Manitoba is now paying $15,000 for one of the last minute election follies of the Campbell government. As an inducement to the people of northern Manitoba to vote for Liberal candidates, the former government promised to extend television into the north.
> An arrangement was made with a private firm to test a system of relay towers to Dauphin, an arrangement so hurried that it was not even recorded in a regular contract, only in a letter by the former minister of industry and commerce. The test has ended in failure. But according to the terms of the letter, the province committed itself to pay the company $15,000 even if the system proved unworkable.
> The present government considers itself morally bound to pay this amount. This is a proper recognition that a government must honour even the hasty and unwise commitments of its predecessor. But from the fiasco Manitoba can learn a lesson. Television is a federal matter, not a provincial responsibility. If television can be taken into northern Manitoba, the C.B.C. should take it there, not the province.

The announcement that this attempt had failed, which was made only about four weeks ago, brought about further interest on the part of private enterprise in this area. The first interest noted came from the station in Yorkton, Saskatchewan, which announced that it was going to apply for a licence to construct a satellite station in the Duck mountains to service the Swan River and Dauphin area. Then there was an announcement by the operators of the Brandon television station who said that they were going to apply for permission to build four television stations, one at Dauphin, one at Swan River, one at The Pas and one at Flin Flon if the C.B.C. would agree to pay the annual rental charges of a microwave system to that area. Later the radio station at Flin Flon made an announcement which clarified the policy of that station definitely for the people of that area.

As I said before, all these things are of tremendous interest to us but I think that with them all coming at one time they are creating a certain amount of confusion and I should like to suggest a way to clear up the confusion. To bring out the point I want to make I should like to refer to a news item in the Dauphin Herald of March 12. It reads as follows:

> Dauphin town council went on record Monday night with a resolution urging the board of broadcast governors to expedite the processing of applications for establishment of television broadcasting facilties in the Dauphin area and northern Manitoba. The council's resolution read in full:
> "It being understood that several applications have been made or will be made for the establishment of television broadcasting facilities in Dauphin and other points in northern Manitoba, be it resolved that the council of the town of Dauphin request that these several applications be dealt with by the board of broadcast governors as quickly as possible in order to provide to these points in northern Manitoba the best possible T.V. service at the earliest possible date.

The several applications include the application from Yorkton to establish a satellite station and the application from Brandon to establish four stations if the C.B.C. will pay the microwave charges. Then there was the announcement by the Arctic Radio Corporation Limited which owns the radio station at Flin Flon in these words:

> The Arctic Radio Corporation Limited, which owns and operates radio station CFAR, Flin Flon, believes that the residents of the area it presently serves by radio are entitled to the same quality and standards of television programs as those enjoyed by the majority of Canadians elsewhere.
> The Arctic Radio Corporation believes that it should now be apparent to all concerned that this standard can be achieved only through the extension of the C.B.C. microwave network into the area. If the C.B.C. undertakes to furnish network service to the area the Arctic Radio Corporation is prepared to discuss with the proper authorities the establishment of television broadcasting facilities in the area.
> The Arctic Radio Corporation will not, however, participate in or support any scheme or proposal which would result in bringing to the people of Flin Flon and area television programs below the standard and quality of those enjoyed by the majority of Canadians elsewhere.

That is the situation with respect to private enterprise wanting to go into the area to operate stations. I say that it may be causing a bit of confusion because here we have town councils suggesting that the board of broadcast governors expedite these licences and get things cracking as quickly as possible. I believe that the most important thing at the present time is to get a commitment from the C.B.C. with respect to whether they will pay the microwave charges involved in bringing television into the area. If licences are given to this operator or that operator we are only going to confuse the issue a great deal more because some of them are willing to operate satellite stations and others will only come into the area if the C.B.C. will provide the microwave facilities.

I realize that my time is getting short, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to emphasize that a favourable decision from the C.B.C. in the very near future would clarify this point and would also make the situation much more satisfactory to the individual station operators who are anxious to go into the area.

May I say that even in the days of radio the area of northern Manitoba was sadly neglected. Even today, there is no broadcast line in Manitoba north of Brandon. We have to rely on the C.B.C. regional station at Watrous, Saskatchewan, and that is not very satisfactory for a great many areas. There are many areas in northern Manitoba that cannot even pick up these regional broadcasts, so I think the C.B.C. has had a very light financial burden so far as the northern Manitoba area is concerned.

Last year at my request a survey was made to ascertain the approximate cost to the C.B.C. of putting television into the area about which I am talking. Although the C.B.C. has not made these figures public I have, as a result of talking to various people in the Manitoba telephone system, which also put in quotations on the cost, and as a result of talking to people in the C.B.C., learned that quite a large sum may be involved. I should like to briefly discuss what it might possibly cost to do this. I have reason to believe that the annual rental charges for the microwave relays necessary to serve the area north of Flin Flon could amount to about $300,000 a year. Now, if the C.B.C. were to look after the whole program, including outlet stations, it has been calculated that it might cost $1 million extra to construct these outlet stations. If this amount were written off over a period of 10 years, that would add another $100,000 a year to the annual cost. We would then have an annual rental of $400,000 to service this area. I do not know how close these figures are to the C.B.C. estimate, but I feel they are somewhere in the neighbourhood of the C.B.C. figures.

This may seem like a large sum, but let me remind hon. members of the extreme interest of the people in this area. I might say, truthfully, that the people who have television now cannot see why people should be so interested in obtaining it. However, I should like to know how great the hue and cry would be if the C.B.C. said they were not able to carry the Grey cup game because it cost too much or perhaps the world series or the Saturday night hockey games. I am sure we would hear a great hue and cry from the people of the populated areas of Canada. They would say, it does not matter how much it costs, we want it. I would not be too surprised if they got it.

I do not believe we should feel that $400,000 annually is too great a sum. Let us break that down. I asked the C.B.C. what formula they used in deciding whether or not an area should be serviced. They said they had a formula but they did not make it public. This is quite all right. However, I find that in a bulletin issued by the Canadian broadcasting league reference is made to the fact that the cost for C.B.C. television is 3.3 cents per household per day. If you work that out on a yearly basis it means a cost per household of roughly $12.04 for the present C.B.C. television service. If television services were provided for the Churchill constituency they would serve, including the area around Dauphin, around 30,000 households at an annual cost of $400,000. If these figures are correct it would mean the cost per household would be $14.28 as against the present cost of $12.04 for the rest of Canada.

However, I do not think we should become alarmed at that. I make this statement for two reasons. What kind of formula is it that permits the C.B.C. to say that if the costs of service run to more than $12.04 per household they cannot service that area or they must give some other area consideration? What kind of formula is it that permits the C.B.C. to say to the people of the north, who are not getting television service, that they cannot get it because the costs per household are too high? These people are told they cannot get it, but still they are paying for it. What basis, then, have we for using that formula?

The most recent figures which have been published concerning the average wages received in the various areas of Canada indicate that the towns of The Pas and Flin Flon contain wage earners who have the highest average in the Dominion of Canada. I would assume, therefore, that they are paying the highest taxes. We come back, then, to the formula which shows that the costs of servicing this area are higher than the costs for the rest of Canada and the C.B.C. says, although you do not get it you still have to pay for it.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I was discussing the possible cost of the bringing of television by the C.B.C. into the northern part of Manitoba. In my brief closing remarks I would like to point out to the house, and bring to the attention not only of the members of this house but possibly of the board of broadcast governors, that this possible cost of $400,000 annually should not be regarded as exorbitant or too costly. I am informed by the C.B.C. that if anyone were to make application to operate a television station in Manitoba with the kinerecordings which would be supplied by the C.B.C. they would recommend that a licence be granted, and that kinerecordings alone would cost the C.B.C. in the neighbourhood of $150,000 a year. If two operators wanted that service—and we would need more than one station in that area—the cost would amount to $300,000; so we must not consider the sum of $400,000 as being in any way out of the question.

In the brief moments I have left I would like to thank some of the people in northern Manitoba who have been so very kind in giving their time and efforts to assist in bringing this matter to the attention of the C.B.C. I would like to thank Mr. Jim Leggett of Swan River and the various town councils and chambers of commerce; the Flin Flon Miner and the Flin Flon Daily Reminder; the Northern Mail of The Pas; the Swan River Star and Times. I would also like to thank radio station CFAR of Flin Flon for keeping the people in that area well informed as to what the situation is in regard to television in the area and the policy of that station. I would also like to say once again that the people of the area are very gratified at the interest presently being shown by private entreprise in applying for stations. But I did mention that it was adding a little confusion, and I think I am right. I would therefore recommend that the C.B.C. decide as quickly as possible if they will pay the annual rental charges of a microwave system. Then the board of broadcast governors should decide which of these applicants has the most satisfactory qualifications to operate stations, and get the job done as quickly as possible.

(Translation):

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the few remarks I wish to make at this stage, in support of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson), will be very brief. The resolution reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give early consideration to the advisability of suggesting the installation of a television service by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the populated areas of the constituency of Churchill.

In his plea in favour of his constituents, the hon. member pointed out the importance of his resolution and the interest which it has for the area he represents. He also expressed the wish of the people of his constituency in regard to a television service, such as the whole people of Canada are entitled to have. He also mentioned that such facilities could serve a population of about 45,000 in his constituency, or approximately 30,000 homes in the area. He also referred to the numerous requests, letters and articles published in local newspapers in favour of such a measure.

Mr. Speaker, I represent a constituency where television facilities are also completely lacking. I am therefore in a position to sympathize with the hon. member for Churchill, and I recognize the merit of his request.

Indeed, in northeastern New Brunswick and in two constituencies of Gaspesia, a population of over 240,000 is deprived of all television facilities. Among that population, more than 165,000 French speaking Canadians would like to get their share of such a service, through the medium of the C.B.C. French network.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am entirely in favour of the resolution. I am certain that the voters in my riding, as well as those of the constituencies of Northumberland-Miramichi, Restigouche-Madawaska, Bonaventure and Gaspe, would be most interested in getting from the C.B.C. the share of service to which they are entitled. The people in my riding are contributing their share in taxes and therefore, like those in other areas, are paying part of the cost of the C.B.C.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that when the board of governors of the C.B.C. studies the request of the hon. member for Churchill, it will also favourably consider the wishes of the people in my riding who have sent him a great many requests and letters, as well as to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan).

(Text):

Mr. G. E. Halpenny (London): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the terms of the motion of my very good friend, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson), which is before this house will meet with the sympathy of all hon. members on both sides of this house. The importance of the welfare and general happiness of those Canadians who live far from metropolitan areas, especially the people who live in areas similar to those represented by the hon. members for Churchill and Dauphin, is a matter of real concern to the government and to broadcasters. In spite of what some of us may think of it, television with its tremendous capacity for entertainment, information and education can do much to relieve the isolation of the north and provide a living link with the great metropolitan centres, indeed with the whole world. In fact, a good case can be made for providing television to the more remote areas—because of the peculiar advantages it offers. In urban and rural areas particularly, these advantages are often available from several other sources; but in the north television may be the only source of any one or all of them. In such amount of homework I have been able to do on this subject, I have contacted and talked with members of the C.A.R.T.B. and with the C.B.C. As you know, the C.A.R.T.B. are the private broadcasters. I discussed the question of extending television as quickly as possible to those areas of low population density which do not enjoy television service.

To better understand the present situation it might be well if I briefly reviewed the development of television since it first came to Canada in September, 1952. In 1951 the report of the royal commission—that is the Massey commission—recommended that Canada should have a national television service similar to the national radio system. Specifically it said that the C.B.C. should go ahead with plans to provide national coverage and to produce a program in both French and English. Another suggestion made by the commission was that private stations be required to serve as outlets for national programs. This followed the pattern already established in radio.

In 1952 the former government announced that only the C.B.C. would be allowed to build and operate television stations in the six largest cities of Canada, with each station representing a major geographical division of our country. The then government also announced that applications would be received from private stations to serve areas outside those covered by the C.B.C. transmitters. The intention was that the C.B.C. transmitters would serve as a framework or skeleton for a national television service with production centres in most regions. This would give the national service, made up of independent stations and C.B.C., the chance to reflect the regional as well as the national characteristics of Canada. It would also give opportunities to artists, performers and writers in each region.

Since September 1952 between 85 and 90 per cent of Canadians have been brought within range of a Canadian television station at reasonable cost. This compares very favourably with the United States which have had television for a few years longer than we, and yet reach proportionately fewer of their citizens than we do in Canada. The fact that approximately 90 per cent of Canadians now receive television signals is a creditable achievement in view of the size of our country and its low population density. In fact, I do not know of any other country in the world where the growth of television coverage has been quicker. And let us not underestimate the strain on our resources necessary to build this service. Communication has been one of our major preoccupations since confederation, and each new development in technology throws up new challenges to our ingenuity and financial resources.

It fell upon our national system as the instrument for carrying out a broadcasting service to provide a television service in areas which, because of low population density, were not sufficiently attractive to private station operators. The corporation had already gone through a similar experience in providing radio service through the development of the low power relay transmitter. There are now nearly 60 of these located in communities where no other reliable broadcast service is available. I understand the corporation decided some time ago that a similar device might provide a solution in extending television coverage.

In making plans to provide television service to small remote communities it would appear that the C.B.C. applied the same standards that it had devised when the radio service was under development. These standards or criteria were intended to keep planning within practical limits and to ensure that public funds were spent where the most people would benefit.

Where an expensive service is provided through public moneys it is always difficult to know when to stop extending the service to reach more of the people who contribute the funds. Theoretically, because all Canadians contribute to the national television system they are all entitled to roughly the same service. In practice it is not possible to treat everyone in exactly the same way, and the expense of bringing service to all parts of the country is prohibitive and unjustified. This is not new in a sparsely settled country like ours. The provision of public services such as railways, highways, schools and hospitals cannot come at the same time everywhere because the costs may be out of proportion to the number of citizens who benefit. Generally speaking, the more costly the installation, the larger the population must be to justify the extension of the services.

I will briefly outline some of the factors that influence the planning on extending television service to remote areas. I understand that in order to qualify for consideration the population of a town or village should exceed an established minimum. The C.B.C., for instance, would not operate a station in an area covered by an existing or proposed private station. Second, a broadcast channel assigned under international agreement would have to be available in the area. Third, a thorough study of each area to be served would be needed to find the most economic way and most effective transmitters to serve them.

Then further, close study would be given as to how best a signal could be sent to the transmitter, whether by (a) network connection, (b) off-air pick-up from another transmitter, or (c) television recordings. It would also be necessary to calculate the annual operating costs, including amortization, per television home served, so that we would know the per unit cost of serving each home. Finally, other things being equal, I understand the corporation believes that the transmitter which offered the lowest unit cost service should be installed first.

Now to get down to cases, I am informed that the capital cost of building transmitters at four of the more populated areas in the Churchill and Dauphin constituencies would be approximately $1 million. The annual operating costs, including the rental charges on a microwave connection from the main transcontinental microwave system, would be approximately—and here I disagree with the hon. member for Churchill—$450,000 per year. If the stations were to be serviced by television film the operating costs would be about $600,000 per year. There are, according to the best estimates, about 40,000 homes in the area that would be served by the requested four transmitters.

On this basis the capital and operating costs per thousand homes served comes rather high and I do not feel that any private broadcaster would take a chance faced by these extravagant costs. I think he would be very unwise to set up a private station in these areas. Then we must take into consideration the fact that there are 40 or 50 locations in Canada which are similar to those about which the hon. member for Churchill was speaking. Simple multiplication will show what the ultimate cost to the public treasury will be if we are to make television available in the homes of perhaps 40 or 50 such communities.

In 1956 the corporation submitted to the royal commission on broadcasting, as will be found on page 220 of the Fowler report, a capital program for covering areas not then receiving a television service. This capital program was for a period of seven years and provided for the progressive extension of coverage as well as for other developments in the television and radio field. I am also informed that plans for a further revision of coverage will be reflected in a five-year capital program to be submitted to the government by November of this year. This is done in conformity with section 35 of the Broadcasting Act. Therefore, provided that this parliament approves the corporation's program, we can expect a progressive extension of television service to many remote areas over the next few years. When coverage of the populated areas of the constituencies of Churchill and Dauphin can be brought into being should depend, in fairness to the other 40 or 50 similar areas, on the comparative per unit cost of such service.

I feel sure that the hon. member for Churchill will agree with me that this government is aware of the obligation to bring national television service to every Canadian home where it is practical to do so. However, as I have pointed out, there are many formidable obstacles both technical and financial in the way of the accomplishment of this objective at the present time. With new technical developments and a carefully planned scheme for extending television service it is hoped that we can duplicate and perhaps even improve the enviable record we have for radio coverage in this enormous country where 96 per cent of our people are presently served by our radio system, both private stations and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Certainly we lack neither the will nor the know-how and as the money becomes available the television service will reach out to bring to our more isolated communities, such as Dawson, Swan River, The Pas and Flin Flon the very great benefits it can offer; thus, we hope, binding them more closely together with the millions of other Canadians who now receive the service through both public and private stations.

I realize that this subject is one that could occupy us for many hours and I know that many hon. members would like to speak on this question particularly with a view to outlining the needs of some part of their riding. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton):

That the debate on the proposed resolution of the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) standing on the order paper as No. 4 under Notices of Motion be now adjourned.

Mr. Regier: What a misuse of parliament.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question before he sits down? Does the hon. member not agree that we should have an opportunity to vote on this resolution in favour of which he has just spoken?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED RECOGNITION OF GOVERNMENT OF RED CHINA

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of recognizing the government of the Chinese People's Republic.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rather think the debate this afternoon in which most interesting facts were presented about the boy scouts, sea scouts and girl guides has rather cut into the time available to discuss the present motion. We in this group feel that this is a motion of interest to all members of the house and of importance to all the people of Canada. We in this group fully recognize that in introducing this motion certain basic aspects and fundamentals should be laid down. We feel strongly that it is necessary for all of us in North America to achieve a full understanding of Asia in general and China in particular.

When countries like China are discussed all we hear from a great many is talk about communism. The communists are definitely wrong in expecting the whole world to go communist but if we are to be realistic then I feel sure we will have to give up some of our own vain hopes. I have no hesitation whatsoever in saying that if we believe in what we say about freedom and tolerance we shall have to stop insisting that eastern nations conform in all particulars to the western pattern or submit to what I might term western tutelage.

Everyone in the house knows and appreciates the fact that communist ideology is different from our own, and we are certainly entitled to differ. But, Mr. Speaker, I think we can ask by what logic does it follow that we should close our eyes to the facts of Chinese progress or refuse to shake hands with other people because of a differing political belief? I think we should also note that to the oriental mind the withholding of diplomatic recognition is an insult, and they are a proud people.

We in this group say without hesitation that strong efforts must be made to break through the present stalemate and find ways of living in peace with nations of different ideologies. Of course, when we tackle the problem of recognition in that manner there are those who try to make us believe that the present government of mainland China is not going to stay in power. It was, therefore, with a great deal of interest that I read reports about four members of the Ontario bar association who last fall spent a number of weeks in China. On their return one of them said in a major speech in Toronto not so long ago that nowhere did they get any suggestion or even a hint that the present regime in Peking is temporary or that it lacks popular support. It was stated that all the evidence which came to their attention was, as a matter of fact, to the contrary.

If we are going to be realistic, Mr. Speaker, and surely we must be realistic, I think it must be understood that in the past decade the Chinese people have been engaged in a tremendous struggle to achieve national salvation and to emerge from centuries of abject poverty and cruel oppression. We in Canada, we in the House of Commons, may not be too happy about the methods that have been used, but all will agree, except those who are mentally blind or fanatics, that startling changes have taken place in that country.

There can be no question whatsoever that China portrays an almost overpowering picture of a nation making history with great speed, and whether or not we like it China is going to be a great power. It has a huge population, it is richly endowed with natural resources spread over an area as large as our own country, and I think it is acknowledged by nearly all that in the not too distant future China will be a highly industrialized nation. What all this means to Canada and our own future is something to which we are obliged to give serious thought. It is because we in this group along with a great many other people in Canada believe that Canada has to give very serious thought to what is taking place in that part of Asia that we have introduced the motion now before the house.

When we want to discuss the recognition of the People's Republic of China of necessity we hear objections from some sources. It is a matter of record that, to a great extent, the objections come from the other side of the line. It was significant that only the other day we had a visit from a well known individual in the United States, by name Walter S. Robertson, the assistant secretary of state for far eastern affairs.

It was interesting also to note that Mr. Charles Lynch, writing in the Ottawa Citizen, referred to Mr. Robertson as, "Mr. China Policy" in the state department. In this article Mr. Lynch referred to the views expressed by Mr. Robertson and stated that Mr. Robertson was here for one reason and that was to try to counteract the good reports that had been brought back to this country by some of our well known people who had visited China and, perhaps indirectly, to let the government of Canada know what the views of the government of the United States were.

I should like to deal very briefly with a couple of Mr. Robertson's objections as they were reported in the Ottawa Citizen, because they should be answered. I note that not only did Mr. Robertson stress objection to China so far as diplomatic recognition was concerned, but he also had views with regard to that country being seated in the United Nations. I should like to quote from this article:

"Nor should red China be seated at the United Nations", Mr. Robertson said, "because it is not a peace-loving nation and frequently has repudiated its international obligations."

We say, Mr. Speaker, that if we should not recognize China because it is not a peace-loving nation nor should it be in the United Nations because it is not a peace-loving nation, then the question is why should the United States sit with those in the United Nations whom they are consistently stating and challenging as not being peace-loving nations? It does not seem possible for them to have it both ways. They ask us to take it one way for their own particular purposes.

Mr. Robertson is also quoted as saying that the Peiping Red China regime was imposed by force. May we point out that the United States and Canada sit in the United Nations with a number of other nations that achieved their government by force. We think it is only reasonable to ask, in considering this motion, why it is right to sit with nations who obtained their position by force, and yet at the same time say we will not sit with Red China under similar circumstances. This same gentleman goes on to say that United States policy is to strengthen and keep alive the non-communist Chinese government. Are we to refrain from diplomatic recognition of a government responsible for 650 million or 700 million people on the Chinese mainland which has been in power now for about 10 years because it is United States policy to strengthen and keep alive the non-communist Chinese government?

Just where may that government be? There can be only one place to which that refers and that is Formosa and the government of Chiang Kai-shek. Certainly, it seems ridiculous to think Chiang Kai-shek is the Chinese government or has any hope this side of heaven or hades of ever becoming the head of the Chinese government. Reasonable and practical persons everywhere admit that it is impossibility. I think, instead of listening or even thinking of following the arguments set forth for non-recognition, we might be wiser in Canada to pay attention to some of the statements of our own people. I could take a considerable time in setting forth those statements, but I shall not do so because of the shortness of the time allotted for this debate. However, there are two statements that I believe should be mentioned.

[Mr. Winch.]

I do not think anyone is going to call James Muir, the president of the Royal Bank of Canada, a communist. I do not think anyone is going to challenge a man of his position on the ground he does not know what he is talking about after he makes a personal visit and a personal examination. He is quoted as saying in Montreal on February 11:

The Chinese communists want to trade with Canada, says James Muir, president of the Royal Bank of Canada. "But I think our government is asleep."

Mr. Muir, who toured China last summer, said last night Canada could trade with China without officially recognizing the government there, though "we'll have to recognize them sooner or later anyway".

I think it is better soon than later. There is one man from British Columbia upon whom I know we can safely rely. He is one of the greatest educationists in our Dominion of Canada. I am referring to Dr. N. A. M. MacKenzie of Vancouver, who is not only president of the University of British Columbia but is president of the Canadian national commission for UNESCO. Speaking in Montreal as late as March 12 he said that greater understanding must be promoted between the west and the Orient to prevent war. I quote from this press clipping:

He told a press conference the starving, over-populated Orient looks with hungry eyes to Canada and other western countries where food and land are plentiful.

"They (Oriental countries) will not put up with this situation permanently," he said. "And the alternative to greater understanding is eventual violence."

Words such as these, coming from the president of one of our great universities and the president of the Canadian national commission for UNESCO, are words to which we in this group believe we should give very careful consideration. We believe that it is in the best interests of Canada that we should not blindly follow in the footsteps nor obey the dictates of another country with respect to this matter. I am sorry to say it, but it is my own belief that if the United States were to recognize China tomorrow, this government would automatically do so. It is quite obvious that they are blindly following United States policy, a policy which our people—I mean men such as Mr. Muir and Dr. MacKenzie—say is a wrong one and could lead to violence and war.

In the past we have heard some arguments put forward by the present government as to why Canada has not yet made any move toward the recognition of the Peiping government. We remember a statement made last year by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that the Chinese government would have to expiate its crimes. This leads me to another phase of this question of recognition of the People's Republic of China. Surely, much as we pride ourselves as Canadians on being freedom living and tolerant, there is not one of us who thinks that we stand alone in that position. Surely, it is a reasonable approach to examine the position of the many other countries in the world.

We find that from October 2, 1949 to December 3, 1958 thirty-eight countries have recognized the People's Republic of China. I have the list here of those 38 countries. I am not going to take up the time of the house by reading them out, but you can be assured, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of those 38 countries which recognized the People's Republic of China are not communist nor countries of dictatorship; they are countries of democracy. They are freedom loving and peace loving peoples, the same as we here in Canada. Yet as I point out, 38 of them have recognized the Peiping government from October 2, 1949 to December 3, 1958.

I know there are those who would like this matter to be brought a little closer to home, so I would like to do that. We are all proud that this country is a member of the commonwealth, and I know that the Prime Minister takes particular pride in that fact. He did a great deal of travelling around the commonwealth on a recent trip. He never misses an opportunity to speak about the commonwealth and build for himself the name which he likes, which was put up on him by a member of the press, that of "Mr. Commonwealth". There are ten members in the commonwealth, and of those ten members five recognize the Peiping government. Those five are the United Kingdom, India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Ghana. Surely, the Prime Minister and his government, and every Conservative and Liberal, will say that the United Kingdom is a peace loving nation, a freedom loving nation, a democratic nation, and that the United Kingdom would do nothing that would lead to a building up of communism or a building toward war or aggression of any kind. Yet we find that the United Kingdom and four other commonwealth countries have recognized the Peiping government. So we ask, why is it that this present government up till now has tied itself to United States foreign policy, and not to that of five of the brother nations of the commonwealth?

Of course, there are others who are keenly interested in peace and are definitely anti-communist outside of our commonwealth itself as an organization, and that group is NATO. And Canada is a part of NATO. There is an organization which has been established by democratic and peace loving countries, and established definitely for the purpose of opposing communist aggression. Yet on going over the list I find that of the NATO members four recognize the Peiping government. They are the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Denmark and Norway. I have already spoken of the United Kingdom; and I do not believe it is necessary to go into detail to emphasize that, as far as democratic fighters and believers in freedom are concerned, there are none better to be found than in the Netherlands, Denmark and in Norway. So we find both in the membership of our own commonwealth and in the membership of NATO those countries included in the 38 I have mentioned who have recognized the Chinese republic.

We know, from listening to government speakers and others over a long period of time that they are opposed to communism. We are not alone in that. All parties in this house would unfalteringly reject the precepts of communism. One of the arguments which we have heard put forward as to why we should not recognize the People's Republic of China is because that country is communistic. Mr. Speaker, that argument is not valid if that is one of the reasons in the thinking and consideration of the government in trying to reach a decision on diplomatic recognition, because there cannot be too great a differentiation in communist countries. I find from the Department of External Affairs, over the personal signature of our late friend who passed away the other day, that Canada recognizes the governments of the following communist bloc countries. I particularly emphasized when I spoke with the late minister of external affairs that I wanted to know the countries which the present Canadian government recognized as communist countries yet gave Canadian diplomatic recognition. The hon. minister said that Canada recognizes the governments of the following communist bloc countries; the U.S.S.R., Albania, Bulgaria, Poland, Roumania and Hungary.

May we pay particular attention to Hungary in view of the fact that we were told by the Prime Minister last year that China had to expiate its crimes before it could be recognized by Canada. In the speeches made in this house in connection with what took place in Hungary, and the condemnation of communism in the U.S.S.R., did Canada say to the Russians or to the Hungarians then in control, "Expiate thy crimes"? No; they recognized Hungary, Roumania, Poland, Bulgaria and the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Speaker, that is the record of recognition of the People's Republic of China by freedom loving countries throughout the world, as well as by dictatorships. There is recognition by half the members of our own commonwealth. There is recognition by certain NATO countries and, as I just pointed out, Canada's own position is that being a communist country is no necessary bar to Canadian diplomatic recognition. So from the viewpoint of realism, in view of the fact that we have a country of nearly 700 million people situated on the other side of the Pacific from the west coast of our country, we say in the interests of Canada at this time, a peace loving and reasonable and sensible country, that now is the time for us to extend recognition, and that hand in hand with that recognition we feel sure will come a greater expansion of inter-country trade.

That is something which is most certainly needed at this present time in our country, particularly so in the province of British Columbia. If time permitted I could read statements of the truck loggers' association in British Columbia, boards of trade, trade unions, all expressing their strong opinion that recognition on a diplomatic level would greatly assist in expanding export business from this country.

Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention to speak for almost my full time on this matter, but as you know, sir, I have been boxed in on time and I feel that I would be absolutely derelict in my responsibility if I did not leave time for others on both sides of the house to express their opinions on this matter.

In conclusion, may I say that this motion is moved in all sincerity. It is moved with an understanding of the international situation and in the belief that a great many, if not the majority, of thinking people in this country now believe it is time Canada stood on her own feet in foreign policy matters and ceased to be a satellite of the United States. It is time we faced the facts as they are, and in the interest of Canada now, and in the greater interest of Canada in the future I suggest that this motion deserves not only study but endorsement by all hon. members in this house so that the government, knowing the views of parliament on this matter, may take upon itself responsibility for according early diplomatic recognition to the republic of China.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this evening's debate, because under present circumstances it is my duty to oppose the passing of the resolution before us. I am surprised, however, that it should have been introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). Either the hon. member for Vancouver East hardens his heart from one session to the other, or he sets himself to changing his mind. Though I have not been sitting in this house for long, I noticed that the measures advocated by the hon. member are contradictory in principle. Could it be, on his part and on that of his political group, the last flickering glimmer of a dying flame?

Indeed, during the last session the hon. member for Vancouver East was asking for the abolition of capital punishment in this country, under the pretext that hanging was a remainder of barbaric customs and contrary to the dignity of man in our improved civilization. In fact, as can be seen on page 714 of Hansard of May 30, 1958, the hon. member stated:

> I hope . . . that there will be a recognition that it is time in Canada we moved ahead with modern thought, recognizing that the basis of justice and law in our country should not be that of retribution and revenge but should be that of the protection of society at all times—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member gets too far in that direction I wish to remind him that we are not debating the question of the abolition of capital punishment.

Mr. Pallett: I think, with respect, that the hon. member may be laying the foundation for an argument. I think that if you allow him to continue you will find that this is directly relevant.

Mr. Speaker: I should just like to tell the hon. member that I do not think it is relevant to make the argument that the member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) is inconsistent in other matters. The hon. member for Sherbooke may have some other point in view, but I think I should caution him that he is straying from the subject.

(Translation):

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I now come to the main idea, the substance of this resolution, and say that the representative of Vancouver East is now asking recognition of a government which has applied the worse methods of barbarism and vengeance, and which shamelessly continues to attack the dignity of the human being.

This resolution asks for the recognition of the government of the People's Popular Republic of China. In this connection, there are two schools of thought.

One group of people, generally in favour of recognizing Communist China, put forward the two following arguments: first, the Communists are now in firm and permanent control of the Chinese mainland. Although the Peking regime is not desirable, it is in power and will continue to be in power for a long time. Little can be done to change this situation. Unless you want to ignore 600 million people, you must deal with this regime.

In the second place, in certain respects, Chinese communism would be different from Soviet communism. Trade and cultural relations between communist China and the free world would perhaps draw Peiping apart from Moscow and convert Mao Tse-Tung into a new Tito.

The second group of people who oppose recognition of the people's government of China thus counters these two arguments:

These two arguments are misleading and similar to the reasons set forth in 1930 to promote relations between the West and Japan, Italy and Germany.

At the time, those who put forward such motives believed that the governments of Japan, Italy and Germany had perfect control over their people and that trade and cultural relations with those countries would convince the latter of the necessity of a brotherly spirit and of peaceful co-existence. The belief was that if sufficient concessions were made, it would help to disrupt the forces of the Rome-Berlin axis.

But you know, Mr. Speaker, what happened; it was the second world war. Scrap metal that the United States had sold to Japan fell back in the form of bombs which devastated nearly half of Asia. Oil delivered to Italy in 1936, under the pretext that trade restrictions curtailed freedom, served to make fuel for Italian planes which played havoc with Ethiopia and helped Mussolini to dream of an empire. Diplomatic relations and negotiations with Germany resulted into the Munich disaster. For years, the Germans kept building up their strength on the general principle that they could be sold non-strategic materials.

The upshot of this short-sighted policy was the brutal death of millions of human beings and the destruction of thousands of cities. This was a historic lesson that cannot now be forgotten and which should serve to guide future behaviour. We must depend on historical facts rather than on wishful thinking.

It is a mistake to believe that the Peiping regime is in full control of the Chinese continent. According to reports, students have staged many demonstrations against the communist regime and refugees keep pouring into Hong Kong. May I point out also the statement of the Chinese Minister of Justice, Shih Liang, that in the space of no more than 17 months, 364,604 counter-revolutionists have been tried in people's courts. It is therefore obvious that things are not going so well in Red China.

Mr. Speaker, Mao Tse-Tung has conquered the country by fire and by the sword and he is staying in power by inhuman and brute force. He has liquidated more than 18 million Chinese within 9 years and, even under his despotism, barely 2 per cent of the continental Chinese are members of the Chinese communist party.

The second argument to the effect that Mao Tse-Tung could become a second Tito is being formally refuted by the constant support Peking has been giving the USSR, when the Russians denounced some of Tito's attitudes. As a matter of fact, we might also recall that Peking approved Russia's action in its brutal intervention in Hungary.

Chinese communism is indeed the same as Soviet communism. Its roots and designs are the same. We only need read the statements of Chinese communist leaders to see that their ambition is associated with Soviet dreams. In 1940, Mao Tse-Tung stated, and I quote:

> I am a Marxist anxious to communize China and the world under the leadership of Moscow.

And recently Chou en-lai declared—and I quote again:

> The most sacred international responsibility of communists in every land and of all times is to unite the nations in the socialist camp under the leadership of the Soviet Union.

Has the time come for Canada to recognize the government of the People's Republic of China? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker, and for several reasons.

To recognize communist China would be to tell Formosa that we are abandoning it and renouncing this anti-communist fence.

To recognize communist China at this time would be to jeopardize the national independence of those Asian countries which rightly fear communist expansion. These countries need our support to strengthen their independence, and to improve their now wavering political and economic stability.

To recognize communist China at present would be to destroy the hope of millions of Chinese who are repudiating communism and are anxious to recover their freedom.

To recognize communist China would be to increase its international prestige, to pave the way for communist expansion and to bolster its tottering economy. At the present time Red China admits it is facing economic difficulties. It lacks iron, steel, timber, meat, petrol and coal.

To recognize communist China would be to invite the 12 million Chinese living in south-east Asia to surrender to Peking, to place under Chinese control those countries where China exerts a great influence, such as the Philipines, Vietnam, Indonesia, Singapore, Malaya, Thailand and Burma. Moreover, Canadian citizens of Chinese descent, through the medium of communist Chinese diplomatic representatives here, would become the target of pressure and blackmail in connection with their relatives living in Red China.

To recognize communist China would also mean to ignore the sacrifices of thousands of Canadian and American soldiers who died in Korea, precisely to check the communist advance.

Then too, recognition of communist China would favour its too early admission into the United Nations and thus leave the Security Council at the mercy of the Soviet, in league with Chinese communists.

From an international standpoint, Peking as early as 1949, repudiated most of its international obligations. Red China violated armistice agreements in Korea and Indochina. It has pressed several Asian countries to revolt and embrace communism. It has never shown any concern for the establishment of peace and international security.

As a Canadian Christian member of parliament, I do not forget the atrocities of which our religious missionaries in China were the victims. Chinese communists, in those circumstances, displayed a disgusting materialism and ignored all sense of human dignity and of spiritual values.

No, Mr. Speaker, in my humble opinion, the time has not yet come to recognize such a regime. No, Mr. Speaker, in my humble opinion, the moment has not yet come to recognize such a government, and that moment should not come before red China mends her ways, before she gives evidence of good faith and consistently acts on behalf of pacification and reasonable humanism.

I believe that if we want to be realistic and practical, all our efforts should tend to strengthen our allies rather than to revive red China's economy. By strengthtening our principles of freedom, and by striving to reinforce the economic and political systems of our friends in Asia, we will be doing something worthwhile and help build a free society against the unquestionable slavery of communism.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a statement made on November 1, 1957 by the present Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). I quote from page 654 of Hansard:

There is nothing inconsistent about endeavouring to trade and at the same time not recognizing the government of that country. The attitude of this government is unchanged in that direction, and until such time as the people's government, the communist government of China, expiates its wrongdoing under international law there certainly will be no justification for the granting of recognition as we see it.

Recognition under international law in the past used to be a juridical act, but today the information we have indicates that recognition would be regarded by various countries in Asia which have withstood communism as an act of more than legal recognition and, indeed, would be interpreted as a recognition of communism as such and would afford to those who today resist communism the removal of a major incentive that has impelled them to take their stand firmly against the onrush of communism throughout portions of Asia.

Mr. Speaker, the policy of the present government was certainly laid down on November 1 by the present right hon. Prime Minister. In addition, on February 26, 1958, the former Secretary of State for External Affairs, the hon. Sidney Smith—at this point, Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed a brief digression to express the deep admiration I had for this eminent Canadian whom I had the occasion to meet on fairly intimate terms at the 13th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations in New York. I attended those meetings as a Canadian parliamentary observer, and almost daily, I had the opportunity of benefiting from the knowledge, advice and geniality of the hon. Sidney Smith. So I can understand that his untimely death was a great shock to the right hon. Prime Minister and to all hon. members. For my part, I was deeply grieved, and I deeply regret the passing of such a great Canadian who had begun to earn a world-wide reputation for himself, as a great diplomat and a counselor of high wisdom.

As I was saying, the Hon. Sidney Smith, as quoted in Hansard for February 26 at page 1405, again discussed this question and explained the present government's position with regard to recognizing the People's Republic of China:

In view of the lively interest that is shown by the Canadian people in the future of our relations with the Chinese people, I feel sure that the house will expect me on this occasion to discuss in some detail the government's attitude toward the recognition of the government of the Chinese People's Republic.

And the Hon. Sidney Smith, at page 1407 of Hansard, drawing a conclusion to many considerations that were replies to arguments favoring commercial and economic relations with communist China, and which provide a good answer to arguments raised earlier by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), said:

It is for these reasons that it is the view of this government that we must go carefully. We should take the initiative in limited fields—in fields of trade and in other ways to which I have referred—and we should take every opportunity that presents itself to overcome the causes of discord between the west and Peking China. We must be patient. We should not be hasty. Otherwise we may undo the good work that has already been accomplished in laying the basis for progress toward the goal of removing the occasions for misunderstanding now existing between Canada and communist China.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver East emphasized in his speech the considerations that had been raised either before the office or the general assembly of the United Nations Organization. In fact, during the thirteenth session, this important matter was discussed in two distinct places, first before the office, a body whose function is to assist at all times the chairman of the general assembly. In fact that office, before the regular meetings of the general assembly, prepares the agenda by deciding what matters are to be raised and discussed by the Assembly. The agenda submitted for the first meeting of the thirteenth session of the general assembly, brought that very question before the 81 members of the United Nations Organization. It was not a question of discussing the matter on its merits, nor of going into the pros and cons of recognition of the Chinese People's Republic; the issue was whether, during the thirteenth session, the question would be discussed during its sittings. Now the president, Dr. Malik, right at the outset of that sitting of the 13th session, warned delegates of the countries which had to take part in the proceedings that they had to abide by the procedure instead of dealing with the question on its merits, since the issue was merely whether the question was to be discussed. But during the course of the debate some countries started to discuss the recognition of communist China, and Dr. Malik, perhaps to allow various countries which were anxious to make a clean breast of it allowed them to discuss the question at length on its merits. Thus, various countries voiced their opinion on the matter. And a few minutes ago, while listening to the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver East, I realized that the gist of his statement was nothing but an echo of the arguments set forth by Mr. Gromyko at the 13th general assembly and of the arguments exploited by communist countries which are Moscow's satellites and by countries which have a sympathetic consideration for Moscow and communist China. It is odd how far the human mind can indulge in distortions and contrive all kinds of formulas and arguments to justify a situation and to reach a conclusion.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to review briefly some other arguments which no doubt the hon. member for Vancouver East has forgotten. Bulgaria raises a problem of international law.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, this is a subtle argument. Apparently, it is the state, as such, and not the government, which answers for the rights and duties toward the country. Now in 1945, when as a result of the treaties of Potsdam, the islands of Taiwan went back to China. They were handed to the Chinese state and not to the Chinese government. If since 1945, the Chinese government has changed, Taiwan still belongs to the Chinese state. According to the Bulgarian concept it would therefore be wrong to claim that Peking is now guilty of aggression by its actions with regard to Taiwan. And if Peiping is not being aggressive, it would represent the Chinese people and deserve to sit as such at the U.N.

According to Rumania, during the same debate, American policy contained a wrong principle, i.e.: What is not convenient for the U.S., is not convenient for the U.N. If Washington were to recognize Peking, it would imply its admission to the United Nations. Now, according to the Rumanian representative, Washington is not recognizing Peking because recognition would endanger American policies in the Far East.

Russia in its turn is afraid that if Peking is kept away, the universal character of the United Nations would be impaired, as the Chinese continent has a population of 600 million people, whereas Chiang Kai-shek only rules over 10 million subjects. The Soviet thesis sees an increase of prestige for the United Nations, if Peking were accepted in this organization.

Another country brought another facet into the argument. Cambodia claims that the Chinese people love their communist government, that they are proud of their new life and their new industrial and economic development.

Such arguments seem almost identical to the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver East.

And Cambodia goes on saying that the Chinese people certainly do not seem to wish ever to return to Chiang Kai-shek's rule.

As far as Burma is concerned, it favours discussion, in the General Assembly, of Peking's admission to the United Nations, in order to avoid war. The United Nations, it says, were created to avoid the meeting of those nations on the battlefields. Now, the position seems so explosive in that area of the Far East, that it becomes urgent to solve it before it is too late.

Members of the Arab union feel that it is necessary to accept political realities. As far as they are concerned, the only Chinese government is that of Peking.

As for Hungary, it finds ridiculous that Peking should be refused membership in the UNO. It likens the situation to that of medieval Rome which, despite Copernic's protest, decreed that the sun revolves around the earth.

India is wondering why the United States, if they are sure they have good reasons for refusing Peking's admission into the UNO, refuse to state those reasons openly before the General Assembly.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, the arguments in favour of the recognition of communist China by the United Nations, put forward by the countries that agree with the principles of Moscow and of Peking.

Among unfavourable arguments, there are of course those which were put forward by the Formosan delegate sent by Chiang Kai-shek who claims that Formosa now represents the Chinese people in keeping with all the standards of the charter of the United Nations. In fact, we read in the preamble of this charter, and I quote:

We the peoples of the United Nations determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war—

The Formosan delegate then stated that only a peaceful state could aspire to the UNO. Now how can the communist regime introduce itself as a peace-making agent after invading Korea and killing there a million human beings? Some countries favourable to Peking claim that the future of peace is at stake. But you do not have the right to barter human freedom under the noble pretext of establishing peace.

The United Kingdom, which, for its part, had already recognized the Peking government in a unilateral and individual way in order to have trade relations with that government, thought that, during that thirteenth session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, the discussion of that controversial problem would have heightened an already too strong international tension.

At that thirteenth session of the General Assembly, the honourable Sidney Smith stated the stand taken by the Canadian government about this important matter. He indicated first that a great difficulty of expression had come up since a miliary intervention was threatening peace in the Taiwan area, and that it would be utopian to study the Chinese problem in the background of what was happening in that strategic area. He thought it was not in order to raise the question of admission or non admission of communist China in UNO at that time, because international tension, heightened by military events in the Far East, did not constitute a favourable atmosphere for the discussion of such a matter

That is why, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation, at that thirteenth session, rejected the Indian amendment and favoured postponement of the problem.

A vote was then taken, with the following result: 44 countries decided that the question should not be taken up during that thirteenth session; 28 members wanted a debate in the General Assembly and 9 members abstained.

Mr. Speaker, the question had to be well understood, and I believe that the principles put forward on that occasion may as well apply to our country, both from a unilateral and individual standpoint. How can a country like communist China—considering the principles I referred to very rapidly—possibly ask to be admitted to the United Nations? How can it ask Canada, a peace-loving country par excellence, whose friendship is easy, whose heart and mind are understanding, to support Chinese admission after its aggressive and bellicose actions, ever since it has achieved power? How can it ask to be admitted, if it cannot put into practice the principles of the United Nations?

You are no doubt aware, Mr. Speaker, that the United Nations, set up in 1945 by several war-weary nations anxious to strengthen international peace and co-operation across the world, instituted a charter which has four main purposes: first, to maintain peace and ensure international security; second, to promote sincere friendship between members; third, to develop international co-operation in the social, cultural or economic fields; fourth, to create through the United Nations an organization where all common purposes of the various members can be harmonized toward the achievement of those justifiable ends.

Well, Mr. Speaker, how could that country abide by those principles and those views while waging war and displaying a belligerent attitude, both within and outside its borders. A nation cannot shoot its way into the United Nations: admission into that body must be under the benevolent sign of the dove.

Canada, as I said earlier, has a sensitive heart and a level head, and may eventually recognize communist China. However, before such recognition is granted, China will have to show in a sustained, permanent and truthful way that it intends to abide by its international obligations, to treat its citizens as human beings, to respect the dignity of the human person, to deal with other countries whose co-operation it seeks, not by threats and blackmail, but by peaceful and friendly methods.

I therefore support the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister on November 1, 1957, when he stated that communist China must atone for its faults and show its good intentions and good faith. Moreover, that statement by the Right Hon. Prime Minister was supported and enlarged upon by a further statement, made by the hon. Sydney Smith, on February 26, 1958. Mr. Speaker, may I say that in my view, those statements were wise, fair and appropriate.

Should the resolution now before us be put to a vote, I would feel compelled to vote against it, for the various reasons I have indicated.

As regards the hon. member for Vancouver East, may I suggest to him that in introducing resolutions in the future, he show more cohesion and co-ordination, unless he wants to deepen our conviction that he intends to remain, to his very death, connected with a political group whose views are at variance with the facts of present day Canadian life.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Allard: Certainly.

Mr. Herridge: Does the hon. member know that a good number of the candidates of the Progressive Conservative party in British Columbia at the last election publicly advocated and supported recognition of China?

(Translation):

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to answer the question raised by the hon. member. In reply, I would say to him that any good Conservative member of the house should agree with statements made by the right hon. Prime Minister.

(Text):

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I think it obvious at the outset that any remarks I make will not settle finally the controversial subject propounded in the resolution before the house. It is unfortunate that I have to start at this late hour of the day.

Mr. Winch: It was well planned.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is the hon. member's interpretation. I can have my interpretation. But I do want to suggest right at the outset that I feel the mover of this resolution has grossly oversimplified the problem. As I listened to his presentation I noted that it was not the presentation of a reasoned argument but rather quotations from certain authorities who are in favour of the idea of the recognition of Red China. I am sure that we could find equally eminent authorities who take a counter view, if there were time for us to do so.

I should like to introduce this note into the discussion, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) has suggested that the experience of those who have travelled on the mainland of China is to the effect that all is for the best in the best of possible worlds.

Mr. Winch: I never did any such thing.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps I am slightly misinterpreting his statement.

Mr. Winch: You mean grossly.

Mr. Dinsdale: Let me remind the hon. member that I said he was not giving his own opinion but he was quoting the opinions of others. He made reference to such eminent authorities as Mr. James Muir, the president of the Royal Bank, and other authorities of that kind. Now, that is one viewpoint. The viewpoint I should like to put before the hon. member tonight is this: The international communist conspiracy has been rampant in the world ever since the revolutionary events of the year 1917. It has been a subtle conspiracy, yet it has been relentlessly moving forward embracing more and more of humanity. Immediately following world war II we felt the impact of international communism in western Europe. Year by year, one after another, the nations of Europe came under the domination of Moscow until, following the coup d'etat in Prague in 1948, the western nations finally woke up to the realization they were faced with a new manifestation of international communism and they came together in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Since that time there has been no further encroachment, at least in this area of communist expansionism.

Now, it follows, if the theory is accurate that communism does have this international manifestation, that in some area of the world a new expression is being felt. There are those who feel that the outthrust, the upsurge of international communism today is now being felt in the Asiatic countries, in China in the first instance and in the countries bordering so-called Red communist China. This is one through that I wanted to bring before the hon. members in the few moments that are at my disposal here tonight.

There is the other aspect of the problem upon which he relied very heavily in presenting his case. He inferred that the Canadian viewpoint is determined entirely by the viewpoint of the United States on this problem. In fact, I believe he used the words that Canada is merely a satellite of the United States in this regard. I believe that that statement can be challenged. It is true that Canada, as a neighbouring North American country, follows very closely the leadership of the United States in establishing our foreign policy. It is also equally true that the decision of Canada in reference to this problem, up to the moment, is the result of deliberation and consideration, which are the words used in the resolution, on the part of the government which formerly had the responsibility for conducting affairs in this nation, as well as on the part of the government which at the present moment has the responsibility of guiding the foreign policy of the nation.

I think that the late minister for external affairs put the matter very nicely when he spoke in this house just a few weeks ago and reviewed in a comprehensive way the pros and cons of this issue. Just a week ago, on March 13, I had the privilege of listening to one of the assistant secretaries of state for our neighbour to the south, Mr. Walter Robertson, deal with this very issue of the attitude of the United States toward the recognition of Red China.

Mr. Winch: I quoted him, too, to be fair.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, but you did not quote all aspects of that speech, to be equally fair.

In thanking the speaker on that occasion, the gentleman chosen for that task spoke in very sober tones and said that the effect of the speech by Mr. Robertson was like the impact of a cold shower because in recent days we had tended to lose some of the fundamental perspective on this problem. Mr. Robertson pointed out, for example, that the majority of the free nations of the world still have not recognized the People's Republic of China. Out of the total membership of the free nations only 22 have recognized the Peiping regime, whereas 44 have still failed to give this regime recognition.

Mr. Robertson also drew our attention to the basic difficulty of this very vexing problem, the fate of the Formosan government if the western nations, particularly the United States and Canada, should yield to the impulse to recognize Red China. We have not only one China to contend with in this issue, we have the established government on the island of Formosa. It was the opinion of Mr. Robertson that recognition would undermine the position of the Chiang administration and place the whole cause of freedom and democracy in the Asiatic countries in serious jeopardy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is ten o'clock.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION BOARD

Question No. 129—Mr. Argue:

1. What amount of each commodity did the agricultural stabilization board hold as of December 31, 1958?

2. What was the total amount of money paid for each commodity held by the board as of December 31, 1958?

3. What amount of each commodity had been bought by the agricultural stabilization board from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958?

4. What was the total amount of money paid for each commodity acquired by the board between April 1, 1958 and December 31, 1958?

5. What quantity of each of the commodities handled by the board from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958, have since been disposed of?

6. What was the total amount of money received by the board from the sale of each commodity from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958?

7. What amounts of each commodity were disposed of other than by outright sale, between April 1, 1958 and December 31, 1958?

8. What was the total amount of money paid for each commodity disposed of in such a manner by the board from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958?

9. In what manner was each commodity disposed of by the board between April 1, 1958 and December 31, 1958, other than by outright sale?

10. Did the board expend any other moneys in the performance of its functions from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958, in its purchase programs other than for the support of food stuffs? If so, for what purpose?

11. What was the net cost of operations of the board from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. On December 31, 1958, the agricultural stabilization board held the following stocks:

Butter, 79,339,941 pounds; Dry skimmed milk, 65,113,795 pounds; Shell eggs, 3,108 cases; Cheese, 2,155,818 pounds; Pork products, 8,405,251 pounds; Fowl, 832,255 pounds; Tomatoes, 114,536 cases.

2. The estimated total cost of the inventories shown in 1, including carrying charges to December 31, 1958, were as follows:

Butter, $50,962,067; Dry skimmed milk, $9,015,425; Shell eggs, $38,917; Cheese, $742,628; Pork products, $3,140,065; Fowl, $330,189; Tomatoes, $597,786.

3. The following is an estimate of total purchases by the board from April 1 to December 31, 1958.

Butter, 71,466,653 pounds; Dry skimmed milk, 97,653,587 pounds; Shell eggs, 101,428 cases; Cheese, 15,408,323 pounds; Pork products, 8,668,872 pounds; Tomatoes, 139,526 cases.

4. The estimated amount of money paid for each commodity acquired between April 1 and December 31, 1958, is as follows:

Butter, $45,481,917; Dry skimmed milk $14,052,773; Shell eggs, $1,198,140; Cheese, $5,238,830; Pork products, $3,116,641; Tomatoes, $726,307.

5. The estimated sales of each commodity from April 1 to December 31, 1958, are as follows:

Butter, 17,310,783 pounds; Dry skimmed milk, 60,259,509 pounds; Shell eggs, 187,077 cases; Cheese, 13,252,505 pounds; Pork products, 263,601 pounds; Tomatoes, 24,990 cases.

6. In the case of sales returns there is always variation in the methods of payment as well as numerous adjustments so that book records, except for the year end audited financial statement, cannot be correlated with the estimated sales shown in question No. 5.

Book records indicate the following amounts received for various commodities between April 1 and December 31.

Butter, $10,982,561; Dry skimmed milk, $2,571,742; Shell eggs and egg products $3,015-637; Cheese, $4,092,437; Porks products, $97,-999; Fowl, $1,899,243; Tomatoes $113,281.

7. All commodities were sold by the board although in some cases, such as that of dry skimmed milk, an agreed commercial value for the area to which the product is destined is provided for in the estimates of another department, for all donations to international relief agencies.

8. See No. 7

9. See No. 7.

10. No.

11. The accounts of the board are kept on the basis of programs which start at different times during the year. The only time that an accrued net cost is calculated and audited is for the fiscal year April 1 to March 31.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT—LEGAL FEES

Question No. 166—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1954, have any fees or remuneration been paid to (a) legal counsel; (b) other persons, for opinions and action arising out of reports of the restrictive trade practices commission or for other activities relating to the combines legislation?

2. If so, what are the names of (a) the counsel; (b) other persons, what amount was paid to each and for what service in each instance?

Answer by: Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice):

1. (a) Yes; (b) Yes.

2. (a) Counsel.

ESKASONI, N.S., SCHOOL

Question No. 241—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Was a contract awarded for the construction of the Eskasoni, Nova Scotia, school? If so, to what firm?

2. What was the amount of the tender?

3. What was the total amount paid to the contractor for this project?

4. Were previous tenders called and cancelled? If so, what were the names of those who tendered and respective amounts of tenders?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. Yes—M. R. Chappell, Sydney, N.S., on March 11, 1958.

2. $56,225.00.

3. $59,916.00.

4. Yes, in December, 1957.

(a) Stephens Construction Ltd., 199 Townsend Street, Sydney, N.S., $57,500.00.

(b) M. C. Campbell & D. G. Grant, P.O. Box 251, Antigonish, N.S., $59,330.00.

(c) M. R. Chappell, Sydney, N.S., $60,719.00.

(d) Maritime Builders Ltd., Sydney, N.S., $67,785.00.

FEDERAL GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXATION, HALIFAX

Question No. 255—Mr. Morris:

1. Does the federal government pay grants to the city of Halifax in lieu of taxation on federal government properties?

2. If so, what is the formula used in the payment of such grants and is the formula related to the so-called business tax rate or residential tax rate applied by the city of Halifax to taxpayers?

3. What was the total grant paid by the federal government to the city of Halifax in lieu of taxation on federal government properties in (a) 1956; (b) 1957; (c) 1958?

4. What are the individual assessed valuations of federal government properties in the city of Halifax?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes.

2. Starting in 1957, the grant formula uses the rate of tax which would be applicable to federal property if that property were taxable; that is, federal property is divided into two groups. To one the business tax rate is applied and to the other the residential tax rate is applied. Before 1957, under the former Municipal Grants Act formula, a weighted average of the residential and business rates was used in the grant calculation. Also the grant was not paid on all federal property but only on federal property in excess of 2 per cent of combined taxable and federal property.

3. (a) 1956, $806,187; (b) 1957, $1,408,422; (c) 1958, $1,400,000 (interim payment).

4. The total accepted value of federal property on which the 1957 grant was based

Subject to residential rate	$12,618,500
Subject to commercial rate	21,620,675
Total	$34,239,175

Questions

The federal property in Halifax is comprised of about 50 properties involving over 200 separate buildings.

The hon. member has agreed to accept the above answer reserving the right to examine the details on file in the Department of Finance.

FEDERAL GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXATION, DARTMOUTH, N.S.

Question No. 259—Mr. Morris:

1. Does the federal government pay grants to the town of Dartmouth in lieu of taxation on federal government properties?

2. If so, what is the formula used in the payment of such grants and is the formula related to the so called business tax rate or residential tax rate applied by the town of Dartmouth to taxpayers?

3. What was the total grant paid by the federal government to the town of Dartmouth in lieu of taxation on federal government properties in (a) 1956; (b) 1957; (c) 1958?

4. What are the individual assessed valuations of federal government properties in the town of Dartmouth?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes.

2. The current tax rate of the town of Dartmouth is applied to the approved assessed value of federal property to calculate the grant. The town of Dartmouth does not have separate tax rates on business and residential properties.

3.

	Taxation year to which payment related	Payment under sec. 5 (annual grant)	Payment under sec. 7 (local improvement grant)
(a)	1956	$ 92,638	$1,685.19
(b)	1957	$106,997	$ 522.57
(c)	1958	$105,744	$2,967.82

4. The total accepted value of federal property on which the 1958 grant was based—

Land	$ 189,100
Buildings	$2,974,100
Total	$3,163,200

The hon. member has agreed to accept the above answer reserving the right to examine the details on file in the Department of Finance.

FEDERAL GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXATION, HALIFAX COUNTY

Question No. 260—Mr. Morris:

1. Does the federal government pay grants to the municipality of the county of Halifax in lieu of taxation on federal government properties?

2. If so, what is the formula used in the payment of such grants and is the formula related to the so called business tax or residential tax rate applied by the municipality of the county of Halifax to taxpayers?

3. What was the total grant paid by the federal government to the municipality of the county of Halifax in lieu of taxation on federal government properties in (a) 1956; (b) 1957; (c) 1958?

4. What are the individual assessed valuations of federal government properties in the municipality of the county of Halifax?

1. Yes.

2. The current tax rate of the municipality is applied to the approved assessed value of federal property to calculate the grant. With respect to areas in the municipality that are designated as self-contained defence establishments under the act, a grant is paid only on federal land and on buildings used as residences; other buildings are excluded in these areas. There are four self-contained defence establishments in this municipality, viz:—

H.M.C.S. Shearwater,
Shannon park,
Bedford naval magazine,
North beaverbank.

With respect to all remaining federal government properties in the municipality, the tax equivalent is paid on both land and buildings.

The municipality of the county of Halifax does not have separate tax rates for business and residential properties.

3. 1956 grant, $45,840; 1957 grant, $75,000 (interim payment); 1958 grant, no payment yet.

4. The estimated total accepted value of federal property on which the 1957 grant will be based was $5,400,000 covering 109 items.

The hon. member has agreed to accept the above answer reserving the right to examine the details on file on the Department of Finance.

SCHOLARSHIP PARTICIPATION BY CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 267—Mr. Hellyer:

1. Does the civil service commission approve of civil service employees participating in scholarships?

2. If so, what assistance or encouragement is given to employees when participating?

3. Was a scholarship leading to a master's degree in public administration advertised during August by the Maxwell school of Syracuse University, Syracuse, New York, and leave granted by the Department of National Defence to one of its employees to enter such studies?

4. If so, (a) on what terms or arrangement; (b) what length of leave; (c) the name or names of employees recommended by the civil service commission, and terms of recommendation?

5. Was the recommendation carried out in full? If not, what were the changes and the reasons for changes?

6. Does the civil service commission intend to continue recommending employees to take up studies in other than Canadian universities?

7. What financial obligations are assumed by government departments because of this policy?

Answer by: Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State):

1. Yes, where the subjects of study are related to the needs of the civil service.

2. Leave may be provided without pay, at half pay and, in a few instances, at full pay, depending on the circumstances which exist in relation to the requirement of the civil service for the training in question.

3. A scholarship leading to a master's degree in public administration at the Maxwell school of Syracuse University was advertised throughout the service in March 1958, and not in August, 1958. An employee in the Department of National Defence was awarded the scholarship by Syracuse University and was granted leave by that department.

4. (a) and (b) Leave with half pay was authorized for the period July 28, 1958 to June 23, 1959. (c) The civil service commission did not recommend employees for this scholarship. Applications were sent by the candidates to the Maxwell school of Syracuse University and the selection was made by that institution.

5. The employee withdrew from the program in August, 1958. The reason given by the employee for his withdrawal was his inability to find suitable accommodation for his family in Syracuse at a reasonable cost.

6. The commission does not recommend that employees take up studies in other than Canadian universities. As a normal practice, the civil service commission does not approve leave to employees to attend universities outside of Canada when equivalent courses are available in this country.

7. Where a financial obligation is assumed by government departments, it is by the partial payment of salary to the employee while he is on leave or, in a few instances, by full payment of salary.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 24, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONFERENCE RESPECTING SCHOLARSHIPS AND FELLOWSHIPS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that at the commonwealth trade and economic conference in Montreal a decision was taken in principle to establish a new scheme of commonwealth scholarships and fellowships. The conference agreed that the exact scope and detailed arrangements for this scheme should be worked out at a further conference of the commonwealth countries to be held in the United Kingdom in 1959. It was also agreed that the mandate of this conference would include a review of existing arrangements for co-operation among commonwealth countries in the field of education to determine the need for any improvement or expansion of these arrangements.

All commonwealth governments including Canada have now accepted an invitation from the United Kingdom government to attend a conference on the lines agreed upon at Montreal, this conference to be held at Oxford, England, from July 15 to July 29. Lord Halifax, the chancellor of the university, has agreed to serve as president of the conference and Sir Philip Morris, the vice chancellor of Bristol University will serve as chairman. The composition of the Canadian delegation to the conference will be decided at a later date.

Meanwhile, the house will wish to know that a meeting is to be held in Ottawa shortly between government officials and representatives of Canadian universities to discuss the arrangements for Canadian participation in this commonwealth scholarship scheme.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the official opposition I wish to state that we welcome the initiation of this scheme for commonwealth scholarships, and we are glad to note that the meeting for this purpose will be held this summer in a highly appropriate place, Oxford University.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the C.C.F. group may I state that our sentiments are exactly the same as those expressed by the Leader of the Opposition.

REPORT ON MUNICIPAL INCENTIVE PROGRAM—EXTENSION TO MAY 31

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with your permission and that of the house I should like to report briefly on the present status of the municipal incentive program, and to make an announcement. As the house knows, this program was designed to assist in combating seasonal unemployment. As at March 20 I am pleased to report that the number of jobs provided under this program had reached a total of 32,000. That is a total of 32,000 jobs which would not otherwise have been provided.

Those who consulted the dominion bureau of statistics report yesterday will know from that report that this program has played a positive part in the present encouraging increase in employment and the reduction in unemployment which is now taking place. The house may be interested at this time in knowing that since this program was first announced we have received and processed 1,909 applications from municipalities across Canada. Of this number we have approved 1,838 applications or 96 per cent of the total, and a number are still pending. The aim has been, of course, to grant the maximum number of approvals in line with the objective of this program in order to put the maximum number of men to work. The estimated total cost of projects approved to date is $81,375,000.

The federal contribution necessary to launch projects of such magnitude has been slightly more than $9 million; to be exact, $9,279,000. This is the estimated federal share of payroll costs for the period in question from December 1, 1958 to April 30, 1959. The total payroll costs are estimated at $27,358,000. The cost of works to be completed during the period indicated is $52,739,000. Total payroll cost during the period is estimated at $18,706,000. Of this the federal share, as I have pointed out, is a little over $9 million. Thus the federal government's share of direct payroll costs for the period in question represented 17.6 per cent of the total cost of the works for that period.

I mention this, Mr. Speaker, in order to indicate for the benefit of hon. members the extent to which the provinces and the municipalities have co-operated in taking advantage of this program and in making possible works of the magnitude mentioned and, of course, in providing jobs both directly and indirectly to a great many Canadians.

As the house is aware, the success of the program to date has resulted in numerous requests that the period of time be extended. I should add that a number of such requests have come from provinces some of which are contributing to payroll costs in the amount of 25 per cent and 30 per cent, adding a further incentive to the municipalities.

The house will recall that a supplementary estimate was recently approved granting funds in the amount of $15 million for this program. In order that those municipalities which have taken advantage of this program to undertake during the winter months works and projects which they would not have otherwise undertaken, may be enabled to continue to receive this assistance for another full month, I am happy to announce that it is the intention of the government to grant an extension of this program until May 31.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will welcome even this information which has been given so generously by the Minister of Labour today. He mentioned that the winter work program has resulted in the placement of some 32,000 people. I regret to inform him that I made a mistake last night when speaking outside of this house. I said that the winter work program had put some 33,000 to work. I erred by a thousand in my tribute to the minister.

An hon. Member: Wrong again.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Someone says "wrong again"; but listen to those figures and see whether I am very wrong. The fact that the government has decided to extend this program to May 31 is an indication—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): May 31.

Some hon. Members: Wrong again.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that the government regards this as a very serious matter. Indeed, it is so serious, as was pointed out yesterday by the minister when reporting on the latest figures on unemployment, that the unemployed of Canada represent 8.8 per cent of the working force. I am sure, however, he will not deny that in the maritime provinces the unemployed represent 12 per cent of the working force; in Newfoundland the unemployed represent 30 per cent of the working force; in Ontario the unemployed represent 6 per cent of the working force; in Quebec the unemployed represent 12 per cent of the working force; on the prairies, 5 per cent, and in British Columbia 8.7 per cent. Let us compare this situation with the situation in Denmark, Belgium, the United States, Western Germany, Sweden, Norway, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, which will indicate that the announcement today by the minister is not really going to correct our situation.

An hon. Member: What about Windsor?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is very bad in Windsor, I regret to say. We in Canada have a higher level of unemployment than any of the countries of the western world that I have mentioned. In Canada 8.8 per cent of the working force is unemployed. In Denmark it is 8.3 per cent; in Belgium, it is 7.2 per cent; in the United States it is 6.1 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In Western Germany it is 5.6 per cent; in Sweden it is 4.3 per cent; in Norway it is 4 per cent. In the Netherlands it is 3.2 per cent; and in the United Kingdom, 2.5 per cent.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —so that this government cannot take—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is my recollection and understanding that when ministers make statements it has been the practice of the house, although it is not provided for under the rules, to permit short comments on the statements in reply. Those comments are, by the practice, to be strictly relevant to the statement itself. What the hon. member is doing is taking us on a sort of world tour, which seems to be hardly relevant to the statement made by the Minister of Labour.

I suggest to you, sir, that the hon. gentleman should abide by the practice of the house. I well remember that when we were sitting over there we kept our comments short—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: —and if at any time we tended to stray from short comment we were reminded by my hon. friends who were sitting here at that time what the rule was. I do suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the rules of the house, which my hon. friends were so anxious to see obeyed when they were over here, should govern them in their conduct when they are over there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of order, I can very well understand the concern and embarrassment of the government—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood the hon. member for Essex East to say he was speaking to the point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was just saying, Mr. Speaker, in making my answer to the point of order, that I can well understand the embarrassment of the government when one seeks to comment on the important statement made by the Minister of Labour. The Minister of Justice, I am sure—

Mr. Speaker: Order. With all deference to the hon. member, his comments are not on the point of order. The point is how far he should go in his comment on the statement of the minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, I think I was just about to do that, but I have the right to comment upon statements made by the Minister of Justice that were not all on the point of order. The Minister of Labour quite properly made a statement outlining the government's amendment to its winter work program and giving statistics respecting the unemployment situation in Canada.

Mr. Fulton: In Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was commenting on those statistics by revealing that the situation in Canada is so severe that it does not compare favourably with the unemployment situation in other countries—

Mr. Starr: On a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —in the western world, and I submit that I was completely in order.

Mr. Speaker: There can only be one speaker at a time on the point of order.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was perfectly in order in commenting on the statement of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Minister of Labour have something to say on the point of order? I wish to deal with it, because it is a rather important point in our practice and I think it is well that we keep on firm and proper lines in the practice at this stage of the proceedings of the house.

Mr. Starr: I think the remarks made by the hon. member for Essex East were irrelevant, in that he compared the situation in our country with other countries that do not have the same climatic conditions and seasonal fluctuations that Canada has; and when he does so he speaks in a tone of disappointment because he predicted last year—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I am hearing the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have not finished my statement.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has something further to say I will hear him again, but I am now recognizing the hon. member for Kootenay West on the point of order.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to trespass on the time of the house only for a moment or two to say that, strange as it may seem, I agree wholeheartedly with the contention of the Minister of Justice on this occasion. I do think that the member for Essex East is trespassing upon the good will of the house in making these lengthy statements, and I suggest that if he will follow the practice of his leader in replying to statements by the Prime Minister or other members of the government he will be even more in line with the rules as we understand them.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to deal further with the point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Speaker: May I say this. The practice at this stage of the proceedings of the house is not capable of exact definition but as I understand it, is customary for a minister who wishes to make a statement to do so under the heading of motions on routine proceedings. It has been the practice of this house, for at least the last five or six years, for one speaker from each of the opposition parties to be allowed to comment briefly upon the statement.

It is clear, I think, to all of us that this does not open a question for debate. Of course it does not restrict the character of the comment, which may be favourable or it may be unfavourable. I think we have to depend upon the good sense and discretion of the members of the house in not going too far. Certainly I would think that any comment that went beyond the length of the statement itself would be disproportionate and out of order. I feel the comment should be strictly relevant to the statement, and with that in mind I trust the hon. member will proceed to finish his statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can only say that I regret that the hon. member for Kootenay West regards this as not the kind of question that deserves comprehensive consideration.

Mr. Argue: That is an unfair statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Having dealt with the comparative situation, I want to conclude what I have to say by reminding the minister of his stand in connection with the document which he gave to the country yesterday, and which shows that 537,000 are out of work, 1,000 less—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Here is a very important statement which the minister has not emphasized. Employment in the Atlantic region reached a low level during February, largely as a result of shutdowns in the Nova Scotia coal mines. Some 14,000 fewer people were working in February than in the previous month. This is the kind of statement, together with what I have already said, that justifies the government not only in doing what they have announced today but in taking much more formidable and comprehensive steps than this program for coping with unemployment.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we in the C.C.F. are disappointed in that when the minister announced the extension of the winter work program he extended it for only another month. This would have been acceptable had the minister coupled with that statement some assurance that the unemployment problem in Canada during the summer would be solved.

The announcement by the government means that all they have been able to accomplish, with the co-operation of the provinces and municipalities, has been to put to work on site a number of persons equal to about 6 per cent of the number of persons unemployed in this country. This shows that the government, in real fact, has thrown up its hands and is prepared to live with widespread unemployment. We feel that the statement that has been made this afternoon, welcome as it is, is but a gesture compared with what the government should be doing to cope with this major problem.

[Mr. Speaker.]

TRADE

SALT FISH—STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON MARKETING

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on August 1, 1958 I announced the government's decision that the exclusive right to export processed salted fish from Newfoundland, held by the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, would not be extended beyond July 31, 1959.

By the act of union between Canada and Newfoundland, the exclusive licence to export salted fish, which had been granted to the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited by the commission of government, was continued for a period of five years in order to allow the orderly development of alternative marketing arrangements during this period of transition.

At the expiration of the licence arrangement with NAFEL in 1954 it was again agreed to continue the exclusive licence for a further period of three years, with the qualification that interprovincial trade in salt bulk was freed from this restriction. Subsequently two extensions of one marketing year each were granted, the final one at the time of my statement on August 1 last. Thus the salt fish industry of Newfoundland has had a ten-year period in which to adopt marketing methods in conformity with the practice of this trade in other Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

Serious consideration was given to alternative methods of marketing salt fish in Newfoundland. An interdepartmental committee made an extensive and exhaustive survey of the situation. Exporters, processors, fishermen and government officials in the Atlantic provinces and the province of Quebec were interviewed and given an opportunity to present their views.

After full consideration of all aspects of the trade, it was not found possible nor deemed in the best interests of the salt fish industry to adopt alternative methods of controlled marketing in the province of Newfoundland. Accordingly the export marketing of Atlantic coast salted fish after the 31st July, 1959, will be carried out on the basis of free competition.

The government will continue its present practice of supervising the inspection of Atlantic coast salted fish by the Department of Fisheries and will extend to exporters trade promotion assistance through the Department of Trade and Commerce in Canada and our trade commissioner service abroad.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his courtesy in giving this statement to the house so that it will be known to those on the east coast in case any questions may arise that anyone might like to have put to the minister tomorrow. I shall refrain from making any comment beyond that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUMMIT CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF MEETING IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in respect of the invitation to the governments of the United States and the United Kingdom to hold the proposed summit conference meeting in Quebec, Canada, whether that invitation has also been extended to the governments of France and the Soviet union.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it got no further than I mentioned yesterday, although a formal invitation will be extended.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED PURCHASE OF SEAPLANES FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister confirm the announcement in today's press attributed to the director of the aircraft branch of his department that ten seaplanes are to be purchased from the United States for the R.C.A.F.?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, we must all admit that there is a need for such an aircraft. Also there has been press speculation in support of the SA-16 Grumman for the R.C.A.F. No contract has been awarded to the Grumman Engineering Corporation by the Department of Defence Production. A meeting was held yesterday between the air industries and transport association of Canada and the Department of Defence Production at which meeting officials of the department were advising the Canadian aircraft industry on the procedure for obtaining contracts under production sharing. Discussions are going on to see what equivalent work can be done in Canada. No contract has been signed. No press release has been made by any officials of my department. Discussions are continuing.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Is the hon. minister not aware of an article or report published in the Globe and Mail of March 24, 1959, to the effect that an order had gone through for the purchase of Grumman aircraft from the United States? That news item is reported to have come from Mr. Thompson, director of the aircraft branch of the Department of Defence Production.

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, I must say that the director of the aircraft branch of my department has made no statement nor issued any press release to that effect. As I said just now, discussions are going on and what equivalent work will result for Canadian aircraft industries, if agreement is reached, is not yet known.

(Text):

[Later:]

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. I should like to ask the minister if he would advise the house as to whether the statement attributed by the Toronto Globe and Mail of today's date to Mr. Thompson, director of the aircraft branch of the Department of Defence Production is true. The statement is to the effect—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking about the same statement to which reference was made earlier?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, I am asking about a statement that is in the same press release but which was not covered by the earlier question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The same press report, not release.

Mr. McIlraith: I stand corrected by the Prime Minister; it is indeed a press report. The statement attributed to the director is to the effect that the United States navy will not permit Canadian manufacturers to tender bids on naval defence contracts unless they are already producing items for the Canadian government. I should like to ask the minister if that is a correct statement of the position.

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, do I gather that the hon. member for Ottawa West would like information as to whether or not this statement was made by Mr. Thompson?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker; I would like the minister to advise the house whether or not that is a correct statement of the position on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McIlraith: This is a matter of policy affecting the minister's department, and it is clearly in order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I said that no official of my department made a press statement. Negotiations on this matter are continuing. This question relates to government policy. I have outlined the policy at various times during the session, and I shall certainly refer to this again when my estimates are once more before the house.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

LACHINE CANAL—REPORTED LAY-OFF OF WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pratt (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister care to comment on a report in the newspapers that 38 long-term employees have been laid off from work in connection with the Lachine canal by the St. Lawrence seaway authority, in favour of new men.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Every possible effort has been made by the Department of Transport, the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the civil service commission to find jobs for these men as soon as possible.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question. The minister will remember that I myself referred to this matter some time ago. Did the minister not make a statement recently that the Lachine canal would be operated as before? The question now is, why are these men being laid off?

Mr. Hees: The operation of the Lachine canal as a water through-way will be quite limited compared with its operations in the past, and fewer personnel will be required. We will retain just as many men as are required to do the work, and attempt to find employment for the others as quickly as we can.

Mr. Chevrier: But is it necessary to lay off some 40 men?

Mr. Hees: We are not laying off one more man than is absolutely necessary. We like to keep men working, and we do not let them off unless it is absolutely necessary.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

HALIFAX, N.S.—FUEL USED IN BANK OF CANADA BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is it a fact that the minister has requested the Bank of Canada to use coal for heating the new Bank of Canada building in Halifax, but that the bank is insisting on using oil for heating purposes?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, in reply to that question I must say that this department has no authority to tell the Bank of Canada to use coal instead of oil. The Bank of Canada is an independent concern.

Mr. Robichaud: A supplementary question. Would the minister advise the house if he has approached the Bank of Canada and asked them to use coal?

Mr. Comtois: Yes, I can answer that. I can say that representations have been made to the Bank of Canada suggesting that coal might be used instead of oil, if it could be used, and the answer from the bank was to the effect that it was not economical, and to a large extent, to use coal instead of oil in that new building in Halifax.

(Translation):

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED DELAY IN RECORD OF PERFORMANCE TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture a question on behalf of the members of the Ayrshire Society of Quebec and the riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. For what reason has the Department of Agriculture not placed a larger number of herds under the record of performance tests?

(Text):

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): There are approximately 3,600 herds now on test, of which 126 have been accepted since November 1, 1958. Applications have been received for an additional 60 herds. These will be accepted as soon as arrangements can be made to provide inspection without reducing service below minimum standards to herds now under test. Discussions are now in progress with breed associations for the purpose of revising the policy in such a way as to make it possible to accept promptly new applications which meet the requirements for inspection.

In short, this program has proved so popular that it has been difficult to keep up with all the demands for this type of service.

TRADE

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EXPORT PROSPECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the concern caused by the announcement by the dominion bureau of statistics as reported in this morning's Montreal Gazette that in the first half of the current crop year wheat exports from Canada were 4.5 per cent lower than last year, and that for the same period the combined exports from Canada, the United States, New Zealand and Argentina increased by 3.2 per cent, United States exports alone having increased in the same period by 11.2 per cent, has the minister any statement to make on future export prospects for Canadian wheat?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. There is no need for any alarm with regard to the wheat situation. Although our exports for the first six months are down by 4.3 per cent, that is by between six and seven million bushels, nevertheless the prospect for this year is that we shall reach an export total of 300 million bushels of wheat. Last year we set a record total of 316 million bushels. Even with the slight decline I have mentioned, our export total should amount to 300 million bushels.

We are in a world situation where exportable surpluses are greater than they were a year ago. At the same time it is expected that world trade in wheat will be higher than it was a year ago, which offsets to some extent the exportable surplus which is being held largely by the United States, Australia and Russia. However, Canada's position in the commercial markets of the world is still as good as it was a year ago. Some of the extra exports from the United States are very likely due to that country's surplus disposal program. In general, Canada's export position with regard to wheat is holding up very well and we shall experience another record year.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question. Taking into account Canada's current export of wheat, can the minister say whether it is a fact that at the present time Canada's net surplus of wheat is less than at the same date a year ago; also is there likely to be a reduction in the carry over at July 31, 1959?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In the crop year 1957-58 the surplus, which was set at over 700 million bushels in July, 1957 was reduced by over 100 million bushels, and the same amount of reduction is to take place in this crop year, 1958-59. Another 100 million bushels of that surplus will go into the world market for disposal.

WHEAT—CONFERENCE OF WESTERN EXPORTING COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say whether the United States secretary of agriculture, Ezra Benson, is arranging in Washington within the next few weeks a conference of the major non-communist wheat exporting countries in order to discuss a joint export program and co-operation in the export field?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there have been some items in the press forecasting arrangements of this order. I expect to receive official word with regard to this soon. This is in line with the proposals frequently put forward here by the Prime Minister himself with regard to a world food bank and suggestions of that nature, and the general disposal of surplus food products.

Mr. Argue: Do I take it from the minister's answer that Canada would welcome the opportunity of participating in such an important conference?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared to participate in any conference of this nature that would be of assistance to countries that are in need of food.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that with only two judges in the supreme court of Newfoundland it is virtually impossible for the court to function as a court of appeal, and justice is thereby being denied to the people of Newfoundland, could the Prime Minister indicate whether it will be possible for him to recommend without further delay the appointment to fill the vacancy on the court which has existed for three months, and which on February 12 he expressed the hope of making at the earliest possible date?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): It is generally agreed that an effective court of appeal requires three members, so that when an appeal comes before the court, if there is any division of opinion the appeal will not be dismissed on an equal division of the court.

In the province of Newfoundland over the years the number of supreme court judges has been limited to three. The result has been that the court of appeal has operated on a basis which, as I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree, was not beneficial to the administration of justice. This must have been recognized in 1957 when the legislature of Newfoundland provided for a further judge being appointed to the supreme court, that law to become effective on its proclamation by the attorney general of Newfoundland. For some reason that proclamation has never been brought about, and knowing the influence that the hon. gentleman has in Newfoundland I would suggest to him in the interest of that high standard of justice which all of us desire to achieve, he suggest the proclamation of that law which would expedite the setting up of a court of appeal which would have none of the weaknesses which would still be present even if the appointment in question had been made. I await the hon. gentleman's co-operation, knowing the power he possesses.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I shall be more than delighted to extend to the Prime Minister the co-operation he has asked for, but I suggest to him that the Newfoundland government would be more likely to proclaim this legislation if three months had not elapsed since the time the existing vacancy occurred. The fact is that there are only two judges, and for three months the Prime Minister has made no recommendation with respect to filling the existing vacancy.

TRANSPORT

PORT BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE—REQUEST FOR IMPROVED FERRY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to indicate the plans of his department for improved ferry service on the Port Borden-Cape Tormentine run?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. As a result of representations made by all four of the hon. members from Prince Edward Island, the matter of the adequacy of the present ferry service has been made the subject of a special study which was launched last autumn and is expected to be completed shortly. It will be recognized that this problem cannot be treated entirely separately from the question of a causeway, in the long run, but apart from this the interim situation is receiving our urgent attention.

Hon. members from the island have also suggested that consideration be given to acquiring the passenger-vehicle ferry Vacationland or one of the other ferries formerly in use on the straits of Mackinac run, prior to the opening of the Mackinac straits bridge. This suggestion is being looked into.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question on the basis that when there was consideration of the supplementary estimates the other day the minister was absent and I asked this very question. Now the minister arises and states he answers the question because of inquiries from the four island members. The supplementary question I now ask is this. When were the studies started in connection with the causeway between the mainland and Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Hees: Several months ago, Mr. Speaker. I feel compelled to state that if I had known the hon. member intended to ask me a question the other day, naturally I would have made a point of being in the house.

FLOODS

BEAUCE, QUE.—REQUEST FOR BLASTING IN CHAUDIERE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Beauce, who has been prevented from returning to Ottawa because of a heavy storm in his district, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that several well-informed people in Beauce district foresee that floods this year will be even worse than those which took place in recent years, will the minister consider the possibility—without necessarily having received a request to that effect from the provincial government—of blasting the major ice jams in the Chaudiere river to lessen to that extent the danger of flooding which threatens local property owners?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I have checked into the situation, and it appears that there is no responsibility on the federal government for blasting these ice jams in the Chaudiere river. This is entirely within the jurisdiction of the provincial government.

MANITOBA—FEDERAL AID IN PROVINCIAL DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he or any member of the government has received a request from the government of Manitoba for financial assistance to pay for part, at least, of the cost of the program of provincial development announced by the premier of that province a few days ago, in which announcement he said the federal authorities would be paying part of the cost.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I have received no such communication, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the question the Leader of the Opposition directed to the Minister of Finance. The premier of Manitoba did communicate with me relative to a plan for flood control on the Red river. The supporting material was received just a few days ago, and is now under discussion.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN INTERESTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Port Arthur asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question dealing with subsidized United States shipping in the great lakes, and as this matter comes under the jurisdiction of my department I shall attempt to answer the question.

I assume the service to which reference was made is that from United States great lakes ports to the Caribbean including calls at certain intermediate Canadian great lakes ports. This service is of course international in nature, and the ships in the service being United States flag ships will not be able to engage in the coasting trade of Canada, that is the carriage of goods from one Canadian port to another. They will, however, be able to pick up cargo in Canada for a foreign destination, or pick up cargo in a foreign port for a Canadian destination.

This situation is being followed closely by interested departments of government.

FINANCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO BORROW MONEY BY UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether it is a fact that the unemployment insurance commission intends to stop selling securities which are entailing substantial losses as a result of the reduced market value of government bonds, and that it intends to borrow money to meet its current heavy financial requirements resulting from the present massive unemployment?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this question should more properly be directed to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I tried to ask a related question of the Minister of Finance the other day and he thought it was a question to be answered later. May I ask him now whether he can give a reply to this very important question?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, certainly no question resembling this one was directed to me the other day. Let me tell my hon. friend that the information he is seeking is just the kind of information that traders in the market would very much like to have, and it never has been the practice at any time to give that information to the public.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the Minister of Finance not aware of the dangerous state of the fund at the present time and of the implications of such an act on the fund? I ask him that question.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Finance has indicated that he does not think he should answer this question, and it seems to me it should be pursued at another time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO LOGGERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that unemployment insurance benefits have been denied since December 31, 1958 to the loggers who would otherwise qualify for insurance, if their last employment was not with the A. N. D. Company, regardless of whether or not they are members of the I.W.A.?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was good enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question, Mr. Speaker. In the short interval I have been able to get the following information. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that any persons laid off before the strike, if qualified in the ordinary course of events, were getting their insurance. Those laid off on account of the strike, of course, could not draw, under the section of the act which stipulates that loss of work owing to a labour dispute does not qualify a person for benefit. Those laid off prior to the strike but who are continuing out of employment on account of the fact that a strike is in progress come under the same regulations as those who are now out of work purely on account of the strike.

As to the actual situation in Newfoundland, it is as follows. Any disqualifications imposed on unemployed loggers as a result of the strike were lifted as of March 15. The reason for this was that officials of the unemployment insurance commission were informed that as of March 15 production at Anglo-Newfoundland Development was back to normal. Therefore the situation now is that any loggers still out of work after that date are entitled to ordinary benefits, or whatever benefits they would normally qualify for. In other words there is now no disqualification as a result of the strike now in effect.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Do I understand the answer to mean that in the opinion of the unemployment insurance commission the strike against the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company is over?

SECRETARY OF STATE

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—REPORTED DELAY IN DEALING WITH APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I ask a question of the hon. Secretary of state? Last year, I complained that the civil service commission had decided to return to applicants the forms they had sent to the commission, with the reply that no competition was being held.

Could the hon. Secretary of State tell us whether, in the meantime, the situation has changed, or whether any change is contemplated for the future?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite get the question asked by the hon. member for St. Denis, but I understand the good suggestion he made last year has been acted upon.

[Later:]

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the hon. Secretary of State? I did not quite get the meaning of his reply. Does he mean that applications sent to the civil service commission are kept for a year, in case vacancies should occur in the meantime, as was done in the past when those applications were indeed kept for a year, either in the Post Office Department, or in the income tax division or elsewhere, and then, when a competition was to be held, applicants were notified of the date? Could the hon. minister make his reply as clear as my question?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, to reply as clearly as the question was put to me, I say yes.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES—PASSES FOR MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It has relevance because of the fact that so many of us are about to head home. What consideration has been given to the petition placed before him some time ago and signed by almost all members of parliament from Ontario and Quebec, offering to waive their own rights if the government would consider the introduction of a limited number of air passes or vouchers each session for members of parliament from the other provinces of Canada?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): A great deal of consideration, Mr Speaker.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Has the minister brought the question before his colleagues in the cabinet?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

HAZELTON, B.C.—INQUIRY RESPECTING DERAILMENT

On orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and apologize for not having given him notice of it. Is the minister able to give the house any information regarding the C.N.R. derailment near Hazelton, British Columbia, in which one C.N.R. employee lost his life?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I am still awaiting a full report, Mr. Speaker.

THE MINISTRY

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers, to provide for the payment of salaries to them at the rate of $4,000 per annum out of the consolidated revenue fund and to authorize the re-imbursement to them of reasonable expenses incurred by them in the discharge of their duties.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Fisher: Is the Prime Minister not going to make a statement?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, in moving the motion I shall say but little; I shall refer in general only to the history and then ask the support of the house for this measure because I have noticed, Mr. Chairman, a very considerable interest in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I say, sir, the interest has been shown in questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition and others surrounding him, the reasons for which are not completely apparent at the moment.

Mr. Pearson: I will explain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall deal for a moment with the general history connected with the establishment of the system of parliamentary assistants, the beginnings of which go back to a recommendation contained in a report made on the organization of the public service of Canada in 1912 by Sir George Murray, who was given the responsibility by the then prime minister of Canada, Right Hon. Robert L. Borden. At page 10 the following appears:

> Under present conditions there is only one political officer in each department, namely, the minister in charge of it. As a cabinet minister he has work of the highest importance to perform outside his department; and even if the relief which I have above indicated could be afforded to him within his department—

Which consisted of suggestions as to changes that might be made in order to improve the administration of the various departments.

> —his parliamentary and other duties would still be a heavy tax on his time, especially in the case of those ministers who are in charge of the more important departments.

Then there was a further reference to the same matter by a special senate committee on the machinery of government in 1919, the chairman of which was the late Senator J. S. McLennan. At page 11 of the report it is stated:

> We propose that time be made for these duties—

The reference is to the responsibilities of a minister and his duty to shape policy.

> —by the employment of parliamentary undersecretaries as assistants to the ministers. We conceive that their highest usefulness will be found by not circumscribing their duties to occasional replies to a question in parliament, but by making them active and indispensable forces in the working of the departments.

It goes on to set forth the views of that committee, which at the moment I want to make very clear are not necessarily adopted or accepted by the present government. Then you will recall, sir, that in 1936, following the change of government and the return of Right Hon. Mr. King as prime minister, the speech from the throne in that year contained the promise that at the session of 1936 parliamentary secretaryships would be provided.

Well, my hon. friends opposite had a moment of jollity as I commenced. I point out that seven long years passed by before there was any further reference to that subject by the then prime minister or his government. It was not until 1943 that anything further was done in that connection.

It is a matter of interest that there were members supporting the government of that day who were in favour of the establishment of the system. That very distinguished lawyer, A. G. Slaght, who was a member of this house, dealt with the question in 1936, believing that the speech from the throne did indeed reveal the expectation of a hope to be attained. Then on February 12, 1942, as found at page 539 of Hansard, Mr. Slaght put forward in the house a number of names of members of parliament from the government side who would be suitable to act as parliamentary secretaries. As a member of the opposition then I remember the surprise of the present Minister of Public Works and myself at being referred to by Mr. Slaght as potentially qualified parliamentary secretaries. That was in 1942. That was just a step in the direction, according to Mr. Slaght at that time. He said that parliamentary secretaryships or assistantships constituted a training, as I remember, that ultimately led to the attainment of cabinet rank.

Various other references have been made to the subject, and textbook writers have dealt with it at great length. I simply point out where hon. gentlemen may secure the fullest references. There is the late Mr. Dawson's work, "The Government of Canada." He referred to the subject at length at page 265 and following. I am going to content myself with merely giving one reference, in which he says:

> The case for parliamentary assistants is overwhelming. They make possible, through a greater consolidation of departments, a desirable reduction in the number of members in the cabinet; they allow the prime minister to give more equitable and wider representation to various provinces; and they furnish the finest training for young promising members who aspire to cabinet positions.

Provision for Parliamentary Secretaries

Then he refers to the words of Mr. King at the time he introduced the expenditure provided by the estimates with respect to this matter. Without being facetious in any way I must say that I am looking forward to hearing Mr. King's Boswell, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, give us that knowledge which is peculiarly his respecting this organization and the manner in which it functioned.

Appointments were made, the earliest being made in 1916. The government of Sir Robert Borden made provision for such appointments first under an order in council passed pursuant to the powers contained in the War Measures Act and later by act of parliament. It is interesting to know that among the first named in July, 1916 was Colonel Hugh Clarke, member of parliament for Bruce, who is still alive today and is an outstanding publicist and public spirited man whose devotion to Canada is recognized by all of us without regard to party. Mr. McCurdy was appointed parliamentary secretary for the department of militia and defence, later on resigning and being succeeded by Colonel Clarke who in turn was replaced by F. H. Keefer, M.P.

I am not going to place the orders in council on the record. It was provided, however, that the appointments would be limited to the continuance of the then war, and that appointments might be made from either house of parliament. I think I can do no better than refer to the remarks of Mr. Mackenzie King on this subject. He dealt at very great length with the establishment of the system of parliamentary assistants, and the debates in that connection are to be found in Hansard for April 20 and 21, 1943. The general purpose of the establishment of a system of parliamentary secretaries is to make parliament more effective, to make provision for assistance in many of the phases of a minister's life and thereby lighten the load of responsibility which rests on those who occupy the treasury benches.

Indeed, as one reads the remarks of Mr. Mackenzie King one is impressed by the experience he had as it is revealed in the course of his speech, as well as the speech made by the late Viscount Bennett when the subject came up in the house in 1936, concerning the responsibility that rests on those who are charged with office under our system of democracy.

Our purpose is at all times to improve and strengthen parliament as an institution; to make possible an opportunity for members in various parts of the country to learn of the operations of the departments and to participate in a specialized manner in doing those things which are allotted the departments under statute and as particularly interpreted and applied by the ministers. After all, the major question is to keep parliament in a position of not being unchanged and unchangeable.

I believe in this regard I have the approval of a very profound student of this subject, and I say that with respect, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. We maintain ancient traditions; we change to meet those changes that come about through the complexities of modern government. We change some of the forms, but maintain the mandate. We alter, to meet altering conditions, the techniques of parliament. We do not change the great and abiding things that have remained with us as our legacy from the generations past.

Some years ago changes were made when the rules committee was set up. I viewed those changes in the rules with some doubt before they were presented. After they were presented they represented a step forward and had the unanimous support of members from all sides of the house. I feel there are many other changes we might make, but I do not want to divert in that connection. As I visit other democratic institutions I find, for instance, that in the recording of the vote in India, in the representative parliament of that country, it takes less than a minute and a half whereas in this house it takes from 15 to 25 minutes. After all, I believe those changes are changes of the type that could be considered. They derogate nothing from the dignity of parliament, but they do bring about that saving of time which is necessary so that other matters of greater consequence may receive the fullest consideration.

Now, sir, one of the outstanding works on the subject of the relationship between ministers and parliamentary secretaries is that of the outstanding leader of the Labour party in the United Kingdom, Right Hon. Herbert Morrison. In his book "Government and Parliament", he sets forth on pages 59 and following something of the condition of affairs in the United Kingdom parliament. He says:

> Each departmental minister usually has a parliamentary secretary to assist him, but in some of the larger departments there may be two. Mostly, they are members of the House of Commons, or if not, then of the House of Lords. They must not, of course, be confused with the permanent secretary who is the senior civil servant in the department. Nowadays, they are selected by the prime minister in consultation with the minister concerned.

In the United Kingdom, while they are not appointed by the sovereign, the sovereign in every case is entitled to be informed of the proposed appointment although constitutionally he has no powers. The reason for the system of parliamentary secretaries, as viewed by Mr. Morrison, is that in the main they constitute a help to the ministers and also enable that training to be received that, in some cases, does bring about the attainment of further advance. Assistance is given thereby to the answering of questions and familiarization with public administration.

Those were some of the points mentioned by Mr. King when in 1943 he introduced the measure. He said that one of their purposes is to assist, in general, in any capacity in which the minister may deem advisable; to keep in touch with other members. But, he pointed out, appointment did not mean attachment for all time.

In 1943 Mr. King was asked why it was that a period of time had passed by, a period of seven years. He said he did not know why the appointments were not proceeded with, and he followed that by dealing in general with the difficulties which he, as prime minister, was experiencing, and which prime ministers in general experience. I think in general we are now carrying out what Mr. King had in mind in 1943 when he first introduced the system. A question was asked as to why he proceeded by an item in the estimates rather than a bill, and he gave his answer on April 20, 1943, as reported at page 2380, which was as follows:

> That causes me to say a word as to why I am asking the house to vote the necessary supply by an item in the estimates rather than to support a bill setting out more or less in detail the duties and functions of those who are to fill these positions.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the Prime Minister from what page he is reading?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is page 2380.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the unrevised.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Unrevised.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the Prime Minister intended no reflection by that observation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, I am surprised there would be any such suggestion, though I am referring to the unrevised issue. My friend should not read into the use of the word "unrevised" any meaning like that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was reading the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to tell my friend that he is able to read a lot, but he is not very good with physiognomy. Before this interlude I was reading what Mr. King said:

> I believe the experience of the past, particularly that at the time Sir Robert Borden made an effort to establish under-secretaryships, has shown that it is preferable in time of war, and for the year immediately following war, to regard these as more or less temporary positions. Undoubtedly the house will in the interval become accustomed to the practice of having parliamentary assistants to ministers. We will see the advantages and disadvantages of the practice, and I should hope that, as soon after the war is over as possible, a bill might be passed which would serve to perpetuate the system, and which would be so drafted as to make quite clear the functions and duties of those appointed to this office.

I see no reason why I should not say that, in doing what we are now about to do 14 years after the end of the war, we are doing that which Mr. King suggested would be done after the war.

As I see it, the system is one that will bring about a degree of apprenticeship for members who are chosen to occupy this high and important position, and will enable ministers to delegate some of the functions which my hon. friends opposite realize must necessarily be performed under the responsibility of ministers but actually under their direction can be delegated to others.

I am going to say no more than this. With the fortification of the experience of the past, with the determination expressed by Mr. King through the lips of the Governor General in 1936 that the legislation for a system of parliamentary secretaryships would be proceeded with at that session, with the confirmance of that determination somewhat abbreviated in the intervening years in 1943, which resulted in the translation of the determination into parliamentary assistantships, I hope the house will give support to this resolution and make possible the attainment of that further step in the evolution of the House of Commons which has been found to be effective in the mother of parliaments and also in this parliament.

Because of the fact that the system is to be embodied in statute form, there will be removed any suggestion that the acceptance of a position as parliamentary assistant is in any way a contravention of the Senate and House of Commons Act, and I hope that general support will be given to it. Indeed, my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate inferentially dealt with this fact when, in the last session, he referred to his feelings as to the result that might flow from appointments of members in the House of Commons to positions of emolument under the crown except through statutes. All of that fear and all the arguments he then advanced will be removed if parliament passes this bill which legalizes the appointment of parliamentary secretaries, thereby making a further advance in the assurance of the maintenance of the mandate which rests on parliament as a whole.

Provision for Parliamentary Secretaries

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the Prime Minister permit me to say that I did not call into question in any way the complete legality of the item with respect to parliamentary assistants.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee for any length of time, because this is a resolution which we propose to support. Indeed, it would be strange if we did not support it, because it merely restores the practice which was introduced by a government representing our party and which operated with reasonable success over some years while we were in office. When an item was put in the speech from the throne on this matter after there was a change of government, that item dealt not with the initiation of a practice but with the continuance of a practice which had been in existence for some years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To what item is the hon. gentleman referring?

Mr. Pearson: I mean when, in the speech from the throne, it was stated that parliamentary assistants would be appointed. As hon. members of the committee will recall, last year there was an item in the estimates. That apparently was the way in which the matter was to be dealt with at that time. That item was discussed at or near the end of the session, and no action was taken with regard to it. In that sense it was a useless vote, and we naturally wondered why the government did not proceed to implement the authority which had been given to it. Does the Prime Minister not understand "the sickening pangs of hope deferred"?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I had that for only six months.

Mr. Pearson: Or, as the scripture puts it, hope deferred maketh the heart sick. But perhaps his delay on this occasion was due to his realization that gratitude is only a lively sense of anticipation of favours to come. In any event, Mr. Chairman, another move has been made, this time not by an item in the estimates as was done last year but by legislation.

The Prime Minister had indicated why he thinks legislation is preferable as a procedure in this regard. If this resolution carries and if a bill is introduced which also carries, perhaps we on this side of the chamber—and the Prime Minister has already made reference to that matter, particularly with reference to myself—will be relieved of requests from hon. members opposite to keep on asking questions. Perhaps also the House of Commons will be relieved of some of the extravagantly laudatory speeches made on occasion by hon. members opposite who have been preaching for a call.

The Prime Minister anticipated, as he so often does, the point I would be likely to make about delay, by pointing out that there had been far longer delay in the past.

The Prime Minister mentioned that the history of this question of the appointment of assistants to ministers goes back, I think he said, to 1912. I have not gone back as far as that in my own researches but, of course, I do recall that during the first war there was a parliamentary assistant, though he was not called that, to Sir Robert Borden, and that Mr. King made an appointment of that character when he became Prime Minister in 1921. Then, in 1936, as the Prime Minister reminded us, there was a reference in the speech from the throne to legislation for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries, and the Prime Minister has already indicated that there was a long delay in carrying out that promise.

If the Prime Minister had read the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne in 1936—perhaps he did read it—he might have discovered the reason for this delay, because Mr. R. B. Bennett, as he then was, took exception to this proposal. He said he was in favour of the principle but that he was sure it would not work out well in practice and was obliged to conclude, reluctantly, that such appointments would not be wise. And perhaps the Prime Minister of that day, showing a consideration for the views of the leader of the opposition which is not always shown, might have decided not to proceed with the matter as long as Mr. Bennett was in the house.

In any event, no action was taken in 1936, as the Prime Minister has pointed out, but the question was reintroduced, as the hon. gentleman said, in 1943, during the war. At that time the spokesman for the official opposition Mr. MacNicol—I think he was the member for Toronto Davenport—expressed himself as wholly opposed to the idea of such appointments and to the item inserted in the estimates to enable the idea to be carried out. Indeed, he moved an amendment, seconded by our friend from Toronto Broadview, Mr. Church, whom some of us will always remember, to reduce the amount in the estimates to $1. Led at that time by Mr. Gordon Graydon, also a very good friend of many of us, the opposition voted in favour of reducing the item to $1.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where does the hon. gentleman see in the record that Mr. Graydon voted against it?

Mr. Pearson: It says that the amendment was moved by Mr. MacNicol and seconded by Mr. Church. These were two distinguished members of the opposition, so I assume that the party all voted together. There is nothing in the record which says they voted against it, but I am inferring that the opposition voted against the item which was carried only on division; I have no evidence to prove that all of them did.

Mr. MacNicol, in moving his amendment at that time, in his statement which appears on pages 2346 and 2347 of Hansard of 1943 may have given some indication of the difficulties which had delayed the prime minister of that day in putting this proposal into practice. In expressing surprise at the delay which had occurred Mr. MacNicol said that the prime minister had no doubt been "besieged and importuned by an enormous majority of some 67, a wholly unnecessary majority, and he went on to say, as reported on the next page:

> The late Sir Robert Borden had the same difficulty—
> The difficulty of selection.
> —when he was prime minister. He had a majority of forty-six. Such a large majority puts too much pressure on the prime minister. With a smaller majority the prime minister and his ministers would be able to do better work. At the present time they must be constantly harassed by those asking for political appointments or political preferment. That is the trouble with too great a majority.

That is what Mr. MacNicol said in attempting to explain what he thought must have been Mr. King's difficulties at that time. It was an explanation which had a bearing on the delay which took place in implementing the promise of 1936.

Well, the question was settled for the time being. Parliamentary assistants were appointed, but there was a good deal of discussion in the house from 1950 onward, as the Prime Minister will recall, as to the role, functions and value or otherwise of these parliamentary assistants as they were called at that time. On February 12, 1951, the present Minister of Justice worried about the role of the parliamentary assistant in the House of Commons and complained about the growing practice of parliamentary assistants speaking for the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On what page is that to be found?

Mr. Pearson: If the Prime Minister will look at page 267 of the Hansard of February 12, 1951 he will find it. I am paraphrasing, but fairly I think, what the worries of the present Minister of Justice were at that time. Those worries stemmed from what the Prime Minister thought—and I am not disagreeing with him—was the chief value of these appointments, namely that they allowed ministers to delegate some of their duties and authority.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not their authority, their responsibility.

Mr. Pearson: Their responsibility and their duties. Ministers cannot, of course, as privy councillors delegate their authority to anyone, The present Minister of Justice was worried also lest parliamentary assistants be tempted, as he thought they were being tempted, to make statements, particularly outside the house, which might infringe the principle of cabinet solidarity by which they were not bound, not being privy councillors, but by which they might appear to be bound in some sense since they were parliamentary assistants.

Furthermore, on later occasions, particularly in 1956, as will be found on page 3522 of Hansard of that year, Mr. George Drew objected, and objected strongly, as perhaps the Prime Minister may recall, to the growing practice of parliamentary assistants making statements in the House of Commons on behalf of the government. He felt that statements of any importance should be made in the house by ministers and not by parliamentary assistants. On one notable occasion he had, if I may put it this way, quite a run in with the then minister of agriculture with regard to this matter. Indeed, the Minister of Public Works, as he now is, also took up this very point on June 7, 1954 when he argued that parliamentary assistants should not try to take the place of ministers in piloting bills or resolutions through the House of Commons.

Thus, there has been a good deal of discussion on this matter over the years, and while, having had some experience in the operation of the practice of appointing parliamentary assistants, from my own experience, I think they can be a useful and valuable adjunct to the machinery of government, no doubt there is some substance to the misgivings which hon. members have from time to time raised in the House of Commons with regard to their position in the constitutional scheme of things being misunderstood.

I note that the government has decided to proceed by way of legislation rather than by way of placing an item in the estimates. There is something to be said for this method, which is one that has been followed in the past. It has also been departed from in the past. There is this disadvantage however, about procedure by way of legislation—it is more inflexible than the procedure of placing an item in the estimates. In the bill which will be submitted in due course a specific number of parliamentary secretaries is mentioned, and if the government in the future desires to alter or add to that number it could only do so by way of amendment to existing legislation. Also whereas when we were in office we referred to this group as parliamentary assistants the government has now decided to change the title to parliamentary secretaries. Possibly this is not a matter of any great importance but it is a change and perhaps in due course we will be told why that change was made.

In conclusion I need only say that when the bill is before us we will examine it and have something more to say about it. At the present time I can state on behalf of the members of this party that we support the resolution. We agree that the appointment of parliamentary assistants—parliamentary secretaries, sorry—will take some of the burden from the shoulders of ministers. Some of us over here have reason to appreciate how very heavy that burden is. If they can be relieved in a proper way of some share of that burden by the appointment of parliamentary secretaries that should add to the efficiency of government. In this house on whatever side we may sit, we are all interested in the efficiency of government and all are anxious to do what we can to increase it.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, when I view some of the anxious looking faces on the other side I am reminded of that ancient line, "To live by the will of one man is the cause of all our misery." Members of the C.C.F. group support the principle and purpose of this legislation. We, like the Leader of the Opposition, recognize the heavy burden imposed on senior members of the cabinet by their responsibilities under modern conditions and the need for the help of qualified persons to lighten that load, particularly while parliament is in session.

Before proceeding further I wish to thank the Prime Minister for his historical review of the situation from 1912 until this monumental day. I also enjoyed the summary of the history of parliamentary assistants and parliamentary secretaries to which we were treated by the Leader of the Opposition.

In my opinion when the bill is introduced, to be correctly named it should be entitled, "A bill for the relief of the suspense of certain Progressive Conservative members who have been waiting in the wings for over a year;" short title: "An act for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries."

We also endorse the government's decision to provide for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries by an act of parliament rather than continuing the former unsatisfactory, somewhat questionable and piecemeal procedure. When this legislation is passed parliamentary secretaries will be able to accept their remuneration in good conscience and without any fear of criticism in so far as the propriety of the remuneration is concerned inside the house or out.

This apparently unpretentious legislation is of far greater significance than its simple language would suggest. First of all I must say rarely does a prime minister have occasion to introduce legislation with such interesting implications as this. This must be important legislation because the Prime Minister is piloting it and he attends only to the more important things that happen in this parliament.

This legislation will receive the unanimous approval of all parties in this house and the whole-hearted and fervent support of the Prime Minister's followers although this will be followed later, when the legislation is proclaimed, by the keen disappointment and heart rending of a certain number of the Prime Minister's disciples. I witness the air of expectancy on the government benches, the shining eyes all fixed on the Prime Minister in adoration, supplication and in anticipation. I might say, not only shining eyes but in two cases, dewy eyes.

Soon the Prime Minister, the director of the nation's greatest stage, will have to choose the preferment from the many aspirants among his followers those who are to play supporting roles in the cast of that great drama, the Canadian vision, playing continuously to interested audiences since June 10, 1957.

I cannot resist commenting that with one lightning, legislative stroke the Prime Minister—not understood as yet by hon. members of this house or by the people of Canada, but they will see through it in the future—has clearly separated the ranks of those who believe in free enterprise into Progressive Conservatives and Liberals. With this measure the Prime Minister casts out the word "assistant" with its plebeian origin, history and meaning. Not for him to be surrounded by persons recognized as underlings and underworkers or known as assistants after the fashion of the smaller retail trades. Instead, the hon. gentleman introduced the word "secretary", derived from the Latin and of ancient usage, meaning according to the dictionary, "a scribe with learning, a confidential officer"; a word replete with Tory, Disraelian, and foreign office tradition and meaning.

In this bill the Prime Minister indicates his disapproval of the language and words used by the former prime minister, Mackenzie King, and his regard for the principles and practice of Disraeli, Balfour and Baldwin. This legislative bow to the great Conservatives, this renunciation of Liberal practice, will cause doubting Tory chests, far and wide, high and low, to breathe a sigh of relief knowing that in the use of the word "secretary" the party has returned to first principles and represents a brand of free enterprise distinct from the wavering and plebeian course of Liberalism. This measure demonstrates beyond the shadow of a doubt the deep and unbridgeable gulf between the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberal party.

I shall now turn from a philosophical approach to a microscopical appraisal of this legislation. Parliamentary secretaries can play an important part in parliament. According to my reading on the subject—and I have done a little reading on these questions over the years—they are required to be persons of intelligence, initiative and industry; to be sedate, sedulous and sagacious; to be pleasant, plausible and pleonastic. Their duties and responsibilities have been defined as a result of long experience in the parliament at Westminster.

Although I was a bit flustered at first when I thought the Prime Minister was going to steal my quotes, I confess I was pleased when I saw him refer to that very excellent volume, "Government in Parliament", written by the Right Hon. Herbert Morrison. I congratulate the Prime Minister for going to Labour Party authorities for his material. I wish to quote briefly from this volume because I trust that after the parliamentary secretaries have received their appointments and their anxiety is relieved, to that extent they will use the Hansard of this day as the Canadian encyclopedia for parliamentary secretaries. At page 66 of this book I find the following:

Life of a Parliamentary Secretary

The life of the parliamentary secretary can be interesting and fairly full, or, on the other hand, uninteresting and rather empty according to the attitude of the minister and, to some extent, the higher civil servants. If, departmentally, he is left out in the cold or given little or nothing to do it is, I think, cruel, foolish, and unfair.

We saw some of that in the session of 1957. I continue:

It is cruel because it will develop unhappiness and bitterness in the heart of the parliamentary secretary; it is foolish because the parliamentary secretary of today is a possible minister of the future and it is desirable for him to learn all he can, including the taking of responsibility; it is unfair because, apart from creating a feeling of frustration, it makes a fool of the parliamentary secretary when he hears through other channels of things he ought already to have known about, and is driven to tell inquiring M.P.'s that he is sorry but he knows nothing about it. Nor should it be forgotten that he has important duties to discharge with and for the minister from the treasury bench. Moreover, there is the important consideration that the proper employment of the parliamentary secretary can lighten the burden of the minister.

And we all agree with that. I think that has been mentioned by the Prime Minister and by the Leader of the Opposition. I have one more short quotation which is found at page 69, as follows:

There is another possible injustice to parliamentary secretaries, namely, leaving them out of office consultations and conferences. Obviously it is not always right or convenient to have them present, but systematically to leave them out means that they do not know the background of policy decisions. Moreover, even listening to their chief handling such meetings is an experience and an education which may help them if and when they come to shoulder bigger responsibilities. It was my general rule, therefore, to give instructions that the appropriate parliamentary secretary or secretaries should be present at such gatherings, and I would see to it that they had an opportunity of contributing their views, even though they were by no means always accepted. This not only assisted our deliberations and brought them into the inside of things, but helped them to learn the delicate art of the ministerial handling of civil servants. In the end I would give a decision, but, even though it was a decision that some did not want, everybody would go away happier for having had a share in the deliberations.

I think there is a lot of wisdom in that paragraph as written by the Right Hon. Herbert Morrison.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, in Great Britain parliamentary secretaries are extremely polite to members of the opposition. In that connection and to illustrate the competence of parliamentary secretaries in Great Britain I would quote a model of lucidity, detail and good diction from a question and answer, a question asked of the parliamentary secretary to the minister of works, which is equivalent to our Minister of Public Works in Canada. The question was:

Mr. Hector Hughes asked the parliamentary secretary to the ministry of works, as representing the lord president of the council, if he will instruct the department of scientific and industrial research to collate, with a view to publication, all scientific information obtained by Her Majesty's government from the recent flights round the earth of the Russian satellite and its appendage.

I do this for the benefit of the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton because I suspect he has been practising. The parliamentary secretary replied in this style, and I offer it to the members as a model:

In consultation with the Royal Society a "World Data Centre" has, following on the international geophysical year, already been established at the radio research station of the department of scientific and industrial research. One of the functions of the centre will be to maintain a bibliography of scientific publications relating to observations on the Russian satellites and associated rockets. This is within the executive function of the research council of the D.S.I.R.

I offer this as a model for budding parliamentary secretaries to study. I notice there has been press gallery comment with respect to parliamentary assistants, and on a number of occasions throughout the years I have seen comments made. Apparently they were not held in the greatest esteem by some members of the press gallery. I am going to quote one member, that very well-known member of the press gallery, John Bird, who writes about the birds:

> The parliamentary assistant among the birds of parliament hill, is the little red-capped chipping sparrow. Every year you may see him proclaiming his territory from the top of a light standard above the terrace. His song is a monotonous, unmusical trill, like an insect's. This he repeats over and over, with "damnable iteration", but small conviction. Like those other assistants, inside the "Big House", he tells his story by rote, with little hope of persuading anybody, since he so obviously lacks authority.

I quote this because I trust that the parliamentary secretaries to be appointed by this legislation will be a more valuable species, playing a more melodious and satisfactory tune.

I am getting along with my few brief remarks, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to say that we in this group want the answers to a number of questions about parliamentary secretaries. I trust the Prime Minister will give us the answers before the debate is concluded.

Will the parliamentary secretaries be given the status of junior ministers, as they are in Great Britain? What will be their standing in the order of precedence for which there is no provision at this time in Canada? I know that one of the presently budding parliamentary secretaries is rather a stickler for etiquette in the form of dress and precedence. Will they be required to wear a top hat and tails on important occasions?

I also want to know whether there is to be some definition of the duties and responsibilities of parliamentary secretaries. In that respect, I mean that members in the opposition are anxious to know clearly what are the duties and responsibilities of parliamentary secretaries and how far they are justified in trespassing on their time, and so on. Then, we want to know whether the appointments are made for a fixed period of time, for a session or for a parliament or in view of the Prime Minister's reference to the constitutional aspects of the question, are they appointed during good behaviour or at pleasure?

The Parliamentary Guide indicates that a number of potential parliamentary secretaries hold directorships. Three are directors of lumber companies; one is a director of an insurance company; one is a director of a telephone company; another is a director of a coal and coke company; another was national director of the Progressive-Conservative party in 1943-1949; and another rising star was president of the young Conservatives of Canada in 1956-1958.

We in this group, Mr. Chairman, insist on the British practice being followed when they receive their appointments. They must divest themselves of directorships in companies.

I notice also in the ranks of the potential parliamentary secretaries there are a good number of members of the legal profession who are also members of legal firms or partners in legal firms. These gentlemen are in a rather unusual position. They will be making some sacrifice in accepting the appointment—not all but some of them—as parliamentary secretaries, because we all know that no member of the Progressive Conservative party who is a parliamentary secretary would for one moment think of allowing any particular firm of which he is a member to accept any government business. We want to make our position perfectly clear in that respect, and what we expect.

I now come to another matter. As I understand it, strangely enough the parliamentary secretary will properly receive a larger remuneration than a minister without portfolio. How is that matter going to be adjusted in fairness to everyone concerned, and to comply with the procedure in this legislation.

I want to mention one other thing to which we in this group have given some thought. The Prime Minister has not followed the practice of the former government in appointing the government leader in the senate to the cabinet. We consider that that practice had considerable merit. I think I know the Prime Minister fairly well. He is a person who usually takes the middle course. I know that whenever I see him oscillating between two points of view he will stop at six o'clock. We have a recommendation to make in this respect. In view of the new policy of appointing parliamentary secretaries, would it be possible for him to take a middle course and appoint the government leader in the senate as a parliamentary secretary? In fact, he could be the chief parliamentary secretary, a sort of mother hen, as it were, for the newly hatched brood of parliamentary secretaries in the House of Commons. I just throw that out as a suggestion.

I have dealt with some matters that concern us with respect to these appointments and I trust the Prime Minister will be able to give answers to my questions before the debate concludes. However, on behalf of those parliamentary secretaries to come, those unknown faces opposite that will be known to us after the Easter recess, I presume, I wish to quote the comforting words used by the late Right Hon. Ellen Wilkinson who was a member of the labour cabinet in Great Britain, a very fine woman who unfortunately passed away in 1947. She had a great wealth of common sense, understanding of human nature and a great appreciation of parliamentary practice. When she was dealing on one occasion with the duties, responsibilities, hopes, aspirations and disappointments that follow in the wake of those who become known as parliamentary secretaries, Ellen Wilkinson suggested these beautiful lines from "Indian Love Lyrics" as a dirge for unhappy parliamentary secretaries:

> Less than the dust, beneath thy chariot wheel,
> Less than the rust, that never stained thy sword,
> Less than the trust thou hast in me, my lord,
> Even so, am I.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, after the very thorough review we have had of all the possibilities, philosophies and theoretical difficulties in connection with parliamentary secretaries I do not know that I have anything to contribute beyond what I originally intended to say and that is something which has not been covered by the previous two speakers. In effect I wish to offer the Prime Minister what one might call a short list of good prospects from an outside point of view. He will be aware that no member of parliament can make cutting, nasty or slighting references to other members of parliament so this means that all my remarks have to be on the right side of the borderline toward the good, the favourable and the sweet.

I should explain the origin of my making such suggestions by way of a contribution to the debate. When the house met for the first time last year and there were approximately 180 new members, many of them young, eager and full of the vision, I think all of us were aware that the whole house seemed to throb with energy and ambition. One of the great features of the House of Commons is that we are not confined within separate party channels. Fortunately we do mix and have our conversations in very many places. All of us get a finger on the pulse of what is going on in the other parties and since there are some 208 people in the government party we have some idea of what is going through their minds and what are the ambitions and feelings of these people.

I know that we are all peers here but as an ordinary member for parliament naturally I am not in touch with the ministers. Nonetheless perhaps I can bring something to this debate for the benefit of the Prime Minister. I do not feel I have the antenna that the Prime Minister perhaps had in getting the feelings of people throughout the country but I suggest that my antenna has been in operation feeling the moods and aspirations and in some sense getting a cross-section of the ability of the potential parliamentary secretaries.

Picking parliamentary secretaries or parliamentary assistants as they were called is all part of what has been going on for a long time in Canada, the organization and selection of the cabinet. The Prime Minister quoted Mr. Dawson who has written the standard work on the government of Canada. Normally a prime minister has to consider when forming a cabinet the factors of geography, region and province. They are very important. You cannot slight one part of the country. He has to look at religious considerations and to a certain extent, I suppose, at ethnic considerations so far as the other major group is concerned. Then, of course, there are always the political considerations. There are such things as shaky seats that perhaps a little bit of a push will help. All these factors come into play.

One of the things I most admired about the Prime Minister when he formed his cabinet was that he did not restrict himself to what many political scientists considered had become the pattern, namely that Quebec had to have five members of the cabinet, four of whom had to be French Canadian Catholics and one an English speaking Protestant; that Ontario had to have a certain number, and that the ministers of public works and justice had to come from Quebec. He more or less threw such considerations aside and left the field fairly wide open. I think anyone who will look at the cabinet as it was first appointed and as it is now will agree that is so. Traditionally, even in the days of the great mentor, Mackenzie King, parliamentary assistants also were usually appointed with these geographical factors in mind but the present Prime Minister again gave us an indication of his range of view and the fact that he would step outside standard procedures.

I have a list here of the 13 parliamentary assistants appointed two years ago and it is very interesting and flattering to me as a member from Ontario that eight of them were from the province of Ontario, true recognition in my opinion of high educational standards and a great amount of ability. There was one from Quebec, one from Alberta, one from New Brunswick, one from Nova Scotia, one from Manitoba, none from Prince Edward Island, none from British Columbia and none from Newfoundland. This seems to me to be an indication that the Prime Minister is going to pick his parliamentary secretaries to quite an extent on the basis of their ability and flair rather than on the basis of strict geographical considerations or other such factors.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to another point that arises with regard to parliamentary secretaries, a point about which the Minister of Justice spoke a few years ago, the question of cabinet solidarity. In choosing these parliamentary secretaries the Prime Minister and his colleagues will want to pick people who they feel will fit into cabinet solidarity.

There is also the question referred to by Mr. Morrison, Mr. Dawson, Mr. King and other authorities, the jealousy or fear that may develop when there is an incompetent or relatively incompetent minister and a young, thrusting, ambitious parliamentary secretary. These things indicate that there are hardly any rules that can be laid down as to the relationship between a minister and his parliamentary secretary but there is a need to have parliamentary secretaries who will be affable and who will to a certain extent know their places.

Another factor that is involved is one that the Prime Minister has already mentioned, and that is this question of "young". In parliamentary terms, just what is young? I checked the age of the parliamentary assistants who were appointed two years ago, and while I do not want to go into detail by going through the roster, there are two names on the list whom I have a hard time thinking of as young. I know they are young in spirit, but beyond that one has a hard time thinking of them as young. I know that the legislation will not likely set an age ceiling, but that is one of the factors that have to be considered. In my short list of suggestions, I have tended to concentrate on what I call young people.

One of the other factors, of course, that has not been mentioned at all in the selection of parliamentary secretaries, is that of introducing a woman into these points. Again, the Prime Minister has a very limited choice. He has taken the first step by introducing the first lady into the cabinet, and now he has an opportunity of establishing another first for his government by introducing the first lady parliamentary secretary. Of course, as I said, his choice is limited because there are only two. I would that he had more, but this is a factor that has to be considered.

The hon. member for Kootenay West mentioned another factor and that is parliamentary secretaries for the Senate, that is making some hon. member of that house a parliamentary secretary. I was interested in finding that this topic has already been up for discussion in the other place this session. It was introduced by a member of the opposition and the thought there should be several parliamentary secretaries in that place. However, that is something else.

There is another definite problem in connection with parliamentary secretaries. Last year I was rather shocked when the Prime Minister said he hoped the day would never come when being a member of parliament was a full-time job. A lot of us took that to mean that if we are finding being a member of parliament a full-time job, then there is something wrong with us. I would introduce the question, are these parliamentary secretaries to be full-time jobs or are they just to be sessional? Then, there is the point raised by the Hon. George Drew when he was leader of the opposition, and this is something about which we need information. He raised the point in connection with the rules of the house whether parliamentary assistants have the right to close debates on bills or whether they have the authority to speak for the minister on estimates. This is a point that should be settled.

One of the other aspects of this matter in which we are interested is the number of parliamentary secretaries to be appointed. I have heard a figure of 20 mentioned. If we get the figure up as high as 20, and add to that the number we now have in the cabinet, then you have a type of patronage in the hands of the Prime Minister which could be very powerful. I wonder whether or not that many parliamentary secretaries are necessary? There is a little book written by an independent member of parliament in Great Britain, W. J. Brown, entitled "Guide to Parliament". He said:

> In the second place, the scope of government patronage has widely increased of recent years. We have now to deal not only with the eighty paid posts of a ministerial kind, but a large additional number of governmental or quasi-governmental posts which are within the gift of government, which, in filling them, acts largely on the advice of the whips.

He goes on to say that this whole tendency of the ministry, and what attaches to it, is growing and is very dangerous to the point of view of the freedom of the individual member voting as he pleases in certain cases. We are very much aware of the fact that in this particular house very few of us always vote according to our whims, but we tend to follow the party line. There are considerations. For example, the hon. member for York-Scarborough has a bill coming up upon which I hope we will have a free vote, and that is the bill in connection with capital and corporal punishment. Are parliamentary assistants going to be tied to whatever happens to be the view of their minister or the view of the government? I would suggest that this might be one reason for keeping these appointments to a minimum.

One of the great arguments that Dawson makes in connection with parliamentary assistants is that they will be of assistance to some cabinet ministers. I do not think the Prime Minister touched on this. I quote:

> The greater use of members of the house as parliamentary assistants to certain ministers would do much to relieve the work of their seniors, and it would incidentally also make it easier to reduce the number of those in the cabinet proper.

Dawson goes on to make the point that really fisheries does not merit a ministry. I stand corrected, he does not say that fisheries does not merit a ministry but he says fisheries does not merit a post in the cabinet. He says the same thing of the Department of National Revenue and the Post Office Department. We do not know whether or not this is a part of the plan of the Prime Minister in introducing parliamentary secretaries, that is to reduce the size of the cabinet. However, we may suggest that is always an ideal, if it is possible, to keep the executive as small and tightly knit as possible. If this could be done through the introduction of more parliamentary assistants, that would be all to the good.

In the past, in so far as the ministry of fisheries has been concerned, if the minister came from the east coast then the parliamentary assistant came from the west coast. Personally, I wonder whether, with a department of that scope and size, it is necessary to have a parliamentary assistant. On the other hand, when I look at the ministry of transport, which has grown so large and has spread over so many fields, and is going to continue to grow, I wonder whether it would not be possible to have two or three parliamentary assistants for that department, one for air, one for sea and one for land communications. There are a number of departments which, I feel, fall into that category. For example, the Minister of Finance, according to one of the members of the press gallery, hired a young man at $10,000 a year in order to humanize the face the Minister of Finance presents to the public. We would suggest more parliamentary assistants—and again they will be on my short list here—could do a great deal to take some of the pressure off the Minister of Finance in this particular regard.

There is one other point we need to mention in connection with parliamentary assistants, especially when I look at some of them sitting over there, and that is that it is not always certain that you go on from parliamentary assistant to bigger things. We have one gentleman sitting in the house now, the hon. member for Ottawa West, who gave many years of service as a parliamentary assistant and who never achieved any higher post. I know the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was looked upon, when he became a parliamentary assistant, as a young man in a hurry. Unfortunately, the year 1957 came along and he had nowhere to go.

One of the great things that I envisage may come out of the appointment of these parliamentary secretaries is something that may be more clearly understood if I were to read some remarks by the Right Hon. Winston Churchill. This is what Mr. Churchill said in 1939:

> What is the use of sending members to the House of Commons who say just the popular thing of the moment and merely endeavour to give satisfaction to the government whips by cheering loudly every ministerial platitude, and by walking through the lobbies oblivious of the criticisms they hear. People talk about our parliamentary institutions and parliamentary democracy, but if these are to survive it will not be because the constituencies return tame, docile, subservient members, and try to stamp out every form of independent judgment.

The relevance of this particular extract to my remarks is this. I feel that any time you get 208 members together, even though they shelter under the banner of a leader that they revere and under a party of the same name, there is bound to be a breaking out of what one might call rump groups. I think we have looked forward to that in this particular house, the development of a rump group or a ginger group but we have not seen much ginger this session. The point I want to make at this particular time is this. Once these parliamentary secretaries are appointed, I think there will be the development of such a ginger group; that is one of the reasons why we should like to see this legislation pushed through immediately so that out of the bitter need for recognition, some of the disillusioned and disappointed and heartbroken will move to be that rump.

An hon. Member: Dreamer.

Mr. Fisher: One hon. member says "dreamer". I do not believe that for a minute. I know that in caucus these members speak out. I always remember one of my encounters as a listener in previous election campaigns with the Prime Minister who was in opposition at that time. He gave a magnificent performance on the trained seals that flipped on the Liberal backbenches. He said, "They tell us they speak in caucus, but we speak in the House of Commons of Canada where the people of Canada can hear us." I just want to go on from there to one of my members on the short list. I refer to the hon. member for Winnipeg South. During the last campaign in Springfield he was quoted in the Winnipeg Free Press as saying that the Liberals and the C.C.F.'s talk too much in the House of Commons, especially the C.C.F.'s, and that the Conservative members did their talking in caucus. This raises in my mind a picture of the Wednesday morning caucus being always open to the hon. member for Winnipeg South. I suggest that one of the consequences of appointing him a parliamentary secretary would be that he would be much diminished in the caucus so that there would be opportunities for some of the other hon. members to state their case at that particular time.

One of the parliamentary committees in England a number of years ago looked into this question of parliamentary secretaries and parliamentary private secretaries. I quote from the Journal of the Society of Clerks-at-the-Table in Empire Parliaments:

> The parliamentary private secretary has no recognized official position: he acts as the confidential friend and assistant of his minister and necessarily enjoys in very large measure the confidence not only of the minister personally, but of the minister's department and the officials in it. Thus he must necessarily be to some extent imbued with the "team spirit" which is part of the life blood of the ministry; thus, too, his independence as a member of the house must be liable to be impaired to a somewhat greater degree than that of an ordinary member of the party supporting the government in office for the time being, although it would be a great mistake to regard his relations with the government as being as close or intimate as in the case of even the least important under-secretary in the government.

In Great Britain these hybrid personal secretaries are different from the kind contemplated by the legislation the Prime Minister has brought in today. But the comparison that it brings up at the end indicates that the under-secretary, which is the British comparison, has an important position and is definitely related to the ministry. We have no indication of that matter in this particular legislation.

One of the things that Dawson comments on, relating to the former prime minister, Mackenzie King, is this and at page 268 he says:

> Yet in the same debate he made the astounding statement that an assistant would have to be persona grata not only to the minister (who is responsible for his actions) but also to the deputy minister (a civil servant), a pronouncement which seemed to justify the unflattering description by one member of the house that the assistants would be nothing more than "official coat-tail bearers" for the ministers.

That brings up the question of whether these parliamentary secretaries are going to have to be persona grata with the deputy ministers according to Mr. King's interpretation. From the minister's remarks I did not catch that he touched on that matter at all. I personally would suggest—and I am sure every other member of the house would go along with me in this regard—that he must be persona grata with the deputy ministers. The deputy minister has no choice in the matter. However, that is just a question.

If we look at this list of parliamentary assistants for two sessions ago we find that one of the names can be struck out unfortunately because of ill health. I refer to Mr. Angus R. MacDonald. The bearer of one of the positions has gone forward to become Minister of Defence Production, indicating that this is a worth-while channel after all, despite my previous strictures. We are left with these other names, as I said in my interpretation with the exception of two, of young, thrusting, ambitious fellows and, I would think, from looking at the names, men of real ability. What is going to happen to them if they are not appointed parliamentary secretaries this session? I think the inference throughout the whole country will be that they have failed.

Unfortunately we do not know whether or not they have failed. Perhaps it was not their failure at all but rather the minister's failure. I would therefore make a strong plea here to the Prime Minister that he consider on his short list the former parliamentary assistants. I should like to mention especially the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the hon. member for Carleton. I have had it said to me dozens of times by Conservative members in this house that the hon. member for Carleton deserves to be a cabinet minister. We know that he is kept extremely busy at the present time on the Ottawa scene in his relationship with the government. Perhaps a parliamentary secretaryship would be all that he could handle in lieu of those responsibilities. Perhaps that was the reason that the former parliamentary assistants—

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, to leave the chair in order to permit the house to consider private and public bills.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

PARAMOUNT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. J. R. Taylor (Vancouver-Burrard) moved the second reading of Bill S-12 to incorporate Paramount Life Insurance Company.

He said: As indicated, this is an act to incorporate Paramount Life Insurance Company. I hope that at this stage, Mr. Speaker, it will not be necessary to deal with the bill clause by clause. If the matter can be referred to a committee I can assure hon. members that I will have someone from Vancouver attend—one of the officers or officials of the company—in order to give detailed information about this bill. May I add that since the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba prohibit a life insurance company from doing business unless it holds a dominion licence, it therefore became essential that British Pacific Insurance Company, the provincial company, make application for dominion registration and dominion licence. This procedure entails the formation of a new company.

May I also add that the board of directors of the proposed company will include Mr. Harry J. Seed, Mr. J. M. Burnett, Mr. C. T. Ruddell and Mr. Esmond Lando, all Canadians and all of Vancouver. The new company's home office will be in Vancouver, and this is the first time that the home office of a dominion chartered and licensed life insurance company will be located in British Columbia. The owners have indicated their intention of maintaining a substantial investment in the province. Several hundred British Columbia people will find employment with the company as agents and office workers. This is, of course, in line with the present trend of business and gives heart to the statement: "Go West, young man, go west". With a head office in Vancouver, better service can be given to policy holders from that area and it is hoped that other life insurance companies will also construct buildings in the west in order to give similar service.

As I have indicated, if the matter can be referred to a committee for further consideration, I can assure all hon. members that an officer of the company will be present in Ottawa to give any further information required.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: As there are a number of divorce bills down for second reading, is it the pleasure of the house to take them in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill SD-135, for the relief of Jan Roberti.—Mr. McCleave.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-9, respecting the printing of negotiable instruments in the English and the French languages.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like, if possible, to deal with this bill.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is under the same disability as he was under last week or, at least, the last time this order was called, namely that the bill which he wishes to move is identical in purpose with another bill now standing on the order paper for resumed debate, and therefore I am not able to allow the hon. member to proceed with his motion.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESTRICTING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT TO CERTAIN OFFENCES

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-18 to amend the Criminal Code (Capital punishment).

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying last August when I was interrupted by six o'clock, I am sponsoring this bill this session. I must say a word about the activities of other hon. members in this party and in other parties who have spoken in support of this or of a similar bill in the past. I should like to commend them for fighting the good fight over the years on behalf of this proposition. I should like further to make some reference to the many individual citizens groups, civic councils, church and other organizations who have sponsored resolutions and made representations to me and to other members of this and former parliaments on the subject.

Last year in the course of my remarks on this bill I was dealing with the legal system as it exists today and the possibility of tendencies within that system which might prejudice the accused. I dealt with tendencies which might exist in the minds of judges and, at some length, with the tendencies which I knew by personal experience to exist in the minds of certain jurors. I dealt also at that time with the relative abilities of the crown prosecutor versus those of the defence counsel, pointing out that in many cases and, indeed in most cases, the crown prosecutor was a man far more experienced and able in his task than his counterpart engaged in the defence; also that first rate experienced murder defence lawyers did not normally, in spite of the very worthy activities of the legal aid societies, defend most of the murder cases before the courts of this country.

I dealt, further, with the facilities available to the crown and to the crown prosecutor to gather, assemble and document evidence against the accused with virtually unlimited funds and personnel at their disposal, and compared with this the dilemma of the defence lawyer, particularly when a poor man or a man of modest or no means was accused. How much can a defence lawyer afford to spend out of his own money in these circumstances, with a most unlikely prospect of a fee, if there is to be any at all.

I had meant to refer to some aspects of the present system, particularly with regard to the legal defence of insanity—a defence based on the M'Naghten rule, a precedent for determining insanity in law which has its origin in the year 1843. Several things may be said about this.

The first is that it seems to me that since 1843 few branches of medical science have made such progress as that of psychiatry. When we are dealing with the mind and diseases of the mind surely we must recognize that giant strides have been made since that time although unfortunately these strides are not reflected in the courts and their benefits are not available to juries.

The second difficulty with the law concerning insanity is the position that twelve good men find themselves in when dealing with medical evidence of a psychiatric nature. I wish to quote a statement from a review of a book entitled, "Star Wormwood", by Judge Curtis Bok, of the United States, in which he dealt at some length with this subject. The review states:

> Juries should not be required or expected to choose between contesting alienists attempting to apply the prevailing artificial and archaic legal test of insanity. The function of a trial is to find facts, or as Judge Bok puts it, "deeds", or what happened.

I was a member of two juries in which we were concerned with the M'Naghten rule, in both cases hearing eminent psychiatrists supporting different contentions. I confess that all of us were hard put to follow the thread of their arguments and the meanings of the continually changing terms which they applied to support their arguments. These are some of the things that make one wonder if our present processes of law can come to a sufficiently certain conclusion to justify the taking of a man's life.

I should like to quote another reason dealt with in the Canadian Bar Review of May, 1954, in which is contained the record of a symposium dealing with a motion concerning the abolition of capital punishment moved at that time in the name of the hon. member for Parkdale. This reference is from the remarks of one of the participants, Reverend John Kelly, then professor of philosophy at St. Michael's college, University of Toronto.

Concerning one of the aspects of the question I mentioned earlier this afternoon, he had this to say:

> The common good also demands that there should be no discrimination against one section of the population. Yet, if the former warden of Sing Sing, Lewis E. Lawes, is to be believed—and I see no reason to doubt his credibility—and if the condition he describes is general—and so far as I can discover there is no reason to suppose that it is not—the death penalty is predominantly and disproportionately imposed upon the poor and upon males. He escorted 150 people to their deaths—149 were men; 150 were poor. Since the enforcement of the death penalty seems incorrigibly selective, it seems to me that it is working against the common good.

I should like to make reference to the report of the joint committee of the House of Commons and the other place which dealt with capital punishment and reported in 1956 before I proceed to discuss the specific reasons why I am moving this bill. One of the recommendations of that joint committee was as follows:

> While the committee considered that capital punishment should be subjected to periodic review by parliament, it recommends that the death penalty should be retained as the mandatory punishment for the crime of murder.

It is in the spirit of that recommendation that I hope we will have a full and comprehensive discussion on this subject at this time representing, if possible, the feelings of all political parties here represented.

The basic arguments for the abolition of capital punishment are several in number and I should like to deal with them in turn, treating some of them rather more extensively than others.

The first suggestion is that it is not actually an effective deterrent. As I mentioned last year there are statistics that can be cited in support of both sides of this question. In the symposium statistics were referred to by Mr. G. Arthur Martin, Q.C., well-known defence counsel of the city of Toronto. With respect to the subject of the death penalty as a deterrent he had this to say:

> The state of Michigan, which abolished the death penalty about a hundred years ago, consistently has had a smaller number of murders for each hundred thousand population than its neighbouring states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, where it might safely be assumed that conditions of life were comparable. Michigan, however, has a slightly higher incidence of murder than, for instance, Massachusetts or Connecticut, which have retained the death penalty; perhaps the difference is due to cultural conditions, the nature of the population, and so on. On the other hand, Rhode Island, which has abolished the death penalty, has a lower incidence of murder than either of its neighbours, Connecticut or Massachusetts, where capital punishment is retained.

When one examines reports, recommendations and discussions on this question over the years one must come to the conclusion that a case has not been made that the death penalty is in fact a deterrent to murder.

The second major reason advanced for the abolition of capital punishment is that it is morally wrong. I should like to quote briefly from the report of the joint committee in this regard and leave it at that. At page 12 of the report we find the following:

> It was contended that it is morally wrong for the state, as well as an individual, to take human life. The punishment was said to be at variance not only with the principles of Christianity but also with the humanitarian and social developments which characterize the modern world. It was alleged to be an obsolete, barbarous punishment which has been successfully dispensed with in most civilized countries and that it is out of step with modern morality and thought. It was also claimed that the public is revolted by the barbarous nature of the punishment.

I now move on to what has always to my mind seemed the key aspect in the great debate that has ranged on the subject over the years. It is that capital punishment is essentially based on the motive and feeling of revenge. One of the most powerful and compelling statements on this subject appeared in the symposium to which I have made reference. The statement was made by Rabbi Fineberg of the city of Toronto who with respect to his reaction had this to say:

> Is any human being exempt from the desire to be appeased by a criminal's contorted agony? I remember the gratification I derived from the hanging of the Nazi war criminals. They had steeped their hands in the blood of six million Jews, the evil they visited on mankind was beyond reckoning—yet I recall my feelings with shame, as unworthy, and as more excusable only in degree than the cries of the mob milling about the gallows at Cornwall prison recently.

My submission is that the motive of revenge is reflected in the fact that capital punishment is not something of which we as Canadians can be very proud. Surely, if motivations for laws exist, in this instance we should be motivated by a desire to protect the public in the determination of our penalties rather than the indulgence of revenge.

On this point, Mr. Speaker, whenever the subject is raised in almost any group, ultimately those who are opposed to the abolition of capital punishment say, "Yes, but what do you mean? What would you do if you caught a man murdering your wife or raping and murdering your child?" My reply to this question, has been as honest as I could make it. It has been that I do not think I or any other man would be held responsible for what he might do when faced with that situation. It is interesting to note that if a man comes across somebody murdering his wife and takes action to prevent that person from murdering his wife I doubt whether the records of the trials in this country or in any other country will show many if any convictions under such a set of circumstances. This kind of question, Mr. Speaker, I submit proves the point. I concede freely that I am in no condition to govern my actions, emotionally or in any other way, in such a position and yet those same people want to reflect my feelings at that time in the laws of our land concerning capital punishment.

I recall a conversation which is pretty typical of most people's thinking on this matter, a conversation in which we discussed the academic aspects of the arguments pro and con concerning capital punishment. My friend was in large measure in agreement with me. It happened that on that particular day and at a particular point during our conversation we turned on the news. The shocking news of the rape and murder of a small child was given on the television screen. It was one of those coincidences that seemed to bring into focus our argument. At that time the young daughter of this friend of mine, about the same age as the child who had been murdered, came into the room and my friend who moments before had conceded, on the basis of the rational and calm appraisal of the situation, my argument, changed his mind completely on the basis of association of ideas, I suggest. I have not discussed the matter with him since. I hope he is allowing his calm and serene judgment to govern in this matter, as I think we should with respect to all our laws and certainly with one as important as this.

There is another argument advanced with respect to the abolition of capital punishment and it has to do with the question of morbidity, if there is such a word; that capital punishment has its morbid aspects. I quote from the report in this regard:

> It was contended that capital punishment is not only unjust to the murderer and ineffective as a deterrent, but is brutalizing in that it has a bad effect, not only upon prisoners and staff of the institutions where it takes place, but on society at large. It was said that the disproportionate publicity which surrounds a murder trial and an execution reflects the morbid instincts aroused by the death penalty. The shocking scenes which have accompanied some executions were cited in proof of these assertions as to the degenerative influence of capital punishment.

There is a reference in the symposium on this very point, in this connection again by Mr. G. Arthur Martin, Q.C. He had this to say:

> I suggest to you, if we are honest with ourselves, that we, as individuals, are in fact ashamed of the retention of capital punishment as part of our penal system. If this is not so, why is the identity of the executioner concealed? Why should his name have to be kept secret so that he will not be shunned by his neighbours? Why is the execution of the death penalty shrouded in secrecy, if it is a deterrent even when secretly carried out?

> Actually, if it is such an effective deterrent as its proponents would have us believe, everybody should be encouraged to witness executions—perhaps they should be compelled to witness them—so that they will see to what ends their crimes will lead them if they do not restrain their impulses.

Let me move on to the next and perhaps the most obvious factor in this whole argument, namely the risk of error. The risk of error I submit on the basis of what I have said earlier in this discussion can create the doubts on those lines raised in the public mind by the recent revelations, later denied, in connection with the Coffin case. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that two members of the Conservative party in this house were on opposite sides of the legal battle which took place in the Coffin case. Something that has always disturbed me about the Coffin case is the fact that at one point the accused had escaped. He was as free a man as one can be when one is a fugitive from justice; but at least he was not in jail. The submission of the defence in that trial, if I recall it correctly, was that when he was approached and found in fact by the lawyer he, in the process of being convinced to return to trial was influenced, I am sure, by the fact that if he was innocent, as he knew in his heart he was, under our system of justice he simply would not be found guilty. I do not know what force in law and in the courts this argument might have; obviously, it was not too powerful an argument.

That left very serious doubts in my mind and in the minds of many of my fellow Canadians. There are other examples. One sent to me by one of the many people who wrote to me following the introduction of this bill earlier this year concerned a prisoner in the United States named James Foster who was under sentence of death for murder. His execution was stayed twice and then convict Charles Rothschild confessed to the killing. I have found myself wondering over the years how many James Fosters in Canada, the United States and other countries have had their time run out on them and how many Charles Rothschilds did not come forward.

I submit that we should remove every possible doubt of the consequences of an error in the trial, that we owe it to society to replace the death penalty with life imprisonment that really means life imprisonment so that in the case of new facts coming to light after the trial has taken place the convicted individual will still be around to be reprieved. I submit that the substitution of life imprisonment that really means life imprisonment for the mandatory sentence of hanging would accomplish the protection of society, as mentioned earlier, and also the protection of the accused.

To continue with the committee report, there is the question of the adverse effect upon the administration of justice, but in this regard there is a reverse effect in the sense that many jurors who have difficulty in coming to grips with the facts in the case and with a quite natural repugnance to being a party to a hanging will reduce a charge of murder to manslaughter. I think any fair person examining the trial records in this country will agree that there have been such cases. As I have submitted, we should be concerned with the protection of society but certainly in this case the result is the reverse in that the charge is reduced in the case of murderers who should be put away for the protection of society and to prevent any future recurrence because of the qualms or squeamishness of jurors, and the sentences of these people are also reduced when they are convicted of manslaughter.

Another reason advanced by the committee has to do with prison administration, and in this regard I should like to quote the report. At page 12 there is the following:

> Opponents of the death penalty alleged that the incarceration of all convicted murderers will pose no special problems for prison administration and argued that, as a class, murderers have a superior record to other types of prisoners. Some also urged that, even if the housing of all convicted murderers presented difficulties, it would be improper to permit mere administrative considerations to stand in the way of abolition which was justified on broad grounds of public policy.

These are the conventional reasons advanced on which I and a growing number of Canadians who favour the abolition of the death penalty base our case. My specific purpose in introducing this bill is to change the Criminal Code in such a way that both the protection of society and protection of the accused are preserved.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I know that one should not direct a question to the Speaker but, sir, have you ever seen a man hanged? I have. I saw a young man hanged about 20 years ago because the attorney general of British Columbia told me I did not know anything about abolition or non-abolition of capital punishment unless I had seen a man put to death. It is because of that experience that I say that anyone who has seen the state put a person to death could not help but make a full and comprehensive study of all matters pertaining to the retention or abolition of the death sentence. I have tried to do that over the years, and as a member of the joint committee of the senate and House of Commons on capital and corporal punishment I obtained a great deal of information.

I fully realize that the report of the joint committee contained a recommendation that capital punishment be retained but I would draw to the attention of members of the house the fact that so far as the decision of the committee was concerned there was only a difference of three in the vote for retention or abolition, that it was the almost unanimous view of the committee that eventually the death penalty would be abolished and for that reason the committee recommended a review every few years by the house or a committee. It was generally agreed that the only reason why some voted for retention was that they did not think the people of the country were ready yet for abolition.

The evidence is clear, Mr. Speaker. I say it is clear not only from other sources but from the two million words of evidence submitted to the joint committee over a period of three years. You can examine the records of all the countries of the world and the states of the United States and you will find that there is no broad or general differentiation in the rate of homicide between abolitionist or non-abolitionist states or countries.

To those who say that there is protection for police forces in having capital punishment I would point out that prior to 1954 no study had been made of that question whatsoever. The first study ever undertaken in the world so far as we know was undertaken in 1954 by Professor Sellin, one of the world's outstanding penologists. In that year letters were sent to the chiefs of police in all cities of the United States with a population of more than 10,000 asking for information with regard to murders of policemen since the year 1919. When the reports were received they were analysed very carefully and Professor Sellin advised the committee by letter that an analysis of all replies showed there was no justification for the statement that capital punishment was a deterrent to the murder of law enforcement officers.

So, both from the angle of a deterrent and protection, I say that from all the studies of the question I have made there can be no basis for the retention of capital punishment, unless it is admitted that it is retained strictly on the basis of retribution or revenge.

I know that because my name is closely linked with the stand I take in connection with the abolition of capital punishment. Every time there is a vicious, brutal murder, especially a sex murder, anywhere in Canada, I receive some letters. Sometimes I get quite a few. Almost every one of them says exactly what was pointed out by the mover of this bill, suppose it had been your wife or your mother or your daughter? The point is that the very position these people take is conclusive evidence of the failure of their own argument because the murder took place. We have capital punishment, and we have always had capital punishment in Canada.

The records are clear that in most instances when a person kills he does so from an emotion, from a fear, from an attempt to escape from passions; that is something that having capital punishment on the books is not going to deter. I am going to conclude my remarks because my views on this subject are very well known. I did want to say these few words and to add my hope that the endeavours that have been made in the past, together with this new endeavour by the mover of this bill, will have some effect and we will get what start we can upon this modern approach to this very important phase of penology. I hope the day is not too far away when this country will join the majority of other countries in the western world in which this ancient system of revenge has been abolished and where society is protected through the medium of a prison and not through the exercise by the state of a right which the state says is illegal and immoral if followed by the individual.

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): It is indeed a pleasure to speak in support of the position taken by the two hon. members who have preceded me in connection with the deterrent value of capital punishment. A little over a hundred years ago capital punishment was the penalty for some 280 offences in England. When it was sought to abolish this penalty there was great agitation amongst the people who feared that might lead to an increase in crime and petty thievery because, at that time, hanging was the punishment for stealing even a sheep. Since that time England has taken the lead and capital punishment has been completely abolished there. I feel it is high time we followed that example.

There is one other point I should like to mention this afternoon. Having had the experience of defending people accused of murder, as I know many hon. members have had the same experience, I can truthfully say that I believe too much depends upon the ability of the lawyer as to whether or not the man is going to be hanged. The life of a man is placed on too precarious a pedestal because so much depends on the feelings of the jury. I feel it is high time that this government took the initiative by following the course advocated in this bill. I am sure that the abolition of capital punishment has the approval of every hon. member in this house.

Certainly the points brought out by both hon. members concerning the immorality of capital punishment should give each and every one of us food for thought. I am often reminded, Mr. Speaker, of the words of Marshall Hall who made it very clear that, according to the principles of British justice, it is better for a thousand guilty men to go free than for one innocent man to be hanged. How often have we had occasion to think about the Coffin case to which reference was made this afternoon? How often do we think that at times there must be mistakes? It is impossible for lawyers and juries to go on in an infallible manner. I can recall sitting in this house in the opposition on the night that Coffin was to hang. I wanted to rise and ask the cabinet of that day to reconsider the matter because they only had about three hours in which to do so. However, the rules of the house prevented that.

I can recall the feelings I had at that time, and thinking that here was an example of a man who was probably going to the gallows for a crime he did not commit. I can recall thinking that the only means of removing this fear from the minds of Canadians was to abolish capital punishment, once and for all. I think it has been clearly demonstrated here his afternoon that as a deterrent to crime capital punishment does not serve a useful purpose. Recent judicial decisions in the United States are bringing out very clearly the mental aspects that surround these crimes of homicide. The old rule in the M'Naghten case no longer applies in the courts in some states of the United States. They are taking into account the various aspects of mental illness, aspects which have only become known in recent years.

There is one more reason why capital punishment should be abolished, and I feel I would be very grateful indeed if this government were to take the initiative by introducing the necessary measure into this house to abolish capital punishment.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, mention has been made in this debate of the joint committee which was formed in 1953 to study the whole problem of capital punishment. I was a member of that committee for a short time toward the end of the sittings. The committee sat for almost three years and they heard witnesses from all spheres of life, lawyers, doctors, psychiatrists, police officers and prison officials. All the arguments were put forward. I think, within my experience, it was one of the most soul-searching committees I have ever seen functioning. Everybody was so anxious to form an honest opinion on the subject.

There were some hon. members on the committee who argued that the retention of capital punishment was a deterrent and that it was a just punishment for murder; that it indicated society's revulsion to the greatest of all crimes, the taking of life. There was also a basic belief that public opinion was substantially in favour of capital punishment. I think, to a certain extent, that was true. Actually, public opinion is changing a great deal and perhaps the committee had something to do with that change. Gallup polls have been taken on this subject since 1943. In 1943, 73 per cent of the people polled believed that capital punishment should be retained; in 1953 that figure had only dropped to 71 per cent. Seventy-one per cent said it should be retained and 22 per cent said it should be abolished and seven per cent were undecided. But by 1958 there had been a change in public opinion. Fifty-two per cent were for the retention of capital punishment; 33 per cent were for its abolition; and 15 per cent were undecided. As a member of that committee, I think the one factor that influenced my thinking was the claim made by responsible and authoritative people that it was a deterrent to murder. In the final report brought out by the committee on the retention or abolition of capital punishment this statement was made:

> The committee was impressed by the virtually unanimous support of the death penalty by provincial attorneys and other provincial law officers and provincial police officers who had responsibility for and firsthand experience in law enforcement in Canadian provinces. These officials without exception testified that capital punishment was an effective deterrent to murder. They considered that it was particularly effective in deterring the professional criminals from carrying weapons and committing crimes of violence. They contended in addition that abolition of capital punishment would endanger police because a criminal seeking to avoid arrest would have much less fear of the consequences of the use of firearms or violence if capital punishment were abolished.

On the basis of this summary and after much soul searching on my part, I was one of those on the committee who voted for the retention of capital punishment. But my soul searching did not stop there. Since 1956 I have done a great deal of studying on the subject. I have read the opinions of people who are far more qualified than am I to form opinions and I have interviewed many experts including judges, lawyers, prison authorities, social and welfare workers and police reporters, and I must confess that I have changed my mind with regard to capital punishment. Although I still believe that it is a deterrent, I no longer feel that that fact overrides more important factors against capital punishment. In listing some of these factors, may I mention the following.

First there is the fact that a considerable portion of murders are undoubtedly committed in sudden and uncontrollable passions and I do not believe that the thought of death in any way would stop those murders. I believe the most effective deterrent would be, as the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) said, life-long imprisonment, really life imprisonment; and even more important, the sure knowledge that they will be detected and apprehended and that they face life imprisonment which to me seems to be a much more severe punishment than the painless form of death.

There is no doubt about the fact that many murderers must be mentally ill and emotionally irresponsible. I do not believe that any normal, sane, law-abiding people should be obliged to assume the responsibility of meting out death to such people. I have had many judges tell me that murder juries are hesitating to acknowledge that the crime is murder and the result is that although the evidence is patently against the accused, juries with the slightest shadow of doubt will bend over backwards and in many cases guilty persons go absolutely free. I think this is another argument against capital punishment.

The one strongest argument undoubtedly is that it is morally wrong for a man to take the life of another man, or for the state to take the life of a man. Like most hon. members in this house I am sure that I have received hundreds of briefs and representations from all kinds of organizations—including church organizations and welfare organizations—and individuals pointing out that capital punishment is not only an obsolete and barbarous punishment but that it is un-Christian and out of step with modern morality. One brief from the Quakers asserted that the wide publicity given to murders tends to make the thought of murder familiar and, to morbid minds, even attractive.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the basic facts which have influenced my thinking with regard to capital punishment. The strongest argument for its retention is that it may be a deterrent to further murders. But I believe the arguments for its abolition are even stronger; and the strongest of all, to my mind, is that undoubtedly it is morally wrong to take a life that God has created.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, perhaps on this occasion I can complete a ten-second speech before Your Honour looks at the clock and finds that is now six o'clock. Like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), I had occasion to see a hanging carried out in a Canadian penitentiary a good many years ago. Despite the grisly solemnity of that ceremony—for it is difficult to take human life under any circumstances in anything that can be called a proper setting—it still does not change my opinion that capital punishment is a necessary ingredient in our make-up of law and order.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

THE MINISTRY

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Diefenbaker—Mr. Rea in the chair.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers, to provide for the payment of salaries to them at the rate of $4,000 per annum out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to authorize the re-imbursement to them of reasonable expenses incurred by them in the discharge of their duties.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few minutes left, and one of the points I wanted to make in connection with this subject is occasioned by the fact that the Prime Minister has made remarks in this house to the effect that he does not care for lobbies, and I would ask him to ignore the lobby in the form of the telegram he received on the night of the last election from a certain member who was a parliamentary assistant, some of whose followers I understand comported a lobby in the form of a telegram to the Prime Minister. I hope he will ignore their indiscretion.

I must apologize for failing to mention accurately the former parliamentary assistant, the hon. member for Victoria. We would hesitate to make any short list in connection with anyone in the province of Quebec, but I do feel that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, who played such a powerful role in the settlement of the C.B.C. dispute, must certainly be considered and, from the great respect which Liberal members of this house seem to have for the hon. member for Bellechasse, I imagine that he, too, would be worth considering.

One of the points one finds so intriguing is in connection with Prince Edward Island. I, as a teacher, would like to see a fellow teacher, the hon. member from Queens given an opportunity, but we are up against the fact that this is a small province. In so far as the province of Ontario is concerned, the Prime Minister has two former provincial cabinet ministers available for selection. They foresook the provincial field for higher things in order to support the party, and one would imagine that they will receive serious consideration.

As one moves west, one encounters the hon. member for Athabasca who, as a former police officer, would make a real contribution as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice. The former member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was retired from the R.C.M.P. under treasury board minute 527514 dated February 6, 1958 which authorized his retirement from the service under section 97, paragraph (d) subsection 2, which states that one may be compulsorily retired from the force in order "to promote economy and efficiency". We feel he would undoubtedly do well in this new position which would require the very same things.

I should hate to finish without mentioning how pleased we are to see the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska back with us after his illness. He certainly, because of his very forthright nature should be one of those to be considered. The final point I want to make in connection with personnel touches on two members who, from the back benches, have given touching demonstrations of feeling and devotion for members of the cabinet and other leading Conservatives. I refer especially to the hon. member for Victoria, who in this house on more than one occasion has expressed an emotion for his chief which I think deserves a higher calling. The other hon. member I would refer to is the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who must surely deserve something because of the devotion he holds for you, Mr. Chairman, hon. member for Longueil.

Some few of my remarks are undoubtedly not going to be taken seriously but I would suggest that in them there are points which are worthy of consideration. Certainly we in this group are prepared to push this thing through tonight so that the government need no longer be delayed after the Easter recess. There is only one other point, and this was brought to my attention by a couple of Conservative members during the recess for the evening meal. This was to the following effect: how could they possibly vote for the present resolution since they were, perhaps, involved self-interestedly in a matter concerning the expenditure of public money. I should just like to assure them that if they feel they cannot vote for this resolution they have an undertaking both from the official opposition and from this group that we will put it through.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to yield to the Prime Minister's invitation to scoop my own book by saying anything about what I may know about what Mr. King thought, because I hope that every hon. member some two or three years hence will buy the book.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How long do we have to wait?

Mr. Pickersgill: It depends on how competently the business of this parliament is done, and how much leisure I can get to work on the book. There is really only one observation I want to make about this resolution and it is one which ought to receive consideration from two angles. One is, of course, the protection of the public purse. The other—and this is a more important angle still—is the protection of the independence of parliament.

All hon. members will recall that the first United Kingdom prime minister who was known by the title of prime minister—which was at that time considered to be not a title of honour but a term of opprobrium—said, or is supposed to have said, that every man has his price. I would be the last to hold any such view, and my experience in Ottawa goes back over 20 years. I believe that if the generality of the population had the same high standards of conduct as most public men have, the public would not be the poorer for it. There is, none the less, a danger. We are all human. We are all fallible and we are all subject to many temptations. It may be that very often the temptation of place is more important than the temptation of remuneration, but it is a very healthy rule that no member of parliament and certainly no member of this place should accept any emolument of any kind under the crown unless parliament itself has so decided.

There has, I think, been a regrettable, indeed, a deplorable tendency in some other legislatures—I will not go beyond that—to proliferate offices under the crown in some cases almost to the point where almost half the membership is in receipt of something more than the indemnity of a member. I think that is a very unhealthy situation. I am a practical politician—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —or at least I think I am, and I am no great believer in that kind of independent member who gets up and tries to make a good fellow of himself in the eyes of his constituents by a display of independence of his party simply for the sake of getting his name in the newspapers. There have not been very many men of this sort in our public life and I think, myself, that if we are going to have a party system and relatively stable government and some resistance to pressures of every kind that come upon every parliament, that in the main the place where the hon. member for Winnipeg South is supposed to have said that independence should be shown is the most effective place to show it.

What I do think is very important is that no matter who is in office and no matter what the government may be there should be in the ranks of the supporters of that government enough people who are both genuinely independent and capable of remaining independent. It seems to me that independence and party loyalty are not in the least incompatible and that it is very important to preserve both.

The Prime Minister will recall that Sir John A. Macdonald is supposed to have said that he had no use for parliamentary supporters who were willing to support him only when he was right. The men he liked were those who would support him when he was wrong. I suspect that the Prime Minister will be as much in need of that kind of support as any other leader we have had. The point I am trying to make is that there should not be slavish support nor the kind that comes from any hopes or expectations of profit, advantage or place. For that reason I sincerely hope that the highly salutary provision that was put in the estimates in 1943 will be included in the bill; that is to say that there should be an upper limit to the number of parliamentary secretaries who may be appointed.

I recognize that there is quite a strong argument that may be advanced to the effect that the government may not know from time to time how many of these secretaries it is desirable to have. However, I suggest that recent experiences in this parliament in this very session illustrate what a salutary thing it is for a government to have to come back to parliament and ask for any additional expenditures. I believe hon. members will understand to what I am referring without my elaborating further.

It seems to me the government should take the responsibility for deciding that any reasonable number of these parliamentary secretaries should be appointed and no more, and I believe 14 would be quite enough. I do not know what the Prime Minister's views are about whether any of these could be appointed in the other place. I do not know if the legislation envisages that. That is, of course, the practice in the United Kingdom. I confess that my own feeling is they are needed more in this house.

There are certain portfolios that are very onerous. All ministers are equal, we recognize, but some are more equal than others. Some of those who are perhaps a little less equal than others I believe scarcely need the support of a parliamentary secretary. That is really the only point I wanted to make about this proposed legislation. I sincerely hope this parliament will not pass legislation that does not place an upper limit on the number of parliamentary secretaries that may be appointed.

So that I will not be tempted to inflict any more observations on the house when we reach second reading of the bill, perhaps I should add that there is one member of the government—or rather one portfolio; I should not say one member because I would not like to reflect in any way upon the hon. lady—where I can say from personal experience a parliamentary secretary is badly needed because of the nature of the work in that department, and that is the one I occupied when I left the government. Equally, I would say with all due respect to the hon. member for Labelle, that in the portfolio which he holds and which is the one I held when I first went into the government, I would think a parliamentary secretary would be redundant.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I recall when almost a year ago the estimates were taken up in this chamber and we were asked to vote a certain supply of money to pay for parliamentary secretaries a number of us did a little mathematical calculation and came to the realization that the amount asked for was over and above the sum that could reasonably be expected to be expended on the part of the government because as I recall it a number of months of the year had already elapsed at that time. We moved an amendment on that occasion to reduce the estimate for parliamentary secretaries so that payments could be made only for the remaining months of the fiscal year. However, the Conservative backbenchers were more loyal to their political party than to their own logic and they helped to defeat the amendment. The fiscal year will have run out on March 31 and none of this money will have been expended. This illustrates that on some occasions the backbenchers of the government are ridiculous in their loyalty to their party which loyalty exceeds even their loyalty to their own sense of logic.

The question before us at this time is whether or not ministers need parliamentary secretaries. Looking at the condition in which our country finds itself we have to admit that they surely need help. They are all in difficulty. The government has mismanaged affairs and members of the cabinet are so incapable that members of the opposition are unable to say anything but that the cabinet ministers who now occupy the front benches of the government do indeed need assistance.

Agriculture is in a mess and it is obvious that the Minister of Agriculture needs some help. I should like to recommend some agriculturists from British Columbia to be his assistants. We have a few of them from that province on the government side of the house. There is the hon. member for Cariboo, a lifelong farmer and a good one at that. There is also the hon. member for Fraser Valley, a former superintendent of experimental farms who certainly ought to know agriculture. I regret that the Prime Minister this afternoon referred to these secretaries as new blood and young blood and therefore the hon. members for Cariboo and Fraser Valley obviously cannot be considered.

I was interested in a comment made by the hon. member for Port Arthur who indicated that not one parliamentary assistant in the previous group appointed by this administration was from the province of British Columbia. I feel the mere fact that hon. members from British Columbia regardless of political affiliation have shown that they have more on the ball than hon. members from other provinces should not be held against that province in the appointment of these officials. The fact that we now have three members from that province in the government should not preclude British Columbia having a fair share of the proposed parliamentary secretaries.

There is on the government side of the house an hon. member from British Columbia who has abilities that are unique and that probably exceed those of most hon. members in the government. I am referring, of course, to the hon. member for Vancouver South. It is rather an unlucky accident for him that the Prime Minister chose to select as members of the government that obviously able gentleman, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra; his party leadership opponent, the able hon. member for Kamloops; and the equally able lifelong friend of the Prime Minister, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. However, we feel that the hon. member for Vancouver South ought not to be discriminated against simply because British Columbia already has three members in the government. We hope that the honesty, forthrightness, experience and intelligence of the hon. member for Vancouver South is going to be recognized.

The hon. member for Kootenay West raised the problem of a parliamentary secretary receiving more in income than a minister without portfolio. I would like to recommend one thing. I realize that these parliamentary secretaries are not going to be appointed, or I do not think they will be appointed, until there has been a shake-up in the ranks of the government. If this is a problem, I would like to suggest that the hon. member for Greenwood, the Minister without Portfolio, could without any warning whatsoever move over and occupy almost any one of the portfolios of the government and operate it with much greater efficiency than it is being operated at the present time. I know the hon. member for Greenwood does not want a so-called promotion to the other place and we in our group, having observed his actions over a period of many long years, have come to admire some of his abilities and we rather regret to see him sitting on the sidelines as an adviser to a lot of young fry who, I am sure, do not want any advice and who are unwilling to accept his advice. We know he is a Tory of the old school and, I would rather have a Tory of the old school than any of those wishy-washy young, neither fish nor fowl to my left. I would highly recommend that the hon. member for Greenwood, at the time of the reshuffle of the government and at the time of the appointment of the parliamentary secretaries be given the honour, the respect and the acknowledgment that he deserves in a Conservative government.

The opposition members in this house are very concerned as to who is going to be appointed as parliamentary secretaries. We have had some experience in the past, in the days of the parliamentary assistants, and we rather liked it lately when we did not have to have a second-rate minister offering us explanations on anything that we might ask a department. We had direct contact with the minister. We hope that the new parliamentary secretaries who are to be appointed are not going to be simply a buffer agent on behalf of the minister. We hope that they will give us the same courteous service as we have received in recent months whenever we have had occasion to call upon any ministers of the government.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Diefenbaker thereupon moved to introduce Bill C-37, to provide for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FREIGHT RATES

MEASURE RESPECTING REDUCTION OF CLASS AND COMMODITY RATES

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to direct the board of transport commissioners to require by order the reduction of class and commodity freight rates (other than competitive rates) charged by carriers subject to the order of the board dated November 17th, 1958, and to authorize payments to reimburse carriers for the resulting reduction of their revenues up to an aggregate amount of twenty million dollars.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sevigny in the chair.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, by its decision dated November 17 last the board of transport commissioners, pursuant to the application of the railway association of Canada and certain of the member companies, authorized a general increase of 17 per cent in the class and commodity rates which are non-competitive, including rates by joint rail-water routes which are differentially related to the rail rates, accessorial services, and specific increases of 22 cents per ton on coal and coke. No increases were authorized for statutory rates on grain and grain products, import and export related rates, and international rates between the United States and Canada; nor did the board authorize increases in competitive rates, in as much as the making of such rates is within the discretion of the railways, and is governed by the exigencies of competition.

The decision of the board was appealed by eight provinces to the governor in council, and while the governor in council recognized the need of the railways for the additional revenues which would thereby be obtained, and did not disallow the increase, it was the view of the government that a means of granting some relief from the increase should be devised.

As an interim measure designed to alleviate the burden of the authorized increase in rates, the proposed legislation provides for a subsidy of $20 million over a 12-month period, to be paid to the companies that are subject to the board's order No. 96300 as reimbursement for such reductions in rates as they may be directed to make pursuant to this legislation. The companies that are subject to order No. 96300, and thereby come within the scope of this legislation, are principally the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its leased lines, and a number of smaller railway companies which are member lines of the railway association of Canada; and the water carriers who participate in joint water-rail, and rail-water—rail routes, that is the Canadian Steamship Lines, Northwest Steamship Company and Canadian Pacific Great Lakes Steamships.

The government has decided that the most effective relief is to be afforded by confining the subsidy to a reduction in the non-competitive class and commodity rates, including the joint rail-water rates which are differentially related to the rail rates. These rates are generally known as "normal" rates, and are the ones which have taken the full percentage increases authorized by the board over many years.

This manner of alleviation concentrates the benefits on the long haul traffic where rates have not been kept down by competition. The subsidy will not apply toward a reduction in the other rate categories which I have referred to, whether or not they were authorized to be increased under the board's order.

The legislation provides that the board shall require the companies to reduce their class and commodity rates by such amounts as to effect a reduction in their revenues obtained from this traffic by $20 million during a 12-month period. The exact reduction in rates which will thereby result is a matter which will depend upon traffic volume and not one which the government, by legislation, could fix in advance. I may say, however, that on the basis of the present volume and pattern of traffic it has been estimated that the application of the $20 million subsidy on the basis which I have outlined will permit a reduction of some seven percentage points, thereby making the authorized increase approximately 10 per cent in lieu of 17 per cent.

As hon. members know, the government has indicated its intention of proceeding with a comprehensive inquiry into matters affecting the railways. The proposed legislation therefore limits the assistance to a 12-month period, when it is hoped a report will be available to the government. Consideration will then be given to means of further relieving the unfair discriminatory burden of the freight rate structure.

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt the minister at this point? Because of the noise in the house I could not follow the last sentence. He referred to a comprehensive inquiry affecting railway matters. Did he go any further and say anything about a royal commission?

Mr. Hees: Not yet.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry I interrupted.

Mr. Hees: Consideration will then be given to means of further relieving the unfair discriminatory burden of the freight rate structure. In the meantime the government does not propose to permit any further general increases in railway freight rates. At the conclusion of second reading I intend to move that the bill go to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines and may I say for the information of hon. members that I am advised by the chairman of the committee that, provided the bill is given second reading in time, the committee will commence sitting on Tuesday, April 7, at 9.30 a.m.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the committee will have listened with interest to the statement the minister has made on the very important and very complicated question of freight rates. I was unable to follow all the implications of the statement although I tried to listen as carefully as I could to what was said. When I interrupted the minister I gathered from him that it would follow in due course that a statement would be made about the appointment of a royal commission. I did not hear that statement made but I take it that in the course of the debate at a later stage it is the intention of the minister to make that kind of announcement and to state also the terms of reference of the royal commission.

Mr. Hees: I might answer the hon. member for Laurier on that point now, Mr. Chairman. A much larger, long term inquiry is under very active consideration by the government at the present time and I expect that in the very near future to Prime Minister will be making the kind of announcement to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister for that reply. I take it that the long term inquiry he has in mind is one which will cover the whole matter of railway policy as well as the railway freight rate structure. While I do not wish to anticipate what the form of that announcement will be I take it from what the minister has said that it will be a commission of some sort. I am not particularly concerned at the moment whether it be a royal commission or another type of investigation but I am very much concerned with the fact that according to the statement the minister has made there will be a complete investigation into the railway policy of Canada as well as the inequalities, inequities or discriminations which may exist and have existed for some time in the freight rate structure. I wanted to get that assurance from the minister because I intend to come back to that point at a later time.

The matter under discussion this evening is a resolution moved by the Minister of Transport which divides itself into two parts. The first part is expressed in these words:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to direct the board of transport commissioners to require by order the reduction of class and commodity freight rates (other than competitive rates) charged by carriers subject to the order of the board dated November 17, 1958—

That is the judgment referred to by the minister earlier. The second part is expressed in these words:

—and to authorize payments to reimburse carriers for the resulting reduction of their revenues up to an aggregate amount of $20 million.

The terms of this resolution give rise to a number of questions and it seems advisable to consider these as one proceeds to discuss the statement the minister has made as well as the order of the board. I should like to deal first of all with the judgment and order of the board of transport commissioners which is dated November 17, 1958. The decision, in its recital of the facts on pages 5 to 7, indicates, particularly at page 6, what the railways had in mind.

Mr. Chairman, I am shocked at this moment. I have to interrupt my remarks to convey to the committee the information which has this moment been given me that the hon. member for Russell has just passed away.

Mr. Harkness: This is shocking news and I suggest that we adjourn. I move that we adjourn.

The Chairman: In view of the tragic news of which the house has been informed the chair agrees that we should adjourn. I will therefore rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the Minister of Agriculture to move the adjournment of the house?

Mr. Harkness: I so move.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 8.42 p.m.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

STONTIUM 90—ANALYSIS OF OFFSHORE WATERS AND FISH

Question No. 136—Mr. Argue:

1. Has any analysis been made recently of the Canadian offshore waters of either our Atlantic or Pacific coasts, and/or the fish found in these waters, to determine the content of nuclear fall-out produced strontium 90 or other long-lived radio active isotope?

2. If so: (a) What was the nature of the findings? (b) How do these compare with the supposed tolerable limit in each case?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. No. These measurements have not been undertaken because reliable observers in other countries have reported values which are a low fraction of those measured in the average Canadian diet. In addition, fish contributes only a little over 1 per cent of the calcium in the Canadian diet. Calcium and strontium are closely associated in foods and where little calcium is obtained from a dietary source, little strontium will be added.

2. See answer 1 above.

ATOMIC AND HYDROGEN BOMB TESTS

Question No. 138—Mr. Argue:

1. Is any department or branch of the federal government presently making any studies as to the extent to which atomic and hydrogen bomb tests can be made without grave danger to the human race?

2. If so, what are the results or findings of such studies?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. This is an extremely complex problem which cannot be fully studied by one nation alone. Agencies of the federal government, particularly Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Department of National Health and Welfare, through representation on the United Nations scientific committee on the effects of atomic radiation, have been participating in studies and assessment of studies of the possible dangers to the human race of nuclear weapon tests.

2. The results of these studies have appeared in the report of the United Nations scientific committee of August, 1958.

NATIONAL MUSEUM DIRECTORS

Question No. 187—Mr. Argue:

1. What were the names of each director of the national museum of Canada who has held that position since January 1, 1935?

2. What were their administrative and professional qualifications, by whom were they recommended and appointed, and between what dates did they hold this position?

3. What was their citizenship status?

4. Did any of these men hold positions with the museum prior to their appointment as director?

5. If so, what position or positions were they?

6. What was the reason for termination of employment with the museum in each case?

(Answer is as of date of question, i.e., February 23, 1959.)

1. (a) William Henry Collins (acting director), (b) Wyatt Malcolm (assistant director, assistant curator), (c) F. C. C. Lynch (in charge), (d) William Benjamin Timm (in charge), (e) Frederick James Alcock (curator, chief curator), (f) Loris Shano Russell (director, natural history branch), (g) Jacques Rousseau (director, human history branch).

2. (a) A distinguished geologist and director of the geological survey (of which the national museum was a division) he was appointed by the civil service commission as director of the geological survey in 1920 and took over as acting director of the museum on the death of William McInnes in 1926; he retired in 1935.

(b) A geologist and civil servant, he administered the national museum in his capacity as assistant director to the geological survey and, under Mr. F. C. C. Lynch, chief of the bureau of geology and topography, he continued under the title assistant curator; he functioned in these capacities from 1926 to 1941.

(c) As chief of the bureau of geology and topography, he was titular head of the national museum; a civil servant, he was named by Dr. Charles Camsell, deputy minister of Mines and Resources and held office from 1936 to 1946.

(d) As director of the mines and geology branch (a civil servant in the department of mines and resources) he was in charge of the museum for a few months in late 1946 and early 1947.

(e) A distinguished geologist and geographer, he was named as curator by the deputy minister of mines and resources in 1947; in 1948 the title was changed to chief curator, and he continued in office from 1947 until retirement in 1956.

(f) A palaeontologist who served 7 years with the geological survey, he was for 14 years with the royal Ontario museum, director of the royal Ontario museum of palaeontology. For 6 years he was chief zoologist, national museum and was appointed by the civil service competition to position of director of the national museum on November 10, 1956.

(g) Served with the Montreal botanical garden for about 20 years, first as part time and full-time assistant director in the period from 1938 to 1942, later as superintendent of the garden from 1942 to 1956, and finally as its scientific director from March 1956 until his resignation a year later. He was appointed by the civil service commission competition on January 1, 1957.

3. All persons listed were or are Canadian citizens.

4 and 5. (a) As a member of the geological survey he was associated with the museum, although not on its staff. (b) Same as for (a). (c) No. (d) No. (e) Same as for (a). (f) As assistant palaeontologist and geologist, geological survey, 1930 to 1937, he prepared exhibits for the museum; from 1950 to 1956 he was chief zoologist, national museum. (g) Seasonal employment for field investigations during the summers of 1929 and 1930.

6. (a) Retirement. (b) Retirement. (c) Retirement. (d) Relegation of work to Dr. Alcock. (e) Retirement. (f) Incumbent. (g) Incumbent.

NATIONAL MUSEUM—FUNCTIONS

Question No. 203—Mr. Argue:

1. What are the various functions of each branch of the national museum of Canada and their relative importance?

2. What functions does each branch of the national museum of Canada perform in Canadian life, what relationships exist between each branch of the national museum and other Canadian museums, and what services does it render to them?

3. What was envisaged by the royal commission on arts, letters and sciences as the function of national museums in the life of the nation?

1. The functions of the natural history branch are to collect, preserve, study, exhibit and to make known by scientific and popular publications and other media of mass communication the significance of the materials that illustrate the zoology, botany, geology, palaeontology and mineralogy of Canada.

The functions of the human history branch are to collect, preserve, study, exhibit and make known by scientific and popular publications and other media of mass communication the significance of the materials that illustrate the ethnology and archaeology of Canada. Under archaeology are included both prehistoric and historic archaeology, and also physical anthropology. Under ethnology are included social anthropology, material cultures, linguistics and folklore.

In the past the emphasis has been mainly on the closely related functions of collections, preservation and study, due primarily to limitations of space and available funds. Some emphasis has been placed on the collection function (particularly in the fields of palaeontology, ethnology, archaeology) because of the necessity to collect specimens before their destruction or obliteration by floods and other natural catastrophes, agricultural activities, human settlement and the natural destructive processes of time.

As additional space and facilities are being made available, exhibits, as well as the educational and information services, are being enlarged and improved.

2. Both branches of the national museum of Canada contribute to the scientific and cultural knowledge of the general public of Canada, of the scientists and students in the sciences outlined in the answer to No. 1. This is done mainly in three ways: First, specimens are exhibited or made available for study in collections at the Victoria museum building in Ottawa and by displays in other Canadian museums and institutions to which they are lent. Second, lectures and discussions are given at the museum and talks are broadcast over the radio and on television. Finally, scientific reports and papers in both scientific and popular periodicals are published.

In the scientific field, both branches of the national museum provide reference collections for the use of scholars. Thus the natural history branch provides basic information for geological and biological research and for studies in conservation. The human history branch provides basic information on the origins and early history of the native and immigrant peoples of Canada and material for social studies on modern Canadian peoples. The museum's collection of folk songs has been widely used in folk music presentations and in Canadian musical composition.

Both branches of the national museum co-operate closely with other museums across Canada both directly and through the Canadian museums association, of which the director of the natural history branch was, until recently, secretary-treasurer. This co-operation takes the form of the exchange of specimens on both a permanent and temporary basis, the identification of specimens, long term loans to museums, information and advice on the preparation of exhibits, the training of museum personnel, and the use of the museum's library and photographic collections.

Questions

REPAIR WORKS, RICHELIEU-VERCHERES CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 226—Mr. Cardin:

1. How much of the money voted in the estimates of 1958-59 for repair works in the constituency of Richelieu-Vercheres was actually expended?
2. What projects appearing in the estimates of 1958-59 for Richelieu-Vercheres have been completed to date?
3. Were some of these projects not proceeded with? If so, for what reason?
4. Have steps been taken by the department to complete these projects in the coming fiscal year?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Location	Project	Amount	Paid To Date
Contrecoeur	Retaining wall	$ 90,000.00	$13,834.32
Ste Anne de Sorel	" "	345,000.00	Nil
Sorel	" "	60,000.00	43,424.09
Tracy	" "	45,000.00	1,799.38
Vercheres	" "	50,000.00	21,208.25
St. Ours	" "	8,000.00	Nil
Varennes	Repairs to retaining wall	15,700.00	(work in progress) 3,092.58

2. Sorel—retaining wall
   Sorel—terminal wharf No. 1—improvements
3. Yes. The retaining wall at Ste Anne de Sorel has not yet been proceeded with due to a change in design and an agreement being reached with the municipality regarding the site.
4. Yes. Projects which have not been completed are either in progress or suspended due to winter conditions, and work will be resumed in the coming fiscal year.

E. A. COTE

Question No. 246—Mr. Argue:

1. Over what branches of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources does Mr. E. A. Cote, the assistant deputy minister, exercise supervision?
2. How are Mr. Cote's supervisory duties over the operations of each of these branches defined?
3. Over what operations of each of these branches does Mr. Cote's jurisdiction extend?
4. Which branches of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources are not under supervision of Mr. Cote, and who supervises the operations of each?
5. Is Mr. Cote a member of any government board or committee?
6. If so, what are they, what is the purpose of each, and in what capacity does Mr. Cote serve?

1. Forestry, water resources, the national historic sites division and the Canadian wildlife service of the national parks branch, the human history and the natural history branches of the national museum of Canada, and the Canadian government travel bureau.
2. The duties are to supervise the activities of the branches, normally not in detail, but in their more important aspects, particularly those involving questions of policy; to be available for consultation by the branch directors and to assist in formulating policy; to report to the deputy minister and to raise important questions of policy for consideration by him or for decision by the minister; to ensure, through the directors, the efficient operation of the branches and their adherence to government and departmental policy generally.
3. Over the general operations, varying in detail as circumstances require.
4. Mr. F. J. G. Cunningham, assistant deputy minister, supervises the operations of the northern administration branch and of the administrative services of the department. Mr. R. C. Robertson, deputy minister, supervises the operations of the national parks aspect of the parks branch directly, as well as being generally responsible for the department as a whole.
5. Yes.
6. (i) Names of committees: (a) The advisory committee on water use policy, (b) Privy council committee of officials on research, (c) The suggestion awards board.

(ii) Purposes of committees: (a) To coordinate at the official level interdepartmental policy on water use, (b) to consider interdepartmental research policy, (c) to consider and recommend to treasury board awards for useful suggestions to improve working methods in the civil service.

(iii) Capacity in which Mr. Cote serves: (a) Vice Chairman. (b) representative of deputy minister, (c) member.

TRIBUTES TO DECEASED MEMBERS

THE LATE SIDNEY E. SMITH—
THE LATE J. OMER GOUR

Mr. Speaker: May I convey to the house a message of sympathy which I have received from the legislative council of British Guiana, in these terms:

SECOND LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL
under the
British Guiana (Constitution) (Temporary Provisions) Orders in Council, 1953 and 1956.

SECOND SESSION

1958 - 1959

RESOLUTION NO. IX.

RESOLVED, That this council records its profound regret at the death of Mr. Sidney Smith, minister of external affairs, Canada, and directs that an expression of its sympathy be conveyed to the parliament of Canada and to the relatives.

Passed by the legislative council this 18th day of March, 1959.

(Signed) A. I. CRUM EWING
Clerk of the Legislature

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is always very difficult to express oneself adequately when a fellow member passes from this scene. Last evening all of us were deeply shocked at the sudden passing of Mr. J. Omer Gour, member for Russell. I had just left the house a few moments before, and on arrival at my office was informed that he had joined the group who in the service of their country pass away. He was a man of genial disposition, kindly in his relationship with his fellow members and one who without exaggeration did have the affection of all who served with him, irrespective of political persuasion.

He came into the House of Commons in 1945, having already established for himself an intimate connection with the lives of the people of his constituency. He was an executive in a number of co-operatives and was greatly interested in agriculture. He had given himself to public service in various charitable and semi-public institutions in his community. He had served as mayor of his home town of Casselman for a period of five years. Indeed, his wide interests in the community are spelled out in the list of organizations to which he gave the benefit of his advice and to which he made a contribution.

Here in the House of Commons in a most gentle manner he epitomized those characteristics of public service which are the hallmark of good citizenship. He looked upon his membership in the House of Commons as an opportunity for greater personal service to the people of his constituency who sought his counsel at all times. Indeed, as I remember it, when he had his first office on the first floor of this building the numbers who came to him for advice were so great that he had to establish, as it were, an additional office in the hallway. He was a good member. I speak as one who liked him because of his infinite fairness and his attitude in general to the discussion of public affairs.

On behalf of the government and the people of Canada I wish to extend our deepest sympathy to his widow, his two daughters and his son. To them I trust will come the comfort that is felt by those who, having lost a loved one, realize that his service and the contribution he made to his constituency, his province and his country will be a monument in the years ahead to that life of service. I want to add as well the sympathy of my colleagues, myself and members on the government side of the house to the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues in the great loss that he and they have sustained in the passing of one who enjoyed the affection of the house.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Prime Minister for what he has said about our friend and colleague. We are reminded by his words that within a week a second seat in the House of Commons has been vacated by sudden death. Once again last evening we were shocked into a realization of the transient and uncertain character of man's life and man's affairs.

We in this house have lost in the death of Mr. Gour one of our senior members, a member with 15 years of service in the house. As the Prime Minister has said, Mr. Gour reached the House of Commons after many years of public service in his own community and after achieving success in his own field of private activity.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the measure of a man's worth is best judged from the feeling for him by the people among whom he lived and worked. In the case of Joe Gour that feeling was one of respect and affection for a man whose whole life was one of service to others. That same feeling, I know, was shared by all his fellow members in the house, particularly perhaps by those of us who worked with him in the Liberal party and who deeply appreciated his unselfish and complete co-operation and his wise counsel, expressed always with modesty but with frankness and sometimes with a saltiness that caused it to be remembered.

He was a strong party man, but his friendships in the house were not limited by party affiliations as happily is so often the case. We all liked him. He was a good and modest man. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, he was always fair and ever generous in his assessment of policies, with a particular interest in how they affected his farmers, his people as he always called them. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think it is true to say that he had become a notable parliamentary personality over the years he was in the house, one who had earned and had received our regard and our affection. We shall all miss him greatly.

I join with the Prime Minister in his expression of deep sympathy to Mrs. Gour and the members of the family at this dark time. Their loss was as sudden as it is irreparable.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the passing of Mr. Gour last evening demonstrates once again to all members of the house how fleeting and temporary is our life. I was particularly shocked because I have had the good fortune for some time to sit in the house next to him. We became close friends, and I cannot speak too highly of his personal qualities.

As has already been said, he came to this house in 1945. In parliament and in his community he worked in the interests of agriculture. He worked in his community in the interests of community life and in the interests of his church. I have admired Mr. Gour and his activities in parliament for many years because of his fairness, and because of his independent turn of mind. I can remember a number of occasions on which he spoke out most forthrightly on controversial issues. He was a man who felt, in one instance, that his government should move in the field of interest rates in order to protect the incomes of the ordinary people of this country.

He was a member of the agriculture committee, as I have been, for many years. I can agree with the statement by the Leader of the Opposition that he had the interests of the farmers, the people of his constituency, very close to his heart. We know that in parliament he worked under something of a handicap. I think, with the handicap he had, he showed great bravery in always being prepared to stand up and speak his mind in the interests of justice as he saw it.

I join with the Prime Minister in extending to the Leader of the Opposition and to the Liberal party our sympathy at the loss of a valuable colleague. We extend to Mrs. Gour and to the three children our most sincere sympathy.

(Translation):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it does not happen too often in parliamentary life that a member has to interrupt his speech to be informed of the demise of a colleague. That was my experience last night, while I was speaking to a resolution relating to the Department of Transport.

As soon as the house adjourned, I went to my fellow-member's office, where I witnessed a very moving scene. The party whip, surrounded by our colleagues, was reciting prayers until the arrival of the priest who later administered the last sacraments, while our colleague's widow and his two children could not believe that their husband and father was no more.

Mr. Speaker, Joseph Gour had great virtues. He was a good and generous man. Many people in his riding and elsewhere frequently benefited from his generosity.

He was a most sincere man, faithful to his principles. On many occasions he fearlessly made his views known on difficult and delicate matters. Only recently, as my colleagues in the house well know, at a farmer's meeting where some of us had been speaking in general terms, Joseph Gour did not hesitate to express his opinion bluntly so that the farmers might fully know and understand exactly what he had in mind.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, Joseph Gour was a party man. That is not a bad thing. It only proves, as the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said a moment ago, that one can be a party man and still deserve the respect, friendship and affection of members, not only on the opposition but also on the government side.

When I was member for Stormont, Mr. Gour was my neighbour and, on several occasions, came to my constituency to give me a hand.

The two tragic events which have occurred in the house within a week, should, it seems to me, teach us a lesson. On one side of the house there was a member who had achieved great things, both in the national and international fields, while on this side, another member's activity is abruptly ended after he, too, had done great things in a more restricted field, his district, his constituency. Both, however, are of equal status before their Maker and I feel that, whatever our qualities, successes, shortcomings or failures, each and everyone of us should remember that we are all equal in the eyes of the ultimate Judge.

Mr. Speaker, Joseph Gour was a patriot. He loved French, he loved French education and culture, and hardly missed an opportunity to speak in their behalf, especially when they stood for the advancement of his own people in Ontario. I am sure that no member of the house, even among those who do not share my views in this regard, will begrudge my saying that, because of that attitude, he has been of genuine service to his constituents.

Then too, and above all, Joseph Gour was a family man. He loved and adored his wife, children and grandchildren, and lived for them. His passing will create a great void among us, but in his family that void will never be filled.

To his bereaved widow, to his son Robert and to his daughters Gaby and Raymonde we extend our deepest sympathy.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENT ON REVISION OF TERMS OF UNION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to acquaint the house with the government's proposals with reference to the terms of union with Newfoundland.

Article 29 of the terms of union provided as follows:

Review of Financial Position

29. In view of the difficulty of predicting with sufficient accuracy the financial consequences to Newfoundland of becoming a province of Canada, the government of Canada will appoint a royal commission within eight years from the date of union to review the financial position of the province of Newfoundland and to recommend the form and scale of additional financial assistance, if any, that may be required by the government of the province of Newfoundland to enable it to continue public services at the levels and standards reached subsequent to the date of union, without resorting to taxation more burdensome, having regard to capacity to pay, than that obtaining generally in the region comprising the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island.

In pursuance of this provision the former government appointed a royal commission consisting of Chief Justice McNair of New Brunswick, the late Sir Albert Walsh, chief justice of Newfoundland, and Mr. John Deutsch. Their report was submitted not long before prorogation of the last session of this parliament, and by that report they recommended that Canada should pay to Newfoundland additional financial assistance after the transitional grants as follows:

	Millions of dollars
1959-60	7.3
1961-62 and thereafter	8

The recommendations of the royal commission have been studied with care and were discussed by the government with the premier and other representatives of the government of Newfoundland. Both governments have entertained serious reservations concerning the basis of the conclusions reached by the commissioners. We in particular have been concerned that the commissioners have used the fiscal year 1957-58 as the base year, whereas the period accepted as the basis in the presentation of all the evidence was the fiscal year 1956-57, which accords with the terms of article 29 which I read in full a moment ago. The vague nature of the commissioners' recommendation as to the duration of the payments has also occasioned difficulty for both governments. In his final submission to the royal commission, counsel for Newfoundland argued quite specifically that provision should be made for a further review of the economic and financial position of the province within a reasonable period of time. The government of the province still asserts that position as the proper interpretation of the rather uncertain and nebulous provisions of article 29.

Since the fiscal year 1957-58, and incidentally since this government came into power, Newfoundland has greatly benefited from additional forms of financial assistance from the government of Canada. The new direct payments alone aggregated over $9 million in the fiscal year 1958-59. This amount included the increased rate of standard individual income tax, the higher than average per capita benefit extended to Newfoundland through the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, as well as various increased or new conditional grants.

Notwithstanding the difficulties presented by its report, it remains a fact that the royal commission was appointed to fulfil the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada, and these terms are part of the British North America Act. My colleagues and I are accordingly of the opinion that parliament should be invited to take action on the commission's recommendations. It is proposed, therefore, to ask parliament to authorize payments as recommended by the royal commission, but in our view the duration of the payments should be limited to five years, as both Newfoundland and Canada have recognized the difficulties involved in making projections from one selected year into the future, and it has further appeared to be quite inappropriate to endeavour to provide for a fixed amount payable annually over a period of unlimited duration. A resolution will shortly be placed on the order paper asking leave to introduce a bill to carry into effect these provisions pertaining to the terms of union. The proposed payments will be unconditional and will be in final and irrevocable settlement of the provisions of article 29 and the contractual obligations of the union consummated in 1949.

On conclusion of the payments as of March 31, 1962, which corresponds with the conclusion of the present five-year fiscal arrangement between Canada and the provinces, Newfoundland's position can be considered in the light of the general methods of providing financial assistance to the provinces which may be in effect at that time.

Provision will be made in the bill for the payment to Newfoundland of the amounts due for 1957-58 and 1958-59, totalling $13,550,000, before the government accounts are closed for the present fiscal year.

I should now like to say a word respecting the 10th anniversary of the union of Newfoundland with Canada, which will be celebrated next Wednesday, April 1. As the house will not be sitting then may I be allowed on behalf of Canadians in the other nine provinces to convey to the people of Newfoundland the pride we all feel in the decision then made whereby they became Canadians.

Each of the provinces has its problems, and Newfoundland is no exception. Differences do exist as to the solution of these problems; but my certain faith, based on the achievements of the past, is that these differences will be solved in the spirit of confederation and with that understanding and common dedication that are the enduring basis of confederation.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's statement indicates that the government will ask parliament to discharge an obligation to Newfoundland, one which arises out of the terms of union with that province and one which was examined by a royal commission which made certain recommendations in regard to its discharge. I suggest that any additional forms of financial assistance which may have been given to Newfoundland since that royal commission reported or indeed before it reported have no bearing whatever on this particular contractual constitutional obligation.

I welcomed, as I am sure all hon. members of the house welcomed, the statement of the Prime Minister that action is to be recommended in the terms of the royal commission report in so far as the amount of financial assistance is concerned. I regret that this was not done many months ago, whereby the uncertainty which had been created by this delay could have been avoided, and I think the government is to be criticized for not having taken this action earlier.

I hope I am not misinterpreting what the Prime Minister said when I note that this assistance is to be for five years only. That does not seem to me to be compatible with the obligation which the government of Canada accepted in the terms of union. While it is one thing to have these terms re-examined and perhaps reviewed at the end of five years, it is quite another to assume that no obligation will exist after five years. That assumption is quite unwarranted.

The Prime Minister has made reference to the fact that we are approaching the 10th anniversary of the union of Newfoundland with Canada. That was a happy event for all of us at the time it happened, and we can all take great pride in this completion of the work of confederation. The Prime Minister has mentioned that there are difficulties between the province and the central government. We have had difficulties of that kind before in confederation, and I feel certain that with a spirit of good will and understanding—and that means understanding of the situation and circumstances of Newfoundland as well as those of Ottawa—these difficulties can be resolved and that this union between the oldest British colony and Canada will continue to develop and flourish in the years ahead as it has in the past 10 years to the benefit of the people of Newfoundland and of the rest of Canada.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, members of the C.C.F. will reserve their comments on the financial announcement made by the Prime Minister until the time the resolution is before the house.

We have noted his reference to the 10th anniversary of the union of Newfoundland with Canada. In spite of the grave mistakes we believe have been made by the premier and legislature of that province, and in spite of our very strong feeling that there has been an encroachment on fundamental human rights and freedoms, we have no quarrel with the people of that province. We are certain that while there are major differences between the C.C.F. movement and the government of Newfoundland, in the days ahead all people of good will in this nation, including the people of the tenth province, will work as one for the the improvement of the living standard of Canadians generally. We hope the day is not far distant when far-seeing governments both on the national and provincial level will have worked out policies to provide to the people of Newfoundland the same standard of living and the same rights that are afforded other Canadians.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether I understood him correctly to say that the legislation which he announced the government intends to bring down to implement the recommendations of the McNair commission contemplated the complete discharge of the obligation under section 29 of the terms of union by that legislation, which will expire on March 31, 1962?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): That is so, Mr. Speaker; and any consideration at that time will, of course, be in the context of the larger situation of the nation as a whole.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the Prime Minister realize that every person in Newfoundland will regard this as another breach of a solemn contract?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I really do not think the hon. gentleman, while he claims paternity for most good things that have been achieved on behalf of Newfoundland, speaks for all the people.

Mr. Pickersgill: You will see.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXPANSION OF CANADA HOUSE IN LONDON, ENGLAND

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that arrangements have been completed under which the building adjoining Canada house in the city of London, England, and now occupied by the Royal College of Physicians will be added to the present Canada house when the new building of the royal college is completed. This is a particularly satisfactory arrangement, because the property now occupied by Canada house was completed in 1825 for the Union club and the adjoining property, which occupies the remainder of the west side of Trafalgar square, was completed at the same time. A unique feature of these two buildings is that although they were built for different organizations, they were designed by the same architect and built by the same contractor. As a result the exterior on Trafalgar square is part of a single architectural design, with exactly the same size windows and similar decorative features.

The new property will give Canada house the additional office space required for its administrative headquarters. It will also provide one of the finest sites in London overlooking Trafalgar square from which historic streets such as the Strand, Whitehall and Pall Mall radiate to every part of the city.

THE BUDGET

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PRESENTATION ON THURSDAY, APRIL 9

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I inform the house that barring any unforeseen contingencies I hope to introduce the budget on Thursday evening, April 9.

STARRED QUESTIONS

C.B.C. BOARD OF DIRECTORS—RADIO INTERESTS

Question No. 10—Mr. Caron:

Is any member of the executive committee of the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at present engaged in the business of broadcasting or has any pecuniary or proprietary interest, as owner, shareholder, director, officer, partner or otherwise, in a broadcasting station or in the manufacture or distribution of radio apparatus?

He said: I have consulted the minister, and if I have leave of the house I would like to withdraw the question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member shall withdraw his question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and question withdrawn.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 42—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total amount to the credit of the unemployment insurance fund as at (a) February 28, 1958; (b) February 28, 1959?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The answer to this question is as follows, Mr. Speaker:

(a) February 28, 1958 ....$794,547,091.77
(b) February 28, 1959 ....$547,399,504.48

Starred Questions

C.N.R. TRAIN DERAILMENT, SUDBURY-HORNEPAYNE

Question No. 43—Mr. Fisher:

1. Was there a train derailment on the Canadian National Railways line between Sudbury and Hornepayne on March 20 or March 21, 1959?
2. If so, what were the particulars, including the location, speed of the train, preliminary estimate of the cause and of the cost of such derailment, the length of time through traffic was held up, and details of train rerouting caused by the derailment?
3. Has there been a reduction in the maintenance of way personnel in the past 12 months on the section where the derailment took place?
4. If so, how large a reduction?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The answer to part 1 is yes, on March 21.

In regard to part 2, the management advise that super Continental train No. 1 had 13 cars and the diesel unit derailed at mileage 121, Ruel subdivision on the Capreol division. All cars and the diesel unit remained upright, and no personal injuries were suffered. The investigation into the cause of the accident has not yet been completed. Preliminary indications are that the speed of the train was not excessive, and the damage to the equipment was slight and is not expected to exceed $1,000. As a result of the derailment the main track was blocked for approximately 22 hours, and trains were detoured between Austin, on the Sudbury subdivision, and Oba, on the Oba subdivision, over the C.P.R. and Algoma Central and Hudson Bay lines.

As to part 3, there has been no reduction in manpower during the past 12 months in the maintenance of way forces on the section where this derailment took place, and there has been no deterioration in the standard of maintenance of this section of track.

Part 4 is, of course, answered by the answer to part 3.

BOND ISSUE DENOMINATIONS, 1959

Question No. 44—Mr. McMillan:

In connection with the issue of $200,000,000 government of Canada bonds authorized by the Minister of Finance in February, 1959, one issue to mature in 13 months and the other to mature in 21½ months, how many bonds were sold in each of the following denominations, $1,000, $5,000, $25,000, $100,000 and $1,000,000?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the first issue the answer is $2,055,000; $3,320,000; $16,725,000; $44,900,000; $18,000,000. With reference to the second issue the answer is: $7,375,000; $12,450,000; $32,475,000; $53,700,000; $9,000,000.

FOREIGN SHIPPING SUBSIDIES, ST. LAWRENCE-GREAT LAKES

Question No. 45—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the government received information that certain foreign shipping lines have had subsidies approved by their governments for service into Canadian ports along the St. Lawrence-great lakes seaway?
2. If so, what are the lines, and their Canadian ports of call?
3. Under present regulations or statutes would such shipping move cargo from one Canadian port to another Canadian port?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The answer to parts 1 and 2 is that it is understood that the United States government has indicated that it proposes to subsidize certain shipping services from United States great lakes ports to Caribbean and trans-Atlantic areas. Since this is a matter of United States decision we do not, as yet, have full information as to what lines and types of service may be involved. I have seen reports that the United States company, Grace Lines, has been authorized to operate on one of these routes but I am not aware that any other companies have as yet been named. In the case of Grace Lines it is understood that the company will be permitted to carry cargo between Canadian great lakes-St. Lawrence ports and foreign ports en route. As I indicated in reply to a previous question, this situation is being watched carefully.

With regard to part 3, this information was given in the answer I made yesterday to the hon. member, namely that the Canada Shipping Act prevents these ships from moving cargo from one Canadian port to another Canadian port.

NEWFOUNDLAND—PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO LABOUR DISPUTE

Question No. 46—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Did the Prime Minister receive a communication from the premier of Newfoundland inviting the government to set up a public inquiry into the violations of the law in the labour dispute in Newfoundland?
2. If so, what was the precise wording of the communication and the precise wording of the Prime Minister's reply to the premier of Newfoundland?

R.C.M.P. REINFORCEMENTS, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 47—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Did the Prime Minister receive a communication from the premier of Newfoundland, regarding the refusal of the government to send Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements to Newfoundland?
2. If so, what were the precise contents of such communication?
3. Did the Prime Minister make any reply to this communication, and if so, what was the precise nature of the reply?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as these two questions are concerned, if I may take them together, the answer is yes. I have the correspondence. It is not included in my file here, but with the leave of the house I will table it later today.

Mr. Pickersgill: That will be quite satisfactory to me, sir, if the Prime Minister would ask leave to have it included in Hansard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind reading the appropriate portions, but I think there is really no need for it to be included in Hansard. If the hon. gentleman wants the exact wording I will ask that these two questions stand and when the session resumes I will see that the answer is complete. I thought it would help him just to table it, but if that is not satisfactory I will ask that both questions stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would much prefer that, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Questions 46 and 47 stand. Questions stand.

R.C.M.P. STRENGTH, CORNER BROOK AND DEER LAKE, NFLD.

Question No. 48—Mr. Batten:

1. How many Royal Canadian Mounted Police are stationed on regular strength, at (a) Corner Brook; (b) Deer Lake, Newfoundland?
2. Have any reinforcements been sent to either of these two areas?
3. If so, how many?
4. From what areas were these reinforcements drawn?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is that 43 members of the R.C.M. Police are stationed on regular strength at Corner Brook and three at Deer Lake, Newfoundland.

The answer to part 2 is yes.

The answer to part 3 is that 4 reinforcements have been sent to Corner Brook and 1 to Deer Lake.

The answer to part 4 is that of those reinforcements 4 were drawn from St. John's, Newfoundland, and 1 from Hampden.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

RAILWAY GRADE CROSSINGS, QUEBEC

Question No. 252—Mr. Deschatelets:

1. Was any amount paid by the federal government in the province of Quebec in connection with the elimination of railway grade crossings since 1955?
2. If so, what amount each year since 1955, in what locations and to whom were payments made?
3. Was any of this work requested by the provincial government of Quebec?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Motion No. 78—Mr. Fisher:

For a copy of all correspondence since August 1, 1958, exchanged between the federal government and the municipal authorities in Fort William and Port Arthur, Messrs. Milton Vibert, Arthur Widnall, Norman R. Wilson, and Harold G. Blanchard, concerning the appointment or selection of the lakehead harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to.

C.B.C.—POLITICAL CONVENTION BROADCASTS

Motion No. 80—Mr. Fisher:

For a copy of all reports and memoranda prepared by or for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and which has been distributed beyond the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation administration, on any aspects of the Progressive Conservative convention of 1956, and the Liberal convention of 1958.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the first part of this motion cannot be accepted by the government in its present wording because it calls for memoranda prepared by or for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which would be in the nature of intradepartmental communications and would be privileged. That is not of so much importance as the second part, which refers to memoranda which have been distributed beyond the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This has reference to matters that occurred three or four years ago, and if there were any such documents I do not think anyone in the world could tell today where they might have drifted to in the meantime. I suggest that this is not a request that should be made to the government and that the motion should stand. We cannot accept it in its present wording. I do not know what the hon. member has in mind, but I suggest that he allow it to stand and perhaps he can then limit his motion to such an extent that we can accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member willing to allow the motion to stand?

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Motion stands.

R.C.M.P. REINFORCEMENTS, NFLD.—PROTESTS OVER FEDERAL ACTION

Motion No. 81—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by the Minister of Justice, since March 10, 1959, protesting the refusal of the government to reinforce the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland, together with the replies thereto.

Motion agreed to.

R.C.M.P. REINFORCEMENTS, NFLD.—PROTESTS OVER FEDERAL ACTION

Motion No. 82—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by the Prime Minister, since March 10, 1959, protesting the refusal of the government to reinforce the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland, together with the replies thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Subject to the usual and customary exceptions.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the Prime Minister—

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not catch what reservation the Prime Minister expressed.

Mr. Speaker: The usual and customary exceptions. Subject to the reservation expressed by the Prime Minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM AFTER EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, when parliament reconvenes after the Easter recess, he will indicate to the house at as early a date as possible and in as much detail as possible the legislative program for the rest of the session, and perhaps also its timing. I believe if he could do this it might facilitate and even expedite the business of the session.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can say at once that anything that will expedite and facilitate the carrying out of the business of the session will receive my immediate approbation, and I shall endeavour forthwith after the Easter recess to place before the house in as complete outline as is then possible the legislative program.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. When does the minister intend to bring before the house the resolution to set up the committee on railways and shipping?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): That will be the responsibility of the house leader.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO CALLING OF CONFERENCE ON FISCAL MATTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister can bring the house up to date as to what progress his officials and his department are making in bringing the finance ministers of the provinces together in a conference with the minister?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report that excellent progress has been made in this direction. Mr. Burns, the director of the federal-provincial relations branch of the Department of Finance, has now visited five of the provincial capitals, four in western Canada and Quebec, and has received full co-operation everywhere he has gone. He will be completing his visits to the other five provincial capitals very soon, and plans can then be definitely concerted for the holding of the meeting of the provincial treasurers and the Minister of Finance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Argue: Can the Minister of Finance say whether or not the meeting with the provincial ministers of finance will be somewhat of a preliminary meeting to an eventual summit meeting that will include the Prime Minister and the premiers of the provinces?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a matter that remains to be determined. In the meantime this first, important and I think essential step is being taken and good results seem to be indicated.

NATIONAL REVENUE

USE OF NEW ELECTRONIC EQUIPMENT BY DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue a question and I hope he will pay me the courtesy of not looking at me with a suspicious eye. A few weeks ago the minister described in the estimates committee a new gadget that his department had recently made available and, as one newspaper columnist put it, "the electronics man will get you if you don't watch out." I should like to ask the minister if this gimmick is now in operation at all border points.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I could never look at the hon. gentleman with a suspicious eye. Even the electronic one to which I referred would, I am sure, gaze upon him with a high degree of kindness. With respect to the machine in question, all the processing is done at headquarters in Ottawa, and the information is sent here from the various ports to be processed.

GRAIN

OATS, BARLEY AND WHEAT—FINAL PAYMENTS ON 1957-58 POOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is he able to inform the house when the final payments will be made on the oats and barley pools for 1957-58? I must apologize to the minister for not giving him notice of my intention to ask this question.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to answer the hon. member. The barley and oats pools for 1957-58 have been closed out, both in a surplus position, with the amount available for distribution something over $6 million in the barley pool and over $2 million in the oats pool. The oats pool is in a much better condition than in the preceding year, when there was a deficit of about $2 million. Cheques for both pools will be issued early in April.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister say when the wheat pool account will be closed out, and when final payment will be made?

Mr. Churchill: That will be announced in due course, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY PREMIER OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State a question. Would he care to comment upon the statement credited to the premier of Quebec, as published in today's Montréal-Matin? According to that paper, the provincial premier has stated, with the charm and courtesy for which he is noted, that the system of taxation applied by the federal government constitutes a theft of money that belongs to the provinces.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order.

(Translation):

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the premier of the province of Quebec never consulted me before making that statement.

(Text):

BUREAU OF STATISTICS FIGURES ON U.S. AND U.K. CAPITAL ENTERING CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I must apologize for not having been able to give him earlier notice of my intention to ask the question. In view of the fact that the dominion bureau of statistics bulletin of March 24 points out that United States capital in form of portfolio security transactions entering Canada in 1958 increased by 8 per cent while British capital entering Canada during the same year decreased by 70 per cent, will the minister tell the house whether this took place as the result of government policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not raising a question of immediacy or urgency. It is a rather broad question which probably would be a suitable subject for a debate.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Following the question asked of the Secretary of State by the hon. member for Dollard, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. As a result of the serious stand taken by Mr. Duplessis in respect of federal grants, does the Prime Minister not feel that the time has now arrived for a summit conference in Quebec with the premier?

SHIPPING

OPENING OF NORTHEASTERN N.B. PORTS FOR FISHING FLEET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister advise the house what action is being taken by his department to assure the early opening of northeastern New Brunswick ports, particularly Caraquet and Shippegan in Gloucester county, to allow early operation of the fishing fleet?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for Gloucester for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. The majority of our fleet of icebreakers are now concentrating in dealing with the extremely heavy ice conditions in the lower St. Lawrence gulf, maritime and Newfoundland areas, where requests for assistance continue to be far in excess of our capacity. We will do everything possible to be of assistance, however, in meeting any request submitted to our marine agents.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR SECONDARY AIRPORT OUTSIDE CITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I do so, sir, because tomorrow I hope to return to my home city where I have not been since the first week in January, and I know I will be asked a certain question. Will the minister advise the house, and particularly the members from British Columbia, as to the present situation with reference to a secondary airport outside the city of Vancouver? In view of the confusion that has arisen in the past few weeks, could he outline the present situation, what is going to occur and what is being considered; because when I arrive in Vancouver I will be asked this question and I should like to be able to say I got the answer from the minister this afternoon.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): As the hon. member has said, this is a rather complicated question. I discussed it with representatives of the city of Vancouver about two weeks ago when they were down here. The answer required by this question would be too lengthy for the orders of the day, but I shall be glad to discuss the matter with the hon. member if he will come over here and speak to me after the orders of the day are finished.

Mr. Winch: Perhaps it would be preferable for the minister to come over here.

Mr. Hees: I am very glad the hon. member asked that question, because in the truly democratic spirit the representatives of this government always go to the members. However, on this particular day I have not one but two bills coming up, and I am afraid I shall be in my seat until six o'clock.

VANCOUVER—CONTRACTS FOR WORK AT INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Taylor (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Transport inform the house whether a $1½ million contract has been approved providing immediate work for B.C. Bridge and Dredging Company and Tide Bay Dredging Company, both of Vancouver?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, that contract was recently passed by treasury board.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

LACHINE CANAL—FEDERAL ACTION FOLLOWING LAY-OFF OF WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the strike which workers on the Lachine canal are now contemplating because of the 38 men who are being laid off on March 31, some of them having had 38 years of service, may I ask the minister what steps he or his officials are taking to find comparable jobs for these men?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I am afraid I cannot add very much to the answer I gave the hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle when he asked me the almost identical question yesterday. I told him and the house that we are doing everything possible to find jobs for these men through the Department of Transport, the St. Lawrence seaway authority, and the civil service commission. We shall continue to do everything possible to place all these men.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Why are these 38 men being replaced by newcomers who are unknown to the canal workers on the Lachine canal, and many of whom are inexperienced in canal work?

Mr. Hees: I have no knowledge of that situation. I have given instructions to the St. Lawrence seaway authority and to my department, and we are working through the civil service commission to place these men. I do not know of other men being hired. However, because the matter was brought up yesterday I am having it looked into, and everything possible will be done to see that these men get a fair break.

SOULANGES CANAL—FEDERAL ACTION FOLLOWING LAY-OFF OF WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the fact that some 132 employees of the Soulanges canal have been laid off as of March 31, many of whom have been in the employ of the department for 25 years and more? Can the minister tell the house for how many of these employees the department has found work?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier, having once been minister of transport, I think knows that in a department the size of the Department of Transport one does not carry figures of that kind in one's head. Therefore it is of course not possible to give the answer offhand. All I can say is that I shall be glad to look it up for the hon. member and to assure him that, as in the case of all other canal employees, we have been trying in every way possible to find other employment for them.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Notwithstanding the fact that the minister has been trying—and I am sure he is doing his best—the point is that few if any of these employees are being taken on. That is the purpose of my question in asking the minister how many of these men, first on the Lachine canal and now on the Soulanges canal, have been taken on.

An hon. Member: He gave the answer.

Mr. Hees: The last time I checked on this matter I was informed that most of the employees who were out of jobs had been found other employment or had found other employment for themselves.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that that statement is totally inaccurate, because I happen to have—

Mr. Churchill: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but that is not a point of order. If the hon. member wishes to raise a question of privilege I suppose he may do so.

Mr. Chevrier: I do so, Mr. Speaker; I raise a question of privilege. I say that the statement made by the minister is not accurate. I now make the statement that on the Lachine canal and the Soulanges canal—and particularly the Lachine canal—there are large numbers of people out of work.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is this. As in the case when employees are laid off on the C.N.R. or under any other operation which comes under the jurisdiction of the government, the operation under the jurisdiction of the government does everything possible to find work as soon as possible for the people who are laid off, and they are not laid off unless there is no work for them to do. I make the same answer to the hon. member today. We find work for every single employee for whom we possibly can find work, and we do so as quickly as we can. We cannot do more than that.

Mr. Chevrier: You have not succeeded on those two canals.

Mr. Hees: Perhaps we have not succeeded, Mr. Speaker, but we have done our very best, and nobody can do better than his best.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a supplementary question. Will the minister tell the house when it reconvenes next month what is the number of people for whom jobs have been found on those two canals?

Mr. Hees: I shall be glad to do so. At any time the hon. member for Laurier, the former minister, wants any information I have given it to him, as he knows, either on the floor of the house or privately. I have never held back anything from him or any other member. Since he wants to find out, I will give it to him this afternoon if he wants it.

Mr. Chevrier: I want it.

Mr. Ricard: He wants to make a show.

Mr. Hees: I will give it to the hon. member this afternoon if he wants the information.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member just said that I wanted to make a show.

Mr. Ricard: That is right.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the questions I have asked were for the purpose of eliciting the fact that there are at least 200 men being laid off at the end of this month for whom work or jobs have not yet been found. Yet this hon. member says I am trying to make a show.

Mr. Ricard: Yes, that is right. You are trying to make a show.

Mr. Chevrier: Why does the hon. member not do something about it by making representations?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member should be held to account.

Mr. Stinson: Shame.

Mr. Chevrier: I ask the hon. member to come on over here and I will show him when he says "shame".

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is room for only one debate now. I hope hon. members will not get into a private altercation on the last day before the Easter recess.

Mr. Harold Winch (Vancouver East): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport; I think it is a simple one. In view of the lay-offs on certain projects on the Soulanges canal, can the minister explain why men with as much as 35 years of experience are laid off and men without any experience are now being hired?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will appreciate that this matter has been explored as far as it can be, and the information available to date has been given.

Mr. Winch: No, sir. We have not seen—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Winch: Is it patronage or is it not?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is seeking to give the house information, not asking for it.

CORNWALL CANAL—FEDERAL ACTION FOLLOWING LAY-OFF OF WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to annoy the Minister of Transport, but I would like to ask him this question. In view of the fact that there are some 85 men who have been laid off, or will be laid off at the end of this month, on the Cornwall canal, has any attempt been made to place these men on the Iroquois canal?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have been trying, as I have said over and over again, to place the men who have been laid off anywhere we possibly can.

SECRETARY OF STATE

AUTHORITY FOR ISSUANCE OF BILINGUAL STAMPS AND DOCUMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State a question. Last Friday, March 20, I asked him to give the house certain information on bilingual stamps and money. Is he in a position today to answer that question?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, when I looked into this matter I was informed that, because stamps are not negotiable instruments, the matter comes under the Postmaster General.

Mr. Caron: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Does the same thing apply to bilingual money?

Mr. Courtemanche: I may tell the hon. member for Hull that special legislation in this regard was passed in 1934.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, the special legislation concerned French money and English money; as for bilingual money, I think the bill was passed in 1937 and—

Mr. Johnson: If you know all about it, why do you ask?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, if you know, why put questions about it. You are just out to make trouble.

Mr. Caron: I haven't been a minister's secretary, to get information.

Mr. Pigeon: You lack the required ability.

Mr. Caron: I possibly didn't lack the required brains.

Mr. Pigeon: You never had the know-how.

Mr. Johnson: This is just a build-up for his election as mayor.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): May I ask a question of the hon. Secretary of State? Could the hon. Secretary of State tell me how it is that the invitations and the program for the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty were printed in English only, rather than in both languages?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): I shall check on that, Mr. Speaker, and reply to the question later.

Mr. Caron: A supplementary question. I hope it will not be necessary to pass a special bill for that purpose.

An hon. Member: No. It is merely a matter of convincing the Liberals, in the department, to do their job properly.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

GRUMMAN SA-16—INQUIRY AS TO MANUFACTURE IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Defence Production. Has the Canadian government made any request to manufacture in Canada, under licence, the SA-16 Grumman for the R.C.A.F.?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): In answer to that question I would say that when the government makes a decision on the replacement of the Canso aircraft for rescue work they will certainly take into consideration the advantages and disadvantages of manufacture under licence in Canada.

U.S. NAVY—ALLEGED REFUSAL TO ACCEPT BIDS FROM CANADIAN COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Is it a fact that the United States navy will not accept bids from Canadian companies for naval contracts unless these companies are providing such items for the Canadian government?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): In reply I may say that this is news to me. I do not think this report is true, but I shall attempt to have it verified and give the hon. member an answer.

Mr. Chevrier: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Defence Production. Will he produce and table in the house the speech alleged to have been made by the director of the aircraft branch of his department, to which reference was made in Hansard of yesterday?

Mr. O'Hurley: I cannot give this information. This was a closed meeting with the association and that information relates to security, so I cannot give it.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a supplementary question. Does the minister feel that he cannot table the speech, notwithstanding the fact that it was substantially reported in the press by a number of papers?

Mr. O'Hurley: There was no speech. It is speculation. There was no speech prepared and given at this meeting.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PROCEDURE FOR OBTAINING CONTRACTS UNDER PRODUCTION SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Will the minister advise the house what the procedures are for obtaining contracts under production sharing, which his officials outlined to members of the aircraft industry at a meeting on March 23, and to which the minister referred yesterday?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Laurier in connection with the procedures discussed at this meeting, I said I would restate the policy of the government on every occasion. That policy is to brief companies on how to approach prime contractors of the government of the United States in order to get contracts, and I can say that several companies have been very successful. I will be making a statement in due time about the success we are having. Our department is prepared every day to brief Canadian manufacturers as to where to go in the United States, whom to contact, at what time and on what contracts.

Mr. Chevrier: Is there a special procedure in connection with that statement the minister has made, and if there is would he table it in the house?

Mr. O'Hurley: There is no special procedure, so I have none to table.

TRADE

CANNED APPLES—IMPORTS FROM JAPAN TO B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house if any canned, solid pack apples have been imported into British Columbia from Japan since January 1, 1958? If so, in what quantities and at what values?

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether or not the minister carries that information around with him. I suggest the question might better go on the order paper.

Mr. Robichaud: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, notice of this question has been sent to the minister.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The notice was sent to me about half an hour before the house assembled. How the information could be assembled in that time, I do not know. The question is a proper one for the order paper, because it refers to statistics.

[Mr. O'Hurley.]

Mr. Robichaud: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, notice was sent this morning before lunch.

An hon. Member: What time do you have lunch?

REPORTED DEFICIT FOR FIRST TWO MONTHS OF 1959

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Owing to the fact that our external trade deficit for the first two months of 1959 is almost $130 million, which is approximately three times higher than it was last year and the second highest for that two-month period in our history, can the minister tell the house whether he intends to take steps to meet the situation?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will agree that this question is of the same order as the one asked by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard). It is a general inquiry with regard to a continuing situation, and not suitable to be answered by a short answer on the orders of the day. If he had some specific inquiry about the responsibilities of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I would let it go, but not to invite him to give a general discourse on the balance of trade.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY ONTARIO ATTORNEY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration; I regret not having been able to give her notice. This question arises out of a news item in the Gazette this morning to the effect that Attorney General Roberts of Ontario felt there was need for an inquiry to correct the provisions of the Indian Act. I wonder if the attorney general has ever communicated any suggestions for changes to the minister.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The answer is no.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to comply with the request of the attorney general that the federal government set up an inquiry into the situation on the Six Nations reserve?

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not know what the hon. member has in mind. I must also admit that I do not know precisely what the attorney general had in mind.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was wondering that myself.

Mrs. Fairclough: As all hon. members of this house know, there will be a joint committee of both houses of parliament which will meet after the Easter recess. It seems to me that will provide the very best opportunity that the members of the Six Nations could have to present their case to a most sympathetic inquiry board.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION ON LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): In the absence of the Minister of Justice, who has just been called out of the house, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister say whether the controversial Newfoundland legislation is still being studied by the cabinet and whether a decision as to disallowance has yet been made?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the fullest consideration is being given to that problem.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

HAZELTON, B.C.—STATEMENT ON DERAILMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Skeena inquired about a C.N.R. derailment near Hazelton.

The management of the railway advised me that a freight train was derailed on Saturday, March 21, on the Bulkley subdivision, near Hazelton, because of a rock slide. Unfortunately the engineer was fatally injured. An investigation is under way, but the management point out that it has been established that a rock slide was the cause of the accident.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY CANADIAN COMMANDER IN EUROPE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he can comment on a statement reported in today's Globe and Mail and attributed to the commander of the Canadian brigade in Europe. The statement to which I refer is, "Our defence plans are based on the nuclear weapon".

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the commander of the brigade in Europe operates under the general term of SACEUR, the commander of the European forces in Europe.

Mr. Pearson: I have a supplementary question. From that statement am I to infer that the decision whether to use or not to use nuclear weapons by the brigade in Europe will be made by SACEUR?

Mr. Pearkes: A statement was made in the house about a month ago by the Prime Minister which explained the arrangements that were being worked out between Canada and the NATO authorities for the use of nuclear weapons by the brigade. I have nothing further to add to that statement.

NORAD—REPORTED U.S. RECOMMENDATIONS FOR CO-ORDINATION OF SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence based on a press report in the Ottawa Journal of March 23 that a special division of the United States air force is now preparing recommendations for co-ordinating the North American air defence system. Can the minister say if, in view of the fact that NORAD is a joint command, representatives of Canada are taking part in the work of this special division?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I have not seen the report, Mr. Speaker, and I would rather not answer the question until I have had an opportunity of studying it.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING ALLEGED DEFAMATORY STATEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I asked the Minister of Justice, who I regret to say is not in the house now, what steps the government proposed to take against those persons who had made defamatory and libellous statements about the conduct of the police in Newfoundland. The minister asked me to identify the statements, and I furnished the government with that information yesterday. In the absence of the minister I would now like to ask the Prime Minister what action the government proposes to take to uphold the integrity and defend the good name of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, I am sure by misadventure, failed to ask the question while the Minister of Justice was in the house, and I think he will have to allow his desire for information to await the resumption of the session.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Is the government reluctant to act because they are afraid of incurring the displeasure of Mr. Knowles—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and other politicians now in the labour movement?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was at one time over here, and apparently his statement is a reflection of the state of mind he exhibited on so many occasions when he occupied a treasury seat.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would now like to answer my question as to whether the failure to act is in order to curry favour with Mr. Knowles and his friends?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that my hon. friend get in touch with the hon. gentlemen to his right, with whom in this session there has been a close relationship.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, having regard to the heavy responsibility of his position and the seriousness and developing importance of the international situation in the next few months, he will be in a position to announce before long the appointment of a secretary of state for external affairs?

Right Hon J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the moment I think the answer I gave to the last hon. gentleman, with great respect, applies. When the house resumes the question might be asked again.

FREIGHT RATES

MEASURE RESPECTING REDUCTION OF CLASS AND COMMODITY RATES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 24, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Hees—Mr. Rea in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to direct the board of transport commissioners to require by order the reduction of class and commodity freight rates (other than competitive rates) charged by carriers subject to the order of the board dated November 17, 1958, and to authorize payments to reimburse carriers for the resulting reduction of their revenues up to an aggregate amount of twenty million dollars.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, last evening I had just begun to discuss the merits of this resolution when as the house knows I was unfortunately interrupted by an incident which we have all had occasion to regret. At that time, sir, I was discussing the resolution and its implications in so far as the board of transport commissioners' judgment of November 17, 1958 is concerned. I was about to say that the decision in its recital of the facts, which may be found on pages 5 to 7, indicates that the application made to the board stated that the cost of applying the recommendations of the conciliation board to all railway employees in the two-year period from January 1, 1958 to December 31, 1959 would add to rail expenses for the Canadian National Railways $41.5 million, and for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $26.5 million. As will be seen from the two statements which are to be found on exhibits 58-17 and 58-27, the burden of the judgment is unequally distributed between the two calendar years 1958 and 1959, being respectively $11.5 million and $30 million for the C.N.R., and $7.1 million and $19.2 million for the C.P.R.

The decision, sir, also indicates that the application stated that in order to enable Canadian National Railways to secure full requitement of the additional labour cost would require a general increase in freight rates of 19 per cent, with 25 cents on coal and coke.

Furthermore, the decision of the board sets forth in clear and unequivocal language the facts that entered into its consideration and contains an excellent review of the contention of the various parties to the application as well as a clear consideration of the law and the method followed by the board in the application of these freight rate hearings. It is sufficient, however, for my purposes at this time to say that the board considered that an increase of 17 per cent with 22 cents on coal and coke would yield revenue approximately equivalent to the amount of the Canadian Pacific's additional labour cost and accordingly authorized such increases in freight rates to be made effective on or after December 1, 1958.

During these hearings both the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific railway submitted estimates of additional revenues they would respectively receive from the increases they had applied for and these figures will be found on pages 28 and 29 of the judgment. These figures show by implication the difficulties which the railways expect to encounter in applying an increase in rates. Thus, the statement of the Canadian National Railways on page 29 indicates that on traffic moving under competitive rates, for instance, they expect to earn in 1959 revenues of $73.8 million and to receive from a 19 per cent increase additional revenue of $7.011 million, which are equivalent to an average increase of 9.5 per cent; and the Canadian National Railways expect to earn revenues of $175.1 million from all other freight traffic and to receive from a 19 per cent increase on this traffic a further $25.9 million which is equivalent to an average increase of 14.8 per cent.

In the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway the additional revenues from these two classes of traffic are estimated at amounts equivalent to average increases of 9.5 per cent and 15.2 per cent, the difference between the C.P.R. and C.N.R. percentages being attributable no doubt to different operating conditions.

The clear inference to be drawn from these estimates is that the railways believe on a substantial part of the traffic falling into one or other of these two classes it will not be possible to apply the full amount of the increase authorized. All traffic does not move under the same conditions and in some instances because of competition or because of the harsh realities of economics it is just not possible to impose a higher rate and the traffic simply will not stand for it. This is not merely a debating point, it has greater significance than that. It opens up the enormous if not insuperable difficulties of giving effect to the proposal which the minister has brought before the committee.

These are some of the questions that come to my mind: How is this subsidy to be provided for by the government? How will it be allocated? Where is the formula that will be applied in distributing this subsidy? There was no indication of that given by the minister in his statement and I presume we will not receive that, if at all, until we get the bill.

I believe it is of tremendous importance that before the committee moves on this it knows on what basis, on what formula and by what method the board or the government will apply this subsidy of $20 million. That leads me to submit to the minister and to the committee the following examples.

Let us suppose that of the great volume of traffic moving at class and commodity rates there are three items and that the railways believe that on item A the maximum increase they can apply is 5 per cent; that the maximum they can apply on item B is 10 per cent and the maximum on item C is 15 per cent. Are all the rates to be reduced by 5 per cent so that item A will not be increased at all while items B and C will be subject to increases of 5 per cent and 10 per cent, or is there to be a ratable reduction; that is, a reduction of the same percentage applicable to each? For example, will all of these rates be reduced by 40 per cent so that the new reduced rates on items A, B and C would be respectively 3 per cent, 6 per cent and 9 per cent?

The number of items in the freight rate structure, as the minister knows, is very great and it seems logical to anticipate that a percentage reduction would be the simplest solution; in other words, a horizontal reduction of horizontal increases. This brings me to a point that will probably bring memories back to the minister. I remember so well when I was on the other side of the chamber how we were taunted about horizontal increases and how we were told that every time there was an increase in freight rates the effect of that increase was unjust and unfair because of the horizontal increases to which it applied. As I look at this subsidy I can see no remedy that will in any way attenuate the effect of horizontal increases.

I should like to bring to the attention of the committee a statement that was made by the acting Prime Minister on behalf of the government, the Minister of Public Works, in the absence of the Prime Minister, when the decision was taken by the government concerning this matter. Amongst other things, Madam Chairman, the hon. gentleman said:

> It is however recognized by the government that there are serious inequities in the present freight rate structure which have both contributed to, and been aggravated by, the system of horizontal rate increases. The government has already indicated its intention to move toward a solution of these problems.

I submit that this subsidy is not in any way going to reduce the effect of these horizontal increases.

Perhaps at this point I should pause to commend and congratulate the hon. member for York-Humber who is now in the chair. I have been on the point of saying, "Mr. Chairman" once or twice, but on realizing who was in the chair I changed it to "Madam Chairman". This is a unique experience for me which I enjoy and I am sure I bespeak words on behalf of all hon. members, even my hon. friend to my left with whom I perhaps lost my patience a little too quickly this afternoon; on behalf of all of us I extend our congratulations.

I wish now to continue my argument. I am afraid the minister who made the statement to which I have just referred was not aware of the judgment; neither did he read the judgment of the board of transport commissioners. It runs right in the teeth of the statement he made. I do not think, sir,—

Mr. Hees: Madam.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you. I do not believe that horizontal increases can be disposed of in their serious implications on freight rates generally by this resolution. Let us see what the board of transport commissioners said about this question at page 14 of the judgment:

> On every application for a general increase in freight rates the matter of a uniform percentage increase has been spoken to by the parties and considered by the board. The most recent expression of the board's views is contained in its 11 per cent judgment, and in the determination of this application for interim relief the board adopts those views, which are set forth as follows:
> "The representations which have been made as to increased 'spreads' between long and short haul rates is by no means new. There are many critics who point up the undesirability of horizontal increases, particularly stressing the amounts in cents per one hundred pounds by which such 'spreads' increase, but it has not been shown in what way this feature can be avoided without either placing a higher rate burden on short haul traffic or reducing the earning power of the carriers by granting them rate levels too low to produce the revenue they should be entitled to seek for the service they provide".

Again, in the report of the royal commission which was established on transportation to deal with this matter of freight rates, there is a whole chapter by Mr. Justice Turgeon in which he deals with the effect of horizontal freight rates. On that occasion he made no recommendation in so far as a remedy for those rates was concerned. On the contrary, he stated that the matter was one for the railways and the board to determine.

The question naturally arises as to what the reduction would amount to in relation to the additional revenue which the increases are expected to yield. We know now that certain rates are being excepted; that competitive rates, international rates and import-export rates and the like are not covered in this resolution. But the minister said nothing about agreed charges. What about agreed charges? Are they covered in the subsidy? What about the piggy-back rates? Are they covered in the subsidy? When he rises to reply the minister should tell us because it is a matter of some importance to the house. What about coal and coke? Do they move under commodity rates, or are they excluded? If we assume that coal and coke, which always have been treated separately by the board, are outside the scope of the resolution, what is the amount of increase which would be subject to being affected by the proposed subsidy? To some extent the answer is found on pages 29 and 30 of the judgment which gives the estimated results of this requested increase. From the traffic under the description "all other freight traffic" the C.N.R. expected a 19 per cent increase would yield $25.9 million, while the C.P.R. expected that on its traffic such an increase would yield $20.2 million, or a total of $46.1 million. The board, however, allowed an increase of only 17 per cent. If we assume that a 17 per cent increase would yield 17/19ths of the railways' estimate, we arrive at a figure of $41.2 million as the additional revenue that may be expected from a 17 per cent increase on this traffic.

However, as the minister stated, this resolution will apply in its implications not only to the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways but to other railways. There are other class 1 and class 2 railways to which application of this resolution will be made. Exact figures are not available to me of the dollar volume of this additional traffic, but we may safely assume that the aggregate increase for all carriers would be $41.2 million plus $4.8 million or a total of $46 million. A reduction for the whole of 1959 of $20 million applicable to that total would be equivalent to 43.5 per cent. But there is nothing in the resolution to indicate whether the reduction is to be made as a specific percentage of the increase, such as 43.5 per cent, or as a specific deduction from each rate; that is, 6 per cent or 7 per cent or 8 per cent to be deducted from the 17 per cent or whatever was the actual rate of increase, which would, in my view, be wholly impractical. However, the minister did say that this was the equivalent of a 7 per cent increase. I do not see how the minister is able to make that statement because I here say that the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways themselves are not able to say what increase they will receive in commodity rates, in normal rates, from the 17 per cent order, and if they are not able to say this, how then can the minister say that the reduction will be a 7 per cent decrease?

Some questions come to my mind along these lines. One of them has already been answered by the minister. I was going to ask him how long was this subsidy going to remain in force? He has answered by saying 12 months. What happens after the 12-month period? What will happen in the light of the present application which is now before the board for a 15 per cent increase in freight rates? The minister says that it will be held up pending the determination of the long term policy of the government. Suppose it takes two years before the long term policy of the government is determined. Does that mean that meanwhile if there is an increase in cost, if there is an increase in the wages of the railway workers, the railways will not be entitled to receive the increase in freight rates because of this? The minister has certainly not cleared this up. I think that is one of the things he must do when he rises to reply because we know that if a royal commission is established, as has been indicated, it may take many months, it may take a year or two years before a recommendation is made upon the terms of reference which will have been given to it. Does this mean that in the meantime those workers who may be entitled to increased wages because of the increased costs will be held up in their demands, or does it mean that the minister will then come along with another such resolution in which he will increase the $20 million by another amount which will look after those increased wages? If that is so, then this is in effect a way a subsidizing of wages.

Another question which arises is the following. We have observed that not all competitive rates will be increased to the full extent authorized by the board. Some of this traffic will stand only a smaller increase, perhaps 10 per cent instead of 17 per cent. In the same way some normal rated traffic may be able to stand an increase of 10 per cent. Let us suppose that such is the case. Is it the government's intention that the traffic moving under the competitive rate shall pay the full increase of 10 per cent, because in the resolution traffic moving under competitive rates is expressly excluded, but the traffic moving under normal rates shall pay only a part of the increase of 10 per cent? Would this not lead in some instances to a further revision of the rates, so that the shipper would qualify for the lower rate, with the government making good the resulting deficiency?

But apart from these questions which arise from an examination of how the proposed subsidy will work out and how it is to be applied, there is a much more important question than that. What problem is solved by this subsidy? Does it solve any problem or is it not merely a complicating factor? Does not the granting of this subsidy merely postpone this very serious and grave issue which is before the government? Does not the granting of this subsidy merely in effect do what the government ought to have done many months ago when the serious railway problem came before it for attention?

So, sir, I have no hesitation in declaring to the house that this resolution is nothing but a stop-gap arrangement. It is nothing more than the kind of solution that the government has applied to all problems. It allows all major problems to develop to a state of crisis before it acts and then it acts by writing out another cheque.

The government has known that it would have to deal with this problem since November of 1957 when the unions representing the non-operating employees of the railways served demands for increased wages, improved fringe benefits and changes in working rules. It may not have known with certainty what amount of money would be ultimately involved when these demands were finally dealt with but the government did know after the award of the conciliation board in September, 1958 how much money would have to be found. However, in characteristic fashion it waited until the last minute before it came to a decision that can only be regarded at best as an interim. I strongly believe that the interim measure will make the problem more difficult to solve and will give rise to innumerable smaller problems.

What is the government's long term policy? I think the minister owes it to the committee to tell us what the government's long term policy is. After all, parliament is being asked to vote a subsidy of $20 million and then, when it suits their convenience, the government will announce their long term policy either in the form of an investigation as I indicated last night or a royal commission. I do not think it is fair to parliament any more than it is to the people of Canada to ask for the passage of this measure without knowing what the intention of the government is. Is it intended to have an investigation into the complex freight rate structure of the country? Is it intended that there shall be a royal commission to consider the whole railway transportation problem of Canada? I believe that these things should be known before the passage of this resolution is approved.

I think we should also be told, as I said earlier, on what basis the $20 million is to be handed out. What will happen to the freight rate structure as a result of the application of the $20 million? All the minister said was that certain rates were excluded but that is not clear enough. I think that those who are particularly interested, the provinces and the railways, will want to know how this formula is to be applied. When the railways themselves have some difficulty even today in arriving at the amount of money which will be derived from the 17 per cent increase, it becomes all the more difficult to ascertain how this formula is to be applied. The minister knows that the railways are having difficulties today in increasing their rates in the light of the 17 per cent judgment. The ceilings go up but the amounts they are able to charge for traffic is uncertain and very often freight will not move on the increased rate. If the railways are having difficulties in the application of the 17 per cent increase, then a fortiori there will be difficulty unless there is a clear formula in the application of the $20 million reduction.

I think the minister is oversimplifying the situation. I think the minister believes that it is an easy formula and easy to work out. I can tell the minister that when it came to providing a formula for the $7 million bridge subsidy a tremendous amount of thinking went into the matter and the situation then, I submit with deference, was not nearly as serious as it is now. The committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines spent many hours, indeed many days, in trying to iron out a formula. It heard many representations and arrived at a formula on the basis of the trackage, the mileage, and the maintenance of that trackage over the bridge.

How is the formula going to be applied here? There is nothing indicative of that in anything that has been said by the minister so far. So I say that this matter certainly cannot be dealt with on an interim basis but must be carefully studied. The previous administration, which had a great deal of experience in this regard, proceeded by a measure which directed the board of transport commissioners to equalize freight rates and by the appointment of a royal commission to study the whole railway problem. Is the government going to do the same thing? I think the minister should tell us.

While I am on that subject, I should like to say that all of the recommendations made by the royal commission on transportation with regard to freight rates were put into effect by the former government. The minister will recall that when he sat on this side of the house we were condemned by the minister and his friends because of what we were doing at the time. The board of transport commissioners was condemned. It was said that the board of transport commissioners was useless, that its members were not performing their job. As a matter of fact, at one stage there was a motion to reduce the estimates of the board of transport commissioners to $1. That was the extent of the contribution made by some hon. members on the other side of the house at that time, but now when they are in office not only do they not dismiss the members of the board of transport commissioners but they do exactly what was done by their predecessors. They renew the appointments of certain members of the board.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: I just have one sentence before I conclude. In my opinion this measure will not solve the difficult railway and railway freight problem. We on this side of the house are extremely anxious to see the formula which will be applied and under which the board of transport commissioners will operate in distributing the subsidy of $20 million. I hope the minister will be able to let us see the bill after the passage of the resolution so that we can study all its implications.

Mr. Hees: Before the hon. member speaks, may I answer the questions put to me?

Mr. Argue: No. It is the custom of the house to hear a representative from each of the parties. I know the Minister of Transport is most anxious to follow our normal procedure because he is one who takes a great interest in the rules of the house and is always most co-operative on that score. This announcement by the Minister of Transport demonstrates that the government has broken another solemn commitment to the Canadian people, namely to prevent further increases in discriminatory freight rates. The policy of the Conservative party has been made clear in the past. The Prime Minister has made it clear. The Minister of Transport himself has spoken very often on this and other questions. The Prime Minister, in Drumheller, Alberta, on May 18, 1957, had this to say, according to press reports:

> At Drumheller he said there should be equalization of rail rates in Canada "within reasonable limits" to give a shot in the arm to agriculture and industry on the prairies.

The Canadian Press report says:

> On freight rates, he said, that a rate pattern discriminatory to the west has been made worse by recent increases. This had struck "an almost paralyzing blow" to industrial development in the west.

In the Globe and Mail, we find this report:

> He said a Conservative government would equalize freight rates as far as possible to help both agriculture and industry on the prairies compete with the rest of Canada.

Before the last general election when the board of transport commissioners had granted a 3.6 per cent increase and the government did not have this tremendous majority, they acted forthrightly, they acted with courage. They said to the board of transport commissioners that this increase would not be allowed. However, in this instance, the government not only failed to prevent an increase in freight rates but through this legislation which is forecast by the resolution and in the words of the minister they are allowing a net increase of 10 per cent even after this $20 million subsidy becomes effective.

We have now had in this country since the end of the war, a long series of increases in freight rates. The total increase to date amounts to 157 per cent. This imposes a great burden upon the remote areas of Canada, particularly the prairie provinces, British Columbia and the maritimes. Even with this legislation, this government is allowing the same practices and the same conditions to prevail as were allowed under the previous administration. We think the government should have taken the same position they took with regard to the 3.6 per cent, namely to have disallowed the 17 per cent. The government was requested to disallow the increase by eight provinces. Seldom on public matters do the provinces of this country speak with the type of unity with which they speak with regard to freight rates. Only two provinces did not join with the others in protesting increases in freight rates. I think the provincial governments of Ontario and Quebec make a mistake in not protesting increases in freight rates. I believe this is particularly true because these rates affect the more remote regions of these provinces.

The Ontario government is apparently quite ready to allow horizontal increases in freight rates to discriminate against the whole of the northern sections of Ontario. I feel the premier of Ontario has been derelict in his duty in not joining with the other eight provinces that have protested the increases in freight rates. There are a number of reasons why I feel the premier of Ontario should join with the other provinces in this regard. The main reason, of course, the economic reason, is that an increase in freight rates damages the economy of northern and northwestern Ontario. The premier of Ontario should show concern when that large section of the province is adversely affected by the actions of this government.

There is another reason why I feel the premier of Ontario should join with the other provinces and that is that perhaps he, above all others, may have some influence on this government. I would hope that in the future he would correct this very serious error and mistake. The board of transport commissioners over the years has allowed a great many increases in freight rates. I have in my hand a list of the various increases in freight rates which have been allowed since the end of the war. The number of increases, although some of them were parts of subsequent total increases, amounts to seven since the end of the war.

In assessing the need for an increase in freight rates, the board has taken the financial position of the Canadian Pacific as a yardstick, that is the net profit position. There has been a consistent and continuing complaint from the eight provinces that on this basis of assessing the freight rate requirements of this country the board of transport commissioners has been in very serious error. The board has failed to take into account the fact that the Canadian Pacific has set aside very large depletion and depreciation reserves which, in the opinion of the eight provinces, are excessive and should not be allowed. The Canadian Pacific is a mammoth organization which operates steamships and hotels and owns the controlling interest in Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, owns very large tracts of lands and holds the mineral rights on those tracts of land.

A few years ago the Canadian Pacific was showing a substantial profit because of oil revenues and revenues from its mineral rights on the land it holds, so they transferred the land from their general account to a separate account in order to make the Canadian Pacific balance sheet show a smaller profit. The board of transport commissioners by its actions in the past has shown that it is incapable of solving the problem of discriminatory freight rates in this country. We require today, I believe, a firm announcement by the government that there shall be no further horizontal increases in freight rates. The minister has said there will be no increases for a certain period of time until certain studies are made. I do not believe that is an adequate guarantee. We should have a forthright statement from the government that they will not allow further increases in freight rates in this country.

The railway must have sufficient revenue to operate. The workers who are employed by the railway companies should have a wage level in keeping with the workers in comparable occupations in this country. However, there is no reason, in our opinion, why the board should take the Canadian Pacific as the yardstick and grant increases as it has done in the past. There should be no automatic increase in freight rates because of an increase in costs, no matter what those costs may be. In the early years of confederation, it was decided under the national policy that it was necessary to the preservation of Canada as a nation to have a transcontinental railway, and subsequently to have further transcontinental railways.

It was recognized that the railroad was in some instances built through areas that were not productive, when the normal course of the railway might have been to go south of the great lakes through the United States; and some recognition was given to that consideration by the payment of a $7 million subsidy for the so-called bridge. In the opinion of the C.C.F. it is time that we adopted a national transportation policy. We believe that the government should set up a national transportation authority that would have jurisdiction over all transportation matters coming under the federal government and that its declared policy should be to equalize freight rates and to make them apply equitably in all parts of Canada.

The government is going to have to decide whether or not it will continue the present rule, namely to grant freight rate increases so that the C.P.R. will show extremely large profits, or whether it will take into account the legitimate economic interests of the maritime provinces, western Canada and the remoter sections of the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec.

From the Minister of Transport we have had so far a brief statement. In introducing a measure such as this one which entails the expenditure of $20 million, I would have thought that the minister in charge of it would have given the house the benefit of a comprehensive review of this whole question. The minister has not done that. Although the minister's major statement to the house was relatively short, I doubt that it contained as much pertinent information as the statements he made during the speech delivered last night by the hon. member for Laurier. We seem to have the government policy coming out by dribs and drabs. The Minister of Transport, interrupting the hon. member for Laurier, gave us some important information. He said this as reported at page 2208 of Hansard:

> In the meantime the government does not propose to permit any further general increases in railway freight rates.

It would be interesting to know what period this statement covers. Does the government during this parliament intend to prevent further increases in freight rates or does the government merely intend to prevent further increases in freight rates during the next 12 months? What is the government's policy with respect to further increases in freight rates?

Mr. Morris: Would the hon. member permit a question at this point? It is only intended for explanatory purposes and is not antagonistic.

Mr. Argue: Yes.

Mr. Morris: Did I understand the hon. member to say that his group favoured the fixation of the present rates and that no permit ever be granted to raise the rates and at the same time to assure that the railways would continue to operate services of benefit to Canadians and pay what we all hope would be decent living wages to railway employees? I wonder what policy he had in mind. How can he reconcile these two objectives? How can you procure from the railroads this type of service and salaries or wages without providing some method for them to recoup their income?

Mr. Argue: Of course there must be some method. I made the statement—and I think the hon. member was able to grasp it—that there should be no further horizontal freight rate increases in this country, and that there should be no further increases in commodity rates in this country. If it is necessary—and it may well be—from time to time to provide additional revenues to the railways because of increased costs, the necessity of providing additional services or improved services, then those additional costs should come from the national treasury. That is not a new statement. That is not something that is new today. The province of Saskatchewan argued this matter before the board of transport commissioners long before the establishment of the Turgeon royal commission which subsequently reported on February 29, 1951. It is interesting to know that that particular policy which the Saskatchewan government originated and initiated is getting greater and greater support from provincial governments across this country.

Mr. Morris: Will the hon. member permit one further question?

Mr. Argue: Yes.

Mr. Morris: Is the hon. member suggesting that as a form of policy his group would support the endowing of a private corporate carrier, namely the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, out of the national treasury in such circumstances as he sets forth?

Mr. Argue: We do it all the time. This government is doing it now. The hon. member has been asking me questions. I think I have the right to answer his questions. The government is doing it now with $20 million. When the question is put to the house I am certain it will receive a unanimous vote. But we also say that when the government is endowing the C.P.R. with a large part of the $20 million, an entirely different yardstick should be taken in the setting of freight rates. We say that the C.P.R. has been given larger freight rates than are necessary had the board of transport commissioners taken into account the total financial position of this mammoth and sprawling octopus, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, instead of taking into account merely the freight and railway operations of the company. The C.P.R. is in a wonderful position. The air transport board, with the government's approval, has given C.P.A.L., a C.P.R. subsidiary a chance to extend their facilities to haul passengers on transcontinental operations. The C.P.R. is in the trucking business in an extensive way. This company is in competition with itself. The more successful the C.P.R. trucking firms become, the higher the freight rates that must be paid by my hon. friend's constituents and the people of the maritime provinces and by the people who live in the western provinces. We say that it is time for a national transportation policy that would prevent further discrimination and further burdens upon the remote areas of this country. Of course that has been the declared policy of the Prime Minister since 1940. But he has made a complete reversal since he has become Prime Minister. Even with the $20 million subsidy the government is allowing a further increase in discriminatory freight rates.

We would be greatly interested in knowing whether we are to have another royal commission to look into the freight rate question. We had the Turgeon royal commission which presented a comprehensive and detailed report. The hon. member for Laurier says that all of the recommendations dealing with equalization have now been implemented. Yet freight rates are more unequal in this country than they were when the report was given to this house. As the years go by, under the corrective policy of the former administration, and under the new freight rate policy in revision, freight rates become higher, discrimination increases, and the burden on the remote sections of this country goes up. We are interested to know whether there is to be another royal commission. The member for Laurier last night said this:

> When I interrupted the minister I gathered from him that it would follow in due course that a statement would be made about the appointment of a royal commission. I did not hear that statement made but I take it that in the course of the debate at a later stage it is the intention of the minister to make that kind of announcement and to state also the terms of reference of the royal commission.

The minister replied as follows:

> I might answer the hon. member for Laurier on that point now, Mr. Chairman. A much larger, long term inquiry is under very active consideration by the government at the present time and I expect that in the very near future the Prime Minister will be making the kind of announcement to which the hon. member has referred.

I ask, is that a royal commission? How can the Prime Minister make the announcement at a later date when the Minister of Transport leaks it to the house in making the announcement that he made last night in advance of the Prime Minister?

I notice that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is in his seat. There has been a great deal of speculation as to what went on in the cabinet circles last fall when they were considering the 17 per cent increase in freight rates and the judgment which had been made by the board of transport commissioners. I have in my hand the Motor Carrier for February, 1959, which is a trade publication for truck and bus operators in Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. It has a very interesting paragraph on page 6 which is headed "Secret Sessions" and reads as follows:

> Behind closed cabinet doors in the east block Diefenbakermen—

Not Conservatives, note; "Diefenbakermen"—

> —Gordon Churchill (Manitoba) and Alvin Hamilton (Saskatchewan), had been fighting for the same remedy but opposed by finance minister Donald Fleming, generally regarded as the mouthpiece of the powerful Tory "eastern group" of finance and investment houses.

There was a tremendous skirmish in the cabinet last fall, according to this report.

> Churchill, supported in spirit at least by Manitoba Prime Minister Duff Roblin—

That is about all the support you would get, I guess, from a Tory colleague, "in spirit"— > —threatened to resign and then, as all good politicians and party stalwarts must do, subsequently denied such action.

> Out of the stormy sessions came the decision to set up a special cabinet study committee under the chairmanship of Hon. A. J. Brooks.

We would like to know if this special cabinet committee has been established. We would appreciate any comments from the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to the important role he played in pressuring his colleagues to act at least in this meager way. But in the light of those statements, I think the statement made by the hon. Minister of Transport last night takes on a great significance when he seemed to fence in his own Prime Minister by announcing to the house the statement which the Prime Minister would make at a later date. People of Canada who are bearing these tremendous burdens of freight rates are fed up to the teeth with royal commissions. We have had royal commissions into freight rates time and time again. We have had royal commissions in other fields. This is becoming a government by royal commission.

Mr. Churchill: What about your provincial government in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Argue: The provincial government in Saskatchewan is doing very well.

Mr. Churchill: You have had royal commissions, though.

Freight Rates

Mr. Argue: We have had royal commissions, as the hon. minister of northern affairs has said, in fields where no other provincial government has acted; so that Saskatchewan has the distinction of having the first reports in this field. But this government says, following the other administration: Me too. This is a hot potato. We are obviously not fulfilling our election promises; we are repudiating them, so we will set up a royal commission. We can hide behind a royal commission for a year or so. When the royal commission brings in its report, we can say it supersedes our definite election promises to the people of this country.

Those Canadians who live in the maritimes and in western Canada, the remote areas of Ontario and Quebec, say that this government has failed to fulfil its election promise to the people of Canada to prevent further increases in discriminatory freight rates. All this legislation does at best is to reduce the very serious effect of this last increase in freight rates. What this government is doing by this legislation is saying, "We shall allow freight rates in this country to be a somewhat greater burden on freight users than the very high freight rates allowed by the previous administration, about which we complained so bitterly." This is a bits-and-pieces government. This government has no policy in this field except to follow the pattern of the previous administration in hiding behind royal commissions, adding discriminatory freight rates to discriminatory freight rates, and failing to enunciate a national transportation policy that would provide equitable freight rates to all parts of this nation.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, the resolution moved last evening by the Minister of Transport concerns very seriously every province of Canada and particularly the Atlantic provinces. This resolution deals with a measure which will result in a reduction of certain class and commodity freight rates other than competitive rates. It also provides for payments to reimburse carriers for the resulting reduction of their revenues up to an aggregate amount of $20 million. The passing of such a measure will undoubtedly reduce substantially the 17 per cent increase which was authorized by the board of transport commissioners' order of November 17, 1958. In fact, it is calculated that the 17 per cent increase authorized by that order will be reduced to approximately 11 per cent, and even to 10 per cent, according to the minister's figures of last evening following the application of the measure now to be introduced.

I would like to deal at this time with the freight rate structure as it applies particularly to the Atlantic provinces. Increases in our Canadian freight rate structure have been numerous and quite substantial, particularly in the postwar period. Every Canadian citizen will recognize the handicap which the Atlantic provinces have to contend with due to difficulties of transportation, partially accounted for by our geographical position with regard to the more heavily populated sections of Canada. In fact, owing to economic, geographic and other disadvantages, the Atlantic provinces are adversely affected by transportation difficulties and are liable to suffer more from any increases which affect tariffs of tolls and rates than any other area of the country. The distance from and the cost of transportation to the great continental market centres has always been a serious handicap to maritime producers. Freight subventions extended under the Maritime Freight Rates Act have tended to offset in part only the disadvantages which affected development of our industries in the maritimes. This transportation problem has in fact been a basic part of the plan for confederation. The railway rate structure determines the distribution of railway costs between several regions and also determines to what degree different industrial and regional groups contribute to the payment of such costs.

The advantage of the Maritime Freight Rates Act enacted in 1927 by a Liberal administration, partially offsetting the disadvantage of maritime producers in relation to the central Canada market, were gradually nullified by further reductions in freight rates made by the railways themselves in central Canada to meet truck competition. It is true that a great deal has been done in recent years to offset the higher cost of marketing the products of the producers of the Atlantic region caused by the long distances between that region and markets in central Canada. This was followed by improved means of communication within the Atlantic region itself. It was agreed, as announced in March of 1957, that a thorough and comprehensive examination of the entire transportation situation in the maritime provinces should be undertaken to determine the possibility of introducing changes which could contribute to the economic welfare of this region.

The Minister of Finance then expressed the government's intention to launch an immediate review of the maritime transportation problem in general in order to put forward as soon as possible proposals to improve the transportation system generally. As a temporary measure to meet the special disadvantages offered by horizontal increases in freight rates, increases which we know have fallen more heavily on outbound traffic from the maritimes, an increase in the subventions paid under the Maritime Freight Rates Act was authorized in 1957, extending such subventions from the level of 20 per cent to the present level of 30 per cent.

When the 1958 estimates for the Department of Transport were discussed in the house the Minister of Transport was asked by the hon. member for Laurier if the study of the interdepartmental committee on maritime transportation had been completed and if a report on the matter could be expected at an early date. The minister's reply will be found on page 4357 of Hansard for August 30, 1958. I quote:

> This whole question is under intensive study at the present time, and we expect to have a report on it by the end of the year.

The end of the year has passed and we are still waiting. The freight rate boosts have moved so fast in the last decade, as was mentioned today, that we have had seven increases in the past eight years. They have increased by 154 per cent and a further request for another 12 to 15 per cent increase is now before the board of transport commissioners. The result of these increases has been a reduction in the value of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. We were pleased to hear from the minister his statement that no further increases are contemplated for the next 12 months. The reductions asked for in the measure to be introduced by the government and presently under debate will be of extremely limited advantage to the Atlantic provinces.

The terms of confederation clearly established that the maritimes should have cheap access to the markets of central Canada. The present Maritime Freight Rates Act as it now applies barely cushions the full impact of the climbing freight rates over the last 10 or 12 years. The present railway charges have a tendency to accentuate the decline of manufacturing in the Atlantic provinces and in other outlying parts of Canada. This policy is clearly reflected by the tendency of our Canadian industries to concentrate their operations right in the middle of the market or at the nearest possible distribution point.

The people of the maritimes have become more and more aware that what is needed today is the bold, comprehensive and coordinated approach to our transportation problem which was so clearly indicated in the Gordon commission report. The narrowing of such differences and disadvantages by effective changes in the horizontal per ton mile policy of rate increases will substantially help the maritimes to improve the present climate for industrial development. The plea of the maritimes is based on a confederation commitment which involves the importance of our access to central Canadian markets which access is deteriorating due mainly to the increased cost of transportation together with the contraction of foreign markets particularly as these questions affect our lumber industry.

I should like to quote one paragraph of the report of the Turgeon commission which dealt with transportation. At page 27 in the third paragraph outlining alleged disadvantages, we read:

> The maritime provinces state that when compared to central Canada their economy is found to be deteriorating and that this trend is influenced by the increased cost of transportation to central Canada and by the contraction of foreign markets; for example the loss of markets for apples, lumber and pit props in the United Kingdom, and potatoes in the United States.
> The case of the maritimes may be summarized: At confederation they were promised access to the central Canadian market. Today, in view of the deterioration in foreign trade, particularly because of monetary and commercial restrictions, access to the central Canadian market has become more important than ever. Isolation of the maritimes from the central Canadian area as a result of distance and of increased freight charges is one of the central themes put forward in their case. A witness for the transportation commission of the maritime board of trade, when asked whether or not the maritimes were willing to accept their disadvantages provided they retained their advantages, replied:
> "The national background in connection with our intercolonial railway was to afford persons and industries to get into the markets of central Canada. That is the basic principle."
> The Maritime Freight Rates Act is regarded as the instrument intended to facilitate access to the central Canadian markets. It was suggested by the same witness that this instrument is losing its effectiveness:
> "The general tenor of the evidence of the maritime approach . . . is that the changes which have taken place since the Maritime Freight Rates Act became effective in 1927 are having the effect of enhancing the difficulty of maritime producers in reaching the highly competitive markets of central Canada in competition with industries located closer to the markets."

The report of this royal commission is perhaps the best document ever prepared on the subject of freight rate problems in the maritimes and other sections of Canada affected by transportation difficulties. Maritime shippers claimed, and rightly so, that recent changes have decreased the advantages which the rates established under the act of 1927 intended to confer on the maritimes. I may not want to go as far as to disapprove of the statutory Crowsnest pass agreement but nevertheless the rest of Canada must be made aware—and this applies particularly to the prairie provinces—that the board of transport commissioners are not now in a position to grant rates which are just and reasonable to the lumber industries because of inequities in the rate structure which are beyond the board's power. This matter was dealt with thoroughly in the submission of the Canadian lumbermen's association to the cabinet committee on freight rates on January 9 of this year. Without disapproving of the Crowsnest pass agreement, I would suggest however that its application should motivate the government to give further consideration to the added burden which is automatically thrown on other traffic, including lumber.

The Canadian lumbermen's association is rightly concerned about the effect of increased freight rates on lumber which is called upon to bear such a proportion of each mileage rate increase when applied to our eastern Canadian lumber industry.

I am not surprised to see the New Brunswick sawn lumber production decrease from a total of 281 million board feet in 1956 to 244 million in 1957 and to 198 million in 1958, a reduction of approximately 30 per cent in the period of the last three years. I am not surprised also that our lumber dealers are under the impression that the lumber rates are being called upon more and more to subsidize the statutory grain rates. This leads me to remind the government of the events leading to confederation in 1867, and of the responsibilities deriving from this union of the provinces. There must be, however, ways and means of adjusting existing differences without interfering with the present arrangement for the transportation of grain to ports of exit. It must be recognized, however, that lumber provides earnings in excess of the national average, and such finished commodities as veneer and plywood are far beyond the national average rate. Such anomalies should not be allowed in our national transportation system, and adequate measures should be found to correct these irregularities by the application of a long range plan formulated to give equal opportunity and equal justice to all concerned.

In a formal statement issued by the government, following the acceptance of a new freight rate increase in November of last year, it was admitted that there are serious inequities in the present freight rate structure which have both contributed to and been aggravated by the system of horizontal rate increases. The government informed the country that a study was being undertaken at once to work out measures to relieve the inequities in the freight rate structure, including any that may be aggravated by the last increase of 17 per cent. It was made clear that the intention of the government was to provide both an immediate alleviation of discrimination where it exists and a long term solution to the broader problems. Recent events, such as the last increase mentioned, which has been followed by a new demand for a further increase of 14 to 15 per cent will definitely make it difficult for the government to carry on with its "hold-the-line" policy of fighting the wage-price spiral and inflation which we are facing today. Again I want to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that we were pleased to learn from the minister last evening that it is the intention of the government not to allow any further increase, at least for a limited period.

It is true that the approval of the measure to be followed by the present resolution will reduce by approximately one-third the additional burden of the latest freight rate increase. It is also true that the major share of this increase is being paid by the western and the Atlantic provinces, and such boosts place unfair burdens on Canada's outlying regions. Horizontal increases, when applied on a uniform percentage basis, destroy the advantages which the Maritime Freight Rates Act was designed to give to our area. This measure introduced by the government at the present time will do very little to alleviate this situation.

We all remember that one of the main pledges of the Atlantic resolutions which, as I have stated before in this house, is very familiar to government members, was to bring the maritimes a better transportation deal. It has been made clear that 75 per cent of this increase will fall on classes of rates which provide the railways with only 32 per cent of their revenues. In other words, roughly one-third of the railway traffic is being asked today to pay about three-quarters of the revenue which the railways expect to derive from the last rate boost. We in the Atlantic provinces are on the receiving end of this iniquitous additional burden and the pledge of the Atlantic resolutions must be implemented without delay to protect the vital interests of the Atlantic provinces in this matter of transportation.

It has been stated that the role of the railways was to serve the Atlantic interests without prejudicing particular industries and areas. The application of a similar policy resulted in the implementation of the Maritime Freight Rates Act in 1927, but events of the last 10 or 12 years clearly show that the advantages of such an act are being scuttled under the series of rate increases which have reached over 106 per cent since 1949. We want to make it clear that the outlying regions of the country cannot be expected to bear the heaviest share of the burden in serving the national interest, and this applies also to the fight against the present trend of inflation, which is a serious menace to the economy of the country.

We are asking the government for full compensation for the inequalities imposed upon us, and we insist on legislation which will provide a formula to protect us from the ill effects of future rate increases which are expected to follow.

While we will support the present legislation we reserve the right, however, to regard it as a temporary measure only, which will alleviate in part the discrimination in Canada's freight rate structure. It is only a half way measure which does not provide the full protection promised in the Atlantic resolutions, and is far from reaching this new deal which would give our products easy access to the markets of Canada.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a minute to indicate my own interest in this resolution, as I am sure all maritime members of parliament would. This is a resolution which I am sure it would be desirable to pass today and also second reading of the bill by agreement so that we could begin the hearings of the—

Mr. Argue: No.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —committee as suggested by the minister last night, on Tuesday following our Easter recess. I do want to say—and perhaps I disagree to some extent with the hon. member for Assiniboia in this regard—that we in the maritimes welcome the comprehensive survey which is promised, whether it is a royal commission or not, because our main difficulty, the unsolved problem, is the movement of our industry into the competitive area of central Canada. While we do know that problem, we are not—I think this is agreed to by all—in a position at this time to say what is the actual remedy.

Everyone knows the situation. The hon. member who has just taken his seat has given us the complete story. We all have files and speeches of our own in similar vein. We do know the difficulty. It is one of the problems which looms very great in our eyes, particularly when one considers the optimistic outlook which now exists in the maritimes. Our power situation is much better. Many of our other minor difficulties are being solved but this is our unsolved problem.

We look forward to considering this legislation in committee, which will perhaps be a beginning, and we further welcome the comprehensive survey which has been promised by the Prime Minister and which will be announced shortly.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, in rising to say a few words on this resolution I wish to congratulate the Minister of Transport upon bringing this resolution forward. Speaking as a representative from a rural constituency in Alberta, I can safely say I think I speak for the rest of the farmers from the province of Alberta when I say this resolution will be welcomed because when we listen to the hon. member for Assiniboia speak about the cost-price squeeze it always seems to me and to members on this side that he overlooks one thing. The cost-price squeeze is a matter of labour costs and other costs.

Let us take an example for a few moments some of the things that the farmers in Alberta have to buy. Let us take a 14-foot ordinary combine. In 1953, a combine cost $5,750 while in 1959 the cost is $9,800, an increase of $4,000. Much of the increase reflects increased labour costs as well as increased freight costs. That is just one example and I am going to give a few more. That is why this legislation will be welcomed by the farmers of the province of Alberta.

There is one thing that is overlooked by the hon. member for Assiniboia when he talks about freight rates and this matter is sometimes misunderstood in western Canada. The Crowsnest pass rates have been in existence since 1897 and apply to the shipment of various grains. We have been assured by the Prime Minister and the government that they will remain in existence. I am certain that the farmers of my constituency and elsewhere in the province of Alberta welcome that.

I should like to give a few more examples of increased costs, and increased costs are the reason why if some western farmer were here this afternoon and could speak instead of myself he would support the resolution. Over a period of five years the price of a self-propelled swather, for example, has increased by $200. Tractor prices have increased by $1,700. Prices of disc hauls have gone up $710, and so on. I could give a whole list of farm machinery to show that costs have doubled since 1953.

Much of the increase has been due to increased labour costs. When I listen to the hon. member for Assiniboia, who comes from the same province in which I was raised, I often wonder why he does not tell the full story. We in western Canada know that the 17 per cent increase in freight rates came about because the men of the railways asked for an increase in wages. Now the government is acting to cut the increase to 10 per cent with the result that the men on the railways have got their increase and the farmers of western Canada have the advantage of the $20 million provided in the resolution. That seems to be the whole story.

When the members of the C.C.F. speak either in the province of Saskatchewan or in this house I always feel that they only tell half the story and leave the other half untold. That is what prompted me to say a few words on behalf of the province of Alberta. I think that the member for Assiniboia, who leads his party in the house, should remember that when his friend Stanley Knowles brings about the marriage of the labour group with his group the farmers are going to take heed and will take into account that the increased freight rate costs were brought about by the demands of labour for more money. When that marriage comes about I am quite certain the C.C.F. will lose their influence in the rural communities of Saskatchewan as well as whatever influence they have in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to learn that the C.C.F. has influence in rural Alberta. That is the finest news I have heard in the house for some days. I assure the minister that I will not take my allotted time and will leave him enough time to reply, as I know he wishes to do. I wish to endorse the plea that a national transportation policy be established. We are being asked today to provide the railroads of Canada with an amount of $20 million. There are many Canadians who look a bit askance each time the parliament of Canada is asked for what amounts to a handout or subsidy to any one enterprise. Therefore when we are asked to vote $20 million to the railroads of Canada it causes us to consider the terms under which the subsidy will be paid.

I notice that the resolution contains one term, namely that the subsidy will be paid if there is a reduction in certain rates. All the speeches thus far have tended to deal only with the condition of rates. I can defend the policy of the government in handing to the railway companies a fixed sum of money if the railways are offering services to the Canadian public that are not in themselves of a profit-making nature, and I believe that is the main argument underlying the resolution. The people of the far eastern and western provinces are to be given some relief and the taxpayers generally are being asked to share with them the heavy burden of moving goods to and from central Canada.

I think that the resolution will receive the unanimous support of members of the house. However, I should like to see the terms imposed on the railroads take in a few other factors as well. I believe that all Canadians, so far as is reasonably possible, should have available to them the services of Canadian railways. What I have in mind at this time may involve something that would not mean a great net return to the railroad companies. However, in travelling to Toronto from western Ontario recently on the C.P.R. line I was rather impressed by something I observed. The train came to a stop and we were informed that we had arrived at West Toronto. Some miles beyond the train again came to a stop and we were told we had arrived at the suburb station of Parkdale. I looked out the window and saw the C.P.R. station. Then I looked out another window and saw the C.N.R. station. In other words, Parkdale a suburb of Toronto, has two railway stations. Several miles farther on the train finally arrived at the union station.

The point I want to make is that if the people of Canada are going to be asked to subsidize the railroads then as many of them as possible should be given service by the railroad. In metropolitan Toronto there is a reasonable number of railroad stations to serve the suburban areas and the same situation prevails in the suburbs of Montreal. However, hitherto the railroad companies have refused to extend the same service to the suburbs of other metropolitan areas of Canada. I fail to understand why, for example, the municipality of Burnaby from which I come, with a population of 100,000, should continually be denied the service of a railway station. Possibly one reason why the people of Burnaby do not use the railways more than they do is that they always have to go to the heart of the city of Vancouver if they want to do any business with the railways. If the people of Burnaby are going to be taxed in order to provide this subsidy, then I believe that the railway companies should give some consideration to providing our people with as many railway facilities as can be reasonably provided.

I have noted that we are being asked for a subsidy for the operation of railroads and I assume that most of the major railway companies in Canada will be involved. We have the Canadian National railways, Canadian Pacific railway, the Pacific Great Eastern railway, the Northern Alberta railway, and I do not know exactly how many other companies that are going to be involved in this subsidy.

If we are speaking of subsidies, then the people of British Columbia have a claim against the federal treasury. We hope that before the government goes too far in subsidizing the operations of railroads they will remember that they have not yet paid us the customary railroad building subsidy for the extension of the Pacific Great Eastern from Prince George into the Peace river block. If we are speaking of subsidies, let us put first things first, and let us pay off this obligation which is owing to British Columbia for the building of that railroad extension.

One of the services that we expect the railroad companies to supply to the Canadian people, and for which we are willing to allow subsidies, is what we often call the unprofitable branch line services. We contend, and I think parliament has accepted over the years, that many areas of Canada must be served by railroads, whether or not such service means a net return to the company. It is for that purpose that in the past much money has been voted to the railroads by this house and likely will again in the years to come.

I am not making particular reference at this time to the fairly well populated sections of Alberta that are going to be asked to share in the cost of this subsidy. However, there is a section of Alberta in which the people have been waiting for the services of a railroad for 40 years or more. I regretted very much the other evening that the members from northern Alberta could not seem to make up their minds as to where the proposed new railroad ought to be built. I have no hesitation at all in advocating that this railroad be built up in a northwesterly direction to connect with the Pacific Great Eastern. This would supply much needed rail service to the thousands of people living in the farm communities north of Grimshaw, Alberta.

I do not want to become involved in the argument as to whether the extension should go from Pine Point to Grimshaw or Pine Point to Dawson. This is a matter for others to decide. However, if the farmers around Fort Vermilion, who will have to pay for this subsidy, had this railroad extension they would receive over 30 cents more for each bushel of wheat they had to sell. I do not see why the government should even contemplate the building of a railroad in a southeasterly direction, mostly over rock, when there is southwest of the Great Slave lake, old, settled communities that have waited for so very long for the fulfilment of an obligation assumed by those who encouraged them to settle there many years ago.

I know the minister is anxious to reply, and I have only one other non-profitable service to list. I am going to be very brief. I think all members of this committee would much more gladly allow this subsidy to be paid to the railroad companies of Canada if these companies gave a fair deal to the older, retired pensioners. In this connection, I would specifically refer to the Canadian Pacific railway which, since 1947, has allowed a 45 per cent increase in the pensions of those of its employees who worked and are retired in the United States. However, those who were retired prior to 1953, and who had worked and lived in Canada, have never received any increase at all. It is shameful that so many of these people have to eke out their last days on pensions of $35 and $40 a month.

I have attempted, Mr. Chairman, to list a few of the unprofitable operations that we would like to see the railroads of Canada undertake. If these services were undertaken, that would help to obtain the endorsement of the Canadian taxpayer for the intent of this resolution being implemented. The unprofitable services to which I referred were the suburban areas where newer metropolitan regions are not receiving the services they should be receiving; the retired pensioners of both major railroad companies who are not getting the deal they should, and certainly the people in northwestern Alberta should be told at this time that they are going to be given the blessing of railway service in the not too far distant future.

Mr. Batten: I know the minister is anxious to reply, so I shall not take up very much time in making my few remarks. Earlier in this session, I did make some remarks concerning freight rates in my own province of Newfoundland. Once again I want to indicate our interest in this subject during the discussion of this particular resolution. I think the Canadian people have to face the fact that we do have a problem so far as rail transportation is concerned. We not only have the problem of providing efficient rail service for the Canadian people, but also we have the problem of paying the cost and equating the one to the other.

Over the past few years we have had a number of rather substantial freight rate increases. When these increases are applied horizontally across the board, I think it is easy to understand that those provinces which are to the west and to the east are likely to bear the bigger burden. In my province of Newfoundland, of course, the matter of freight rates is of particular interest. Our main line across the island is operated by the Canadian National and carries a large percentage of the freight which travels from east to west or west to east. Then, too, we have some 1,300 communities situated around the coast of Newfoundland which are serviced by the Canadian National boats, in the main. The result is that any increase in freight rates affects not only those people in Newfoundland who are served by the Canadian National trains but also those who are served by the C.N.R. boats.

If I may digress here for a moment, I should like to say that during the last three or four months we have been fortunate in having the services of the William Carson on the Port aux Basques-North Sydney line. I should like to tell the minister now that, in my view, this operation has been comparatively satisfactory even in one of the worst winters we have had for many years. During the years that I have been a member of the House of Commons I have always received a good deal of correspondence during the early part of December and the latter part of February concerning the backlog of freight for Newfoundland that has piled up at North Sydney. Since the William Carson went into service last October, I have not had one letter concerning freight that has not reached Newfoundland at the proper time. I believe that the William Carson, even during this very hard winter, has given satisfactory service. Later on in the year, when the regular routine is observed again, the William Carson will give us good service not only in so far as freight is concerned but also in the transportation of passengers and this will build up our tourist trade.

I do feel that there are many questions in connection with this proposal which need to be answered. I should like to know particularly how this particular subsidy is going to be applied. What will be the formula and how will it affect those provinces which are west of central Canada as well as those which are east of central Canada, particularly my own province which is the farthest east. However, while I do support this resolution, I am going to withhold my questions until the minister presents his bill and we have a better opportunity of understanding what his intentions are in this regard.

Mr. Hees: When the hon. member for Laurier was speaking, he asked three questions that I should like to answer now. First of all he asked how the formula will be applied. Before I say anything on that matter I should like to tell him and the other members of the committee that this plan for alleviating the burden of freight rates, as we are doing, was not worked out in a casual manner whatsoever. A great deal of time and thought were put on it. It is an extremely difficult problem. It was worked on during many meetings by a committee composed of cabinet ministers and officials.

The plan which has been arrived at has the full concurrence of and was worked out by the chief commissioner of the board of transport commissioners and his experts. I have great pleasure in assuring the hon. member for Laurier that I have been assured and the committee was assured that this is a workable plan. Also one of the reasons for referring this bill to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines is this. If there are technical questions having to do with freight rates and their operation, that committee will afford to all hon. members an ideal opportunity to question officials on the more technical aspects of this bill and how it will operate. However, I think I can generally answer the questions put to me by the hon. member for Laurier by going back over a few of the things I said in my opening statement. With regard to how this formula will be applied, which was the question asked by the hon. member, I said this as reported at page 2207 of Hansard:

> As an interim measure designed to alleviate the burden of the authorized increase in rates, the proposed legislation provides for a subsidy of $20 million over a 12-month period, to be paid to the companies that are subject to the board's order No. 96300 as reimbursement for such reductions in rates as they may be directed to make pursuant to this legislation. The companies that are subject to order No. 96300, and thereby come within the scope of this legislation, are principally the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its leased lines, and a number of smaller railway companies which are member lines of the railway association of Canada; and the water carriers who participate in joint water-rail, and rail-water-rail routes, that is the Canada Steamship Lines, Northwest Steamship Company and Canadian Pacific Great Lakes Steamships—
> The legislation provides that the board shall require the companies to reduce their class and commodity rates by such amounts as to effect a reduction in their revenues obtained from this traffic by $20 million during a 12-month period. The exact reduction in rates which will thereby result is a matter which will depend upon traffic volume and not one which the government, by legislation, could fix in advance. I may say, however, that on the basis of the present volume and pattern of traffic it has been estimated that the application of the $20 million subsidy on the basis which I have outlined will permit a reduction of some seven percentage points, thereby making the authorized increase approximately 10 per cent in lieu of 17 per cent.

That is the general pattern of how the reduction will be made. As far as the technical details are concerned, the chief commissioner of the board of transport commissioners has assured me that there will be no problem arising there, and that it could be done with relative ease. If there are other technical questions which the hon. member for Laurier would like to ask with regard to how this will be done, I would suggest that those questions will most easily be answered when the committee meets.

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt the minister at this point?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister said that the reduction would be in the neighbourhood of seven per cent. My question then is this. Will the 17 per cent increase in freight rates be reduced en bloc by seven per cent by the board of transport commissioners?

Mr. Hees: This reduction will apply only to non-competitive class and commodity rates.

Mr. Chevrier: To the extent of seven per cent?

Mr. Hees: To the extent of seven per cent; yes.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister another question.

Mr. Hees: I should not like to say exactly seven per cent. As I outlined earlier, it will be something in the neighbourhood of seven per cent.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not holding the minister to that answer because I know the matter is a technical one. I also know that it is going to be a little bit more difficult than the minister anticipates, but I do not want to discuss that matter now. The other question I wanted to ask is this. The minister indicated that the board was requiring the companies to reduce their rates. He read from the statement he had made originally. What I should like to know is this. How is the board going to direct the companies to do this? There must be a formula of some kind.

Mr. Hees: The chief commissioner of the board of transport commissioners assured the committee that this would be feasible, that he saw no problem whatsoever. I cannot answer further than that, not being a rate expert myself. However, I am sure that the questions of the hon. member for Laurier will be answered by the chief commissioner when the committee meets; and I hope it will meet soon after the Easter recess.

The second question the hon. member for Laurier asked was to what will this reduction apply? Again I should like to refer to what I said in my opening statement as follows:

> The government has decided that the most effective relief is to be afforded by confining the subsidy to a reduction in the non-competitive class and commodity rates, including the joint rail-water rates which are differentially related to the rail rates. These rates are generally known as "normal" rates, and are the ones which have taken the full percentage increases authorized by the board over many years.
> This manner of alleviation concentrates the benefits on the long haul traffic where rates have not been kept down by competition. The subsidy will not apply toward a reduction in the other rate categories which I have referred to, whether or not they were authorized to be increased under the board's order.

The third question was this. What will happen at the end of the year? Again I should like to refer to my statement in which I said as follows:

> As hon. members know, the government has indicated its intention of proceeding with a comprehensive inquiry into matters affecting the railways. The proposed legislation therefore limits the assistance to a 12-month period, when it is hoped a report will be available to the government. Consideration will then be given to means of further relieving the unfair discriminatory burden of the freight rate structure . . . In the meantime the government does not propose to permit any further general increases in railway freight rates.

I think that is the fullest answer I can give.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may, I should like to follow that matter up with one or two questions. Suppose the inquiry to which the minister has referred—the over-all survey that is to be made of the freight rate structure—lasts for more than a year or more than 12 months. What will happen in that eventuality?

Mr. Hees: That is a problem which we shall have to face in the months ahead. That will be the responsibility of the government. I can assure the hon. member for Laurier that we accept that responsibility.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not a very satisfactory answer. I am not pressing unduly but I think the experience of the house is that if this is the kind of survey or inquiry which the minister and the acting minister indicated it would be, it cannot be finished in 12 months. I therefore think the house is entitled to know what happens.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated, we hope to have a report by that time. If we do not have a report by that time, then it will be up to the government to decide what course of action it will take. When the freight rate increase went into effect last December we had a number of cabinet meetings and we decided what course of action we would take. We decided that we would take the action outlined in this bill, and as we stated at that time there would be a further long term study made. That is the decision which the cabinet made late last November or December. After the passage of perhaps eight, nine or ten months, as it becomes more apparent what progress the long term inquiry will be making, then the government will have to consider the matter again, and in the light of what has taken place we will make further decisions. Those decisions are our responsibility, and as I told the hon. member we will not shirk that responsibility and I feel sure the government will take the right action.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister said that the reduction would be in the neighbourhood of further applications to the board. There is now one pending in the amount of 15 per cent, if I am correct. If that matter were disposed of before the 12-month period, what would the position be?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, this bill deals with the next 12 months, and the matter the hon. member has brought up will be considered and dealt with, just as I stated a few moments ago, after probably eight, nine or ten months have passed and we see what has happened in the meantime and what the circumstances are then. In light of the circumstances existing at that time we will decide once again for the future.

Mr. Chevrier: I hope the hon. minister will not think I am being a nuisance—

Mr. Hees: Not at all.

Mr. Chevrier: —but I would like to get a little more clarification. An application before the board normally does not last 12 months but is disposed of as a rule, in my experience, before that time. Say the application were disposed of in three months from now, what would the position of the government then be on an application which was allowed, say, for a portion of the 15 per cent?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I think that is a hypothetical question. I will again remind the hon. member of what I have said regarding this. The proposed legislation limits the assistance to a 12-month period. At the end of the statement I made last night I said that in the meantime the government does not propose to permit any further general increases in railway freight rates. I cannot make that any clearer.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. minister elaborate a bit on what the nature of this proposed long term investigation will be? If I may ask, will it be a royal commission or will it be an investigation? Can the minister give some indication of what its terms of reference will be?

Mr. Hees: As I indicated last night, Mr. Chairman, all of that will be dealt with very fully by the Prime Minister in the near future.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the hon. minister give any indication of when the Prime Minister will make his statement?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman, I cannot.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, there has been some confusion about this matter and I would like to ask the hon. minister if he would give a clearer explanation of the position of an individual province under the terms of the resolution which is now before us. I have in mind, of course, my own province of British Columbia. As the hon. minister knows, over the years now British Columbia has had to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in research and in presentations before the board because of the position of that province in relation to the freight rate situation. I am sorry, but I am not yet clear what will be the position of British Columbia as far as the present proposition is concerned. Quite honestly, I do not think it will help us any in British Columbia, and I would like to hear from the hon. minister what the position of British Columbia is in relation to the present situation. Also, in this plan of investigation and inquiry, what is the situation as far as representation is concerned by a province from a short range and a long range point of view? But my main question is, what will be the position of British Columbia under the present plan?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, there is no differentiation in this bill between one province and another. This deals with non-competitive class and commodity rates on freight hauls in no matter which province they happen to be. I cannot tell the hon. member exactly what percentage of the $20 million will go to British Columbia or any other province. Naturally it is impossible for me to tell him that. As far as British Columbia is concerned, British Columbia will be treated equally fairly with all other provinces. There is no inclination to discriminate against any province. This act, as I said in my original statement, is to help those who pay freight rates on the long haul, because they are the ones who suffer most. It is our intention to alleviate the burden of those who suffer most by these freight rates.

Mr. Winch: As far as British Columbia is concerned, I say that the freight rates in British Columbia make that province suffer the most. I remember—

Mr. Hees: Could I say this, Mr. Chairman? If British Columbia is suffering the most, then British Columbia will get the most.

Mr. Winch: I will be very happy to accept what the minister has said, if he would just explain how British Columbia will benefit most under the proposition now before us. I remember very well only a few years ago a former member sitting on the same side of the house, a Liberal, by the name of McGeer, put up a fight on behalf of freight rates as far as British Columbia was concerned. He was the first man who found out that on rail travel from Calgary to Vancouver it was downhill. There was then a change of freight rates. But British Columbia is in a spot. That province spends more money, and it always has, on trying to work out a decent—the Minister of Transport has asked me to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman, I have not. I was trying to ask in an informal way, it being close to six o'clock if the hon. member would not let me get the resolution through? If he does not wish me to, then it will go over.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, freight rates are important to British Columbia. May I call it six o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I have some indication from the hon. member who is leading the house as to what the business will be on Monday, April 6, when we reconvene? I hope the minister will be in a position to give us as much of the business for the succeeding days as possible.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, when the house reassembles on Monday, April 6, it will be engaged in private members' bills. On Tuesday, April 7, we will proceed with the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Transport. The second item of business will be second reading of the act to amend the Canada Shipping Act also standing in the name of the Minister of Transport. The third item will be the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with amendments to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. That is as far as we can forecast the business of the house. I regret I cannot inform the hon. member with regard to the following days.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, until Monday, April 6, 1959, pursuant to the order of the house passed on March 9, 1959.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

STRONTIUM 90—BONE ANALYSES

Question No. 133—Mr. Argue:

1. Is the government making any investigations as to the level of strontium 90, presently being found in the bones of: (a) children; (b) adults; (c) animals?

2. If so, what are the results shown in each case, for each year in which the investigations have been made?

3. What are the supposedly tolerable levels of strontium 90 in each of the above categories?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

	1.	2. Strontium units
(a) Children	Yes	1956—1.5 (average) 1957—1.5
(b) Adults	Yes	1956—0.3 (average) 1957—0.3
(c) Animals	Yes, but not regularly	1956—5.4 (average) 1957— —

3. The maximum permissible level in the human body is 100 micromicrocuries of strontium 90 per gram of calcium (i.e. 100 strontium units) for the whole population. No maximum permissible level has been established for animals.

STRONTIUM 90—ANALYSIS OF WHEAT

Question No. 134—Mr. Argue:

1. Has any analysis of wheat grown in Canada for milling purposes been made recently to determine the content of nuclear fall-out produced strontium 90 or other long-lived radioactive isotope?

2. If so: (a) What was the nature of the findings?

(b) How does this compare with the supposed tolerable limit?

(c) Has there been any significant increase in any instance since 1945?

(d) If so, in what respect?

3. If strontium 90 were to be found in wheat, what proportion of this would be found in (a) the flour; (b) the bran, after the milling process?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Not of wheat as such, but of flour which is the chief form in which wheat is used by Canadians. The measurement of strontium 90 in wheat has not been made on a regular basis because it is not considered an important contributor to the strontium 90 content of the Canadian diet. However, wheat has now been added to the national program for the measurement of strontium 90.

2. (a) Spot checks of flour during the past year have shown levels of strontium 90 ranging from 12 to 22 strontium units. (b) They are well below. (c) In 1945 there was no measurable amount of strontium 90. (d) Answered by (a) and (c).

3. About 39 per cent of the calcium in wheat would be found in flour, leaving 61 per cent to be found in the bran, etc. As calcium and strontium are associated in foods it would be expected that strontium would be found in roughly the same proportions.

FERRY SERVICE, P.E.I.—NFLD.—MAINLAND

Question No. 176—Mr. Broome:

1. What ferry services are operated between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and Newfoundland and the mainland, and between which ports do they run?

2. What is their frequency of service in (a) summer; (b) winter?

3. If operated by Canadian National Railways or any government agency, for each service, what was the profit or loss for the years 1955, 1956, 1957 and 1958?

4. If operated by independent companies, what amount of subsidy, if any, was received for the years 1955, 1956, 1957 and 1958?

5. What ferry operations other than above received subsidies in the year 1958, and what amount of subsidy was paid for each operation?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. (a) Borden, P.E.I. and Tormentine, N.B. ferry service (operated by Canadian National Railways). (b) Wood Islands, P.E.I., and Caribou, N.S. ferry service (operated by Northumberland Ferries Limited). (c) North Sydney, N.S.-Port aux Basques, Nfld. ferry service (operated by Canadian National Railways). (d) North Sydney, N.S.-Argentia, Nfld. ferry service (operated by Canadian National Railways).

Operation of M. V. William Carson in freight service only. Service terminated in August 1958, upon transfer of ship to North Sydney-Port aux Basques service.

2. Borden, P.E.I. and Tormentine, N.B. ferry service: (a) June 16 to November 15, ten round trips per day. (b) November 16 to June 15, five round trips per day.

Wood Islands, P.E.I. and Caribou, N.S. ferry service: (a) May 1 to June 20 and September 22 to December (close of navigation).—4 trips per day each way. June 21 to September 21—6 trips per day each way. (b) No service during winter period of closed navigation.

North Sydney, N.S.-Port aux Basques, Nfld., ferry service: (a) and (b) The M. V. William Carson operates a daily schedule, seven days per week summer and winter. Trips by other vessels are made as required.

North Sydney, N.S.-Argentia, Nfld., ferry service: (a) and (b) This service was not a schedule operation, trips were made as required.

3. Borden, P.E.I.-Tormentine, N.B. ferry service: 1955 loss $1,624,639, 1956 loss $1,804,287, 1957 loss $2,027,639, 1958 loss $1,987,689.

North Sydney, N.S.-Port aux Basques Nfld., ferry service: 1955 loss $3,042,776, 1956 loss $3,325,727, 1957 loss $4,758,057, 1958 loss $4,636,523.

North Sydney, N.S.-Argentia Nfld., ferry service: 1955 loss $364,136, 1956 loss $747,103, 1957 loss $963,618, 1958 loss $610,133.

4. Wood Islands, P.E.I., and Caribou, N.S. ferry service: 1955 subsidy $158,000, 1956 subsidy $163,000, 1957 subsidy $175,000, 1958 subsidy $567,000 (subject to a recapture the amount of which is still to be determined).

5. Baddeck and Iona, N.S., $17,500; Campobello, N.S., and Lubec, Maine, $8,000; Cross Point, Que., and Campbellton, N.B., $50,000; Dalhousie, N.B., and Miguasha, Que., $27,500; Ile-aux Coudres and Les Eboulements, Que., $15,000; Ile-aux-Grues and Montmagny, Que. (summer), $3,300; Ile-aux-Grues and Montmagny, Que. (winter), $1,700; Pelee Island and the mainland, $42,500; Prescott, Ont., and Ogdensburg, N.Y. (net), Nil, (subsidy paid, $15,000; refunded, $15,000); Riviere du Loup and St. Simeon, Que., $21,000; Sorel and Ile St. Ignace, $43,000; Tobermory and South Baymouth, $100,000, (subsidy includes another service between Owen Sound, Manitoulin island and Georgian bay ports).

MOTOR VEHICLES PURCHASED OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 210—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

Has the government of Canada, through the Department of Defence Production, made any purchases of motor vehicles of any kind from corporations situated outside of Canada?

Answer by: Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production):

Yes. An examination of the contracts placed abroad for motor vehicles during the past few years shows that these vehicles were primarily for use by the armed forces located outside Canada. Such purchases in Western Germany have included buses, light sedans, diesel tractors, and three-quarter-ton trucks; and in France have been largely for trucks. Buses and trucks have been purchased in the United Kingdom for use outside Canada. Motor vehicles purchased abroad for delivery to Canada have been for small quantities of special purpose military vehicles, not available from Canadian production.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD BUILDING, MONTREAL—CHAR SERVICE

Question No. 237—Mr. Rouleau:

1. Since the completion of the building occupied by the national film board at St. Laurent, Quebec, what has been the cost of char service?

Questions

2. Is this service supplied by the Department of Public Works?
3. If so, how many employees are engaged in this work?
4. Have any of these employees been laid off since June 10, 1957?
5. If so, how many and for what reason?
6. Have any such employees been hired since June 10, 1957? If so, how many?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Materials and equipment, $7,554.27; salaries, $310,350.00; total, $317,904.27.

2. Yes.

3. 31.

4. Yes.

5. 1 employee released because he could not speak either English or French. 4 employees abandoned their positions. 9 employees resigned. 1 employee rejected because of physical incapacity to perform the duties. 1 employee transferred to Post Office Department. 10 employees were temporarily added to the staff in May, 1957, to do special cleaning work in the processing rooms, and were released as of April 1, 1958, when suspended ceilings were installed and this special labour was no longer required.

6. Yes, 16—relative to the first five groups referred to above.

GRANT TO U.S. RED CROSS

Question No. 277—Mr. Vivian:

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs make a statement on that section of the auditor general's report, presented January 30, 1959, which deals with the $50,000 grant made in late June, 1957, to the American Red Cross Society to help cope with the devastation caused by hurricane Audrey?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs):

In the report of the Auditor General for 1958, two points were raised in connection with the contribution of $50,000 to the American Red Cross for relief to victims of hurricane Audrey. These points were, first, whether the Department of External Affairs was consulted by the Canadian Red Cross society before the grant was announced in the press on July 1, 1957; and, second, whether the grant was made in conformity with the provisions of the relevant vote.

With respect to the first point, I have had the records examined and I find that the department was consulted by the national commissioner of the Canadian Red Cross society on June 29, 1957, and that departmental approval for the proposed grant of $50,000 was communicated to the national commissioner on the same day.

Questions

On the second point, the wording of the vote is as follows:

"To authorize the expenditure for international relief purposes, or other relief purposes authorized by the governor in council, of the unexpended portion of the grant made by the government of Canada to the Canadian national European flood relief fund by vote 572 of the Appropriation Act, No. 2, 1953".

There is nothing in this wording or, indeed, in the correspondence which preceded the establishment of this vote which suggests that it was intended at any time to confine its application to relief purposes in Europe. Indeed, the moneys expended under the vote have, in very large measure, gone for relief in other parts of the world. I am aware, however, that the explanation given to the house on March 22, 1956 by the then minister of finance might have been open to another interpretation.

On the basis of my examination of this matter I am satisfied that the Canadian Red Cross society acted entirely within the terms on which the administration of these funds was entrusted to it. I should perhaps add that these funds derived only partly from the $1 million grant made in 1953 by the government to the Canadian national European flood relief fund.

POSTAL CONTRACT, MARGAREE FORKS-FRIZZLETON, N.S.

Question No. 294—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has a contract been awarded for the conveyance of mail between Margaree Forks and Frizzleton, Nova Scotia?

2. What are the names of those who submitted tenders for this postal service, and amount of each tender?

3. To whom was the contract awarded?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.

2. Joseph Urbain Chiasson, Margaree Forks, $1,385; Fenwick Gordon Hart, Cranton Section, $1,490; Barkes Elan Phillips, Cranton Section, $1,494; Earle C. Ross, Frizzleton, $1,555; John Simon LeBlanc, Margaree Forks, $1,740; Albert Ross, North East Margaree, $1,800; Alphonsus Richard Miller, Margaree Forks, $2,340; John Patrick Murphy, North East Margaree, $2,400; Russell Henry Shaw, Frizzleton, $2,400; John Whelan Tompkins, North East Margaree, $2,800.

3. Joseph Urbain Chiasson, $1,385 per annum.

PUBLIC RELATIONS SUPERINTENDENT, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 296—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Was a public relations superintendent recently appointed for the Post Office Department?

2. If so, is this a newly created position in the Post Office Department?

3. What salary is paid for this position?

4. Was the position filled by civil service competition?

5. If not, what procedure was followed?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes

2. No.

3. $7,140-$8,220.

4. Yes.

5. See answer to No. 4.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 6, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—REPORTED REMARKS BY MEMBER FOR ST. JOHN'S WEST

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which it seems to me affects every hon. member of this house. I have in my hands the St. John's Daily News for Thursday, March 26, in which, with reference to the announcement made by the Prime Minister regarding the terms of union, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne) is quoted as follows:

Mr. Browne was quoted on radio station CJON as saying "There are 22 other members in the cabinet of Canada and I cannot expect to push my opinions down their throats."

Now, sir, it seems to me that in view of—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: —the well understood doctrine of collective responsibility—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can only hear one member at a time, and I am waiting to hear what the question of privilege is.

Mr. Pickersgill: In view of the well known doctrine of collective responsibility it seems to me that the house is entitled to know from the hon. member for St. John's West, in view of that extraordinary statement, whether in fact he did concur in the decision of the government of Canada to repudiate the solemn obligation under the terms of union.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to prevent the hon. member for St. John's West from speaking to the question which has been raised as a question of privilege, but I do not see that it is a question of privilege.

RESEARCH

PROPOSED COMMITTEE TO PROMOTE AND ACCELERATE ACTIVITY

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, a special committee, representative of all parties, with power to call witnesses and send for documents and papers, should be appointed for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the advisability of providing inducements to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy on this occasion to speak on this subject from this side of the house. As you know, this matter has been of great interest for several years, not only to members of the House of Commons, but to the public in general throughout the country, and I am not overlooking those who are interested in science and research, including those in the research council, universities and different engineering and chemical societies. I have urged in the past, Mr. Speaker, that this committee be set up and given the power to call witnesses other than those on the government payroll.

For the record, I might state now that this subject has been discussed on three different occasions, in 1953-54, in 1955 and in 1956. Committees were set up on three different occasions to study the activities of the atomic energy control board and the national research council. But it was the idea of members of our party that in addition to those representing the atomic energy control board and those from the national research council, we should hear evidence from parties such as presidents of universities, the heads of industries, the heads of labour organizations including labour economists and also those such as Dr. Spinks, Dr. Stratford and others who made representations before the Massey commission some years ago.

It was in 1956 that the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) in discussing this subject also asked for an amendment to a motion which was before the house at that time concerning the national research council act. He asked that the motion be amended in order that we could send for persons, unclassified papers and records. That amendment was defeated in the house by a vote of 72 to 127. As a matter of fact all the members of the Conservative party were supported by the other two minority groups, namely the C.C.F. and the Social Credit. We feel that the committee would serve a much better purpose if it were allowed to call these outside witnesses. I think today research is one of the most important aspects of our economic life.

Proposal to Increase Research Activities

I should like now to give the house a definition of research, because it is extremely broad. To me the term "research" is something like the term "time". It is a relevant term. Time may mean a fraction of a second or a millennium. In my opinion—and I think the house will agree with me—the term "research" is equally broad. The Oxford dictionary defines research as the endeavour to discover facts by scientific study of the subjects, which includes innovation, the development of new, better and more efficient ways of doing anything requiring human effort.

This country and the free world today are facing problems that are increasing in their importance, and I refer particularly to inflation. The part I hope to contribute will deal with productivity, in turn relating to research. I have a good example of that, for instance, in my own riding, where we have an extremely high productivity per person. In view of the evidence that has come before our committee on mines, forests and waters, I intend to relate something for the consideration of this house. It is in connection with the development of the Athabasca tar sands, something that was announced just a few weeks ago for the first time in Canada by one of our well-known scientists in that particular department. His name is Dr. Convey, who made a great contribution in that committee.

Before I go into that matter I should like to say that in Britain, as I have emphasized on previous occasions, they have a standing committee known as a parliamentary and scientific committee which deals primarily with questions relating to research in that nation. I am not going to repeat what has been said in previous years about the functions of that committee or what it has accomplished, but it is on record in many magazines which contain scientific data, emphasizing the success of that particular committee in Britain and giving that committee credit for bringing Britain out of the unfortunate situation in which she found herself after the second world war.

In former speeches, which I will read as part of the record, to which I know the advisers of the government have access and no doubt have studied, and will study, various representations were made when we argued on behalf of accelerated research in this country, not only in connection with meeting competition at home, but also to meet competition abroad. We have had illustrations of our accelerated research, as a matter of fact, in the agricultural field, in health and in other fields, and these are very important.

Mr. Speaker, on the question of productivity, which I think is very important, I would now like to refer to a matter which was dealt with by this government just a few days ago when I asked the productivity per person per year in the 20 highest levels in this country. I think this is very pertinent information for this house, because it concerns a very important aspect of our national economy; and as I intend to argue later on, if we are going to beat inflation, which is our main problem in this country and elsewhere in the free world, we must increase productivity.

Before I submit these figures I realize, of course, that industries vary, productivity varies, and we must take all that into consideration. In Sarnia, which is an area which I have the honour to represent, according to the figures tabled by the government our productivity was $1 short of $22,000 per man per year. That is about twice as high as the next city, Beauharnois, which showed $11,000 odd; and the lowest in the 20 was Lachine with $7,153. That is the productivity per man per year. The tabulation also shows the average per capita for one year is $7,000.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that one way to overcome inflation, which is the curse of the free world today, is to increase that productivity. I am not suggesting that it can be done overnight, but I am going to say in all sincerity that there is a responsibility on every Canadian and every person in the free world to do their part in increasing that productivity, thus eliminating the curse of inflation. I say without hesitation that if we all put our shoulders to the wheel, whether we belong to a union or are one of the white collar workers, no matter what position we occupy in this country, if we did a little more and probably earned a little more we would put inflation into the background within weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to refer to an advertisement which appeared in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post, I believe about a week ago, inserted I believe by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. This is one of the most important advertisements which I have read, and I am going to outline a few of the ideas contained therein. It says that there is a cure for inflation; that even a little inflation is bad. It goes on to say what the government can do. It can pay its current expenses out of its current income. This calls for discipline and courage in government. The article adds, under the subheading "What we can do to help" the following words:

> We can urge and actively support economies in government—whether federal, state or local. This does not mean endangering national security or affecting vital services, but it does mean helping the government to limit spending to services which are truly necessary.
> Cutting government expenditures is a job for everyone, if taxes and our government debt are to be reduced. Reduction of both is extremely important in our fight against inflation.

Another paragraph reads:

> We can buy prudently. It is always wise to get full value for our money. But, in time of inflation, it is even more important.

But I think the most important part of all is the paragraph which I am now going to read:

> We can give a dollar's worth of value for every dollar we earn. Increased productivity is an effective way to help defeat inflation. Here is what President Eisenhower said about productivity:
> " . . . if our efficiency does not increase, if our productivity does not rise, we . . . will tend to fall into the costly error of overpaying ourselves for the work we do. Along that road . . . lies the spur to further inflation."

I should also like to quote an article written by Mr. Solomon Fabricant which I happened to come across a few days ago. The title of the article is "Basic Facts on Productivity Change". It is described as occasional paper No. 63, and it was printed by the National Bureau of Economic Research, Inc., in the United States. I am glad to say we have a representative on that committee. Mr. Fabricant is, I think, one of the best recognized economists in the free world, and here is what he has to say on page 1 of this pamphlet, which was published in 1959:

> Productivity deserves the attention that it has received, for it is a measure of the efficiency with which resources are converted into the commodities and services that men want. Higher productivity is a means to better levels of economic well-being and greater national strength. Higher productivity is a major source of the increment in income over which men bargain and sometimes quarrel. And higher—or lower—productivity affects costs, prices, profits, output, employment and investment, and thus plays a part in business fluctuations, in inflation, and in the rise and decline of industries.
> Indeed, in one way or another, productivity enters virtually every broad economic problem, whatever current form or new name the problem takes—industrialization, or research and development, or automation, or tax reform, or cost-price squeeze, or improvement factor, or wage inflation, or foreign dollar shortage.

Productivity, as I think every member of the house would agree, is clearly allied with research, and we have contended in the past it is the responsibility of government to take the lead in accelerating research in this country in order that we may be better equipped to meet competition, particularly from abroad. In addition, as I have already emphasized, it has an important part to play in curbing the inflationary spiral.

I remember asking in the course of one of the speeches I made some years ago whether we were doing enough in the field of research in Canada, and the questions I asked in those days—and they were asked by other members of this party besides myself—are even more important today than they were at that time. In the interval we have witnessed the arrival of the sputnik, a 1957 scientific venture of such importance that I do not think anything has excelled it during the last century.

I should like now to refer to our position in research with respect to what is taking place in our northland, the part of Canada which lies north of the mainland in the Arctic regions. I also intend to refer to the tar sands, because this subject was before the committee to which I have referred, and Dr. Convey made the startling statement that the tar sands in that area, which cover some 17,000 square miles, contain as much as 300 billion barrels of oil.

That is an astronomical figure. It is probably two and one half times the known resources of the remainder of the free world. If we calculate it according to the estimate of one barrel per cubic yard, the figure would be twice as great. In terms of dollars and cents, Mr. Speaker, that is well over $900 billion, if we use the figures of Dr. Convey. This is another figure which is almost beyond the comprehension of the human brain and it is something that we in Canada can be very proud of because we are very fortunate in having so many metals. I submit that now we must find greater use for many of those metals because we are finding, through research, that plastic is taking the place of lead, and so on. We have our gold lying underground instead of being used.

I want to relate what I mentioned a moment ago to the Athabasca tar sands. There have been some eight underground explosions in the United States, and as a result of those explosions it has been decided that the Richfield Oil Corporation, in conjunction with other interests, will make a similar test in Alberta which they expect will be successful. It is claimed by the scientists that they can now separate the sand from the oil which will again, as I say, be a tremendous benefit not only to this country but to the free world.

The point I am coming to, Mr. Speaker, is this. It is proposed that in this—I will not call it an experiment though in a way it is—there will be associated the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Department of National Health and Welfare, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, the Alberta research council, the Alberta conservation board for gas and oil, the Richfield Oil Corporation and also the United States atomic energy group. I mentioned a moment ago that this technical group includes representatives from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, and I believe our atomic energy board will be represented as well.

Here we have a huge enterprise far surpassing anyone's imagination, with a potential which may be the greatest asset the free world has ever known and, according to our information at the moment, we in this country are going to rely entirely on United States research methods and application. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the recovery of the oil is to be brought about by exploding small atomic bombs some 1,200 or 2,000 feet below the ground, as the case may be, or some 200 feet below the tar sands. I was hoping to get information before I spoke today as to the number of bombs that would be required. They claim that this is going to be a successful operation. My submission is that we in this country should now accept our responsibilities as one of the foremost members of the commonwealth and establish our own separation plants in Canada for the purpose of doing in Canada the work that was proposed to be done by the atomic energy board of the United States.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that it was said in this house some years ago by the then minister of trade and commerce that we could make atomic bombs. We are still interested in using atomic energy for peaceful purposes by making bombs in this country. We now make cobalt and other bombs and we use isotopes for agricultural, medical and other purposes. Because we have probably the second largest known uranium ore bodies in the world—I think South Africa is first; as I recall the figures I think we produce about 30 per cent of the world's total—this project could be undertaken in this country.

It will be an expensive project. I noticed a proposal in the press on Saturday by the present president of Rio Tinto. He is calling for a joint federal-provincial research program of sufficient magnitude to assure Canada's position in the nuclear energy field. He believes that both the federal and provincial governments can count on the assistance of private industry. I assume he is referring to the uranium industry, which is a big industry in this country and still in its infancy. Therefore I suggest to the government in all sincerity that this is a new approach, a Canadian approach, to develop our uranium industry more or less independently of any foreign country but still within the British commonwealth of nations.

I make that suggestion because the development involved would require so many millions of dollars and so much export of plutonium and the other by-products that it would probably necessarily mean an association with the commonwealth, and our best customer which would be the United Kingdom. I see no reason, therefore, why this idea cannot be explored now, not next year, to see whether or not this industry can be developed in Canada in conjunction with the private uranium interests—and their supply is huge—together with the financial assistance and co-operation of the United Kingdom. This may involve the expenditure of $750 million. I am simply drawing this figure out of a hat, but from what I know of the expenditures involved in the United States and elsewhere in developing fissionable products with a separation unit or industry, it would involve probably that amount of money or even more.

I say in all sincerity that we are just at the morning, you might say, of the atomic era. Now is the time for us to accept the challenge. The situation in the world being what it is today, I have no doubt that in this country this industry and this idea will receive favourable support. I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce has reviewed this idea personally, and I hope that before too long, before this operation takes place in the Athabasca tar fields, we can have the program under way. We know that uranium will be purchased under an agreement with the United States for some three or four years more, but we should not have this uncertainty in the business field. I think there is some uncertainty, though most of us cannot help but see a great future for the uranium industry in the development of atomic power for peaceful purposes.

Together with the idea of developing atomic energy for peaceful purposes we could have small nuclear power projects for use in this country and also for export. We may also be able to export these fissionable materials to other than commonwealth countries. I want to say here that I regret, as I think most people do, that we are handicapped in our ability to obtain valuable information from the United States because of legislative enactments made some few years ago in that country. As a result primarily of the espionage and spy trials in Canada the United States has not seen its way clear to share much of its information on matters having to do with fission with Great Britain and Canada in particular. I regret this situation, because after all we are in a great partnership, a partnership so important that it must not be allowed to break up; otherwise the security of the free world is in danger.

I have mentioned the oil and tar sands. Canada is engaged in the oil and gas industry, and research is so applicable to that industry. No country in the world today can surpass the reserves of oil and gas that we have. We are in a most enviable position, and I think most members will agree that in the days to come a great deal of our research will be in the petrochemical industry. We in Canada have a high cost economy, but because a smaller amount of manpower is required in the petrochemical industry we can develop that industry successfully. Its development is only in its infancy. Up to now oil and gas have only been discovered in one part of our country and, unfortunately, not in other parts. Therefore it is going to cost something to transport these products.

So far as oil and gas are concerned, the important thing the government has under consideration at the moment is the setting up of an energy board. This is more important today than it ever was in the history of Canada, because this is the most important industry in Canada today. In the early days we had an agricultural economy, in later days a sharing of the economy by industry, but in the days to come I think our big development will be in the petrochemical field. As I said before, and it is worth repeating, we are in the enviable position of having such huge reserves of oil and gas. One reason there is such high productivity in Sarnia is that it is a petrochemical area. There are other areas in Canada, such as Montreal, which can be equally important because they must get their end products from gasoline or oil as the case may be.

I want to mention here that some time ago a few members of parliament went to Sarnia with me and visited the Polymer Corporation plant and some of the other chemical plants. They were astonished to find that the new Imperial Oil petrochemical plant, which cost approximately $30 million, is operated by eight men on a shift or 24 men to cover three shifts a day. That does not include maintenance men. We did not see any there that day, because it is a new plant and the number of maintenance men will be very few. I mention that as an example of an astonishing development through research, a development that means a great deal to the economy of Canada because we must increase our productivity. Automation has been under way for years. In my view it will be accelerated, because only through such acceleration can we have increased productivity.

There is another point I should like to mention. It concerns our situation in Canada, of having industries whose parent companies are in the United States or Great Britain. During the same tour to which I have referred we also went through the Dow Chemical plant, which cost $75 million to $90 million. The vice president took us on a tour of the plant, and I was very glad to hear him tell the members of the House of Commons who were present that the Dow Chemical plant had more Ph.D.'s than any other industry in Canada. I never realized that before, though I knew they had a large, highly trained technical staff of engineers and others with higher training. To me that meant only one thing; it meant that in Sarnia there was a research laboratory that I had not realized was as important as it is.

That brings me to this point. Since discussions about research and the necessity of accelerated research first started in this country a number of plants have set up research divisions. Incidentally, I had the honour of being present when some of these laboratories were opened. I am only going to mention a few of them. In the last few years research divisions have been opened by Dupont, C.I.L., Shawinigan Chemicals, Polymer, Imperial Oil, Dow Chemical, Consolidated Mining and Smelting, Canadian Chemicals, International Nickel and others. Perhaps some hon. members have read the statement received in the mail this morning from Imperial Oil, or will read the one which I hope will come to hand within a few days from the Polymer Corporation. Former Polymer reports prove conclusively to anyone interested in reading them that the success of that huge crown corporation has been the result of research, and that industry certainly has an excellent research team.

I mentioned a while ago that Dow Chemical was apparently doing more research than I thought was the case. I want to suggest now that many more United States industries with branch plants in Canada could well establish research divisions in this country, staffed with Canadian workers, in the same way Dow Chemical has done. I wish to give some reasons why United States industries could well consider establishing research divisions in this country. In the first place, the cost in Canada is lower. Unfortunately the salaries of Canadian scientists are not as high as the salaries of scientists in the United States, with the result that the cost of research is lower in Canada.

We welcome United States and other foreign capital to this country to aid in our development. We do not have the money to develop our country. We have the resources, and I submit that if United States industries would establish research laboratories in this country, as has been advocated over the years in practically every speech in the house on this subject, it would bring about better relationships.

I know that there are some who think there is too much United States investment in Canada. I do not agree with that view, and I do say that greater participation in research programs by Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies would make for better relationships.

Public relations is a very important aspect of the association of any two countries, and especially our two countries because of the differences which have arisen as the result of quotas on many of our agricultural products as well as lead and zinc. Lead and zinc are perhaps not so important today as they were some years ago. The demand for copper is growing. Plastics are replacing some of the other base metals, and no doubt research will develop other uses for these products in the future.

There is another reason, and that is this would permit beneficial research work to be carried out in secluded spots. It is not necessary to have a research laboratory located at the back door or front door of an industry. In fact the best work is done by scientists who are remote from the industry. They are not the type of men who are going to punch a time clock. A research division could well be established in this country 500 or 1,000 miles away from the parent industry. This plan would make use of engineers who might be barred, because of quota restrictions, from entering the United States but who could be admitted to Canada.

I feel, therefore, that further representations could be made with a view to encouraging United States industries to set up research divisions in Canada. United States participation in our economic life is here and is here to stay. It is becoming more important every day. In order to make this participation more Canadian, these industries must take part in the fundamental approaches to our problems.

I am going to say now, Mr. Speaker, that since the government has been the major spender of funds in this field more stress should be laid upon research contracts, whether they be with industries or universities. I have maintained in the past that every campus should have a research team. Then those who want to obtain a greater amount of detailed knowledge in any particular field will go to the particular university in Canada specializing in that field. We have not had that situation in Canada, I am sorry to say. This fact was borne out three or four years ago when a team from a well known organization in Britain visited our universities and came to the conclusion that this country needed advancement in that particular field.

I do not believe the government should employ universities to do applied research. If that has been the practice in the past I do hope that in future this field will be left to industry.

I must say here, Mr. Speaker, and I regret not having said it earlier in my remarks, that I should like to pay high tribute to our scientists and engineers in the national research council and in the atomic energy field at Chalk River. I was fortunate enough to be a member of the committee that visited Chalk River and, as a layman, I must say it required hours of intensive study to glean even the faintest idea of the job they were doing. This was one of the most interesting committees of which I have ever been a member. I am hoping, of course, that we will have another one, because it is important that the people of this country know what the government is doing, and know why so much money has to be appropriated for this purpose. As the years go by much more money is going to be required, not only by government but by industry as well to accelerate and promote research in this country.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, it would be much easier to speak to this resolution if it were couched in more specific terms. The resolution reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, a special committee, representative of all parties, with power to call witnesses and send for documents and papers, should be appointed for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the advisability of providing inducements to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research.

The operational words in this resolution would appear to be "the advisability of providing inducements". Now, so far as the idea of increasing and accelerating research is concerned, I am sure everybody in this house would be entirely in favour of that. If special inducements were required to bring this about then that, too, I am sure would receive hearty support from all sides of this house. Why this committee should need the power to send for documents and papers to achieve this objective is a little beyond my comprehension.

Specifically, the resolution calls for a committee to seek ways and means of increasing our research facilities. As I said, no one could quarrel with that objective, and I am sure every member in every part of this house will support it wholeheartedly. However, this resolution presupposes that we are not now doing as much as we ought, and that point I think is debatable. Research facilities are very costly, and what a country like Canada can afford to provide in that respect is limited by our population and by the financial resources we can allocate to that specific activity.

We must bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that we have a national research council which has done excellent work and has made a contribution to the world of science of which Canada can very well be proud. We think of the research work that has been done with respect to the Arctic; the development of Arctic clothing for our troops; buildings for the Arctic. Then there was the atomic reactor at Chalk River which was a pioneer venture in that line, and the cobalt bomb. These are notable contributions which I think stand out all the more as Canadian contributions in view of the limited resources at our disposal.

Then we have the fisheries research board. While this body works very quietly and perhaps does not make the headlines, the fisheries research board is doing commendable work in exploring new types of fishing equipment and in finding ways and means of packaging and processing our fish in order to lower handling costs. In addition we have the Connaught laboratories. In that connection we can take pride in the contribution made through the discovery of insulin and more recently in the development of the Salk vaccine. Over the week end I was told, I do not know how true this is, that there were news reports to the effect that some Canadian scientist had developed a process for separating strontium 90 from calcium. I have not had the opportunity of verifying that report, but if it is a fact then that is a contribution which I believe the whole world will applaud.

I think the future health of our children and the effects of atomic fall-out are subjects which occupy the minds of people living everywhere, in all civilized countries. Then we have some research going on at various universities all across Canada. I think it was at McGill University that Dr. Rutherford first carried out the experiment which laid the foundation of nuclear physics. On top of that we have a fair amount of industrial research being carried out by private enterprise. Hence the amount of research already going on in Canada at the present time is not inconsiderable.

The resolution presupposes that this amount is not enough. Of course if we can find ways and means of improving our research facilities increasing the number of projects or providing new ideas for research, the committee will make a useful contribution. Certainly I cannot see how such a committee can possibly do any harm.

The resolution states that the purpose of the committee would be "to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research". Mr. Speaker, there are many fields of research. I presume that what this resolution means is that the purpose would be to promote research generally. I would prefer that the resolution pinpointed certain projects upon which the committee might concentrate. What I have in mind is research carried out to try to find solutions to our great national problems. At the present time we have several national problems. We have a tremendous wheat surplus. We have a coal surplus in Nova Scotia. That coal cannot be sold economically in competition with coal from other countries. In my own province and along the Atlantic seaboard we have tremendous fish resources which do not yield a profitable return to the producer.

It seems to me that one of the answers to these problems must lie in the development of new products from these sources. If we could only find a way of using half our wheat surplus in order to produce some other product, our agricultural problem would be solved. If we could find ways and means of developing new products from our Nova Scotia coal the problem of the coal mines in Nova Scotia would be solved. If we could develop products such as plastics from our fish products in Newfoundland, our fishing industry would be much better off. If such a committee were set up, Mr. Speaker, I think these are the specific avenues to which I should like to see some attention directed.

The hon. member has laid great stress on productivity as a cure for inflation. I am afraid I cannot agree with him there. We have always increased our productivity, whether little or much; sometimes it has been 2 per cent and sometimes it has been 4 per cent, but an increase in productivity has not had much effect on inflation. Even if we could increase our productivity tenfold, unless the benefit of that productivity was passed along to the consumer I cannot see how it could possibly have any effect at all on the problem of inflation.

I would therefore make this suggestion. Before we set up a committee to seek ways and means of increasing research facilities or of developing some form of inducement—because all this procedure is going to cost money—it might perhaps be wiser if the committee confined its activities to finding ways and means of consolidating and co-ordinating the research facilities we already have. I believe there is room there for thought. In a country like Canada, with such a variety of interests, such a variety of climatic conditions and such a variety of natural resources, it is difficult to co-ordinate research projects and it is quite easy for unnecessary duplication to exist.

I should therefore think that the first duty of this committee would be to assess the facilities that we already have, and to seek ways and means of consolidating them in order to avoid any overlapping. Then if the committee could assure the house that it was practicable to spend a large sum of money on additional facilities, I am sure everyone on this side of the house would be glad to support such an expenditure.

Proposal to Increase Research Activities

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lambton West has persevered in this general field now for many years. I wish to compliment him and to congratulate him on bringing this general subject before the House of Commons for discussion from time to time. I do not think I have listened to anyone introducing a private member's motion who made a better speech and received less attention in the house than did the hon. member who spoke this afternoon on this subject. A larger number than usual of private conversations were going on. There was a background rumble. Almost nobody seemed to be paying attention to the speech.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Only half a dozen members are present in the opposition.

Mr. Argue: What I have said is no reflection on my part—on the contrary—on the speech that has been delivered by the hon. member. I think it is the inevitable result of the general attitude of this government toward private members' days and private members' resolutions. We seem to be getting into the position where it is the accepted practice that when a private member's resolution comes before the house, a vote is not taken on the motion. Every devious means under the rules is used to avoid a vote. The private member's motion, though it may be very innocuous and though it may be non-controversial, and as far as anyone reading Hansard is concerned everybody may seem to be for it, is either lauded to death by being talked out or somewhere along the line in the proceedings a member, usually on the government side of the house, stands up and adjourns the debate.

Then there seems to be another innovation in this general method of dealing with these motions and it is this. If there is a controversial one—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is departing from the subject matter before the house. I think there may be times and occasions when he could make these remarks, but it does not seem to me that he ought to take for that purpose the time that is allotted to this debate.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a plea that this motion be voted on. It is of sufficient importance that it should come to a vote. As far as we have been able to learn this afternoon the subject is not a controversial one. I would think no one is opposed to it, so surely this motion we are discussing is the kind of motion on which the government should allow a free vote, as on occasions in the past when we have discussed other private members' motions.

I think it is in order to mention how this particular motion got on the order paper in the first place. Of course the hon. member filed the motion, as dozens of motions have been filed, on the order paper. There was a practice existing for a long time that private members' motions were introduced for discussion according to the time they reached the office or hands of the clerk of the order paper; the motions were taken in the order in which they reached the clerk's hands. With this motion, as with others, in recent times the practice has been to have a kind of grab bag; they all go into the bag and a motion is pulled out. I do not think that is the best method of closing the order in which motions are placed on the order paper. I do not think it is in keeping with the best parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I cannot allow the hon. member to follow that line at this time. His remarks are really dealing with the business of the house, and the order paper is the business of the house. We are now discussing a specific motion.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I think it is proper to get on the record the means by which these motions come before the house.

Mr. Speaker: There is a time when everything can be put on the record relevant to the business of the house. The only matter which is relevant now is the motion which the hon. member for Lambton West has moved.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if the acting leader of the government would be good enough to permit a vote on this motion, when the matter goes to the appropriate committee for discussion one of the question on which a good deal of research might be undertaken is the whole question of how we handle—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's speech will shortly be terminated if he does not follow a more relevant course.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, as to the terms of this motion I had noted some time ago that I was going to challenge the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make the position of the government known, because in his department there is a kind of carryover from the time of Right Hon. C. D. Howe, who was at one time in charge of that department, of many of the questions and many of the general areas of research which have been raised by the hon. member who introduced this motion. I think it would be most enlightening if hon. members could be given the position of the government on this question.

Mr. Speaker, it is all very well for a private member to introduce a motion, and for one hon. member after another to get up to speak on the subject matter of the motion. But it would be most interesting to hear what the government's view is on the subject raised by this particular motion. Somebody may say to me, "Well, all right; this is a private member's motion and we should not have a statement from the government in the field of research." But I submit that if any private member's motion, and I am talking of this motion in particular, is to serve the purpose set forth in the terms of the motion, it is necessary to hear the position of the government.

Mr. Brooks: Well, let us hear your position. You are supposed to be making a speech on this.

Mr. Argue: You will get my position. I think I have already congratulated the hon. member, if the minister happened to be in his chair at that time, for the great work he has done in this regard. I said that we supported the terms of the motion. I would be very interested to hear from the minister what the government's position is, and I would ask him this question. Is the minister prepared, or is any member of the cabinet this afternoon prepared, to state the position of this government, as to whether or not it favours the establishment of a committee for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the advisability of providing inducements to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research?

Surely the hon. member who introduced the motion has the right to expect a reply from a member of the government. It is one thing for cabinet ministers to talk about the need for general research, but in a debate like this which has been initiated by a member of the Conservative party it would seem that now is the appropriate time to hear from the government what its position is. I see that we now have two cabinet ministers in the house, which is not bad for a private member's motion; I have seen the attendance of the cabinet down to a smaller number than that.

Mr. Speaker, there are a great many areas in which research would be most helpful to this nation. A number of them have already been mentioned. I would suggest that in the field of health there is need for expanding research in the field of cancer. The Minister of National Health and Welfare stated in the house the other day that there is no great effort being made in this field by the government. There is co-operation with the cancer society and some small sums of money are made available, but there is no co-ordinated or substantial research initiated by this government in this field.

The greatest killer of all, we are told, is heart disease. Here is a field in which this government should take the lead; and a lead, I might add, Mr. Speaker, in co-operation with other governments, because the field of health is one which is not confined to the borders of any given country. In the field of health a substantial amount of very valuable work might be done even if this committee never went beyond it. In the United States congress there are representatives who have taken a great interest in establishing international associations to develop research in the field of health. This is certainly something which Canada should promote at every opportunity.

There is great need and opportunity for research in the general field of mental health. For many years in Canada people with mental illness have been confined to mental institutions not much better than our jails. These institutions are merely places of detention, where little care or treatment is given the patients. This attitude toward our mentally ill is changing in our nation. As we approach mental health in a progressive manner a larger and larger percentage of cures is obtained. Here is a field in which research is necessary; it is a field of great opportunity.

Much mention has been made of the need for research in the general scientific field, particularly in regard to the various problems affecting the petrochemical industry in Canada. That is an industry of growing importance. It is an industry with growing problems in which research might be most helpful. There is also the question of how Canada's research in the Arctic region could be increased and expanded. There is a growing body of very disturbing evidence that Canada knows little about its north, that in the field of research in the north Canada is far behind.

As a matter of fact Canada today is to a very large extent dependent for knowledge of its own northland on reports made by scientists of the U.S.S.R. Canada can certainly not be happy in a position such as this, and there is no question but that we should be exploring our own land and developing research in this remaining frontier. From evidence which is already in the hands of the public, and evidence given before a committee of this house during the present session—I understand I may not refer to this evidence and I will not do so in any specific way—it is clear that prominent scientists feel there is a crisis in research as far as the Canadian northland is concerned.

This is a most important motion, because it is so comprehensive and because it deals with the whole field of research in general.

Proposal to Increase Research Activities

The Prime Minister has in the past waxed very eloquent about the need for increased research and the need for more scientists. Now we should like to see something more than eloquence, something more than campaign speeches in this field; and I hope the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who makes such a worthy contribution in his own department and who as a cabinet minister is so highly regarded among hon. members—my deskmate keeps reminding me of the very high regard in which the minister is held, and I share his view—

Mr. Brooks: He has been doing some research.

Mr. Argue: I am very glad to hear that. I am going to ask my deskmate to tell us in what category, as a result of his research, he places the other cabinet ministers, because I understand that he places the Minister of Veterans Affairs very high on the list. I think he could make an interesting contribution to this debate if he would inform us how the other cabinet ministers stack up. But I should like to hear from the Minister of Veterans Affairs and from other senior cabinet ministers what attitude the government takes toward this motion.

There are other areas of research, in addition to those I have just mentioned, which require immediate attention. For instance, I think the committee could do marvellous work in inquiring into what could be done to bring employment opportunities to the half a million Canadians who are unemployed today. Surely this is the kind of emergency proposition which the committee should take into consideration. This is important not only because of its effect on the lives of those Canadians who are unemployed, but because of its bearing on the taxpayers throughout this country who have to find the payments which must be made and need to be made to those who are out of work. Here is an opportunity—and perhaps this is most important of all—to restore the $2,000 million of production which is lost because half a million people are idle. Surely, to add $2,000 million to the gross national product of this country is something which would be worth a great deal of research on the part of such a committee if this motion were allowed to pass.

Then again there is the question of inflation. We are going to hear something about the government's stand on inflation in the budget, in addition to the comments we have heard from the government so far this session. But when we have seen the dollar eroded by 50 per cent in the last generation it is obvious that this is a question which must surely deserve a great deal of research.

Then there is the whole matter of the position of the agricultural industry and the way it has been allowed to lag and fall behind. If I might be allowed, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that there is another subject of research which this committee might well undertake, namely to inquire whether the technique of deficiency payments is one which is scientifically correct and which should be used to a greater extent than at present—

Mr. Speaker: I admit that the hon. member has used a certain ingenuity in suggesting these various fields of research, but it seems to me that he is taking liberties with the motion.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, when they ask me back in my constituency, back in Saskatchewan, what the difference is now in the way parliament operates with a reduced opposition, I tell them that in many respects it is very much the same as it has always been; that the most controversial question in the House of Commons is often problems affecting agriculture. So this is a question upon which heated comments are often made. However, you have ruled that this is not a matter for research under the terms of the motion now being discussed, so I will continue—

Mr. Cathers: I hope not for long.

Mr. Argue: What was that?

Mr. Cathers: I hope not for too long.

Mr. Argue: Now, that is a brilliant contribution. The hon. member is improving. I think that is one of the most brilliant statements he has made for some time. He is on the record, anyway, so we have noted his attendance today.

The next item I have in my notes refers to the need for research in the whole field of labour legislation in this country. This is one of the questions which vex our democratic procedure. It is a question to which Canadians all across the country are giving deep thought, and I hope it is a question which the hon. member who introduced this motion would agree is suitable to come within the terms of his proposal, and one which would lead to the betterment of life in this country for all Canadians.

There are many subjects which could be dealt with. One of the questions which such a committee could discuss is how the whole field of research in this country could be co-ordinated so as to improve our standard of living, and so as to retain sovereignty for the Canadian nation. We are all aware—and certainly from reading speeches made by hon. members opposite, supporters of the government are aware—of the need to guard Canadian sovereignty and the need to go forward with the development of research in the north, in the field of national relations, to ensure that the integrity of the Canadian nation is maintained. Here is a comprehensive sphere in which this committee could do very valuable work.

I have listened on many occasions to the hon. member for Lambton West speak on the need for scientific research, and I know that when he introduces this motion he does so because he believes—and I agree—that he is doing something which is most useful and which is providing a very valuable subject for debate in this house. I hope the members of parliament associated with him, and those in the other parties, will do justice to this motion by allowing it to come to a vote and passing it unanimously, thus demonstrating to the country that parliament is interested in research and that Canada in the days ahead will use research in order to increasingly promote our national well being.

Mr. Alexander Best (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to support the resolution of the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy). To my mind this is one of the most important resolutions which could be placed before the house. The whole subject with which it deals in rather large and general terms is to my mind again one field which perhaps has more potential for contribution by this government and by the actions of such a committee than almost any other field that we could investigate and embark upon.

Of course, a resolution of this type and nature has been before the house for several years, and I feel that every member in the house must congratulate the hon. member for Lambton West on his interest and tenacity in pursuing this subject. It is one which is perhaps controversial only to a degree; I would say, to the extent one carries out investigations into research itself or the extent of government aid to research. We can see this generally in the speeches that have gone immediately before from the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I would just comment, however, that the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo in his remarks, with which I would generally agree, was negative; the tenor of his remarks was negative. He said he could not see how this committee could possibly do any harm. That might be true, but I think it is a rather negative observation on the tremendous need we have in Canada to study and to accelerate this whole process of research.

I would also add that several of our present cabinet ministers have spoken on this resolution in the past and supported it actively in the years when they were in opposition. I would strongly urge that action on this committee be taken, and that the government set it up as reasonably soon as possible. There is a counterpart of this committee in Great Britain. There they have a very interesting committee which has had a most useful effect over the last few years. It is called the parliamentary and scientific committee.

The first one was founded in 1939 and it included members of all parties of the House of Commons of Great Britain. It replaced at that time the former parliamentary science committee. The present committee in Great Britain is one of a number of informal parliamentary groups. Incidentally, membership is open to members of parliament and to nominated representatives from various other institutions such as universities and other non-profit institutions. This standing committee, acting as it does on a regular basis, provides an interchange of most important information, a constant interchange of information between those trained scientists and the members of parliament, or those people, in other words, who are legislating upon matters which must inevitably affect the growth of scientific progress in any country.

This is something which I believe is called for here, although the structure of our committee might be somewhat different. It is something that we very much need in Canada and it is something which this resolution calls for. I think the need for research in Canada is unquestioned. We have a history of research going back many years, but it has been the experience of all countries of the world that almost inevitably governments, either federal or provincial, as we have them in Canada, have had an ever increasing part to play in the fostering and advancing of research.

In the general sense of scientific and fundamental social research it has been the feeling that these are fields which it has not appeared wise to leave entirely to industry or to universities. They are fields which need some co-ordination in research and in many instances it comes down to matters of finance from governments. I think this is particularly true in Canada today. We are a small nation of some 17 million people; we are a trading nation, tremendously dependent upon export and we are a nation facing the problem, as the hon. member for Lambton West mentioned, of productivity and ever-increasing costs and the problems of competition, competition within North America and competition all around the world.

This puts a premium on research in Canada. We do not have the great internal markets which many nations such as the United States, for instance, have, and which cushion them somewhat against costs. All of which creates a need for greater ingenuity with which to produce industrial products. This, of course, is just one aspect, the economic aspect, of fundamental research and applied research, and the effect which it must have on each and every one of us in the products we buy and their relative costs. Because of the position in which we now find ourselves Canada should probably be in the very forefront of research expenditure on a per capita basis. Probably there should be a premium placed on our ability in Canada today to use our ingenuity, our research establishments and our brain power to make up for the problems we have in a widely scattered population and the heavy costs which they generally incur.

We have as well the tremendous defence problems with which the free world and we in North America are faced. These problems of defence are dependent, of course, partially upon scientific research. We have our own defence research board, of course. This is a fundamental problem and one which is typical today. We have seen, of course, in the last two or three years particularly, that defence can shade almost imperceptibly into economic defence as well. In other words, defence research may be connected partially with producing products in a more imaginative fashion and at lower costs to compete in the economic structure which we are facing more and more in this world and which is allied to our military defence problem. The threats that we have been facing from Russia are a culmination of those two facts, with the problem of economic defence or offence thereby causing our research interests to come to the forefront more and more in the last two or three years.

This committee would be a tremendously important thing in Canada. It could gather together from all across our land leaders in the scientific world, leaders in industrial research, people from various government departments, many of whom are now engaged in fundamental and applied research and, I think perhaps most important of all, leaders from our universities across Canada, those institutions which to my mind must be the bulwark and the foundation of fundamental research in this country.

We have faced in Canada this growing need for additional research and we have been feeling our way, so to speak, into the interrelationship between the various parties involved in this problem. By "interrelationship", of course, I mean our federal and provincial governments, our various educational institutions, our industries and other groups of that nature. I should like to treat this interrelationship as a part of the problem which this committee, if set up, would study, because while I feel that financial aid is, of course, a most important necessity on the part of the federal government, I think that can only be carried out as a result of concurrent studies of the interrelationship of our various research organizations. They are complex. They have grown gradually as is natural with a small country, but they have now increased to a fair size and complexity and perhaps there are changes to be made which might be of great advantage.

Before the first world war Canada was engaged in a very moderate amount of research in various places. We were then and are still to a certain extent a country of tremendous natural resources and the problems then were more those involving engineering advances, transportation, power and utilities. The focus was more on moulding our vast raw resources into a coherent whole which could make this country function as a unit. We are still, of course, particularly in view of our emphasis on our north country, faced with the problem of the heavy structural integration of Canada as a whole.

The first world war brought up a number of interesting matters and one might say that it more or less started the Canadian government on the road to its role in research. This came about in 1916, I believe, when the Canadian government and the government of Great Britain, incidentally, set up very similar groups to study research in their respective countries. At that time the Canadian government created a cabinet committee of six ministers and on their recommendation an honorary advisory council for scientific and industrial research was established. From that we have seen the rise of the present national research council.

The background of development in Great Britain is rather interesting. It came about partially because of the tremendous industrial surge of Germany, the government of that country having taken a very active part in fostering research before the first world war. In Great Britain this had been done to a limited extent but research had largely been in the field of the various learned societies such as the royal society and the royal institute of London. The German government, however, played a very active part and the results of its active participation in research were reflected in German industry. We saw there at that time a very rapid technological build-up.

Partly as a result of this there was considerable stimulus in Great Britain and Canada toward the formation of a committee which would involve the government more in productive research. The setting up of the national research council after that time grew out of the cabinet committee and in 1928 the government started the erection of a national research council laboratory which was opened in 1932.

In the following years until 1939 or 1940, research activity on the part of the government grew slowly but at the time of the second world war there was a tremendous expansion in this field. Throughout the second world war various laboratories across the country, including several here in Ottawa, were engaged in defence research. This was still within the scope of the national research council and the effort during those war years was naturally of a more applied nature having in mind technological advances, the solving of various problems and successes which could contribute directly to our war effort. Some of the matters one might mention which were the subject of research were various medical fields, radar, biological warfare and so forth. Those are some that come to mind.

However, after the war it became obvious that the defence part should probably have a separate entity, and separate representation. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the whole structure and interrelationship of the defence research board as it came into being and that of the national research council and other organizations would bear close scrutiny by such a committee as it is proposed should be established. The encouragement of research by additional funds must be related to the structure and interrelationships of the various bodies now engaged in fundamental research.

The defence research board was created shortly after the second world war and was set up in much the same manner as the national research council, with which I should like to deal again in a few moments. Representatives of each of the armed services are members of the board and at the present time, as well as over the past few years, there is considerable interlocking of membership with the national research council. However, structurally the defence research board is a unit and entity within the Department of National Defence.

The defence research board has made a very considerable contribution to research in this country. It gives grants in aid of research to universities and operates as well an extensive system of laboratories throughout the country. Much of its research, of course, has been devoted to applied work of direct interest to the armed forces. One can think of laboratories such as that at Suffield, Alberta, the northern laboratory at Churchill, Manitoba, the medical laboratory in Toronto and the armament and research development centre at Quebec city as examples of the places at which these activities are carried out. While in the defence research board the emphasis has been on applied research, there has been considerable success as well with fundamental work, some of it carried out at universities.

The national research council was the predecessor of the defence research board, from which the latter split off as a separate group. The national research council consists at the present time of some 21 members, four of whom are paid officials. The remaining 17 are selected from the universities and industry. I would suggest that a number of these people be interviewed by the committee and be asked to present their thoughts on Canadian research because I think that in a general way their experience is probably more widespread in the field of Canadian research than is the case with the members of any other single group.

The president of the national research council presides over the council and is also in charge of the laboratories which the council operates. Three vice-presidents, paid officials of the council, are responsible for administration, medical research and science respectively. The national research council is not a government department but a separate organization which has the responsibility of the operation of its own laboratories and for assistance to scientific and engineering departments of Canadian universities in pursuing research work. The council, as members know, reports to the committee of the cabinet and it is the chairman of this committee, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), who presents the council's budget to parliament.

It might be said that aid from the national research council to universities for research is substantially greater than that from any other Canadian body. These funds for research are devoted to both fundamental and applied research. There are various scientific divisions within the national research council such as applied biology, pure and applied physics, and pure and applied chemistry. Those are some of the divisions that come readily to mind. Laboratories are not operated by the council in the field of medical research. The vice president in charge of this subject works with universities and other institutions in this particular field. The vice president in charge of medical research also presides over the medical committee which recommends awards and scholarships to be made in the medical field.

There are as well, and I think this is an interesting point, some 28 associate committees of the national research council for the purpose of planning programs of research and education as well as bringing into these committees representatives of the various government departments, universities and industries which are directly involved in research.

Of course, one would be remiss if he did not mention nuclear research in Canada. This, in many of its aspects, is again the outgrowth of work done by the national research council. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, a crown company, grew out of the work that had been done some 10 years previously in the national research council. This crown company collaborates with industry in the development and use of atomic energy. We have, as well, the atomic energy control board which handles the distribution of radioactive materials in Canada and awards grants in aid for research in this field to various educational institutions.

I should like to go back for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to the question of where we go from here, particularly as that question relates to the national research council. As I said before, I feel that the universities should be the mainstay of fundamental research in Canada. I feel, not being critical of the council as such, that we have a basic problem of organization in that we have a unit which is both running laboratories on its own, with a very considerable staff, which has considerable investment and production interest, and which is also granting funds for similar or different research to other institutions, mainly universities. This dual role is perhaps a difficult one, perhaps an unwise one, for an institution or a council to be undertaking. I would say, however, it was probably a natural procedure. However, the question arises as to whether or not these roles would be better separated in the future.

We have, as an example, in Great Britain, the formation of three councils. These councils are the medical research council of Great Britain; the agricultural research council of Great Britain; and the department of scientific and industrial research, which is actually a government department and takes up, so to speak, the other areas of industrial and technical research, general biological, physical and chemical research. There are, in this way, three divisions and not the one organization as we have at present in the national research council. These three organizations report directly to the cabinet. I think that possibly this is a move which might be studied by this committee, if it were set up. Advice could be sought on this question from the people in industry, from the members of the national research council themselves, from the scientists in various government departments engaged in research as well as from the people in universities who are the recipients of a considerable proportion of the money which the national research council grants each year.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the increase in the funds for the national research council has been a very encouraging sign. We can scan the expenditures of the national research council and find that in the year 1952-53, for example, $15,400,000 were expended, and much the same in the following 2 years. Coming along to 1955-56, we find that just over $16 million were expended; 1957-58, $20.2 million. Then we see, in the estimates for 1958-59 and 1959-60 very significant increases. In 1958-59 the figure is $25,992,000, while in 1959-60 the figure is $30,133,000. This is a very rapid rate of increase and is, I believe, an important sign of the increasingly important place given to research in this country. I feel that one of the most important points in this connection is that the larger proportion, perhaps 75 per cent or more, of the budget each year is spent on the council's own laboratories, staff and research work. The remainder is used for grants in aid of research and scholarships to universities.

The amount spent on these grants in aid of research and scholarships has jumped very appreciably in the last two years. We had an item in the estimates last year, 1958-59, of almost $6 million for scholarships and grants in aid of research, while in 1959-60 this item has risen to $7,957,000, an increase of $2 million in that period. This money goes largely to our educational institutions. We do not have in these institutions a separate body of research workers but instead, a constantly growing and self-perpetuating body of graduate students, teachers and others who are encouraging and engaging in research. This is a fundamentally sound point about which the people in the research fields across Canada feel rather strongly. It is unwise to separate, to put a wall around a research institution, aside from certain ones connected with defence work, and lose close communication with educational and teaching institutions such as our universities.

This is an important matter. I believe that research should be connected with the universities and educational institutions as much as possible. I would advocate, Mr. Speaker, that this committee might examine the British scheme. As the hon. member for Lambton West mentioned, research groups could be attached to universities across Canada. I can think of no country that would benefit more from the establishment of specialized teams. For example, these people could look into certain aspects of biological, medical, or chemical research and other fields. We, in Canada, can rarely afford the manpower, or the finances of having more than one of these highly specialized groups, but perhaps a council could formulate a plan whereby we could overcome this fundamental problem which we have in Canada today by encouraging research groups.

In many of our specialized fields we simply do not have in Canada adequate facilities for training. A university by itself can generally afford—speaking financially and also in a manpower sense—one man and one man only who is a specialist, let us say, in the diseases of fish, and this subject is used just as an example. It is necessary to give training to graduate students and personnel in universities in order that we can have these people trained and employed in Canada. The need is great. There is a crying need in many fields. With these research groups, one group per specialized field, so to speak, and many of these groups attached to our educational institutions right across Canada, we could give training in depth of knowledge. I think this would be a tremendous step forward in the way of progress.

I might add while mentioning the establishment of a separate medical research council, that a committee headed up by Doctor Farquharson of the university of Toronto, vice president of the national research council in charge of medical research is now studying organization problems. This committee established by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is investigating this whole situation, and should report sometime in the near future.

The small research groups which have played such an important part in general research in Great Britain would be one of the important matters that we should deal with. I would think that this committee, should be one which would first of all make an over-all survey of existing research in Canada, look at the over-all picture first of all and see what areas are most in need of federal assistance or federal reorganization of bodies which come under our jurisdiction. But the committee after that could go on as a continuing group which each year during the sessions of parliament or perhaps at other times than during the sessions of parliament could continue to study the various aspects of research in Canada and keep the members of this house up-to-date on the various specialized fields. There is a gap—and I think this gap probably widens each year—between technological and scientific research advances which have made our world almost a wonderland, and our knowledge of them; our ability to legislate in the fields—because we must deal and grapple with these problems—has not increased to a comparative degree. There is a liaison gap there which this committee could fill and where it could play a part which would be of tremendous importance in the years ahead.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I were not to mention some other research which is going on in Canada at the present time. We have various government departments, of course, engaged in the field of research. The Department of Fisheries has a fisheries research board, with stations on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, and another station, I believe, in the province of Quebec. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has a mines laboratory. The Department of National Health and Welfare maintains laboratories generally for the protection of public health. The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has a forest research division and a forest products laboratory. We have seen these various areas of research. One can also add to this the various provincial institutions which are engaged in research, largely applied to industry, particularly industries in the provinces concerned. The federal Department of Agriculture sponsors a great deal of important research. We have seen the reorganization of the federal Department of Agriculture. I refer to the reorganization of the experimental farm services and the science service portion of that department. I think this is a natural outflow of the interrelationships which come about in research. In this day and age one cannot be, let us say, a wheat plant breeder without some knowledge of plant pathology, genetics, soils and so on. The various departments which had been separated and are being brought together in this reorganization scheme provide an example within the Department of Agriculture of an over-all reorganization and channelling of information and research. We should look at this example when studying research in this country. The Department of Agriculture for many years has carried on much useful research in Canada. Probably one could look again at our universities. I have mentioned that the universities are the main stage of most of our fundamental research drama, and I believe this should continue.

We can look at our industries. The industries in Canada are spending a considerable amount of money on research and development. I think the figures would indicate that in 1955, for instance—and I am reading from the commercial letter of the Canadian Bank of Commerce of September 1957—between $65 million and $66 million were spent during that year. But again in this small country of ours we face a problem. Many of our large companies, those most able to conduct research, are subsidiaries, so to speak, in many cases, of parent companies in Great Britain or in the United States, and the research activities have been carried out by those parent companies to the detriment, perhaps, of research in Canada; certainly to the detriment of the development of personnel and institutions within the particular industry in Canada.

But this situation is changing. The hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) mentioned the chemical industry. I think that is a prime example. In the chemical industry, the engineering industries and the forest products industry we have seen the growth of laboratories. I think we should challenge industry to increase the growth of industrial research. In our tax laws, allowance is made as some five per cent of taxable income is deductible if used for research by companies. I am not certain as to the situation, Mr. Speaker, but it would be interesting to know in how many cases that five per cent of taxable income deduction for research purposes was made use of by various industrial companies. In some cases, if the projects are approved, that figure can be larger than five per cent.

Two or three years ago the industrial foundation on education was organized. I think there is here a potential opportunity for small companies and medium-size companies with related interests to band together and form research organization. I believe there are one or two of these in existence in Canada at this moment. They have been a very successful part of the research scene in Great Britain, where they receive government encouragement and some government assistance. In various cases industrial or trade groups could join together and pool some of their resources, within the framework of competitive industries, in order to solve a number of research problems so as to make better products or increase productivity. This then, is the research scene as I see it in Canada at the moment. I think that a first and long step forward would be the establishment of this committee of the House of Commons, to examine the whole of the research scene and report back to this house. There is no doubt whatever that we need increased research facilities and probably increased reorganization in our various institutions. I am sure that this committee could serve as a foundation for information to the government, and as an ideal liaison group to accomplish this purpose.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the splendid address made by the mover of this motion and I, like those who have gone before me, would like to congratulate him for his long-standing interest in this subject of such vital importance to Canada, to its parliament and to its people. I know that for many years the hon. member has pioneered in this particular arena in presenting his views and calling for greater consideration of the question.

I have listened with great interest to the most comprehensive coverage of the question of research presented by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Best). I, in my turn, should like to address a few remarks to you, sir, on the question of research as it affects the field of the social sciences. I may say that if my remarks are brief, such brevity is not at all proportionate to my interest in this great question and to the heartiness of my support of the resolution before us. I was quite interested in the discussion of the hon. member who preceded me dealing with the subject of industrial research and technological and technical research. All of this is of tremendous importance, and in the fast-moving world in which we now live we have daily reminders of the vital importance of this very question. There are some who say that international competition and conflict at the present time may appear occasionally to be due to something which is taking place in the classrooms or the research laboratories of various nations. But while that is of tremendous importance, I think we must also regard those matters which are not of a technical nature. I was most impressed to read in the first annual report of the Canada Council words to which I subscribe wholeheartedly:

> The country's surging growth, with the promise of still greater prosperity and even more leisure, poses its own problems. Life and business are likely to become more complex. People will need more "know-how" in industry and business and also greater skill to manage themselves, to enjoy their leisure, to control their environment and to use their machines. All this points to the need for more education—more training of engineers, scientists, and business men, of course—but also for greater numbers of inspired and talented teachers, of artists, humanists and social scientists, and of thinkers of every sort.
> Material prosperity alone will not make a great nation. As we press on to push back the frontiers of material progress, we must aim to advance on the spiritual front, and advance in our artistic expression as a nation.

I agree with the preceding speakers who emphasized and underscored the need for encouragement and advancement of research, which the proposed committee would undertake. But I believe that in the field of social sciences the need is even more acute. In this field few institutions are engaged other than the universities. I was much impressed when the member for Halton pointed out that the fundamental role must be played by the universities, and I think too that it is only in a limited area that the research function can be totally separated from a teaching function.

I was impressed when the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) told us about the increasing research programs of various business corporations. I think this is all to the good, but in the field of social sciences, except for economics and perhaps for those fields of psychology related to personnel management, the burden is left almost completely to the universities. When we consider the need for the furthering of research facilities we must look to the existing functions, roles and opportunities of our Canadian universities. Surely in this field we find very little room for complacency. We find that university faculties are overworked, with too many classes and too little time for research. They use the expression in universities that the head of the department holds the chair in that subject. One Canadian university professor said that he had not a chair but a settee, since he headed three departments and taught four different subjects.

We find, too, that equipment is inadequate and that it is difficult to meet the ordinary demands of the undergraduate population which is ever increasing in these times. You cannot carry on social science research without an adequate library, to say the least. You find, too, that the trained minds who must carry out research in the field of social science are troubled by economic considerations which limit their usefulness in the research aspect of their work. Many university professors instead of pursuing a research program during the vacation period find it necessary to engage in the rather arduous and onerous duties of teaching summer school. When I refer to this question, I am not speaking academically; I understand from personal experience just what is involved. Often the sabbatical leave arrangements are very inadequate. Sometimes the grants which are given are given reluctantly and niggardly, if at all.

Now may I go to something which the hon. member for Halton touched on when he spoke for other areas of research. We find in a country like Canada that we are constantly losing our trained researchers. It is said that we normally find that about 50 per cent of Canadian graduate students leave Canada and carry on their research work or their teaching work in the United States. It is necessary for many of them to go to the United States or the United Kingdom to carry on their Ph.D or perhaps their M.A. program, and then having been established in a United States university the opportunities are such that about half of them do not return to Canada.

Then there is the old question of too few scholarships and fellowships for the student in social science who has the aptitude, ability, interest and desire to proceed, but who because of lack of financial backing must forego a career in this field. There are of course grants to students in this category, and I am happy to say that over the recent years they have been increasing. It is significant—I believe this observation lends timeliness to the resolution of the hon. member for Lambton West—that until very recently the funds which were assisting Canadian students in the field of social sciences came from such organizations as the Carnegie Foundation, the Guggenheim Trust, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Nuffield Foundation, or from the private generosity of that great benefactor of education, Lord Beaverbrook; in other words, from sources outside this country. In the field of individual contributions to education from those of its citizens who are blessed with this world's goods, Canada lags far behind the United States and the United Kingdom.

In the overall field of assistance to worthy students the figure for Canada is quite significant. It has been estimated—I have the figures here for 1954 and 1955—that in Great Britain 72.9 per cent of all students registered at British universities were in receipt of some kind of scholarship or bursary. In the United States in the same year 55.9 per cent of all university students enrolled in state universities were in receipt of either all or part of their tuition fee, while 20 per cent of those in private universities were receiving assistance. In Canada, for the same year, the figure for all students was estimated at 14 per cent. This refers to a situation which existed some two or three years ago. Since then the improvement has been considerable, though not substantial.

The hon. member for Halton referred to the national research council, that splendid body which was established in Canada under the administration of Sir Robert Borden. In the field of the social sciences there is no such body. The closest we have to it is a private organization, the Canadian Social Science Research Council, which in May of this year will come of age and celebrate its twenty-first birthday. This group of dedicated and interested scholars looking over the field 21 years ago was shocked at the state of research into the social sciences of this country.

Mr. Winch: Are they not shocked now, 21 years later?

Mr. Macquarrie: They found, 21 years ago that at the undergraduate level geography was taught in only four of the universities, anthropology in fewer still; they found that statistics, sociology and other social sciences did not appear in the curricula of several of the leading universities, and that when they did appear they received scant attention. This Canadian Social Science Research Council discovered that at post graduate level 21 years ago there were 12 scholarships or fellowships offered in the social sciences and 14 in the humanities as compared with 96 in the natural sciences. In its first report, the committee observed:

> Considering post graduate scholarships in Canada one is apt to wonder whether they are as much a recognition of scholarship in itself as they are a means of helping along those who have chosen practical careers-studies that are expected to yield a dollars-and-cents return. This emphasis is probably to be expected in a country where so much attention can still be devoted to undeveloped resources, but experience of the 1930's has been such as to make us wonder whether, even from the purely practical point of view, there ought not to be more encouragement given to the study of the social and economic mechanism that enables the resources to be used.

In this connection it is encouraging to report that in the 21 years of this research council's activities much has been accomplished, and that just before the creation of the Canada Council it was possible for it to distribute annually some $150,000 to worthy Canadian institutions of learning and to ambitious and deserving students in Canada.

I feel that if such a committee as is now suggested could be established, it could bring to itself no more valuable and no more highly informed witness than Dr. John Robbins who for 20 years has been secretary of the Canadian social science research council. I am confident that no man in Canada is so familiar with or so deeply concerned about the problems involved in this aspect of research as he is. The Canadian social science research council is still performing a very important role, in that with regard to certain grants made by the Canada Council it is the selecting body. In addition to assisting scholars, the council has also assisted publications, and there is no field of journalism in Canada in which there is greater difficulty in maintaining a situation of solvency than that facing the learned publications which a mature society must require. In this instance I should be remiss if I did not say that the establishment of the Canada Council was one of the greatest moves in the direction of improving research, especially in the field of the social sciences and the humanities. That was a wonderful step forward and something which I applauded most heartily. As I have seen it function, I congratulate still further those who sponsored this magnificent development.

But though the Canada Council is a mark of national initiative in this field of research, I think still further initiative should be shown on the national level and therefore it is altogether appropriate that we should be discussing the resolution now before us. I think that we in Canada can offer inducements of a tangible kind to stimulate research into many untouched and uncharted areas. They say a country becomes mature when it begins to become aware of its past and take an interest therein. I used the expression "uncharted," and I used it advisedly because in so many areas of Canada's growth and development we find great vacuums so far as research and study are concerned. We have a great dearth of secondary material in the field of history alone. For instance, in Canada we have now, happily, one fine modern work on the great statesman, Sir John A. Macdonald. But why should we not have a dozen? We might compare the situation with that in the United States where the whole field of historical study has become so vast that the volumes on Lincoln alone would establish a very substantial library. There are many figures in the Canadian past which deserve the attention of Canadian scholars. We need our great statesmen assessed by those who were not their contemporary admirers or detractors, though there is an important role for contemporary scholarship as well. There are many other figures, besides prime ministers, whose contributions to the country should certainly be recorded. One could think of many such men. Joseph Howe might be one. Sir Clifford Sifton could be another and I should personally like to see something written about Sir Sam Hughes.

There are other subjects besides history. Canadian scholarship might direct itself to ecology. We are in the midst of a vast change in our urban-rural relationships, yet most Canadian students study sociology today from texts which were written by United States authors about United States conditions. About parliament itself, about political parties, about the whole process of our political institutions, there is much yet to be done, and the inducement and the encouragement of research in this field alone would I think present a very worth-while challenge and opportunity to the kind of committee we envisage in this resolution.

Mr. Winch: If it is allowed to pass.

Mr. Macquarrie: There is much, of course, which can be done to assist scholars and stimulate scholarships but, of course, always to leave the scholar free; for intellectual independence is an absolute necessity in any kind of good research.

Perhaps such a committee as we envisage might move into new fields of Canadian endeavour in the field of research. We might inquire into the possibility of developing a policy similar to that of the United States congress where they select political science students and take them down to congress where they are attached to a member thereof and become a part of his routine operation. Something similar might be done in this country, although I know immediately there would certainly be the problem of office space and facilities which hon. members know are not nearly ample in this building.

Our various departments might usefully introduce into their operations students on an in-training planning basis to further their research into various important questions of international relations, governmental organization, administration and the like.

There are many situations which I might discuss, Mr. Speaker, which may be further benefited by the establishment of the kind of committee we have been talking about this afternoon. While I would agree with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) that much has been done and while I am happy to say that the situation is improving, I think we would be something less than realistic if we did not recognize that the question of research not only in the field which I have been discussing but perhaps in the more seemingly immediate fields that have been discussed by the house does require the urgent application of the kind of measures set forth by the mover of this resolution. I therefore, Mr. Speaker, am happy to support him in his presentation and to congratulate him on his devotion to this important topic.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, ever since this motion was introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) every speaker has supported it, its principle and its objectives. I know some of us could spend a great deal of time in expressing our support of it but as far as I am concerned it is more important to have this matter decided than to spend between 20 and 40 minutes saying that I am in agreement with it. Therefore, sir, I hope that I can establish a precedent by saying that I support this motion, its principle and its objective and I sit down hoping it will come to a vote.

Mr. H. C. McQuillan (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will not be as brief as the hon. member for Vancouver East but in speaking to this motion if I appear to speak primarily in connection with the forest products industry it is because I have spent most of my life in that field. I recognize and am very well aware of the urgent necessity of a great deal of research in the field of forestry. For years I have been attending lumbermen's conventions, pulp and paper and other such conventions and in every instance it has been stressed before those conventions that there is a need for research in the field of forest products.

I hold in my hand an editorial which appeared in the Canadian Lumberman of November, 1958 and which outlined their views on the matter. It expressed the feeling of a great part of the industry and reads as follows:

> But an industry which plays such a vital role in the economy of the country should not be left to founder, dependent on the research and development of the giants in the industry. If these giants consider it a sound business principle to establish the means of improving techniques and practices for continued prosperity, should not the federal government consider it an equally sound principle? The thousands of smaller companies are dependent upon government research for their new ideas, and the government must look to the small businesses for the country's continued prosperity. There was never a tree that was not at one time a seedling.
> We have urged in the past, that a separate department of government should be established with sufficient funds and facilities to fully exploit the forests. Ottawa has never refuted the arguments, but does nothing to alleviate the situation.

I feel it is time to alleviate the situation.

Mr. Winch: Don't talk the motion out, though.

Mr. McQuillan: The hon. gentleman who just interrupted me said at one time that I had rocks in my head. I sometimes wonder what he has in his.

An hon. Member: A vacuum.

Mr. McQuillan: In summing up Canada's economic prospects in the field of forestry the Gordon commission spoke of the need for forestry and forest research. The commission summed it up in this way:

> Canadians must guard against overrating the strength of their position in forest and mineral products; for most of such commodities, there are many closely competitive sources in other parts of the world.

This further emphasizes the need for research in that field.

Proposal to Increase Research Activities

In February I had the pleasure of attending the opening of a new forest products laboratory in Vancouver. It was a credit to the government. The people in that department were very pleased to have such a building which would allow them to work with greater efficiency and produce better results than they had produced in the past. But it struck me that it was only a small part of our requirements in the field of research into forestry and the forest industry. I notice that according to a publication of the dominion bureau of statistics approximately $1,070,000 is being spent by the Canadian government in forest products and forestry research. The pulp and paper section of the industry itself last year spent something well over $6 million. The lumber industry fell off rather badly and spent a matter of $150,000. This is primarily owing to the fact that most of the lumber is produced by smaller companies and they have not the facilities or the means to finance and to pursue research in that field.

Last year I spoke before the mines, forests and waters committee about one particular phase of research which is most vital to us in British Columbia particularly, namely that of finding greater use for one of our finest primary forest species, the western red cedar, of which we have in one small part of the coast of British Columbia something like 75 billion feet. So far we have not been able to use it successfully in the making of pulp and paper because of certain chemical aspects of the wood and the chemical effect on the digesters in the pulp and paper plants. Yet if we are going to derive the most from our forests we must find a use for this low grade cedar product, particularly if we are to continue to maintain our pulp and paper and lumber production on the coast.

We also heard in that committee from a very eminent British Columbia forester, Mr. Ian Mahood, who came here to appear before the committee. He emphasized the need for research in the field of silviculture. He pointed out that one of the greatest problems in British Columbia was to maintain a rapidly producing forest with high productivity in close proximity to the existing plants and developed roads. He pointed out that some countries in the world are making great progress in this particular field. He spoke about the recommendations of the late Mr. Gordon Sloan who acted as a commissioner to investigate the forest problems in British Columbia. He recommended the lumping of research by all agencies, government, industry and university. He also spoke about the necessity of studies of tree seed production and collection, the development of strains of trees best suited to the geographical climate and soil condition, the suitability of species to site and many other things that would assist in the rapid growing of our forest in close proximity to existing plants and road developments in order that we may maintain a competitive position in the world markets for forest products.

I think most of us are fairly well aware of what the forest industry means to British Columbia and to Canada. Taking the overall picture, it means something in the neighbourhood of $2,400 million a year in production and I believe it means over $1,500 million a year in total exports. This is an industry to which research is vital. The government has not been too generous in the field of forest research, particularly in the field of silviculture. I do not begrudge the money spent on research involving other products but when one compares the expenditures one finds that in the case of rubber $4,307,000 was spent in 1957 and $1,200,000 odd in the case of textiles. I do not say that these amounts are too high by any means—probably they are not sufficient—but the money that has been allocated for forest research is far too meagre for an industry on which the province of British Columbia depends for the greatest part of its livelihood and the whole of Canada depends for a great part of its livelihood. I take great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in supporting this motion and I hope, as the member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) does, that it will be approved by the house and we will have action.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, when I enter this building through the main doors I am sometimes stopped by the use of the adjectival word "wholesome" in the inscription carved above the main entranceway:

> The wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west.

One would suppose that one would read the words "cruel sea" or perhaps, with poet Dick Diespecker of Vancouver, the "furious sea", or perhaps the "menacing sea". But no, the inscription is, "the wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west."

I have waited for this debate to speak for a few minutes on the subject of research into the sea, the sea around us, the cruel sea, the mysterious, menacing sea. It could be made a wholesome sea for when we come, as I hope we will, to establish a committee I would hope that in due course that committee would cause to be brought before it persons of expert knowledge who would help it to investigate the development of the sea for future generations as a source of chemicals and minerals far more abounding than those in our constituencies in the land base areas of Canada.

There is far more food in the sea than there is on the land. The sea is the mother of us all. The sea is the master of our planet. The land is its slave. Three-quarters of the surface of our cooling cosmos is inhabited by the sea. The sea at its greatest depth far exceeds the height of the highest mountain. Briefly, because I come from a coastal riding, because I am a man who lives on the shore of the sea, it seemed to me that I might enliven this debate on research for a few moments by saying a few words about research into the sea and by holding out some idea of what a committee of parliament might bring before it for further examination.

Most of the research into the sea that we have done in Canada has been provoked by the necessities of our military position. At the commencement of the second world war the Royal Canadian Navy had no scientific establishment and was doing no research into the sea. The national research council, largely through the devotion of two of its senior officers, had kept alive a study of acoustics. One of these, Dr. Field, a former student of Dr. Boyle, both from the national research council, established an acoustics department of the national research council in 1930 and at the start of the war what we knew of underwater sound transmission came largely from this study of acoustics and from information made available to Canadians by research teams of the royal navy.

We should remember when we come into this house to discuss defence that it has been the fashion this session to discuss air interception. This inevitably gives rise to a discussion of the circumstances and particulars surrounding the CF-105. This discussion has no particular bearing on another peril, however, which some people consider to be even greater than the peril of air attack. I refer to the peril that lies under the mysterious sea, the peril of submarine attack. We now have truly submersible craft, craft which can journey through the Arctic ocean at the height of the winter season. This was proven by the most recent voyage of the U.S.S. Skate. The feasibility of this undertaking had already been established, that is the possibility of traversing the Arctic under the ice, but last month the U.S.S. Skate established that it could be done during the worst meteorological time in the Arctic.

These submersibles which may some day be turned against us, and for a defence against which we require all the research talent and energy we can bring together, are now capable of long endurance at high speeds under water and are also capable of launching missiles from under water in relatively undetectable locations. We must remember that in the single month of January, 1940, 100,000 tons of allied shipping were lost to magnetic mines. At that time the German navy had 45 operational submarines. Today the Soviet union has over 600 at sea, any one of which has more striking power and capacity to destroy North America than any German submarine.

In 1940, following that terrible month of January, two professors from Dalhousie university in Halifax were asked by the Royal Canadian Navy to commence research into the perils of the sea. Doctors G. H. Henderson and J. H. L. Johnstone were asked to commence inquiries into defensive measures which could be taken to protect allied shipping against the perils of the magnetic mine. Dr. Henderson visited London. I do not know that this story has ever been fully told. Sufficient time has now elapsed that interest can be assuaged without national security being in any way imperilled. Dr. Henderson went to the United Kingdom. It was, perhaps, logical that Halifax should have been chosen as the place upon which to base this research.

Back in the terrible days of the war Halifax and its sister city of Saint John were indispensable to this nation. Alas, sometimes we are subsequently forgotten, but thereby hangeth another tale. Dr. Henderson returned and visited Dean Mackenzie at the national research council. A small amount of money and a small number of personnel were made available. During the war, in my harbour, 3,800 allied vessels carrying the produce of every one of our constituencies, carrying the sinews of war, underwent degaussing at a range established in Bedford basin adjoining Halifax harbour.

It is typical of military weapons that as fast as you find defensive measures against them they are superseded by new types of equipment or new techniques of use. At the end of the war a separate naval research establishment was created. I refer to the laboratory of the defence research board which has its headquarters at Dartmouth across the harbour from Halifax. Here is concentrated, in conjunction with applied research of the Department of Fisheries oceanographic station at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, almost all the substance and total of Canadian research into our greatest physical asset, the wholesome sea which is at our gates. This research is largely concentrated in these two locations. Here, since the war; here, since the creation of separate physical facilities in 1952, in the town of Dartmouth, a small group of scientists and their professional and clerical staffs have rendered a service which I would not want to defame by a constituency address.

It is typical of most scientists that they are interested, a priori, in the achievement of their scientific research, not in its application. It is typical also of the naval scientists that they are indeed the most silent members of the silent service. Some of the results of this research, which are possible of limited civilian application, would be of incalculable benefit to Canadians. The naval research establishment in Dartmouth is presently preoccupied mostly with work of a highly secret nature, classified security work having to do with the detection of submarines, the increase of fire control mechanisms and the improvement of ordnance as a defence and as a direct countermeasure against submarines.

However, in addition to this classified work, the story of which will have to wait perhaps for some future generations, there has been some other work done. It is this type of work which I would hope that a research committee would inquire into and expand, if possible. The naval research establishment at Dartmouth has conducted continuing experiments with a hydrofoil craft. It is interesting to tell, and I think for the first time publicly, that the modern hydrofoil craft now visible in Halifax harbour under trial actually originated with a request of the then general officer commanding the Pacific region, now the distinguished Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes), who asked during the late war that the Suffield experimental station produce a portable smokescreen device to be used in amphibious assaults. As a result of this request research was conducted which revived experiments first conducted in 1907 by Alexander Graham Bell, John A. D. McCurdy and Casey Baldwin at Bras d'Or in Nova Scotia. These were the three men who had, in fact, created the Silver Dart, the first heavier than air craft to be flown in Canada and who also created the first hydrofoil craft. It is interesting that as a result of all our research we have come back, after several years, to their basic prototype. This hydrofoil craft is the forerunner of a new ship design because the research establishes that the hydrofoil principle can now be adapted to other vessels.

The naval research establishment at Dartmouth has also been engaged in research into scale formation on the coils of freshwater evaporators used by our ships at sea. We as Canadians have an enormous capital investment in naval ships. Yet if we had no fresh water aboard them, men could not stay at sea for indefinite periods. In this regard, it is interesting to note that our sister parliamentary group, namely the United States congress, has voted $10 million for advanced research in that country into the conversion of salt water into fresh water. The United States' secretary of the interior, Mr. Seaton, early last month announced that that research in the United States had advanced to such a degree that it was now possible to procure fresh water from salt water at a cost of one dollar per thousand gallons. This compares with a present cost of fresh water to domestic households in the city of Ottawa of approximately twenty cents per one thousand gallons. I mention this matter lest any hon. member from an inland constituency think that the result of research into the sea would have no direct bearing upon his constituency. My farm member friends across the floor of the house must surely be interested in any venture which can produce fresh water from salt water at a reasonable economic cost. If the cost can be further reduced the impact upon the world's food production would be inmeasurable.

The naval research establishment at Dartmouth has also done pioneering research into marine paints to prevent or resist corrosion and rusting, particularly below the water line. The naval research establishment is also examining and researching the use of other alternative materials for ship construction. Finally, in this symbolic recital of this incalculable work, may I say that the naval research establishment is engaged, in conjunction with the fisheries research stations, in basic research into oceanography. Here we come face to face with the future of our world, for the sea, the wholesome sea, contains more minerals than does the land area, more chemicals and more food life. Yet in today's atomic age it is a little saddening to reflect that we know more about the moon than we know about our own sea.

At the naval research establishment in Dartmouth even as I speak experiments are being conducted into such basic research information as thermal gradients and salinity gradients off the Nova Scotia coast which is one presenting peculiar problems for oceanographic research for not only does the temperature of the water change in location and as it deepens, but it also changes with the seasons.

I cannot overemphasize to my fellow members of all parties in the house, the absolute indispensability to the welfare of all the people in all the parts of Canada who sent us here of the research which is conducted today, by chance in my constituency, into the nature of sound transmission in the sea. It is now theoretically possible for a submarine to lie under a layer of water where there is a sudden change in temperature or even in salinity and there be relatively unreachable by detection gear. It is possible that this research into the sea will be the means whereby, in conjunction with other defence mechanisms, we shall buy our survival in an atomic age. But I would hold out the hope—as I know would other hon. members—that this research into a special field, namely research into the sea, would some day be useful to us not in protecting ourselves against death from nuclear-headed, underwater-launched missiles but that it would be useful to us in transmitting to all the world's peoples the hope that at long last we shall be able to gather in the bounty of the sea and that when we enter this building we shall not ceaselessly wonder about the adjectival use of the word in the inscription over the main door:

> The wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that 40 years of scientific research on a national scale or basis has made it possible for Canada to keep pace with the exploitations of its own vast resources as well as with the accelerated economic development noticeable in all parts of the world. This statement is found in a recent edition of the Canada Year Book. We may or may not agree with this statement. It is clear that the great research in the past has brought great benefit to our country. In listening to the debate this afternoon we have learned that there are many fields in which research is still necessary. For that reason I think the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) is to be congratulated for having brought this motion before us in order to give us the opportunity of reasoning with the government with a view to having it set up the committee that he has suggested.

In going over the past we have seen that as a result of the first world war the government at that time set up the national research council. Then in 1924, as a result of experience, it was reorganized. This council has given leadership in many fields of research and has provided grants and scholarships to encourage research. Because of the experiences of the second world war, the defence research board was established in order to give leadership in research necessary for the defence of Canada. We have already proved the necessity of research and the benefits of it. Today we are considering the advisability of reviewing our efforts in the field of research.

I therefore raise two fundamental questions in respect to this. Should we not now consider our capacity to extend such research? Have we sufficient facilities to train the personnel necessary to develop such research? Does our educational system provide the opportunity and the incentive which will produce the research personnel necessary for the work that is to be carried out? Secondly, to what extent should we endeavour to develop the full intellectual potential in our human resources? The answer to these questions would involve research in numerous fields and problems related to education, such as the teaching and training of our gifted children, the use of television in our educational system, the teaching and training of our handicapped children, the curriculum requirements for our present society, and the financing of education.

The federal government has recognized the need of assistance and the importance of research and education, and is giving increasing assistance. The provincial governments have recognized the need and importance and are giving it increased assistance also. Universities have been expanding research facilities, and they have been assisted by government and private grants. Some local boards have recognized the importance of research, such as the Toronto board of education, which has set up a research department and is providing space for this department in its new administrative building. I submit that this house has ample proof of the need to set up a committee to study the needs in the field of research, and I would like to suggest that when this committee is set up and meets it should study the need of research in the field of education.

To support this view I quote from the brief to the federal government from the Canadian teachers' federation presented in 1958. On page 9 of that brief they state as follows:

> Research is an important aspect of improvement of education. In Canada there is no co-ordinated program of educational research. While the work done has been creditable, it has suffered from want of financial support except in the case of a few projects financed by grants from foundations, mostly in the United States.
> The Canadian teachers' federation for the past five years has maintained a research division which costs approximately a quarter of its annual budget. The education division of the dominion bureau of statistics renders a valuable service in the provision of statistical research but it is greatly hampered by lack of staff. A few of the faculties of education in Canadian universities are conducting some research. However, all of these add up to a very inadequate program if Canada is to remain abreast of some other countries and in line with changing conditions in our social, economic, and scientific advances.
> The federation recommends that the federal government give consideration to providing at least some of the financial support necessary to establish and maintain a central bureau of educational research. Such a bureau could co-ordinate work now being done throughout Canada, stimulate and conduct new research and generally render a service to this aspect of the improvement of education.

I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that if we are going to consider the research problems into our physical assets we cannot overlook the need of the skilled researchers to carry out this work. We must give encouragement and assistance to the educational groups throughout this country to provide the opportunities and facilities to train research workers, and for that reason I think it is necessary that the federal government study in any project such as this the implications which it would have in the educational field. I sometimes wonder what is the percentage of the personnel involved in the research which is being done which have been trained in our own universities or school system. I also point out that in the field of research itself education is a very fertile ground in which this research should be carried out, and I hope that in the consideration of a committee which may be set up there is not overlooked the need of research in education.

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, like others who have spoken on this resolution, my first words must be words of congratulation to the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy), who has proposed this resolution and who has put forward his case in support of it so ably in this house today and on previous occasions. In preparing to speak on this matter I did some research in Hansard, and I found that the past contributions of the hon. member for Lambton West and of many of his colleagues who were then sitting in opposition were most informative. I would suggest that if anything is left out in today's debate it would very likely be included in past debates on this matter in this house. In particular I would refer hon. members to a speech made by the hon. member for Lambton West on May 11, 1954. This speech may be found in volume 5 of the revised Hansard for the 1953-54 session at page 4630. There he suggests that in dealing with this topic we ask ourselves several questions, and I would suggest to the house that those questions which are found on that page are just as applicable today as they were at that time. I will not repeat those questions as they are somewhat lengthy and I am sure there are others who would like to speak on this matter. I therefore merely refer the members of this house to those questions which may be found in Hansard.

There are a great many aspects of research that could be dealt with, and it is difficult for any hon. member to touch upon them all. We have heard from various quarters today and we have heard various aspects of research discussed very fully and ably. To my mind research is essential for our survival both from a military and an economic point of view. We are all well aware, I am sure, of the tremendous advances which have been made in soviet Russia in the field of research and in the field of education. They have made advances in the field of military weapons, and these advances are all quite well known to us in this house. They have made advances in industry, in agriculture and in various other fields, and these strides have enabled them to compete for and obtain world markets from which they were previously excluded.

In order to discuss the present situation in Canada I should like for a moment to refer to the situation which existed in this country in 1938-39. I must apologize for the figures to which I will refer, inasmuch as they are not completely accurate figures, and this is for the simple reason that it is very difficult to obtain accurate figures in terms of dollars and cents when one is discussing this subject. However, I am sure that even though these figures may not be completely reliable they will serve to illustrate the situation which existed at that time. In 1938-39 the amount spent by the Canadian government on research was between 40 cents and 50 cents reckoned on a per capita basis. This figure applied not only to Canada but also to the United States and to the United Kingdom. In comparison, the expenditure on a per capita basis by industry in Canada during the same period was approximately 20 cents, and in Britain it ranged between 30 cents and 50 cents. In the United States, on the other hand, the surprising amount of $1.70 per head of the population was being spent by private industry. Today in Canada, as nearly as I can find from the material I have accumulated, the government is spending approximately $1 on research, on a per capita basis, and private industry is spending $1.35. These figures, though they may not be accurate, as I have explained, are somewhat below the figure which the United States was spending in 1938-39, and for that reason I ask the question: is Canadian industry doing all it can in the field of research? Regardless of what they are spending, are they realizing their total potential? I think this is one aspect of the subject which the committee proposed in this motion might study in detail. Having studied it, the committee would be in position to recommend to the government how industry could be encouraged to spend more on research. It would also be in a position to offer guidance to industry in developing its products and competing for markets.

I think many of us at the present time see far too many situations where parts of industry—certain aspects of industry—have become wholly dependent on government contracts. One cannot help but ask the question: are such companies doing anything for themselves. One cannot, of course, apply this criticism to every industry in this country, but I think there are certain industries which feel that there is a gold mine underneath the centre block and that all they need to do is raise enough fuss and they will get contracts. Such firms are completely disregarding one of their responsibilities as free enterprise companies in a free enterprise nation, and that is basic research—to come up with a product and then to sell it.

I wonder if I might call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was discussing the question of whether or not private industry was fully performing its duty in the field of research. I pointed out that some industries seem to have become wholly dependent on government contracts. Once those contracts have run out or, in the interests of the nation as a whole, have been terminated, a situation arises which is lamentable both from the point of view of the company and the country. I suggest that a committee such as that proposed in this resolution would do much to guide and encourage private industry to promote research in fields which would be beneficial to themselves and to our economy.

I should like now to turn for a moment and look at this matter from the point of view of the student. I have a recent copy of the Winnipeg Tribune, which paper I am sure all members will agree, because of its unbiased treatment of political matters, has become the spokesman for western Canada. A news item in this paper refers to a genius hunt proposed by Dr. O. M. Solandt, who was at one time chairman of the defence research board and is now vice-president of research for Canadian National Railways. He suggested that we go on a campaign to find the geniuses in this country and to put them to work doing basic research. The question that immediately comes to my mind when I read such an article is, what are we going to do with all of those geniuses when we find them, and I am sure that if we went on such a hunt we would find a good many? How are we going to support them? To touch on this a little more specifically, the curriculum in the field of education has not been brought up to date with the times; consequently a student who is ready to go into research is approaching 30 years of age. Because of certain biological and economic factors—he is either out of funds or is married and raising a family—he runs into a great many difficulties in going into research. I am sure we will all agree that it is not a paying career. A committee of this kind could find out whether we are making the best use of our bursaries and our scholarships, and possibly could channel them into hands that are more deserving or into areas of the country which require a little more assistance than some other areas.

The committee could also make recommendations with regard to the structure of the Income Tax Act in so far as it affects students, and also the Unemployment Insurance Act in so far as it affects students. In this way they would be providing an opportunity for more students to go on with their education and eventually do basic research.

From the economic point of view, we have heard a great many people in this country say that the high cost of labour is pricing a great many of our products right out of the world markets. Here basic research is essential to find newer techniques in the field of manufacturing and to find out and promote new products which we could sell to other countries.

Basic research is essential to our survival. We must find new defences to any weapons of warfare that may be developed in other countries and we must also put on the drawing board weapons which may be used for retaliation should the need arise. Today we have the atomic bomb and the hydrogen bomb, and much is being done in this country in promoting the development of atomic energy for peaceful uses; but I do not think we should conclude that the atomic bomb and the hydrogen bomb are the ultimate so far as weapons of warfare are concerned. I think the past 10 years have indicated through the strides which have been made, that even more destructive weapons may be found, for instance, in the field of germ warfare. In this regard we must be prepared to meet any weapon that may confront us in the future and to do that research is very necessary.

Nothing that I have just said is to be construed as criticism of what is now being done by the defence research board, by the national research council, by atomic energy or by those private industries in this country which are promoting research and are doing all they can.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like heartily to endorse the resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for Lambton West. I do so because in my maiden speech in this house on May 22 last year I made a recommendation that the government set up a committee to study the whole field of education in this country. Therefore I heartily endorse the resolution we are discussing today.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising to discuss this resolution is not to delay its passage but, on the contrary, to assist it if I can by the brief remarks which I intend to make.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) spoke earlier this afternoon and indicated the position of the party in so far as we on this side of the house are concerned. All I intend to do is to put a few brief remarks on Hansard which will perhaps indicate to some further degree the position which we take.

The resolution of the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) seeks the appointment of a special committee for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the advisability of providing inducements to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research. The word "inducements", of course, is one which has a very broad meaning and it is one under which many matters could be considered. I am not here to attempt to define the term. My only thought at the moment is to say that I would have hoped that the hon. member would have told us in perhaps a little clearer language just what was meant by the term. Nonetheless, that does not derogate from the fact that we on this side of the house think that in essence the resolution is a good one.

In fact, I think that the house knows full well the attitude and conduct of the former administration with reference to research. I have no intention of recalling what that is. Neither have I any intention of going into the details of what was done by the previous administration in the field of research, in the field of atomic energy and in many other fields having to do with the development of natural resources. If I felt that I would not be taking up the time of the house I would go into them in greater detail. However, as one member has stated already, I believe that this is a matter which should be disposed of as quickly as possible and I have no intention of delaying the passage of the resolution.

I did rise, however, with one other purpose in mind, to put on Hansard the attitude of the Liberal party with reference to this matter. It has already been discussed in the house but not under this heading and I thought I should like to read at this time the statement of policy approved by the party so far as research is concerned. It is in these words:

> We propose to establish a national science commission to co-ordinate, promote and sponsor scientific development and research in Canada. The purpose would be to ensure, through appropriate financial assistance and the effective use of our resources, an adequate program of basic and applied scientific research through the national research council, the defence research board and other government agencies, together with industry and the universities.

I believe that most other hon. members who have spoken on the resolution have touched upon the various aspects of this Liberal party program. I put it on the record first for the purpose of saying that it goes beyond the terms of the resolution of the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy). I would have hoped that a commission would have been set up for the purpose of dealing with the very matters that the hon. member has in mind. However, he suggests a special committee and while I am not in disagreement with the resolution, far from it, I believe that the purpose that the hon. member has in mind would be more quickly and adequately attained by the adoption of the proposal I have placed on the record.

Nonetheless we on this side of the house are in agreement with the resolution on the whole and will support it. Without saying more I feel I should ask hon. members if at this stage it would not be advisable to dispose of the resolution by having a vote on it so that the committee will be set up in order to deal with the matters the hon. member has in mind in his resolution.

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased this evening to support the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy). In his resolution he suggests a special committee, representative of all parties to examine, to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research. In my view no person in the house is better qualified to propose such a resolution than the hon. member for Lambton West, for he represents an area which has become known as the chemical valley of Canada and the products manufactured in this valley are widely distributed and widely known all over the world. I am sure that since he first became a member of the house in 1945 he has seen at each session the growing need for a much greater acceleration in the field of research. I wish to congratulate him for bringing this most important subject before the house for discussion not only on this occasion but during other sessions.

The hon. member for Lambton West, speaking on the subject of research on May 11, 1954, proposed a series of questions and I wish to quote a few of them at this time. As found at page 4630 of Hansard his questions were as follows:

1. Are we doing enough in the way of research in this country, in view of the vast and varied natural resources now known to exist in commercial quantities in Canada?
2. Are our universities in a position to continue to provide the trained scientific minds and undertake the fundamental research necessary to assure the continued development and productive expansion of this country?
3. Would accelerated efforts in the field of industrial research, resulting in new products, new uses for old products, improved techniques that lower production costs, enhance or help us, an exporting nation is ever-increasingly competitive world markets?
4. Are our present fiscal policies, in relation to research expenditures, adequate to induce private industry to undertake the amount of research that should be undertaken other than by government agencies, if we are to continue to enjoy a high level of capital investment so essential to high employment and general prosperity in this country?
5. Does the government do enough in the way of agricultural, medical and other research, in fields where this can best be accomplished by the state in the common interest of all its citizens?
6. How does the degree and extent of research in this country compare with comparable efforts in the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries with whom our primary and secondary producers must complete in export markets?

I feel that these questions, Mr. Speaker, were important in 1954, almost five years ago, and are just as important and probably more so today than they were at that time. Tonight I wish to discuss one phase of a research program and that is in the field of agriculture. Research in agriculture has been concerned largely with practical problems and in this regard contributes greatly to the industry. But viewed as a specific program it means finding wider outlets for agricultural products; it means finding new uses in a wider field for edible and inedible agricultural products, for as we continue to expand in industry a greater need arises for raw materials. Much of this raw material can come from our agricultural products.

I wish to give credit to the tremendous contribution our agricultural scientists have made in the field of agriculture in the past. If it had not been for the contribution of a great scientist, Dr. Saunders, we would not have had Marquis wheat. Later, when rust threatened the varieties of wheat grown in western Canada, research again came to the rescue and a new variety was introduced that was fairly immune to the rust spores. What would be the position of our agricultural producers today if we did not have scientific agricultural research to improve and produce new varieties of cereal grains? Our production per acre probably would be back where it was 25 years ago.

It was not too many years ago that soybeans were first introduced commercially into Canada. The area in which it was felt they could be successfully produced was confined to the so-called banana belt of southwestern Ontario, namely the counties of Essex, Kent and Elgin. The area in which they are grown today has been extended to include many counties in Ontario, as a result of the use of new varieties. Scientific research has made possible the manufacture of products from soybeans that are too numerous to mention. Today these beans are grown in practically all the counties of southern Ontario from the county of Essex to the Ottawa valley.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) is now faced with ever-increasing surpluses of a number of agricultural products. He is faced with the problem of how and where to dispose of these surpluses. Dry skim milk powder happens to be one of these products of which we have a large surplus. This is a product that has been manufactured within recent years. I feel that with a greatly accelerated research program some use may be found for this skim milk powder other than as a food. The same remarks may apply to many other agricultural products that are in surplus supply.

I have heard it stated on many occasions that 60 per cent of our population depends directly or indirectly on agricultural products or products manufactured therefrom. Before resuming my seat, M. Speaker, may I say that, if given the opportunity of participating in an accelerated research program and presenting views before the committee suggested by the hon. member for Lambton West, the agricultural industry will not only receive benefits but others engaged in other types of manufacturing industry throughout the country as a whole will also receive benefits.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to take this opportunity, like previous speakers, to offer my most sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) upon his introduction to the House of Commons today of a most pressing and timely subject which certainly merits the interest and general discussion of the members of this house. Just a few minutes ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Smith) drew our atttention to the fact that this problem is one which must be faced not only by governments, be they federal, provincial or municipal, but by all segments our society; —government, industry, community associations and labour.

I am more than pleased, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Lambton West, at the outset of his remarks, decided to offer a definition of the word "research". Referring to the Oxford dictionary he gave us a classical definition of exactly what the word "research" means. I say this is most important, Mr. Speaker, because in a very few minutes I want to point out that we are dealing with a subject which is part and parcel of a wider, though not necessarily more significant, subject. I refer to the delicate question of dominion-provincial relations.

If you would permit me to digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I should like to relate to this house an incident which occurred a few years ago. At that time I had the privilege of watching a number of sittings of the United States congress. They were dealing with a bill which was essentially a bill related to education but which touched upon many aspects of research. While we must admit that the United States federal constitution is not exactly like that of the federal constitution which governs the Dominion of Canada, one had to admit that congress was experiencing a certain amount of difficulty in securing the passage of this educational or research bill. The reason was that, not unlike the provinces of Canada, the states of the United States of America guarded most jealously their rights over education. Speaker after speaker, therefore, had to get up and demonstrate that this was extraordinary legislation they were attempting to pass, and that certainly it was being passed because of the emergency conditions which, to a certain degree, did exist in relation to research and education. This is one question we can ask ourselves today in relation to domestic and world events. Do emergency conditions exist, not in the definite and dogmatic sense of the word "emergency", but do emergency conditions exist in relation to this problem?

As I said before, the problem of research which has been discussed today must not be necessarily mixed up with the problem of education per se, although it is readily admitted that both research and education are most definitely interrelated. I think that although we as federal legislators are not keen to get up in this house and discuss in their entirety simple matters which fall essentially within the provincial domain, we must be realistic in tackling any question of research in this federal house. We must be realistic and admit that this problem is only going to be solved with harmonious dominion-provincial relations. It is upon this basis that I should like to make a few brief, pertinent remarks.

I do not want to enter the field of partisan politics at the moment, but it is a fact that when this administration assumed office dominion-provincial relations were not good. I think it is fair to say that past Liberal ministers of finance—certainly, it seemed that way to many of us who were residents of the province of Quebec—did not even care to recognize that there was such a thing as a problem existing in connection with tax matters. Since the present administration has come to power the whole atmosphere has begun to change. Time and time again we can see that we have at least recognized the problems and we are going to try to work them out under harmonious and friendly conditions.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to revert to my initial remarks. I should like to say that it was extremely important that the mover of this motion attempted to give us a very reasonable definition of the word "research".

Many provincial leaders in the province of Quebec naturally have worries when they see a motion of this type in relation to research. Naturally they have worries as to what we think research actually means. Let us consider, for example, the many French-speaking classical colleges and schools in the province of Quebec. What will be defined as research or as aid to research in relation to these institutions? I think it is a well known fact—and it might as well be spoken about and aired frankly in this house—that under the terms of the British North America Act the provincial authorities in the province which I represent guard most jealously provincial rights over education. But that fact should not make us pessimistic in dealing with this most worthy resolution. It should only make us more aware of the absolute necessity for defining the word "research".

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on the problem of research in relation to some statements made by an illustrious Canadian, a great Christian, a humanitarian, a great scientist, neurosurgeon and neurologist and now in his later years a great author. I refer to Doctor Wilder Penfield, O.M., director of the Montreal neurological institute. I think that we as Canadians should be proud to count him amongst our most illustrious citizens.

I have made a few brief notes here, Mr. Speaker, on some remarks made recently by Doctor Penfield on education and research at the twenty-third annual meeting of the Montreal neurological institute on May 14, 1958. While his report has particular application to the above-mentioned institute, many of his remarks have broad significance in relation to the field of research. As he takes a look at research in Canada today, especially higher research, he feels that the best educated and trained nation is the strongest and happiest and best able to defend itself and to realize its own potential. The problem of the institute is the problem of many similar institutions in the field of higher education and research. They teach graduate students. They are carefully selected scholars and expert technicians prepared to take up their life's work. Like Doctor Penfield did, they are laying plans. Some will found university or hospital units of their own. Undoubtedly they will secure research grants from some foundation, government or patient.

Doctor Penfield feels that research institutions like nations must take a long view. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, as has been said by many hon. members who have spoken today, Russia and the communist forces are putting a great deal of emphasis on research and development programs. I think we should not regard the whole situation in an atmosphere of panic. While I happen to be one of those who believe that in many ways we have a superior and better educational system than the Russians have, a great many teachers and professors liken our position with respect to the Russians, to that in a sailing race.

Again I should like to underline this whole competitive spirit when I say that we should not always be comparing ourselves in this way or should not always be comparing our methods of research and education with those of the communist countries because comparisons do not always lend themselves to clarity in this instance, as each nation and each group of nations has its own particular background. But at any rate, a great many teachers and professors have likened our research race with the Russians to that of a sailing race; when they say that coming along towards the finishing line there is a great group of sail boats and the majority of the western nations' boats are away out in front but unfortunately the Russian's genius for research or the Russian aptitude for research has the ability to place that one boat far out in front, invariably under extremely perilous conditions.

Very often in research we must permit men to go forward without counting dollars all the time. We must permit men to go forward not always considering whether or not their particular research program will pay dividends in the immediate or near future. We saw that the defence administration of our neighbours to the south not so many years ago made many serious cutbacks on their research program with regard to their defence establishments. Thus in the opinion of many people came about the fact that the U.S.S.R. were able to produce sputnik before the United States were able to produce any similar weapon.

Doctor Penfield goes on to note the stalemate in Canadian education as, for example, in the province of Quebec. He notes that Quebec has returned university grants from the federal government. As he realizes the provinces, as I said before, claim prior responsibility with regard to education per se, Doctor Penfield states: "Let us agree that the provinces are right; let us agree that the actual terms of confederation should be respected on this point." But then the centrifugal aspect of the problem is presented. What now? Are institutions of higher learning to waste away while discussions of political advantage are carried out? Must research stop? Should graduate students stop their work and go abroad?

Viewing the provincial stand he offers a compromise and the compromise is this. Let the national government rescue research in Canada. If this is done in the most effective manner there will be no interference with provincial plans for education. Research is a field in which the provinces take little interest. Yet on the federal level, as has been mentioned previously in the house today, we have a national research council. He feels we might take a look at educational foundations such as the Rockefeller Foundation and the Nuffield Foundation.

Mr. Speaker, I fully realize that perhaps already too much has been said in periodicals and magazines with regard to the fact that our educational systems in the western world during the past years have catered to mediocrity. But in all frankness, I must sincerely count myself among those who agree with this general proposition.

Much has been said time and time again throughout the western world about the rights of the backward student. Too little has been said about the rights of the near-genius, the bright student and even the genius, who are oft times bored to death because our educational and higher educational institutions are geared to the dictates and tastes of mediocrity. Democracy throughout the past years has been noted for its ability to key itself, better than any other political system which history has ever known, to the true aspirations of the individual. As has often been said, Mr. Speaker; the spark from heaven, who picks it up? The crowd, never; the individual, always. It is a research program and research considerations such as we are discussing in this house this evening will cater more to the real needs not only of individual genius but of individual initiative which is going to build up a bigger and better and a more productive Canada, not only materially but in all those ways which make a strong and young democratic nation such as ours play its real part in world affairs.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I listened with very great pleasure this afternoon to the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) when he proposed this resolution which has to do with research. I also was very happy to hear all hon. members who this afternoon made suggestions and spoke of the significance of research in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, research is at the root of all progress in any country. In that field, we should not leave too much to luck or chance. Developments must be prepared and the march of science must be guided into proper channels. Research should not be restricted to the scientific field but should apply to all areas likely to improve the lot of man. In a country like ours, at the crossroads of two ages and two worlds, it is important to adjust research first to modern conditions and then to the geographical pattern.

Modern conditions, for instance, tend to promote research in the great Canadian Northland, and to intensify it in that area so as to discover the mineral wealth of our soil, like oil, gold or other resources. In the geographic field, research must be activated in that direction so as to improve and develop means of communication throughout the country as they are essential to the uniform development of all parts of a country.

Mr. Speaker, in Canada research can be as vast as the country itself, but must be proceeded with in the same way as was the case for our other natural resources. Canada to date has produced excellent research workers to whom we owe the advance of our country and who have achieved an enviable reputation among the world's scientists.

This afternoon, we in this house had the pleasure to hear the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Best), and hon. members were immediately reminded of the famous development we owe to those two great Canadians, Dr. Best and Dr. Banting, the discoverers of insulin.

Many of our research workers have become prominent in all fields of science. In the field of agriculture, need I mention the famous Marquis wheat, which is a Canadian development? That wheat continues to make Canada better known throughout the world.

Need I refer to such prominent research workers as the late brother Marie Victorin, a great scientist, who had the things of nature at heart but always remained in the field of science. He specialized in the field of plants: botany.

Need I mention Professor Lower, an historian of great renown, or Canon Groulx, a great research worker whose many historical accounts can be found today in all Canadian libraries?

For the moment research in Canada must be placed in its natural setting. Research is being made in the field of science, of pure and applied science. In the field of pure science need I mention the wonderful work accomplished by the National Research Council whose fame is well established throughout the world? In the field of applied science, we have in Chalk River an atomic energy laboratory and it is worthy of note that the research work being carried out there is solely directed to peaceful uses. Canada may not be as advanced in the field of research, as other and more prosperous countries of the world, for instance, the United States who have monopolized the best brains in the world. In fact, Berkeley University, in California, has seven Nobel prize winners among its teaching staff.

Canada is forging ahead in agricultural research, in industrial and scientific research of all kinds, and it can be said that our country, proportionately speaking, considering its population and its financial means, is second to none in the field of research.

In the field of agriculture, for instance, if we refer to pamphlet A52-258, issued in 1958 by the Ottawa Central Experimental Farm, we note that that service comprised 33 experimental farms, one experimental farm for fur bearing animals, 20 experimental substations, 2 research laboratories, 2 forest nurseries, and 244 illustration stations.

In 1958, for instance, there were in the province of Quebec 5 experimental farms, as follows: Caplan, Ste Anne de la Pocatiere, Lennoxville, l'Assomption and Normandin, as well as 3 sub-stations, one at Lavaltrie, in the constituency of Berthier-Maskinongé, one at Ste Clothilde and one at Fort Chimo. According to the latest annual report of the Department of Agriculture, there were in the province of Quebec, in 1957, 44 demonstration farms a figure surpassed only by Saskatchewan with 52 farms.

Mr. Speaker, in all those farms experiments are being conducted to enable Canadian farmers to produce foodstuffs that can compete with those produced by the other countries.

According to the public accounts for the financial year 1957-58, the experimental farm division—and when I say experimental farms, I mean research in the field of agriculture—included 435 permanent salaried employees receiving an annual salary of $5,000 or more. Among those, 53 only have aa French-Canadian name. Furthermore, 31 other permanent salaried employees received, for the same period, travelling expenses amounting to $500 or more. Among those, 6 have a French-Canadian name.

Mr. Speaker, allow me at this stage to outline in detail the expenses incurred by the experimental stations in the province of Quebec.

Stations	Amount
Caplan	$ 56,722
Ste Anne de la Pocatiere	$ 287,370
Lennoxville	$ 318,635
L'Assomption	$ 190,966
Normandin	$ 184,678
Ste Clothilde	$ 50,092
that is a total of	$1,088,463

made available to experimental stations in the province of Quebec.

Each of the following federal stations benefited from an expense budget which is higher than that of the better treated station in Quebec: Nappan, $322,204; Charlottetown, $322,863; Fredericton, $431,423; Kapuskasing, $361,647; Brandon, $336,223; Swift Current, (including soil laboratories), $689,911; Lethbridge, $674,363; Lacombe, $368,501; Beaverlodge, $362,239; Summerland, $541,472; and Agassiz, $333,395.

This shows, Mr. Speaker, that each one of the experimental stations I just referred to, which are located in other provinces of this country, has a more substantial budget than any other experimental station in the province of Quebec. That is why I urge the government to consider the feasibility of increasing the appropriations in order to speed up research in the field of agriculture, especially for the experimental farms in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to have in my riding the federal experimental station of L'Assomption. As I just said, the vote granted to this station for purposes of experiment and research amounts to $190,966. In my opinion, it is a meager budget. Once again, I call upon the authorities concerned to consider the possibility of increasing the amounts of money made available to the officials of this station to step up research. I also take this opportunity to urge the Department of Agriculture authorities to hire more staff at the L'Assomption experimental farm, so as to promote research.

Proposal to Increase Research Activities

There are many experiments being conducted at the L'Assomption experimental station, but unfortunately, due to a lack of sufficient staff and funds, those experiments are not carried through as far as they should. Thousands of dollars more would have to be voted to stimulate research for the discovery of milder varieties of tobacco, because as you know, Mr. Speaker, the federal constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is the leading tobacco-growing area in the province of Quebec. There would also be a need to develop milder varieties of cigar tobacco, as well as other varieties with greater resistance to disease, drought and cold weather.

Mr. Speaker, there should also be more research and more experimentation into the field of chemical fertilizers, in order to develop fertilizers better adapted to our needs, and to increase the yield of Canadian tobacco growers. There is also need for studies in the field of fertilization and into the effects of irrigation on the quality of tobacco and on the soil.

Again in connection with the experimental farm at L'Assomption, there is need for increased research into field crops, gardening and poultry raising.

Mr. Speaker, it is also most important that our research centres obtain the funds they need for medical research; they should be given the necessary funds to step up research in the fields of heart disease and cancer. When a war breaks out, millions of dollars are found for armaments. Today, millions of dollars should be made available to research laboratories to enable them to step up their work against cancer, because we all know that no cure has yet been found for cancer of the blood. Canada has many research laboratories. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to remind you of the importance of the University of Montreal's institute of microbiology, directed by an outstanding professor, Dr. Frappier. This laboratory enjoys a worldwide reputation; it is a credit not only to the province of Quebec but to the country as a whole.

In the industrial field, many research projects are being carried out. Companies make millions of dollars available to their technologists in order to further scientific progress. Do I have to mention to you that, in the province of Quebec, the city of St. Hyacinthe has a school of research on textiles which is held in high repute even beyond the province of Quebec?

The paper-making school in Three Rivers has a miniature paper mill which is the most important in the world. In fact, it is ahead of the one found in Grenoble, France.

Research in mining, lumber and paper must also be intensified.

Research in refining and petroleum must also be carried out on a larger scale.

Scientists must be encouraged to do research work, to intensify their research, for instance in the field of humanities, history, folklore and literature.

In the field of history, need I recall the name of Mr. Jean Bruchési, recently appointed Canadian ambassador abroad? It is a recognized fact that he has done much research work in the field of history.

In the field of folklore, need I recall the name of the late Father Oscar O'Brien, and the Alouette Quartette? We also have men who have specialized in literature, including fiction, poetry and radio writing. As for radio, is it necessary to mention the name of Reverend Father Seguin? Many professional journalists also do research work.

Mr. Speaker, we have many scientists, but unfortunately, we may not have enough of them in the field of philosophy and sociology.

In what manner can we promote research? Provincial governments should be encouraged to grant scholarships to students. The Canadian government should also be encouraged to increase the number of scholarships granted for research only or for the exchange of students between countries. Funds should be voted to improve the laboratories, to encourage young people to work in earnest. Finally the necessary grant should be made to research institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the national research council be made to act as co-ordinator of research in Canada. Research knows no boundaries.

Perhaps one of the best means of simplifying research would be to adopt the metric system. In the light of studies that have been made, there is no doubt that the adoption of the metric system would help simplify research. Both from a scientific and a practical point of view, the metric system has the unique advantage of being the only decimal-based measuring system where all units, whether geometrical, electrical, thermal, mechanical, optical, or dynamical, are logically interrelated on the basis, as I said, of decimal multiples and submultiples.

It is because of its clarity, its logic, and its efficiency that the metric system, after its creation in 1801, rapidly became the most widely used measuring system in the world. It is now used throughout Europe (except in the British Isles), in all countries of Central and South America—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is rather stretching the significance of this very broad resolution when he begins to suggest the adoption of the metric system.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the metric system in relation to research. I wanted to take the opportunity afforded by the debate on this resolution to deal with it but, in any case, I will have the opportunity to speak on the matter in more detail in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, still as far as research is concerned, I strongly urge students in agriculture, the agronomists, those who have a master's degree in science or a doctorate in agriculture, to go into the federal services. At the present time, according to a list of the staff of the Department of Agriculture, the proportion of French-speaking technicians who should be working in that department is not adequate. I do not want to blame anybody, Mr. Speaker, but I strongly urge the students in agricultural schools, the agronomists, those who have a master's degree or a doctorate to apply for employment with the civil service commission. With their technical training, their general education, the agronomists of the province of Quebec are indeed as well qualified as if not better than, other agronomists of this country. I strongly urge them to go into the federal services. They can look forward to a career, to a future where they are solely needed.

I said earlier that experimental farms in the province of Quebec do not have, proportionately speaking, their fair share of the national income. We do not have a sufficient number of technicians in federal experimental farms of the province of Quebec to do efficient research work.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say a few words on that resolution which, in my opinion, is very important to the economic future of this country. I congratulate the hon. member who sponsored it and I can assure you that this resolution has certainly pleased not only all hon. members, but also all scientists, all those devoted to research in our Canadian universities.

(Text):

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad of the opportunity that the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) has given to me by putting forth such a resolution because it enables me sincerely to express some of my views, especially in the field of scientific research. I feel, sir, that the criticism that we see from time to time in the newspapers and hear from people across the country to some extent as to the lopsided representation in parliament is justified. By that I mean we have the talking groups of lawyers, school teachers, labour leaders and so forth, as opposed to perhaps the working people, those who are actually doing things, such as the scientists.

Since the beginning of this session I have listened to some observations made on perhaps one of the most outstanding things that affects us world-wide, namely the international geophysical year, which was conceived by scientists down in the United States in April, 1950, and which finally came into existence and ran for a period of 18 months from July 31, 1957, to December 31, 1958. During this time some 30,000 scientists and technicians from some 66 nations took part in a crash program of data collecting to enable us to know a little bit more about this world. I feel, as one of the members of the talking class, being a lawyer, that I am in a rather inadequate position to put forth perhaps the point of view of the scientists; but I feel nevertheless that it is one of the inadequacies of parliament that we have no scientific representation in this group who is able to speak on such an important and noteworthy resolution. Therefore, I have allotted the task to myself with a certain amount of temerity.

The most important aspect of research in the international geophysical year which interested me was the matter of space research. This was accomplished through several means; first, the sounding rockets; second, the earth satellites; and, third, what they call deep-space vehicles. In the first category of the sounding rockets, some several hundred rockets were launched from the United States, the Soviet union, Britain and Japan. In the second category of earth satellites, during the international geophysical year some four were launched from the United States and three from the Soviet union. During this same international geophysical year the only deep-space vehicle launched was launched by the United States, namely the Pioneer, which went up to a distance of some 80,000 miles.

Hon. members may ask what were some of the results that we have obtained so far from the international geophysical year? First, and perhaps the most important in the matter of space research, was the discovery of the Van Allen radiation layer. This is an area of very intense radiation extending from some 600 miles to some 21,500 miles above the earth. Apparently this particular radiation layer is not so dense at the poles. This is of interest to the space research people in the sense that it may pose further difficulties when man eventually travels out into space.

One of the other things which has come out of the international geophysical year so far and which is of interest to us is in contrast with what was thought in 1492 at the time of Christopher Columbus. People laughed when Christopher thought that the earth was round. We have had a vision since 1492 of a round earth. Yet the scientists taking part in the international geophysical year have said that the picture they have now is of a pear-shaped earth, one that is flattened at the poles and somewhat pear-shaped toward the South American region. One problem which has been raised by the activities of the international geophysical year and which would benefit from interest on the part of such groups as ourselves is the question of the distance between the Atlantic and the Pacific because even in this modern age the exact distance is not known. True, it may only be a matter of one or two miles that is involved but even though we are in a scientific era it still is not known.

Another matter of interest is the question of the effect of the tidal waves actually involved in the earth. The earth too has tidal waves exactly the same as water. In fact, the scientists say that places like Hawaii rise and fall several inches in the course of one day. It is hoped that the research of the international geophysical year will give more definite information regarding this particular matter.

I think also of the question of space rockets and space research. As parliamentarians I think we should be very much interested. However, since the beginning of this session I do not believe we have had anything but oblique reference to the international geophysical year and its accomplishments. The postmaster general of the United States of America is interested in transporting mail by rockets. I wonder whether the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) of Canada has given any consideration to the matter or is similarly interested. Perhaps that is a slightly facetious reference but we are actually in the space era and recognition is being given to such possibilities.

The resolution of the hon. member for Lambton West covers the providing of inducements to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research. So far as scientific research is concerned, I think that one of the first things that we as members of parliament must do is to show some interest in the subject. In my opinion such a committee could give consideration to the establishment of a parliamentary space committee to study this matter and receive reports from scientists as to what is actually going on in other parts of the world with regard to space and other scientific research. I feel that this matter should be of interest and I think that in the very near future we will see the establishment of a ministry of space. With our rather simple legal principles regarding space ownership permeating down to the centre of the earth and somewhere into the upper regions, it will become very important to Canada to have a clear understanding of what control it can and will exert with regard to outer space.

I realize that a small country like Canada does not have the money to enter into space research to the same degree as the Soviet union, Great Britain and the United States but nevertheless I believe that as members of parliament we should show some leadership and take an interest in space research. I believe that the United States has such a government committee and if we had a space committee there could be liaison with their committee. We would then be able to keep in the vanguard of development instead of being still on the ground back in the horse and buggy era while other nations are looking upwards. I believe that the resolution of the hon. member for Lambton West provides an opportunity for Canada to take the necessary scientific leadership.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, like the speaker who has just taken his seat I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) for bringing this matter before the house again. Since I have been a member I know that the hon. member has always taken a very keen interest in this subject and has contributed a great deal to the discussion of it during the time he has been in the house. I should also like to note that while in the past all members of the house have not been entirely in favour of the type of resolutions now before us there has, I am very glad to say, been a change of heart in some quarters. I was very happy to hear the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) indicate that they were in favour of the resolution.

I was particularly glad to hear this in view of the fact that on March 1, 1956 a similar motion was presented to the house by the parliamentary assistant to the then minister of defence production. The motion at that time read as follows:

> That a special committee be appointed to examine into the role of government in the field of non-military research in Canada, including:
> (a) operations in the field of atomic energy,
> (b) operations of the national research council.
> That the committee be empowered to sit during the sittings of the house and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee and to report from time to time; and that notwithstanding standing order No. 67 the committee shall consist of 20 members.

The arrangements provided for that committee were very similar to the committee the hon. member for Lambton West has in mind but with one important difference. The resolution now before us provides that the committee can call for witnesses and send for documents and papers and goes on to say that the committee should be appointed for the purpose of examining and reporting on the advisability of providing inducements to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research.

The only difference between the two resolutions is that the committee envisaged by the hon. member for Lambton West would have the power to send for experts in the person of professors, scientists, technologists of various kinds, and for documents and papers so that the committee would have concrete information on which to work and would not be working on speculation. However, back in 1956, and I think this is important, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Green) moved an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton West, to the government motion, that amendment being in these words:

> That the motion be amended by inserting after the word "house" in the sixth line thereof the following:
> "To send for persons and unclassified papers and records."

It is interesting to note that on that date, March 1, 1956, the members of the government then in power voted against that amendment, the result of the vote being 127 nays and 72 yeas. At that time the three opposition parties, the Progressive Conservatives, the C.C.F. and the Social Credit, all voted in favour of the amendment. It is for this reason that I am very delighted to see that spokesmen for the Liberal party in the house today have indicated their support of the motion now before us. Apparently they have had a change of heart in the meantime, possibly due to the fact that they now sit across the floor.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house by reiterating what has already been said by many other members, nor to bring before the house questions which I am sure are in the minds of the general public. I refer, of course, to the necessity of basic research being increased in Canada because of the very rapid advancement by what may be considered the potential enemy, namely the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. There has been repeatedly brought to everyone's attention by the press, radio and prominent speakers the extent to which Russia has been able to mobilize her vast resources of men and raw materials, and also her almost machine-like production of scientists, engineers and technologists. I well recall that in 1956, I think it was, I made remarks in this house dealing with this subject. I do not intend to repeat them now. It is nothing short of a miracle the extent to which Russia has been able to emerge from virtually a feudal economy almost 38 years ago into practically the world's leading industrial power. This has been accomplished by encouraging scientists, technologists and basic research. I think we can learn a lesson from that.

It is true that in this country, the United States and other western countries we have developed a very high standard of living. We have done very well. I think there is a growing tendency, because we have done well from a material standpoint, for our people to sit back, rest on their oars and say, "Well, we are there." The fact that somebody else is coming along makes little difference. But, Mr. Speaker, the people of Asia, Africa and those countries newly formed since world war II do not have what they call luxuries and what we consider as daily necessities. They are getting pretty tired of getting along on mere subsistence. They are looking with eager eyes toward countries which will help them and which can produce what they consider to be the luxuries of life and which, at the present time, we consider to be the necessities. The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is more and more coming into the position of being able to do this. If we continue to permit the U.S.S.R. to give help and provide the materials which they will be able to do in the future, then there is no question but that we will have lost the economic war which is being waged in the world today. We will certainly have lost it in so far as the underdeveloped countries are concerned. It is true that we have been very helpful to these countries, but if we were going ahead at the same rate as Russia we might do a great deal more. We would not have the worries we have at the present time.

Now, coming a little closer to home, I would say that this problem of encouraging basic research is certainly of great interest and importance to Canada from a domestic point of view. I know that various members have already mentioned the question of basic research. It has been dealt with by others probably better than I could deal with it. However, I should like to point out three things. If a committee such as the one suggested were set up and had the power to send for experts, to send for reports, to look into the matter as carefully as possible, it is quite likely that three of the major domestic problems in Canada might be on the way to solution, not complete solution, but at least a start made toward the solution of these problems.

There is the problem of seasonal unemployment in Canada which we have because of our climate. There is the problem of the huge surpluses, agricultural and otherwise, that have been built up in this country. There is the problem we have as a result of the loss of our domestic and export markets because of high production costs in Canada. In so far as seasonal unemployment is concerned, I am quite sure that if such a committee as is proposed in this resolution were established, scientists and engineers could be called who might suggest avenues of research in the field of winter construction. It is a well known fact that the great problem of seasonal unemployment in Canada is created by the fact that the building industry cannot carry on work during the winter. I know some progress has been made in this field. Only last winter in my own city I saw a bridge being built which had a plastic dome arrangement over it and work which could not have been done heretofore except in the summer months was being done. This bridge was largely built during the winter months.

Further research along this line would greatly improve the possibility of carrying out construction programs in the winter. This would aid in solving some of the problems we have in connection with seasonal unemployment in the building industry. Needless to say, this would be of great importance to this country and in particular to the people who are employed in the building industry. I know of one or two construction firms who are spending considerable of their own money, in a small way, in an attempt to produce metal frames for these plastic domes. These metal frames are put together like the mechano sets with which the youngsters play.

Instead of the wooden frames, which have to be thrown away, these light aluminum frames can be put together quickly to carry this plastic dome, then dismantled and used somewhere else. This is only one example, but it illustrates the type of thing which I have in mind. The results of these projects could aid greatly in ironing out the hills and valleys, as the statisticians call them, in the graph of winter employment in the building industry.

Then, there is the problem which faces the fishing industry in the wintertime because of severe weather. I am quite sure that research into this problem could improve the possibility of conducting fishing operations during the more rigorous winter months. This is the sort of thing that this committee could do which would be of practical help to the Canadian people and to those of us who are busily trying to find methods of solving the seasonal unemployment problem in Canada.

The second thing I have in mind is the huge surpluses we have built up in the various agricultural products. The ones that come to mind, of course, are wheat and dry skim milk powder. No doubt hon. members can think of other things. It is very difficult for various reasons, as all hon. members I am sure are aware, to dispose of these surpluses even on a giveaway basis or at a very low price. I think an effort might be made to find substitute uses for some of these large agricultural surpluses. A scientist friend of mine said that some of his associates were working on the problem of converting some of these agricultural products—I have forgotten which ones but I think wheat was one—into some type of plastic which could be readily used. This would provide a market for some of these agricultural surpluses, and this is another example which illustrates the type of thing that could be investigated by this committee.

Then, of course, there is the very important question of the loss of our domestic and export markets because of the high cost of production in Canada. We all know that Canada faces stiff competition as a result of the low wage levels in Asiatic countries. For example the employees in the plywood industry in Japan receive 20 cents an hour, while in Canada they receive $1.65 per hour. Certainly we in Canada have not the slightest desire to reduce our wage levels. Until such time as the wage levels in these countries catch up to our level, we must find some way of manufacturing in Canada which will enable us to compete with these low wage economies in the east.

There are two ways we can do that. First of all, this committee could look into ways and means of producing new and better products. This would be one method of competing with these low wage economies. The second and obvious way is to find new and better methods of producing present day products. This, again, would be something that this committee could investigate and thus contribute a great deal to the economy of the country. Of course, we all know that many large firms are already spending a great deal of money, time and effort on research, but I do not think there is anyone in this house who would not agree that our research effort in Canada cannot be greatly improved upon.

If this proposed committee had a chance to call all sorts of experts, look into records and information which is available I am sure it would make a helpful recommendation to the government as to how research could best be improved and increased and what inducements would be necessary. It may not be entirely a matter of money. There may be some other method. However, there must be some way of improving and helping to increase research in Canada generally. In particular, I think this committee could look into the possibility of improving research with respect to those three problems I mentioned, namely seasonal unemployment, the disposal of our huge surplus of agricultural products and the loss of our domestic and export markets owing to the high cost of production in Canada.

I should like to close my remarks at this time because I do not wish to go into details. Those are three broad principles which I think could be looked into carefully by this committee. By doing so I think it could contribute a great deal in helping the government to deal with these three problems which have always been with us.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposed by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) calls for the setting up of a committee to examine and report upon the advisability of providing inducements to promote and accelerate research activities in many fields. I may say that all hon. members who have spoken here today seem to be in favour of this motion. The hon. member who preceded me said that he hoped the Liberal party was in favour of it and would speak in favour of it. I may say that the members of the Liberal party are very much in favour of this motion and have not provided speakers in the hope that this motion might be voted on before ten o'clock tonight. I have listened to one Conservative speaker after another rise in his place here this afternoon and speak in favour of this motion. If they keep on talking until ten o'clock they will in effect kill the motion and put it at the bottom of the list, and it will never come up again for discussion this session. One would suspect that they have orders from higher up to keep this debate going on. If they are serious about the matter, I should like them to allow this resolution to come to a vote. I should like to move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas) that the question be now put.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member his motion in written form? If not, will he write it out?

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, the resolution that has been proposed by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) has created a good deal of interesting discussion and debate this afternoon and evening. He has challenged us all to give great thought and consideration to his resolution proposing the setting up of a special committee to deal with research as it would affect Canada and our research problems. I propose to talk for a few moments about a field in which I am most interested.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there is a motion before Your Honour at this time. If the hon. member wants to speak at this stage I think he must speak to the motion. If I am wrong in that interpretation, I hope Your Honour will put me right; but my understanding is that there is before the house a motion which must be dealt with.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, this is all very nice as a bit of clever stage play but the actual fact is that on a motion of this type the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) or any other hon. member is entitled to debate the merits of the original resolution.

Mr. Winch: No.

Mr. Green: What we are having presented in the house tonight, Mr. Speaker, is another example of Liberal closure.

Mr. Argue: Oh, oh.

Mr. Green: There is the same objective, with slightly different methods, that we saw in the pipeline debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word in connection with this matter. Apparently my hon. friend, during his holiday or recess—whether it was out in his constituency or elsewhere—did not seek, as it were, to establish between the two sides of the house the friendship for which he is so well recognized; but the contrary. Mr. Speaker, may I say that I am going to come to the point of order in a moment—

Mr. Speaker: I should not have allowed the minister to depart from the point of order because I now find that the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) also wishes to do so. I think we should stick to the point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: What I was going to say is that there is a motion now before Your Honour. While the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) does not like the motion and seems to indicate that it is closure, the fact is that it is just the converse. This is not an attempt to bring about closure but it is an attempt to bring about a decision on the matter. The point of order I raise is that there is a motion before Your Honour and I think we should deal with it.

Mr. Speaker: Can the hon. member give me any citation which indicates what is relevant on a motion of this kind; I refer to the previous question.

Mr. Chevrier: The citation I would give to Your Honour is that which is found at page 20 of the rules, namely standing order 32(1) (c) which reads as follows:

> 32 (1) The following motions are debatable: Every motion: . . .
> (c) for the previous question;—

This standing order can also be read in conjunction with standing order 63.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Read standing order 51.

Mr. Chevrier: Standing order 63.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Read standing order 51 first.

Mr. Chevrier: I have no objection to reading standing order 51.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Try citation 196 of Beauchesne where it is stated that debate may continue on the original question.

Mr. Chevrier: Does my hon. friend wish to speak on the point of order? If he wishes to do so, he is quite at liberty to do it. However, I am discussing it now and I am bringing to Your Honour's attention the section which I read earlier and on that basis I say that the motion is debatable.

Mr. Green: There is no point of order in that. At page 165 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, paragraph 196, we find the following:

> 196. The previous question is moved when the original question is under debate, in order to force a direct vote on the original question before an amendment is proposed. The form of the motion is "That the question be now put."

That is exactly what the hon. member for Welland (Mr. MacMillan) has moved. Then there is this very pertinent sentence:

> Once it is proposed, the debate may continue on the original question.

Proposal to Increase Research Activities

Mr. Chevrier: Then the whole point is, what is the previous question? There is a distinction to be made between the original question and the previous question. My hon. friend has not made that distinction, so until he brings before the house a rule dealing with the previous question, which he has not done and which I do not think has been clearly established in this house before, then I submit the discussion should be on the motion now before the house.

Mr. Speaker: There is no doubt about the procedure. The motion is debatable, and the debate can continue in much the same fashion as it did before the motion was put, and the members who have spoken before are free to speak again.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before the other debate developed, I propose to speak on this special research committee more in line with the field of agriculture. I think one should realize just how important research is to this great country of Canada, and one need only think of the great amount of research that was put into the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and what has developed from that research field. Never before in the history of Canada would a research committee be more necessary than it is today, especially in the field of agriculture as mentioned here this afternoon and this evening, due to the large amount of surplus agricultural products in Canada. One only need think of the situation that prevailed during the last war when Germany practically ran her whole regime on the lowly, humble potato and its by-products. They made many things from the potato, and I would think that if we had the research committee that is proposed here today, possibly something similar could be developed from wheat, which is in great surplus in this country at the present time. It is quite conceivable that many products could be made from wheat if the time, the money and the research went into this major problem. It is not many years ago that casein was developed from milk, and from casein they made plastic, and from plastic has developed many, many products.

So I would think, Mr. Speaker, that with the co-ordination of a research committee such as proposed it would go a long way toward helping us develop some other products from our surplus agricultural products. It is generally realized, I believe, that even with the great increase in population and the rising living standards, Canada can produce more than it consumes for many years to come. I think of the field of plant pathology, where many new and better varieties could be propagated in order to produce for Canada some of those products which we are now importing from other countries. I think of the large amount of vegetable oil which comes into Canada from the United States from which we make margarine. I think the field of research could develop suitable varieties from which we could get these vegetable oils. It was that great president of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, who once said that if we buy goods from other countries, they have the money and we have the goods; but if we produce the goods at home or grow the crops, then we have both the goods and the money. It was on that principle, along with the building of a great population, that the United States is now one of the greatest countries in the world.

I think that is a model which we should be inclined to follow more, and with a research committee we could direct our thoughts along these lines. I think that such a committee, if established, would go a long way toward co-ordinating the field of agricultural research. We have across Canada, as you know Mr. Speaker, many experimental farms and also many agricultural colleges. Each is very sincere in developing experimental work, but I think we lack very much a co-ordination between these two great bodies, the agricultural colleges and the experimental farms. If they would co-ordinate this research it would do away with the great waste of time and money which we have today.

Mr. Peters: Let us do a little research into the waste of time we have had here today.

Mr. Hales: The hon. member has had his opportunity.

Mr. Peters: This is what the Canadian people are asking for.

Mr. Hales: My hon. friend has had his opportunity to speak this afternoon. If they would co-ordinate this great research field it would save much time and money and considerably more research work could be done if one organization co-ordinated the whole field of experimental agricultural work. We have had wonderful results in the last few years in Canada in the field of agricultural research study. One only has to stop and think of the development of the famous MacIntosh apple, which apparently originated in western Canada, and also the development of the world famous Marquis wheat. One also has only to stop and think of the great strides and improvements which have been made in the study and research of pasture grasses and pasture improvements so that today we are raising practically double the number of livestock on the same acreage of grass that we were able to do a few years ago. It is not many years ago that we had to import practically all our tobacco for human consumption, whereas today, owing to the results of great research and study, tobacco is now grown in Canada to fulfil our needs. One only has to think of poultry to be reminded of the great results which research has achieved. Some 20 years ago it took 14 weeks and 12 pounds of feed to raise a three pound broiler chicken. Today this can be done in nine weeks and on seven pounds of feed, and the scientists are looking toward a goal which is even more promising, a three pound chicken raised in six weeks on six pounds of feed. Such great strides as this have been brought about through science and research, but I think that even more might have been accomplished had we received the benefit of a co-ordinating committee set up to direct the results of this research.

Mr. Winch: Are you going to talk this out or vote for it?

Mr. Argue: Are you going to read out this one?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member who has the floor has a perfect right to speak without interruption.

Mr. Argue: But not to read his speech.

Mr. Hales: I wish the hon. gentleman had prepared a speech for me that I could read.

Mr. Argue: He admits he cannot read it.

Mr. Hales: One can go on to speak of the many directions in which research has proved of value. Today in the city of Ottawa the fisheries council of Canada is meeting. I dare say that they have a research council, but I think they would be appreciative if there was a committee in Canada to co-ordinate all the work which is being done in the industry. I think, for example, of the great lakes system in which at one time there was a bountiful supply of lake trout which could be caught at almost any time. But the lamprey eel has caused such devastation that it is now almost impossible to catch a lake trout. Research will be of great value in helping to overcome this dreaded lamprey eel.

I understand that an agriculture research council exists in Great Britain and that it is achieving wonderful results. The council reports directly to the cabinet on the problems with which it deals, and I believe that we in this country, with our vast natural resources would find such a research co-ordinating body of particular advantage. It is not so long ago that we were ridiculed about our vision of the great north and ridiculed for planning to build roads from igloo to igloo. But great research has been carried out in the northern part of Canada, to the extent that only recently over 70 million acres of land has been sold or leased for development by the oil industry. But the most important function of this proposed committee, as I see it, would be the co-ordination of all the research being done in connection with all the various industries in Canada, because with this co-ordination one can expect greater achievement and greater results. In the course of this debate we have heard some very interesting remarks concerning the wide ramifications of research, and the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) by introducing this motion has provoked long and serious discussion on this subject. I maintain that for a young country such as ours, with our vast natural resources, there is a particular need for a research co-ordinating board in order that we may make the greatest use of the natural resources with which we have been endowed.

Mr. Winch: The hon. member is not checking the clock, Mr. Speaker. Is it okay if I count down?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not contributing to the debate by such tactics and I would ask him to refrain.

Mr. Winch: Every member has supported this motion.

Mr. Hales: May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business is for tomorrow, and for as much of the week as the leader of the house is able to give it?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we will begin with item No. 39 on the day's order paper, the resolution concerning the bill which deals with freight rates. Then we will take item 30, second reading of the bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act, and next item 35, the resolution concerning the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements. On Wednesday we will commence with item 33, second reading of the bill to provide for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers. As has already been announced, the budget will be brought down on Thursday evening. We expect that estimates will be taken either on Thursday or on Friday, and perhaps on both days, and they will be the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. The intention is to resume the budget debate a week from today and to carry right through with the full eight-day debate.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

STRONTIUM 90—ANALYSES OF AIR, WATER AND MILK

Question No. 132—Mr. Argue:

1. Has any recent analysis been made of the air, water, or milk supplies of any of the following cities to determine the amount of nuclear fall-out produced strontium 90 or other long-lived radioactive isotope present: Vancouver, Edmonton, Whitehorse, Regina, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Churchill, Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, Saint John, Moncton, Halifax, Charlottetown, St. John's?

2. If so: (a) What was the nature of the findings in each case?

(b) How do these compare with the supposed tolerable limit in each case?

(c) Has there been any significant increase in any instance since 1945?

(d) If so, in what respect?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

Air

1. Gross beta activity in air has been measured at the following stations. No analysis has been made for long-lived isotopes:—

St. John's, Halifax, Ottawa, Churchill, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Whitehorse.

2. (a) There were marked fluctuations both with time and location. (When relatively high readings were obtained, the radioactivity decayed rapidly.)

(b) They are well below the maximum permissible level.

(c) Yes.

(d) In 1945 there was no measurable strontium 90.

Water

1. Yes, for rainwater at the following stations:—

St. John's, Quebec, Ottawa, Churchill, Winnipeg, Edmonton.

2. (a) 1958 (Ottawa) 5 millicuries per sq. kilometer, (Quebec) 7 millicuries per sq. kilometer. Levels for the other stations are being calculated.

(b) Because rainwater is not usually consumed as rainwater no maximum permissible level has been established. However in terms of drinking water the above strontium 90 values are well below the maximum permissible level. In addition, before rainwater reaches the normal drinking water supplies, a number of natural and artificial filtering processes take place reducing the strontium 90 content further.

(c) Yes.

(d) In 1945 there was no measurable strontium 90.

Milk Supplies

1. Yes, at the following stations:—

Moncton, Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Vancouver.

2. (a) There are reported in CNHW (RP-1), July 1958, and AECL No. 678, July 1958.

(b) They are well below the maximum permissible level.

(c) Yes.

(d) In 1945 there was no measurable strontium 90.

RADIATION LEVELS IN CANADA

Question No. 137—Mr. Argue:

1. What radiation levels have been reported in Canada following nuclear bomb tests (in roentgen units for comparison) for each of the last four years?

2. What is the minimum lethal dose (in roentgens)?

3. What is the supposed tolerable level (in roentgens)?

4. Is there any disagreement among scientists concerning (a) the minimum lethal dose; (b) the supposed tolerable level?

5. If so, what are the nature of their contentions, and the names and qualifications of the scientists who made such statements?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Direct measurements of radiation levels in Canada following nuclear bomb tests have not been made because the daily and seasonal variations in the natural background radiation levels are greater than the slight increases produced by nuclear test explosions.

Rough calculations of radiation levels can be made by making certain assumptions and using measurements of the level of radioactivity in air and in rainfall and snow. Such calculations are not being carried out on a routine basis because of the large uncertainties involved. However based on computations for Ottawa rainfall the radiation exposure due to weapon tests is estimated to be 1 per cent or less of that from natural sources, cosmic and terrestrial.

2. A lethal dose for the individual is not defined, but it is generally agreed that a dose of about 400-500 roentgens will cause death among 50 per cent of the group exposed. However, this dose has to be delivered rapidly. For small doses given over a long period of time, the corresponding figure would be much higher.

3. For workers using radioactive materials an exposure of 5 roentgens per year, but not exceeding 60 roentgens before the age of 30 and not exceeding 200 roentgens per lifetime exposure, is considered acceptable.

4. (a) There is no major disagreement with regard to the range of lethal doses.

(b) There is no major disagreement with regard to the maximum permissible exposure for workers using radioactive materials. There is disagreement with respect to the possible consequences of low levels of exposure to whole populations. The degree of uncertainty with regard to the effects of low levels of radiation upon exposed individuals has been very clearly stated in the report of the United Nations scientific committee on the effects of atomic radiation.

5. The nature of the possible difference of opinion has been indicated recently in an exchange of letters which has appeared in the pages of the Sunday edition of the New York Times, between Professors Linus Pauling and Barclay Kamb of the California Institute of Technology and Dr. Miriam P. Finkle of the Argonne national laboratory. The opposing contentions in this case related to whether it is likely that there is a threshold level of radiation below which there would be no effects at all even in large populations, or alternatively whether there may be very slight effects upon the incidence of leukaemia and bone tumours, which, in view of a world population of two and a half billion people, might nevertheless affect substantial numbers of individuals in the world as a whole. Professors Linus Pauling and Barclay Kamb are respectively professor of chemistry and assistant professor of geology at the California Institute of Technology. Dr. Miriam P. Finkle is in the division of biological and medical research of the Argonne national laboratory.

FISH CONTAMINATION BY NUCLEAR FALL-OUT

Question No. 139—Mr. Argue:

1. Have any communications been received by the Canadian government from any foreign government or agency thereof, or from any other official source, that the fish inhabiting the waters adjacent to our coasts have become contaminated or affected in any way by nuclear fall-out?
2. If so, what were the nature of such communications?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. No.

Questions

2. See answer 1 above.

BACKGROUND RADIOACTIVITY

Question No. 140—Mr. Argue:

1. Is any agency of the federal government conducting experiments to determine the level of background radioactivity beyond which there will be danger of genetic mutation in living organisms?
2. If so, have any conclusions been reached as a result of these experiments?
3. Have any hypotheses been formulated?
4. If so, what are the nature of these?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Studies of this nature are not being made because it is believed that the number of mutations produced by exposure to radiation varies in direct proportion to the dose, and that even very low levels of radiation from natural sources cause some of the mutations which are occurring all the time in living organisms. It should be added that although estimates have been made of the possible genetic consequences of an increased amount of radioactivity, the basic information on which these estimates have had to be based needs to be improved.

2, 3, 4. See answer 1 above.

C.N.R. TRAIN WRECKS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 142—Mr. Argue:

1. How many train wrecks occurred on the Canadian National Railways lines in Nova Scotia, during the periods between July 1, 1957 and February 1, 1959, and January 1, 1956, and July 1, 1957?
2. What was the cause of each such train wreck during the above period?
3. What was the cost of each such train wreck during the above periods?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1, 2 and 3. The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that the term "train wrecks" is not a precise one, but the tabulation below includes all mishaps of any kind where damage was $750 or more and, as such, classified as reportable accidents.

Statement of Train Accidents on C.N.R. Lines in Nova Scotia for Periods Shown

Questions

TRAINING OF MUSEUM CURATORS

Question No. 214—Mr. Argue:

1. What facilities are there in Canada for the training of museum curators and other museum staff?
2. What facilties in Canada are being used for the training of museum curators and other museum staff?
3. What is the function, and what are the duties and responsibilities of a museum curator?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. The national museum has sponsored a week-long seminar—and proposes to sponsor others—for the training of museum curators. The national gallery has a scheme for the training of curators for art museums whereby the trainee receives instruction for an entire school year. Week-long seminars for museum curators are sponsored by the Canadian museum association. These have been held at Jordan, Ontario, at Halifax and at Victoria, and they are arranged by the regional museum leaders of the association. The association also sponsors week end "workshops" which have been held in a number of centres. Workshops are also sponsored by the Ontario historical society, principally for the curators of small historical museums. Members of the Canadian museums association are eligible to undertake home studies for the certificate of the museums association of Great Britain, and several members are currently enrolled in this scheme.

With respect to the training of museum staff other than curators, most of the larger museums in Canada accept individuals who are willing to be employed without pay on an apprenticeship basis with the object of learning the techniques and methods of museum work. The national museum of Canada and the Royal Ontario museum have accepted trainees on this basis, some of whom have been supported by museums sponsoring them and others by grants from the Canada Council.

2. See answer to No. 1.

3. One of the main responsibilities of a museum curator is to preserve and exhibit (as may be appropriate) the contents of the museum or museum section for which he is responsible. The duties and responsibilities vary greatly according to the type of museum concerned, its size and the nature of its contents. They also vary with the emphasis placed on the various phases of the museum's activities. A curator of a large museum normally acquires specimens to add to the museum's collections, studies them, records data about them and supervises their storage and preservation. He supervises the preparation of exhibits displaying them to the public, and explains their significance by the production of scientific reports and papers, which are publicized in scientific and popular periodicals and by means of lectures, radio, television and other media.

BRANCH DIRECTORS, NATIONAL MUSEUM

Question No. 248—Mr. Argue:

1. By what authority were the positions of director of the human history branch and director of the natural history branch of the national museum of Canada created?
2. On what date was this done, and by what legal instrument were these positions authorized?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1 and 2. Pursuant to section 9 of the Civil Service Act and under the authority of the Financial Administration Act, the position of director, national museum of Canada was established and approved by treasury board minute 503905 of May 18, 1956. The then government later decided to seek legislation to divide the national museum into a museum of natural history and a museum of human history and decided to create an additional position of director. This additional position was recommended under the Civil Service Act, concurred in by treasury board and approved by the governor in council effective December 28, 1956 as shown in a supplementary list of positions.

NATIONAL MUSEUM BRANCHES

Question No. 250—Mr. Argue:

1. By what authority was the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources empowered to divide the national museum of Canada into two branches?
2. On what date was this done and by what legal instrument was it carried out?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1 and 2. Pursuant to section 9 of the Civil Service Act and to the Financial Administration Act, the change of departmental organization to provide for the division effective January 1, 1957, was recommended by the civil service commission on December 18, 1956, concurred in by treasury board and approved by the governor in council on December 28, 1956.

FARM EMPLOYMENT PLACEMENTS

Question No. 254—Mr. Regier:

1. How many persons were placed in farm employment in 1958 through national employment offices?

2. How many persons were placed in farm employment in 1958 through the immigration department?

3. What is the distribution as to males and females in question (1) and (2)?

4. How many farm employers employed (a) only one person; (b) two persons; (c) three to five persons; (d) more than five persons?

Answer by: Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State):

1. 89,335.
2. 5,794.
3. (1) 59,055 males; 30,280 females.
   (2) Statistics not available.
4. This information is not available.

C.N.R.—TRANSFER OF AIR BRAKE SHOP

Question No. 268—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the Canadian National Railways move the air brake shop work from Port Arthur to Neebing in the last three years?

2. If so, how many men were involved in the switch?

3. What were the reasons for making this change?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes, in 1957.
2. Five.
3. From an operational standpoint it is considered that Neebing is the appropriate location to perform such work.

C.N.R.—TRANSFER OF AUXILIARY

Question No. 269—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the Canadian National Railways move the auxiliary to Neebing from Port Arthur in November, 1958?

2. If so, how many men were involved in the switch?

3. What were the reasons for making this change?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes.
2. Nine.
3. Studies indicated that Neebing is the appropriate location. In the event the auxiliary is required west of Neebing, there is a time saving through this relocation.

C.N.R. CLEANING PLANT

Question No. 270—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is the Canadian National Railways planning a cleaning plant at either Port Arthur or Neebing?

2. If so, when will this plant go into operation, what will be its capacity, and how many men will be required to man the plant?

3. How is such cleaning work being carried on at the present time, and how many men are involved?

4. Will the new cleaning plant have any effect upon the work being done at the Port Arthur repair tracks?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. A car cleaning track has been constructed at Port Arthur.

2. The plant will go into operation this spring. The capacity of the track is approximately 150 cars. Estimated cleaning staff will be approximately 15 and an additional 10 engaged in making light repairs and upgrading cars.

3. Cars are now being cleaned for paper loading at Neebing, for paper and flour loading at Port Arthur, and for general freight on the freight shed tracks. Eleven men are now engaged in this work. Two men are also employed at Port Arthur and two at Neebing engaged in light repairs to cars which are being cleaned.

4. The men engaged in the light repairs on the new cleaning track will be under the jurisdiction of the Port Arthur repair track foreman and will not result in a decrease in the Port Arthur repair track staff.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—MARINE INDUSTRIES CONTRACTS

Question No. 271—Mr. Fisher:

1. Since January, 1952, has Marine Industries received and/or carried out any contracts for the St. Lawrence seaway authority?

2. If so, what was the nature, cost and location of such contract?

3. Who have been the executive officers of Marine Industries during this period?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. Dredging channel, lake St. Louis. Award contract prices, $8,219,000. Awarded March 18, 1955.

Dredging approach to seaway, Montreal harbour. Award contract price, $10,636,000. Awarded March 9, 1956.

Dredging and channel improvements, Cornwall island. Award contract price,$13,-411,000. Awarded January 25, 1957.

Dredging lake St. Francis, Lancaster bar. Award contract price, $384,000. Awarded March 18, 1955.

Supply of sounding sweep No. 2. Award contract price, $65,500. Awarded June 27, 1958.

3. Officers who signed contracts were:

Dredging channel, lake St. Louis—J. Edouard Simard, president; C. Hawken, secretary.

Questions

Dredging approach to seaway, Montreal harbour—J. Edouard Simard, president; L. N. DeRome, managing director, dredging.

Dredging and channel improvements Cornwall island—J. Edouard Simard, president; C. Hawken, secretary.

Dredging lake St. Francis, Lancaster bar—J. Edouard Simard, president; C. Hawken, secretary.

Supply of sounding sweep No. 2—Arthur Simard, vice-president; C. Hawken, secretary.

DR. RICHARD S. MACNEISH—NATIONAL MUSEUM APPOINTMENT

Question No. 291—Mr. Argue:

1. On what date was Dr. Richard S. MacNeish first appointed to the staff of the national museum of Canada, and to what position was he appointed?
2. Did this position come under the Civil Service Act and regulations?
3. Was this position advertised by a civil service competition?
4. If so, (a) Did Dr. MacNeish apply? (b) What was the position advertised for, and the date it was advertised? (c) What names appeared on the civil service eligibility list? (d) In what order were the names listed? (e) How many persons applied? (f) What was the closing date for the receipt of applications?
5. Was Dr. MacNeish a British subject or Canadian citizen at the time he applied for this position?
6. If not, has the civil service commission been notified that he had applied for naturalization papers either as a British subject or Canadian citizen by the closing date for the receipt of applications for this competition?
7. If not, on what authority was Dr. MacNeish permitted to compete in this examination?

Answer by: Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State):

1. Dr. Richard S. MacNeish was first appointed to the staff of the national museum of Canada on June 20, 1949. He was appointed to position, MR-MMU-5 as an anthropologist 3.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

4. (a) Yes.

(b) This position had become vacant and, since it was considered that no one in civil service possessed the qualifications required, it was advertised as an open competition on March 30, 1949.

(c) The name of Dr. MacNeish was the only name on the eligible list for this competition.

(d) See (c).

(e) Two.

(f) April 23, 1949.

5. No.

6. The civil service commission had not been notified that Dr. MacNeish had applied for naturalization papers as a British subject or a Canadian citizen by the closing date for the receipt of applications in this competition.

7. Dr. MacNeish's application was admitted to competition 49-4450 by authority of P.C. 24/3539 of July 15, 1949, which exempted him from the requirements of section 33 (1), now 32 (1), of the Civil Service Act. This section of the Civil Service Act reads as follows:

"No person shall, without the authority of the governor in council, be admitted to any examination unless he is a natural born or naturalized British subject and also has been a resident of Canada or Newfoundland for at least five years."

STATELESS PEOPLE—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT CONFERENCE

Question No. 310—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

Is Canada being represented at the conference of 30 nations convened to prepare an international agreement to eliminate or reduce the number of stateless people in the world?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs):

Yes.

BANK OF CANADA BUILDING, HALIFAX—HEATING

Question No. 313—Mr. Robichaud:

1. What is the estimated cost per annum of heating the new Bank of Canada premises at Halifax, Nova Scotia, with (a) oil; (b) coal?
2. How many gallons of oil will be required and from what country will it be purchased?
3. How many tons of coal would be required to heat this building?
4. What would be the cost of moving such a quantity of coal into the Ontario market from Nova Scotia at the highest subvention rate per ton applicable?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Not of government record.

2, 3 and 4. Answered by No. 1.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 7, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE LATE DR. ARTHUR BEAUCHESNE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while ordinarily no reference is made in the House of Commons to those who in the past have been associated with the house, I trust that I may be permitted to make reference to the passing of one who had a signal honour conferred upon him on September 15, 1949 by a motion of the then prime minister, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. I refer, of course to Dr. Arthur Beauchesne. At that time he retired as Clerk of the House of Commons and had conferred upon him an appointment as honorary officer of the house and a seat at the table on occasions of ceremony.

Dr. Beauchesne passed away today in his eighty-third year. He made his mark in life as clerk assistant, to which post he was appointed in 1916, and as clerk of the house from 1925 to 1949. Those of us who were in the House of Commons during the days when he served as clerk of this house recognized him as a great scholar, a student and authority on parliamentary procedure. In his person, and through the instrumentality of his book on the rules of procedure in parliament he gave to parliament a singular distinction. I know that members on all sides of the house would want to pay their tribute to this honorary officer of the House of Commons who, though he retired some 10 years ago, retained a position by virtue of the motion to which I referred. This was not the first time in Canada's history, I believe, but the second occasion upon which an outstanding clerk had been so honoured. I wish to extend the sympathy of the House of Commons to the family of Dr. Beauchesne.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it is entirely appropriate that the Prime Minister should have expressed, on behalf of the house, our very great regret and sorrow at the news of Dr. Beauchesne's passing. Dr. Beauchesne, of course, has made a great and permanent contribution to parliamentary government and parliamentary institutions in Canada. He has become over the years as the Prime Minister has indicated, the acknowledged master of parliamentary procedure, and his published works on this subject have become, of course, a bible for us all. As long as we are preoccupied in this house with points of order, rules and procedure, and that will be as long as there is parliamentary government in Canada, Dr. Beauchesne's name will perhaps appear in the columns of Hansard more often than that of any member.

His public service to Canada in this and in other capacities extended over many years, indeed until the very last days of his life. I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that service will not be forgotten by the country which has benefited so greatly from his work. We on this side of the house should like to join with the Prime Minister in this expression of regret and sympathy to the surviving members of Dr. Beauchesne's family.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we in the C.C.F. group wish to be associated with the expression of sympathy of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. It was my good fortune to serve in the House of Commons from 1945 to 1949 while Dr. Beauchesne was still the clerk. All of us who knew him personally recognized his great knowledge of parliamentary procedure. I think it was fitting that he was interested in parliamentary procedure almost to his very last breath. The fourth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms was published only last year. Dr. Beauchesne has a permanent place in the life of parliamentary government, having served Canada so well and having established himself as Canada's eminent authority on parliamentary rules and forms.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON WASHINGTON COUNCIL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Perhaps I should have asked it of the Minister of National Defence, who was Canada's representative on the occasion in question, but he is not present this afternoon. In the absence of the Minister of National Defence I should like to ask whether the Prime Minister can make a report today on the recent meeting of the NATO council in Washington.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, Canada was represented at the NATO ministerial meeting by the Minister of National Defence who will not be returning to Ottawa until tomorrow, and who no doubt will add to some general observations that I make on this occasion in answer to the Leader of the Opposition in giving to the house a brief account of the position taken by Canada on the principal questions discussed at the meeting.

As a result of the Soviet union's declared intentions concerning Berlin and Germany, the discussions of the council were largely devoted to the consideration of the German problem in its various aspects. The ministerial council received a report from the four powers with special responsibilities for the German question, on the present state of their thinking in respect to those matters which will be the subject of discussion during the forthcoming talks with the Soviet union.

The Berlin issue is undoubtedly one of the most serious challenges that the alliance has yet had to face. Canada considers it imperative that it should not be interpreted primarily as a challenge to our military capability, as a challenge to seek a solution by force. We believe with President Eisenhower, in the words he used some years ago, "there is no alternative to peace". Believing that, the west must therefore try to settle its differences with the Soviet union by negotiation. But if these negotiations are to be successful there is a clear need to clarify western thinking with respect to the grave issues confronting the alliance. This was one of the purposes of the meeting in Washington.

By way of contributing to this process of clarification Canada offered a few suggestions concerning the problem of Berlin. In the Canadian view no agreement can be acceptable to the west which places in jeopardy the security of West Berlin or the freedom of its citizens. It is also the Canadian view that the NATO countries could not accept a solution which might endanger the ties between the Federal Republic of Germany and the other countries of western Europe. Moreover, we could not accept arrangements which might have the effect of foreclosing the prospect of the reunification of Germany.

Hon. members will recall that I made a statement in this house on March 19 in which I expressed the belief that——the United Nations might play some significant role in the solution of the Berlin problem, and that this phase deserves further and more careful study.

In the development of this idea the Canadian delegation suggested that the permanent council of NATO study the possibility of a role for the United Nations in the application of a solution for the Berlin problem. I believe the United Nations might play a useful role provided, of course, that a four-power agreement is reached first. The basic role of the United Nations might be to verify that all parties were abiding by the terms of the agreement. An essential part of the agreement might be a Soviet pledge binding itself and its associates to full freedom of access to West Berlin and the acceptance of a "United Nations presence" on the lines of communication to that city. Canada, in advancing these suggestions as a basis for discussion, emphasized that United Nations responsibility for West Berlin would be complementary to the rights and obligations of the four occupying powers.

With regard to the problem of a German settlement, the Canadian delegation expressed the hope that there would be increasing cooperation at the technical level between the federal republic and the East German regime. It would, in the Canadian view, be fruitful to give further study to a proposal originally made by the federal German republic to institute a continuing commission for Germany which would be charged with the responsibility for supervising and promoting progress toward reunification. The Canadian delegation further suggested that the western powers might usefully explore the possibility of some measure of arms limitation which, together with an adequate system of inspection and control, might have a wholesome and calming effect in the European area.

I think we can say with some satisfaction that the four members of the alliance with special responsibility in Berlin not only received with careful attention the suggestion made by the Canadian delegation and other members of the council, but they have agreed to take into account in their preparatory work the views and observations put forward during the ministerial meeting for the difficult negotiations which lie ahead. I submit this is another important development in effective political consultation in NATO matters which will be of great importance to each and to all members of the alliance.

If there are further matters that the minister of defence can bring before the house amplifying what I have stated today, the opportunity will come upon his return to the house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of National Defence, as the Prime Minister has said, will be making perhaps a more detailed statement on an appropriate occasion on his return to the house, I need not comment at any length on what the Prime Minister has just said; but I think the house will welcome his statement, especially as the NATO communique from Washington was not very comprehensive or informative in regard to the questions which are very much in our minds, particularly the question of Germany and Berlin.

There is no doubt, as the Prime Minister has said, that the west is entitled, and indeed has a duty, to display firmness in regard to the protection of western rights in Berlin, though firmness itself is not necessarily a policy so much as a posture. There are western rights in Berlin which have to be protected, but there are also eastern interests in Berlin and, indeed, in Germany; and the problem is, of course, to reconcile western rights with eastern interests. I think we in this house all agree that this must be done by negotiation and cannot be done by force. It has therefore become a matter for negotiation.

So far as we on this side of the house are concerned, we support the principles which the Prime Minister has in a general and brief way indicated as the basis for such negotiations. We think the Canadian proposal put forward at the NATO council for the introduction of the United Nations into this Berlin situation in some appropriate way was a constructive and imaginative one. We hope this proposal can be followed up by the NATO council.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): We welcome the stand taken by the Canadian government in advancing the possibility of the United Nations playing a useful role in the Berlin crisis. Nothing the west does should imperil either the security or the freedom of the people of West Berlin, but there is a growing feeling, I believe, in the NATO nations that this is a time for negotiation, a time for discussion. Perhaps, working with the United Nations, agreement might be reached which would maintain the security and the freedom of West Berlin while at the same time showing the Soviet union that the western world is prepared to take into consideration its natural fear of a rearmed and reunited Germany.

It is no secret that there are great strains at this time within the NATO organization. We hope that cool heads will prevail. We hope that the stand taken by the Canadian government, the position outlined by the Prime Minister and the position taken by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, will prevail to the end that negotiation and settlement may be achieved. We are hopeful that a summit meeting will take place, and that at that time a lasting solution to this problem will be reached.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO RECENT CHANGES IN REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): I should like to inquire of the Prime Minister whether he has any observations to make concerning recent changes in the immigration regulations.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will be in a position to make a statement on this question on her return to the house tomorrow or the next day. In the meantime I think I should make some reference to this matter, particularly in view of certain representations which would appear to have been made for the purpose of leaving an impression that some discriminatory change has taken place under the order in council which was passed on March 19.

I should point out that on May 24, 1956 an order in council was passed, P.C. 784, of which the order in council passed on March 19 was an amendment. That order in council of May 24, 1956, reads as follows, in so far as the pertinent sections are concerned:

20. Landing in Canada of any person is prohibited except where the person falls within one of the following classes of persons who may be landed in Canada if such person meets the requirements of the act and of these regulations:

(a) a person who is a British subject by birth or by naturalization in the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, or the Union of South Africa, a citizen of Ireland, a citizen of France born or naturalized in France or in St. Pierre and Miquelon islands, or a citizen of the United States of America if such person has sufficient means to maintain himself in Canada until he has secured employment therein;

(b) a person who is a citizen by birth or by naturalization of Austria, Belgium, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden or Switzerland or who is a refugee from a country of Europe, if such person undertakes to come to Canada for placement under the auspices of the department or, if the department has given its approval thereto, for establishment in a business, trade or profession or in agriculture;

(c) a person who is a citizen by birth or by naturalization of Egypt, Israel, Lebanon, Turkey, or of any country of Europe or of a country of North America, Central America or South America if such person is the husband, wife, son, daughter, brother, sister, as well as the husband or wife and the unmarried children under 21 years of age of any such son, daughter, brother or sister, as the case may be—

And so forth.

Subsection (c) was amended in only two particulars, one by deleting Egypt as one of the countries, and by altering son and daughter to unmarried son and daughter, and by the removal of the previous provision covering brother and sister. I point this out because there has been a suggestion that the order in council passed in March was a discriminatory one. I want to say subject to the alterations to which I made reference it is the same as the law has been since 1956 under order in council. I wish to make clear to my hon. friend that anything in the nature of discrimination has no place in our law. I, for one, intend to have this looked into, because the section indicates that the one passed in 1956 had whatever objections can be raised against the present amendment.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege at this time. I did not want to do it a moment ago while the Prime Minister was discussing a matter in answer to a question raised by an hon. member. I say to you with all respect that I do not think this is regular on the part of the Prime Minister. The reason I make that statement is this. It is the purpose of questions in this house, as Your Honour has brought to the attention of hon. members repeatedly, to seek information and to obtain information. What the Prime Minister has done on this occasion is to take an order in council and read certain pertinent parts of it. We do not know the order in council and we do not have it before us. We are not in a position to reply to what has been said.

It is my contention that this is a matter which should be discussed either on the estimates or on some other occasion when a bill is before the house. I do not think it is fair to hon. members on this side of the house to have an hon. member ask a question and then have the Prime Minister by the statement he has made in Hansard reply in this manner.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has raised a question about our practice, and I think perhaps I should make a preliminary comment on it. I have had some concern about the practice which has grown up of making rather lengthy statements in reply to questions rather than making such statements under the heading of motions, which has been the customary practice.

Today we have had two examples. The Leader of the Opposition asked a question, in reply to which the Prime Minister made a rather extensive statement on a matter of public interest which could have been made as a statement under the heading of motions. Then in response to a question from the hon. member for Davenport we have had another answer which is perhaps more in the nature of a statement, in that it deals with a matter at greater length than has been the practice in answering questions. There is perhaps confusion as between the two procedures which are available at this stage of the proceedings of the house; first, statements by ministers followed by comment by one speaker from the official opposition and one from the other group and, second, the usual oral question and answer practice.

Without giving any settled opinion or ruling I do say this is a problem the house must bear in mind, because it becomes confusing if we do not keep separate the procedure respecting ministerial statements and comment thereon and the procedure as to oral questions and answers.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, when you are considering this matter I wonder whether you would also take into account the fact that today an additional point of confusion was brought into the picture because the Leader of the Opposition asked a question of the Prime Minister to which an answer was given, and that answer was then followed by a statement by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: I think hon. members on both sides of the house might perhaps give thought to this matter, because it is important that we know what are the limits of discussion at this time of the day when there is no motion or other matter before the house.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister not think it was rather contemptuous of the rights of parliament to wait to pass this order in council until immediately after the house had concluded consideration of the estimates of that department?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the hon. gentleman is strictly right in the lecture on procedure inherent in his question, because I seem to recollect that a similar situation arose when he was minister. Possibly he could clarify that.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, sir, since the Prime Minister has chosen to answer a perfectly proper question by a most improper innuendo, perhaps he would substantiate his recollection by pointing to the regulation that was made immediately after my estimates were before the house; because I think he will find some difficulty in doing so.

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): May I put another supplementary question to the Prime Minister arising out of the statement he made. Can the Prime Minister inform the house what the reasons are for reducing the categories of immigrants admissible to Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that would be a lengthy statement, and having listened to your admonitory words I suggest that this would be a question for the minister to deal with at another time.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has received any complaints with regard to the restrictive character of this order in council?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have seen some statements made by certain members of parliament in criticism of it, and that is the reason I say that matter can be fully looked into.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask a supplementary question, which will require a short answer. What is going to be the position of the people who are now in the backlog so far as applications are concerned?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Those which have been proceeded with prior to April 1 will continue to be processed in the usual way.

Mr. Fisher: I have another supplementary question. There is a backlog in Italy of approximately 60,000. As a result of this regulation, do new applications take precedence over the approximately 60,000 already in existence?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the processing operation generally follows the chronological sequence of applications, and that will be continued.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Will the Prime Minister give consideration to allowing the house to debate this matter at the earliest opportunity? In view of its importance, in view of the many complaints which have been registered, and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has had ample opportunity to make a long statement and that an opportunity for debate should be afforded to others, will he make provision for the house to discuss the matter at the earliest opportunity?

Mr. Argue: Make your budget speech on that subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Essex East knows that in the next few days the budget debate will take place, at which time any member can deal with the question as he sees fit.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will he bring the house up to date on the strike situation at the Polymer Corporation, Sarnia?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question I regret to advise that there is not much I can report except to say that, in so far as the Department of Labour is concerned, we have communicated with both parties by telegram offering further mediation services of the department. In reply we have received an acceptance from the union but have not yet heard from the Polymer Corporation. We hope we will receive a reply to our telegram in the next few days. That is how the matter now stands as far as we are concerned.

[Later:]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of the answer he gave to the hon. member for Lambton West a moment ago, in which the minister said that his good offices were being offered in connection with the Polymer strike. Can the minister tell the house what difference there is between this dispute in which a crown corporation is engaged and the dispute which took place earlier between another crown corporation, the C.B.C., and its employees?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether or not the hon. member for Laurier is in search of information or simply making a point. It seems to me it is an argumentative question, and I do not think there is room for that kind of question at this point.

Mr. Chevrier: May I explain what the purpose of the question is?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I shall be glad to hear what the information is that the hon. member wishes.

Mr. Chevrier: I think it is quite in order, sir, to ask a minister why he took a certain action in one case and why he refused to do so in another. That is simply what I was putting to the minister, why he offered his services in one dispute although he refused to do so in another.

Mr. Speaker: I see the minister is anxious to explain, but I am sorry I do not agree that the question should be allowed. If the hon. member wished to ask the minister why he did a certain thing, that is one thing. This procedure of making comparisons, it seems to me, is going beyond the rules.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question, then?

An hon. Member: Supplementary to what?

Mr. Chevrier: It is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Lambton West and arises out of the answer which the minister gave. Has the Minister of Labour not received representations from his colleague, the Minister of Defence Production, with reference to the dispute at Polymer, which is under the jurisdiction of that minister?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, I have not, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR INCREASED ASSISTANCE IN CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the increasing cost of construction of fishing vessels, can the minister advise the house if it is his intention to introduce at this session an amendment to the act or a bill to provide assistance in the contruction of vessels of the dragger or long-liner type, with a view to increasing the present subsidy rate and also extending it to larger vessels?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I might say that at the present time there is a complete review of the whole subject of subsidization of fishing vessels under way. No conclusions have yet been reached, however.

With regard to legislation, the authority required is included in the Appropriation Act. Parliament in providing an appropriation for assistance in the construction of vessels of the dragger and long-liner type makes the assistance subject to such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council. Therefore changes, if any, may be made under the authority granted by parliament in this way.

FREIGHT RATES

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF PROPOSED ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I assure you, sir, that it is important or I would not ask it. It is our understanding that a royal commission is to be appointed to investigate the entire situation relative to freight rates. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether or not in the terms of reference there will be authority to study a national transportation policy and make recommendations with respect thereto?

Mr. Speaker: Before the Prime Minister deals with that question, may I ask whether that is not a subject matter on the agenda for today?

Mr. Winch: My question is based upon a press report that a royal commission is to be appointed.

Mr. Speaker: It strikes me that the announced business of the house brings up the question of freight rates in committee, and the hon. member will have an opportunity to deal with that matter more effectively there.

Mr. Winch: I cannot get an answer.

HOUSING

APPOINTMENT OF PROJECT AUTHORITIES—STATEMENT ON SITUATION IN NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Do members of a housing authority, charged with the responsibility of administering housing projects, receive their appointment by the provincial government after consultation with the municipal authority? If so, does the federal government intend to change this procedure and make its own appointments?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I also have a question from the hon. member for St. John's East which I shall answer at the same time, and which reads as follows:

> Would the minister comment on the accuracy of a statement made in the Newfoundland legislature, Friday, April 3, by Premier Smallwood, and as reported by the Canadian Press, to the effect "that C.M.H.C. had taken from the St. John's housing authority the possession and administration of 192 rental units, contrary to a 1956 agreement"?

The general practice in setting up authorities to administer dominion-provincial housing projects is for representatives of the two governments, that is federal and provincial and in most cases also the municipal authority concerned, to agree upon the personnel to be appointed to the authority in question. Appointments are then made by provincial order in council. This plan has been followed successfully in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, and there has been the closest co-operation among the three levels of government. In the provinces of Alberta and Prince Edward Island there are no dominion-provincial housing projects.

This course was not followed in Newfoundland, where a St. John's housing authority was set up by the provincial government in 1951. The administration of dominion-provincial projects by this authority eventually proved to be unsatisfactory, and early in 1958 it was understood that inactive members would be removed and that new appointments would be made pursuant to consultation between representatives of the two governments. However, the provincial government failed to carry out such consultations and filled the authority with its own appointees, in spite of the fact that 75 per cent of the cost of these projects, including the cost of rental subsidies, is paid from the federal treasury.

On August 25, 1958 I wrote to Premier Smallwood—I shall table these letters—suggesting a method of co-operating in the administration of the housing projects in St. John's, but have received no reply. I wrote again on October 2, 1958. No reply having been received from the premier to either of these letters, I wrote again on February 10, 1959, as there were two new dominion-provincial housing projects nearing completion, but as yet no reply to the third letter has been received.

In the light of these circumstances Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which has been building these two further projects, is administering any units in the two new projects which are available for occupation, and tenants are being chosen entirely on the basis of need, which I am afraid was not the case when the provincial government was administering them. I am hopeful that it will be possible to work out a satisfactory method of co-operation between the two governments, just as has been done in the other provinces.

May I add that press reports indicate that we have been accused of playing politics in the allotment of housing for poor people, but all the evidence I have been able to get is to the effect that the shoe is on the other foot. Hitherto, in some cases, people have had to apply to the provincial government in order to get accommodation. I should like to table these three letters.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I might ask the minister—

An hon. Member: Joe, junior.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the minister if he could accept the motion that I put on the order paper last night and table at the same time, so we may have the full story, the agreement or agreements to which the premier made reference in the house of assembly, so they will appear in the record today?

Mr. Green: I am not surprised that the hon. member is seeking some information about what went on in Newfoundland, because the information he has been getting from his friends down there has not been very accurate. One very good example of this—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the Minister of Public Works is not going to enter into a debate at this stage. His beginning seemed to turn that way.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I was just answering a question asked by the hon. member, and pointing out that one very good example of his lack of accurate information—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Green: —is the fact that there is no such agreement as the one to which he refers in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister another question. I listened very carefully to his statement, and I might add that I listened politely to his statement, and the minister used the passive voice by saying that it was understood that something or other was going to happen. Would the minister table the understanding?

Mr. Green: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the understanding in this case is not of such a type that it can be tabled, because we thought we would be able to co-operate with the government of Newfoundland on exactly the same basis as we have co-operated with all the other provincial governments in Canada. However, this has turned out not to be the case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister assert that there are no agreements between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or between the minister and the St. John's housing authority; that there have been no agreements since confederation between these two organizations? Is that the assertion the minister is making?

Mr. Green: There were agreements with the provincial government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister table them, and table them today?

Mr. Green: I cannot table them at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly; suppressing evidence, as usual.

Mr. Green: No, no; don't get so clever.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the great importance of the portfolio of external affairs and the necessity of having a full-time minister at the earliest possible date, has the Prime Minister anything to report as to when such an appointment will be made?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the curiosity of the hon. gentleman will have to remain unsatisfied for the time being.

Mr. Argue: Could the Prime Minister not say when the government will make the announcement, particularly in view of his statement to the house on March 25 that such a statement would be available when parliament reassembled?

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's statement, I wonder whether he would be prepared to comment on a radio report that the appointment of a minister of external affairs will be made after the budget speech?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can only give the same answer that I gave a while ago. The curiosity of the hon. gentleman will have to remain unsatisfied until then or possibly later.

POWER

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—STATUS OF AGREEMENT RESPECTING THERMAL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. As contractors are at present being invited by the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission to submit bids for substructure excavation and site grading for the proposed East Saint John thermal plant, is the minister now in a position to advise the house if a specific agreement has been signed between the government of Canada and the government of the province of New Brunswick in connection with the construction of the said plant? If not, what are the reasons for such an undue delay in the signing of this specific agreement?

[Mr. Green.]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is no agreement signed between the province of New Brunswick and the government of Canada concerning the East Saint John plant. When I have information that I am able to give to the house, I will give it.

Mr. Robichaud: I have a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that invitations to bids are now advertised by the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission for this project?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): No, Mr. Speaker.

WATER RESOURCES

FRASER RIVER BOARD—INQUIRY AS TO REAPPOINTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question of which notice has been given. Can the minister advise the house whether the Fraser river board has been re-established, and if so what is the present life of the board and its terms of reference?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Fraser river board has not been re-established. When and if it is re-established I will make an announcement in the house.

TRADE

COARSE GRAINS—PROSPECTS FOR FUTURE EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce of which I have sent him notice. The dominion bureau of statistics publication of April 3 states that the export of coarse grains fell by 6 per cent in the first half of the current crop year and by 40 per cent from the 1953-57 five-year average. Would the minister say what the prospects are for future exports of coarse grains from Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the question was dealt with by the minister a few days ago, but I have no objection to him bringing the answer up to date.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, not this one. The hon. member gave me notice of this question, for which I thank him. His information was drawn, I believe, from the Coarse Grain Quarterly published in February by the dominion bureau of statistics, and his figures are in accordance with that document. On the face of it the picture looks gloomy, but there is a bright silver lining if you read a little further in the booklet, something which my hon. friend did not do.

The coarse grains are divided chiefly into barley and oats. The barley export, which normally runs at about 75 million bushels in a crop year, I think will be attained this year. Our barley exports are a little above what they were a year ago. The barley goes to the United Kingdom in large part and to the United States, Germany and Japan. If you separate the barley from the oats, it is the oats that give the poorer picture because the exports there are down a bit; and that is largely because the export market for oats, running to about 20 million bushels a year, has been largely the United States, and the supply of feed in the United States is 12 per cent greater than it was a year ago. Of course when you put the two together you get an average which gives a poorer picture than is actually the case, because our substantial barley exports will be maintained and the oats picture may be improved.

RUSSIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question in this general field. Can the minister say what progress is being made in the renewal of the Russian-Canadian trade agreement as a method of restoring our wheat exports, which are also down?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, our wheat exports are running at just about the same level as last year, and will reach the 300 million bushel target this year. The negotiations with Russia are proceeding satisfactorily.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

REPORTED DECISION BY CUBAN GOVERNMENT TO PUT SHIPS INTO OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The Toronto Star of April 6, 1959 carries a story to the effect that Cuba plans to put into operation eight ships bought by the Batista government from Canadian National Steamships, according to David Salvador, president of the Cuban labour federation. Can the minister tell the house whether this statement is accurate and the ships have in fact been sold to the Batista government, and what has happened to the previous sale to Banco Cubano del Commercio Exterior?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. As I replied on February 17, as recorded at page 1129 of Hansard, in reply to a written question by the hon. member, the sale was made by Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships to Banco Cubano del Commercio Exterior, and in reply to a request by the hon. member I tabled the record of that sale. As I understand it, Banco Cubano del Commercio Exterior is the national bank of Cuba; and as the Castro government is the government of the country, I think it reasonable to suppose that the Castro government would see to it that the ships were operated.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether, being under the special stress that we know he is under at the moment, he has noted that the monthly statement of government revenues and expenses has not been provided to the country on the usual due date. In the past it has usually been available on the 24th, the 25th or the 26th day of the month following that report. We have not had the report for February.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I assure my hon. friend that I am not operating under any stress, let alone distress.

Mr. Chevrier: That will come.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With respect to this statement that my hon. friend seeks to have, I can assure him that I am well aware that it has not been issued publicly within these recent days. But when I bring down the white paper tomorrow, as I hope to do, my hon. friend will have there the answer for the full year.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister assure us that there will also be outlined the monthly figures for February?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker. There will be no occasion for that in view of the annual figure which will be given. We will give the complete figure, not part of it. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that in this respect I am simply following the course set by my predecessors, including the time when my hon. friend was parliamentary assistant to the minister of finance.

INDUSTRY

CANNING—REPORTED INTENTION TO REPLACE DOMESTIC WITH IMPORTED GOODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister any information which would confirm or deny rumours that the curtailment of operations at Canadian Canners' vegetable canning plant at Strathroy is part of a company plan to replace Canadian production with imported unlabelled canned goods?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the information I have is that the Canadian Canners' operation at Strathroy, Ontario, will be discontinued for this year. I have not been told whether or not the discontinuance is to be permanent, but certainly for this year it will be discontinued because of a surplus supply of canned goods at the factory. The second part of the question I cannot answer, because I do not know what plans may be in the mind of the company.

Mr. John Smith (Lincoln): I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce the fact that in the Niagara peninsula Canadian Canners operated some eight canning plants, but since this new United States company has taken over six plants have been closed. I would like the minister to take that matter under consideration.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF U.S. SCOOTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I ask a question of the Postmaster General. Has the Postmaster General any comment to make about the American scooters purchased from the United States during the Easter recess by the Post Office Department?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Only, Mr. Speaker, that they represent something which I recommended to the previous administration, about which they did nothing, and which I am delighted to be able to commence working on at the present time.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Are these American scooters made in the United States?

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The company has an assembly plant in Peterborough, Ontario, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my hon. friend give consideration to using his great influence in seeing that the scooters are made in the Canadian automobile plants, where there is so much unemployment?

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Postmaster General think these scooters will cause the number of employed personnel to be reduced?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The primary purpose of these mailmobiles, to use the proper term, Mr. Speaker, is to enable us to extend letter carrier delivery into suburban areas where the houses are more widely separated than in the centre of cities, and not in any sense to reduce the letter carrier staff.

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not think an ordinary bicycle would—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, we have passed now from a bicycle type of government to a motorized and more efficient modern government.

BEAUCE, QUE.—REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING USE OF ARMY PERSONNEL—FEDERAL HELP IN CASE OF DISASTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) being absent, I would like to ask the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley) a question with regard to an urgent problem quite familiar to him, regarding Chaudiere river which started to act up yesterday, I would like to know whether the people living along its banks can count on help from the army in case of disaster and emergency.

Has the minister read an article published in Quebec's paper Le Soleil on Monday, April 6, mentioning a statement by the premier of that province to the effect that the army would hasten to the rescue at the first emergency call for help in case of any threat of an ice-jam or flood on the Chaudiere river?

I would also like the minister to tell us whether he is aware of such a statement by the premier of Quebec and, if so, whether the Minister of National Defence has authorized the premier of Quebec to speak on his behalf with regard to the activities of the army in his province, or whether, on the other hand, provincial authorities took the necessary steps to obtain some help from the federal government in case of a probable disaster on the Chaudiere river?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the report published by Le Soleil, but I would like to thank the hon. member for advising me by telephone of his intention to ask this question.

I am quite familiar with the problem, and I daresay, on behalf of the government, that we share the anguish and anxiety of people who live along the river Chaudiere at this critical moment. And if the government of the province of Quebec, which is certainly watching any flood menace on the Chaudiere river with the keenest attention, decided to call upon the federal government for help, I would be very happy to speak to my colleagues in the cabinet for the riparians of the Chaudiere and the people of Beauce riding.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

WINNIPEG-EDMONTON—PROPOSED REDUCTION OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I have given him notice. I wonder if the minister is able to give the house any information regarding the proposal of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to discontinue the operation of its passenger trains Nos. 41 and 42, which run between Winnipeg and Edmonton via Yorkton and Saskatoon?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I am advised by the board of transport commissioners that they have just received an application from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for an order approving the discontinuance of passenger trains Nos. 41 and 42 operating daily except Saturday between Winnipeg and Edmonton. Some opposition to this proposal has already been registered, and the usual investigation will be conducted by the board in order to determine the effect of this proposal on the railway patrons in the area concerned.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRY AS TO JURISDICTION OVER PILOTS AND PILOTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport which stems from the advertisements in the press in the last few days for great lakes pilots. Do these advertisements indicate that a firm decision has been made that pilots and pilotage will come directly under the Department of Transport, and if so does that mean there is now an agreement with the United States coastguard to this effect?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would think this question could more properly be asked when the bill dealing with amendments to the Canada Shipping Act comes up. The bill will probably be up today or tomorrow, just depending on when the resolution dealing with the freight rates subsidy passes. The advertisements to which the hon. member refers were published in order to speed up as much as possible the process of having adequate pilots available for the shipping season on the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that the salary advertised is $300 or more below that which was paid last year?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR ST. JOHN'S WEST

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister from Newfoundland whether he has any comment to make on the report which appeared in the Daily News of March 31 to the effect that he was going to Ottawa that day "to tell the Prime Minister of the strong feelings here about his term 29 decision", and would the minister tell us what response he got?

Mr. Speaker: I have my doubts about the propriety of that question, on the basis that it really relates to the hon. member's responsibility as a member and not to any ministerial or administrative responsibility which is a proper subject for a question. The rules permit only questions of members in their private capacity relating to bills which they have introduced in the house. It is perhaps a novel point, but that is my view of the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to raise a point of order, sir. Are we to understand that it is therefore not competent to question members of the administration unless they have specific departmental functions?

Mr. Speaker: I hope I said nothing to give that impression. The question as framed by the hon. member related, it seemed to me, to the representative capacity of the hon. member.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the minister himself has made certain statements regarding his responsibility for government policy in this matter, and that is why my hon. friend asked the question.

Mr. Speaker: I have no objection to him asking questions of the minister within the responsibility of the government of which he is a member, but I do object to the question the hon. member put.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to put a supplementary question. I would like to ask the hon. member, the minister from Newfoundland, if since his return from Newfoundland he has made representations to the Prime Minister about the decision respecting the terms of union.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is just a repetition of the last question in more unrefined words. I think you will find support for the decision which you purported to give in citation 171 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member has not yet related his question to a matter of the administrative responsibility of the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I should like to put the question in another way. Are we to assume, then, that the reason the minister left St. John's so precipitately was that he did not wish to defend his leader?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not improving his position.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT FOR 1957-58 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the approach of the spring seeding season on the prairies and the great need for cash at this time to pay seeding expenses, can the minister say when the long-awaited announcement of the final payment for the 1957-58 crop will be made? Will the announcement be made before seeding?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I know the hon. member for Assiniboia is a strong supporter of the wheat board. I am also a strong supporter of the wheat board, and will take advice from them as to when this final payment, which comes normally just before seeding time, shall be made.

Mr. Argue: Is the minister in a position now to tell the house when the payment is to be made? Has he yet received advice from the wheat board with regard to the date?

Mr. Churchill: An announcement will be made as soon as the information is available.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF FEDERAL WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I wonder whether the minister will extend the winter works program for a further month in order to help the hard-pressed municipalities to repair all the potholes across the country—the little ones, the medium sized ones and the big ones—in order that the Post Office Department's new scooters will not all drop out of sight on their first round.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Evidently the hon. member for Trinity is not aware of the scope of the terms under which this municipal plan was launched by the federal government, or he would not be asking ridiculous questions.

Mr. Hellyer: Perhaps the minister would consider broadening the scope of this scheme.

FREIGHT RATES

MEASURE RESPECTING REDUCTION OF CLASS AND COMMODITY RATES

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 24, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Hees—Mr. Sevigny in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to direct the board of transport commissioners to require by order the reduction of class and commodity freight rates (other than competitive rates) charged by carriers subject to the order of the board dated November 17, 1958, and to authorize payments to reimburse carriers for the resulting reduction of their revenues up to an aggregate amount of twenty million dollars.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two questions which I should like to ask arising out of the discussion which took place the other evening. The committee will remember that the minister, in his statement which can be found at page 2207 of Hansard for March 24, 1959, told us that this was a subsidy of $20 million in order to give assistance to those who were affected by the judgment of the board of conciliation. It was, he said, a subsidy which would last for a period of 12 months.

I have become interested in a number of matters, not only since the minister made his statement but also since I had the opportunity of reading the minister's reply. There are one or two questions which I raised and to which inadvertently, I am sure, he did not reply.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Laurier, but it would be appreciated by the Chair if members carried on their conversations outside the chamber. There is far too much noise at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The question which is uppermost in my mind now has to do with the form of the proposed subsidy. As the minister knows, this is a lump sum payment to the railways designed to alleviate the burden of the authorized increase in rates and, as the minister also knows, the only reason for increasing the rates in this case was because of the decision of a conciliation board in a matter concerning an increase in wages for the railway workers.

My question, then, is this. Does this mean that if a further increase in wages takes place and is reflected in a second increase in freight rates, the government would follow the same pattern and increase the $20 million subsidy to meet the position brought about by the further increase in the rates?

Mr. Hees: That is a hypothetical question and one which I should not care to answer now.

Mr. Chevrier: May I put it this way, then. Is it the intention of the government to tie this subsidy to increases in wage rates?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask just two questions, and then I will sit down. Is it the intention of the minister or of the government to tie the subsidy to the low level of railway earnings from export grain traffic under the Crowsnest pass rates agreement?

Mr. Hees: It is not the wish of the government to tie the subsidy to anything. This subsidy is a specific subsidy designed to meet a certain specific situation. Railway costs went up, justifying, in the opinion of the board of transport commissioners, an increase in the rates. It was the opinion of the government that it would be a fair thing to do to alleviate the burden imposed on the people affected, particularly those who have to pay the cost of the long haul across Canada, and it was for this reason that the subsidy is being introduced at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps I may proceed from here. The minister says it is not the intention of the government to tie this up either to the wage rate increase or to the grain rates. May I then ask the minister what this subsidy is associated with? I am getting away from the word "tied", now, so as not to embarrass the minister. What is the $20 million subsidy associated with?

Mr. Hees: I think I have already explained that as clearly as I can. The board of transport commissioners authorized the railways to increase their class and commodity rates by 17 per cent. It was felt by the government that this imposed an undue burden on those who would have to pay the increased freight rates, and the people who do that are the consumers of Canada. It was for this reason, and in order to alleviate the burden borne by these people, that we have introduced this subsidy. I do not think I can explain it more clearly than that.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has already told us that, and I appreciate what he has said, but what I am trying to find out is this. What is the formula which is to be adopted in order to provide this assistance which he says the government wants to give to those who are affected by the increase in the rates? He did not say that in the statement. I would like to have some clarification of that. What is the formula that will be applied?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be simplest if I read my statement once again to the hon. member, because the whole explanation is in the statement.

Mr. Fisher: The statement is not clear.

Mr. Hees: The statement is perfectly clear, I believe.

Mr. Chevrier: The statement is on the record. If the minister wants to repeat it I am not going to stop him, because that is his privilege; but as the hon. member who has just interrupted said, the statement is not clear and demands some clarification. That is why I put the additional question. What is the formula? What is the basis or method the government or the board of transport commissioners or the Department of Transport will use to distribute the $20 million subsidy?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the time when that question could most easily be asked in detail would be, as I have stated, when this bill comes before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. That is the purpose of bringing a bill before that committee, so that in great detail questions may be asked and answered.

I have told the hon. member generally what is the principle to be employed, and I am afraid I cannot explain it any more clearly than I already have. I feel that the hon. member understands it more clearly than he is letting on.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I want to add my words to what has been said by the previous speaker. With all due deference to the minister there are a number of things that are not clear even in the wording of the resolution itself or the purport as given to the committee in the statement made by the minister just prior to the Easter recess. I believe the committee has the right, in view of the importance of this matter, to ask the minister for a lucid explanation and exposition before the bill goes to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

One point the minister has made clear is that this represents only a temporary alleviation of the freight rate situation. The minister is asking for authority to pay up to an aggregate amount of $20 million in order to reduce the effect of the freight rate increase of recent date by some 7 per cent. But this entire question goes much deeper than that. I sincerely hope that while we are at the resolution stage the minister will take us more fully into his confidence.

This afternoon on orders of the day I endeavoured to ask a question, and I wish now to repeat it in view of the statement made by the Speaker of this house. The question I asked was as follows:

> It is our understanding that a royal commission is to be appointed to investigate the entire situation relative to freight rates. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether or not in the terms of reference there will be authority to study a national transportation policy and make recommendations with respect thereto?

When I asked that question on the orders of the day the Speaker immediately rose and with the endorsation of the Prime Minister said that I was asking a question dealing with a matter of business that would come before us this afternoon. I am sure all hon. members would be interested in having the minister answer this question. We would like to know what he and the government have in mind with respect to transportation and freight rates, not just for the next 12 months under temporary alleviation in the form of subsidies but in the long term view.

If we can accept what we have heard on the radio and seen in the newspapers it is the intention of the government to appoint a royal commission. Surely it is the responsibility of the minister at this time, when he is asking for a subsidy of $20 million, to tell us what the government has in mind when the 12 month period is over. What has it in mind about the appointment of a royal commission? What personnel will serve on the royal commission? Perhaps of even greater importance, what will be the terms of reference of that commission? Surely this is the time, at the resolution stage of this legislation, when this information should be given to the committee. We sincerely hope the minister and the government do not have in mind simply allowing this matter to drift from year to year in the future as it has in the past.

If the government has in mind the appointment of a royal commission, what will be the terms of reference? Will it deal only with the question of freight rates? Does the government intend to follow a policy of allowing this question to drift from year to year, bringing in temporary measures in the form of subsidies? What we should have now and indeed what we should have had years ago is a thorough study into the transportation system in Canada, out of which would flow recommendations concerning a national transportation policy.

The time is long past when this country should have had a national transportation policy. Naturally there are great difficulties relating to this question. We have in Canada two great transportation systems, one publicly and one privately owned. Irrespective of this we must recognize that Canada is a large country, 3,500 miles in breadth, with a greater land area than the United States and a population of only 17,300,000, according to the latest figures. We require an efficient transportation system. I presume the intention of the royal commission would be to make recommendations in this regard, but as yet we have heard nothing from the minister with respect to this matter. We urge the minister to give us some information on this question this afternoon. We are interested in knowing the terms of reference of any royal commission that may be appointed. In particular we wish to be advised if one of those terms of reference will be a complete study of a national transportation system and recommendations for a national transportation policy. There is certainly a need for it.

I remember that years ago I had the privilege of being a member of the British Columbia legislature, at which time I met a most extraordinary individual. I did not like his politics nor did I like him personally, but I hasten to admit that he was a most unusual man. His name was G. G. McGeer. He was mayor of the city of Vancouver at one time, a member of the British Columbia legislature, and a member of the House of Commons and the Senate. His was a rather outstanding experience. He was also one of the most outstanding lawyers in the province of British Columbia. Years ago a Liberal government appointed him as its counsel in a hassle on freight rates. I can still recall G. G. McGeer telling me with a chuckle how in five minutes he had won the case for British Columbia by producing a relief map that showed that in the main the territory from Calgary to Vancouver was downhill.

British Columbia won its case immediately but it has not won another case since or none of any importance so far as the transportation system and freight rates are concerned. Anyone who knows our country and particularly the western provinces can see the need for a national transportation policy. If you are a tourist travelling by train there is no question whatsoever but that you should travel on the C.P.R. through the Canadian Rockies and British Columbia's four mountain ranges. The trip is wonderful and the scenery is beautiful but the route is a very expensive one as far as the C.P.R. is concerned.

Yet about 200 miles north you have the C.N.R. line with practically no grades whatsoever. There is the route of freight whereas the C.P.R. line is the route of passengers. However, there has never been any co-ordination or correlation so far as passenger and freight traffic are concerned. Apparently the C.P.R. can set freight rates indirectly one way or another on the basis of their high cost route through the mountains of British Columbia instead of freight rates being set on the basis of the low cost route of the C.N.R.

It would be very interesting if the minister would tell us how fast a train can travel from Vancouver to Montreal. There is no difference in travel time between Vancouver and Montreal in the case of the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. even though the C.N.R. can undoubtedly make the trip in less time. All you have to do is to talk to the engineers, superintendents and firemen. There is no question at all that the C.N.R. could provide a faster trip but for some reason or other it is not allowed to do so. I do not know what the reasons are, but surely there is firm foundation for a real study to be made of a national transportation policy that will give the greatest efficiency at the lowest possible cost in the movement of both passengers and freight.

The fact that this afternoon the minister is asking the house for authority to subsidize both railways, one publicly owned and the other privately owned, to the extent of $20 million in one year provides ample reason for members of the house and taxpayers generally who have to pay the $20 million to ask the Minister of Transport to give the house this afternoon a clearer indication and a better understanding of what he has in mind from a long range point of view, what he intends to do to take care of the situation when the year is over and the $20 million is expended.

We understand, as I said before, that there is going to be a royal commission. We hope the minister will tell us who are going to be on the commission. If he cannot do that, at least he must know now what the terms of reference are. We ask the minister to take us into his confidence, to give us a picture of the terms of reference which will reveal the extent of the study and what authority is going to be given to the commission. We ask the minister to explain, if he does nothing else, whether or not under his direction as Minister of Transport there is going to be in the not too distant future a national transportation policy for the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to make a few comments on the resolution and the whole principle involved in the subsidizing of railroads. Generally speaking I cannot say I am very favourable to the principle of subsidizing railroads because for one reason I do not think it is any solution at all to the freight rate problem. However, I believe it is justified in this case because it is going to help those parts of the country which suffer from discrimination in freight rates and I hope that the royal commission to be established will come up with a more permanent solution.

One thing that has surprised me is that in the course of the debate there has been no mention of what impact the subsidizing of railroads will have on other forms of transport. Surely one of the things that has kept freight rates down throughout the country is other forms of transport, water transport and truck transport. So far as the principle of subsidizing railroads is concerned, I think it would be very dangerous as a long term policy and I was pleased to hear the minister say that this provision is definitely only for one year and that a royal commission is to be appointed to consider the whole question.

There are some things that it will be hard for a royal commission to deal with; in fact, I do not see how a royal commission can deal with them under the terms of reference of the last royal commission. There has been some suggestion that if we have a thorough investigation it will solve the problem forever but no previous royal commission has ever solved it forever and if we have a commission now I do not expect it will solve it forever. However, the commission will probably be able to make suggestions that will help the situation for a few years. Because the situation changes from time to time I do not think we can expect a permanent solution, no matter what study we undertake now, that will solve the problem forever.

One of the things a royal commission is up against in investigating the whole matter is the difficulty of investigating the trucking industry. I am going to deal with the trucking industry particularly because I happen to know something about it. It is one of the main competing forms of transport so far as the railroads are concerned, and perhaps the real solution to freight rate discrimination would be to have more competition by truck transport in those areas where it is deficient at the present time. Obviously rates have been brought down in those areas where there is considerable truck transport and I do not see why rates would not be brought down if truck competition were expanded in those areas where there is discrimination. It seems to me that would be the logical way to achieve equalization of freight rates.

If we were to adopt a long term policy of subsidizing the railroads in those areas where there is discrimination surely the only thing we would do would be to prevent any competition arising because such subsidization would make it impossible for truck competition to develop. If we were to adopt such a long term policy we would be spending money in this manner which I think could be much better spent to promote the building of highways with the object of bringing down freight rates in that way.

I should like to deal for a moment with two or three aspects of the trucking industry. The last royal commission, the Turgeon commission, was very much aware of the impact of trucking on railways. However, under its terms of reference that commission was unable to go too far in investigating the trucking industry because it did not come within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. You will recall that the Turgeon report was made before the privy council decided that certain aspects of the trucking industry did in fact come within the scope of the federal parliament.

I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the various groups that are engaged in the trucking industry and what their effect has been on rail rates. We first of all have the group known as for-hire operators who perform exactly the same service as the railroads do. They maintain their trucks for hire by the general public and they charge a fee for moving freight. The second group involved in truck transport is the private owners. This is a group of businessmen who maintain trucks for the purpose of moving their own goods from place to place. I do not think any real assessment has been made up to the present time of their impact on the field of transportation because nobody on the federal level has had the authority to investigate this question. Since the last royal commission was set up to inquire into freight rates there has been one new segment added to the trucking industry and that is the U-drive trucks. These trucks are leased and a man can hire the truck for a day, a week or a month, to move his own goods.

Now, each one of these segments of the trucking industry has an effect on freight rates. The main point is that there is some regulation, in fact there is a growing body of regulation over the for-hire truckers. However, there is practically no regulation of the private operators, nor do I believe that they pay a fair share of the taxes. I am not familiar with the situation across Canada, but I can speak for the province of British Columbia.

I cannot quote figures which are up to date because the situation has been changed. A department of transport has been set up under the provincial government and some radical changes have been made in the taxation structure. The field of taxation with relation to trucking is quite broad, but one aspect of it is the highway licence which is required. A few years ago I recall that this licence cost in the neighbourhood of $180 for a truck operated by a for-hire operator, whereas the operator using his own truck paid somewhere in the neighbourhood of $5. There are many other fields in which I believe this tax discrimination exists. I feel that it has a great effect on freight rates because these people who operate their own trucks tend to keep down the rates of the for-hire operator. Shippers tend to say to the for-hire operators, "If you do not keep your rates down, we will buy our own trucks." This, in turn, has caused the railroads to set up what they call competitive rates across Canada.

It is my contention that these competitive rates are, in many instances, too low. I believe this has resulted in added freight rate discrimination because obviously the railroads have to be aware of their total revenue situation. If they cannot get revenue in one place, obviously they have to apply higher rates wherever the traffic will bear them. I think this fact is to a great extent responsible for the discrimination that exists in freight rates today. I do not see how any investigation by a royal commission that does not have authority to deal with all the aspects of trucking, and to determine whether trucks are paying their proper share of taxation for the use of the roads, and various other questions of this nature, can ever arrive at any proper settlement of this freight rate question. I do not think we should even consider investigating the railroad industry by iself, without taking into consideration the trucking industry, water transport and air transport which I am sure as time goes on is going to become more and more important.

I know that somebody is going to tell me we will not have authority to do this because trucking comes within the jurisdiction of the provinces. However, I want to say this: most of the people who come here to make complaints about freight rates have been the provincial governments. I certainly feel that under the circumstances, when the provincial governments have such a great interest in this matter, there could be more co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. We seem to arrive at this same situation in so many fields of legislation today. When we come to deal with some subject we find that part of it comes under the federal government and part of it comes under the provincial government. I believe that the question of freight rates is one subject where the interests of these governments are common. It may be that whatever type of commission is set up, eventually provincial representatives of some sort could be appointed. In any case, I certainly believe that any investigation must take into consideration the impact of the trucking industry on this whole question of freight rates.

There are one or two other things that I believe the federal government could do which would help the situation. At the moment there are no provisions under the Railway Act for the trucking industry to appear before the board of transport commissioners when freight rate hearings are held. I believe that the trucking industry has now reached a stage in which it could provide valuable information to the board of transport commissioners in making decisions. It may well be that the discrimination in existing freight rates comes about because they are too low in certain areas and, consequently, have to be raised too high in others. We have the railroads setting competitive rates. They say the rates are there to meet the competition of trucks or to meet the competition of water carriers. The water carriers are able to appear before the board of transport commissioners and state their views as to whether or not there is a competitive rate. In so far as the trucking industry is concerned, they are not allowed to appear before the board of transport commissioners to state their views on this matter.

It may well be that the competitive rates of the railroads in those areas where they are meeting truck competition are lower than they need to be to meet this truck competition. I should like to cite one example of this which has come to my attention in British Columbia. I do not know to what extent this situation exists across Canada, but here is one instance in which the competitive rates of the railroads have been below the existing truck rates. It seems obvious to me that if the railroads lower freight rates in one place like that, then they have to raise them higher in another area in order to keep up their total revenue position. I do not think we can accept the fact that just because the public is making a saving in one particular area it is for the general good to have the railroads do that.

There are only two results which can flow from this practice. When the railroads cut rates below the trucking rate in a specific area, either the trucks in that area are put out of business or else they have to meet the rail rates. The result is a net loss of revenue for the railroads. Perhaps that is one of the reasons we are now having to subsidize the rates as we are being asked to do by this resolution.

Here is a particular instance in British Columbia as outlined in a submission made by a tariff agent for the trucking industry in British Columbia. This case illustrates the necessity for the trucking industry being allowed to appear as an interested party before the board of transport commissioners when hearings are held. This brief has been submitted to the board of transport commissioners, along with a request for a hearing, and I have been informed since that the board has turned down this request. I do not want to get into too much detail here, so I am just going to give you a general picture. Before the railroads asked for their 17 per cent increase the rate charged by both rail and truck transportation was $1.20 per hundred pounds for this particular haul. When the 17 per cent increase in rail rates went into effect the rail rate went up to $1.40 per hundred pounds. The trucking industry, which was having its own difficulties in getting along on the rates being charged, applied to the public utilities commission in British Columbia for a 17 per cent increase so that the rates would still be competitive. However, the public utilities commission did not grant the full 17 per cent in this particular instance. They granted the trucking industry only 8.5 per cent. The trucking industry accepted this for the moment and prepared to fight the case for the second 8.5 per cent.

In the meantime the railroads reduced their rates down to $1.10 per hundred pounds. Surely, if there was any need to reduce them there was no need to reduce them below what the trucks were charging because that certainly resulted in a net loss of revenue to the railroads. As I pointed out before, the obvious thing that is going to occur is that the trucking industry will meet these rates. The net result will be that the railroads will have a loss of revenue without a net gain in traffic. This is another factor in the freight rate situation which is facing us now, and may be one of the reasons we are being asked to subsidize rail operations.

If I may sum up, I should like to impress upon the government once again my hope that whatever commission is going to be set up it will be one which will investigate fully the impact of the trucking industry in all its aspects, for-hire truckers, people operating their own trucks or U-drive trucks, upon the freight rate structure.

I firmly believe that it should be done in complete co-operation with the provinces. Before a commission is empowered to undertake this investigation I believe there should be consultation with the provinces to cover the aspect and to see if some agreement cannot be reached, to investigate whether trucks across Canada as a whole are paying their fair share of the taxes and to see whether trucks are paying too low a rate in some areas are not making rates sufficiently low in those areas and thereby causing the railroads to put their rates too high in other parts of the country.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, this subject of freight rates is of vital importance to my constituency. I should therefore like to give a few facts and figures which are pertinent to our economy. Now that the Minister of Transport has arrived on this side of the house I am sure we will get what we ask for.

I am in receipt of several communications from various lakehead firms objecting very strenuously to any freight rate increase for northwestern Ontario. These letters also demonstrate the alarm that is felt in connection with the so-called "alleviation of discrimination" in how the proposed $20 million subsidy will be applied. If northwestern Ontario is not given the same measure of consideration which is being given to the western provinces it could mean, not only hardship to the people of northwestern Ontario but also a terrific burden to many of our firms and industries.

The failure of the province of Ontario to join the other eight provinces in protest against these freight rate increases for the people living in the northwestern part of the province, which is approximately 1,000 miles from Toronto, is the proof that the government of Ontario is not really much concerned with its welfare. It is again an unchallenged reminder that northwestern Ontario should have been a part of Manitoba, as it is generally conceded that the interests of that part of the province are clearly more closely linked with the prairie provinces by reason of the fact that the lakehead is the transshipping point for grain, iron ore and general merchandise.

I could not do better justice to the subject than to quote a few paragraphs from a file of correspondence in support of government consideration of measures which will ensure a fair deal for northwestern Ontario. I have a letter from the general manager of the Northwestern Ontario development association which reads in part as follows:

> Announcement was made recently by the federal government that it plans to appoint a special body to review the general field of rail problems and freight rates. Also announced was the intention to undertaken a study "to work out measures to relieve against inequities in the freight rate structure."
> According to press reports emanating from Ottawa, serious consideration looms of a more favourable freight rates deal for the four western and four Atlantic provinces. In the middle province of Ontario, the problem confronting our northwestern economy is obvious.
>
> The recent 17 per cent freight rate boost, unopposed by Ontario, placed an additional heavy burden on our northwestern industries, business firms and consumers. The railways have announced their intention of applying for a further rate increase.
> Our association, with other regional bodies, is endeavouring to compile a fund of information and evidence to support whatever representations might be made later in behalf of our area to the proper authorities.
> If we are left outside the areas to which concessions might be granted in any freight rates overhaul, the disadvantages to our existing economy would be serious and our prospects for continued growth dealt a damaging blow.

Only the other day I received the following telegram from the chairman of the joint transport committee of the cities of Fort William and Port Arthur:

> Unless proposed freight rates subsidization offers northwestern Ontario same assistance as Manitoba discrimination should be charged.

I have here a communication from one of the large departmental stores. It reads in part as follows:

> We learned that there may be consideration given a request by all provinces, excepting Quebec and Ontario, which would have the effect of eliminating all or part of the last (17 per cent) freight increase. We are in sympathy with Manitoba's views, but we are deeply concerned about the problem of cost differential which our company would face on goods entering our area from Manitoba. And we know that in order to be competitive, we must make every effort to appeal that the same concession apply to northwestern Ontario.

We handle in excess of $7 million at retail,—a large percentage of this volume comes from operating branch stores in the following locations:

Marathon	—198 miles east of the lakehead CPR
Geraldton	—189 miles east of the lakehead CPR
Schreiber	—120 miles east of the lakehead CPR
Beardmore	—120 miles east of the lakehead CNR
Red Rock	— 70 miles east of the lakehead CNR CPR
Atikokan	—135 miles west of the lakehead CNR
Dryden	—230 miles west of the lakehead CPR

I believe you know that transportation cost hits our type of business heavily, because thousands of small lot shipments are involved. Also, it is necessary to redistribute the bulk of our merchandise from Fort William to our branch stores. This further increases our transportation cost.

It has taken many years to build up this business, and transportation costs have been one of the biggest factors we've had to contend with. The distances mentioned in the above list help to explain why this is so.

Horizontal increases in freight rates work against us in securing supplies as well as in distribution. Protests from our trade have been plentiful against absorbing the last 17 per cent increase. Any easement in this rate, applicable to Manitoba, which was not extended to our territory would be to create unfair competition in goods into our area from Winnipeg. This would be a discrimination which we most strongly protest.

Then again I have received several others. I do not wish to read them all. I have one here in particular concerning a large hardware store also located at the lakehead. It reads as follows:

We are writing you in connection with the proposed increase in freight rates, particularly west of the lakehead.

We are given to understand that manufacturers in the east can ship to wholesalers, such as ourselves, in Winnipeg, at the old freight rate, both in carload and l.c.l. shipments. We also understand that they are able to ship from Winnipeg back to Ontario at the old freight rate.

On the other hand, we understand that on shipments from manufacturers in the east to distributors, such as ourselves in the lakehead, we are forced to pay the increased freight rate. When we ship to places such as Dryden, Kenora, Fort Frances, and Atikokan, we are charged the new increased freight rate.

If this information is correct, we wish to offer a very strong objection, for to us this is rank discrimination. We have already run into a situation with one of our competitors in Winnipeg shipping nails to Atikokan at a much cheaper price than we can offer, shipping from the lakehead. We have no way of knowing whether these are imported nails, which are considerably cheaper, or whether the above freight rate structure affects this price. This is just one item that we can think of at the moment. This could also apply to other lines of hardware.

We would certainly appreciate you taking this matter up with the transport board, and register our strong objection.

Then there is another one which says:

The situation here can be put briefly, but is, nevertheless, extremely serious. Our company operated during 1958 at a new loss of $557,488.73 and during this time we paid out $988,689.35 in freight charges. These charges of course were at the old rates before the 17 per cent increase.

As can be seen from the above, any freight increase is an extreme hardship to us and further increases are beyond all reason. We are beginning to wonder how long it will take to squeeze us out of business.

I trust that the above will be of some help to you. Should you require further information by all means get in touch with me again.

Then there are others, but I do not wish to take up the time of the committee in dealing with all this correspondence which I have received. But I would just say in conclusion that in view of these representations founded upon indisputable facts, I submit that the government should give a clear indication that in the assessment of rates the voice of northwestern Ontario will not go unheeded.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take any more than a few minutes of the time of the committee; nevertheless I want to express a view which I offer not as a solution but as a suggestion. In making it I do so because we have had many members express concern over the problem of the rate structure as it affects many areas of Canada, particularly those hon. members represent. I think it is hardly necessary for me to point out that the rate structure as such reveals some inequality of rates, which perhaps penalize the area which I represent more than any other section of Canada, and thus I am also concerned. The problem is indeed acute. I think the point which we must remember, however, is that it is going to become a great deal more acute unless the action which has been suggested by the hon. minister is taken and acted on, because it has been indicated to us by the railways that in the next fifteen years they are going to require about a billion and a third dollars. These dollars are to be used purely for replacement costs and the extension of new services. So that while the situation is critical today, and we have a history of going from one crisis to another and from one increase in the rate structure to yet another, each of these adjustments has not altered the position nor has it attacked the problem at its source.

The source of the problem is to put somehow the railways on a paying basis. That is not just a pious hope; it has to be effected, otherwise, as previous members have indicated, we will never reach a solution either temporary or permanent. Therefore I think we should first of all recognize the need for the subsidy which has been indicated in the resolution, and while we can state that we oppose subsidies, it is intended by the government only as a stopgap until such time as the whole problem can be dealt with. This, it has been clearly indicated, will be followed by the royal commission and any action recommended by that commission will follow in due course.

I have said that the railways indicate to us that they are going to have to undertake very sizeable capital expenditures. These amount to about $83 million a year. Therefore, if we are going to attack the source of the problem, we are going to have to provide for them a source of revenue in addition to the ordinary operating revenues which as a corporation they receive. I think then it is essential that the commission recognize, as the government does now, that the next ten years are going to be more difficult than the past, because the call on our railways to meet the demands for new services and the need for the replacement of present equipment has never been as extreme as it will be in the coming years.

The suggestion that I have made is that a capital fund should be established by the government which would operate on a revolving basis over the next ten-year period, and on which the railways would be permitted to draw at a nominal low interest rate. That would get them over the hump so that they would not be required to come back repeatedly for increases in freight rates just to make temporary adjustments, thus delaying the eventual day of reckoning. I suggest that the capital fund if established would not be unlike a partial solution which the United States has followed in offering to the railways guaranteed loans to meet exactly the same situation. They have taken this positive action together with reducing services to certain areas where the railways have been asked to operate, for which there is little desire by the community and very little hope of any practical revenue being derived by the railways concerned.

I believe, then, in summary, that in order to place the railways on a paying basis it is not sufficient merely to adjust the inequalities in the freight structure but rather we are going to have to meet the costs of operation which cannot be met by current revenues. I suggest that a capital grant to the extent of about $30 million during the initial period, on the basis which I have suggested, would meet the urgent demand, thus endeavouring to attack the source rather than make, as I have said, a temporary adjustment. That is the one thought which I have with respect to the monetary aspect of the problem.

I also have two other suggestions. The first is a subject which has been mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway dealing with competitive transportation, and in particular motor transport which serves and connects the various provinces in Canada. It does seem to me that we are going to have to come to the day when we must place all competing forms of transportation under one administrative body to determine the relationship of the tariffs which they charge in competition with one another. It seems inconsistent to me to have a competitive system where one means of transportation is kept under a fairly tight rein, examined and made responsible by the government of Canada as a public convenience, and the other is left completely without any form of control. I have noticed a growing desire amongst the transport companies themselves to see at least that their rates are published on a federal basis, because they are not concerned, funnily enough, with the competition of the railways but are concerned with the competition of those who undercut in their the competition of those who undercut in their own business of transport. So I see a need for a different approach to bring about regulations which will relate one competitive mode of transport and another in their respective rate structures.

The third suggestion I offer is directed to the old problem of agreed charges. These are charges which are made between the railway company and the shipper whereby he agrees to ship a high volume, up to 80 per cent, of his traffic through the particular railway concerned. It was designed in a special instance to compete with certain other forms of transportation, mainly by water, and I think this is paradoxical inasmuch as it eliminates competition, especially as far as truckers are concerned. I think we should examine the agreed charge system carefully, because to a large extent it has increased the cost of transportation, certainly into the prairies. It is an established fact that in many instances it is possible to ship products from eastern Canada to Calgary cheaper via Vancouver than by shipping them to Calgary direct. I maintain that agreed charges have not served the purpose which they were intended to serve. This is an area which should receive close scrutiny in an effort to deal with the source of the problem. Nothing else will be sufficient. Unless we succeed in meeting this problem the entire financial structure of the railways could collapse around them. It is therefore of vital importance to find some constructive solution to the problem of how they are going to meet their very extensive costs over the next 10-year period.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, before this resolution passes I should like to direct a question or two to the Minister of Transport. I understood him to say the other night that shipments across the international boundary line between Canada and the United States would not be subject to the increase in freight rates. I would point out that shipments from Michigan, and particularly shipments of farm products, get the benefit of a cheaper rate to Toronto than do farm products from the Windsor area in Canada, and I should like to know from the minister whether or not the increase in freight rates will give United States farmers any further advantage in connection with getting their products to Toronto and to other Canadian markets.

Another thing which has been brought to my notice is the fact that Canadian farmers can ship to points in eastern Canada—to Montreal for instance—from the Essex-Kent area by routing their shipments by way of Detroit. These products are carried by United States railways to Montreal and points east. I should like to ask the minister to comment on this aspect of the question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Just before the minister comments on the statement made by the hon. member for Welland, I should like to join with him in asking the minister to give consideration to the question which has just been put to him because it is a very serious one for the farmers of southwestern Ontario.

Undoubtedly the interest of the hon. member for Welland in this matter arises from the fact that he was born in the district and, more particularly, that he joined with a number of us during the Easter weekend in giving consideration to some aspects of this very problem. The increase in freight rates does seem to give United States farmers—farmers in Michigan, for example—an advantage over farmers in Essex or in Kent—corn growers or soybean growers in both jurisdictions—and if the advantage is as great as it would appear to be, the situation is undoubtedly a very serious one. The question implied by the hon. member for Welland is this: is it not a fact that a farmer in the state of Michigan, for instance, is able to ship corn or soybeans in competition with the Canadian growers into Canada over Canadian railroads with an advantage denied to Canadian farmers as a result, in this instance, of the increase in freight rates?

This situation is, I know, not one which arises as of yesterday, although the particular situation which does confront the farmers in this district is one which is accentuated as a result of the increase in freight rates to which the government acceded a few months ago. The situation is, of course, serious in its basic quality. It is possible for farmers to ship corn from Chicago to points in Canada cheaper than it is possible for Canadian corn growers or Canadian soybean growers to ship those commodities to various points in Canada from a Canadian point of origin.

If this action of the government will lead to a settlement or a resolution of the long term problem which I have just mentioned, or of the short term one created by the increase in freight rates, there will be much satisfaction. In any event I strongly support the implication of the question put by the hon. member for Welland as to whether or not something can be done immediately to take care of the discrimination which now exists and which allows such preferential treatment of United States farmers as opposed, say, to farmers in Essex and Kent who are confronted with the burden of these increased freight rates.

There is also, of course, the long term question of being able to ship United States farm products from points in the United States into Canada cheaper than they can be shipped from points in Ontario such as Kent and Essex to other points in Canada. It seems to me that the whole question of the depressed state of agriculture in this particular section is in a large measure attributable to the defects of the freight rates structure. This might be an appropriate moment for the government to take a second look at the whole problem and try to bring relief to thousands of farmers in southwestern Ontario, notably in the counties of Essex and Kent.

Mr. Fisher: I was hoping that the minister would answer some of the questions put to him as we went along, but I will give him a few more to answer later.

The minister obviously feels, since he has tried to repeat his original statement several times, that it is a model of clarity. I have gone over this statement, and this model of clarity makes very little sense. I took home with me copies of the debates on this subject which occupied the house just before the recess and gave them to a couple of acquaintances of mine who are the only people in our area, I would say, who are knowledgeable on the question of freight rates. I asked one of them for his comments afterwards, and he said: "It seems to me that most of the people in the House of Commons who speak on freight rates are boobs." I said: "Well, it is a very complicated topic and you must understand we are just amateurs at this sort of thing." He said: "Yes, but it seems to me that the biggest boob is the Minister of Transport, and he is the man who is supposed to have a policy on it."

What hits me about this statement is that I do not think the minister wrote it. I think it was written for him, and I think that is one of the reasons he sticks so closely to it. I do not think the minister understands much about what this interim policy is going to mean any more than we do, and I think there are some questions which should be answered before this is referred to the committee.

This is one of the techniques employed by the minister. He appeared to say, "Let us get this thing to the committee where we will have all the technical people and all your questions will be answered in detail." My experience in committees, which is admittedly brief, has been that when we get to the committee with all the experts very soon we poor amateur boobs, the members of this house, quickly find ourselves out of our depth. While we are in this committee and amongst our peers—especially our peer the Minister of Transport—I think this is the time when we should have the preliminary exposition as to what the interim policy will be.

I should like to know from the minister how this will apply in an area way. Will we land in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines and find that we have representatives there from eight provinces, each representative stating his case, or will we have to ferret out from the representatives of the minister exactly how it will bear provincially or on a regional basis? These are some of the things I think we should know from this statement.

I should like to know what the minister meant by the statement he made on March 24 in introducing this resolution as reported at page 2207 of Hansard of that date:

> The government has decided that the most effective relief is to be afforded by confining the subsidy to a reduction in the non-competitive class and commodity rates, including the joint rail-water rates which are differentially related to the rail rates. These rates are generally known as "normal" rates, and are the ones which have taken the full percentage increases authorized by the board over many years.

I should like to have a simple exposition of that statement. I would like a fuller explanation of what is meant by rates which are differentially related to rail rates and what is meant by normal rates. I should like to have the explanation made right here and now. Beyond that I should like to know how this subsidy will affect the bridge subsidy or if it will affect it at all. I think the minister knows what I mean by the bridge subsidy. We have never been able to figure out how it affects northern Ontario. All we know is that we have the highest freight rates in Canada. We are interested in finding out about the regional basis of the application of this measure because we wonder if we are going to be lumped with the west.

In one of his off-the-cuff statements in which I assume he would be more frank than usual the minister indicated that if British Columbia suffered the most it would gain the most from this subsidy. I should like to have a fuller explanation of what he meant by that. We in northern Ontario feel that we have suffered. I feel it is about time we had a clear exposition.

When hon. members got back from the Easter vacation we discovered the usual number of briefs and representations in the mail. I just enjoyed reading the submission of the Canadian lumber association to the cabinet committee on freight rates. In essence the brief represented a call for the repeal of the Crowsnest pass rates. In the same mail I discovered a pamphlet published by the Alberta wheat pool called "The Crowsnest Pass Agreement in Review", which is a very clear exposition of why we maintain these rates.

Several hon. members have spoken about the position of the trucking industry. Probably the minister has looked at some of the material contained in The Motor Carrier, a magazine that represents the interests of the trucking people. I was particularly intrigued by the headline I found on one page which read:

> Subsidy Issue Sparks Dramatic Cabinet Cloak and Dagger Affair

It is not difficult to imagine our dashing minister involved in a cabinet cloak and dagger affair of some kind or other. What I would like to know is what recognition will be given in this interim period to the position advanced by the truckers? They are dead set against this subsidy. Let us have an explanation from the minister as to how this subsidy is going to apply fairly to the railways and not apply unfairly to their competitors, the trucking people. In effect that is what was asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I think we merit from the minister at this time something much better than the exposition he has given us.

The whole purpose of the minister's exposition seemed to be, "Let us get this to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines." To my way of thinking that is not the place for a clear outline of how this legislation is going to apply for the next year. I believe the place for that is right here and now in this committee. I was pleased to find that my opinion in this regard is identical with that of the hon. member for Laurier. Doubtless the minister will recognize that some of us over here in our opinions do not always dovetail with the opinions of the hon. member for Laurier but this is a case where we are in agreement in feeling that this statement is not good enough. We need a clear, concise outline of how this legislation will work in this one-year period.

I should like to say that I think that we have had enough of royal commissions especially those set up to inquire into freight rates and transportation. I feel it is about time this government took advantage of the knowledge of the board of transport commissioners and of the findings of previous royal commissions and demonstrated two things, some leadership and some guts, in nailing down a national transportation policy without resorting to another royal commission which will take an interminable amount of time to report and is almost certain not to have the authority to consider all the problems relating to the question. Royal commissions do serve a purpose but I feel that sometimes we campaign too frequently to have them set up. In this case the government should show leadership with respect to a national policy on transportation and freight rates rather than shoving the question into one of these corners. The present record of the government with respect to royal commissions is not really an enchanting picture if we look at the various royal commissions that have been established and consider the great length of time it has taken them to getting around to making even interim reports and the fact that there seems to be some lack of agreement on interpreting just what their findings mean.

I do not see how the idea of the establishing of a royal commission to study this question could excite anybody except perhaps the lawyers who will make a killing presenting the cases for the various provinces in connection with the freight rate aspect of the question. If the minister really digs into the transportation and freight rate problems and gets down to work—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private bills, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH IMPOSITION OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved the second reading of Bill C-19, to amend the Criminal Code (corporal punishment).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of introducing this bill which deals specifically with the abolition and removal from the Criminal Code of the provision for whipping, a provision which calls specifically for the use as so described in the Criminal Code of a weapon—I think it can only be properly described as a weapon—known as the cat-o'-nine-tails. This is a device which is not normally seen by Canadian citizens today unless they happen to be watching late movies such as Mutiny on the Bounty, the Corsican Brothers and others. Vivid in my mind, as I am sure in the minds of many other members also, are scenes where human beings are flogged, in some cases flogged to death.

The arguments in favour of the abolition of corporal punishment follow a pattern very similar to that in the case of the arguments established in support of the abolition of capital punishment. They deal specifically with the aspect of a deterrent and the fact as no doubt will be established by speakers from other parties in the house, that there is no evidence, statistically or otherwise to support the retention of corporal punishment. The argument that corporal punishment, whipping in particular, is motivated by revenge is, of course, true. We have all heard people discussing a certain crime that has been committed and making the statement that hanging or whipping is too good for the person who committed the offence. When this subject has come up in private conversation I have often asked people who have made such statements what they would prefer to do. In most cases they go further than the use of that unhappy device, the cat-o'-nine-tails, as a means of torture to extract revenge and suggest some of the ancient oriental methods but finally before we reach drawing and quartering they concede my point.

There are morbid aspects of corporal punishment which disturb me as a member of parliament no more or less than they disturbed me as a private citizen. You, Mr. Speaker, I, every member of the house and each and every member of our society has a hand on the whip when a whipping takes place in the same way that we have a hand on the rope in the case of a hanging. We as citizens of Canada and members of the house are elected specifically to enact such legislation as truly reflects the feelings and instincts of the people we represent.

In the case of corporal punishment the same risk of error is involved, although I grant not to the same extent, as in the case of capital punishment. If a man is hanged and evidence is later discovered indicating that the accused was in fact innocent, nothing can be done, but I submit there is permanent damage to the recipient of corporal punishment in that the man carries the marks of it to his grave.

The debate concerning corporal punishment has raged in many countries of the world for many years and in a few the use of the whip or lash has been abolished for over 100 years. There has been a trend in human behaviour and human conscience reflected in the legislatures and laws of many lands which tends toward what I like to think is an enlightened point of view regarding corporal punishment.

Not too many weeks ago I saw in a popular pictorial magazine a series of pictures of a thief who had been apprehended in one of the Middle Eastern countries. The picture was taken by a man who had secreted a camera into the area. The sequence of pictures showed a poor man, a beggar, being dragged into the public square and held down by three or four other men while a policeman cut off a hand. The last picture showed the man minus his hand sitting in front of his hovel and the hand that had been cut off was nailed to the doorway of his abode. The final comment in the story accompanying the picture was that some of those who had their hands removed had died. Yet burglary continues in that country. I have read a discussion of corporal punishment in "The History of Corporal Punishment" by George Ryley Scott and in his book he describes the action of the cat-o'-nine-tails. I tried to obtain and bring to this house this afternoon a cat-o'-nine-tails. I have no reason to believe that the present day version differs substantially in structure or effect from the original. I should like to quote briefly from the book to which I have referred in order to give the house some idea of the specific effects of the cat-o'-nine-tails, provision for the use of which is found in our Criminal Code. The author has this to say at page 83:

> The English cat-o'-nine-tails, the weapon employed, was a terrible instrument of flagellation. It was a close rival of the Russian knout. The "cat" consisted—> —of nine separate thongs of leather or thick whipcord, each two feet in length, and knotted in three places. At each stroke the thongs cut through the skin like so much paper, the knots tearing out lumps of flesh. The sensation of the whipped individual, says Shipp, is "as though the talons of a hawk were tearing the flesh off the bones," and, as stroke follows stroke, and the "cat" becomes clotted with blood, it "falls like a mass of lead upon the back."

I understand it still does.

This, Mr. Speaker, seems to be a voice from the distant past, something that one might find in such a novel as Mutiny on the Bounty. Yet today in our Criminal Code we find this same instrument, this same weapon, prescribed.

The matter of sadism so far as this subject is concerned is very pertinent and relevant in at least three aspects. Before going into this part of the argument, I should like to give you a definition which I heard of a sadist. A sadist is defined as someone who is kind to a masochist. While this definition may have a humorous connotation, it leads into an aspect of the punishment which concerns the recipient of flagellation. It has been, I think, demonstrated in studies made of certain aspects of sexual crimes that, far from being a punishment for certain types of such crimes, the whip is possibly a most desirable form of experience for that individual.

Sadism most certainly can occur in the application of the sentence. A judge meting out a sentence, trying by some method to come to the correct number of lashes which might suit a particular crime, has the effectiveness taken out of his decision according to the degree of physical strength and sadistic inclination which may exist in the mind of the individual who is handling the lash. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I submit that sadism is a natural reaction in the minds of society, particularly on the part of those closely associated with a specific crime, but is certainly not something of which we as citizens of Canada today can be proud to find in our laws and in the designated penalties attached thereto.

There is another aspect of this question which many of my colleagues in the house, as I have mentioned, will be discussing. I should like to quote briefly from the chapter headed "Summing-up the Position" in this book on the History of Corporal Punishment which deals with the fears presumed to be part of the deterrent which applies and results from the retention of corporal punishment. The author says:

> But the fear induced by corporal punishment belongs primarily to none of these categories. It is essentially and pre-eminently the fear of physical pain. It is the fear inevitably associated with suffering of a degrading, deliberate and debasing nature. Fear which is associated with and restricted to physical pain, as a punitive factor, possesses no true reformative power. Thus the qualities which commended corporal punishment to primitive and savage races, and which still provide strong justification for its employment by the individual as a means of exacting private vengeance, become indefensible as applicable to any penological system of the modern state.

Later on the author refers to another aspect of it which I should like to quote.

> In many quarters the fear has been expressed that the abolition of the "cat" and the birch would lead to an increase in the incidence of crime. There is no justification for any such contention.

Historically, as the demand has been made for the removal of the more severe forms of punishment, the cry has gone out that if this is removed there will be a flood of crime. Nobody will be safe in his bed. Finally, when enlightened governments have taken action to reduce the bestiality in our penalty sections those fears, so vigorously expressed, have proven to be unfounded. The abolition of corporal punishment for women and girls did not lead to any increase in crime amongst the female population.

One of the most powerful and most convincing arguments against any form of corporal punishment is that the sentence which the judge or magistrate may consider merely adequate will be transformed, by those responsible for its application, into a brutal attack or the severest torture reminiscent of some of the days of the Spanish inquisition. These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the reasons why those of us who favour the abolition of corporal punishment are supporting this bill.

There is a further reason, of course, contained in the report of the committee of the Senate and House of Commons which reported on this matter in 1956. I am quoting from page 47 of the final report of that committee, paragraph 27:

> Accordingly, the committee recommends that corporal punishment be abolished for any of the offences for which it is presently prescribed in the Criminal Code.

The broader aspects of the reform of our penal system, which I understand are receiving most active consideration at the present time by the government, must embody some other set of principles, principles which will result in remedy, reform and rehabilitation rather than extracting what I submit are the outmoded, savage penalties presently prescribed in the Criminal Code.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity of speaking for a few minutes in support of the bill which has been introduced by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee), asking this house to pass an amendment to abolish corporal punishment as part of a judicial sentence in Canada. It is rather extraordinary, and to our shame, that Canada is one of the few countries in the world that still retains the lash and the paddle as part of a judicial sentence. I can only express the hope that hon. members of this house who have to deal with matters of law can visit or will visit our institutions and ascertain just what takes place there. I am certain that almost every person who has been inside a penal institution and has seen the lash and the paddle used, or who have been informed how they are administered, could never stand in his place in this house and oppose the abolition of the lash or the paddle.

May I just take a few minutes to explain the procedure to those who are keenly interested in this question, and tell them just what that means. When a person who receives a judicial sentence of the lash or paddle, in accordance with the order of the court, the warden of the penitentiary has to carry out that order. The inmate in prison is taken down to a small room in the basement of the penitentiary. The lash, as was pointed out by the mover of this bill, is sometimes known as the cat-o'-nine-tails. I disagree with only one statement that he made. It is different from the book he quoted. It is now eight lengths of nylon cord. They have modernized it to that extent. It is now nylon cord.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the inmate is taken into a small room. If it is the lash, there is a table sloping at a 30 degree angle up against the wall. At the end of that table embedded in the concrete are steel plates. The feet of the inmate are fastened by leather straps to the steel plates in the concrete so that he cannot move. He is then stretched along the inclined board, with arms extended, and his arms are strapped to the board so as to be completely immovable. He is stripped to the waist.

Then, Mr. Speaker, in case you have never seen that procedure, may I tell you that a leather belt is put around the kidneys because a blow on the kidneys can kill. Then the man who is strapped there, his feet on the floor, his arms extended, with protection so that he cannot be killed, with a leather belt over the kidneys, gets in Canada what is known as the lash. I want to tell you Mr. Speaker, that I have personally visited penal institutions in Canada where a man has been ordered the lash by a court, and I have seen men in hospital with their backs wrecked by the lash seven days after they received it.

If the order is not for the lash it is for the paddle. Although it is called the paddle, actually it is the strap. The strap varies in Canada according to the institution. It does not vary in length nor width nor thickness but it varies as to whether or not it has any holes in it. About half the institutions use a strap called the paddle with holes. The difference in the administration of that form of punishment is that instead of being on a sloping form—their feet are still strapped to steel plates to the floor—they are bent over a table with their arms outstretched and the leather belts holding their arms. The trousers are down. The leather belt is over the kidneys. Then the paddle is administered. It is bad enough without the holes. But if the leather belt has the holes in it, the flesh is lacerated. There, too, Mr. Speaker, I have seen these men in hospital.

We do not forget the crimes of these men but we should give consideration to the purpose of their punishment. Surely we in Canada have now reached a point of understanding of modern penology to realize that the purpose is not a matter of revenge but for the protection of society. It is an answer that they are obliged to give to the people for an anti-social act. But I believe—especially from knowing the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton)—in the application of education in an endeavour to rehabilitate.

I have long had an interest in penology. About five years ago I visited a penitentiary and I asked the warden if he would call into his office everyone he knew of in that institution who had received the lash or the paddle either as a judicial punishment or as part of a discipline under the authority of the warden's court and the warden did so. That afternoon the warden and I together interviewed right in the institution some 17 men, I think it was, who in their criminal life had had the lash or the paddle. They were told to speak absolutely bluntly. It is all on the record.

The warden said, "This is Mr. Harold E. Winch, M.P. and he wants to ask you some questions." So in turn we questioned every inmate. We asked, "Are you a better man because of corporal punishment?" "What is your reaction to corporal punishment?" "Is it a detriment to further crime or to breaking the law of the institution?" "Has it made you a better boy or a better man?" Sixteen of them said no and one said yes. It was most interesting, Mr. Speaker, that one chap said "It almost made a murderer out of me." He said, "The first time I ever received corporal punishment was when I was at a reformatory in Ontario, and I got the paddle because I broke the law in the reformatory; I had one dollar in my pocket and I was not supposed to have any money. After what happened," he said, "I swore I would get that man." He escaped from the reformatory and he and a chum went across the border. They stole a car, stole a gun and came back. This boy told me—and the warden can confirm what I say—that he had had the man that gave him the paddle in the sights of that rifle. However, luckily for him, his chum woke up to what was taking place and removed it. That is one experience I had along with the warden in talking to those in the institution.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough mentioned the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which investigated this matter. Our joint committee had the counsel of that committee, a well-known lawyer of this city, interview in the city of Toronto a number of men who had received the lash or the paddle but who are now out of the institutions. Most of them have been very well established in the business life of the city of Toronto. The members of our committee kept completely away. The interviewing was done only by our counsel, and the report of our counsel referred to the men only by a letter of the alphabet so that the names of the individuals were kept completely in confidence. I would invite the members of this house to read the transcript of the evidence of that interview with those who have become rehabilitated, some of them prominent in business, and who had had the lash or the paddle. With only two exceptions their replies were that corporal punishment antagonizes a man, makes him bitter and vicious, and more anti-social than when he was sentenced.

Mr. Speaker, there is the matter of the transcript record of the three-year study of the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate; there is the record from such authority as that quoted by the mover of this bill; and there is my own experience. But may I just add one other word and it is this. In a few days or weeks this house will be asked to pass millions of dollars for the maintenance of penitentiaries in this country, millions of dollars for the maintenance of police forces in this country. All that money comes out of the taxpayers' pockets. As I said before, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) I am sure has in mind modern methods of rehabilitation, not crocodile tears or simply retention and education. Surely when we recognize the cost of keeping a man in a penitentiary, which is I think $4.70 a day, it must be the hope of the government, the minister and the members of this house that when these men are released from the penitentiary they shall not return. We spend, as I say, millions of dollars every year, and we are going to vote millions of dollars inside the next few weeks for the following twelve months to try to rehabilitate those who have proven themselves anti-social.

Mr. Speaker, in nearly every penitentiary across this country now we have wardens of course, doctors, psychologists, psychiatrists and educationalists, and we are teaching the inmates vocations. If by judicial sentence we have a continuation of what is still the law in this country when the judge orders the lash or the paddle, I am afraid that the money spent in providing the educators, the psychologists and psychiatrists is wasted when a man is strapped and has his back lacerated or his pants taken down and his backside lacerated. It just does not seem to make sense.

But in particular I want to emphasize the absolute stupidity of some of the judges who give a sentence of lashes in two sections; one shortly after the prisoner is admitted to jail and then later before he comes out, so that all that work done by the educationalists, the vocational training men and the doctors is ruined because of the law as it stands today. I am certain from personal interviews, studies and my knowledge of this question that the bill which is now before us is a bill which demands worthy consideration of all the members of this house, and I sincerely hope that we will wipe this blot off Canada's name and cease to be one of the few remaining countries of the world to use the lash and the paddle as part of a judicial sentence. We do not want to see, because of the approach to this problem of the Minister of Justice and the government, the taxpayers' money being sent down the drain. I hope that this bill which has been introduced many times now will receive the vote of all members of all parties in this House of Commons.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to second the bill proposed by my hon. friend from York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee). Only a week ago it seems we were on opposite sides of the fence on a somewhat similar bill involving capital punishment. I had some reservations about that question, but I have no reservations about the fact that my hon. friend through his fine argument presented this afternoon, backed up by the persuasive emotionalism of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), is on the right track. I hope in my own modest way to produce some statistics for the attention of the house which will support the conclusions which have been reached by both those hon. members, and also the conclusions which have been reached in other countries in the world which have decided to abolish this particular method of punishment.

But first, sir, may I be permitted to examine two arguments that will probably be used by those who are in favour of retaining this particular form of punishment. The first one is probably best expressed by that old master of the English law, William Blackstone, Oxford's first Vinerian professor of law:

> Of all parts of a law the most effectual is the vindicatory. For it is but lost labour to say, "Do this, avoid that", unless we also declare, "This shall be the consequence of your non-compliance." We must therefore observe that the main strength and force of a law consists in the penalty annexed to it. Herein is to be found the principal obligation of human laws.

This, Mr. Speaker, may be a persuasive argument at first blush, but I suggest to the house that this argument contains a fallacy, and that is that there are other methods of punishment available for offenders quite apart from the inhumane one of corporal punishment. The other punishment available is simply the threat or the actuality of imprisonment.

The second argument that might be used to maintain the present situation comes from the old adage, "Spare the rod and spoil the child." This is a wonderful field for professional and amateur psychologists, and anyone who has seen children in action or been a child himself, which takes in everybody, has a wonderful opportunity to vent his or her personal opinion on this philosophy. But again, I think that to spare the rod and spoil the child has no particular application to this argument. For one thing, the child in the home loves the parent and expects the parent to assert a certain amount of discipline. The child also knows that if the parent is forced to take drastic measures, such as a spanking, if it is done out of a love for the child, while the child's love might abate for the moment under the stings of the punishment, it will return in full force and be strengthened by respect.

On the other hand, in the penal institutions of this country, Mr. Speaker, it is very unlikely that any of the inmates love the warden or that the warden, for that matter, loves the inmates, and the imposition of the rod under such circumstances would not be accompanied by the factors which play such a vital role in the home, namely the factors of love and affection and the need for children to be obedient to their parents. I hope in those short words that I have helped dispose of two of the arguments that will probably be used by those who favour the retention of corporal punishment.

Now for the matter of the statistical argument. Does it work anyway? This was considered before the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons in 1954. I have their report and I shall read very briefly from it if I may. I do not think the statistics given that committee by the Canadian authorities are particularly helpful, because the numbers involved are not large enough. Then I will go on to quote some of the findings of a committee in the United Kingdom which dealt with a much larger number of offenders, and I think I can prove statistically beyond all reasonable doubt to even the most sceptical in this House of Commons that there really is no merit in retaining the use of the lash or the strap. As to the Canadian picture, it will be found at page 781 of the joint committee's report. Question No. 20 asked:

> In your opinion, does corporal punishment operate as a deterrent to (a) the young offender, (b) the recidivist, (c) the sexual offender?

There are answers to this question from several of the western provinces—British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. There is no comment from Ontario, and some actual figures from the commissioner of penitentiaries. The answer from British Columbia is that there seems to be some evidence of paddling having been useful in helping young offenders to redirect their activity. From Saskatchewan, there was the following reply:

> We know of no evidence to support the view that corporal punishment in fact operates as a deterrent to any group of offenders.

These are, apparently, opinions plucked out of the air by attorneys general or by people in their offices who may be softhearted or hardhearted as the case may be. However, the commissioner of penitentiaries did offer some statistical fodder to the committee. I suppose the main question really is whether the lash, once given, tends to ensure that a person will not repeat his offence, so I do not intend to deal with all the statistics which the commissioner presented to the committee, though I will deal with some of them, those which concern the recidivists. One hundred and ninety three persons were awarded corporal punishment who had previously served sentences of imprisonment in the period from January 1, 1943 to December 31, 1953. The figures with regard to these people are as follows:

Subsequently convicted again after having received corporal punishment	59
No record of further sentences	56
Still incarcerated	78
Total	193

I myself had a very interesting interview with a recidivist a few weeks ago. This recidivist had recidivisted time and time again, because he had spent 10 different terms in Canadian penitentiaries. It was his opinion, in the light of his studies, that recidivism took place within one year of an offender being released from a penal institution. I think that is significant, for if there is anything about the lash and the strap it should be that the scars and the humiliation and the degradation of undergoing such punishment are still fresh within this period, if not upon the body then on the mind at least of a released prisoner. And yet statistics from Canada supplied by the commissioner of penitentiaries seem to indicate, if they indicate anything at all, that the lash has no particular effect.

May I turn now to what has occurred in the United Kingdom, and I use as my source material a report of the departmental committee on corporal punishment, 1928, issued by Her Majesty's stationery office. This committee had this to say as reported on page 80:

> We have given due weight to the opinions which witnesses have expressed to us on this point on the basis of their personal experience; but we thought it desirable to supplement this evidence by obtaining some statistical information regarding the subsequent record of offenders who have been dealt with by means of corporal punishment. Statistics based solely on the subsequent records of persons sentenced to corporal punishment would be defective in two respects. First, they could not show what the man's subsequent career might have been if he had not been flogged. Secondly, as corporal punishment of adults is always combined with a sentence of imprisonment or penal servitude, they could not show how far the subsequent career may have been influenced by the term of imprisonment or penal servitude. No figures could elucidate these two points completely; but, in order to throw some light on this aspect of the matter, we have obtained figures which enable a comparison to be made between the subsequent record of persons who actually received corporal punishment and of persons who were liable to corporal punishment but were dealt with by other means.

The statistical analysis which the committee presented with the help of the home office and New Scotland Yard was an analysis of the records of 440 persons who were convicted of robbery with violence during the period 1921 to 1930. The report states:

> Of the 142 flogged, two have subsequently been convicted of a second offence of robbery with violence, and in a third case a charge of robbery with violence was dropped when the offender was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude on another charge founded on the same facts. Of the 298 who were not flogged, three have since been reconvicted of robbery with violence: but two of these men were mentally unstable and it seems very doubtful whether either of them would have been restrained from committing the second offence if he had been flogged on the first occasion.

And the conclusion which the committee reached was this:

> So far as these 440 cases are concerned, it appears that a sentence of imprisonment or penal servitude without corporal punishment was no less effective in deterring the offender from committing a further offence of robbery with violence than a sentence of imprisonment or penal servitude combined with corporal punishment. As regards subsequent offences other than robbery with violence, the record of the men flogged was bound to be worse than that of those who had not been flogged. Of those flogged 55 per cent were subsequently convicted of serious crime, as compared with 43.9 per cent of those not flogged.

I find this report very interesting, and I hope other hon. members will also. I think there is much food for thought in this very fine study which was made in the United Kingdom. The report continues:

> It might have been assumed that this would be due to the fact that the persons not flogged included a higher proportion of first offenders who might be less likely to offend again: but when the cases were subdivided into groups according to the previous record of the men concerned it was found that, even among the first offenders, the subsequent record of those flogged was less satisfactory than that of those who were not flogged.

Time is getting on, and there are others who wish to take part in the debate. I think that perhaps I have given enough statistical information to the house at least to knock the props out from under those who would argue that flogging and the lash do have a beneficial effect and do tend to alter the personality of a prisoner who undergoes this method of punishment.

In conclusion, if I may, I should like to make two more observations. One is that the mere fact of subjecting a human being to the inhumanity of the whip undoubtedly sets a mark of Cain upon that person. If not, it gives him a peculiar stamp in his own circle and sets him apart from ordinary mankind. It may even, in certain circles, tend to make him a heroic figure, a type of outcast beatnik who is given recognition because of the fact that all the forces of society have combined to subject him to the most inhuman of treatment.

If I have any reservations about the bill I think they would only go so far as the matter of prison discipline. Perhaps the lash or some form of physical punishment is necessary in prison. I am not sure about that. Perhaps my hon. friend will deal with it at some future time. I know we are not going to pass this bill this afternoon. Let us be frank about it. I also heard my hon. friend's heartening words that action may be undertaken by the government. Our debate this afternoon will at least serve the useful purpose of bringing this matter again to the attention of the Canadian public and provoking some new thought about what has become in this country a rather fearful and degrading sore on our body politic.

(Translation):

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the house that I support this bill. When the Criminal Code was amended in 1954, we entrusted a joint committee of the house and Senate with the responsibility of making appropriate investigations with regard to capital and corporal punishment, and lotteries.

In 1956, the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons reported to us after investigating the abolition of capital punishment. There is, to my mind, no need to quote from the statements by expert witnesses like doctors and others, who were heard before that committee and who repeatedly explained how corporal punishment was applied. Following the evidence heard, the committee came to the conclusion that capital punishment should be abolished. The relevant report was published at that time in the press and we were able to learn the reasons in favour of abolishing the lash as well.

Some of my learned friends opposite have studied the question. The hon. member for Scarborough (Mr. McGee)) gave us some good arguments and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) gave lengthy quotations. However, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who was a member of the committee which studied the abolition of capital punishment, gave us a description of what that punishment is today, of its bad aspects and detrimental consequences, leading up to the conclusion that it should be abolished.

I share the views of those hon. members and I am in favour of abolishing capital punishment. I shall however limit myself to the following two reasons: the effects of capital punishment on the indivdual are very bad. It induces in him the idea of revenge against society and he becomes embittered against his fellow men. As a matter of fact, that measure which was introduced in the middle ages is obsolete today. Moreover, judges in criminal cases no longer sentence anyone to the lash. Why? Because they know of its detrimental effects on those subjected to this punishment.

Then another amendment was made to the Criminal Code which today would justify the abolition of the lash. The amendment was passed several years ago when the penalty of life imprisonment was introduced for individuals known as habitual criminals.

To those who are opposed to the abolition of the corporal punishment and who say: "What about the man who does not want to mend his ways, who is always before the courts, and constantly sent to prison?" We might answer that, after a third charge, the crown in each province may lodge a complaint and prove to the courts that such a man, being recognized as an habitual criminal, could be given a life sentence.

For all those reasons I believe we should now abolish corporal punishment because it is bad for the individual. I believe that, in a society which prides itself on being modern and in an advanced state of civilization, this form of punishment is no longer warranted and I am convinced that if it were eliminated from our statutes, it would be all to the advantage of the individual.

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it will be suggested, of course, that I am talking out this bill and I would not consider that I had been offended if such an accusation were made because I am opposed to this bill. I recognize that a great body of public opinion is in favour of the intention behind this bill. Many eloquent speeches today have expressed the point of view which I believe is widely held. I would suggest, however, that if I had an opportunity to speak at great length I would also express the view of a large body of public opinion in saying that I believe the terms of this bill are far too broad and general. It deals with the subject in a manner which in effect gives little consideration to the other side of the argument and there does exist another side which is both substantial and important.

We have listened this afternoon to a great deal of maudlin sentimentality. I agree with the argument that corporal punishment should not be imposed to the extreme but let us bear in mind what it is intended to prevent. It is an important deterrent to the recurrence of many crimes. For instance, section 136 of the Criminal Code provides that everyone who commits rape is guilty of an indictable offence and subject to imprisonment or to be whipped. I have not reached the position where I could accept the abolition of corporal punishment in respect of crimes of this nature. I do not believe that a prison term is fully adequate. Corporal punishment could serve as a deterrent to those who commit crimes of the nature I have mentioned. The hon. gentleman who introduced this measure said that one who receives corporal punishment may carry the memory of it to his grave. I suggest that with respect to some crimes it is perhaps justifiable that the individual should so do.

Mr. Winch: He may deserve it but what good does it do?

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): The hon. gentleman who interrupts had an opportunity to take part in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the hour for the consideration of public and private bills has expired. The house will resume the business interrupted at five o'clock.

FREIGHT RATES

MEASURE RESPECTING REDUCTION OF CLASS AND COMMODITY RATES

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Hees —Mr. Coates in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to direct the board of transport commissioners to require by order the reduction of class and commodity freight rates (other than competitive rates) charged by carriers subject to the order of the board dated November 17th, 1958, and to authorize payments to reimburse carriers for the resulting reduction of their revenues up to an aggregate amount of twenty million dollars.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary South).]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I might take this opportunity to answer the questions asked by hon. members so far in the debate. The hon. member for Fort William asked that the subsidy should not discriminate against northwestern Ontario. I have already said that there will be no discrimination against any province or region. The hon. member for Port Arthur asked, first of all, what normal rates are, what does it mean when rates are differentially related and what effect will the proposed subsidy have on the existing bridge subsidy.

Normal rates are the ones which have taken the full percentage increases authorized by the board and do not include competitive rates. The differentially related rates referred to are the joint rail and water rates and they are lower than all-rail rates. With respect to the hon. member's inquiry whether this measure will affect the bridge subsidy the answer is that this subsidy is in addition to the bridge subsidy and not in substitution for it in any way.

The hon. members for Welland and Essex East referred to rates on agricultural products moving into Canada from Michigan compared with rates from southern Ontario to points in Canada. The reason for the difference is that the United States produce comes in on international rates which in this instance are lower than the local, domestic rates. These local, domestic rates will have the benefit of the subsidy and the international rates will not. If there is still any discrimination the shipper can complain to the board of transport commissioners and have his complaint investigated.

Lastly, the hon. member for Laurier asked what is the formula which the board of transport commissioners will use to distribute the $20 million subsidy. From the discussions I have had with the board I can say that there will be a horizontal reduction in the level of non-competitive class and commodity rates from the 17 per cent increase authorized by the board to approximately 10 per cent, or a 7 per cent reduction. In effect there is no real formula. This is simply the method by which the subsidy will be applied.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, while I appreciate the rather brief answers we have had from the minister with regard to certain questions I still feel that we deserve a fuller exposition. For example, with regard to the question of the hon. member for Laurier, just how is this formula going to be applied across the country? We want to get some idea of the regional position. Let me put it this way. The Canadian Pacific railway dominates freight rates in so far as western Canada is concerned. In the way this formula is going to be applied will more of the subsidy go to one railway than to the other because of regional differences? I see the minister shaking his head. This means, of course, that his explanation has not been thorough and clear enough. I want him to remember all the way through that, as I told him at the beginning, I am approaching this matter from the point of view of the boob, the amateur who wants a clear explanation.

Mr. Hees: If I may answer the hon. member's question, the $20 million will be used in what we, after a great many discussions, consider will be the most effective way to relieve the burden on the person who pays for freight rate increases, namely the consumer. The method which has been indicated to us and which we believe will provide the most effective relief is to apply the $20 million right across Canada to all non-competitive class and commodity rates because those are the rates which take the full increase and bear most heavily on those people whose goods have to be carried over the long haul.

The board of transport commissioners has advised us that in its opinion the application of the $20 million to the non-competitive class and commodity rates of the railways and the water carriers affected will make it possible to reduce these rates by approximately 7 percentage points, from 17 per cent to 10 per cent. We believe that this method of applying the subsidy will give the greatest relief to the people who need the relief the most, the consumers whose goods are carried on the long hauls.

Mr. Fisher: Let me take a specific example and ask the minister for information on it. We have a plywood mill in our region which ships plywood into the Toronto market, a haul of around 800 miles. When the 17 per cent increase came into effect it applied to all plywood shipped by that mill into the Toronto market but the increase did not apply to British Columbia plywood entering the Toronto market because competitive rates were available via United States lines from Seattle through to southern Ontario. Are we to assume that under this new scheme the subsidy will apply so far as plywood from our particular area is concerned and will not apply on the British Columbia plywood because it was not affected originally by the 17 per cent increase?

Mr. Hees: From the type of question the hon. member has asked I think it is very obvious that to obtain answers to complicated, specific questions such as he has asked is the reason that a bill of this kind is referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I think the hon. member must realize that to become a freight rate expert able to answer off the cuff any freight rate problem that is propounded requires 10, 15, 20 or 30 years of continuous work on freight rates. That is the length of time that our expert on freight rates with the board of transport commissioners has spent on this subject. Those working with him have spent shorter periods of time but a great many years doing the same kind of work. I suggest to the hon. member, who is a member of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, that the best way to get specific answers with respect to specific commodities in specific districts is to give the bill second reading as soon as possible and get the committee operating. He can then ask questions in that committee to his heart's content. He can ask them of the experts who will be there and I feel sure they will be able to give him the answers or at least will do their very best to do so.

Mr. Fisher: That may be so but I am not convinced that we will get an exposition of policy. What so often happens in a committee is that you go there and you have technical advisers there and they will give you the answer in detail to a specific question but when you bring up a general question they say that it involves policy and the minister or the government determines the policy. That is why I was hoping we could obtain a more complete clarification of policy. I see the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the chamber. Of course we all know that according to the reports about this cloak and dagger affair he was the one who threatened to resign. Since he felt so seriously about the matter that he threatened to resign, maybe he can give us a clear exposition of just what is involved in this interim 12-month policy and how it is going to apply in a general way across the country in the various regions.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I shall participate in the debate to the extent of denying the hon. gentleman's statement. I did not threaten to resign.

Mr. Chevrier: There is a matter which I think has not been answered satisfactorily by the minister, and I am sure he will agree with me when I go into it in a little greater detail, not in any way to delay the passage of this measure because I know that the minister and the committee are anxious to get it through. The point I want to make now is one which has already been made. I want to insist upon it because I do not think it is fair for the minister or the house to ask parliament to pass this measure unless we have a statement from him or from the Prime Minister dealing with the royal commission on transportation. I think that the least that can be expected of parliament when a measure of this kind is being debated, and when parliament is being asked to pass a subsidy to provide for $20 million in reduction of the judgment of the board of transport commissioners, that the minister or someone on behalf of the government should tell parliament what the other half of this measure is going to be.

I want to refer to a statement which was made by the acting prime minister in the absence of the Prime Minister and which was given to the press concerning this whole matter. In his statement he dealt with two matters. He dealt first of all with this interim measure and he dealt also with a study which would be made of the whole transportation matter. He said this in his statement which is dated November 26, 1958, and I quote:

> A study is being undertaken at once to work out measures to relieve against inequities in the freight rate structure, including any that may be aggravated by the present increases.

I presume the minister was then referring to this measure which is now before us. He went on to add this, and I quote:

> Steps are also being taken to set up a suitable body to review the general field of railway problems and policy. This study will include not only a comprehensive consideration of the railway freight rate problem—including the situation of the long haul provinces in the west and in the Atlantic region—but also other specific problems which require solution if Canada's railways are to serve the national interest without prejudicing particular industries or areas.

Then he went on with an additional part to his statement with which I shall not bother the committee at this time. The point I make now is this: I do not think that this measure should be allowed to pass at this stage without the minister giving some indication as to when the royal commission is going to be established, if it is a royal commission; what the scope of the royal commission is going to be and whether or not it will deal with inequities, discrimination, inequalities in freight rate structures and what other matters will be referred to it with reference to a national transportation policy. I invite the minister at this stage to tell us what is the policy of the government with reference to the other half of this freight rate matter.

Mr. Hees: I might answer the hon. member's question now, if I may. This bill deals with the question of the government making available a $20 million subsidy to relieve certain freight rate burdens which the government believes should be relieved. The statement on the setting up of a royal commission will be made by the Prime Minister in the course of the next few days. I am not in a position to make it now, and therefore it cannot be made. It will be made by the Prime Minister who will outline the matters with which the royal commission will deal and how it will operate. My suggestion to the hon. member and other members of the house is this: As soon as possible, we should pass this resolution, give the bill second reading and have it go to a committee where it can be thoroughly studied. This will take some time. I feel absolutely positive that by the time the bill comes back to the house, and certainly before there will be any chance to have it passed in its entirety, the Prime Minister will have made his statement regarding the royal commission and the hon. member, as well as others, will be able to express his views on it if he wishes.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister give the house an undertaking that before second reading of the bill the Prime Minister will announce the royal commission and the terms of reference thereof?

Mr. Hees: I did not say before second reading, I said before the bill is passed. As the hon. member knows there is second reading, then the measure will go to a committee. It will come back to the committee of the whole house when a free debate is allowed. Then, there is third reading after that. I believe this gives ample opportunity for debate on this matter after the bill has been considered by the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I urge hon. members to make it possible for the bill to go to that committee and be examined. This will take some time as there is necessary work to be done on the bill. Then, the measure could come back and I feel sure, by that time the Prime Minister will have made his statement.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the committee get an undertaking from the minister, then, that before third reading of the bill there will be a statement or announcement with regard to the royal commission?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I make that.

Mr. Argue: I do not agree that the commitment of the minister is entirely satisfactory so far as a discussion of the royal commission is concerned. As the minister well knows and as the chairman is well aware, second reading provides for a study and general discussion of the bill or anything that might come within the terms of the bill. Once the bill has been given second reading and once we are in committee of the whole on the bill, then the minister well knows that you must keep your discussion confined to the clauses of the bill.

As I understand it, there is no clause in this bill that has anything whatever to do with the setting up of a royal commission, so we will have no opportunity under the rules of the house to discuss the government's policy so far as a royal commission is concerned. This afternoon, on orders of the day, when we probed the government the hon. member for Vancouver East, I believe it was, asked about a royal commission, asked about the government's policy. The Speaker, and I think quite rightly, said that since today we would be discussing this resolution in committee the proper place to find out about the government's policy was in committee. We have been trying all afternoon to find out what is the policy. There has been no announcement as to the terms of the royal commission. The Prime Minister, according to a press statement, stated during the Easter recess that such a royal commission was to be set up. Surely, when we are discussing the government's transportation policy, that is the time to discuss the royal commission.

I would ask the minister if the order in council has been passed setting up the royal commission. I would ask him if the order in council has been passed whether the terms of the order in council can be given to the committee because surely it is not good enough for the members of this house to be asked now to deal with this very important resolution and approve a subsidy of $20 million, yet be left entirely in the dark so far as the royal commission and its terms of reference are concerned. I see the Prime Minister is in his seat. I think he could be most helpful to the committee. He could tell us what the scope of this royal commission is going to be.

Another thing about which I am most concerned is the position of freight rates in this country within the next 12 months or between now and the period when the royal commission is considering the statements put before it and before the commission makes its report.

The hon. member for Laurier this afternoon was asking—and he can correct me if I misinterpret what he said—what position the board of transport commissioners would be in if a new application is placed before the board, if in the meantime the railways are faced with a wage increase. Does this mean that the board cannot increase freight rates within that interim period? The Minister of Transport side-stepped the question. He said that he was not able to say whether or not that was the position.

An hon. Member: That is all he could say.

Mr. Argue: That seems to be a rather strange attitude for the minister to take, in the light of the statement he made in this house on March 24 when he said, as reported at page 2208 of Hansard:

> In the meantime the government does not propose to permit any further general increases in railway freight rates.

Does this mean that the application now before the board will be left in abeyance? I hope that is exactly what it means. Does it mean that there will be no further consideration of this application in the meantime? I think that is the position that parliament should take. But I think that the minister should clarify to the committee this statement that he made on March 24, particularly in the light of the discussion this afternoon. I think we are entitled to be told at this time what are the terms of reference of the royal commission and whether or not this means that until the royal commission makes its report—at least until that time—there is to be a ceiling on freight rates, namely the present ceiling, above which they will not be allowed to go. I should like to know whether the royal commission which the government has in mind will have on it persons entirely different from the persons who are now on the board of transport commissioners. As the hon. member for Laurier has said, I think that when parliament is being asked to consider this half of the government's transportation policy we should be given information as to the scope of the royal commission, when it will be set up and who the personnel will be.

Mr. Winch: I am most happy that the Prime Minister is now in his seat this evening. On the orders of the day this afternoon I asked a question which Mr. Speaker said could be answered and dealt with under the business of the day. A great deal of discussion has taken place between that time and now. I want to say that I understand the position of the Minister of Transport. I understand that in the resolution he is asking for an expenditure of $20 million in one year but that he also realizes that that is not the answer. I appreciate the position of the Minister of Transport, having regard to the fact that there is to be a royal commission. But the establishment of a royal commission is a government decision and a government policy. Therefore, because it is a government decision and government policy, it can be announced only by the Prime Minister himself. As I say, I appreciate the position of the Minister of Transport who is trying to answer questions which he has not the power to answer. But, Mr. Chairman, because this matter of transportation policy, the royal commission, is of such great importance, I am grateful that the Prime Minister is now in his seat because we can now direct to him a question. According to his cabinet ministers, when it is a matter of government policy such as the terms of reference of a royal commission, he alone can make that statement. Without further words, while we are still on this resolution will the Prime Minister now give us some indication as to the terms of reference of the study that is to be made of the transportation system of Canada? May I ask that question of the Prime Minister?

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Argue: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: No, Mr. Chairman. This afternoon I asked a question and Mr. Speaker said it could be asked under the business for the day. May I say to the Prime Minister that I watched him and he nodded his head all the way through. I asked a question on the royal commission and its terms of reference and the Prime Minister nodded his head in complete agreement with the Speaker and myself that it would be done today. I am now asking the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to give the committee any information on the royal commission and its terms of reference; or, if he will not do that, may I ask what is his broad objective in solving the competition problem in Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, may I first refer to the nod to which reference has been made. The nod was in appreciation of the fact that the Speaker's ruling was in keeping with the rules, not with regard to those matters alluded to by the hon. member.

In so far as the royal commission is concerned, the minister has been in a position to make the announcement which he has made, namely that the terms of the royal commission will be placed before the house before the bill is passed. That is the undertaking that the minister has given and that undertaking will be upheld.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just ask a further question for the purpose of clarification? It is quite true that the minister has given that undertaking and I am sure the committee is appreciative of that fact. But there is a point which has been raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia—and I think it was raised earlier—namely that if the announcement is not made until third reading—which broadly speaking is the undertaking which the minister has given and the Prime Minister has confirmed it—then there will not be an opportunity of discussing either the royal commission or its terms of reference. I am sure the Prime Minister would not want that to be the position because, in the statement which the acting prime minister made on the whole subject in November of last year, it was clearly stated that this matter was divided into two parts, one the interim measure which we now have before us and the other a study of some kind or nature that was to be made of the whole transportation policy including the freight rate structure, inequities therein and so on. The second aspect of this policy we have not got. We are going to get it soon. Can we have from the Prime Minister an assurance—and I am sure the Prime Minister would agree with this procedure—that when the announcement is made it will be made at a time when we shall have an opportunity of discussing its terms of reference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure the government would be happy to have any suggestions as to those terms which might be embodied in the reference. The responsibility as to what terms will be embodied in the submission to the royal commission is, of course, the responsibility of the government. I remember on several occasions discussions in the past when I was sitting on the other side of the house when the government of those days pointed out that the responsibility for the terms of reference of a royal commission must necessarily be that of the government. I had thought that out of the discussion during the resolution stage recommendations and ideas would be advanced by hon. members in all parts of the house setting out their views which might be incorporated therein.

The objective was clearly set forth on the occasion in November by the Minister of Public Works. That still is the objective and the purpose, and any ideas and expressions of views in this regard will be welcomed. I know the hon. member and I will welcome any views at all. The hon. gentleman, who was minister of transport, is well qualified in every way by his experience to place before the committee those views which he suggests be included in the terms of reference of the royal commission. I have no hesitation in saying to him from the manner in which he has approached the subject, as has also the hon. member for Vancouver East, that the terms, when they are brought before the house, will be the terms included in an order in council setting up the commission. They will be subject to discussion, but there will be no alteration of them after that.

The former minister, the member for Laurier, knows what a tremendous problem transportation is at the present time. There have been injustices through the years because of the geography of our country and disparity in population, the wide distances between various points, and many other reasons which would warrant the setting up of a royal commission. There was set up the Turgeon commission, which went into the transportation problem. On the evidence placed before that commission and on the report which it made I would reiterate what I said and what the hon. minister said, that when the royal commission is set up both hon. members will be given the opportunity to express their views. But I point out that by that time the terms will have been determined, and there cannot be, under normal circumstances, an amendment of the terms. Therefore I now ask hon. members to place before us their suggestions and views on this matter to the end that their views may be fully considered by the governor in council in the determination of the ambit of the royal commission.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the Prime Minister for the intervention he has made in the debate and for the suggestion he has just made. I have too much respect for the government and the Prime Minister to make any suggestions at this time in connection with the terms of reference, because I think the committee will agree that a matter of this kind is of such importance that at this stage, at least, I should not venture to make any suggestion, although I would like very much to make suggestions when the time comes. The point I was making, Mr. Chairman, is this, and I say this with the greatest respect, that I do not think the Prime Minister is adopting the right attitude with respect to this matter. I say this respectfully, and I am sure he will not take it otherwise. It seems to me that when we in this house are asked to vote a subsidy of $20 million, that is one-half the policy of the government with reference to the settlement of the freight rates question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One-half of the policy?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, because the other part of the policy, if the Prime Minister prefers, has to do with the establishment of the royal commission. If the Prime Minister remembers, and I say this subject to correction because I am drawing on my memory now, it seems to me that when the former royal commission was set up there was given full opportunity to discuss the terms of reference—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Might I ask which royal commission the hon. gentleman is referring to?

Mr. Chevrier: The Turgeon royal commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will send out for that; I cannot say offhand.

Mr. Chevrier: I draw on my memory now because I have nothing else to call on. My recollection is that when the prime minister, or the former minister of transport, did make the statement, there was an opportunity for discussion and my recollection is that the Prime Minister, in his capacity as the then member for Prince Albert, made a number of comments on the royal commission. Now, I say again that I might be mistaken, and it might well be that these comments were made with reference to the report when it was brought in. If my memory is wrong I will have to take that back, of course.

But the point I desire to make now is that I do not think it is appropriate or sufficient for the house to be asked to vote this subsidy without knowing something about what the royal commission is going to study, and if the Prime Minister makes the statement after third reading of the bill there will be no opportunity for discussion. I think the house should have an opportunity, and I am sure the Prime Minister would be the last one to say that there should not be such an opportunity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to argue about that because I am trying to be so helpful at the moment, and I want every suggestion, but I do point out that if the opportunity to discuss the terms of reference of the royal commission is given, as I hope it will be, the royal commission will then have been set up and the suggestions will be to late. I am asking now for the opportunity to discuss the terms. Naturally I will be available, and I will even go further and say that opportunity will be given during the discussion in committee and on second reading, not later than that.

Mr. Chevrier: Then if that is the case I am satisfied. I have no objection to that, and I think that is an answer to my objection.

Mr. Winch: I would like to ask about a problem which has puzzled me all day. We are concerned with an interim payment of $20 million over the year, and I would like to ask what is the basis of setting up a royal commission and what are the terms of reference. But the Prime Minister says that information cannot be given; it will be announced and will be a fait accompli. I cannot accept that from the Prime Minister. He and I sat very close together for about four and a half years, and the present Prime Minister gave me a lot of advice when I was a newcomer on this side of the house and I think I learned a lot from him. I thought I learned from him something about diplomacy and parliamentary procedure.

I have listened very carefully and very closely. The Prime Minister and the government have decided that in the interest of Canada they should introduce a resolution, which means in due course, a bill, providing for a subsidy of $20 million for 12 months. It is not for the railways, according to the Minister of Transport; it is intended to help the consumers. What we are trying to find out now is on what basis this question is to be referred to a royal commission. What are the terms of reference? As I say, I have been listening very carefully, and all I can gather from the Prime Minister is that he intends to bring down these terms of reference. I am just waiting until hon. members opposite are ready. And I am asking this question: how does democracy work? How can we convey to the Prime Minister, before he presents us with a fait accompli, what should go into these terms of reference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I might just answer that question now, may I say that I asked the hon. gentleman to place before us his suggestions as to what should be included. However, the paucity of his thinking has apparently brought about a hiatus in this regard. I asked him what he would like to see incorporated. The hon. member is probably speaking about this with a knowledge of the past. Let me say to him that never did I at any time on the other side of the house or elsewhere, suggest that the setting up of a royal commission was a matter the nature of which should be determined by the house. That is the responsibility of the governor in council. But we are going further than that on this occasion. I want to ensure that this commission shall have as its basis of responsibility the best suggestions that the house can offer, and I am waiting to hear the hon. gentleman place before us what he thinks should be included in those terms of reference. It would be very helpful, I am sure.

Mr. Winch: Thank you very much. I am sorry the hon. gentleman was not here this afternoon when I spoke for 20 minutes on that very subject, namely what should be included in the proposed study. I said that it was not just a matter of freight rates but that it was a matter of national policy; that there was a need for a complete analysis of both passenger and freight transportation in the light of the position of one province as compared with another. The power to be given to the commission under the terms of reference to be announced by the hon. gentleman himself, because the Minister of Transport could not do this, should include authority for a complete study enabling the commission to make recommendations with regard to a national transportation policy. I am certain that the Prime Minister when he spoke just now did not know that I spoke for 20 minutes on this subject this afternoon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I read everything that takes place in this house. I read Hansard most carefully and I know that I will peruse every word and every suggestion made by the hon. gentleman with the greatest care.

Mr. Argue: We have seen a complete metamorphosis as far as the Prime Minister is concerned. When the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works sat in opposition they castigated the then government for allowing one increase in freight rates after another. They did not regard as an acceptable policy of the government an escape by way of a royal commission. Oh, what a different attitude we find now as compared with the attitude which was taken before 1957. Then, the freight increases were not going to take place. There was an interim increase of 3.6 per cent; the government, before the 1958 election, stepped in and said this increase would not be allowed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am glad of the opportunity—

Mr. Argue: I have the floor.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege. That statement is completely inaccurate. During the election campaign no reference was made to the matter; no decision was made, and it was only after the election campaign that a decision was taken, when it could in no way affect the voting in this country.

Mr. Argue: I am sure I do not know what the Prime Minister is contradicting. All I said was that when he was in opposition he was very much opposed to increases in freight rates but that following the 1957 election when a 3.6 per cent increase in freight rates was awarded by the board of transport commissioners the government stepped in and said: this increase will not be allowed. That was before the 1958 election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was not so. If the hon. gentleman is not paying greater attention to verity than he is in that statement, then I can only weigh the rest of his statement with the sense of responsibility which he exhibits.

Mr. Argue: That is not a very profound statement from the Prime Minister. He is losing his temper now. A few moments ago he was very careful. He was glad—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Argue: I have the floor and I claim my right to the floor.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege, and I want to clarify this. The hon. gentleman keeps repeating that the decision was made prior to the election. That statement is not in accordance either with fact or truth.

Mr. Argue: My statement was that the 3.6 per cent award was made, the judgment was made before the 1958 election. I do not think there is anything to deny in that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not the decision.

Mr. Argue: Not the decision to disallow it; that was made shortly thereafter. But that was the policy of the government before the election. That was the policy which was brought about by this decision taken to disallow the 3.6 per cent increase in freight rates. But that is a policy far different from the policy to be followed now, if, indeed, it is worthy of the name of a policy, namely that an increase of 17 per cent in freight rates is first to be allowed and then at some later date the Minister of Transport brings in a motion to provide a subsidy to the railways to roll back the 17 per cent to 10 per cent. We still have at this very moment a 10 per cent horizontal increase in freight rates which is adding to the great burden of discriminatory freight rates in this country against which the Minister of Public Works complained so effectively and so frequently while he was in opposition.

Mr. Green: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Does he believe that the wage increases should not have been allowed?

Mr. Argue: I will tell the Minister of Public Works that it is a mistake for either this government or the board of transport commissioners to tie together recommendations of a conciliation board and awards of the board of transport commissioners. No increase in freight rates should automatically result from an increase in wages. The position taken by the Minister of Transport and by this government is, apparently, that if there is an increase in wages an open and shut case is provided for the board of transport commissioners to grant a corresponding increase in freight rates. That is not the position I take. The position I take is that the board of transport commissioners should at all times look at each and every application on its merit and should not postpone its decision until some other board has made a decision or until the cabinet has decided what action to take.

It is up to the board of transport commissioners to consider each request on its merits. Eight provinces came before this government. The Prime Minister can correct me if I am wrong but I believe they came not to complain about the increase in wages but to ask that the 17 per cent freight rate increase be disallowed. The government got into so much trouble with eight of the provinces that it has decided on this half-measure as a method of quieting the provinces and calming the people of the country.

Apparently we have in embryo a royal commission. I have been trying to find out if the order in council has been passed setting up the royal commission. The Minister of Transport under whose department this legislation comes apparently is not going to make the announcement but he has prepared the way for the announcement that is to come later. He hinted in the house that an announcement would be made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I did not hint at all. I definitely stated that there would be an announcement made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Argue: Not about the royal commission. You did not say that.

Mr. Hees: Yes I did, today.

Mr. Argue: It took considerable effort on the part of the opposition to find out if there would be a royal commission or some other body appointed. The Minister of Transport did not make that too clear. The hon. member for Laurier asked him a question to this effect on March 24 and as reported at page 2208 of Hansard of that date, the Minister of Transport replied:

> I might answer the hon. member for Laurier on that point now, Mr. Chairman. A much longer, long term inquiry is under very active consideration by the government at the present time and I expect that in the very near future the Prime Minister will be making the kind of announcement to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. Hees: Well?

Mr. Argue: Well, there was no reference in the words of the minister to a royal commission.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member has reached the stage where he is so naive that he cannot read into that statement that in all probability the announcement of a royal commission was going to be made then he is not as smart as I know he is.

Mr. Argue: But, Mr. Chairman, with this government I have learned that you have to find out precisely what is meant and then you have to watch hon. members of the government very carefully to see that they do not sneak away from what they have said. The minister did not use the term "royal commission". He implied it, and that is exactly what I said earlier when the minister started bobbing up and down in his seat. We had no announcement in the house and then, according to the press, the Prime Minister during the Easter recess announced that a royal commission would be appointed shortly. An article by Harvey Hickey in the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 3, reads in part:

> A royal commission will be appointed shortly to examine the whole structure of railway freight rates, Prime Minister Diefenbaker announced today.

Parliament was not in session. According to this press report the Prime Minister made the announcement during the Easter recess. We are now attempting to ascertain the terms under which the royal commission will operate. We have met with no success. We have been told that we will have an opportunity to discuss this question. We have not been told whether it would be in order but the government agreed it would make the announcement so parliament would have a chance to have the order in council before it when hon. members were in committee upon the bill that is to follow this resolution. In other words, it will be before us when we are in committee on another matter. At that time if the chairman should rise and say we cannot discuss the terms of reference of the royal commission because we have to stick to the clauses of the bill, will there be anyone to say that the chairman is not correct?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. member knows he could not be more out of order than he is at the moment in discussing a royal commission on this resolution?

Mr. Argue: Well, is that not a brilliant comment from the Minister of National Revenue?

Mr. Nowlan: It may not be brilliant but it is perfectly true.

Mr. Argue: I do not know if the minister was in the house on the orders of the day—

Mr. Nowlan: He was.

Mr. Argue: —but if he was he would know that Mr. Speaker said the place to discuss the question of the royal commission was at this very point and because of Mr. Speaker's suggestion we have been discussing it.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the hon. member then afraid that the Speaker later on will rule him out of order?

Mr. Argue: That is not quite the ground that the minister raised just a moment ago when he accused me of being out of order. My point is that I am in order because the Speaker said we would be in order. The Speaker has not said he would allow a discussion at a later date which might be ruled out of order.

The Minister of National Revenue should know that the Prime Minister has been discussing this very question. The Prime Minister has been alluding to a royal commission. He said a royal commission would be set up but apparently its terms have not been decided upon. I should like to know if the order in council has been passed. First it was hinted that there would be a royal commission appointed and then an announcement was made during the Easter recess but now we are told it has not been set up. The announcement has been made but the government is looking to the opposition to tell it what the terms of reference should be. The government has been floundering for a long time and well they might seek our advice.

My advice to the government is first of all that it does not need a royal commission. There have been enough royal commissions on this subject. All the government needs to do at this time as far as further increases in freight rates are concerned is to continue the position it took not many months ago that there should be no further increases in freight rates.

I suggest that the government give consideration to amending this resolution. It is possible to amend it provided a cabinet minister other than the Minister of Transport moves the amendment and provided there is a seconder. I suggest it should be amended to provide a subsidy that would roll back the total 17 per cent freight rate increase so there would be no increase at all and particularly in view of the fact the government disallowed the 3.6 per cent increase. That would be much better than this wishy-washy, catch-as-catch-can policy the government is now trying to get away with. The Prime Minister needs help on what the royal commission should be inquiring into and with respect to what it should do. I do not agree that a royal commission is necessary but if that is the policy of the government I suggest the first instruction to be given the royal commission to bring in recommendations that will prevent further increases in freight rates. That is the first thing that should be provided in the terms of reference in the royal commission.

The second instruction given the royal commission should be to bring in suggestions as to how equitable freight rates can be provided in this country. Those are things the commission should be doing, if there must be one at all. It should also be instructed to examine into the balance sheet of the Canadian Pacific railway to see how this railway has shown low profits on its railway operations when it is in fact making all kinds of profits on its other operations.

I suggest to the Prime Minister that the terms of reference should include the matter of the board of transport commissioners considering all of the profits of the Canadian Pacific railway and not just those profits earned from railway operations. The Canadian Pacific railway is a mammoth corporation with many departments. It pretends to show need as far as its railway operations are concerned but it has very large profits in several fields.

I have in my hand its 1958 annual report and on page 25 there is a statement of "other income". With regard to net earnings from steamships there was a loss of $1,212,571 in that year. Net earnings from hotel, communication and other properties amounted to $481,393. Dividends amounted to $7,943,339. The next item is net income from petroleum rents, royalties, reservation fees and land rents. There is a very large profit of $6,828,-123 resulting from land granted to the C.P.R. from the public domain many years ago. Net income from interest amounted to $3,808,428, and the sub-total is $17,848,712. There are the profits of the C.P.R. other than the profits that have been made from railway operations. These are things that should be considered in any inquiry.

Then, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver East, we feel that a royal commission should give consideration to a national transportation policy to serve the needs of the Canadian people. It should consider the efficient operation of the railways and the provision of adequate services. It should discontinue the policy of taking only the railway operations of the C.P.R. as the yardstick in establishing freight rates in this country.

We have had many royal commissions in this connection in the past. We do not need another one today. We need action by the government, action to roll back increases in freight rates, action to prevent further discrimination through horizontal increases in the future. The government should be enunciating its policy and program instead of bringing forward this temporary measure which may provide very little by way of alleviation to the Canadian public.

I do not think this point has been clarified yet and I should like to ask the Minister of Transport or the Prime Minister to say whether or not it is the policy of the government to prevent further increases in freight rates until such time as the report of the royal commission is in the hands of the government. That, at any rate, would be some progress.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member had been in the house and had paid attention or had read Hansard he would know that in the statement I made at the opening of this debate I said, as found on page 2208 of Hansard:

> As hon. members know, the government has indicated its intention of proceeding with a comprehensive inquiry into matters affecting the railways. The proposed legislation therefore limits the assistance to a 12-month period, when it is hoped a report will be available to the government. Consideration will then be given to means of further relieving the unfair discriminatory burden of the freight rate structure. In the meantime the government does not propose to permit any further general increases in railway freight rates.

I do not think I can spell it out any more clearly than that.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, the minister used the word "hope". He hopes that a report will be available within a 12-month period.

Mr. Hees: That is right.

Mr. Argue: If the report should not be available within a 12-month period, does the minister's position still stand, namely that for any additional period until the royal commission reports there will be no further increases in freight rates? My question is very specific. It is not tied to a 12-month period or a 10-month period or a 14-month period. Is it the intention of the government to prevent further increases in freight rates between now and the time the report of the royal commission in question is placed in the hands of the government?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the government is dealing with this matter 12 months at a time. If at the end of that 12 months it is obvious that it will not be possible to receive the report then it is obvious that the government will have to give this matter further and very serious consideration, and that the government will do. In the meantime we intend to proceed along the lines I have outlined.

Mr. Argue: I do not think that answer is particularly satisfactory because it shows that unless the government has some club that will force this royal commission to report within a 12-month period the people of the country have no assurance that after that 12-month period and before the royal commission may make a report there will not be further horizontal increases in freight rates. I know one can take it from the statement of the hopes of the minister that the royal commission may report within a 12-month period, in which case the people of the country will be saved during that time from further horizontal increases in freight rates but there is no guarantee that there will not be further increases after the 12-month period if the royal commission report has not been made by that time.

Mr. Hees: And I feel sure that if the government gave an assurance for two years the hon. member and his colleagues would ask for five. If the assurance was for five, they would want 10 and if it was for 10 they would want 20 and so on. You cannot please them.

Mr. Chevrier: May I have another word in connection with the invitation extended by the Prime Minister with reference to suggestions? I do so with great timidity because I know this is a matter of extreme importance but a number of things come to my mind now and I give them to the house, to the government and to the Prime Minister for what they are worth. In the first place, we have already had an excellent royal commission on transportation, and if I remember what the Prime Minister said when he was on this side of the house I think he was very happy when the announcement was made of the personnel of that commission. I think he was also very happy about the recommendations brought down by the Turgeon commission. Be that as it may, there is no doubt that the inquiry conducted by that royal commission with respect to the freight rate structure was one of the most exhaustive that has ever taken place. Therefore, first of all I think that the royal commission to be established should not be asked to go over the same ground covered by the former commission unless there are matters which have intervened between the 1951 report and the position as it obtains today, which need inquiry.

I also think that the royal commission might well give some consideration to a subject which has been discussed in the house so often, namely the impact of horizontal increases on the extremities of our country, on the maritime provinces, on the prairie provinces and on British Columbia. The Prime Minister will remember that when he was on this side of the house he complained very bitterly, and perhaps rightly so, about the impact of horizontal increases. The 17 per cent case has had a very serious effect so far as horizontal increases are concerned. In other words, that judgment has pointed up the discrimination horizontal increases create in the case of the eastern and western provinces. The 7 per cent reduction is simply an alleviation of that difficulty, but not a solution; and therefore I think this is another matter to which the commission might give consideration.

But perhaps the most important matter that I think should be considered is a long term and short term policy for the railways of this country. I am sure that the Minister of Transport and the government do not have the time to deal with matters of this kind. It seems to me that the commission might well be given, as one of its terms of reference, the consideration of the long and short term policy for the railways of Canada.

With reference to the short term policy I can give to the house four matters which might well be considered. The first is this: The railways have always maintained that some passenger services are an unprofitable operation. Should these services be curtailed or should they not? There is no doubt that some of these services should not. Whether or not the commission should be entrusted with consideration of matters of that kind is, of course, for the government to determine. However, it seems to me that since the railways complain so often, not only in statements by the presidents of both railways but in statements before the board of transport commissioners, that some of these are unprofitable operations then perhaps this is a matter which the commission should be considering.

Then, there is the question of the branch lines of the railways. Are unprofitable branch lines to be maintained? There are some branch lines that must of necessity be maintained. There are, I know, in the Canadian National Railways branch lines that are unprofitable. Are they to be continued at the expense of the ratepayer who will, in effect, because of these pay increased freight rates?

There is also the all important question of the dieselization of the railways. Should railways be completely dieselized or should they not? This is an extremely important matter. Again there is a new factor that has come into railway operation recently and that is the piggy-back rates. Should they be maintained? Should the railways be allowed to fully exploit these rates?

There is another matter which I refer to the government and it is a matter which is of particular interest to the western provinces, but more particularly to the province of Alberta than to any other province. I refer to the one and one-third rule. The Prime Minister will recall that the Turgeon commission made a recommendation concerning the one and one-third rule for intermediate territory and that recommendation of the royal commission was implemented by an amendment to the Railway Act. Unfortunately, however, because of a judgment handed down by the board of transport commissioners the one and one-third rule is practically inapplicable today. It has no force. While it did apply it was, I am told, of tremendous benefit to the intermediate territory, that is the territory to which transcontinental rates do not apply. This is a matter which the royal commission might well consider, as to whether or not it is possible to implement the one and one-third rule and give the benefit to Alberta and intermediate territory which was envisaged by the Turgeon commission.

Mr. Winch: Is it not now in operation?

Mr. Chevrier: It is in the Railway Act, but unfortunately because of a judgment which the board of transport commissioners handed down in the cast iron pipe case it is, I am informed, no longer operative. I think that is a matter to which the commission might well give consideration.

I do not want to delay this measure any longer. I conclude simply by saying that these are matters that refer to the short term policy of the railways. There is something far more important and that is the long term policies of the railways. I would not attempt to deal with them because that is a matter for the experts. I think that if a royal commission is going to be established that is another matter which should be considered.

If I may, and if the Prime Minister will allow me, I should like to refer to the discussion which took place a moment ago. There were some very pertinent statements made by the Prime Minister dealing with freight rates. I should like to bring them to his attention and ask him if he will comment on them. When he was in Saskatoon on February 13, 1958, here is what he had to say with regard to freight rates:

> Mr. Diefenbaker said that last year he had criticized general railway freight rate increases as being unfair to the western provinces.
> "Did we act?" The government had "help up" a 3.8 per cent railway freight rate increase allowed by the board of transport commissioners earlier this year.
> "We said it could not at this time be justifiably brought into existence".

Then, later on, according to a Canadian press report from Windsor, the Prime Minister is reported as stating:

> On freight rates, Mr. Diefenbaker spelled out for the first time his government's apparent intention on the increase granted in January by the board of transport commissioners.
> "We said before we were in power that freight rates were unjustifiably high when raised horizontally", he said.
> "Did we act? When the board allowed an increase, we held it up because it couldn't be justifiably brought into existence on the basis the increase was provided."

Those two statements were made in February of 1958 and that, of course, was before the March election. I bring them to the attention of the committee. My purpose in rising was not so much to do this as to make suggestions, which are given in all modesty and which I know do not begin to deal with the all important problem. They are given for what they are worth, and in an effort to be constructive.

Mr. Winch: I only rise to make one statement. A few minutes ago the Prime Minister and I engaged in a little crossfire which we both appreciated. At that time he said that since the terms of reference are not yet drawn he would appreciate any information or suggestions concerning the terms of reference. I told the Prime Minister that I had expressed my thoughts in connection with a number of matters this afternoon.

There is one more thing to which I should like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister and which I think is of some importance in connection with freight rates. This afternoon mention was made of the competition between the railways and the truckers. I believe that it would be interesting if any commission appointed by the Prime Minister were to have the power to investigate what the truckers get and what the railways get, and to ascertain how many of the major trucking lines in Canada are owned by the railways. It would be interesting to find out just what this camouflage is. I know it exists because of the information which I receive in my office from certain truckers' associations. I know that the majority of these truckers are owned by the railroads, and it might be interesting if the commission were to study the competition between the railroads and the trucking lines, and the trucking lines that are owned by the railroads.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a question of the hon. gentleman for information? He says he believes that the majority of the trucking firms are owned by the railways—

Mr. Winch: I said that some of the major trucking lines are owned by the railroads. In British Columbia you will find that is particularly true, and last year one of the biggest trucking companies in Canada was bought by the railroad. In spite of this these truckers, in their association, raise cain about the freight rates set by the railroads when they are themselves owned by the railroads.

Mr. Fisher: It was very sweet of the Prime Minister to come in and give the debate a bit of focus which it was not getting from the Minister of Transport. He asked us to offer suggestions. One of the first ones we have to offer—and it is not so much a suggestion as a conclusion that I would draw—is that in one year you are not going to get a decent royal commission report on a topic of this size unless you instruct the royal commission to go away for six months into retreat and to plow through the information that is available from the previous commission and also from the hearings that have taken place before the board of transport commissioners.

The fundamental problem in our whole railway policy, according to Mr. Currie who has prepared the longest, most detailed and most difficult book on it, is this. He boiled it down. As he said, it could be expressed in one sentence. It was that Canadians had never made up their minds whether they wanted their transportation policy to be socialistic or free enterprise. In other words, we have never made up our minds whether we are going to be for subsidization all the way across the board wherever possible or whether the railways are expected to operate as business units.

It seems to me that if you are going to charge a royal commission with the investigation of the railways there is a real starting point, namely should the royal commission not advise us as to whether the railways are supposed to operate as business organizations or whether they are institutions operating in the public interest and so the question of profit does not enter into it at all. This sort of hybrid arrangement that we have at the present time with the Canadian Pacific Railway supposedly operating as a free enterprise concern and the Canadian National Railways operating as a government concern needs resolving. That is what the royal commission really should do. It certainly cannot do it in one year, and thresh out a policy like this. That is why the whole idea of this being an interim measure and that we are going to get some magic report is rather nonsense. The very number of people who will want to appear before this royal commission when it has hearings I think is an indication that it is going to take more than a year.

The minister said earlier that it took from 15 years to maybe 30 years to begin to appreciate and understand freight rates. I am wondering where we are going to get for this royal commission the personnel with that kind of experience. The only place that I know of where you can get it is from the board of transport commissioners. As they are already constituted, why not let them handle this particular job?

One of the things the hon. member for Laurier mentioned that the commission should investigate fits into this picture of free enterprise or socialism, namely this question of non-productive lines. You get some really stupid examples. We had one in our region where the C.P.R. ran a railway into Manitouwadge from the south and the C.N.R. ran one in from the north. There is not enough traffic to keep either one going on a really prosperous basis. This is something that happened recently, within the last three or four years. It is a typical example of mismanagement or poor planning or something like that. However, somebody is stuck with the result and I have a hunch that it is the people of Canada.

I think one of the decisions that really needs to be made very firmly by this royal commission is what is to be done about non-productive lines. Do we go along with them or do we not? As the minister knows, every time there is a suggestion of reduction in service, howls go up. I know that I happen to have more railway division points in my constituency than has anybody else in Canada. I have six of them. Last year when the Canadian National Railways was taking off one of its transcontinental trains a tremendous uproar went up and as a result of the uproar the Canadian National Railways reversed its decision. The decision must have been reversed because it was in the public interest. Here is a typical example of public interest determining something that the president of the C.N.R. had said was uneconomic. Hence essential to this whole problem of the commission in its terms of reference and what it is going to decide is the decision whether we are going to have a national transportation policy based upon the general interest of the country or whether we are going to go on with this half and half system, of pseudo free enterprise and pseudo socialism. I hope that the terms of reference will be such that the royal commission can come up with some real answers.

The hon. member for Laurier mentioned another aspect, as did the hon. member for Vancouver East, namely that the study has to be more than just a study of railway freight rates. The largest pressure groups in this whole field of freight rates or the most vocal and vociferous ones are the ones in relation to trucking. There is also the question of the international aspect of rates and the water rates with the water shippers that need to be studied closely. In other words, from railway freight rates you immediately branch out into all forms of transportation. You cannot consider freight rates without looking at passenger tariffs because they are indivisible in terms of the service that is being provided, since trains have to run over the same rails and the same provisions for one kind of service are used in another. I therefore suggest that the terms of reference should be extremely broad and that the commission should be encouraged to bring in a complete report setting out a national transportation policy for the government and for the people of Canada, not for five years nor for ten years but for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask one question of the minister. First I should say that there are now two applications before the board of transport commissioners, one for an additional 15 per cent by the railways which the minister said would be held up and another for commuter rates. I am just wondering whether the statement the minister made in his first speech before the Easter recess, namely that there would be no increase in freight rates, covered the application for commuter rates as well.

Mr. Hees: I was talking about a general freight rate increase.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just clarify that matter? The application with regard to commuter rates is a general application. Does the minister mean that his answer does not apply to the commuter application?

Mr. Hees: That is correct.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hees thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Mr. Hees: Now.

Mr. Speaker: By leave now?

Mr. Hees: Now.

Mr. Chevrier: Next sitting.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have some remarks to make on the second reading. From the leader of the house I understood last night that this matter would be put over for discussion until another day.

Mr. Argue: Next sitting.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not wish to delay it unduly but I think there are things which could not be said on the resolution but which might preferably be said on the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be read the second time at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Canada Shipping Act

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MORTGAGES, CERTIFICATES, PILOTS, ETC.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendments proposed by this bill are for the most part of a technical nature and many of the clauses represent merely a clarification in wording or a tidying up of existing legislation. Since there will be ample opportunity to discuss these technical details in the committee to which this bill will be referred I will not go into detail on them at the present time. They cover such matters as registration of mortgages on vessels, definition of international voyages and of minor waters, certification of officers and engineers, inspection requirements, and so on. Apart from this the principal clauses in the bill deal with the certain aspects of marine pilotage.

For some years officials of the Department of External Affairs have represented to us that the existing section 346, which provides exemptions from the compulsory payment of pilotage dues, is discriminatory against foreign flag ships in that the exemptions apply only to ships registered in Her Majesty's dominions. Such discrimination is contrary to the provision of a number of treaties in force between Canada and other states, such as the United States, dealing with navigation matters. With the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway and the expected extension of the great lakes trade to the gulf of St. Lawrence this point will assume considerable importance. Our treaty obligations require that we be in a position to accord to the ships of the other nations with whom we have these treaties the same kind of treatment as we give to British ships that may be engaged in the same trade, but the present section 346 does not permit exemption to be granted to any ships but those under the British flag. A proposed amendment will correct this situation.

Perhaps it would be well at this time, Mr. Speaker, for me to say an additional word of explanation concerning this matter of compulsory payment of pilotage dues. There is at present no compulsory pilotage in Canada. The view has been held that the master of a ship must be responsible for the safety of his ship, and the decision must rest with him as to whether or not he requires local assistance in navigating narrow waters. The Canada Shipping Act in section 340 is quite specific on this point.

When a district has been declared by the governor in council to be one in which the payment of pilotage dues is compulsory, certain exemptions apply covering naval ships, government ships, fishing vessels and other small vessels, and ships regularly employed in the domestic trade. However, certain of the exemptions made under the provisions of section 346 may be withdrawn by the pilotage authority of the district by bylaw approved by the governor in council.

We also feel that it should be within the power of the pilotage authority, with the approval of the governor in council, to adjust or add to these exemptions according to the changing times. That is, we believe that just as the government has power now to withdraw exemptions power should also exist to add to the exemptions. This would, however, be done only if a master or mate possessed full confidence and experience to navigate in a pilotage district without the help of a pilot. Only the pilotage authority is in a position to reconcile the sometimes apparently conflicting interests of the pilots and their employers who are the masters or owners of the ships they serve.

The other pilotage amendment covered in clause 10 of the bill is a different matter. It provides for a new part VIA under the heading "Great Lakes Pilotage", and I would ask hon. members when considering this part of the bill to separate it completely from the provisions of part VI of the act. There has never been a pilotage district west of Kingston, Ontario on the great lakes. The masters and officers of the regular lake vessels are, of course, familiar with the waters which they ply, and when the occasional ocean vessel entered the great lakes it was the practice for the master to employ a man who, to distinguish him from the licensed pilots in the St. Lawrence, was referred to as a "sailing master". These sailing masters remained on the ocean ships throughout their voyages on the great lakes and assisted the foreign masters through the narrow channels and in the entrances to the ports. The sailing masters took their rest while the ships were on the open waters of the lakes.

It is obvious that whatever arrangement is made for pilotage on the great lakes should be a reciprocal one as between Canada and the United States, and we have held a number of discussions with the United States authorities on this subject. We do not as yet, however, know the exact form of any legislative action they may take in this regard. However, our sections dealing with pilotage on the great lakes are so designated as to permit us to proceed independently, or to fit in virtually with any scheme which the United States authorities may develop, and also provide for reciprocity with the United States in recognition of pilots' licences or certificates either government may issue. Our basic approach is that within restricted waters which will be defined by the governor in council full pilotage should be required, while elsewhere on the open waters we should at least be satisfied that the ship is carrying a navigating officer or officers fully competent to handle the ship in the open waters.

To summarize the proposed part VIA, it is intended as enabling legislation to empower the governor in council, at a time and to such degree as may be deemed expedient, to require the employment of local pilots by ocean vessels when in the restricted waters of the great lakes; also to take the necessary steps to ensure that every ocean vessel has on board officers who know the rules of the road for the great lakes and can speak English sufficiently to use the radio-telephone.

The only other clause of the bill still to be mentioned is clause 9, which provides that a pilot licensed by the United States authorities for waters forming part of the boundary waters is not committing an offence when he takes his ship across the boundary line. The need for this is obvious when one considers that Canadian pilots must cross and re-cross the boundary line when taking ships up and down the St. Lawrence.

At the conclusion of second reading it is my intention to move that this bill be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines for more detailed examination.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the house I am sure will welcome the statement which the hon. minister has made with reference to the second reading of an act to amend the Canada Shipping Act. There are in this bill some sections which are entirely innocuous. There are other sections, on the other hand, which are contentious, and I would like to direct my attention to those sections of the bill which it seems to me are of a very serious nature. I am prompted to say that these sections should not be passed without the most serious consideration. There are several sections that I consider contentious and to which I know the house and the committee will want to give the most careful and serious consideration. These sections the hon. minister has already referred to in general, and I shall not deal with them specifically until I come to them.

In the first place, the question that comes to my mind is this. Why is this legislation necessary? The hon. minister in his statement has given no reason why this legislation should be passed at this time. I presume that the bill is brought down because of the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway, which will take place some time next month. But while that is the pretext I think the main reason for this legislation is the insistence of the United States to enact this measure.

It seems to me that we should not be asked to pass this kind of legislation until we know what the legislation in the United States congress is going to be. Last year there was a bill brought before congress; it did not go through. We know what the nature of that bill is; I have a copy of it here in my file. But the bill which is now before the United States congress, even if it does goes through all of its stages, cannot possibly be passed until October or November of this year. So I ask the question: Are we being asked to pass this kind of legislation before we know what the concurrent legislation on the other side is likely to be? The minister a moment ago used the expression "reciprocal legislation". Well, this is not reciprocal legislation. It is unilateral legislation. It cannot be reciprocal legislation until the two parties have agreed to what they want in the legislation.

Mr. Winch: And they have not agreed.

Mr. Chevrier: And they have not agreed, as the hon. member says. I say respectfully to the minister and to the house that we should not be asked to pass legislation of this kind until an agreement has been reached with our friends on the other side, because we are going to be at a tremendous disadvantage if this legislation is put through unilaterally as I consider it.

Now I come to another question: why is this legislation required? I can see no reason why such legislation as this should be required at this time. It may be necessary in 12 months time; it may be necessary at another date, but it is certainly not necessary now, and the proof of this contention is that there have been any number of ships—deep draft vessels, perhaps not ships drawing 25½ feet of water, but certainly ocean trampers—which have been going up to the head of the lakes and passing through the St. Lawrence without the necessity of this kind of legislation. This has been going on now since 1947, and according to the evidence which was given in the other place, one pilot stated there were as many as 744 voyages made, I believe, in 1958. This was done by virtue of the present sections of the Canada Shipping Act, and under the appropriate sections of that act, without regard to the bill which is now before us. There is in the act all the power and all the force necessary to deal with the situation which might arise because of the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway. So I ask again: Why should this bill be enacted at the present time.

The next question which comes to my mind is this: Who is asking for this legislation? The St. Lawrence seaway authority does not want it; the St. Lawrence seaway development corporation, which is the United States entity, does not want it; the state department in the United States does not want it; the department of commerce in the United States does not want it. But the United States coastguard wants it. I am almost prepared to go a step further and say that I believe the officials of the Department of Transport deep down in their hearts do not want this legislation either. What has happened is that the coastguard service has put it into their minds that it must have this legislation, and before even it is passed in the congress of the United States they come and ask us to enact a measure of this kind.

I say, with respect to the house, that we should not be asked to pass this sort of legislation because it is not enough to be told—and I say this with respect—by a foreign power that this is necessary. And in effect that is what is happening; the Department of Transport is being pushed around, and the Canadian government is being pushed around at this moment by the demand for the implementation of this bill. We should know why this legislation is required. As it is now, the bill before the congress of the United States provides for certain features which are not acceptable to Canada, and if they are not acceptable to Canada, how do we know that this type of legislation will not affect us in some way or another, and that it may not affect us detrimentally.

How did the minister proceed when he decided, for instance, to implement tolls? There was a section in the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act which clearly said that the St. Lawrence seaway authority could establish tolls either by itself or concurrently with the United States. What happened was that the seaway authority set up a tolls committee jointly with the seaway development corporation. It was the tolls committee which made an agreement, and the minister came to this house and asked the house to approve the agreement which had been made by the two countries. That, I submit, is the way in which the minister should have proceeded in this case and there could be no complaint about that because it would be an agreement made between Canada on the one side and the United States on the other and implemented by parliament.

Why do we not proceed in the same manner in this instance? After all, pilotage is important. Pilotage is as important as tolls, and tolls are as important as pilotage. Why is there not a committee composed of a group of three Canadians and a group of three Americans to determine questions of pilotage in the international section of the river, that is to say from St. Regis to the head of the lakes? If we had such a committee, and if an agreement were consummated, we could implement it by way of legislation. But there is no agreement. All we know is that there is a bill before congress, and that this bill, as I have said, may have serious implications for us. I submit once again we should not be asked to pass this legislation until we see the United States legislation and know what it is going to be. What harm will be done if we carry on for another year in the same way as we did in 1958 when 744 voyages were made from the great lakes and the St. Lawrence to ports overseas?

There is another point which comes to my mind and it is one which has not been cleared up yet. It is this: is this legislation valid? I have grave doubts about the validity of this legislation. I may be quite wrong, but I know that there are a number of prominent lawyers who share this view, namely that legislation of this kind cannot and should not be implemented by parliament unless based upon agreement, as I said earlier, or upon a treaty. There should be a treaty or an agreement covering pilotage in international waters. This should be brought before the house and the subject of the agreement or treaty should be implemented by legislation. Even if legislation were required, which I doubt and which I deny, then I say that this is not the method we should use—the passing of legislation which the minister has called reciprocal or concurrent but which, really, is unilateral legislation. In my opinion the course of action to be followed is quite clear—and this is what I said earlier—namely that Canada and the United States should come to an agreement on the subject and that it should be implemented by this house.

What is this going to mean with reference to costs? This is an important matter. There was some discussion earlier about the costs which the seaway is going to bring about and, of course, I now speak of costs in the sense of tolls only. Does the house know that if it is considered by some that tolls on the seaway are high the pilotage which is going to be brought about by this legislation is going to be even higher than the costs brought about by tolls on the seaway, so that if there are elements in Canada or elsewhere that think the tolls on the seaway are high, because of this legislation the costs will be greatly increased.

We must be careful not to play into the hands of the opponents of the St. Lawrence seaway. There have been groups outside of this country that have opposed the St. Lawrence seaway down through the years. When they were finally defeated in the congress of their own country and saw that there was no hope in stopping the seaway they then proceeded to carry on a fight to make the tolls on the seaway so high that they would be prohibitive and make it impossible to move traffic competitively and as well succeed in amortizing the costs of the seaway.

I am afraid that if we pass this legislation without knowing more about its consequences we will be playing into the hands of the opponents of the seaway. These people have but one thing in mind. They have continued by intense lobbying both in the United States and indirectly in this country in favour of high costs for ships moving up and down the St. Lawrence and the great lakes.

I repeat that we do not need this legislation at this time. I suggest instead that there should be a complete overhaul of the Canada Shipping Act with a study of the matters that are dealt with in this legislation. I know what the minister will be prompted to say. He will likely ask, "Why did you not do it when you were on this side of the house?" I will admit at once that perhaps I should have. Possibly I did not realize in the early days when I was on the other side of the house how important this statute was. This is one of the most important statutes to have been passed by this parliament, but it is outmoded and outdated and should be modernized and brought up to date by means of a commission. But over and above modernizing the statute the commission should consider the question of pilotage and the other matters that are under discussion in this legislation. It seems to me that a commission could be very rapidly established. I could suggest names to the minister for that purpose and I know he would consider them very carefully although perhaps not act upon them. Be that as it may, I think there should be a further study of the Canada Shipping Act and of this legislation before we are asked to give these amendments our approval.

There exist now in this act, as I intend to prove, all the sections and powers that the governor in council or the minister need to deal with this situation, to accomplish everything the minister seeks to accomplish without the necessity of this amendment. I appreciate that that is a far-sweeping statement but I believe I shall be able to establish the validity of it as I go along.

The powers to which I have referred are to be found in many sections of the act but particularly in sections 323 to 329. If the minister will not accede to my request and consider that the time is not yet ripe for this legislation, then I ask him to give consideration to the suggestion that any legislation at this time having to do with the Canada Shipping Act, in the light of what has transpired on the St. Lawrence and the great lakes, should seek to ensure that all advantages be gained by the opening of the seaway. Any legislation at this time should make sure that neither ocean shipping or domestic shipping will be injuriously affected by what is now before the house.

As I said earlier, the legislation arises out of the insistence of the United States authorities to pass a pilotage bill before congress which may well be detrimental to Canadian interests. It appears that the United States authorities and particularly the coastguard want a law that will make pilotage compulsory on the great lakes for ocean vessels other than Canadian or United States vessels by forcing such vessels to carry an additional officer to the normal complement without by proper enabling legislation creating the machinery which would provide the pilotage service required under the bill, a service which where needed, namely in restricted waters, would only be acceptable and satisfactory if it were government controlled and apt to provide the development of a sufficient pool of trained pilots for these restricted areas where pilotage is necessary for the safety of navigation.

What is important, arising out of the development of the St. Lawrence seaway, is the safety of navigation. That is paramount it seems to me and unless we keep that in mind continually we might well get ourselves into serious difficulties. The government should oppose this legislation and by "this legislation" I mean the legislation that is now before congress. It should oppose the legislation and protect itself under its own laws as they are now in existence by setting up pilotage authorities in these restricted waters. It should try to convince the United States authorities that the Canadian system of pilotage provides a suitable pattern on which the United States government could rely to pass enabling legislation providing for the organization of a similar system in the United States which would permit joint administration of pilotage in the restricted waters of the great lakes.

I come back again to the idea of joint administration and concurrent administration just as there is with reference to tolls. If this were found possible with reference to tolls by means of a committee composed of three Canadians and three Americans, surely the same attitude, the same method and the same procedure could be found possible with reference to pilotage. I have no doubt that if the government pursued it in that light, there could be no difficulty whatsoever. The most serious and flagrant danger of this bill is the one that is contained in clause 8 with which I shall deal on another occasion.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it 10 o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the leader of the house what the business will be for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall commence with item No. 5 on today's order paper, the second reading of the bill concerning the appointment of parliamentary secretaries; then continue the debate on the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act; and then take the second reading of the bill concerning freight rates.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

INDIAN AFFAIRS—HOSPITAL COSTS

Question No. 198—Mr. Benidickson:

1. What was the national average cost per resident patient day for operating the federal government Indian hospitals in the fiscal year (a) 1956-57; (b) 1957-58?

2. What was the national average cost per resident patient day for operating (1) the Sioux Lookout Indian hospital; (2) the Lac Seul nursing station; (3) the Pikangikum nursing station, in the fiscal year (a) 1956-57; (b) 1957-58?

3. What amount is paid currently for treatment of Indian patients if admitted to the community hospitals at: Kenora (General and St. Joseph's), Dryden, Sioux Lookout, Red Lake, Cochenour, Atikokan, Fort Frances, Emo, Rainy River?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Average patient day cost of all Indian and northern health services hospitals:—1956-57, $8.57; 1957-58, $8.95.

2. (1) Average patient day cost Sioux Lookout indian hospital:—1956-57, $8.43; 1957-58, $9.41.

2. (2) and (3) Lac Seul and Pikangikum nursing stations are not hospitals; hence costs cannot properly be calculated on a patient day basis. The bulk of operating costs are attributable to public health work. The actual costs of these two nursing stations were as follows:—

	1956-57	1957-58
Lac Seul	$13,095	$12,185
Pikangikum	11,566	7,787

3. Current hospital rates are set by the Ontario hospital services commission and charges for the general care of Indians are paid by the commission.

HARBOURS BOARD GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXATION, HALIFAX

Question No. 256—Mr. Morris:

1. Does the national harbours board pay grants to the city of Halifax in lieu of taxation on national harbours board properties?

2. If so, what is the formula used in the payment of such grants and is the formula related to the so-called business tax rate or residential tax rate applied by the city of Halifax to taxpayers?

3. What was the total grant paid by the national harbours board to the city of Halifax in lieu of taxation on national harbours board properties in (a) 1956; (b) 1957; (c) 1958?

4. What are the individual assessed valuations of national harbours board properties in the city of Halifax?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. The formula used takes the municipality's total realty assessment on taxable property. The national harbours board's valuation of its own properties is then related to this figure to establish the percentage of board responsibility to the total assessment. This percentage is then multiplied by the municipality's figure for total expenditures on police and fire services. The formula is not related to either the business or the residential tax rate.

3. (a) $75,000, (b) $75,000, (c) $75,000.

4. The board's valuation of its properties in the city of Halifax, as set in 1954, is $5,564,728.

The hon. member has agreed to accept the above answer reserving the right to examine the details on file in the national harbours board.

C.N.R. GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXATION, HALIFAX

Question No. 257—Mr. Morris:

1. Does the Canadian National Railways pay grants to the city of Halifax in lieu of taxation on Canadian National Railways properties?

2. If so, what is the formula used in the payment of such grants and is the formula related to the so-called business tax rate or residential tax rate applied by the city of Halifax to taxpayers?

3. What was the total grant paid by the Canadian National Railways to the city of Halifax in lieu of taxation on Canadian National Railways properties in (a) 1956; (b) 1957; (c) 1958?

4. What are the individual assessed valuations of Canadian National Railways properties in the city of Halifax?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Valuation—railway roadway, according to average value of adjoining lands. Land, other than roadway, at actual value. Buildings—stations, freight sheds, offices, warehouses, elevators, roundhouses and machine, repair and other shops at actual value.

Rate—50 per cent of the merged average rate of taxation for the 5 year period immediately preceding the commencement year of the agreement. "Merged rate" means the effective rate if the residential and commercial rates were not operative.

Note—Land and buildings thereon under lease are excluded from the grant. Valuations are revised annually to allow for changes in holdings and leaseholds.

3. 1956, $75,000.00; 1957, $75,348.53; 1958, $75,615.81.

4. The accepted value as contained in the agreement between the city of Halifax and the Canadian National Railways is $5,356,975 made up of land $3,857,415 and buildings $1,499,560—total $5,356,975.

PETAWAWA FOREST EXPERIMENTAL STATION

Question No. 303—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the forestry branch been asked by the Department of National Defence to lease certain portions or all of the Petawawa forest experiment station or to abandon any experimental areas?

2. If so, what were the reasons, nature, and results of such requests in the period since 1950?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Yes—to abandon certain areas.

2. Because of the increased range of modern weapons and the need for conducting brigade training schemes, the Department of National Defence required part of the military reserve on which the forestry branch previously had rights of use for forest research purposes. As a result of a formal request from the deputy minister of national defence, dated July 2, 1958, the area available for forest research has been reduced from approximately 93 to 36.5 square miles of land for continuing research with a consequent loss to the forestry branch of about 50 per cent of long time silvicultural study areas. In return, the forestry branch obtained full rights of use on a remaining 36.5 square miles with relatively secure tenure since such rights of use would be withdrawn only in a national emergency. Several small experimental areas within the released area are also retained temporarily until 1963.

TELEGRAPH OFFICES, CAPE BRETON ISLAND

Question No. 314—Mr. Chevrier:

In connection with the government telegraph offices closed on Cape Breton Island, how long had each office been in operation and who was employed as operator in each case at time of closing?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

Office	Opened	Operator at date of closing
Arichat	*March 15, 1928	Mrs. Albert Nichol
Baddeck	Jan. 1, 1882	Miss Dunlop
Big Bras d'Or	July 19, 1882	H. Campbell
Breton Cove	April 1, 1899	D. B. McLeod
Cheticamp	April 1, 1887	Mrs. M. Fiset
Gabarus	Jan. 16, 1904	Miss C. Grant
Grand Etang	April 23, 1893	Jos. Douchette

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 8, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PHOTOGRAPH OF HOUSE IN SESSION BY NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Mr. Speaker: The retaking by the film board of the photograph of the House of Commons in session has been arranged for tomorrow immediately after prayers. I hope all hon. members will be in their places so that we shall have as complete and as good a photograph as possible.

THE BUDGET

TABLING OF BUDGET PAPERS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFICIT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I table copies in English and in French of the white paper containing the budget papers in connection with the budget which I hope to present tomorrow evening. In accordance with the practice which has prevailed in recent years and for the convenience of hon. members I move:

That the budget papers be published as an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings and also as an appendix to tomorrow's Hansard.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I might as well anticipate now the inevitable burning question as to how large the deficit has been for the year which ended March 31. Mr. Speaker, it is not more than a billion dollars, as some prophesied. It is not the billion dollar deficit that some said it would be. It is not even the $700 million deficit that I estimated last session it would be. I am very happy to report to the house that we have held the deficit down to $617 million.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REPORT ON WASHINGTON COUNCIL MEETING

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from Washington where I had the honour of heading the Canadian delegation at the spring ministerial meeting of the North Atlantic council. I think the house might be interested to receive a brief report regarding those meetings. First I should like to pass on to you, Mr. Speaker, and the other members of the house the many messages of sympathy which were expressed by his former colleagues, the various foreign secretaries of the NATO countries, with regard to the untimely death of Dr. Sidney Smith.

The meeting I attended was an important one in that the members of the alliance were confronted with a serious challenge as a result of the Soviet union's recent pronouncement concerning Berlin and Germany. It also assumed special significance because it marked the tenth anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization which came into being on April 4, 1949. In this regard the opening ceremonies, which were attended by the President of the United States, were held in the same hall where the treaty had originally been signed.

At that first meeting, coinciding as it did with a tense international situation, a group of freedom-loving nations decided to join efforts against the danger of aggression. The prospect then of further encroachment on the free world seemed imminent. Those who drafted the treaty believed this danger could be averted only if it were made clear to the Soviet union that an attack on any of the members of the North Atlantic alliance would be regarded as an attack on all of them.

The events of the past ten years have proved the soundness of that policy. Had it not been for the North Atlantic treaty there might well have been further losses of people and territories to the Soviet empire. Indeed, the whole defensive position of the west might have been desperate. We should be grateful to the men of many nations who negotiated the treaty and secured its acceptance. Expressions of gratitude were given at the opening meeting of the sessions I have just attended.

NATO—Report on Washington Meeting

We can take satisfaction from the way in which over the years NATO has gained strength. Mr. Spaak, the chairman and secretary general of the North Atlantic council, in his opening remarks had this to say:

> Ten years ago the North Atlantic treaty gave practical expression to the union of twelve countries and to their common determination to resist any active aggression. Today this union and this determination appear to us so natural and so necessary that we can no longer conceive for our peoples a free and peaceful existence without them.

Modes of consultation have been developed in which all member nations can freely express their views on the common problems. They received the opportunity of expressing those views in the three-day meetings in Washington. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister in his statement of April 7 has already given an account of the position taken by Canada on the principal questions discussed at the Washington meetings. These were primarily concerned with the German problems.

It is unnecessary for me to elaborate on what the Prime Minister has said, though I would call attention to the statement he made about the suggestion which was advanced by the Canadian delegation that in some manner the United Nations might be able to assist in the solution of the Berlin problem. In the House of Commons on March 19 the Prime Minister expressed the belief that the United Nations might play some significant role in the solution of the Berlin problem, and that this suggestion deserved further and more careful study.

Further study has been given to the possibility of the United Nations playing some part, and suggestions were made at the meeting as to how the United Nations might contribute something to the solution of the problem. I pointed out that we in Canada were anxious that consideration be given to ways by which the present arrangements over Berlin could be strengthened, either by supplementary or substitute arrangements. I pointed out that the Prime Minister had made his statement as of March 19, and then I went on to say that I would doubt if the United Nations could play a useful part unless a four-power agreement had first been reached. I suggested that a settlement involving the United Nations need not be weaker, and conceivably might be more stable, than the present position in which the powers are now in Berlin by right of conquest. Although the effective introduction of the United Nations into the Berlin situation could probably be accomplished only through the agreement of the four powers, it could serve to engage the interest of other governments in the freedom and independence of Berlin in a way which no agreement reached solely among the occupying powers could do. Accordingly I suggested it would be worth while for the permanent council to study the possibilities of a role for the United Nations in the application of a solution to the Berlin problem, and an assurance was given that a full study would be made by the permanent council of the suggestions which were put forward.

The two main suggestions which I advanced were, first, that the basic role of the United Nations might be to verify that all parties were abiding by the terms of whatever agreement was reached; and, second, that an essential part of the agreement would be a Soviet pledge binding itself and its associates to permit full freedom of access to West Berlin and the acceptance of a United Nations presence on the lines of communication.

I think all hon. members will appreciate that at this very moment the western powers having special responsibility—the United States, the United Kingdom, France and Germany—after receiving the advice of the allies at the NATO conference, are now preparing for the negotiations which lie ahead, and that great restraint should be exercised and nothing said which might make those negotiations even more difficult. I am satisfied that the views presented by myself on behalf of the Canadian government will be given the most serious consideration by the experts in the series of consultations now scheduled to take place before the foreign ministers' meeting on May 11.

I can report to the house that the unity which marked the council's adoption of its declaration on Berlin last December also characterized the meetings in Washington last week. All 15 nations which were represented expressed their conviction that "the unity of action and policy which the alliance makes possible is the best guarantee of successful negotiations with the Soviet government and of any genuine resolution of differences between east and west".

In addition to the extensive discussion of the problems of Germany and Berlin, the council directed its attention to the political situation in other parts of the world where international communism continues to exert various forms of pressure on the free world. In the Canadian view it is a cause for gratification that during the last year or so there has been a marked increase in consultation among the governments of the alliance in respect of these problems which lie outside the area covered by the treaty. Because the pressure exercised by the communist bloc is not limited to the countries of the alliance or confined to direct military aggression, the council is obliged to look beyond the territorial boundaries of the treaty in order to prevent encroachment on freedom in other parts of the world.

I am also convinced that in spite of difficulties it is possible to achieve a high degree of harmony in national policies within the present treaty commitments and, without giving ground for misunderstanding, in other areas of the free world.

There was also a useful discussion of the work of the alliance during the past year. The council endorsed the secretary general's report calling for a further impetus to be given to the work of the alliance and recognizing the need for increased collective action in regard not only to political consultation and the common defence effort, but also to certain aspects of economic, scientific and cultural matters.

Canada and the other countries have now had the opportunity to express their views on the problems of Berlin and Germany. The four powers who will be directly involved in the forthcoming negotiations with the Soviet union are fully aware of our views. I am confident that those who are representing these powers will prove equal to the challenge of the tasks they have ahead.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister's statement has proven to be an interesting and valuable supplement to that given yesterday by the Prime Minister on the work of the recent NATO council meeting in Washington. It is, I believe, all the more welcome because it is, if I may say so, more informative than the communique which was issued at the end of the council session. I believe that all hon. members of this house and indeed all Canadians as well as the great majority of citizens in all the Atlantic countries have real cause for satisfaction in the fact that NATO has been able to celebrate its 10th birthday.

The minister mentioned the origin of NATO and those who were responsible for its foundation. I am thinking in that connection especially of four men who did not take part in the ceremony in Washington. I am thinking of John Foster Dulles, who had so much to do with the development of the coalition and who was kept away because of illness. I am thinking, too, of Dean Acheson, who was one of the really effective founders of NATO. I am also thinking of Chancellor Adenauer, a great champion of freedom, who has decided to withdraw soon from active participation in domestic and international affairs. I am thinking also of the former prime minister of this country, Louis St. Laurent, who was one of the first leaders of an Atlantic government to give public expression to the desirability and indeed the necessity of building up an Atlantic community not merely for defence but for development.

We have been successful in these ten years in developing NATO into an effective organization for collective defence, though no doubt its strategy in that regard will have to be changed in the next ten years as it faces new problems in the field of defence. We have not been so successful, as we all know, in building up NATO as an effective agency for development. Perhaps in the years ahead the greatest tests that NATO will meet will be in the field of building up the Atlantic community for purposes other than military defence, to which the minister made reference this afternoon; in the field of co-ordinating foreign policy and economic policy. If NATO cannot make progress in that regard it will undoubtedly disappear as a coalition with the disappearance of the danger and the fear that gave rise to NATO in the first place. And so, as we look ahead to the next ten years, I think all in this house agree that it will be an important aspect of Canadian policy to do what can be done to build up NATO in this respect.

The minister mentioned one test that is immediately before NATO; that is the test which it faces in the settlement of the Berlin and German questions. I quite agree with him; and, as was indicated yesterday, if this problem, so important to the peace of Europe, is to be solved it is desirable to broaden the basis of responsibility for West Berlin from the four occupying powers to all the NATO powers, and to use the NATO council for that and other purposes as an effective agency for negotiation.

I was glad to hear the minister say that he thinks in the last year real progress has been made in that regard. In any steps the Canadian government can take to support that progress I assure the minister and I assure the government they will get full support from this side of the house.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we believe that NATO in the last 10 years has effectively served the interests of the peace of the world. We believe that NATO, with the emphasis that has been given to it, should be greatly changed at this time. NATO has been basically a defensive and a military organization. At a time when people agree that many nations in the world have weapons capable of bringing about world destruction there should be a re-examination of NATO itself, of the things that have been accomplished under NATO, and an examination to see how we can best proceed.

We are most happy with the emphasis that has been given to the desirability of the United Nations itself playing a greater role in Europe and in questions of peace vis-à-vis the United States, the Soviet union, the North Atlantic organization and the eastern bloc. For many years we have looked for greater emphasis on economic co-operation. The C.C.F. have been greatly disappointed in that so little emphasis has been given to clause II of the agreement. We hope that real emphasis will be placed on economic co-operation, and that the building up of the economies of the countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization will take place in the years ahead.

The whole question of Berlin is very much to the fore, and we are hopeful that arrangements will be made to maintain the freedom of West Berlin but at the same time to bring about a withdrawal of troops within central Europe and the strengthening of peaceful relations among the nations involved.

As the foreign ministers' conference approaches, and as the NATO nations are about to go into the consultations to which the minister referred, we feel that this lends emphasis to the need for Canada to be fully represented by the Prime Minister immediately appointing a person to occupy the position of Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to remind the hon. member that the scope of comment on a statement is limited to the statement itself. It does not include comment on other subjects such as that on which the hon. member is now embarking.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, on that point I was referring to the consultations that the minister said were about to take place amongst the NATO nations before the foreign ministers' meeting. I feel it is appropriate to comment on the question as to how Canada can be adequately and fully represented. We feel, Mr. Speaker, that the emphasis which is being given to the United Nations in this whole question is good. We look forward to some real action in the field of economic co-operation.

STARRED QUESTIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO LABOUR DISPUTE

Question No. 46—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Did the Prime Minister receive a communication from the premier of Newfoundland inviting the government to set up a public inquiry into the violations of the law in the labour dispute in Newfoundland?

2. If so, what was the precise wording of the communication and the precise wording of the Prime Minister's reply to the premier of Newfoundland?

R.C.M.P. REINFORCEMENTS, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 47—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Did the Prime Minister receive a communication from the premier of Newfoundland, regarding the refusal of the government to send Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements to Newfoundland?

2. If so, what were the precise contents of such communication?

3. Did the Prime Minister make any reply to this communication, and if so, what was the precise nature of the reply?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall answer the two questions at one time. I do have to refer to question 47 as well. I shall answer it in view of the fact that I undertook to do so, although I do not wish the answer in any way to constitute a precedent, for I believe the question is in derogation of the rule set out in citation 171 (p), Beauchesne's fourth edition, which says:

> No questions must be asked which might prejudice a pending trial in a court of law.

The pertinent words in the telegram from the premier of Newfoundland are as follows:

> The attorney general of Newfoundland informs me that the Minister of Justice of Canada has cancelled temporarily the dispatch of 50 additional officers of the R.C.M.P. for duty in the present emergency in central Newfoundland. Newfoundland has a solemn contract with the Canadian government, identical with those signed by Canada with seven other provinces.

Then it says, after some intermediate words:

> I now ask you to supply us with the additional R.C.M.P. men to enable us to maintain law and order in this emergency according to the contract that exists between us. If you cannot or will not do so will you undertake to have the government of Canada take over the task of maintaining law and order in central Newfoundland. If you will not give us the police to do it as the contract requires you to do then will you take on the responsibility yourselves of maintaining law and order in this emergency.

Then in the other telegram the pertinent parts are:

> In the interest of the peace, order and good government of Canada and to protect the good name of the R.C.M.P. the government of Newfoundland invites the government of Canada to set up at once a public inquiry under a superior court judge from outside Newfoundland to investigate the acts of lawlessness and violence which have taken place in central Newfoundland since the strike of the loggers began on December 31 for the purpose of ascertaining the facts and assessing the responsibility.

Those are the pertinent words. There are, of course, additional ones. To both these telegrams I replied:

I find I have not replied formally for the record to your telegrams of March 12 and 13.

The pertinent words are these:

You will, of course, be aware that the government gave most serious and urgent consideration to the requests in your telegrams. In view of the widespread public interest in the matter it was necessary for us to make public our stand on this proposal in parliament just as quickly as the legislation was ready. I stated the position of the government in parliament on Monday March 16. I understand that you learned of this decision almost immediately when announced. I am sending you, for your records, a copy of the statement taken from the official record of our debates.

Then I concluded:

I feel it would be out of place for me to add anything to that statement.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to raise a point of order arising out of what the Prime Minister has just said. He has indicated that perhaps these particular questions are out of order, and as a matter of clarification I should like to ask Your Honour's advice as to whether in fact these questions are out of order, and if so on what grounds they can be considered out of order. The Prime Minister has stated that he does not want his answer to be considered a precedent for this kind of question in the future, and therefore I think this matter should be clarified immediately.

Mr. Speaker: I heard the reservation which the Prime Minister made, but since he did not take objection to answering the questions there is no point that arises for decision now from the Chair. I would not like to deal with the question hypothetically.

Mr. Pearson: That is the point I raise. I assume that if the questions are allowed by Your Honour, then that is an admission that they are in order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we will have no play on words like that. The statement was quite clear that this was not to be considered a precedent. I had given an undertaking and action was taken subsequent to that undertaking. I said that even though there might be a question as to whether or not these questions should in fact be answered, I would answer them.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister has said there might be a question of propriety with regard to the questions which could be asked, and that is the point I wish to make. In our view there is no question of propriety with regard to these questions, and therefore the Prime Minister's observation that these answers should not be taken as a precedent has no meaning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am just following the former prime minister, your leader.

Mr. Speaker: If serious objection to the questions were taken, of course, I would have to deal with the point; that is, that a question should not be answered because of pending litigation. However, since the question has been answered without objection as a point of order it seems to me that with the reservation the Prime Minister has made, he is reserving the right so far as he can do so to object to similar questions in the future, and I am not called upon to make any decision now.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I now raise a question of privilege affecting the privileges of every hon. member of the house. The questions the Prime Minister has just answered call for the precise wording of the communications. It happens, and it will not surprise the house to know, that I have copies giving the precise wording of the communications, which I obtained subsequent to putting these motions on the order paper. The Prime Minister has misled the house by failing to give the precise wording of the communications.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can understand my hon. friend's feelings. He, the other day, had occasion to give advice to the premier of Newfoundland which was accepted for a few minutes, and then the rug was pulled from under him. When my hon. friend speaks about misleading the house, I would remind him that I wanted to table these letters the other day but he did not want that. I am prepared to do that. I have been asked to give the precise words, and they would be the pertinent words. The trouble with the hon. member is that he does not know what he wants.

Mr. Speaker: The point of privilege, it seems to me, has not been borne out by what was said. I am sure the house will recall that the Prime Minister made it clear that he was not attempting to give the full text but only the relevant parts. I do not think any point of privilege arises such as the hon. member asserted.

Mr. Pearson: The question surely reads, what was the precise wording of the communication. Surely the precise wording of the communication means the precise and complete wording of the communication.

An hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Pearson: What does precise mean?

Mr. Speaker: If I may say so, that is a different point. That raises the question of the sufficiency of the answer, and it is not open to the members of the house to question the sufficiency of a reply. It is open to those who are subject to interrogation to give such reply as they see fit.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. Since the Prime Minister has referred to this communication or these communications, and has said that he is quite prepared to have them tabled, since parliament itself is involved in that certain excerpts have been made public, I feel that we in this chamber have a right to see the entire documents. I would suggest therefore that they should be tabled, since they have now been referred to.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank my hon. friend for the suggestion, because that is exactly what I offered to do. The documents are available.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the Prime Minister also comply with the request I made the other day when this matter first arose, and agree to ask to have them printed in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to reserve his remarks for the period of oral questions when we finish starred questions.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Following Your Honour's suggestion, I should now like to ask the Prime Minister if he would be willing, for the convenience of members of the house, to ask the permission of the house to have the communications referred to in starred questions Nos. 46 and 47 made an appendix to today's Hansard?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the general attitude of the hon. member, I think that would be making a "Lamontagne" out of a molehill.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Prime Minister should either refuse or accept the suggestion of my hon. friend. Now what has he done? He has countered merely with a calculated and jovial irrelevancy.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order may I ask? Is it within the right of any hon. member, including the Prime Minister, when the matter is one involving not just the Prime Minister but all members of this house, for the Prime Minister to say in a despotic way, "No, I will not have this done"?

Mr. Speaker: I think on reflection the hon. member for Essex East will appreciate the answer, which is that it is by unanimous consent that documents are printed in Hansard, and that if any hon. member objects, even the Prime Minister, the documents will not be printed. If the hon. member would like me to put his request to the house I shall do so, but I take it the Prime Minister has said no.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, sir, I should merely like to thank the Prime Minister for his courtesy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will reciprocate in that, and say there is no need to do other than table the documents.

OIL AND GAS PERMIT RIGHTS, NORTHERN CANADA

Question No. 49—Mr. Hardie:

1. What are the names of the ten successful bidders for oil and gas permit rights in northern Canada?
2. Which of these are United States corporations, Canadian corporations, Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies, British corporations, others?
3. Of the total acreage under permit rights, how many acres have been assigned to each of these companies?
4. Of the total acreage under permit rights, what percentage has been assigned to (a) Canadian corporations; (b) United States corporations and Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies; (c) British corporations; (d) others?
5. In this connection, what is meant by "cash bonus bids"?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in view of the length of the answer I would request that it be tabled and printed as part of Hansard at this point.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to have incorporated in Hansard at this point the rather extensive answer which he has to this question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above follows]

1. Assuming that the information required is the one sale on March 9, the names of the ten successful bidders for oil and gas exploration rights in northern Canada are as follows:

Pan American Petroleum Corporation, Calgary, Alberta; Triad Oil Co. Ltd., Calgary, Alberta; Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Co. Ltd., Calgary, Alberta; Shell Oil Company of Canada Limited, Calgary, Alberta; Canada Southern Petroleum Limited, Calgary, Alberta; Dome Petroleum Limited, Calgary, Alberta; California Peace River Company, Calgary, Alberta; Alberta Bretorada Petroleum Corporation, Calgary, Alberta; Alberta Calgarada Petroleum Corporation, Calgary, Alberta; James Ross, Ottawa, Ontario.

2. United States Corporations: Pan American Petroleum Corporation, Calgary, Alberta; California Peace River Company, Calgary, Alberta.

Canadian Corporations: Dome Petroleum Limited, Calgary, Alberta; James Ross, Ottawa, Ontario; Triad Oil Co. Ltd., Calgary, Alberta.

Canadian Subsidiaries: Canadian Southern Petroleum Limited, Calgary, Alberta; Shell Oil Company of Canada, Limited, Calgary, Alberta; Alberta Calgarada Petroleum Corporation, Calgary, Alberta; Alberta Bretorada Petroleum Corporation, Calgary, Alberta.

British, United States and Canadian: Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Co. Ltd., Calgary, Alberta.

3. As a result of the March 9 sale, these ten companies received permit rights as follows:

	Acres
Pan American Petroleum Corporation	1,896,442
Triad Oil Co. Ltd.	63,212
Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Co. Ltd.	95,661
Shell Oil Company of Canada Limited	474,367
Canada Southern Petroleum Limited	63,854
Dome Petroleum Limited	31,445
California Peace River Company	63,854
Alberta Bretorada Petroleum Corporation	150,102
Alberta Calgarada Petroleum Corporation	50,262
James Ross	50,262

4. The percentage acreage breakdown as between the Canadian, United States companies, etc., within the ten companies listed in 3 above is as follows: (a) Canadian corporations, 4 per cent; (b) United States corporations, 68 per cent, Canadian subsidiaries, 25 per cent.

(c) British, United States, Canadian corporations 3 per cent.

(d) Others.

5. "Cash bonus bids" is the amount of cash over and above the permit fee and deposit a bidder is prepared to pay in a public competition for the privilege of obtaining an exploratory oil and gas permit.

Note: The sale of March 9 covered 2,939,661 acres. This brings the total under permit in the Northwest Territories and Yukon to some 80,000,000 acres. Questions 3 and 4 have been interpreted as applying to the March 9 sale only. If they refer to the 80,000,000 acres, the work involved in producing the answers would be very great as the corporate structures of every company holding any permit would have to be examined to determine whether they were British, Canadian, United States, etc.

IMPORTS OF CANNED APPLES, JAPAN TO B.C.

Question No. 50—Mr. Robichaud:

1. What is the quantity of canned solid pack apples imported into British Columbia from Japan since January 1, 1958?

2. What is the value of those imports?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answer to parts 1 and 2 may I say that statistics are not available because data on canned solid pack apples are not separately recorded in Canadian import statistics.

Mr. Robichaud: Why not?

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CF-105—ESTIMATED COSTS

Question No. 200—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Did the Minister of National Defence or any member of the government receive an estimate last December from A. V. Roe Canada Limited on the cost per plane for the delivery of 100 operational Arrows (CF-105's)?

2. If so, what was the cost estimate per plane?

3. What would such cost estimate per plane amount to with a spare engine and missiles?

C.B.C.—CABINET REPRESENTATIONS

Question No. 272—Mr. Deschatelets:

1. Did the Solicitor General, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Secretary of State, the Minister of Defence Production and the Postmaster General make representations at any time since June, 1957 by letter, memorandum, telephone or conversation, to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation concerning any radio or television program broadcast or proposed to be broadcast over the facilities of the corporation?

2. If so, what was the nature of such representations, when and how were they made, and to what program or programs was reference made?

LANDING STRIP, MINGAN, SAGUENAY COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 284—Mr. Bourget:

1. Has the government built a landing strip at Mingan, in the county of Saguenay?

2. If so, what was the construction cost of the said landing strip?

3. Did the government dispose of the said strip by sale, lease or otherwise?

4. If so, to whom, on what date and on what conditions?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

WORK ON MERCIER BRIDGE, MONTREAL

Motion No. 54—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports by inspectors, agreements, contracts, and other documents exchanged between the St. Lawrence seaway authority, the Department of Transport or any other government department, and any person or persons, since January 1, 1955, relating to any work to be done on the Mercier bridge at Montreal, Quebec.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to passing this motion with the usual reservation with regard to the permission of the province.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the reservation stated by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

ORDER IN COUNCIL P.C. 1959-259

Motion No. 79—Mr. Dumas:

For a copy of order-in-council P.C. 1959-259, dated March 5, 1959.

Motion agreed to.

C.B.C.—POLITICAL CONVENTION BROADCASTS

Motion No. 80—Mr. Fisher:

For a copy of all reports and memoranda prepared by or for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and which has been distributed beyond the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation administration, on any aspects of the Progressive Conservative convention of 1956, and the Liberal convention of 1958.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, when this motion was called the other day I said I could not accept it in the wide terms in which it was drafted. I have since received from my hon. friend a letter in which he has defined the matters he wishes to have included in the return. I am prepared to accept it on the basis of the information I now have and the terms which have been agreed upon.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house prepared to accept the modification of the motion as suggested on the basis of a letter written?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING—AGREEMENTS WITH ST. JOHN'S CORPORATION

Motion No. 84—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of the agreement or agreements made in 1956, between the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation on the one hand, and the St. John's housing corporation on the other.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion does not describe accurately any documents which are in existence. However, in accordance with the undertaking I gave yesterday I am obtaining copies of all agreements dealing with dominion-provincial housing projects in St. John's and I shall be glad to table them.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion stand in the meantime?

Mr. Pickersgill: It can be dropped as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to have this motion dropped?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion dropped.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING ON R.C.M.P. AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Justice whether he can explain to the house why the proposed dominion-provincial conference to discuss the Royal Canadian Mounted Police agreement which was to be held this month has been postponed, and whether he can say when such conference is likely to be held?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister I will take this question as notice, and he will give an answer at the proper time.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING NEW POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to table the letters which, on March 23, he said he was addressing to the provinces announcing the new policy on civil defence.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am in a position to do so but I have not them available today. I will see that they are tabled tomorrow.

TRADE

CANNED APPLES—IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As the minister could not answer my starred question in connection with solid pack apples imported into British Columbia from Japan since January 1, 1958, can he now inform the house whether any quantity of canned apples has been imported from Japan since January 1, 1958; and if so, what quantity?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I gave an answer to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Winch: Since when do you import apples into British Columbia?

Mr. Churchill: If there are any more questions before I continue with my reply, I am patiently waiting. Imports which are not of great significance are not listed separately in the returns; they appear under an item "not otherwise provided for"; and apples, if any, which have come from Japan are listed in the statistics of imports under that item. If in future canned apples from Japan become a matter of major importance, that fact will be noted and a separate item will be listed in our returns. But at the present time that is not the case.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house whether any quantity of canned apples has been imported into Canada from Japan?

An hon. Member: He has answered.

Mr. Robichaud: No, he has not.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister realize that even a small quantity of apples imported from Japan into British Columbia is a matter of major importance to the British Columbia fruit growers?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I think it depends on the type of apple that is imported. If the hon. member is concerned with this matter I am surprised that he himself did not raise it, rather than leaving it to his friend opposite over there.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF SUBURBAN MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General which results from his announcement yesterday about the mailmobiles. Will there be consequential changes in the regulations to broaden suburban mail delivery owing to the introduction of this new Conservative vehicle?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the basic requirement for house to house delivery is that the houses must be separated by no more than 40 yards, and that will remain. However, not waiting for the introduction of the vehicle, last fall we revised our requirements for extending letter carrier service in the fringe areas of our major cities, and surveys are now taking place to determine where the new and relaxed requirements will enable us to further extend letter carrier service.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question arises out of the continuing complaints and dissatisfaction over the distribution of box cars. Since the minister on January 21 said the Bracken royal commission report was in the hands of the printer, and this question was again referred to four weeks ago today, would the minister say whether the report has been lost? If so would the minister look into the matter and see if he can find the report and would he say when the report will be printed? Surely it should not take months to get this report printed.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thought the hon. member was going to add to his speech something about deficiency payments, but he did not quite get that far. The situation the hon. member mentions with regard to continuing complaints in connection with box cars must be only in his own office, from his own supporters. I have been receiving no complaints with regard to the distribution of box cars. Actually the situation with regard to the delivery of grain is excellent this year, and far ahead of what it was a year ago.

If I may come to the question the hon. member led up to very carefully and slowly, the printed report of the inquiry into box car allocation will be available just as soon as it is delivered to my hands from the printer. The printer has other work to do, I suppose, but he is pushing ahead as rapidly as possible with the printing of the report, and it will be placed in the hands of hon. members as soon as possible.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. Is it the intention of the government to supply an edition in the French language at the same time?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, that can be done. If so, of course, it will delay the publication of the report, and I understand from the hon. member's question that is what he would like to have done.

Mr. Chevrier: Why should it cause delay?

Mr. Churchill: It frequently happens that the translation is a little later than the publication of the first report, and it imposes a delay which has to be accepted. It is unfortunate, that is all.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question. Would the minister mind inquiring of the queen's printer when the report may be available and subsequently inform the house, there is great interest in this report?

Mr. Churchill: I will do everything possible, Mr. Speaker, to accommodate the hon. member. I will ask the queen's printer if it is possible to speed up the work.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUMMIT CONFERENCE—INVITATIONS TO MEETING IN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether formal invitations to meet in Quebec have now been sent to the governments concerned who will be attending the summit meeting, and if so have any replies been received to those invitations?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question about this earlier and suggested, as I recall it, that invitations be sent. Informal invitations have been sent. The formal ones will be presented, I understand, when the meeting of foreign ministers takes place.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—CANADIAN ATTITUDE TO U.S. LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. J. Walker (Rosedale): May I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister tell us the attitude of the Canadian government toward the legislation recently passed in the United States House of Representatives in regard to the diversion of water from the great lakes at Chicago?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will try to bring the house up to date on that matter. The bill has passed the House of Representatives and is now before the Senate or a Senate committee. The United States government is aware that the proposal to divert water from lake Michigan at Chicago is causing considerable and understandable concern in this country, and at the appropriate time further official representations will be made. I think that is as far as I can go at this time, but we are paying the closest attention to this matter, at the same time not wishing to do anything that would in any way cause a situation to arise which might not be beneficial

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the discussion which took place in the house on at least two occasions with reference to this matter, has the government given consideration to referring the question of the diversion of water out of lake Michigan into the Chicago drainage canal to the international joint commission?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my answer offhand would be that no direct consideration has been given to that question, because of course the matter is now before the United States congress. I am just wondering whether this is an appropriate time for doing that which the hon. gentleman has suggested.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just add one point, which is this. The Prime Minister knows, of course, that the matter has already been referred to the international joint commission in so far as some technical aspects are concerned, and that is what prompted my question. I think it should be given some consideration.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON AIR DEFENCE INTEGRATION DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on March 25 the hon. member for Essex East asked if the R.C.A.F. were represented on the air defence system's integration division of the United States air force. The answer is yes.

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENTS IN RURAL MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that the Post Office Department has taken steps to facilitate letter carrier delivery in suburban areas, has the department any plans for making rural mail delivery more widely available?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, even before the steps to which the hon. member has referred were taken, we had reduced our rural mail delivery requirement from four houses per mile to three houses per mile, which enables us to make a considerable number of extensions in this field.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister relating to the remarks he made in this house on March 16 with regard to Newfoundland, and his call for a cooling off period of two weeks. I should like to ask him whether he considers there has now been such a cooling off period and, if so, has he any announcement to make with regard to the matters which were then before the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I was not at the Canadian club today, so I do not know whether or not the cooling off period has been sufficient. As to the second portion of the question, that matter is still under consideration.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I was unable to give him notice, but I did not think he would require it. I wonder whether the minister will indicate to the house when we might expect the introduction of legislation to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): My information is that the bill is now being printed. As soon as it comes off the press it will be introduced into this house.

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF RADIO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue how soon the government hopes to put a notice on the order paper for the setting up of the committee on radio which he promised at the beginning of the session.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The notice can go on the order paper at almost any time, but I am advised by the officers of the house that at the moment there is congestion as far as rooms are concerned and also so far as stenographic services are concerned, and that it would not be practicable to set up a committee until some short time has elapsed. I hope to proceed with this just as soon as I am advised that it is possible to do so.

THE MINISTRY

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-37, to provide for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up much time at this moment on the discussion of this bill on second reading, other than to state that the matter was fully discussed and considered at the resolution stage.

A number of questions were asked during the discussion of the subject at that time, some of which were asked because of an inexhaustible desire for information; others were apparently designed to elicit information of a different kind. I will say no more than I said in introducing this matter at the resolution stage, namely that what is being asked for is the setting up of a system of parliamentary secretaries to ministers.

The terms are clearly set forth in the bill. A question was asked as to the numbers thereof, and hon. members will see that the number is restricted to 16. The salary will be $4,000 per annum and the duties, if I may paraphrase them, will consist of assistance to the ministers to whom the several parliamentary secretaries are allocated, in such manner as the ministers may direct.

I think I can add nothing more to what I said on the introduction of the resolution, and I trust that the same degree of unanimity which was apparent during that discussion will continue, and that it will be possible—and I merely express the hope that it will be possible—for us to conclude our deliberations before the debate on the budget begins.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the house for any length of time on the second reading of this bill, because our position with regard to the principle involved was made quite clear when we were discussing the resolution upon which the bill is based. However, we shall have some suggestions to make in committee with regard to some of the detailed provisions of the bill which certainly do not commend themselves to us on this side of the house.

It may be recalled that when we were discussing this resolution the Prime Minister, in giving his historical account of the background of this matter, indicated that many years ago a bill of this kind was introduced in the House of Commons by the then prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; I am sure the hon. gentleman will not mind my pointing out that that is a mistake. Right Hon. Mackenzie King placed on the lips of the governor general the promise that a bill would be introduced, but it was not introduced.

Mr. Pearson: I think that is quite right, Mr. Speaker; it was in the speech from the throne, but the government of the day did not proceed at that time to introduce legislation to implement that particular part of the speech. No doubt the Prime Minister, when he studied the history of that time, discovered in Hansard the reason which was given later by the prime minister of that day for his difficulty in regard to proceeding with the bill. He pointed out that the difficulty—the major difficulty—which was responsible for his not proceeding with the measure was that he himself, so he said, would not like to take responsibility for appointing a parliamentary assistant or a parliamentary secretary without consultation and agreement with the minister of the department concerned, and that he found the ministers of various departments were most reluctant to choose from among the members of parliament one who might become an assistant.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And he went further than that; he mentioned deputy ministers.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, he went further than that and said they should be able to work well with deputy ministers.

I call to the attention of the Prime Minister that if this gave rise to a difficulty in those days, that difficulty has certainly been compounded by one clause of this bill, which would put the Prime Minister and the ministers in this difficult position every year. But I shall have more to say about this later, when we come to the committee stage.

Meanwhile I reaffirm what we said when we were discussing the resolution, namely that we shall support the principle of this bill, without prejudice to any observations we may wish to make or any changes we may wish to see introduced when we discuss the bill in committee.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): The purpose of this bill is to make provision for a maximum of some 16 parliamentary secretaries. This parliament during one whole session and for a substantial part of another session has operated in the absence of parliamentary secretaries, and I think those of us who have had some experience in the House of Commons will agree that our experience without parliamentary secretaries has demonstrated the wisdom of this present bill. Many of the cabinet ministers are overworked. They have great burdens, and they need help. There may be a few of them—I can think of a couple—who perhaps are not fully employed, but we realize that many of the portfolios are very heavy and very trying. The provision of parliamentary secretaries would, we believe, be of help to the government, and consequently would lead to the more efficient dispatch of public business.

I am sure there are many ways in which parliamentary secretaries could be helpful to a minister. One such way would be in seeing that questions of which hon. members have given advance notice to a minister are taken to the proper authorities in the appropriate department and the answers obtained. In that way we would obtain greater efficiency in the answering of questions in this house. There have been in this session instances of questions being asked and the replies requiring many weeks before being prepared and presented.

I can think of other ways in which parliamentary secretaries would be of assistance. I think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) is greatly in need of a parliamentary secretary. We realize that his portfolio is particularly heavy and that in the past ministers of this department have made great use of their parliamentary secretaries. As a matter of fact, this type of service has been a training ground in some instances for a person who subsequently became the minister of that portfolio. While I believe the major business of parliament should be conducted by the ministers themselves, I can appreciate that parliamentary secretaries may be able to give parliament more adequate answers on many important questions when the ministers are busy with other matters.

To cite another example, parliamentary secretaries would be useful when supplementary estimates are before the house. The secretary may be able to provide appropriate answers. This would depend on the individual himself and the extent to which he had been briefed with regard to questions that might be asked.

I believe that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) could do with a parliamentary secretary. He might, for instance, use him to open letters containing complaints. The minister said he has received no complaints about box car allocation, a comment I was interested in hearing. I would like to see a parliamentary secretary assigned to the Minister of Trade and Commerce who would keep him informed on these questions and complaints. The minister today seemed not to have any great knowledge about the importation of canned apples. This perhaps illustrates his need of a parliamentary secretary.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) who is the government leader in the house is an efficient person and in my opinion handles his department extremely well but I feel he would benefit from the assistance of a parliamentary secretary to handle in this house the strategy as far as private members' days are concerned. The parliamentary secretary to the house leader might be able to bring about some arrangement that would give parliament an opportunity to deal in a more effective manner with the whole question of private members' motions and private members' bills. Perhaps we could discover an alternative to the usual course of talking out all of these motions.

In the field of policy it would appear to me that the minister of as important a department as the Department of Labour might make use of a parliamentary secretary to make inquiries into the grave unemployment problem confronting the nation to see what might be done about solving it.

I suggest that the Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche) should have a parliamentary secretary to keep track of royal commissions, how long they take to report and what they are doing.

Mr. Pickersgill: And to watch what happens to their reports.

Mr. Argue: A former parliamentary assistant tells me that there is no man made who could accomplish such a task. One royal commission that could be inquired into with respect to the progress it is making is the royal commission on patents and copyrights. This commission has been sitting for many years and parliament would be interested in knowing when a report may be expected.

There is no question about it, the growing complexity of the role of the Canadian government in our economy requires a strengthening of administration from time to time. I am certain that an investment of this relatively small amount of money for this purpose is a good investment for the nation.

Although you may rule that the comment I am about to make is somewhat extraneous to the measure before us, Mr. Speaker, I should like to see the Prime Minister and the government give consideration to the whole question of research assistance not only for the cabinet but for members of the opposition. I know that the Prime Minister is aware of the research problem confronting opposition members and I am certain it is a problem he faced for many years.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's apprehension is quite correct. He is straying away from the subject under discussion.

Mr. Argue: I was encouraged to continue, Mr. Speaker, by what I thought was the general assent of the Prime Minister with respect to the difficulties that opposition members face in terms of research. I am hopeful that hon. members on all sides of the house in supporting this measure will consider other appropriate ways whereby the democratic administration of Canada may be strengthened.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I want to be very brief notwithstanding the unusual interest and attendance that I see in the government benches with respect to this item of legislation. My sole point would be to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) if he is overly enamoured of the term "parliamentary secretary". There are some competent and able people sitting behind him who over years of long association with me would probably speak more frankly with me than with him about the desirability of that phrase. My impression is that many think "parliamentary assistant" is a good phrase.

I know that the Prime Minister and his party are usually inclined to adopt the British system and in the United Kingdom people who occupy these positions are referred to as secretaries. If the Prime Minister has not heard about it I should like to tell him that among those whom I think are eminently qualified for his recommendation for positions of this kind some would prefer the title "parliamentary assistant".

This is something about which there is no political quarrel. I believe we have to lay down somewhat more rigid rules concerning duties and responsibilities and I know that the Prime Minister with his great attention to parliamentary practice has given this a great deal of careful consideration. I think he will be greatly benefited by having this second string contingent of people who feel that even during the recess they have to give assiduous attention to the political and administrative functions of government to assist the ministers who are today coping with such large and fantastically high responsibilities.

If the Prime Minister does not know it, I think he will find that some of those to be appointed will really think that the title of parliamentary assistant as we have had it in the past is a little more appropriate to the Canadian concept than perhaps the British style of parliamentary secretary. I just raise this point.

Provision for Parliamentary Secretaries

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the passage of this bill, but I feel there are certain very pertinent questions which should be mentioned at this stage of the proceedings. First of all, I wish to say I found it rather strange and even quite interesting while reading the Prime Minister's speech on the resolution stage of the bill to notice that although he had not yet been attacked he felt it absolutely necessary to defend his repeated delays in introducing this legislation by making what I am sure he considered very sly and devastating references to the fact that Mr. Mackenzie King was also guilty of procrastination. This very interesting habit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) of attacking a government which is no longer in power in a vain effort and attempt to justify his own maladministration is not only a futile but indeed a very infantile exercise which can in no way change the subject under discussion in this house at this time. Of course what Mackenzie King did in 1943 was extremely important to the people who were sitting in the house in 1943, and no doubt at that time the discussions were germane to the subjects which were immediately before that house.

What particularly concerns us now is what this Prime Minister and what this government intend to accomplish with the particular legislation which we have before us, and any other consideration that the Prime Minister may wish to introduce into the discussion can only be considered as a camouflage or as a proverbial blue herring.

Mr. Pallett: Red.

Mr. Cardin: A blue one. Mr. Speaker, it has been quite evident in the past several months that there has been a very distinct reluctance in the mind of the Prime Minister concerning the appointment of parliamentary secretaries. This great day has indeed been postponed for days and weeks and months. As a matter of fact, only recently this resolution which appeared on the order paper was postponed on several occasions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Cancelled?

Mr. Cardin: I am quite sure that the Prime Minister must have had good reason for postponing this legislation; but as one reads the bill he immediately realizes that the Prime Minister is actually increasing the number of parliamentary secretaries from 14 to 16 and that he is making his appointments for a period not exceeding one year. I must confess, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but recall the very nasty rumours and stories that were circulated around parliament hill some time ago to the effect that there were some 180 hungry and eager parliamentarians who were very anxious to get away from the rank and file of the Conservative party and that the Prime Minister had a bit of a problem in trying to fit 180 members into the 14 available positions. As a matter of fact, he was seriously considering appointing the parliamentary secretaries on an annual rotation basis so that he might, of course, satisfy as many of his political colleagues as possible. Now that the bill has been brought down and we see its provisions we also realize that the rumours that we have heard were not entirely without foundation. At this time we should have a very definite look at the consequences of this particular legislation and not let ourselves be sidetracked into considerations of Mr. King's procrastinations in this matter.

I think I should make it clear, Mr. Speaker, right from the start that I am not opposed to the appointment of parliamentary secretaries. On the contrary, I feel that at a time when most of the government departments have expanded to an unprecedented level and where the ministers are literally overburdened with departmental administration, policies and detail; when they must look after not only the affairs in this house but must also study the problems that may come before the cabinet; when they are called upon to represent the government not only from coast to coast in this country but also abroad, there is absolute need for the appointment of knowledgeable parliamentary assistants, and it would be in the greatest interest of parliament if the parliamentary assistants were to be named because of their capacity rather than for any other criteria.

Since 1943, when the parliamentary assistantships were set up on a more definite and more permanent basis, than had been the case heretofore, I believe they have rendered valuable service to the house and to parliament. I am sure the experiment has been a considerable success. It has been proven to be a good training ground for members of parliament and indeed has been a stepping stone to the cabinet. However, I believe the time has now come when parliamentary assistants should be given a new status in the hierarchy of the departments. They should be given more definite and specific responsibilities in the departments to which they are attached and in the performance of their duties in this house in order to lessen as effectively as possible the burden which is now on the shoulders of the ministers alone.

There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that there are innumerable members on the government side who would make exceedingly fine parliamentary assistants provided, of course, that they were chosen for their capacity, their training and their adaptability and provided that they are not chosen in an effort to make content as many of the government members as possible. I think indeed it would be a very gross disregard of the rights of parliament as well as of the rights of the Canadian taxpayers to use parliamentary secretaries as a means of recompensing the supporters of the government.

At this stage of our political evolution, there is an absolute need in parliament and in the departments for good parliamentary secretaries. These responsibilities should fall on the shoulders of the most qualified men. I shall even go farther, Mr. Speaker: If the parliamentary secretaries are to play the role that is required in this house and in the departments then I submit respectfully that these should be full-time jobs. If that is so, then I believe serious consideration should be given to increasing the amount of the emolument that is now provided for in this bill.

I do not believe $4,000 is sufficient for a full-time job. We should not expect capable men, who no doubt have family obligations, to neglect or completely abandon for a period of two or three years whatever business they have without assuring them of an adequate return for the services they render. On the other hand, if parliamentary assistants are to be named on a yearly rotation basis, then I submit that this type of political pie-cutting is out of keeping with the very purpose for which parliamentary secretaries were instituted in the first place. I am quite sure all hon. members will agree that it would take a considerably longer period than six or seven months or a year for a person to be fully acquainted with and knowledgable of the details of his department. It would take a considerably longer period than that, and by changing and rotating parliamentary secretaries from year to year you would place the parliamentary secretary in a position where he could be of no possible use to the department, to the minister or to the house. As a matter of fact, that type of parliamentary secretary would be occupying a purely honorary position. I believe that the moneys that would be expended in payment for that type of parliamentary secretary would be wasted. As a matter of fact, what you would be asking the Canadian people to do would be to pay the government's debt of gratitude to some members of the Conservative party.

In addition I feel that although this legislation may call for the appointment of 16 parliamentary secretaries the Prime Minister would not be justified in filling these 16 positions in order to satisfy as many of his colleagues as possible. I do not think it would be reasonable or even logical, for instance, to name a parliamentary assistant to the attorney general or to the ministers without portfolio or to any of the departments in which the work involved does not justify the naming of a parliamentary assistant. In my opinion, there is a need for good parliamentary assistants, and they should be placed in those departments in which it is well known the minister is overburdened; where there is a quantity of important detail which the minister has not the time to handle and which could be well handled by a good parliamentary secretary.

It would be, I am sure, in the interests of the departments, of the ministers and of this house to place the best available men in these key positions. This is the only basis upon which we can support, and even heartily endorse, the appointment of parliamentary secretaries. This is the only basis upon which the Prime Minister could justify the appointment of parlamentary secretaries if he desires, as he said, to preserve the rights and dignity of parliament and to improve our parliamentary procedures. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the appointment of parliamentary secretaries on an annual rotation basis would, in fact, destroy the effectiveness of parliamentary assistants, and although that procedure may be of some definite political advantage to the Conservative party, I submit such a course would be contrary to the best interests of this parliament.

Mr. Benidickson: Will the Prime Minister make any reply?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thought that the few general remarks I would want to make on this measure should be made on this particular section. The Prime Minister, at the outset today, stated that he hoped it would be possible to provide passage of this bill before the end of the day so that there would be no further delay, in the light of the fact we are soon going to be discussing the budget. I am sure all members of the house will endeavour to co-operate, consistent with their concept of duty, with the request of the Prime Minister. But he would be the first to deny any hon. member the opportunity of expressing views which an hon. member thought he should express with regard to any measure.

The Prime Minister, of course, understandably asks us to give quick passage, subject to discussion, but he is hardly in a very good position, in one sense, to make this request.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I immediately withdraw it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He has, for reasons best known to himself, delayed this decision up until now. There were parliamentary assistants after the election of June, 1957, and some of them are in the house today. I am sure those who are now in the house are anxiously awaiting the passage of this bill to ascertain whether or not they will be reappointed. For my part, I wish it were possible for the Prime Minister to appoint every member of his party as a parliamentary secretary, so well disposed do I feel toward every hon. member who sits on the Speaker's right.

Notwithstanding that, the situation is that there were parliamentary assistants appointed after the election of June, 1957. They functioned, I think one may say, with competence and with distinction, and served their ministers and their country well. During the period of their appointment the Prime Minister, however, decided, according to his prerogative as the Queen's first minister, by his request for dissolution, to bring to an end the tenure of the parliamentary assistants who were associated with his government. This long delay since January, 1958 has not been explained properly by the Prime Minister. If there is justification, as I believe there is, for the appointment of parliamentary assistants, or as the bill calls them, secretaries, at this time, there certainly was justification for the Prime Minister taking this step shortly after his return to office on March 31, 1958.

What the reasons for the delay were, of course, I do not know. I have not yet reached that point of efficiency as to be able to satisfactorily and confidently detect what is in the mind of the right hon. gentleman. However, one suspects, as in the case of most prime ministers, that there was real difficulty, difficulty that arises out of dissatisfaction on the part of some hon. gentlemen who were not previously appointed, and possibly some dissatisfaction—but I am sure that could not have existed in many cases—with the record of achievement of parliamentary assistants previously designated, although, as I say, I do not know of anyone who was a parliamentary assistant after June of 1957 who could not qualify under the highest standards.

It may be that the Prime Minister has since found that certain political obligations have now confronted him which he is obliged to take into consideration. It would be regrettable if now, in the appointment of new candidates, he would do what the hon. member who has just spoken said he should not do, namely make appointments on the basis of trying to extricate himself from particular inevitable political embarrassments that attend the head of any government. One would hope that the Prime Minister could find some other method of dealing with these political embarrassments or these potential dissatisfactions and that he would appoint as parliamentary secretaries only those men in his party who sit behind him in whom he has the fullest confidence and whom he regards as most competent for the particular assignments.

The hon. member for Assiniboia points out that I am now discriminating by failing to mention not only those sitting behind the Prime Minister but as well those members of his party who sit opposite. Because I have carefully observed an attitude of complete neutrality on these appointments I would want to include all hon. members sitting on this side of the house who support the right hon. gentleman. I am sure that our propinquity with these hon. members over the period of the last few months has given us a special opportunity of recognizing their high qualifications for these junior ministerial positions. Of course, as the Leader of the Opposition quietly observes, in their propinquity with us they have had an opportunity of adding to their standards, competence and qualifications.

I hope the Prime Minister will take into account another factor that is extremely important in this matter and it is this. While there has been in this country a tradition about trying to give cabinet representation to all sections of the country, and particularly to the divisions within a province, and while I recognize that that is a rule to be observed by the Prime Minister in accordance with his own prerogative and his own concepts of the kind of government he wants, the Prime Minister now has, in the particular appointments which will be open to him once this bill is passed, the opportunity of rectifying some of the weaknesses that attend the present ministry.

For instance, in the province of Ontario the Prime Minister has a group of respectably competent gentlemen who sit on the ministerial benches, including the distinguished lady member from Hamilton. I have no observations to make against any one of those particular ministers and I would not want them to think that I was in any way engaged in a campaign to have them withdrawn by attrition, compulsion or persuasion from the right hon. gentleman's government. But for some time I am sure the Prime Minister himself has been concerned about the fact that the great city of Toronto in Ontario has had more than adequate representation in the cabinet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Something it did not have under the last government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says "Something it did not have under the last administration". He is quite correct. For most of the period of the government of the last prime minister that was the case. But we rectified the situation by the appointment of the brilliant present hon. member for Trinity, whose appointment possibly took care of that situation which I think admittedly was a mistake.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was rectified on April 27, 1957.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The right hon. gentleman has now erred the other way. The Minister of Transport, the Minister of Finance and the Minister without Portfolio who represents the constituency of Greenwood all come from Toronto. Then the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration comes from a place not far from Toronto. While the citizens of Hamilton are not always anxious to be identified with Toronto, the fact is that she lives close to Toronto, in what at least might be called the Toronto-Hamilton district. Then the Minister of Labour lives in Oshawa, some 40 miles from Toronto. Hence we have all of the ministers from Toronto who come from the same district or the same area in Ontario. Then of course while the late Secretary of State for External Affairs represented a riding that was not in Toronto but was close to Oshawa, nevertheless he himself came from Toronto. As the Leader of the Opposition now observes again in his effective coaching method, they are all in the same television area.

But the great regret is that as a result of the concentration of my right hon. friend's ministers from Ontario in the Toronto-Hamilton-Oshawa district, the fact is that central Ontario, southwestern Ontario, eastern Ontario and northern Ontario are all unrepresented in the cabinet of my right hon. friend. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, who lives in Stratford which is some 60 miles from London and some 225 miles from Ontario's leading city of Windsor, is the only one in the cabinet who can properly be said not to come from the heavily concentrated area of Hamilton-Toronto-Oshawa. The Prime Minister now will have the opportunity, not of making changes in the cabinet—I am sure that is not possible—but at least of rectifying the situation somewhat by appointing parliamentary secretaries taking into account the geographical areas of Ontario that are not now represented in his cabinet.

Then of course, he will be confronted in other provinces with certain dilemmas. I refer to those provinces where, for instance, there is more than one minister and where the population is not comparable with that of some of the larger ones. For instance, in one province where there are now three ministers, the Prime Minister will have to ask himself this question: Should I appoint any parliamentary secretary at all? If I do so, can I appoint more than one? Certainly if he appoints any in the province to which I have just referred he will be confronted with a great difficulty.

There are a number of objections to this bill; but surely the one that will stand out clearly is the reference in a subsequent section which we shall discuss when we come to it namely that these parliamentary secretaries are to be appointed for a period of only 12 months. The result will be that during the term of my hon. friend's tenure in office before the next election there will have been no less than 64 parliamentary secretaries appointed by the right hon. gentleman. In the discretion that is his my right hon. friend will have to consider whether or not that is the proper way in which to provide the kind of training required for future ministers in his government or in any government that is represented by the Conservative party.

Surely the purpose behind the appointments of parliamentary secretaries is not only to assist ministers in the proper discharge of their functions but to train the most promising members and to give them the kind of training which will serve for the future. I recollect that the right hon. gentleman himself, speaking on this question in the house, some time ago, referred to the post of parliamentary assistant as an extremely useful training ground. I ask the Prime Minister this question. Does he think that he will be carrying out the desired objectives in appointing parliamentary secretaries for a period of only 12 months?

I look at some hon. members—I am tempted to refer to them by their constituencies, but I will not—who I know would make very good parliamentary secretaries. They should be given an opportunity of serving for more than 12 months. Can they collect any kind of useful experience in as short a period as 12 months? That, I think, is very doubtful. In any event, it does not conform at least to the traditional standards which have applied in the United Kingdom parliament and here. So I would hope when we come to that section that the Prime Minister will want to reconsider it and possibly change it to provide for a longer tenure.

The fact that now we do not have, unfortunately, a Secretary of State for External Affairs points to the necessity of having someone in that department who at least will have access to the Prime Minister from the membership of this house, particularly at this time. If there had not been any delay in this matter it would have been possible for the Prime Minister to have available the services of a parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs long before this, and the delay which has taken place indicates that what is now being done should have been done 14 months ago.

I only hope the Prime Minister will have good fortune at his side when he comes to make these appointments. I hope they will be made on the basis of competence. In that regard, as I said when I spoke in this house on this subject a year ago, when he comes to the county of Essex he will certainly have two very able gentlemen, and I tell him that I will offer no criticism whatever if he appoints both the hon. member for Essex West and the hon. member for Essex South as parliamentary assistants. That will add to the qualities of his government, but I hope it will not ensure its success.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise briefly to express the support of this group for this measure because we believe that under present conditions parliamentary secretaries are necessary and can render a service to parliament and a service to the public. Before going on with my few remarks, I do want to deal with the obvious inconsistencies between various members of the Liberal party who have spoken in this debate. We had the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River pleading with the Prime Minister not to adopt the British practice and call them parliamentary secretaries. Then we had the hon. member for Essex East who has just taken his seat criticizing another section of the bill and wondering why the Prime Minister did not adopt the British practice in this respect. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that we in this group are quite willing, when it comes to the procedures and operations of the parliamentary system, to receive our instruction from the mother of parliaments in Great Britain. They have had long experience and their practices have been proven worth while throughout the years.

We do hope that the Prime Minister will give consideration to competence, not to geographical regions and things of that sort. Secondly, we hope he will give consideration to youth. While possibly out of a spirit of humanitarianism it may be necessary to consider a few gray heads, we would not object to that so long as the number was not more than four out of sixteen. We do think that young men should get the opportunity to serve in these positions. I think, generally speaking, that parliamentary secretaryships are looked upon as training grounds for cabinet positions at a later date, and I think the young men should have their opportunity to show their competence in this respect.

There are a few questions which I trust the Prime Minister will answer when he replies to the criticism on section 1. We in this group would like to know what rank these parliamentary secretaries will hold. In Great Britain they are treated as junior ministers, and there is a provision in their table of precedence for parliamentary secretaries. There is no such provision in our table of precedence, and I would like to know whether there will be consideration given to that. What are their duties? While the bill particularly mentions that they shall assist the minister in such manner as the minister directs, we in this group would like to know more specifically what is expected of them with respect to assisting the minister and with respect to their duties in the house, and just what opposition members can expect from them by way of assistance. I know that parliamentary secretaries can be of great assistance to a minister and save a lot of his time by providing an opportunity for members to take up their questions with them outside the house and on other occasions. We would like a more detailed explanation of their duties.

In addition, will they be required to resign any directorships, the same as a minister? That is the practice in Great Britain, and seeing that the Prime Minister has followed fairly well the practice which prevails in Great Britain in the drafting of this bill, surely he will insist on that. We in this group are glad that the bill provides for appointments for only one year. We are all human beings and it gives persons appointed as parliamentary secretaries some opportunity for initiative. They are not just appointed and then go on till the end of the parliament. They have to demonstrate their ability not only to the Prime Minister but to the rest of the house, and we think that is an excellent provision. It provides an opportunity for the Prime Minister to drop any duds, not that I am suggesting that he will appoint duds, but it is the sort of thing which could possibly happen.

That is all I have to say at this stage. I hope the Prime Minister will give some fuller explanation of the questions other hon. members and I have asked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the discussion has been most helpful and beneficial, because we have had the advantage of listening to those who have occupied these positions in the past. One of them, the hon. member for Essex East, ultimately became a minister within a year, ten months after he showed his peculiar capacity. Then there was the hon. member for Laurier, who too became a minister. Then I was going to mention the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, but he came up another way. Then there is also the hon. gentleman for Kenora-Rainy River. I must say he spoke with the experience of one who discharged his responsibilities in a way that sometimes we do not mention; but I must say, as I listened to him in the days he was parliamentary secretary to the minister of finance, that I could not but think he had devoted himself very diligently to a very difficult job.

The general attitude, of course, has been one of appreciation of the need. There was an expression of doubt that seemed to characterize the remarks of the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres. He was a parliamentary assistant and discharged his responsibility in a manner that could not have been characterized as infantile, which is an expression which came to his lips as he discussed this matter. I do not even want to think of that term, because I know how seriously he deported himself, and how when he was in New York as parliamentary assistant to the then secretary of state for external affairs I listened to him with that attention which his presence and remarks demanded, and I say that in all sincerity.

What are the difficulties here? Listening to the hon. member for Essex East I must say I was impressed by the tenor of his remarks and by the fact that he seemed to be concerned about political embarrassments. I can understand that. He referred to them, of course, in a different sense to the sense I have in mind, but he did refer to them, and I could not pass the opportunity of saying that I can understand his feelings in this regard.

Questions were raised as to the reasons for the delay. One hon. gentleman referred to the fact that I had made a reference to Mr. Mackenzie King. I frequently do refer to him, for I sat over yonder and watched him for years and saw him operating. Sometimes as I look over at the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I seem to detect an unseen person there behind him, and the manner in which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate speaks on occasion reminds me that his former chief must at one time or another have exercised that influence which some of us believe he always exercised in the background.

I mentioned Mr. King. In 1935, in the course of the speech from the throne of that year, Mr. King was shocked by the fact that it was the adoption of a British principle when he promised he would provide legislation for the setting up of parliamentary secretaries. Approximately eight years later when he did introduce, not legislation, but simply an estimate which was effective from year to year, he endeavoured to explain why it was that he had not continued in his early adherence to the expression "parliamentary secretaries" and why he had come to the conclusion that the term "parliamentary assistants" was best. The major argument appeared to be that the appointment is from year to year. It has always been that.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The estimates which were introduced each year from 1943 on to 1957 read as follows:

> To provide hereby, notwithstanding anything contained in the Financial Administration Act or the provisions of the Senate and the House of Commons Act respecting the independence of parliament, for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to each member of the House of Commons appointed by the governor in council to be a parliamentary assistant (which appointment shall not render such member ineligible or disqualify him as a member of the House of Commons) to assist a minister of the crown in such manner and to such an extent as the minister may determine—

I emphasize those words; they are almost identical with those contained in clause 3 of the bill.

> —and to represent his department in the House of Commons in the absence of the minister therefrom, a salary of $4,000 per annum and pro rata for any period less than one year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the Prime Minister permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to continue. In so far as the actual appointments were concerned, they were not revolving in any way, but at the end of each year they terminated because of the fact that though not requiring a further order in council there was no further vote within the estimates to cover any appointment for another year. Thus, in fact, it was an appointment from year to year. The simple fact is that we are following in effect what was done in the past, and in no way is there a suggestion that it means that there will be wholesale alterations or changes. This simply allows for the assurance that each year each one who is appointed will realize that his appointment is one which continues only for the period of the year for which he is appointed.

The question was asked: why the expression "parliamentary secretary"? I adopted the view of Mr. King, and this was his first thought on the subject in 1935. Then I read the British practice, and I was particularly impressed with the book written by the Right Hon. Mr. Herbert Morrison on the British parliament and the general system, and it was on that basis that the alteration was made.

The hon. member for Kootenay West asked whether the parliamentary secretaries are to be given the status of junior ministers, and without any qualification in this regard I say that they are not. We have today a different system from that which exists in the United Kingdom. There, in effect, the ministry consists of two grades—those in the cabinet and those outside the cabinet. Originally, in 1917 or 1918 when Sir Robert Borden introduced this system into the House of Commons here. he did have in mind that parliamentary secretaries—which, incidentally, was the name then given to those hon. members, few in number as they were, who were appointed to those positions—might on occasion sit in the cabinet. At the moment my colleagues and I have no favourable views in that regard.

In so far as tables of precedence are concerned, may I say to the hon. member for Kootenay West that tables of precedence are one thing that have never been of particular concern for me. As a matter of fact I do not know how they are determined; perhaps the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, having occupied the various positions that he has in the civil service and having, also, been secretary of state, would be able to enlighten hon. members on this point. All I know is that it is in the red book. Who determines it, I do not know. I can say that as far as parliamentary secretaries are concerned, there is no suggestion of precedence other than that during the course of the discharge of their responsibilities in the House of Commons and outside they will on appropriate occasions as the minister directs perform those duties which are in essence comprehended by the expression "parliamentary secretary".

A question was raised by one hon. member—I think it was the hon. member for Kootenay West—as to whether parliamentary secretaries would be required to divest themselves of directorships in companies. I have always been a strong believer in the necessity of members of a cabinet being divested of any interest in any corporation, by which I mean, not the interest of a shareholder in the various companies in which one might buy shares but an interest as a director of any corporation. I think that has been generally accepted, although some years ago when there was a discussion of this question in the house the then prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, as I recall, while he himself had divested himself of all interest in this regard and felt, personally, that such a course should be followed, acknowledged that one minister or another did hold certain directorships.

I am speaking from recollection but I believe Mr. St. Laurent said it was a question for the individual to determine. I believe those occupying positions in the cabinet should, without question, divest themselves of that kind of interest. That is the view I hold. In so far as parliamentary secretaries are concerned the line is much finer but I believe that in the general interests of the preservation of the parliamentary system in its entirety, and the assurance that no consideration other than the determination of the responsibilities of the member shall enter into the equation, parliamentary secretaries should follow a similar course.

The Leader of the Opposition dealt in general with the matter and I thank him for his remarks and for the general support that has been expressed. There may be some questions that will arise later on as the various clauses come up for consideration.

The hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres thought there should be an increase in the amount of $4,000 to be paid as remuneration. I know that those appointed as parliamentary secretaries really could not express any determined adversity to such a suggestion but as for myself I cannot accept that proposal as appropriate having regard to all the circumstances. The hon. gentleman said that good men should be chosen on the basis of a full-time job. The hon. gentleman served in the capacity of parliamentary assistant and I think he would modestly allow himself to come within the ambit of the descriptive words "good men". He served for that amount and at no time in those days did I ever hear him suggest that an additional amount should be paid. I cannot believe that the hon. gentleman was too serious in that suggestion. I believe he was advancing a general argument as to the remuneration that goes to those in public life and not endeavouring seriously to advocate that at this time there should be such an increase.

In that connection may I say that those who serve in public life and who accept such responsibilities do so in the largest possible degree on the basis of the service they can render. I know of no one who enters public life in return for the compensation which appertains to the holding of public position.

Indeed, I have often said of hon. members of the House of Commons—and I am looking now at the hon. gentleman directly opposite —how many of them, had they chosen to stay in private life, would find themselves today much better off monetarily speaking than is the case. It is true that if we cannot recruit through the public service the best men, even though the remuneration is not that which could be expected in private life, to serve with the same devotion they would bring to their private activities, then public life would indeed be the poorer as the result.

There is no suggestion of there being any hidden purpose in this legislation. The question of handling it in this fashion rather than doing what is done through the medium of an estimate answers itself.

I listened to the arguments of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on another subject and with that convincing power he exhibits on some occasions he was able to convince me that there were no sound reasons why the appointments in question should not be by legislative enactment directly rather than through the backdoor method of an estimate voted annually. In so far as the term is concerned, may I again say there is no question of the kind of representation that has been suggested here.

As for the hon. member for Essex East, I was glad to see the degree to which he showed an interest in the assurance that all important parts of Ontario shall be represented. At the expense of reiteration may I say I used to wonder as he sat over here, with that sense of fairness with which he always clothed his words, how badly he must have felt when for a period of—perhaps it was 22 years—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, no: 6½ or 7 years; but they were not 7 lean years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —there were always a number of Liberal members from Toronto on this side of the house from time to time throughout that period and yet that great city remained under what appeared to be a ban that must have shocked the finer sensibilities of those hon. members appointed similarly to the hon. member for Essex East.

The suggestions made by the hon. member for Essex East and the suggestions other hon. members have made as to representation for all parts of the country lacked one important reference and that is the necessity of appropriate representation among those of the other major race. All of those things will be taken into the fullest consideration when the appointments are made. I thank hon. gentlemen in all parts of the house and in both opposition parties for their contributions and suggestions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rose to ask the Prime Minister a question and at his request did not ask it. I shall now make the point I was going to make in the form of a question. I intend to resist the Prime Minister's very appealing invitation to give a dissertation on the table of precedence. I believe I will save that for another occasion when we are not so anxious to get the session over.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But could you really not help? Do not pass up an opportunity.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, if the right hon. gentleman would like to have a private conference with me I could give him a great deal of information that perhaps it would be inadvisable for either of us to have appear on Hansard with regard to that particular subject.

Before I come to the point I originally rose to make, I wish to say a word about what the Prime Minister said about the backdoor method of appointments. I did not in the last session criticize the legislation respecting parliamentary assistants. If the Prime Minister will look up the record he will find that I did say I thought this had gone on long enough and no longer needed to be regarded as an experiment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I rise to say that I did not suggest that the backdoor method ever came into the mind of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, as a matter of fact it did. We know the Prime Minister used the term and I objected to this method but not with respect to parliamentary assistants. It seems to me that the really objectionable thing in our present situation is that the government chooses to appoint ministers of the crown by what the Prime Minister sees fit to refer to as the backdoor method. To that I take the same exception as I did a year ago. I think it is highly objectionable that ministers of the crown should be remunerated by an item in the estimates, but I never shared the views of Mr. Knowles when he was here that an appropriation act was not just as good legislation as any other kind. Perhaps it is not as convenient for lawyers to refer to but it is just as good legislation.

It seems to me, so far as parliamentary secretaries are concerned who do not share in the collective responsibility of the government and are not members of the government, that if the government chooses to legislate for their remuneration in the estimates through the appropriation act or chooses to do it this way, is a matter of relative indifference. I think on balance it is slightly better to do it this way. But I do think—and I would not have introduced the matter if the Prime Minister had not—it is very objectionable indeed to have ministers of the crown remunerated through the estimates and I do hope that before the session is over, if the Prime Minister continues to have ministers without portfolio whose utility some of us have some doubt about, it would be desirable to provide proper legislation for the purpose.

But what I rose to say—and it is very presumptuous of me to take issue with the Prime Minister in this—is that I think the Prime Minister was wrong when he said that parliamentary assistants in the past were appointed for a year at a time. The Prime Minister read the estimate. It is true that the remuneration was provided one year at a time but it is my understanding—and I saw many of the orders in council, though not all of them—that there was no term ever put in the orders in council. It would be my opinion—and I give this opinion without asking a fee because I am only a law student and not a lawyer—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Because what?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am only a law student and not a lawyer. It is my opinion—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You cannot charge for that.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that so long as the order in council subsisted and so long as the hon. gentleman remained a member of parliament he was a parliamentary assistant, though he might not wish to assist very much if his remuneration stopped; but I do not think that would prevent him from going on being a parliamentary assistant so long as the order in council remained in force. Therefore, I think the Prime Minister was wrong in law and in fact in saying that the appointments were made for one year at a time. They were made in fact for an indefinite period, the way in which we on this side of the house feel that the provision should be made under term 29, that no time limit should be put upon it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I really do not want to get into term 29 because that is something that we should not discuss on this occasion although the hon. gentleman, on every occasion that he discusses something, brings in some matter connected with term 29. As far as the hon. gentleman's views are concerned, I give them the weight which I always give to expressions of his views. We are in disagreement on this matter but it is a disagreement and I am sure a sincere disagreement.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the practice has now been established in the consideration of this bill in committee of dealing with clauses 1 and 2 together, therefore, I propose to follow that course because I have something to say not only on clause 1 but more particularly on clause 2 with which the Prime Minister and others have already dealt.

So far as the Prime Minister's argument about the nature of the previous appointments being for one year and one year only is concerned, I think he was wrong. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has pointed out, the impression created by this legislation is that the appointments are to be made for one year only though, of course, they may be renewed. The Prime Minister pointed out that that is not the intention of the bill. Then he brought forward the analogies to prove that he was right in his own interpretation. Yet I would point out to him that members of the government are appointed under I believe a statute but their salaries have to be voted each year in the estimates. If those salaries were not voted each year it would not affect their positions as ministers of the crown in any way, shape or form. I believe that would be the case in connection with this legislation, as my hon. friend has pointed out, unless the order in council specifies to the contrary, it would be of an indefinite character or for one year, whichever was expressed in the order in council. In our day when we appointed parliamentary assistants there certainly was no suggestion that the appointments should be made for one year only and I would be very surprised indeed if it were found that the orders in council passed at that time had that effect.

Certainly this legislation on the face of it seems to provide for a contrary practice and we on this side think that that is bad. Indeed, the Prime Minister himself, when he was speaking a few moments ago used these words, and I took them down as he said them, that the procedure in this bill was adopted so that each one—and by "each one" he meant each parliamentary secretary—will realize that he is appointed for the year. That is what we think is wrong in this legislation. Of course, there are other features of the legislation, in clause 2, particularly, which might be criticized. We are proceeding not by estimate but by legislation and though an item in the estimates—as my hon. friend who has just spoken has pointed out—is in a sense, I think, proceeding by legislation, nevertheless it is a more flexible form of legislation. When we pass a special bill for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries, as we are proposing to do now, it means that if at any time, for instance, the government of the day wished to add one more parliamentary secretary to the 16, or two more or three more, that could only be done by an act of parliament.

As we see it—I do not see how there can be any other interpretation—this bill does provide for the principle of rotation in the appointment of parliamentary secretaries, and it is that to which we take exception.

If rotation is good as a principle in connection with the appointment of parliamentary secretaries, surely, Mr. Chairman, it might be argued that it is equally good as a principle to apply even to cabinet ministers, because some of the advantages of rotation which my right hon. friend has mentioned, not on this occasion but on a previous occasion, surely would attach to other appointments; but I do not think it is good. I think it would be a bad practice to appoint parliamentary secretaries for one year only. The clause states:

A parliamentary secretary shall be appointed to hold office for a period not exceeding 12 months—

As the Prime Minister indicated the other day, the main purpose behind the appointment of parliamentary secretaries—and it is a good purpose—is to relieve ministers of some of the burdens they are carrying. I have had, of course, some experience in office and I have had some experience—and a very happy experience it has been—in working with parliamentary secretaries. My last parliamentary secretary, my colleague sitting just behind me, has spoken on this matter and perhaps I should interpolate at this point to say that when my hon. friend from Richelieu-Vercheres talked about the possible desirability of increasing the salaries of parliamentary secretaries he was making the argument that if those positions are to be full time, not for one year only but for full time; if they are to be of that character, then perhaps $4,000 a year was not enough; that is, to pay a parliamentary secretary who was doing full-time work for his minister, which was not the situation in previous times.

He went on to say that if, however, the position of parliamentary secretary was not that kind of position, and if it became the kind of position we have in mind it may be under this legislation which provides for a one-year appointment only, then perhaps $4,000 a year might be too much. Perhaps it would be too much. If a parliamentary secretary is appointed for one year only, how can he really learn the work of his department during a period so short as that? I know from my own experience, and I am sure my hon. friends on this side who have been parliamentary assistants will agree with me, that it takes a parliamentary assistant at least six months to become familiar with the work of his department to the point where he can really carry part of the ministerial burden. If he knows he is only going to be in office as a parliamentary secretary for one year, I do not think you can assume he is going to be able to do that part of the work which the minister would want him to do. This is our main criticism of this part of the legislation.

I suggest that perhaps an appointment of this kind, and there might be 16 appointed so that in four years there would be 64 of them, would be a kind of political scholarship to be awarded by the Prime Minister to some of his more deserving colleagues. I suggest that political scholarships might more properly be awarded by the Canada Council which has been set up for the purpose of awarding scholarships. If the Prime Minister replies to this argument by saying, well, there is no objection to reappointment and perhaps we should assume that they will be reappointed, my answer to that would be that this legislation says the appointment shall be for a period not exceeding 12 months. Surely, that is the assumption in the legislation, and if the parliamentary secretary feels that the only chance he has of continuing in his job is to become valuable in his job, that will not give him a sense of security and achievement in his work which he will need to have if he is going to do the job which the government no doubt had in mind in appointing him in the first place.

Now there is another objection and it is, I think, quite a strong one to the appointment for one year only. I touched on this a few moments ago. A parliamentary assistant not only has to assist the minister in the house and out of the house, but he must also become familiar with the official work of the department. This means he has to establish a close, and I would hope constructive relationship with the deputy minister and the senior officials. It is not going to be any encouragement, though perhaps encouragement is not the right word, to the senior officials of the department to work as closely with the parliamentary assistant as they should, and it is not going to be much encouragement for the parliamentary assistant to work closely with the senior officials if he should feel that by the end of the year his scholarship will be over and someone else will be taking over from him. We think, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that this particular provision of the legislation is not designed to enable the government to fulfil the functions which they had in mind, so we were told, in introducing this legislation in the first place.

This will, of course, relieve the Prime Minister of one difficulty. He will now have 40, 50 or 60 men whom he can appoint during the course of this parliament instead of 16. This has already been pointed out. I can understand that this is a very real difficulty for the Prime Minister and the members of his government. He is not in the happy position Mr. King must have been in 1943 when he was making appointments as parliamentary assistants. He had, in the list of those who might be considered, my hon. friends who are sitting on my right and on my left, and in that he should have been under no compulsion to act as the Prime Minister must be with his wealth of resources.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I seem to recollect that some of the appointments did not meet with the favour of some of the other members.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister knows far more about the hidden political history than I do because he was in the opposition at that time and that is where you find out what goes on in government circles. This present bill will serve this purpose which I have just mentioned, that it will make possible the appointment of a great many members opposite as parliamentary assistants. It has been said that such are the vicissitudes of political life in France that 70 or 80 per cent of the distinguished gentlemen who go into public life in France, after a period of 15 or 20 years are able to put on their visiting cards the words, "ancien Président du Conseil". If this legislation is passed it will have that result. There will be many hon. members who will be able to put on their visiting card, "Sometime Parliamentary Secretary". While we appreciate the advantages of this provision, we are also conscious of its disadvantages and it is those we are pointing out at this time. So when we come to clause 2, I am going to have one of my colleagues move an amendment.

Mr. Crestohl: For the purpose of clarification, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. It has not been established as yet whether these appointments are going to be for 12 months or will these people serve only during the sitting of parliament? If they are to serve beyond the sitting of parliament, will the parliamentary assistant be required to reside in Ottawa so that he may be close to his department for the entire period of 12 months? If that should be the case, does the Prime Minister not think that the $4,000 additional would not be sufficient to take care of the burdens which may be imposed upon the parliamentary secretary if he is to properly discharge his duties?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In answer to that I may say that clause 5 says:

[Mr. Pearson.]

The governor in council may make regulations providing for the payment to a parliamentary secretary of reasonable travelling and other expenses

(a) incurred by him in the discharge of his duties during a session of parliament while away from Ottawa, or

(b) incurred by him in the discharge of his duties while away from his ordinary place of residence during a period when parliament is not in session.

I do not think it was at any time ever the expectation that the parliamentary secretary should remain in Ottawa during the entire year. The appointment would be for a period of a year, or in the words of the estimate to which I referred earlier, there would be a salary of $4,000 per annum and pro rata for any period less than a year. At no time did parliamentary assistants reside in Ottawa during the entire year. There were times when they returned, and the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres will corroborate this, to Ottawa after the session. This was only in respect of particular matters that brought them back to Ottawa.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Appointment of parliamentary secretaries.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to move an amendment to clause 2 following upon the remarks by the Leader of the Opposition. I move:

That clause 2, subsection (3), be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

A parliamentary secretary shall hold office at the discretion of the governor in council and shall cease to hold office when he ceases to be a member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Herridge: On behalf of this group, Mr. Chairman, may I say that we are opposed to the amendment because we think the principle of subclause 3 is sound. The appointment for one year in effect has been the practice. I think the Prime Minister explained that throughout the years that has been in effect the practice. While it is not necessary that the parliamentary secretary will be replaced each year, we in this group think it is good practice and leaves scope for initiative and devotion to duty to which, of course, we pay great devotion.

Mr. McIlraith: I think there is one matter that should be drawn to the attention of the committee. It arises out of the Prime Minister's remarks earlier this afternoon and has to do with the former method of appointment of parliamentary assistants under authority of an item contained in the estimates. His argument was that those appointments were for one year only because the estimate was only for the duration of one year. The fact is that great numbers of appointments are made by government for a term of years but the provision for payment is made through an annual estimate. That is the method used in almost all circumstances by the government in providing money for the payment of persons appointed to various types of positions. Hence the argument is not quite valid in its entirety. I want to point that out to the Prime Minister. When he examines his argument tomorrow I think he will find that he went further than the facts warranted in arguing the point he was seeking to make. From hearing the hon. member for Kootenay West it is obvious that is so, at least in so far as the hon. member is concerned. The practice with regard to the previous appointments was to have them in fact continue for a longer period of time, usually during the life of the particular parliament in which the persons were appointed and until that parliament was dissolved. I want to draw that point to the attention of the committee before they vote on this amendment.

There is one other matter on which the Prime Minister I think may have innocently misled the committee and it is this. He made the remark that in no circumstances were parliamentary assistants ever here during the time when parliament was not in session or in very rare circumstances—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. I said they were ever here. I know they were.

Mr. McIlraith: —during the period of time when the house was not in session. That is not wholly accurate. In one particular case with which I am familiar a great deal of work was done between sessions; and during the whole of the time between some sessions. In some between sessions periods much more active and difficult work was done than that done while the house was in session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the hon. gentleman tell me to what parliamentary assistant he refers?

Mr. McIlraith: I thought it was obvious; I was referring to myself. In the period of time when the defence production department was being set up and also at the end of the great war when the department of reconstruction and supply was being reduced and terminating its war work, there was no doubt at all about the fact that in those periods between sessions of parliament continuous work was being done by that particular parliamentary assistant, and it was extremely heavy work. I just wanted to correct the record on those two points because I thought it was not appropriate to have the record left as it was.

Mr. Crestohl: I support this amendment because the Prime Minister's explanation did not quite satisfy me about this question of expenses. It is quite conceivable that while the house is not in session ministers who have business to attend to abroad will want their parliamentary assistants handy, and the deputy minister would want the parliamentary assistant handy when the minister is absent for a month or so. Would it then be necessary for the parliamentary assistant to be in Ottawa—if, for example, his residence is in Vancouver—under subclause (b) of clause 5? Will his residence in Ottawa during that time, if he is participating, so to speak, in the routine of the department, be a necessary expense which he can charge and which will be payable to him under the heading of these expenses? On the other hand if he is appointed on the basis of it being a full-time job it may be that his residence should be close to his offices here and therefore the salary perhaps may not be sufficient.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Chevrier) negatived: yeas, 16; nays, 103.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Duties.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister this question. Does he intend to appoint parliamentary assistants at the end of 12 months? What we are trying to ascertain is whether or not the argument put forward from this side has any validity. Is it the Prime Minister's intention that parliamentary assistants should be appointed only for 12 months and that a new one will then be appointed?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought I made it clear that there is no question of rotation.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Travelling and other expenses.

Mr. Crestohl: On clause 5, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Prime Minister can give some indication what he has in mind when he speaks of "other expenses". I can understand that a parliamentary secretary will receive reasonable travelling expenses, but with regard to "other expenses", the word "other" has no limit, of course. I think it should be limited in some form.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I thought the meaning of this clause was quite clear. It says:

—reasonable travelling and other expenses

Provision for Parliamentary Secretaries

(a) incurred by him in the discharge of his duties during a session of parliament while away from Ottawa—

In other words, if he is sent away in discharge of his responsibilities while the session is on, naturally his hotel subsistence will be paid. Then if he is called away from his ordinary place of residence during the period when parliament is not in session, his expenses which are necessarily incurred, his hotel and travelling expenses, will be paid. That is what I had in mind, that he should not be out of pocket. I do not want "other expenses" interpreted in the sense that it would imply a large amount over and above what is ordinarily payable for hotel expenses. I mean by "other expenses" simply what I have stated and nothing more.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, if I understood the Prime Minister correctly a few moments ago, he indicated there would really be no duties for a parliamentary secretary while parliament was not in session. The Prime Minister was taking exception, if that is the appropriate word, to the argument we were using that it should be a full-time appointment. If it is not a full-time appointment but merely a parliamentary sessional appointment, what duties could a parliamentary secretary have between sessions which would require expenses of this kind?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres would be an example. There were certainly occasions between sessions when as parliamentary assistant to the Leader of the Opposition in his then capacity as secretary of state for external affairs he would have incurred expenses while he was in New York in connection with his official business.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, but those expenses were incurred in the circumstances mentioned by my hon. friend by a parliamentary assistant appointed to a Canadian delegation to an international meeting, and he would have incurred the same expenses exactly if he had been a member of parliament and not a parliamentary assistant. My hon. friend who was a parliamentary assistant in those days will recall more than one occasion when I asked him to come to Ottawa and talk to me about various matters which did not involve representing Canada abroad, and in those days, in the department over which I presided, he would not have been entitled even to his travelling expenses to Ottawa.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It has been well pointed out by different members that such expenses should be allowed. As the Leader of the Opposition says, something to correct that situation should be done, and those who were his followers agreed some action should be taken in that regard, and indeed the larger salary provided would give support to this.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister, of course, has drawn more from my remarks than they would warrant, which is something he has done occasionally in the past. If that is true and the parliamentary assistant can charge expenses in the same way presumably that a minister can, then apparently he is going to be on duty 12 months of the year and it is in a sense a full-time appointment. Is not that a reasonable conclusion to draw from the Prime Minister's argument?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, because apparently the Leader of the Opposition has not read clause 3, which says:

The parliamentary secretary to a minister shall assist the minister in such manner as the minister directs.

Parliamentary assistants are required, if the minister feels that a matter requires attention such as referred to by the hon. member for Ottawa West. The hon. member said he worked very hard, and I know that he was living here in Ottawa. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition could tell me whether other parliamentary assistants received their expenses. If they did not, I am convinced by the argument that they should have, even though I do not accept the argument that the amount of $4,000 a year is insufficient.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Tomorrow.

Mr. Pearson: At the next sitting of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, at the next sitting of the house.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MORTGAGES, CERTIFICATES, PILOTS, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hees for the second reading of Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last evening I was discussing second reading of this bill, and I would like to continue my remarks.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have the floor for a moment because I intend, with the hon. members' permission, to ask for the adjournment of debate on this bill for the following reason. Last evening the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) suggested that there should be a firm and general basis of agreement with the United States regarding pilotage on the great lakes before the Canadian legislation dealing with this matter is finally made effective. In fact there have been extensive consultations with the United States authorities on this matter already and numerous meetings have been held. Of the two most important points involved, we have already reached agreement with the United States on one; that is, the reciprocal recognition of pilotage certificates or licences which might be issued by the authorities of either country. However, there has not been firm agreement as yet as to the basis upon which pilotage requirements should apply in the waters of the great lakes and the areas which should be involved. The reason for this is, I understand, largely because the United States has not yet reached an internal decision on this matter, although we in Canada have reached a tentative decision as to the solution we favour.

While the legislation proposed in this bill is sufficiently general to permit this matter to be worked out satisfactorily within its terms, I am quite prepared to see another attempt made to reach agreement with the United States authorities on this additional point, and indeed will make arrangements myself at the earliest opportunity to visit Washington for discussion of this subject. I would therefore ask the hon. member for Laurier who has the floor if he would be good enough to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, before I do that there are one or two matters I would like to bring to your attention. In the first place, I welcome the suggestion which the hon. minister has made. I think it is all to the good and I commend him and congratulate him for the decision which he has taken. I also think that it will be an excellent idea if the hon. minister does go to Washington to see if some new agreement cannot be made with the United States authorities before the matter is brought back to the house again. However, my hope last evening was, and still is, that a committee from Canada and the United States be established and that an agreement be worked out so that such agreement can come back to the house.

I have not finished my speech, sir. I still have a considerable amount of material dealing with the very contentious clause No. 8. I wanted to spend some time in bringing to the attention of the minister how important and how serious this clause is. I do not wish to begin any consideration of this subject matter now, other than say that I do not think it is affected by the agreement which the minister hopes he will be able to make. I do hope the minister will find it possible to withdraw this clause, because it is going to affect adversely the pilots in the province of Quebec, particularly in the Montreal and Quebec districts and in the Kingston districts. It is going to affect an industry which has been in existence in the province of Quebec for over 200 years, and it will do away with that industry. I hope that when the matter comes back to the house the minister will find it possible to withdraw this clause from the bill. I want to reserve my rights when this legislation comes back before us again and to this end I point out that I have not completed my remarks and that I should like an opportunity to complete them, though now, at the request and at the suggestion of the minister, I propose to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member moves the adjournment of the debate, may I remind him that by making such a motion he would lose his right to speak. It should therefore be understood that he has not forfeited his right to speak further when this matter is discussed on another occasion, and the consent of the house should be obtained. Does the house so order?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I might also say that the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) would like two minutes before the hon. member moves his motion in order to express the view of his group. This is largely a matter to be brought about by arrangement. Would the hon. member for Laurier and the house permit?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to thank hon. members of the house for having given me unanimous consent to my saying a word or so in relation to this somewhat unusual procedure. We support the proposal made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) for the adjournment of this debate because we think it is essential to protect Canadian sovereign rights in this very important matter, as mentioned by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) during what we considered to be his excellent speech last evening on this bill. We are in agreement with the hon. gentleman in this case, and I trust that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) will be pleased. We believe that it is most unwise to proceed in this matter along unilateral lines, and we repeat the suggestion made by the hon. member for Laurier that there should be consultation and co-operation between Canada and the United States before decisions are reached.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like on behalf of this group to compliment the minister on what we consider to be a very wise response to representations from the opposition and on his willingness to have further consideration given to this matter since the debate last night. We trust that after the procedure suggested by the hon. member for Laurier has been carried out this measure will come back to us in a form which will fully protect the rights of the people of Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) to move the adjournment of the debate so that I may be allowed, with the consent of the house, to resume the discussion when the matter comes before us again?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On the motion of Mr. Bourget the debate was adjourned.

FREIGHT RATES

MEASURE RESPECTING REDUCTION OF CLASS AND COMMODITY RATES

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker when the house was discussing this matter last evening at another stage, namely the resolution stage, I indicated that I should like to make some additional remarks on second reading of the bill. I am prepared to make those remarks now, not with the intention of delaying this legislation but because of comments which were made earlier on the subject by others.

Before I come to that, may I say that this measure, Bill C-38, an act to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic, is, on the face of it, simple enough. The pertinent and governing clause is, of course, clause 3 and it can be divided under several heads. By virtue of clause 3, the board:

1. Shall make an order.

2. Shall revise class and commodity rates other than competitive rates of railway companies.

[Mr. Herridge.]

3. Shall revise them downward as they were increased by the judgment—the 17 per cent case—so that in the opinion of the board the estimated aggregate gross revenues of the companies will be reduced by $20 million.

That is the effective clause. Clause 4 provides for the payments to be made out of the consolidated revenue fund. Clauses 5 and 6 I do not think are in the slightest degree contentious, and clause 7 is inserted in the bill so there shall be no conflict between the Railway Act and this act. Under clause 7 the board may allow a reduction in the select territory or in the rates subject to the Maritime Freight Rates Act only to meet reductions in the cost of operations. It is now stated that a payment to a railway company under the new statute shall be deemed to be a reduction in the case of the railway operations. But I shall go back to clause 3, which, in my opinion, is the only one that can in any way be considered to be contentious, and I ask the house and the minister to consider the words in line 18 of clause 3, "increased by 17 per cent". The clause reads:

> Forthwith upon the coming into force of this act, the board shall by order require the companies to revise such of their class rates and commodity rates (other than competitive rates) in effect at the commencement of this act as were, pursuant to order No. 96300, increased by 17 per cent.

The point I am making is this: supposing the railways were unable to increase their rates by 17 per cent, and there was evidence of this placed before the board. Suppose the railways were able to increase their rates by only 10 per cent or by only 3 per cent, because that is all the traffic would bear? I point out that there are a number of cases, as was stated in the evidence given before the board of transport commissioners, in which the 17 per cent increase could not be wholly put into effect. What happens then? Does it mean that in these rates there would be a consequent reduction of 7 per cent?

I think we are entitled to clarification. In other words, will this rate or these rates, where the full effect of the 17 per cent has not been felt because of the conditions I have mentioned, enjoy the full effect of the subsidy? I leave that to go to another equally contentious point in my opinion.

The minister has said that the government does not propose to permit any further general increase in freight rates pending the decision or the study made by the royal commission. I do not think I am incorrectly quoting the minister but if he feels I am I will quote from the statement he made. The minister having said that, I ask him this question. Is he or the house familiar with section 328 (5) of the Railway Act?

I ask the house to listen to these words. That section reads as follows:

—the powers given to the board under this act to fix, determine and enforce just and reasonable rates, and to change and alter rates as changing conditions or cost of transportation may from time to time require, are not limited or in any manner affected by the provisions of any act of the parliament of Canada—

This means that when an application is before the board of transport commissioners for determination it is their duty and responsibility to hear the case. There is no other act of parliament which can prevent the board from doing that. A fortiori, there is therefore no statement that may be made by the minister, the government or the Prime Minister which can stop the board of transport commissioners from hearing the case.

Mr. Hees: That is right.

Mr. Chevrier: Having said that, where does that lead the board of transport commissioners? How can the board in any way be affected by the statement the minister has made. Unfortunately I cannot locate the statement at the moment.

Mr. Hees: May I answer the hon. member at this time?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows only too well the government has no right at all to interfere with the board of transport commissioners either hearing the case or bringing down a judgment. The government has no intention of doing either of those things. However, when a freight rate award is appealed to the governor in council, the governor in council has the option of either allowing of disallowing the increase that has been made by the board.

Mr. Chevrier: I was coming to that point, Mr. Speaker. That is not what the minister said.

Mr. Hees: That is what the minister meant.

Mr. Chevrier: But what the minister said and what he meant are two different things. If the board of transport commissioners are going to be allowed to hear the case—and having made a determination an appeal may be made under section 53 (1) of the Railway Act—that is one matter. The minister I am sure gave careful consideration to the statement he made because if my recollection is right he put it on Hansard on more than one occasion. What I am complaining about now is that, by inference, that statement is a direction to the board or perhaps, it is a direction to the Canadian National Railways not to proceed with the application which is now before the board.

Mr. Hees: It is intended to be neither, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: Of course, the minister did not make that clear. On the contrary what was said was not at all in accordance either with what I am saying now or with what the minister has said within the last few moments. In order to make the thing quite clear what the minister should have said was this: "We are not going to interfere with the application now before the board but when the order is appealed by the provinces or by any other group we will hear that application under section 53 (1) of the act and decide against it." The minister has closed the door, however, by saying there is going to be no further increase. If it is found that within the period of a year the wages of the railway workers have increased and it becomes necessary because of changing conditions in Canada to increase these wages, then the minister and the government are stopped from giving to those workers a further increase because of the statement which has been made.

Turning now to another matter, the bill, as I said, by means of clause 3 directs the board to make an order in accordance with the manner I have outlined earlier. This is the measure promised by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) when speaking as the acting prime minister in November, 1958 he said this was the measure designed to relieve against the discrimination which existed in freight rates and to relieve against inequalities including any that may be aggravated by the present increase in the amount of 17 per cent. The other measure is a royal commission the terms of which we have not yet got although the Prime Minister did indicate yesterday that its appointment would come before third reading.

We in this group and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) tried to get a further commitment from the Prime Minister to the effect that we might be able to discuss the terms of reference when the announcement was made. We were not successful in doing this notwithstanding the fact that when he made his statement in November, 1958 the then acting prime minister made it quite clear that the other measure he had in mind—whether it related to a royal commission or another inquiry was not made clear at the time—would result in the consideration of railway problems and railway policy. He indicated that the inquiry would consider not only a comprehensive statement of railway freight rates including the situation of the long haul provinces in the west and in the Atlantic region but also specific problems which require solution if Canada's railways are to serve the national interest without prejudicing particular industries and areas.

The intention of the government at that time was quite clear. First, there would be an interim measure to deal with an immediate problem and, second, a royal commission to deal with the long term problem. What we have before us now is the long awaited measure to relieve against the freight rate increase. The intention of the government is to provide immediate alleviation by means of this measure. I would like to know what this bill means and to what extent it provides immediate alleviation.

The bill clearly excludes from the operation of the subsidy the whole field of competitive rates and, while it is not stated, it also excludes the following items, since the board of transport commissioners in their judgment excepted these from its operation in the 17 per cent case: agreed charges, international rates, import and export rates, grain and grain products in western Canada, and grain and grain products from prairie points to Vancouver, Prince Rupert and other parts of British Columbia. It excludes those new piggy-back rates which are now important, and I presume that other rates are also excluded. Hence the bill applies to a very limited field in the freight rate structure.

In his statement earlier the minister indicated that the reduction would be one in the neighbourhood of seven per cent, in that the subsidy would be applied in such a way that rates generally, as applied in the judgment, would be reduced from 17 per cent to 10 per cent. But a question which arises and which I think is of importance is this: What freight revenues of the carriers will be affected by this measure? I think we should be told what they will be. The minister has not said so, but I would venture to say that only a very small fraction of the freight revenues of the railways, and incidentally of the freight rates which the west and the Atlantic provinces will have to pay, is affected by this decision. My reason for saying this is that of all those exceptions the class and commodity rates are getting now to be smaller and smaller and every time there is an increase in freight rates the effect of it is made to be felt upon a lesser and lesser group of rates and therefore it becomes a greater burden for those who have to pay those rates and they are affected more seriously by it.

I come now to the question which was asked earlier and which I will not go into in detail at this stage, but on which I hope, when the bill is referred to the committee, there will be some clarification. I refer to the method by which this order is going to become operative. Yesterday and earlier I asked the question, what formula is going to be adopted? What method is the board going to establish? What procedure is going to be followed in the implementation of this subsidy of $20 million? How is it going to be distributed? Is the relief granted by this measure to be tied up with wage increases? The minister said no and then later on he said that it was not going to be tied up with anything. Well, it has to be tied up with something. There has to be some kind of formula under which the board is going to proceed, and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not going to be nearly as easy as anticipated by the minister because those of us who are familiar with the bridge subsidy of $7 million, which is administered by the board of transport commissioners, know that there was no easy method to put that into effect.

The railways have said all along that they need the relief granted by the 17 per cent increase. They said that they needed all of this increase in rates to put them in funds so as to accept and put into effect the majority report of the conciliation board. I think the house should be told whether this bill is subsidizing wages. If so, the minister should tell us. Not only would this create a precedent but it could have serious implications for the future.

There is another matter which I would like to discuss at this time but I would prefer not to begin its discussion and have it interrupted; therefore, sir, I wonder whether you would call it six o'clock?

On motion of Mr. Chevrier the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the house leader what the business will be for tomorrow and whether he can outline the business for Friday as well?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow afternoon we shall continue with this debate and then go into agricultural estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: On Friday?

Mr. Green: The same program. By the way, if this bill does not go through tomorrow we may not take it on Friday but go on with the agricultural estimates; I cannot say for sure. I believe there was a bill which did not get third reading today. It will be called first tomorrow.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

STRONTIUM 90—ANALYSIS OF FOODSTUFFS

Question No. 135—Mr. Argue:

1. Has any analysis been made recently of foodstuffs, other than milk or wheat, consumed by the Canadian people or the animal population to determine the content of nuclear fall-out produced strontium 90 or other long-lived radioactive isotope?

2. If so: (a) What commodities were examined? (b) What were the findings?

(c) How do these findings compare with the supposed tolerable level?

(d) Has there been any significant increase since 1945?

(e) If so, in what respect?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes.

2. (a) Animal bone, which contributes calcium to the diet in certain meat products and flour additives. (b) The average value was 5.4 strontium units. (c) They are well below the agreed maximum permissible level. (d) In 1945 there was no measurable strontium 90. (e) See answers 2 (b) and (d) above.

AIR FLIGHT COMMEMORATIVE STAMP DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 274—Mr. Boulanger:

1. Was the distribution of the stamps commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the first powered flight in the British Empire carried out on the same basis as the preceding special issues?

2. If so, how many stamps were sent to each post office situated in towns having a population of more than 25,000?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. The distribution of the commemorative stamp to mark the fiftieth anniversary of powered flight in Canada marked the beginning of a system of shipping predetermined quantities of the special stamp to each post office. These quantities are based on the normal sales at each post office of the denomination being issued.

2. See statement below: St. John's, Nfld., 90,000; Halifax, N.S., 113,200; Sydney, N.S., 61,300; Moncton, N.B., 44,800; Saint John, N.B., 44,700; Cap de la Madeleine, P.Q., 18,500; Chicoutimi, P.Q., 32,500; Drummondville, P.Q., 39,600; Granby, P.Q., 56,850; Hull, P.Q., 30,500; Cite de Jacques Cartier, P.Q., 42,300; Jonquiere-Kenogami, P.Q., 23,500; Lachine, P.Q., 35,100; Levis, P.Q., 32,500; Montreal, P.Q., 1,338,825; Mount Royal, P.Q., 30,200; Outremont, P.Q., 38,800; Quebec, P.Q., 214,500; St. Hyacinthe, P.Q., 46,900; St. Jean, P.Q., 39,400; St. Jerome, P.Q., 27,800; Shawinigan, P.Q., 26,600; Sherbrooke, P.Q., 108,050; Trois Rivieres, P.Q., 46,000; Valleyfield, P.Q., 28,500; Verdun, P.Q., 40,650; Ville St. Laurent, P.Q., 24,400; Ville St. Michel, P.Q., 17,500; Westmount, P.Q., 49,200; Brantford, Ont., 40,000; Fort William, Ont., 91,500; Guelph, Ont., 34,800; Hamilton, Ont., 279,200; Kingston, Ont., 68,500; Kitchener, Ont., 44,800; London, Ont., 130,600; Niagara Falls, Ont., 49,000; North Bay, Ont., 54,500; Oshawa, Ont., 69,500; Ottawa, Ont., 346,300; Peterborough, Ont., 46,000; Port Arthur, Ont., 81,900; St. Catharines, Ont., 71,500; Sarnia, Ont., 29,000; Sault Ste. HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 9, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

FURTHER STATEMENT IN RESPECT TO ANNOUNCED DEFICIT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I informed the house that the deficit for the 1958-59 fiscal year was $617 million. In some of the reports which have appeared in the press since, one finds the statement that this deficit figure excludes the $184 million deficit in the old age pension fund. Mr. Speaker, this is completely erroneous. Every cent of the $184 million deficit in the old age pension fund for the year 1958-59 is included in the figure of $617 million which I gave as the deficit for the fiscal year 1958-59. It will be recalled that the house voted this sum in March in the final appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1958-59 to liquidate that deficit in the old age pension fund.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister is right in the statement he has made on that particular matter, but he might have gone on to explain to the house that the deficit of $617 million did not take into account the use of the defence equipment fund, which, if it had been taken into account, would have raised the deficit figure to about $830 million.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has misled himself in this respect. The budget speech last year made very clear what was the proposal with reference to the use of the defence equipment account. That account, as was made very clear at that time, had been drawn upon by my predecessor from time to time. We did not approve the continuance of such an account because it was not in keeping with the control parliament should exercise over expenditure. Therefore we proposed last year that an additional sum be drawn out, and that was clearly made the basis of the estimate in regard to deficit and in regard to expenditure.

INQUIRY AS TO DEFENCE EQUIPMENT FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance concerning the defence equipment fund which has nothing in it, or at least nothing in cash to back it. In his budget speech last June the minister said that he intended to take about $165 million, the last of that account, into the budget. Where did the other $46.7 million come from? What defence equipment did we supply last year?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the defence equipment account was set up by the former government and was drawn upon by that government during several years for the purpose of charging against that account certain purchases for the Department of National Defence. When purchases were charged against that account they did not come into the normal appropriations, nor into the government's accounting in respect of receipts, expenditures and deficit. As I carefully explained last year, we had taken exception to this practice when we were in opposition because we felt it denied to parliament the full opportunity that parliament in all circumstances ought to have in order to be in a position to control and supervise public expenditure in the fullest degree. Therefore in very plain terms I stated last year in the budget speech that we proposed to draw on that account not simply the amount that had been drawn against it the previous year but to go further and take out the additional $165 million in order that the account would be liquidated and this question would not arise in the future. That was done. The matter is fully disclosed and commented upon in the white paper which I tabled yesterday, and which with great respect I commend to the reading of my hon. friend.

Mr. Pearson: Why don't you answer the question now?

CIVIL DEFENCE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING NEW POLICY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) asked for the tabling of letters addressed to the premiers of the several provinces concerning civil defence. I wish now to table two copies in French and in English of these communications.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EUROPE—REPORTED PROPOSAL FOR NEW EAST-WEST SECURITY SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister's attention been drawn to an article in this morning's Montreal Gazette which says that the United States has circulated far-reaching plans amongst its allies for a new east-west security system in Europe? Would the Prime Minister be prepared to say whether Canada's advice has been sought, and what progress is being made in these negotiations?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this particular article was drawn to my attention by the hon. gentleman himself. I have no information as to the foundation for the newspaper report to which he refers, but I should like to add this; that at this stage, when the western powers are engaged in co-ordinating their negotiating position for the meeting of the foreign ministers at Geneva in May, it would not be too helpful to comment on unofficial reports of this nature.

Mr. Argue: Can the Prime Minister say whether, in these negotiations, Canada is being kept informed and is being consulted?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Generally speaking there is the widest possible exchange of information between the various capitals on this and analogous matters at all times.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED STATEMENT BY U.S. DEFENCE SECRETARY ON PRODUCTION SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the apparent difference of understanding between Canada and the United States with regard to defence production sharing between the two countries as evidenced by a press report in the Windsor Daily Star of April 4 to the effect that the United States defence secretary had told congress—and I quote—that "this is simply an understanding on the part of the Canadian government that we will encourage some of the major suppliers of defence goods which are bought by Canada for Canadian deployment to place some orders there", while the Minister of National Defence has stated—and I quote again—that "Canada would not be satisfied with purely sharing of production for facilities that are to be used in Canada". I wonder whether the minister would care to make a statement to the house in an effort to clarify the situation.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): During my visit to Washington I had an opportunity of meeting some members of the press, and when discussing the question of the sharing of the production of defence requirements I did use the words that Canada would not be satisfied with purely sharing in the production of the facilities that are to be used in Canada. I also had an opportunity to meet Mr. McElroy, and Mr. McElroy fully understands the Canadian position.

If at some later date he is asked to do so, I am quite certain that the Minister of Defence Production will be able to give the house full details of the progress which has been made in this field.

Mr. Chevrier: Does it follow from this that the effect of these arrangements is that Canada will be getting subcontracts rather than main contracts?

Mr. Pearkes: I hope Canada will be getting not only subcontracts but many main contracts as well.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO RECENT CHANGES IN REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I wonder whether the minister is able to explain in a little more detail than was attempted on Monday by the Prime Minister what is the intent of the amendment to the immigration regulations which was announced over the Easter recess.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I am in the course of preparing a statement on this matter. It is not ready yet, because I should like to incorporate into it some statistical information which I think should be interesting. I hope to have this statement ready shortly.

Mr. Regier: Is it a fact that henceforth immigrants sponsored by Canadian employers will be given preference over immigrants sponsored by relatives living in Canada?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, that is rather a broad question. The answer in general would be no, but I shall try and cover the hon. member's points in the statement I will make later.

HIGHWAYS

MONTREAL—REPORTED CLOSING OF MAIN ROAD ALONG WATERFRONT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I did not give him notice of this because it has just now come to my attention, and he may reply tomorrow if the information is not available. La Presse of yesterday afternoon carries a story to the effect that the main highway running along the waterfront at Montreal adjacent to the port and within the jurisdiction of the national harbours board is to be closed. There may be good reasons for this; that I do not know. I wondered if the minister would be good enough to make inquiries and advise the house why the road is being closed.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to make inquiries.

FEDERAL-MUNICIPAL CONFERENCE

PROPOSED MEETING ON FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPAL CAPITAL WORKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government received representations from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities asking the government to convene a federal-provincial-municipal conference with a view to developing more federal assistance for major capital works in the municipalities? If so, is the government considering convening such a conference in the near future, as promised on several occasions by the leader of the Conservative party during the last two election campaigns?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a number of representations were made today in the presentation made by the association in question, all of which will receive consideration.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPENTIGNY, QUE.—REPORTED THEFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is the Postmaster General aware that two days ago, a theft involving $11,000 took place at Repentigny and, if so, would he tell the house if a burglar alarm was installed in that post office? Second, will he realize his ambition of having the Royal Canadian Mounted Police look into this matter?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the theft. I will attempt to ascertain the facts concerning the other points about which the hon. member has asked.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour regarding the dispute at the Polymer Corporation. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the reported statement of Mr. C. G. Palmer, international representative of the oil, chemical and atomic workers' union, indicating that the union is prepared to compromise on monetary aspects of the dispute? Can the minister say whether the company has as yet replied to his offer to provide mediation services of the department in connection with the dispute, and can he tell us in general what progress is being made toward settlement?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. On Tuesday last the hon. member for Lambton West asked about the progress being made in respect to that dispute. I advised him at the time that we had received a telegram from the union to the effect that they were amenable to mediation and that I expected in a few days to receive some communication from the Polymer Corporation. That is where the matter still stands. I continue to expect that we will receive a communication from the corporation.

OLD AGE SECURITY

REPORT OF DR. CLARK—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he has yet had an opportunity to read the Clark report on the old age security system in the United States? If so, has the government determined its policy with regard to this matter, a policy that was promised to the people of Canada during the course of the last federal election campaign?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity of reading the report, and when the government decides upon a policy it will be announced in the house.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a supplementary question. Has any consideration been given to referring the subject matter of this report to a committee of this house for study, as was done on a former occasion?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Whatever action is decided upon will be announced in the house.

THE MINISTRY

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-37, to provide for the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Can he tell the house whether the expenses incurred by parliamentary secretaries will be reported in the same manner as are expenses of ministers of the government, or will there be an itemized statement? Will each parliamentary assistant be required to indicate, after the expenditure is made, the purpose for which it has been made, or will it be done in the same manner as ministers who just account in a lump sum at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): The remark I want to make is this. Several times the Prime Minister has told us that one of the reasons he wanted this to go through was in order to allay our curiosity and our worry on this side of the house. We would like him to know that we are going to be looking forward just as much as those fine faces we see behind him to the concrete results that are going to flow from this legislation. We hope we will not have to ask any more questions in the house about when people are going to be appointed. We also hope that he can now give us some indication of the great day.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No. I expect that the Prime Minister intends to reply.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the house that if the Prime Minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, sir, I have no desire to prevent the Prime Minister from speaking but does he not require unanimous consent?

Mr. Diefenbaker: You had better get the picture over there.

Mr. Speaker: Unanimous consent might have been required yesterday, but the order is properly called today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is one occasion when we want the Prime Minister to speak.

[Mr. Argue.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the authority on the subject of rules and other things, has been proven wrong again, thus adding to the record he has established over a long period of time. The hon. member for Essex East asked whether expenses should be lumped together or given in detailed form. I have no feelings one way or the other on that, and I can see no reason why detailed expense accounts should not be submitted. So far as his other question is concerned, the hon. gentleman need not ask any questions at all. Indeed, questions would be inappropriate at this time, because the legislation has not been passed and will not be passed until it receives the approval of the Senate and finally the signification of the crown.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FREIGHT RATES

MEASURE RESPECTING REDUCTION OF CLASS AND COMMODITY RATES

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hees for the second reading of Bill C-38, to make provision for the reduction of certain class and commodity rates on freight traffic.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the house adjourned I was discussing four aspects of the bill, and I should like to go on now and deal with a matter dealt with by the Prime Minister on an earlier occasion. I was considering clause 3 of the bill, which I said was contentious. I said that I thought the statement made by the Minister of Transport in the earlier part of his remarks was a direction to the board of transport commissioners not to deal with further applications made to it.

I see that the Prime Minister is leaving. I intend to deal with some of the things he said earlier in the debate, and particularly with his attitude concerning horizontal increases when he was on this side of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I will take it as read. I am sorry I have to leave. It is no discourtesy to the hon. gentleman. I always listen to him with the greatest of interest, but I have an appointment that takes me out of the house. I shall read every word.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the Prime Minister for his generous comment. I know he has many things to attend to, and I am sure I will be the last to be offended if he is not present when I discuss his earlier remarks.

Sir, I posed a question as to whether the effect of the subsidy would apply to those rates which have not been increased by 17 per cent. I see that the minister nods his head. Hence any rate that has been increased by, say, 10 per cent or less will not get the benefit of this subsidy. There is also the question which I pose now, namely the effect of this subsidy on coal and coke. It was said earlier that the subsidy would apply to all the rates under the board's order of November, 1958. As the house knows, the rate on coal and coke was increased by 22 cents a ton. Of course the question that comes to mind is this. Will the reduction of 7 per cent be applied to coal and coke? I see that the minister nods his head.

I now come to another part of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, in order to do that for which I really rose in the first place yesterday, namely to deal with certain statements made by the Prime Minister earlier, in which he made sweeping announcements and statements in so far as the conduct of his government is concerned. I refer to the statements he made. They can be found at page 63 of Hansard and read as follows:

> In 1948 the former government instructed the board of transport commissioners to proceed with an investigation into discriminatory freight rates to the end that equalization should be brought about so that those in the western provinces and maritime provinces should in no way unnecessarily be discriminated against; that is ten years ago. They also set up a royal commission, the Turgeon commission. It met and in 1951 it made recommendations, but with the exception of one small change, as I recollect it, the $7 million subsidy in respect of the bridge in the lake Superior area, no action was taken thereon.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether hon. members would accord a little more attention to the hon. member who has the floor, or would at least moderate the tone of their voices. There is a good deal of noise in the chamber at the moment.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this juncture I rose to protest the statement made by the Prime Minister. I said that statement was not only inaccurate but was not in accordance with the fact. The Prime Minister replied that I would have an opportunity to say so at a future date if I felt like doing so. That is exactly what I intend to do now. The Prime Minister, however, went on and said this, as reported at page 64 of Hansard:

> I am saying they did not do anything effective during those years. They did one thing. They talked about inflation. They cried over it. During the period between 1945 and 1957, freight rates increased by 120 per cent.

Then later, as found on the same page, he said:

> We find ourselves, by horizontal increases, placed in an ever more difficult position. The Leader of the Opposition says "Why do they not act?" For 12 years the increases went on and the government of which he was a member did nothing.

Sir, that is not so. That statement is not only inaccurate but is unfounded in fact, as I intend to prove. Let me pause here for a moment to say this. When the Prime Minister came in the house, as he did the other evening, and invited the house to give suggestions with reference to the establishment of a royal commission and the scope of that commission and spoke calmly and coolly, let me say to him that I prefer that attitude on his part rather than the political attitude which was adopted not only in this statement which he made but when he and others say "Oh, you have been here for 22 years but you have done absolutely nothing". In so far as freight rates are concerned I say that the former government has an excellent record of which it can boast.

But the Prime Minister was not alone in making that statement. The Ottawa Journal which is a fairly close follower of the Prime Minister and his friends, published an editorial following the statement made by the Prime Minister on December 1, 1958. I should like to read part of this editorial into the record. It is entitled "Mr. Pearson and Railways" and it reads in part as follows:

> Mr. Pearson opposes a freight increase for the railways, says they should have been given a subsidy instead, charges that the government allowed the railway problem to "drift".
> What did the government of which Mr. Pearson was a member allow the railway problem to do?
>
> In 1948, ten years ago, the government announced with a blare of trumpets that it had asked the board of railway commissioners to look into the whole railway rate structure, to look especially into geographical rate inequities.
> It has been a long look; and during that whole decade of looking Canada experienced one crippling railway strike, plus almost continuous dispute over railway rates and wages. It is not on record that Mr. Pearson or any of his colleagues ever did anything to hurry along the job they had given to the board of railway commissioners or did anything else whatever about railway rate inequities.

That editorial is as inaccurate, unfounded and unwarranted as is the statement which the Prime Minister has made.

Let us now look at the facts, Mr. Speaker, and let us consider the applications that were made to the board of transport commissioners over the years. The first general increase in freight rates came in 1917, and I need not remind the house what government was in office at that time. That increase amounted to 15 per cent. The second increase came in 1918, one year later, and it amounted to 25 per cent. I need not tell the house who was in office then, because the house knows. But do you know how it was done, Mr. Speaker? It was done not by way of application to the board of transport commissioners but by an order from the cabinet to the board of transport commissioners to increase the freight rates by 25 per cent. That was the way in which a Conservative administration proceeded to deal with freight rates in those years. Then in 1920, still under a Conservative administration, there was an increase of 40 per cent, following an application at this time by the Railway Association of Canada to the board.

Then in 1921, when a Liberal administration took office, the 40 per cent increase was reduced, first by 5 per cent in 1921, then by 10 per cent in the same year and that reduction was followed by a further reduction in August of 1922, leaving the effect of the 40 per cent increase as follows: 17½ per cent in eastern Canada and 12½ per cent in western Canada.

So much for what was done under a Conservative administration with reference to freight rates. I insist on putting this on the record for the simple purpose of telling those of our friends who sit on the other side of the house that we on this side are getting tired, as I am sure the people of Canada are, of the government's practice, every time something happens in this country, by which they delight in telling us, "Oh, this is what you did when you were in office". It is about time the government stood on its own feet and made decisions without always saying "Oh, this is what you did when you were in office". We have been having that practice followed for some time. We had it followed by the Minister of Finance this afternoon. We had it followed by the Prime Minister with reference to the immigration order when it was before the house yesterday. Can we not have decisions, announcements and statements by the government without always having a reference made to the fact that this was done by the former administration, and that the government either was carrying on those policies or even making them better? Surely the time has come now that they have been in office for 20 months, almost two years, when they should be able to make decisions of their own and give the reasons for them.

It has been intimated by the statements and the editorial in the Journal that when we on this side of the house were the Liberal administration we had done nothing with reference to the question of rates. Listen to this. In 1897—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Very well, I will come right down to 1957 if my hon. friends will bear with me; but do not forget that the statement was broad, just as all these statements are from the other side of the house. It is said, either through the Prime Minister or through this editorial, that we were in office for 22 years and did nothing, so may I be allowed to say what we did. I say that the lowest freight rates ever put into effect in this country were the Crowsnest rates which were established under the Laurier regime in 1897. Then in 1903 the Liberal government enacted the Railway Act which authorized the establishment of the board of transport commissioners, the board which deals with these matters. That is the very board, Mr. Speaker, which our friends on the other side of the house want to destroy and see disappear, and I will be able to prove in an instant that a motion was made to that effect by hon. members opposite when they sat on this side of the house.

Then in 1924 the Liberal government inaugurated an investigation to determine whether it was possible to equalize freight rates in Canada, and it was found that it was possible. In 1927 the Liberal government introduced the Maritime Freight Rates Act, giving the benefit of a 20 per cent reduction in freight rates to the select maritime area. From 1948 to 1950 it reduced and then removed the mountain differential. It reduced the mountain differential first from 1½ miles on the prairies equalling 1 mile on the Pacific coast, to 1¼ miles, and then reduced the 1¼ miles to 1 mile, removing the mountain differential entirely in 1950. The mountain differential was a matter of great contention over the years, and I submit that is something which well might be given consideration.

But the greater part of the criticism levelled at the Liberal administration was with reference to P.C. 1487. That was an order in council under which the board of transport commissioners were authorized to make a thorough study of the rate structure of the railway companies with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure which would, under substantially the same conditions and circumstances, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, so as to permit the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and the extension of Canadian trade, both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of agricultural and other basic commodities.

The Prime Minister, sir, ridiculed that investigation. I have in my hand the three reports which the board of transport commissioners handed down under this investigation, and I would like to refer briefly to them. The first report was made on March 25, 1955, and the effect of this first report was to substantially reduce class rates in western Canada to equalize these class rates, a matter which the provinces had been asking for over the years. I wonder if the Prime Minister or his followers have read or studied this interim report on the equalization of freight rates, because it is well worth reading.

The second report under the investigation I have referred to was brought down on September 23, 1957, and I would just like to read one short paragraph from it. It states that——the first phase of equalization throughout Canada, namely, of class rates accompanied by a new freight rate classification, had been accomplished and made effective on March 1st, 1955.

Later, on page 4, it is stated:

The equalized class rates have now been in effect for two and one-half years and have cured the complaints that existed for so many years concerning the higher class rates in western Canada compared with eastern Canada.

Mr. Broome: Nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: What was that?

Mr. Broome: I said nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: If my hon. friend says "nonsense" to the judgment of the board of transport commissioners, he will have to direct his very intelligent comment to the board and not to me. Do not forget that our friends are now in office and have jurisdiction over this body. They cannot rise in the house and make statements like that when the body charged with the responsibility of establishing these rates makes statements such as this. I am not making them, they are to be found in the board's report.

Then I come to the third report under the terms of the order in council P.C.1487, dated December 22, 1958. I would like to read from page 3 of this report, which says:

Order in council P.C.1487 of April 7, 1948 required a general investigation of the freight rate structure of Canada, and directed that this investigation be made "with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rates structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, etc." Section 336 of the Raiway Act is broader in its application and sets forth the national freight rates policy that, subject to certain exceptions, "every railway company shall, so far as is reasonably possible, in respect of all freight traffic of the same description, and carried on or upon the like kind of cars or conveyances, passing over all lines or routes of the company in Canada, charge tolls to all persons at the same rate, whether by weight, mileage or otherwise."

That was the object of the order in council P.C.1487; it was to equalize those rates as between the east and the west. Then the board in its judgment went on to say:

The board has been proceeding with "equalization" as defined by section 336, i.e., that subject to all reasonable considerations and the exceptions set forth in the section, the rate on a given article for the same distance and for the same weight must be the same in any part of Canada west of the maritime provinces, despite any differences in circumstances and conditions.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): How could that principle possibly have been established when at the same time the railways were allowed to set competitive rates? I am not saying that they should not have been allowed to do that; obviously they had to. But where there was competition in one area and not in another, how could the freight rates possibly have become equalized?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend must make a distinction between class and commodity rates and competitive rates. This judgment does not deal, as my hon. friend knows, with competitive rates, because the competitive rates have always been excluded by the railways in their applications to the board of transport commissioners, and the reference to the board dealt with exactly the same subject matter that is being dealt with now by the minister in the subsidy of $20 million. I did not deal with competitive rates, because competitive rates are determined by other forms of transportation such as motor vehicles or water carriers. I think that is why this equalization dealt only with other than the exceptions mentioned in the order in council.

The Prime Minister complained about the tremendous length of time it took for the board to deal with this equalization under P.C. 1487. Well, the judgment of the board as recorded on page 4—the final judgment dated December 22, 1958—states that it was not possible to proceed with the equalization of these rates until January, 1952, and gives the reason therefor. It then goes on—and this will be of interest, I am sure, to the hon. member who interrupted me—to give the number of judgments which the board had handed down in order to equalize freight rates, and there are 13 of these judgments, beginning on January 10, 1952 and ending on January 19, 1958. Hon. members will find on page 5 a detailed statement concerning many of the class and commodity rates which have been equalized.

Thus I say this, in so far as the report, the investigation and the study under P.C. 1487 are concerned; that the board did a commendable job and the Prime Minister, instead of criticizing the board, should be commending it. The Prime Minister said it took a long time. Well, in the United States it took 12 years to enable freight rates to be equalized, so even if it has taken Canada seven years—and the job is still not done—I do not think we should be too surprised.

Now I come to 1948, when the government of the day established a royal commission on transportation, the Turgeon commission. That commission produced the most exhaustive study ever made in this country of the problem we are now discussing. The Prime Minister, when he was on this side of the house, welcomed the announcement of the royal commission and spoke approvingly of it. The work of this commission was expeditiously handled; but let me point out to the minister that notwithstanding the fact that the commission was appointed on December 28, 1948 it did not issue its report until February 9, 1951, more than two years later.

So I say to him with deference that if the royal commission which he and the government intend to set up is going to do the kind of job the government expects it will do, it should be encouraged to carry out a thorough investigation, and it should not be limited with regard to time in such a way it has been limited both by the Prime Minister's statement and by the minister's own announcement.

Finally, in 1951 the then government of Canada accepted the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation. It accepted all the recommendations having to do with freight rates and many other recommendations incidental thereto, and these were brought into this house, implemented by way of legislation and put into effect. It was stated at that time in this house that this was the most important and forward looking piece of legislation having to do with freight rates ever introduced in Canada. Notwithstanding that statement there are still accusations from the other side that nothing was done.

Let me go into detail with reference to what was done by the previous administration by way of implementing the recommendations of the Turgeon commission. First of all we brought in legislation which provided for the payment of a subsidy of $7 million for the maintenance of the trackage through northern Ontario which serves as a link or bridge between certain points in that part of the province of Ontario. That is the matter which the Prime Minister said was the only thing done of any consequence.

Let us see what other things done were of consequence. Legislation next provided for the establishment of a national freight rate policy as enacted in section 336 of the Railway Act. This was an over-all direction to the board by a section which stated that every railway company shall so far as reasonably possible in respect of all freight traffic of the same description and carried on or upon a like kind of car, passing over all lines or routes of the company in Canada, charge tolls to all persons at the same rate whether by weight, mileage or otherwise, with the exceptions mentioned in subsection 4 of section 336. This is what the board of transport commissioners tried to do. Using P.C.1487, as I have said, in conjunction with this amendment, section 336 of the Railway Act, the board tried, and succeeded in large measure, to equalize freight rates.

This section was, I submit, of tremendous benefit to western Canada. It provided for the equalization of rates between east and west. Prior to this, rates in the west were higher than those in the east. Rates have now been equalized under this section between east and west except for the unfinished business mentioned in the reports of the board which were tabled in the house and which anyone can see.

Then again, the legislation brought into effect the one and one-third rule which, as the committee knows, is of particular interest to the province of Alberta. The one and one-third rule is contained in section 337 of the Railway Act and it was, for so long as it was in operation, of great assistance to those who live in the intermediate territory. The one and one-third rule states that whenever any railway establishes a rate to Vancouver, say, it shall not charge more than one and one-third of that rate to intermediate points.

This, as I have said, was of great benefit to intermediate points until the judgment of the board of transport commissioners on agreed charges in the cast iron pipe case, interpreting section 32 of the Transport Act. This judgment nullified the benefits of the section inasmuch as the railways can contract themselves out of it by means of agreed charges. This is why the other evening I suggested to the house that consideration should be given to the effect of that section of the Railway Act, read in conjunction with section 32 of the Transport Act, to ascertain if it is not possible by some means or other to give the effect and benefit of the one and one-third rule to intermediate territory.

Another piece of legislation which was brought down was the provision for the uniform classification of systems of accounting for the railways. The house knows that for a long period there was tremendous difficulty between railways in Canada and in the United States because there was no uniform system of accounting, and the railways repeatedly asked parliament to institute a change and make accounting uniform. This was done by means of a section in the Railway Act. The interstate commerce commission of the United States had had such a unified system for many years. This was a good piece of legislation to be enacted, and it was one which the provinces welcomed and which the provinces had been anxious to obtain.

Now I come to a point which will interest the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne), dealing with competitive tariffs. At that time there was a great deal of complaint about the fact that the railways could simply file a competitive tariff. Well, the Railway Act was amended so that a competitive tariff filed with the board was subject to the same investigation and study as any other tariff. The board was enabled, because of that legislation, to go into that rate and ascertain whether or not it was compensatory to the railway. I believe, too, that it was of benefit to those who have to ship goods from one end of the country to the other.

Then there was a piece of legislation having to to with the recapitalization of the Canadian National Railways. As the house knows, the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act was introduced in this house. It changed 50 per cent of the company's interest bearing debt to preferred stock, on which after settling income taxes a dividend of 4 per cent would be paid from earnings. For a term of ten years, because of that legislation, until 1961, the railway is not required to pay interest on $100 million of its long term debt. The C.N.R. asked for this legislation and welcomed it, and I have no doubt that it assisted the railway a great deal.

We then brought in a bill to amend the Transport Act which provided for agreed charges for the Canadian National Railways and other lines. It, too, was of assistance to the railways.

In a word I repeat what I said earlier. All the recommendations made by the royal commission having to do with freight rates were implemented by the previous administration. The Prime Minister said the rates had gone up by 120 per cent. He did not say to what extent they had gone up in other countries, and neither did he include in the increase he mentioned that which has been made by the board of transport commissioners since the present government took office. There has been an additional 17 per cent increase, which brings the increase to 157 per cent rather than 120 per cent. The Prime Minister very carefully shied away from the 17 per cent increase which was put into effect by the board of transport commissioners under the regime of my hon. friends. If a comparison is made of increases in freight rates over the years from the time increases started after world war II, in 1948 let us say, up to the time the Prime Minister made his statement, it will be found that increases were greater in the United States and as substantial, if not greater, in the United Kingdom.

There, sir, is the record in so far as the previous administration is concerned. There is a statement of what was done by the previous Liberal administration, what was done by the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues when they sat on the other side of the house to alleviate the burden of freight rates.

Let us see what was done by our hon. friends when they sat on this side of the chamber. This is important. Let us see how their conduct then compares with what it is today. Hon. gentlemen opposite when they sat on this side of the house sought to do away with the board of transport commissioners. They said the board was incompetent. They accused the board of being responsible for the increases in freight rates and for the state of confusion and chaos in which the country found itself in reference to the unfair application of freight rates. "It is not functioning as it should," said the opposition of that day. "The government," the opposition said, "should take over".

Do you know what they did then? They moved to reduce the estimates of the board of transport commissioners to $1. When I brought in my estimates on June 2, 1950 this was suggested by the then opposition. There will be found at page 3113 of Hansard of that date a record of the discussion wherein I made a lengthy statement about the position of freight rates as they were at that time. At the end of my speech the then leader of the opposition intervened in the debate, and at the conclusion of his remarks he moved that item No. 524, which provided for the salaries of the board of transport commissioners and the administration, maintenance and operation of the board in the amount of $624,800, be reduced to $1. That was the extent of the contribution of our hon. friends opposite when they sat on this side of the house. They would have put the board of transport commissioners out of operation.

Let us examine what they do now. Now that they are in office they renew and extend the terms of office of certain members of the board. I do not know how many have been extended, but I know the tenure of office of one or two has been extended. These are gentlemen for whom I have great regard and who have excellent records on the board. Now that hon. gentlemen opposite have the responsibility of office they renew and extend the terms of office of some men whom we appointed. But now here is the great joker of those who sit on the other side of the house. Do you know what they did in those days? They were against the establishment of a royal commission. They said it would be a complete waste of time and would accomplish nothing. I am sorry the Prime Minister is not here because—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He may be listening.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, he may be. I regret that he is not here because I am sure he would enjoy my reading back to him some of the statements which were made during that debate. I remember the debate very well—oh, not the debate; the debates, because there were so many of them—and what was said particularly by hon. gentlemen opposite. Now we have the Prime Minister coming forth and saying he is going to establish a royal commission to deal with the transportation policy, the very thing hon. gentlemen opposite said would be utterly useless.

The then leader of the opposition made an interesting statement dealing with the appointment of a royal commission.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What date was that?

Mr. Chevrier: January 14, 1949. It was quoted in the Montreal Star. The statement was made by the then leader of the opposition as he got off the train at Regina, and well do I remember it because I raised it in the house. This statement followed the announcement which had been made in the house by the former government to the effect that a royal commission would be established to deal with transportation policy and other matters. The press release reads:

> The royal commission to investigate Canada's freight rate structure was tagged tonight (in Regina) by Hon. George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, as a "waste of time." In a brief press conference on the second stop on his western tour, Mr. Drew said all essential data seemed to have been assembled and that the most important thing now was "determining the principle on which adjustment must be made of rates."

The then leader of the opposition thought a royal commission was a waste of time. Do you know what happened after that? The Conservative party held a convention here in Ottawa and passed a resolution stating that a royal commission would be a good thing. The resolution was to the effect that a royal commission should be established without delay to consider the whole transportation policy. They were running in both directions, their leader saying a royal commission was a waste of time and the party in convention saying they wanted a royal commission, just as they do now that they sit on the other side of the house. They run in two directions and sometimes in three, now that they sit where they do. We have had demonstrations of that sort of thing on a number of occasions, as the house knows, and I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will not ask me to cite examples.

Mr. Fraser: The two royal commissions were for the purpose of determining different questions.

Mr. Chevrier: That is a very helpful remark.

Mr. Fraser: It is true.

Mr. Chevrier: The other inconsistent attitude of our friends on the other side of the house had to do with horizontal rate increases. The house knows that once an increase in freight rates is granted, unfortunately, the effect is uniform. It is horizontal rate increase and it affects all parts of Canada detrimentally, but more particularly those parts in the east and in the west. According to our Conservative friends when they sat on this side of the house, the former government had done absolutely nothing to alleviate the burden of those uniform and horizontal freight rate increases and the former government should be condemned, the Prime Minister said. In fact in his statement in the house which I read earlier—and I shall repeat one sentence—he said, as reported at page 64 of Hansard:

> We find ourselves, by horizontal increases, placed in an ever more difficult position.

Then again, during the election campaign the Prime Minister made some very pertinent statements about horizontal rate increases. Here is what he is reported to have said, according to a Canadian Press report published in the Windsor Daily Star of February 14, 1958:

> On freight rates, Mr. Diefenbaker spelled out for the first time his government's apparent intention on the increase granted in January by the board of transport commissioners.
> Listen to this:
> "We said before we were in power that freight rates were unjustifiably high when raised horizontally.
> Did we act? When the board allowed an increase, we held it up because it could not be justifiably brought into existence on the basis the increase was provided."

This statement was made on February 13, 1958. The effect of it is to say that horizontal increases are unjustifiably high and should not be allowed to go into effect. Well, what did the judgment of the board of transport commissioners say just a few months later? The board of transport commissioners, at page 14 of its judgment dated November 17, 1958, said this about horizontal rates:

> There are many critics who point up the undesirability of horizontal increases, particularly stressing the amounts in cents per one hundred pounds by which such "spreads" increase, but it has not been shown in what way this feature can be avoided without either placing a higher rate burden on short haul traffic or reducing the earning power of the carriers by granting them rate levels too low to produce the revenue they should be entitled to seek for the service they provide.

This is a complete answer to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Brooks: That is owing to competition, of course.

Mr. Chevrier: It does not matter what it is owing to. The point is that the Prime Minister and those who sat on this side of the house said they were going to remedy the impact and the effect of horizontal rates.

Mr. Brooks: I think the point is that horizontal rates were increased over the years when the Liberals were in power, and that the amount of freight on which it was imposed was on a base of about 34 per cent. There was the difficulty over the horizontal rates, as my hon. friend knows; it was the application of the horizontal rates on such a narrow base.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister for that intervention, and my reply to him is this. He has been in office now for 20 months. Here is the judgment of the board of transport commissioners which has increased freight rates by 17 per cent. The effect of that rate increase is uniform and horizontal; it applies all across Canada; it applies to the maritimes as it does to western Canada. It has done nothing to alleviate horizontal increases.

Mr. Brooks: May I say to my hon. friend that the increase was 17 per cent. We have reduced it 7 per cent. Your party was in power for 23 years. Increases amounted to some 130 per cent, and your party did not reduce them 1 per cent.

Mr. Argue: The minister's party has increased it by 10 per cent. It went up 17 per cent and down 7 per cent.

Mr. Brooks: Ten per cent.

Mr. Chevrier: I have no objection to my hon. friend interrupting my speech. As he knows, he has no right to interrupt or to inject a political note. But let me say this to him. The 17 per cent judgment is unjustified in so far as the attitude of our friends on the other side of the house is concerned because of the fact that the increase in the horizontal rates is definitely affected by the 17 per cent.

Mr. Brooks: Will the hon. member permit—

Mr. Chevrier: No, I will not allow the minister to interrupt me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I am afraid the Chair cannot allow the house to anticipate the committee stage.

Mr. Chevrier: I have no objection to an interruption by the minister, but at least he should wait until I have replied to his statement. What I was saying is there has been a reduction of 7 per cent but there is still an increase of 10 per cent, and the effect on the horizontal and uniform rate increases is nonetheless 10 per cent in the maritime provinces, in the select territory where my hon. friend lives.

Mr. Brooks: Put on by the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Chevrier: I see; put on by the board of transport commissioners. But when my hon. friends were on this side of the house they said the board of transport commissioners were inadequate, were useless and were not doing the kind of job that should be done, and they made a motion to reduce the estimate to $1. I know my hon. friend does not like this; nonetheless I am trying to say that it is one thing to go out on the hustings and make a political speech and it is another thing to come into the house and give the facts as they should be given.

Mr. Brooks: You are making a political speech in the house and not on the hustings.

Mr. Chevrier: Then my hon. friend can answer it. If I am making a political speech here my hon. friend can answer it, and I hope he will rise in his place and answer this. The statement I make now is that freight rates are far too important a matter to be dealt with politically.

Mr. Brooks: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: They should be dealt with by the board of transport commissioners. This is the board which has been maintained by parliament over the years to deal with this highly technical matter, and no political note should be injected in it. If my hon. friend believes that I am making a political speech now may I say that I would not have made it had the Prime Minister not made the statement the other day that while we were in office we had done absolutely nothing. I submit that we have done a great deal, and if my hon. friend who interrupts me now will consider the facts he will agree. He knows full well that the Maritime Freight Rates Act, which is of assistance to his part of the country, was passed by a Liberal administration. The increase of 10 per cent, from 20 per cent to 30 per cent, in traffic that moves, I believe, outside the select territory was also brought into effect by a Liberal administration. I am sure he will not deny that.

I have perhaps taken up too much time, sir. I did not intend to speak at this length, and I would not have risen in my place had those statements not been made by responsible members of the house here and outside the house on a matter which when I sat on the other side of the house I considered was a technical one to be dealt with by the board of transport commissioners, an expert body whose business, experience, duties and responsibilities are to fix, determine and enforce rates pursuant to section 328 of the Railway Act, as changing conditions from time to time require.

To sum up, I say that those who sit on the other side of the house, when they sat here, would do away with the board of transport commissioners, would call royal commissions useless and would remove the effect of horizontal freight rate increases. Now you are in office. Go ahead and remedy the impact of horizontal freight rate increases. Go ahead and do what the Turgeon royal commission, which conducted one of the best and most exhaustive studies ever made in this country, said could not be done with reference to horizontal increases except by the railways. In dealing with horizontal freight rate increases the commission had this to say:

> The remedy does not lie in the prohibition, statutory or other, of horizontal increases, but is in the hands of the railways themselves. The railways should make studies of traffic conditions in all their bearings and should present to the board . . . proposals showing not only their maximum percentage increase requirement, but also, among other particulars, varying percentage increases on different commodities, flat, instead of percentage increases when these are more suitable, and maxima in appropriate cases in cents per 100 pounds or other unit.

The recommendation by the board of transport commissioners with reference to horizontal increases was that no legislative amendment was required, that the Railway Act in its present form was sufficient and authorized the railways and the board to deal with this problem satisfactorily. But you on the other side of the house have said, "Oh no, wait a minute; we shall deal with this and will remedy the impact when we get into office". I have referred to two statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), one made in Saskatoon and the other made in the house. If he can do it I will be the first to commend him because I know the people of Canada will welcome anything that will have the effect of alleviating the burden of horizontal increases in the freight rate structure.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Brooks: Does the hon. member say that the freight rate situation is satisfactory?

Mr. Chevrier: I certainly have not said that.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Brooks: He says that nothing can be done, according to the Turgeon report.

Mr. Chevrier: I said no such thing.

Mr. Brooks: You implied that.

Mr. Chevrier: If I implied that, then I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I was dealing with horizontal increases when I made the statement I did and I was not dealing with the whole freight rate structure. Of course the freight rate structure can be bettered. That is the object of P.C.1487, to equalize freight rates all across Canada.

Mr. Brooks: That is the object of this government to better the freight rate structure.

Mr. Chevrier: I hope the government will be successful. What I was dealing with when my hon. friend interrupted me was only a small fraction of the structure, namely horizontal and uniform rate increases, and the board in its last judgment says it has not been shown in what way this can be done; that the railways are the ones to alleviate horizontal increases. When I was dealing with horizontal increases I was simply replying to statements that had been made earlier by those on the other side of the house.

So that there may be no doubt in the minds of hon. members let me say that of course there remains a great deal to do. There are still inequities, there is still discrimination, there is still equalization that needs to be brought about with reference to the freight rate structure, there is still need of a national transportation policy for Canada. I presume that will be the object of the royal commission. I presume that will be one of the terms of reference of the commission. I do not pretend that the situation is fine in the finest of worlds. What I am saying is that we have done a great deal to alleviate the effect and burden of discrimination, inequalities and inequities in the freight rate structure, and I think I have put enough evidence on the record to indicate to our friends on the other side that while we were in office we did not simply do nothing as our hon. friends try to indicate.

I have been much too long, Mr. Speaker, and I simply want to conclude by saying that with respect to any measures the government brings before us, either through this subsidy which we will support and try to strengthen when the bill goes to the committee or through the scope, broad as it may be, of a royal commission, we will support the government because having in mind the tremendous distances over which freight has to move to the extremities of our country it becomes more and more important to remove these inequities. The former administration removed a large portion of them and should be given credit instead of criticism.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for a few minutes on the bill which, from the point of view of members of this group, is a measure of expediency to meet a long term and continuing problem that is of concern to large sections of the Canadian people. It simply reduces from 17 per cent to 10 per cent the increase in freight rates which the people have to pay at the present time. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that during the exchange between the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) and the former minister of transport with respect to what the present government had done in 20 months compared with what the former government had done in 22 years I made a quick calculation, and if my calculation is correct the average rate of freight rate increase per year during the former government's term of office was slightly under five per cent while, allowing for the $20 million subsidy, the average rate of increase in freight rates during the last 20 months has been something slightly over six per cent. There is not a great deal of difference with respect—

Mr. Brooks: Hardly a logical conclusion.

Mr. Herridge: —to whether one government or the other was in power. I wish to present the representations of this group regarding this very serious and complicated question. I might say it is not a subject on which I enjoy speaking because I admit quite frankly I can no more explain the idiosyncrasies of the freight rate structure than fly but we do have certain opinions with respect to how freight charges are arrived at, the effect that increases in freight rates have and the attitude of the Canadian people.

The representations of our group are based on a knowledge of the seriousness of this continuing situation as indicated by the repeated protests year after year made against increases in freight rates by provincial governments, farmers' organizations, the British Columbia fruit growers' association and organizations representing lumber manufacturers, mining and other industries. The representations of the farmers' organizations have been placed before the house a number of times by other members of this group and I am not going to deal with them further. But I do want to say a few words with respect to the tree fruit industry, the lumber industry and the mining industry.

The tree fruit industry of British Columbia, with which I am particularly well acquainted, has made submissions to hearings of the board of transport commissioners on several occasions vigorously opposing increases in freight tariffs. They have done so because they have done everything possible to lower costs by improving packaging and extending markets with an aggressive sales policy. In other words, they have done all they can to help themselves. Regardless of every effort in this respect the industry is having a very difficult time indeed. Even at present the growers are receiving little more and in many cases less than the cost of production. I am sure a good number of members recall that in 1955 the cost of production of apples in British Columbia was approximately $2.50 a box and the average return to the fruit growers of British Columbia for all grades was about 72 cents a box. That gives one some idea of why they are so concerned about the cost of transportation for their commodity.

Again, what about the lumber industry? I am very well acquainted with a wide section of the lumber industry and it too has suffered very seriously in the last 12 or 18 months from lack of markets and low prices. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, in the last 15 months a good number of small saw mills in British Columbia have been obliged to close down because they could not continue to operate or could not continue to make a profit that made it possible for them to operate. Others have continued to operate under great difficulties and in most cases up until quite recently on an extremely narrow margin. The industry in British Columbia has made repeated representations to the board of transport commissioners and to the cabinet committee on freight rates because of the seriousness of the cost of transportation to this industry. I am sure the minister realizes what it means to these smaller mills, particularly in the mountainous sections of British Columbia, to have even this ten per cent increase in freight rates at this time.

Then I am sure all of us know the difficulties that have been experienced by quite wide sections of the mining industry which have suffered a decline in the price of base metals in the last two years particularly. Here again in this connection may I say that in my constituency and in surrounding constituencies a number of small properties have been obliged to close down, to a large extent because of the cost of transportation of their product to the markets concerned. These transportation costs are a most important factor particularly with respect to the smaller segments of the lumber industry and the mining industry and in connection with farming and fruit farming in general.

For a few moments I want to deal with our two arguments—we have stated them before but on this motion for second reading we wish to repeat them—against the position taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company when seeking increased freight rates. I might say that my reading of the record in years past would indicate that the whole pattern of freight rates in Canada seems to be established by the attitude of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We in this group believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company suffers from two diseases, namely economic schizophrenia and income tax anaemia. That is our approach to the position of the C.P.R. We believe both of these diseases can be cured by a shot of government action and we believe it is about time that something was done in that respect.

We think the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has what we would term a split personality. The company has for years assiduously developed the legend that its corporate assets are arbitrarily divisible as between the rail and non-rail operations. The company's entire case, as far as we can see, rests on the assumption that its railway operations can be divorced from the other lucrative enterprises which account for such a large part of its income. In our opinion, this is a completely unsound and unethical position. For instance, when a shareholder purchases stock in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company he does not buy shares reflecting the assets of the railway as distinct from the non-operating assets but purchases shares that reflect the earnings of the total assets of the company. Why should not the company's rates, taxes and charges be assumed to be on the same basis?

I want to quote briefly from an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of November 19, 1957. It was written by a gentleman who is designated as "S.M.". I think this editorial clearly states the case and I am going to quote it in full because I think it is worthy of being on the record. It states the case much better than I could do it of my own volition and it presents our argument in this respect. The editorial is headed "C.P.R.'s Claim Challenged". This was one of a series of articles dealing with proposed freight rate increases. It reads as follows:

> Ottawa: The Canadian Pacific Railway Company for years has assiduously developed a legend that its corporate assets are arbitrarily divisible as between rail and non-rail operations.
> Every application for higher freight rates depends upon this supposition, and none more than the case currently being considered by the transport board. The C.P.R. has asked the board to accept as a rate base the sum of $1,146 millions, which the company says is its net investment in railway property.
>
> The C.P.R.'s entire case rests on the assumption that its railway operations can be arbitrarily divorced from those other lucrative enterprises which account for such a large part of its income.

[Mr. Herridge.]

> The validity of this argument has been directly challenged by a paper prepared for the board by Prof. Vernon Fowke of the University of Saskatchewan. Prof. Fowke's study clearly demonstrates that neither parliament nor the original officers of the company intended that these ancillary operations should be anything but part of the company's general transportation system.
> The Canadian Pacific Railway Act of 1881 defines the purposes of the company: To construct a rail link to the Pacific coast, to buy or build a line to the Atlantic, to acquire such other facilities as would contribute to a well-rounded transportation system, and to operate the whole in perpetuity.
> The charter was amended in 1902 to broaden this scope by including such non-rail operations as mining and smelting,—

I may say that includes an extremely profitable mining and smelting company which last year declared a profit of over $14 million.

> —irrigation, generation of electricity and iron, steel and lumber manufacturing.
> The 1902 amendments specified that these powers were to be exercised "for the purposes of the company," and this phrase or its equivalent is contained in each amending clause. Its inclusion, as Prof. Fowke observes, is no mere legal verbiage, for parliament in 1881 had clearly defined these purposes as the operation of the railway.
> Any recent annual report of the C.P.R. will illustrate how far the company has departed from these purposes. Its "other income" in 1951 was nearly $30 millions, not a penny of which was credited to rail operations.
> "The wording of the various sections of the (1902) statute makes it abundantly clear," Prof. Fowke states, "that the parliament of Canada had no intention that the beneficiary of the statute, the C.P.R., might henceforth or at any time exercise its additional powers as ends in themselves or for purposes divorced in any way from the purposes for which the company was originally formed."
> Parliament clearly had not contemplated a company which would pour its railway profits into vast non-rail operations, at the same time charging the public with the entire cost, including corporate income taxes, of running the railway alone.
> Nor had parliament ever intended that the 25 million acres in land and $25 millions in subsidies which it granted the C.P.R. would be used, not for the benefit of its customers, but for the greater reward of its shareholders.
> The 1902 powers, the subsidies and the land grants were given, Prof. Fowke says, to assist the C.P.R. in the fulfilment of its purposes as an instrument of national policy, the central object of which remained that of operating a railway.

I quoted that editorial in full, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is an excellent exposition of the facts of the situation as we see it with respect to the C.P.R.'s continued insistence on divorcing its railway operations from its other much more profitable operations.

I now come to the question of what I term the income tax anaemia; that is, the method by which the company under the income tax provisions of legislation makes annual additions to the so-called tax equalization reserve, whereby they make provision for modernization, dieselization, improvement in track and so on. It is an extremely complicated question indeed. For the sake of exactitude I just want to quote briefly from one or two briefs that were presented to the board of transport commissioners by various transport officials who make a specialty of this subject. In that connection I will quote first of all from page 2 of a report by the national association of railroad and utilities commissioners, 1955, report of committee on depreciation. I quote this one paragraph because it illustrates what is happening at the present time under the present income tax policy pursued by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. At page 2 of the report we find this:

> Heretofore, public utilities generally have employed the straight line method of computing depreciation expense for income tax purposes. For many years, prior to about 15 years ago, electric and gas utilities computed depreciation expense for income tax purposes according to the straight line method but employed other methods for corporate accounting purposes. To a limited extent this is still true. In general, those utilities claimed and were allowed more depreciation expense in their tax returns than they recorded in their corporate books of account. A study by the securities and exchange commission for the ten-year period, 1930-39, disclosed that 168 electric and gas utilities charged 53.64 per cent more depreciation for tax purposes than they recorded in their corporate accounts. The higher allowances for depreciation expense resulted in consequential tax savings as compared to the taxes which would have been terrible had the allowance for depreciation been equal to that recorded on the books.

That is exactly the same principle which has been given effect at the present time by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and to which we object.

Then there were further representations made before the committee. I think they were presented by the gentlemen representing the province of British Columbia in this particular case. I would like to read from appendix A of the report from the committee on accounts and statistics, which is a report dealing with the accounting treatment of tax reduction occasioned by depreciation provisions of the internal revenue code of 1954. They used this to illustrate this practice which has been transferred from the United States to Canada in recent years. This is what is said on page 12 of this appendix:

> It should be clear from the foregoing evidence that the new methods of accelerated depreciation authorized in the internal revenue code of 1954, and particularly the years-digits method, offer management the opportunity to make considerably increased annual depreciation charges for an indefinite period and, consequently, very great tax savings. Moreover, contrary to erroneous general belief, these tax savings will be permanent—at least as long as the law remains in effect. In no legitimate sense may they be considered tax deferrals.

Then on page 13 I read the following with respect to this problem:

> The committee is convinced that the use of the liberalized depreciation procedures permitted by the 1954 revenue act results in tax reduction, not tax deferral, and that it would be contrary to sound accounting principles and to the provisions of the uniform systems of accounts to record such tax reduction in a deferred credit account.
> The real regulatory problem in connection with tax reduction arising through liberalized depreciation is how to treat the tax reduction in fixing rates for service. This of course is not an accounting matter; however, the committee does have some thoughts on this question and believes the following suggestions are worthy of consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I have just dealt briefly with two aspects of the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the first of insisting on separating its railway assets from its other much more profitable assets when considering the cost of operating the railway, and the need according to the company for increased freight rates and, second, the annual addition to the so-called tax equalization reserve fund.

We in this group believe that a national transportation policy that co-ordinates air, land and water transportation in Canada is urgently required. We think we require a policy in which consideration will be given to the needs of every section of Canada as to how this country can most economically and effectively be given the service, both freight and passenger, to meet its requirements. We believe this national transportation policy should make provision for an efficient service to all portions of Canada, and should make provision for the equalization of freight rates and the necessary standards of passenger service to all parts of the country. In our opinion the terms of reference of the royal commission should provide for a thorough study of all aspects of the transportation problem as a basis for the planning of a national transportation policy by this House of Commons and this government. Until we approach this problem in an over-all way we are simply going to continue this "bits and bobs" policy year after year, with the companies asking for an increase in freight rates, farmers' organizations, mining and lumbering industries appealing against the increases, and then some temporary expedient being brought before this house to meet the situation and soft soap over it temporarily, just as we are doing in this bill, thus getting no further toward a real solution of the question. Under present circumstances agricultural, lumbering, mining and other industries suffer from an inequitable freight rate structure. Also many Canadians suffer from the discontinuance of branch line passenger services, which in some cases should not and would not be discontinued if this government governed Canada in these cases rather than let the wishes of the C.P.R. prevail.

Mr. Speaker, once again I cannot resist bringing to the attention of the house one situation just to illustrate the effect of this "bits and bobs" policy and the fact that what Mr. Crump says goes, rather than what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) says, with respect to meeting the needs of various sections of Canada. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, that under present circumstances our Minister of Transport in effect has to go cap in hand almost on bended knee to ask Mr. Crump if he would do something to correct an injustice which exists with respect to transportation services provided in some parts of Canada. That is what is actually happening at the present time, and in the opinion of the members of this group it is an outrageous situation which we are going to continue to protest against until we get some remedy. I cannot believe that this government is going to allow this situation to continue. As I said before, I cannot resist bringing to the attention of the house again the fact that in southeastern British Columbia, where 135,000 people produce between $200 million and $250 million worth of mineral, forest and agricultural products, they have to suffer a Budd car service from Vancouver to Lethbridge where the young and the aged, the decrepit, lame, invalid and sick are required to sit up for 24 hours and subsist on dry sandwiches and cool coffee. There is a direct illustration of what happens with respect to this "bits and bobs" policy. This is the passenger service which is being provided by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the southeastern portion of British Columbia, and regardless of how much the Minister of Transport tries to help us, and I know he has done his very best, still Mr. Crump says nothing doing. He says what is going to be done or not done.

We submit that that situation should be remedied, and we will continue to squawk until it is, even though I find that because of my continued reference to this injustice some of my lady friends around the building are now referring to me as "The Kettle Valley Kid". It is about time the government of Canada demonstrated that it meant to govern with respect to a national transportation policy for this country. Members of this group trust that this is the last time that this house will be required to deal with this problem on a temporary, piecemeal, titbits basis, and hope that a national transportation policy will result from the royal commission's recommendations, which we trust will be within a year, and that consequent action will be taken on the part of this government, which has promised so much and to date done so little to meet this problem.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has just made an admirable speech except that his last words should have been "promised so much and have done so much". Coming from British Columbia, I would not expect the hon. member to have anything but the highest praise for this government, which is the first government to have recognized the peculiar problems existing in the extremities of the country.

I was very interested to hear the remarks made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who spent 90 per cent of his time castigating the government and the last 10 per cent telling us what a fine bill this was, what a lot it would do for the country and what a lot there was still to do in the way of equalizing freight rates.

With regard to British Columbia, I should like to quote from a brief prepared by the British Columbia lumber manufacturers association which stated that since April, 1948 seven freight rate increases had been approved by the board of transport commissioners and that the total cumulative increase had been 125 per cent up to the beginning of 1958. This included the 3½ per cent which this government disallowed in its first term of office, and all hon. members from British Columbia know how widely and heartily the government was praised in the press of the province for this decision. In circumstances with which all hon. members are familiar, the government was faced with a 17 per cent increase in freight rates, an increase which had to come about if we were to keep our railways in a position to serve this country and provide the essential transport facilities which a modern society needs. So what has the government done? It has brought in, not bits and pieces of legislation, but an idea in legislation which is new. I wish the hon. member for Laurier would listen to this: for 22 years during which his party governed this country there was nothing new in the way this legislation is new, because this legislation recognizes the needs and extremities of transport users in this country.

The effect of succeeding increases in freight rates had been to increase the cost of shipping a thousand board feet of lumber from Vancouver to Winnipeg from $14.70 prior to April 8, 1948 to $34.60 by January 1, 1957. On the same basis, shipments to Toronto increased in cost from $22 to $40.30. Because of these increases there set in a progressive decline in shipments of coast lumber to the eastern Canadian markets, a decline of some 47 per cent from almost 10,000 carloads in 1948 to 5,290 carloads in 1957. As every hon. member from British Columbia knows, or ought to know, our prosperity is dependent entirely on the prosperity of the woods industry, because at least 25 per cent of our payroll comes from forest industries, and as forest industries go, so goes British Columbia.

I have just finished checking with the board, as far as I can, with regard to the latest increase—the increase of 17 per cent—and I think it would be of interest to hon. members to know that rates on traffic originating in British Columbia on the coast and in the interior would have had to bear that 17 per cent increase almost in its entirety and, in consequence those shippers and those producers who are dependent upon the movement of the products they have produced will gain the greatest benefit from the present legislation since, as I have said, this measure has been tailored to help the maritimes and the far west. Further, as I also said, this is the first time anything has been done in this house to help, particularly, the province from which I come.

The hon. member for Laurier mentioned the Turgeon royal commission and the bridge subsidy on traffic across the northern shores of lake Superior, and mentioned what important aid this provided in marrying the two sections of Canada. The bridge subsidy is a very fine thing, but there are other non-productive areas in Canada; one might call the trackage through the mountains a non-productive area. But what has been the effect of the bridge subsidy? It has certainly been good, but it was not tailored to suit our needs, because the effect of the subsidy, having regard to the location of the bridge, has been to increase our cost of shipping into our legitimate markets, that is, the prairie provinces, in relation to the cost of eastern manufacturers shipping to the same region. This has come about because of the location of that bridge.

The fact that an artificially low rate is in existence across this trackage creates a subsidy which helps in shipping west, and which does help the west to ship to the east when shipments are being made east of the bridge but not when they are being made to points west of the bridge. So although this has helped us to a limited degree it will not do so to anything like the same extent as this measure will do.

To give hon. members some idea of the difference in the application of these rates I should like to point out that the 16½ per cent freight rate increase granted in 1953 resulted in an increase in gross railway revenue of only 2.8 per cent. Why was this? It was because much of the traffic, particularly in Ontario and Quebec, would have been diverted to other means of transportation had the rates been so increased. The rates were, therefore, held down to the competitive rates in those areas, but where the traffic would bear the increase, that is where the increase was placed and this was, of course, in those areas where a widely-flung trucking system does not exist and where there are no facilities for water travel such as exist in Ontario and Quebec. Incidentally this substantial increase of 16½ per cent was not mentioned by the hon. member for Laurier. With regard to this increase, his government simply said: there it is, let us put it through.

This measure which we are debating today is one which will provide us with immediate help. We are not being asked to wait for the length of time it would take to receive a report from a royal commission. This is something which will be of help right away, immediate assistance such as has been noticed in field after field of government endeavour.

The hon. member for Laurier made great play with the mountain differential and the fact that the one and a half rule as against the 50 per cent premium for transportation through the mountains was cut to one and a quarter and then to one. They recognize he said, that there was no real justice in this differential, and I suggest that that was about the only thing they ever did to help the province of British Columbia. This legislation is legislation tailored to help us in the west and to help our brothers in the maritimes in the most practical and common-sense fashion.

I think when the time comes for the proposed commission to investigate the entire freight rate structure, close attention should be given to the simplification of that structure, because it needs amendment and needs to be drawn in such a way that rates are truly equalized—so that when a manufacturer in British Columbia is shipping, say, to Brandon he will pay the same rate per ton per mile as a manufacturer in Montreal would have to pay. When such a situation as this comes about we shall, indeed, have equality of competition and we in the west will be able to share equally with the eastern manufacturers in access to Canadian markets.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house any longer, but I would say, in conclusion, that this is one of the most progressive steps as far as the west is concerned, and one of the best steps as far as British Columbia is concerned, that this government has taken to date, and I commend the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) for having introduced this bill and suggest it should be made law as quickly as possible.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister is listening to what is being said by those who are speaking in support of this bill. A few moments ago I thought he was showing a degree of discourtesy in not listening with bated breath to the fine speech that was being made.

The thing that concerns me in relation to this bill being sent to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines is this. What is going to happen in the committee? What information are we going to get with which to operate in terms of an explanation as to how this act is to work? I have just been looking at the bill again and clause 7 continues to confuse me. I think the minister has not given us a sufficiently lucid explanation of what is meant by that provision and perhaps he will do so later.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) gave some specific instances of how our particular region in northwestern Ontario suffers with respect to inequalities as far as freight rates are concerned and I commend his remarks to the minister's attention. An hon. gentleman from the west coast who spoke earlier this afternoon remarked on the bridge territory on which there is a $7 million subsidy. There are some points I wish to reinforce and underscore in this regard. In many ways the bridge is the greatest weakness in the whole freight rate structure in Canada. Every argument put forward by the western provinces commences with a reference to the bridge and the fact that it is not economical because not enough traffic originates from the bridge.

One reason why the people in northwestern Ontario are sceptical about the vision, and you cannot blame them for it, is because they live in a part of the country in which they would like to see displayed much more evidence of vision so far as providing industry and revenue are concerned. In no area would this be more effective than in the field of railway development. If we could get more internal traffic development, especially on the Canadian National Railways, such as we have at Steep Rock and Manitouwadge, perhaps the basic problem of the railway structure will ultimately be cleared up.

When this bill is before the Committee I hope we will have some explanation of the bridge subsidy. It was set at $7 million, approximately seven years ago I believe. In view of the upward trends in cost that we have experienced why has not the bridge subsidy gone up? When the bill goes before the committee we should get an interrelated picture of all aspects of the freight rate situation. I remarked the other day that we members of parliament are amateurs, duds and boobs with respect to this field which is one of the most difficult to understand and appreciate. When the minister appears before that committee I suggest he have with him departmental experts and advisers from the board of transport commissioners. They should be there throughout the time the committee is sitting so they would be on call to guide us as we move through consideration of the bill. It is important that we understand this legislation even though it is an interim measure because after a year there will be the report of the royal commission to consider.

The bridge territory in which my constituency lies is one of the fundamental regions at which we must look. We have been told by experts that the highest freight rates in Canada obtain in the area. That is an important internal concern. As a national problem, if we do not get more traffic originating in the bridge area, the discrepancies and the problem of equalization will continue to exist and may exist for a long time.

These remarks lead us into a reference of the vision, of course. Northwestern Ontario is a vast area approximately 600 or 700 miles in breadth and depth. The whole area of the maritimes and part of British Columbia could be tucked into this portion of the country, it is that large. I would suggest to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources that it concentrate on a development policy for this area which would do a lot for the freight rate situation.

I hope the minister will give us a nice, slow, amiable run-down on where he stands in relation to the bill, that the bill will be sent to the committee and that the committee will do a good job.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up too much time of the house on this subject because no doubt there are many other hon. members who wish to participate in the discussion. I do believe, however, it is my duty to bring to the attention of the house some facts about the situation in regard to freight rates as they apply in the northern part of Manitoba. It is my belief that the people in that area suffer very greatly under some of the highest freight rates that exist in this country.

I wish to refer briefly to an article which appeared in the November 11, 1958, issue of The Rural Co-Operator published by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture in Toronto.

In an article entitled, "Competition Myth Costs Money", the following appears:

> What Canada has, in effect, is a giant railway monopoly half owned by the public (C.N.R.) and half owned by private business (C.P.R.). We pay for the duplication of overhead but receive none of the advantages of competition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in many areas of Canada that would be a ridiculous statement, as you no doubt realize that many areas benefit to a marked degree from competitive rates. If people in those areas were to compare the rates of which they may take advantage with those that exist in the area I represent they would see the situation in its true light.

We have only one railway in northern Manitoba and at many points no highway parallels this railway. The rates are high on most goods and materials that come into the area and of course the working man is the one who pays the shot.

There is one aspect of this problem which is difficult to understand. In places like Lynn Lake and other points along the Hudson bay line where there are no highways, families who wish to go out on an annual holiday are required to ship their automobiles to the nearest highway by rail. There is a loading charge for putting the automobile in the box car, a high transportation cost for bringing it out to the highway and an unloading charge and on the return trip the same charges are applicable. Those charges although high are probably justified but one thing that should be examined is this. When two families are bringing out their cars there is no reduction in price and both pay the rates applicable to the shipment of a single vehicle.

There are many other examples that could be cited of situations of this kind existing in the area of northern Manitoba. Additional freight rates apply on goods going north of The Pas on the Hudson bay line. I suppose this is also a result of lack of competition, but these things should be inquired into.

I might refer also to the situation which I believe points up the necessity of a very full investigation into this matter. I would like to refer to the Arthur D. Little Incorporated report, which was an economic survey of northern Manitoba. In this report, which has just recently been released, transportation is mentioned. The report says:

> Transportation is of considerable importance in pulp and paper operations, both for the supply of raw materials and for the delivery of finished products. For raw material supply, northern Manitoba offers facilities comparable with areas in which pulp and paper mills have been successfully established; for the delivery of finished products, however, it suffers from a serious competitive freight rate disadvantage.

The report goes on to deal with transportation to markets and it says:

Freight Rates

> Rates that have been quoted by the Canadian National Railways for newsprint from a point (Pit Siding) near the Kelsey power plant would have the effect of virtually excluding shipments to Canadian markets. Rates to United States destinations, however, are by no means unsatisfactory.

These remarks are made in relation to a survey which was made by Arthur D. Little Incorporated in respect to the possibilities of opening up a pulp and paper mill in this area where, I might say, an industry of this kind is very badly needed.

I should like to give a comparison of those rates further to bring out the point that a full investigation into this matter should be undertaken soon. The freight rates which were quoted to ship newsprint from this area were from Pit Siding to Saskatoon, a distance of 560 miles. The rate per ton quoted was $28.4. To Winnipeg, a distance of 724 miles, the comparative rate was $34 per ton. To Fort William, a distance of 1,157 miles, the rate per ton was $48.6.

I should like to give a further comparison to show why I think an investigation of our freight rate set up is very necessary. To ship the same newsprint from Pit Siding to Minneapolis, a distance of 1,141 miles, would cost $17.80 per ton; to ship it to Milwaukee, a distance of 1,456 miles, would cost $22 per ton; and to ship it to Chicago, a distance of 1,535 miles, the rate is $22 per ton. Apparently we are permitted to ship newsprint from Pit Siding to Chicago, a distance of 1,535 miles, for $22 a ton and yet to ship it within Canada to Fort William, 1,157 miles, almost 400 miles fewer than to Chicago, the rate is $48.6 a ton, more than double. I realize Mr. Speaker, that I am certainly by no means an authority on freight rates, especially rates of this nature. In fact, I have a very limited knowledge of them. No doubt in those comparisons of shipping within Canada and to the United States there is something which comes under our export regulations. However, I do think that since the northern areas are so badly in need of industry, these things should be investigated as quickly as possible.

I notice that the explanatory note of the bill we are discussing reads:

> The purpose of this bill is to provide for the revision of certain class and commodity freight rates and to compensate the companies to the extent of $20 million.

I sincerely hope that some of this $20 million will be used to lessen the burden on the people of those outlying areas who are paying tremendous freight rates at the present time.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I think it has been a good and constructive debate and I should like to answer a couple of questions which have been asked.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked whether this measure provided assistance to coal and coke. The board of transport commissioners advise me that the increases on coal and coke have been only about one-half of the general percentage increase of 17 per cent. Assistance to coal and coke is given in the form of subventions, and to show how those subventions have been increased, for instance, during the past two years, I will give the comparative figures for the years 1956 and 1958. In 1956 the average subvention paid per ton was $2.67. In the year 1958, the average subvention per ton was $3.15. This shows that there has been an increase of 48 cents per ton during those two years, or an increase of 18 per cent.

Subventions paid during the calendar year 1958, by regions were as follows: In the maritime regions, that is in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, the amount was $8,546,041. In the western region, that is the province of Alberta and the Crowsnest area of British Columbia, the amount was $667,000.

On March 17 last the Prime Minister announced in the house that the federal government would pay an additional $500,000 in the form of subsidies to maritime coal this year. The government also recently announced the payment of an additional 50 cents per ton on 100,000 tons of Alberta coal which was being shipped to Japan, and this additional subvention was paid to make possible the sale of that quantity of coal.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked when the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines would meet next week. I might tell hon. members the chairman advises me it is planned to have the committee meet at 9.30 a.m. next Tuesday. There will be present members of the board of transport commissioners who will be there to answer all questions that will be put to them by those who are in attendance. No attempt will be made to brush off questions or to hurry up proceedings. There will be ample time for anybody who is a member of that committee to ask all the questions he wishes and I feel sure hon. members will receive the answers they are looking for.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask one question? The minister shook his head in answer to a question which I asked earlier with reference to those increases under the board orders which were not as high as 17 per cent. Does that mean that the subsidy will not apply to those increases?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is correct. It is our intention to use the $20 million in what we considered would be the most effective way, that is, to give the most effective relief to those who need it the most. So we adopted the plan, as I said earlier, of applying the $20 million only to the horizontal, non-competitive, class and commodity rate increase of 17 per cent.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask another question? Did the minister receive any demand for representations from western Canada to the effect that Tuesday would perhaps be too early for them to come here to make representations?

Mr. Hees: No, I have received no such representations.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

1. Departmental administration, including advisory committee on agricultural services, $747,531.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned the other day, I was endorsing some remarks made by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) about the difficulties and the plight of small producers of pulpwood in eastern Canada. To the suggestions he made may I add another one which, if carried out, might provide these people with some measure of relief, and help them contend with the arrogance and brutal selfishness of corporations that refuse to buy their products and forget that the natural resources of this country must be developed not only to allow companies to pile up profits and pay out dividends, but also, and mainly, to ensure the welfare of all classes of citizens.

We have, in Quebec, an embargo making it mandatory for anyone to process our wood within the limits of the province when that wood has been cut on crown property or on lots under lease. However, there is nothing to prevent a man who cuts wood on his own lot to market and export his wood. Since those corporations obstinately persist in their ways, would it not be possible to seek markets elsewhere?

It would therefore be necessary that Canadian farmers be made aware of potential markets. Would it not be possible for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) to get together and have trade and commerce officials investigate this matter and supply our farmers, through their unions, like the C.F.U., for instance, with all the information they could find on such marketing facilities. Action along those lines would only be fair and would teach those corporations that general welfare should take precedence over their own petty and individual interests. This might be another instance where fear would be the beginning of wisdom.

The dairy industry, Mr. Chairman, seems to be on the verge of a depression which should be avoided at all costs. Everybody realizes the importance of that industry in the eastern provinces, especially in Ontario and Quebec. A few statistics will illustrate its extent.

That industry, comprising the production, processing and sale of fluid milk and its products, is one of the mainstays of this country.

The fact is that in 1955, the sale of milk brought our farmers a revenue of $1,438 million, and the value of milk consumed on the farm was valued at $62 million. Quebec ranked first with 35 per cent of our total dairy production, while Ontario was second with 32 per cent.

In 1957, milk production in the province of Quebec accounted for 37.8 per cent of the total farm production and the sale of its milk products was $215 million, distributed as follows:

Butter	$71,490,000
Cheese	$10,085,000
Fresh cream	$86,349,000
Other products, including ice cream and milk	$47,530,000

In the provincial constituency of Bellechasse, in particular, considering its population, milk production is uncommonly remarkable. In 1957, we had, in fact, 11 butter factories and two cheese factories, one of which, in La Durantaye, also produces milk powder.

Those factories were supplied by 2,075 producers having a total of 21,400 cows, while the number of owner farmers was 2,200. Butter production rose to 2,993,599 pounds with an estimated value of $1,763,559. Cheese production, amounting to 443,856 pounds represented a value of $154,902. The value of other products, such as milk powder, fresh cream and fresh milk, amounted to $116,349.

In other words, it can be said that in 1957 Bellechasse producers received for their dairy production, a total of $1,733,885 apart from what they got from St. Henri, Lower Berthier, St. François and St. Luc parishes, for which I have no figures.

Furthermore, about a hundred producers supply milk to Quebec city. Their daily deliveries total about 40,000 pounds of milk, sold for consumption as such at $4.78 a hundred pounds, which represents an annual value of about one million dollars. Those figures show the importance of that industry in the country's economy, especially in Ontario and Quebec, more especially in the constituency I have the honour to represent.

Now, that industry is at present labouring under serious difficulties. While our production far exceeds domestic requirements, there is a steady decline in our exports.

Dealing with this problem at the opening of the federal-provincial conference on agriculture, on November 12 last, the hon. Minister of Agriculture pointed out, in particular, that the United Kingdom, the largest importing country, had substantially increased its dairy production from 1955 to 1957. Butter production, he noted, had increased from 53 million to 101 million pounds; cheese production, from 141 million to 256 million pounds, and skim milk powder production, from 50 million to 85 million pounds.

The other day, the hon. Minister of Agriculture stated in the house that, on January 31, 1959, the Price Stabilization Board had on hand, among others, the following products:

Butter	69,682,444	pounds
Cheese	1,205,883	"
Skim milk powder	65,126,608	"

Last year's figures, for that date are not available, but it can be stated that there is, at the moment, a substantial increase. Obviously, large quantities of those products will find their way into the domestic market during periods of production letup, but there is danger of a surplus, that the government will have to deal with.

The international market has undeniably become difficult as an outlet for our dairy products. The hon. Minister of Agriculture pointed this out only recently, on March 3, before the Ontario Concentrated Milk Producers' Association; while in the last quarter of 1958, we were selling butter at 63 cents a pound, the United States were offering it at 59 cents, Denmark at 36 cents and New Zealand at 31 cents.

As far as cheese is concerned, our exports to England which, about 15 years ago, had gone up to 253 million pounds, have steadily declined since, although on the other hand their quality has consistently improved.

In this field, however, the increase in dried skim milk production still raises the greatest problem. Born out of a need existing at the time, that is eight or ten years ago, this product met with considerable success. Many plants were built, and large investments were made, unfortunately without due account being taken of the law of supply and demand. Milk producers reaped sizeable profits, because for every 100 pounds of milk used for the production of butter, they receive 50 cents for the skim milk. But at the same time, part of their production was diverted towards an industry with far from assured markets.

In 1957, without considering market conditions, the Liberal government stepped in and set a support price of 17 cents, without such support having even been requested by leading farm organizations, at least in Quebec.

The net result is that not only has production reached tremendous proportions, but due to the price factor, we are gradually losing out on the world markets. We are now faced with frightful overproduction and with ever-increasing inventories, even though last year, the support price was lowered to 15 cents. What it will be this year, I cannot say. In my view, however, the support should not be removed completely unless an alternate policy is provided without delay. Such a policy should be aimed at helping the producers themselves, and should enable them to seek and to find new markets. That, incidentally, was the position clearly taken three weeks ago by farm delegations from Quebec and Ontario. While, in the field of manufacturing, there always remains the possibility of closing down plants, there can obviously be no question of stopping production in a dairy herd.

It must be remembered that you cannot change the course of agricultural production at will. Though it has been possible in some cases, through the use of price supports, to direct the course of Canada's agricultural production towards goals of doubtful wisdom —and this is possibly what happened in the case of powdered milk—and to get a quick response from the producers, we must now proceed carefully and gradually in bringing about the changes that are needed. You cannot, overnight, substitute one type of agricultural production for another type, and such a substitution is even slower and more difficult when it has to be done by farmers of limited means.

In my view, the government should, under present circumstances, concern itself mainly with seeking means of insuring the disposal of our unsold milk products, particularly powdered milk, in view of the present overproduction. I am no expert in this field, far from it, but I have collected a number of suggestions from authorized persons, and I submit them for the minister to consider and to ponder.

In the first place, would it not be possible to include a larger proportion of dried milk in the composition of animal feeds? It has been established that available supplies of soybeans and fish meal used for such purposes are clearly inadequate. Well, since we have an excess of milk powder, would it not be better to market it in this way? Of course, it would not be a profitable market in terms of revenue but it would be better than unproductive stockpiling and, at the same time, it would help another section of our farm population.

Larger grants of milk powder to underdeveloped countries would be another relatively convenient outlet. I understand that for this purpose we would have to reduce the size of the containers now being used, because of the practically complete absence of refrigeration facilities in those countries. Since again this year we will be called upon to vote considerable financial assistance to those countries, there is no reason why we should not supply them with a larger share than usual in this particular form.

In a speech he made last November, and to which I referred earlier, the Minister of Agriculture pointed out how much the competition of margarine had increased the difficulties of the dairy products markets all over the world.

"In recent years, he said, margarine consumption has equalled or exceeded that of butter in the United Kingdom, in the United States and in Western Germany".

Since the end of World War I up to 1951, the production and sale of margarine were prohibited in Canada. In 1951, the Privy Council, confirming a Supreme Court decision, stated that, if, on the one hand, the international trade of this product has been a responsibility of the federal government, on the other hand, the production, possession and marketing of margarine were a provincial responsibility. Following that judgment, the province of Quebec, alone, exercising its rights, passed legislation and adopted a policy of total prohibition. But since the other provinces failed to adopt the same policy, in 1958 alone, production of both edible and inedible margarine increased to the fantastic figure of 145,598,000 pounds, to the serious detriment of our milk products business.

I know that at the present time experiments are going on in order that rapeseed might eventually be used in the making of this product. But so far vegetable oils used in it come mainly from abroad. Would it not be advisable to curb their import through higher tariffs?

In 1955, Professor Patrick Allen, of the documentation centre of the School of Higher Commercial Studies of Montreal, dealing with this butter-margarine problem, in a particularly thorough study, disproved the arguments put forward to justify the competition arising from these two products. You are following a dangerous course, he said, when under the pretext of safeguarding the consumer's "democratic" freedom or because it is cheaper, you advocate free consumption of margarine. Such an argument could be put forward in favour of all foreign products and would justify the repeal of all enactments designed to protect our Canadian industries. But then what would become of security in employment and of the standard of living of our industrial workers? Since those are factors which must be taken into account in our foreign trade, why should they be discarded with regard to butter producers for whom, however, it is appropriate to provide adequate income which would not only bear a comparison with the earnings of city workers but would at least be on a par with the earnings of industrialists whose capital investment is equivalent?

Another way of marketing our dairy products would be to promote the production and sale of cheese.

I mentioned earlier the particularly high level our cheese exports had reached in the past. Our cheddar cheese had come to enjoy a particularly remarkable reputation.

In my opinion, there is no oversupply of cheese. There would be no danger in increasing our production of cheese by 15 million pounds and in diverting to that effect 15 million pounds of skim milk which is today processed into powdered milk. Doctors say that cheese made from skim milk is as rich in proteins as cheese made from whole milk, and is often recommended by modern dietitians.

In view of that, it would be advisable to promote increased domestic consumption by means of proper advertising. Cheese consumption is remarkably low in Canada. While the annual per capita consumption in some European countries is as high as 30 pounds per year, here in Canada it is only about 5 or 6 pounds. Yet, besides cheddar, we manufacture other cheeses of very high quality, of which I shall name only two: those made by the Reverend Trappist Fathers at Oka, and the cheese manufactured by the Reverend Benedictine Fathers of St. Benoît du Lac, to mention only Quebec products. Unfortunately, the number of our domestic varieties is too limited, which leads us to buy foreign brands.

The officials of our Department of Agriculture would do well, I think, to study our facilities for the production, sale and consumption of that important dairy product. Canadian producers spend $350,000 a year on advertising alone. Should we not help them? The federal consumers' service has already done excellent publicity to increase domestic consumption of powdered milk. Henceforth that service might show more interest in cheese and promote its sale through plenty of good publicity throughout this country.

And as a final suggestion: could we not introduce a general policy of milk distribution in our schools? In some urban centres, the practice has been established without any government assistance and is giving excellent results. The federal government, together with the provinces, school boards and parents, should, I believe, try to generalize that practice. It has been estimated that it means a daily consumption of 7 ounces i.e. two fifths of a pound of milk, per pupil, which would help raise domestic consumption by about $20 million a year. In other words, this plan would absorb practically all the surpluses on markets supplied by fresh milk producers. I need not of course refer to the priceless benefits it would mean for the health and welfare of whole generations of school children.

Those are, Mr. Chairman, some of the means which could be considered and implemented to sell our dairy products' surpluses, which are now going through a crisis of an obviously temporary nature. In its brief submitted to us the other day, the Ontario Producers' Association pointed out the following:

> The amounts spent on agricultural support prices are a mere pittance compared to the billion dollars Canadians pay annually for tariff price supports. People who live in price supported glass houses should be the last to throw stones.

We do not hesitate—and rightly so—to increasingly support other sectors of agricultural production. For the same reasons, and still rightly so, we must maintain the policy providing for the support of the dairy industry, which now provides the livelihood of thousands and thousands of our fellow-citizens who are either isolated or grouped in modest co-operative associations, in the less favoured areas, as far as marketing is concerned, and consequently who are less able to defend themeslves.

Farmers are not asking for subsidies which would more or less lead to routine and inefficiency. In fact, the Catholic Farmers' Union, in its latest brief to the Quebec government, asked the latter not to issue any more permits for the building of new powdered milk plants. They are therefore prepared, if need be, to diversify their dairy production. But then, they need time. They also need advice, help and encouragement.

That crisis which is threatening our dairy products, as I said, is, in any case, of a temporary nature. In fact, according to the Gordon report, it is expected that, taking as a basis the annual average given by the figures for 1951 to 1955, domestic consumption will have increased by 29 per cent in 1965 and 68 per cent in 1980. Account must also be taken of developments which, at any time, may come about in Europe or elsewhere in the world, the possibility of which suggested to the right hon. Prime Minister that brilliant idea of a world food bank.

There is a last consideration which I should like to outline in closing my remarks.

Agriculture, in our country, is not merely an economic activity; it is, above all, a way of life, characterized by the close union existing between family and profession. It is the only profession in which all members of that social cell, which is the family, are interested in the work of the father, who is, at the same time, the head of the undertaking in which the community contributes to the welfare of everyone, to his education, his progress, his establishment in life and to the raising of his standard of living.

With agriculture, we have a whole sector of our population, composed of independent owners who, precisely because they own their enterprise, will naturally resist totalitarian tendencies of our contemporary world, and thereby contribute more than any other group to the social stability and the maintenance of those institutions which make for the strength and greatness of our country. That is why agriculture must remain a foremost consideration in our minds. That is why legislators must work unceasingly to maintain intact its economy, structure and means of survival.

[Mr. Dorion.]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, following the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion), I wish to take this opportunity, while the house is considering the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, to make a few general comments on the agricultural situation now prevailing in Canada, and then deal briefly with the matter of agricultural research.

May I begin my remarks by calling attention to an idea put forth by the hon. member for Bellechasse at the beginning of his speech, when as reported on page 1949 of Hansard, he made the following statement:

> The other day, following a question I had directed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), we learned that 17 of these companies have been prosecuted for infringement of the Combines Investigation Act while shamefully, deliberately and systematically exploiting—I have to use this word—the isolated small producers in our rural areas. Those punitive measures will not of course settle the problem. However, in taking this action according to law and within its constitutional responsibilities, the present government has shown a fairness and a sense of justice which deserve commendation.

Mr. Chairman, we all know of the sense of fairness of the hon. member for Bellechasse, and I think he will not be offended if I complete his thought and state that the investigation that formed he basis of the proceedings against those firms had been called for as early as January 1955 by the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc). The investigation had been authorized by the Liberal government at the time, and the report was published on April 29, 1958. I know the hon. member for Bellechasse will want to thank me for making this correction, so as to render unto Caesar what belongs to Caesar. While I am on the subject, I must say that my hon. colleague from Gatineau has, in the past few years, made himself a champion of the small pulpwood producers. In fact, he spoke in their favour several times in the House. I should like at this stage to quote from a speech he made on May 22, 1958, as reported on page 389 of Hansard:

> The main responsibility for having tolerated the exploitation of settlers and farmers by a number of lumbering companies for many years rests with the government of the province of Quebec, but I realize that the Union Nationale electoral fund took advantage of that, and as Mr. Duplessis said: "In Quebec, you do not win elections with prayers only". I had proof of that in the last election.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that the record has been set straight—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I ask the hon. member whether he can prove his statement.

Mr. Deschatelets: If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) had carefully listened to my remarks, he would have realized that I was reading part of a speech that the hon. member for Gatineau has already made on this matter of pulpwood. And if the hon. member wants more information on the matter, he can apply to the hon. member for Gatineau who has a thorough knowledge of the problem.

I would now like to make a few remarks about the way in which the prairie farmers' delegation, which came to Ottawa on March 10 last, was received. I will not refer to deficiency payments, although I might say, in this regard that so large and representative a delegation certainly deserved a less arrogant answer and a more sympathetic reception than the brush-off they received from the government. In my opinion, the delegation showed, in its human, true and honest statement, the exact living conditions of people on the prairies today. Never had the government been given a more authentic description of the depressed conditions, the worries and difficulties which exist today in the prairie provinces.

Those facts which the western farmers have stated were never contradicted nor refuted, because they are exact. It is the responsibility of this government to solve the difficulties that western producers are now facing. In the light of that situation, we cannot fail to notice the reversal of things, the change of the situation, that has happened in two years. After two years of administration, during which confusion has been added to incohesion, the situation has kept deteriorating and the government has now come to the pathetic result where farmers representing a whole area of this country had to come to Ottawa to state the difficulties and hardships they were suffering because of the present government's lack of foresight.

And no doubt the majority of the delegates had voted for the present government. What a disillusion! What a let down! They now face the future with anxiety.

In his speech made in the early stages of discussion with regard to these estimates, the Minister of Agriculture as can be seen on page 1681 of the official record, made the following statement:

From some points of view, 1958 was the best year agriculture has ever had.

I therefore thought we might refer to some evidence to see who was right. The Minister of Agriculture maintains that, from some points of view, the situation of agriculture in this country is better than it has ever been. Considering the facts brought before us—

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: On a question of privilege, I know the hon. member does not wish to misrepresent what I said. If he will look in Hansard he will see that I said 1958 was the best year agriculture had since 1953, not the best year we have ever had.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, this does not change anything that I have said. I of course accept the honourable minister's explanation. Without referring to the official record, I must accept his word. He says that, in some respects, ever since 1953, this has been the best year in so far as agriculture is concerned. However, I do question the minister's opinion, precisely because it is only an opinion; I question the opinion expressed by the minister in his speech, and I shall try to prove, with the help of witnesses, that his opinion is not in agreement with the facts. This is not surprising in the least since the minister's opinion comes from his ivory tower. So I am going to appeal to the testimony of the farmers themselves, who have to put up with present conditions. Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come to call for my first witness. I draw his testimony from statements made to the prime minister and to members of the cabinet by a visiting delegation of prairie farmers.

The first witness I shall call upon to prove conditions now prevailing in the prairies is the Reverend George Walliser, from Dilke, Saskatchewan. Here is a man who is in daily contact with the people of the prairies, and here is what he has to say in regard to the present situation.

(Text):

We are also alarmed by the general feeling of discouragement that is creeping over the people who are still left on the farm. Many young people have no hope of ever taking up farming. They have no choice but to leave home at an early age and crowd into the cities, adding to the problem of unemployment, and the consequent moral evils.

This general discouragement of the people, this lack of hope in the future, this confusion about the present, is creating in our people a spiritual unrest that hinders the effectiveness of their work for church and country.

(Translation):

I now come to my second witness, Mrs. Beatrice Trew, of Lemsford, Saskatchewan. Here is what she had to say about the present situation in the prairie provinces.

(Text):

Conditions in far too many farm homes are not conducive to healthful living nor even to what might be termed an adequate standard. We love farming and life in the country but we do not believe we should have to live in substandard homes nor should our children's health be endangered by crowded quarters, inadequately heated and lighted as many are.

(Translation):

My third witness is Mr. Gordon Wilkinson, of Regina, Saskatchewan.

(Text):

Those of us who live in the western part of Canada know from first hand experience that many of Canada's 700,000 farmers are on the brink of ruin unless their buying ability is brought up to a higher level.

We recognize that the two most important economic problems in Canada today are,

(1) Depressed farm prices and high operating costs,

(2) Unemployment and low urban buying power.

It must be recognized that any depreciation of buying power on the part of any segment of the population of Canada has a detrimental effect on the other segments. Low rural farm purchasing ability means lack of production in urban industries.

(Translation):

My fourth witness is Mr. Chas. W. Gibbings, of Rosetown, Saskatchewan, vice president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool.

(Text):

The economy of Canada is more vulnerable to farm income fluctuations than ever before. The present unemployment situation is undoubtedly partially a reflection of the declining farm purchasing power. When a farmer buys a tractor he puts people to work in the mines, the smelters, the steel plants, the rubber factories, the transportation industry, as well as those in the factories where the tractor and its components are made. Conversely, he puts them out of work when he fails to buy.

(Translation):

Here is another witness, Mr. Martin Arndt, of Springside, Saskatchewan.

(Text):

If the cost price squeeze is allowed to continue, it will bring about first, the loss of the family farm, and with it, small business and community life.

(Translation):

I have a further witness, Mr. J. W. Clarke, of Kindersley, Saskatchewan, who said:

(Text):

Mr. Chairman there is no doubt in my mind that the grain farmers position is exceedingly grave. The large grain producer, as well as the small farmer, is facing disaster. The only difference seems to be the rate at which they approach it. It is evident that if society wishes to retain the family farm as a unit of production it must act soon.

(Translation):

Still another witness, Mr. Rudy Usick, from Erickson, Manitoba, said this:

(Text):

Unless action is forthcoming soon to increase grain prices, livestock surpluses will increase with correspondingly lower prices.

This would mean that a national agricultural crisis woud result out of a temporary crisis in prairie agriculture.

(Translation):

Another witness, Mr. Alex McCalla, of Bremner, Alberta, made the following statement:

(Text):

Young people in agriculture who are either establishing or continuing a farming enterprise, are confronted with low income, instability and lack of security.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I might quote further evidence from people who today are living on the prairies but obviously not in an ivory tower, like the Minister of Agriculture.

Therefore, when comparing the views of the Minister of Agriculture and the situation actually prevailing in the prairies, we rather tend to accept the specific and true statements of people who live there now and who tell us that the position of farmers has never been so difficult as now.

In fact, much more could be said, because if we could call upon the testimony of farmers from central and eastern Canada, they would voice the same complaints and raise the same grievances. Western farmers, like those of central and eastern Canada, are now caught in a squeeze. They are caught in the cost-price squeeze, on the one hand, and on the other hand, they are caught in the downward trend of commodity prices.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder why such a state of affairs exists. Why has there been such a considerable deterioration during the past two years at a time when my hon. friends have been managing the affairs of this country? The answer is a very simple one—

Mr. Grafftey: That is not true.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the answer is very simple, and I shall give it right now. If my hon. friend who just made an interjection wants to, he may try to refute it when I have finished my remarks.

That state of affairs and that deterioration happened because the present government never had and is still without a real farm policy. If we look closely into what has been done for our farming industry in the past two years by the present government, we shall find that there has been a policy of mere expediency and that no preconceived plan embracing every aspect of agricultural life has ever been submitted to this house to meet our present needs of a permanent character. To my mind, as long as we have no farm policy of a permanent nature corresponding to these needs, there will be no hope of increasing our farm production per lot or per acre or of seeing a rise in farm income. My hon. friend, who is so fond of interrupting, will perhaps ask us if we had an agricultural policy when we were running this country. I will answer him at once.

When the Liberal party came into power in 1935—and at this stage, it is needless to emphasize the situation which prevailed at that time, because everybody knows the terrible state of affairs which existed, not only in the prairies, but on farms all over central and eastern Canada—the government, headed by the Liberal party of 1935, was then faced with an unprecedented challenge. The government, at the time, developed an agricultural policy. Western farmers, as well as those of other parts of Canada, had to be provided with better production facilities. The problem was then one of production.

At this stage of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I must say in all frankness that, in my opinion, there should never be a debate on agriculture in this house without the name of the former minister of agriculture, Mr. Gardiner, being mentioned.

Mr. Chairman, when the Liberal party was swept out of office in 1957, western farmers were in the situation that had been planned for them, that is to say they were the greatest wheat producers in the world. In fact, from 1935 to 1957, we provided them with production facilities comparable to those of any other country in the world. That was the result of a well-planned agricultural policy, which we had put forward in 1935.

Mr. Chairman, I want to be fair. I do not say that this government has failed to do anything, but I do say that what has been done for agriculture, these last two years, was done only according to a bits and bobs policy. I repeat what I said earlier, that this government has never submitted to the house an overall preconceived plan that would meet the needs of Canadian farmers.

And now, Mr. Chairman, may I say a few words about agricultural research. A study of the main estimates shows that votes numbers 5, 6 and 7 call for an estimate of a little over $2.5 million, due to the new direction given to our research services. In that connection, I must say that last year, at the time of the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, I dealt with this matter of research and here is what I said, on July 31, 1958, at page 2933 of Hansard:

(Text):

I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) a very important point. I feel that if we are to improve the efficiency of agriculture in this country, in the west as well as in the eastern and central parts of this country, we should at once adjust our research procedure. Let us set up a new co-ordination of existing services and give a new, bold and forward looking impulse to these research services, so as to develop ways to increase the income of the farmer who is now caught in the cost-price squeeze.

(Translation):

This year, Mr. Chairman, I find that a step has been made in the right direction with regard to reorganizing research, which is so important for agriculture. I have read several studies made by experts in this field, and they claim that the reason why Canadian industry has made such great strides in the last 15 or 20 years is that it was based on industrial research. If a small fraction of the money being spent by the government or by private Canadians on industrial research were devoted to agricultural research, I feel we could meet a number of the needs now existing in the field of agriculture.

In other words, I think we should try to pattern our agricultural research on what has been done in industry.

Mr. Chairman, I stated last year, and I repeat, that in the field of research, we are lagging behind many small countries in northern Europe. We are obviously lagging behind our powerful neighbours who, I understand, spent slightly over $50 million in 1957 —I am referring here to the American government—and such an amount was considered by observers as definitely small and inadequate to meet the needs of research.

Mr. Chairman, as far as we Canadians are concerned, we have many problems to face in the agricultural field, including the disposal of farm surpluses. In my view, by building up our research agencies and giving our experts more scope than they now enjoy, we could hope some day, from an industrial point of view, to find markets for certain products, for certain goods that we produce in much larger quantities than we can consume.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this is only a beginning, and that the amount we shall be voting this year—which is larger than the amount provided in other years—for the purpose of reorganizing research services, will be but a first step. May we at long last give those services an entirely new and bold direction, in order that our experts may work under conditions enabling them to produce better results.

Last year, when we discussed his departmental estimates, I made a few suggestions to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and I think I should repeat them this year.

I believe that we should allow our best experts to visit the countries where research is much more advanced than in Canada, that we should send them there to study for periods of six months, or one or two years, if necessary. We could, in this way—

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time is up.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: I had expected that probably some of the western members would wish to speak on this item and I would be interested in hearing what they had to say, particularly since the Easter recess permitted a great number of the western members to return to their constituencies and to talk to the people who supported the great number of people who came to Ottawa in the delegation. I am not sure what the members told their constituents when they went home, but I understand there is to be another delegation come to Ottawa, a follow-up delegation, to receive the answer which they expect will be the final answer from the government. That delegation, I understand, will be coming somewhere around the 25th of this month. I had hoped that this was an indication that the members from the west had given some consideration to the impetus which caused the delegation to come to Ottawa in the first place and that they might now have a change of heart and might agree with some of the people who came in that delegation and some of the conclusions which it reached. However, this may not be the case, or it may be that the members from the west are not saying anything at all because they do not want to embarrass the minister who had already made up his mind before the delegation came to Ottawa.

I was very impressed with the delegation itself and with the brief that it presented to the government.

Mr. Grafftey: I can tell you that the delegation was not impressed with the C.C.F.

Mr. Argue: Oh!

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Mr. Peters: Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I wonder how a member from the province of Quebec, and particularly from an urban riding in Montreal, would know what the delegation felt about the C.C.F.

Mr. Grafftey: I am from a rural riding in the eastern townships.

Mr. Peters: I wonder how the hon. member would know anything about the situation as it affects any one political party.

The Chairman: Order. It would be appreciated if the committee would permit the hon. member to continue his remarks.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this is just another country heard from. My remarks might also apply to a rural riding as it does to an urban riding.

We have some indication from some of the meetings that have been held that there has been unanimous support for the position that the C.C.F. took in regard to the brief presented by the delegation, and I am quite sure there will be an opportunity for us to see some of the results and whether we were right or some of the other parties were right in our analysis of the needs of the western farmers.

I think the follow-up delegation could produce more favourable results if the members who visited a number of their constituents when they were home ascertained whether the mass delegation that came down here, supported and financed by a very large percentage of their constituents, was speaking for those constituents. If this delegation was not speaking for those constituents, then I think 1,000 people certainly put a lot over the people who sent them here. If they did not do this, then there are quite a number of members from western Canada who are trying to put a lot over the western people.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Peters: It may be nonsense but it has to be one way or the other. Either the delegation was right in representing the farmers of the west or the western members are right. They both cannot be right, because they do not represent the same things. One of the sides must be right, not both. When I sit down I shall be very happy to have some of the western members rise in their places and tell us which side they now think is right.

I was interested in the remarks made by the previous speaker. He indicated—and I presume he spoke for his party—that they were interested in supporting the idea of deficiency payments as presented by the delegation.

Mr. Henderson: He comes from the city of Montreal.

Mr. Peters: Frankly, I do not care where he comes from. He is a member of this house and he has decided he is going to support deficiency payments. I suggest that this might also—

Mr. Grafftey: Did he say that?

Mr. Peters: —be adopted by his political party. This is much more than the western members are doing because they are not supporting deficiency payments or the minister would be introducing a bill very shortly. I am quite sure that if he intended to he would indicate to the house that he was going to do so. I hope, as I say, that this was an indication of the view of his party. It will mean that the opposition is united in supporting such a measure at this time. A number of documents were introduced when the brief was presented by the delegation and they interested me a great deal because they were from people representative of specific groups.

A great deal has been made by such rags as the Rural Scene and others of the fact that there were more signatures on the petition than there were farmers in the particular provinces. I think this is a good thing. In my opinion it indicates that not only the farmers were concerned but also a number of other people.

He read from some of the supplementary briefs accompanying the main brief and it is interesting to look at some of them. One is from a clergyman and he did not speak only for himself. He represented a number of people. He points out how falling farm prices and a lower standard of farm income in western Canada are having an effect on all the people of Canada, not just the grain producers. He says in part:

> We are also alarmed by the general feeling of discouragement that is creeping over the people who are still left on the farm. Many young people have no hope of ever taking up farming.

Mr. Grafftey: It is the same letter.

Mr. Peters: It is not a letter. If the hon. member would listen he would know that I am referring to supplementary briefs from people not directly concerned with deficiency payments as they are not affected by them. It is of no concern whether or not this has been read before. I am interested in this particular paragraph and I continue:

> They have no choice but to leave home at an early age and crowd into the cities, adding to the problem of unemployment and the consequent moral evils.

The clergy were concerned and presented a brief. Housewives were also represented and presented a brief.

An hon. Member: Read that one too.

Mr. Peters: Pardon?

Mr. Habel: He does not know what he is saying.

Mr. Peters: I am quite concerned with the fact that a good number of members do not seem to understand what it is all about. As they represent ridings that are concerned about deficiency payments, I think it is about time they got hold of some of these briefs and read them if they do not have the sense to listen. I was interested enough that I asked for a copy of these briefs and the delegation supplied me with them. If the hon. member did not get one I am quite sure he can get one from some of his friends if he will ask them or he can have mine if he wishes. The housewives were very concerned, as they should be, and they have specific problems that are not necessarily those of the farmers themselves. Labour was concerned. Mr. Gordon Wilkinson of the Canadian Labour Congress endorsed the main brief.

An hon. Member: I wonder why.

Mr. Peters: You wonder why. I will read you why he says he endorses it.

An hon. Member: How is the new party coming?

Mr. Peters: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that some of these backward representatives from western Canada are doing more for the new party than some of the rest of us can possibly do.

Mr. Drysdale: We heard it all at the meeting. Did you attend?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this seems to be the only time that some of these members ever say anything.

An hon. Member: We heard it the first time.

Mr. Peters: For the benefit of those who did not read this brief I quote:

> We recognize that the two most important economic problems in Canada today are (1) depressed farm prices and high operating costs; (2) unemployment and low urban buying power.
> It must be recognized that any depreciation of buying power on the part of any segment of the population of Canada has detrimental effect on the other segments. Low rural farm purchasing ability means lack of production in urban industries.

Later he goes on to say:

> Labour in Canada, representing the purchasing power of three million individuals by its one million members, believes the farm delegation has a good case and urge your government to give favourable consideration to their brief as quickly as possible.

He was not interested because he was going to get deficiency payments.

An hon. Member: That is where most of the money would end up.

Mr. Peters: The reason he was interested was that if the farmers receive a fair and reasonable net income they will be able to buy the things that the workers in the factories produce. He was interested in such things as the mechanization of agriculture and he added his brief to the other supplementary briefs. Then there was a brief from a merchant. Possibly some members do not understand why a merchant would be interested in the problems of the farmers. In his brief there is this passage:

The farmer makes up 12 per cent of the total population of Canada but at the present time receives only six per cent of the national income. Under these circumstances we cannot maintain the family farm or small business.

He is interested in the matter from his point of view and he wants the farmer to have a fair and reasonable income so that he can sell to the farmer the things he has in his store. This should be elementary enough even for western members to understand. There are a number of other briefs representing other points of view. According to the government, diversification is the cure-all but one of these briefs points out that diversification has been tried in some areas and refers to the difficulties that have arisen not only in relation to wheat production but with respect to the diversified industry. He points out that if a farmer goes out of grain production in western Canada he probably goes into beef production and that brings about a lowering in the standard of farm income across the country because a surplus is created of that product. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Grafftey: You sure can.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

He said: Mr. Speaker, ten months have passed since I presented my first budget to this twenty-fourth parliament of Canada. Tonight it is my privilege to present the Canadian budget for the year 1959. I am deeply conscious of the honour and responsibility which once again fall to my lot.

[Mr. Peters.]

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, the task of preparing the budget this year has indeed been a challenge. The concurrent existence of higher than normal unemployment and a disturbing inflationary potential have puzzled and confused economic observers not only in Canada but in many other countries. It has been necessary to analyse, weigh and assess the strength and drive of these opposing forces and to endeavour to prescribe courses of fiscal policy which will assist Canada to steer a wise course through them.

In the past year, public attention has been focused to an unusual degree on economic and financial issues. In the house, in the press and in public discussion, questions of inflation and unemployment, fiscal and monetary policy, recovery and the public and private functions in promoting sustained growth have been keenly debated. This is all to the good, for the functioning of our system of government depends upon an informed public opinion.

1958 ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

A year ago we were faced with the carry-over of the effects of a slowing down in economic activity. The two major factors in the recession which began early in 1957 were the decline in business capital investment and the liquidation of inventories, which resulted in serious unemployment. There is still considerable unemployment, but looking back over the past year it is clear that we are now in a period of economic recovery, a period in which the forces of economic growth and expansion have reasserted themselves. In the fourth quarter of 1958 the volume of production rose by two per cent above the preceding quarter and was two per cent above the level of the year as a whole. Taking account of normal seasonal influences there was a marked improvement in the trend of employment and earnings, in the volume of retail sales, in the level of corporate profits, and in the accumulation of inventories.

The budget white paper, tabled yesterday, reviews the economic developments of 1958 in some detail. I should like now to draw attention to some of the more significant aspects of these developments since they provide the background against which my budget proposals are presented.

The most important forces stemming the decline in business activity during 1958 were to be found in the fiscal policy and position of the federal government—lower tax rates and revenues, higher expenditures and increased cash disbursements particularly in housing loans. The additional spending power provided in this way helped to arrest the decline and underpinned both consumption and investment to a substantial degree until the major retarding influences had spent themselves. The tax reductions announced in December, 1957, helped to maintain the purchasing power in the hands of the public. Personal taxes paid in the calendar year 1958 were $142 million lower than in 1957, despite an increase of $1.4 billion in personal incomes. In addition, there were increases in social security payments, such as old age pensions, veterans' benefits, and unemployment insurance payments, and these also had the effect of maintaining personal incomes and consumer expenditure. Almost one-third of the total increase in personal incomes consisted of increased federal payments of this type, which rose in 1958 from $1.5 to $1.9 billion. There was also increased direct government expenditure on goods and services and this too injected new demand and tended to offset declines elsewhere in the economy. Increased federal transfers to the provinces were equal to about one-third of the total increase in provincial and municipal expenditures. The increase in provincial and municipal expenditures on goods and services in 1958 also provided substantial support.

Perhaps as important as changes in taxes and expenditures was government action to offset directly the decline in business capital investment by making funds available for housing. The result was that housing investment attained an all-time high in 1958. Housing starts rose to 165,000 units compared with 122,000 units in 1957 and a previous record of 138,000 units in 1955. In terms of value, investment in residential construction rose by $353 million or 25 per cent.

Federal fiscal policy played a major role in arresting the decline and in sustaining the economy until the balance of economic forces again turned in the direction of the recovery which is now well under way. The result was that cash requirements on budgetary account and for loans and advances were greatly in excess of cash receipts, and there was a very large cash deficit of $1,263 million in the 1958-59 fiscal year.

Hon. members are aware that in our accounting system there is no separation between current and capital expenditure except as regards loans and advances. In other words, the budgetary deficit reflects not only normal current expenditures but expenditures on capital works as well. It should be pointed out therefore that the deficit on budgetary account referred to above was to a large extent the result of expenditures on development of resources and construction, which in private business would be charged to capital account. In the calendar year 1958 these federal capital works included in current budgetary expense amounted to about $400 million. In addition, there were capital grants to the provinces, the most important of which was an expenditure of more than $50 million for the trans-Canada highway. Thus it will be seen on analysis that three-quarters of the 1958-59 budgetary deficit is in fact due to expenditure of a capital nature, rather than expenditure on current account.

The moderate but steady advance in consumer spending during the first nine months of 1958 was also a continuing source of strength. In the fourth quarter of the year the advance quickened and consumer expenditure rose by three per cent, the largest quarterly increase since 1952. This advance was an important facet of recovery and carried consumer expenditure to a level six per cent above the same period in 1957. The fourth quarter increase was particularly noticeable in expenditure on durable consumer goods which rose by eight per cent.

Consumer expenditure is much the largest and most stable element of demand in our economy. The steady rise in consumer spending during 1958 was supported by a growth in all the main components of personal income. For 1958 as a whole total wage and salary payments were two per cent above the 1957 aggregate but the trend throughout the year is more significant. There had been some decline in labour income between the summer of 1957 and the spring of 1958. This trend was reversed in February, 1958 and by December last the level of labour income was five per cent above the low point reached eleven months earlier.

The aggregate income of Canadian farmers improved substantially in 1958. Net farm income rose by 24 per cent. This was largely the result of higher returns from livestock and animal products. Farm cash income was only two per cent below the all-time high reached in 1952 and on a per capita basis for all those employed in agriculture cash income was the highest ever recorded. Government action in aid of agriculture and agricultural exports contributed directly to this improvement.

Among the forces contributing to expansion in our economy is the rapid increase in our population. During 1958 our population increased by 381,000, and by mid-summer of this year our population will pass the 17½ million mark.

All this indicates something of the strength imparted to the economy by the growth in incomes. As I mentioned earlier, this was reinforced by a reduction in tax rates and by a very considerable increase in social security payments so that personal income available for spending was markedly higher than in 1957. In fact, the increase in personal income after taxes was seven per cent in 1958 compared with an increase of five per cent in 1957. About two-thirds of this large increase in personal income after taxes was used for the purchase of additional consumer goods and services; and the remaining third, an unusually high proportion, was saved. A return to more normal levels of saving together with the anticipated expansion in personal incomes can be expected to impart still greater strength to consumer spending in the months ahead.

Corporate profits are a sensitive indicator of business conditions. For the year 1958 as a whole corporate profits were five per cent lower than in 1957. But here again the yearly aggregate is not indicative of what happened during the course of the year. The downward trend in corporate profits which persisted through 1957 and early 1958 came to an end in the summer of 1958. Corporate profits began to rise in the third quarter of 1958 and increased by a further eight per cent in the fourth quarter. This recovery in profits can be expected to impart strength to increased business capital investment.

A further factor of importance in the recovery now taking place is the changing role of inventories. Movements in inventories tend to be of a short-run character, often intensifying demand in periods of expansion and inducing further declines in periods of lessening activity. In the 1955-56 investment boom the strongly inflationary conditions associated with a high level of capital investment contributed to a rapid rate of inventory accumulation. As the mood of optimism was replaced by one of caution, inventories were allowed to run down and to this extent current needs were met from existing stocks rather than new production. Between the first quarter of 1957 and the first quarter of 1958 investment in inventories declined by $1.1 billion at annual rates—from accumulation at a rate of $500 million to liquidation at a rate of $600 million. Throughout the latter half of 1957 and the first half of 1958 investment in inventories was declining and therefore exerting a depressing effect on production. By the third quarter of 1958, however, this movement had run its course and inventory investment had resumed a positive role.

I have referred to the fact that declining business capital investment was a major factor in the slow-down which emerged during 1957. This decline was particularly noticeable in the export-based resource industries where expansion had been fed by world demand. As the world commodity markets moved into a position of over-supply in late 1956 and early 1957, capital investment in these industries slowed down and this trend spread to other areas of investment as well. The decline was particularly marked in investment in machinery and equipment which fell by almost 20 per cent between the first and the fourth quarters of 1957.

For 1958 as a whole business capital investment, excluding housing, fell by $789 million or 13 per cent from the 1957 level. While business capital investment was lower than in the peak year 1957, it was high by any other standard and remained an important source of demand in the economy. Moreover, it should be observed that a considerable part of the impact of the decline in capital investment and inventories did not fall on Canadian producers but was reflected instead in a decline in imports which had been swollen by the demands of the previous boom.

The decline in business capital investment was largely offset by expansion in social capital, including housing. In 1958 outlays of this kind increased by $513 million or 17 per cent and offset almost two-thirds of the decline in business investment. Investment in housing and community facilities such as roads, schools and hospitals, amounted to more than two-fifths of our total capital spending.

A large number of Canadian workers and important segments of the business community find their prosperity directly related to the demand for our exports. Despite the recession in the United States market in 1958, our exports of merchandise were maintained at the record level of 1957. There were substantial gains in exports of a number of commodities, among them uranium, aircraft, beef cattle, wheat and farm implements. There were declines in other products, notably petroleum, iron ore, copper, nickel, primary and semi-finished steel, as well as pulp and newsprint. There was during 1958 a pronounced economic recovery in our major external market, the United States. While our expectations of continuing improvement in the economic situation at home do not depend on any large increase in exports, the continuing strength of recovery in the United States cannot fail to affect the position of some of our most important exports and has already contributed to a return of confidence.

While exports were maintained in 1958, merchandise imports fell by eight per cent and our deficit on commodity trade declined by more than $400 million,—from $579 million in 1957 to $174 million in 1958. These reductions in purchases from abroad were associated with the lower level of business investment in Canada and affected in particular our imports from the United States. The reduction in our deficit on merchandise trade was offset to some extent by a further rise in our deficit on non-merchandise account, and our overall current account deficit declined by $288 million,—from $1,400 million in 1957 to $1,112 million in 1958. While the merchandise deficit was sharply reduced in the first three quarters of 1958, imports since then have been rising more rapidly than exports, a reflection of our progressing economic recovery.

The exchange value of the Canadian dollar in terms of United States dollars increased during the course of 1958, although the increase was confined to the first half of the year. The premium of the Canadian dollar over the United States dollar was a little more than 3½ cents in December, 1958, compared with about 1½ cents at the beginning of the year.

In our trade with the United States exports were well maintained while imports, particularly of capital goods and equipment, fell off quite sharply. On the other hand, our imports from the United Kingdom showed some increase. I am glad to say our trade and payments position with both the United Kingdom and the United States moved into better balance. With respect to the United Kingdom the gap in our current account has narrowed for the third consecutive year, with increases in both our imports and exports. The United Kingdom current account deficit with Canada in 1958 was $130 million,—the lowest in any year in the post-war period except 1950.

The achievement of better balance in our trading relationships was one of the objectives which prompted the government to call for a commonwealth trade and economic conference. All the other members of the commonwealth, accepting our invitation, met with us in Montreal last September. It proved to be one of the most significant meetings in the history of the commonwealth, and owed much to the initiative of our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). I have no hesitation in saying that, in the field of trade and economic development, the decisions reached at the conference will result in great benefits not only to the commonwealth but to the whole of the free world. The results of the conference fully justified its opening theme—"An expanding commonwealth in an expanding world."

Two subsequent decisions of great importance were foreshadowed at our conference. First, there was the approval at New Delhi in October of the proposal to enlarge the resources of the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund. In their different spheres these two institutions promote world prosperity and world stability. I shall very soon be inviting the house to approve legislation enlarging Canada's subscriptions to the resources of both these institutions. Without going into details at this time I should, however, remind hon. members that these increases in our subscriptions do not involve new cash requirements.

Second, there was the decision of the government of the United Kingdom in December to make sterling convertible—a decision which, I am happy to say, was taken concurrently by a number of leading European governments. We may be confident that, over the months and years ahead, convertibility will be a potent force reducing discriminatory trade barriers against our products and enlarging opportunities for our exporters.

One must admit, however, that trading arrangements and commercial policies on the other side of the Atlantic are in a state of some uncertainty. The European economic community—the European customs union as it was originally called—has come into being, and as an evidence of western European solidarity it is indeed welcome. Also to be welcomed is the fact that many of the first tariff reductions of the community, which came into effect last January, were made available to all members of GATT and were not confined to the members of the community. On the other hand, there seem to be strong pressures within the community to increase discrimination against the outside world in the field of trade quotas. This, together with the possibility of higher European tariffs at a later date, is seriously disturbing to other members of the North Atlantic community and could exercise a divisive influence within the alliance. In seeking wider trade opportunities wherever we can we shall continue to employ all available facilities including those of GATT, the one organization which brings together the important trading countries and the chief trading groups.

Despite these difficulties and uncertainties in the commercial policies of the common market countries, world trade and payments have been moving into better balance. The fear of "dollar shortage", which hung over these countries in the post-war years, now seems to be dissipated. The United Kingdom and western European countries have added over $3 billion to their gold and dollar reserves last year and this trend is expected to continue. For this reason alone we are entitled to expect that trading opportunities in that direction should continue to improve.

Much of the increase in European reserves came from the United States where gold reserves have fallen by $2.3 billion during the past year. This implies that, broadly speaking, the United States is continuing to act as a "good creditor". By gifts and loans, bilaterally and through international institutions, it is providing other countries with more than enough dollars to pay for the excess of its exports over its imports. But it is to be hoped that the people and the government of the United States will become less timid regarding imports, particularly imports from a country like Canada, which buys from them far more than it sells, and is linked with them by bonds of common continental defence. In particular the actions of the United States in imposing during the past year new import restrictions on lead and zinc and mandatory controls on petroleum have aroused strong resentment in this country. We shall continue to press for the removal of these and other unjustifiable impediments to our export trade.

No review of the economic situation would be complete without some comment on price movements. In the fourth quarter of 1958 consumer prices were 2.4 per cent higher than a year earlier. The wholesale price index rose 1.3 per cent in the same period. This tendency toward rising prices, particularly in a period of recession, is a matter for concern. Advancing technology might have been expected to reduce the cost and selling price of many products to consumers. It is evident, however, that developments in corporation pricing policies, in labour organization and even in our political democracy are producing increased rigidities which inhibit the free play of competitive forces and thereby promote inflation and price increases.

I feel constrained at this point to renew the warning I gave in my previous budget regarding the danger to our longer term economic prospects of a persistent trend toward higher costs of production. World markets are becoming increasingly competitive, and unless we can keep our costs of production in line with those in other important trading countries we shall find it increasingly difficult to sell our goods abroad and meet the competition of imports at home. Indeed this is happening now.

Rising costs and continuing price increases spell inflation. They weaken our competitive position at home and abroad and thereby reduce the possibilities of useful and productive employment. They divert effort from productive pursuits to the wasteful processes of speculation, from which in turn flow economic maladjustment and decline. More than this they impose severe burdens on those with fixed incomes and those normally least able to protect themselves. They lead to an unequal sharing of the fruits of progress and frustrate the just expectations of toil. I believe that the long-run growth in production and the fairness with which it is distributed are not unrelated and that both depend upon reasonably stable prices.

There has been much discussion about inflation during the past year, both here and in the United States. Some of it, in my view, has been of an exaggerated and overdramatized nature. I have always welcomed public discussion of this question. Only good can come from a better public understanding of the varied causes of inflation, of its different aspects, of its risks, of the dangers and injustices it breeds, and of the serious economic distortions it produces. I reject the doctrine of either the desirability or the inevitability of creeping inflation. As the London Economist put it:

> The proposition that inflation is inevitable is not an acknowledgment of economic determinism, but a political judgment that the will to control it has disappeared.

To argue that inflation is inevitable is a reflection upon, indeed an insult to the intelligence and the moral fibre of free peoples.

I do not see any present evidence of overt inflation in the coming year; in fact the consumer price index has declined for the past four consecutive months. We must, however, continue on guard against potential inflationary pressures. I believe that it is well within the power of Canadians to achieve reasonable price stability without sacrificing either immediate recovery or balanced growth.

I have tried to draw together the main strands in the economic developments of 1958. I have pointed to the evidence of recovery at home and abroad. Throughout 1958 there was serious unemployment despite very substantial positive action by the government. The improvements in economic conditions to which I have referred had not been in effect long enough to bring about a substantial improvement in employment before the end of 1958. It has been an unusually severe winter in most parts of Canada, and this has contributed to some delay in the recovery of employment. The most recent statistics available show a reduction in the numbers of unemployed persons as compared with a year ago and a rise of 152,000 in the number of persons working. These are very encouraging figures, and I am confident that we can now look forward to a rapid growth in employment opportunities as the season advances.

It remains to assess the strength of this recovery and to estimate the levels to which it will carry incomes in the coming year. I estimate that a mere continuation of the level of gross national product reached in the first quarter of this year would of itself produce a 1959 gross national product about four per cent above 1958. But recovery is still in process, and we can therefore confidently expect the gain in 1959 production to go well beyond this figure. Assuming normal crops, stable prices and no untoward external events I shall be basing my budgetary policy and my revenue forecasts on a gross national product of about $34½ billion which is about seven per cent above the average level achieved in 1958.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1958-59

I should like now to review briefly the government's accounts for the fiscal year that ended on March 31. Hon. members will find these set forth in some detail in the white paper tabled yesterday. It will be two or three months before our books of account for the fiscal year can be closed and audited, and the figures in the white paper and those I use tonight are approximate and subject to revision.

In my budget speech last June I budgeted for revenues of $4,652 million, expenditures of $5,300 million and a deficit of $648 million. In August, as a result of further sales tax exemptions provided in the amendments to the Excise Tax Act, I estimated the deficit at $650 million, and shortly before the house adjourned in September, following approval by parliament of the special wheat acreage payments and certain other expenditures, I revised my forecast of expenditure to $5,350 million and of the deficit to $700 million. It now appears that our revenues were $4,770 million, our expenditures including the deficit in the old age security fund were $5,387 million and the total budgetary deficit was $617 million.

The increase of $120 million in revenues is 2½ per cent over the budget forecast and reflects the fact that economic conditions during the year were somewhat better than those on which my budget estimate was based. Approximately $52 million of this increase was in tax revenues and $68 million in non-tax revenues, the latter reflecting mainly higher interest earnings and increased Bank of Canada profits. Expenditures at $5,387 million were $37 million, or two-thirds of one per cent higher than my revised budget forecast.

In addition to the expenditures for government services that are charged to the budgetary accounts we have made many very substantial loans and advances and disbursed large sums for a variety of other authorized and essential purposes. During the fiscal year these outlays amounted to $1,760 million and included loans and advances of $336 million to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, $207 million to the Canadian National Railways, $99 million to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and $42 million to the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, as well as $212 million representing disbursements from the national defence equipment account. To meet these outlays substantial sums amounting in all to $1,114 million were available from the repayment of loans, net annuity insurance and pension receipts and from other non-budgetary sources.

The budgetary deficit of $617 million and the net non-budgetary requirements of $646 million have been financed by an increase of $1,429 million in the government's outstanding unmatured debt, resulting in an increase of $166 million in our cash balances.

During the fiscal year, in addition to the refunding of treasury bills which matured weekly, outstanding securities amounting to the very large sum of $7,973 million were redeemed or converted. New bonds in the amount of $9,286 million were issued in exchange or for cash. After taking into account the net reduction of $116 million in bonds held in our securities investment and sinking fund accounts the unmatured debt held outside these government accounts increased by $1,429 million during the fiscal year.

The average interest rate on the government's unmatured debt at March 31, 1959 was 3.60 per cent compared with 3.05 per cent at the end of the previous fiscal year. This increase was mainly due to the substantial lengthening in the average term of the debt achieved during the year.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

The subject of dominion-provincial relations has already been debated on two occasions in the present session. Accordingly I do not propose to enter on that subject this evening. However, the house might find it interesting to have on record the financial contributions the federal government is already making available to the provincial governments and to provincial institutions.

Under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act we are making unconditional payments to the provincial governments or unconditional tax abatements amounting to $684 million in the current year, of which $167 million is in the form of fiscal aid through equalization and stabilization payments. Other direct unconditional payments from statutory subsidies and the share of the power corporation income tax total $30 million. As additional grants to the Atlantic provinces we are paying $2½ million a year to the government of Prince Edward Island and $7½ million a year each to the governments of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland.

In addition to these very large sums we are paying or stand committed to make available to the provincial governments or to provincial institutions very large amounts of money in the form of conditional, matching or specific grants-in-aid. These cover such projects as hospital insurance, health and hospital grants, old age and disability assistance, unemployment assistance, trans-Canada highway and roads to resources programs, grants in aid of vocational training, university grants, grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes and in aid of winter work programs, and many others. The actual disbursements under these arrangements are expected to add up to more than $460 million in 1959-60.

I should like at this point, Mr. Speaker, to place on Hansard a table showing the cost to the federal treasury of all our subsidies, tax rentals, tax abatements, and conditional and unconditional grants to provincial governments and provincial institutions, including municipalities and universities, for the past three fiscal years and for 1959-60.

There will be a number of tables that by leave of the house I will propose to place on the record of Hansard tonight, if the house were prepared to give its consent to that now I might save interrupting later.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to have printed in Hansard this table and subsequent tables as they appear in the address?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you. The table follows:

TABLE 1

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE PROVINCES
(in millions of dollars)

	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59 (preliminary)	1959-60 (estimated)
A. Unconditional Grants—
1. Statutory Subsidies	22.7	22.0	21.6	21.4
2. Tax Rental and Abatements	523.3	493.6	514.3	517.0
3. Equalization		136.0	147.5	163.4
4. Stabilization		3.4	5.7	3.3
5. 50% share of Income Tax on Power Utilities	6.6	7.3	8.7	9.0
6. Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants	—	—	25.0	25.0
7. Term 29 Award (Nfld.)	—	—	13.6	7.3
Sub-total	552.6	662.3	736.4	746.4
B. Conditional Payments—
1. Agriculture	0.8	0.9	1.6	1.6
2. Health	36.4	34.7	46.5	63.0
3. Hospital Insurance	—	—	57.8	160.0
4. Welfare	38.4	54.3	72.8	76.2
5. Vocational Training	4.1	4.5	8.5	10.0
6. Highways and Transportation	26.9	55.9	65.3	70.3
7. Resource Development	2.8	4.8	16.8	23.8
8. Subsidized Rentals and Slum Clearance	0.1	1.0	2.2	4.0
9. Other	1.2	1.0	9.2	8.5
Sub-total	110.7	157.1	280.7	417.4
C. Payments for the benefit of provincial institutions—
1. University Grants	16.0	16.5	25.5	26.2
2. Grants to Municipalities in lieu of Taxes on federal government property	9.7	17.8	22.3	22.5
Sub-total	25.7	34.3	47.8	48.7
TOTAL	$689.0	$853.7	$1,064.9	$1,212.5

It will be seen from this table that the total cost to our treasury in 1956-57 was $689 million; in the year just ended it was $1,065 million; and in the year we are now entering it is estimated that it will be $1,212 million. Thus in this new fiscal year our payments to or for the benefit of the provinces will be almost double those of three years ago.

Finally, hon. members should note that through the federal schemes of unemployment insurance, old age pensions and family allowance payments we disbursed in 1958-59 a total of $1,510 million. These disbursements not only had important income sustaining effects on the entire Canadian economy, but also had a major impact on provincial and municipal finances in relieving them of a great part of the burden of relief payments which in earlier decades would have fallen very heavily upon them.

DEBT MANAGEMENT

I reported to the house in my budget speech last June 17 that the matter of debt management, including the financing of about $1,400 million of new cash requirements, would be one of the major financial problems of the year. I said at that time that debt management cannot follow any rigid formula, but needs to be adapted to shifting economic conditions and market sentiment. I emphasized, however, the importance of taking advantage of every appropriate opportunity to sell longer term bonds in order to keep our debt maturities spread out over a reasonable period of years. Since the end of the war the average term of our debt had been steadily shortening. At the end of 1949 it was about 8½ years; by the end of 1954 it was just over 7 years; and early in 1958 it was down to 6 years.

Our problem of debt management in mid-1958 had several aspects. One was a significant change in the attitude of the investing public toward government bonds, both in Canada and in the United States. After some signs of strength in the earlier months of 1958 the New York bond market broke sharply in mid-June, and continued a pronounced downward trend to the end of the year. The Canadian market, with some variations, followed this general trend.

In both countries investors were showing little interest in increasing their holdings of longer term government bonds. These circumstances led us, in planning our financing, to look to the relatively short term market; but here we encountered the problem of the shortness in the average term of our existing debt. The major factor in this situation was the impending maturities of nearly $6½ billion of wartime victory bonds that had ultimate maturity dates between January 1, 1959, and September 1, 1966. But in so far as the market and the investor were concerned, this $6½ billion was not spread over eight years, because the first four of the issues were callable in 1959 or earlier and the 1966 issue was callable at any time after September 1, 1961. From the investors' point of view, therefore, this $6½ billion had to be considered as being spread over, not eight years, but approximately three years.

It was to clear away this heavy over-hang of bonds of short term and uncertain term, and to provide a substantial lengthening out of the average term of our debt that the great conversion loan of last summer was undertaken. I shall not repeat the detailed merits of this the largest financial operation in Canada's history. It achieved an unprecedented success. More than 90 per cent of the outstanding Victory Loan bonds were converted by their holders into longer maturities. It has proved to be a major anti-inflationary step; it removed a source of heavy pressure on the bond market; and by nearly doubling the average length of our debt it has made it possible to develop and carry forward a sound debt management policy.

Monetary policy and debt management are closely related. During the first nine months of 1958 the Bank of Canada progressively increased the total money supply very substantially. This increase in the money supply, which began in the third quarter of 1957, was in part a normal central banking operation to counter the recession in business activity and to ensure that recovery was not impeded by any shortage in credit. It was also a necessary concomitant of the conversion loan operation which was the foundation for a sound debt management policy.

Debt management and the problems of financing the undertakings of government are too often regarded as matters remote from the interest of the average citizen. The complexities of public finance and the intricacies of the bond market may seem to be removed from his experience. The fact is, however, that the national debt and the way it is managed touch the lives of all Canadians.

The volume of government borowing, the rates, distribution and length of the national debt, affect the whole pattern of individual, corporate, municipal and provincial financing. Good debt management is essential to the maintenance of the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar and the achievement of sustained national development. It is at the very heart of national thrift and is vital to the realization of the economic goals of a free and competitive society.

An important and healthy development of recent months has been the sharp reversal of a long continuing trend of dis-investment in Government of Canada bonds by the general public. This decline in the holdings of Canada bonds by the general public—that is, holdings outside the banking system and government accounts—had been going on more or less steadily since the end of the war, but was considerably accelerated during the first part of 1958. Ten years ago the general public's holdings were close to $10 billion; five years ago they were down to $9 billion; at the end of 1957 they were about $8.7 billion; and they reached a low point of just under $8 billion in September, 1958. In the past six months there has been a sharp turn around. Since last September the general public's holdings of Canada bonds have increased week by week and are now $1,560 million higher than on September 30. Today the general public's investment in Dominion of Canada bonds is at a higher level than at any time in the past eight years.

If I may have consent, Mr. Speaker, I should like to insert at this point three factual tables relating to the size, the distribution, the average term, and the total interest cost of our public debt over the past ten years.

*Excluding Canada Savings Bonds and Perpetuals.

These tables show that since 1949 our gross funded debt has increased by about five per cent, and our net debt is almost unchanged. Our net debt per capita was $847 ten years ago, $725 five years ago and is reduced to $676 now. Our net debt as a percentage of gross national product in the same years was 71.2, 44.4 and now 36.3.

While the gross interest on our public debt rose from $440 million in 1949-50 to $604 million in 1958-59, our interest and dividend returns from our public investments have risen in the same years from $92 million to $225 million. The net interest cost of the public debt was thus $348 million ten years ago and was $379 million in the year just ended.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1959-60

I come now to the budgetary outlook for the current fiscal year. Early in February I tabled the main estimates for 1959-60 totalling $5,596 million. In addition, I must assume that there will be some payments under the Agricultural Stabilization Act and that we will have to make provision for a reduced Canadian National Railways deficit for 1959. The deficit in the old age security fund will be about $185 million this fiscal year. There will also be some additional statutory expenditures as well as the usual supplementary and further supplementary estimates but offsetting these we can expect some lapsings in appropriations.

The total amount of lapsings at the end of the year is likely to be much smaller than in past years, as a result of the arduous labours of the treasury board in revising and screening the departmental estimates for the current year. As I said on tabling the main estimates, we have done our utmost to promote efficiency and economy in government administration, and notwithstanding our growth in population and the essential services that must accompany such growth, we have been able to hold both staff and administrative costs remarkably close to the levels of the previous year.

After careful study and consideration, and taking into account our continuing efforts to achieve further economies in administration and greater efficiency in the public service, I have concluded that our budgetary expenditures for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, will be approximately $5,660 million, excluding the old age security fund deficit, or $5,845 million including that deficit.

This is $458 million higher than our budgetary expenditures last year. While this would appear to be a very substantial increase I should remind hon. members that $235 million, or more than half of the total, is in our defence expenditure, and reflects, for the most part, the decision taken last year to liquidate the national defence equipment account in 1958-59. Actually, our total cash outlay this year for defence will be approximately the same as last year, but because of this change in bookkeeping treatment, equipment purchases which in previous years were charged to the defence equipment account will now be charged to budgetary expenditures. As I explained last year, this change was made in the interests of good accounting and for the maintenance of proper parliamentary control of expenditures.

The other half of the increase is in non-defence expenditures. More than $100 million is due to the higher cost of our contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. Part is due to increased debt charges reflecting the increase in our outstanding debt and higher interest rates; part to the normal growth in our existing social security and welfare payments; and part to government policies designed to foster national development and to provide increased employment opportunities,—expenditures which will in this and future years increase the efficiency and productive capacity of our economy and thereby add to our future national wealth and income.

Forecasting revenue is always difficult, much more difficult than estimating expenditures. On the basis I indicated earlier of a gross national product of $34½ billion for 1959 and taking into account all available information, I should expect if there were no change in tax rates that our total revenues would be $5,165 million in 1959-60. This is $395 million, or about eight per cent, more than our revenues in the year just ended.

If I may have unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I should like at this point to insert in Hansard a table showing my estimate of the revenues for the year just ended and what we may expect to receive in the coming year under our existing tax laws.

Table 3
Revenue forecast—Before tax changes
(in millions of dollars)

	1958-59	1959-60
Personal income tax	$1,371	$1,550
Corporation income tax	1,029	1,065
Non-resident tax	60	75
Estates tax	73	75
Customs duties	486	525
Sales tax	694	755
Other duties and taxes	561	610
Total taxes	$4,274	$4,655
Non-tax revenue	496	510
Total revenue	$4,770	$5,165

With projected revenues of $5,165 million and expenditures of $5,845 million I should expect a deficit of $680 million for the current year if there were no change in our present tax structure.

Apart from and outside the budget we shall continue to require large amounts of cash and before I come to discuss the appropriate tax policy for our present and prospective circumstances I should like to draw these requirements to the attention of the house.

As hon. members know, every year the government lends or advances substantial sums for a wide variety of public purposes. These are not treated in our accounts as budgetary expenditures, as in most cases they are interest-earning or revenue-producing and the principal amount is eventually repaid.

On the other hand, each year we collect or receive large amounts of cash which are not treated as budgetary revenues. These consist mainly of moneys paid for the purchase of government annuities, insurance or superannuation benefits or from the repayment of loans made in previous years.

During 1959-60 we shall probably be called upon to advance about $300 million to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing loans; about $200 million for the capital investment and refunding programs of the Canadian National Railways and close to $150 million to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, the National Harbours Board, the Canadian Farm Loan Board and other crown corporations and for other non-budgetary purposes.

On the other hand, we shall have about $250 million available from the repayment of loans and from the excess of current contributions over current benefit payments in our various annuity, pension and insurance accounts.

Our net requirements for these non-budgetary accounts, excluding possible exchange fund requirements which cannot be forecast, will be of the order of $400 million which we must borrow. This together with the prospective budget deficit would result in net cash requirements of between $1,050 and $1,100 million for the year.

TAX POLICY

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of our present expenditure program and our present tax structure we shall be facing a deficit of about $680 million in the fiscal year ending next March 31. This is about $63 million greater than the deficit recorded for the year just ended, notwithstanding the fact that I expect our present tax structure to yield nearly $400 million more revenue in 1959-60 than in 1958-59. As I have already said, this is due to two principal factors. The first is that having liquidated the former defence equipment account during the past year, the defence expenditures to be charged against the current budget in 1959-60 will be $235 million greater than last year, although the actual cash expenditures will be about the same. The second factor is that we shall now be meeting a full year's cost of the hospital insurance program, and this will add more than $100 million to our expenditures.

Government policies relating to taxation and expenditures should be kept flexible. In an earlier generation when government revenues and expenditures were only a very small fraction of the gross national product the broad economic effects of government finance were not of great significance. But in this modern age where the government expenditures constitute 18 to 20 per cent of the gross national product—and in many countries the percentage is much higher than in Canada—the financial policies of the government—the amount spent, how it is spent, how the revenues are raised, and the balance between revenue and expenditure—all exert a very direct influence on the health of the private sector of the economy.

As economic conditions change, the government's budget policy needs to change also. It must be flexible; it should be adapted to the shifting economic climate. There are times when a substantial deficit is clearly the right policy; there are times when the budget should be in balance; there are times when some provision should be made for the orderly retirement of debt; and within these ranges there is always the question of degree. The problem of timing the adjustments in budgetary policy is not an easy one, and yet good timing is often of crucial importance.

Government financial policy can never be as flexible as policy in private business. Changes in taxes have important, sometimes vital, effects on business operations. Government expenditures are in large measure analogous to the overhead expenses of private business; they cannot be greatly changed on short notice. Budgetary changes cannot be lightly undertaken or introduced without the most careful consideration. Moreover, it would be very upsetting and confusing to business if changes in taxation were made too frequently or at unusual times.

The deficits we ran last year, both on budgetary account and on over-all cash account, were very large; but looking back over the past year and considering all the circumstances I do not think that they were excessive. Undoubtedly they were a major factor in moderating the 1957-1958 recession, with respect to both its depth and its duration. I think nearly all informed observers have agreed that our policy last year was right in its direction and about right in its degree. We are now, however, well on the road to recovery, and we can look forward to a steady expansion of economic activity, employment and incomes.

I believe all hon. members recognize that we must look forward to a time when conditions of prosperity and employment will allow a balanced budget and when we can also make proper provision for an orderly retirement of debt.

We have not yet, however, reached that stage. Recovery is gathering momentum, but it would be unwise at this juncture to change our course so abruptly as to hamper the forces of expansion. I believe, however, that there should be some narrowing of the budgetary gap. If, under the greatly improved prospects of today, we were to continue to run deficits on the same scale as last year, we would, in my judgment, run serious risk of building up an inflationary potential which could prove most difficult to keep under control a year or so hence.

Appropriate steps in the direction of balancing the budget are also desirable in order to reduce the heavy pressure of new federal borrowings on the bond market. I have already noted that our federal debt in relation to our growing population and in relation to our expanding gross national product is not excessive; indeed its relative burden is less than in almost every year since the end of the war. But the fact remains that the Canadian bond market has not been accustomed to absorbing as large a volume of new government of Canada bonds as we have had to offer during the past year. The impact of our borrowings, which over the year as a whole have been achieved largely in a non-inflationary manner, has exerted an upward pressure on interest rates. It is desirable, therefore, under present circumstances to move in the direction of reduced federal borrowing, in order to reduce pressure on the interest rate structure and to leave more room for essential provincial and municipal financing.

The two principal elements of a continuing nature in our increased expenditures in 1958 and in 1959 are the increased old age pensions and the new program of hospital insurance. These are universal benefits available, in so far as the federal government is concerned, in the same degree to all Canadians, from coast to coast, and without regard to individual means. It seems to me that, in principle, such universally available benefits should be met from a broadly based system of tax contributions.

Our tax policy for 1959-60 will therefore be based on two principles:

(a) To provide a broadly based source of revenues to meet the new and additional forms of universally available social welfare benefits, and

(b) To reduce the budgetary gap in a degree that will not interfere with the desired rate of recovery, but will hold out the prospect of a balanced budget at the appropriate time.

I have already referred to the important results achieved by the government in providing increased social security, including old age security and hospital insurance. These programs have been well received. They cost money and must be paid for. We have also, as I have previously indicated, spent large sums to meet the problem of unemployment.

As far as I can judge, our Canadian public has been well informed about the underlying facts of the situation. Evidently most people have been expecting some tax increases this year. Many may be not unpleasantly surprised that the increases I shall be proposing are as moderate as they are.

In formulating my proposals I have made every effort to spread the increased burden in a pattern which is fair and equitable and will not weigh too heavily on any one section of the community. Several different taxes and various tax rates will therefore be affected, each of them in moderate degree. The measures which I propose are designed to safeguard the credit of the country, the soundness of our currency, the development of our resources, and the security of our economic future.

OLD AGE SECURITY

The Old Age Security Act provides a pension without a means test to every eligible person 70 years of age or over. The pension was $40 a month from 1952 until July 1, 1957, when it was increased to $46 a month. To meet our people's needs it was increased substantially to $55 a month by the present government on November 1, 1957.

Before the old age security legislation was first introduced the entire subject was carefully studied by a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. After considering various methods of financing, this committee recommended that the contributory principle be applied, and that the required funds be raised annually on a pay-as-you-go basis. From the outset the contributions to the fund have been two per cent on personal incomes with a maximum contribution of $60, two per cent on corporate incomes, and a two per cent sales tax. This 2-2-2 formula is now far from adequate to provide the funds required to pay the increased pension. In the past fiscal year the contributions fell short of the required total by $184 million. If we are to continue to maintain the contributory principle and an ear-marked fund it is necessary to increase the contributions to the fund.

I propose that we continue to support the pension out of the same three sources of contributions in the same proportion as in the past. This system is well established and fully accepted by the public. I am, therefore, proposing the following rates of contribution; three per cent on personal incomes with a maximum contribution of $90, to take effect on July 1, 1959; three per cent on corporate incomes, to take effect from January 1, 1959; and a three per cent sales tax, to take effect tomorrow.

Under the 2-2-2 formula the two per cent levy on personal incomes reached its maximum of $60 at a level of taxable income of $3,000 a year. The new three per cent levy on personal incomes will reach its maximum of $90 at the same level of taxable income.

For the convenience of hon. members may I insert in Hansard a table showing total contributions and total pension payments under the Old Age Security Act since its inception.

Table 4
Old Age Security Fund

Fiscal year	Total contributions (millions of dollars)	Total pension payments (millions of dollars)
1951-52 (3 mos. only)	$ 26.4	$ 76.1
1952-53	223.6	323.1
1953-54	293.1	338.9
1954-55	290.0	353.3
1955-56	316.2	366.2
1956-57	371.6	379.1
1957-58	371.5	473.9
1958-59	(est.) 376.0	(est.) 560.0
Total	$2,268.4	$2,870.6

The rates of contribution that I am proposing will yield about $143 million in this fiscal year and about $196 million in a full year. This means that the fund will show a deficit of about $42 million at the end of the current year; but since we shall have provided for the necessary revenues to bring the fund into balance over the next two or three years, I do not propose to treat the deficit in the old age security fund as a budgetary charge in the current year, but to carry it forward into 1960-61.

May I insert here a table showing the effect of these changes on the Old Age Security Fund for 1959-60 and for a full year.

INCOME TAX

I also propose some increases in the rates on personal and corporate incomes as part of the general program of reducing the deficit.

Aside from the increased contributions for old age security I do not recommend any increases in taxes on personal incomes below the level of $3,000 of taxable income.

I am proposing, however, to add two percentage points of personal income tax to each rate in the rate schedule above $3,000 per year, to take effect on July 1, 1959. The effect will be that taxpayers will pay an additional two per cent on all of their taxable income in excess of $3,000. The increased old age security contributions, to which I have already referred, will involve these same taxpayers in an additional $30 on their first $3,000 of taxable income. It is expected that this increased rate on taxable incomes in excess of $3,000 will yield $25 million this year and $45 million in a full year. It will have no application to approximately 3,800,000 of Canada's 4,600,000 personal income tax payers.

For 1959 the rates will reflect the fact that the increases are not to take effect until July 1. Therefore the increase in income tax rates for this taxation year will be one percentage point on taxable income in excess of $3,000 and the additional old age security contribution will not exceed $15. For example, a married taxpayer with two young children who has a total annual income of $5,600 will pay no additional income tax, but will pay an additional $2.50 a month for old age security commencing next July.

It will be remembered that this government reduced income tax rates and increased exemptions in 1957. On the first $1,000 of taxable income we reduced the rate of tax by two percentage points. On the second $1,000 of taxable income we reduced the rate of tax by one percentage point. At the same time we increased the exemption for each dependent child by $100.

Taxpayers in the lower and middle income brackets will find that their tax increases this year will cost them less than the relief granted to them by the reductions of 1957. The best way to illustrate the effect on the individual is to compare the taxes which will be payable in a full year after this year's changes with the taxes payable in 1957 prior to the reductions we introduced in that year. For purposes of comparison, let us consider the position of a typical married man who is the father of two children of family allowance age.

At an income level of $3,000 a year, under the new rates, this man will pay a total of income tax and social security contribution of $56, an increase of $4 from the 1958 level. He will, however, be paying $34 less than he paid before the reductions we introduced in 1957.

At an income level of $4,000 a year, under the new rates, he will pay a total of $208, an increase of $14 from the 1958 level but $44 less than before the reductions we introduced in 1957.

At an income level of $5,000 a year, he will pay a total of $390, an increase of $24 from the 1958 level but $44 less than before the reductions we introduced in 1957.

At an income level of $7,500 a year, he will pay a total of $898, an increase of $68 from the 1958 level but still $2 less than before the reductions we introduced in 1957.

It is clear from these examples that even after the increases now being proposed the vast majority of taxpayers will be paying less in income tax and old age security contributions than they paid prior to the reductions we introduced in 1957.

At the same time they are receiving the protection of a social security system which has been greatly improved and extended.

For the convenience of hon. members may I insert in Hansard at this point five tables indicating the effect of the proposed changes in personal income taxes, along with the increased contribution to old age security.

NOTE:—See Notes for Table 6a.

I am also proposing to add 2 percentage points to the rate of tax on corporate income in excess of $25,000, to take effect from January 1, 1959. This increase will have no application to approximately 42,000 of Canada's 50,000 corporate income taxpayers. It is estimated that this additional tax will increase revenues $56 million on a full year's basis and $32 million this fiscal year. The applicable rate will now be 47 per cent. Together with the old age security contribution, the levy on corporate profits up to $25,000 will be 21 per cent, and on the excess over $25,000 will be 50 per cent.

Although it is only fair and equitable that all corporations should pay the old age security contributions in full, my proposal that corporate incomes up to $25,000 should be exempt from the additional two per cent levy is in line with the government's policy of giving special encouragement to the expansion of smaller business firms.

May I insert here, Mr. Speaker, a table showing the effect of this tax increase at various levels of corporate profits?

In connection with personal income taxes, I have reviewed the whole subject of income tax deductions for medical expenses. It became necessary to do this because of the greatly increased federal contributions to health costs under the hospital plans financed jointly with the provinces. After studying various solutions to the problems at issue, I have come to the conclusion that a change should be made.

My proposal is to exclude from medical expenses, as now defined in the Income Tax Act, all such expenses from which the taxpayer is relieved to the extent that they are paid with the assistance of the federal government under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. This amendment will take effect as from January 1, 1959, to coincide with the taxation year for individuals.

The exemptions granted under the Income Tax Act for medical expenses are clearly intended to relieve the individual taxpayer who has a burden of unusual medical expenses. It would be quite anomalous to allow income tax deductions to individuals for hospital care received at government expense now that the federal government is financing a very substantial proportion of hospital costs. The federal treasury should not be in the position of paying twice, once in terms of expenditure and again in terms of taxes forgone.

A further reason for making this change arises out of the differences in form amongst the provincial schemes. Because of these differences it is becoming increasingly difficult to give equal income tax treatment to the residents of the various provinces which have instituted hospital insurance plans. Under some of these it appears that the taxpayer incurs expenses which he has, in effect, prepaid by insurance premiums. Under others he does not incur expenses but merely receives free care paid for out of general taxation.

Under this proposal a taxpayer will still be able to claim expenses which he himself has paid, including any co-insurance or deterrent charges paid under a provincial hospital insurance plan, or which an insurance company or health insurance association has paid for him. Consequently, there will be no change in the present incentive for taxpayers to insure against the costs of health care. Implementation of this proposal will have no effect on a taxpayer in any province that is not receiving federal funds in support of a hospital insurance plan.

This change in the definition of medical expenses will reduce the total of medical expenses deductible on income tax returns, and it is estimated that it will increase our tax revenues by $3 million this year, and $9 million in a full year.

Before I leave the subject of medical expenses in relation to personal income tax, may I say that I have carefully reviewed a number of requests for additions to the list of items that may be included as medical expenses for income tax purposes. I am proposing to add a few more items to the list including iliostomy and colostomy pads, crutches, trusses, and rocking beds for polio patients.

In addition to these tax changes I have just outlined, Mr. Speaker, the bill to amend the Income Tax Act will contain a number of amendments of a more technical nature. Some of these are designed to alleviate hardship, others to improve the efficiency of the tax system and keep it up to date. It is not expected that these changes will have any significant effect on revenues.

One of these amendments will provide for more generous tax treatment of payments made by an employer to the widow or dependent children of a deceased employee by providing that such death benefits shall be free of tax up to an amount equal to 12 months' salary of the employee or $10,000 whichever is the lesser.

There has been an increasing use of group life insurance plans as a means whereby corporations provide substantial remuneration to some of their senior officers in a tax-free form. This is unfair to other taxpayers. Accordingly an amendment will be proposed to subject to tax a portion of the benefit which an employee derives through the payment of group life insurance premiums on his behalf by his employer. It is not intended to disturb the present tax treatment of the many plans where the benefit provided by the employer does not exceed $25,000 of insurance for an individual employee.

Another proposed amendment that will be of some general interest will provide for tax relief on lump sum withdrawals from employee pension plans where the amount withdrawn is transferred to another pension plan or used as a premium under a registered retirement savings plan. It is believed that this step will help an individual who is moving from one job to another or from the status of employee to that of self-employed person to do so without seriously disturbing his provision for a retirement income.

ESTATE TAX

The Estate Tax Act has been in force since January 1, 1959, a period of about three months, and has received general public approval. I am not proposing any amendments to this act this year. In my view, it would be wise to allow for another year of testing, study and experience.

SALES AND EXCISE TAXES

In a budget of this kind, where it is necessary to find increased revenues, no one will be surprised that I am including some changes affecting cigars, cigarettes and spirits. Taking effect tomorrow, the excise duty on spirits will be increased by $1 per proof gallon, from $12 to $13 per proof gallon. This change is equivalent to about 12 cents on a 25-ounce bottle of whisky. Also taking effect tomorrow, the excise tax on cigarettes will be increased by $1 per thousand. This latter is equivalent to two cents per package of 20 cigarettes. Also taking effect tomorrow, the excise duty on cigars which is now $1 per thousand will be increased to $2 per thousand.

These three tax increases will yield about $42 million in this fiscal year and $46 million in a full year, including the parallel increases in customs duties and the consequential increases in the sales tax.

I am proposing some technical amendments which will affect the application of the Excise Tax Act to toilet goods and pharmaceuticals. These amendments will go some way toward implementing one of the recommendations contained in the report of the sales tax committee of 1956.

Briefly, they will extend the definition of manufacturing to the packaging of toilet preparations and pharmaceuticals except where this is done in a retail store for sale directly to consumers and will also extend the definition of manufacturer to any person who markets private brand toilet preparations and pharmaceuticals except a retailer who sells directly and exclusively to consumers.

This amendment will apply to both the sales tax and the special 10 per cent excise tax.

After careful consideration, I am convinced that a serious degree of inequity exists at present in the application of the Excise Tax to toilet goods and pharmaceuticals. This is why I am proposing these amendments. In some instances, one domestic manufacturer is being treated unfairly in comparison with another, merely because of the way his business is organized. In other important instances products of domestic manufacture are being taxed more stringently than comparable imported products. The amendments I am bringing forwards are designed to rectify these situations.

These present recommendations may be regarded as portions of the continuing program of reviewing the operation of the Excise Tax Act and of implementing, where appropriate, certain parts of the report of the sales tax committee of 1956.

I have received a number of requests for the exemption of particular products from sales or excise taxes. Because of the need for revenues I find myself unable to comply with any of these requests this year, apart from minor technical exceptions.

The bill to amend the Excise Tax Act will also contain a number of amendments providing technical and administrative changes. None of these latter amendments is expected to have any significant effect on revenue.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

I now turn to the Customs Tariff. I have a substantial number of changes to propose to the house tonight. The main group relates to fruits and vegetables. For the convenience of honourable members, I have consolidated these changes, affecting eighty-one tariff items and sub-items, into a single resolution. Another resolution contains the nine changes that we are making as a result of renegotiating the most-favoured-nation rates on woollens and worsteds. Another resolution clarifies the interpretation to be given to the word "machinery" throughout the tariff. And still another embraces all changes of a miscellaneous character.

It might be of interest to note that 142 tariff items and sub-items are affected by the resolutions. In the case of 32 items the rates of duty are being increased. In the case of 40 items rates are being reduced. In the case of nine items, all involving fruits and vegetables, rates are being both increased and decreased depending on the season. Finally, there are 61 items for which rates of duty are left unchanged and for which the changes proposed are, for the most part, purely formal.

In every case where an increase is proposed in a rate that was bound in one way or another under our trade agreements, the appropriate negotiations or consultations have been undertaken and are either concluded or virtually concluded.

The house will recall that, on November 17, 1957, I tabled an extensive report by the tariff board on fruits and vegtables. Broadly speaking, the changes in the tariff items on fruits and vegetables that I am submitting tonight flow from that report.

The government undertook to negotiate the tariff changes proposed by the board, under the terms of our trade agreements, with the countries concerned—that is to say, chiefly with the United States, but also with other countries supplying us with small quantities of fruits or vegetables. We recognized that, as in all such negotiations, we would either have to "compensate" for the increase in some tariff rates by reductions in others, or else face retaliatory tariff increases against our fruits, vegetables or other products entering the United States and other countries. Accordingly, before negotiations began, we consulted the Canadian horticultural council about possible supplementary changes in our tariffs on fruits and vegetables which might be used by way of compensation.

In the end, the negotiations ranged over almost the whole of our tariff schedule on fruits and vegetables. While the negotiations have been friendly, they have not been easy. The results, however, can be regarded as satisfactory. Details are to be found in the resolution on the fruit and vegetable tariff schedule that I am tabling tonight. For the convenience of hon. members I have divided this resolution into three sections: one sets out changes of substance, both increases and decreases in rates; another contains other changes of a purely formal nature, such as the renumbering of tariff items; a third was required to make a minor change in our trade agreement with New Zealand.

Three of the most important changes are as follows: The duty on potatoes, table and seed, new and old, will hereafter, as recommended by the tariff board, be 37½ cents per cwt. throughout the year. Thus, at last, we regain substantial reciprocity with the rates applied to our potatoes by the United States—that is to say, reciprocity with the rates applied to the bulk of our shipments to that country. Our seasonal duty applying to imported peaches remains at 1½ cents a pound, but it will hereafter be in force for 14 instead of 9 weeks each year. In respect of apples we are moving to complete reciprocity with the United States; the duty on imported apples will hereafter be ¼ cent a pound all the year round, instead of free for 10 weeks and ⅜ cent a pound for the rest of the year.

The list of products is lengthy. I can summarize the changes broadly, indicating first what is happening to the "in-season" duties and second what is happening to the "out-of-season" duties. As for the "in-season" situation, the special seasonal duties will be increased or the seasonal period improved, or both, for the following products: asparagus, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, corn-on-the-cob, cucumbers, lettuce, onions, peppers, parsnips, apricots, sour cherries, pears and prunes. Further, an additional duty of 5 per cent will be charged on green beans, Brussels sprouts, carrots, beets, cauliflower, lettuce, peas, parsnips and corn-on-the-cob when imported in season in consumer-type packages.

Turning to the out-of-season situation, for most products the duty continues to be 10 per cent as at present; but for a number of important products a period of free-entry will now be permitted during part or all of the "off-season". These off-season arrangements, which will benefit Canadian consumers without, we believe, damaging Canadian producers, will apply to the following products: beans, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, lettuce, peppers, tomatoes, cantaloups, pears, plums and strawberries.

Turning to the canned and frozen products there are modest increases of duty consequential upon the increased protection received by the fresh products. These increases apply to asparagus, Brussels sprouts, apricots, cherries, peaches and prunes. Certain commonwealth countries send us some canned fruits and, following discussions with them, we are adjusting preferential rates on these products so as to maintain existing preferential margins.

I now turn to textiles. In September 1957 I referred to the tariff board the whole of the textile schedule, including yarns, fabrics and made-up goods, and at that time I invited the board's recommendations. The board has, up to the present, submitted reports on woollen and worsted fabrics, on woollen yarns, on cotton yarns and fabrics, and on textile wastes. It has also held hearings on synthetic fibres and fabrics, and I expect to receive that report shortly. Thus, most of the more important items have now been considered. The board has yet to hold hearings, however, on a substantial number of items, many of them of no wide significance but some of considerable importance to the groups directly affected.

It would have been unfair and undesirable to delay action on any of these numerous textile items until the board had reported on all of them. I am sure the house would wish the government to take or to initiate action on individual groups of items as soon as practicable after receiving the board's recommendations, and this is the policy that the government is following. However, we are bound to act within the framework of our trade agreements; these may involve preparatory procedures in addition to the negotiations themselves which usually occupy many months. Moreover, since some groups of textile tariff items are closely linked to others, it may be contrary to our commercial interests to try to negotiate one group before we are in a position also to negotiate another.

In my last budget I took the first step towards our general revision of the textile schedule by introducing modest increases in the British preferential rates on woollens and worsteds under tariff item 554b.

At the same time I announced the government's intention to renegotiate the most-favoured-nation rates on that item with a view to restoring the margin of British preference. Accordingly, tonight I am announcing new most-favoured-nation rates under that item as follows: for fabrics weighing 12 ounces or more per square yard a rate of 27½ per cent plus 33 cents per pound; for fabrics weighing less than 12 ounces a rate of 27½ per cent plus 38 cents; and for fabrics weighing not more than 9 ounces a maximum duty of $1.10 per pound. The increases in these rates correspond with the modest increases in the preferential rates introduced last year, so that the margin of preference previously in effect is now being restored.

Our negotiations regarding increases in our M.F.N. duties on woollens and worsteds have been conducted with Italy and France. By way of compensation we are granting reduced rates on a special type of wool fabric—fabrics for neckties and scarves—and also on perfumes, aperitif wines, ports, sherries and manufactures of marble.

We have taken steps under our trade agreements to initiate negotiations on other textile items, including cotton yarns and fabrics. The house may be assured that we shall move forward as quickly as may be practicable.

A brief reference should, perhaps, be made to other reports of the tariff board that have been received and tabled since my last budget: Those relating to rubber footwear and to fluorspar. In neither case did the board recommend any change in the tariff structure, and no change is proposed.

This concludes what needs to be said about the disposition of reports from the tariff board. However, the resolutions I am tabling for the amendment of the Customs Tariff cover other matters as well. For the most part the changes that are put forward are of miscellaneous character, of considerable interest to those directly concerned but of no very general interest. There is, however, one group of changes to which I should call attention.

I have been giving thought to various representations that have been made to the government regarding a very important concept which runs through our Customs Tariff: the concept that the protection afforded to goods which are ruled by the Department of National Revenue or the courts to be of a "class or kind" made in Canada should receive greater protection than similar goods of a "class or kind" not made in Canada. This differentiation, based on "class or kind", is to be found in many individual tariff items and also in our anti-dumping and countervailing duties.

Some of the representations have suggested legislation which would define or re-define the words "class or kind" in such a way as to enlarge the range of goods that are now deemed to be made in this country and thus given the greater protection. It is questionable, however, whether an over-riding measure, involving a departure from present practices and present interpretations, is in the national interest. I am not prepared, at this stage, to propose a general measure to broaden the range of goods that receive protection on a made-in-Canada basis. On the other hand, I am prepared to propose particular measures to prevent this range of goods from becoming narrower. In this connection important representations have been received from Canadian manufacturers of machinery, and I am proposing two steps tonight that will be of interest to them.

One of the problems to be met is this. Most machines now enter Canada, not under tariff items naming particular types of machine, but under items providing for machinery in general. These items provide for relatively high rates of duty on machines of a class or kind made in Canada and relatively low rates on those of a class or kind not made here. Experience has shown that, with the increasing complexity and variety of modern machines, these "class or kind" provisions create uncertainties. Much time and expense are involved in trying to clarify "class or kind" questions before the courts.

I propose to resolve these issues in six important fields by introducing six new tariff items tonight. Each of these items will specifically name one class or kind of machine, which has been ruled to be made in Canada, and will apply the tariffs rate that is now applicable to it. Thus, there will be no change whatever in the immediate situation. But all concerned, and particularly the Canadian manufacturers and users of these machines, will be able to make plans and contracts on a firm basis and without fear of protracted and costly litigation. The six are: fork-lift trucks, paper-mill machines, power cranes, power shovels, machines for generating electricity, and vending machines.

The second problem to be met stems from modern automation. Machines are becoming not only more complex but also more closely interwoven and intertwined—linked together, in many cases, under complicated control systems. This has raised a question: What is the difference, if any, between "machinery" and "a machine"? Let me illustrate the problem. The word "machinery" might be interpreted to cover a series of machines, interlinked with each other and under a common control system. If so, and if one or more of this series of interlinked machines was not made in Canada, then our customs department and our courts might feel bound to rule that the machinery, the assembly taken as a whole, was of a class or kind not made here. As such, the whole assembly would be entitled to low rates of duty even though some of the individual machines were of a class or kind made in this country and would thus have been entitled to substantially higher protection.

To avert this risk of loss of protection I am tonight inviting the house to insert a new definition or interpretation in the Customs Tariff. Under this, wherever the word "machinery" appears in the tariff it will be defined to have the same meaning as the word "machines". Here, again, there will be no change whatever in any rates of duty that are being applied at present; but I hope we shall be avoiding serious difficulties and uncertainties that might have arisen in the future.

In concluding my proposals regarding changes in the Customs Tariff, I should say a word about their effect on the revenues. Hon. members will have observed that, while some of the changes in rates are upwards, others are downwards. Only one of the changes affects a tariff item which yields us substantial revenue—an increase of $1 per gallon on imported spirits bringing this rate into line with the higher domestic excise duty to which I have already referred. Apart from this change, it is reasonable to assume that the tariff changes I am proposing tonight will not appreciably influence the balance of ways and means in the coming year.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

That, Mr. Speaker, concludes my budgetary proposals for the year upon which we are just entering. In summary may I remind you that our budgetary expenditures, which exclude the old age security fund, are expected to be $5,660 million; our budgetary revenues after giving effect to the tax changes I have proposed are estimated at $5,267 million; and the indicated deficit for 1959-60 is $393 million.

In reviewing our cash requirements earlier this evening I estimated our extra-budgetary cash needs at about $400 million. To this sum I must now add the expected deficit of $42 million in the old age security fund which is not being charged against the current budget. In round figures, therefore, our net cash requirements outside the budget will be about $450 million, and this added to the budgetary deficit, means that our net borrowing requirements this year will be of the order of $850 million, or some $400 million less than in the year just ended. With a good response to our Canada savings bond campaign this year, our net market borrowings in 1959-60 should be less than one half of the $1,220 million borrowed in the market in 1958-59. Since our flow of revenues will be at a rising rate throughout the year, partly because of expanding prosperity and partly because some of the increased taxes do not come into full effect until later in the year, our new borrowing needs are likely to fall more heavily in the first half of the fiscal year than in the second half.

May I now insert here, Mr. Speaker, my final table which shows the effect of the proposed tax increases on the budgetary levies, on the old age security fund contributions, and the combined increases.

Table 8

Revenue forecasts—After tax changes
(in millions of dollars)

	Revenue added Full year	Revenue added In 1959-60	Total revenue in 1959-60
(a) Budgetary Levies
Personal income tax	$ 54	$ 28	$1,578
Corporation income tax	56	32	1,097
Non-resident tax			75
Estates tax			75
Customs duties	3	3	528
Sales tax	1	1	756
Other duties and taxes	42	38	648
Total taxes	156	102	4,757
Non-tax revenue			510
Total revenue	$156	$102	$5,267
(b) Old age security fund contributions
Personal income	$ 75	$ 41	$191
Corporation income	28	20	76
Sales tax	93	82	269
Total	$196	$143	$536
(c) Combined increases
Personal income tax	$129	$ 69
Corporation income tax	84	52
Sales tax	93	82
Cigars, cigarettes and spirits	46	42
Total	$352	$245

It will be seen that the total tax increases proposed amount to $352 million in a full year and $245 million in this fiscal year. This increase will, in a full year, balance the increased cost of old age pensions and the enlarged social security program.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, Canada has its share of problems, some arising out of international disagreements and tensions, and others resulting from the process of growth of our nation. With courage and firmness, none of those difficulties are insuperable. So long as our problems are only in the nature of growing pains, we can look to the future with confidence and assurance.

We have withstood the disturbing calm of recession, and the winds of prosperity again fill our sails, as the basic strength and firmness of the Canadian economy again assert themselves. With a united, determined and confident population, Canada marches on unflinchingly towards its bright destiny.

(Text):

Just as last year's budget was designed to meet 1958 economic conditions and needs, so this year's budget is designed to meet the changed conditions and needs of 1959. In a period when economic conditions are undergoing rapid change, our approach to our fiscal problems must be flexible and adaptable.

This budget has been designed to foster and promote recovery. Our aim is to maintain a sustainable rate of growth in terms of employment, development of resources and a sound dollar, so that Canadians everywhere may find full expression for their enterprise, industry and aspirations as free men and women.

Canada has no reason for fear. Blessed as she has been by a benign Providence above all other lands, she can face her shining future with utmost confidence.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1960 and subsequent taxation years each of the graduated rates of tax at present applicable to individuals on taxable income in excess of $3,000 be increased by two percentage points and that for the 1959 taxation year each of the graduated rates of tax applicable to individuals on taxable income in excess of $3,000 be increased by one percentage point.

2. That with respect to income of corporations earned on and after January 1, 1959 the 45 per cent rate of tax on taxable income in excess of $25,000 be increased to 47 per cent and the 43 per cent rate of tax on taxable income in excess of $25,000 applicable to corporations deriving more than half their gross revenue from the sale for delivery in Canada of electrical energy, gas or steam be increased to 45 per cent.

3. That commencing January 1, 1959 the definition of medical expenses exclude those amounts which the taxpayer is not required to pay because they are paid with the assistance of the government of Canada under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

4. That amounts paid on or after January 1, 1959 for iliostomy and colostomy pads, crutches, trusses for hernia and rocking beds for poliomyelitis patients be included in the medical expenses that are deductible in computing taxable income.

5. That for the 1959 and subsequent taxation years an individual be allowed to deduct in computing income, in addition to the amounts now permitted by the Act, any amount received by him out of a pension fund or plan upon withdrawal or retirement from employment or upon the winding up of the fund, not exceeding the portion thereof that is paid in the year, or within 60 days after the end of the year, as a contribution to a registered pension fund or plan or as a premium under a registered retirement savings plan.

6. That with respect to deaths occurring after April 9, 1959 the exemption for a portion of a death benefit paid by an employer upon or after the death of an officer or employee in recognition of his service be changed from an amount equal to the employee's remuneration for the last 90 days in the office or employment to an exemption for an amount equal to the remuneration of the employee for the last 12 months in the office or employment or the amount of $10,000 whichever is the lesser.

7. That for 1960 and subsequent taxation years there shall be included as income from an office or employment the amount of the benefit which an employee derives by virtue of the payment by his employer of a premium under a group life insurance plan to provide the employee with life insurance coverage to the extent that it is in excess of $25,000.

8. That the time within which a notice of objection to an assessment issued after February 8, 1959 must be served be increased from 60 to 90 days from the day of mailing of the notice of assessment.

9. That the privilege of qualifying as a foreign business corporation be withdrawn except for those corporations that were so qualified for the 1958 taxation year.

EXCISE ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Act to provide:

1. That the duty of excise on spirits distilled in Canada be increased from $12 to $13 per proof gallon.

2. That the duty of excise on Canadian brandy be increased from $10 to $11 per proof gallon.

3. That the duty of excise on cigars be increased from $1 per 1000 to $2 per 1000.

4. That any enactment founded upon this resolution be deemed to have come into force on the 10th day of April, 1959.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act to provide:

1. That the excise tax on each five cigarettes or fraction of five cigarettes contained in any package be increased from 2 cents to 2½ cents;

2. That the wording of the exemption from sales tax for "stock conditioners, condiments and feed supplements for addition to poultry, cattle and other stock feeds" in Schedule III be changed to read:

"Feed supplements for addition to poultry, cattle and other stock feeds and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof";

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

3. That the exemption from sales tax for tanks for collecting milk be extended to include complete parts therefor including materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture of such tanks and parts;

4. That the definition of "producer or manufacturer" be extended to include any person who packages toilet articles, preparations, cosmetics or pharmaceuticals for sale except where they are packaged by a retailer in his retail premises for sale therefrom directly to consumers or users;

5. That the definition of "manufacturer or producer" be extended to include any person who markets, except by sale at retail directly to consumers or users, toilet articles, preparations, cosmetics or pharmaceuticals manufactured under his own brand;

6. That the sales tax be imposed, levied and collected on goods purchased or imported by a licensed wholesaler and retained for his own use or for rental to others;

7. That any enactment founded upon this resolution be deemed to have come into force on the 10th day of April, 1959; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act.

THE CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. Resolved,

(a) that it is expedient to amend the English version of the Customs Tariff by adding to section two thereof the following subsection:

(3) The word "machinery" wherever it appears in this Act shall be read and construed as "machines";

(b) that it is expedient to amend the Customs Tariff by striking out section 13 and substituting the following therefor:

13. (1) The Minister may order that, in lieu of the ad valorem rate of duty or the free rate of duty, the specific duty provided in tariff items 87, 92, 94, 95 and 95a shall apply to goods described in the order imported through ports in a region or part of Canada during such period or periods as may be fixed by the Minister.

(2) If, before the coming into operation of an order under subsection (1), a person purchased goods for importation through a port in a region or part of Canada specified in the order, in the expectation in good faith that the ad valorem rate of duty or the free rate of duty would apply to the goods, and at the time of the coming into operation of the order the goods were in transit to the purchaser in Canada, the ad valorem rate of duty or the free rate of duty shall apply to the goods, notwithstanding the order.

2. Resolved,

(a) that Schedule A to The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932 be amended by striking out tariff item 106 and the enumeration of goods and the rates of duty set opposite that item, and by inserting therein the following item, enumeration of goods and rates of duty:

Tariff Item		Tariff Rates on Goods the Produce or Manufacture of New Zealand	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in This Budget
106	Fruits, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the containers to be included in the weight for duty:
	(1) Apricots	1½ cts. per pound	1 ct. per pound
	(2) Cherries	1½ cts. per pound	1 ct. per pound
	(3) Peaches	1¼ cts. per pound	1 ct. per pound
	(4) Pears	1 ct. per pound	1 ct. per pound
	(6) Prunes	1⅓ cts. per pound	1 ct. per pound
	(8) N.o.p.	1 ct. per pound	1 ct. per pound

(b) that Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 83*b*, 84, 85, 87, 89, 90*e*, 92, 93, 95, 99*d*, 105*i*, 106 and 505*c*, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of those items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget: British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
85	Mushrooms, fresh, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty.....per pound	1 ct.	4½ cts.	5 cts.	Free	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.
87	Vegetables, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty:
	(2) Asparagus.....per pound	Free	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.	3½ cts. or 10 p.c.
	In any 12 month period ending March 31, the specific duty shall not be maintained in force in excess of 14 weeks, and the 10 per cent duty shall apply whenever the specific duty is not in effect.
	(3) Beans, green.....per pound	Free	1½ cts. or Free	1½ cts. or Free	Free	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.	1½ cts. or 10 p.c.
	In any 12 month period ending March 31, the specific duty shall not be maintained in force in excess of 14 weeks which may be divided into two separate periods, and the Free rate shall apply whenever the specific duty is not in effect.
	(5) Brussels sprouts.....per pound	Free	3 cts. or 10 p.c.	3 cts. or 10 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.
	In any 12 month period ending March 31, the specific duty shall not be maintained in force in excess of 16 weeks, and the 10 per cent duty shall apply whenever the specific duty is not in effect.
	(6) Cabbage.....per pound	Free	Free or 9/10 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free or 9/10 ct. or 10 p.c.	Free	9/10 ct. or 10 p.c.	9/10 ct. or 10 p.c.
	The Free rate shall apply during the months of March and April.
	During the remaining months in any 12 month period ending March 31, the specific duty shall not be maintained in force in excess of 30 weeks which may be divided into two separate periods, and the 10 per cent duty shall apply whenever the specific duty is not in effect.

5. Resolved, that any enactment founded upon the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force on the 10th day of April, 1959, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

THE OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend The Old Age Security Act to provide:

1. That for the 1960 and subsequent taxation years the rate of Old Age Security tax every individual shall be required to pay on his taxable income be increased from 2 per cent with a maximum of $60 to 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 and that for the 1959 taxation year the rate shall be 2.5 per cent with a maximum of $75.
2. That with respect to income of corporations, other than non-resident-owned investment corporations, earned on and after January 1, 1959 the rate of Old Age Security Tax be increased from 2 per cent to 3 per cent of taxable income.
3. That the rate of Old Age Security tax on the sale price of goods be increased from 2 per cent to 3 per cent and that any enactment founded upon this paragraph be deemed to have come into force on the 10th day of April, 1959.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, with all members of the house I think that we would want to pay the traditional compliments to the zeal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in the important task he has in presenting a budget of this kind. We are all familiar with the dimensions of the problems he has had to face in recent times. I want to assure him that those of us on this side, where we do see constructive measures, will at all times want to support them and certainly any evidence of recovery that he is able to present to us will be as much a delight to the opposition as to people all across the country. But unfortunately, as we so often find in these presentations of the Minister of Finance, there is an exceeding amount of passion in presenting his case but often not very much consistency and, I suggest, too often accompanied by soothing forecasts as I think we will find to be the case in this debate.

The thing that I think is most striking to all of us is the difference that has taken place in the Minister of Finance in the short period of two years. I think it was Oscar Wilde who was not able to recognize a former acquaintance and then said, "I beg your pardon, I did not recognize you, I have changed a lot." I thing that is the position of the Minister of Finance when we look upon him in this debate.

The striking contrast, of course, is that the highlights of everything that he enunciated tonight seem to be directly opposite to the things that we knew him to stand for in recent times. He has presented to us on two occasions the largest programs of expenditure, even in wartime, in the history of the country notwithstanding his desire in the past to be the exponent of government economy and reduction in expenditure. We saw to our surprise some new recognition on his part that apparently some of the things he used to deride now have his approval although he did not make his confession too clearly. I am thinking in terms of what he had to say tonight about the possibility that under certain conditions there might even be some merit in such a thing as a surplus.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say that.

Mr. Benidickson: He called it flexibility and debt reduction but it is the same thing. He always used to deride any suggestion of a deficit and say that we should have a balanced budget. He used to say that if we had deficits we were living beyond our means. But tonight for the second time in succession we have a really whopping deficit and, in addition, above all else the Minister of Finance is known across Canada as one who has been advocating reductions in taxation. The sum of $500 million was supposed to be a reasonably attainable reduction in government expenditures without any reduction in services. Indeed, the suggestion was that a number of items could be increased and improved notwithstanding such a reduction. I say, what a contrast.

It appears that a while ago the electorate voted for cake but they are finding that the cake seemingly has to be paid for. The tax reduction that we heard about so frequently and with such emphasis during the election campaign actually only totalled $204 million—

An hon. Member: Only.

Mr. Benidickson: —compared with the staggering, whopping increase in taxation proposed in this budget, an increase of $352 million. This is the minister who so frequently said that taxes in Canada already are too high. It was the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who said repeatedly that there was no great difficulty to be encountered in bringing about reductions in taxes and also having increases in pensions. But, with no election imminent, we find that these pensions seemingly have to be paid for. In other words, whether the money goes into the social security fund or general revenue, we are now getting an increase in taxation, and I think the ordinary people of the country will recognize that if $352 million extra is to be taken from them for government purposes it is a tax, no matter what it is called. I want to point out that except during wartime and at the time of the war in Korea in 1950 and 1951 there has not been an increase in direct taxes in this country since the Bennett regime.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The same kind of government.

Mr. Benidickson: We have, of course, the same kind of government and we are getting the same kind of results. It was the Minister of Finance and those associated with him who over the years warned about tax increases. They pointed out that business that is hurt is not likely to pay taxes. They pointed out the effect that increased taxes have not only on the spending of individuals but on the capital investment of corporations, which is one of the depressing statistics not mentioned by the Minister of Finance tonight but to which we must all give attention in the course of this debate.

I rather suspect that the timing of these taxes is just the utmost in political cynicism based on a realization that increases now may be compensated for at a more appropriate time two years hence by tax reductions. In any event, $352 million is being taken out of the spending stream as a result of these proposals.

I question whether the minister would agree that we are out of danger and whether he is not nipping recovery in the bud. As I indicated, we usually can get from the minister arithmetic that requires a little further analysis. Certainly last session we found that there was a rabbit in the hat and that there was some slick bookkeeping there with respect to the defence expenditure fund. Again tonight we find throughout these statistical tables, as quickly as we are able to peruse them, some extremely deceptive sentences. For instance, on income tax, this is something that I think is striking in its deception:

> Aside from the increased contributions for old age security, I do not recommend any increases in taxes on personal income below the level of $3,000 on taxable income.

But the exception is there. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it will be obvious when these proposals are analysed that even the individual in the low income bracket is going to be short $2.50 per month in taxes compared with what the situation is. We have that difference of $2.50. By whatever name it is called, it is a reduction in the take-home and available pay of the taxpayer.

We received some gloomy news as to the increase in our debt but that news was coupled with a brag that the public and not the banking fraternity had within recent times increased their holdings of government securities. Why would there not be an increase in the holdings of government securities if the total increase in the amount of debt is $1,429 million in the course of a single year?

Those, I think, are all matters that will get proper attention as the debate proceeds. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to allow the house to accept too readily some of the soothing statements and statistics that were provided by the minister. There were a great number to which he made no reference. As will be recalled, his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) not long ago presented to this house statistics of a key indicator with respect to possible prosperity in this country when he pointed out that capital investment in this country was going down. I want to point out to the house that this is in contrast to the trend in the United States.

The minister made these encouraging statements about our trade deficit. I know that figures in this respect were just as available to him as they are to all other hon. members of the house. He did not choose to give us the latest figures in this respect. I point out to the house that the January trade gap was the highest for this month in any of the past ten years. I point out that our exports for the last two months, made available in statistics that came our way yesterday, indicate a drop in the first two months of $40 million in domestic trade. The minister expressed some satisfaction about a levelling off in the rise in the retail price index. He did not point out to us that, on the contrary, the wholesale price indices have been moving out of their recent lows; indeed the increase in wholesale prices between October and November of last year was the biggest since 1950. These, of course, are a foretaste of what might happen with respect to the prices that we pay eventually at the retail level. He did not tell us that carloadings in the United States, compared with last year, are up almost six per cent but in this country our carloadings are down. The Financial Post of March 28 pointed out that United States industrial production will likely get back to its boom-time peak within a matter of days but by contrast Canadian output is only one-half up to its low in recovery. These are some of the things that I think in a less passionate outline of our financial position might have been given by our national treasurer.

Something was said about unemployment but it was so little that I think that the country, when it examines the statement tomorrow, will really be shocked. Very little change has taken place in that respect. I am afraid that this was an attempt to put the public to sleep, just as the minister did a year ago in his budget statement at that time when he referred to a mild recession. I do not think the continuing half million or more who are unable to find jobs regard the situation either now or then as being in the nature of a mild recession. What we really need is not a presentation of happy statistics. We want all the statistics. What is needed is not slogans but jobs; and that is something we have not been getting from this administration. We know the reason for that. We know that for a year at least they were not impressed with matters of this kind and gave everybody the impression that we had nothing to worry about. I could give innumerable quotations from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) in the first years of office when they indicated that not only did we not have an emergent situation, as they described it, but that at all times we were on the verge of the elimination of the difficulty. Of course, that has not proved to be the case.

I am not going to deal tonight with the conversion loan. The Minister of Finance has an unusual faculty of describing a flop as a success; and almost anything that he talks about with respect to fiscal and monetary policy he is tempted to describe in recent months as anti-inflationary. We will deal with that matter. I simply want to say to him that there is no clearer sign of the long descending spiral of confidence in the government than the drop in bond prices with which we are all so familiar. Apparently we have in the minister someone who has no fear either of the height of interest or of the height of spending under his proposals. The rate last week is four times the rate that a short time ago he boasted about as being the all-time low. We can never get from the minister any indication that he personally is endeavouring to affect that rate, although we hear from governments and from corporations that this is exceedingly detrimental to their investments and to the creation of jobs and work in our country. This matter I think has had inadequate attention from the minister in every debate. I hope that in this debate we shall finally get some indication of what his intentions are in this respect, particularly with the hope that, on a regional basis at least, where there is an admitted depression in certain sections of our country, some special effort will be made by the administration to relieve the chronic unemployment which is at alarming levels.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that this is the biggest somersault that I can ever recall, with its complete negation of everything that the party in power indicated to the electorate they stood for, and I think that on Monday afternoon, when the debate resumes, the fullest explanation should be given, and I hope that instead of evading, as the minister sometimes does, the direct question, we will get from him some further detail about the things which were avoided tonight. We have taxes of a great variety proposed to us. It is interesting to find that in one, particularly the increase in the excise taxes on tobaccos, the increase is 25 per cent, because the resolution, as I read it, says that the tax on five cigarettes contained in any package will be increased from 2 cents to 2½ cents. That is why I call that 25 per cent. I remind the minister that he was so prominent in the past in warning about the opportunity of diminishing returns with respect to taxes of this nature.

On motion of Mr. Benidickson the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what the government intends to do tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we shall take the agricultural estimates.

It being fourteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

ANCIENNE LORETTE AIRPORT—SPACE LEASED TO QUEBEC

Question No. 265—Mr. Bourget:

1. During the last five years, has the Department of Transport leased one or more spaces to the government of the province of Quebec, or to one or more of the departments thereof, for the purpose of housing aeroplanes in one or more of its hangars at the Ancienne Lorette airport?

2. If so, for each year and in each case, what was (a) the area of the space under lease; (b) the number of aeroplanes housed in hangars; (c) the type of each such aeroplane; (d) the terms of the lease and the rental?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. By lease dated March 1, 1957, the Department of Transport has leased to the department of colonization of the province of Quebec, 18,000 sq. ft. of space in the east half of hangar No. 2 at the Quebec (Ancienne Lorette) airport. The lease runs from year to year and the rental payable to the Department of Transport is $9,360 per annum.

2. (a) Answered in 1 above. (b) Seven. (c) One Beechcraft (type D-18-E), two Beavers, one Cessna (type T-50), one Cessna (type 180), one Mallard (type G-171), and one Royal Gull. (d) Answered in 1 above.

ARMOURIES RENTAL, DRUMMONDVILLE, QUE.

Question No. 281:—Mr. Boulanger:

1. Was the armouries at Drummondville rented to any organization on February 7, 1959?

2. If so, what was the total rental paid by the said organization including any supplemental charges for insurance, etc.?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. The armoury at Drummondville was rented to L'Association de la Jeunesse de l'Union Nationale de Drummondville on February 7, 1959.

2. The total rental paid including supplemental charges was $200.38. This amount includes the following:

Rental	$ 29.88
Insurance coverage	131.50
Caretakers	14.00
Cleaners	10.00
Use of public address system	15.00
Total	$200.38

COLONIZATION DEPARTMENT, QUE.—TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT PAYMENT

Question No. 283—Mr. Bourget:

1. Did the Department of Transport receive, during the fiscal year 1957-58, an amount of $13,198.64 from the department of colonization of the province of Quebec?

2. If so, on what account?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. Quebec (Ancienne Lorette) airport, as follows:

Hangar rental	$10,140.00
Warehousing	892.14
Rental of office space	1,752.00
Aircraft handling	339.50
Sundry services	75.00
	$13,198.64

Note: The amount $10,140 shown as hangar rental represents 13 months' rental at the rate of $9,360 per annum.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLE INSPECTORS

Question No. 311—Mr. Rouleau:

How many fruit and vegetable inspectors are there in the Department of Agriculture for Canada, and how many for each Canadian province?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

BUDGET PAPERS

presented by the Honourable Donald M. Fleming, M.P.,

for the information of Parliament in connection with the Budget of 1959-60

FOREWORD

The purpose of these Papers is twofold:

1. to present a general economic review of 1958, bringing together in one place and in convenient form some of the more comprehensive indicators of economic conditions prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Bank of Canada and other Government Agencies, together with brief comments;

2. to present a preliminary review of the Government accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959.

PART I

ECONOMIC REVIEW OF 1958

PAGE

1. National Accounts—
   - National Income and Product 59
   - National Expenditure 62
   - Personal Income and its Disposition 65
   - Source and Disposition of Saving 67
   - Investment and Capital Expenditure 69
   - Revenue and Expenditure of All Governments 72

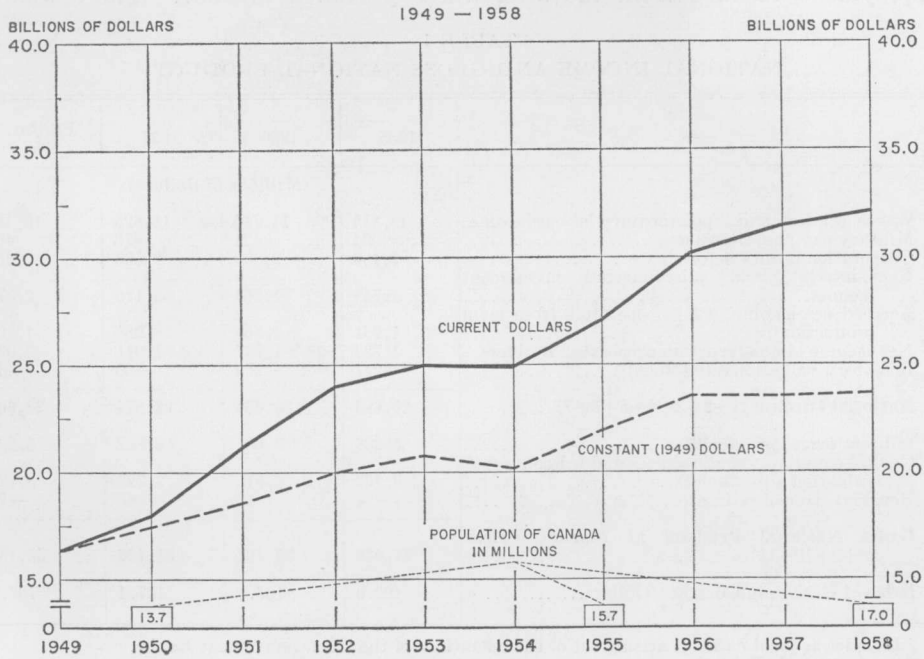
2. Balance of International Payments 77

3. Employment and Earnings 81

4. Monetary and Credit Developments 83

5. Price Trends 87

The tables in this Budget Paper are based upon estimates provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Bank of Canada and other Government Agencies. Some of the figures appear for the first time; others have been published elsewhere. All 1958 estimates are preliminary and subject to revision.



THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

National Income and Product

In 1958 Canadian gross national production rose by $778 million or by 2½ per cent and reached a level of $32.2 billion. Price increases accounted for about four-fifths of this advance in the value of production; the volume of total output was slightly higher than in 1957.

In 1958 for the second year in succession the growth in aggregate physical production fell short of the full growth potential of the economy in terms of the annual increment in the labour force and a further improvement in productivity. However, there was a significant difference between the economic trends of the two years. In 1957 the cessation of the strongly expansionary forces which characterized the preceding period, exerted a depressing influence on overall activity and brought about a downward adjustment in both business expectations and business operations over a wide area of production. During 1958 the volume of output stayed above the low point reached during the winter of 1957-58 and there was mounting evidence in the course of the year that recovery was under way. Although conditions of excess capacity continued to prevail in a considerable number of industries, selective increases in demand occurred and affected a growing number of products. The service industries which had expanded without interruption throughout the period of recession played an important part in providing additional support to the strengthening in economic trends. As a result of these developments and in marked contrast to the same period twelve months earlier, economic activity in the fourth quarter of 1958 rose substantially and the volume of non-farm output at seasonally adjusted annual rates expanded by approximately 2 per cent.

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE
IN CURRENT AND CONSTANT (1949) DOLLARS

The modest increase for 1958 in total real output did not apply in all sectors of the economy. In the non-agricultural sector, approximate stability prevailed with some decline in commodity production almost balanced by a further increase in the output of services. In agriculture, on the other hand, the expansion was quite pronounced and this accounted for the advance in aggregate real output.

In the goods producing industries output in 1958 continued to rise in construction and the public utilities. The increase in construction was due to record-breaking activity in the residential building field, but the advance was fairly moderate. The gain in output for public utilities was more substantial reflecting the continued growth in population and the rapid rate of resource development in previous years. Mining production was maintained at about the same level as in 1957 and this came about mainly because of sharply rising uranium shipments. The declines in production were concentrated in the forestry industry and in manufacturing. Notwithstanding the improvement in sales of lumber and the upturn in the pulp and paper industry during the latter part of the year, there was a sharp curtailment in logging operations in 1958. In manufacturing both durable and non-durable goods production fell below the 1957 level. The decline in the durable goods sector was quite pronounced, affecting among other commodities transportation equipment as well as iron and steel products. In non-durable goods manufacturing the downward movement was more moderate and in the second half of 1958 a marked recovery in production occurred. The steady upward trend in the service sector has been maintained in recent years despite fluctuations in overall business activity. In 1958 output increased in all service industries except transportation, storage and communication. The advance ranged from a moderate improvement in the retail and wholesale trades to a sizeable expansion in financial and related services.

Non-agricultural employment rose fractionally in 1958 but this was slightly more than offset by the drop in the number of agricultural jobs, and overall employment declined from the level which prevailed in 1957. There was a further rise in the labour force although the growth of 2.1 per cent in 1958 was much less than in the previous year when the unusually heavy flow of immigrants added a large number of persons to the working force. These trends in the labour market during 1958 were reflected in a higher level of unemployment. The number of persons without jobs and looking for work averaged 6.6 per cent of the labour force in 1958 compared with 4.3 per cent in 1957.

The shifts in production and employment in 1958 were associated with a further rise in earned incomes. The expansion of over 3 per cent in national income was approximately the same as the advance in 1957. Except for corporate profits there was a gain in all the major income groups and the improvement was particularly marked for unincorporated business, both in the farm and non-farm sectors. In 1957 labour income was up by 7½ per cent or considerably in excess of the rate of increase in national income, whereas in 1958 the rise in salaries and wages was less than the expansion in national income and amounted to about 2 per cent. The advance in labour income failed to keep pace with the rise in consumer prices and there was consequently a small decline in real income per capita. After some hesitation in the winter of 1957-58, aggregate wages and salaries rose slowly but steadily in each succeeding quarter and at the end of 1958 labour income was $544 million or 3 per cent above the level twelve months previously. An improvement in rates of pay as well as some increase in the number of paid workers during 1958 contributed to this effect. There was a decline from 1957 in the average number of hours worked per week.

In 1958 corporation profits fell by $136 million or by 5 per cent to a level of $2,369 million. The year-over-year decline, although less than the drop of 11 per cent in 1957, provides no indication of the recovery which occurred in the course of 1958. The downward trend in corporate profits which prevailed throughout 1957 came to a halt in the summer of 1958. Corporate profits gained moderately in the succeeding quarter and expanded by 8 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1958. This reflects a significant change in underlying business conditions brought about by a more favourable cost structure and by an improvement in sales affecting a growing number of industries.

Corporate profits are a sensitive indicator of the changing tempo of economic activity whereas other investment income, such as income from rentals and interest payments, follows a more stable pattern and tends to reflect more accurately the growth in the value of Canadian assets. As a result of the steady expansion over the years, income from these latter sources in 1958 reached a level of $2,374 million and exceeded corporate profits for the first time since 1934. Higher shelter costs and rising interest rates contributed to the gain of $195 million or 9 per cent in 1958.

Accrued net farm income, after a sharp decline in 1957, recovered substantially in 1958 and rose by $234 million or 24 per cent. The size of the wheat harvest was not substantially different from 1957 and the slight increase in crop production was mainly due to the expansion in coarse grains. The major part of the improvement in agricultural income was a result of higher returns from livestock and animal products. Output and prices for some products, particularly for cattle, were significantly higher than in 1957. Farm cash income which had declined moderately in the previous year rose by 8 per cent in 1958 to a level of $2,808 million. The total for 1958 was less than 2 per cent below the all-time high reached in 1952. In the years since 1952, the agricultural labour force has declined by almost one-fifth and, as a consequence, farm cash income on a per capita basis was at a record level in 1958.

Net income of non-farm unincorporated business which remained practically stable in 1957 showed a fairly substantial advance in 1958. The increase of 7 per cent was about double the rate of expansion for national income and earnings in this sector reached a level of $2,079 million. Although corporation profits were $290 million higher than income of non-farm unincorporated business, this difference was markedly smaller than in most years since 1946. Most of the advance in unincorporated business income during 1958 was a result of the pronounced improvement in earnings from construction. There were further modest gains in the service and trade sectors.

National Expenditure

In 1957 there was a lessening in the tempo of activity abroad but the impact of this on the Canadian economy was eased during 1958 by the strong recovery in the United States and by the expansionary measures taken in a number of countries, including European countries which had experienced a notable improvement in their foreign exchange reserves. The level of Canadian exports was well maintained and consumption expenditures continued to rise steadily. Larger government outlays, particularly in the form of higher transfer payments, compensated to an important extent for the fall-off in purchasing power elsewhere. Record expenditures on residential housing tended to offset a large part of the decline in business capital investment. These developments were accompanied by further adjustments, some of which began in 1957 in response to less favourable economic conditions. Efforts were made to bring costs more closely in line with current levels of plant operations. Commodity imports declined sharply in late 1957 and early 1958 and a larger proportion of Canadian requirements was supplied from domestic sources. The liquidation of business inventories had largely run its course by the end of 1958 and a better balance prevailed in stock-sales ratios. Upward price movements were somewhat less pronounced than in 1957 and selective declines took place over a wide area in 1958.

Personal expenditures on consumer goods and services rose by 5 per cent in 1958 compared with 6 per cent in 1957 and 7 per cent in 1956. Although the upward movement in expenditures slowed down over the last three years, consumer outlays played a progressively more important role in stabilizing overall activity and the demand from this source accounted for a rising proportion of total final purchases. In 1956 and 1957 consumer demand absorbed one-third and one-half respectively of the increase in total final purchases. In 1958 the expansion in consumer outlays was equal to $945 million whereas the rise in aggregate final demand was less than this mainly because of the decline in capital investment.

Consumer expenditures advanced without interruption throughout 1958. Although the expansion was quite modest during the first nine months of the year, this was followed at the end of 1958 by an increase of 3 per cent, the largest since the second quarter of 1952. Consumer expenditures in the fourth quarter of 1958 rose, seasonally adjusted at annual rates, by $660 million to a level of $21.3 billion or about 6 per cent above the level in the same period of 1957. Prices for consumer goods and services advanced by 2½ per cent in 1958 or less than in 1957 when the increase amounted to about 3½ per cent. The expansion of 2 per cent in the volume of consumption was slightly less than the rate of growth in population and there was for the second year in succession a small decline in real per capita consumption.

In both years, 1957 as well as 1958, government expenditures on goods and services rose by about 7 per cent. The increase of $382 million in 1958 brought outlays for all three levels of government to almost $6 billion. The expansion in this component of gross national expenditure tended to offset a substantial part of the decline in total final demand which took place in other sectors of the economy. Civilian expenditures by governments increased somewhat faster than total outlays because there was a further decline in defence costs. The expansion in capital investment for all levels of government combined was particularly pronounced and the rise of 10 per cent differed sharply from the downward trend in business capital formation.

Business capital expenditures (including housing) after reaching a record level of $7.3 billion in 1957 declined by $436 million or 6 per cent in 1958. The drop in the volume of capital investment was somewhat more pronounced since prices continued to rise although the advance of 2 per cent was less than the increase in 1957. Notwithstanding the downward shift in the year-over-year comparison there was some improvement in the trend of capital outlays during 1958. In the previous year investment expenditures reached a peak in the first quarter and subsequently decreased without interruption to a low point in the first quarter of 1958. However, capital outlays remained approximately stable during the last three quarters of 1958.

In 1958 the movement in the various components of capital investment was different from the pattern established in the previous year. In 1957 investment in non-residential construction as well as in machinery and equipment expanded on a year-over-year comparison, whereas residential construction declined. In 1958 there was an increase in housing construction and the extremely rapid growth tended to offset almost one-half of the decline in the other two components of capital investment.

Following the decline of 8 per cent in 1957, expenditures on residential construction in 1958 rose by $353 million or 25 per cent and reached a level of $1.8 billion. Taking into account the rise in prices, house building, in real terms, expanded by 22 per cent in 1958. Governmental action, particularly the large-scale provision of loan funds, played an important role in bringing about the strong

[2] The book value of inventories is deflated to remove the effect of price changes and the derived "physical" change is then valued at average prices of the current period to obtain the value of physical change. The difference between this value of physical change and the change in book value is called the inventory valuation adjustment (see line 7, Table 1).

revival in house building. Shortly after the introduction of these measures in 1957, housing starts rose notably and in the fourth quarter reached a new high of over 145,500 units, at annual rates and seasonally adjusted. Throughout 1958 government funds continued to be made available for house building and in addition easier conditions prevailed in the private mortgage market. These developments on the supply side and the strong demand for housing, supported by the uninterrupted rise in personal incomes, led to a record-breaking rate of activity in construction. Housing starts in 1958 amounted to 164,632 units compared to 122,340 units in 1957 and the previous high of 138,276 units in 1955. Housing completions in 1958 amounted to 146,686 units compared to 117,283 units in 1957 and the previous record of 135,700 units in 1956.

The extraordinary capital investment boom in recent years brought about a large-scale expansion in non-residential construction and expenditures in this field rose by 40 per cent in 1956 and by 20 per cent in 1957. This development reached its peak in the third quarter of 1957. In the succeeding five quarters there was a fairly continuous decline in outlays from the record level of $3.1 billion and the drop over this period amounted to $472 million. For 1958 as a whole non-residential construction declined by 9 per cent below the level in the previous year but outlays remained the highest on record except for 1957. Prices in this sector rose by one per cent in 1958 compared to the increase of 3 per cent in the previous year.

Investment in machinery and equipment rose to a peak of $3.1 billion in the first quarter of 1957 and followed a sharply declining trend during the succeeding four quarters. Relatively more stability prevailed during the remainder of 1958 and the year ended on a somewhat stronger note with expenditures rising by 2 per cent in the fourth quarter. For 1958 as a whole this component of business capital investment declined by $499 million or 18 per cent below the average level in 1957. Since prices rose by about 3 per cent in 1958, the drop in the volume of investment in machinery and equipment was somewhat larger and amounted to about 20 per cent. A large part of the fall in requirements was reflected in lower imports.

In contrast to the increase in inventories of $142 million in 1957 there was a reduction in stocks held both in the farm and non-farm sectors in 1958 and total inventories declined by $386 million. Farm inventories, including grain in commercial channels, fell by $170 million or substantially more than in 1957. In both years the disposal of wheat was in excess of below average crops and effectively reduced the high stocks accumulated during the previous period when a series of bumper harvests went together with some weakening in overseas markets. Moreover, the market for cattle, particularly in the United States, began to expand rapidly in the second half of 1957 and the high level of demand for Canadian supplies, which continued during 1958, was met in part from sales out of inventories. The movement in non-farm business inventories was different over the two-year period and the accumulation in stocks of $243 million in 1957 was followed by a decline of $216 million in 1958. The swing from heavy inventory accumulation in the first half of 1957 to substantial liquidation in the first half of 1958 was particularly pronounced. The turnabout of $920 million at annual rates during this period acted as an offset to overall demand equal to almost 3 per cent of gross national expenditure. During the second half of 1958, however, there was a reversal of the trend in business inventories and stocks rose by $32 million, at annual rates, in contrast to the reduction of $464 million for the first six months of the year. These developments during the course of 1958 indicate that stocks moved closely in line with current levels of economic activity and as a result there was a cessation of the downward effect exerted by the rapid adjustment in business inventories earlier in the year. In 1958 price increases for some components of business inventories were largely offset by declines elsewhere. It is estimated that in physical terms business inventories declined by about 2 per cent in 1958.

Inventory changes can occur quickly and these movements can bring about large additions or large offsets to total final demand. While fluctuations in this component are an important factor in determining the level of economic activity, the changes are of a short-run nature and tend to hide the more fundamental trend underlying the current situation. Excluding inventory changes, aggregate demand affecting both domestic production and foreign production rose by about three-quarters of a billion dollars or by 2 per cent in 1958. Since imports declined by $435 million, the increase in total final demand for 1958 which was met from Canadian production actually amounted to about $1.2 billion or close to 4 per cent. This indicates the extent to which the burden of the adjustment in the Canadian economy during 1958 was shifted to foreign sources of supply.

In 1958 exports of goods and services were 1½ per cent below the level in the previous year. Since prices declined somewhat there was actually an expansion of one per cent in the volume of exports in 1958. With only a small increase in prices, imports of goods and services in 1958 fell both in volume and value terms by about 6 per cent. As a result of these trends Canada's deficit on current account was substantially lower than in 1957.

Personal Income and its Disposition

Personal income differs from national income in a number of ways although the components of these two totals are for the most part similar or identical. While national income is the total of the annual earnings of Canadian residents from the production of goods and services, personal income is the sum of the current receipts of income regardless of whether these receipts are earnings from production. For example, personal income includes only that part of corporation profits which is actually received by Canadian persons as dividends. On the other hand, transfer payments, such as family allowances, old age pensions, veterans' benefits and charitable contributions of corporations, are part of personal income although they are not payments for services and, therefore, do not form part of national income.

In 1958 all components of personal income expanded and the total rose by 6 per cent or somewhat faster than in 1957 to a level of $24.6 billion. The growth of $1,444 million in 1958 was $617 million in excess of the advance in national income and this was the second year in succession when greater buoyancy prevailed in personal income. The difference in the upward movement came about mainly as a result of disbursements made by governments. Transfer payments, which are not part of national income, rose very rapidly in 1958 and this increase contributed about 38 per cent to the expansion in personal income. Larger unemployment insurance and welfare payments as well as increased disbursements to farmers were instrumental in bringing about the advance of $545 million or 26 per cent in government transfer payments. This component accounted for about 11 per cent of personal income in 1958 and exceeded investment income which had previously ranked second in importance next to wages and salaries.

Compared to the previous year Canadians in 1958 saved more but spent less out of each dollar of income on consumer goods and services and similarly paid out less in direct taxes. The yield from succession duties and miscellaneous direct taxes remained practically unchanged from the level in the previous year and the decline in total personal direct taxes in 1958 was due to lower receipts from the personal income tax. Revenues from this latter source fell by $136 million or 8 per cent in contrast to the advance of $195 million or 13 per cent in 1957. The decline in yield came about despite the further rise in incomes and was a result of the reduction in tax rates which went into effect in 1957 and 1958.

DISPOSITION OF PERSONAL INCOME

In 1958 personal disposable income, or income after payment of taxes, rose by 7 per cent compared with an increase of 5 per cent in 1957. The expansion of $1,574 million in disposable income in 1958 was about half as large again as the rise of $997 million in the previous year. About two-thirds of this increase in disposable income was used for the purchase of additional consumer goods and services, while the remainder took the form of higher personal saving. The level of personal saving is related directly to changes in assets and liabilities such as variations in inventories, in holdings of liquid assets, in contractual payments for life insurance and in outstanding consumer debt, mortgage debt as well as loans from banks and other financial institutions. For example, in recent years the increase in personal assets has been offset to a considerable extent by increased consumer credit. In 1958 there was a further expansion in consumer credit but the increase was quite small. In 1958 saving out of current income rose by $629 million or from $1,467 million to $2,096 million. The increase in personal saving exclusive of the change in farm inventories was about twice as large as in the previous year. Personal saving exclusive of saving in the form of farm inventories amounted to 9.8 per cent of disposable income in 1958 compared with 7.6 per cent in 1957 and 6.4 per cent in 1956.

All main categories of consumer expenditures expanded in 1958. Consumer expenditures for durable goods rose more than in the previous year while outlays for non-durable goods and for services increased somewhat less than in 1957. The growth of $441 million or 4 per cent in purchases of non-durable goods affected a large number of products including foodstuffs, tobacco and clothing. Expenditures for durable goods, which had remained largely stable in 1957, increased by $76 million or 3 per cent in 1958. The expansion was particularly pronounced in the fourth quarter of 1958 when an advance of 8 per cent brought total outlays to a level $248 million higher than in the same period twelve months earlier. The major factor was the sharp rise in sales of new motor cars. Outlays on services in 1958 rose by $428 million or 6 per cent compared with the advance of $594 million or 9 per cent in 1957.

Source and Disposition of Saving

Saving may be divided into three parts. In addition to personal saving, which is discussed in the preceding section, there are business saving and government saving.

In 1958 business saving declined slightly more than in the previous year and there was a large deficit instead of a surplus on government account. As a result of this and notwithstanding higher saving in the personal sector, the nation's total saving fell by $549 million or 9 per cent in 1958 compared with a drop of $193 million or 3 per cent in 1957.

Government saving is represented by the surplus of revenues over expenditures for all three levels of government combined. In 1957 saving by governments amounted to $52 million but in 1958 there was a deficit and expenditures exceeded revenues by $1,046 million. These figures are calculated in accordance with National Accounts practice and reflect the adjustment of federal receipts to place corporate tax revenue on an accrual basis. Excluding the effect of this adjustment, which has no significance from a cash standpoint, government saving in 1957 actually amounted to $292 million while the deficit in 1958 amounted to $926 million. The change in government accounts from a surplus to a deficit over the two-year period represented an offset to the nation's total saving equal to about twice the increase in personal saving in 1958. Almost all of this change took place in the federal accounts. As in the previous year, there was an excess of expenditures over revenues on the provincial and municipal levels taken together but the deficit was substantially unchanged from the level in 1957.

The largest part of the nation's saving arises in the form of funds set aside by business enterprises for future expansion or re-equipment. In 1958 business saving declined by $31 million to a level of $4,488 million. Depreciation allowances, the largest item in this total, remained stable in 1958, but there was a further drop in undistributed corporate profits. This component of business saving declined by $36 million in 1958 compared to a decrease of $209 million in 1957. In both years the reduction in retained earnings showed the effects of a lower level of corporate profits. The moderation in the decline of undistributed corporate profits in 1958 was mainly related to changes in the amount of dividends paid out which rose by $82 million in 1957 but fell by $58 million in the following year.

In 1958 the deficit on Canada's international current account amounted to $1,063 million, a decline of about 24 per cent from the record deficit in 1957. The imbalance on current account was more than matched by the inflow of capital from abroad and there was a sizeable increase in Canada's reserves of foreign exchange. The net inflow of capital in the form of direct investment and as a result of security transactions was smaller than in 1957 but remained at a relatively high level. As in the preceding two years, proceeds from security transactions were the most important source of external capital. These transactions are treated more fully in the section on the International Balance of Payments.

Investment and Capital Expenditures

The rapid growth of capital investment during the postwar period was interrupted in 1954 and again in 1958. Although total private and public capital expenditures declined by $300 million or more than 3 per cent in 1958, outlays were higher than in any other year except 1957. The total amounted to $8,417 million, a level more than one-third larger than in 1955 when the extraordinary investment boom of recent years got under way. Between 1955 and 1956 total capital expenditures as a proportion of gross national expenditure rose from 23.1 per cent to 26.6 per cent, a significant increase in the importance of investment activities in the Canadian economy. In 1958 capital outlays undertaken in all sectors constituted 26.2 per cent of gross national expenditure and, measured by this ratio, investment expenditures continued to underpin overall demand with much the same strength as in 1956.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

The decline from 1957, when spending on capital facilities accounted for 27.8 per cent of total expenditures, was a result of diverse trends in the major components of capital investment. Business capital outlays fell by $813 million or 14 per cent in 1958 in contrast to the advance of $650 million or 13 per cent in the previous year. This downward movement reflects in part the completion of some of the large resource development projects undertaken in recent years. To some extent business investment intentions have also been affected by the existence of excess capacity, particularly in the forestry and mineral products industries, and by the slower growth in economic activity both at home and abroad. On the other hand, expenditures on social investment facilities including housing rose in 1958 by $513 million or 17 per cent, a significant increase over 1957 when outlays in these sectors expanded by $31 million or one per cent. The renewed strength in housing, which began to exert a pronounced effect on investment activity in the latter part of 1957, accounted in 1958 for about two-thirds of the growth in investment in these fields. In 1958 combined capital investment in housing and social facilities was equal to about 43 per cent of total capital spending compared with 35 per cent in 1957.

For the economy as a whole the changed pattern of capital outlays involved a further expansion in construction and a sharp fall in requirements for machinery and equipment. Expenditures on construction were $171 million or 3 per cent higher than in 1957 while purchases of machinery and equipment were $471 million or 16 per cent below the level in the previous year.

Except for agriculture and the service group, all major components of business capital investment were affected by the decline in outlays in 1958. In the primary sector, capital expenditures, which had remained approximately stable in 1957, fell by $224 million or 21 per cent in 1958. Although the decline in forestry was somewhat more than offset by the expansion in agriculture, investment in this sector was substantially lower than in 1957 because of sharply reduced spending on mining, oil and gas well exploration and development. The total for this group, which almost doubled between 1955 and 1957, dropped by $244 million or 40 per cent in 1958.

The largest decline occurred in outlays for manufacturing and this accounted for almost one-half of the fall in total business capital investment in 1958. The decline was spread over a large number of industries but was particularly pronounced in the paper products industry as well as the metal and mineral groups. Notwithstanding some moderate increases in the food and tobacco industries and in the petroleum products group, total investment in manufacturing dropped by $397 million or 27 per cent in 1958 in contrast to the advance of $85 million or 6 per cent in 1957.

In 1957 the growth of $546 million in investment outlays by utilities accounted for the major part of the expansion in total business capital investment. In 1958 expenditures in this field fell by $173 million or 8 per cent to a level of $2,135 million. Heavy declines occurred in outlays for the generation of electricity and for railway transportation. Extension of the telephone and gas distribution networks continued in 1958 and there were higher outlays for water transportation but the increase in expenditures for these purposes was relatively moderate.

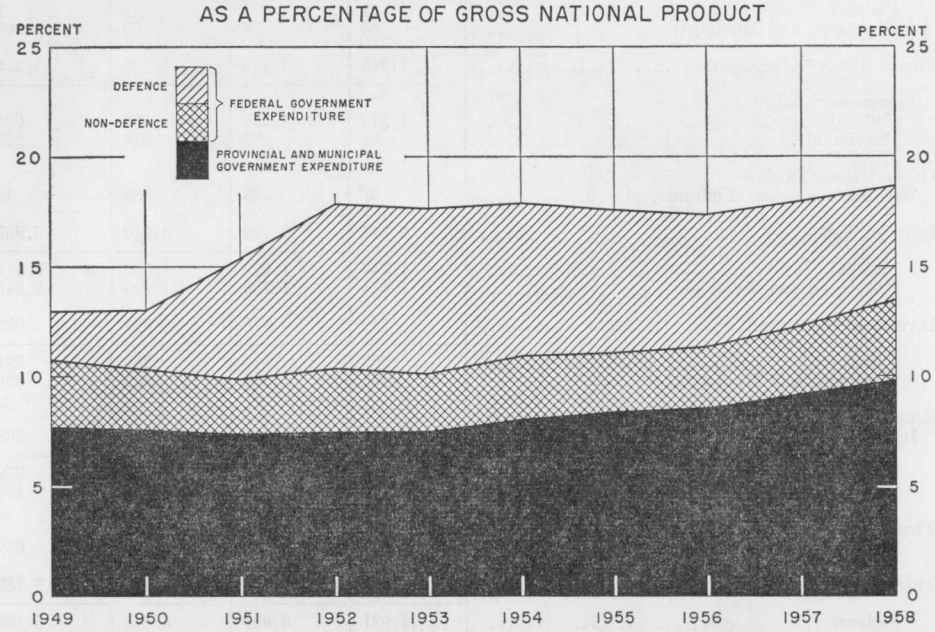
In the service sector, total capital expenditures in 1958 remained at approximately the same level as in the previous year. Stability came about as a result of offsetting trends, with higher outlays for the financial and related groups on the one hand and lower capital spending by the wholesale and retail trades as well as commercial institutions on the other hand.

In 1958 the largest expansion in capital spending took place in housing and the increase in outlays amounted to $351 million or 25 per cent. Investment in social capital facilities rose by $162 million or 10 per cent in 1958, an increase comparable to the advance in 1957. The major part of this expansion in 1958 came about as a result of the growth of $129 million in capital expenditures by government departments. Investment in this field increased faster than in 1957, whereas capital outlays by institutions, which rose by $36 million in 1958, advanced at a somewhat slower pace than in the previous year. There were further and substantial additions to university facilities together with a fairly pronounced increase in investment expenditures for hospitals and moderately higher outlays for schools as well as churches.

Revenue and Expenditure of All Governments

This section includes only those government transactions which have relevance for the National Accounts, and consequently the surpluses or deficits shown here differ from those shown in the various public accounts. In particular, corporate taxes have been adjusted to an accrual basis. In the calendar year 1957 the adjustment was large and reduced revenues by $240 million. In 1958 the adjustment was much smaller and reduced revenues by $120 million. Exclusive of this adjustment which has no relevance from a cash standpoint, the surplus for all levels of government in 1957 actually amounted to $292 million while the deficit in 1958 amounted to $926 million. This shift from a substantial surplus to a large deficit, which began during 1957 and reached a peak in the second quarter of 1958, had a sharp impact on the economy and was a significant factor in support of economic recovery. The deficit in 1958 was equal to the addition of about 3 per cent to overall demand.



The greater part of the deficit arose in the federal accounts. In the calendar year 1958 federal expenditures increased by $739 million or 14 per cent while federal receipts, exclusive of the adjustment for the accrual of corporation taxes mentioned above, declined by $473 million or 8 per cent. As a result there was a deficit of $745 million in contrast to the surplus of $467 million in 1957. On the combined provincial and municipal levels, expenditures rose by $401 million or 11 per cent while revenues increased by $395 million or 11 per cent and the deficit amounted to $181 million in 1958 compared with $175 million in 1957.

The economic effects of fiscal operations are not determined solely by revenues and expenditures. The expansionary or restrictive influence of governmental operations depends in part on changes in loans and investments. In this sector the federal accounts in 1958 also exerted a substantial and positive impact on the economy since payments in respect of loans and investments exceeded receipts by a large margin.

Approximately 60 per cent of total expenditure at all three levels of government was made for purchases of goods and services in 1958. The expansion in total outlays on goods and services was about the same as in 1957 and amounted to $382 million or 7 per cent. The increase in federal expenditures accounted for about 29 per cent of the overall growth. The fairly moderate advance in the federal share came about because of different trends in defence and non-defence outlays. Defence expenditures fell in 1958 by $109 million or 6 per cent and this decline offset one-half of the substantial rise in federal civilian outlays. In the two years since 1956 defence expenditures have declined by 8 per cent and reached a level of $1,659 million, the lowest since 1951, while total expenditures on all levels of government have risen by about 22 per cent to a high of $10,199 million.

As a result defence costs played a progressively less important role in the budgetary structure and in 1958 absorbed 16 per cent of combined government expenditures compared with 22 per cent in 1956. Federal civilian outlays on goods and services rose rapidly in 1958 and the expansion of $218 million or 23 per cent was more than double the growth in 1957. The total amounted to $1,172 million in 1958 and accounted for about one-fifth of overall expenditures on goods and services by all governments. In 1958 the increase in outlays on goods and services by provincial and municipal governments was only slightly less than in the previous year and amounted to $273 million or 9 per cent. The total accounted for about 53 per cent of overall expenditures on goods and services by all governments in 1958. At the federal level as well as the provincial and municipal levels, there was a marked growth in investment outlays in 1958 and this reflects the continuing backlog of demand for social capital facilities.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON GOODS AND SERVICES
AS A PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

In the years since 1945 total expenditures for all governments combined rose by 96 per cent while transfer payments more than tripled during the same period. The expansion in this category of governmental outlays was particularly rapid in 1958 and the total advanced by $596 million or 21 per cent compared with the increase of $336 million or 14 per cent in 1957. The growth in federal transfer payments accounted for about three-quarters of the overall expansion in 1958. Federal outlays which began to rise significantly in 1957 expanded approximately twice as fast in 1958 and reached a level of $2,440 million, about 24 per cent higher than in 1957. The legislative changes introduced in 1957 to bring about more generous social security benefits, including higher family allowances and larger old age pensions, were in effect for only part of that year but resulted in substantially increased payments for the full twelve months of 1958. The growth in the number of persons receiving the bulk of social security payments also contributed to the rise in total disbursements. In addition, a special acreage payment to Western grain farmers was made in 1958. However, higher unemployment was, as in the previous year, the most important factor in the expansion of federal transfer payments and led to significantly larger disbursements from the unemployment insurance fund.

In 1958 federal transfer payments accounted for about 40 per cent of total federal government expenditures compared with 37 per cent in 1957. At the provincial and municipal levels transfer expenditures are relatively less important and accounted for about 23 per cent of total outlays in each of the years 1957 and 1958. Disbursements by provinces and municipalities were $126 million or 15 per cent higher than in 1957 and reached a level of $975 million. Larger grants to private non-commercial institutions absorbed about one-half of the expansion in 1958.

The increase in federal subsidies in 1958 came about mainly because of the higher cost of the agricultural stabilization programme. Federal transfers to other governments rose sharply in 1958 and reached a level of $658 million. The advance of 27 per cent compares with increases of 8 per cent in 1957 and 7 per cent in 1956. Several factors contributed to the rapid growth in 1958. There was a substantial increase in tax rental payments to the provinces. Moreover, the Atlantic Provinces' Adjustment Grant was instituted by the federal government in 1958. In addition, federal participation in provincial hospital insurance schemes began in 1958 and the federal share in the cost of this programme led to a sizeable expansion in payments to the provinces.

On the revenue side, taking into consideration all levels of government, the yield from direct taxes declined in 1958 and this was partially offset by the slight rise in receipts from indirect taxes, the continued expansion in investment income and the further growth in contributions to social funds. The drop in direct personal tax revenue was mainly due to lower payments under the federal personal income tax. Yields from this revenue source declined by $143 million or 9 per cent in 1958 in contrast to the increase of $191 million or 13 per cent in 1957. The difference in the trends for the two years was largely due to reductions in tax rates and came about notwithstanding the rise in personal incomes.

Federal cash receipts from corporation income taxes rose moderately in 1957 and reached a level of $1,346 million. In 1958 federal revenues dropped sharply to a level of $1,100 million. In both years there was a pronounced decline in corporate earnings but in 1957 revenues continued to expand and advanced by $51 million whereas in 1958 federal receipts fell by $246 million. The major factor underlying the diverse movements in the two years was the lag between corporate earnings on the one hand and corporate tax payments on the other hand. Thus, the drop in corporate earnings from the high level of 1956 was only gradually reflected in tax revenues received during the intervening period. In 1958 there was a rise of $31 million or 15 per cent in revenues from the corporate income tax levied by Ontario and Quebec. The Ontario tax applied only for part of the calendar year 1957 but was in effect throughout 1958 and this was the main factor bringing about the growth in provincial revenues from this source in 1958.

Revenue from indirect taxes collected at all levels of government rose by $47 million or one per cent in 1958 compared with the increase of $188 million or 5 per cent in 1957. In both years combined provincial and municipal revenues were more buoyant than federal receipts from indirect taxes. The yield from these tax sources in the federal field remained relatively stable in 1957 and declined in 1958 by $78 million or 4 per cent to a level of $1,912 million. This came about mainly because receipts from customs duties and from excise taxes were lower in 1958 than in the previous year. The downward movement in collections from these major revenue sources was partly a reflection of prevailing economic conditions which led to a reduction in imports and was partly a result of further exemptions from sales tax introduced in 1957 and 1958. Provincial and municipal revenues from indirect taxes, although advancing at a slower rate than in recent years, continued to expand in 1958 and reached a level of $2,045 million. About two-thirds of the growth of $125 million in receipts was due to the increased yield from the municipal real estate tax. Provincial collections from the gasoline tax, the retail sales tax and other miscellaneous taxes rose moderately in 1958.

Investment income of provincial and municipal governments rose by $70 million or 13 per cent in 1958 compared with an increase of $52 million or 10 per cent in the previous year. On the federal level, income from investment, following the decline of $47 million or 15 per cent in 1957, recovered somewhat and expanded by $26 million or 10 per cent in 1958. There were offsetting gains and declines in most of the individual components and total income advanced in 1958 mainly because the United Kingdom resumed payments on the loan made by Canada under the 1946 Canada-United Kingdom Financial Agreement.

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

For the year 1958 as a whole our sales and purchases abroad conformed to the pattern which began in 1957 when the change in the economic climate, both at home and in the world at large, had a pronounced effect on Canada's international transactions. Merchandise exports, which previously provided a strong stimulus to economic growth, rose only moderately in 1957 and remained approximately stable in 1958. Merchandise imports, following a period of striking expansion, declined in 1957 as a result of diminishing pressure on supplies. A further drop of 8 per cent took place in 1958. The average level of prices for commodity exports as well as for commodity imports remained substantially unchanged in 1958 so that there was little difference from the previous year in the terms of trade, that is, the ratio of export prices to import prices.

The marked decline in merchandise imports was instrumental in bringing about a reduction of roughly two-thirds in the commodity trade deficit in 1958. The deficit amounted to $174 million compared with $579 million in 1957 and a record level of $728 million in 1956. However, the imbalance on non-merchandise transactions continued to grow in 1958 and this tended to offset, to some extent, the decrease in the trade deficit. As a result the current account deficit of 1958 was $288 million below the level of 1957 and amounted to $1,112 million.

It is interesting to note that for the first three-quarters of 1958 the trade deficit actually amounted on the average to $104 million, seasonally adjusted at annual rates. In the fourth quarter of 1958, commodity exports rose by about 5 per cent but commodity imports increased at a significantly faster rate and expanded by 9 per cent. These developments in the latter part of the year led to a widening of the imbalance on trading account. As a result the merchandise deficit in the fourth quarter of 1958 amounted to $384 million, at seasonally adjusted annual rates.

The value of merchandise exports in 1958 amounted to $4,890 million compared with $4,909 million in 1957. There were widespread declines in Canadian sales abroad for some commodities as well as substantial gains for others. The drop in exports was particularly pronounced for products such as petroleum, iron-ore, copper, nickel, primary and semi-finished steel as well as for pulp and newsprint. Offsetting movements took place in a number of other commodities and large increases occurred in shipments of uranium, aircraft, wheat, beef cattle, farm implements and natural gas.

The value of merchandise imports fell from $5,488 million in 1957 to $5,064 million in 1958, a drop of $424 million. The downward movement in purchases from abroad was associated with the lower level of business investment in Canada and this was particularly felt in reduced imports of machinery and equipment as well as iron and steel products. There was also a notable decline in imports of petroleum and other fuels. However, the further growth in consumption in 1958 was reflected in a somewhat higher level of imports of consumer goods.

The excess of payments over receipts on non-merchandise transactions rose from $821 million in 1957 to $938 million in 1958. The increase of $117 million in the deficit was almost entirely the result of a 7 per cent decline in non-merchandise receipts since total payments scarcely differed from the level in the previous year. A number of factors contributed to the lower level of Canadian earnings from invisibles. There was a substantial drop in receipts from freight and shipping partly due to the decrease in exports of bulk commodities and partly because of a fall in shipping rates. The sharp drop in immigration in 1958 was accompanied by a reduction in funds brought in by immigrants. United States expenditures in Canada on defence installations were also lower than in 1957. The relative stability in total non-merchandise payments was a reflection of offsetting movements in the individual components. There was a sharp decline in the cost of freight and shipping mainly as a result of lower imports and this was balanced by higher expenditures on all other major accounts.

The trend in our commodity trade with the United States was the most significant factor in the reduction of Canada's overall current account deficit in 1958. Although merchandise exports to the United States fell by one per cent, merchandise imports declined much more drastically and the drop actually amounted to 12 per cent. As a result the imbalance in our commodity trade was substantially reduced and the deficit fell by $413 million to a level of $534 million in 1958. Although the deficit with the United States on non-merchandise transactions rose by $66 million, most of the shift on commodity trade was reflected in the overall current account balance and the total deficit declined from $1,551 million in 1957 to $1,204 million in 1958.

Both exports to and imports from the United Kingdom rose by $19 million in 1958 and the balance on trade remained unchanged. However, there was some increase in our deficit on non-merchandise transactions. As a result the current account surplus with the United Kingdom was somewhat smaller than in the previous year.

Exports to other Commonwealth countries increased by about 22 per cent in 1958 mainly because of a pronounced expansion in shipments to India. Imports however declined by 12 per cent. These developments brought about a substantial increase in the current account surplus with other Commonwealth countries.

The moderate increase in Canadian sales to Europe was more than offset by a lower level of shipments to Latin America as well as to Japan and exports to all other countries fell by 7 per cent in 1958. At the same time imports rose by about 2 per cent and these changes, together with an increase in the deficit on non-merchandise transactions, led to a sizeable current account deficit in 1958. This was markedly different from 1957 when an approximate balance prevailed in our transactions with all other countries.

In 1958 special loans and grants were made to a number of Commonwealth Colombo Plan countries. As a result, there was a substantial increase in exports financed from aid funds and the major part of this increase consisted of wheat shipments.

In 1958 the net inflow of capital into Canada was smaller than in 1957 but the total remained at a high level. Direct investment from abroad declined by $120 million but at the same time Canadian direct investment in other countries fell by $50 million. The net capital import through international security transactions amounted to $680 million in 1958 or $86 million less than in the previous year. Sales of new Canadian issues to non-residents were lower by $124 million but, as in the two preceding years, remained the most important single source of external capital. Net sales abroad of outstanding Canadian issues declined by $5 million while the net inflow of capital from transactions in foreign securities rose by $10 million. At the same time, redemptions of foreign-held Canadian securities were $33 million lower than in 1957. There was also a decline in 1958 in the net inflow of funds on account of all other capital movements. None the less, total net capital imports were sufficient to finance our deficit on current account and Canada's foreign exchange reserves rose in 1958. At December 31, 1958, our reserves amounted to $1,939 million, expressed in U.S. funds, compared with $1,828 million at the same date in 1957.

Apart from some interruption in the late summer of 1958, the exchange value of the Canadian dollar rose during the year. For December, 1958, the average rate of exchange for the United States dollar was 96.46 compared with 97.74 for December, 1957. The upward trend was reversed in early 1959 and there was some decline in the exchange value of the Canadian dollar.

EMPLOYMENT AND EARNINGS

In the absence of any marked change in output, total employment in 1958 remained relatively stable. The average number of persons with jobs in 1958 amounted to 5,722,000 or 24,000 persons below the level reached in the previous year. This decline of less than one-half per cent, although quite moderate, contrasted with the expansion in employment of 2.6 per cent in 1957 and 4.2 per cent in 1956. The labour force participation rate in 1958 was substantially the same as in the previous year but the pronounced drop in immigration was more than offset by population growth in the active age groups and as a result there was a further expansion in the labour force. It is estimated that 124,000 persons entered the labour market in 1958, a rise of 2.1 per cent compared with the expansion of 3.8 per cent in 1957 and 3.1 per cent in 1956. This increase in the labour force accompanied by the lack of additional employment opportunities resulted in a substantial growth in unemployment. However, apart from seasonal movements, unemployment ceased to rise after mid-1958 and began to decline in January, 1959.

In 1958 agricultural employment fell by 4 per cent, a reduction of 32,000 in the number of persons with jobs in this industry. The major part of the decline was a reflection of the movement from rural to urban occupations which has been evident throughout the postwar period. It is estimated that in 1958 some 26,000 persons left the agricultural labour force compared with 30,000 persons in 1957 and 44,000 persons in 1956.

THE LABOUR FORCE

In 1958 there was a further rise in the number of persons with jobs in non-agricultural occupations but the increase was quite small and averaged 8,000 persons. The fractional growth of less than one-half per cent in non-agricultural employment compares with a gain of 176,000 persons or 3.6 per cent in the previous year. On a seasonally adjusted basis, non-agricultural employment reached a peak in September, 1957, and subsequently declined by 1.4 per cent to a low point in February, 1958. This was followed by irregular gains and in December, 1958, non-agricultural employment was only slightly below the high point reached 15 months earlier.

The pattern of employment for the main industrial groups reflected, on the one hand, a declining trend in the goods producing sector, and on the other hand, a continued upward movement in the service industries. A sharp fall in employment occurred in the forestry industry. There were also declines in mining, manufacturing and construction. Except for transportation, storage and communication, gains in employment continued in all the service industries although the expansion was smaller than in 1957.

For the year 1958 there were on the average 405,000 persons without jobs and seeking work compared with 257,000 persons in 1957 and 180,000 persons in 1956. Unemployment in 1958 as a proportion of the labour force was higher than in any other postwar year and amounted to 6.6 per cent compared with 4.3 per cent in 1957 and 3.1 per cent in 1956. At the seasonal peak of unemployment in 1958 the increase over the previous year amounted to 252,000 persons without jobs and seeking work. At the seasonal low point the increase over 1957 numbered 107,000 unemployed persons. At the end of 1958 the gap had narrowed to 48,000 persons. In contrast to 1957 when unemployment at the end of the year was larger than at the start of the year, there was a slackening in the growth of unemployment during 1958, and the number of persons without jobs in December was lower than at the beginning of the year. In February, 1959, the number of persons without jobs and seeking work was virtually unchanged from the previous month and on a year-over-year comparison there was a decline in unemployment.

After a long period of steady growth, labour income, on a seasonally adjusted basis, began to fall in September, 1957, but the decline was moderate and the expansion in wage and salary payments was resumed in February, 1958. Labour income rose with few interruptions and stood at a new high in December, 1958, about 5 per cent above the low point reached 11 months earlier. For 1958 as a whole total wage and salary payments rose by 2 per cent compared with increases of 7½ per cent in 1957 and 11 per cent in 1956. As in previous years, the higher level of labour income was shared by a larger number of paid workers. In 1958 there was a rise of 22,000 in the number of paid workers and average annual earnings on a per capita basis amounted to $3,534, a gain of $61 or 1.8 per cent compared to the increase of $132 or 4 per cent in 1957. Higher rates of pay were instrumental in bringing about the improvement in per capita earnings in 1958 since there was some decline from the previous year in the average number of hours worked per week. In manufacturing average hourly earnings rose by 3.6 per cent compared with 5.6 per cent in 1957 and this trend is indicative of the slow-up in pay rate increases over a wide area of the economy. The advance in per capita earnings in 1958 failed to keep pace with the rise in consumer prices and there was a slight decline in real income.

In 1958 higher earnings in the form of salary and wage payments were concentrated in the service industries. In this sector of the economy labour income rose by about 6 per cent compared with the advance of 10 per cent in 1957. The growth in labour income for public utilities, governments, finance and related groups was somewhat more buoyant than for the service sector as a whole. There was a decline in wages and salaries paid out in the major goods producing industries, except in agriculture. Labour income in the forestry industry was about one-fifth lower than in 1957. Earnings in construction fell by 5 per cent whereas the drop in labour income for manufacturing and mining was less pronounced and ranged between one and 2 per cent.

MONETARY AND CREDIT DEVELOPMENTS

In Canada as well as in the United States, the change from economic recession to recovery during 1958, and the excess of government expenditures over government revenues, had important effects on monetary and credit conditions. The attitude of the investing public in both countries underwent a significant change towards the middle of the year and there was a fall in bond prices in North American capital markets notwithstanding the substantial increase in the money supply which took place. The course of events in Canada was influenced, to a large extent, by developments in the United States.

The Canada Conversion Loan 1958 was an important event in Canadian financial developments during the year. The sale of longer-term bonds to the public in exchange for their holdings of shorter-term Victory Loan issues was the largest financial operation ever undertaken in Canada and brought about the conversion of over 90 per cent of the $6,416 million of eligible issues. The Conversion Loan, which was announced in July and concluded in September, had the effect of lengthening the term to maturity of outstanding Government of Canada issues from just over six years to somewhat more than ten years. This reorganization of the government debt structure was designed to provide an improved base for future government financing operations and to assist in the orderly development of the Canadian money market.

Following the decline from the levels reached in the summer of 1957, interest rates in Canada increased again in the second half of 1958. The upward trend in yields for three-month treasury bills was particularly pronounced and rates rose from a low of less than one per cent in July to 3.56 per cent in December, 1958. During the succeeding two months, yields remained relatively stable but rose again in the latter half of February, 1959. The change in rates for medium-term Government of Canada bonds followed a similar pattern. The yield on the 2¾ per cent issue of June, 1967-68 stood at 4.48 per cent in December, 1958, compared with 3.39 per cent in June, 1958. There were further increases in 1959 and in early March the yield rose to 4.79 per cent. Relatively more stability prevailed in the market for long-term government bonds and the yield of the 3¼ per cent issue of October, 1979, had reached in December, 1958, a level somewhat above the previous peak reached in 1957. The yield rose further in 1959. The Bank of Canada discount rate, which is set on the basis of one-quarter per cent above the average tender rate for treasury bills, increased to 3.81 per cent in December, 1958. At the beginning of April, 1959, the Bank of Canada discount rate stood at 4.58 per cent.

Interest rates for provincial, municipal and industrial bonds, following the decline from the levels reached in the third quarter of 1957, also increased during the latter part of 1958 and early 1959. In February, 1958, the prime commercial rate charged by the chartered banks was lowered to 5¼ per cent and remained at this level until March, 1959.

The decline from the peak in 1957 was more pronounced for Canadian medium- and long-term interest rates than for comparable United States rates so that spreads between Canadian and United States rates narrowed somewhat. The upturn of interest rates after mid-1958 was at first much sharper in the United States and the differential was substantially reduced. The situation was reversed in the fourth quarter of 1958 and in general the spreads in December were wider than at the same time in 1957. Some further widening in spreads occurred in February, 1959.

The amount of funds obtained by provinces and municipalities from net new bond issues at home and abroad increased by $163 million in 1958 but this was more than offset by the reduction in corporate borrowing. As a result total net bond issues of provinces, municipalities and corporations declined by $168 million to a level of $1,602 million compared with $1,770 million in 1957 and $1,570 million in 1956. Net issues of corporate stocks, which reached a peak of $688 million in 1956, continued to decline for the second successive year and amounted to $290 million in 1958. Corporate bond issues were concentrated in the first half of 1958, whereas equity funds played a larger role in corporate financing during the latter part of the year and about one-half of total new stock issues were placed in the fourth quarter.

For all levels of government, the amount of new bond issues sold abroad rose above the 1957 level. As in the previous year, the proportion of funds raised in foreign markets was particularly large in the case of municipal borrowing. On the other hand, new corporate bond issues sold to non-residents declined sharply in 1958 and accounted for about one-third of corporate net bond issues compared to one-half of corporate net borrowing in 1957. As a result of these trends, total net new bond issues sold abroad declined in 1958 by $77 million. Total net new bond issues sold to non-residents amounted to $538 million and less than one-third of total sales took place in the second half of 1958.

Action by the Bank of Canada led to a substantial increase in the cash reserves of the chartered banks in 1958. The increase in cash reserves of the banks was reflected in the expansion of $1,277 million in total bank assets and over two-thirds of this increase took the form of additional purchases of government securities. The total of other liquid assets rose only moderately since the increase in some categories was partly offset by lower holdings of day-to-day loans, call loans and net foreign assets. About one-fourth of the growth in total bank assets was accounted for by increased investment in insured mortgages and in non-government securities.

[1]To make the statistics for the different periods in this table comparable certain approximate adjustments have been made in calculating changes in loans and investments. The 1956 figures have been adjusted for the reclassification of foreign currency loans from Canadian loans to net foreign assets which was made in the returns of the banks to the Department of Finance, and the 1957 figures for the change in the allocation of inner reserves consequent upon the change in the method of valuing Government and provincial securities required in the returns of the banks to the Department of Finance.

[2]Total foreign currency assets less total foreign currency liabilities. Excludes foreign currency securities issued by Canadian borrowers.

For the year 1958 as a whole, the demand for loans rose only moderately and bank loans other than day-to-day and call loans increased by $82 million compared with the expansion of $114 million in 1957 and the growth of $532 million and $759 million in 1956 and 1955 respectively. There was approximate stability in combined lending to provincial and municipal governments but loans to grain dealers declined by $61 million. Instalment finance companies increased their bank indebtedness but this was more than offset by a decline in the outstanding amount of commercial paper issued by these institutions. In the latter part of 1958, general loans rose above the level in the previous year and in December, 1958, the total amounted to $4,138 million or $75 million higher than at the same date in 1957. Personal loans expanded throughout 1958 and for the year as a whole the increase amounted to $173 million. Loans to farmers and to financial as well as social institutions also rose whereas bank advances to industry, to merchandizers and to some of the service industries declined in 1958.

[2] The deposit balances of religious, educational and welfare institutions and personal accounts used mainly for business purposes were reclassified from "personal savings deposits" to "other notice deposits" as at September 30, 1957 in the returns of the banks to the Department of Finance. The figures prior to September 30, 1957 are thus not comparable with those since that date. The amount of deposits reclassified was approximately $140 million.

Holdings by the public of currency, bank deposits and Government of Canada securities expanded in 1958 by $1,702 million compared with the advance of $235 million in 1957. Holdings for all the main classes of liquid assets rose in 1958. The growth of $1,314 million in bank deposits accounted for the major part of the overall increase. Holdings of government securities at the end of 1958 were $274 million higher than at the same date in the previous year. Substantially larger holdings of Canada Savings Bonds were mainly responsible for the upward movement in the amount of government securities held by the public. However, the relatively moderate advance of $28 million in holdings of market issues hides substantial fluctuations which occurred during the course of 1958. There was a decline of $482 million for the first nine months of 1958 and this was followed in the fourth quarter by the addition of $509 million to the holdings of market securities by the public.

The total amount of Federal Government direct and guaranteed securities outstanding increased by $1,251 million in 1958. Comparing holdings at the end of 1958 with holdings at the same date in the previous year, there was an increase of $1,086 million in the amount of this debt held by the banking system and an expansion of $274 million in the amount held by the general public. This was partly offset by a decrease of $109 million in government accounts.

PRICE TRENDS

The upward movement in the consumer price index which began in mid-1956 continued with few interruptions in 1958. In the fourth quarter of 1958 consumer prices were 2.4 per cent higher than in the same period a year earlier. This compares with an advance of 2.6 per cent for the twelve-month period ending in the fourth quarter of 1957. For the year 1958 as a whole the average level of consumer prices increased by 2.6 per cent or less than in 1957 when a rise of 3.2 per cent occurred. The upswing in retail prices during 1958 was accompanied by a more or less stable trend in wholesale prices for the first nine months of the year. This was followed by some rise in the wholesale index beginning in the fourth quarter of 1958 and in February, 1959, wholesale prices were 1.4 per cent higher than a year earlier, 7.7 per cent above the low point of recent years reached in October, 1954, but were 5.3 per cent below the high point of the post-war years reached in mid-1951. In both years, 1958 as well as 1957, there was only a fractional increase in the average annual level of wholesale prices.

The consumer price index rose during the first four months of 1958 from 123.4 in January to 125.2 in April. There was a decline in the succeeding three months and the index stood at 124.7 in July. The upward movement was resumed in August and consumer prices reached a high of 126.3 in November. Slight declines occurred in the next four months to 125.5 in March, 1959, which left the index at a level one per cent higher than in the same period a year earlier. For 1958 all major components of the index followed an upward trend.

The largest increase occurred in the cost of services where prices rose by close to 4 per cent. The average level of food prices in 1958 was up 3 per cent compared to the advance of 4.6 per cent in 1957. However, in March, 1959, food prices were 1.1 per cent lower than a year earlier. Canadians had to pay more for shelter in 1958 and the index rose by 2.6 per cent. More moderate increases took place in the other two components, clothing and household operations.

NOTE: 1958 indexes are preliminary. The Canadian Farm Products index is fully revised only up to July 1957 and does not reflect final payments on all grains for subsequent months.

The United States consumer price index also reflected the continued upward trend in prices. The index registered an average increase of 2.7 per cent for the year 1958, an advance comparable to the movement in Canadian consumer prices. Food prices in the United States levelled out in the second half of 1958 but for the year as a whole the index was 4.2 per cent above 1957.

During the twelve-month period to December, 1958, wholesale prices rose by 1.3 per cent whereas for the year 1958 as a whole the general index remained practically unchanged from the level in 1957. This difference came about mainly because of the strengthening in wholesale prices which occurred in the fourth quarter of 1958 in contrast to the decline in the same period of 1957. A pattern similar to the trend in the general index prevailed in the broad industrial categories of wholesale prices. In a year-over-year comparison prices fell in 1958 except for manufactured products. The decline was particularly pronounced for industrial materials and metals. However, in the latter part of 1958, the indexes for all the major industrial classifications stood at a higher level than a year earlier. The sharpest recovery occurred in prices for non-ferrous metals and raw materials. In 1958 there was also a substantial advance in prices for Canadian farm products.

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1958–59

1. INTRODUCTION

The figures presented in this Part for the fiscal year 1958-59 are preliminary and subject to revision. The fiscal year of the Government ended on March 31 but the books must remain open for some time after that date to record various adjusting entries and to take into account all payments up to and including April 30 made on account of expenditures originating in and properly chargeable to the fiscal year 1958-59. The final figures when they become available next August may vary to some extent from those given in the following pages.

2. HIGHLIGHTS OF GOVERNMENTAL FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING 1958-59

The following table summarizes the financial operations of the government for the fiscal year and indicates how the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions, together with changes in the unmatured debt, affected the government's cash balances. In the sections entitled "The Budgetary Accounts" and "The Cash Position" a more detailed explanation of these transactions is given.

Budgetary transactions

Revenues of the government for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959 amounted to $4,770 million. This was $120 million or about 3 per cent more than last year's budget forecast as revised on August 13, 1958 to $4,650 million and $278 million or 6 per cent less than the total of $5,048 million collected in 1957-58.

Expenditures amounted to $5,387 million and were $37 million or less than 1 per cent more than the budget forecast as revised on September 6, 1958 to $5,350 million to take into account the special wheat acreage payments and other commitments arising out of the further supplementary estimates, and $300 million or 6 per cent more than the total spent in 1957-58.

On the basis of these figures the deficit for the fiscal year was $617 million compared with the Minister's revised forecast on September 6, 1958 of a deficit of $700 million and a deficit of $38 million for 1957-58.

On the revenue side of the government's budgetary operations collections have shown a decline from the previous year. This was due partly to the fact that the general level of activity and production in the economy was somewhat less than in 1957-58 and partly to the tax reductions announced in December, 1957 and June, 1958. Although receipts from excise and succession duties and non-tax revenues exceeded those of the previous year, these increases were more than offset by reductions in the receipts from personal, corporation and non-resident income taxes, excise taxes and customs import duties.

On the expenditure side defence was again the most significant feature in the government's programme. In 1958-59 defence expenditures amounted to $1,437 million, a decrease of $250 million or 15 per cent from the preceding year and represented 27 per cent of the government's total budgetary outlay. For the most part this decrease is due to the policy announced in the budget speech of June 17, 1958 of liquidating the balance in the national defence equipment account during the fiscal year. Equipment purchases totalling $212 million were charged to the account during 1958-59 compared with $24 million in the previous year. In 1957-58 defence expenditures amounted to $1,687 million and constituted 33 per cent of the total.

Non-budgetary transactions

Although the budgetary deficit for 1958-59 was $617 million, the government's bank balances at the end of the fiscal year were $166 million greater than a year ago. This increase in cash balances was the net result of budgetary requirements of $617 million, requirements of $882 million for loans, investments and working capital advances and of $878 million for other non-budgetary disbursements offset by non-budgetary receipts and credits of $1,114 million from repayments of loans and investments, annuity, insurance and pension accounts receipts and other non-budgetary sources and an increase of $1,429 million in outstanding unmatured debt.

Old age security fund

Pension payments from the old age security fund amounted to $560 million and tax receipts credited to the fund totalled $376 million, and the deficit of $184 million for the fiscal year was covered by a temporary loan by the Minister of Finance to the fund. During 1957-58 pension payments amounted to $474 million and tax receipts credited to the fund to $372 million resulting in an excess of pension payments over tax receipts of $102 million which together with the remainder of the 1956-57 deficit of $2 million was charged to expenditures in 1957-58 under the authority of a vote of parliament. Parliament has authorized the writing-off to expenditure in 1958-59 temporary loans of $184 million outstanding at March 31, 1959.

Debt transactions

During 1958-59, the government issued securities amounting to $9,286 million (excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature periodically) and redeemed or converted issues in the amount of $7,973 million, resulting in an increase of $1,313 million in unmatured debt. As other liabilities increased by $488 million the government's gross public debt increased by $1,801 million to $20,220 million at March 31, 1959. During the fiscal year the government's net assets increased by $1,161 million to $8,534 million. As a result the government's net debt at March 31, 1959 was $11,686 million, the increase of $640 million reflecting the budgetary deficit for the fiscal year of $617 million plus an adjustment of $23 million in respect of prior years transactions.

Cash position

Receiver General bank balances increased $166 million during the fiscal year as net budgetary and non-budgetary requirements totalled $1,263 million and outstanding unmatured debt (after taking into account transactions in the securities investment and sinking fund accounts) increased by $1,429 million.

3. THE BUDGETARY ACCOUNTS

Total revenues, amounting to $4,770 million for 1958-59, were $278 million less than the total for the previous year. Total expenditures were $5,387 million, an increase of $300 million over the total for 1957-58. The deficit for the fiscal year was $617 million compared with $38 million for the previous year.

A. Revenues

Budgetary revenues were $4,770 million in the fiscal year 1958-59. This was $278 million or 6 per cent less than in the previous year. Of the total revenues for the year, $4,274 million, or 90 per cent, was derived from taxes and $496 million or 10 per cent from non-tax revenues.

(1) tax revenues

Tax on personal incomes

The personal income tax was again in 1958-59 the largest source of government revenue, the yield (excluding the old age security tax) being $1,371 million. The decrease of $129 million or 9 per cent from the previous year was more than accounted for by the reduction in rates and the increase in exemptions for dependents which became effective in 1958.

In addition the 2 per cent tax on personal incomes levied under the Old Age Security Act yielded $148 million. The maximum tax is $60 per person. This revenue was credited to the old age security fund.

BUDGETARY REVENUES BY SOURCE

†Includes excess profits tax for the year 1952.
*Estimated

Corporation income tax

The corporation income tax (excluding the old age security tax) yielded $1,029 million in 1958-59 and was the second largest revenue producer. The decrease of $206 million or 17 per cent from the previous year was largely due to lower corporate profits in 1958. It is estimated that $12 million of the decrease resulted from the tax change announced in December, 1957 which increased the first bracket subject to the lower rate of tax from $20 thousand to $25 thousand.

In addition the 2 per cent tax on incomes of corporations under the Old Age Security Act yielded $55 million which was credited to the old age security fund.

Taxes on interest, dividends, rents and royalties going abroad

Revenue under this heading is derived from taxes withheld on payments of interest, dividends, rents, royalties, alimony and income from estates and trusts made to non-residents. The decrease of $4 million from the previous year reflected lower corporate profits in 1958 and because some large refunds were made to adjust overpayments of tax in previous years.

Excise taxes

Included under this heading are the revenues from the general sales tax and the special excise taxes levied on a wide range of manufactured products.

The most important tax levied under the Excise Tax Act from a revenue standpoint is the sales tax. The decrease of $9 million or 1 per cent in receipts (excluding the 2 per cent old age security tax) from the previous year reflected the new exemptions announced in the 1958 Budget which it is estimated reduced revenue by $7 million.

The 2 per cent tax on sales levied under the Old Age Security Act and credited to the old age security fund yielded $173 million compared to $176 million in the previous year.

Excise taxes other than the general sales tax were $7 million or 3 per cent less than in the previous year.

The reduction in the tax on automobiles from 10 per cent to 7½ per cent on December 6, 1957 and reduced sales of automobiles during the year resulted in revenue from this source declining $12 million. In addition refunds increased by $3 million over the previous year largely as a result of refunds made to automobile dealers on account of automobiles on hand at the time of the tax reduction in December 1957.

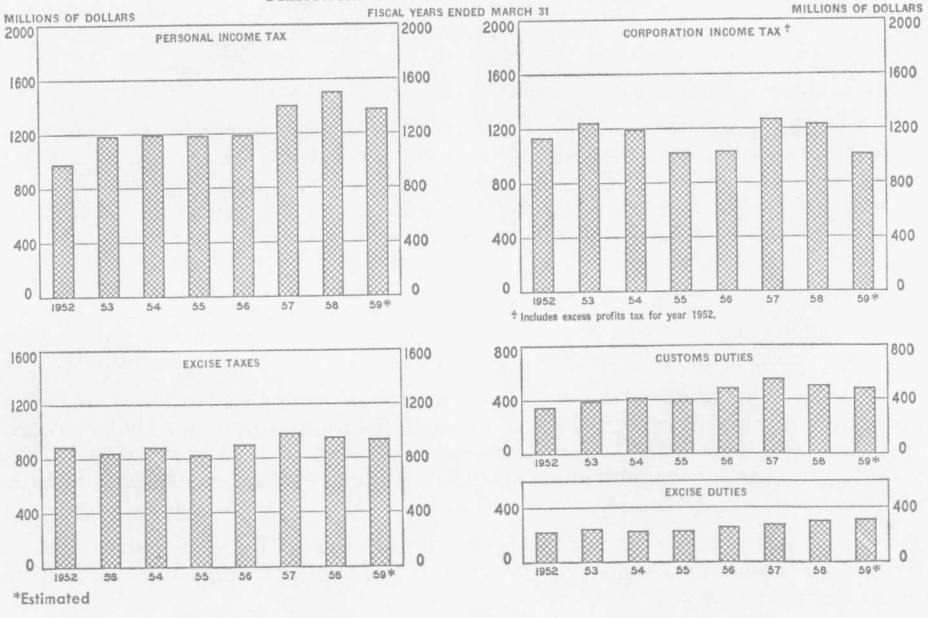
These declines in revenue were partly offset by increases of $7 million from the taxes on tobacco products and $2 million from the taxes on television sets, radios, tubes and phonographs.

Customs import duties

The decrease of $12 million or 2 per cent in customs import duties reflects the decrease in the volume and value of imports during the year.

Excise duties

Excise duties are levied only on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. (Additional taxes on tobacco products are levied under the Excise Tax Act referred to above.) The collections from the taxes on alcoholic beverages, before deducting refunds, were $181 million, an increase of $9 million over the previous year. The gross receipts from the taxes on tobacco products amounted to $141 million, an increase of $9 million.



Succession duties

The revenue from this source for the year amounted to $73 million and as for the previous year was affected by collections from two unusually large estates.

Other taxes

Most of the revenue under this heading was received from the special taxes on the export of electrical energy from Canada, but a small amount was also received from the tax on the export of furs from the Northwest Territories.

PRINCIPAL SOURCES OF TAX REVENUES

(2) NON-TAX REVENUES

Non-tax revenues for 1958-59 were $497 million, $71 million or 17 per cent more than the 1957-58 total of $426 million.

Return on investments

Payments from Crown corporations were $38 million more than in the preceding year due largely to an increase of $20 million in the profits of the Bank of Canada for 1958 transferred to the Receiver General over those for 1957 and an increase of $12 million in interest payments received from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The main receipts from other loans and investments were $23 million in interest received on the 1946 loan to the United Kingdom and $19 million representing exchange fund profits. The former included annual interest of $22 million (the interest payment due December 31, 1957 was deferred) and $1 million in interest on deferred principal and interest payments.

Post office

Gross post office receipts totalled $182 million but authorized disbursements from revenues for salaries and rent allowances at semi-staff and revenue offices, commissions at sub offices, transit charges on Canadian mail forwarded through or delivered in foreign countries, etc., amounting to $26 million, brought the net revenue to $156 million. Last year gross receipts amounted to $178 million and authorized disbursements totalled $25 million.

As costs of operating the post office during 1958-59 (excluding the $26 million charged to revenue) were $158 million, net expenditure exceeded net revenue by $2 million. However, in making this comparison, it is to be noted that the total shown for post office revenue does not reflect any payment for the franking privilege covering parliamentary and departmental mail or for certain miscellaneous services provided for other government departments and agencies, nor does the total shown for operating expenses reflect any charges for premises occupied by the Post Office Department or for certain accounting and miscellaneous services provided by other departments.

Refunds of previous years' expenditures

Refunds in the current fiscal year of expenditures made in prior years totalled $33 million, $5 million more than in 1957-58. These refunds included $20 million received by the Department of National Defence, of which $9 million was on contracts with the United States Government for the supply of engines, aircraft and other defence equipment under an arrangement that when Canada places contracts with the Government of the United States, payments of the estimated costs are made to the United States Treasury and if these estimated costs are revised, or if there are reductions in the contracts, the United States Government refunds the overpayments. In addition $5 million was received by the Department of Finance (of which $4 million was a repayment by the Province of Ontario in connection with succession duty payments under the tax-rental agreements), $2 million by the Department of Veterans Affairs and $6 million by other departments.

Services and service fees

Sums totalling $25 million were collected during 1958-59 by various government departments for services and service fees, $3 million more than the total collected in the previous year.

Revenue from this source included $6 million received by the Department of Trade and Commerce, mainly for services in connection with the inspection, weighing, storage and elevation of grain and for electricity, gas and weights and measures inspection services; $9 million received by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, mainly for police services to provinces and municipalities; and $4 million received by the Department of Transport, chiefly for wharfage and other canal and marine service fees, steamship inspection, air-ground radio at airports, and government telegraph and telephone services.

Proceeds from sales

Receipts from proceeds from sales were $19 million for 1958-59, $3 million less than the total received in 1957-58.

Receipts under this category included $7 million from Crown Assets Disposal Corporation representing amounts realized from the disposal of surplus Crown assets (after deducting certain agency fees and transfers), $3 million under agreements of sale and $6 million from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation representing the proceeds from the sale of wartime housing properties and including amounts available as the result of the reversal of the provision for depreciation set aside by the corporation in previous years on properties that have now been sold.

Privileges, licences and permits

Revenues of $26 million were received during the fiscal year on account of privileges, licences and permits compared with $19 million received last year.

Included in these revenues is an amount of $9 million collected by the Department of Transport, mainly on account of aircraft landing fees, rentals of hangar accommodation, and other miscellaneous rental charges, and $6 million by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources for oil leases in the Northwest Territories.

Bullion and coinage

Revenue under this heading arose out of the operations of the Royal Canadian Mint and included assaying, refining and handling charges and the net gain on coinage and refining operations.

Premium, discount and exchange

Under this heading is recorded the premiums and discounts incurred in the purchase of foreign currencies. Transactions in the current fiscal year resulted in a net credit of $2 million to revenues compared with $1 million in the previous year.

Other non-tax revenues

Revenues from this source amounted to $4 million, compared with $5 million in 1957-58.

(3) COMPARISON OF ACTUAL REVENUES WITH FORECAST

The Budget Speech on June 17, 1958 forecast that budgetary revenues for the fiscal year 1958-59 would be $4,652 million. On August 13, 1958 the Minister of Finance stated that as a result of further sales tax exemptions provided in the amendments to the Excise Tax Act the revenue forecast for the year would be changed to $4,650 million.

It is now estimated that budgetary revenues for the fiscal year will be $4,770 million or $120 million more than forecast. This increase of about 3 per cent over the budget forecast reflects the fact that economic conditions for the year, as measured by the G.N.P., were slightly better than those on which the forecast of revenues was based.

The following table shows the extent to which actual revenues for 1958-59, as now estimated, differ from the budget forecast.

[1] As amended August 13, 1958.

As the above table shows, the actual revenue from a number of sources is expected to be very close to the amount forecast. The revenue sources which showed a significant difference from the amount forecast are the non-resident income tax, succession duties, customs import duties and non-tax revenues.

The revenue from the tax on income going to non-residents fell below the forecast because dividend payments going abroad were not as high as expected and because some large refunds were made to adjust overpayments of tax in previous years.

The revenue from succession duties has been substantially influenced in the last four years by duties payable on two exceptionally large estates and actual revenues in each year have varied from forecasts because of the difficulty of foreseeing exactly when the duties on these estates would be paid.

The revenue from customs duties exceeded the forecast reflecting the fact that imports in the year did not decline as much as expected.

Non-tax revenues were $68 million above the forecast, due to larger than expected profits from the Bank of Canada and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and other returns on investments.

B. Expenditures

Budgetary expenditures for 1958-59 amounted to $5,387 million, an increase of $300 million over the 1957-58 total of $5,087 million.

Defence expenditures

Defence expenditures which consist of expenditures of the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production and outlays for the civil defence programme were again the largest category of government budgetary expenditures. The total of $1,437 million for 1958-59 was approximately 27 per cent of the aggregate budgetary expenditures of the government and was $250 million, or about 15 per cent, less than the total of $1,687 million for 1957-58 when defence expenditures were 33 per cent of aggregate budgetary expenditures.

Expenditures of the Department of National Defence were $1,418 million, those of the Department of Defence Production were $14 million and outlays for the civil defence programme were $5 million. In 1957-58, expenditures were $1,668 million, $15 million and $4 million respectively.

PRINCIPAL CLASSES OF BUDGETARY EXPENDITURES

[1] The unshaded areas of the columns in the chart for health, welfare and social security represent pension payments out of the old age security fund not charged to budgetary expenditures in the year in which they were paid.

[2] Does not include those payments to provincial and municipal governments for specific purposes.

Expenditures for army, naval and air services totalled $1,172 million, $229 million less than the 1957-58 total. The outlay for army services decreased by $8 million, for naval services by $54 million and for air services by $167 million from the previous year's totals. This decrease of $229 million in budgetary expenditures was due mainly to the policy followed this year of liquidating the balance in the national defence equipment account by charging defence equiment purchases to that account.

Mutual aid to NATO countries and contributions towards the military costs of NATO were $21 million less than in the previous year. Under the provisions of section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act the Governor in Council may authorize the transfer of defence equipment or supplies and the provision of services or facilities for defence purposes to other parties to the North Atlantic Treaty. The expenditures of $97 million for 1958-59 included $75 million for the transfer of equipment and supplies, $10 million for costs incurred in acquiring and supplying military equipment for, and in the training in Canada of aircrews from countries which are parties to the North Atlantic Treaty and $12 million for Canada's share of the NATO military budgets and infrastructure costs.

Outlays for defence research and development were $78 million compared with $79 million in 1957-58.

The government's contribution to the permanent services pension account of an amount equal to $1\frac{2}{3}$ times the contributions by permanent services personnel was $50 million, the same as in 1957-58.

Administration and general costs increased by $1 million in 1958-59 over the 1957-58 total.

The total expenditure of $14 million for the Department of Defence Production was $1 million less than in 1957-58. A decrease of $3 million in respect of the programme under which capital assistance is given to private contractors, Crown plants operated on a management-fee basis and Crown corporations undertaking contracts essential to the defence programme was partly offset by an increase of $2 million in administration and general costs.

Civil defence expenditures of $5 million were $1 million higher than comparable costs in 1957-58.

In addition to these budgetary expenditures for defence, there were certain other cash outlays which must be considered in assessing the full effect of the defence programme on the economy of Canada.

For several years the estimated replacement value of equipment and supplies acquired by the Department of National Defence prior to March 31, 1950, and later transferred as mutual aid to NATO countries, was credited to the national defence equipment account, to be used subsequently for the purchase of equipment or supplies for the army, naval or air services thereby involving cash outlays which were not reflected as budgetary expenditures. Since 1956 no credits have been made to this account, instead the Defence Services Vote provides that where any equipment or supplies are transferred as mutual aid, the estimated present value thereof shall be credited to that vote. In accordance with the policy outlined in the budget speech of June 17, 1958, the balance remaining in the national defence equipment account has been liquidated in 1958-59. Total charges of $212 million were made to the account in 1958-59 compared with $24 million in 1957-58.

Under section 11 of the National Defence Act there is provision for the sale of materiel, not immediately required for the use of the Canadian defence forces or the Defence Research Board, to such countries and upon such terms as the Governor in Council may determine. The proceeds of such sales are credited to a special account to be used for the procurement of materiel. Net cash outlays from this account during 1958-59 were $6 million leaving a balance of $12 million at March 31, 1959.

The Department of Defence Production also makes cash disbursements, for the procurement of materials for use in the manufacture of defence equipment, which are not recorded as budgetary expenditures. For purposes of accounting and control, these amounts are charged to the defence production revolving fund and are treated as assets on the books of the government until they are billed to the Department of National Defence or sold to defence contractors for use in the manufacture of defence equipment. As a result of the transactions during 1958-59 the assets of the fund were reduced by $21 million leaving a balance of $34 million in the account at March 31, 1959.

The following table summarizes the cash outlays for defence for the past two fiscal years:

Public debt charges

In 1958-59 public debt charges were again the second largest item of budgetary expenditures. These charges, which consist of interest on public debt, the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions, the cost of issuing new loans and other costs incurred in servicing the public debt amounted to $644 million in 1958-59 or 12 per cent of all budgetary expenditures compared with $567 million or 11 per cent in 1957-58.

Interest on public debt was $604 million in 1958-59 an increase of $65 million over the 1957-58 total of $539 million. Interest of $483 million on unmatured debt was $45 million higher due to an increase in unmatured debt and the general rise in interest rates; interest of $121 million on other liabilities was $20 million higher mainly due to increases of $14 million in respect of the permanent services pension account, $4 million in respect of the superannuation account and $2 million in respect of the government annuities account. The increase in respect of the permanent services pension account was mainly due to the fact that the account balance was adjusted upwards by $326 million on April 1, 1958 to reflect an actuarial revaluation of the liability.

The increase of $12 million in other public debt charges was due to new loans issued during the fiscal year.

When considering the magnitude of these public debt charges and the burden they place upon the public treasury, it must be borne in mind that a substantial portion of the debt is attributable to, or is invested in, productive or earning assets. Therefore, in calculating the net burden of the government's annual interest charges, the income derived from loans, investments and other productive assets must be taken into account. For 1958-59 this income was $225 million as shown in the preceding section on revenue. This amount deducted from the gross total of $604 million for interest as shown in the above table leaves a net annual interest charge of $379 million compared with a net of $370 million in 1957-58.

Subsidies and tax-sharing payments to provinces

Payments to the provinces during 1958-59 for statutory subsidies, rentals under the tax-sharing arrangements act, the transitional and additional grants to Newfoundland, and the transfer of a portion of income tax receipts from certain public utility companies amounted to $467 million compared with $383 million in 1957-58.

Charges to budgetary expenditures in 1958-59 under the Federal-Provincial tax-sharing arrangements, including adjustments made on account of the previous year, were $70 million more than in 1957-58. The increase occurred despite a decrease in individual income tax collections and corporation taxable income from the preceding year. The increase was occasioned by the introduction of Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants of $25 million of which $7½ million was paid to each of the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland and $2½ million to Prince Edward Island, and the increase of the standard tax rate for individual income from 10% to 13%. An adjustment was required by the tax-sharing arrangements act to compensate for the 1958 reduction in the federal individual income tax rate.

Payments to the provinces under the Federal-Provincial tax-sharing arrangements in 1958-59 were adjusted by deducting a total of $1 million from the tax-sharing entitlement of the provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. This deduction represented recovery of one-fifth of the overpayment made to those provinces under the 1952 tax-rental agreements on account of an over-estimation of their population as revealed by the 1956 census. By memoranda of agreement with the provinces concerned, the 1952 tax-rental agreements were amended to authorize the recovery of the overpayment in equal monthly deductions from the tax-sharing payments of those provinces over the five-year life of the new agreements.

Under the proposed Newfoundland Additional Grants Act, pursuant to the report of the Royal Commission on Newfoundland Finances appointed under clause 29 of the Terms of Union, Newfoundland is to receive additional grants for the fiscal years 1957-58 to 1961-62 inclusive. The additional grants for the first two fiscal years, which are payable in 1958-59, amount to $13\frac{1}{2}$ million.

Statutory subsidies at $21 million in 1958-59 were unchanged from the previous year.

A summary of payments, by provinces, during 1958-59 is given in the following table:

The amount of public utility tax receipts transferred to the provinces in 1958-59 amounted to $9 million or $1 million more than in the previous year. Section 6 of the Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1952, authorized the payment to the provinces, whether participating in an agreement or not, of a portion of the income tax collected from corporations whose main business was the distribution to, or the generation for distribution to, the public of electrical energy, gas or steam. The 1958-59 payment represents the transferrable portion of the income tax from the above corporations for the taxation year 1956. This payment is the last transfer authorized under the 1952 Tax Rental Agreements Act.

Family allowances

Family allowances are payable in respect of all children under sixteen resident in Canada, with minor exceptions such as in the case of children of immigrants who must reside in Canada a year before an allowance is payable. The monthly allowance is $6 if the child is under 10 years and $8 in the age group 10 to 15. Children of immigrants receive family assistance of $5 per month during their first year of residence in Canada from the Department of Citizenship and Immigration if during that period they are under sixteen years of age.

Family allowance payments of $475 million represented 9 per cent of total expenditures. The increase of $37 million over the previous year reflected the increase in the number of children in the eligible age groups and the increase in the monthly allowances effective September 1, 1957.

Reduction in the amount of temporary loans to the old age security fund

In 1958-59 payments of $560 million out of the fund exceeded receipts of $376 million by $184 million. Parliament has authorized the charging of this amount to budgetary expenditures in 1958-59 leaving a nil balance in the fund at March 31, 1959.

Unemployment Insurance Act administration and government's contribution

Expenditures in 1958-59 relating to the Act (excluding the goverment's payment as an employer) amounted to $73 million compared with $70 million in 1957-58.

The Budget—Appendix

Unemployment insurance benefit payments are not charged directly to budgetary expenditures but are paid from the unemployment insurance fund which is financed by equal contributions from employees and employers, by interest earned on investments, and by the government's contribution of an amount equal to one-fifth of combined employee-employer contributions.

The government's contribution to the fund for 1958-59 was $38 million and administration costs were $35 million; the corresponding amounts for 1957-58 were $38 million and $32 million.

Government contribution with respect to the superannuation account

In 1958-59 the government contributed $38 million to the superannuation account compared with $78 million in 1957-58. The decrease was due to the fact that there was no charge in 1958-59 comparable to the $44 million in 1957-58 covering the additional liability created by the general salary increase of May 1, 1957.

Hospital insurance and diagnostic services

The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, Statutes of 1957, authorizes contributions by Canada in respect of programmes administered by the provinces, providing hospital insurance and laboratory and other services in aid of diagnosis. Payments of $58 million were made in 1958-59.

As may be noted in the following table seven provinces had entered into agreements during the year. The effective date of each agreement is as follows:—July 1, 1958 for Newfoundland, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia and January 1, 1959 for Nova Scotia and Ontario.

Agriculture

Expenditures of the Department of Agriculture totalled $167 million for 1958-59 compared with $95 million in 1957-58.

The principal changes in the expenditures of this department were in the payments to western grain producers, the operating losses of the agricultural stabilization board and the deficit in the prairie farm emergency fund.

The Western Grain Producers Acreage Payment Regulations were set up by Order-in-Council, P.C. 1958-1442 dated October 16, 1958, whereby payment of $1 was authorized for each acre of cultivated acreage as set forth in the permit book, issued by the Canadian Wheat Board to each wheat grower, recording the seeded acreage of his lands. The maximum payment to each permit holder was not to exceed $200. The Canadian Wheat Board was authorized to act as the agent of the Minister of Agriculture under these regulations and made payments aggregating $41 million.

With the authority of parliament the $15 million operating losses of the Agricultural Stabilization Board for 1958-59 that had been credited to the agricultural commodities stabilization account were charged to budgetary expenditures in 1958-59.

Advances of $15 million made by the Minister of Finance to the prairie farm emergency fund to cover the year's deficit were charged to expenditure in the accounts for the fiscal year.

Atomic Energy

Expenditures of the Atomic Energy Control Board and payments to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited totalled $26 million compared with $22 million in 1957-58 an increase of $4 million.

Administration expenses of the Atomic Energy Control Board and grants for research and investigations with respect to atomic energy were $0.5 million, the same as the 1957-58 expenditure.

During the fiscal year $25 million was paid to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for its research programme, $4 million more than in the previous year. Of the total, $18 million was for current operations and maintenance and $7 million for the construction and acquisition of buildings, land, works and equipment.

In addition, advances of $3 million were made to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited during the year, for the construction or acquisition of buildings and equipment at Chalk River and Deep River and for the commercial products division at Ottawa. This brought the total of advances covered, or to be covered, by obligations or shares of the company to $59 million at March 31, 1959.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Expenditures of $62 million were made by the government on account of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation during 1958-59 compared with $43 million in 1957-58. The increase of $19 million was the result of an increase of $26 million in grants for radio and television services offset in part by a decrease of $7 million in the payments to the corporation of amounts equal to the collection of the 15 per cent special tax imposed on radio and television sets and equipment. These latter payments were discontinued under the provisions of the Broadcasting Act which came into force on November 10, 1958. The corporation received, however, under the authority of Vote 701, $2 million to make up the deficiency between the estimated amount that would have been received from the tax during the fiscal year and the amount actually received to the date the new Act was proclaimed.

The Broadcasting Act which came into force on November 10, 1958, stipulated that the corporation shall pay to the Receiver General such part of the working capital of the corporation as in the opinion of the Minister of Finance was in excess of $6 million, to be applied in the reduction of its indebtedness to the government. The remainder of the loans outstanding when the new Act came into force were to be cancelled and an equivalent amount credited to a proprietor's equity account. The excess of working capital amounting to $4 million was repaid by the corporation and an amount of $23 million representing the balance of the loans outstanding was cancelled and transferred to net debt.

Citizenship and Immigration

Expenditures of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration were $54 million in 1958-59 an increase of $2 million over the total for 1957-58.

The principal changes in the expenditures of this department were a reduction of $7 million in immigration expenditures due to lower immigration, a reduction in the expenditures in connection with movements of Hungarian refugees and an increase of $9 million in Indian affairs including an increase of $5 million for Indian education and $3 million for Indian welfare.

External Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of External Affairs totalled $76 million in 1958-59, an increase of $16 million over the previous year.

The increase of $13 million in assistance to other countries was due to increases of $11 million for the purchase of wheat and flour to be given to India, Pakistan and Ceylon to relieve food shortages and $2 million for the purchase of flour to be given to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

Finance

The major items of expenditure for the Department of Finance have been dealt with in previous paragraphs under the headings of "Public debt charges", "Subsidies and tax-sharing payments to provinces" and "Government contribution with respect to the superannuation account".

Other expenditures totalled $76 million for 1958-59, an increase of $17 million over the expenditures for 1957-58.

The increase in other expenditures was mainly due to increased payments to the National Conference of Canadian Universities for the purpose of making grants to institutions of higher learning and to higher grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property.

Mines and Technical Surveys

Expenditures of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys totalled $46 million for 1958-59, an increase of $10 million over the total for 1957-58.

The increase of $10 million was mainly due to an increase of $3 million in emergency gold mining assistance, $2 million by the Dominion Coal Board for coal subventions under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act and $2 million for aerial photography.

National Health and Welfare

Family allowance payments amounting to $475 million, the reduction in the amount of temporary loans to the old age security fund amounting to $184 million and contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act amounting to $58 million constituted the main items of expenditure for this department and have been dealt with under separate headings in preceding paragraphs. Civil defence expenditures, amounting to $5 million, have been dealt with under the heading "Defence expenditures".

Other expenditures of the department in 1958-59 totalled $156 million, an increase of $39 million over the previous year.

The following table presents a distribution of these payments to provinces for 1958-59:

General health grants to the provinces for assistance in hospital construction, general health services and the control of diseases increased by $11 million over the previous year.

Under the Unemployment Assistance Act the federal government contributes up to 50 per cent of the cost of unemployment assistance paid by the provinces, subject to certain deductions as set out in the Act. To date nine provinces have signed agreements with the federal government. There was an increase of $14 million in these contributions over those for the previous year.

Under the Old Age Assistance Act, the federal government reimburses the provinces by paying 50 per cent of the lesser of $55 monthly or the amount of assistance given by the provinces in the form of monthly pensions to eligible persons in need who are in the age group 65 to 69. (Under the Old Age Security Act, all persons 70 years and over who satisfy the residence requirements of the Act may receive a pension of $55 per month from the federal goverment out of the old age security fund.) Similarly, the federal government reimburses the provinces under the Blind Persons Act for allowances of not more than $55 per month to blind persons in need over the age of 18 by paying 75 per cent of the total payments, and under the Disabled Persons Act by paying 50 per cent of not more than $55 per month for allowances to disabled persons in need over the age of 18 years. In 1958-59 increases in payments to the old age assistance were $6 million, to blind persons $1 million and to disabled persons $5 million.

National Research Council

Expenditures amounted to $26 million, $4 million higher than for 1957-58. Salaries and other expenses amounting to $23 million accounted for the increase. The costs of construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment totalling $3 million were approximately the same as in the previous year.

National Revenue

Expenditures of the Department of National Revenue were $70 million in 1958-59 compared with $68 million in 1957-58, an increase of $2 million.

The increase in the customs and excise division was due principally to increased expenditures in the operation and maintenance of ports and in the taxation division mainly to increased expenditures in the district offices.

Northern Affairs and National Resources

Expenditures of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in the fiscal year were $75 million, an increase of $26 million over the total for 1957-58.

The main increases in expenditures of this department were in the national parks and northern administration and lands branches. The increase of $7 million in the national parks branch was due to $6 million for construction and $1 million for administration. The increase of $15 million in the northern administration and lands branch was due mainly to $7 million for construction and $2 million for operation and maintenance in the Northwest Territories, $2 million for construction in the Yukon Territory and $3 million for access roads leading to resources.

Post Office

Gross expenditures of the Post Office Department for 1958-59 were $184 million, an increase of $6 million over the 1957-58 outlay of $178 million.

Remuneration of postmasters and staffs at revenue and semi-staff offices, commissions at sub-offices and certain other authorized disbursements are paid from revenue. These payments, included in the total of $184 million, amounted to $26 million, compared with $25 million in 1957-58.

Public Works

Expenditures of the Department of Public Works for 1958-59 amounted to $212 million, compared with $206 million for 1957-58, an increase of $6 million.

The increase of $1 million in the public buildings construction and services branch was due to an increase of $3 million for the acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings in Ottawa offset by a decrease of $2 million for the acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings other than in Ottawa. The increase of $4 million in the harbours and rivers engineering services was due mainly to the acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works in Ontario. The decrease of $2 million in the development engineering services branch was due to lower costs in connection with the trans-Canada highway through national parks.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Expenditures for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police amounted to $53 million for 1958-59, $5 million more than the total spent in 1957-58.

Payments as shown in the table represent gross expenditures; payments received from the provinces and municipalities for police services amounting to $9 million were credited to revenue.

The increase of $5 million in the land and air services was due to increases of $2 million in operation and maintenance and $3 million in construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment.

Trade and Commerce

Expenditures for the Department of Trade and Commerce totalled $65 million for 1958-59, an increase of $8 million over the previous year.

The main items in the net increase of $8 million in the expenditures of this department were $5 million on payment of carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves and $2 million due to the Canadian Wheat Board loss on oats for the crop year 1956-57.

Transport

Expenditures of the Department of Transport for 1958-59 amounted to $300 million, an increase of $93 million over the total of $207 million in 1957-58.

Of the $37 million increase in expenditures for air services, $31 million was for the civil aviation division of which $26 million was for the construction and acquisition of buildings, works, lands and new equipment including construction work on municipal airports and $4 million was for operation and maintenance of airways and airports.

The increase of $19 million in expenditures for marine services included $11 million for the construction or acquisition of steamers, $5 million for the operation and maintenance of steamers and $1 million for construction or acquisition of buildings, works, lands and equipment for aids to navigation.

The increase in the outlays of the Board of Transport Commissioners was due entirely to a special contribution of $10 million to the railway grade crossing fund.

During 1958-59, $61 million was paid to cover the net operating deficits of certain Crown corporations compared with $31 million in 1957-58. The increase of $30 million was due mainly to the reimbursement to the Canadian National Railways on account of its 1958 deficit, which was $52 million compared with the 1957 deficit of $22 million.

Veterans Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of Veterans Affairs were $291 million in 1958-59 compared with expenditures of $277 million in 1957-58.

The net increase of $14 million in the outlays of this department included increases of $6 million for pensions for disability or death and $8 million in war veterans allowances due to legislation authorizing increases in monthly payments of pensions and allowances effective July 1 and November 1, 1957.

All other departments

Expenditures of the departments not dealt with in preceding sections amounted to $100 million for 1958-59, an increase of $10 million over the total for 1957-58.

The main changes were a decrease of $10 million in the expenses of the Chief Electoral Officer, due to the previous year's expenditures having included the costs of the June 1957 and March 1958 federal elections; an increase of $9 million in expenditures of the Department of Labour due to payments of $5 million under the winter works programme for which there was no comparable expenditure last year, and an increase of $4 million in payments to provinces to provide financial assistance to vocational schools and training under youth training programmes; and $4 million in the expenditures of the Office of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries of which $3 million was for the construction, improving and equipping of penitentiaries.

A. CHANGES IN PRINCIPAL LIABILITY CLASSIFICATIONS DURING 1958-59

The gross liabilities of the government increased by $1,801 million during the fiscal year. The main changes were increases of $1,313 million in unmatured debt and $577 million in annuity, insurance and pension accounts and a decrease of $207 million in undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts.

†Also includes treasury notes for the fiscal years ending 1952-1956 inclusive.
*Estimated

Current and demand liabilities

This category consists of obligations of the government payable currently or on demand. The principal changes were an increase of $53 million in accounts payable (which records the net liability of the government for accounts paid in April which are applicable and charged to the previous fiscal year) and $32 million in outstanding treasury cheques.

Deposit and trust accounts

In these accounts are recorded sundry funds deposited with the Receiver General of Canada or held in trust for various purposes. The net increase of $42 million was due to an increase of $43 million in the account "United States—S.A.C. bases", which records funds received from the United States Government for the purpose of facilitating the placing of contracts by the R.C.A.F. on behalf of the U.S.A.F. in respect of Strategic Air Command bases, offset in part by decreases in other accounts.

Annuity, insurance and pension accounts

This category records the amounts to the credit of the various annuity, insurance and pension accounts.

TABLE 35

(in millions of dollars)

Other	96.4	90.5	5.9
	3,289.4	2,712.8	576.6

The decrease of $242 million in the unemployment insurance fund represents the amount by which benefit payments totalling $483 million exceeded contributions by employers and employees of $182 million, contributions by the government of $38 million, income of investments of $20 million and other miscellaneous revenue credited to the fund. Benefit payments were $98 million higher than the $385 million paid out in 1957-58.

The government annuities account increased by $58 million reflecting the amount by which premium receipts of $62 million, interest credited to the account by the government of $40 million and the amount of $1 million required to maintain the reserve exceed payments of $46 million to annuitants and beneficiaries.

The increase of $89 million in the superannuation account was due mainly to the government's contribution of $37 million equal to the estimated current and prior service payments of individuals in 1957-58 and $44 million interest credited to the account. The remainder of the increase was due to the excess of employees' current and prior service contributions of $41 million and miscellaneous receipts of $1 million over benefit payments of $34 million.

The permanent services pension account increased by $428 million. The major part of the increase was due to a credit of $326 million to record in the account the full actuarial liability as at March 31, 1958 as calculated by the Department of Insurance. The balance of the increase reflected the government's contribution of $50 million which is made at the rate of one and two-thirds times the current and prior service contributions, interest on the account of $32 million, and contributions of $30 million by permanent services personnel for current and prior years service less payments of $10 million from the account.

Old age security fund

Under the Old Age Security Act pensions of $55 per month are paid, without a means test, from the old age security fund to all eligible persons seventy years of age and over. Payments from the fund during the fiscal year were $560 million while credits to the fund from the 2 per cent tax on personal incomes (maximum tax $60), the 2 per cent tax on corporation profits and the 2 per cent sales tax totalled $376 million. Temporary loans amounting to $184 million were required to cover the deficit resulting from these transactions during 1958-59. Parliament has authorized the writing-off to expenditure in 1958-59 the deficit of $184 million.

Undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts

This category records the undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts for which moneys have been appropriated by parliament and from which disbursements may be made for authorized purposes in periods subsequent to that in which the appropriation was made.

(in millions of dollars)

Undisbursed Balances of Appropriations to Special Accounts	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)

Railway grade crossing fund	22.0	12.6	9.4
Other	0.1	0.1	.....
	77.9	285.4	−207.5

The national defence equipment account was established under Section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, and continued by subsequent votes of parliament. Under the terms of the Act, the value of defence materials and supplies acquired prior to March 31, 1950, and transferred to members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, could be credited to the account and these credits could be used in subsequent years to purchase equipment or supplies for the naval, army or air services of the Canadian forces. This account which totalled $212 million at the beginning of the year was liquidated during 1958-59 in accordance with the announcement by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech of June 17, 1958.

The decrease of $5 million in the Colombo plan fund represented the amount by which disbursements from the fund of $40 million exceeded the $35 million credited to the fund out of moneys voted by parliament for assistance to countries in south and south-east Asia.

The increase of $9 million in the railway grade crossing fund represented the amount by which the $15 million credited to this account and charged to expenditure exceeded disbursements of $6 million.

Deferred credits

This is a new category set up to record the amounts of deferred interest on loans and advances to certain Crown corporations and national governments and other deferred payments due the government. These are contra accounts to corresponding items under "Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations," "Loans to national governments" and "Other loans and investments." Further explanations are given under these categories.

Suspense accounts

These accounts consist of balances where some uncertainty as to disposition exists

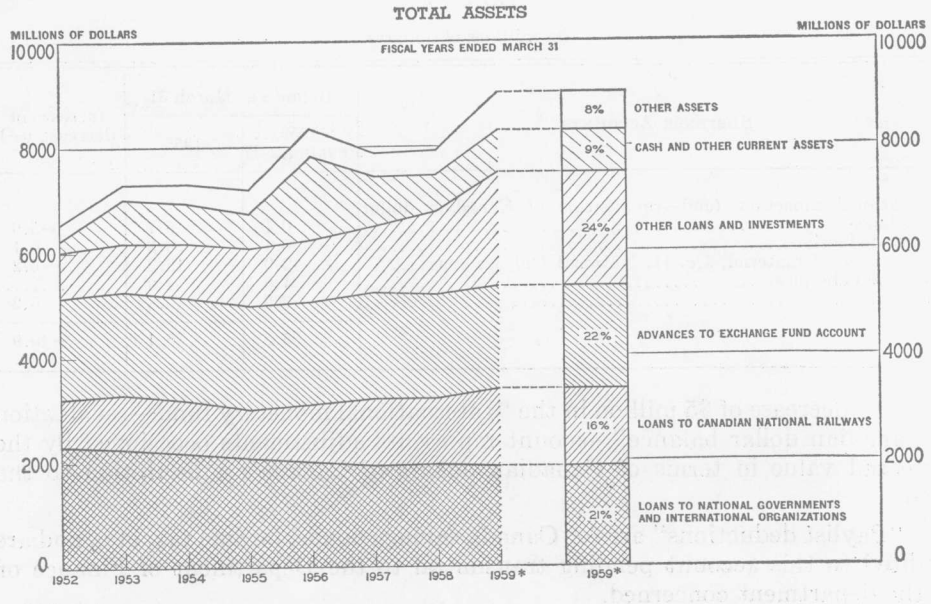
Other	3.0	2.8	0.2
	25.5	36.4	−10.9

The decrease of $5 million in the "International monetary fund—revaluation of Canadian dollar balance" account represents adjustments occasioned by the increased value in terms of Canadian dollars of Canada's subscription to the fund.

"Paylist deductions" are for Canada savings bonds, income tax, etc., and are credited to this account pending transmittal to the Department of Finance or to the department concerned.

The "Replacement of materiel" account established by section 11 of the National Defence Act is credited with amounts realized from the sale of materiel that has not been declared surplus to requirements but has been authorized by the Governor in Council to be sold to other countries. The account is debited with disbursements representing amounts paid for the procurement of replacement materiel. During 1958-59 disbursements exceeded credits to the account by $6 million.



Unmatured debt

The unmatured debt of Canada at the close of 1958-59 amounted to $15,558 million compared with $14,245 million at the close of the previous fiscal year. Debt payable in Canada increased by $1,463 million partly offset by a decrease of $150 million in debt payable in New York. There was no change in debt payable in London.

In the year under review, unmatured debt obligations payable in foreign currencies have been stated in Canadian dollars converted at the rate of $2.80 for the pound sterling and par for the U.S. dollar.

B. Changes In Principal Asset Classifications During 1958-59

The total of assets increased during 1958-59 by $1,161 million. The principal changes were increases of $735 million in loans to Crown corporations, $326 million in the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the permanent services pension account, $159 million in current assets, $72 million in deferred charges, $19 million in other loans and investments and $20 million in advances to the exchange fund, and decreases of $129 million in sinking fund and other investments held for retirement of unmatured debt and $39 million in loans to national goverments.

Current assets

There was an increase of $159 million in this category during the fiscal year, mainly due to increases of $121 million in the cash accounts, $24 million in working capital advances and $13 million in the securities investment account.

(in millions of dollars)

Cash in current and special deposits increased by $166 million but this increase was partly offset by decreases of $41 million in cash in hands of collectors and $4 million in moneys received after March 31, 1959.

The increase of $24 million in working capital advances was due to increases of $42 million in the agricultural commodities stabilization account and $3 million in other accounts offset by a decrease of $21 million in the defence production revolving fund.

Advances to the exchange fund

Advances during the year to the exchang fund account to finance the purchase of gold and foreign exchange amounted to $225 million and repayments were $205 million, increasing outstanding advances to $1,995 million at March 31, 1959.

Sinking fund and other investments held for retirement of unmatured debt

There was a decrease of $129 million in this category during the fiscal year due to a reduction in the government's investment in its own New York bond issues. On February 1, 1959 the government called for redemption the 1948-56/63, 3% New York issue of which it held $129 million in this account.

Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations

These loans and investments increased by $735 million during 1958-59 bringing the balance in this category to $3,289 million at March 31, 1959.

Advances to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, to be covered by obligations or shares of the company, amounted to $3 million during the year. These advances were for the construction or acquisition of buildings and equipment at Chalk River and Deep River and for the commercial products division at Ottawa.

Under the provisions of the Broadcasting Act which came into force on November 10, 1958, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation repaid $4 million, (that portion of the working capital of the corporation in excess of $6 million). The remainder of its indebtedness of $23 million to the government was cancelled and this amount, plus the capital surplus of the corporation at the coming into force of the Act, was credited to a proprietor's equity account and transferred to net debt.

Loans to the Canadian Farm Loan Board amounted to $22 million during the year while repayments by the board were $253 thousand bringing the total advances to $88 million at March 31, 1959.

Loans to Central Mortgage and Housing during the year amounted to $373 million, of which $350 million was for direct loans by the corporation, $22 million for federal-provincial housing projects and $1 million for advances for house construction. Repayments totalled $37 million of which $33 million was for direct loans, $1 million was for loans for federal-provincial housing projects and $3 million for loans for house construction. The net increase for the year of $336 million brought the total loans to the corporation to $1,004 million at March 31, 1959.

Loans to the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation in connection with the construction of the Northern Ontario section of the all-Canadian natural gas pipe line totalled $42 million in 1958-59. There were no repayments during the year.

Advances to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority amounted to $99 million bringing the total loans to $271 million. In addition deferred interest on these loans was increased by $8 million being the amount of interest due on December 31, 1958. A contra item for this amount is included in the liability category 'Deferred credits".

In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, the government made advances of $205 million to the Canadian National Railway Company for capital purposes and retirement of debt in the hands of the public. Repayment of current and prior years' advances during the year ended March 31, 1959 was $11 million.

In addition, to assist the company to finance further capital expenditures in the year ended March 31, 1959, the government purchased an amount of $21 million of four per cent preferred stock of the Canadian National Railway Company. This stock is issued under the authority of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, 1952, in an amount equal to three per cent of the gross revenue of the company.

Further, in the year ended March 31, 1959, the government provided the company with temporary loans of $34 million to cover, in part, the 1958 income deficit and $14 million to cover, in part, the 1959 income deficit. Since in the year ended March 31, 1958, the government made temporary loans of $22 million to cover, in part, the 1958 deficit, the total loans on the 1958 deficit were $56 million. However, an amount of $4 million was repaid prior to the end of the current fiscal year and the outstanding balance of $52 million was charged to expenditure.

In summary, the total amount which was made available to the company during the year was $274 million, repayments and write-off amounted to $67 million, resulting in a net increase of $207 million in the amount outstanding at the end of the fiscal year.

Other changes in loans and investments included increases of $21 million to the National Harbours Board, $20 million to the Northern Canada Power Commission, $2 million to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation and a decrease of $3 million in loans to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited.

Loans to national governments

These loans totalled $1,449 million at March 31, 1959, a decrease of $39 million during the fiscal year.

During the fiscal year the United Kingdom government repaid all of the outstanding balance of $23 million of the $700 million interest-free loan granted under the provisions of the War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act, 1942. In addition a $16 million repayment was made on the $1,185 million loan made under the $1,250 million credit authorized by the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, reducing the principal outstanding at March 31, 1959 to $1,081 million.

Repayments of advances under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act to certain foreign countries to assist them in purchasing goods and services in Canada amounted to $18 million during the year reducing the balance at March 31, 1959 to $286 million.

Miscellaneous loans and advances to foreign governments increased by $18 million due to an increase of $19 million in special loans to finance the purchase of wheat and flour from Canada. These special loans amounted to $35 million at March 31, 1959, of which $33 million was made to India and $2 million to Ceylon.

Other loans and investments

There was an increase of $19 million in this category during the year bringing the balance to $682 million at March 31, 1959.

Canada's subscription to the capital of the international monetary fund was reduced by $3 million during the year. The accounts of the fund are maintained in terms of United States dollars therefore in order to keep Canada's subscription at the required amount, that portion represented by Canadian dollar balances is revalued quarterly and any settlement required is made annually as at April 30, the end of the fund's fiscal year. The decrease of $3 million reflected the settlement at April 30, 1958 and subsequent adjustments due to the quarterly revaluations.

Loans to provincial governments increased by $27 million due to a loan of $30 million to the Province of New Brunswick in respect of the Beechwood Power Project partly offset by regular annual payments of $3 million in respect of loans to other provinces.

Overpayments to certain provinces arising out of 1952 tax-rental agreements were reduced by $1 million during the year.

Advances under the Veterans Land Act decreased by $9 million, however as the reserve for conditional benefits under the Act was reduced by $6 million, the net decrease was $3 million.

Miscellaneous loans and investments decreased by $1 million during the year. Increases of $6 million being more than offset by decreases of $7 million.

Securities held in trust

This category records the security holdings of various liability accounts. There was a decrease in this account of $3 million, the balance at March 31, 1959 being $20 million.

Deferred charges

This category consists of the residual balance of discounts and commissions, redemption bonuses and conversion premiums on loan flotations that have not been amortized or written off to expenditures.

The balance in the account at March 31, 1959 of $150 million reflects an increase of $72 million during the fiscal year. Costs of new loans issued in 1958-59 and charged to the account were $108 million, of which $67 million was in respect of the 1958 conversion loan and $6 million in respect of treasury bill discounts which will be charged to interest on public debt in 1959-60. Credited to the account was $36 million of which $31 million was charged to annual amortization costs and $5 million representing discount on treasury bills sold in 1957-58 was charged to interest on public debt in the 1958-59 budgetary expenditure accounts.

Unamortized portion of actuarial deficiencies

In 1958-59 $326 million was credited to the permanent services pension account to bring that account into line with an actuarial evaluation as at March 31, 1958 and an equivalent amount was set up as the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency.

There was no change in the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the superannuation account. The balance remained at $139 million.

Suspense accounts

There was no change in the balance in this category during the fiscal year.

Capital assets

Capital assets, which consist of assets of the government such as land, buildings, works and equipment, etc., that are charged to budgetary expenditures at the time of acquisition or construction, are shown on the statement of assets and liabilities at a nominal value of $1.

Inactive loans and advances

This category records loans and advances which are not currently revenue-producing or realizable. Included are the loan of $49 million to China under the Export Credits Insurance Act, loans of $24 million and $7 million made to Roumania and Greece in 1919-20 and 1920-21 and advances of $12 million in respect of the implementation of guarantees (Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited), an increase of $1 million over 1958-59.

Reserve for losses on realization of assets

There was no change in this reserve during the year. The balance at March 31, 1959 remained at $546 million.

C. Increase in Net Debt

The budgetary deficit of $617 million for the fiscal year 1958-59 plus an adjustment of $23 million in respect of prior years transactions resulted in an increase of $640 million in the net debt of Canada from $11,046 million at March 31, 1958 to $11,686 million at March 31, 1959.

5. THE CASH POSITION

The government's cash position is affected not only by the budgetary transactions explained in some detail in preceding sections but also by non-budgetary transactions and changes in the government's outstanding unmatured debt. Although there was an estimated budgetary deficit of $617 million in 1958-59, the government's bank balances increased by $166 million during the same period. This increase was the net result of the budgetary deficit of $617 million, a cash requirement of $646 million for non-budgetary transactions and an increase of $1,429 million in outstanding unmatured debt (after taking into account transactions in the securities investment and sinking fund accounts).

Non-budgetary receipts and credits relate to transactions which result in increases or decreases in the government's assets and liabilities and do not appear in what might be called the government's income account for the fiscal year nor do they enter into the calculation of the annual budgetary surplus or deficit. However, in considering the full scope of the government's financial operations and in measuring their effect on the government's cash position and their impact on the economy, non-budgetary as well as budgetary transactions must be taken into account.

The increases or decreases in the government's assets and liabilities have been described in detail in the section entitled "Statement of Assets and Liabilities of Canada". On the assets side the non-budgetary transactions consist, for the most part, of loans and advances to, and repayments by, Crown corporations and other government agencies and funds (including the old age security fund), national, provincial and municipal governments, international organizations, veterans and other borrowers. On the liabilities side they relate mainly to receipts and payments in connection with the many deposit and trust accounts, and annuity, insurance and pension funds held or administered by the government.

The following statement summarizes the non-budgetary transactions for 1958-59 and indicates how they, together with the budgetary transactions and changes in the unmatured debt position, affected the government's cash position. For purposes of comparison, the corresponding figures for 1957-58 are also shown.

As the table shows, non-budgetary receipts and credits for 1958-59 (excluding unmatured debt transactions) totalled $1,114 million while non-budgetary disbursements and charges (also excluding unmatured debt transactions) amounted to $1,760 million, resulting in a net amount of $646 million required for non-budgetary transactions. As there was a budgetary deficit of $617 million, $1,263 million had to be financed by an increase in unmatured debt or a decrease in cash balances. In 1957-58 there was a requirement of $127 million for non-budgetary transactions and this together with the budgetary deficit of $38 million resulted in $165 million having to be financed by an increase in unmatured debt or a decrease in cash balances.

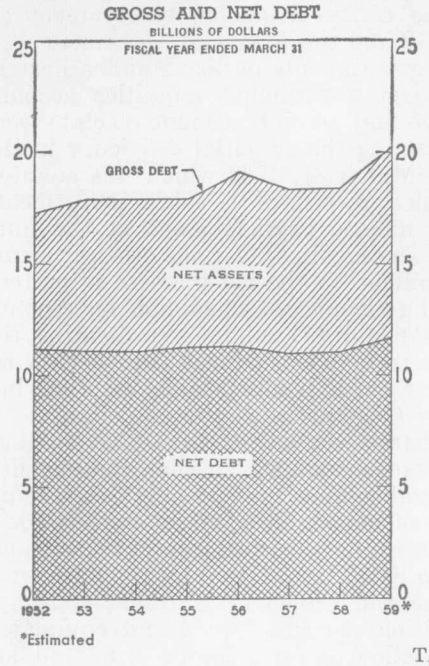
Non-budgetary receipts and credits, as already indicated, totalled $1,114 million in 1958-59. Repayments of loans, investments and working capital advances were $103 million and included $4 million from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, $39 million from the United Kingdom Government on account of the War Appropriation Act, 1942 and the Financial Agreement Act, 1946 and $18 million from other national governments on loans under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act. Net government annuities account receipts were $58 million and net insurance and pension account receipts were $523 million including $326 million representing the actuarial deficiency in the permanent services pension account as at March 31, 1958 which was credited to the account during the fiscal year. The net proceeds of the sale of investments of the unemployment insurance fund to finance payments out of the fund amounted to $238 million, and net receipts and credits in various other accounts amounted to $192 million including $84 million for the net increase in current and demand liabilities (such as outstanding cheques), $43 million on account of Strategic Air Command bases (in trust) and $41 million representing the net decrease in cash in the hands of collectors and in transit (which cash represents moneys received by public officers on or before March 31, 1959 but not deposited to the credit of the Receiver General until after that date).



Non-budgetary disbursements and charges amounted to $1,760 million. Loans, investments and working capital advances were $882 million and included net advances of $42 million to the agricultural commodities stabilization account in connection with the purchase and sale of commodities after allowing for a charge of $15 million to budgetary expenditures in respect of losses in operations during 1958-59, $22 million to the Canadian Farm Loan Board for the purpose of making loans to farmers, $207 million to the Canadian National Railways for additions and betterments, the acquisition of rolling stock and equipment and the retirement of maturing debt after allowing for a charge of $52 million to expenditures in respect of the company's operating deficit for 1958, $336 million to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the purpose of making housing loans, $19 million to the Governments of India and Ceylon for the purchase of Canadian wheat, $21 million to National Harbours Board for reconstruction and capital expenditures, $20 million to Northern Canada Power Commission for power plant construction in Northern Canada and assistance under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, $42 million to the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation for financing the Northern Ontario section of the natural gas pipe line, $99 million to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority for dredging and construction of the seaway, and net payments of $26 million to provincial governments ($30 million having been advanced to the Province of New Brunswick in respect of the Beechwood Power Project). Net payments from the unemployment insurance fund were $242 million (sales of investments amounted to $238 million). Net disbursements from the special defence accounts were $218 million reflecting the decision to liquidate the national defence equipment account. Other non budgetary disbursements and charges amounted to $417 million and included $72 million in respect of loan flotation costs not yet amortized and $326 million in respect of the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the permanent services pension account.

In summary, as budgetary and non-budgetary transactions during 1958-59 required financing in the amount of $1,263 million, and unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public (after taking into account transactions in the securities investment and sinking fund accounts) increased by $1,429 million, more than sufficient to meet the requirement, cash balances on deposit with the banks increased by $166 million.

6. THE PUBLIC DEBT

Gross and net debt

During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, the gross public debt increased by $1,801 million to $20,220 million. This increase was made up of increases of $1,313 million in unmatured debt and $488 million in other liabilities. During the year the government's recorded net assets increased by $1,161 million. The net debt thus increased by $640 million to $11,686 million.

Unmatured debt

The total unmatured debt of Canada at March 31, 1959 was $15,558 million. This was $1,313 million more than the total at the end of the previous fiscal year. During the fiscal year the government's holdings of its own securities in the sinking fund decreased by $129 million and in the securities investment account increased by $13 million. The net increase in the amount of outstanding unmatured debt in the hands of the public was $1,429 million.

Summary of securities issued and redemptions during the year

During the year ended March 31, 1959, the government issued securities payable in Canadian dollars in the principal amount of $9,286 million (excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature periodically but including the increase in the issue of treasury bills in the amount of $70 million) and redeemed or converted issues in the amount of $7,973 million. Of the amount redeemed or converted $150 million was payable in U.S. dollars; the balance was payable in Canadian dollars.

Redemptions were financed as follows:

By proceeds of new issues:
Canada savings bonds 1958 series (net)	860
Other new bond issues	1,550
Increase in treasury bills	70
		2,480
By refunding or conversion		6,806
		9,286
Increase in unmatured debt		−1,313
Applied towards redemptions		7,973

At March 31, 1959, the outstanding unmatured debt payable in U.S. dollars was $150 million compared with $300 million on March 31, 1958 due to the call of the 1948-58/63 loan on February 1, 1959. The amount payable in sterling was $52 million, unchanged from the previous year.

In July the government announced the conversion loan campaign which was the largest debt operation ever carried out in Canada. In order to lengthen out the term of the debt, by selling to the public longer term bonds in exchange for the shorter term victory loan bonds, it offered to convert all unmatured 3 per cent victory loan bonds into new 4½ per cent bonds due September 1, 1983, 4¼ per cent bonds due September 1, 1972, 3¾ per cent bonds due September 1, 1965 or 3 per cent bonds due December 1, 1961, providing the term of the new bonds was not less than that of the victory loan bonds converted. In all, $6,416 million of the victory loans was outstanding and of this total $5,806 million, or approximately 90 per cent, was converted into the new issues.

Net sales of Canada savings bonds, 1958 series, as at March 31, 1959, amounted to $860 million and redemptions of Canada savings bonds series 3 to 12 (of which series 3 matured on November 1, 1958) were $575 million. The net increase during the year for all series was $285 million and the amount outstanding at March 31, 1959 was $2,832 million.

The issue of treasury bills was increased by $70 million during the fiscal year and the amount outstanding at March 31, 1959 was $1,595 million.

(4) Issued at par in conversion of 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th victory loan bonds. Cash adjustments paid as in (3) above.

Interest rates

During the first four months of the year interest rates generally continued the downward trend from their peak reached in August, 1957. Subsequently rates reversed their trend and continued to rise gradually. The average interest rate on the government's unmatured debt at March 31, 1959 was 3.60 per cent compared with 3.05 per cent at the end of the previous fiscal year and 2.74 per cent at March 31, 1955.

Treasury bill yields reflected a trend similar to that of general interest rates. The yield on three-month bills on April 3, 1958 was 1.83 per cent. On August 1, 1958, the yield dropped to a low for the year of 0.87 per cent and was 4.30 per cent on the last issue of the fiscal year.

AVERAGE INTEREST RATE ON UNMATURED DEBT

The following table shows the high and low yields together with the yield on the last issue of three-month bills for the fiscal years ended March 31, 1955 to 1959 inclusive.

Indirect debt or contingent liabilities

In addition to the direct debt set out in the statement of assets and liabilities the government has assumed certain indirect or contingent obligations. These consist of securities of the Canadian National Railways, guaranteed as to principal and interest, or as to interest only, and a number of miscellaneous guarantees, the chief of which are the guarantee of insured loans made by chartered banks and other approved lending institutions under the National Housing Act, 1954, deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada, bank advances to the Canadian Wheat Board, advances under the Export Credits Insurance Act and bank loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

The government's liability under its guarantee of insured loans under the National Housing Act, 1954 was $2,059 million at December 31, 1958, compared with $1,398 million at December 31, 1957.
