Bridgetown, Explain their days' continement. For winter layers they cannot be excelled, and the chickens are very hardy. The Plymouth Rock excels all other received for general use. Fowls of this bread of the Brahmas, are most excellent layers, very pretty, and among the best fowls for table use—pullets weighing, when full grown, from seven to eight pounds, and cockerels from nine to ten pounds. Moreover, they are very hardy, and great foragers when running at large. I am of opinion that this is the breed above all others to answer the general requirements of farmer and fancier.
