Milton's Prayer for Patience

1 AM old and blind! Men point at me as smitten by God's frown : Afflicted and deserted of my kind, Yet am I not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong,
I murmur not that I no longer see
Poor, ol I, and helpless, I the more belong,
Father supreme! to Thee.

All-merciful One '
When men are farthest, then art Thou most near,

When friends pass by, my weaknesses to shun,
Thy chariot 1 hear.

Thy glorious face Thy glorious race
Is leaning towards me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my louely dwelling-place—
And there is no more night.

I recognize Thy purpose, clearly shown;
My vision Thou hast dimmed that I may see Thyself—Thyself alone.

I have nought to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred—here,
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in that radiance from the sinless land
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go,
Shapes of resplendent beautyround me throng,
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now. When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from "Paradise" refresh my brow,
That earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime,
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine,
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

The Young Gardener.

PERHAPS there was a garden plot known as his, which, aided by a suggestion or two from his father, he carefully cultivated. Any father would be proud of such a son as "The Young Gardener." The faithful, affectionate dog, gambolling by his young master's side, seems to take in the whole situation, and rejoices in his master's joy. Woe be to any one who shall dare to interrupt him, or take anything off his barrow. Look at it again, and if you see, as your Editor sees, you will then agree to the following:-

1st. It is suggestive of healthfulness. That boy is the picture of health. You may be sure that he goes to bed early, and gets up early. He don't chew nor smoke tobacco, nor use intoxicating drinks; none of your home made cider or wine for him, his nose would be offended if you put whisky near it. He eats his share of porridge and other wholesome food, and drinks plenty of good milk and water, and keeps his skin clean by the use of plenty of soap and water. He is none of your poor, thin little boys the wind mustn't blow upon; but a real healthful little fellow.

2nd. It is suggestive of industry. If the contents of his barrow is a specimen of his crop, then you may be certain that his garden is the very opposite of what King Solomon describes, when he says: "I went by the and lo it field of the slothful . . was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof." It had been well digged, carefully planted, and the hoe had not been allowed to get rusty, and where and when he could not well use has hoe, then he hand-pulled the weeds. It would be quite a delight to look on it. See how he has filled his barrow; notice the way he has taken hold of the handles, see the way he steps. Off jacket and vest, roll up his shirt sleeves, and at it with a will. What pleasure to see a man or boy work after that fashion. Doubtless he can swim as well as the next, at the proper time, and with suitable companions; but he don't believe in all play.

3rd. It is suggestive of cheerfulness. Some boys and girls have the unfortunate habit of looking rather sour when they are at work; just as though they hated it. They are cross and don't half do it, unless they are watched all the time. Our Young Gardener looks to be real happy. Perhaps he is a little proud of his crop, and as he hastens to the door, he is thinking what his mamma will say when he calls her to look at what his barrow contains. Or it may be that is what he calls the minister's portion, and his young heart is so happy it shines out all over his face while he thinks of the surprise he'll give the minister. However that may be, he looks very cheerful.

Healthful, industrious, cheerful; these, with true religion in his heart make him just such a boy as the world needs. If he lives to manhood he'll help to make the world the better for his abode in it; and in the judgment of the great day, the Lord Jesus Christ will say unto him, "Well done."—Ensign.

The Borrowed Baby.

"PLEASE, ma'am, I've come to borrow the baby." The speaker was a rosy-cheeked girl who lived with the family over the way. It was a regular nuisance, this lending the baby all the time. She did not seem to belong to us any more at all. I suppose we were all a little jealous, because she loved the new people so much, and they took so much pains with her, teaching her little cunning ways and pretty sayings; and I must say they were most judicious, never giving her sweet things to make her sick, or letting her take cold. So, for the hundredth time I rolled little Dudu up, and, kissing her goodbye, sent her off to act the part of a borrowed baby. When John came home to dinner, and found the baby gone again, he was just as angry as he could be. "Why can't they go over to the asylum and take their pick of babies." "But not like ours, John," I said, quickly. "Well, no, of course not, but I don't propose to have strangers going halves with our baby. Besides, I won't have them teaching that child any more religious nonsense, and they may as well know it; when they bring her back this time you may as well settle it once for all."

I forgot to say that John and I were Free Thinkers, and did not go to church, or subscribe to any of the religious beliefs to which we had been educated. We had both graduated in a brilliant, intellectual school, utterly devoid of the foolish superstitions of any religious faith, and we intended to bring up our child in the same severely moral atmosphere. It did not once occur to us that ours was the strength of youth and presumption, or that our ignorance could not pull down in a day what knowledge been a thousand years building. We felt that we were sufficient for our-selves and our child. The baby came home. She was nearly three years old, but after all, only a baby, and as I took her from the girl I said: "We won't be able to lend the baby any more, Mary; her papa and I both think it isn't a good 1 lan, and we cannot possibly do without her; the house is too lonely. Tell your mistress so with my compliments."

"I'm sorry, ma'am," said the girl, "because we all love little Dudu so much and she's really sweet. She can sing 'Jesus loves me' all through, and not miss a word."

"Superstition!" I exclaimed angrily. "Tell your mistress for me that I do not wish my child to learn those senseless hymns. I do not believe in them, nor do I intend that she shall."

" Not beel i e-ve them!" gasped the girl. "Why you ain't a heathen, be you?" I dismissed her curtly, and when John came home told him of the message I had sent.

"That is right, my little woman. I guess we know enough to take care of this little blossom. Winkie, don't we?" Hey, wee Willie Somehow just then an old forgotten text flashed into my mind—" My grace is sufficient for thee," and it ran up and down the garret of my thought all the evening. When I put Dudu to bed 1 evening. When I put Dudu to bed I noticed that her hands were bot and her eyes seemed heavy. There was lots of diphtheria in the place, but she had not been exposed to it in any possible manner, our neighbours who had borrowed the baby being as afraid of it as we were, for that was why no baby was at their home.

Oh, that dreadful time! I cannot recall it now-the days-hardly more than a day—of anguish; the awful suffering and the end, the parched lips and the fever-bright eyes—the awful realm of death and not one of hope, one word of comfort, only the cruel, dreary, unlighted grave that yawned for our darling! Just at the last there was a moment's peace. It was not on us that her last look fell. We turned to see who or what she saw, and there stood our neighbour over the way, whom she, at least, sweet darling, had loved as herself, and then she lifted the weary little hands, and a glad look of recognition was in the wan face, and we all heard the last broken words as they fell in awful distinctness from the baby lips:

"Desus loves me—dia I know."

And it was all over, and only the memory remained of so much beauty and sweetness; and as our hearts were going back to the dust of unbelief, our good neighbour came like an evangelist, and giving us of her own brave strength gained at the foot of the cross, said wisely: "Be content. God has only borrowed the baby!"—Detroit Free Press.

Ir you stand a quarter of a mile off from your father, you will be sore puzzled to know what he says or what he means; but if you go within five feet of him, everything will be plain. So, my Christian brother, if you stand off and away from God, your Heavenly Father, in the midst of earthly absorptions, you will undoubtedly be much at a loss to know what is His will; but if you live near to Him, walking with God (as the Scripture expression so significantly gives it), you will have no difficulty of this sort.—Howard

THREE small children, a boy and two girls, respectively ten, seven, and four years old, arrived in St. Louis a few weeks ago, having trav lled thither all the way from Kulm, in Germany, without any escort or protection but their innocence and helplessness. Their parents, who had emigrated last year from the Fatherland and settled in Sedalia, Missouri, had left them in charge of an aunt, to whom in due time they for warded a sum of money, sufficient to pay the passage and other expenses of the little ones to their new home across the ocean. As they spoke not a word of any language save their own, in all probability they would never have arrived at their destination had not the relative in question provided them with a passport, not, truly, addressed to any earthly authority, but to Christian mankind at large Before taking leave of them she gave the eldest girl a New Testament, instructing her to show it to every person who might accost her during her long voyage, and in particular, to call attention to the first leaf in the book. Upon that leaf the wise and good woman had inscribed the names of the three children, their birthplace and several ages, and a plain, unvarnished statement to the effect that "their father and mother in America were anxiously awaiting their arrival at Sedalia, Missouri," followed by the irresistible appeal, their guide, safeguard, and interpreter throughout a journey of over four thousand miles: "Verily I say unto you, forsemuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto Me."

"Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep."

By virtue of its age and value and previous associations this little prayer has become a classic. It must be very ancient, for who can tell when or by whom it was written? Thousands, from the silver-haired pilgrim to the lisping infant, sink to nightly slumber murmuring the simple petition. It has trembled on the lips of the dying. One instance was that of an old saint of eighty-six years whose mind had 80 failed that he could not recognise his own daughter. "Very touching," says the relator, "was the scene one night after retiring, as he called his daughter, as if she were his mother, saying, like a little child, 'Mother, come here by my bed and hear me say my prayers before I go to sleep. She came near. He clasped his white, withered hands, and reverently said:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake, I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to take;"

then quietly fell asleep and woke in beaven.

A distinguished judge, who many years ago died in New York in extreme old age, said that his mother had taught the stanza to him in infancy and that he never omitted it at night. John Quincy Adams made a similar assertion, and an old sea captain declared that, even before he became a decided Christian, he never forgot it on turning in at night.—Anon.

THERE - a strange, wild wail around, a wail of wild unrest, A moaning in the music, with echoes uncon-

And a mocking twitter here and there, with small notes shill and thin,
And deep low shuddering groans that rise from caves of gloom within

And still the weary wail crosses the harmonies

And still the wailers wander through His fair lands rich and broad;
Grave thought-explorers swell the cry of doubt and nameless pain,
And careless feet among the flowers trip to the dismal strain.

They may wander as they will in the hopeless search for truth,
They may squander in the quest all the freshness of their youth,
They may wrestle with the nightmares of sin's unresting sleep,
They may cast a futile plummet in the heart's unfathomed deep.

But they wait and wail and wander in vain, and still in vain.

The Peril of a Sparrow, and How He Was Saved.

RY UNCLE JOHN.

Every boy knows how the English sparrows, first brought over from their native country to eat up the caternillars pillars and measuring worms which were eating the leaves from the parktrees in New York city, have spread into the towns and cities of Canada as well. Why they do not go more into country places I cannot tell; perhaps it is because they think, like our tramps and loafers, that they can get an easier living in the towns than country. Like those shiftless people, I am sure, that in inclement weather they must sometimes suffer very much from their choice.

But then, I am sure that one sparrow is of more value, many ways, than many loafers. They destroy many injurious insects; they pick up a great deal from the streets which would become offensive; and their company makes every place, every house-top and tree, very lively. I must give them credit for doing that much for

The place where I have made the home of my old age is quaint but comfortable. It is an old double house, altered to accommodate a family for which only one of the former smaller tenements of which, under one roof, it was composed, would be too small. With two or three new doors cut through, one partition knocked out, and a stair-way moved from one place to another, it furnishes us with fourteen rooms

(some of them very small, 'tis true), and sundry passage-ways, closets, and other conveniences. The plan of the labyrinth of rooms is now so odd, that I have given our cottage an odd name, namely, Ramble Lodge. But then it is very cozy and comfortable.

The sparrows, of which we have more than our proportion, increase the interest and pleasantness of our homely dwelling. The reason why we have more sparrows than many other people is this: (1) We keep a horse, and the hay and horse-feed in general, together with the refuse of the house, furnishes them a great deal of food; (2) I slways keep more than a dozen fowls, which I purposely furnish with a variety and ange of food from time to time, some of which is small enough for sparrows, of which they dispute the possession with the hens. Once, when, for a time, I fed a mixture of very small grains, the sparrows came down upon us in such numbers as to become a nuisance, and my good wife, who is a very tidy housekeeper, entered a strong protest. By furnishing less food of a kind they could avail themselves of, a part of them flew elsewhere. have still, however, enough left to make our premises very lively. Two old covered eave troughs, now no longer used, being displaced by metal pipes, are taken possession of—a shelter in stormy weather and in winter, or as a breeding-place in summer. Since St. Valentine's day there has been a world of chatter connected with love-making, house furnishing, and nest-building, in the sparrow community. This would be even more pleasant if they had not fought away another family, which had prior possession and a kind of pre emption right of the premises: I refer to the swallows, who, though a very urbane sort of bird, have been forced to pack off to the country, and to build their houses under the caves of barns, while they sun and air themselves, when off work, on the fences and telegraph wires. In the towns we must be content with the sparrows Just in front of the southern window of the room where I often write, in a sheltered corner, are two peach-trees, which have grown very tall and bushy. We manured them so much they bear no fruit, but have all grown to wood. In the place of peaches we have to accept the shade, and to use them as curtains to the windows. The sparrows, however, have made a perch of them. They are a pretty object for the eye to rest upon, and their chatter is very lively at most times. But now to my story.

On Good Friday morning one of my sparrows fell into a snare from which he could not extricate himself. You will remember it was a snowy morning, and I had gone to the front of the house to see whether the snow did not require to be removed from the sidewalk, when a young man drew my attention to a great concourse of sparrows at one corner, which seemed to be trying in vain to rescue one of their number from a perilous position. He had, apparently, been trying to enter the eave-trough, above described, through a hole which had once been an opening to a spout, with a considerable bit of string, which he had in-tended some way to utilize in the construction of his nest; but one end of it had got fastened around the head of a nail, or in a crack in the wood, while the other end had become wound around his neck. Leaving the hole with the expectation, probably, of making a free flight after more materials, he had become suspended by the neck, like a culprit who had been hanged for a felony. Nor could he help himself in any possible way, not being able to regain his footing anywhere. There he swung to and fro like the pendulum of a clock, and though he fluttered and fluttered, his strength every moment was becoming less. His little feathered associates gathered around, and made cries of alarm, pecking and pecking till they became discouraged, and gave it up. A deliverer of greater powers and intelligence must interpose, or poor birdie was lost. I addressed myself to the rescue: first I had Katie, the housemaid, hand me out the step-ladder. That was too short to allow me to reach the bird, which was dangling full twenty feet or more from the ground. I then bethought me of the pitch-fork, by one prong of which I hoped to undo the tie at one end or the other; but even that was too short; besides, it was hard to keep my posi-tion on the top of the ladder. I was in danger of slipping off, without any rope to fetch me up. The little captive fluttered less as his strength became exhausted, and I began to fear, as life seemed to be ebbing out, that he would die upon my hands, when I bethought me of that long piece of fish-pole, which was kept for beating carpets withal. Presto, I ran and found it, returned and mounted the ladder once more, and found I could now reach the bird, and began poking and poking in hopes of detaching one or other end of the string; neither of which I could do, but was momentarily in danger of getting a tumble myself.

I now gave up hopes of saving the bird alive; but thought his death was only a question of time-and that his nest must remain unfinished—that his mate must mourn in early widowhood, and the happy little house keeping establishment, which I had hoped to see grow up under my eye, must come to nought. Shall I confess the sad determination to which I came! It was to save him from a lingering death by killing him myself! With that view, I began to beat him with the end of the pole, when, O joy! though I must have hurt him somewhat, down he came, and lay panting under one of the shrubs in the flower garden. But he was not dead; for when I went to seize him in my hand, I was glad to see that he could fly. I allowed him to rejoin his mate; and I expect their house-keeping operations have been resumed, and their family-raising prospects are not blasted.

Dear children, for whom I record this little incident, we see in this occurrence an illustration of the events of which Good Friday, the anniversary of the Saviour's death, should remind us. We, like the bird, were imperilled, and in danger of a dreadful death. We could not save ourselves; and neither men nor even angels could help us. It required a nature superior to ours to retrieve our disaster. But, as a human being, with superior strength and resources, resound the bird, so the God-man, the Lord Jesus Christ—

"Beheld our helpless grief; He saw, and, O amazing love! He flew to our relief.

Down from the shining seats above, With joyful haste he fied; Entered the grave in mortal fleah, And dwelt among the dead."

I almost hazarded my safety in striving to rescue my little feathered friend; but He laid down His life that we might live. And His resurrection brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel.

May we all lay hold upon that life and enjoy it forever! Amen.

How to be Nobody.

It is easy to be nobody, and we will tell you how to do it. Go to the drinking saloon to spend your leisure time. You need not drink much now: just a little beer or some other drink. In the meantime play dominoes, checkers, or something else to kill time, so that you will be sure not to read any useful books. If you read anything, let it be the dime novel of the day; thus go on keeping your stomach full and your head empty, and yourself playing time-killing games, and in a few years you will be nobody, unless you should turn out a drunkerd or a you should turn out a grankerd of a professional gambler, either of which is worse than nobody. There are any number of young men hanging about saloons just ready to graduate and be nobodies.—Watchman.

It's no Worth the Warsle for't.

In the following moralizing, by George Paulin, we hear the world-old echo of Solomon's complaint, "Vanity of vanities! all is vanity."

> It's no worth the warsle * for't. A' ye'll get on earth, Gin ye hae na walth aboon Mair than warl's worth.

It's no worth a body's while, Coortin' fame and glitter, It only makes the aftercome Unco black and bitter.

It's no worth the fisher's heuk, Fishin' here for pleasure, Gin ye canne' count aboon, Freend an' hame an' treasure.

The Queen of Home.

When you think of a queen you think of a plain woman who sat opposite your father at the table, or walked with him down the path of life arm in arm-sometimes to the thanksgiving banquet, sometimes to the grave, but always side by side, soothing your little sorro as and adjusting your little quarrels, listening to your evening prayer, toiling with the needle or at the spinning-wheel, and on cold nights tucking you up snug and warm. And then on that dark day when she lay a-dying, putting those thin hands that had toiled for you so long, putting them together in a dying prayer commending you to that God in whom she had taught you to trust. Oh, she was the queen she was the queen. You can not think of her now without having the deepest emotions of your soul stirred, and you feel as if you could cry as though you were now sitting in infancy on her lap, and if you could call her back to speak your name with the tenderness with which she once spoke, you would be willing now to throw yourself on that sod that covers her yourself on that soot that covers her grave, crying, "Mother, mother!" Ah! she was the queen. Your father knew it. She was the queen, but the queen in disguise. The world did not recognise it—Dr. Telmage, in Sunday Nagarine.

For Love's Sake.

SOMETIMES I am tempted to murmur That life is flitting away, With only a round of trifles Filling each busy day— Dusting nooks and corners, Making the house look fan, And patiently taking on me
The burden of woman's care.

Comforting childish sorrows,
And charming the childish heart
With the simple song and story, Told with a mother's art; Setting the dear home table, And clearing the meal away, And going on little errands In the twlight of the day.

One day is just like another ! Sewing and piecing well Little jackets and trousers, So neatly that none can tell
Where are the seams and joinings—
Ah! the seamy side of life
Is kept out of sight by the magic Of many a mother and wife !

And oft when I am ready to murn ur That time is flitting away, With the self-same round of duties With the self-same round of duties Filling each busy day.

It comes to my spirit sweetly,
With the grace of a thought divine,
You are living, toiling for love's sake, And the loving should never repine.

"You are guiding the little footsteps
In the way they ought to walk,
You are dropping a word for Jesus
In the midst of your household talk;
Living your life for love's sake,
Till the homely cares grow sweet—
And sacred the self-denial
That is laid at the Master's feet."

Primary Teaching.

MRS. CRAFTS, the writer of the little book on Primary Teaching to which we will refer, is an enthusiast in her work. No one can read her book without catching a share of her enthusiasm, and that is what we all want.

The importance of teaching the very little ones is lovingly urged in the following words:

Edward Judson wisely says Rav. that while it is now a matter of surprise when a child is brought into Church membership, the time is surely coming when the case will be exact'y opposite. It will then be expected that children will come in large numbers, and the admission of an adult will be a surprise. Why! Because adults have outgrown the trusting age. This instinct of Godtrust in children is unused steam-power which the Church is allowing to escape. Bishop Simpson, in the following words, expresses the same opinion as Dr. Judson:

"I am satisfied that the day is coming when in our Church, and in all the Churches of the world, we shall look chiefly to the conversion of childhood, and as a comparatively rare instance to the conversion of those in maturer years."

Child-Christians usually go on trusting all their lives. Mr. Spurgeon says he admits to Church membership an average of fifty children a year, and that "he has never yet been obliged to expel one member admitted into the Church as a child."

These loving little ones love every Why body else who loves them. should they not love their Saviour just as soon as they are told of his love?

And who shall be the teacher to lead aright these little ones, of whom Dr. Vincent has said:

They are the dearest of all They are the weakest of all. They are the weakest of all.
They are the purest of all
They are the most accessible of all.
They are the most susceptible of all.
They are the most promising of all."

As to very young children, she says they should be taught in small classes in one separate room. Why? Because many teachers with a unity of interest are associated together.

Because teachers are stimulated and helped to do their work by seeing what their associates do, and by hearing a portion of the lesson taught by the experienced teacher in charge of the whole class as a department.

Because the children get the benefit of two presentations of the lesson (in perfect harmony by preconcerted arrangement between the class teachers and the head teacher).

Because children of the same age may be grouped together (by tens) and the teaching of the lesson exactly adapted to them.

Because there is time and opportunity for developing reticent, or dull children, through the assistan' teachers.

Because the lesson may be applied to individuals, instead of the class in general.

Because the peculiar temptations which surround each child may become

Because each child may be called by

Because the record of attendance may be made each Sunday in a very short

Because absentees may be faithfully visited.

Because more children are brought into the class through the efforts of several teachers than could be reached by the head teacher alone.

But we might go on quoting indefi-nitely. Send for the book—it costs only 12 cents—carefully read it, and you will be better and more successful mind, and increases the facility and correctness of expression.

At the Metropolitan Church School, Toronto, this plan has been adopted with most gratifying results. A bronze medal has been offered for the best papers on the four quarter's lessons. A large number of scholars write answers to the printed questions, which answers, we are assured, are of a very high average. The questions are divided into two classes—Senior and Junior. The following, the Junior Class list for the first quarter, will doubtless be suggestive to other schools.

1. When did the ascension of Christ take place? Who were present? What promise did the angel give them? 2. What wonderful events took place on the day of Pentecost ? 3. When the people cried "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" what did Peter say? How many were added to the Church? What did they do with their property 1 4. When the lame man asked alms at the temple gate, what did Peter say to him? What did the man do?

5. By what means did Peter say that the lame man was made strong?

6. How many of the people who heard Peter believed the word? What did the Priests and Saducees do to Peter and John?

7. What question did the rulers ask Peter and John? What was Peter's answer?

8. When Peter and John were let go, what did the rulers say to them? What answer did the apostles make? 9. Why were Ananias and Sapphira so sudden'y destroyed! 10. How were Peter and the other apostles persecuted, and how were they enabled to triumph over it?

11. Who chose "The Seven?" Who appointed them to their office! What were their qualifications, and who was foremost among them 1

12. Describe the death scene of the first martyr. What was his last prayer, and what other prayer was like unto it?

PROVINCIAL S. S. ASSOCIATION.—At the late S. S. Convention in Brampton, it was decided to employ a Secretary, or General Agent, none having been employed since the resignation of the Rev. W. Millard, nearly two years ago. In answer to advertisements the Conmittee received fifteen applications, and at a largely attended meeting, held on the 2nd inst., the Rev. John McEwen, the interest in the lessons; it leads to the habit of looking at the lessons of the quarter as a whole, instead of as separate and unconnected parts; it fixes Gilbert Island Warriors.

FORMERLY, the natives of the Gilbert Islands, in the Pacific, had no guns, but fought with curious clubs and spears; and even now they like to take their old weapons into battle with them, to use when their powder is gone. Some of the spears are armed with sharks' teeth, and are almost twenty feet long. To protect themselves they have a kind of armour, made of cocoanut fibre-cord. A part of this resembles a great-coat; and it comes up behind their heads, to shield them from behind, or when they run. They also make coverings for their legs, arms, and head, of the same material, and still another covering for the head, of the skin of the porcupine-fish. The picture is quite lifelike. Through the recent labours of Missionaries from the United States and native Christians from other groups, most of the Gilbert Islands have been, to a great extent, Christianized. These islanders were formerly very treacherous and ferocious; but a most pleasing change has taker place in the disposition and habits of very many of them.

THE Sunday-School Schedules were sent some weeks ago to every Superintendent of Circuits in the entire connexion. It is desired that they will kindly see that they are properly filled up and duly forwarded to the proper authorities.

WE had the pleasure, in company with the Rev. Mr. Crews of the Guardian office, of assisting at the quarterly review service of the Richmond street School in this city, on Easter Sunday. The Superintendent's table was beautifully decorated with flowers; and this old mother School exhibited a degree of life and vigour which it has never surpassed. Pearson, Esq., the indefatigable superintendent, stated that it had never raised so much money for missionary purposes as it is now doing, and in every other department it exhibits equal energy.

An exchange says that self-made men have generally a great deal to say in praise of their architects.

THE Parsees are a Persian sectas their name implies-who are somewhat numerous, and are very influential in India. They are fire-worshippers; and reverence the sun and sacred fires which are kept burning in consecrated spots. Their religion is much more pure and noble than that of the Hindoos; and they are followers of the famous ancient philosopher and teacher Zoroaster. Among them are some of the wealthiest and most respected merchants of British India. They are also among the best educated and intelli-gent. Their funeral usages are very strange. They do not bury their dead but expose them to the vultures and other birds of prey in great roofless circular buildings which are expressively called Towers of Silence.

Foreign Missionary Literature in the Home.

"FOREIGN missionary literature in the home " is a means of mental, social, and moral culture.

It Enlarges the Mental Horizon.

It Develops Cosmopolitan Sympathies. It Tends to Moral Elevation.

1. Foreign missionary literature cultivates the imagination. It deals with the unseen-absent things! It is not bounded by the next river or nearest line of hills. It lifts out of the old local rut the humdrum routine, and casts us amidst strange scenes, new faces, totally different surroundings. It presents a panorama of curious spectacles in China, Japan, India, Siam, Laos, Cochin China, Persia, Turkey, and beaten as it has often been, where Africa, Mexico, South America, and the Pacific Island-world; an endless succession, mingled with the rapid interplay of a kaleidoscope.

It brings the ends of the earth to our fireside. We are travellers without leaving our own little locality. Here is an open gateway of information; world exchange of facts and opinions. Such reading oultivates a far-seeing eye, an aptitude of affairs. It promotes reflection; it suggests new channels for activity; in a word, it furnishes a liberal education.

2. Foreign missionary literature cultivates cosmopolitan sympathies. We not only inhabit all remoteness, but are taught to recognize that "touch of nature which makes the whole world akin." The actual and inner life of foreigners is brought nearer than by ordinary books of travel. We find here neighbours among the antipodes; meet these people familiarly in their stores and workshops, at their homes and temples, walk and talk with them. See them buying and selling, eating, travelling; some in court robes, others in homespun, many in savage undress. Here is humanity in its myriadsidedness. "Nothing human is foreign!"

Barriers of race, colour, caste, are merged into a common brotherhood. Courtly Persian and fierce Koords; Bedouins of the desert; dark complexioned Brahmins; savage Bushmen and Fiji cannibals,—far off in lineage, with discordant views, of such contrarity of habits. yet children of "Our Father;" one in origin and destiny. Such reading enlarges our capacity to comprehend other lives, enables us to take a stand outside of self. Class monopolies, sectarian exclusion, the spirit of national separatism is weakened, Christian comity promoted, worldwide sympathies cultivated.

3. This literature tends to moral elevation. It introduces us to the choice company, whose names are embalmed in missionary biographics. Stalwart church leaders, full orbed souls, saints in piety, Christ-like in purpose, giants in achievements, the goodly fellowship of Martyn, Heber, Duff, the Mrs. Judson, Fidelia Fisk and their peers; men and women, to whose daring, indomitable perseverance and ardent faith, our century so largely owes its imperial strides in exploration, commerce and philanthropy. It brings us reports from those now at work all along the frontier; sometimes in the most desolate, dangerous and malarious regions inhabited by the human race; in journeyings eft, in perils oft, in weariness from toils and watchings. Here we meet the sturdy opponents of the slave trade, the pioneers in education, in translation, in publishing, Christian physicians, and teachers and would the advancing lines of civilization have stood which are everywhere reducing the barbarism of the world?" Such models could be illy spared. We need to keep our households in close contact with lives so magnificent in quality and action, that the pith and savour of their noble living may kindle laudable ambition, stir high enthusiasm, help to maintain due moral elevation. When thought sinks to the common-place, character halts in sym-"Great truths" need bodies, therefore God puts them into men, that they may have feet to run, hands to strike, and elbows to crowd their way to the front. As the mountain climb forces purer air into the lungs, colours the cheek and nerves the flagging muscles, so chivalrous sentiments and heroic exploits quicken the spiritual nature. Here is a veritable field of cloth-of-gold stained with richest martyr blood-nineteenth century knights,

"Who ride abroad redeeming human wrongs, To teach the heathen and uphold the Christ."

And as we read "the fire of God which fills them" enkindles our own spiritual aspirations.

> Four and Seventy-four. BY MRS. M. ADELAIDE NIXON.

Lowly, beside the old arm-chair, Childhood and old age bowing there, With folded hands at evening prayer, Four and seventy-four.

Soft flaxen curls and locks of grey, Mingling together as they pray,
"Give us our daily bread this day;"
Four and seventy-four.

Four is a rosebud, fair and sweet; White dimple hands together meet, Clasped rev'rently, at Jesus' feet— Our rose-bud Four,

No threads of gray in the flaxen hair, No shades of sorrow, no lines of care, But budding beauty everywhere— Our precious Four.

But seventy-four's a withered rose; Life's morn and noontide at their close, Waiting the evening's blest repose— Weary Seventy four.

The once fair face is lined with care; Sorrow's wand hath touched it here and there, And left white threads in the nut-brown hair Of worn-out Seventy-four.

It mattereth not whether young or old The Good Shepherd lovingly from the cold Gath'reth the stray lambs of his fold,

THERE are several counts in the indictment against tobacco:-

1. It impoverishes the soil.

2. It causes great waste of industry. 3. Its cost is immense. The money spent for it would feed a multitude of he poor, or support an army of mis-

4. It is filthy-promoting uncleanness. It is disgusting — polluting the body, the breath, the cothing, the house or place of business, the air. It is offensive to the delicate and refined.

5. But the great crime of tobacco is in destroying both body and soul. A strong narcotic, it gradually breaks down the nerves, and saps the foundations of life. It thereby produces a call for stimulauts. The nerves destroyed, the moral sensibilities are sadly lowered; the chances of salvation are lessened, and many, many a tobaccouser is lulled into eternal death.

A HOTEL boaster, who was vaunting his knowledge of the world before a crowd of new-comers, was asked by a wag at his elbow if he had ever been in Algebra. O, yes, certainly," said he; "I passed through there on top of a stage about a year ago."

" Don't write there," said one to a lad, who was writing with a diamond pin on a pane of glass in a window.
"Why not?" said he. "Because you can't rub it out." There are other things men should not do because they can't rub them out. A heart is aching for sympathy, and a cold, heartless word is spoken. The impression may be more durable than that of a diamond upon the glass. The glass may be broken, but the impression on the heart lasts forever.

Old Church Bells

RING out merrily, Loudly, cheerily,
Bithe old bells from the steeple tower;
Hopefully, fearfully, Joyfully, tearfully Moveth the bride from her maiden bower

Clouds there is none in the bright summer sky; Sunshine sings benisons down from on high; Children sing loud as the train moves along, "Happy the bride that the sun shines on."

Kneel out drearily, Measure out wearily, Sad old bells, from the steeple grey ' Priests chanting lowly,
Solemnly, slowly,
Passeth the corpse from the portal to-day,

Drops from the leaden clouds heavily fall, Dripping over the plume and the pall; Murmur old folks as the train moves along, "Happy the dead that the rain raineth on.

Toll at the hour of prime, Matin and Vesper chime, Loved old bells from the steeple high, Rolling like holy waves
Over the lowly graves,
Floating up, prayer fraught, into the sky.

Solemn the lesson your lightest notes teach; the presching your iron tongues preach; Ringing in life from the bud to the bloom, Ringing the dead from their rest in the tomb.

Peal out evermore Peal out evermore—
Peal as you pealed of yore,
Brave old bells, on each Sabbath day.
In sunshine and gladness,
Through clouds and through sadness Bridal and burial have both passed away.

Tell us life's pleasures with death all still rife; Tell us that death even leadeth to life; Life is our labor and death is our rest, If happy the living, the dead are the best.

The Best of Swords.

AFTER all, it needs a stronger arm than human, to root out and effectually destroy this giant evil of intemperance. The biggest and the bravest soldiers in the Israelite army, did not dare to go out, and fight with Goliath. He was an enormous, blasphemous, and bloody fellow that, -just such unother customer as we have got to deal with now, But young David, only a mere boy, was not afraid to go out and fight him, because he went out in the name of the God of Israel whom Goliath had defied. Goliath found his match then, and the liquor traffic will only find its match, when the men and women, the boys and girls of the land fight it in the name, and in the strength of Almighty God.

We must fight this giant with the Bible-the sword of the Spirit of God -in our hands. You would think, to hear the liquor-drinkers and sellers quote Scripture to defend their practices, that they were wonderful Bible readers. We fear their knowledge of Scripture is not much. Like the old lady that the minister was visiting once. She seemed to talk like a pious, Bible-loving old woman, When he had got through his conversation—

"Now," said he, "if you will hand me the Bible, I will read and pray with you." She went off to get the Bible, but somehow it took her a long time to find it. After she had hunted over the whole house for it, she came back with a face beaming with delight and said, "I am so glad you came in, for I have found my spectacles that have been lost for three years. I have been searching for them everywhere and never could imagine what had become of them, till I have found them just now in the Bible."

most of the liquor traders or liquordrinkers care to read in that book. Their quotations of Scripture are a good deal like a quotation a whiskeyloving Scotchman once made-

"Why," said he, "I have a Scripture command for drinking spirits. Bible says, 'we are to try the spirits.' And so every whiskey bottle he could lay his hands on, he was bound to try, quoting his favorite passage as his authority.

We don't think that these lovers of liquor put very much faith in the countenance they say the Bible gives them in their practices. All the passages of Scripture they bring forward are very far from keeping their own consciences easy.

The eccentric preacher, Lorenzo Dow, who was a good man, but who had the oddest way of bringing people to feel the truth, once was on his way to preach in South Carolina, when, underneath an old spruce tree, he overtook a coloured lad who was blowing a large tin horn, and who could send forth a blast with rise and swell and cadence, which waked the echoes of the distant hills. Calling him aside, Dow said to him-

"What's your name?" "Gabriel, sir," he replied.

"Well, Gabriel, have you been to Church Hill ?"

"Yes, massa; I's been there many a time "Do you remember a big spruce tree on the hill!" "Yes, massa; I know that pine tree. "Did you know that Lorenzo Dow is going to preach under that tree to-morrow?" "O yes, everybody knows dat?"

"Well, Gabriel, I am Lorenzo Dow, and if you'll take your horn and go to-morrow morning and climb up that tree, hide yourself among the branches before the people begin to gather, and wait there till I call your name, and then blow a blast with your horn such as I heard you blow a minute ago, I'll give you a dollar. Will you do, it Gabriel?"

"Yes, massa; I takes dat dollar!" Gabriel, like Zaccheus, was hid away in the tree top in due time. immense concourse of people, all sizes and colors, assembled at the appointed hour, and Dow preached on the judgment at the last day. By his power of description he wrought the multitude up to the highest pitch of excitement, describing the scenes at the resurrection, at the call of the trumpet peals which were to awaken the sleeping nations.
"Then," said he, "suppose, my dying friends, suppose you should hear at this moment the sound of Gabriel's trumpet 1" Sure enough at that moment the trumpet sounded. The women shrieked and many fainted; the men sprang up and stood aghast. Some ran. Dow stood and watched the drifting storm, till the fright somewhat abated, and some one had discovered the colored angel, who had caused the alarm, quietly perched on a limb of the old spruce, and wanted to get him down to whip him. Dow then resumed his discourse saying, "I forbid all persons present from touching that boy up there. If a colored boy with a tin horn can frighten you almost out of your wits, what will you do when you shall hear the trumpet thunder from

We fancy it is precious little that the Archangel? How will you be able to stand the great wrath of God?"

It is conscience that makes cowards of us all, and it takes very little to scare the guilty consciences of liquorsellers and drinkers, who know well the iniquities of their doings, notwithstanding their absurd appeals to Scripture in self-justification.

The Bible is the deadliest of enemies to intemperance and every other sin.

There was once a little boy who went to Sunday-school regularly, and had learned his lessons so well, that he had a great many Bible verses in his mind. He was a temperance boy. He was once on a steamboat making a journey. One day as he sat alone on the deck, looking down into the water, two ungodly gentlemen agreed that one of them should go and try to persuade him to drink. So the wicked man drew near to the boy, and in a very pleasant voice, and manner, invited him to go and drink a glass of liquor with him.

"I thank you, sir," he said, "but I never drink liquor."

"Never mind, my lad, it will not hurt you; come and drink with me."
""Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, whoseever is deceived thereby is not wise,' was the boy's ready answer.
"You need not be deceived by it.

I would not have you drink too much. A little will do you no harm, and will make you feel pleasantly."

"At last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder," said the boy;
"I think it wiser not to play with adders." "My fine little fellow," said the crafty man, putting on a most flattering air. "I like you, you are no child, you are fit to be a companion of a gentleman. It will give me great pleasure if you will come and drink a glass of the best wine with me."

The lad looked him steadily in the eye, and said, "My Bible says, 'If sinners entice thee, consent thou not.' This was a stunning blow to the tempter, and he gave up his wicked attempt and went back to his companion.

"How did you succeed?" the other

"Oh, the fact is," he replied, "that little fellow is so full of the Bible, you can't do anything with him."-The Temperance Battle-field.

The Drink Traffic.

No morbid sympathy with the agents of this guilty traffic should prevent our arriving at just conclusions as to its enormity. No garments of respectability can hide its horrid loathsomeness. Wrap it in silk, clothe it in purple, bedeck it with the ermine of the law, it is still the same grinning skeleton, fetid with the odour of the grave. Wrong is wrong for ever, and no sanctions of the law can make it right. The whole business is essentially dishonest. It gives no worthy equivalent for the hard-won earnings of its victims. Its factors are It is a crying fraud. the chief agents and allies of Satan in beguiling men to their everlasting ruin. Like human ghouls, they fatten on the blood and lives of their fellow-men. They heap up colossale fortunes by the ruin of others. They rear their houses on a pile of their victim's bones. Their gold and their silver is cankered. The rust of them shall be a witness against them. Gouts of blood are on every The palaces they build are ooin. haunted with the spectres of the souls they wreck. Let them get some honest calling; nor bring the wolf of want howling at their neighbour's door, that they may live in luxury. Let them bethink them of the fact that they are every year sending down sixty thou sand hapless victims---fathers, husbands, brothers, wives-to a drunkard's grave and to a drunkard's hell.

A hundred years ago, that stem iconoclast of wrong, John Wesley, wrote thus of the unholy trade: "The men who traffic in ardent spirits, and sell to all who will buy, are poisoners. general; they are murderers of His Majesty's subjects by wholesale; neither does their eye pity or spare. And what is their gain? Is it not the blood of these men? Who would envy their large estates and sumptuous palaces? A curse is in the midst of them. The curse of God is on their gardens, their walks, their groves; a fire that burns to the nethermost hell. Blood, blood, is there; the foundation, the floor, the walls, the roof, are stained with blood. And canst thou hope, O man of blood, though thou art clothed in scarlet and fine linen, and farest sumptuously every day, canst thou hope to deliver down the field of blood to the third generation! Not so; there is a God in heaven; therefore thy name shall be rooted out. Like as those whom thou hast destroyed, both body and soul, thy memorial shall perish with thee.

It is no defence to quote the authority of the law, the license of the Government. No man, nor body of men, have any moral right to issue or to receive such a license as that. "Licensed," to scatter firebrands, arrows, and death; "Licensed" to set men's souls on fire with the fire of hell;

Licensed to make the strong man weak, Licensed to lay the brave man low; Licensed, the wife's fond heart to break And make the orphan's tears to flow, Licensed to do thy neighbour harm, Licensed to kindle hate and strife; Licensed to nerve the robbers arm, Licensed to whet the murderer's knife.

Licensed where peace and quiet dwell, To bring disease, and want, and wor; Licensed to make this world a hell, And fit man for a hell below.

Of what avail will be such a "license" as that, when the Righteous Judge shall make inquisition for blood?

This pernicious traffic, more than anything else, retards the progress of the gospel, and erects a kingdom of darkness in the midst of Christendom, consigning millions of baptized men to a life of sin and misery and ignorance far worse than any in the realms of darkest paganism. It excludes men from the kingdom of heaven and makes It excludes men them the heirs of wrath and death eternal. It everywhere creates and fosters crime and pauperism, irreligion and vice; causes physical and mental disease; shortens life, and often sends the soul into the presence of its Maker by an act of self-slaughter, or crimsoned with the guilt of murder. It is the cause of much of the Sabhath desecration, profanity, and abounding wickedness that are the reproach of Christian civilization. By its malign influence, many who might be useful members of society and ornaments of the community, become its moral lepers and lazars, disseminating pollution and misery all around them. - Withrow's Temperance Tracts.

Forth she went, first to die ()t our daughters of Zion, Where the Macedon cry, With a pitiful sigh,
Called for truth that the soul cauld rely ou.

Many years toiled she on,
Vexed in soul by the heathen
Who disowned what was done;
But we feel that she's gone
To her rest in the mansions of heaven,

We may write of her now, That her labours are ended, That her works here below Are enwreathed on her brow,
And the "plaudit" already descended.

we ever revers Her fair name and devotion ! May her zeal 10-appear in us all, far and near, And our hearts stir with deepest emotion

Over her orient grave
In "the kingdom celestial,"
May the wild flowers snave With the grass gently wave,

As in Eden, the garden terrestrial!

In conclusion, a prayer For the children and father:
May the one well prepare
Many heather to share In the hope of salvation together !

And the little ones guide, O Thou, Hope of the helpless; Food and rament provide, And salvation beside, And the joys never fading and deathless.

The C. L. S. C.

THE "People's College," as it has been happily named by some writer, now has a membership of about thirty thousand. It has passed its probationary stage. It has ceased to be an experiment. When first presented to the public in August, 1878, much doubt was expressed even by its friends as to the reception it would meet. eagerness and enthusiasm with which the first announcement of the plan was received at Chautauqua did much to remove these doubts, and now that for more than four years it has stood the practical tests of use under widely varying conditions and closest criticism, it must be pronounced one of the greatest educational schemes of this age. The measure of good it may do cannot be over-estimated. It is adapted to the wants of rich and poor alike. It will lighten the burdens of the toiling masses by making their homes brighter and happy, while the leisure of the wealthy class will be occupied in self-improvement. It has already exerted a marked influence in many communities. There are two classes of persons who should be very deeply interested in its plans. The teacher very often succeeds in awakening in the minds of pupils a desire and ambition for a higher culture than the common school affords. Poverty, dependent friends, or some other equally strong reason, close the doors of seminary and college. What they do must be done at home, and in snatches of time between the burdens of the day's toil. Now and then, without aid or suggestion from any, a youth has succeeded in acquiring quite a thorough education, but while one has succeeded a thousand have failed because they needed direction and encouragement, and could receive neither. To this ambitious and earnest class of young people this course of reading is an inestimable boon. The teacher who desires to secure the !argest results will now be able to aid thousands in acquiring an education by recommending the C. L. S. C. course of reading and study. The Christian pastor will be interested in this course of study because of the effect it will certainly have in any community of increasing the number of Church attendents and raising the intellectual life of his congregation to a higher plane.

The greatest bane of this age is the reading of poor and impure literature. By its use taste is vitiated, moral standards are lowered. The imagination is made to do constant work in the lower animal realm, and the whole nature becomes debased. The bad book can only be driven out by a good one. Bad tastes can only be reformed by showing the greater pleasure and profit to be realized by the cultivation of good taste. The C. L. S. C. will certainly do very much in securing a reformation in this direction.

Old Aunt Peggy.

A GOOD Kentucky lady, upon her return to the home of her youth, after an absence of many months, heard of the distressed condition of "Old Aunt Peggy," a negro who had belonged to her family. In the kindness of her heart, she immediately made arrangements for her comfort, and started out in the rain to find her. When Mrs. B. entered the wretched hovel, Aunt Peggy was hovering over a little fire in an old rusty, broken stove, and exclaimed, "Dar, now! if dar ain't Miss Mary!" After an exchange of hearty greetings, Mrs. B. said, "O dear! how have you lived in this condition?"

"Oh, de good Lord mit'y mi'nful bout me. Sometimes I has nothin' to eat, but then He takes my appetite 'way from me, so I dosen't crave nothin'; den I gets sleepy, an' I dreams mi'ty pleasant. O child! I takes it friendly!"

"Well, but, Aunt Peggy, you have not a dry spot in your shanty."

"Well, honey, I knows dat; but it don't seem to gin me no cold; den, bless you it doesn't rain eb'ry day.'

Mrs. B., who by this time was very much impressed that "godliness and contentment" is truly "great gain,"

"Well, Aunt Peggy, I will send for ou this afternoon. We have a nice you this afternoon. We have a nice little room fitted up, and your wants shall be supplied as long as you live.

Clasping her hands together, she fell down on her knees, and with tears of joy streaming down her poor old black cheeks, she praised the Lord; then quieting down, said:

"Dar, now! didn't I tell you I takes it all friendly 1 S'pose Aunt Peggy hadn't been in such a fix, whar'd Mis Mary got a chance to put another star in her crown? An' I knows its gwine to be sot full on 'em, kase you was always good to us."

BEAUTIFUL toiler by the sea! Visions of love have come to thee, Tender handmaid of charity

Ever she toils, and toiling sings, Never her soul to dull earth clings Warm human hands 'neath soaring wings.

Tender in word as kind in deed, Every act a fruitful seed:
The love of God her smiling creed.

Sorrow smiles where her footsteps fall; Ever she echoes her Master's call; "Come unto me," she says to all.

White by the Western Sea she lies ! Close those tender pitying eyes; Open they now on paradise.

Are earth's gentle ministries o'er ? Toileth our toiler never more! Hands are folded, and wings must soar!

we cry. "We need the twain-Warm human hands for human pain, And soaring wings. Come back again!"

She lives ! she lives ! and toiling sings, Warm human hands are 'neath her wings, Devising tender, liberal things.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. [May 6. LESSON VI. A. D. 40.] PETER PREACHING TO THE GENTILES.

Acts. 10. 30-44. Commit to memory vs. 42-44.

GOLDEN TEXT.

On the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Chost.—Acts 10. 45.

CENTRAL TRUTH.

God rewards all earnest seekers after more light and life.
TIME.—A.D. 40. Within a year after the last lesson.

PLACE.—Cornelius's house in Cesarea, a city on the coast of the Mediterranean, the Roman capital of Palestine, large and flourishing, built by Herod the Great, and named in honour of Augustus Cæsar.

CIRCUMSTANCES.—We are now on the eve of a new era in the Church, when its gates would be thrown open to the Gentiles without conforming to Jewish rites and ceremonium.

CORNELIUS .- An Italian of noble family, CORNELIUS.—An Italian of noble family, a centurion, i.e., captain of a hundred men. His company was called the Italian band, because the soldiers were Italians. He was a heathen who had learned something of the true God from the Jews, was a good man, prous, and generous, prayerful, and seeking more light.

HELPS OVER HARD PLACES. -30. Fasting until this hour—The ninth, or three o'clock of that day. 31. Thine alms had in rememof that day. 31. Thine alms had in remembrance—God had not forgotten these tokens of his love and desire to be good. 32. Send therefore—He must do his part in obtaining the answer. To Joppa—Thirty-five miles to the south. See last lesson. 33. Immediately I send—That afternoon. The three messenthe south. See last lesson. 53. Immeasures I sent.—That afternoon. The three messengers arrived at Joppa about noon the next day. God sent a vision to Peter to teach him what to do. (See Acts 10. 9-23). 34. Then Peter.—Who had returned from Joppa with the messengers, and was now at Cornelius's house. No respecter of persons—i.e., treats men according to their character, and treats men according to their character, and not according to race, position, circumstances.

44. The Holy Chost fell on all—As on the day of Pentecost, so that they spoke with tongues. Probably there was also the same appearance of tongues as on Pentecost. (See Acts 10. 46; 11. 16). After this they were baptized and received into the Church. (v. 47).

SUBJECTS FOR SPECIAL REPORTS.—Cesarea.—Cornelius.—The vision of Cornelius.—The vi-ion of Peter.—The new era in the Church.—God no respecter of persons.—What a good man like Cornelius received from the Gospel.—Peter's sermon.—The baptism of the Holy Ghost.

QUESTIONS.

INTRODUCTORY.—How long was it since the founding of the Church i Of what nation were most of the Christians? Why? Why was it difficult for them to receive Gentiles into the Church without becoming Jews? The dawn of what new era in the Church is described in to-day's lesson
