Mr. GUTHRIE: Or in Canada. An athracite coal strike in the United States is a most serious thing for the ordinary householder in Ontario. It may be that another strike will not occur in those coal fields next summer, or next winter, or for a year or two to come; but there is still a possibility that these strikes will occur. During the last five or ten years there have been a large number of such strikes, and in some of those years we have certainly experienced a coal shortage in Ontario. I believe the seriousness of the coal shortage was greater this year than ever before. In the city in which I live I have had more complaints this year than ever before, as to both scarcity and price, and there is a prospect of this problem getting worse rather than better. It is one of those questions which we must face in Ontario and in the Dominion of Canada.

I do not take the view of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that it is a question with which the government has little or nothing to do. He should realize that in facing a coal shortage in central Canada, we are facing something in the nature of a national calamity. The people have a right to look to the government for direction, assistance and protection in the matter of a national calamity, and they will look to the government and hold the government responsible. The question which interests us most in Ontario is: What is the government doing as regards this question? What steps is it taking, or what does it propose to do? No one on this side of the House or in any part of Canada would, I think, for a moment question the propriety of the government expending money in experimenting along lines such as those described by the minister to-night. That is well and good but it is highly speculative. It may eventually result in some relief in this country; but it is a very indefinite matter, and the relief may be long postponed. The question is: What are we going to do in the meantime?

If I understood the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) aright as he spoke to-night,—he has left the chamber, I am sorry to say—his proposal is simply that this country could take care of the province of Quebec, which has no coal, if Quebec had the use of the whole output of the mines of Nova Scotia, which output he estimates at about 8,000,000 tons. That, he says, would provide reasonably well for Quebec, and then the problem of a supply for Ontario would arise. I understand, in Ontario, we use some ten or twelve million tons, and we have no coal in our province. The minister says that we cannot bring coal from Alberta to Ontario on account of the long haul. Let me tell him that many cities in Ontario this winter have brought coal from Wales, and the people have been using Welsh coal. It is true we have had to pay a high price for it. If we can use Welsh coal, surely we can use Alberta coal. The Minister of the Interior intimated pretty clearly that, on account of the quality of Alberta coal and the long railway haul, the use of it in Ontario at the present time is hardly a practical question.

What does he propose? He says that there are coal fields in the United States within 300 or 350 miles of Ontario, and an abundant supply of bituminous coal can be derived therefrom. That is the point that rather puzzles me. I have read in American papers within the past two weeks that if another strike takes place in the anthracite fields, great distress will be caused in the United States, and the result will be that the whole output of soft coal of the United States will be used in the United States and that Canada will get neither anthracite nor bituminous coal from the United States. That is a condition which must be considered. It may not be a probability; but it is a possibility and one which the government should consider. We are faced with a real difficulty and means must be found to avert it. If the condition arises again next winter as it did this winter; if it becomes more grave next winter, as it may possibly become, the government is bound to take care of such a situation. It is bound to protect and to direct and to assist, and the time to lay its plans is now, not later on in the season, not waiting, as the minister will say, until next autumn, until the acute situation actually arises. Let plans be made now. Give the people a lead in the matter. It is all very well for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to say—

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What plans, if any, has the hon. member in mind that should be laid now?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know that I have a definite plan, and I do not know that I would be called upon to explain it if I had one, although I would be glad to do so. But a government in office for the purpose of governing and taking care of the country should immediately get busy and devise a plan. What ran through my mind was something in the nature of coal depots to be established at various points in Ontario. Whether those depots were to be supplied with Alberta coal, or Nova Scotia coal, or Welsh coal, I could not form a very reasonable conclusion. Then, if the difficulty arises, we shall at least be carried through what may or may not be another hard winter. It is the government's work to look after that, and the people of Ontario feel very much interested in this question. Letters have come, I fancy, from Ontario to every member of this House during the present session. I know I have been interviewed. I have had communications, and the question is: Is the government prepared to direct, to undertake, to help, and if so, will it lay its plans now?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am sorry to detain these estimates, but I imagine we are all speaking at quite a distance from them. I do not rise to discuss this coal question in detail or at any length, because at a future time I wish to take it up in connection with the work done by Mr. Magrath and Mr. McCourt during the past year. But I should not like the idea to go out that the United States has not been dealing fairly with Canada in the coal situation this winter or is not dealing fairly now. As a matter of fact northern New York, to put it mildly, has been as hard pressed on account of the lack of fuel as Ontario has been. I know of one instance in which Pennsylvania anthracite was sent from an Ontario town to a town in New York state to help them out. The United States has acted fairly in the matter in every respect, and I have no doubt that hon. members would endorse that statement if they were acquainted with all the facts. It is true that some gentlemen in the United States, I will not call them agitators, did attempt to stop the export of anthracite into Ontario and Quebec. But when it came to a showdown before the authorities they were brushed aside and the export was permitted, Canada receiving, I think, all she had a right to expect under the circumstances.

As to the lack of coal, we all agree that there is a sufficient supply on the American continent to keep us all warm and provide for all our necessities. But that is not the trouble When the operators and the owners fall out it makes no difference what supply Providence has deposited in the earth; we do not get it, and that is all there is to it. It does not matter whether the disagreement takes place in Pennsylvania or in Canada, the supply depends on the ability to bring it to the surface and have it transported. And the United States has just as much trouble, notwithstanding its large deposits, as we have in Ontario. Suppose all plans were laid for bringing the coal from Alberta to Ontario; if the same trouble arose in Alberta as in Pennsylvania we should not be able to get coal from that province any more than we could from Pennsylvania, because it would not be mined. I intend to speak at greater length on this subject on a future occasion when I have all the data, but at the moment I want to point out that the root of the trouble does not lie in the fact that there is not a supply of coal close at hand, although it may be in the United States; it lies in the fact that the coal is not produced at the mines. I think we burn about 4,000,000 tons of anthracite in Ontario and Quebec annually, and this year we have had only a percentage of that, so that we have been left in a straitened condition. Some cities, I believe, have suffered considerably, although some parts of the country have suffered to a greater extent than others. As a matter of fact the districts I am in touch with suffered less this year than two years ago. That, however, is only a matter of comparison. No doubt it does seem queer to people generally that while we in Canada have an immense supply of coal there should be a lack of fuel. My hon. friend spoke about depots. This proposition would be a good one, I think, if the coal to be stored were Pennsylvania anthracite. But some of the coal we have in Canada would not retain its quality when placed in these depots, and that, of course, would make a difference. Some of the coal in Canada does not stand the weather and will not retain its heating and steaming qualities when stored in large piles or exposed to the air for any length of time. And that is one of the difficulties that arise in transporting our coal any very great distance.

Mr. FORKE: A good many of the coal sheds in Manitoba are filled in the summer and the coal keeps all right until winter. I do not think it slacks to such an extent as to present any insuperable difficulty.

Mr. GRAHAM: I did not refer to any particular coal. I have been discussing the matter with Mr. Magrath a good deal, and expect to have more data. But let me emphasize again that we do not want it to go out from this House that we believe we have been humiliated in the United States or treated unfairly or anything of that kind. Those in the United States in authority over the fuel situation this year treated Canada fairly; indeed, more fairly than many of the people of New York state think she should have been treated. And this fact is due not only to their fairness but to the work done by Mr. Magrath, who has been at the head of the commission assisted by Mr. McCourt and Major Bell.

Now, as to peat. Put not your trust in peat, is my advice. We have large peat bogs in Canada and I have had more or less knowledge of the peat industry for a great many years. While it has been difficult to get moisture out of peat, it has been done, but to such a negligible degree that the quantity produced cannot be depended on to take the place of coal. As an auxiliary, shipped over a few miles, it can be successfully utilized, and it has great heating and steaming qualities. But the quantity produced up to date, under the experiments that have been made, has been comparatively small, and for years to come we shall not be able to depend on it except as an auxiliary. I am in hearty sympathy with the idea that we should work out some scheme to enable us to use our own coal, because apart from the possibility of a famine or the difficulty of getting a supply from the United States, Canadians ought to use their own coal so far as they can, simply because it is their own. That is the policy I believe in, and I think that the minister (Mr. Stewart, Argenteuil) has started a useful line of experiments. I have a good deal of faith in the final outcome of these experiments, because if we can utilize Nova Scotia coal or western coal in the form of coke or in any other form in the central sections of Canada, we have not only done something to protect ourselves, but we have accomplished something to the advantage of both East and West and of the whole Dominion. So far as it is possible to do so, my policy, I repeat, is that we in Canada should utilize our own resources.

Mr. GOULD: Is the $120,000 in this item supposed to be for the purpose of carrying on further work in connection with these experiments this summer?

Mr. ROBB: The $120,000, I understand, does not all go to that work. The work is financed by the Mines branch of the Dominion Department of Interior, as well as by the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Mr. GOULD: Last year there was a total of $250,000 voted for the experimental work at Bienfait.

Mr. ROBB: That matter comes under another department.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I might answer the question. There was $250,000 voted last year of which $125,000 is still available. Out of that we propose to devote $25,000 to the building of a carbonizer of the same type as that which has just been used in testing two loads of our coal.

Mr. GOULD: There has been a good deal said to-night in regard to the shortage of coal throughout Ontario. The part of the country from which I come is much colder than Ontario and we have had a coal shortage there this year. Since I have had the honour of representing my constituency in this House I have repeatedly requested that transfer switches be placed at pivotal points on the railway for the purpose of having coal transported to our people with regularity. It is a fact, as my worthy leader (Mr. Forke) states, that in western Canada the local coal dealers in the towns fill up their sheds with 60 to 80 tons of coal against the approaching winter, and those whose credit is good can go to the coal merchants and get a sufficient supply to fill their bins. But there are thousands of people on the prairies who cannot do that, and these are the people the least able to suffer the hardships of a coal shortage. I maintain that the government in looking after the welfare of the people by protecting them against these fuel shortages should see to it that the railways trasport this coal at lower freight rates. At our lignite mines coal costs from $1.50 to $1.80 a ton, yet when it reaches my home, not more than eighty miles away, I am obliged to pay $7 a ton. I give this by way of illustration. The big spread in price is due to a great extent to the long roundabout haul involving an extra hundred miles or so. It will be readily understood that this is a very heavy toll to take from the people who have to burn this low grade lignite coal.

I do hope that the experimental work will be brought to a success and that eventually we will have the briquetting of lignite coal placed on a commercial basis. About two weeks before I came here one hundred pounds of lignite briquettes were sent me from Bienfait by the Utilization Board. I tried them in my furnace and heater with very satisfactory results. They were a little smoky to start with, but they soon burned brightly and retained their form until reduced to ash. I see no reason why when another carbonizer is installed and the plant completed a great industry should not be developed that will provide for the fuel needs of the people of the west. I would point out to hon. members from Ontario that they still have wooded areas which can be resorted to in case of fuel shortage, but we on the bleak prairies have no substitute to take the place of our coal—when our coal fails we have to suffer all the hardships of our western winters, and we have been in this deplorable condition many times. I myself have seen a carload of thirty or forty tons of common lignite at a siding, with sixty teams waiting for a supply, being doled out in lots of 500 pounds. The people who go out on the plains to build up the country should receive every encouragement from the government, and their hardships should be reduced to a minimum. And certainly the government should take the necessary steps to ensure these settlers against any further fuel shortage.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Which government?

Mr. GOULD: All governments, whether by co-operation or by individual effort. I am not charging any government with being derelict, but it seems to me the seriousness of the fuel problem in the West has not impressed itself upon governments to the extent that we consider desirable. We have terminal elevators to store our excess grain until transportation can be provided, and while the hon. minister was speaking it occurred to me that fuel depôts throughout the western provinces and Ontario would be a means of solving this problem and would not entail a very heavy expenditure. I would like to see the lignite fields in my district developed. I have been informed that north of the present lignite area there are huge deposits of coal of exceptionally good quality, and I have had many requests from people in that territory for the government to test the extent of these deposits. I think it would be good policy for the Minister of the Interior to give this matter his consideration.

Mr. McKENZIE: This is a very familiar question to me and one on which I have been expressing opinions for the last twenty years in and out of this House. For many years I found it difficult to get anyone to appreciate the great importance of the question, because we were not then faced with the prospect of embargoes on our importation of anthracite coal from the United States; we could get it in abundance, and therefore it was difficult to impress on the people of Ontario and Quebec the desirability of our being independent in every respect, particularly in regard to our coal supply.

It is rather disappointing to me to hear the suggestions made that after helping to develop the hard coal deposits of the United States, and now having reached the stage when we may be denied any further supplies of their anthracite, we should start in to develop their soft coal and continue our dependence for our fuel upon a foreign nation. No doubt they are a very friendly people and quite willing to deal with us while we have the money to pay for the coal they send us, but the day may come when we will be thrown back on our own fuel resources, and then I am confident we shall regret the extent to which we have neglected to develop our own coal deposits.

Our transportation facilities—our railways and canals—are built with the idea of developing our trade east and west. Now, is it not the sane and proper course for us to utilize these instruments of transportation to meet the necessities of our people, particularly in the matter of fuel supply? I was very much disappointed with the figures given by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) in regard to the limited production of coal in Nova Scotia. It will be readily understood that every business man has to limit his production or output to his market. That is the situation in the Nova Scotia coal-fields. We have unlimited quantities of coal under ground, but our market is limited; we can sell only 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 tons a year, and consequently the output is limited. But if we can assure the coal owners of Nova Scotia of a bigger market it will be no trouble for them to double their output. Many of the mines now open are only working single shift. With the demand doubled it will be no trouble for those mines to work double shift and produce double their present output, and if this supply is not sufficient to meet the fuel requirements of Ontario and Quebec, more mines can be opened. So hon. members will see that Nova Scotia can produce as much coal as may be required to meet the fuel demands of Ontario and Quebec or of any other part of Canada. We have in Nova Scotia limitless quanities of coal at tidewater, capable of being transported to any part of this country. But those who have invested money in that business are looking for a proper return from what they have put into it, and it is up to the business men of Ontario and Quebec, and up to the government, so far as they can help in that direction, to arrive at some method by which this coal can be brought into the central provinces and used to meet the needs of the people in the matter of fuel.

A good deal has been said about briquetting. We have passed the experimental stage of briquetting in Nova Scotia. We have briquetted coal; it is a splendid fuel of which hundreds of thousands of tons can be produced in our province if there is a market for it. I imagine it is just as good a fuel as anthracite, particularly in open fire-places; it makes a more cheerful fire, being more like wood fire than anything you can get by using anthracite. We have also passed the experimental stage so far as coking is concerned; we have coked hundreds of thousands of tons of coal, and the product thus obtained has been used in the different cities of Ontario and Quebec with highly satisfactory results. This question is one of the most important that the House has had to discuss, and being an old coal miner myself, I am glad to have this opportunity of saying something with regard to it, particularly with regard to our coal in Nova Scotia. There is talk of having coal shipped to Montreal, and there converted into coke. What is the matter with converting it into coke at the pit mouth? If there is danger from ignition in the yarding of large quantities of coal, that danger does not exist in connection with coke. In the process of making coke the sulphur is removed and it can be piled mountains high without any difficulty on that score. We should all stand up, more or less selfishly, for the development to the fullest extent of the resources of our own country, and you will pardon me, I am sure, if I express the ambition we have that our coal should be converted into coke in the part of the country in which it is produced, thus giving our people the advantage of that further development. Coke is much lighter than coal; very much larger quantities of it can be carried by water, and the units of heat in your cargo will be much greater than if coal is carried. I suggest, therefore, that the manufactured article rather than the raw coal, be transported and yarded at different centres. Then you will have a fuel suitable for any use, whether for furnaces or for stoves, for heating or for cooking. I am sorry to appear as if I were delaying the estimates of the minister, but this is a very important subject, and I am glad to have an opportunity to express my views upon it. We cannot too soon be independent of outside countries for such a necessity of life as our fuel supply.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to endorse the sentiments expressed in the latter part of the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie). I wish also to put in a plea for Alberta in this regard, particularly my own district. Out there we have a coal that is, I think, unequalled by coal produced in any other part of the Dominion of Canada. I am told that you can light it simply by applying a match to it, and if you happen to break your looking-glass you can use the glistening surface of the coal as a mirror. It is the most beautiful coal you could see. So far as the shortage in Ontario this year is concerned I must say that I have not seen any very pronounced evidence of it; I did not shiver at all—until I heard the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) speaking. In the West we were not at all alarmed; we did not hear anything about a shortage. However, if a shortage did exist—and it may have; if you have had difficulty in getting coal, it can only be the fault of the people themselves and of this government. We have in Alberta, I say, unlimited quantities of the finest coal in the world, simply awaiting consumers. Are you aware that we are shipping thousands of tons of Drumheller and Taber coal to the United States? If you will only ask us for our coal we shall be glad to send it down to you—if you will pay the freight. The suggestion made by the hon. member for South

10 p.m.

Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) is one that might well occupy the attention of the government. Alberta coal would lend itself to storage in depots; there might be some little slacking, but it would not amount to a great deal. I believe you could get that coal landed in Toronto at around $16 a ton—from $16 to $18, at any rate—and it would compare favourably with the anthracite that is now used in this part of the country. I ask the government, therefore, to consider the possibilities of obtaining for use in central Canada our Alberta coal, particularly coal from Drumheller. If you will put it up in great storage bins and distribute it as required throughout Ontario, we will supply you with all you need.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know whether the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie) was in the chamber when in answer to queries with regard to the advisability of storing Nova Scotia or western coals, the statement was made that these coals would not compare with anthracite so far as quality was concerned; that they would not store without slacking, and that our grates and furnaces were not suited to their use. I would like to hear what my hon. friend has to say in that regard. He knows the kind of furnaces and grates we have here and the kind of climate which exists; he knows whether the coal from Nova Scotia must be used right away or whether it can be stored. I should like very much to get information as to what really can be done with Nova Scotia coal. There is just one other question I want to put to him and that is this: He tells us that Nova Scotia coal can be, and is being, successfully briquetted. I take it that even the Minister of the Interior would not say that Nova Scotia coal in briquetted form could not be used in our grates as they are now. I want to know whether Nova Scotia coal is really being briquetted and what the cost of that coal is.

Mr. McKENZIE: As far as the briquetting of Nova Scotia coal is concerned all I can say is that a Nova Scotia company—not the largest of our companies, but a company known as the Bras d'Or Coal Cmpany, and I may say that Senator Currie is the owner of that coal mine—introduced a briquetting machine and made a success of producing the article. But in those days—it was before the war—American coal came in so cheaply that the people did not care to enter upon the experiment of buying these briquettes and the American anthracite coal put the company out of business. In those days you could buy anthracite coal and land it in your cellar in North Sydney for $7 a ton. The cost to-day is two and one-half times that price. Even if the briquetted coal cannot be bought to-day the machine is there; they stopped producing briquetted coal because the people would not buy it when anthracite was so cheap and easy of purchase. But there is no difficulty in burning these briquettes. I have burned them in the grate in my house and they make a splendid fire. I have been keeping house in North Sydney for the last thirty years and the dwelling is heated by a hot water furnace. I have never burned anything but Nova Scotia coal and the house is clean and comfortably heated. I do not think there is anything peculiar about the furnace it is an ordinary furnace built by people in North Sydney who make a business of it.

With regard to Nova Scotia coal being unfit for dumping as they call it, for many years we had no trouble at all. I believe that a few smaller mines, on the north side of the harbour as well as on the south side, have been opened, where there is a certain amount of shale but there is no difficulty if that is kept out of the coal. If coal with that shale in it is dumped and left for some months there is danger that it will ignite and burn. However, the coal produced by the old standard mines is not subject to this danger at all. In the matter of heating one's house, if there is proper care and proper selection of the coal there is no difficulty whatever.

Let me say to my hon. friend that no matter how good any article is it may be spoiled and given a bad name by being improperly handled. Even a coal miner may spoil coal by allowing shale and stones to enter it, whereas he should keep these materials out. If our Nova Scotia coal is properly mined and handled there is no better bituminous coal on the continent of North America.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend did not quite catch the point. I did not want his opinion on the subject of ignition; I wanted to see what his view was as to the statement of the Minister of the Interior that the Nova Scotia coal was of such a character, compared with the lignite of the West that it would not stand; not that it would not burn but that it would slack and become dust and greatly deteriorate in value if exposed to the weather.

Mr. McKENZIE: Any bituminous coal will suffer more or less when exposed to rain and sun. Much will depend upon how long the coal is left out under the weather. If covered up in some sort of a shed this slacking process will not happen at all. If that process takes place it is due to the influence of rain, frost, hot sun and so forth which disintegrates the coal. But even if Nova Scotia coal slacks it is a good fuel. It is not as nice to handle, but you can get a fierce fire, a good heat, out of slack; it never gets to the stage where it is not heat producing.

Washed coal, for the purpose of making steel is treated in washing plants. That means that the coal is ground into what may be called very poor slack, and then it goes through a washing process. Of course you would not use washed coal for heating your house but it gives the best kind of heat in the making of steel. I have been living in the neighbourhood of coal mines all my life and I never saw any Nova Scotia coal that could not be used for heating purposes if used under anything like favourable conditions.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not want to add very much to the length of this debate, but while this particular item may be passed without exhaustive consideration the discussion which has grown out of it has really an importance that just at first, I am sorry to say, perhaps some members of the administration did not care to attach to it. We do not want to launch into schemes that are too paternal but on the other hand I do not want to see the government avoiding such measures as may be necessary in order to grapple with really unfortunate conditions which may confront our country. I think that is what a government is for. I think that in a matter of this kind, instead of expending ourselves in mere criticism, if we are given the opportunity it should be the work of each member of the House to make such suggestions as he can for the improvement of the very lamentable situation which we have had to face during the present winter, and which has had to be faced during some previous years.

I am not going to debate whether this is the worst of all the occasions. Personally I think it has been. I may be wrong about that, but I know that the winter has been more severe than any winter in which we had a fuel shortage previously. But we will not get very far by debating that at length. The real question is, what has been done up to date, and what can be done for the future? I do not think that a House that complacently sits for six or seven hours during the discussion of daylight saving, as we did last year, or of a man's spiritual or moral welfare, as we have done more recently, ought to deny at least a few hours of consideration for a man's bodily comfort. I am not half so anxious to prepare a man for the next world as I am to keep him tolerably comfortable while he is in this world, and some people not in parliament will do all that is necessary to look after his spiritual welfare. Let us here devise the means for looking after his material welfare. To keep him decently warm is one of the most important things.

How is this coal or fuel of whatever nature it may be, to be got? I will tell you what I have seen in my own province, and I presume the same thing has been going on all over Canada. It is not bad so far as it goes, not at all bad, but it has simply been the giving of warnings to the people through the press that they must not expect to get American anthracite. In my province we have been leaning very heavily on American anthracite. It has been tolerably cheap; it is a more comfortable fuel than the native product of Nova Scotia and to some extent of New Brunswick, and our people have used it very largely. They have got warnings that they cannot count on a continuance of the supply. There is not involved in that the slightest bit of reflection on our neighbours to the south. They are doing the best they can in the face of a very difficult situation, and I agree with hon. members of this House who have acknowledged that the United States has dealt fairly with us. But they may continue to deal fairly and still be unable to deal with us even as well as they dealt this winter. When that day comes, will it be enough to use the printing presses to warn the people of this country, to send out circulars to tell them that in all probability American anthracite cannot be got, and that Welsh coal, Scotch coal, stovoids and several other substitutes may be used which will do pretty nearly as well as anthracite, or literature such as I have seen saying that you can make soft coal do very well by burning buckwheat with it? That does not mean the buckwheat that the farmer grows, but a particular size of coal they use down there.

It is easy to say that you can use these things, but what are you going to do to get them? Can you rely on the coal trade? They cannot manage everything. Their importations of anthracite are shut off, and a man who has been dealing in anthracite all his life is perhaps scarcely in a position to make arrangements with mines. He can buy his product so far as it goes, but would it not be better to have a governmental agency spending perhaps a little less time and a little less money on finding out how to make analine dyes just for the present, useful as they may be, and put that energy into co-ordinating the fuel business of the country, just as you would co-ordinate any other enterprise of the country during war time. For this is a war against one of the worst elements with which man has to contend, a war with cold, and he must have his weapons ready.

Is it asking too much of a government that it should function in a matter of this kind, that it should provide leadership, that instead of merely giving out pamphlets, it should have an organization which would be in touch with the men in the coal business, and that means be taken at least to take a rough census of the necessities of the country? For instance, you go into a city like Ottawa. A very brief census will reveal what I will call the institutions whose heating arrangements are capable of being easily made over so as to use fuel oil, other heating arrangements, that can take some of these made-up forms like briquettes, and others which must have anthracite. Then you ration. But it is not enough to ration until you know you have the substance to deal out. Then co-ordinate with the mines and with the railways and see that the necessary material for that particular community is brought in. Leave it in private hands just so far as you possibly can. Do not interfere with the ordinary business of the country more than you can possibly help; but help the ordinary business of the country, help it to stay on its feet and do the work it has to do. Put the force of the government back of it to the extent at least of obtaining information and give them enough power to see that the coal dealer acts justly. It might be necessary to go further, and it being the case of an emergency I would not revolt against even some paternalism on the part of the government. I would even rather have a little grandmotherism than have no action taken at all. What we want to have is the happy mean. I would therefore suggest that some attention might be paid, and perhaps it is being paid now, to the development of oil shales in New Brunswick. I believe a good supply of oil could be obtained there. It would be worth while to help in some way that industry to be developed rapidly, so that oil fuel would be available wherever oil fuel can be used, and it can be used in a great many cases. It is quite a simple matter, I understand, to adapt furnaces of a certain character to the use of oil. But somebody must do those things.

[Mr. Baxter.]

This is as vital to us as any subject I can possibly think of. It is of immensely more importance than nine-tenths of the subjects we discuss in this House, yet to-night it was rather intimated to us that it would be better to let this stand over till some other time, and that anyway, there was nothing the government could do about it. I do not agree with that. I am not taking this position at all from any standpoint of partisanship. I believe the government can do a very great deal about it. I do not believe it is the office of government as one government said of itself, that it was merely a fly upon the wheel and could not control the motion. It did not control the motion, it was a fly upon the wheel, and as soon as the people got an opportunity they replaced it with a government that did something. I am not issuing an invitation to my hon. friends to take measures to remain in power, but I am quite willing, even if it helps them to stay in power, to give assistance by voice or vote in this House in order that they may get courage enough to grapple with this situation and keep helpless people from being frozen to death, for that is what the thing comes down to.

Now I want to say a word about the remarks of the Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie). New Brunswick coal is good. That coal stands out. I have seen it standing out all winter at the Canadian Pacific coal dumps in West St. John, and it does not slack too much to be used in the engines. There is no danger there. It can be burnt in practically any furnace. Some slight changes are sometimes necessary, and even if sometimes your grates are burnt out by the use of it, what is the cost of a few grate bars compared with the ruin of the health of a family and the ruin of the building itself through want of heat during our rigorous winters?

That is what we come down to; that is the thing to be faced. I am just going to ask the department to enter upon this thing with a whole heart and a willing mind, and to put into being an organisation that will go a good deal further than the organisation has gone this winter; that will reach higher up, that will bring producers and distributors together, that will make a census of the requirements of Canada, and that will make our supplies go just as far as they possibly can. The department may go even further than that. If there is to be a long railway haul in some instances, let them put the new board of railway experts to work. This will be just one more problem for them. I would suggest that they might even lay off for a time the special trains that will be necessary down in my province to conduct the second deportation of Acadians from the Maritime provinces, and they might use those trains to better advantage in hauling coal to warm the Canadians of the upper provinces.

Mr. MILLAR: I think if we are going to run true to form to-night, we shall have to switch back to standardisation. We carried on the discussion for a while on standardisation; then we went over to coal; then we went back to standardisation, and then over to coal again. I am inclined to think, if we were able to burn within the next ten years all the coal we have been handling since eight o'clock, we would have very warm winters in Canada.

I should like to make a few remarks in reply to the minister before this item passes. The minister referred to a meeting which had been held, to which I understood him to say the agriculturists had been invited, to discuss this question of standardisation. I do not know that my information is correct; but I got the impression from some conversations I had at different times that the way those meetings worked out was this. Manufacturers of farm machinery, not wishing to do certain things, would say that they could not be done, and the agriculturists present, not being practical machinists or engineers, could get no further. Perhaps a different policy on the part of the government, if they wish to progress along this line, would be to have practical men deal with practical men; that is men who are machinists, who know all about the business of making machines, to deal with those who are now engaged in the business of manufacturing machines. The minister took objection to coercive legislation. He doubted whether it would be wise to force those machine companies to take that course. In case an investigation were to prove that the machine companies of Canada, as has been alleged by many, are, for the purpose of making greater gains, multiplying parts unnecessarily, and refusing to standardise those parts when they could very readily be standardised; if that be the case in order that they may sell more machines and reap greater profits, I should like to ask the minister what the remedy is, if it is not coercive measures on the part of the government. It is quite obvious that purchasers of machines could not possibly bring about any remedy by co-operative means or any other, so far as I can see. This would be no departure from what is being done. We have plenty of precedents for coercive measures. I remember some legislation that was passed a short time ago in Saskatchewan in regard to selling machines, and now we find that a company that sells an engine and guarantees that that engine will develop a certain power, is compelled to live up to its guarantee. Moreover, when they sell machinery, they must use a certain form of contract specified by the legislature. They are also compelled to charge the same rate of interest after maturity as well as before. So in many ways, we have measures that are coercive. Therefore, if it is proved that machine companies are causing a great deal of loss and inconvenience to those who till the soil, and that this is reflected in other lines of business, causing a loss to Canada as a whole, coercive measures will be quite justified.

Since the hour is late, let me close with just one more remark that I was going to make in regard to another matter, perhaps, not quite relevant to the discussion, but a matter of great importance. I refer to the enormous cost of parts. I have heard it said by those who have done some figuring, that a binder that can be bought for about $329 or $330, which, I think, was the price a year or two ago, would, if purchased in parts, cost about $1,500. While I would not say that those figures are exactly correct, I believe they are not far from correct. Those are matters in which tillers of the soil are perfectly helpless. It seems to us that we are in the stranglehold of those who sell us the machinery and provide the parts. It was necessary for the government of Saskatchewan to pass legislation compelling those machine companies to keep the parts, because they practised in the past selling a machine and then within a year or two saying: "We have no parts for that machine; we are not making it any more," and a man with a practically new machine, a machine very little used, was compelled to throw it aside. In order to protect the buyer the government of Saskatchewan was compelled to pass such legislation. This would be going just a little further, and I think it would be quite justifiable. If I thought there was any danger of our switching back to coal, I would talk until eleven o'clock; but as the hour is late, I think we are about ready to pass this item and I will say no more.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have a good deal of sympathy with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar). I have been interested for many years in this matter of standardization of parts, and I think it is really time that something should be done. Perhaps the hon. member is not aware that last year the Committee on Agriculture appointed a special committee to go into that matter. They picked up the threads that had been dropped at some previous session when a special committee had been appointed for that purpose, and they got to the point where they came to a "gentlemen's agreement" with some of the manufacturers. As far as I understand the matter, this was not very much, but just a start that was made. I think three of the companies in Canada agreed to take a certain standard for some bolts and, I believe, knife heads of mowers and certain things like that, and at any time changes were made in the future, they would hold to that standard. That is, perhaps, all right in a way; but the question arises as to other makes coming into the country. The minister mentioned that matter himself. I would suggest that if it were necessary to take any coercive measures, I would take measures which applied not to the manufacture but to the sale. In this way, the measures would apply to implements coming in from the United States as well. The John Deere Plow Company makes a special class of machine for western Canada, a particular kind of plough that, I believe, is not sold in other parts of the country at all. Yet to suit conditions in western Canada, they make a particular class of machine, and any other company will do the same thing. I think the matter is being seriously considered in several states to the south; in fact, I believe in at least four states, there is a law at the present time as regards standardization of sleighs and cutters. The companies are compelled to manufacture and sell only the standard wagon size, I understand, for the convenience of automobiles travelling in the winter time.

One of the secrets of Henry Ford's success is the system of standardization he employs. You will go into one of the Massey-Harris agencies in a small town for some mower sections. They have none in stock and you step across the street to a Deering or a McCormick or a Frost and Wood. You find that they all have these parts, but there is a difference of 1/16 or 1/32nd of an inch, just enough to prevent them from working. It seems absurd that such a condition should exist. One particular company makes a practice of changing some of its parts every three or four years and I have been told that this is done with the intention of frustrating the specialty companies who make a business of manufacturing these parts. The only way to get ahead of the specialty companies is to adopt the Ford method, that is, of underselling them. This is a matter that might be referred to the agricultural committee for consideration.

Now, I want to deal for a moment with the coal situation which is after all the important question. In the district from which I come we are not particularly concerned with the shortage of fuel. If it is a cold day and there is a lack of fuel all you have to do is to take an axe and go into the bush and bring back some wood with you. There is no trouble in that regard. But I realize the importance of this subject from the national standpoint, and it seems to me that the solution of the whole problem is a matter of transportation. They have an abundance of coal in Nova Scotia, according to the Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie) as well as in Alberta, and I see no reason whatsoever why it cannot be profitably transported to Ontario and Quebec. I think a good deal of the difficulty could be overcome by making seasonal rates on the railroads. Any practical railway man knows, in fact, one need not be a practical railway man to know, that an engine can haul about twice as much in the summer as in the winter. The time spent on the road and about terminals is a great deal less in summer than in winter and it can safely be said that you can operate the railways on 35 cents in the dollar during the summer as compared with the winter. One of the problems on the prairies is that as soon as the wheat starts to move the coal begins moving also, and unfortunately in the same direction. When the channels are all clogged with wheat that is the time people find they need coal; and there is no reason why coal cannot be transported in the summer. Mr. Hanna giving evidence before the special rates committee last summer, stated that if the railways had steady business all the year round they could operate with 5,000 box cars less. Now, 5,000 box cars, according to my calculations are worth $25,000,000, and I assume that with engines and other equipment it is necessary for the Canadian National Railways to maintain about $50,000,000 extra equipment. Taking the overhead charges, depreciation in value, interest, etc., I believe I am not far wrong when I say that it will run to $10,000,000 more loss yearly. If that or part of it could be saved by keeping the railways busy all the year round you would accomplish one of the biggest things in the country; you would solve one of the greatest problems that face us to-day. It would also help to a large extent to solve the wage question.

Some hon. gentlemen mentioned conditions with regard to miners. I am more familiar with railway matters than with mining, but I may say that the wage question is also one of the serious problems in connection with the railways. We see a good deal in the newspapers about the enormous wages drawn by train and engine men and others employed by the railways. As a matter of fact, however, some of these men very often do not get enough to break even on. They will make a good wage in the fall and winter and most of the summer they are laid off. I know that last summer some men who had been fourteen years in the service of Canadian National Railways were laid off. That is a serious situation and these men must necessarily ask for high wages if they are to make a living. If you can keep the wheels of transportation moving in the summer—and that I contend can be done by fixing a sliding scale of rates, to go into effect on the 1st of May and be operative until the 1st of August when the grain starts to move—it will give the people in this part of the country an opportunity to secure coal either from Nova Scotia or Alberta, and in many cases some grain could also be carried at lower rates. This would simplify the whole proposition, and I contend that the suggestion ought to be taken into consideration. The transportation of, say, 7,000,000 tons of coal from Alberta would call for about 5,000 trains, and I think the railways are capable of handling it. I would assume from the figures quoted by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) that Nova Scotia can supply 8,000,000 tons, which would leave 7,000,000 tons to come from Alberta. In the year 1922, we purchased from the United States 15,000,000 tons of coal, for which we paid, I think, between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 or $125,000,000. It seems to me that there is no reason whatever why we cannot save that money and increase the earnings of the Canadian National Railways.

I think that we have overlooked another important source of supply, however. We have looked to the East and to the West, but we have not looked to the North. I think most hon. gentlemen here are aware of the fact that in the islands along the northern part of Hudson bay there are immense coal deposits, and I am one of those who predict that as soon as the railway reaches James bay it will be found that that coal can be easily brought into Ontario. Looking over a report the other day of Captain Bernier I saw the statement that he had mined coal on Melville island and found it as good as Sydney coal. And there was an abundance of it too. Mr. Stefansson mentions the same thing. I see no reason therefore why we should be dependent on the United States or any other country for coal. They evidently do not want to give it to us, and so far as I can see we could be independent of them if we adpoted the proposal I make of establishing seasonal rates.

Mr. NEILL: Some hours ago in the debate, the Minister of the Interior (Mr Stewart) made the remark that having regard to the ever-threatening danger of the United States putting an embargo on coal coming into Canada, it behooved the government, or it was the intention of the government, to seek to develop and enlarge the fuel resources of Canada. He might also have added, to preserve the existing coal resources. I heartily agree with him in that position, and I have been pleased to-night to hear hon. members from Ontario describe the hardships to which they have been subjected through lack of coal in the East, because perhaps they will now pay some attention to the coal situation in British Columbia, which I brought to their attention last year. My plea at that time fell on deaf ears; but when it is a case of "coming home to the hangman" perhaps they will take more interest in the subject.

I want to mention briefly what the situation is, which is more acute than it was last year, in connection with the mines in Vancouver island and in British Columbia generally. In spite of all this coal scarcity in Canada they are going out of business from want of orders —not from any want of market—due to the encroachment of fuel oil imported from the United States with a very small duty. But for fuel oil there would be enough demand to keep the mines working 75 per cent more than they are working at the present time. But the mines in some cases are working only two days a week, while in other cases they are shut down, on account of the competition of imported fuel oil. The miners in these mines, with all the dangers which they have to face—50 having been killed the other day —are paid a very modest wage. So that the trouble is not due to excessive labour cost. The mines are run in a thoroughly modern and efficient manner. In one case there is not a steam boiler in the whole mine; it is all run by electricity generated by water-power. But the trouble is that the coal mines cannot compete with the cheap fuel oil which is sloughed off on the market from the American producers of gasoline.

Now, what happens to any industry when it gets down to habitually working only two or three days a week? As you can imagine, large capital is tied up, and it means that those interested will quit. That is what ultimately must happen; they will go out of business.

And what happened a few years ago? These are deep mines, and if not worked they soon flood. A deep mine when flooded is about as costly to re-open as to develop a new mine. So when these deep, costly, highly equipped mines go out of business they go out of business for all time, once they become flooded. What happened two years ago may happen two years hence. Two years ago, owing to some economic disturbance in the States—no threat of war or anything of the kind—the sellers of fuel oil notified British Columbia consumers that in three months time there would be no more oil exported into British Columbia. What did the railroad and manufacturing people do? They hurriedly converted back their plants to coal burners, and very glad they were to find the coal mines of Vancouver Island waiting patiently and ready and eager to fill their wants. But in a very short time industrial conditions in the States changed and fuel oil was once more available. Immediately the consumers, selfish, as most business interests are, converted back their plants to the somewhat cheaper and more convenient method of using oil.

Let me predict what will happen two years hence after the coal mines have been shut down. Owing again to some economic disturbance, or to a threat of war or to any other reason whatever—no reason was given last time, none may be given in the future—supposing the United States again put an embargo on fuel oil? A few years ago we would have laughed at an embargo on anthracite coal, would we not? But to-day it is in sight. They may put an embargo on fuel oil, but by then our mines, owing to our selfish neglect, will have gone out of business. Where will our railways, our ships, and manufacturing industries get their supply of fuel then? There will not be any. What will be the position? Suppose war threatens with some nation bordering on the Pacific, what will we do when our oil supply is cut off and we have no coal to resort to?

Last year I pleaded with the House to put a duty of two cents a gallon on fuel oil in order at that time to preserve our coal industry. I thought it worth while not to let one of our Canadian industries go out of business. This year I no longer plead, I threaten and warn this House and the government that in two years or less our railroads, our ships and industries may be desiring coal and will not be able to get it. It will not then be the loss of the industry, it will be the fact that we will be throttled as a nation, for we will not have any fuel supply in British Columbia, and that is of far greater national importance than even the destruction of this single industry. Therefore, I suggest and urge upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that he consider once again the national importance of imposing such a duty on fuel oil as will enable these coal mines to be kept in operation at least to meet our future wants. Otherwise when the day of travail comes upon us and finds us with no fuel, we as a nation will bitterly regret the selfish indifference we have displayed towards the situation out there.

Mr. MILNE: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): Does the committee realize that considerable latitude of discussion has been allowed by the Deputy Chairman? I do not want to shut off the hon. member, but I would remind him that the item now under discussion is No. 367.

Mr. MILNE: My intention was to revert for a few moments to the standardization of fuel oil. I believe I am in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): Yes.

Mr. MILNE: A matter of great importance to the whole Dominion is the standardization of gasoline and fuel oil. It affects not only those who drive motor cars, but those who operate machinery. In making an analysis of a large number of samples of gasoline and kerosene we find that the specific gravity, distillation and other specifications vary to quite a large extent. We find in many cases that when the weather gets cold retailers fill their tanks with a low grade gasoline and sell it at the same price as they charge for the high grade. I think that consumers should be protected from this fraud by making the oil companies declare the specifications of their commodities. I am told that it is very difficult to standardize these products so as to ensure the importation of, say, gasoline of a certain grade on account of conditions obtaining at the oil wells and distilleries; but it seems to me it would be a very simple matter to compel the companies to guarantee their products to be up to a certain standard; that is, if I buy gasoline I should be able to see at the plant or filling station the actual specifications and so know exactly what quality I am being supplied with. I make that suggestion to the government in order to guard our consumers against the gross fraud now being practised on them.

There is room, too, for research work in connection with lubricating oils. I am convinced that more engines are destroyed from the use of poor lubricating oil than from any other cause. While we have specifications for lubricating oil as to its flash test, viscosity, and so on, yet there is something in a lubricating oil, a greasy quality, that we have not yet been able to define exactly. Therefore I think the research branch might well direct their attention to the subject. If they could frame a standard specification for lubricating oils a great deal of fraud would be prevented, for we would then know what we were buying. In addition to the regular oil companies handling heavy oils jobbers are springing up here and there and putting on the market oils of very inferior lubricating qualities. We also find that the dealers in many cases carry three different grades of lubricating oil, and if they get out of one grade before your can is filled they will take the rest from some of the cheaper grades, but charge you the higher price just the same. I should like the government to take this matter into consideration and see whether there is not some way of protecting the consumer from these frauds —for I claim they are nothing less than frauds. I would like to see the government find out something more about lubricating oils—what the quality of the oil is that makes it a lubricant, and so on—so that the consumers may be protected from every point of view.

Mr. ROBB: This matter has already been under review by the officers of the department, but I will again direct the observations of my hon. friend to the attention of the Research Council with a view to seeing whether we can arrive at a basis for establishing a standard for Canada.

Mr. WHITE: The discussion seems to have gone very far afield; in fact, I have had some difficulty in finding out what item we are considering. There was one matter in connection with the discussion on fuel that impressed me as requiring a little more notice. The hon. minister stated that the steel was within 80 miles of the anthracite coal mines in Alberta. If that coal is really anthracite and compares favourably with Pennsylvania coal, it strikes me that 80 miles is a very short distance to bridge in order that the supply may be made available for Ontario. The hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Copp), according to Hansard of February 21, reports that about 2,700,000 tons of anthracite coal were imported into Canada last year; and that was only about 60 per cent of our normal supply. That would, figuring it roughly, amount to a weight of about 100,000,000 bushels of wheat at 60 pounds to the bushel. If all our western railroads had for every 80 miles of track a business of 100,000,000 bushels of wheat, they would be in a much better financial condition than they are today. The government, therefore, might very well take into consideration the matter of linking up the rail connections so as to provide us with adequate supplies of our own Canadian coal. The question of freight rates might be submitted to the Railway Commission with a view to securing special rates at certain favourable times of the year so that solid through trains of coal might be taken from the coal fields to, say Fort William, at a much reduced cost for transportation.

Coming back to the item under discussion. I have had the honour to be appointed a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture, dealing with the standardization of parts. There was very little done last year; in fact we met once and had a little discussion, and that was the end of it. The work already done has been a start, but a very small one. Certain agricultural implement makers have agreed to adopt certain standards of bolts, and so on, but they are the standard bolts already made, so that there is very little advance in that respect. The question of standardization involves many considerations. The matter of patent rights is involved; the matter of standardization of machines and parts which come from the United States is involved. In order to make some progress in the matter I wrote to the United States Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, in August last, and was informed by him that the American manufacturers of farm implements had taken up this matter of standardization. I will quote a section of his letter:

> National standardization as a part of the programme of this department is still in the initial stage of its development however, the farm implement manufacturers having recently appointed a committee to carry forward in surveying present conditions and in recommending simplifications.
> I fully agree with you that standardizations of Canada and the United States should be in agreement, particularly in such important fields as farming equipment, and I am asking our Division of Simplified Practice to keep you fully informed as this work progresses. Meanwhile, the most accurate statement of present standards can be obtained from Mr. H. J. Sameit, Secretary of the National Association of Farm Equipment Manufacturers, and we are asking him to give you a statement of these practices.

I have several letters on this subject; I quote from one dated December 23rd last:

> Our plow and tillage implement department has formulated its recommendations, and when approved by 75 per cent of the membership who manufacture this line, such recommendations will be ready for adoption, after being formally approved by our General Standardization Committee and the General Executive Committee.
> We will be pleased to provide you with the recommendations of each department as soon as they have been formally approved by the General Standardization Committee and our General Executive Committee. If you desire to have the information piecemeal, we will forward it.

I understand that this movement in Canada was started by the farmers, but in the United States it was started by the implement men, the object being to reduce the number of implements that were manufactured for certain purposes, in order that fewer lines of machinery would have to be carried, with resulting decrease in the cost of production. I am not just sure that standardization can be carried very far. It can be effected in many respects, but it can be carried so far that it will lead practically to the stifling of inventive genius. It strikes me, therefore, that a government standard machine is a thing which is a long way in the future.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): I understand we were discussing also the following item, 368.

Items agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—maintenance of terminal elevators, and necessary equipment, $10,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the reason for the change there?

Mr. ROBB: There is a decrease of $85,000, an amount which was last year required to provide some improvements at Vancouver. This year there is an item of $10,000 for the Moose Jaw elevators.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The reduction means that certain work in construction which was done last year will not have to be done this year.

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—weaights and measures inspection, $310,000.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand there is a charge made for the inspection of public scales. Does this charge meet the cost of the work?

Mr. ROBB: For many years this department showed a loss; this year, for the first time since its organization, there will be a small surplus.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): I wish to get some information from the minister bearing upon the answer to a question put in the House regarding the Peterborough district. It would appear that this district is practically self-supporting—in fact, more so—but it is possible that the figures do not cover the whole cost. When the question was put as to what percentage of the moneys collected by the inspector was received by the government the answer was given 100 per cent. The sum of $892 was collected and I would ask what was paid out in cartage.

[Mr. White.]

Mr. ROBB: Is that in Peterborough or in the Belleville district?

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): The question placed on the order paper had reference to the inspector of weights and measures for the Peterborough district, but I believe this is the same district as the Belleville district.

Mr. ROBB: It is the Belleville district. I have not at the moment the details my hon. friend wants but I will be glad to get that information for him.

Mr. MILNE: When a gasoline pump is tested by the inspector and the pump is shown to be short, or does not give a gallon, is there a prosecution for short measure? In the gathering of something over thirty samples of gasoline in the province of Manitoba—a gallon being collected at each station—I think there were only two stations in the entire list where there was a clear gallon; the remainder were all short.

Mr. ROBB: The government's responsibility is inspecting the accuracy of the machine; we are not responsible for the operation of the machine. If there is a shortage I submit the question of prosecution is a provincial one.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): Is there a standard cartage charge? As I understand, the inspector goes into a town or village and inspects the scales in rotation, and that it is the practice to charge $2.50 for cartage in each case. The complaint has been made that sometimes this charge is excessive; that there is no reason to make a charge of $2.50 for cartage when the inspector simply goes from one door to the next.

Mr. ROBB: The cartage charge would vary somewhat in proportion to the size of the weights that the inspector had to carry about. It might also vary in different localities. My hon. friend will understand that there might be places where the charge for cartage would be less than in other communities. Of course this matter is governed by regulations and my hon. friend will understand that we do not carry those regulations around in the record. However I will get my hon. friend the information he desires.

Mr. CALDWELL: With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Milne) I have had very grave doubt in my own mind for some time as to the advisability of the department allowing the use of these pumps to measure gasoline or oil. For instance, the inspector may inspect them and they may be perfectly all right, but there is a possibility that the valve of that pump may vary the least bit. Gasoline is something that escapes very readily if the valves of the pump are not just as they should be. Then there is a want of suction and you will not get the amount of gasoline you should get. I found on one occasion that the man had put twelve gallons into the ten gallon tank of my car. I told him that I did not mind paying for the gasoline, but I did not want a ten gallon tank stretched by putting twelve gallons into it. How often this thing happens we do not know, and it is worthy of the minister's consideration as to whether the use of these pumps should be continued. They are very convenient, I admit, and one of the things put forward in their favour by salesmen themselves is the fact that they will save their price on the machine in a very short time.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend knows—he is more familiar with the facts than I am—that there are many varieties of this pump on the market. In some cases the department has refused to recognize them. I am not sure, however, whether we should accept the advice of my hon. friend and not inspect them. Perhaps they require inspection oftener. I can quite see that there is a chance for some fraud to be practised.

Mr. CALDWELL: How often are they supposed to be inspected?

Mr. ROBB: Once a year, but if there is a complaint they are inspected oftener.

Mr. SPENCER: If fault is found, is the license refused until the matter is put right?

Mr. ROBB: They are not allowed to weigh on a scale unless it has been put right.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the same rule apply to a pump for oil after it is inspected?

Mr. ROBB: I think so.

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not think that once a year is often enough to make an inspection. There is another thing. How many drivers of automobiles, for instance, are in a position to know just how much gasoline has been put into their tank? You seldom have your tank empty. Very few people are in a position to gauge accurately what was in their tank when they began to fill it and what it contained when they were done. I know on the occasion I spoke of I said to the fellow: "There must be something wrong with your pump." He took a gallon measure and pumped it out and it was about two-thirds full. Apparently he was astonished himself and said "I will not use that any more."

Mr. ROBB: I will bring this matter to the attention of the department and see if we cannot adopt a more satisfactory method.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): Is any certificate issued to the owner and operator of a pump after it is inspected?

Mr. ROBB: The inspector places a stamp on the machine and it is sealed.

Item agreed to.

Printing of parliamentary and departmental publications, including cost of translation of the Canada Year Book, $150,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Could we not get back to the old figure in connection with this item?

Mr. ROBB: I am afraid we cannot do that in view of the number of census publications that are being issued.

Item agreed to.

Canadian Exhibition in France, $50,000.

Mr. STEVENS: I wonder if the minister would allow that item to stand in connection with the other.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

VIMY RIDGE MONUMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the leave of the House I desire to move:

LABOUR STRIKES IN 1922

Hon. Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York) moved:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, letters, documents and other writings relating to the strikes of workers in shipping, railway and other crafts in 1922 and also for copy of the opinion of the Department of Justice given in relation to the conduct of either employers or employees affected by such strikes.

He said: This is the matter that was discussed between the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) and myself the last time the motion was called. Owing to the fact that he told me that this would be a very long job, and as I did not want to give any unnecessary work, I suggested—and no doubt the minister has had an opportunity of reading over my statement in Hansard—that the matter should be contracted. Unrevised Hansard reads, at page 514:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, letters, documents and other writings relating to the strikes—

That means, not only strikes, but contemplated strikes where the department has been called upon to take action.

—of workers in shipping, railway and other crafts in 1922 and also for copy of the opinion of the Department of Justice given in relation to the conduct of either employers or employees affected by such strikes.

All communications of whatsoever sort exchanged between the departments of government or any member of any department of government with any persons or companies respecting the Sydney coal strike of last winter. All communications made to or received by any department of the government and by the railways in connection with the shop trades' controversy of last summer, and concerning the Alberta coal strike in the fall of 1922.

It was also asked at the time that the correspondence between the Department of Labour and Mr. John L. Lewis should be brought down. That has since been supplied on another return, so that that part of the original motion may be struck out.

Hon. JAMES MURDOCK (Minister of Labour): I think the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) has two motions confused. In the one under discussion there is no reference to any correspondence with Mr. Lewis, but there was in another one, the return for which has been prepared for my hon. friend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I enlarged it; I did not know that that had been covered.

Mr. MURDOCK: I have written a couple of letters to my hon. friend asking just what is desired. I intimated that there were no strikes in the shipping or railways of the country. He then struck out the words, "and other crafts," and this made the order immaterial; there was nothing then to give to my hon. friend. If he would place on the order paper what is desired, we would be only too glad to endeavour to secure it for him.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was placed before my hon. friend on February 21, at page 514 of Hansard. My hon. friend is quite right; I dropped all reference to the question of correspondence between Mr. Lewis and the department.

Mr. MURDOCK: I am still in doubt, and I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that you would rule that something concrete should be placed before the Labour department, so that we would know what the hon. gentleman desires, and we would then be only too glad and anxious to get it for him.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is on Hansard. It is immaterial to me whether I re-draft the motion and submit it to you, Sir, or my hon. friend, or whether the motion goes through on the understanding of what I read from Hansard of February 21, at page 514.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I point out that as the motion asks for correspondence relating to certain matters "and other crafts," that request would include practically all the correspondence in the Department of Labour on the subject of strikes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, but we got past that point. The Prime Minister was not listening to what I said. I pointed out that, as appears in Hansard of February 21, I had so changed the wording of the motion as materially to cut it down. If the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) has any difficulty in gathering the purport of that amended motion I will re-draft it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would advise the hon. member to re-draft his motion. The motion is dropped.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, I think it had better stand.

Motion stands.

MATT C. BECKETT

Hon. Mr. STEVENS (for Mr. Duncan) moved:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, and writings of any kind, relating to the appointment of, and discontinuance from office of, Matt C. Beckett, of Owen Sound, Ont.

Mr. BUREAU: A question to the same effect appeared on the order paper some time ago and was answered. Three letters which were exchanged were produced.

Mr. STEVENS: I was under the impression that this resolution was passed before, but it is still on the order paper.

[Mr. Murdock.]

Mr. BUREAU: I thought I brought down the answer.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

On the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is in the public interest that the present Royal Canadian Mounted Police force be disbanded and that there be organized (a) a federal police force for the protection of government buildings and other federal property, (b) a Northwest Mounted Police force whose activities would be confined to unorganized territories.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have just had a communication from the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) intimating his inability to be present to-day and asking to have this motion stand. If I may have an assurance from the Prime Minister that we shall have an opportunity to discuss it on another occasion I shall be glad to comply with the minister's request.

Motion stands.

FOREST PROTECTION

Mr. PIUS MICHAUD (Restigouche and Madawaska) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable for the purpose of the preservation of our great forest wealth that the government of Canada should co-operate with the governments of the several provinces.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have taken a special interest in the Canadian Forestry Association for many years, and have also read carefully all forestry reports published by that asociation and by the Forestry branch of the Department of Interior. I beg to congratulate and to thank the personnel of these two bodies for their splendid work. They have taken great pains to secure information on this important subject and I am more than thankful to them for the facts which I have been enabled to obtain in connection therewith. We are told that a country without a forest is like a man without a heart. We have forests in this country, the estimated value of which is over two billion dollars, an amount sufficient to pay our present national debt. In 1922, there were over 4,000 forest fires in Canada, and Mr. Robson Black, secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association, has stated that these fires destroyed more lumber than all our forest industries or our own lumbermen could consume in many years of operation. Further, he states that the timber limits destroyed last year would cover a space between Halifax and Winnipeg a mile in width. I have here a report published in one of the Ottawa newspapers of a meeting held recently in this city. At this meeting Mr. W. H. Shapley, who presided, made some remarks in connection with our forest industries. He is reported thus:

> Time and money was spent to prevent disease and loss in agriculture, laws were enacted to prevent workingmen being injured, and capable men were doing research work in many departments, but little or no attention was paid to means of preventing fire loss.
> Mr. Shapley stated that the annual fire loss in the Dominion was a disgrace to its citizens. Complaints were being made of the burden of taxation, yet few were disturbed over an annual fire loss of 45 millions and many valuable lives.
> Responsibility for conditions as they were could not be placed upon the fire fighting organizations maintained in this country. The fundamental error was that too great stress was placed on the extinguishing of fires and too little emphasis placed on the necessity of safeguarding the hazards from which fire originate.

There is not a province in the Dominion which has not its timber limits and I know that the government of each province desires the heartiest co-operation in order to preserve its natural wealth. I was very much interested in an article published recently on this subject, in its bearing on the province of New Brunswick. I would quote the following:

> The annual agricultural and forest crops of New Brunswick comprise about 85 per cent of the total value of all products produced. The forests cover about 70 per cent of the total area of the province, and the total value of the forest products produced averages about $35,000,000. Agricultural products in 1922 were valued at $42,965,000. These two great industries, lumbering and farming, combine to keep New Brunswick stable. . . . . There are thirty-four acres of forest land for every man, woman and child in the province, while cultivated farming land under field crops aggregates two and one-half acres per capita.
> The rural population is much greater than the total in towns and cities. Farming communities in fertile valleys and on rich uplands are surrounded by forests. During the long winter months when the prairie farmer the potato planter and the fruit grower are more or less idle, the New Brunswick farmer is busily engaged cutting logs either in the timber limits of the lumber companies or on his own wood-lot getting out logs, lathwood, pulpwood or cordwood. Did you ever meet a man from rural New Brunswick who did not know how to use an axe? It is estimated that 10,00 men are employed in the lumber woods this winter. More than $2,000,000 will be paid out in wages and board before the annual cut of fifteen million logs will be safely skidded on the bank of the streams. The forest payroll of the long winter months keeps the farm on a stable footing in that period between harvesting and sowing. If the reader doubts this statement, let him ask any of the merchants in the rural districts about conditions during the 1921-22 season when the depression in the lumber industry was at the lowest level, and there was little or no work in the woods. The same condition would arise and exist for a century if these same forest trees were burned.

The flames that destroyed many homes, wrecked business and caused the death of many men were contributed to to a greater or less extent by the carelessness of lumber men, campers and others who frequent our forests. In this connection allow me to repeat the words of a United States forestry commissioner. In a report recently submitted to Congress—which, by the way, was read at a meeting of our Forestry Association held in Ottawa—concerning the damage to American forests, it is declared:

> When the forests fail the lumber business, one of the greatest industries of the country will disappear. Suffering among all building trades will follow; mining will become vastly more expensive. The price of coal, iron and other minerals will rise. When this occurs the railways will be directly affected and the cost of transportation will increase. In brief, when forests commence to fail every man, woman, and child in the United States will feel the pinch. Through past misuse forests are undoubtedly failing.

There is a lesson for Canada here. Experts have readily admitted that Canadian forests constitute one of the world's greatest reserves of timber. That they should be ruthlessly wasted by fire and other agencies is tragic and unnecessary.

While it is true that the government has done much to protect the forests, there is very much that yet remains to be done. The population of the consuming area tributary to our forests has increased fivefold during the past half century, but its wood consumption has increased tenfold or more. The natural resources of Canada are the envy of the world. To squander these resources is nothing less than criminal.

On reliable information it seems that about 150,000,000 cords of wood, or fifty years' supply, were destroyed by insects in the last ten years in the province of Quebec. In the same province 800,000 acres were burned over in 1921, and only a little over 1,000 acres were planted. And still millions of trees were exported from eastern Canada to the United States in the same year. The Boston Herald, in connection with this great destruction, says:

> What adds to the pity is that most of the timber destroyed by our woodland fires is so young as to belong to generations not old enough to protect it.

So far, I believe, the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick have the most practical laws to protect their forest reserves. I have in my possession the Forest Act of the province of New Brunswick. This was passed in 1918 and has been amended from time to time since. I must admit that in New Brunswick we have copied to a certain extent legislation enacted by the province of Quebec. Let me acknowledge, Mr. Speaker, that the province of Quebec with its great forest reserves has given an excellent example to all the other provinces of how to take care of this natural wealth.

Reports, based on comprehensive surveys, have been published by the Commission of Conservation in regard to the forests of Nova Scotia and British Columbia and an inventory of the Ontario forests commenced by that Commission is being completed by the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior. The Forestry branch has I am informed examined a very considerable area of the forest land in the prairie provinces and the forest services of Quebec and New Brunswick are collecting data as to the forest resources in their respective provinces, but the information available is still far from complete.

On the basis of what knowledge I have, however, an attempt has been made to arrive at a tentative estimate of the remaining timber supplies in the Dominion. It must be admitted that this estimate is largely a matter of opinion and is subject to revision as new data is secured. It would appear that including all classes of timber, saw material, pulpwood, ties, poles, fuel, etc., accessible and inaccessible, the total stand may be approximately as follows:

	Softwood million ft. B.M.	Hardwood million ft. B.M.	Total million ft. B.M.
Eastern provinces.	300,000	100,000	400,000
Prairie provinces.	140,000	85,000	225,000
British Columbia.	360,000	1,800	361,800
	800,000	186,800	986,800

Note.—Hardwood includes poplar and cottonwood as well as woods generally known as "hardwoods."

It is estimated that of this about 560 billion feet is of saw timber size.

Of the species which are used for the manufacture of pulp, there is estimated to be 850 million cords of spruce, balsam and western hemlock and 490 million cords of jack pine, lodgepole pine, eastern hemlock, poplar and cottonwood; a total of 1,340 million cords. About 650 million cords of this is in eastern Canada. Included in the pulpwood estimate is 500 million cords which is also saw material and will doubtless be used to a very considerable extent as lumber.

Accessibility is a most important factor in considering forest resources. It is difficult, however, to estimate the extent to which these resources may become commercially valuable since accessibility depends on changing conditions such as transportation facilities, methods of exploitation, market standards, price of products and cutting regulations. Under present conditions it is doubtful that more than one-half of the saw material and one-third of the pulpwood, exclusive of the prairie provinces, can be considered commercially accessible.

	Million feet, B.M.
Lumber..	4,000
Pulpwood, 4,000,000 cords..	2,000
Fuel, 8,000,000 cords..	4,000
Shingles, ties, poles, etc. (estimated)..	1,000
Total..	11,000

A superficial comparison of the above figures might lead to the conclusion that we still have sufficient timber to supply our requirements for an indefinite period, but such a conclusion is unwarranted when all the facts are considered. It must be remembered that these estimates will doubtless be considerably reduced when more authentic information is secured, that a large proportion of the timber can probably never be operated at a profit, that under the present system of exploitation a great deal of the timber is wasted, and that fire, insects and fungi are destroying many times the amount of timber used.

It was estimated that in British Columbia fire had destroyed twenty-two times the amount of timber cut prior to 1917, and there is reason to believe that similar conditions exist in the other provinces. The spruce bud worm has destroyed, it is estimated, at least 100 million cords of pulpwood in Quebec and 15 million cords in New Brunswick during the last ten years. This is equal to twenty-nine times the annual cut of pulpwood in the whole Dominion. Other insects are also destroying vast amounts of timber. No attempt has been made to estimate the damage done by fungi, but it would appear to be as great as that caused by either fire or insects.

It is apparent to all who are familiar with the situation that the timber resources within reach of the established industries, especially in eastern Canada, are being depleted to such an extent that unless provision is made for the growing of new crops of timber, these industries are faced with the necessity of curtailment of production or entire abandonment of their operations. The constantly increasing cost of securing supplies for the saw mills and pulp mills is an evidence of this condition and has led to several of the pulp companies undertaking reforestation measures.

In addition, it must be pointed out that we must be prepared for a greatly increased demand for our forest products. In a recent report to the United States Senate, the Secretary of Agriculture said:

Three-fifths of the original timber of the United States is gone, and we are using timber four times as fast as we are growing it. The forests remaining are so localized as greatly to reduce their national utility. The bulk of the population and manufacturing industries of the United States are dependent upon distant supplies of timber as the result of the depletion of the principal forest areas east of the Great Plains.

Already the United States is dependent on Canada for two-thirds of its newsprint and our total exports of wood and wood products to the United States in 1922 were valued at over $148,000,000. With the growth of population and decreasing supplies of timber in the United States, we must expect increased demand for our forest products and we should be in a position to take advantage of this expanding and profitable market at our doors. Canada is the principal source of all kind of timber within the British Empire, and our exports to other parts of the Empire and to the Orient are rapidly increasing. With the growth of population in the Dominion our needs for home consumption are bound to be greater; for, in spite of the use of substitutes, the use of wood continues to increase. Our immense forest area is capable of providing a very much greater output if handled with the view of maintaining production. This means protection from fire for both mature and young timber, control of injurious insect and fungi by establishing healthy conditions for growth, and the securing of reproduction by either natural or artificial means.

Dry weather will not prevent a tree from growing. Hail storms cannot destroy our forests; wet seasons do not affect them; floods only stimulate their growth. Trees do not require cultivation in the sense that other products of the land require it; if the forests are protected from fires and if the timber is cut as it should be, forest products will be assured to us in large quantities for years to come. But in the East we have had some difficulty during the last few years in exporting our lumber, because, about the time we are ready to ship it, our friends in the prairie provinces are ready to ship their wheat and every available car in the East is taken to the West for that purpose. I am one of those who like to see our friends in the West grow a good crop and export it to advantage, but we in the East have been handicapped for some years on account of this lack of cars. Especially was this the case last fall. We were glad to see the splendid crop that our friends in the West had, going out, as it did, to many different parts of the world, and we admired the splendid results of their efforts to produce as much wheat as possible. Our lumbermen in the East, however, were making the request that at least a reasonable percentage of these cars should remain in our province in order to facilitate the export of our lumber. After the lumber is sawn early in the spring, it lies in the yards for three or four months until it dries, and that is about the time that it is shipped to different markets in the United States and other parts of the world. Thus our export season for lumber is the same as the export season for the wheat of the prairies.

In conclusion, I would ask the government to co-operate as much as possible in the preservation of our forests so that they may be made the national asset that they can be if they are conserved as I have suggested.

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is a subject which has not sufficiently impressed the people of the country generally; there are only a few men in Canada who realize its importance. We have one man in the Maritime provinces who is so strongly impressed with the necessity of protecting our forests that he is spending a large amount of money in a personal campaign to educate the public in this connection. Last summer he offered a prize of $5,000 for the best essay on the destruction of the spruce bud moth. Our government in New Brunswick has a very good system of fire protection: lookout stations are established on nearly all the high mountains of the province; these are connected by telephone with headquarters in the centres of population so that forest fires may be detected in their early stages and dealt with before they spread. In that respect we are carrying on good work, but that work was started about thirty years too late. I am firmly convinced that more lumber has been destroyed by fire in New Brunswick than has ever been cut by the woodsman's axe. The destruction of the lumber is not the only consideration; the potential value of the land for the growing of trees has practically disappeared, due to the burning of the soil. Where the lumbermen cut over they take the larger trees; the smaller growth trees then grow more rapidly, and a crop of logs can be harvested every ten years if the cutting is judiciously done. On the other hand, spruce land which is burned over is hardly ever of any further use for the growing of trees, and that is one reason why forest fires are such a serious menace to the lumber industry.

It is also a fact that if our forest areas become depleted there will be less moisture throughout the land. I do not need to emphasize that point so far as our friends from the prairies are concerned; where there are no forests there is little or no moisture. In eastern Canada the depletion of our forests is becoming a serious menace from this point of view; our streams are drying up; we have less moisture—less rainfall in summer and less snow in winter. Our crops are therefore in danger if we allow this depletion to continue.

The gentleman who offered the $5,000 prize for the best essay on the preservation of our forests has also offered prizes to provincial governments and private individuals for the best reforestation work in the eastern provinces, and in the carrying on of this campaign he has paid out large sums from his own private purse. I do not know what the federal government is doing at present in connection with the destruction of our forests by the spruce bud moth, but I think the Department of Agriculture could very well take under consideration the expending of some money in research work to find out if there is any possible way of combating this very destructive pest. I do not wish to detain the House at any length, but I could not let this opportunity pass without trying to impress on the House and the government the necessity of some work along this line.

Hon. C. A. STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I think we all agree that the forest is one of the most important sources of wealth that Canada possesses. Let me say at the outset that I am entirely in accord with the resolution. It would be a considerable impetus to the Forestry Branch of the Department of Interior to have the co-operation of the provincial authorities in the preservation of the forest wealth of the country. Anyone travelling through Canada this year could not help but be struck with the very great destruction which has resulted through forest fires. The destruction by the moth is a serious menace to the forests of eastern Canada, but probably fire is the greatest enemy we have to contend with to-day in our forests. If we were to organize from one end of Canada to the other a staff of officials who could prevent the serious destruction annually by forest fires, I do not think it would be necessary for either of my friends to make a speech urging the preservation of the forests of Canada.

I find on investigation in the Forestry branch that we are giving some attention to reforestation, but it appears to me that the thing on which we should be united, and upon which we should spend our greatest effort, both at the moment and for a considerable time to come until this menace is overcome to a very large degree, is preventing the spread of forest fires. That is one thing we can unite upon, and that is one reason I am glad that this resolution has been introduced. Most of the provinces of Canada control their own forests, and intervention on our part is more or less a matter of sufferance. I have only to say that, so far as the Department of the Interior is concerned, the Forestry branch will welcome any suggestion by which we can work in harmony with the various provinces of Canada for the preservation of the forest wealth of this country.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I am not so particularly concerned about the fate of this resolution. It is a colourless, meaningless production, dealing with an important subject but in so gingerly a way that the passing of it means nothing at all. The subject, though, is of consequence and of pressing consequence. It becomes more pressing every year and I venture to say that its imperious character has not been realized by the people of Canada, and I fear I must say has not been realized by the government of Canada.

Co-operation is a word that covers a multitude of sins in these days, or rather, covers a multitude of omissions; but what is in mind when we advocate co-operation? The subject demands action; it demands a broad big policy and the inauguration of that policy now. Consequently, we should not pass lightly over a resolution of this kind without taking the occasion to press home to the government the imperative demand that such a policy be evolved.

I did not expect this discussion to be precipitated to-day. I am not prepared with the figures and the data I would like to be armed with, but I can, I think, recall enough facts to show the serious character of the position we are in, and as I do so, I am not attributing the position we are in to anyone in particular. I am not saying that governments have failed to keep up with public opinion on the question. I am saying, though, that public opinion has failed to keep up with the increasing importance of the subject from year to year, and that consequently parliament has not been alive to that importance itself. I lived for some years under the impression which I think now was a delusion, that the rate of depletion of our forest areas was not greater than the rate of accretion, that is to say, that the production from year to year was overtaking the damage by fire, the damage by disease, and, as well, the reduction by the lumber cut. I do not think there is a question of doubt that that is not only not the case, but that it is so very far from being the truth that we are rapidly approaching the end of our lumber resources.

Mr. Barnum, the gentleman who no doubt is referred to by the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell), has produced an array of statistics and a weight of argument that it seems to me is bound to impress anyone who reads fully his production. At all events, let me say this: I have seen no answer whatever to the case Mr. Barnjum presented. I have seen nothing, indeed, which detracts from the force of his contention that we are within a short time, and not a fraction of a century, but a matter of a very few years at the present rate of depletion and of cut, of the end of our forest resources. Nor have I seen his contention answered that the preservation of our forests as they are to-day, and in the extent they are to-day is vital not only to the supply of timber for our country, but vital as well to getting the real value of our agricultural and other resources in this Dominion. Our rainfall and the distribution of that rainfall is affected by the distribution of our forests, and when our forests are gone the result seems to be inevitable, that the great body of our rainfall gets off the land without adding that nutriment to the soil that comes from keeping the rainfall for a certain time within the soil itself.

There are many other consequences that follow such depletion. The contention is advanced by Mr. Barnjum that the United States of America is within a few years, indeed, less than a dozen at the present rate of consumption, of the end of its forest resources, and that Canada, unless some policy designed to conserve those resources is adopted, is not far from that proximity to the end itself. There has been, of course we all admit, a frightful devastation by fire. There has been an almost equal devastation by the bud-worm and other destroyers of our trees. There has been also, of course, a very considerable depletion by the methods of lumber men. These are going on together, and by present means I venture to say that it is impossible to apply any adequate check. We do, of course, what we can to check the spread of fires in the western provinces where the forests are under the control of the Dominion of Canada, but though we multiply our service to that end and add to our Forestry branch of the Interior department, and though I believe we have very expert and faithful officials, it is none the less true that as our machinery has expanded, the forest fires have expanded in almost equal degree. Coming to the other provinces we cannot apply our machinery there; we cannot apply our regulations. We suffer from that even in the west. We cannot apply them for the reason that the jurisdiction is under the provinces themselves. Consequently, the difficulties that surround the subject are many and great. They would seem indeed almost insurmountable, and I venture such suggestions as I wish to make with very considerable diffidence. But because I believe that discussion is worthless unless we come to grips with some specific idea that is worth discussion and worthy of consideration with a view of getting to some goal, I advance one. We might place the prohibition of a heavy export duty upon our pulpwood. I know there are objections to that; there are objections to every policy. In the provinces there is prohibition upon the export of pulpwood cut on provincial lands. That obtains in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, the two larger provinces of Canada. I think it obtains in other provinces as well. I know of no reason why, if that is good sound and defensible policy in relation to timber owned by the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, it would not be a reason equally effective against the exportation of pulpwood from other provinces of Canada. That it would perhaps be met by retaliatory legislation on the part of the United States is an argument which is often advanced. It is a subject that one does not care to discuss until he has viewed it from every angle, but from such study as I have been able to give I am not at all convinced that we are subject to retaliatory legislation that would put us in a position in which we would suffer as much as we are sure to suffer by the continued free exports of pulpwood. That is the suggestion that I commend to the government for its consideration.

Now, to meet another difficulty, and a bigger one, I make this suggestion: it is impossible for any province to adopt legislation looking to the safe cutting of our timber, to the clearing of the land with a view to preventing the spread of fire following the cutting of the timber, unless other provinces do the same. For example, if the province of Quebec were to consider adopting the slash clearing policy, and the province of Ontario did not follow in the same line of policy, then the lumberman of Quebec would be put at a disadvantage with his competitor that would probably be fatal to his business; consequently it follows that whatever is done of any importance to the lumber industry in this regard in one province must be accompanied by a like course in another province, or it becomes impracticable in the province that considers its adoption. Then, how can the Dominion parliament meet the situation with a view to the adoption, say of the slash clearing policy in all the provinces of Canada, because, unless we are going to insist, at whatever cost, on the clearing of the slash after the timber is felled, we simply pave the way, we feed the flames, and make all our difficulties in the way of preventing and overcoming forest fires in the future. Well, there are two or three ways in which that can be done—two or three, at all events, worth trying. The provinces might be brought together and we might perhaps agree with the governments of those provinces to recommend to their several legislatures the adoption of uniform regulations in this regard. I question if that would succeed. It might succeed and it might not, but if everything should fail it would be at least possible for this Dominion, and in my judgment it would be not only constitutionally practical but would be justified by the stern necessity, to make the failure to clear slash in the public interest an offence by Dominion legislation, and to make it compulsory upon all private operators in timber and on our timber land. If that were done, then unquestionably it should be followed by operators upon public lands in the various provinces.

Mr. CALDWELL: The hon. member refers to the burning of slash?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I refer to that.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does the hon. member realize that our spruce in eastern Canada grows from a tree the size of your arm to trees of very large size, and it is impossible to burn the slash without killing the small growth?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I do not think it is impossible, without killing the small growth. I know it grows in that way. If the slash is killed by fire wherever it lies, necessarily that would ensue, but it would be quite possible to have regulations that would provide for the gathering or the accumulation of slash, and then provide that it would be got out of the way in some manner, and I presume, of course, by fire, and thereby take away the main cause of the spread of forest fires in future. I for one can see no way in the world in which we can ensure ourselves against the spread of these large forest fires that are devastating the great wealth of the country unless we take away the fuel of these flames. It is this fuel that causes the flames to spread. It is that which starts them going, and though it be a matter of expense, the extent of that expense is already pretty well known. That it does cost something to accumulate and to burn this slash without at the same time destroying the young growth is now pretty well established but it is far better that that cost be borne, and added, indeed, to the cost of our lumber—for there is where it is going to come—than that we now should not only mortgage prosperity to pursue blindly and prodigally a policy that is going to leave the country depleted of not only one of its great sources of its wealth, but of one of those sources that is vital to the other sources, without which the main source at all events is of very little value to our land.

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): It is a matter of general agreement that our forest lands are becoming unduly and greatly depleted. There are three causes for the depletion of our forests—fire, insect diseases, and overcutting. All are important factors. They may vary somewhat in degree, but they are all formidable and large factors in the depletion. The depletion of our forests is a serious matter for the country's welfare, not only on account of the enormous wealth that is being lost, but because the replacement of the forests requires so many years. It is appreciated now—and I do not think we need take an absolutely dark view as regards our forest lands in this respect—that general knowledge is now being diffused throughout the land regarding the serious conditions that exist, and what steps should be taken to prevent it. That of itself is something. It has not reached the point where action is being taken to nearly the extent that it should be taken. It is becoming recognized now that the condition of our forests is somewhat similar to the condition of health in the human being—that there is such a thing as forest health and such a thing as forest disease, and that when forest disease occurs our forests suffer to a very great extent. What causes forest disease? There are two principal causes. One is fire and the other is overcutting. Fire destroys a large portion of the forest and the soil; it lowers the health of the region and encourages, just as is the case in human diseases—the onset and growth of insect disease. In the same way over-cutting encourages plant disease. If forests are overcut, the land dries, the trees die, the high state of health of the forest depreciates, and this allows the onset of insect and lower animal life disease. These are matters of importance for our people to know, so that the problem may be dealt with, with a reasonable hope of success.

What can be done to solve this great and serious economic problem in Canada? I should be disposed to attach a good deal more value to the word "co-operation" than I have so far heard mentioned. And why? Forest lands are the property of the provinces, and the federal government has a Department of Agriculture. This, then, must largely be a matter of co-operation between the provincial governments and the federal government, and much could be gained by a series of conferences between the federal government, especially its Department of Agriculture, and the local governments. To what effect? So that they would agree and lay down certain standards—what measures should be adopted for the prevention of fire? How should we deal with the removal of slash? To what extent should we attempt to keep our forests clean? How should we deal with insect diseases? It has been mentioned that we must look to the federal Department of Agriculture for more assistance, because they have the entomologists who are carrying on this work. The federal government might help us still further in the matter of plant pathology, in view of the fact that forest diseases are so destructive to our forest life at the present time. We have now reached the point where our forests have suffered so severly that we must have recourse to those measures, and we must preserve our forests and keep them cleaner. We might well turn our eyes towards the condition of forests in France; and if we follow the example of French forestry, where everything is carried out so completely as regards care, cutting, fire protection and removal of slash, this will be very much to our advantage. I quite recognize that this is a matter of process of time. When Canada was a new country, forests were regarded, and we regard them still somewhat, as something to be used without any sense of discrimination or limitation. That time has gone. We must now accustom ourselves to caring for our forests as is being done at the present day in France where the forests are older, the problem larger and greater care required.

Mr. E. A. LAPIERRE (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I believe the federal government should at once take measures to co-operate at least with the Ontario and Quebec governments on account of conditions which at present exist in the northern country. The discovery of gold in Rouyn township, which largely adjoins the boundary of the province of Ontario, has caused a tremendous rush of propectors into that section of northern Ontario. Within the last six or eight months, some twelve or fifteen hundred mining claims have been recorded in the township of Rouyn and adjoining townships. During the coming summer, in conformity with regulations imposed by Ontario and regulations imposed by Quebec, a certain amount of development work will have to be done upon those mining claims. Any of us who are familiar with conditions in Cobalt or in the Porcupine country, knows what happens after prospectors have gone into the bush. The slash may not be as great as that produced by lumbering; but as soon as prospecting and development work starts on a large scale, in a timber country, the same conditions are created that slash creates in a lumbering country. The section of the north country in which these mining claims have been recorded adjoins the largest and most valuable standing pulpwood there is on the North American continent, and in its present location and owing to its density, should a fire, such as the one we had in Porcupine in 1916, start in the slash that will be created in the township of Rouyn and in the district of Kirkland Lake, there will be a repetition of the great conflagration that took place in the Porcupine district and one which will cause Canada one of its greatest losses in its pulpwood wealth. These conditions are being created; we are having to-day a repetition of what took place in the Porcupine country, and nothing less than immediate co-operation between the federal government and the governments of Ontario and Quebec will prevent a serious conflagration in the pulpwood limits of northern Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE: Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from one of the greatest lumber manufacturing centres in Canada, I feel that I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without saying a few words in commendation of the spirit which prompted the mover of this resolution in bringing this matter before the House. We do not spend enough time in discussing our natural resources, in endeavouring to plan ways by which those resources may be conserved and made use of to best advantage for the people. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) has quite properly stated that one of the greatest dangers to our timber is fire. I know that is true in British Columbia. Fire has taken an immense toll of our timber and our trees, and I am afraid it is a very difficult problem to determine the best method of protecting our trees against fire. In this connection, I might mention that in Vancouver there is an air station which is maintained, I think, by the Dominion government. A very splendid work has been done by that station in patrolling the forests of British Columbia. There is an extensive territory to be covered and it is impossible in any other way properly to patrol the forests of that province. Where fires have got under way in the forests of British Columbia it is almost impossible to put them out, and what we have to do if possible is to prevent them from getting a start. That is what these men are doing. I think they have accomplished a great deal of good and I should be very sorry indeed to hear that there was any proposal to do away with this air station. I have heard it suggested that in the execution of a policy of economy, this service was going to be dispensed with or curtailed. That, I think, would be a mistake. There is no doubt about the importance of our practising economy, but it would be false economy to dispense with, or even to curtail, the air patrol which has done such splendid work in connection with the forests of British Columbia. We must realize that it has taken many hundreds of years to produce the trees that are now standing out there on the Pacific coast. I am told that some of these trees have been a thousand years growing. Now, if a tree of that kind should be destroyed by fire, and if we have to wait another thousand years—

Mr. BUREAU: We will not wait.

Mr. McQUARRIE:—until another one grows, it can be seen what a hopeless outlook there is if some effective means are not taken to prevent fires. I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) has said in reference to the burning of slashings. I am afraid, however, that in British Columbia that would be a great undertaking. It would be a considerable problem to dispose of the limbs that come from one of these giant timbers; I do not know that it would be practicable in our part of the country.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would inform the hon. member that it is not only practicable but it is being done to-day in British Columbia.

Mr. McQUARRIE: To some extent.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Very largely.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Should not the province have the right to compel the man who cuts timber on Crown lands to clean up the slashings? He should be made to clean up these slashings at the end of each season and to prove that he has done so. His business is a profitable one and therefore he ought to be made to clean up.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I accept the assurance of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) as to the practicability of this proposal. Of course, if it can be carried out it is something that certainly should be done. I thought, however, that it presented a rather big problem.

[Mr. McQuarrie.]

I think we should make every effort possible to conserve our timber wealth because it is one of the greatest assets we have. In my district we are to-day shipping lumber to a great many parts of the world. The business is almost wholly an export one, and if it had not been for the timber industry in British Columbia during the last few years I am afraid that province would not be in the satisfactory position it occupies to-day. We are doing a world trade in lumber, and as I see it, we have only just started; there is a great future ahead of us. Our timber seems to be unlimited in extent. But unless we take every precaution to protect it from the ravages of fire, I fear it will be sadly depleted. I am very strongly in favour of bringing such matters to the attention of the House and I commend the action of the hon. member (Mr. Michaud) in moving his resolution.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): I have been very much pleased to notice from several quarters in the House the commendation of the good work that Mr. Frank Barnjum is doing in educating the Canadian people on this very important subject. Mr. Barnjum is a Canadian who spent some years in the United States, prosperous years I am glad to know, and has now returned to Canada filled with splendid enthusiasm and prepared to do whatever is possible for the promotion of every Canadian industry. He feels a deep interest in this subject because he has been associated with the business for a long time. Everything that he proposes in the way of forest conservation, every movement that can be made for the better protection of the forests from fires, everything that can be done in the way of tree planting, and all that Mr. Barnjum desires in the interests of our forests, will, I am sure, have the heartiest sympathy of the House and the public generally. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) said he had had a revelation in regard to the alleged endless valuable forests of Canada. I had a somewhat similar experience. I am reminded that very many years ago, travelling in Nova Scotia in the southern portion of the province, I had the pleasure of meeting an old Scotsman who was engaged in the lumber business. He had carried on operations in Sweden, Norway, I think, Newfoundland and then in Nova Scotia, and he seemed to have a grievance. Meeting a minister he naturally wanted to air his grievance. He said he had a great complaint to make, because we were charging him a duty on seeds. I said I did not think that the duty on seeds was very high and I did not think that his grievance could be very grave. I asked him what kind of seeds they were. Spruce seeds, he said. As we looked out of the window of the train we saw a thick spruce forest. "What are you talking about spruce trees for?" I asked him. "Why, there is any quantity of spruce trees in the province." In his broadest Scotch he said: "Mr. Fielding, I give you warning that if there is not a policy of tree planting in Nova Scotia and in this country generally, and in America, within twenty-five years there will be a timber famine in Canada and on the American continent." Well, ten or twelve years passed, and very much of what the old gentleman predicted had come true. At that time he was planting trees. My right hon. friend was substantially, though not technically, correct in his reference to the provincial regulations; and he apparently suggested that what was good enough for Quebec and Ontario was good enough for the other provinces. He rather assumed that there was a prohibition on the export of wood in these provinces. That is not technically correct, although in the main it is. Neither the province of Ontario nor the province of Quebec has the power to prohibit the export of wood or to impose an export duty. But in Ontario and Quebec the provincial governments are owners of timber lands. They lease timber lands to people desiring to operate them; and any landlord who has any land to lease can impose any condition he desires on the lessee. So that the fact is that in the province of Quebec and in the province of Ontario the export of wood is largely, though not absolutely, prohibited in its raw state. But it is not correct to assume that this prohibition is general, because one of the difficulties is in relation to private lands. My good friend Mr. Barnjum is enthusiastic in all these movements and he goes further than any one who has spoken on this subject. He attaches great importance to the entire prohibition of the export of wood. Perhaps a high export duty might serve the same purpose, but he insists that the export of wood should not be allowed at all. It so happens that there are lands in Quebec that are not owned by the government but by private persons, and no prohibition can be applied to them. On private lands the man who can raise pulpwood thinks he has the same right to handle it as the man who raises any other crop. We heard a good deal on that question years ago in the course of a tariff investigation. At that time the owners of private lands complained very bitterly against any prohibition or restriction being put upon the export of their wood, and they stated that this would be equivalent to placing them at the mercy of a few home manufacturers. I am not adopting one view or the other, I am merely repeating the objections urged on that occasion.

My right hon. friend mentioned retaliation by the United States, and that means a great deal. I am very much impressed myself by the letters Mr. Barnjum has written, and I know he has educated a great many people on the importance of this subject. I must admit that I have at times entertained a considerable measure of sympathy with his proposal that we should absolutely prohibit export, but there are grave difficulties in the way, and anyone who comes from forest districts, notably those in the province of Quebec, where timber areas are in private hands, will see at once that the prohibition or restriction of export would probably create a good deal of ill-feeling. My sympathies go largely to Mr. Barnjum, and perhaps in a little while we shall be able to find a solution of the problem. Meanwhile I think my hon. friend from New Brunswick (Mr. Michaud) has done good service in raising this discussion to-day.

Mr. D. W. WARNER (Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, most of this discussion has been confined to districts where lumbering operations have been in progress, and there the slash is no doubt a menace. But I have travelled hundreds of miles through forests in which no cutting has ever been done, and there I found the marks of fire. I saw now and again lying on the ground the trunks of trees three feet in diameter, which is pretty big for spruce, and I do not believe anything but fire has destroyed what must at one time have been very heavy forest growth. On the edge of these forests one can see where settlers have cut down trees, but as the greater portion of the area belongs to the Dominion government, comparatively little interference has taken place.

I think the resolution is appropriate in calling for co-operation between the Dominion government and the governments of the several provinces to ensure protection of our forest reserves against fire. At one time I was under the impression that Canada had unlimited forest wealth, but since going through various forest areas I have come to the conclusion that there is a limit in this respect unless we stop the ravages of fire.

As to placing an embargo on the export of forest products, I do not see that that would help at all in the part of the country to which I am referring, because it has never been possible, so far, to do any cutting there on a commercial scale. But those forest areas are worth protecting, and we should educate the people on the importance of co-operating in this national work. No doubt considerable damage has been caused by insects, but I am not well enough acquainted with the actual conditions to speak definitely on this point. It is my opinion, however, that in the wilder lands to which I am referring very little damage has been caused by the depredations of insects; most of it is attributable to fire.

I think this resolution will have a good effect by impressing on the people the need of fire protection if we are to preserve our forest wealth. I agree with my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. McQuarrie) that the aeroplane is the best means of patrolling our forests, for it affords better observation and enables fires to be reported very shortly after they break out, and that is the time we must get after them and control them. Therefore I think the air service is indispensable in taking care of most of our forests outside the settled areas.

Motion agreed to.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF CANADIAN MAGAZINES

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (West Toronto) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that measures should be adopted to encourage the publication of Canadian magazines and periodicals.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my purpose in presenting this resolution is to bring to the attention of the House the very grievous state of an important industry—one which is not only an industry in the ordinary sense of the word, but is a factor in the education of our peoples as well as an important agent in the development of our national life.

We talk of the publishing industry as we would of any other manufacturing industry, but, Mr. Speaker, it is something more than that. The periodical press of a country is an educational institution, and in every country where there has been created and developed a good periodical press, there you will find the national ideals more firmly established and the unity of the people brought about in the most satisfactory manner.

We have a very difficult country in which to establish national unity: we have many racial problems and we have also the problems of geography. In addition to the two chief racial groups, there are in western Canada a great many colonies of people who still cherish the ideals of their native countries and seek to perpetuate their old national customs. Unless we can bring these people into harmony with the rest of the country we will never establish that national unity which is so desirable. And I maintain, Sir, that one of the most, if not the most, effective agency is the publication of magazines and periodicals with a nation-wide circulation.

In addition to these racial impediments that afflict our country, there are geographical difficulties to overcome in establishing our national ideals and in promoting the harmony of the people. There are the differences of material interests between the Maritime provinces, and Quebec and Ontario; and still further differences of material interests between the Maritime provinces and the western provinces. To make the sentiment of one province known to another becomes a great national service and a great national duty which we should use every available agency to promote.

The diversity of material interests between the Far East and the Far West, in the absence of some means of communication that will bring them closer together, is one of the reasons why there has been so much misunderstanding between their respective inhabitants. I believe that notwithstanding anything that has been said in the West or in the East, there exists in every province a keen desire to assist every other province in achieving that degree of prosperity for which it strives. There is more Canadian spirit in the Dominion, I think, than most of us realize, but it is necessary that it should be made coherent and that it should be understood in the different sections of the country. We all know how proud the East is of the West, of its great productiveness and of the virility of its people; and we know that the West, notwithstanding that you do not hear very much of it on the platform or in the press, has more admiration for the enterprise of the East than perhaps is apparent to those who look upon the matter superficially. But to many it is hard to discover a way for the East and the West to co-operate in national policies to the advantage of both the grand divisions of the country.

It is unavoidable, Sir, in a country with so large an area as ours, embracing, as it does, three thousand miles of territory, that what is closest to us bulks most largely, the result being that local interests in the different sections have more prominence in the minds of the people than the national interests. To this must be attributed any provincial jealousies that may exist. I think it is the duty of government, by just and equitable laws, to convince the people in all sections that their welfare is the deep concern of the administration. I think it can be said that that duty has been had in mind by every government we have had in Canada. Errors in judgment have been committed; there have been errors of policy on trade questions, on transportation questions and on many other matters, but it has always been the intention of the governments of Canada to serve the interests of the whole people. This parliament must view public questions in a broader way than they are looked at in many of the provinces where local interests bulk so largely. If, therefore, we are to bring the people together it is imperative that all the agencies available to secure this end should be employed to the fullest measure.

Now, among the agencies to promote national ideals and advance national unity, I think the press is the most effective. In my judgment the daily press cannot perform this work. It suffers from two disabilities. First, the daily press is partisan; secondly, its circulation is local, or at the widest, provincial. The editors of daily papers must cater to their respective constituencies; what affects parts of the country remote from the place of publication is treated very lightly or in some cases gets no attention at all; thus local feeling is stimulated and national considerations are overlooked. I am not attempting, Sir, to discredit or belittle the daily press. He would be a very injudicious person who would attempt to do that, because we know the mighty place it occupies in this or any other democracy. But I am trying to point out that the exigencies of the business of running a daily newspaper make it pretty nearly impossible for that newspaper to take the national as opposed to the local or provincial viewpoint on many questions. There is, therefore, in my opinion, a definite and very important field for magazines and periodicals. I am not insensible of the fact that these might show bias or partisanship, but the success of a publisher would depend upon the absence of such bias or partisanship; he must first consider the requirements from the business standpoint, and the danger of bias and partisanship is likely to be very slight. If, then, there is to be an independent press to express the sentiment of all Canada, it must be found in the periodical press and the magazines of the country. Canadian periodicals, which are all too few in number and have circulations all too small, have the ability to interpret the sentiment of one province to the other—the sentiment of the Maritime provinces to British Columbia, to Alberta, Saskatchewan or Ontario, and the sentiment of those provinces, then, to the East. No daily newspaper can do that; no daily newspaper has a circulation covering the different provinces. This service, therefore, can be rendered only by a virile, profitable and successful magazine press. To bring the East and the West together for their mutual understanding on great national issues would be a patriotic service of no small moment, but it can be performed only by publications having, as I say, a nation-wide circulation. Only by such publications can we ever hope to develop Canadian national ideals, to create a market for the productions of Canadian writers, and provide for those opportunities to use their talents for the dissemination of Canadian literature throughout the whole Dominion. That is a legitimate field for the efforts of publishers.

Nothing more surely conduces to national pride than a national literature. I think it can be said that Canada to-day cannot claim to have a national literature in the shape of a periodical press such as prevails in the Mother Country and in the republic to the south. There is no young country in the world which has so much material for good writers, so much romance mixed with its history, as this Dominion of Canada. The discovery of the country; the work of the early pioneers who hewed out their homes from the dense forest; the intrepidity of the officers and servants of the Hudson's Bay Company; the wonderful exploits of the Northwest Mounted Police—these are just a few of the things which writers could discuss for the entertainment and benefit of Canada and for the development of our national literature.

The trouble to-day, Sir, is that Canada is being Americanized by the periodicals of the United States—a process which is proceeding much more rapidly than is realized by the average citizen who does not give a great deal of study to the question. If it were the best class of American magazines that had the largest circulation in this country there would not be so much ground for complaint, but such magazines as Harper's, Scribner's and others of the same class have comparatively limited, indeed, extremely limited, circulation in this country, while those like the Red Book, Snappy Stories and that kind of stuff—

Mr. BUREAU: Snappy Stories has been banned.

Mr. HOCKEN: It does not circulate any more in Canada?

Mr. BUREAU: It ought not to.

Mr. HOCKEN: I agree with the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau). There are other magazines that may have not so "snappy" a name but have stories that are just as "snappy" as those that appear in Snappy Stories. I hope my hon. friend will ban that new magazine which I will refer to in a moment.

The adolescent mind of Canada is being trained by a long catalogue of frothy and frequently anti-British and often suggestive writing that should be discouraged. I am glad to hear from the Minister of Customs that he is banning this kind of stuff as he discovers it. This kind of literature is specially favoured in being introduced into this country, and that is the bone of contention that I am endeavouring to present. I do not think that we should continue to allow the mental pabulum of the youth of this country to be the Yellow Kid and Mr. Jiggs and other stuff sent out by the Hearst Syndicate. How can we hope to nourish the intellectuality of our young men and young women by such puerility as we see in the syndicated stuff and in the magazine and other periodical publications that fill the news stands of this country.

I was interested the other day in reading a pamphlet on Canadian Literature of French Expression by Jules Tremblay, and in it I find this which I would like to present to the House as the opinion of an author of some prominence in this part of the country. Referring to the Americanization of this country through the periodical press, he says:

> All our provinces hold certain things in common. One, considered dangerous, is the peaceful, and steady intrusion of Americanism through the stage, the wireless, the moving picture shows, the phonograph, the magazine, certain newspaper services, and the book. American ideas permeate our minds to-day. No reason there were to complain, did we borrow from our neighbours their qualities with their goods. But people, as a rule, rather borrow defects, faults, and vices, or indispensable things from other races. Our idiosyncracies are adjudged too slow, and must be replaced by fashions of speech, dress, dancing, and thoughtless libertism in matters of religion. . . . Do you not think that this easy going penetration will never promote the best kind of nationalism in Canada? I bear no preconceived hostility against Americans. I have lived long enough with them to know their real worth. But we do not import too much of their worth. The brand of accessions that comes from them to us is a source of alarm for Canadian unity. Segregation is in the air, not far from the Rockies; it is potential only, just now, but may very soon become actual, if we do not find a strong counterpart; and that counterpart is Canadianism opposed to Americanism. We must shape our own destinies for ourselves, and not for outsiders. Unless we act with a purpose, we are of small account in the process of change. In twenty-five years, we may be Canadians in name and Americans in fact, a fact which may politically evolve a few decades later.
> Evolution is constant. Canada will be transformed, with the rest of the world. The surviving nations will be those where the people will have kept faith with their own traditions; and these traditions are best maintained by literature, by national literature.
> [Mr. Hocken.]

I entirely agree with Mr. Tremblay, and I quote his words as those of a man who has given a great deal of thought to this particular subject.

Before going on I would like to quote a paragraph taken from the Ottawa Citizen of February 24. Referring to the address given by Colonel R. H. Webb at the Carnegie Library, it says:

> He said that one or two United States firms alone were selling upwards of $38,000,000 worth of American books in Canada.

I know that the copyright law has a great deal to do with that, but I think it is fair to say that the taste that is being developed in Canada by these American periodicals is also largely to blame for that tremendously large importation of American books. What I venture to say is that we should make an effort to give every reasonable encouragement to the men who are willing to risk their means and devote their business ability to providing a substitute for this overwhelming mass of American literature that is coming into this country. At least, we should be willing to remove the handicaps, the unfair competition under which the publishers of our magazines and periodicals labour at the present time.

I happen to know of many men who at different times have endeavoured to establish Canadian national publications. I have watched them organize their forces, launch their enterprises and carry them on until they had sunk perhaps one or two or three hundred thousand dollars, and then be forced to suspend publication. That has been the experience of the great majority of those who have ever attempted to organize a Canadian periodical press. They have almost all met with disaster. There is only one publication in Canada to-day that has a circulation of 75,000. There never was but one that had a circulation of over 100,000, and that one, I understand, has recently suspended publication. So that it is not that Canadians have lacked the enterprise. It is not altogether the fact that they have neglected what may be called the duty of trying to develop a Canadian literature through the periodical press, because many of them have tried, have used up all their resources, and finally have had to desist.

The extent to which American magazines come into Canada is not generally understood, nor is the very rapid increase that is taking place in that importation. People in the ordinary course of their business see the bookstalls filled with flashy covers, but they do not take the time, perhaps they have not got the time, to get the facts as to the quantity of this material that is coming in or as to its character. It may surprise some members of this House to know that for every Canadian periodical sold in this country there are four American publications sold; that is to say, that by reason of the handicaps under which this particular industry is suffering Canadian publishers are able to secure only twenty per cent of their home market. There is no other industry operating in this country that could possibly exist under conditions of that kind, or that could even get capital to start under such conditions, and the situation for the Canadian publisher is getting worse every year. I have a memorandum prepared by the Canadian National Newspaper and Periodical Association, and it presents a few figures which I think it would be well to put on Hansard. In 1912 the total value of the magazines coming into this country was $831,000 and in 1922 the value was $3,122,000. In ten years the volume of American periodicals coming into Canada increased from $831,000 to over $3,000,000. That will indicate the rapidity of the growth that has taken place in the last ten years, and the conditions are so favourable to American publishers and so difficult for Canadian publishers that this increase is likely to continue in proportion as our population grows. Owing to the conditions under which the business in foreign publications is carried on in Canada there has been a growth in ten years from $800,000 to over $3,000,000.

Now, Sir, the meretricious charcter of most of those publications is something that should give the people of this country concern, especially those who are interested in the moral welfare of the people, particularly the young people. They are devoted almost entirely to fiction of a most sensationally suggestive and generally demoralizing character—about as demoralizing in some cases as publishers dare print. I noticed recently in an Ottawa paper the advertisement of a new magazine called, The True Story Magazine. Here it is. Hon. members may have noticed the advertisements. It has been printed all the way across Canada, and it is a pretty fair sample of the kind of stuff the American publishers are sending in for the young people of this country. I see here the statement "Has every man and woman a soul mate?" Perhaps we ought to have a sole mate, but not this kind of soul mate. This advertisement sets out this kind of stuff as an inducement for the young people of this country to buy the paper. One of the stories they print is headed "Whose Daughter", and it goes on to give a brief description of the story. It says:

> Suppose your own sister turned out to be "the other woman." Suppose your husband frankly told of his love for her, and showed a revulsion to yourself to whom he was married; suppose a love child was born to your sister, your husband its father, and during the birth your sister died. Would you adopt the child and bring it up?

And so on. Is that the kind of stuff to be allowed to come into the Dominion of Canada under specially favourable conditions? This is a new magazine. Perhaps the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau) when he reads some of these stories may ban this magazine, but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a class of literature such as this should be prevented from coming in, and that steps should be taken to encourage a wholesome literature such as Canadian publishers will produce if they have an opportunity and a fair chance of making ends meet.

I am going to give the House some reasons why Canadian publishers are unable to compete. In the first place the raw materials of the Canadian publisher are taxed, and that leaves him at a very serious disadvantage with his competitor in the United States. He has to pay in Canada for white paper a price equivalent to the United States price plus the duty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. member explain why it is we have to import the white magazine paper from the United States, when we are large exporters of white paper?

Mr. HOCKEN: We do not have to import the white paper, but white paper is sold in the United States at 25 per cent less than in Canada. It is sold at an advance greater than 25 per cent, because you pay for Canadian paper exactly what you would pay for paper bought in the United States, plus the duty and plus the freight.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am informed—and the hon. member will know whether my information is correct or not—that the character of paper that goes into magazines is not manufactured here, that it is an American manufacture and that the quantity that is used here would not warrant the manufacture in this country. Newsprint is another paper altogether and of course we manufacture that.

Mr. HOCKEN: The information given to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) is not correct. There are a good many book paper mills in this country doing quite an extensive business. There is a mill at Georgetown and mills at other places. Book paper of all grades is manufactured in Canada, but it is sold in the United States for 25 per cent less than in Canada. The same is true of engravings, inks and other raw materials that go into the production of magazines. There is protection for the papermaker, the inkmaker and the engraver, and everybody else that produces anything that goes into the magazine, excepting printing presses, and there is no duty on them because they are not made in Canada. If that were the only handicap it would be bad enough, but there are other factors more serious than that. So far as the Canadian circulation is concerned, the American publisher has an enormous advantage. In his own country he sells anywhere from 50,000 to 2,000,000 copies of an issue, it may be a weekly or it may be a monthly. What he sells in the United States pays all the cost of overhead, type-setting, proof-reading, making of plates, engraving and everything. These charges amount, I should say, to about 80 per cent of the total cost of producing a magazine, and they are all met by the domestic circulation. So that all the cost the publisher has to meet for his Canadian circulation is that of his white paper and press work, and the freight charges incurred in sending the product to Canada. Once a magazine is prepared for the press the cost of running off a few extra thousand copies for Canada is only a very small proportion of the total expense. He dumps into Canada his excess circulation, and thereby makes it impossible for the Canadian publishers to establish Canadian periodicals. Besides that, many of these publications that are coming in are unfit for young people to read. The Canadian publisher has to meet all this competition.

Let me for a moment put the matter in this way. Take the cost of writing, editing, type-setting, for a circulation, we will say, of 50,000 in Canada and compare that with similar cost for a publication in the United States with a circulation of 50,000 in Canada, and you will see how much greater the overhead is of any publisher who is trying to do business in Canada. As I said before, I know of only one Canadian publication that ever reached a circulation of 100,000, and that publication reached that circulation by methods of puzzles and guesses and that kind of thing. That was not a healthy, normal circulation; but even that publication has gone out of business; it has recently ceased publishing. Any Canadian publisher who is able to secure 50,000 circulation is regarded as a very successful man, but there are scores of American publications selling in Canada 50,000 copies, all the cost of which to the publisher is the white paper, the press work and the freight. I contend that conditions which make it possible for foreign publishers to secure a wider circulation in Canada of their publications than can be gained by their Canadian competitors call for amendment. Under present conditions, a Canadian publisher would be at an advantage if he put up a plant in Buffalo or Detroit. He would get his paper at nearly 30 per cent less, and he would have the advantage of a certain circulation in the United States. In fact, I know of one publisher in my own city who, a few years ago, seriously considered moving his printing plant to Buffalo. If he had, perhaps he would be in business yet. He did not take that step, and he is now one of the "has-beens"; he is one of those who have had, during the last few years, to suspend publication.

Mr. GOOD: What would be the effect of the abolition of the duty on these book papers?

Mr. HOCKEN: Not very much. I think conditions call for greater amendment than that. Twenty-five per cent reduction on the paper would be something, because paper is a big item in periodical publications; but the biggest item is the writing and, of course, that would not be affected. Something more than that is necessary if Canadian publishers are ever going to be able to establish Canadian publications.

Present conditions are unfair to employees as well as to employers. I know of one publisher in this country who circulates about 75,000 magazines, who pays in wages $125,000 a year. If the 1,183,000 copies of American publications that come in here every month were produced by the workmen of the Dominion, there would be fifteen times as much paid in wages in this industry in Canada. If American publishers were put on a fair basis of competition with Canadian publishers, many of the former might find it profitable to print in Canada, and that would add to the volume of work for Canadian workmen. Our friends in the United States take very good care to guard their American workmen when the question is one of publication of books or anything under the Copyright Act. Nobody can get a copyright for a book in the United States until the type is set up and the book produced in the United States. If we followed that plan and required books and magazines to be set up in this country, of course that would be prohibition. I am not arguing for that; I do not think we need go that far; but I want to point out that there is a real market in Canada for periodical literature, as is proved by the fact that 15,000,000 copies of American magazines are sold annually in this country. If we could secure half the volume of that trade, it would mean a large expenditure of money in wages as well as making the industry somewhat profitable for those who engage in it. I have questioned some men who are in this line of business, and they estimate that, with proper encouragement, there would be a potential extension of this business to, at least, $10,000,000 a year; that is, this would be an industry expending $10,000,000 a year in Canada. I am giving that only as an estimate; but undoubtedly the industry would be very greatly expanded if it were possible to continue on any reasonable basis of profit.

All kinds of magazines are coming into Canada; but as the present leader of the Progressives (Mr. Forke) said last year, prime objection is to be taken to American Sunday School publications that come in. I have no objection to the morality of their teachings, but these papers are edited for American children. All their illustrations are drawn from the lives of the great men of the republic. All their heroes and heroines are Americans. The whole atmosphere of those papers is that of the United States. We should remember that these papers are perused by very young children. At the beginning of their lives, they are taught American ideas instead of Canadian ideas, and this prepares them, as they grow a little older, to take up with those meretricious American magazines that come in so freely, and to make them the chief source of their mental exercise. Are we not perpetuating conditions that are calculated to Americanise our Dominion and to prevent the development of a strong Canadian sentiment, when we begin with little children going to Sunday school, and follow that up with Snappy Pictures, and True Stories and the rest of it as the children grow to young manhood and young womanhood, until they are fed on that kind of stuff and nothing else and rarely read good books that are available. Their taste is vitiated; they are unable to value and appreciate good literature.

I am not proposing that a subsidy should be granted to magazines. At the present time this government grants an annual subsidy of $50,000 a year to the daily press to assist them in carrying on a news-gathering service. That has been paid, I think, for at least three or four years. Therefore, even if the periodical press asked for a subsidy, it would have a good precedent for doing so. I think that money spent on the daily press is well spent; but if it is good policy to give substantial financial assistance to the daily press, would it not be equally sound policy to remove the handicaps from which our periodical press suffers? To my mind, having in view the value of developing a national literature and building up strong Canadian sentiment, the case for the periodical press is stronger than that for the daily press.

I should like to submit to the House another aspect of this question, and while it may be thought that I am straining the case a little. I do not think I am. What effect have these American publications on the movement of population? How far do they account for the emigration of so many of our people to the United States? What part do they play in making it hard for us to keep our young people here? There is nothing we want in this country more than population; the government spends large sums of money in order to get people here, and yet our population increases much more slowly than it should. I think we may trace this directly to the large emigration to the United States. We bring people in, they live here for a short time, and then drift across the line. They would not go there unless they felt that the opportunities there were better. And how do they get that idea? I do not think they get it from the daily press of the country in the particular localities in which they live. My contention is that they get it from the reading of American periodicals. The United States is pictured to them as a land of greater opportunity. Not deliberately perhaps, but none the less actively, those periodicals carry on a propaganda which finally convinces thousands of our best young people, the most enterprising and virile, that while they may get a living in Canada they would do very much better in the United States. When that kind of thing is read week after week and month after month by young men and women it is bound to have its effect.

There is no counter-irritant, so to speak. No publications are put into their hands to show them that there are counter attractions in Canada, because it is impossible for our publishers to compete in the volume of reading matter provided or the number of copies distributed. We can have no complaint to make if our young people slip across the line believing they can meet with better opportunities in the United States. We know as a fact that they can have no better opportunity there than in Canada, but the Canadian opportunities are not set out in the same striking and attractive way. That is what should be done in this country, and any agency that can and will do that should have the favourable consideration of the government. In fact, we need a little Canadian propaganda; at any rate we need fair statements as to the possibility of achieving success in our country. The Consul General of the United States in his report says:

To a large extent the Canadian reader of magazines depends upon those published in the United States. The advertisements in these magazines are perused with considerable advantage to the advertiser, as they keep before the public numerous lines of American merchandise.

I want to refer for a moment or two to the unfairness to the Canadian manufacturer in American magazines being able to present the claims of his competitors so freely and extensively in a medium from which he is excluded. All this publicity which the American magazines afford in Canada to the extent of 1,183,000 copies a month is denied to the Canadian manufacturer because it is absolutely beyond his reach to get it. Space in these magazines is sold on a basis of the total circulation, which runs to hundreds of thousands and in some cases to millions of each issue. Ninety per cent of that being in the United States and ten per cent in Canada, manifestly the Canadian manufacturer cannot get his announcements published in these magazines; he has to pay for two millions of circulation in order to reach 100,000 readers. There is one magazine in the United States which circulates in this country to the extent of 95,000 odd and its advertising charges are $7,000 a page. If the Canadian manufacturer tried to get into that magazine he would have to pay $7,000 a page for a circulation of 100,000,—some thing so preposterous that no one would consider it for a moment. But all his competitors in the United States advertise their goods in this country to 100,000 readers and it costs them nothing more than what they pay for their American circulation. In other words, this is excess circulation dumped into Canada after the American edition of the magazine is printed.

I do not know whether I am able to impress my hon. friends sufficiently with this aspect of the question. There are many articles of merchandise which could not be sold at all without large and extensive advertising; many depend entirely on advertising. And when we maintain a condition of affairs in this country that prevents our manufacturers from presenting their goods to the public of Canada on equal terms with foreign manufacturers I think we are depriving them of something that they ought to have; we are setting up conditions about which they have a right to complain. In this way our own manufacturers are more seriously handicapped than I can describe in their own home market. They have it invaded under conditions with which they cannot compete, and this reacts on their employees, lessening the volume of output and thus effecting an increased cost of what is produced. If a man produces a magazine in this country and his circulation is only 50,000 he has to charge twice as much for the magazine as he would if he sold 150,000 copies. All his overhead costs have to be covered by the 50,000, and if he had three times that sum his overhead cost would be only one-third as much per copy. That is a very serious side of this question.

I have had put into my hand a considerable list of resolutions passed by various bodies in this country advocating that some action be taken to encourage Canadian magazines. I have a number of them here, and while I will not take up the time of the House reading them all, perhaps one or two might be worth while considering. For example, here is one passed by the Toronto Women's Liberal Association.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is an influential body.

Mr. HOCKEN: This resolution reads:

Whereas the number and circulation of periodicals publishing immoral and indecent reading matter is rapidly on the increase:

Be it resolved that the Toronto Women's Liberal Association do strongly urge the appointment of a national censor board to inspect all printed matter in circulation in Canada, and that copies be sent to the Minister of Customs, the Postmaster General and the Finance Minister, enclosing samples of objectionable literature.

Here is a resolution by the Canadian Authors' Association:

Whereas, the Canadian market is now flooded with magazines, chiefly from the United States, which do not inculcate Canadian sentiment and nationality; and

Whereas the large amount of advertising matter in many of those magazines is detrimental to Canadian industry; and

Whereas this condition prevents the foundation of Canadian magazines, the growth of those which now exist, and thus restricts the market in Canada to the detriment of the interests of Canadian writers;

Be it resolved, that the Canadian Authors Association go on record in favour of a duty to be levied on the advertising matter in magazines imported into Canada and this meeting directs that copies of this resolution be sent to the secretary of the Canadian National Newspapers and Periodicals Association, to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and to the Minister of Finance.

Similar resolutions have been passed by the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Association of Canadian Clubs, and a great many other organizations. For example, the Brantford Chamber of Commerce has passed a very strong resolution. So, Sir, this question has been discussed in those circles which are interested in the permanence and prosperity of our periodical press.

May I point out another thing? I think an examination of the facts will demonstrate that the great majority of the best writers of fiction in the English language began their work of authorship on the periodical press. Authors like Dickens, Thackeray, and others first had their productions published in the magazines of the day. The magazine press provides a vehicle for the development of literary talent, and no other medium so good can be found. It provides a means for the young man or young woman having literary talent to develop that talent under the very best conditions.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to make a constructive suggestion. Perhaps it has already been placed before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), but I would like to present it to the House. I would suggest that a tariff be put upon the advertising sections of American magazines. That is a perfectly logical proposal in view of the present tariff. If any one desires to circulate in this country printing matter for advertising purposes produced in the United States he must pay an import duty of fifteen cents a pound; if he is importing white paper he pays a duty of 25 per cent. Here are magazines of from 150 to 180 pages, of which probably more than three-quarters are advertising matter, but because there is a modicum of stories mixed up with these advertisements the latter are not subject to any tariff whatever. All that is necessary to give our Canadian magazine publishers a reasonable opportunity for "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" is that the tariff now applied to advertising matter when it comes in loose or in a solid book be applied to the advertising portions of these magazines.

The figures which I am about to quote illuminate the situation very much, although they cover only four publications. These figures, I may add, are prepared by the Canadian National Newspaper and Periodical Association. If a duty of fifteen cents per pound were placed on the advertising space in the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal, the American Magazine and Good Housekeeping, it would amount altogether to $644,760 a year. The Saturday Evening Post would pay on each issue $7,540. And why should it not? It contains nearly two hundred pages, of which about one hundred and fifty are devoted entirely to the advertising of American goods—advertising space that our Canadian manufacturers cannot use at all—and comes into this country to the destruction of our magazine industry. The Ladies' Home Journal would pay over $16,000 odd on every issue because of the tremendous volume of its advertising. I submit that my proposal is a very fair one and I hope that the Minister of Finance will give it consideration when preparing his budget.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What postal rates do these magazines pay coming into Canada?

Mr. HOCKEN: They come in largely by freight. But the Saturday Evening Post enjoys our postal privileges, and I think about a dozen other magazines as well. The Saturday Evening Post has no more right to our postal privileges than any other magazine published in the United States. Although it violates all the regulations of the Post Office Department, it gets those privileges. Undoubtedly it should not come in here under postal rates at all. However, I am not striking at one publication, I am trying rather to get at the principle involved. I would suggest to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that he consider this question from the three or four standpoints I have tried to present: First, from the standpoint of the necessity of developing Canadian sentiment, the wisdom of providing some agency by which the aspirations of one part of Canada may be communicated to the other, and to try to make it possible by fair conditions for national publications to circulate all over Canada—throughout the Maritime provinces, Quebec, Ontario, the prairies and British Columbia. I believe there is enough enterprise and ability among Canadian business men to establish this industry if given a fair chance; but they have not got a fair chance under present conditions.

I would like my hon. friend to consider the question, too, from the standpoint of the manufacturers. I am not speaking for them alone, but when the enterprise of a Canadian manufacturer becomes successful it means a great deal for the men employed, for no manufacturer can succeed without hundreds, and in some cases thousands, of our men, being able to earn good wages and to maintain happy homes. In the interests of the men who are employed in those industries I would ask the Minister of Finance to consider the imposition of such a duty as I have suggested. In view of the fact that the great volume of these American magazines entering Canada consists of advertising matter, I hope my hon. friend will deal with it as he would deal with any other matter entering Canada for advertising purposes.

Mr. GOOD: I understand that a good many of these trashy magazines contain very little advertising. How would my hon. friend's suggestion meet the case these present?

Mr. HOCKEN: My hon. friend has heard the Minister of Customs tell us that he has banned some of these magazines. I think that is the proper way to deal with meretricious or suggestive stuff. It has been proposed in some quarters that instead of a tax on advertising matter there should be a tax of ten cents a pound on the whole magazine. I would be quite as willing to accept that as the other, but of course it is for the government to decide whether or not a tariff duty should be imposed, and if so, what form it should take. But if it is desirable to keep out the class of magazine the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) refers to, then a tax of ten cents a pound on the whole magazine would be the proper way to deal with the matter.

Mr. E. W. ROBINSON (Kings, N.S.): I do not intend to say anything in regard to the financial points that have been brought up by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), but I would point out that there is need for exercising care in the matter of banning literature from the country. We all agree that literature which is obscene or low in its tendency should be banned; I believe the law already covers that. But the hon. gentleman read a resolution that had been sent to him or obtained by him from some Liberal association of Toronto, and I was verw sorry to notice in that resolution the word "censor" was used. If I remember rightly, the question of censoring literature was dealt with some two hundred years ago or more by John Milton in his Speech for the Liberty of unlicensed Printing; if hon. members will read that they will find the question fairly well dealt with.

There are a number of things that I believe should be kept out of the country, but we must be very careful before we put any hindrance upon the free entrance of books; he will need to be an able person who makes a decision in respect to which the life or death of a book is at stake. The danger of attempting to shut out magazines is that in keeping out the poor ones you may keep out also the good ones, in attempting to eliminate the tares you may at the same time destroy the wheat. I doubt whether the adoption of the procedure advocated by the hon. gentleman would ever produce a Canadian literature. We cannot produce a Canadian literature simply by taking steps to provide cheap paper, or by imposing a duty on magazines or anything of that kind.

[Mr. Good.]

The hon. member spoke about the magazines failing, about their ceasing publication. The question arises, why? The people buy certain magazines, and I believe that if we had the kind of magazine we should have, it would be bought, and the question would not be asked whether it was Canadian or American. In other words, if we deliver the goods we shall be able to get the price. If these magazines have failed, it is because, as the hon. member said, some of them started a puzzle department or adopted a plan of giving away an automobile for every new subscriber, and so on. That would put any magazine out of business.

I wish to quote from an article I read in the paper the other day in which reference is made to an address delivered in this city by Sir Henry Newbolt. It says:

> "You do not build a great literature like a building of brick and stone that can be bought with money; you can only get it when a nation cannot rest satisfied until it does secure it," Sir Henry Newbolt is reported to have said in his lecture in Ottawa. In this pronouncement, there is a challenge both to Canadian readers and to Canadian writers. Is the nation displaying any restlessness in the interests of a great literature?

I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to that question. Does he find any universal demand for a Canadian literature?

> Not sufficient to interrupt the stream of normal life. But the public is not indifferent. It is reading more to-day, and better. Yet it refuses to buy Canadian literature if better literature comes from outside, and in every department of letters, with one or two special exceptions, better literature is coming from outside.

That, I think, is from an Ottawa newspaper.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the hon. gentleman not aware that many of the best Canadian writers, because of the lack of a market for their product here—the lack of any channel for its distribution—went to the United States, contributed to United States magazines and became American citizens, and that that literature now comes to us through those American sources?

Mr. ROBINSON: Certainly, I am well aware of that. I am aware also that some of them have gone to England—Sir Gilbert Parker, for instance. We can name a number of our writers who have gone to England and who have contributed to English magazines. But as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the question is, can we produce a great Canadian literature by banning other literature? Is that the way it has ever been done before? Go back to the ways of Shakespeare and Milton and other great English writers; did their contributions to literature come about by the shutting out of literary works from other countries? Shall we ever become a literary people simply by keeping out of our country the magazines, and so on, that might be an example to us in our writing? The mere fact that our writers had to go to the United States and to England would indicate that they were able to get their articles published in a better class of magazine. If we produce a better magazine in Canada it will be purchased in Canada and read in Canada; then we shall have an important medium for the publication of articles written by our own writers. I do not believe a Canadian literature can be created by taxing the advertising in certain magazines. I do not believe we can bring about the publication of good Canadian magazines simply by shutting out those from other countries. What we have to do is to encourage the reading of good literature; that is the best way to induce good writing. I do not believe we have in Canada to-day what may be called a Canadian literature pure and simple. We have to create a demand for good books. Why is so much of this cheap stuff from the United States sold in Canada? Because there is a demand for it. Are we to create a demand for something better simply by shutting that out? It cannot be done in that way. We heard our friends the Progressives lectured the other day for introducing moral measures, for trying to put us in a good moral position.

I merely wish to enter a protest against the taking of any action that would prevent reading matter that would be of benefit to our people, from entering our country, I care not where it comes from. Moreover, I am afraid that when you introduce the thin end of the wedge, when you give authority to certain men to decide what magazines shall come in and what shall not, you are putting a power in their hands that they should not possess.

Mr. HOCKEN: I may point out to my hon. friend that I did not propose banning any newspaper. I did not propose to tax any reading matter; I did not propose to keep it out. I proposed simply that the tariff now on advertising matter should be applied to the advertising matter in magazines.

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in agreement with the mover of the resolution, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), in regard to the questionable character of a great many of the American magazines that come into Canada, and I was very much pleased to hear the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau) make the statement that he was banning certain of these magazines. I have very great respect for the views of the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Robinson), but I believe we should ban a great many of the publications that are at present coming into this country from the United States. However, I do not find myself in such general agreement with my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) as to the remedy. In fact, I would take the opposite course, and in that respect I am very pleased to find that I have been able to convert the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) to my view as to part of the remedy at least. Instead of putting a duty on the magazines coming in I would take the duty off the print paper coming in. It is not that to which I hope to convert the hon. leader of the Opposition at the present time, but I was very much interested to hear him state in a previous debate this afternoon that he would like to see the exportation of pulpwood prohibited, or a large export duty put on it. That is what I have advocated every session since I have been in this House, and I remember very well that when I proposed it two years ago the present leader of the Opposition, who was then leading the government, had quite a good laugh at my expense. I am pleased, however, to observe that I am converting him to my view.

Mr. JACOBS: Is that a good free trade measure?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is why I laughed.

Mr. CALDWELL: I think it would help to remedy the present situation with regard to Canadian magazines. The publisher of one of the best Canadian magazines told me less than two weeks ago that he could buy his paper in the United States, pay the duty on it and the extra cent-and-a-half sales tax on the imported article, and still get his paper cheaper than he could buy it in Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM: What kind of paper was it?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Magazine paper, I suppose.

Mr. CALDWELL: The same quality of paper he would buy in Canada. That was the statement he made. While for a time to prohibit the exportation of pulpwood would work a seeming hardship on our producers of pulpwood, really it would have a healthy effect on the manufacture of paper in this country. We have practically a monopoly of the spruce wood of North America, and the United States must have our pulp. If they cannot get the raw pulp they are getting now free of duty they would establish pulp and paper mills in Canada, and it would mean the development of possibly one of the largest industries Canada could hope to secure.

Mr. BUREAU: They are doing that right along.

Mr. CALDWELL: I would like to show what is happening to our natural resources, in view of the discussion we have had this afternoon as to the depletion of our forests. I have here a prospectus issued by the Oxford Paper Company of Rumford Falls, Maine, dated June 1, 1922.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CALDWELL: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'cock, I was endeavouring to show some reasons why the Canadian publishers cannot compete with the American publishers in the publication of magazines, and in order to do this I wish to quote from a prospectus issued by the Oxford Paper Company, Rumford, Maine, in June 1922. They were issuing this prospectus for the purpose of selling $3,000,000 worth of stock to develop the pulp and paper industry in the United States. and I want to give the House what they quoted as the large or important part of their assets. The prospectus starts out with this statement:

> The company has been a successful manufacturer of paper for more than twenty years. It owns and operates large plants at Rumford, Maine, manufacturing book paper, coated paper, soda pulp, sulphite pulp and electrolytic bleach. It also owns all the capital stock of Rumford Falls Power Company, which owns and operates the entire electric and hydraulic development at Rumford, including a modern hydro-electric plant with a present installed capacity of 31,000 horse power. An ample supply of electric power and water for the company's present and future needs is thus assured. It also controls a large acreage of spruce and fir timber at various places in Canada, sufficient for 100 years' supply at the company's present rate of consumption.

It enumerates the different holdings which they have in Canada and says:

> The company's available supply of pulpwood is ample. It holds under lease from the Crown the right to cut and remove pulpwood and all forest growth from a tract of about 1,015 square miles (approximately 650,000 acres) in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. This lease runs for a long term of years in twenty year renewable period, the last maturing June 19, 1998, at an annual rental of $6,000. This rental is a fixed sum, regardless of the amount of wood cut from these lands. These holdings are virgin forests and contain, according to conservative estimates by experts, at least 6,000,000 cords of high grade pulpwood sufficient to supply Oxford Paper Company for more than 100 years at its present rate of consumption of spruce and fir.
> In addition, the company owns the right for 12 years to cut spruce and fir from a track of 55,000 acres in Canada, near the city of Quebec, and also has the right to cut spruce and fir from 125,000 acres additional Crown lands in Canada.
> The company has a further large available supply of spruce and fir and pulp through its one-half ownership of Nashwaak Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, which owns in New Brunswick a pulp mill and owns or controls about 359,000 acres of land containing about 1,000,000 cords of spruce and fir timber.

This is the reason I say that I believe the federal government, if they do not prohibit the exportation of pulpwood entirely, should at least put a very high export duty on it. Before the House rose at six o'clock when I suggested this export duty or prohibition of exports, I think I heard the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau) make the remark that it was immoral. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is immoral to conserve the supply of raw material in Canada for one of the most important industries in Canada, to say nothing of the vast importance of the forest growth of this country, in order to protect even plant life in Canada, it is certainly more immoral to allow that raw material to go out free and then to charge a 25 per cent duty on the finished product when it is imported.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not want to be misquoted. I said I considered the principle of an export duty as immoral, and I do.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am pleased that I did not misquote the hon. member, and I still contend that if it is immoral to conserve our natural products in Canada by any method we see fit, it is much more immoral to allow them to go out of the country free, and then charge a high import duty on the finished article which our people must buy. I said that I found myself in general agreement with the mover of this resolution as to the quality of the publications coming into this country from the United States, but I find myself at very great variance with him as to the remedy. My remedy would be to remove the duty, not only from the paper which enters into Canadian magazines, but from the printer's ink, printer's type, if they are not already exempt, and every other item of tariff that enters into the expense of making Canadian magazines. It is very important that we should have Canadian magazines. I do not wish to cover all the ground covered by the mover of the resolution; he did it much better than I could. I think we will all agree with him that American magazines which come into this country, not only contain literature of a very low type which tends to lower the morals of our people, but, as he so well put it, advertise American products, boost the United States as a country and, I think, are a large factor in inducing our young people to migrate to the United States.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I find myself very largely in agreement with the sentiment contained in this resolution, but I am not in agreement with the proposed remedy. Anything which tends to create a national feeling is very much to be desired, but it takes more than sentiment to create national unity. The mover of this resolution (Mr. Hocken) wants, I believe, a duty of some 10 cents per pound placed on Canadian magazines. My opinion is that we have too much protection of this kind already in this country on everything. If we want national unity, this whole country must be put on an equal basis as regards opportunity. Many Canadian magazines and periodicals that are now facing ruin, if that be true—and I believe to some extent it is—or who find it hard to live and prosper—have advocated protection so much that their own pyramid is at last tumbling down on their heads. The protection they have so long advocated has at last made the cost of living and the cost of production so much out of line, so high, that their productions are altogether out of line as to cost with that of those with whom they have to compete.

It is said that nearly 2,500,000 pounds of United States' magazines were carried a year ago by the Canadian mails, and that fact is used by magazine publishers as an argument for more protection. To me, it conveys the fact that there is in Canada a wide reading public, and did we follow a just economic system, that 2,500,000 pounds could be very largely supplied by our own countrymen. Only to-day I received a letter from the Canadian National Newspaper and Periodical Association in which they state that Canadian magazine publishers have to pay from 25 to 40 per cent more for their material than United States publishers, and this, in spite of the fact that a very large percentage of pulp used in the manufacture of book paper in the United States is the product of Canadian forests. So, we are in this country at this time in the position of supplying the United States with the material from our natural resources and paying duty on the finished article from that product. The magazine publishers' association really admit the fact that they are paying from 25 to 40 per cent more for the material because of this trade penalty which we have placed on that product. Were it not for this, it seems to me that they would be well able to compete against all comers.

Senator Willis, of Ohio, is reported by the New York Herald to have stated at a recent dinner of the American Paper and Pulp Association that Canada can produce mechanical pulp 23 per cent lower and chemical pulp 19 per cent lower than these can be produced in the United States. Why, then, should Canadian publishers have to pay from 25 to 40 per cent higher prices for their supplies of book and half-tone paper? We are in the position of having the raw material; but owing to this short-sighted policy of trade restriction by a protective tariff, we have driven the cost of production so high that we cannot make the use we should of our own natural resources. The Woman's Century and the Canadian Courier were forced out of existence by high production costs, with very heavy loss, I believe, in one case. I would be in favour of giving these people relief by the removal of the duty altogether from book print, and I would move that this motion be amended by adding thereto the following words:

By placing on the free list all material used in the production of Canadian magazines and newspapers.

Mr. JOHN A. MacKELVIE (Yale): Mr. Speaker, I find myself very heartily in accord with every word advanced by the mover of this resolution (Mr. Hocken); nor, since he took his seat, have I heard from other members who have spoken on the subject anything that has changed my viewpoint in the slightest. An hon. member across the way objected strongly to the idea of censorship of any kind, calling in support of his contention the somewhat celebrated pamphlet by Milton on the freedom of the press. I do not know that that is particularly germane to the subject under discussion, but something can be said for censorship. It may be remembered that not many years following the utterance of Milton, a vast revulsion took place in England at the time of the Restoration, and the literature of that age which found expression through the drama, while sparkling in many instances with wit and humour, was so lewd in its nature as to lead up before many years to a strict censorship which barred it from the stage. I suppose most of us in this House have reached such years and, I hope, such maturity of judgment, as not to be particularly affected by reading such things. Many of us probably have enjoyed the wit of Congreve, Fletcher, Marlowe and other dramatists; but we would not care to place them for indiscriminate distribution amongst the young people of the land. Those of us who can take enjoyment in Boccaccio would not care to hand over the Decameron to the school boys and girls of the country. So something can, after all, be said for censorship which we also carry on in a very sensible manner in conection with our moving picture shows.

But the argument advanced by the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) presents a new phase of the question. I do not suppose that it is necessary for me to inform the members of this House that I am a firm believer in the policy of protection as applied to our industries; and here I find myself more consistent in the support of such views than the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) can claim for his position. While he has frequently enlightened the House as to his ideas regarding trade, and has fulminated against anything in the way of restriction in this country, now that he finds himself particularly interested in an industry that is of great importance to the district from which he comes, he is quite willing to throw aside his principles and advocate that an export duty be placed on pulpwood. It all depends on whose ox is gored; that is the attitude of a great many hon. gentlemen in this House.

Referring, however, to the resolution moved by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), I think he so admirably covered all the ground that it is hardly necessary for me to enlarge on any of his arguments. But I may remark that if ever there was a time in the history of our national life when it was important that some factor should be encouraged and cherished which would have the effect of bringing about a unification of Canadian sentiment and of making conditions better known to our people both east and west, that time is the present. And I think no more important factor could call for support than that of developing to as large an extent as possible a real Canadian literature embodied in weekly or monthly publications.

The remedy suggested by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans) is that in order to give protection to this industry another industry which was built up at the expenditure of a great deal of capital in Canada should be sacrificed. He would remove the duty from paper irrespective of the damage which that would do to our paper mills in this country, giving no consideration to the numbers who would thereby be thrown out of employment, and regardless of the death blow such an action would bring to a rapidly growing and very important business. But the remedy which he proposes does not in fact secure the relief which those seek who are supporting the resolution. It is rather astonishing that members outside a particular line of business, who cannot be expected to have any technical knowledge of that business, should suggest some remedy which those who are personally interested in the business are sure would be of no effect. It is not a reduction in the duty on paper that is asked for by the resolution. If the supporters of the resolution needed that form of relief they would no doubt request it. On the contrary, they have a specific remedy which they desire to advance in behalf of their position, and that remedy has been well set forth in the resolution.

Now, Sir, I do not intend to speak at any length on the subject, but I cannot help observing that there was some force in one of the arguments submitted by the mover of the resolution in regard to the question of emigration from Canada. We have heard a good deal about immigration this session, and I expect we shall hear a great deal more before the session closes. In this connection I would read a brief extract from an article which appeared recently in the Financial Post bearing on this subject.

> Westerners are beginning to worry about the effect that articles in United States magazines are having upon Canadian emigration. In western Canada where crops and prices are temporarily unsatisfactory and have created some discontent, the articles in these United States publications play up incessantly and inaccurately the doings of Americans and the attractions of United States life. The natural result is that readers want to go where they think life is more enjoyable and they are going in thousands. Many of them are native born Canadians and Old Country people. Letters show they are not finding the happiness they expected.

The rosy picture placed before the readers of scores of these magazines has had its effect in this direction, I have no doubt; and it is rather a hopeless situation in which Canadian publications find themselves. Glancing through nearly every month a number of these American publications, I find in some of the best of them much to interest and amuse me and, occasionally, some information that is not easily accessible in any other form. But I will say that except as regards those of the very highest type, the average publication from the other side which is displayed on the news stands of this country does not at all compare in literary merit to the average Canadian publication. I am convinced that given a fair show and a free field, and allowed to develop as it should, it would not be long before a real Canadian literature could be built up. As pointed out by the mover of the resolution, there is no method better calculated to develop and foster a literature than serial publications in magazine form. That has been found to be the case in other countries and it will be the case in Canada. I am convinced that the elimination from our news stands and general circulation of a lot of the more trashy publications which are sold in such large quantities, and the substitution therefor of Canadian magazines of the type we now have, would be of inestimable benefit to the citizens of Canada. The cheaper magazines of American publication are incomparably inferior to the best of ours and will not average up even to the lowest standard of publication we produce in this country. I am not dwelling on the salacious aspects of the literature provided by many of those publications, because I admit that a great many of them are tolerably free from that imputation. Some of them, however, which are among the most widely circulated and pretentious of American magazines are full of literature of a very insidious and debasing type. I have great pleasure in supporting the resolution.

Mr. A. J. LEWIS (Swift Current): I have a great deal of sympathy with the majority of statements which have been made during this debate this afternoon and evening. I can very well understand that it is desirable that we should have a Canadian literature. But it is a far greater problem to say how we are going to get the Canadian people to read it. I think it would be a mistake to place a ban on any literature that is coming to this country, because the moment you do so you shut out to that extent the light from the people who desire it. It may be that the great mass of the Canadian people have not been prepared to receive the literature that we as a people would like them to read. But even if the supposed remedy were placed on the statute books, whereby we placed ten cents of a duty on every magazine coming into Canada from the United States, if the Canadian people wanted that magazine they would pay that extra ten cents. In other words, they would get it in spite of anything we might do in the way of taxation.

I fully appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that our literature is of great educational value, and that the kind of literature we read will to a large extent mould our public life. For that reason I would be very glad if our people would read Canadian literature. But at the present time many American magazines have a large circulation in this country, and the greater proportion of them are of value to our people. I do not need to mention any particular magazine, but I do not think it will be disputed that some of these American magazines are almost indispensable to us at the present time. Whether we in Canada, even if we had the opportunity, would be able to produce such magazines is open to question.

I have looked at this problem from a good many standpoints, and if the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans) is in order I shall support it, because I do believe it is a step in the right direction. I do not altogether agree with the argument advanced by the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. MacKelvie) that it would be a death blow to other industries if the tariff were removed from the materials that enter into the manufacture of Canadian magazines, because they are produced from our own natural resources. It does seem to me that our manufacturers of pulp and paper, having their raw materials right at hand, should be able to compete with our American friends who have to buy their raw material from us. For that reason I think the argument of the hon. member for Saskatoon is well founded.

I do not altogether agree with the criticism directed against the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) by the last speaker, namely, that he was inconsistent in advocating an export duty to preserve our Canadian forests. It does seem to me, whether we be free trade people or not, when we find Canadian business men devastating our natural resources and despoiling our forests for the sake of gain, and thus denying to posterity its rights that the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton was taking a fair view of the situation in advocating an export duty on pulpwood. Such a duty would at least be killing two birds with the one stone: it would assist our revenue on the one hand, and on the other hand it would also help to preserve this national resource.

Now, I can hardly see the connection between emigration and foreign literature. It must be admitted that although American magazines colour our national life to a large extent, yet we derive certain advantages from their perusal. But that reading matter in the shape of Snappy Stories has such a decisive influence upon the lives of some of our people as to impel them to cross over to the American side is more than I am willing to admit. The only reason why people emigrate to another country is that economic conditions practically force them to go where they can make a good living. Therefore I do not believe that merely by imposing a tariff upon American magazines we shall be able to stop the flow of emigration from this country to the United States.

I would like to see Canadian publishers build up a large magazine industry that would offset the sale of American magazines in this country. But we cannot ignore the grave disadvantage which they are labouring under at the present time. At best they must find their circulation among a population of only nine million, and this limited output renders it impossible for them to pay the high prices for articles and stories that American publishers offer to successful authors. As a result we find that many Canadian authors go to the United States, attracted by the higher remuneration which they can command there. To a large extent we benefit by getting better magazines from the American side. Of course, on the other hand, there is a great deal of trash coming into this country from the United States, much of morbid suggestiveness. But at the same time many people in Canada delight in that kind of reading. Why, it is sold on our trains. You cannot go on a railway journey without a news agent coming along and putting the latest number of Spicy Stories in your hand. And I admit that sometimes after a hard day's work in parliament or somewhere else, when you are tired and weary, a spicy story is all right.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. LEWIS: I am speaking out quite frankly.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LEWIS: But I do not believe the reading of this trash is good for our youth. When we consider the cosmopolitan character of some parts of our population, people not even with British or French traditions, the circulation of these trashy magazines is not conducive to inculcating in them ideals of Canadian citizenship. Consequently I was delighted this afternoon to hear that the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau) is willing to ban any reading matter that drops too low in the moral scale.

I hope that if this House sees fit to adopt the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans), it will put our Canadian publishers on the right road to success, and I trust that our great educationalists and others who have the benefit of the public at heart will see to it that in our schools, our collegiates and our universities our youth are trained to read good literature. We cannot legislate our young men and women to read the classics, but we can train them in the home and so mould their literary taste that they will be able to sift the chaff from the wheat and read the solid achievements of literature. It is only by cultivating a taste for good reading and building up a Canadian literature that the people of Canada will themselves be able to discriminate between what is good and what is worthless in literature and select what they feel is best suited to nurture Canadian ideals.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself in a general way with the resolution of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken). I fear the discussion this afternoon has wandered a good deal from the resolution, and therefore I shall ask the House to consider its exact terms.

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that measures should be adopted to encourage the publication of Canadian magazines and periodicals.

That resolution, it seems to me, should appeal to every member of this House, irrespective of party or creed. I regret—and I say this quite sincerely—that more hon. gentlemen representing the province of Quebec have not supported it. There is a very fine French Canadian literature of which the French Canadian people are naturally very proud, and I must say I had expected to see a number of hon. gentlemen from Quebec very quickly support the resolution. I regret also that hon. members to my left have made it a question of tariff. I do not think that the tariff enters very much into it. The main objection raised by the publishers of this country is that the American periodicals, being supported by a much larger population, are more attractive, probably, so far as general appearance goes; that they have a larger circulation and consequently a larger income, and on the whole can turn out a more attractive publication, and that they are pushing out of the market in Canada the admirable Canadian magazines of which we have quite a number. That would appear to be the general opinion of the publishers as set forth in the literature which they have sent to hon. members of the House.

I agree with other speakers that to ban literature is, generally speaking, not the best way to keep it out of the country, though it may succeed to a certain extent. I remember well travelling in Germany on one occasion and almost everywhere on the doors of cars over the entrance to buildings, and so on, the word "verboten" appeared. They were "verboten" to do this and "verboten" to do that, until one got very tired of looking at that German word. I do not think we should in this country follow that line of thought. I am not one of those who believe that we can legislate ourselves into heaven, or legislate the people of this country into heaven. Probably we would have a better chance to succeed hereafter if we faced at least some of the trials which beset us rather than attempt to wipe them all out. I do not think you can strengthen a child's back, for example, by putting a corset on it from its babyhood; and that is what is too often attempted in legislation. So that I do not believe in banning literature, generally speaking, though I have no quarrel with what has already been done in that respect; some of the literature excluded was spicy, to use the expression of my hon. friend who preceded me (Mr. Lewis), and might well be refused admission to this country. I noticed that Victor Margueritte of France, was the other day expelled from the Legion of Honour for writing a book which was a little too spicy, and I understand that over a quarter of a million copies of the book in question have already been sold in France; so that it is usually one of the best methods of advertising literature to say that it should not be read. There is enough of old Adam in practically every member of this House—possibly with some exceptions—to induce him to read any of these books. I am sure that if the Library should get a copy of Margueritte's "La Garçonne," the rush on the part of hon. members to read it would be so great that it would be necessary to have duplicate copies.

It has been pointed out here to-day that the value of the American periodicals coming into this country in 1922 was something like $3,000,000. That is quite an importation, particularly when we are endeavouring, or should be endeavouring, to lessen our importations from the United States, if from no other reason than that we would prefer to have our exchange on a basis of par. The following are the six magazines having the highest circulation of the American magazines which come here. They are not given in their order, but these are the pre-eminent ones: Pictorial Review, Cosmopolitan, Ladies' Home Journal, Red Book, Delineator, Saturday Evening Post. I should like to ask hon. members of this House this question: If through some catastrophe any or all of these six happened to fail to reach this country during the next year or so, would there be any real damage done to the people?

Mr. JACOBS: You could always read the Orange Sentinel.

Mr. MANION: I always read it?

Mr. JACOBS: You could always read that instead.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend himself always reads high class literature, so I am sure he would read the Orange Sentinel.

Mr. HOCKEN: It is good literature, anyway.

Mr. MANION: I do not know that I could always agree with that to the same extent as I do with the resolution of my hon. friend. However, I did not get up to discuss the Orange Sentinel; it does not come into this resolution, I understand. I was going on to say that I myself enjoy reading these magazines on occasions, and I am sure many hon. members do the same thing. But if any of them, through some accident, failed to come here, I doubt whether there would be any permanent harm done to the people of this country. It is true there are very good magazines published in the United States, and if some measures are taken to keep out of this country or to limit the circulation here of American magazines, some exceptions could easily be worked out to permit magazines of the higher type to come in without difficulty.

I wish to offer four main grounds upon which I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) might give serious heed to the representations of the hon. member for West Toronto in this connection. In the first place, practically all the magazines that the hon. member for West Toronto is aiming at are luxuries. If, therefore, some extra tax were put upon them it would simply be a method of taxing luxuries. Even my hon. friends to my left, who interject free trade into all these questions that come up in the House—even they, I imagine, who know by now, or ought to know, unless they are much more dense than I think they are, that they are not going to get free trade—

Mr. EVANS: I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is not aware that the Magazine Publishers' Association itself has made a tariff question out of this matter? One of the grievances they lay down is that all of the materials that go into and are used in the manufacture of Canadian periodicals are protected by a tariff resulting in the Canadian publisher paying from 25 to 40 per cent more for his raw materials than the United States publisher.

Mr. MANION: I am not trying to voice the opinions of the Canadian publishers; I am simply giving my own. But even so, that is only one of the reasons which the Canadian publishers give. I think they submit in their literature that the important reason why their magazines are not read as widely as they should be is that the American magazines have such a large circulation in this country. I was going on to say that even the veriest free trader among my hon. friends to my left would take the attitude of taxing luxuries, and the Minister of Finance, if he puts any tax upon these American periodicals, will be taxing luxuries.

Mr. JACOBS: Why?

Mr. MANION: Because they are luxuries.

Mr. JACOBS: Literature is a luxury?

Mr. MANION: Most of the literature of which we are speaking is entirely a luxury.

Mr. JACOBS: That is, the spicy part.

Mr. MANION: Some of it, I should say, is an injurious luxury. In the second place, my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, would be raising revenue. The figures given by the publishers' association show that the revenue resulting from a tax of 10 cents per pound on American magazines or of 15 cents per pound on advertising would result in a revenue of a million dollars or more—and I do not suppose there is anybody who knows better than the Minister of Finance that revenue is a very important thing. In the third place, it would aid Canadian literature, and I think it is the desire of every member of this House to do that if at all possible. Finally, it would help to build up a Canadian national spirit, something which I think we lack. Unfortunately, due to the immensity of our land, due to its various sections having different interests, our national spirit has not been developed as it should have been; to too great an extent we speak from the point of view of the sections that we represent. But this would appear to me to be one of the questions upon which we can speak as Canadian citizens without quarrelling from the standpoint of party or even of section, and we should endeavour to build up a greater Canadian national spirit in this country. All that is asked by the member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) and by the publishers is that some of the handicaps be removed. I do not care very much just how the Minister of Finance should happen to go about it, to put Canadian publications on the same level of marketability as the American publications. There is no doubt we have publications in this country, magazines which stand very high as reading matter. I will name only two of the best known; they are the Canadian Magazine and MacLean's, both of which have a pretty fair circulation in this country, and both of which furnish high-class reading matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member spoke of promoting French-Canadian literature and was surprised that nobody on this side spoke in favour of the resolution. In what way would the adoption of this resolution help French-Canadian literature? Does my hon. friend think that the exclusion from this country of French literature or the imposition of a heavy tax on it would help French-Canadian literature?

Mr. MANION: The question gets us back to the sectionalism of which I spoke a moment ago.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not at all. In what way?

Mr. MANION: I do not say that this would distinctly aid French-Canadian literature, but if it would, that would be one more reason why the resolution should be adopted. The reason it may not help French-Canadian literature is that there is practically no French literature published in the United States. My hon. frend should be the first, and would be the first I am sure, to endeavour to build up Canadian literature even if it is not French-Canadian literature.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear. But my hon. friend spoke of French-Canadian literature being built up through this resolution and expressed surprise that we were not supporting it. I simply asked how it was going to help French-Canadian literature.

Mr. MANION: I might point out to my hon. friend that there are a number of French Canadians who fairly often contribute to the English-speaking literature of this country, and in that way it would help French-Canadian literature.

Mr. LAPOINTE: French-Canadian literature in English.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend should have no objection to that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, but that would be Canadian literature, not French-Canadian literature.

Mr. MANION: I hope my hon. friend always makes it straight Canadian literature, and straight Canadian questions when he discusses them throughout the country. When I mentioned French-Canadian literature I certainly did not mean to offend my hon. friend, but simply to take the attitude of boosting the French-Canadians as well as the other Canadians in this country. My hon. friend will agree with me that to a French-Canadian, Canadian means French-Canadian, and the others are English-Canadians. I have read something of the people of Quebec and I know something of them.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am quite willing to accept my friend as a Canadian.

Mr. MANION: Well, I am quite willing to accept my hon. friend as a Canadian also, so far as that goes. I do not think either one of us deserves any credit for accepting the other as such. Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to enter into any controversy with my hon. friend. I wish to say in closing that I think the Minister of Finance will be doing a favour to the people of this country, will be doing a favour not only to Canadian literature, but also to Canadian literature of the province of Quebec, if I may change my phraseology, by doing something to foster the building up of the literature which we have in this country to-day by endeavouring to implement the resolution proposed.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): As an old newspaper man I may be allowed to say a few words on this subject. I am old enough to remember when the newspapers published in Canada had not been converted into omnibuses for the carrying of advertising. The old-time newspaper, which was a very small publication in its way, contained some editorials, a little news, and very little advertising. The difficulty with the modern newspaper of to-day is that it is so bulky and, to many readers so uninteresting. I have been ashamed of myself often in the railway stations at Montreal and elsewhere to see these huge masses of American newspapers coming into the country and flooding the English provinces more especially, for the reason that they are English publications—we are not threatened very much in that respect in the province of Quebec, except in the cities—and I have wondered whether it was because we had nothing worth reading in Canada or because American publications contained a kind of literature which was not produced here.

In the United States, as elsewhere, there are many things worthy of the country in the way of books, magazines and newspapers of the highest order. It is so in England, in France and in Canada, but I am prepared to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are publications in the United States which should never be allowed into Canada. Whether this is a matter for the customs, for the post office or for the Minister of Finance, certainly some of these publications should be barred from the country if for no other reason than the moral reason and because they are anti-Canadian and anti-British. We boast in the province of Quebec, and I know it is not an idle dream, to be very British, British to the core. We and those who came before us have proved it, and are ready to prove it again.

Glancing over the Hansard of some years ago I notice that when you, Mr. Speaker, had the honour of being Postmaster General you gave the British magazines a preference in this country to offset this flood of American publications, and I notice that from 1908 to 1912, to judge by poundage only, according to post office regulations, the number of British publications coming to Canada had increased from 2,000,000 pounds to 5,500,000 pounds. This was a great advantage to the Britisher coming to Canada because he was able to get his own publications, his home newspaper and his home magazines out here, and it was brought about through what the Liberal party had done some years before in bringing about the penny postage. That stands to-day to the credit of the eminent Postmaster General who was successful in that undertaking. It is unfortunate, for some reason or other that I am not prepared to discuss now, that arrangement fell through. Sir George Foster in the course of the debate claimed that this arrangement with the British post office was not continued because the British post office did not carry its share of the burden, that the rate of postage had been reduced from eight to two cents a pound in England, and that Canada carried the whole cost across the ocean. At all events the arrangement fell through, and that is why not such a large number of British publications are read in Canada to-day as was the case then. I hope if such an arrangement can be revived at any time by the Postmaster General, that it will be done, because if I judge the sentiments of the Canadian people we intend to remain British in this country. We intend to make of Canada the leading nation in the Empire if we can do so, and for that reason we want to seek our information at the fountain source and to get from England—I mention England, but the arrangement would also be extended to France of course—publications which are hardly equalled and most certainly are not surpassed by anything in the United States of America.

We have every reason to remain on friendly terms with the United States. Our lot has been cast alongside theirs, and we will continue to be on friendly terms, I hope, as long as we continue to exist as a separate nation, and that I hope will be for many years to come. But I think the Minister of Finance would be well advised—and it is fortunate that in this present case the Minister of Finance is a veteran newspaper man who is in a position to judge of the situation,—to avail himself of any means of increasing the revenue of Canada through the mass of American literature which comes in here in the shape of newspapers, magazines or otherwise.

These are not essential to the Canadian reading public. I am not in favour of buying the literature of any country if it is obscene, or immoral, or contrary to public policy. But when I pick up a magazine with 20 or 30 pages of reading matter and 50 or 60 pages of advertising—which advertising is used in a way detrimental to the manufacturers and business men of this country—I do not see why Canada should not obtain some revenue out of the advertising. When we are taxed to the limit to-day, in all classes of society, federally, provincially and municipally, we should find some means of increasing our revenue by taxing in some shape or form this method of advertising American goods in Canada through the medium of American newspapers or American magazines.

I am speaking more especially of the city of Montreal at present. We have now in Montreal English and French newspapers, well illustrated, issued on Saturday, which compare very favourably with the publications brought in from the United States. The advantage of circulation of the Canadian newspapers is that they assist in creating a national spirit, and we are all prepared to admit that if Canada is to continue to live it must be united. Canadians must come to understand each other better and cease to be divided by provincial lines. Those who came before us may have divided this country for the purpose of administration on provincial lines, but surely the day is not far distant when a Canadian will realize that the whole of Canada is his country and that he is not peculiarly a citizen of any one province. This national spirit can best be created, fostered and encouraged by publications in Canada which are filled with Canadian ideas and Canadian ideals, and its interests can be built up by circulation of its own as well as by publications from the Mother Country. In this country the Canadians have the advantage of two mother lands. We have what is called the Mother Land and also what has been called our stepmother land. However, from the literature of France and from the literature of England, Scotland and Ireland, Canadians can draw from abroad all the inspiration that is necessary. We must build up Canadian sentiment. The most powerful instrument to-day in modern times is no doubt the newspaper press. The newspaper to-day is the most powerful instrument in civilization for good or for evil.

If a way can be found of preventing the flooding of this country by that which is not helpful, by that which is damaging to it, by that which is permeating the whole body politic of Canada and creating imperceptibly in the younger and rising generation ideas which we should not encourage, I hope the veteran Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), will find it, with the assistance of the Postmaster General (Mr. Murphy). Whatever change is brought about, not simply the means proposed in the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans), but by all other means, either through the post office regulations, or by some variation of the tariff, I know that the Minister of Finance will feel it his duty to encourage the effort that is now being made to give to the Canadian people the intellectual food so necessary in the formation of a virile national sentiment, and nothing, I consider, is more important to the people than the newspaper they read day by day. It was said by an old philosopher in olden times, and I think the Minister of Finance repeated the quotation some few days ago—

> I care not who makes the laws of the country, if I but write its songs.

If you can succeed in placing in every Canadian home a Canadian newspaper, bound up with with Canadian ideals, striving through its every effort to make Canada what we want Canada to become, you will be giving that house and that family the most valuable of all assistance. Some years ago there was published in the city of Montreal—and it is still published under another name—a newspaper called the Montreal Witness. We did not always share its views, but it was an honest paper, and whenever one entered the house where the Witness was to be seen we knew what the sentiments of that family were. I wish it were the case now with every newspaper and periodical published in Canada. But surely, as between the two, there should be no hesitation, and I know that if the Minister of Finance can do so he will try, in a friendly way and not in a hostile spirit, wherever an American publication appears, to give an equal chance to a Canadian publication, and if he succeeds the benefit to this country will be very great.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg Centre): I should like to support the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans). It seems to be the only way of accomplishing the end which the resolution calls for. As for the resolution itself, while I will be very heartily in favour of it in the form in which it stands as an encouragement to the publication of Canadian magazines and the development of Canadian literature, I would hesitate to vote for it because of the interpretation which has been placed on it by the mover (Mr. Hocken) and those who have supported it. If a vote in favour of this resolution simply means that we are going to place a sort of a duty on magazines coming in from outside, it seems to me we are moving in the wrong direction. It is all very well, perhaps, for us to object to certain classes of American magazines. We have some literature that is below par in the United States and we must confess that we have some literature in Canada that is below par. There is certain literature that does not tend to foster a unified Canadian life. I think we all agree that we want to develop in this country that literature that does foster unity. We want to do everything in our power to develop a high type Canadian literature, but you cannot do that simply by putting a ban, or an embargo or a duty, upon literature coming from other countries.

We heard some strong words here the other day directed against paternalism. I wonder if we are going to submit to the paternalism that will indicate to us just what we should read.

I am rather surprised that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) should seek to enact a new sort of Index Expurgatorius—a Canadian Index—that will decide for the Canadian people exactly what type of literature they should read. It would seem rather as if, instead of banning ideals from the other side of the line, we should welcome them, yes, welcome ideals from whatever source they may come. We must recognize that just south of the line there is a great population of over 100,000,000 people, people speaking the same language that we do, people who have a much longer history than the English speaking peoples of Canada, people who have had time to develop a very considerable literature, people who have a certain class that is more or less free to do writing, people who have the same old English backgrounds, and to a large extent the same British institutions that we have in Canada, people who to a considerable degree have the same social ideals that we have and, I would say, people with whom, whether we like this or not, the future of Canada at least socially is inevitably bound up. With these hundred million people to the south of us, we must surely look for a development of literature that is well worth while. Presumably from a hundred million people, there are likely to come more writers than from eight or nine million people. Presumably from a hundred million people there are likely to come men who will give us ideals that are not simply the commercial ideals of which we are afraid, but ideals along all lines which we might well welcome in this country and use to our advantage. Think of the long list of high class, worth-while magazines which are now being published in the United States and which we could ill afford to do without. Why should these be put beyond the reach of the poorer people of this country? If we are to ban literature because it comes from the United States or some other place outside of Canada, shall we then proceed to ban painting or art or music that comes from outside of Canada? I should like to protest against a narrow parochialism that has more or less developed in this country. Rather, if we are going to build up a unified Canadian sentiment and make life worth while in this country, we ought to welcome the highest and best in literature, art and music that comes to us from the United States and from all parts of Europe.

Mention has been made of our immigrant people. This thing I know, that if we are going to unite all our immigrant people into a new Canadian type, we shall have to be more hospitable to new ideals and ideas than we have been in the past.

I submit that the only practical solution has been put forward by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans). We cannot put an embargo on ideas; we cannot by taxation stimulate ideas or literature. The most we can do is to make it possible for men to express themselves, to cut down the cost incident to men expressing themselves. I would vote heartily for the resolution, if it meant that this House was extending in some other way by some other method an interest in Canadian literature. I rather regret that we have interpreted the British North America Act a little too narrowly and that this Canadian parliament has had so little to do with Canadian educational affairs. I would rather like to think that this parliament might subsidize, if you will, the various provincial governments in making more adequate provision for education. We are told that two or three or four or five and, perhaps, in this province six per cent of our people get through the high schools. If the education of the people of Canada remains that of the public schools, perhaps, even that of the lower grades of the public schools, we cannot very well hope for an appreciation of the highest and best in literature. I trust that this House will pass nothing that will make it more difficult for people to obtain information from the United States or from any other part of the world.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to take up much of the time of this House. All that I intended saying has been so well said by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) that I feel it almost needless for me to say any more. I could very well have supported this resolution. I had not the privilege of hearing the mover (Mr. Hocken) deliver his address to the House. I gathered, however, that it was the mover of the resolution who introduced the question of a tariff in connection with this matter. I would like to say only this—and I say it good naturedly—I do not see why members to the right of me love so much to lecture hon. members who sit in this part of the House.

Mr. MANION: We are only returning some of your own medicine.

Mr. FORKE: I suppose they are doing it kindly for our good and perhaps we shall be benefited by it to some extent.

Mr. HOEY: Ultimately.

Mr. FORKE: Ultimately. I have no doubt we have some parochialism in this part of the House, but, perhaps, parochialism may also be found in other parts of the House. I am not saying this in an ill-natured manner, but many hon. members have a tendency to tell us what they think about us and what we ought to do on all kinds of subjects.

I had intended giving the quotation which the hon. member for Bonaventure gave a little while ago of the philosopher who said:

> I care not who makes the laws of the country, if I but write its songs.

I well believe the truth of that saying, that the literature of a country has certainly a great deal to do with the life and welfare of the nation which reads that literature.

As regards press censorship and censoring newspapers and periodicals that come from the United States, I have very much doubt whether that can be done. It has always been very dangerous when any set of men have undertaken to say what a people should or should not read. I certainly agree with the sentiment that nothing anti-British or anti-Canadian should be allowed to come into this country, if we can possibly prevent its coming, and anything that can be done in that direction would, I am sure, receive my hearty support.

One thing that struck me during this debate was the remark that has been made so often that Canada is such a small country,—a country with only 9,000,000 people,—that it cannot expect to have any great literature. I wonder if those who make such statements have taken into account the fact that the grandest literature that the world has yet known was written by the natives of small countries. England was a very small country as regards population when Shakespeare wrote his immortal plays. Dante was not a native of the Empire of Germany, but of a very small state; and I hope hon. members will not think I am too bold in mentioning the fact that my own native country gave birth to Robert Burns. Much as we may regret the fact, it is not because we are a small nation, a small people, that no great writer of literature has yet appeared. I think he is coming. He will come some day, perhaps, under very humble circumstances and from a place where we never looked for him, not from learning, not from wealth; but from native ability and genius will come the great literature of Canada.

I have nothing to say against American magazines. I want to mention just this as I go along—it has nothing to do with the argument—as regards reading trashy stuff, perhaps the House will excuse my egotistical way of talking when I say I do not think I have read much trashy stuff for a number of years; but after being in this House and listening to speeches I felt an inclination to buy something trashy and perhaps spicy and read it, by way of change, as a setoff to the many speeches we have been listening to, my own included. I have nothing to say against American literature. I agree with the sentiments expressed by the member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). If we could get some British publications we should have the very best reading and we could delve into the deeps of the best literature and find something worth while. It may not be uninteresting for me to remark that this very day at lunch I was discussing with my desk mate (Mr. Hoey) certain articles in Hibbert's Journal, a magazine of the highest class. I mention this merely to let hon. members know that sometimes Progressives do read what is worth while.

Let me say a few words in regard to our national spirit. I remember well when I came to this country forty years ago that it struck me as rather strange to hear people coming into the province of Manitoba always speaking of particular provinces, Quebec, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, and so on. The words "Canada" and "Canadian" did not seem to be in use at all. I have noticed during recent years, however, and more so since the Great War, a striking growth in the Canadian national spirit; and, whatever may be said in the House sometimes in the course of debate,

I believe that there is undoubtedly a Canadian national spirit among our people from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Whatever may be our differences, and although we may perhaps speak from a sectional point of view at times because our material interests lie in that direction, I do not think we are forgetting our birthright as Canadian citizens. All of us, I think, are willing to subscribe to a Canadian citizenship. I trust that in the years to come that feeling will grow and that our children will rise up with that pride in their nationality that they should feel.

I do not like introducing personal affairs into a debate, but as most hon. gentlemen know, I was not born a Canadian citizen. This fact notwithstanding, I am always proud to hear my children affirm their Canadian citizenship, although perhaps they are as ready to declare that their father is Scotch. I do not hear any one of them, however, say he is Scotch; they are Canadians all. So that one generation does the trick, so to speak, and there is no danger of any of our young people forgetting that they are Canadians.

I might say a word or two also in regard to our foreign population. I think sometimes we speak too disparagingly of those people who come from other countries and make their home in Canada. I had occasion while doing some public work in Winnipeg once to come into very close communication with a lady who superintended the children's hospital in the northern part of Winnipeg, and she said that the Canadian people in that city had a great deal to learn from the foreign population in the art of music and the entertainment that could be derived from that pleasurable source. The people who have a taste and a talent for music are well worth while and will in time make really good citizens.

Let me say once again that I have nothing to say against the United States. I believe that the future welfare of the world is to a very large extent bound up in the future of this North American continent. We find to-day in Europe trouble and distress, sorrow, hatred and envy everywhere. I do not suppose that the people over there are any better or any worse than we are. But we are placed in that position to-day that we can give a lead to the rest of the world, and I believe that this can be brought about by a perfect unity between the great nation to the south of us and our own Canadian people. I do not want it to be thought for a moment that I have anything but the most kindly feeling for the people of the United States. It seems to me that every effort should be made to develop that Canadian national spirit of which I have spoken. If the mover of the resolution had been content to introduce it as it stands on the order paper I do not think I should have had any hesitation in supporting it. In regard to its bearing on the tariff I find that the Canadian Authors' Association makes this statement:

> Canadian magazine and periodical publishers must pay duty on considerable equipment which they bring in from the United States and which is not made in Canada.

At least the mover of the amendment is willing that they should get that advantage by removing all restrictions on any materials they require for carrying on their business in Canada. I have no doubt that Canada can produce just as good magazines as are published in the United States, and I can realize too, that they are working under very great difficulties. My sympathies are all with the publishers of Canadian magazines, and I only wish that something could be done to render their business profitable and enable them to produce magazines that would be read by the Canadian people. It has already been said that you cannot legislate people into reading good literature. I admit the truth of that dictum. Nearly everyone will pass through the stage of reading light and easily read literature until he acquires a taste for something better; and once having acquired that taste he will never go back to the trashy stuff. Once a man has got to know what is worth while in life and has learnt the secret of true living it is not likely that he will spend his time in the pursuit of what is unworthy. I have been wondering in these days when reading current literature why it is that we never get to-day the literature that is likely to last through the coming years. The best selling novels are read to-day, and to-morrow are forgotten and pass away. Why is it that to-day you find the novels of Sir Walter Scott and Charles Dickens still standing their ground and read by countless hundreds and thousands? There must be some reason. I do not know what the explanation is, but such is the fact. Everybody will agree that no matter how popular a novel may be to-day, in five years it will almost be forgotten. We are getting no literature that will live through the ages. It seems almost a bold thing to say, but it appears to me that the world has become so materialistic, and is looking so much to the almighty dollar, that we are not getting the literature that we should expect. It seems perhaps a little bold on my part to criticize literature, but I am stating honestly the view I have.

Reference has been made to the Montreal Witness, which I believe to be one of the most honest papers we have in the Dominion of Canada. I am not going to say anything about the Orange Sentinel. I get it all the time through the kindness of my hon. friend (Mr. Hocken), for I have a fair idea from whom it comes. I read it and enjoy it and I hope I am benefited by it. At the same time I might say a word in regard to the Witness. It has been in my household for the last thirty years and I am ready to make the statement that I have been greatly benefited thereby, because I know that, although I may not agree with what it says in all its editorials, it at least says what it thinks and believes to be true. Now, I could support either the resolution or the amendment; it seems to me it does not make very much difference. But I think perhaps it is best to accept the amendment. The hon. member for Bonaventure took the wisest view when he suggested that the government use every endeavour to give Canadian publications all the advantage that could possibly be afforded and to encourage the reading of good Canadian literature.

Mr. T. G. McBRIDE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to participate in this debate, but it seems to me one phase of the subject has not been touched on yet. Before I left the West I attended a meeting of business men who were consulting one another as to how they could reduce the cost of living, and, among other things discussed, they spoke of the cost of advertising. One Vancouver business firm stated that their advertising cost them as high as 7 per cent of their turnover. Another firm stated that they could not afford to reduce their advertising so long as American journals were circulating on the Canadian side and carrying so much advertising. The manager of this firm, which sold boots and shoes, said that the advertising in these American journals had a great effect on the Canadian people, inducing them to buy the goods thus advertised. Now, if there is anything Canada wants particularly at the present time it is a reduced cost of living, and if a tariff on these American magazines will reduce the cost of living in this country, then I say it is the duty of this government to impose such a duty as will keep them out.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): The resolution of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) is brief and quite simple. It expresses—shall I say—a pious hope, perhaps he will prefer if I say a patriotic hope, that we may all be able to encourage Canadian magazines and periodicals. That is a sentiment which we can all subscribe to, and I want to vote for the resolution. But the moment we undertake to define the method by which this condition is to be brought about, we shall probably be divided in opinion, as the discussion has already shown. For the resolution itself I think we might all vote; I am sorry the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans) has not given us a chance to vote for it as it stood on the Order Paper. True, it is very general, it may even be said to be very vague in its terms, but a resolution of this type, even though it be not specific, yet serves a good purpose in opening up such a general discussion as we have had this afternoon.

As I say, I am sorry the hon. member for Saskatoon has interposed his amendment. I regret to say that I am obliged to vote against it, and I hope the House will not adopt it. If free trade were part of our general tariff policy his amendment would be all right. But it is rather broad in its scope. He is going to place upon the free list quite a lot of things —paper, type, ink, presses, folders and a large list of goods now dutiable to a greater or less extent. Well now, the desire to relieve the press of some of its burdens is one that may appeal to our sympathies, but if you place those articles on the free list you may do very great injustice in other quarters. For example, take the item of paper. Without discussing whether or not paper should be protected, there is a duty on paper. If you strike that duty off you are putting the paper manufacturers of the country under an unexpected competition, and they will be able to say justly, "While you are having free trade in the thing we make, you are leaving us subject to duties on many of the things we use in our production." If you are going to strike out a very few items in the tariff which stand alone, it will be found in most cases that each item has some relation near or remote to some other item. Therefore if you make all the items covered by the amendment free, you are imposing a very unfair condition on the paper makers, the type makers and all the other manufacturers concerned.

I am sorry the amendment is made part of the resolution. The latter is based on a sentiment which I rather like, but I do not want to do any injustice even to the protected paper maker. I think the duties in the tariff to-day in relation to the press are not ungenerous, and I do not think the press has much reason to complain. At all events, while I would have pleasure in voting for the resolution of my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) for, I repeat, it expresses an encouraging sentiment, I do not think the House ought to accept the amendment of my hon. friend from Saskatoon.

Right hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I was about to speak before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) rose in the hope that I might in some way influence his view. I have not very often been successful in that undertaking; probably I would not have been to-night.

I will ask the House to bear with me a very few minutes while I state with conciseness why I shall support the resolution in its original form and vote against the amendment. In the first place, let me say very frankly that I shall vote for the resolution in its original form, not because it is a mere expression of pious or patriotic hope. I shall vote for it because the mover (Mr. Hocken) embodies in his resolution, and in the excellent speech he made in its support, specific, definite, understandable means by which the encouragement looked for in the resolution is to be given. I do not see much value in academic discussions urging the government to find some way of doing something good, unless we have something proposed by means of which that goal is to be reached.

The mover of the resolution has proposed one of two ways. He proposes a ten cents per pound duty on imported magazines, or a fifteen cents per pound duty on the advertising matter contained in such magazines. In my judgment one of those methods or a similar method is feasible. I do not wish to get off into the safety channel of the term "similar method" at all; I believe either of those methods is the right method and will bring the desired result, and I do not think that any other suggestion made in this debate will bring it about. I venture to offer my reasons for that conclusion.

In the first place, I do not regard this as a question of encouraging good literature or bad literature, looked at from a moral standpoint. I do not say that that is not an important question. I believe it is. I do believe that the government has a duty in the way of discouraging, indeed banning, bad literature from a moral standpoint; but the way to do that is to ban it, and the government now has the power. That power has been exercised under previous governments; I have no reason to say that it is not being exercised under this government; but if it is not being exercised it ought to be exercised. If we admit the principle that all literature should be submitted to everybody for perusal, and simply let that policy take its effect, it will carry us to lengths which, if described, no hon. member would be prepared to go.

The only extent to which the quality of the literature to be encouraged enters into this question is this: By a policy of encouraging Canadian literature by the means suggested would we be likely to get better literature from the moral standpoint; or from the Canadian standpoint? I think we would be likely to get better literature from both. I think it would be better from the moral standpoint for the simple reason that in a country like Canada of a sparse highly rural population, the general average of literature that will appeal to the people will probably be better than in a great cosmopolitan nation of the immensity of the United States. I think that may be concluded without assuming to ourselves any superior moral attributes. That we will get a more Canadian literature goes without question ,and therein is the principal subject that we have to discuss.

Then, the question comes: Is it better to have in this Dominion a thriving periodical monthly magazine industry, or is it not? Secondly, if it is, can it be done under present conditions? Can it be done without some of the means suggested by the mover of this resolution? Now I address myself to those questions.

I first of all want to affirm and press home to the government with all the emphasis in my power that this class of Canadian industry is as important as any other class of industry in this Dominion; that it is not only important that we do have a Canadian monthly periodical publication, but that it is so important that the necessity of any other single industry pales into insignificance compared to it. Now, why is it so important? Well, in the first place I believe the foundation as a propagator of opinions in a country to-day is the periodical literature. I believe that in the United States, in Great Britain, as well as in other countries, the editorial writer to-day does not occupy the same sphere of influence relatively that he did in years gone by; in the United States particularly and in England to a lesser degree his place has been taken by the magazine writer, by the contributor to the periodical literature of the country. There is disseminated in the most thorough and most forcible way, and in a manner that causes them to take root in the minds of people, principles of public policy, and public thinking, and these things take their flow from the writers in the periodical press rather than from the editorial writer as in days gone by I do not minimize the influence of editorial writing in the Canadian newspaper, but I do believe that the influence of the magazine writer has grown immensely in comparison. Very well; the magazine, then, the periodical paper, is of importance in any country. It is of especial importance in our own country, and I proceed to give the reasons why I think so.

We are peculiarly situated in this Dominion. We are as yet a small country. If we were a small country, though, as England was a small country in the days of Shakespeare, then the reasons that make it necessary for us to adopt special means would not be present; but we are not a small country in that sense at all. England in the time of Shakespeare was the only English speaking country in the world. England had no competition, had no inflow of outside literature occupying the time and attention of her people. England had one language and one alone; the other countries around had their languages, consequently what market there was for the writings of Shakespeare, on the stage and in the printed paper, was virtually reserved for him and for his contemporaries.

Mr. FORKE: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question? He does not imagine that we have a Shakespeare in Canada to-day who is silent because of the great nation to the south?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am developing my argument, and I do not know that it is very far from the conclusion that the hon. gentleman suggests. If we had, and if he were of the same temper commercially as the Shakespeare of the sixteenth century, he would be in the nation to the south and not in Canada. I will take second place to none in my admiration of, indeed my reverence for, the Bard of Avon; I regard him as the father of our literature. Nevertheless, Shakespeare wrote for gain; he wrote successfully for gain. If he were in the literary field of this Dominion to-day, and if his object were gain, he would soon be a resident, and later a citizen, of the United States of America. Such Shakespeares as we have produced are there to-day, for the reasons that I will later adduce.

I was contrasting the position of Canada as a young country to the position of England in the time of Shakespeare. I do not know that there is any young country that is in a position similar to that in which Canada finds herself to-day. Canada has a population of 9,000,000; we are alongside an English speaking country with a population of 110,000,000. There is no similar situation elsewhere in the world. We have to devise our policy in the light of all the circumstances that surround us; and in all the circumstances that surround us that is the great one—it is so much greater than the others that all the rest of them are of little consequence in comparison with it.

Now I am asked, why is it necessary, in view of the peculiar position of Canada, that we should take these special means? For the simple reason that unless we do, the literature of this country will be largely American instead of Canadian. It has been largely American right through the history of this Dominion up to now. It is getting more and more American every year; it is more American to-day by one hundred per cent—yes, I venture to say by two hundred per cent—than it was ten years ago. Why is that? It is for the very simple reason that is at the back of the whole protective policy of this country. Now I hope hon. gentlemen to my left or anywhere else will not think I am trying to lecture them because I venture to express different opinions; that is not the spirit of any hon. member who has spoken. On this subject I know I hold different views from theirs; I have always held them, and let me say that I have never misled them as to what my views were. We in this country have a population of 9,000,000. We have a limited market because we have that population; the main competitors of every industry of this country are across the line with a home market of 110,000,000. Our magazine publisher in this Dominion can cater to a circulation that can be gathered from what? Not even from the 9,000,000; only from that portion of it that speaks the English tongue; or if he publishes his magazine in another tongue, from that portion of the 9,000,000 that speak that other tongue. He has a very contracted market indeed to appeal to; consequently he must produce his magazine on a scale that will not be wholly out of range of the market to which he caters. The magazine in this country that has succeeded most has not reached to one-tenth the circulation of the leading magazines of the country to the south.

Now, hon. gentlemen to my left, and the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans)—whom personally I respect very much and whose views I always listen to carefully—say, "Take off the duty, and we will be all right. Take the duty from what this magazine publisher uses in producing his paper. Take it from his paper; take it from his ink; take it from his presses and his folders; take it from all these other things, and then he will be able to compete, because he is just as good a man as the man across the line who is producing a magazine against which he must sell." Well now, let us consider it calmly just for a moment. I wholly agree with the argument, first of all, of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that if you do that you have got to march right on. You have to go to the man who is making the paper, and who can make just the same case on that ground as the magazine publisher can now. He can say, "Well, you took the duty off the magazine publisher's raw material because he was under a disadvantage. I am under a similar disadvantage; take it off the goods my workmen use; take it off everything that goes into my plant." The answer to him would have to be yes; it would have to be done. I cannot really explain to my hon. friends to my left how glad I am to-night and under the present conditions that argument is presented by the Minister of Finance and I am not put under the unpleasant necessity of pressing it home upon his mind as well as upon that of other hon. members. I wholly agree with that contention. You cannot do it while you have a protective system; you must maintain that system equitably throughout the whole country. We have it in this country and we are going to have it under this government the same as under the last, and it is right that we should have it.

But let us press that inquiry further. We cannot do that, first of all because it would carry us to lengths to which we cannot go. But we cannot do it because it would get us nowhere after we had done it. How would our magazine publisher compete? He would have his raw material free, it is true; he would have what little excess would come through the removal of the duty on his ink, and the rest of it; but would that put him on an equality with the producer in the south? Let us come to grips with that phase of it. Is there one hon. member of this House who, not having regard to his past speeches on the hustings, but consulting his intellect and his common sense, would venture to stand and say that in those circumstances the magazine publisher in this country would be on an equality with the producer in the south? Concede that he is just as good a man, has just as good principles, has just as much enterprise, is just as sagacious—concede all that; does any one contend for one minute now that he is on an equality? Why of course, he is not on an equality, and why is he not on an equality? Because his circulation cannot reach, no matter how successful he may be, one-tenth the circulation to which a man equally successful would attain in the United States of America.

Mr. GOOD: What is the duty on magazines entering the United States? I ask for information.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know, but for the purposes of my argument we can assume it is nothing at all. Why would our magazines be bought in the United States? Our magazines catering to Canadian circulation naturally are concerned with subjects of peculiar interest to Canada. American magazines are concerned with subjects of peculiar interest to the United States. Consequently, American magazines for that reason would have a tremendous advantage over ours in their own country, and, of course, they carry American advertisements too. There is every reason in the world why they would have that advantage. The same case prevails here as prevails everywhere else. The Americans can attain to a tremendously larger area of business and, as a consequence, unless we are given some advantage in the Canadian market the American is in a position to swamp the Canadian market and keep out of business his Canadian competitor in the magazine business almost altogether. Why is it after all these years that we have so few Canadian magazines? It has simply been because the advantage of the American competitor has been such, year after year, that he has invaded the Canadian domain, got his advertising over here, his literature over here, and made his sales over here. He has invaded more and more as time went on, and now we have less and less Canadian periodical literature and more and more American periodical literature. Before I leave the duty question, let me say this. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) said that there was a duty on pulp coming from the United States, and, as I understood him that pulp had to go first from Canadian mills to the United States, then be re-exported to this country, and that after being shipped to the United States it could be bought more cheaply than it could be bought from the Canadian manufacturer. What I say is this: If the Canadian manufacturer is discriminating against the Canadian consumer, there is a remedy in the hands of the government, and the government should not hesitate a day to put that remedy into effect. Of course, there are differences that could legitimately be taken into account, in the quantity purchased, for instance. If large purchases are made, probably a smaller purchase price might be justified; but for smaller purchases, if the American is given the advantage at all, the government has power under the law to take the duty off and the government ought to bring the Canadian manufacturer to terms by just that method. There is no excuse for discriminating against the Canadian consumer. I am not saying on my responsibility that that is being done. I can hardly believe that it is. I can hardly understand how it can be the fact. But it is the duty of the government to ascertain if it is the fact, and if there is discrimination, then the government should apply the remedy. Because there is abuse which it is in the power of the government to remedy under the law of the land, that is no reason why the principle itself should be removed.

Very well. Because of wholly dissimilar conditions there is no possibility of the Canadian magazine thriving as compared with the American magazine unless there is an advantage given in this country to the Canadian publisher. Why is it of extraordinary importance that this be done? It is for two reasons: First of all, magazine publishing is an industry the same as any other. It is entitled in my judgment to be treated the same as any other industry: it is entitled to the same advantage as any other industry in this country, the advantage in the home market over that enjoyed by its competitor in another country, for the sake of the men employed in the industry and in allied industries. In a word, in order that we may have it as an industry, it has the same claim as any other industry.

But that is not the major reason. There is a reason that appertains to this industry that has no relation to other industries at all. The magazine industry is one that contributes to the building up of Canadian spirit and Canadian national sentiment, and why should we apply our protective system to the manufacturer of cart wheels and screws and nails and Ford cars, and not apply it to the production of periodical literature in this country, is more than I can understand—and as I make that statement I make no particular attack or indictment against any government in particular. It seems to me that the reasons that apply to periodical monthly or weekly literature are powerful one hundredfold over those that apply to any other industry whatever.

Mr. HOEY: I think the hon. member is perfectly logical in the position he takes. Why has not this protection been extended to this industry before?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think I can give an adequate answer, but I will say this. I am not making this as an attack, as I stated before, on any party or any government. Under the late government the sale price of paper was entirely controlled until the courts declared that we had not power to exercise that control. That control existed for years, and I am pretty sure I am right in saying that under that control an advantage

10 p.m. was given to the Canadian consumer.

As a consequence, there would be an advantage there. Of that I speak with some diffidence, but if it will be helpful in any way to the hon. member I will be prepared for the sake of argument to admit that the late government should have given an advantage to Canadian periodical publications and did not. I am inclined to think though that through the greater period of its existence it did. I was emphasizing the importance of giving something in the way of fair treatment at least, and you must give the advantage in the Canadian market if you are going to give fair treatment to Canadian periodical literature. What is going to be the result—yes, what to-day is the result of the consumption of American publications in this country in the degree that they are being consumed now? Why, by the character of the literature of the country, by the spirit that animates that literature the whole mind of the nation is nourished and supported. What is going to be the consequence if the child in Canada reads the publications of Atlanta, Georgia, reads the publications of New York, reads all these literary productions that are inspired by American spirit and American sentiment, and makes that the mental nourishment of his life? If that is all right, if that is necessary on this alleged free trade or free literature principle, it would necessarily be right that they should also have free access to our schools. Why not let them also on the same principle provide the literature for the children of our schools, make our readers, sell them on a commercial basis? That is an extreme illustration.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But only by that can one make oneself clear to some hon. gentlemen. In a word, if government is to exercise no control whatever over literature, it follows that we must let the American publisher right into the schoolroom and let him there feed the mind of the young on just as free a basis as would the Canadian writer and publisher.

Now what I want to urge upon the government is this: we should make certain that the young writer of this country, whose thoughts are Canadian and British, gets an avenue for his energies and a reward for his efforts in this Canada of ours. We have too many of them across the line. I can name them on the fingers of my hand now. I know men who went through college with me who to-day are eminent in literary work, and I do not think I know one who is not a citizen of the United States. These men get access to these widely circulating American publications that can pay far more than any little struggling magazine in this country can pay. Put the Canadian magazine in a position where it will get the same circulation as that now enjoyed in Canada by the American magazine, give it the body of that circulation, and then it will be able to offer inducements to the young aspiring Canadian writer; there will be something to keep him in his own Dominion and the mind of the Canadian people will be fed on literature produced in Canada and animated by the spirit and aspirations of this country. Surely that is of vital importance to us.

There is one thing I know that will meet with the approval of hon. members to my left. On this question of the British preference I am ready to go the whole extent of their 50 per cent,—yes, I will double that preference. I am willing to make the preference to British magazines 100 per cent, and I will tell hon. members why. This is a British country, and I cannot speak in too high terms of the excellent speech in support of the resolution made by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) and of the good British sentiments that he expressed. He made as sound an argument for protection, without mentioning the word "protection" of course as I have ever heard in this House. There is no reason at all why we need protect Canadian literature against British literature. The more British literature circulates here the better. It will never circulate to the serious detriment of Canadian publications. It has too far to come and is too old when it reaches us. The difficulty will be, and is to-day, that we do not get enough of good British magazine literature in this Dominion, and Britain has excellent literature of this character in her publications. The difficulty is we do not get enough of it. We should have no prohibition or discouragement whatever of that literature, and should not interfere with the access of that character of literature to Canada. The prohibition of the Atlantic itself is quite sufficient, because literature, even periodical monthly literature, that is a few weeks old is usually too old for very wide consumption. However, having regard to the necessity for the spread of British thought and British spirit through this country, we are not going to get too much of it, though we put no ban on it, though we place no duty on it and though we have no obstacle at all in the way of it reaching Canada.

What we need to do is to give the Canadian competitor here a chance against the man who really to-day is destroying his business and preventing its success for years, and who is stifling the production of Canadian literature, and we need to do that now. How can that be done? I think I have shown it cannot be done by the method suggested by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans). That would lead us to extremes to which we cannot go, and if we went to those extremes we would be just where we commenced, and we would not have achieved any of the objects whatsoever. It is all right to pass a fine resolution about encouraging literature, but let us be practical. How are you going to encourage it? Those engaged in the business have devised this plan. They say "Put a duty of 15 per cent upon the advertising contained in the magazines, or 15 cents a pound or 10 cents a pound upon the magazines themselves". Of the two I am disposed to favour the first, for this reason, advertising matter is now taxed, provided only that it does not come within the folds of the magazine. If it comes by itself, it is taxed, but if you put some spicy story with it and call it a magazine, it is not taxed at all. That does not appear to me to be reasonable. It seems to me it should be taxed in whatever form it comes, and by taxing the advertising matter you also do away with some of the advantage that the American advertiser has as against the Canadian advertiser—an advantage very well determined by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken). In other words, you achieve two very important objects by a duty in that form. You do not achieve either of those objects so directly by a duty upon the magazine itself. Therefore, I am disposed to favour the proposition that we place a reasonably fair duty on the advertising matter contained in American periodical literature, that we do it without delay, and that we seek to attain the goal by this method, and if this method fail, then if we consider the goal high enough and desirable enough to attain we will resort to other methods to reach it.

Mr. ANDREW McMASTER (Brome): I did not intend to take part in this very interesting debate, but the speech of the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) to which we have all listened with very great interest, has led me to make a few observations, perhaps, in a sense somewhat opposed to those which he has addressed to the House. Apparently the literature of this country has to be encouraged by a protective tariff. Has not the result to the industrial life of this country of a protective tariff taught the right hon. leader of the Opposition how futile that method is? We have had in this country, for the last 50 years or thereabouts, a protective tariff, and in most lines of industry or manufacture, the protected manufacturers ask, not for less protection but more protection, and I take it if literature is to be protected by a tariff of 10 or 20 per cent, in a few years the authors and journalists will come before the House and say "Our genius does not afford us a livelihood, and unless we have the protection of a 40 or 50 per cent tax on literature we will have to go out of business".

I was somewhat pleased and interested in hearing the historical allusion of the right hon. leader of the Opposition. Shakespeare was one who wrote for a comparatively small audience. The people who lived close by spoke different languages, and that is where his success lies. Might I point out to my right hon. friend that if ever there was a man who borrowed from contemporary literature in his day, or from literature which shortly before had been prevalent in other countries, it was the same divine William Shakespeare. Take his plays Romeo and Juliet, the Two Gentlemen of Verona. Did he not get his plots from Italy? When he wrote his immortal Hamlet, was it not from Denmark that he drew the theme of his drama? I would recommend my hon. friend to turn from Shakespeare to the other great contemporary, or almost contemporary, John Milton, and there he will learn that literature, that the intelligence of a nation and that the creation of a human soul are not propagated or helped by the commercial 10 per cent or 20 per cent, but that if there is anything under which genius flourishes it is liberty and the air of freedom, and not a protective tariff or adventitious aids of that sort.

How is a nation developed? My hon. friend is anxious to have a Canadian spirit in this country. I am anxious too, but perhaps we would proceed by different methods in endeavouring to arrive at the desired result. I do say that we could arouse a Canadian spirit in this country first of all by teaching the boys and the girls and the men and the women of Canada that we should be Canadians first and all the time; that this country is the country to which we owe our first allegiance and that there is in the world no other country which has a greater claim over us than this country in which we live; in which our children have been born and in which we hope to lay our bones when we pass to the other side.

[Mr. McMaster.]

May I point out to the leader of the Opposition and to all those who agree with him, that to expect to keep out American magazine literature in this country by a 10 per cent or a 15 per cent tariff on advertising matter is just about as likely to succeed as Mrs. Partington when she tried to keep away the waves that were coming on the advancing tide. The leader of the Opposition, if he really believes in his theory, is the modern King Canute who sat by the seaside and told the waves not to advance any further. This magazine business is not on a commercial basis at all. It is the advertising that pays for those magazines.

Mr. HOCKEN: Is that not commercial?

Mr. STEVENS: That is literature.

Mr. McMASTER: No, it is not literature. We have been talking about literature so much that it might be as well if we had a definition of literature. There are books for the moment and books for all time, and books for all time compose literature and the other things are not literature. What makes the American magazine circulate so much in Canada is the fact that the Canadian people like to read the stories which are in those magazines and one reason why the stories are good is because there is a great deal of advertising in those magazines and the publishers are able to pay very large sums of money for those stories and to command the best writers. I do not think, whether we like to do this or not, any ten or fifteen per cent tariff will affect that situation. If Canada is to have a great magazine literature and if Canadian literary genius is to be developed, it is not going to be developed in that way. Of that I am quite positive. But there is one suggestion I have as to the development of a Canadian national spirit and as to the growth of Canadian periodical literature. It is this, that our papers should not appeal only to one class or one section or one province in the country. How splendid it would be, for instance, if that journal, conducted by a distinguished member of this House, printed one page in French! How it might add to its circulation in provinces other than Ontario and what a help it might be to the development of a true Canadian patriotic sentiment that would cut right across the division of races and provinces and even all ecclesiastical differences, I will not call that religion!

What about this amendment? I am extremely sympathetic with the idea of the amendment; but I am afraid that when we go to reform the tariff, we shall not be able to reform it fairly or reasonably by picking out just a few things of this sort in a discussion of this kind. The tariff will have to be amended; I believe the imperative interests of this country demand that it should be reduced; but it should be reduced, it seems to me only after a careful examination of the whole field, and I am inclined to the opinion that although I am deeply sympathetic with this amendment, it is not the proper way to go about this business.

Let me say just this to those who, after seeing shoes taxed and stockings taxed and clothes taxed and hats taxed, now propose to tax even the magazine which we take to while away a pleasant hour—you may make a logical argument from the protectionist point of view for taxing the people of Canada in order to encourage the native production of magazines, but there is one thing which should remain untaxed and that is the free flow of ideas into a country. That is something that we should not tax even if we are protectionists. May I say this, that any industry that cannot stand on its own feet in a country is commercially not an asset, but a liability to that country, because the producers of a country who are carrying the burden, have to carry just so much larger a burden. The danger in Canada—and it is a very real danger, is though the friends sitting in the left hand corner of the chamber, do not seem to realize it—that if you impose this burden of maintaining a non-economic industry and that burden of encouraging and producing and forcing into economic life another non-economic industry, you may make the burden too heavy for the industries which are really economic. That is a real danger to this country. There was a cartoon which someone told me about the other day. The German goose was being held by a French soldier and the French soldier was pressing its neck and saying: "Lay, confound you, lay." But that is the position in which the natural producers of this country are more and more getting into with the burden which the non-economic industries of this country are placing upon them. They are getting into a position of saying: "We won't lay."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It would be very interesting if the hon. gentleman would tell us, why he says: "more and more" every day.

Mr. McMASTER: I would say that "Every day, in every way, our protectionists are getting greedier and greedier." We have had an interesting speech from the leader of the Opposition. Every journalist, every magazine writer, who hopes for better things under a protectionist tariff, every magazine proprietor who sees great profits flowing in when 10 per cent is put on his competitor from the United States will no doubt echo and spread over the Dominion what the right hon. gentleman has said. But after all, it is founded upon a fallacy and when I hear—because I was not in this House years ago—the echoes of the speeches, those strong low tariff speeches, that the leader of the Opposition made for lower taxes on implements of production coming into this country, I have a sort of sneaking feeling that in his heart he agrees more with me than he does with himself.

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (West Toronto): Mr. Speaker, just a few words before we vote. I think the remarks that were made by the leader of the Agrarian party (Mr. Forke) as to the dullness of speeches in this House have had the effect of brightening up this particular debate. Certainly, since he spoke, there has been a little more pep in it than there was in the earlier part of the day.

Let me express my gratification at, and deep appreciation of, the temper of the speech delivered by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). He is an old newspaper man; he knows a good deal about the publishing business, something about which I think the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) is about as ignorant as he is of trade questions. The hon. member for Bonaventure was speaking out of experience and of course he was speaking wisely, and I am sure his contribution to the debate has been very valuable. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) tries to be facetious at my expense. Well, Sir, I do not think that need bother anyone; it certainly does not perturb me. Any man who stands up in this House and tries to discount the genius of William Shakespeare cannot, I think, be taken seriously by anyone. It is pretty late in the day to charge Shakespeare with plagiarism or anything of that kind. I am not asking for the removal of duties; that removal would not provide the remedy required in this case. I cited the fact that the publishers have to pay duty on raw materials; but I pointed out to the House the injustice under which they labour in having no protection themselves. None of them, as far as I know, asked for the removal of the duties on paper, ink, or anything else. But, Sir, they think that they ought to have protection from the competition, which is unfair, from the other side of the line. The American publication that comes here is dumped on this market and it seems to me it should come under the dumping clause of the tariff as clearly as any other manufactured goods that might be brought here. American magazines are sold in this country at less than the price of the paper and press work would amount to if they were printed here; and how it is expected that Canadian publishers can compete with that is beyond my comprehension.

I do not wish to go over anything that has been already said, but we have got to this point: the free importation of American periodicals means the forced exportation of the brains of authors and the talents of artists of this country. That is what it amounts to. Any man who makes a mark as a writer here does not stay here to serve a Canadian magazine. We cannot expect him to. Can we expect a man who has talent to write an article for which he can get $1,000 in the United States and sell it here for $100 or $200? And the same thing applies to artists as well as to writers. Any person in the magazine industry, whether a writer, an artist, an engraver or a business man, as soon as he demonstrates his capacity in his particular line, is taken over the border by reason of the enormous circulations and revenues which the American publications enjoy. It is only about a year and a half ago that the man who was editing the most largely circulated paper in this country was taken off that paper, by a salary twice as large to go to Philadelphia. I am speaking not of a writer particularly, but an editor; and there is a marked distinction. And that applies to every man on a Canadian magazine. Just in proportion to the ability that Canadians display is the speed with which they go over the line and assist in producing magazines that come into this country and make it impossible for Canadian publishers to compete. If there is any industry in this country that should be protected it is the one that will teach the people to be Canadians and will try to interpret one province to another, using the talents of Canadians to develop Canadian ideals and a Canadian sentiment from one end of the country to the other.

Amendment negatived.

Main motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF RULES

Mr. J. FRED JOHNSTON (Last Mountain) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House a special committee of eleven members be appointed to inquire jointly with Mr. Speaker into the advisability of adopting a rule of the House which will provide that an amendment to an amendment be allowed on the motion that the Speaker leave the Chair for the House to resolve itself into committee of supply or ways and means; with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution that it is a very important departure from old parliamentary practice, and I do not think it should be adopted hurriedly. The matter might at a later day be referred to the committee on rules and be considered in connection with other rules, but I would ask my hon. friend not to press his resolution to-night. This is an old established practice of parliament, and although there may be reasons for a change, I do not think the practice should be changed without much more deliberation than we are able to give it to-night.

Mr. J. FRED JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): Mr. Speaker, that is just the reason we are moving for a special committee. We understand it to be a matter of some importance, and therefore we thought it best to move in this way. Of course, if it will meet with the wishes of the leader of the House at the moment (Mr. Fielding) that the resolution should stand for the time being, I defer to his request.

Mr. FIELDING: Thank you.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

HALIBUT FISHERIES TREATY WITH UNITED STATES

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Before public Bills and Orders are called, I observe that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) is back from his trip to Washington. I hope by this time the ways of secret diplomacy have been arrested and that we may know the purpose of the trip and what results were accomplished.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Yes. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) is not in his place, but the request of the right hon. gentleman is quite reasonable, and I hope at the next session we will be able to give him some information on the subject. At all events the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be consulted in the meantime.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

On the Order, for resuming the debate on the motion of Mr. Neill for the second reading of Bill No. 6, respecting Immigration:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was on before the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) advised the House that he would bring down a bill dealing with a kindred subject, and it was then tacitly understood that this matter should stand until that bill had received some consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

Tuesday, March 6, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

THE BANK ACT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Can the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) kindly give the House any information as to when a bill dealing with the revision of the Bank Act will be brought down?

HALIBUT FISHERIES—TREATY WITH UNITED STATES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I desire to answer a question that was asked last night just prior to adjournment by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), concerning the treaty that was signed at Washington on March 2. This treaty is for the preservation of the halibut fisheries in northern Pacific waters, including Behring sea. It provides for a close season from November 16 of each year to February 15 following, both dates inclusive. It provides for certain dispositions to enforce that restriction. It provides also for the appointment of a commission composed of two members from each country, to investigate the life history of halibut and to make a report to both governments as to the best means of preserving those important fisheries. The treaty is for a term of five years, to be continued thereafter until two years after either party has notified the other that it wishes to put an end to the treaty. It will be printed in due time, but in the meantime I desire to lay on the Table of the House a typewritten copy of the treaty.

Mr. DUFF: Who signed the treaty?

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): As regards the negotiations in relation to this treaty, was there any change in the status of Canada in connection with the British Embassy at Washington?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will answer the question of my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) and perhaps the hon. member (Mr. Maclean) will draw his own conclusions. The treaty was signed by the United States of America, Mr. Charles Evan Hughes, Secretary of State for the United States, acting as plenipotentiary for the President; and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Canada, acting as plenipotentiary for His Majesty the King.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand that neither the name of the British Ambassador nor that of anyone representing Great Britain appears in the treaty, nor was any representative of the British government consulted as to its negotiation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The treaty is signed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, having full authority from His Majesty the King, to sign it as his plenipotentiary.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Is there any change in the status?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Were the contents made known in any way to the British government prior to the execution of the treaty?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, certainly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then my hon. friend agrees that there is no change in the procedure.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, my right hon. friend may draw his own conclusions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I certainly will draw mine, but I was asking the minister what his were.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This treaty will be considered by a committee of the House and by the House itself, and when that is done I think it will be ample time to discuss the merits of the treaty and even the phase of the subject raised by my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have another question to ask regarding the subject. Will my hon. friend tell us upon what decision of this parliament the treaty was negotiated?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The treaty provides for certain dispositions which were recommended in 1918 by the International Commission appointed by both governments—by the government of which my right hon. friend was leader and by the government of the United States. Among many other recommendations, a treaty had been prepared at the time in regard to the salmon fisheries of the Fraser river, and it was signed but was never ratified by the American Senate. Another treaty had been prepared but was not signed, and one of its dispositions was the very one which is now agreed to in the present treaty. That treaty, I say, was never signed; but it has been unanimously recognized by the experts of the Departments of Marine and Fisheries of both countries that it was highly desirable to enforce the close season, to say nothing of the other dispositions which had been recommended by the International Commission. I may say also that this disposition has been recommended unanimously by the members of the parliamentary committee which was appointed last session to investigate the subject of the fisheries in British Columbia. As to the question which my right hon. friend raises, I do not know of any treaty which was discussed in parliament before being negotiated. The discussion always takes place afterwards.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. minister. I should like the minister, before he comes to the discussion of the bill itself, to be good enough to look up some of his own speeches and those of his leaders on the subject of secret diplomacy.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not like to read my own speeches; I enjoy much more the reading of my right hon. friend's.

Mr. SPEAKER: Hon. members had better reserve any further remarks on this subject until the question comes up regularly before the House.

JAPANESE STOWAWAYS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): May I ask the government whether an investigation will be held into the circumstances surrounding the landing at Vancouver a few days ago of the Japanese freighter Taibu Maru with 29 stowaways, and also into the escape of six of these stowaways from the detention sheds at Vancouver? This is a very illuminating incident.

Mr. SPEAKER: No comment can be made at this stage on such a question which has reference to matters of fact. I would suggest to the hon. member that he put his question on the order paper.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

National Defence—militia services—annual drill, $1,050,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Are these estimates based on any commitments of Canada in regard to any war, actual or contemplated, in Europe? I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has made the statement that the policy of his government now is not to engage in any future war, especially in Europe, without consulting parliament. The House, therefore, ought to know whether or not these estimates have been prepared with a view to any commitment in regard to participation in or preparation for war on the American continent or outside of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not aware of any commitments other than such as have been customary in the past.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What part of this vote was expended last year?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of National Defence): The whole of it will have been spent at the end of the year. Some bills are not yet in, but some $800,000 of the vote has so far been expended, and the balance will all have been used up by the end of the year. The committee will find that these estimates have been, in the main, reduced a little from last year. In some of the items I ask for an increase and in others a decrease. In the present case I ask for an increase, because the extra $50,000 will permit us to provide fairly good training. Last year we partially trained about 33,000 men. This year we hope to be able to do a little better with $50,000 additional. On the whole these estimates for Militia services will be found to be about $63,000 less than last year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What training was done?

Mr. GRAHAM: The number authorized to be trained for periods of nine days and twelve days last year was 33,900. The number trained up to January was 24,531, and it is expected that the balance will be in by 31st March. Some of the headquarters and unit training is not yet completed.

Mr. HANSON: How does the number of day's training per man compare with that in previous years? I understand the men were trained eight days last summer.

Mr. GRAHAM: They were trained nine days at local headquarters and twelve days at camp.

Mr. MEWBURN: How many men trained in camp under canvas, and how many at local headquarters?

Mr. GRAHAM: I will get that information. I would imagine that a greater number trained at headquarters in previous years.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Take the ordinary military summer camps, how many were held last year, and where?

Mr. GRAHAM: There were trained at local headquarters for nine days 22,000 men, other than artillery.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I mean summer camps.

Mr. GRAHAM: There were trained in camp 8,851.

Mr. HANSON: What infantry regiments were trained under canvas, and at what camps? I am under the impression that there was no infantry training at any camp last year.

Mr. GRAHAM: The statement by districts is rather lengthy, but I will give the committee particulars for military district No. 1. They are as follows:

x As specially authorized.

Those are the particulars for only one district. There are thirteen districts.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How many men were at the annual camp at Carling Heights—a thousand? —two hundred and fifty? It was a very small camp.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will have to get those figures for my hon. friend.

Mr. HANSON: I would like similar figures for Aldershot and Camp Sussex. I understand there were very few men at either place.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The comment that one hears in regard to the annual drill as performed in Canada last year is that the million dollars which parliament appropriated for that purpose was very largely wasted. Very little drill has been performed. The camps are hardly recognizable compared with the camps that were held in years gone by. A system has been established, and perhaps a good one too, of drilling volunteer units at their local headquarters. Instead of turning them out to annual camp they are permitted to do their annual drill periodically throughout the whole year. That no doubt is a good system. But wherever I have been, and particularly in Ontario, the comment I hear on every hand is that the old time enthusiasm for militia service is, not gradually but rapidly, disappearing, and that little or no encouragement has been given to it by the government. There is no doubt, from the comment we hear in this House, that if the service were to be blotted out altogether a number of hon. members would applaud the proposal.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Now, that is not my view of the situation, and I am satisfied that it is not the view of the vast majority of the people of the Dominion.

An hon. MEMBER: You are mistaken.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But in regard to militia training we have started to go down hill, and during the past twelve months we have gone down so rapidly that it now becomes a question whether the expenditure of a million dollars of the people's money on such training as was given last year is not an absolute waste. There come times, even in the history of this peaceable land, when we call on the militia; in fact, only a few months ago this government had to call upon the militia in various parts of Canada and send them down to the Maritime provinces to preserve law and order. They were not able to get a sufficient military force in Nova Scotia; they came up to Montreal, to Kingston, to Toronto, to London, before they could get enough men to send to the Maritime provinces.

Mr. POWER: Does the hon. gentleman think that if training had been going on in the immediate vicinity of Sydney at the time of the strike, it would have been judicious for the government to send men from that training camp to the scene of the strike?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not see any reason why they should not do so.

Mr. POWER: Would the hon. gentleman himself have done it?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The militia of Canada is essentially a loyal body of men who are in favour of the preservation of law and order. It has been for that purpose very largely that the militia of Canada has been maintained since Canada became a country. The minister to-day comes forward and asks for $50,000 more to continue his annual training. Last year his first proposal was to have $1,400,000 appropriated for this purpose, but a disturbance arose among his followers on the question and he moved a reduction of $400,000. The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) was himself active last session in endeavouring to bring about a reduction of the vote far below the million-dollar point, but—probably after a caucus or a conference of some kind with the minister—he yielded and the amount was allowed to stand at $1,000,000. For anything that is before the House to-day, and for all the training that took place in Canada last year, $1,000,000 should be ample. The minister has not, in my hearing at all events, justified his proposal to increase the amount this year by $50,000. It is apparent to anybody who goes about Ontario—I do not speak for other provinces—that there is a lack of enthusiasm among militiamen themselves in regard to military training and military organization; they feel that instead of being encouraged they have been discouraged by this government. That may be the will of this House of Commons, but in my judgment it is a great mistake. We should keep up an establishment at least equal to that which we maintained in pre-war days. In those days there was no charge in this country of militarism; I never heard it, if there was any. If we keep up the same establishment and give the same class of training as we did three, four or five years before the war, the military spirit will be maintained and the enthusiasm of the militia organization stimulated. But you have not that condition to-day; the manner in which the subject has been handled by the government and by this House has brought about a reduction of enthusiasm and a depreciation in the value of our military organization. We find ourselves, as we did last fall, in this pass: that where trouble of any kind is threatened, even on a minor scale, it becomes necessary to scour the country as far as London to get a handful of men to send to the East to quell a disturbance, or at least to keep the peace. If the old spirit existed; if the old militia units were organized and received proper training and encouragement, men would have been available in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick for all necessary purposes. Let us get back to the old basis of training. The minister says he trains 33,000 men. That is a fair number, if the training amounted to anything. But the men come in in small driblets, a few at a time; they turn out at local headquarters and indulge, I suppose, in a good time for an hour or two and report it as drill. It is the best they can do. The men cannot be got; they cannot be induced to enlist in the various units; consequently the units are far below strength and both officers and men are discouraged. Unless the minister takes some steps to bring about changed conditions, the whole military spirit in the country is going to die out.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is something in what my hon. friend says; the amount now asked is smaller than the appropriation in pre-war days. But I would point out that we are asking for an amount which is within $109,000 of the amount spent in the last year my hon. friend was in office. The reports from my officers indicate that the training last year was just as perfect as it was the year before. The cost of living may be going down a bit, and that may account for the decrease. I must take exception to my hon. friend's statement that the militia men are not enthusiastic; unless the officers all over Canada are deceiving me, the condition is very much the reverse. I visited a good many of the headquarters this year and I found great enthusiasm prevailing. The majority of the officers understand that we have to get back to pre-war conditions, that we have to cut down the expenditure in this connection as in connection with all other services; and I feel that in doing that I am serving the country and not neglecting any interest. My hon. friend referred to the fact that the department had to go to London and elsewhere to get troops for a certain occasion. The law provides that in a case of that kind you must take the permanent force. If we train a million men in the volunteer force they are not, under the act, to be called on, except for the time necessary to replace them by members of the permanent force. On that occasion we called on none of the volunteers; we strictly followed the act and called on members of the permanent force. If he were dealing with the numbers in the permanent force, my hon. friend's criticism might be applicable, but the act does not provide that the volunteer force shall be called out, except in an emergency, and even then it is to be replaced as rapidly as possible by the permanent force. Section 81 of the Militia Act, dealing with aid to the civil power, says:

> The district officer commanding in any locality, if he is present in the locality and able to act, or if he is not so present, or from sickness or other cause is unable to act, the senior officer of the active militia in any locality, not from sickness or other cause unable to act, shall call out the active militia, or such portion thereof as he considers necessary for the purpose of preventing or suppressing any such actual or anticipated riot or disturbance, when thereunto required in writing by the civil authority hereinafter designated in that behalf: Provided that so far as the permanent force is available, a sufficient number of the force is to be employed upon the duty of preventing or suppressing such actual or anticipated riot or disturbance before recourse is had to other militia corps, and shall replace such other militia corps if so called out upon duty so soon as and to the extent the permanent force shall thereafter become available.

So, as a matter of fact, the permanent force is the force that the department, under the act, is supposed to call on in such cases.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend surely has not understood that from the section. It says, in substance, "Shall call out the active militia, to be replaced so far as available by the permanent force." Only to the extent that the permanent force exists is it to be called on. If there is not sufficient permanent force in the district, then the active militia is allowed to remain. The active militia is available there above and beyond the permanent force for the purpose of quelling a disturbance. It has been so used time and again.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not so informed by the officers of the department.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The law is there.

Mr. GRAHAM: The law is quite plain. If you have a permanent force available, you are to use it, but if it be not available, in other words if it be not in the district or close at hand, you can use the active militia until such time as you can replace it with the permanent force. That is as I read the act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And to the extent the permanent force is there. If it is not there to sufficient extent, you may use the active militia. This goes only to confirm the point made by my hon friend for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) that the active militia is available for these purposes. The permanent force referred to is the permanent force of the district; if not, why is the district officer commanding mentioned?

Mr. GRAHAM: The district officer commanding is in that locality. The officers of the department, and the act bears them out, I submit, are my authority that we are to call out the permanent force if they are available. If they are available, it does not make any difference where they are available so long as we can get them, but if they are not immediately available, we can call out the active militia until such time as we can replace them with the permanent force.

Mr. HANSON: Reference has been made here on two or three occasions to the occurrences last summer in the Maritime provinces, especially in Cape Breton. I think that in view of the panic that seemed to strike some people down there in the island of Cape Breton, some explanation is due the House and the country as to the circumstances under which the permanent force or that portion of the active militia, whichever it was that was called out, was called out. Why was there any necessity at all of having a large number of troops rushed into Cape Breton before there had been a single overt act of violence so far as I am informed—and I followed the newspapers pretty carefully at that time. Was there any panic on the part of the officials of the British Empire Steel Company? Did they ask for the militia, or who was it that was responsible for calling out these men? How many men were called out, and who is going to pay for them? I think all these are very pertinent questions, and I should like to hear something from the Prime Minister on this point as well as from the Minister of National Defence, because I remember last year when a discussion was going on in this House with respect to the Mounted Police, the Prime Minister expressed a very pointed opinion that only in the very greatest emergency should the active militia be called out to maintain the civil authority in Canada. There was so far as I am aware absolutely no excuse, no justification whatever, for calling out the permanent force in Cape Breton last summer. I believe it was an abuse of the powers given under the Militia Act.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not going to quarrel with my hon. friend about the Militia Act. I did not anticipate this matter coming up to-day, though it is perfectly in order, because I have to ask for a supplementary vote this present year to pay the expenses of the troops that were called out. When that item comes up I shall have all the information here, and if my hon. friend would let the discussion remain over until that time, it will be only a few days before we can have a thorough discussion of it.

Mr. HANSON: I am quite agreeable.

Mr. LOVETT: Why was the 95th Regiment in my constituency of Digby-Annapolis, ordered out under canvas at Aldershot last summer and a few days later the order countermanded? I would also like the minister to favourably consider giving this regiment drill this summer.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have not the details with me but I will venture the answer, and I think it is probably the correct one. It is the custom in the department at an earlier date than the estimates get through the House to notify the units that are to train, but last year the estimates were cut down to such an extent that many units were unable to train. I think that is the answer. I shall be glad to give consideration to what my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. SHAW: Would the minister tell us what proportion of the amount last year was expended on drill for infantry units, and then indicate the amount that was sent for drill purposes among artillery units, machine gun units and other branches of the service?

Mr. GRAHAM: I can get that information for my hon. friend. The details I have here are not separated in that way.

Mr. SHAW: I wanted the information for a specific purpose. I find myself in hearty accord with some of the remarks made by the hon. member for South Wellington. I do not agree with him, however, in his view that a larger amount of money should be expended for this particular purpose. I think that this money is largely wasted. In order to determine the value of this training I think you have to take into consideration the different branches of the service that are trained. As I recall pointing out last year, the value of this annual drill so far as infantry units are concerned is practically nil. I think it is of very little value. If you consider the training given you must necessarily come to the conclusion that so far as infantry training is concerned, it has two specific purposes. It is either training men for war purposes, or training them so that they will be able to carry out any functions they may be called upon to perform under the provisions of the Militia Act in aid of the civil power. That latter, fortunately, very seldom becomes the unpleasant duty of any militia unit in this country.

With regard to training men for war service, the important thing is the physical training. It is conceded, and was conceded last year, that it takes a period of six months to train a man for war. Now all the training any infantry unit needs for that service can be acquired certainly within a month. The great essential is to put the man in proper physical condition. That cannot be done in a matter of a week; it cannot be done in a matter of nine days; it cannot be done short of the six months required. It seems to me that under these circumstances the training for infantry units of the character which is carried on is practically valueless. However, with regard to the machine gun and artillery units and other technical branches of the service, this annual training may have some special value.

Let me indicate what happened last year, and I simply cite this to show that the training is not carried on economically. Last year artillery units were brought from the city of Vancouver for the purpose of firing a few rounds at Sarcee Camp in Calgary, a distance of 640 miles. Artillery units were brought from Saskatoon, and I think from Edmonton, for the purpose of discharging a few shots, and getting a certain amount of training, after which they went home again. That is not training men economically for these technical branches of the service. I am relying for my information on the newspaper reports, which I presume are correct. I see no reason why the man at Vancouver cannot take out the gun which he brings with him to Calgary, and fire a few rounds in some selected spot there, and the same with the man from Saskatoon. Why should it be necessary to bring these men at great expense over long distances, bringing their artillery equipment with them, and I have no doubt their shells also, just to spend a little time at the camp and then go back home to their usual vocations? It does appear to me, therefore, that it can be charged with truth that this training is not economically performed so far as the technical branches of the service are concerned, and that so far as the infantry is concerned, the training is practically valueless. It is for that reason, Mr. Chairman, that I desire to know from the minister the amount of this vote which would, in the ordinary course, be expended for the special technical branches. It was my purpose to move that the balance be eliminated from the vote altogether.

Mr. GRAHAM: I can give my hon. friend the figures in numbers of men as I did a few minutes ago. I gave him the number of artillery men—

Mr. SHAW: I want the figures in terms of money.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think I have that.

Mr. SHAW: Could the minister state the amount approximately?

Mr. GRAHAM: I will have to have a calculation made. As to the number of men in training the figures are: Infantry trained in camp, 8,851; men trained at local headquarters, including those trained in machine guns, 22,011; artillery trained at local headquarters, of which 2,329 attended firing practice in camp for 6 days, 3,038. That would hardly bear out what my hon. friend said that the artillery men were simply firing a few shots when they were in training for six days.

Mr. SHAW: Of course they were not firing every day.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose they were firing every day when the weather was favourable.

Mr. LANCTOT: Before this item is voted I desire to offer a few remarks intended not for the committee alone but for the country as a whole. I am not of the same opinion as the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), the former Minister of Militia, who stated a few minutes ago that the present Minister of Defence should go further and spend more money for militia purposes. I do not agree with that hon. gentleman; I ask the Minister of Defence, in the interest of the people, to spend less money for this purpose.

It will be remembered that last session I expressed opposition to the vote then asked for of $1,400,000. The Minister of Defence had to suspend the consideration of his estimates for about two weeks and then was obliged to reduce the amount asked for. That action on his part was not satisfactory to me nor to many of the people of this country, but I thought that this year the minister would do better. Under the circumstances I am surprised that the minister is asking for such a large amount; it is altogether too much. It is all very well for volunteers in the cities to go in for drill and to receive pay for it; but I do not see why young men in the country districts should at great expense be carried from one part of the country to the other for a period of nine days. For what purpose is it? Really to have a little fun—that is what it amounts to—at the expense of the country. It is claimed that it takes six months' training, at least to fit a soldier to go on the firing line. Well, if the young men are only trained for six days a year—although I have not made up the calculation—it seems to me that it would take practically a century before they could become qualified soldiers. Therefore, I am opposed to such a scheme.

I am a man of peace, as you know, Mr. Chairman, I have always been a man of that type, and as I am getting older from year to year I shall continue in that frame of mind. It is hard for me to realize that all the members of this House are in favour of training our young men to engage in some future European war. Such an idea is repugnant to the majority of our people, except perhaps the politicians. Is it not admitted by almost everybody that we have been virtually ruined as a result of our engaging in the last European war? I think we occupy to-day a very unenviable position, bearing as we do such an enormous burden in connection with our National Railways and having to support such an immense debt as a result of the war. For my part I do not see how we are ever going to get out of these difficulties. Therefore, when men say, in this House and outside of it, that we should prepare ourselves for a future war I do not accept such advice, neither do the people of the country. It is altogether opposed to common sense, in view of our past experiences and present conditions, that anybody should suggest our going ahead and training men and spending more money for some war in the future. That is my point of view.

I know very well that the so-called big men in the militia want money voted from year to year for military purposes and for the training of the militia. They want to demonstrate to the people that they are doing something, otherwise they would lose their jobs.

An hon. MEMBER: Who are those men?

Mr. LANCTOT: They are the brigadier-generals, the colonels, the majors and the officers of other ranks. Now the minister is asking for $50,000 more than we voted last year for annual drill, and $100,000 more for the cadet services. Will this expenditure be to the benefit of the country? I say, no. Whenever the need arises to maintain the peace in Canada we have to call upon the permanent force. If I am not mistaken the minister told the committee a moment ago that he had to despatch troops from the permanent force to Cape Breton when a disturbance occurred there. Why, I ask in the name of my electors, is it necessary to spend nearly $13,000,000 this year on the militia, the navy and the mounted police? After the recent war was brought to a close we were told that the last war had been fought, and that we were through with war forever. In spite of that we are still being called upon to vote these large expenditures for military purposes, at a time when the people are being taxed in so many different ways. Let me say, for example, that it will take a great many two-cent stamps to even begin to pay the $13,000,000 referred to. Do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that the time has arrived when this government should say: We are going to have a rest now in the matter of military expenditure; we are going to cut by one-half these expenditures for at least five years to come; and if in the future some of our boys want to go and engage in European wars let them go on their own account and let those who foster such action help to bear the expense? That is my opinion. In future, if I am still a member of the House and if anything of this kind is proposed either by my party, or by the Tory party, or by the Progressive party, I will tell you frankly where I shall stand—my policy shall be "Not a man, not a dollar." I move that this item be cut in two; that is to say, that instead of $1,050,000, one-half of that amount should be voted.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment requires to be in writing. If the hon. member will present it in writing, it will be submitted to the committee.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would gladly support some such amendment as that moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Lanctot), not because I want half that amount expended, but because this seems the only way possible to protest against the larger expenditure. As representing a Canadian constituency and a rather important one, I must protest against expenditures for military purposes. I think I may speak, not merely for one constituency, but for a large section of the labour people across this country from coast to coast, who almost unanimously protest against continued military expenditures. I notice that the items for militia, the naval service and the air force, amount to nearly $13,000,000. If we add to that the estimate for the mounted police force, which is more or less a military police force, although it is under another department, we have the enormous sum of over $15,000,000 which is being expended in this country for preparation for some future war or for some possible disturbance at home.

We ought to ask ourselves very definitely, as I said last year, against what enemy we are proposing to go. Are we proposing to keep down by military force any rebellion at home? What province in Canada is regarded as disloyal; what section of the community is regarded as disloyal, that we need to maintain a large military force in order to quell any possible rebellion? To-day we have had called to our attention the fact that the permanent force was used in the Cape Breton district during the past summer. I wonder whether that was a wise movement or not. I happened to be down there a few months after the occurrence, and not merely the labour people who were immediately involved, but business men, editors and others in that district were unanimously of opinion, as far as I was able to gather, that this was a very unwise move. I wonder if the committee is aware that the military were sent down there in spite of protests of mayors of the towns involved. Is the committee aware that a force of some 1,500 returned men lined up in opposition to the military, and it was only the restraint, alike of the returned men and, I am glad to say, of the officers commanding the forces that were sent down, that prevented a fearful tragedy in that district? Was it wise that men from Ontario and Quebec should be sent down to Nova Scotia to try to subdue a number of the very best citizens of Scotch extraction, resident for several generations, of Canada? Surely, there are some other means of settling our industrial disputes in this country than by sending our militia from one province to quell a rebellion of Canadian people in another province.

Are we preparing against any other foe at the present time? I would like the government who are responsible for bringing in these estimates, to tell us whether they contemplate any action against the United States to the south of us—we with our eight or nine million people and over one hundred million on the other side. Could we make any defence there, if defence had to be made by means of military force? Are we proposing, as the last speaker said, to take part in any future European conflict? Whether or not members of the government or members of the committee know this, a very considerable proportion of the people of Canada will not again stand for that kind of thing. It is all very well from time to time in this House to utter praises about loyalty to Empire and so on. Some of us claim to be as loyal Canadians and as loyal British subjects as there are anywhere; but we do not believe in some of the policies that have been pursued in the past in the name of the British Empire or in the name of the Canadian people, and the number of those who hold that opinion is rapidly growing. Are we preparing for any European conflict? We may well pause and ask ourselves such questions.

Probably we are going along simply on the old principle that preparedness is the best way to avoid war; that preparedness is a sort of insurance against war. That doctrine has been proved absolutely false by the events of the last few years. Preparedness carries with it no guarantee whatever of peace, and I take it that the big thing we have to learn these days is that the guarantees of peace do not consist of large armies, or of a large naval force or of an air force or anything of that kind. The guarantees of peace are altogether different. We have been told by leading thinkers in nearly all countries that we have entered a new age. We have been warned that if we pursue the old methods, we are inevitably bound for catastrophe. I take it that we in Canada are at this time in a peculiarly favourable position to begin to work our way out into new methods for ensuring and perpetuating peace. We are on this North American continent side by side with a friendly nation to the south of us. We are closeley united by ties of blood with Great Britain, France, and I am glad to think also, through a considerable part of our population in the West, with large numbers of European peoples. We have no hereditary enemies; we have no enemy that stands at our gates. Under such circumstances, I should like to think that we would cut down these expenditures and take our part in showing the world a better way. I notice that we are not asked to make this year any grant to housing, for which last year we paid $10,000,000 or about that sum. We are not asked to make any grants to the unemployed. Many of these unemployed are men who in the last war were called to serve our country, yet to-day are walking our streets without work. We should take care of the wrecks of the last war before we begin to train our boys for the next war.

There is another item on which I do not intend to speak, but it is closely connected with this. I refer to the training of cadets. Here again, the same question arises. Are the people generally anxious to maintain the enthusiasm which some hon. gentlemen in the House would like to see maintained for military things? From all sections of this country, from grain growers' locals, from labour bodies, even in some instances from bodies altogether outside of this kind of organization, we have resolutions coming in asking that anything like a glorification of militarism should be put down. All sorts of international bodies are meeting in Europe asking that we should join in a campaign against militarism. It is no use our talking about disarmament or declaiming against great military establishments in Europe unless at home we begin to put our theories into practice. We have a far easier task in Canada than is the case in Europe. We have not the animosities and standing armies they have in Europe. We have not the old established systems nor the military caste that they have in Europe. It is easier for us to begin the task here. I will gladly support any motion looking towards a reduction of our military estimates with a view to eliminating them altogether just as soon as possible.

Mr. MEWBURN: I must take exception to the remarks of the last speaker (Mr. Woodsworth). I congratulate the minister on having increased the vote by $50,000; indeed, I think it is hardly enough. The country decided many years ago to have a militia force in Canada and it will be time enough to cut down the estimates when that decision is reversed. I agree with the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), however, that some of the $1,000,000 voted last year was wasted. I do not wish for one moment to be understood as criticizing the very highly experienced officers, whose technical knowledge is of such considerable value, whom the minister has on his general staff. I do not believe that any better officers can be found anywhere. They were handicapped, I believe, in their endeavour to train the militia of Canada last year by reason of the reduction in the vote. But I do think that some of the money that was spent might have been devoted to better advantage in concentrating on certain units in the country. I agree with the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) that with the artillery, machine gun and other technical units a greater effort should have been made to train the men in camps and to concentrate in the work carried out. As regards the infantry, I believe that better results could have been obtained had the whole of the force been trained at local headquarters, and I refer particularly to the city corps. I realize the difficulties the rural corps have, possessing no local headquarters. But as regards city corps in all our cities, I must say that these men have been in the past and are to-day, a wonderful credit to Canada. Of the small pittance meted out to them for training during the maximum of nine days provided for, I think I am safe in saying that not one cent went into the pockets of the individual officers, non-commissioned officers or men. These men are endeavouring to build up their units, a good many of which are up to the old peace establishment; and they cannot do this without expenditure of money. As I pointed out, these corps, previous to the war, augmented their regimental funds by husbanding their resources, and the money that was given for training was put back into the units for the purpose of increasing their efficiency. I know that the city corps spend in training, a good many more than the nine or twelve days that they are paid for. They train all winter; the non-commissioned officers hold classes of instruction; and there is rifle shooting practice throughout the summer. This work is very commendable. But I think it was an error to have small spasmodic camps throughout the country where a few hundred men were assembled, and from which they could not get any material benefit. I have great pleasure in supporting the vote and am delighted that there has been an increase in the expenditure for cadet service. If we want to build up the patriotism which we need in this country we must devote our energies to the young men who engage in the cadet service. My friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) objects to the militia and the mounted police; I daresay he speaks from some experience. But we know what advantage there was in having the mounted police and the militia during the late trouble in Winnipeg, and it is a credit to the country that we had men who were loyal enough to stand by the nation at that time.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I do not know that under the present system the annual drill could be carried on at all if the estimate were cut in half. Is the past system in connection with the annual drill to be continued or not? I understand from the minister that there are thirteen military districts in Canada, and I think I am right in saying that the province of Manitoba comprises one, Saskatchewan one, and Alberta one. I had a conversation with a military man before leaving the West and he informed me that negotiations were under way towards amalgamating these three districts into one, the headquarters to be either at Winnipeg, at Regina or at Calgary. I do not know, of course, whether that is correct or not, but I had that conversation with a lieutenant-colonel who, I presume, had some information on the subject. But assuming that these negotiations are under way, would not that be a fair way to reduce the expenditures in connection with the annual drill? As this gentleman pointed out to me, if you decrease the number of military districts you will decrease the number of staff officers who draw the large proportion of the money we vote annually for drill. The minister might say whether there is any truth in that rumour and whether such a system is to be put into force in the Dominion, of reducing the number of districts.

Mr. GRAHAM: That matter has been under consideration, but I would not say in negotiation. Only yesterday I handed to my chief of staff, General MacBrien, than whom there is no more efficient officer in Canada, a letter that I had received and requested his opinion on it. In reply I got from him a letter which unfortunately I have not with me, and in which he is very much averse to amalgamating these districts, for reasons which he stated. He thinks the training would not be as efficient as under the present system, would be less practicable, and more cumbersome.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How many military districts are maintained now?

Mr. GRAHAM: I said thirteen before; I ought to have said eleven.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They were numbered one to thirteen, but two, I understand, were never in existence.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is the men trained under this item who were actually sent to quell the apprehended riots in Nova Scotia. I think the committee should now be told upon whose authority they were sent; who were sent; what expenditure was incurred; whether that expenditure has been collected; if not, what steps have been taken to collect it, or whether the government intends to take action in the matter.

Mr. GRAHAM: An hon. member asked me practically the same question a few moments ago and he was satisfied when I suggested that that discussion be reserved until I bring down an estimate for the payment of these expenses, when I shall give all the details in regard to the units that were sent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The estimate is not in these items; I was looking for it. Does the minister say that we shall have to pass these estimates and wait for a supplementary estimate before we can get an explanation of so important a matter as that which is connected with this very vote now before the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not say anything of the kind. I say that I shall have all the details when I bring down the estimate. I can give at the present time a general explanation, and I should like my hon. friend from Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) to listen to what I am about to say. Under the act the Defence department has no alternative but to send troops, when they are properly and legally requested, to any place where law and order are likely to be violated or where the good government and peace of the country are threatened. The Militia Act distinctly says that the troops so sent are in aid of the civil power. In some of the municipalities where trouble was threatened last year the mayors made no requisitions, but the Militia Act provides that in such a contingency the county court judge may take action. In this case Judge Finlayson, a county court judge, made the necessary requisition according to law, and thereupon units of the permanent force were sent from Ontario and Quebec into that section to the number of between 900 and 1,000. The expense was approximately $60,000. Under the circumstances it is difficult to say who shall pay this expense. The municipalities did not requisition the troops; the county court judge did. Up to date, speaking from memory, no municipality has been billed for this expense. What action will be taken in the future I am not prepared to say.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In respect of what municipality or municipalities did Judge Finlayson make his requisition?

Mr. GRAHAM: He is the county court judge for the county of Cape Breton.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There must be a municipality affected, and the county court judge must requisition in respect of that municipality.

Mr. GRAHAM: Glace Bay is where the trouble threatened. So far as I know Judge Finlayson complied with every requirement of the act in making his requisition.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Did I understand the minister to say that under the act the Minister of Militia had no option but to send troops when requisitioned?

Mr. GRAHAM: When properly requisitioned it is the duty of the Defence Department under the law to send units of the permanent force for the preservation of order—not to supersede the civil power, but in aid of that power.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then why were such troops not sent to the town of Sydney Mines, Dominion and New Waterford when they were requisitioned for these places?

Mr. GRAHAM: The troops were concentrated at one point under the district officer commanding. The details as to placing the troops would be under his charge.

Mr. BOYS: Was the place in question municipally organized?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. BOYS: That being so, it seems to me that under Section 84 the county court judge would have no jurisdiction.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am informed that under the act he has jurisdiction.

Mr. BOYS: Section 84 provides:

> If the place where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated is not municipally organized, the county or district court judge, or one of the county or district court judges, having jurisdiction in such place, or if there is no such county or district court judge, then any judge of a superior court who has jurisdiction in such place may make the requisition.

But it seems necessary that the territory should not be municipally organized to give the county court judge jurisdiction.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think if my hon. friend would read Section 82 he would find that it covers the point he has in mind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Section 82 provides that the first duty to make a requisition shall be on the mayor or some substitute, but if he refuses then the county court judge may act. Section 84 provides that if the place is not municipally organized the first duty is on the county court judge. As the minister defends his action on the ground that the law gives him no option, will he not say to the House that he approves the act as it stands. Or, if not, why did he not recommend that it be amended last session? Or does the government intend to amend the act this session?

Mr. GRAHAM: The question of amending the Militia Act has never come before the government. If it were to be amended I presume I would make the suggestion; I have not done so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Militia Act in that regard, then, is satisfactory to the government?

Mr. KYTE: I do not think I should permit this discussion to terminate, Mr. Chairman, without adding a word, as I am in possession of local knowledge which does not appear to be enjoyed by other members. The strike was declared in the district of Glace Bay without the usual formalities which are generally regarded as essential. The mayor of Glace Bay is a member of the miners' organization and a prominent and active member of the United Mine Workers. He refused to be a party to calling out the militia. Therefore nothing was left for the citizens of Glace Bay to do, if they were to get that protection which they were entitled to under the law, but to go to the county court judge for the municipality, who resided in Sydney. This requisition was not made until grave acts of disorder had been committed by the strikers. The men were called out and the officials were left in charge of the mine. The strikers picketed the mine and refused food and other refreshments to be taken to these officials. Subsequently they made a threat to withdraw the pump men and thereby destroy millions of dollars' worth of property,— a threat that has not been usually resorted to heretofore in this country. The fact that the Grand President of the United Mine Workers, Mr. Lewis, repudiated the strike, upon the ground that the strikers had no authority and no jurisdiction for withdrawing the pump men, goes to show what a serious condition existed in the community. Troops were called out at the request of the citizens of Glace Bay, who were not concerned as respects the quarrel between the mine owners and the workmen, but who were concerned in the preservation of law and order so that life and property might be protected in the community. I repeat, the mayor of Glace Bay being an official of the striking organization, and having refused to requisition the troops, the only thing to be done was to get Judge Finlayson to act, and it was upon the authority of the citizens that he acted.

Mr. HANSON: What evidence is there before the committee or the department that the mayor of Glace Bay refused to act? We should have that evidence.

Mr. KYTE: The minister—

Mr. HANSON: While I am on my feet, may I ask, was it ever the intention of parliament that the Militia Act should be invoked unless riots were anticipated in a community? I do not understand that riots were anticipated in Cape Breton. What was anticipated was damage to the company's property by reason of the pump men leaving their posts,—something that might be very likely to occur and which the company ought to have foreseen.

Mr. KYTE: That was not the only thing that happened.

Mr. HANSON: That was the main thing.

Mr. KYTE: My hon. friend for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) was many hundreds of miles away from the scene of disorder and therefore he cannot possibly have local knowledge of what happened. It is my fortune, or misfortune, to represent that constituency in this parliament, and it was my business to know what was going on. Therefore, I informed myself, and I now state upon the authority of that knowledge and upon my honour as a member of the House that, judging the situation from every point of view, having regard to the menace that was offered to the life and property of the citizens of Glace Bay, there was no alternative but to call out the troops. If the citizens had waited until the mayor made the necessary requisition, the pump men would have left their posts and the mines would have been flooded.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not say the strikers were justified in threatening to call out the pump men. I do not say the whole strike was justified. That is not the question. The question is whether or not conditions arose which, under the act, justified the sending of the militia. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kyte) is a lawyer; he surely would not argue, merely because damage might be caused to property owned by the company through the pump men going out, that that would be apprehended "riot" or "disturbance of the peace" within the meaning of the Militia Act. Not at all. The Militia Act does provide for aid to the civil authority upon requisition, but only where there is apprehended riot or breach of the peace which it is beyond the power of the civil authorities to control. Upon that being certified by the proper authority, then the government sends the active militia. I would like to ask the hon. member, what was the apprehended "riot"? What was, as the act reads, the "disturbance of the peace" that actually existed or was anticipated as likely to occur? There are the words of section 80; these are the words of the subsequent section. What was it?

Mr. KYTE: I stated that the mayor of Glace Bay, having been appealed to by the citizens of the town to call the troops, refused.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not the point.

Mr. KYTE: They went to a judge of the county court, and he signed the order. The breach of the peace consisted of assaults committed upon the officials who were remaining in the mine for the purpose of protecting the property. There is where the breach of the peace commenced, and it was to prevent further breaches of the peace and futher disorder, that the troops were asked for.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Were individual assaults in a mine or so beyond the power of the civil authorities to control?

Mr. KYTE: They thought so when they applied to the mayor for protection, which he refused to give them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would it not be likely that the mayor was right? The mayor would look at the act and say, "Is there anything here in the way of breach of the peace or anticipated breach of the peace on a scale beyond the power of the civil authorities to control?" If the mayor felt that there was not, it would be his duty to refuse to requisition. I must say that the facts as given in the newspapers at the time did not disclose to my mind any such breach of the peace. If the hon. member knows of anything more than an individual assault or two, I would like the committee to be informed of it.

Mr. KYTE: Individual assaults and the apprehension of more extended assaults and riots is what moved them to ask for protection.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What were the reasons for the apprehension?

Mr. DUFF: I rise to a point of order. This discussion is out of order. If there is to be any discussion on the Cape Breton situation it must come under another vote, not under this one. It should come under the estimates for the permanent force or for the payment of the expenses of those troops.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know where it would come under the estimates for the permanent force when it is the active militia that was called out.

Mr. GRAHAM: It was the permanent force that was called out.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There was no active militia called out at all?

Mr. DUFF: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, there should have been. If any were called out under the act, the active militia should have been called, to be supplanted later by the permanent force.

Mr. DUFF: Order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): Rule 13, subsection 5. reads as follows:

Speeches in Committee of the Whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

I do not think that this discussion is relevant.

Mr. CANNON: Before I give my vote on the amendment I would like to have certain information from the minister which might direct me one way or the other. The item is for $1,050,000 for annual training. What amount will be used for annual training in cities and what amount for annual training of rural corps in summer camps?

Mr. GRAHAM: I gave a while ago the information with respect to the summer camps and the training at headquarters. The amount for permanent force training out of this vote is $45,000; miscellaneous appropriations, $14,000; transport of artillery and so on, $100,000; schools of musketry, $16,000; schools of signals, $10,000. I will give the expenditure by districts.

Mr. POWER: Could we have it according to battalions?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is not given according to battalions. The amounts were estimated by the Chief of Staff who works out the details himself.

Mr. POWER: Surely he must know.

Mr. GRAHAM: He might know the details, but they are never given, to my knowledge, in the estimates. The amounts for the respective districts are as follows: Military District No. 1, $77,000; No. 2, $148,000; No. 3, $87,000; No. 4, $98,000; No. 5, $58,000; No. 6, $69,000; No. 7, $40,000; No. 10, $67,000; No. 11, $61,000; No. 12, $62,000; No. 13, $53,000.

Mr. CANNON: The minister says that $58,000 will be spent in Military District No. 5, which includes the city and district of Quebec. How much of that amount will be spent for the training of the 8th Royal Rifles and the 9th Battalion, and how much for units like the battalions from Dorchester county or Quebec county?

Mr. GRAHAM: The details as to the different battalions have not yet been worked out. I gave information as to the battalions trained last year. I pointed out to the hon. member for Digby and Annapolis (Mr. Lovett) that his regiment had been notified early in the year but had not been trained. Notifications to the different regiments will go out in a few weeks, but until the estimate is passed there is no money available on which the commanding officers of the districts may work. With respect to Military District No. 5, the details for last year were as follows: 7th Hussars, 9 days at local camp; 11th Hussars, 8 days at local camp; 13th Brigade, C.F.A., 57th Battalion, 6 days at local headquarters, 6 days at Petawawa; 82nd Battery, 6 days at local headquarters, 6 days at Petawawa; 6th Regiment, C.G.A., Headquarters, Levis, 8 days at local headquarters and 4 at Halifax; No. 1 Company, Quebec, 8 days at local headquarters and 4 at Halifax; No. 2 Company, Levis, and No. 3 Company, Levis, 8 days at local headquarters and 4 at Halifax; 5th Divisional Engineers, Headquarters, Quebec, 9 at headquarters; 15th Field Company, 9 at headquarters; 6th Field Troop, 9 at headquarters; No. 5 Signal Company, 9 at headquarters; 4th Signal Troop, 9 at headquarters; Montmagny Regiment, 1st Battalion, 9 at local camp.

Mr. CANNON: What was the amount for that?

Mr. GRAHAM: It was $1,474.55. Le Regiment de Beauce, 1st Battalion, 9 days at Levis.

Mr. POWER: How much was that?

Mr. GRAHAM: It was $1,489.65. Fusiliers du St. Laurent, Rimouski, 1st Battalion, 9 days at Levis, $1,656.95; Le Regiment de Levis, 1st Battalion, 9 days at Levis, $1,603.20; Canada Quebec, 1st Battalion, 200 men trained at headquarters; Quebec, 1st Battalion, 9 days at headquarters; Les Chasseurs Canadiens, 9 days at Levis, $1,516.45; Les Franc-Tireure du Saguenay, 1st Battalion, Chicoutimi, 9 days at Levis, $1,699.45; Laval University, 12 days at headquarters; 5th Machine Gun Brigade, 9 days at headquarters.

Mr. CANNON: The reason I asked the question is this. I favour annual training in the cities, but I am strongly against wasting money on annual training outside the cities, on what is called the rural training camps. I do not know much about the results obtained in other sections of Canada, but I know that in our own district the results from these rural camps have been absolutely nil; it has been a waste of money. I do not wish, either, to embarrass the minister. His goodwill has been shown in many ways. He has endeavoured to administer his department in such a way that public moneys are not wasted on military adventures which are of absolutely no use to our country. Last year the estimates were considerably reduced. This year they have not been increased, except by a very small amount.

Mr. GRAHAM: They are reduced on the whole.

Mr. CANNON: Reduced on the whole, but there is an increase in this annual training item. The amendment suggested by my hon. member (Mr. Lanctôt) to cut in half this item might be good if it would mean the wiping out of the annual training at the rural camps, but, should it hamper the annual training in the cities, it ought not, I believe, to command our support. I should like to know from the minister whether it would be possible if this item was cut in two, to give the city corps proper training, and if not, what amount would be necessary for that purpose. I am perfectly willing to vote that amount, or on the other hand if it were possible to find out exactly what the rural training is costing, I would be one of the first to support any amendment to deduct that amount from this item.

Mr. McBRIDE: I for one would certainly take exception to training being given to people in the cities and not to people in the country districts. The people who want it most are the young men in the country. In 1921 we had the pleasure of having a camp out our way. When these young men some fifty-four of them, went in to camp they had no training whatever, they were just like a crowd on the street; but in two weeks' time every man knew his place and it was a pleasure to see them come in, unsaddle, and clean their horses and turn them out. When going to camp they knew nothing about it. If there is any class of people who need the training, and are taking an enthusiastic interest in it, they are the people in the country, and not the city people.

Mr. POWER: I wish to make some references to the remarks of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). When he was discussing this matter he intimated that I was reflecting on the loyalty and honesty of the militia of Canada. I asked him a certain question, and I had a purpose in mind in asking that question. I expected to get an answer, but I did not get one. However, I wish to call his attention to the fact that I had no intention of attacking the militia of Canada, either the rural or the city battalions. I simply wished to find out whether he himself, would, as Minister of Militia make himself responsible for sending untrained troops to the scene of a riot. I am under the impression and I firmly believe I am right, that five, six or seven days' training at a rural camp does not fit a man for military duty. It has been said time and again in this House that it requires at least six months' training to make a soldier, and a man who is not perfectly disciplined is the last man to whom we should entrust the use of death-dealing weapons. We had some experience in the city of Quebec during what was called the conscription riots. At that time the government of the day sent down to Quebec thousands of untrained troops in order to quell the so-called riots which the newspapers had advertised all over the country. Troops were sent down to Quebec who had never handled a rifle, and some of them, I am sure, had never seen a rifle before. On the evening of the day when they disembarked, they were lined up in front of the Canadian Pacific railway station at Quebec, handed loaded Ross rifles, and sent out to keep peace and order in the good city of Quebec. The result, as every one knows, was that a large number of these men, already inflamed by the stories which they had read, and probably by some of the violent denunciations of the province of Quebec which they had heard from some of my hon. friends, were so excited that within a very short time when the first few snowballs were thrown at them they opened fire and a considerable number of people were wounded and some, unfortunately, killed. I submit to my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) that troops of that character should certainly not be sent into any disturbed district. Troops who have been trained for only eight or nine days, no matter how good they were when they entered upon their military career, have not had sufficient discipline, cannot be sufficiently well controlled by their officers to be sent out on any such expeditions. I submit that for the consideration of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Militia. I hope he will take it into consideration and not think that I was attributing to the militia of Canada any disloyal or selfish motives.

With regard to the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Lanctot) I would suggest that he reduce it somewhat. As nearly as I could figure from the answer given by the Minister ot National Defence, the expenditure on the rural corps is about one-fifth of the total. While the minister was giving us these details I added the amounts expended on six rural corps; they amounted approximately to $10,000. That, on a total of $58,000 for the particular district with which I am familiar, would be probably about one-fifth. So, if my hon. friend (Mr. Lanctot) would ask that this amount be reduced by one-fifth, I think he would be carrying out his own views and would probably meet with the approval of a large number of hon. members. I understand that very many hon. members opposite see no reason why there should be a distinction between rural and urban corps. There is this difference. There may be some reason for training urban troops; personally I do not see it, but I am told that there is. If there is, it is because these soldiers of the city are close to the scene of their operations; they can very easily repair every night to the local drill hall and carry on their training work; and they can meet outside the time allowed for drill, and so can cultivate esprit de corps—they can have a real militia organization of some kind. On the other hand the young men from country districts often live too far apart from one another to maintain any permanent organization of any sort. As a rule it takes them one day to get to camp and one day to return, and another day of the camp period is Sunday; so that they have but five or six days a year at most at camp, and the training given to them is, to my mind, utterly useless; it is of no value whatsoever.

Apart from that, I do not consider that at the present time we require any military camps, a matter upon which I have already expressed my views to this House. We have in Canada a sufficient number of trained troops for any eventuality which may arise. It is true that last year some hon. members said that those who had taken part in the last war should not be forced to go to the next outbreak of hostilities. Great commiseration was expressed for those who had participated in the great struggle which began in 1914, and certain members were horrified to think that these veterans might be called upon to go to another war. But it will be remembered that during the course of last summer, when a little scare arose throughout the country, the first to volunteer for active service overseas were veterans of the last war, in fact the government was deluged with offers from them. Now, I stated last year, and I repeat—without fear of contradiction this time because the facts have borne me out—that in the event of another war breaking out in the near future, the first men to volunteer and the first men to go will be those who took part in the last great struggle. Taking that for granted, and I think every hon. member must agree with me, we have in Canada three to four hundred thousand trained troops. And we do not need any more; in that number of trained men we have an ample force to protect us in case of any trouble arising. Let us, then, consider why we should have any training at all. I have already said that in my opinion we should not have any, but apparently I do not seem to be able to find a sufficient number of members here to support my views on this matter. However, I am prepared to go to the length of meeting the committee a little more than half way, and to ask the minister to reduce his estimates by the amount which he has included for the training of rural battalions.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think if my hon. friend proposed to break up the militia that would be the easiest way to do it. It would be easy to say that in Canada we were going to make a distinction, as to the young men that we allow to join our militia or to have any training, between the cities and the country. That would be a mistake from the militia standpoint, I think. It may be true that in the sections named by my hon. friend the rural units do not train to such an extent as the city units do; but in many parts of this country the rural units are more enthusiastic than the city units are, and some of the best officers in the militia belong to rural units. I imagine that such a distinction as my hon. friend proposes to make could not be seriously entertained. Think of the effect it would have all over the country.

The hon. member (Mr. Power) has referred to the fact that many men who had 5 p.m. been overseas were enthusiastic in volunteering their services once more last summer. That is true, but is it fair, bearing in mind the sacrifices which they have made to take this stand? "You say you will go again. Hurrah! The rest of us will stay at home including the young men, who are just as anxious to go as those who have already served overseas." I am not a militarist or anything of the kind, but as I have already said, if there are to be wars we must have a militia. The Dominion of Canada unanimously agreed years ago to take over the militia from Great Britian. We have had a militia force ever since that time, and it is our duty to maintain such a force of reasonable proportions at an expense that will not be too great.

I have been asked whether these units could be trained for less expenditure. They might, but I think I should not be asked—and if I were I could not consent—to make any distinction between the rural units and the city units so far as the expenditure of money for the training of our young men is concerned. This amount of $1,050,000 is less than it was n pre-war times, notwithstanding that the ost of maintaining the militia is at least from 50 to 75 per cent higher than it was then. Personally I could not recommend to the House that we should reduce this item at all. I believe the people of Canada will be with us in endeavouring to maintain a militia force of respectable proportions at as cheap a cost as such a force can be maintained for in this country.

Mr. GOOD: Would the minister tell us what the effect of reducing last year's vote was?

Mr. GRAHAM: The effect of the reduction last year was—I am not making a comparison with the year before because I think the training was practically as good as it was the year before, but with previous years—that a larger number of men were trained in that the units were more nearly up to strength than they were years ago. In other cases some of the units were not trained at all. I may say that the Chief of Staff, in order to give full military training, asked me for a vote of $1,750,000, but the amount was reduced, with his full consent on discussion with him, to the present vote of $1,050,000. I think this is a very moderate estimate of the amount required for training.

Mr. BOYS: With reference to Military District No. 2, which is Toronto, I would like to know what proportion of the allotment of that district was devoted to the rural battalions and what proportion to the city battalions. So far as my knowledge goes, and I realize it is very limited, the battalion in my own county went to camp about one-half strength. They were anxious to go stronger, but the money was not available.

Mr. GRAHAM: What one was that?

Mr. BOYS: The 35th Simcoe Foresters. I want to join with the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride) in putting in a word for the rural battalion. If we are to have drill, we must have it in the country just as much as in the city, and if the battalions are to be cut right down to one-half or one-third strength, I do not believe you will get satisfactory results. Before I cast a vote, I should like, if possible, to know what the ratio of expenditure was last year, and whether or not it is the intention to maintain that ratio for next year. If it is as low as has been suggested by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), namely about one-fifth, I would suggest that the amount that should be devoted to rural battalions should certainly be increased.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think it is the intention of the Chief of Staff to spend a proportion of this $50,000 on rural units, as the city units have every facility for training at home. They can select their time of year for training and they do not have to leave their vocation to do any training. They can attend to their regular work in the day time and train at night. My idea—and I think this is the view of the Chief of Staff—is to increase the amount for the rural units rather than to reduce it.

Mr. BOYS: I am glad to hear that. Can the minister give me the actual expenditure for the ten months gone by?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It must be borne in mind that in recent years the number of rural battalions is very much less than it was heretofore. Many battalions which were formerly rural have, in the last three or four years, become city battalions for the very purpose of allowing them to train at their local headquarters instead of going to camp. But there are some very valuable militia units yet which are rural battalions. The one referred to by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Boys) is one of them; the York Rangers is another; the Huron Regiment is another. All of these, I have been informed, could have gone to camp last year, at almost full strength; but through lack of money for the purpose of drill or training, they were not permitted to go at full strength. There is not, however, to-day the same proportion between rural and city units that there was four years ago. The rural units have become very much reduced in number, because so many of them have now, by their own desire, and at their own request, become city units.

Mr. BALDWIN: While I do not wish to embarrass the minister in any way, I cannot refrain from making a few remarks on this most important subject. Probably there is not a member in this House or a man in this country who would use cold steel or cold lead more quickly than I would to put down any mob or rebellious crowd in Canada. By the cutting down of the estimates last year the minister won great credit throughout this country and great approval by the electors. There has been in the past an enormous waste by these annual drills, and this has been set forth very forcibly by the remarks of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) and the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw). Many years ago these annual drills were in the month of October, which was the season of the year when these drills did not interfere with agricultural work. But since these annual drills have been held in that beautiful month of June, when the crops grow fast and the weeds grow faster, when the bugs are trying to destroy our fruits and the vegetables of our land, it is a crime to call the farmer and his sons from the soil to go through these drills in the heat of the roasting sun.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BALDWIN: There is a good deal of laughter, but I want to tell hon. members who are laughing that this is no minor affair. If hon. members were called to drill in the scorching sun of June, they would see those soldiers blistered almost from head to foot. The officers have to call them off and to give them only a very few hours' drill a day, or some days no drill at all. I can assure hon. gentlemen that I am against this attempt to make soldiers, men to defend our country, by giving them a few days' drill at such great waste of our public money. It has been well said in this House to-day that we have some 400,000 soldiers who have returned from the great conflict, who will have discipline enough in their craniums to serve for a generation yet. We know that great conflict cost this country the appalling sum of about $2,000,000,000. We know that the taxation of this country is enormous. I come from a rural community and I know what the rural people think; I know what the boys and the men who go, think—they think this is a waste of public money. I agree with what has been said as regards the large communities. There is where the pugnacious people, the warlike people and the strikers are. In the rural sections there are none of those warlike individuals, and I am sure you cannot take the farmer and his sons and his horses away to quell riots at Winnipeg or Glace Bay or any large riotous community. I am in favour of a standing army large enough to quell the riots of these great centres. The great American republic have not had this annual drill. They have had a standing army quite sufficient to quiet any trouble in that great country. I would not object to voting money that is imperatively needed to keep soldiers who are trained, and well trained, to cope with any element that might rise against the state.

Let me tell some of the ridiculous things in connection with this waste of money on annual drill. Probably these estimates would go through fully as easily if the two ex-Ministers of Militia were less conspicuous in these debates. How attentive they were in their seats last year and how they beat the drum, and how they made it appear so imperatively needful for us to keep up the estimates or even give more! They thought that these estimates should all be increased. Let me say—and I presume there are scores of others in this House who know of the appalling waste of money—I will not use this locally—but there are certain grafters amongst captains, majors, colonels, and those higher up. They go to the veterinary to help them and say: "Have you some old horses that look fairly well, that are about ready to die? Can you not buy up a few old plugs at $25 a head? You have been with us for many years and although you are crippled and no good, we would like to keep you. Get the best old nags you can and get them through at $175 or $200 a head." These horses are subjected to rough treatment and sometimes, being hitched by the feet they contract acute bronchitis! They are given such drastic medical treatment that in a short while they simply cease to exist. Then there is the chesty, stiff-necked fellow that buys the hay, and oats, and feed. If I were to tell all that I believe and know it would appal the committee. Although I was never a soldier, I have it from their mouths that this sort of thing was done to rob the country in pre-war days, and that being the case I can assure you that I am for cutting down the estimates. That nation is the happiest whose people do not engage in wars. Our sons and daughters are leaving this country to go to the peaceful land to the south of us, notwithstanding all that we are doing. I regret the fact, but I think we ought to devote some of the money to a real effort to retain our own people. Surely no enemies are threatening us. Certainly there are none to the north, I am sure there are none to the south of us, and neither east nor west have we anything to fear. The Monroe doctrine would protect us from foreign invasion.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. BALDWIN: It is laughable and yet serious. Are we going back to the aboriginal age when the savages used war paint and devoted their time to the extermination of one another? Yet, when we spend all this money on war wherein do we differ from the savages? Have we no implicit confidence in our own people and our neighbours? Wherein is the difference between the mothers of this country who are proud to bear sons for a sacrifice in European wars and those mothers who cast their children into the Ganges or the Euphrates? Some people suspect that there is an enemy behind every post and pillar and under every woodpile and under everything that can conceal a possible enemy. It was with much regret I heard so many hon. gentlemen advocating a year ago the expenditure of money for the furtherance of war enterprise. First, last and all the time I am a pacifist. But I am not enough of a pacifist not to fight to the last ditch if my personal rights or the national welfare be encroached upon. I do not wish to embarrass the minister, and while I might not go the length of voting for the amendment that is now before the committee, I do say that there should be less expenditure in this murderous, slaughterous game in which there are so many grafters and spendthrifts who are enriching themselves and wadding their own pockets. The civilized world is looking to disarmament, and I do not think that we should spend money in training our young men to take part in war. I do not think we should raise money—I was almost going to say, by extortion—from the pockets of the people when the farmers of the country are in such deplorable straits, when they have to pay such high taxation, such exorbitant prices for everything they get, and when they receive such unsatisfactory prices for the commodities they produce. If there is anything we can do, however small, towards paying off public debt we certainly should do it; and one way is to prevent the squandering of public moneys. Possibly anything I may say in the way of reducing the estimates will be futile, but undoubtedly in my opinion they should be reduced, especially in regard to something that only tends to build up a war machine for which there is no necessity. Our population is not increasing and there is no enemy in sight. And Heaven knows we do not want to mix up in European troubles, because those untold millions would absorb without very much trouble the comparatively small number of young men we could equip. Let me conclude by hoping that the minister will not be influenced too much by the two ex-ministers of militia who sit opposite.

Mr. IRVINE: What did the minister mean by saying that we could not have a country without a militia?

Mr. GRAHAM: No nation is properly equipped that has not a defence force.

Mr. BOYS: Will the minister give me the information I asked for?

Mr. GRAHAM: Fourteen units went into camp; the unit to which my hon. friend refers, which camped at Borden, being 160 strong.

Mr. BOYS: What I want to know is the amount of money devoted to the rural and city battalions respectively, and the number of men who went from those battalions.

Mr. GRAHAM: I shall get that information to-night.

Mr. LANCTOT: I regret that my hon. friend (Mr. Baldwin) did not say to what extent he wanted the item reduced.

Mr. BALDWIN: Ten per cent.

Mr. LANCTOT: In view of the attitude of some of my hon. friends I would amend my motion by substituting $210,000 for $525,000 or one-fifth of the estimates. That would be more reasonable and it would test the feeling of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Lanctot) moves that resolution 88 be reduced by $210,000.

Mr. SPENCE: Every hon. member should be in real good humour now, and I would suggest that this is the proper time to take the vote. I hope the hon. minister will get this item through without any reduction whatever. Last year he very liberally allowed his estimates to be cut down, and he has since found that that was a mistake, as he has had insufficient funds to maintain the militia at the proper standard of efficiency. He has learned from experience that he needs this money, and I hope every hon. member will give him every dollar he wants.

Amendment (Mr. Lanctot) negatived on division: Yeas, 33; Nays, 77.

Item agreed to on the same division reversed.

The CHAIRMAN: It has been called to my attention that the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Martell) has not voted.

Mr. MARTELL: I beg to differ. I voted against the amendment.

Cadet services, $450,000.

Mr. SHAW: What is the reason for the increase in this item?

Mr. GRAHAM: I want it to be understood that I am more interested in this vote than perhaps in any other that may come before this committee. It is not true that the cadets are trained as soldiers, although part of the training may be of a military character. I maintain that the training given to these boys in their tender years is doing a wonderful work in building them up physically and making real men of them. I supported this vote enthusiastically for years when I was in opposition, and I have regretted on many occasions during the past twelve months that it was reduced last session. These boys in large numbers are given a summer outing with training that goes to make them real men in miniature. I have had some experience of the value of cadet training in my own family, and consequently I speak with some knowledge of the subject. Boys who are inclined to be weaklings physically after going through the course of training for two or three years develop into fine young fellows and become straight physically, mentally and morally. I admit that I was humilated last year when the city of Toronto had to organize a tag day in order to provide the funds to give their boys cadet training. I helped the boys out in an indirect way by lending them whatever camping equipment they required. I am strongly in favour of this physical training for boys. It is given in the schools throughout our country. A boy can go through the course and be really made a man and yet never be a soldier at all, although I admit that a young fellow who is a graduate cadet makes the best military man you can get anywhere because he has the physique to start with. It has been said that this training is only taken advantage of in one or two provinces. The province of Quebec has a greater number of cadets than any other province, and this year they carried away the trophy.

Mr. BUREAU: And Three Rivers did it.

Mr. GRAHAM: A small place called Three Rivers got this trophy—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAHAM:—and I might go further and say that they did their training with rifles supplied by one, Bureau, and presented to them by himself personally. I will give the committee the enrolled strength of cadet corps at January 31st, 1923, by provinces:

Ontario: London, 6,841; Toronto, 16,976; Kingston, 6,836; Total, 30,653.

Québec: Montréal, 32,214; Quebec, 13,432; Total, 45,646. Nova Scotia, 4,329; New Brunswick, 1,587; Manitoba, 10,376; British Columbia, 5,838; Saskatchewan, 3,959; Alberta, 5,453. Total, 107,841.

These cadets are spread all over the whole Dominion. Last year we did not have enough money to give the boys their training camps, and I think we did an injustice to them from the physical standpoint. I am solely responsible for this additional $100,000, and I think the money cannot be spent in any better way than by training our young men and so improving them physically, mentally and morally.

Mr. HOEY: Is this work undertaken in conjunction with the provincial Departments of Education, or is it under the direct supervision of the militia authorities? My contention is that the physical development of the boy is part of his education, and that it should be fundamentally the duty and the privileges of the provincial Departments of Education to undertake this work. Therefore I should like to know if this work, with which I have a great deal of sympathy, is wholly detached from the Department of Defence as such, that is, as a military organization.

Mr. GRAHAM: These cadet corps can be organized only with the full consent and approval of the educational authorities in each province. The Defence department, out of this vote, sends physical instructors wherever they are wanted, in order to give the training. Loans are made for rifle practice and so on.

Mr. SHAW: I think all will agree that the young men and the young women should receive in our schools the best possible opportunity for physical development. A great many people, however, do object strongly to the effort made—shall I say?—to camouflage military training under the guise of physical training. As the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey) has stated, physical training is carried on in every school in Alberta, the teachers being trained to give the best physical instruction to the children under their charge. Then, in addition, there are the cadet corps under the jurisdiction of the officers of the military district in which the school happens to be located, and this military training is carried on in addition to the physical training which is given in the schools. I repeat that physical training is highly desirable, but I think it should be given as such, for that purpose and that purpose alone. May I, under this item, direct the attention of the minister to a resolution adopted by a committee of students at the University of Toronto? It says:

> Inasmuch as the Dominion of Canada is a member of the League of Nations which has been created to promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security, we, the students of the universities of Canada with a view to promoting the ideals of the league by bringing Canada into closer contact through intellectual co-operation with the nations of the world, and in the belief that only through the development of a mutual understanding between races and nations can war be eliminated as an agent of settling international disputes, go on record, through our representative organizations as in favour of the forwarding of a resolution to His Majesty's government of the Dominion of Canada, requesting:
> That the government of the Dominion of Canada set aside annually a sum of money sufficient for the purpose of awarding scholarships to the countries and in the manner as hereinafter set forth:
> 1. Twenty-two scholarships to be awarded to graduates of the universities of Canada for the purpose of pursuing post-graduate studies at any university in any country chosen by the students elected to these scholarships.
> (a) The distribution of these scholarships as between universities to be based upon the enrolment of students in the universities of Canada.
> (2) Seventeen scholarships to be awarded among the members of the British Empire excluding Canada, not more than two scholarships to be awarded at any one time to any one British dominion or colony except that five be awarded annually to India and that two be awarded annually to native African students.
> (3) Sixty-five scholarships to be awarded on the following basis: South America 5; China 4; Japan 4; Russia 5; Korea 2; Hungary 2, Austria 2; Czechoslovakia 3; Spain 2; Italy 3; Bulgaria 2; Roumania 2; Turkey 2; Greece 2; Portugal 1; France 5; Germany 5; Holland 3; Denmark 3; Norway and Sweden 4; Finland 2; Poland 2.

The suggestion of this student body is that the government might take out of the moneys which otherwise would be devoted to militia purposes a sum sufficient to provide scholarships in order that Canadian students might go to some of these foreign lands and in order that students in foreign countries might come to Canada, the result being the promotion of a real spirit of international fellowship. I suggest that instead of promoting military affairs by the expenditure of vast sums of money at this particular time in our history, when these moneys are so urgently needed for other purposes, it would be advisable to consider the allocation of a substantial sum to meet the suggestion made in this resolution. I commend it to the minister as something that would make for that for which we are all striving—a better spirit and better fellowship among the nations.

Mr. BUREAU: How would these scholarships be awarded? Would it be done through the provinces, or through the various educational institutions?

Mr. SHAW: The resolution outlines in detail the scheme which the students suggest. They provide what is called an allocating board to allocate these scholarships.

[Mr. Shaw.]

Mr. BUREAU: Who would select the allocating board? When the federal government begins to interfere with educational matters, the thing becomes quite complicated.

Mr. SHAW: Probably it would not be as difficult as it might appear. The resolution suggests:

> That an allocating board be set up for the purpose of receiving the applications of those students elected to scholarships in Canada from their respective countries, for the purpose of allocating these students to the different universities in Canada according to course desired and the academic standing of the student.

It goes on to say that the board should consist of nine members, and there is reference to the manner in which its personnel is made up. There might be some difficulty in working out the details of the scheme. I simply present the suggestion made by these students as one which would be well worthy of the best consideration of the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. STANSELL: With most, if not all, of what the minister has said with regard to this vote I find myself in hearty accord. I would like however, to ask a question suggested by the stand taken by certain hon. members in connection with another vote, namely, that there should be a separate vote for rural and urban districts in matters such as these. I do not find myself in accord with that suggestion. I believe that all laws should be designed to give equal opportunities to all, so far as that is possible, and I am not at all in sympathy with any suggestion that there should be a different standard for rural and for urban residents. What I want to know is this: how far has it been found possible to extend the benefits of this training to the rural districts? I can understand that it might be more difficult to extend it to the rural districts than it would be to apply it to the urban centres, but I would like to know just how far it has been found possible to make its benefits available to the boys in the rural districts.

Mr. GRAHAM: The benefit to be derived by the rural students would be this: the department has instructors who instruct the teachers. Last year there were I think, five thousand in line for instruction. These, in turn, instruct the cadets and can give the physical training in any school in the Dominion.

Mr. STANSELL: To what extent have the rural districts availed themselves of it?

Mr. GRAHAM: In forming separate cadet corps, perhaps not to a very great extent. But in many of these schools there are little companies of cadets, and owing to the training given by our officers the teachers are able to give the necessary instruction to both boys and girls.

Mr. MacLAREN: In supporting this vote for the cadets—a work which, I am satisfied, is accomplishing a great amount of good—I would suggest to the minister for his consideration that it would be of great advantage to absorb some of the other boy movements that now exist in this country, more particularly the Boy Scouts. I think there is loss of energy and of organization between the Cadets and the Boy Scouts. I believe it would be very much to the advantage of the Boy Scouts were they absorbed into the Cadets. It would increase the number of the Cadets very largely and would avoid the present division. I think that under the recognized discipline of the Defence department there would be considerable advantage to this country and to the Boy Scouts themselves by their absorption into the Cadets.

Mr. ROBINSON: The trouble with the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. MacLaren) is that a boy can join the Boy Scouts when he is eight or ten years old, but he cannot become a Cadet until he is sixteen. I think you will find that in most towns the Boy Scouts ultimately join the Cadets when they are old enough.

In reply to the hon. member who spoke about the cadet movement in rural districts, I may say that the cadet movement is usually in connection with schools, and the children in rural schools—I am speaking more particularly of Nova Scotia—are mostly young; that is, if they want to go beyond a certain grade they have to go to the towns, and there they come in touch with the cadet movement. The physical drill is taught in both rural and urban schools. You could not very well have a cadet corps in the remote rural sections because there are not enough boys who are old enough to form a good cadet corps. I think it will be found, however, that the Boy Scouts generally do join the Cadets when they become old enough.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the age given by my hon. friend is hardly correct. The cadet age, I think, is from twelve to eighteen. You cannot merge the Boy Scouts and the Cadets. I do not think that there is an effort made as my hon. friend (Mr. Shaw) suggested to camouflage militarism in the cadet movement, and in proof of that let me give just one illustration. Of the 6,800 Cadets in this district around Ottawa and Kingston, only 2,080 took rifle training, and that was voluntary on their part. There is no effort made to impose military training on them at all.

Mr. SHAW: Are not these cadets trained in all the military manoeuvres and in military drill?

Mr. ROSS: Only so far as marching goes, and that is not military drill in the sense of rifle shooting and so on. Physical drill is a part of military training, but has only lately been absorbed in the cadet movement as a result of the Great War that is done to harden a man. Physical training was a school preparation. I do not think any person connected with the cadet movement has camouflaged militarism, and when you consider that of the 6,800 Cadets in this district who took physical training, marching and such drilling as the teachers could give them, only 2,080 took rifle drill, I think you have the answer to that suggestion. I think that is worth bringing up.

Mr. BUREAU: With reference to the remark made by my hon. friend from Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) I would like to say a word. It was my privilege some time ago to attend the presentation of a trophy to a cadet corps. The general of the division, General Armstrong I think, was represented at that presentation. One of the speakers spoke from a military point of view, but the general's representative said that the object of the training was first physical training, and then moral training. It was to teach the boys discipline, and he laid down this principle, and it is true I think, that a man cannot command if he does not first know how to obey, and the first thing a boy had to learn was to obey.

But apart from the physical training, the moral training I think is very important. We talk about developing citizenship in this country. We know—I am talking to men of experience—that human nature is pretty selfish, and that if you were to boil down almost any kind of man, 95 per cent of the whole thing would be selfishness. That is the individuality of the man, and the idea of individuality is opposed to the idea of collectivity. Now in any well organized community what we want to do is to develop the idea of citizenship. I might be asked how I connect that up with the cadet movement. Well, as I was telling the boys in my town, "When you were training and marching and drilling, you never thought of Tom, Dick or Harry. You were thinking of the school you belong to. It was your Alma Mater you thought of, and you forgot yourself. When it came down to competing with the other, you thought about your corps, and not about yourself." That is the idea to develop in the child if you want him to grow into a good citizen. Teach him to forget himself a little bit and think of others. That is what makes a good citizen, to get rid of the selfishness, and think not so much of the individual good as of the collective good, and because of the moral results we get in this cadet movement I am wholly in favour of it. I think the minister is not doing too much. I think he did well to take it upon his own initiative to put this amount aside.

Physical training is also a very good thing. If you want to be a man, you want to be able to walk alone and defend yourself. That gives a man the idea that he is something, and when you get a boy to respect himself, he respects other people too, and respects property. No man has a right to ask his neighbour to respect him unless he first sets the example and respects himself, and I think this is a great school in which to teach the boys to be proud of their persons, and to learn respect for themselves, respect of other persons and of property. I think this vote ought to go through, and if all the other votes that come before us for consideration were the same as this, I would be happy to sanction them and to give them my support.

Mr. IRVINE: I would ask the minister who just spoke how he expects to train a boy to respect himself if he trains him to forget himself.

Mr. BUREAU: I have never preached in any church, Mr. Chairman, but I think that the greatest virtue of all is self-abnegation, and that is what I mean when I say that the boy is taught to forget himself. It may be that my English is defective, but if the hon. gentleman knows so much and cannot understand me I can tell him in French what I mean, in which language I can command all the words I require. If my hon. friend who is a former preacher cannot forgive a man for misusing a word in a language that he did not learn at his mother's knee, I can use French; I have enough of it.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not think there is any necessity for the minister to get a little warm simply because I asked a question arising out of his own discussion. I was trying to get at the basis of this training of the boys. He tells us that first of all they are trained to forget themselves. I am not saying that is a bad thing or a good thing. I merely wanted to get at the gentleman's philosophy. Then he says, after they have been trained thoroughly to forget themselves and practise self-abnegation they are trained to respect themselves, and I merely wanted to find out how it was possible for a man to know what he was at all after he had forgotten himself. And, having thus forgot himself, how he could respect himself is difficult for me to understand. I want to make my protest, Mr. Chairman, against the passing of this item, and I quite realize it will only be a protest. I want to make it along the lines that have been laid down by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) I believe that this movement constitutes a recruiting ground for the militia, that it is one of the means of instilling the spirit of war, the narrow spirit of nationalism, the spirit of conflict in the young generation. In short it is one way of instilling the spirit of militarism, the thing we have been trying to get away from. I repeat that it is a recruiting ground for the militia, although the minister tells us that the training given is not a training for soldiers. If it is not a training for soldiers, if that is not the fundamental purpose of this cadet movement, then why not allow this matter of training in physical form and so forth, to be given over to the public schools as suggested by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey)? We were told when the House was discussing the motion of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) on race track betting that it was not the function of the government to moralize or demoralize the community. In that case why should the government take this matter up so strenuously? If it is moral training you want it is not the business of the government, we understand, to do that. If physical training is desired that is not the business of the government either. If this is what the Minister of Defence (Mr. Graham) says it is, viz: not training for soldiers but training for mental and physical development, that belongs to other departments and can be done more efficiently by them. This government has no business to do anything along that line, and no appropriations for such purposes are in order under militia estimates.

I believe this vote may be successfully opposed on the ground of liberty. While our boys are not compelled to enter the cadet movement yet we are compelled to pay for the cost of the training, and there are great numbers of people who are very much opposed to this thing being thrust upon the community. In spite of that opposition they are not allowed to get rid of paying for it, they are compelled to pay their share of the cost. In that way it is an interference with human liberty to compel taxation for that which is not sanctioned by the community. The community would vote the cadets down if they had an opportunity, and I would challenge the minister to submit this one question alone to the people of Canada through a referendum. It would not be carried; the people would not have it, they do not want it. We have other bodies doing the work of mental, moral and physical development. Every public school is carrying on physical training; the Boy Scouts do physical training. Why should we subsidize this, a governmental, paternal thing, to deal with the morals, the mentality, and the physical condition of our boys when other institutions are already attending to these phases of collective responsibility? I base my opposition to this vote on the ground that it is camouflaged militarism as the hon. member for Calgary West stated, and because other institutions are already doing the work to which it is said to be related and doing it in a better and more efficient way.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. LEWIS: I wish to assure the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Graham) of my sympathy and support, and I do not think his position is a very enviable one when we are discussing the estimates of Militia or National Defence; but I am very glad to say that I feel in my heart that he is not afraid of the situation and that he is able to meet the arguments that are presented in favour of a decrease in our national defence. As regards the item that is before us, the minister is to be commended for increasing this amount for the development of the health of the youth of our country. I myself have had an opportunity for a number of years of being with the young men of my community and taking them out for two weeks' training. I feel assured that it is of great benefit to the boys in my community to undertake this training, this mental and moral discipline. But there is one phase of the matter that I feel somewhat detracts from the movement, and that is this. I quite agree that it is advisable in the interests of the health of our young people, that this cadet drill should have all the encouragement that it is possible to give it. I do not altogether agree with the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Irvine) who suggested that this parliament has nothing to do with the health of the people of this country. The health of the boys and the girls of a country is one of the greatest assets of that country, and nothing that can come before us at the present time is of more importance than the physical and mental well-being of our boys and girls. There is a great deal of good in this movement for which we are asked to vote the sum of $450,000. It will develop, not only what we believe to be the health of the boys, but also that which is so essential to national life—I like to call it the "gang spirit." In this movement, there is the spirit of emulation, the spirit of discipline, and when the Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Bureau), commenting upon this situation said "The boys are able to forget themselves," he spoke one of the noblest truths that enter into our modern civilisation. I do not altogether see the point of the statement of the hon. member for Calgary East that he did not see the connection between forgetting yourself and this movement. As far as I have been able to study philosophy, I think one of the greatest teachers said that the greatest freedom that a man could enjoy was when he forgot himself and when he willed the moral and social good of other people. The spirit of emulation and discipline which is found in the physical drill in the cadet service, is one of the finest things to help in making good men and good citizens. But there is one point that seems to find disfavour to a large extent with the people of our country, and that is the feeling somehow or another, whether it be right or not, that there is an attempt to introduce in this service the militaristic spirit that is prevalent. Personally, I am not at all afraid of the word "military" or "militaristic." I myself am the father of five boys, and if the time ever came when it was necessary for those boys to be called upon to defend their country, I should think that I had been lacking in my duty and that there had been something wrong in the training in the home if those boys did not respond. Yet at the same time I do not think this should be connected with what is called the cadet movement for physical training. It is the duty of the state to train men in a threefold way: physically, mentally and morally. This physical training, I believe, comes within the province of the state. But if in some way this federal government could cooperate with the provincial authorities, who have to a large extent the supervision of the education of the youth of the land, and if this government could assist them financially so that the boys and girls could receive the necessary physical instruction which is required to develop them, without fear of the suspicion that in some mysterious way the boys are being trained into soldiers, I do feel that the government would have the approbation of all the people of Canada. As matters are, however, it seems that this work must come under the Department of National Defence.

Now, as regards physical training under the direction of the provincial authorities, it is well known that every teacher is not qualified to give boys and girls physical instruction. In my own district there are men who are physically unfit to give proper commands and demand discipline; and in other ways it would be impossible for the average school to send its boys for two weeks' training on the camp ground. But if the Department of National Defence would limit its supervision to giving military instruction to the teachers, providing a course for them, or lending them tents or other necessary equipment, without in any way imparting a military taint to the assistance it gives, I believe the department would be doing one of the finest things for the boys in Canada to-day. I should be delighted if some measure could be conceived whereby the same privilege could be afforded the rural boys. I live in a rural constituency and when I come to Ottawa and see the boys in the public schools here getting physical training and the moral discipline that necessarily goes with it, it does seem to me that we in the rural parts of the country are handicapped. And that is why I am pleased to take thirty boys to camp two weeks every year. The member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) submitted a proposal this afternoon which I feel that I could support, but not at the expense of this item. I think that the suggestion that comes from Toronto University is a good one, that we should have international scholarships by means of which educated people and ambitious boys and girls from various countries could meet us on a common plane and become acquainted with us, discussing our ideals of citizenship and our traditions, while we might learn something of their traditions and their outlook on life. That would be one way by which we could get into closer friendly relations and a better understanding with other nations; and to the extent that we understood them we should remove the fear of war. I should be quite willing to support the minister if he set aside a sum of money for that good purpose; but I would not support it at the expense of the physical training of the youth of the land, for I believe that such training is one of the greatest assets we have in building up a virile citizenship.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. SHAW: Under our constitution the subject of education rests with the provincial governments, no matter whether it be physical, mental or moral education. How then does it come about that a vote which the minister justifies on the ground of education, and apparently on that ground alone, has come to be a matter for disposition by the federal government? I want to know the legal basis upon which this vote is asked?

Mr. GRAHAM: If we adhered to the strict interpretation of the British North America Act, there are many activities which the federal government now engages in that could not be carried on. For instance, we are dealing with technical education federally.

Mr. SHAW: That is perfectly clear; you are giving a grant for that purpose, which is to be used by the provincial governments in some particular manner.

Mr. GRAHAM: We give the grant on a fifty-fifty basis. The federal government sent a commission of investigation all over the world where technical education was carried on to any extent to gather information on the subject; and a lot of money was spent for this purpose out of the technical education vote. The idea is that where possible the federal government should work in harmony with the provinces where it is thought that some mutual good can be accomplished. Take the question of agriculture. The federal government conducts a system of experimental farms. But strictly speaking, according to my hon. friend, that is really education,—agricultural education,—and the federal government should have nothing to do with it. On the contrary, we work in harmony with the provinces in that matter. They have agricultural schools and we conduct experimental farms all over the country giving agricultural education. Then there is the question of good roads: We join with the provinces in the construction of good roads. True, we give a grant, but it is subject to approval by our engineers; and we have a staff in connection with the Railway department looking after the construction of roads in the various provinces in order to ensure that they are up to standard. The housing scheme also might have been relegated to the provinces themselves from a technical point of view; but the federal government passed a vote and took a hand in the attempt to solve the problem. The simple fact is that we cannot draw too fine a line. The object of the government, I take it, is to develop the citizenship and resources of the whole Dominion; and the greatest of these resources is found, not in the bowels of the earth, not in the timber, nor the lakes nor the streams of the country, but in the boys and girls who are growing up. And if, by avoiding rigid technicalities, we can join forces with the provinces for the development of all the resources that we possess I think we are doing a good work. Nor do I believe that we are violating the spirit and the real intent of the British North America Act.

Mr. GOOD: There is in my judgment very much to commend itself to us in this vote. The work which is being undertaken by those who have charge of the cadets is an important, a desirable and a necessary one. But in my opinion it is unfortunate that it should be carried on under the auspices of the Department of National Defence,—unfortunate because that supervision seems to create a suspicion that the boys who are being trained are subjected to a militarizing process. While I am disposed to support the vote, it does seem to me that some attention ought to be given to the problem of shifting the supervision from the Department of National Defence to our educational authorities. In all the schools now we have physical instructors who are doing very necesary and good work; and I think it is highly desirable that this work should be linked up a little more closely with our educational system, with the Boy Scout movement and things of that kind, as something separate and distinct from the activities of the Department of National Defence.

Item agreed to.

National Defence—militia services—clothing and necessaries, $300,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I suppose the reduction of $40,400, is due to the lower costs prevailing now?

Mr. GRAHAM: In a measure. This vote fluctuates. We had a lot of material left over from the war. One year we may run out of the regular size of caps and clothing and these deficiencies have to be supplied, while perhaps another year we may run out of some other size, and the vote will be a little higher.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Arsenal, Lindsay, $9,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How is it proposed to spend this $9,000?

Mr. GRAHAM: In caretakers' salaries, fuel, light, etc. These are the particulars:

Salary of chief caretaker, $1,008; salaries of three other caretakers, $2,860; allowance for one caretaker in lieu of quarters, $180; cost of water, fuel and light, $1,830; rental of railway siding, etc., $3,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There was some talk last year that the Lindsay arsenal was to be sold. What has been done in the meantime?

Mr. GRAHAM: The property is now in the hands of the Public Works department for disposal by lease or sale, and they are in touch with the authorities of the town of Lindsay, who, I believe, have been discussing the possibility of securing an industry to rent a portion of the property.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What has become of the machinery?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is all there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is proposed to be done with it?

Mr. GRAHAM: A good deal of the special machinery has been sent to the Quebec arsenal. There is other machinery there that I think could be used by an industrial concern.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Has all the cartridge-making machinery been removed to the Quebec arsenal?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not all of it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much has been removed?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am informed that quite a substantial part has been moved to the Quebec arsenal, which can be used there and for which there is room.

Mr. BOYS: The policy of the department, I presume, is to discontinue the Lindsay arsenal and confine ammunition manufacturing to the Quebec arsenal?

Mr. GRAHAM: That is the object. The Quebec arsenal can produce more than all the ammunition we may need in peace times.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Does there remain at Lindsay a full unit for the manufacture of cartridges?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not quite in a position to give that information. It is not the intention of the government at the present time to manufacture any more ammunition at Lindsay. That will be borne in mind whatever machinery may be taken away.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It is evidently the intention of the government to close the arsenal at Lindsay and dispose of it if possible. What has been the cost to the country of establishing this arsenal?

Mr. GRAHAM: When the policy was announced last year of closing this arsenal—and it was closed a year ago—I gave all that information in detail. I regret that I have not it at hand now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I remember when some particulars were given, and I remember as well that the hon. member for the district at the time stated to the House some things that he evidently believed to be facts, going to show that there were shady, or perhaps improper, circumstances connected with the purchase; in fact he intimated that the purchase was not made on the square in the interests of the country. I happen to know that he has since received all the facts, proving fully that the greatest care was taken in regard to the purchase and that it was honest in every detail to the last cent. I hope he will now be good enough to give those particulars to the House.

Mr. BUREAU: How do you happen to know?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know; I have seen them.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Arsenal, Quebec, $390,000.

Mr. LEWIS: What is the reason for the $15,000 increase in this item considering that the cost of labour and materials has decreased?

Mr. GRAHAM: The cost, of course, depends on the amount of material produced. Formerly we had two arsenals; this year all the work is being done in one.

Mr. LEWIS: Is it small arms ammunition that is made in this arsenal?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes; and we make up to as heavy as 18-pounders.

Mr. LEWIS: It was stated last year when we were discussing a similar item that we already had in Canada a great many of the larger shells—enough to last at least a year or so. I was wondering whether shells of this kind were being made, or whether the arsenal was turning out small ammunition only.

Mr. GRAHAM: The amount of gun ammunition to be manufactured during the coming year is 500 rounds of 18-pounder and 500 rounds of 4.5 howitzer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How many rounds of ammunition were manufactured last year?

Mr. GRAHAM: The estimated production of the Dominion arsenal at Quebec last year was as follows:

Cartridges, S.A. ball .303"—7 millions.
Cartridges, S.A. Ball .303" for D.R.A. 200,000.
Cartridges, S.A. Ball .303 tracer mark VII, 10,000.
Cartridges, S.A. dummy .303" 500,000.
Boxes, ammunition .303" 7,710.
Bandoliers, .303" ammunition 144,000.
Chargers .303" cartridges, 1,540,000.
Cartridges .22" long rifle 9 millions.
Boxes for .22" 900.
Cartridges, S.A. pistol .455" 300,000.
Cartridges, blank, pistol .455" 50,000.
Boxes for pistol ammunition 840.
Puffs, powder, 4 drms. R.F.G. 2, 1,000.
Puffs, powder, R.L.G. 2, 1,000.
Puffs, powder, 4 oz. 500.
Puffs, powders, 2 oz. 500.

The total estimated cost was $425,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister has simply read the estimate of last year. I did not ask him for that information. I want to know what was actually manufactured and how near it would be to that estimate. If he cannot give me that information, will he be kind enough to tell us how many rounds of ammunition were used last year in the different camps and elsewhere? The minister told us last year that we had in stock about 45,000,000 rounds of ammunition, but that that was not enough; and we were to make another 10,000,000 rounds last year. Unless we know how much has been used we are not able to see whether or not it is necessary to keep this institution going. We have reduced the number of men who are to use this ammunition, and it seems to me that the amount used last year must have been less than in former years.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is impossible to state the amount of ammunition of every kind used by the militia and by all the rifle associations. My hon. friend asks how much we manufactured. The returns will not be in until 31st March, but it is expected that the amount estimated will have been manufactured by that time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Can the minister tell us how much small arms ammunition he has on hand now?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have not that information.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is strange that we are asked to vote $390,000 for ammunition and no information is forthcoming as to what we have on hand, what was manufactured last year, or even what was issued by the department last year. I notice what appears to be a clerical error in this estimate; the amount of Mark VII to be manufactured is given as 40,000,000. I fancy that should be 4,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And so all the way down the column; two figures have been added at the end which I fancy are clerical errors. There is provision for a large quantity of small arms ammunition in this estimate—more, I think, than there was for last year. I doubt whether as many men were trained last year as there were the year before, or whether as much ammunition was actually used. I see further down that it is proposed to manufacture 500 high explosive 18-pounders. May I ask whether the supply of 18-pounders which was brought from England at the close of the war, and which caused so much talk at election time, has become exhausted, making it necessary to manufacture additional quantities of these high explosive shells?

Mr. GRAHAM: I gave the statement a few moments ago about the 18-pounders. I will give the remainder of the statement, which comprises the information given to me by the technical officers of the department. The amount of ammunition on hand of these natures—that is, high explosives—represents less than 50 per cent of the equipment reserves required, based on pre-war scales. The amounts to be manufactured do not meet the current year's expenditure for practice and are barely adequate to ensure that the machinery and equipment for the manufacture is in order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister please answer the other question: is the supply of 18-pounder high explosive shells which was obtained from England at the end of the war, and concerning which much comment was made during the last general election, now exhausted, so that it becomes necessary to manufacture more of that kind of ammunition?

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not say the supply has been exhausted. The statement I have read is an answer to that question. It says, if it says anything, that even with the production which is proposed we shall have less than 50 per cent of the amount required to maintain our reserves.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is quite clear, then, from the statement of the minister, that notwithstanding all the noise that was made during the last election concerning the alleged enormous quantities of high explosive shells that were "recklessly and extravagantly" brought into this country, the total supply of this ammunition in Canada to-day is only 50 per cent of what the reserves should be, according to pre-war requirements, and the minister finds it necessary to come to parliament to-day and ask for a vote to increase the store of these very shells by five hundred for the coming season, carrying out exactly what I and others on this side of the House said, that we have only accepted from the British government material in the way of shells for the training of our own Canadian militia which will be used by the militia or kept in reserve. This ammunition is being used and the reserve to-day is only fifty per cent of what it was in pre-war times. It must be borne in mind that the shells which were brought into Canada cost this country nothing. Those who attended the meetings of the Public Accounts Committee last year—which did not report the facts to this House, by the way—will bear me out when I say that no better bargain was ever made than the bargain which was made by the Canadian authorities with the British government whereby all that valuable ammunition came to this country practically without the expenditure of a dollar. Unfortunately we did not get enough of it, and now we have to go on manufacturing five hundred additional for the present year.

Mr. GRAHAM: I imagine that originally the cost was taken into account, so that the Canadian people would be charged in the final settlement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: You have not followed the inquiry.

Mr. GRAHAM: Although we paid nothing, I think you will find that originally the cost was taken into account.

Mr. GUTHRIE: General MacBrien says that it was practically a free gift.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am explaining the conclusion I arrived at after looking into it. My hon. friend, I think, has lost sight of the fact that with that amount of ammunition we received also some gun ammunition, sixty-pounders, which has no connection with the eighteen-pounders we are discussing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That was for Halifax.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I notice that the shells the minister has just referred to are costing $12 apiece. Would it not have been much better to have bought these shells than to have made them? You can buy them far cheaper than that.

Mr. GRAHAM: Where?

Mr. CHAPLIN: In the Old Country. You could probably get them for nothing, like some of the other shells we got before. These shells did not cost as much in war time as they are represented to cost here. Twelve dollars apiece is a higher price than what was paid in war time for them. How are we to know whether the stock of small arms ammunition is enough or not unless we know how much has been used during the past year? Last year the minister told us that we had so much in stock, but he is not able to give us even that much information now. He also told us how much we had used during the year, but he cannot give us that information now. Surely the War Department, such as we have, must keep some account of what ammunition they give out to the different places. There is no ammunition being given out in cold weather. It is all used during the summer time, and it seems to me only reasonable that the minister should tell us how much was used during the last summer.

Mr. GRAHAM: Conditions are a little different now from those existing when I gave that information last year. Last year, I think, it was in June when these estimates went through and we had full returns from the arsenals and from every district as to what had been used. These returns will not be in for some weeks. Consequently I am not in a position to give that information this year as it is not in the department as yet. As to the purchase of shells overseas, does not my hon. friend (Mr. Chaplin) know that there are many things in this country that we can buy cheaper in Europe than we can make here?

Mr. HOEY: He is becoming a free trader.

Mr. GRAHAM: A free trader in ammunition. As a matter of fact during the war, factories were going twenty-four hours a day, with three shifts, and producing an immense daily output. The conditions were far different from an arsenal where you have to keep up your organization, where you have your overhead and all that kind of thing, and only a limited production. I think my hon. friend will see, although I do not admit that this ammunition was produced very much cheaper during the war, that with that enormous production in war time, with the factories running twenty-four hours and turning out an almost unlimited quantity, the ammunition could be produced more cheaply than under the conditions prevailing here today.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would remind the minister that the shells he speaks of were made during the war, when the rate of wages was twice what we should be paying now.

Mr. GRAHAM: Wages have not gone down as much as the hon. member imagines.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I question if there is any overhead in our case. These shells are made in a government institution, and there is no overhead at all. This is only the actual cost. The minister says that I am a free trader. I am, as far as ammunition is concerned. I tell him that as far as this ammunition is concerned we can get these shells practically for nothing. They have been dumped into the sea, lots of them, and a little more timely precaution might have secured us enough to last for a few years, instead of our having to manufacture a paltry number now. It is true that the shells cannot be made so cheaply in small quantities. But why make them in small quantities when we can get them for practically nothing?

Mr. VIEN: In answer to the hon. member I might point out what was disclosed at the Committee on Public Accounts last year with respect to the ammunition which came from overseas. When the hon. gentleman says that eighteen-pounder ammunition could be got for nothing overseas, he forgets that the figures for our requirements in respect of that ammunition were given by the late government to the British government. The ammunition was of such a character that it could not last beyond a definite period, and when it reached the port of disembarkation it was marked "Not good after" such a date.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Seven years.

Mr. VIEN: I have seen the marks myself, and in many cases they were marked as good for not longer than three or four years. Moreover, this ammunition was taken by the various Dominions, and the rest of it, as the hon. gentleman has stated was dumped in the North Sea. That ammunition was not given for nothing, and hon. gentlemen who think that it could be stored in Canada for nothing are totally mistaken. It had to be brought over from the ammunition yards in England and on the Continent at a heavy expense. Those who know anything about the matter also know that for eighteen months shifts of men have been employed to put that ammunition in proper shape and make it safe. There are still many men employed at Levis at present in making these shells safe. As it is they are not in a safe condition. Safety pins have to be removed from the caps. These various shells have to be repainted and definite marks put on them. So, hon. gentlemen are totally mistaken when they say that these shells could be brought over at no cost at all to this country. The balances which were left in the hands of the British government were either destroyed or dumped into the North Sea, according to the information which was given to the committee last year. For these reasons I doubt very much indeed if any other ammunition was available overseas after the requirements of Canada had been given to the British government by the officials of the late administration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Reference has been made to the debate which took place on the militia estimates a year ago. I have a copy of Hansard of the date upon which this matter was before the House and it is not possible to find there the record to which hon. members opposite have been referring for the reason that I find that seventeen pages have been omitted from Hansard as printed and distributed for the benefit of members and for record purposes. Now, if the information referred to is not in the records, and if seventeen pages are omitted from the Hansard which has only been distributed by the government since parliament met, I think it is a most remarkable thing. I have a very distinct recollection that when this item was up a year ago an hon. member who sits to the right of the minister got up and moved for a reduction in the estimate for the arsenal, but there is no record of that in Hansard. I do not understand how this omission of seventeen pages of very important matter occurred. I think it is somewhat significant, however, that hon. members opposite who were so loud in their protestations against voting moneys for anything of a military nature should be silent when an item such as this, calling for a large increase in the expenditure on the arsenal in Quebec is up for consideration. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) referred to the outcry which arose when it was found that shells were being brought out from the Old Country and unloaded at Quebec some time ago. Yet not a word is being heard to-day in reference to this matter from those who made that outcry. It would seem that you can reduce the militia estimates as much as you like providing the expenditure on the Quebec arsenal is increased. That appears to suit hon. gentlemen opposite and not a word of protest is uttered; but if you do anything in the nature of training men to serve their country in an emergency there is a loud protest made by those hon. members and also by hon. members who sit to my left.

I regret very much many of the things that have been said this afternoon in regard to military training, particularly those criticisms offered as to the training of cadets. It is unfortunate, some hon. members say that the training of our cadets should be associated with anything of a military nature. The arsenal at Quebec is intended to supply ammunition for the training of men for military purposes, yet hon. members opposite and hon. gentlemen to my left have been protesting against anything in the nature of military training. I could have wished that some of the things that have been said this afternoon could be omitted from the records as seventeen pages of the Hansard of last session have evidently been omitted. I think the latter occurrence should be inquired into, and that the House should be fully informed how such an omission took place.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In last year's estimates there is an item providing for nine million 22 inch cartridges for long rifle use. Can the minister state how many of these cartridges have been used?

Mr. GRAHAM: As I pointed out a short time ago we have no returns from any of the districts and will not have until the end of the year. Last year we had all this information because the estimates were not before the House until June. The fiscal year closes on the 31st March, and we do not get these returns until after that date.

Mr. HANSON: Are there not monthly returns from the arsenals? Business houses would have such returns.

Mr. GRAHAM: We do not get monthly returns.

Mr. HANSON: It seems to me there should be a monthly return from every arsenal showing the output, the quantity shipped, and the balance on hand. I have no doubt that if the minister would inquire he would find that monthly returns are available.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am informed that such is not the case. Let me remind my hon. friend there is only one arsenal.

Mr. HANSON: Now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister say there are no monthly returns—

Mr. GRAHAM: I am informed not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —showing the output of and the stock on hand? I remember answers being given as to monthly returns in previous years.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have looked through Hansard for several years and in one instance I find that my predecessor gave exactly the same answer with reference to a different branch of the service, that he had not the information desired. I am not surprised at that, because apparently it is not possible to get it.

Mr. MEWBURN: I am inclined to think that if the minister made inquiry he would find that in the case of every military district they know exactly from day to day the amount of ammunition shipped and the amount on hand.

Mr. POWER: That would not be a monthly return from the arsenal, that would be simply a statement of what they have in store.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I find that last year in the estimates there were nine million cartridges to be made. This year only a million of the same class of cartridges are to be manufactured. It seems to me that fact is significant in itself; there must be a pretty big stock on hand or the number manufactured would not have dropped down to a million as compared with nine millions last year. It seems that we cannot get definite information from the minister, but somebody ought to be able to furnish it.

Mr. BOYS: Up to date what amount of last year's appropriation of $375,000 has been expended?

Mr. GRAHAM: About $300,000, to the end of January.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I think we should have some explanation as to why 17 pages have been omitted from Hansard?

The CHAIRMAN: I draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that his remarks are not relevant to the item under consideration. The matter he speaks of is one which should come before the printing committee of the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would like the hon. member to inform the committee what pages have been omitted from Hansard.

Mr. BOYS: Could the minister tell us to what extent the shells, or other ammunition, received at Quebec, about which there was so much talk, have since been used for 9 p.m. practice or other purpose at the military camps? Even an approximate estimate will satisfy me.

Mr. GRAHAM: I cannot give an estimate of what number of shells have been used. Of course a great number must have been used. The ammunition is distributed all over the country, and not stored at one place. So far as shells are concerned, even with this estimate we shall be left with not more than 50 per cent of the amount required in reserve.

Mr. BOYS: Could the minister give the committee any idea in dollars and cents as to the cost of manufacture? Would it run into thousands of dollars? Could he give even an approximation of the amount.

[Mr. Mewburn.]

Mr. GRAHAM: It would take some little time to make the estimate. We would have to get the sizes, quantities and all that kind of thing. That is a question my hon. friend surely would not anticipate would come up on the estimates.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I remember when I had the honour of presenting these estimates to the House, my deputy was always prepared with a book showing exactly what the reserves of ammunition amounted to. We could tell what they were in small arms ammunition and in artillery ammunition. Perhaps, if the minister would inquire now, he would find in that book a page with that statement on it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have never been able to find that information in any book of Estimates, either last year's, this year's or that of the previous year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister gave that information last year.

Mr. GRAHAM: He gave it offhand.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister was just joking last year.

Mr. GRAHAM: No, he was not.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister told us on page 2086 of Hansard of last year just what the quantity of the reserves was.

Mr. POWER: Tear that page out too.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is one of the pages that could not be torn out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have been waiting patiently, fully expecting the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) to move to reduce this item. He did so a year ago and I am a little surprised, because I was criticised for some of the criticism which I offered, for it was stated that credit was due to the Minister of Militia in that he was reducing an expenditure which was to take place at Quebec. Surely, under present conditions, with the reductions which have taken place in many of the other items, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would not consent to this increase for the arsenal at Quebec.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Since my hon. friend has informed the committee that those seventeen pages of Hansard have disappeared, I am losing all credit for that amendment of last year, and under the circumstances, I would not think of moving another one.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If the minister was entitled to any credit, we would give it to him notwithstanding the absence of the pages from the record.

Mr. BOYS: If the minister were given an opportunity, I presume he could find out the value of the ammunition we are discussing, in other words, the ammunition which was received from Great Britain, about which there was so much discussion, and which has since been used—how much there was of it, and what it is worth according to the Canadian price of manufacture. I would like to have that information. If it cannot be got now, I would suggest that this item stand, because when that information is given, I wish to make two or three references to some of the evidence taken before the committee which dealt with that matter, which evidence, I think, never reached the House. We are anxious that the House and especially the people of the country should know the facts regarding this ammunition. There are some illuminating and startling facts contained in the evidence of Col. Harrington and General MacBrien on this matter. When I get the information I am now seeking, I should like to make those references which, perhaps, would not be appropriately made without the information.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think the request I made, that the minister give us the quantity of ammunition that is being used in the country for practise purposes during the year, is a reasonable request and one in regard to which the information can be easily obtained, and that information should be brought down to the House at the same time.

Mr. GRAHAM: All right; we will let the item stand.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) tell us what pages are missing from his Hansard? Every page of the debate is in the copy of Hansard that I am holding in my hand. I do not know how my hon. friend got hold of that particular copy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I was ruled out of order when I endeavoured to bring the matter to the attention of the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the copy of Hansard which my hon. friend has just handed me, it looks as if those pages had been cut out.

Item stands.

Grants to associations, etc., $100,000.

Mr. MILLAR: What are the names of the associations that receive these grants and the amount given to each?

Mr. GRAHAM: Services Association; Cavalry Association, Artillery, Infantry, Medical, Engineers, Army Service Corps; Rifle Associations in the different provinces; University Rifle Association; local rifle associations.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance, military properties, $250,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. GRAHAM: Under the appropriation this year, certain services are placed, that heretofore have been under the engineering appropriation, such as $8,000, removal of snow from streets, grounds and roofs; $1,000 for power to be used, Connaught Rifle Range. There are several small votes of that kind that in other years we paid under the engineering appropriation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister should have told us that, when we were considering the engineering appropriations, because it would have shown an increase if those items had not been taken out.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does this item include anything for repairs, extension or improvement of military properties at Brockville or adjacent thereto?

Mr. GRAHAM: This is not really for repairs such as my hon. friend has in mind. That is rather for maintenance. I know what my hon. friend has in mind is the rifle range in the vicinity of Brockville. Last year some money was expended on that in the way of draining, which comes under a general vote, I think the engineering vote.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is in this item nothing for anything of this kind this year.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is nothing specifically; but we have a general appropriation, and we treat these requests as they come up.

Mr. SHAW: Does this item include rental of buildings that would be used for headquarters of a military district?

Mr. GRAHAM: The Public Works department looks after the renting of buildings.

Mr. SHAW: Am I justified in saying that the expenditure indicated on this page of the Estimates is not the total expenditure for defence purposes?

Mr. GRAHAM: In the same way that the total expenditure for post offices or any other public service never includes the amount of rental for the building, that matter being looked after by the Public Works department.

Item agreed to.

Ordnance arms, lands, etc., $66,000.

Mr. HANSON: What does this item cover?

Mr. GRAHAM: To a large extent it covers the inspection of munitions.

Item agreed to.

Pay of staff, $255,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: For the year 1921-22 the vote under the head of Pay of Staff was $265,000, last year it was $255,000, and this year it is the same, a reduction of only $10,000. I was under the impression from the debate that took place last year that the Pay of Staff was an item that was to be largely reduced when the reorganization of the various departments took place, and all these departments were put under the head of National Defence. I do not know that I am disposed to criticize the item very much. I know I did defend it two and three years ago most strenuously, but the chief attack on that occasion was made by my hon. friend for Quebec South (Mr. Power).

Mr. POWER: He is of the same opinion still.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He pointed out to the committee the tremendous number of high ranking officers which this country was maintaining. I forget how many generals and major-generals he stated.

Mr. POWER: Twenty-one.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And he argued that the pay of staff was entirely disproportionate to the force which we had in Canada. Now, I know of one or two changes that have taken place. I know that the Inspector-General has been retired on pension, and that pension does not appear in this item. He was drawing, I think, about $8,500. The department has saved that and perhaps another $1,500 in some other direction, because the saving apparently is $10,000. But the whole array of high ranking and high paid officers still remains. I always maintained that they were necessary to the service, I always maintained, and still maintain, that they were not overpaid, but, on the contrary, in many cases were underpaid. But I am waiting for my hon. friend for Quebec South to give the committee the benefit of his knowledge and to state his views in regard to this particular item, bearing in mind the attitude he took two and three years ago.

Mr. POWER: I have no doubt a large number of these high ranking officers have since retired, but that would not alter my views on the matter as expressed two years ago. I agree with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Graham) that we have too many high ranking officers. I do not think that those we have are overpaid, but there are too many of them all through the militia service of Canada. We have generals where we might have captains, colonels where we might have sergeants, and majors where we might very well have men of the rank and file. I think that the abuses which crept into the service during the term of office of my hon. friends opposite have been such that it has been almost impossible for anyone to get rid of these officers; and in spite of the well meant and strenuous efforts of the minister who now presides over the department, some of these men who were there during the time of my hon. friends across the floor are still there and apparently cannot be got rid of.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is pretty weak.

Mr. POWER: In many cases, as my hon. friend from Lotbiniere (Mr. Vien) suggests, they themselves have not the virtue of resignation; and the minister when he took office found them so firmly entrenched in the positions they occupied during the war that it was impossible for him to get rid of them. I think the minister is doing his best. He has retired at least three that I am aware of, General Burstall, General Gwatkin—

Mr. MEIGHEN: He was out long ago.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps—General Swift, and another whose name I cannot just at the moment recall.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who took the places of these men?

Mr. POWER: I do not know, really. If the leader of the Opposition is too shy to ask the question I will ask the minister for him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have asked him.

Mr. POWER: I have known my right hon. friend and admired him a great many years and I never knew him to lack the virtue of frankness in stating openly what he thought. But in his behalf I will ask the minister to see to it that next year we have fewer of these highly paid officers and that an investigation be made in the department to see whether it is not possible in certain branches of the service to have officers of lower grades carry on the work which is now being done by those who are highly titled and consequently much higher salaried.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I sympathize with my hon. friend for Quebec South in the dilemma in which he finds himself. In the old days he was as bold as a lion in his criticism of this very item. He moved for substantial reductions and divided the committee.

Mr. POWER: Will the hon. member vote with me if I make a similar motion to-night?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I was not in sympathy with the motion.

Mr. POWER: I would move it right away if he would promise to support it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I opposed it then and I would oppose it now. But my hon. friend is entirely wrong when he says that abuses crept in under the former administration. He knows why there are so many high ranking officers in the department to-day, but he has not told the committee. It is because of the war. These men obtained their rank, not here in the department but on the field of battle, and coming back they were not reduced, simply for the reason that they had attained their rank in the field.

Mr. VIEN: Does the hon. gentleman not admire more those generals who served with great efficiency on the battlefield, and who, on returning, went back to their ploughs?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I admire them all. I admire all who served efficiently on the field, and I certainly would be the last one to degrade in rank a man who achieved that rank on the field of battle, no matter what his subsequent calling in life might happen to be. That is why these officers who are still attached to the department have their present ranking.

Mr. POWER: Why not degrade them in pay? You did it to the junior officers throughout the service.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. POWER: How many junior officers holding the rank of major now serve as lieutenants in the regular forces? Why not apply the same principle to the generals?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are only a certain number of offices to be filled. The government cannot employ all the deserving officers of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, that would be impossible. But where their services are required they have been retained, wherever possible in the ranks which they attained in the field. I quite see that the minister cannot disturb that arrangement. It would be most improper in my humble judgment to do so. But what strikes me as being odd is that our permanent force has been reduced since last year. It has been a good deal reduced since my time. When I was minister we were reducing the permanent force. I notice the vote is reduced in these estimates, but the pay of the staff keeps up. That is the point I would bring to the attention of my hon. friend for Quebec (Mr. Power), who was bold enough three years ago to move for the reduction of this item when we had a larger permanent force, and who to-day is as mild as a lamb in the face of a minister friendly to his own cause, and humbly, to what three years ago he called an iniquity and an outrage.

Mr. STEVENS: What officers have been retired during the past year who are paid out of this item? And have any other officers been appointed in their places with or without pensions?

Mr. GRAHAM: Speaking from memory, and notwithstanding the statement of my right hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), General Gwatkin was not out of the service but was acting chairman of the Air Board. He has been retired, not with a pension, because he draws a pension from the imperial authorities. He was given one year's leave of absence, I think.

Mr. STEVENS: What was his salary?

Mr. GRAHAM: It was made up of what we paid him, added to his imperial pension.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think $7,500 in all.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think we gave him $3,500 or $4,000. General Burstall was retired, but is still drawing his pay during leave of absence.

Mr. STEVENS: Will he draw that this year?

Mr. GRAHAM: Up to October. Part of the remuneration of General Fiset, our deputy minister, is in this item. He is on leave of absence until next autumn. Then we had a reduction in the staff which perhaps accounts for a large portion of this decrease. When General Williams resigned in Toronto to take over the provincial police one branch of our department was abolished and the remainder of the staff were transferred, General Elmsley being sent to Kingston, General King to London and General Parry to Toronto. As a matter of fact, so long as the gentlemen whose names I have mentioned are drawing their pay on leave of absence the reduction due to their retirement cannot appear in the estimates.

Mr. STEVENS: Has anyone been appointed in the place of those who have retired?

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. BOYS: Were General Williams and General Fiset retired on one year's leave of absence with pay and also with pension?

Mr. GRAHAM: They do not get any pension until after their leave of absence expires.

Mr. STEVENS: But they will?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes. General Fiset was retired on leave of absence on account of illness. So far as this vote is concerned, none of these gentlemen have been replaced.

Item agreed to.

Permanent Force, $5,290,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What does the permanent force consist of to-day?

Mr. POWER: Officers and their batmen.

Mr. GRAHAM: The permanent force to-day is composed of the following:

	Officers	Other Ranks	Total
Royal Canadian Artillery	67	616	683
Royal Canadian Dragoons	20	250	270
Lord Strathcona's Horse	18	187	205
Royal Canadian Engineers	41	212	253
Royal Canadian Corps Signallers	6	45	51
Royal Canadian Regiment (Infty.)	38	353	391
P.P.C. Light Infantry	34	226	260
Royal 22nd Regiment	16	179	195
Royal Can. Machine Gun Bde.	15	...	15
Instructional Cadre	3	130	133
Cadet Officers Specially Employed	8	...	8
Royal Canadian Army Service Corps	31	230	261
Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps	32	73	105
Royal Canadian Army Ordnance Corps	36	419	455
Royal Canadian Army Veterinary Corps	6	7	13
Royal Canadian Army Pay Corps	21	67	88
Corps of Military Staff Clerks	9	187	196
General List (Officers)	26	...	26
	427	3,181	3,608

The number that this estimate provides for is 3,516.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What was it a year ago? I did not think it was 3,608 last year. It has gone up instead of down.

Mr. GRAHAM: These are the figures:

1921-22, 3,978; 1922-23, 3,608; this year, 3,516.

Mr. HANSON: That is a very small reduction. What was the figure for the Royal Canadian Dragoons?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The figure is 391.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. HANSON: Is that corps stationed at the Stanley Barracks, Toronto?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Is it the policy of the department to keep the corps there? I think these men ought to be moved some distance away from an urban centre to give them an opportunity of indulging in proper drill and manœuvres so that they may become more efficient. To-day their quarters are too restricted and they are not able to carry out manœuvres of any consequence.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend is absolutely right. As a matter of fact we are at Stanley Barracks now on sufferance of the city of Toronto, our quarters at Rosedale Heights having been burned to the ground a few nights ago. The necessity of furnishing accommodation in Toronto has to be considered. To provide money for the purpose we have placed on the market through the Public Works department the St. Andrew's school property, purchased for war purposes, and the property owned by us at Rosedale Heights. If we could sell the St. Andrew's school property for approximately the amount it cost us the proceeds would go a long way towards establishing proper accommodation at Long Branch. There is sufficient land there to give all the necessary accommodation for training, and so on, and there are excellent barracks. The Defence Department hopes before long, with money obtained through the sale of militia property, to be able to work out a scheme to provide proper accommodation for the permanent force in Toronto at Long Branch.

Mr. SHAW: In view of the suggestion that the department is over-officered, will the minister give us the number of men in the Strathcona Horse, and the number of officers and non-commissioned officers, with their respective ranks?

Mr. GRAHAM: Eighteen officers and 187 men. The ranks of the officers are as follows: 1 lieutenant-colonel; 5 majors; 5 captains; 10 lieutenants; 2 warrant officers; 24 sergeants; 12 corporals; 11 lance-corporals.

Mr. SHAW: The figures the minister gives us are ample evidence in support of the charge that has been made. If my recollection is correct, on service that number of men would be in charge of 1 senior captain, 1 junior captain, and 4 lieutenants.

Mr. GRAHAM: We are providing for 2 majors, 1 captain, 4 lieutenants and 175 other ranks.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How many members of the permanent force are in the military district which has headquarters at Halifax?

Mr. GRAHAM: The number is 528.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What was the force there in September last?

Mr. GRAHAM: I should not think there would be much change. I have not the figures here.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was there any part of the permanent force in the adjoining military district with headquarters at St. John during last September?

Mr. GRAHAM: About 53, all ranks.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then in these two military districts there were approximately 600 of the permanent force at the time of the unfortunate strike or disturbance that took place there a few months ago. I understand that at that time the permanent force alone was called upon in aid of the civil power. I also understood the minister to take the view this afternoon that the law was that the permanent force in the first instance must be called on, and after that, if necessary, the ordinary volunteer units of the active militia.

Mr. GRAHAM: I said the law provided that if the permanent force was available it would have to be used; if it was not available and there was an emergency, the volunteer force should be called upon temporarily, but to be replaced by the permanent force.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is what I intended to convey to the committee; perhaps I misstated the point. My view of it is that the law does contemplate the calling out of the ordinary militia, the volunteer units, in the first instance. If language means anything, that is what the Militia Act of Canada provides. I just want to place the matter as it appears in the statute before the committee and let the committee judge for itself. This is a plain matter of fact and a plain matter of law. It will, I fancy, either now or hereafter have to be decided, and it is just as well that we consider it under this vote, which deals with the permanent force. Section 80 of the Militia Act is the law on the subject, it provides:

The active militia,—

That includes the volunteer forces of Canada as well as the permanent force.

—or any corps thereof, shall be liable to be called out, within or without the municipality in which such corps is raised or organized, for active service, with their arms and ammunition, in aid of the civil power, in any case in which a riot or disturbance of the peace requiring such service occurs, or is, in the opinion of the civil authority hereinafter designated in that behalf, anticipated as likely to occur, and, in either case, beyond the powers of the civil authorities to suppress, or to prevent or deal with.

Now, the administration of civil and criminal law in this country is not left to the Dominion government; it rests with the provinces. A riot, a disturbance or breach of the peace, would constitute a breach of the criminal law of Canada, and it is the duty of the provinces, acting under the authority given them in the criminal law and under the constitution, to take cognizance of all such matters and deal with them. In other words, that is not the duty of this government or of this parliament; the province itself must take the responsibility and apply a remedy. The provinces have established municipal institutions; they have delegated provincial authority to the municipalities.

Mr. POWER: May I interrupt the hon. member? We had an unfortunate riot in Quebec in 1918. Why did the hon. gentleman, who was then a member of the Cabinet, not insist that the province of Quebec should take care of that riot?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, the circumstances were entirely different from those which prevailed in this instance. It was a time when Canada was actually at war and we had large military forces in the country, and it was—

Mr. POWER: Not openly at war with Quebec, was it?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, no, not in Quebec.

Mr. POWER: Not openly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The disturbance there was in connection with a matter with which this government had power to deal; I assume that is the distinction. However, I want to state my case, and if my hon. friend does not—

Mr. POWER: The mayor of Quebec did not call on the federal authorities.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, the federal authorities acted on their own initiative and should bear the cost. I fancy they did bear the cost.

Mr. POWERS: They have not paid the victims yet.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My only desire is to lay the facts before the committee and let the committee judge. The municipalities maintain a system, in their police forces, for carrying out the law. If under any conditions the provincial system of police is not sufficient, then any municipality, acting through its head, may requisition the active militia of Canada in aid of the civil power. If the head of the municipality refuses to take action, then power is given to the county judge having jurisdiction in that municipality. It comes back to the municipality, you see. The municipality is the one specially affected. It is to the head of the municipality that power is first given to request the calling out of the militia; then to the local judge having jurisdiction over the municipality where the disturbance arises. So it was in this case. I am informed that the head of the corporation involved and the municipality refused to take action. It was open then to any inhabitant to go to the judge, and on laying the case before him the judge could take action. Following up the provisions of the statute, he would make a requisition in the form given in the Militia Act, which would be forwarded to Ottawa, and upon that the government would act.

Now, how should they act? What I submit was the first thing the government should have done on receipt of that requisition was to call out the active militia in that particular district, in that municipality or at least in that locality.

Mr. POWER: How does the hon. member read that in the act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am going to read the act now.

Mr. POWER: I thought he had read it.

Mr. GRAHAM: He is trying to edit it.

Mr GUTHRIE: Section 81 provides:

> The district officer commanding in any locality, if he is present in the locality and able to act, or if he is not so present, or from sickness or other cause is unable to act, the senior officer of the active militia in any locality, not from sickness or other cause unable to act, shall call out the active militia, or such portion thereof as he considers necessary for the purpose of preventing or suppressing any such actual or anticipated riot or disturbance, when thereunto required in writing by the civil authority hereinafter designated in that behalf: Provided that so far as the permanent force is available, a sufficient number of the force is to be employed upon the duty of preventing or suppressing such actual or anticipated riot or disturbance before recourse is had to other militia corps, and shall replace such other militia corps if so called out upon duty so soon as and to the extent the permanent force shall thereafter become available.

What I maintain in regard to that section is that the whole thing pertains to the locality. Any one reading that enactment which I have just read must come to the conclusion that it is the officer in the locality that can do it.

Mr. DUFF: It is the officer commanding the district.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let us look at the situation. The government had between five and six hundred men in that particular district at the time of the strike at Halifax. Were they called out, may I ask the minister?

Mr. GRAHAM: Certainly, but there were not five or six hundred men whom you would call fighting men.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They were available men for the purpose. Then the next step was to call out the active militia of Canada in that locality.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not in that locality.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why, if my hon. friend's contention was correct, the two or three hundred men he could call out in that locality would not be sufficient. He would have to scour the country and go to Vancouver to get enough men to put down a disturbance. The thing is preposterous.

Mr. GRAHAM: I did not say that at all.

Mr. GUTHRIE: As a matter of fact, he did not have to go to Vancouver, but he did go from Halifax to St. John, and from St. John to Quebec, and from Quebec to Montreal, and from Montreal to Kingston, and from Kingston to Toronto and London, and all that time there was apprehension of a riot or disturbance in Cape Breton. The meaning of the law to my mind is as plain as plain can be. The officer in the locality is the one you should make your appeal to. He calls out the permanent force in the locality.

Mr. GRAHAM: It does not say so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then his recourse is to the ordinary active militia of the locality, but instead of that the minister, under some authority which I suppose he obtained from the Minister of Justice, some opinion which he obtained from the law officers of the Crown, scoured the country from Halifax to London, Ontario, to secure a force of men, at a cost of some $60,000, to go down to Nova Scotia to suppress this apprehended strike. Now what did it all amount to? I take the statement of my hon. friend from Cape Breton South (Mr. Kyte) this afternoon, the government whip in this House. There had been some little outbreak, some little breach of the peace, a blow or two had been struck. Someone became afraid. The mayor of the city was not afraid. He knew that under the Militia Act, if the military forces of this country were brought down there at his request the municipality would have to pay the cost. That has been the law for a very long time and has been enforced in this country. If a municipality seeks to have the militia called out in aid of the civil power, the law says that it shall pay the cost.

Mr. GRAHAM: It has not always been collected.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It may not be possible in many cases to collect a debt, but under the Militia Act, this becomes a debt due to the Crown. All that the government can do under the circumstances is to get judgment, and I venture to say that if the government press they will get the claim. After the permanent force is gathered up, and the active militia in the locality, and I have no doubt there were lots of them, enough at least to put down such a petty little disturbance as occurred in Cape Breton on that occasion—

Mr. GRAHAM: Had the hon. member been minister and under the act got a requisition duly signed by a man authorized to sign, and giving his reasons therefor, would he or would he not have complied with the act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would have complied with the act to this extent. I would have utilized the permanent force I had at Halifax and the militia units in existence in that neighbourhood, and would have done the whole thing at one-quarter the expense incurred by my hon. friend, and I would have asked the municipality to pay it.

Mr. GRAHAM: How would you ask the municipality to pay it? If the hon. member will look at the records he will find that he and his government attempted to collect very few, if any, of such accounts.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am talking about the facts of this case. I am not aware of the facts in other cases.

Mr. GRAHAM: You should be. You were there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But this case I tried to explain as I went along. Now they could not get the mayor to act. He understood the responsibility. But the refusal of the mayor, if the judge acts, does not relieve the municipality. The judge can bind the municipality. if he is the judge in the district in which the municipality is situated, just as firmly as can the mayor. Someone went to a judge, and to a county judge having jurisdiction over the area. Personally I do not know who it was. My opinion is—it may be only rumour—that it was someone who had to do with the British Empire Steel Corporation. There was a strike on at their works and some difficulty had arisen there. They became afraid of what might happen, and someone went to the judge and persuaded him that conditions were such that he should request that the active militia in Canada be called out. I assume that when the minister brings the papers down, we shall find out exactly who did go to the judge. But somebody went who had an interest in the matter, because the mayor of the municipality had refused to interfere. Then the minister sets about to gather up the permanent force in this country from as far west as London, and to bring them down to Nova Scotia to settle what looks on the face of it to be either a small breach of the peace, a small disturbance, or perhaps something that involved some danger to the company's property. My hon. friend from Cape Breton South this afternoon led me to believe that if steps were not taken to prevent disorder, it might result in the men abandoning the pumps and refusing to permit other men to work at them, and that damage might ensue to the company's property.

Assume that all is correct; I assume it is. Suppose damage did accrue to the company's property. The company has the same remedies as a private individual to recover that damage. If damage, through the wrongful act of somebody else, occurs to my property, or to the property of any hon. member in this House, the law is there: We must take advantage of it and recover the damage. We cannot in every instance, although we apprehend that damage will be done to our property, call out the militia of Canada to stop it. I submit that if all they feared was damage to property they had no right to call out the militia at all. They had only right to call out the militia in aid of the civil power "where," in the language of the statute, "a riot or disturbance of the peace requiring such services occurs or is, in the opinion of the civil authority hereinbefore designated at that district, anticipated or likely to occur." A riot or breach of the peace either in being or likely to occur, is the sole reason for calling out the militia. Now the government called the militia out. They gathered up the permanent force from half way across Canada and sent it down to Nova Scotia at a cost to this country—I will not say yet to this country—of sixty thousand dollars odd. In the first instance the Militia Act provides that that money shall be paid by the government, and that the government shall have the right to collect it from the municipality. The municipality which seeks the aid shall pay the cost. That is reasonable, that is proper, I submit. At all events that is the law, and we cannot change the law unless we repeal the act under which this transaction took place.

Now I was somewhat alarmed this afternoon, as were other hon. members on this side, when the minister merely hinted that he proposed to bring in some measure—a bill or an estimate, or something of the kind—to saddle upon the Dominion of Canada the cost of taking the permanent force to Nova Scotia to stop this trifling disturbance which took place last September—that occurrence which some feared might result in a breach of the peace and others feared might result in damage to the company's property. The minister intimated during the discussion this afternoon that he proposed to bring in an estimate to pay that $60,000 out of the funds of the people of this country, when the law says it shall be paid by the municipality. The mayor says he did not request it, and would not, but the judge—he is above the mayor under this statute—having jurisdiction over that municipality said "We must have the military force of Canada," and he would bind the municipality to pay for it just as well as the mayor or the warden, the power being exactly the same. Now, I submit, with all deference to the opinion of others, that it will be going a tremendous distance if this country is to be saddled with the cost, to the extent of $60,000, of putting down a little disturbance in Cape Breton. Surely a couple of hundred men, which the minister undoubtedly had at Halifax, would have been more than sufficient to quell that disturbance or to have given security to the people that no great damage was going to be done to the property of that municipality. Failing that, in the locality, as stated in the statute, there were any number of militia men, any number of militia units that might have been called out. At all events sufficient men could have been procured for all practical purposes at less than one-half the cost which is fixed by the minister in his statement today as something like $60,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend is not going to be allowed to mislead the committee—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAHAM: —unintentionally, because of the payment of $60,000. He has admitted that the country had to pay that in the first place. He knows, as an ex-minister of the Crown, that the only way that we could get the money to meet the expenditure involved when there was no vote for the purpose, was by a Governor General's warrant. A Governor General's warrant was issued which was drawn on to the extent of approximately $60,000. That amount of money must be replaced by a vote of parliament and for that purpose an estimate will be brought in to supplement the estimate for the present year. That course would have to be taken irrespective of the collection of the money from the municipality so the fact need not worry my hon. friend. A vote would have to be brought in regardless of the fact of whether the municipality pay the money in three months or six months in order to cover the amount of the Governor General's warrant.

Now as to the other point my hon. friend made, I am not going to quarrel with him about the law. I imagine that I got as sound advice as he could possibly give, although I respect his opinion. He was not the responsible man to interpret the law to me under the circumstances, and my legal instructions were that the Militia Act meant what it says: That in the first place if it were emergent the permanent troops available should be taken. If there was an emergency and the permanent troops were not at the moment available then we could call out the volunteers; but it is apparent that the act did not contemplate the volunteers being called out for that purpose when it says, in language as plain as the English language can state, that as soon as possible the volunteer force must be relieved and replaced by the permanent force. If the English language means anything the language of the act means that. Now that is what was done.

Another thing. My hon. friend says the cost would be very much less had what he suggests been carried out. But he forgets this fact: When you call out the volunteer force you have to pay the men on that force from $1.25 up to $10 per day, while the permanent force are under pay and get nothing extra for such service. Therefore if the cost of transportation was equal in both cases the expense for pay in the one case would be twice as much as in the other. So I think my hon. friend will find if he works the matter out and looks carefully at the law and what the practical result of each operation would have been that it did not cost the country any more to bring the permanent force to Cape Breton than if we had violated the law and called out the volunteers.

Mr. MANION: In view of the minister's statement this afternoon that the cost to the country will be roughly $60,000 and that they may put in some claim to the municipality, if the facts are as stated and if the permanent force were called out by the government at the request of the judge, and the judge made the requisition for troops at the request, say, of the British Empire Steel Corporation—

Mr. DUFF: It is not fair to say that. It was not made at their request at all.

Mr. MANION: I have not made any statement, I am saying—

Mr. DUFF: You say "at the request of the British Empire Steel Corporation." That is not fair.

Mr. MANION: I have not made any statement at all. I am saying that if the facts turn out to be that the judge requisitioned these forces at the request of the British Empire Steel Corporation—

An hon. MEMBER: We will read you an imaginary letter in a moment.

Mr. MANION: —is there any reason why the British Empire Steel Corporation should not be asked to foot this bill instead of the people of this country? That is what I should like to ask the minister. Is there any reason why the company should not be billed, if the militia or the permanent force were called out for the purpose of protecting their property, and according to the statement made here there was very little necessity for the permanent force to be called out for that purpose?

Mr. GRAHAM: This is a hypothetical case. In the first place the judge
10 p.m. is authorized by the Militia Act to say whether it is necessary to call out the force or not. It is not for my hon. friend or for any other member to say. The law provides that the judge shall say whether it is necessary. The judge said that the military forces were necessary and they were provided under the act. Now, let me ask my hon. friend this: Would he exclude from the citizenship of any place men who were even of the British Empire Steel Corporation?

Mr. MANION: No, I would not, but if it turned out that the British Empire Steel Corporation asked for this force to be called out unnecessarily I think they should foot the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM: The judge decides whether it is necessary or not. Perhaps hon. gentlemen will have a better chance of judging the facts in this matter when the correspondence is brought down, which will take place when the vote to which I referred is called. I do not think it would make any difference. No matter to what part of the community a citizen belongs, if he is a citizen of a certain locality, if he is in the grocery business, the steel business, the law business, even the medical profession, he has a right to be protected. The fact that he belongs to some corporation is no reason why we should say that he should not have a right under the statute to call for protection.

Mr. MANION: I am not speaking of that at all. He would have a right to protection; but according to the statement made this afternoon, the threatened riot was of very small importance—

Mr. DUFF: That is not correct either.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman seems to be an advocate in this House for the British Empire Steel Corporation.

Mr. DUFF: That is not a fair statement and I will not stand for it. I will not allow the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) to say that I am an advocate of the British Empire Steel Corporation. He had better clean his own skirts first before he touches mine.

Mr. MANION: If the hon. gentleman's skirts are as clean as mine, he will have no reason to complain.

Mr. DUFF: They are a great deal cleaner.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for Lunenburg has been interrupting me at every sentence, on behalf of the British Empire Steel Corporation.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member had no right to mention the British Empire Steel Corporation's name.

Mr. MANION: That is a question of opinion.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River has the floor. I would ask him to address the Chair on the subject.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, and address it in the proper way.

Mr. MANION: I have been addressing the Chair and I wish to go on doing so, if the hon. member for Lunenburg will permit me. If it should turn out that it was on the request of the British Empire Steel Corporation that the militia were called out, the British Empire Steel Corporation should foot the bill, and I have no reason for retracting that statement. Have any requests been made so far to the municipality or to anybody to foot the bill to replace the money that the government have had to pay out on that account?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think I replied to that question to the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) this afternoon. So far as I know, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not hear the reply; otherwise, I would have expressed the opinion I express now. This trouble occurred last autumn; we are now in the month of March, and I cannot understand how a matter would be allowed to stand so long. I presume by this time there will be another council, and the hon. gentleman will not be able to deal with the men who were members of the council at that time. The minister intimated this afternoon that inasmuch as the requisition came from a judge, there might be a difference as to responsibility. I do not know where he gets that idea. I venture to say that he did not get it from the Department of Justice. The statute is clear on all questions of dispute, and there is no doubt on that whatever. If the requisition was regular, it was under the act. It it was not, the government had no right to interfere at all. If it was regular, then the liability of the municipality is precisely the same if the requisition proceeded from the judge as if it proceeded from the mayor, warden, or other officer, as the case might be. On the question of liability there can be no doubt, provided that the government had the right under the act. The minister has said that they had. Still, we are now about eight months off and no assessment at all has been made against the municipality.

Mr. MARTELL: I rise to a point of order. This afternoon, Mr. Chairman, you ruled that the discussion must be relevant to the item under consideration. Surely this is not relevant to the item under consideration.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does that need a ruling, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: I will rule that the discussion is relevant and within the item that is being discussed by the committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand the municipalities have protested that they did not requisition these troops; that they were not necessary; that order could quite easily have been maintained without them; indeed, that the disorder was due rather to the presence of the troops. I am not saying that they are right; but I say that if the government acted regularly, then the municipalities are liable, and the government can present to this House no excuse for not promptly assessing the municipalities in accordance with the law.

While I am on that point, let me emphasize this as well. I quite admit that if the requisition comes in the regular way and contains the proper assertions as provided in the act, it is the duty of the government, as is stated clearly in the act, to provide from the active militia or from the permanent force, so far as it is available in the district and later from the permanent force, to supply the place of the active militia called out—it is the duty of the government to provide sufficient troops to take care of such an emergency as is feared. But the extent to which the government provides militia is not something that is fixed by the act at all; that is entirely under the responsibility of the government. The government is the judge of the necessity as regards the extent to which it shall send militia to take care of the situation. The government is not the judge as to whether militia should go or not. The warden, or if he fails, the judge, has that responsibility. The government gathers militia from the ends of this country right up into western Ontario, and sends them down to Nova Scotia at a cost to the country of some $60,000, a cost that under the act the country is never intended to pay. I know that it must be paid first of all out of consolidated revenue, and it might be very likely that a vote would have to be asked. But it was the duty of the government to assess this amount, and it looks as if there had been something wrong in the matter, or the municipalities would not be defying the government, and the government would not be standing aside apparently afraid to send them a bill.

Mr. GRAHAM: As a matter of fact, the amount of $60,000 named by me is an approximate figure. The bills for transportation are not all in yet. I agree with my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) that the judge's jurisdiction includes the municipality. I hope I have not left the impression that the government does not propose to make any claim. The government does propose to make a claim as soon as it has all the bills in.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How is it that it takes eight months to get bills for transportation?

Mr. GRAHAM: The are not all in.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Can the minister explain why they are not in?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not intend to discuss the question whether or not the forces should have been sent to Sydney at the time of the strike. In my judgment it is an idle waste of time to debate that here, because it was absolutely necessary that the forces be sent to Sydney. That is the judgment of all people who know anything of the circumstances prevailing at the time. All of Nova Scotia, in fact, all of eastern Canada was interested in the matter of having troops sent there, I do not, however, rise to discuss that phase of the matter; but I wish to suggest the propriety of amending the law so that the cost of sending those troops to Nova Scotia in this particular instance should not be assessed against the municipalities. I do not think it is fair in the case of civil disorder in any part of Canada where troops are required to preserve peace or order, that the cost and expenses of the same should fall upon the municipalities. The statute is archaic in that respect; it should be changed, and the expense should be borne by the nation. Of course, troops should not be called out without grave necessity. There should be ample justification for calling them out.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the power of requisition should be in the hands of the municipality and the costs assessed against the Government?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Perhaps the power of requisition should be taken from the municipality, and I think it should in many cases. Having that power in municipal hands does not work out well, because, frequently they decline to call out troops when they should be called out because they are alarmed about the contingent cost. I would suggest to the minister the propriety of submitting to his colleagues the question of amending the statute, so that the cost in such cases should be borne by the country and not by the municipality, and that they should also take into consideration possibly the question of placing the requisitioning power in other hands than those of the municipality.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would be the last to deprecate any steps that are absolutely necessary in the interest of the preservation of law and order. As to the actual facts in Nova Scotia, others are better judges than I am; but I do not concur with the hon. member that, merely because there were certain fears of loss of property, not due to riot or disturbance, there was a ground for sending the militia.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): There was no question of fear; there was an actual danger of loss of property running into billions of dollars.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very good; the law is the law. But the law does not provide against that; it only provides for the use of the militia upon requisition, such requisition to be based on the apprehension of disturbance or riot, and not upon any fear of the loss of property due to men leaving their work. That is not a disturbance or a riot. The hon. member says clearly that it was necessary to have the militia come from London. We had a disturbance in 1919 in western Canada, and I really think there was more apprehension and more cause for it at that time that there was in the case in Nova Scotia, but we did not use the militia. The municipalities never requisitioned the militia but the situation was taken care of by civil forces. It was quietly taken care of without very great expense, and a great emergency was met. The militia should be requisitioned only in very emergent circumstances indeed, and only when all other means have failed; and I should think it would be very serious to put it into the power of the government to decide when the militia should be used. The responsibility for the preservation of peace and order is a local responsibility under our constitution, and it is well that it is so. If that were not the case, then the cost of the preservation of peace and order would be far greater than it is now, and the acceptability of the means of preserving it to the localities affected would be much less than it is to-day. Now, inasmuch as the responsibility is on the municipalities, on the various bodies constituted by the provinces, it cannot be in the power of the Dominion government to say whether or not these bodies are capable of carrying it out. If they will assert that they are not able to handle a situation that exists and therefore ask the higher power to intervene, then the Dominion government intervenes to the extent that it is necessary to do so. And the Dominion government must be the judge of that question. But the municipalities must first declare their inability to cope with the situation. It follows from this, that it would not be possible for the Dominion government to be the deciding authority as to when the municipality is equal to the occasion.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I did not suggest that the Dominion government should have the power to decide that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am glad I have got the hon. member to that point. Once you get to the point that the municipality must decide when it is necessary to invoke the assistance of the militia—and I am glad that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) agrees that the municipality must be the party to decide that question—then you cannot possibly have them assess the cost upon the country. They will easily come to the conclusion that they need help, that they are not going to employ extra police themselves, that they are not going to take the responsibility of action and suffer the probable loss of popularity. They will readily come to that conclusion so long as they can do so at the expense of someone else. And that is why it seems to me that suggestions such as the hon. member makes would not be in the public interest. I do not know of any better system than that which we have. Let the local responsibility stand, and let the local liability for its results be there just as it is in the law to-day. If this were regularly observed there could be no question as to where the liability rests in this case. I am not seeking to bring it back on the municipality; I know that the responsibility and the liability are both defined if things were regularly carried on. If they are not regularly carried on, then it is this government that is responsible. And I do not understand why eight months should intervene between the sending of troops to Cape Breton and the ascertaining of what that expedition cost.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and wages, $250,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is this the regular item?

Mr. GRAHAM: It has become necessary to transfer certain amounts totalling $28,990 required to pay the salaries of the engineering staff in connection with the Tuxedo barracks at Winnipeg. These buildings were originally a war hospital and were gradually taken over for military occupation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is not an increased expenditure?

Mr. GRAHAM: No; there is really a decrease of $3,000.

Item agreed to.

Schools of instruction, $115,000.

Mr. BOYS: Where are the schools of instruction, and what is the reason for the increase?

Mr. GRAHAM: These schools of instruction are located in the centres of population, one of which is in Ottawa.

Mr. BOYS: What work are they doing?

Mr. GRAHAM: They train officers and non-commissioned officers. The chief of staff states that owning to the lack of funds in 1922-23 the pay of non-permanent active militia officers attending the schools of instruction was cut out and very few officers attended. There are 1,800 unqualified non-permanent active militia officers chiefly young men who have not seen service overseas. The chief of staff is of opinion that these officers should attend the schools of instruction at the earliest possible opportunity, as their number is increasing daily. The increase is really for the instruction of these 1,800 unqualified officers.

Mr. BOYS: The minister refers to a lack of funds. Was there not a sufficient vote last year?

Mr. GRAHAM: In the distribution of the vote last year they cut out this item to which I have alluded.

Item agreed to.

Warlike stores, $160,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How is the large increase explained?

Mr. GRAHAM: We gave a number of tents to the fire sufferers in northern Ontario, and although every person always promises to return what is loaned by the government, the Militia department is one place that is always forgotten by those who borrow. Then stores that we received from overseas having been depleted have had to be replenished. While this item is somewhat increased, it really fluctuates with the requirements, and this year it is heavy for the reasons I have given.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate Grant to Miss H. M. May, $94.67.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What is this item for?

Mr. GRAHAM: A compassionate allowance to Miss May for salary during a protracted illness.

Item agreed to.

Naval Service—to provide for the maintenance of the Royal Canadian Navy, $1,500,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is item No. 381 for adjustment of war claims which we might take up.

Item stands.

Adjustment of war claims—National Defence—

Militia Services	$4,000,000
Naval Services	274,000

Mr. MEIGHEN: This does not come under National Defence.

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no notice given, and this huge item should not be entered on now.

Mr. GRAHAM: Then we will take up item No. 5, civil government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is better.

Mr. GRAHAM: This item always goes with the militia items, but it is not part of our current expenditure, of course.

Item stands.

Civil government—National Defence—salaries, $712,-681; contingencies, $50,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The details of this item I notice are to be found at page 6 in the Details of Civil Government Estimates which were recently brought down. The amount asked for this year is $712,681.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is a misprint; it should be $762,681.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In the report that was laid on the Table the total is given at page 7 as $712,681, against $701,797 last year.

Mr. GRAHAM: It comes to the some thing when we add the contingencies.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The result, as I have it here, shows a proposed increase of about $11,-000. My reason for drawing this matter to the attention of the committee is that ever since the conclusion of the war the civil government vote has been rapidly decreasing. When the war ended the department was pretty heavily laden with clerks whose services were only requisite during the war and demobilization. It is rather disappointing to find that instead of a substantial decrease for the present year the minister is asking about $11,000 more. What is the reason of the increase?

Mr. GRAHAM: The increase is more apparent than real; there is actually a decrease. The departments now constituting the Department of National Defence were amalgamated so far as the Canada Gazette was concerned, on January 1st. Now, there are two branches of civil employees,—one temporary, the other permanent. Under the new arrangement the department has been reorganized as to the permanent officials. As a matter of fact the estimates this year for the work to be done by the civil employees represents a decrease of $135,000 compared with last year. The apparent increase is $6,000 less than the statutory increases under the new classifications of the Civil Service Commission, which amount to about $18,000. So if we left it at that there would be a saving of about $6,000. Twenty-five members of the temporary staff —I speak from memory—are being made permanent, and 12 or 13 members of the permanent staff have retired, which makes an increase of 12. But the work will be done by the permanent staff and less than 100 temporary employees. Since December 31, 1921, the reduction in the amount paid to temporary employees—out of other votes, not out of the civil government vote—amounts to nearly $700,000; this year the reduction in other votes, will be about $135,000. So that what appears to be an increase is really in respect to what we call the permanent civil government staff, which will now include all employees but a comparatively few who have been paid out of other votes. There is, then, really a decrease instead of an increase.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The total increase for civil government votes in the various departments as shown in these estimates is $265,-000. It would look to me as if the increase has been pretty general.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is no increase here; there is a decrease.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Last year the minister had 464 clerks; this year he has 476. Last year the vote for civil government in this department was $701,000; this year it is $712,-000; yet the minister says the increase is apparent rather than real. We were told last lear that by the amalgamation of the Department of Militia and Defence, the Department of Naval Service and the air force, wonderful economies would be effected, but anyone who paid much attention to the glowing language of the minister when he predicted these great savings will be disappointed. Last year the vote for the air force was $1,000,000; for the naval service, $1,500,000; and for the militia, $10,788,000, a total of $13,288,000. The estimates the minister now brings down provide for the air force $1,250,000, an increase of $250,000; for the naval service, $1,515,500, an increase of $15,500; for militia $10,036,000, a decrease of about $750,000. Adding them all together, I find that the decrease for the three departments is less than half a million dollars—and all the militia estimates are not yet down. I do not believe that any great saving is going to be effected. In fact, you can save down to the point where your expenditure becomes practically waste. You can cut your naval, air force and militia expenditure down so far that it is a question whether your expenditure is worth making; whether it would not be wiser to wipe the slate clean and have no expenditure at all. If the minister intends to have any force that is of value, he cannot cut below his present estimates. I did not believe when he made his statements last year with respect to proposed savings that he was going to end the year with any very great reduction of expenditure, and I find on looking over the public accounts and on examining these present estimates that no very serious saving has been effected. During the trying period of demobilization following the war there was some excuse for rather high militia expenditure, but we are getting pretty far from that day now, and I am sure it is disappointing to those who took the minister at his word last session to find that notwithstanding the amalgamation of all these services the reduction proposed by his estimates is less than half a million dollars.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am surprised at what my hon. friend says; he either did not hear my explanation, or he says it is untrue.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am only taking the figures in the estimates.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. gentleman knows where this saving is; having been in the department, he is familiar with the matter, as some other hon. members may not be. The saving from December 31, 1921, until the end of this year in respect to temporary employees will be $679,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: From what vote have they been paid?

Mr. GRAHAM: A great many of them were paid from the war demobilization vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am discussing the votes that are before the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend forgets that these hundreds of employees were paid out of other votes. We are now going to run the department with very few temporary employees; the staff is practically all included in this civil government vote. I have pointed out that last year and the year before, an amount of $670,000 was paid out of some other vote, and there is a saving to that extent. Let me give these figures again. On December 31, 1921, the total salaries were $1,449,156; on April 1, 1923, the amount will be $770,051, a saving of $679,105. In the reorganization we are making permanent all employees whom the commission thought should be made permanent, and these are included in the vote. I have stated that there will be a saving of $135,000 in the coming year over the amount paid out last year—from other votes, not from the civil government vote, In militia and defence on April 1, 1922, there were employed in permanent work, but not paid out to the civil government vote, 402 persons, whose salaries amounted to $600,057. There were employed on war or other temporary work, 281, at a cost of $276,969. That makes a total of 683 employees, involving an expenditure for salaries of $877,026. In the naval service, 82 were doing permanent work, costing $119,700; 31 were doing temporary work, costing $20,130; total, 113, costing $139,830. In the air service, 92 were doing permanent work, costing $128,276; these were paid out of the general fund of the Air Board. These items make a total salary expenditure of $1,145,132. That was on April 1, 1922. The personnel this year for the Department of National Defence is 476 permanents, as against 576 in the three departments last year, and 48 temporary employees as against 312 last year, or a total of 254 employees as compared with 888 last year. The salary list this year is $770,051, a saving from the previous year of $375,081.

Let me point out in connection with the permanent work that there are 100 fewer employees doing permanent work now, or soon will be, than a year ago, although they are not all in the permanent Civil Service. That represents a saving of $135,352.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If the number of employees has been reduced to the extent the minister claims, how is it that he requires a new man at a salary of $6,000 under the name of Controller of Expenditure?

Mr. GRAHAM. The position of Controller of Expenditure was created by statute. I brought down a bill in this House endeavouring to map out a plan for the organization but this House and Upper Chamber amended it and declared by statute that at a certain date the then Minister of Naval Affairs should become the Controller of Expenditure. So far as its involving any extra expense, it is not very much now because the controller is also acting deputy minister, and he is getting one pay for doing the work of both positions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who is the Controller of Expenditure at this salary?

Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Desbarats.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He is also deputy minister?

Mr. GRAHAM: He is Deputy Minister of Naval Defence up to a certain date, which has not expired yet. The statute was so amended that Mr. Desbarats, who was then Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs, should continue as such up to a certain date when automatically he becomes Controller of Expenditure In the meantime General Fiset having retired, I have named Mr. Desbarats Acting Deputy Minister of the Department of Defence.

Item agreed to.

Naval Service—to provide for the maintenance of the Royal Canadian Navy, $1,500,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the minister not a statement of naval defence to lay before the House and an account of the achievements of the fleet? I noticed that on Christmas Day or New Year's he issued a message to the Canadian fleet at considerable length and of some rhetoric. Surely he can at least repeat that performance.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is difficult for any of us but my right hon. friend to repeat a brilliant performance. The second time it is usually not quite so good as the first. I did not issue any classic to the navy or to the fleet. I issued the statement to the naval service. The act under which our naval activities are carried on in Canada is called the Naval Service Act, and it does not refer to the navy, but to the naval service.

It was on the advice of technical officers that a new idea in the development of the naval service was proposed and accepted by the House last year. Under that policy the cruiser Aurora, which I always maintained, and the technical officers agreed with me, was not a wonderful success as a training ship, was put out of commission and the staff paid off with the allowances provided by order in council. That cost in the neighbourhood of $70,000, if I remember correctly. The submarines were also retired. In place of the old policy another policy was announced during the last session. It was that the two destroyers would be retained, one on each coast, accompanied by two mine sweepers on each coast.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Trawlers.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have learned that that is not the proper name to call them. They now have the dignity of mine sweepers. That is what they are for anyway. On the destroyers there are about 160 men all told. The mine sweepers will require about 25 men each, and the two on each coast are now being fitted out. One of the destroyers is now on the Pacific coast. So the fleet is divided into these two sections.

There are two lines of policy advocated by naval authorities. One is that it is the duty of a nation to prepare for high seas warfare, and the other is that its first duty is to develop the defence of its coast. There is a good deal of difference of opinion on this point among the authorities, but the technical officers in my department advise me that the latter is the proper thing for the Dominion of Canada, that is, training for the defence of our coasts. As the estimates only got through in the summer last year, we were not able to put the "Aurora" out of commission and pay off the officers and ratings until late in the fall.

Under the new system no training takes place except that carried on on the destroyers and among the permanent force. What is aimed at this year is this: The permanent force, officers and training staff, at Halifax and Esquimalt comprises approximately 500 men. These are practically all Canadians, and that I think should be a matter of pride to the people of Canada. The policy I might say is based on the fact that the present minister, backed up by the government, believes that for this young nation the proper policy is to train our own young men for naval service so far as it is possible to do so.

In addition to that there are 500 men of the naval reserve. These men are professional sailors. They need no training in high seas service, but training in gunnery, and all that kind of thing, will be given them so many days each year at our training grounds either at Esquimalt or Halifax. Canada has a very large naval reserve in her men at sea. In addition to that the Navy League has done, and is doing, good work. The Navy League, with which we hope to work, has already placed something like 200 boys on Canadian ships, boys who have got their training through the efforts of that league. In addition to the 500 men of the naval reserve, we are providing for the training af approximately 1,000 men of what will be known as the Volunteer Naval Reserve. I may say that the first offer to raise a company under this programme came from the province of Quebec, from a brother of one who is already in the navy, but up till the present time no active steps, except preparations for the development and training of the volunteer reserve, have taken place. At Esquimalt and Halifax we are now busily engaged in the preparation of the accommodation which will be required, and we have purchased and placed at these points the gunnery equipment for training purposes. There will be a school teacher at Esquimalt and one at Halifax to train the young men that come in the rudimentary knowledge that is requisite for naval service.

In addition to what I have mentioned we have a number of young men being trained in the British navy, not officers but seamen. About 25 of these have recently returned for duty in our own naval service. Furthermore, young Canadians have been periodically sent over to be trained as officers in the British navy. I might mention two of these young men, one of them being the son of the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) the other a son of Mr. Justice Brodeur. Both are very bright active young men and will make their mark in the navy. The object of the whole navy scheme, as I have tried to point out, is not to begin to try to undertake the defence of the high seas—that is impossible for the Dominion of Canada at the present time—but believing that in years to come as we develop we will require naval protection, as we require a militia, it is thought best, at least by the members of the government, that the present is the time to give our young men that training which will fit them, both as officers and men, to take their place in the naval service of Canada as it develops.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Who is the present admiral of the fleet?

Mr. BUREAU: The present member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff).

Mr. GRAHAM: There seems to be competition among the aspirants. However, I may tell my hon. friend the list of applications is not closed. At present the head of the naval service is Commander Hose.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Do these trawlers work in co-operation with the British fleet?

Mr. GRAHAM: They are mine sweepers but my hon. friend insists on calling them trawlers.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, mine sweepers.

Mr. GRAHAM: They did very effective work on behalf of the British fleet during the late war.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I refer to the work of our mine sweepers at present.

Mr. GRAHAM: There has been no war since we had our mine sweepers out.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not doubt at all that so long as we are protected on the high seas, so that nobody can get to our shores, the trawlers will be quite effective to protect them. My hon. friend calls them mine sweepers instead of trawlers, but as long as the high seas are safe at the expense of somebody else I do not think it makes very much difference by what name they are called. I am, though, interested in this programme of training 500 men—either 500 at Esquimalt and 500 at Halifax or 250 at each place, I am not sure which—and 500 more of a volunteer reserve, training them for service in vessels that do not exist and that the government does not contemplate shall exist. I would like to know what training they are to get and what they are to do when they are trained; how much training they get each year applicable to the force at Esquimalt and Halifax and to this volunteer reserve? These men are to be trained for how long each year—trained at what and trained for what? How long are they going to use their knowledge when they are trained, and how much of the expense is borne by the government and how much by private subscription through the Navy League?

Mr. BUREAU: And what will be their daily diet?

Mr. GRAHAM: I hope I did not lead the House to believe that the Navy League was part of the organization. I may say that, with respect to the Navy League, the feeling is better than it was a couple of years ago. That seems evident from the correspondence we get and we hope to have some kind of working arrangement with them before very long.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope so too.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend has asked me a qustion about training. This is the arrangement:

[Training—]

Every year all ratings will be required to perform a certain number of days' training at one of the naval bases for which they will be fully paid.

The training will vary from 14 days to 21 days according to the class of rating.

All ratings will be allocated to the different branches on entry and will be required for that branch before the completion of their first period of enrolment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: After the 14 to 21 days' training, what authority has the minister for saying these young men will be trained to be of value for anything? Has he authority from anyone to say that they will serve in the British navy, because that is the only fleet in which they could serve unless they are going to serve in the fleet of some foreign country? Has he any authority to tell us they would be of value in the case of any emergency at all? In a word, is the training of these men of any value at all when we have no place to put them?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend is pessimistic. This country is going to move. I have tried to point out to him that in the years to come as we develop and as we expand we shall, under this system, have young men of our own to put into naval positions instead of bringing men overseas to fill those positions. My right hon. friend forgets that this kind of training takes place in the naval reserve in Great Britain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Over there they have a fleet in which to put the men they train.

Mr. GRAHAM: It takes place also in the United States. Wherever they have a reserve that kind of training takes place. Now let me ask my right hon. friend a question: Is he in favour of militia training? If so let me ask him what good towards making a soldier does 21 days' training a year in the militia do?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The training for the militia, as my hon. friend knows just as well as I do, is wholly different from the training for the navy. You can fit a man for service in the militia with a short training each year, although perhaps not under the system which my hon. friend provides for in the estimates he has brought down. However, that such can be done has been proved; but you cannot train men for the naval service with only a few days of service each year. If my hon. friend proposes to train them for a few days each year, what is he going to do with them when they are trained? He has no place to put them. What career have they got to look forward to after having gone through this training unless they serve in the navy of some other country, or unless the government contemplates some indescribable naval service which does not exist to-day? If they are training men for a naval policy that the government does not contemplate, then this is nonsense. it is futile. If the government contemplates a different naval policy from what it has to-day, possibly this can be understood; but at present we are simply a laughing stock.

11 p.m.

Mr. FIELDING: Oh, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Just a laughing stock, just wasting money. We are depending on another country to keep our high seas safe, knowing no enemy will reach our shores, knowing that the only things that can reach our shore are wasps and hornets that could not give trouble even to an invader.

Mr. DUFF: I am sorry my constituents are not present to hear the speech of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen).

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is one here.

Mr. DUFF: While they voted against him at the last election, they would certainly go to the polls and justify their votes at the next election, because what he does not know about naval matters or matters pertaining to the sea would fill more than the seventeen pages which the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) lost out of his book. I think I am on record in this House as regards naval expenditure, and I am not here to-night to take back one word that I have said on a number of occasions in the different sessions that have preceded this one; but when the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) says that he does not know what will become of those men when they have trained for ten or twelve days, he is quite right.

An hon. MEMBER: Does the hon. member know?

Mr. DUFF: Yes, I know, and I am going to tell you. The right hon. gentleman—I will be charitable to him—displays his lack of knowledge. The Naval department will get these men, not from the schools, but from the fisheries of this country, from the men who are to-day engaged either in the fisheries or in the merchant marine, not, thank goodness, the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, which the leader of the Opposition is responsible for wasting $80,000,000 on, but the real merchant marine. These young men in the spring and summer will be engaged either in the off-shore fisheries, the deep-sea fisheries or the shore fisheries of this country; they will be earning money and bringing wealth from the sea into this country. In the fall of the year, when they give up their vocation of fishing, if I understood the minister's programme correctly, they will be taken to the naval base at Halifax. I think the minister would be beter advised if he would have the men at Lunenburg where they are; but they will be taken to the city of Halifax and trained at the naval dockyard there where the greatest extravagance took place during the time when the leader of the Opposition was a member of what was known as the Union government. After they have been trained for ten or twelve days, if necessary they can be taken out on the high seas and trained either on mine sweepers or the two destroyers which the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries accepted from the British government. I think the idea is an excellent one, although I am not much in favour of a Canadian navy. In the first place, I do not think this country can afford a navy; but it can afford a certain amount of training for our fishermen and sailors, because after they have the training there is no necessity for them to go into the British navy or the Americain navy or any other navy; they can return to their vocations and help to pay the public debt of this country. They will go aboard the ships of the Canadian merchant marine, and they will be of some value to this country.

If the Minister of Defence brought in an estimate of $5,000,000, or $10,000,000, or $50,000,000—and that would not give us half a decent navy—what would happen? We would have thousands of men taken from a productive industry and put into a non-productive industry, and we would try to make ourselves believe that we had a Canadian navy. If we spent $5,000,000, could we defend our shores? The leader of the Oppposition does not know anything about the matter; he does not know whether it will take $10,000,000, $20,000,000, $50,000,000, or $100,000,000 to protect our Canadian shores properly. The leader of the Opposition, during the war, helped to vote $30,000,000 for what was called a navy to protect our Canadian shores, and we had to call on the United States government and the Japanese government to protect our Pacific and Atlantic coasts. That is the kind of naval policy my right hon. friend had; yet he dares criticise the present Minister of Defence for the volunteer naval reserve for which he asks in the small amount we are asked to supply to-night. It is amusing to me, almost as amusing as it was when the leader of the Opposition was talking about the strike at Glace Bay. He did not know a single, solitary thing about the matter; yet he dared get up and endeavour to make us believe that the county court judge had not the proper authority to call out troops. Of course, we do not mind the leader of the Opposition; he is a sort of joke on this side of the House.

The leader of the Opposition, of course, criticises this expenditure. What I would suggest to the Minister of Defence would be to clean up the mess in the naval dockyard at Halifax, which mess is the result of the work of the government of the leader of the Opposition during the war and since the war, and of what was called the Purchasing Commission which was never authorized by parliament and which was appointed by the leader of the Opposition and his colleagues against the wish of parliament. They spent about $8,000,000 in buying stores which were not necessary; they put them into the naval storehouse at Halifax with the result that, to-day, after the Minister of Defence has sold some of the stores at about a quarter of their value, because he had to do so, there are still at the naval dockyards at Halifax about $2,000,000 worth of stores, and the leader of the Opposition more than anyone else in this House is to blame for that condition of affairs. Therefore, he should be the last one to talk in this House about extravagance or waste of money.

At the present time, due to the bungling of the late Union, National Liberal, Conservative, Tory Government, the people of this country had saddled upon them five ships. These ships were no good to the British navy and those gentlemen of the late Union government had those ships thrust on them. This present government had the good sense to lay up the big ship called the Aurora but at the present time they have two destroyers, the Patriot and the Patricia. Those ships are useless for naval purposes; but they can be utilized, and I am going to sugest to the minister to-night a way in which they can be used. Some time last Ostober, one of those boats was sent through the Panama canal and she is now on the Pacific coast. We have only two boats and the Pacific coast is entitled to one. Instead of bringing her back in the spring and spending a large amount of money in order to do so, I would suggest that the minister leave her on the Pacific coast. We have on the Atlantic, one known as the Patriot, and I would suggest that the minister put her to some practical use. This boat is no good for any purpose of defence; but we have a serious situation, not exactly on the Atlantic coast, but on the Atlantic ocean during the summer time. I am sorry the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) is not in his place, because this matter which I am going to discuss now, I am discussing as much for his benefit as for that of the Minister of Defence. Many fishing vesesls, carying some 3,000 men, proceed every year from Nova Scotia to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, where they anchor and the men fish for about four months of the year. In addition to these Nova Scotia vessels which anchor on the banks and from which the men fish, there come over from France what are known and what the leader of the Opposition referred to as trawlers. I do not believe the leader of the Opposition knows what a trawler is any more than he knows what a mine sweeper is. A trawler is a fishing vessel which fishes with an otter-trawl. These come from France and they can fish off the Grand Banks as well as our Nova Scotia vessels. During the last two years these French vessels have committed great depredation to the fishing gear of the Nova Scotia vesesls, and it has been impossible for the fishermen of these Nova Scotia vessels to do anything to prevent the destruction of their gear. These French trawlers swoop down, sometimes in the day and sometimes at night, where the sailing vessels' gear is set and they destroy not only the gear itself but all the fish on it with the result that a great loss accrues to the fishing vessels of Nova Scotia. I would suggest to the minister that during the summer months when the fishing season is at its height the destroyer Patriot be sent to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland with the Nova Scotia fishing fleet. She will do more good there than she can going up and down the coast of Nova Scotia, and she would be able to afford protection to the fishermen.

Mr. GRAHAM: We shall have to let her off for the boat race.

Mr. DUFF: I shall come to that in a moment. I say that this destroyer can do more work accompanying the fishing fleet than she can patrolling the Nova Scotia coast. If any depredation is committed the captain of the fishing vessel can notify the captain of the destroyer, who can ascertain the name of the French trawler and bring the matter to the attention of the Canadian authorities. I think that some international arrangement should be made with the French and the Canadian governments whereby something might be done to put a stop to these depredations.

The Minister of National Defence referred to the fact that one of these boats might be used in connection with the fishermen's races. I must thank this government on behalf not only of my own constituents but of the people of Nova Scotia generally for his generous act last fall in attaching the destroyer Patriot to the race and giving her up to the international race committee. This destroyer did good work while the preliminary races were being held off Halifax. The minister was good enough to send the Patriot to Gloucester with the racing vessel Bluenose. During the races in Gloucester the citizens of Nova Scotia were proud to see the Union Jack flying from the stern of the Patriot. She was only small, it is true, but she did represent Canada. I must also thank the government and especially the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) for helping us in our time of trouble during that race. It may be recalled by hon. members that a sad accident occurred at that time. One of the crew of the Bluenose accidentally fell into the dock and was drowned after the last race. The Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence, on learninig this fact, immediately telegraphed to the captain of the Patriot, with the result that the body of the sailor was taken to his home town in Lunenburg on the destroyer. On behalf of my constituents, on behalf of the International Fishermen's Racing Committee, and on behalf of the people of the province of Nova Scotia I wish to take this occasion to thank the government for their action in this regard.

Now, I think that if the minister carries out the idea of a volunteer reserve it would be a good thing for Nova Scotia. In that way perhaps a number of young men who, if they had no naval reserve training, wight think of becoming second-rate lawyers, would with this training become good sailors, mates and captains and good citizens. I am willing to give this volunteer naval reserve idea a fair trial, so that instead of having quibbling laywers we might have good citizens who would be able to help us in the production that is so much needed to-day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the resolution should carry until adequate expression is given to the profound gratitude of the House for the inimitable manner in which the hon. member (Mr. Duff) not only sounds the depths of ignorance of all other members, but displays his own supreme erudition on every subject under the sun.

Mr. DUFF: I did not say every member; I said you, and you alone.

Mr. BOYS: You are a burlesque.

Mr. DUFF: I did not refer to anyone else.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is an undying advantage to the House that we have among us one who can speak with pontifical authority on every subject from sewer gas to angels' wings.

Mr. DUFF: You should be modest.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The non. member was moved by very deep and pathetic sympathy for me, ignorant as I was, not knowing even what was to become of these trained cadets after they had got the advantage of government service at Esquimalt and Halifax. In his sympathy for me, and for the House in having to listen to me, he rose to tell us all about it. "Why," he said. "the member does not know where these boys are coming from. I will tell him where they are coming from; they are coming from the fishing vessels, from the fisheries, and they are going to be trained at Esquimalt and Halifax. They are not going to be trained for any purposes of a military or naval character. No, that would be a waste of their time." I hope the minister got that. "That would be a waste of their time. They are going to be trained from ten to fourteen days and then are going back to fish, and they will be better fishermen as a result of the training the minister is going to give them on the trawlers."

Mr. GRAHAM: Mine sweepers.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. So at last we have the exalted purpose of Canadian Naval policy as now practised. It is to make better fishermen of those who are now suffering the depredations of French vessels on the shores of Nova Scotia. It is to teach the boys how to catch more fish from the water in order to feed the people of Canada. That is the purpose of the naval policy of the Minister of National Defence, according to this court of appeal of last resort from the county of Lunenburg.

Well, I thought I was only stating a very simple truth and one generally accepted when I said—without the advantage of this later information—that this $1,500,000 was wasted, in so far as the defence of our country is concerned or in doing of the slightest thing to contribute to that defence, which others are now providing. When I stated that this money was wasted I thought I was uttering the simple truth. I felt fairly confident I was right. I must admit that for the moment I forgot that the same assertion was made a year ago by the hon. member for Lunenburg. Had I remembered that he was of the same opinion I should have had serious doubts as to the soundness of my view. But now that I utter again his conviction of a year ago he is lost in dismay at my ignorance.

Mr. DUFF: I did not mention the word "ignorance"; I said lack of knowledge.

Mr. BUREAU: That is more technical.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let us leave the member for Lunenburg and come to the trawlers now christened the mine sweepers. Is the purpose of our naval policy really what the hon. member says it is? Are these vessels really to do what he says? Is the object of this training to send boys back to be better fishermen or to send them back to some mercantile marine, to be able, as I suppose, to handle the rigging of the mercantile ship a little better? Is the hon. member for Lunenburg rigt? Let us ascertain whether or not we have a naval service and whether we should vote a million and a half for what is actually being done to-day. That is what is before the committee for consideration. Do not let us deceive ourselves into thinking that we are lifting a hand by a burlesque of this sort to aid in that naval defence of which we share the advantage every hour. We are not. It would be far manlier of us to sweep the decks clear and say that we are not, and to stand before the world in our true colours. When we have a Minister of Defence who says we cannot go to the high seas because it would be too dangerous for the light craft that we have and that the high seas must be swept clear by someone else; when we have a Minister of Defence who is compelled to make such an admission, compelled by the exigencies of the policy of which he is sponsor, then we are doing nothing whatsoever in the way of defence, and it would be far manlier of us to say that we are doing nothing and to make the records of the House and the estimates show that we recognize the fact.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Now, it has been stated here that we met the last emergency without adequate provision ourselves. I know quite well we did. I know the necessity of adequate provision was scoffed in this House year after year. We were told that we were March hares and April fools because we ventured to suggest that something in the way of a manly effort should be made to provide against a contingency that seemed at least to be looming in the near future if not on the immediate horizon. We the Conservative party attempted to provide against that contingency, we attempted to bear some share that we thought befitted the strength of this country. We were stopped, we were not able to get the requisite legislation through. Then the war came upon us and we were without provision. We might of course have had something of the nature of what we have to-day under the Naval Service Act, but there was no possibility of getting anything under that act that would be of any use at all. There is no one knows that better than the minister who is now the Minister of National Defence. The only thing we could get was along the lines we sought to provide and were prevented by the Liberal majority in the Senate. That is why we had to depend upon the strong arm of the British navy when war came—an arm to which no ounce of muscle was added by this Dominion.

And here we are now. If we are not ready to do something in the way of naval co-operation that is at least worthy the strength of this, the greatest Dominion of the Empire, do not let us play with the subject. Do not let us put a million and a half dollars in the estimates and tell the world in one breath and through the mouth of the responsible minister, "This is naval defence"; and then through the mouth of his parliamentary deputy, "This is merely to make better fishermen of our boys—a method of increasing the fish production on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts." I think we ought to stand forth in our true colours. I do not think this proposal is of any value. It must be plain that it is not. To be training for a life that our fishermen cannot follow in any naval vessels of ours is useless. If they intend to follow a naval career in another country, the place to be trained is there. To be trained for action on vessels that do not exist, and that the minister will not say are in contemplation to exist—well, surely that is nothing better than a sham.

Now, would it not be wisdom to wipe out the vote altogether rather than to go on in this way? Do not let anyone say that this is my policy. I think we ought to do something worthy of this Dominion. I do not think we ought to expend on a naval service the equal per capita of what the Mother Country does. She has responsibilities that are not ours in an equal share. But we ought to do something that is worthy of our standing, of our strength, of our responsibility, of our wealth, of our exposure here on two coasts, worthy of our place in the Empire, the place we have won. I think the government would be well advised to come before parliament with a programme that measures up to these requirements.

Mr. DUFF. Before the vote carries, Mr. Chairman, I would explain for the benefit of the leader of the Opposition why it is wise to spend this money on the volunteer naval reserve. I think it is well known to most hon. members that the men who join the British navy do not come from the colleges or the schools of the Old Country; they come from the British fishing fleets and the mercantile marine. It is a well-known fact to every hon. member that when the war broke out thousands,—yes, tens of thousands of fishermen and merchant sailors were transferred to the navy and did invaluable service in the North Sea and other parts. Does not every one know that even in our own country men were taken from the fishing fleets on the Pacific and the Atlantic coast and from our merchant marine? They were the only men the government could get for naval duty during the war. They were the men that the government, of which the leader of the Opposition was a member, used on the leaky trawlers and old tug boats with which they pretended to defend the shores of Nova Scotia. Is it not a well-known fact that the fishemen from the island of Newfoundland were perhaps the very best men among those that took an active part in the operations of the British navy at Gallipoli? And yet the leader of the Opposition has the temerity to get up in this House and say that the Minister of Defence does not know what he is going to do with these men after he trains them. If war broke out tomorrow, and Great Britain needed more sailors for her navy, we could send thousands of men across the ocean for service in the North Sea or anywhere else. It is not necessary that these men should join a naval vessel after they complete their training in our fishing boats or in the mercantile marine. Their training during the rest of the year is probably just as effective as any training they will get under this scheme of the Minister of Defence.

The leader of the Opposition must have forgotten history when he criticized what the Liberal party did for the naval defence of Canada. Why, if I were a Tory I would be ashamed to mention a word about our Canadian navy. Was it the Liberal party or the Tory party that brought down the Laurier Naval Bill? Was it not the Tory party which voted against that measure under which the Liberal party wanted to build ships for the defence of Canada? What did the Tory party do for naval defence? What naval vessels did we have to protect our coasts when war broke out? It is quite true that in 1912 the Tory government tried to vote $35,000,000 as a contribution to Great Britain for the building of three dreadnoughts, which would have been attached to the British navy in the North Sea. What use would they have been for the defence of Canada? And would they have been manned by Canadian boys? That was the naval policy of the Tory party in 1912. What happened in 1914 when war broke out? Had they spent one dollar for naval defence up to that time? No. Even the four ships that we provided under the Laurier administration were out of commission, due to the fact that certain Nationalists in the province of Quebec had the Tory party by the throat. Those vessels were tied up at the docks, the Niobe at Halifax and the Rainbow at Esquimalt. It took six weeks to put the Niobe in commission for war service. And yet the leader of the Opposition dares to criticize the Liberal party and the Liberal government in regard to their record on naval defence. If our policy had been carried out in 1910, Canada would have had an effective navy when the war broke out. But because the Nationalist friends of the Tory party would not allow them to continue the Laurier naval policy we were left totally unprotected against attack by the German navy. I think it is high time the leader of the Opposition stopped talking about what the Tory party did for the naval defence of this country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Before the resolution carries, Mr. Chairman, I must express my surprise at the developments which have taken place during recent years. It has generally been conceded that one of the most difficult positions to fill is that of an expert seaman on board a man-of-war, but apparently under the present system it is only necessary to teach men to be good fishermen and they automatically become good navy men. Nine days' training will equip an ordinary fisherman so that he will be equal to anything that may be required of him for the naval defence of this country.

I was also surprised at the references to the Canadian navy made by the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. Duff) and what his party had attempted to do while in office previous to 1911. Notwithstanding the fact that they had occupied the government benches for about sixteen years, during all that time not a contract was let for the building of a single warship. They went out of office and that was the condition of affairs that confronted their successors. It was well known that it would have been impossible to establish shipyards in this country and do anything effective in the way of building ships of war in the short period during which the administration that succeeded the Liberal government was in power. An attempt was made to vote $35,000,000 for the building of three dreadnoughts on the other side, where the work could be quickly done and there was reasonable prospect of rendering aid at a time when it was needed.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member says we could not build warships in this country from 1911 to 1914, when the Conservative government was in power. Is it not a fact that under the Union government 63 ships were built from November 1918 to some time in 1920?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: My hon. friend's question is about as consistent as his argument that fishermen are competent to man ships of war. No one would suggest that these poor little wooden ships of the mercantile marine were competent to defend the coasts of this country or to go out and meet the enemy. Who ever would take that view must be—well, I will not attempt to describe the condition his mind must be in.

Mr. DUFF: The ships that the Union government built from 1918 on were not wooden ships; they were steel ships.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It was impossible to build shipyards here from which ships of war could be turned out that would be competent to meet the enemy—impossible, in any event, to turn them out in time. As late as June 1914, hon. gentlemen opposite were saying that no emergency existed, were pointing out that the sky was clear, that there were no clouds on the horizon, and that there was no need of taking any particular action in the matter of defence. It is also significant that even at that time the leader of the government, instead of taking notice of the criticisms that were being levelled against the administration, was organizing the various departments in order to be ready in the event of anything happening. The deputy ministers of the various departments and members of the Militia Council were a committee organized for that purpose. My hon. friend says that the Liberal party had a policy; but the Liberal party went out of power without doing anything. It is true they called for tenders for the building of ships, but those tenders were filed away for months and no contract was let; nothing was done. Now we find the government asking the committee to pass an item of this size without any pretence that anything effective will result. They say it is merely to equip trawlers and mine-sweepers. I can scarcely understand the minister referring in a jocular way to these trawlers as mine-sweepers, when he knows perfectly well that there is no necessity for mine-sweepers at this time; they are being employed, as the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) has said, for fishing purposes. So we are voting this money for trawlers to go on the fishing banks of Newfoundland and elsewhere.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member pointed out that one of these ships of the navy should be accompanying the fleet in its fishing operations off the banks of Newfoundland and also off the Pacific coast. It is the greatest burlesque ever brought before Parliament to ask the committee to vote money, supposedly for the naval service, but, according to one who claims to be an authority on the subject, actually for trawlers for fishing purposes.

Mr. LEWIS: I think the name "mind sweeper" would be appropriate, because you would have to sweep your mind diligently to find a word that would give to what we have now in the way of vessels for the purpose of defence the dignity of a Canadian navy. I have nothing to say about the Conservative or the Liberal party so far as past policies are concerned. Mistakes may have been made. If the Liberal policy of 1910 had been put into effect, we might now have a navy which could be regarded as a real defence unit. At present, however, we have nothing. It is admitted on all sides that we need a certain amount of defence on the high seas. We have extensive coast lines on the east and on the west and whether we like it or not, these are to-day being protected by the Mother Country. We may not claim that they need protection, but it is a fact that we are producing largely for export trade; our mercantile vessels must sail the high seas, and if our markets are to be kept open in different parts of the world it is essential that these trade routes should be protected. We as a part of the empire should assume our share of that burden of protection We are just as well able to bear the burden as Great Britain is, in fact, the people of Great Britain are more heavily taxed than we are. A nation canot live unto itself, and if we have arrived at the point where we can call ourselves a nation, we must bear part of its burden. We have entered into the League of Nations and that League has declared that in some way or other the whole world must be policed. Are we, as a self-governing nation within the empire, taking our part in national defence? If the policy advocated by the minister is a step to that end, I am willing to support it. But I sincerely hope that the policy advocated by the Liberal party twelve or thirteen years ago may one day be put into effect, so that we may be able to hold up our heads in the world, of which we are one of the important nations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What has become of the students who were attending the naval colleges at Esquimalt and Halifax?

Mr. GRAHAM: Provision was made by which the majority of them entered other universities. Some were admitted to the Royal Military College at Kingston.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They did not take to fishing.

Mr. DUFF: More's the pity.

Mr. GRAHAM: For education.

FOUNDERING OF MONTE GRAPPA

Mr. DESLAURIERS:

1. Was the foundering of the Italian steamer Monte Grappa in mid-Atlantic on or about the 14th November, 1922, brought about by the improper stowage of her cargo taken on board at the harbour of Montreal?
2. Is the government aware that this casualty has been the means of casting a reflection on the harbour?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. The government has no information to the effect that the foundering of the Monte Grappa in mid-Atlantic on the 14th November last was brought about by improper stowage of cargo.

2. The government is fully satisfied that the casualty has not cast any reflection on the harbour.

3. There is no authority for holding an inquiry into a casualty of this nature. See section 776, chapter 113, revised statutes of Canada. If a definite charge should be made charging any person or persons with improper conduct in connection with the stowage of cargo, the necessary authority would be obtained to hold an inquiry under the terms of the Inquiries Act.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT, 1915

SALES TAX—PROPOSED SELECT COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, a select committee of this House be appointed with instructions to conduct an inquiry into the operation of the Special War Revenue Act, 1915, having particular reference to the sales tax and its difficulties of administration and collection and alleged inequities, with power to summon witnesses, to call for documents and information from government departments and to report its findings or recommendations, from time to time, to the House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution, it will be noted, introduces the very important question of taxation. I do not know of any problem to-day that is commanding more attention and inciting, perhaps, more concern among the people than taxation. And this is a condition not peculiar to Canada alone, but to all countries in the civilized world.

I may be permitted very briefly to make a reference to the causes of this concern. In the first place, as a result of the enormous war debt of all the belligerent countries, there has been added within a very short space of time a huge sum annually to the national expenditures. This necessarily reduces the amount of revenue available for ordinary purposes by a very substantial amount. In addition, we have the almost generally increased cost of administration, due to higher salaries, and cost of materials. All these things tend to two ends; first, to an increase of taxation; and, secondly, of course, to the reduction of the amount of revenue so raised for ordinary purposes.

It is not my intention for a moment to insinuate that any responsibility for this particular condition rests upon the government; indeed, I think I would be foolish to do so. But I do wish to say that both government and parliament must assume responsibility for dealing with the question which arises out of this condition. The whole problem of taxation is of primary importance and must to-day engage the attention of the government perhaps above almost every other problem. It also merits the closest study and attention of parliament.

We are raising our taxes from a very limited number of sources. We have the customs, the excise, the income tax, the sales tax, and the corporation income tax. I do not intend to make any close analysis of these methods of taxation, or to offer any very severe criticism of any of them other than to illustrate my point and the reason for my resolution in the briefest possible manner.

My resolution particularly asks for a study of the sales tax. The reason is that this tax is to-day perhaps the second largest source of revenue. And it is capable of becoming even a greater source of revenue. It is a method of taxation which is new to this country. A few years ago we had a sales tax which was termed a luxury tax, and while it may have served its purpose for a short time, the irritation caused by it was such that a modification of its conditions became necessary. In a lesser degree, perhaps, but nevertheless to a smaller extent, there are inequities connected with the sales tax; there are injustices and unnecessary costs which could be mitigated, if not wholly overcome, by some slight modification of the act, and it is for that purpose that I suggest that a committee be struck to consider the question. I may say to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that in the proposal for a House committee I am not seeking to reflect upon the minister and his department, under whose particular jurisdiction is placed the problem of raising revenue. I offer the suggestion as an aid to him, and if the Finance department or the government will undertake this task, with some assurance that when the budget is brought down we may have a solution of some of the problems that I shall touch upon briefly in a few moments, that will be satisfactory to me. However, before deciding that matter I suggest that the minister hear what I have to say, as well as the remarks of others who choose to speak on the subject.

I have already intimated that the present system—and I am referring very largely to the sales tax—is in some measure inequitable. Merchants and dealers who are dishonest are able to escape the tax by various methods. Many small dealers claim that they do not keep books; some of these are foreigners who have not a great knowledge of the English or the French language or of business methods common in this country. These people escape a good deal of taxation, whereas the bona fide merchant who keeps an up to date system of books is checked up closely and must pay to the last farthing. There is no question that in this respect the tax is inequitable and unfair. Then, it is exceedingly complex and costly. The number of officers, clerks and inspectors that are necessary even to get the measure of collection that we are getting now from this tax is very large, but if the law were administered with any degree of exactitude; if the tax were collected from all, the officials would be multiplied many times. It is only by simply ignoring a great many persons that the cost of adminstration is kept as low at it is.

I am not going to attempt this afternoon to demonstrate to the last point the soundness of my contention for a change in the tax. I am asking for an inquiry; I only hope to give the House sufficient information to excite its curiosity, shall I say, to the extent that it will grant this request, or to bring from the government assurances that will answer the purpose.

Let me give two specific cases, Mr. Speaker, to illustrate my point. Take first the case of the leather business. First, the dealer in hides pays 2½ per cent on the sale to the tanner. Then, the tanner, on his sale to the shoe manufacturer, is assessed 2¼ per cent, and the shoe manufacturer on his sale to the wholesaler is assessed 2¼ per cent, as well as the wholesaler on his sale to the retailer, or, in the case where the sale is made direct from the manufacturer to the retailer, there is a 4½ per cent tax, which amounts to the same thing. There the tax ends; the pair of shoes goes out to the public; there is no further imposition. Now then, let us take a very similar case to show how wholly unequal is the application of the tax. Take the case of cocoa. The dealer in cocoa beans, on his sale to the manufacturer, is assessed 2¼ per cent; then on the sale by the manufacturer of cocoa powder to the wholesaler, there is another 2¼ per cent. On the sale by the wholesaler, of chocolate powder to the retailer there is another assessment of 2¼ per cent; or, as in the case of the leather, if the manufacturer sells direct there is a 4½ per cent tax, which is the same thing. Up to this point the application of the tax is the same in connection with these two industries; both are treated alike. But the retail purchaser of cocoa powder may be a manufacturer; in fact, the greater part of the candies, chocolates, and so on that are consumed is manufactured by persons or firms carrying on a retail business as well. The retailer who has paid the tax right down from the sale of cocoa beans to his own purchase becomes a manufacturer and is then assessed a 5 per cent manufacturing tax as well as the 4½ per cent sales tax. In order that it may be clearly shown that I am not overstating the case, I have under my hand three specific instances taken from my own city which can be duplicated by scores of similar cases in every city throughout Canada. I will give these three cases to show the result of the application of this super-tax to the trade in question.

The Mission Confectionery Company, conducting a retail business in Vancouver, with very handsome retail stores, refreshment counters and cafe stalls, and at the same time manufacturing candies, paid in 1922 an amount in super-taxes—the tax I referred to a moment ago as being added to the amount that would be paid, say, by the shoe manufacturer —equal to the profit on the entire business for the year from the cafe bakery, confectionery and soda fountain. The only way they can carry on business is to have these various lines; they have their soda fountain; they serve light refreshments, cold soft drinks in the summer and hot drinks of various kinds in the winter. This service is a convenience to the public and is very widely patronized. A bakery and confectionery is also operated. That is one case. Here is another: Chanticleer Limited paid in this super-tax in 1922 more than the profit on the entire business for the year, cafe included. In the case of R. C. Purdy, another large firm, the super-taxes for 1922 combined were greater than the profit in the entire business, cafe included, for 1921 and 1922 combined. These firms are threatened with annihilation if they must continue to pay this tax under the present system. It is not my purpose this afternoon to argue in detail regarding these particular cases. I merely cite them as illustrations of the inequity of this tax and the unfairness of its application, to show how under the present law one class of business will pay a given rate, while another class is called upon to pay a very much higher rate.

I have another illustration here. It is a letter from a dealer in furs and skins, from North Battleford. This man is just a jobber or broker who goes out into the country and buys furs and skins from the settlers and farmers. Sometimes he would buy, I suppose, lynx skins, wolf skins, or whatever the fur-bearing animals of the district might be—sheep skins, cattle hides and so forth. He is a general dealer in skins. Such an individual serves a good purpose and is doing a useful work for the community. This man collects the skins in his locality, then when the big dealer comes along there is a sale tax upon this man who originally collected the skins. The big dealer certainly will not absorb that tax, and the result is that the small dealer has to absorb it, and naturally it is an inconvenience and loss to his business, and in my estimation threatens to shut out a class of individual who is exceedingly useful to the community.

There are other phases of this question which I shall touch upon only very briefly; for instance, the application of this tax to such institutions as libraries and hospitals. I have resolutions under my hand which I shall not for a moment refer to other than to bring them to the attention of the committee as another reason for careful examination of the method of applying this tax.

Let me turn to another phase of this question. I want to suggest to the House that in place of the present system of collecting the sales tax from the manufacturer or dealer in raw material, from the manufacturer, the jobber or distributor, and then from the retailer, following this tax down through these various lines of business—and we exempt certain classes of goods, which increases the complexity of the matter—instead of that I would suggest this simplified method of securing what I consider would certainly be quite as large a revenue. Take the present method we have of applying a certain excess duty, if you like to call it that, or sales tax duty of a given figure to be determined by a committee or by the government, as the case may be. Then impose a sales tax upon all manufacturers of manufactured goods which go to the public in a finished form. At the present time the manufactured article of one firm is in many cases the raw material of another, and there is your difficulty under the present system. You are taxing the man who purchases bar steel, for instance, to turn it into cutlery, though that bar steel is the finished product of the steel company. He pays the sales tax to the steel company, which offsets the duty in that case, but he has to reproduce that bar steel in the form of cutlery, and on that he pays a sales tax again. I might give innumerable illustrations of that kind. The present tax in its application is complex, intricate and to my mind wholly unnecessary. Therefore I suggest the imposition of this tax upon such manufacturers as produce an article finished for the ultimate consumer. That, I think, would give a very handsome revenue. You may say that it would be difficult to classify the manufacturers in that way. I do not think it would be. I remember during the war we had a licensing of all manufacturers as well as of other persons doing business, and certainly it would not require anything like the staff in connection with the minister's office and throughout the country to register and license the manufacturers of Canada, who, after all, are the smallest body of classified business men. Of the three classes I have mentioned, manufacturers, wholesalers or jobbers, and retailers, the manufacturing group is the least numerous and necessarily the largest in their production both as to value and quantity. Consequently, the imposition of the tax upon that group would minimize the cost of collection. Let the tax be of sufficient amount to raise the revenue. Then impose the excess duty to which I refer upon imports to offset such an imposition on the manufacturer.

In addition to that, I suggest that on all goods manufactured by such manufacturers, when exported or re-exported, as the case may be, there should be a rebate of such tax. The reason for that is that if our manufacturers are to compete in the world market they must be relieved from excess taxes in their own market. These taxes, we must remember, are imposed for the purpose of raising revenue to run the business of this country, and if our manufacturer is to compete in a foreign country and pay the import charges and taxes which are levied in that foreign country, such a tax as we suggest here, such a tax, in fact, as we are imposing to-day ought to be rebated on such goods as are exported or re-exported.

I do not wish to labour the question, I do not wish to go into detail. I have already intimated that my object is to bring to the attention of the House the fact that we have a very serious problem in connection, not only with this tax but every branch of taxation, but particularly in connection with this. I understand from figures given by those who are supposed to have sound information on the subject that we may expect from this sales tax a revenue to the amount of $90,000,000. This will constitute a very large proportion of our revenue, and therefore inasmuch as this tax is affecting the whole of the business of Canada, it behooves us to give it the most exhaustive study as to whether or not this somewhat new tax is in any way interfering with the normal course of business.

It is claimed by the retailers particularly that it is working a severe hardship to-day. It is claimed by them, as I have already intimated, that the retailer who keeps an up-to-date set of books is penalized as compared with the retailer who does not keep books but just keeps slips of rough memoranda regarding his business transactions. It is exceedingly difficult to draw the line of demarcation between absolute fraud and mere ignorance on the part of small dealers. I am sure that those who have given any study to the question of accountancy will realize at once the absurdity of expecting a man down in the heart of any of our great cities, particularly the foreigner, who is doing in every other respect a legitimate business, and perhaps supplying a very great need in the community, to keep an accurate set of books when he is doing only a small business, such as many of them are doing to-day. So there is no use trying to kid ourselves, if I might be permitted to use that expression, into believing that it is possible to enforce the present tax to the point of exact equality and justice to all.

There are certain advantages which would accrue from the method of taxation I have suggested, and with a brief statement of them I shall take my seat. In the first place, it will reduce, and reduce enormously in my opinion, the cost of collection. In the second place, it will eliminate this discrimination to which I have made very brief and altogether inadequate reference. In the third place, it will in my estimation bring a very much larger revenue to the exchequer of the country, a most desirable result at this time; and in the next place it will bring about a more equitable distribution of taxation over the country as a whole.

I am aware—and I pause for one moment to anticipate the point—that there are those who will at once apply to my suggestions the argument which has always applied to the imposition of a customs duty viz.—that it is always passed on to the consumer. Unquestionably it is passed on to the consumer. It makes no difference what form of tax is imposed it is ultimately passed on to the consumer. The error, however, that is often made in advancing that argument is that there is an imaginary line of demarcation drawn between consumers and others; that is, those who are sellers of goods—retailers, wholesalers or manufacturers—are often classified as being exempt from the penalties of the consumer. As a matter of fact everybody is a consumer, and there is no use trying to deceive ourselves. Taxes are always passed on to the consumer and will be, I care not what form they may take.

Let me illustrate the point very briefly: You may impose a tax, we will say, on the shoe manufacturer, and you may say with all the dignity and majesty of law that that tax must appear on the invoice, and that the shoe manufacturer must pay that tax. Certainly he will pay that tax, but if it puts him out of business he quits manufacturing. The only way he can continue to manufacture is to make a profit, over and above that tax, sufficient to induce him to continue in business; but if that tax so invades his profits as to make it unprofitable for him to continue he will quit manufacturing or, if he can, raise his price. So it does not make a whit of difference whether that tax does or does not appear on the invoice; it will be absorbed sooner or later by the ultimate purchaser and consumer.

There is another phase of the question to which I feel tempted to refer, and it is this: It is pretty generally admitted by those who are frank enough to do so, and I claim to be one of them, that the general public prefer to pay a tax that does not appear under their noses specified as a tax.

Mr. BUREAU: That is true.

Mr. STEVENS: I think that is right; I think everyone who has had any experience with it at all will admit that. Now, I know that a great many pseudo economists who are very anxious to stir up discord will tell the consumer that this mysterious imposition of a tax in an intangible and undefined form has some criminal or some immoral taint about it. That, I think, is a fallacy, an utter fallacy. As a matter of fact business is very largely dependent upon the great general laws of supply and demand, and the question of whether a business is or is not a paying one; and the imposition of a tax—whether it is shown, as I said a moment ago, on the face of the invoice or whether it is absorbed in the general cost—in the long run makes no difference, except that it does cause a certain amount of irritation as has been proven beyond all peradventure in the United States and in Canada when we caused everybody who sold neckties, shirts, shoes, and such like articles, to show upon the counter slip the tax that went to the Dominion or to the federal government as the case might be. I do not think there was the slightest good—indeed I am convinced there was a great deal of irritation and harm—done by that. However, I repeat, in case my statement should be misconstrued, —that as far as equitable treatment of the public is concerned it is not affected at all, because as long as business is done on a competitive basis, and that is how it is done to-day, whether the tax appears on the invoice or not the business will continue just as long as it is a profitable one; that is the basis and that is the test.

I will not detain the House further. I present this resolution with a sincere desire to have a discussion here, if possible, and a definite and serious consideration of this problem with the hope that we may find some solution of the inequalities and the injustices which are now being imposed, unconsciously and unintentionally perhaps, because of the sales tax.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): I have listened with much interest, and with a measure of sympathy, to the remarks of my hon. friend for Vancouver Centre, (Mr. Stevens) and I am quite sure he is moved entirely by a desire to meet some of the criticisms that we are familiar with from day to day on the sales tax—indeed as to other methods of taxation. It is a misfortune that the tremendous obligations of the war have obliged the government of the day, no matter what party may be in power, to discover new means of raising revenue; and it is quite possible that some of these new means are almost experimental in their character and that, in the light of experience, they may be modified or, in some cases possibly, abandoned altogether.

I am afraid that neither my hon. friend nor I can indulge in the hope of devising any means of taxation that will be popular. Taxation is not popular. New taxation is particularly objectionable. If your taxation has been in force for a number of years, even though it may seem to be inequitable, the people get accustomed to it and gradually cease to complain of it, but new taxes always bring forth a new cry against them, and that is the situation regarding the sales tax. The machinery of the sales tax is substantially the same as it was from the beginning. It has been changed somewhat in detail, and the amount has been increased; but it is a difficult thing to adjust. The cases to which my hon. friend has referred, as between the various branches of industry, certainly seem to make out a fair claim to consideration. The imposition of taxes, however, in the end must be the obligation and the responsibility of the government. There is no escape from that, and such being the case I can give my hon. friend assurance at once that what he has said, and other representations that we may receive on the subject, will be considered with the utmost desire to meet criticisms as far as possible.

I must not hold out the hope that we can reduce taxation to any considerable extent. It is a misfortune that we have to pay high taxes—but every country in the world has to pay them too—and there is naturally a desire for exemption. My hon. friend mentioned one case which seems to be very worthy and he thinks that should be exempt. Other cases could be cited which would seem perhaps to be equally open to one's consideration. However, I realize that in our efforts, and in the efforts of our predecessors, to raise money it is quite possible some errors have been made. It is quite possible that there may be some room for criticism. I can assure my hon. friend that we appreciate what he has said, and if there are any other members who wish to join in the debate we shall be glad to welcome the attention and consideration that they may give to the subject. Our only desire, as I am sure he himself will realize, is to try and raise money and raise it in a manner that will be as little objectionable as possible to the public at large.

I do not think, I would respectfully submit to my hon. friend, that anything can be gained by having a committee because, as I I have said, the government must take the responsibility of raising taxes. I hope my hon. friend will on reflection see that he may accept the assurance that I give him that what he has said to-day, and what others have said—and indeed what others may yet say on the subject—will be received in the same spirit in which I know the criticism will be offered, and with every desire to meet objections as far as is reasonably possible.

Hon. Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): I desire to sympathize with my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) in his difficulty. I know the nature of the difficulties my hon. friend has to face, but let me tell him that he has added to them.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is, of course, the tax which can be absorbed and the tax which cannot be absorbed. I do not entirely agree with my hon. friend for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) that all taxes are passed on. Some taxes that are light are absorbed. For example, I do not think our tax of 2 cents on a cheque was ever passed on. I am quite free to admit that when the tax on a cheque to-day aggregates in amount $2 it is passed on. While under the old tax no attention whatever was paid to that small impost of 2 cents on a cheque, to-day in a great many cases that tax is passed on. It is likewise passed on in connection with the sales tax. In our sales tax operations we wanted money and wanted it badly. We tried to get to the point where, at least in the majority of cases, it worked out that we would have such an impost that, while the resultant revenues would be large, yet in the particular instance of each case the amount would be so comparatively small that it would not be passed on. My hon. friends had to add to the difficulties I have mentioned. They increased the sales tax to a point where, I am afraid, it is largely being passed on to-day. One particular matter I would like to draw to my hon. friend's attention is that when we have these sales taxes—and have them we must—they do not work out very fairly in connection with special imposts on luxuries. In referring to the so-called luxury tax, the position was just exactly as I said when we introduced this tax into the House. The idea was that in some way we would stop the tremendous amount of luxurious buying in Canada, and that we would in that way intercept, to some extent, the inevitable deflation that of necessity would come. Hon. members talk about deflation and blame the government for it. It is not a matter of government policy. Business deflates, and certainly in a place like Canada, next door to the great United States, when they de-4 p.m. liberately embarked on that policy of deflation we had to follow. We buy our raw materials in the same markets. The prices are common, the purchases are common, the methods by which business is done are common and when they deflate we have to deflate. We wanted in some way or other to put the brakes on business to avoid to some extent the disastrous effects of deflation. Deflation is disastrous and it is a question which is the worse, undue deflation or great inflation. I am sure the effects of deflation are more disastrous than the effects of inflation. But knowing it was coming, we wanted to do something which would ease the shock, and these luxury taxes did ease the shock.

The manager of a large departmental shop met me in Ottawa about six months after the luxury tax had been imposed and when we were experiencing deflation and marked deflation. He said he called me all kinds of bad names, everything he could think of, when that tax was put on. He thought that I was everything I ought not to have been. Then he said "Do you know, when I stopped to think I wondered if you really were trying to make yourself the most unpopular man in the country, or trying to do a real service to Canada, and I came to the conclusion you were trying to do that real service, and having come to that conclusion, I knew the only thing you could be driving at was that you wanted to warn everybody not to buy. I stopped buying, and to-day my shelves are practically bare. If I had had the ordinary amount of stock, which in the ordinary methods of business I would have had on my shelves, I would have suffered very, very materially from this deflation; as it is to-day it is not hurting me." That was the reason that tax was put on. Immediately that deflation had shown itself the tax was taken off, because it is really a tax that is not a fair one, a tax which singles out one particular activity as against all other activities. It is not a fair thing. I just want to give the House the one illustration that the hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) has made plain. He spoke about the confectionery business and gave the names of some concerns engaged in that business. We had a luxury tax on candy. Candies were dear and they were being sold in great quantities.

That tax we took off, with all the rest of the luxury taxes but it was one of the last taxes we took off. We needed the money but the real underlying reason, apart from the unfairness of having two taxes upon one commodity, was that it is a tax which cannot be properly administered, for the simple reason that the foreigners,—and I am not using that word in the slightest degree offensively, because they make first class candies—are generally more or less uneducated people, and are more and more going into the candy business. In some of our smaller towns the candy merchants are Greeks and Italians. They go not only into the candy business but into the fruit business as well, and they are doing the business. They keep no books and I found it quite impossible to fairly and equitably enforce that double tax.

As I said in opening, I sympathize very, very deeply with my hon. friend. We must have the money; and must get it, but I hope he will see to it that this idea of double taxation, this special tax upon this activity or that activity, on top of the sales tax, is stopped, and I am inclined to think, from the representations which I know he must be receiving, that he has already come to the conclusion that it is an undesirable form of taxation.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker I am rather glad that this question has come up, although I would have liked to have had some notice that the discussion was going to take place this afternoon, so that I would have had some data upon which tc speak. However, I suppose we shall have another opportunity on the debate on the budget to discuss the subject, but it might be as well that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) should have some idea as to what proposals or what criticisms are likely to be presented at that time. I think the members of the House are all pretty well aware of the fact that the members in this part of the House are what may be called low-tariff men. We also recognize the fact that taxation must be high, and that we have to have those taxes, and as the Minister of Finance has said, he has got to have the money and the great question we have before us, besides the question of economy is where can those taxes be best raised, without hurting too much? Naturally the answer would come "Those who pay the taxes should be those who are best able to pay them." Consequently I believe that taxes should be as low as possible on all the common necessities of life, and I would say to the Minister of Finance that I would like to see that list of exemptions from the sales tax extended to everything that is in use by the common masses of the people. I mean the common articles that the poorer classes of the people must have in their daily lives.

In regard to the pyramiding of taxation, I believe the principle is wrong, and if that could be possibly avoided, I do not know that I would not agree to some extent with the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). I do not feel at all sorry that the taxes should be rather high on articles of luxury. I do not care. Suppose the price of chocolates is rather high, people will have them, they buy them and they must pay for them, but they are a luxury and are not necessary to human life and the poorer classes of the population cannot very well afford them.

Now as to taxes being unpopular because we know we are paying those taxes. I do not know that taxes are ever very popular; they are something we do not like to pay. Nevertheless, when I pay a bill I always want to know what I am paying it for, how much I am paying, and what services or value I have received for the money I am giving. If indirect taxation takes from me two dollars when I should pay only one, I do not feel like paying two dollars about the particulars of which I am not at all certain. I do not find any fault with a tax because it is direct, for under such a tax we know either that we are getting value or that we are not, and if we are not we are able to direct our criticism intelligently. Under municipal taxation you know what your taxes are, and how the money has been expended, and you can intelligently criticise that expenditure. But under a system of indirect taxation there may be extravagance and waste and you may be unable to put your finger just exactly on the spot. I am therefore not opposed to direct taxation.

Now, I do not desire to take up the time of the House to-day, because I expect to have an opportunity of criticising the budget when it comes down. Still I think it is as well that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) should be given some idea of just the direction criticism is likely to take. First of all, there must be a demand for economy in the conduct of public business, while recognizing the fact that a certain amount of money must be raised and must be collected from those who are best able to pay. As regards the taxes consumers pay, I think everyone recognizes that the consumers have to contribute to taxation. But I claim that in this country the heavy burden of taxation falls upon our primary industries, because other businesses can so conduct their affairs as to pass along the taxes until they rest upon the people engaged in these primary industries. I think that probably I have said enough at the present time to indicate the lines along which our criticism may probably be directed.

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): I hardly agree with the remark of the leader of the Progressive party that candy is a luxury. In a sense, of course, it is; but when we speak of candy we must think of the children. Candy is the children's delight, and the majority of people would be inclined to agree that the appeal which the hon. gentleman made might have had some regard to the children. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has well covered the subject and has shown the many objections that are inherent in the present system of sales tax. It is my intention, however, to refer to one or two points not dealt with. The matter of keeping books and the ability of the government inspectors and tax collectors to collect the taxes from the confectioners are questions that arise, as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre pointed out, largely because certain foreigners engaged in business in this country have not that system of book-keeping that makes it possible to collect these taxes. The up-to-date and reliable business man conducts his business in the proper way. And what is the result? Three of the largest confectionery and bakery firms in Vancouver have made no profits during the last year or two. The member for Vancouver Centre explained what happened. In the case of one, R. C. Purdy, the sales taxes for the year 1922 were greater than the profits of the entire business for the year 1921-22 combined.

Mr. CALDWELL: Do they claim that they paid the taxes out of their profits? Or did they add the tax to the prices of the goods they sold?

Mr. LADNER: The claim is that the amount of the sales tax exceeds the profits which they would have made if they had paid the taxes which they could not pay. Those who have been in Vancouver know that these three establishments, the Mission Confectionery Company, the Chanticleer, and R. C. Purdy, are the three leading confectioners and bakery firms there, and they are actually losing money; while on the contrary we find from the records of the city license inspector of Vancouver that the orientals now have two thousand licenses in Vancouver alone in the retail and wholesale business, showing an increase of five hundred per cent in four years. What is the explanation of that increase? It is simply because the oriental keeps no books. Whatever records he has are in Chinese and Japanese, and the tax collectors do their best to understand that language and get at them, but in the end the wily Chinese is able to outdo the government and the tax collector, while the men who endeavour to face their just obligations in the way of taxation lose money. These orientals have been able to increase their business to the extent that they now have two thousand licenses in Vancouver, and that is very significant. It is one of the most cogent reasons why other means should be devised of collecting the taxes. The Minister of Finance properly told us that in view of the obligations of the war new taxes had to be imposed and that you could not devise a new means of taxation which would be popular. But there is a method of co-operation with the retail and wholesale merchants and the manufacturers of this country by which some practical basis could be arrived at. The retail and wholesale merchants and the manufacturers have in their associations considered the question of the sales tax, and in a memorandum which I hold and which is published under the caption "Taxation" they state in a letter to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that they represent and have the authority of the Retail Merchants Association of Canada, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Jewellers Association, the Canadian Wholesale Grocers Association, the Canadian Wholesale Hardware Association, the Canadian Automotive Equipment Association and the wholesale dry goods trade. All these organizations have joined together on a common plan that would eliminate the injustice of the present system of collecting the tax and would replace it with a system which would be more equitable and in the net results would bring the same amount of revenue to the exchequer of the country. They say in one of the concluding paragraphs:

[Mr. Leader.]

If expenditures are reduced, the government will not need to raise so much revenue through taxation; but, if after exercising every possible economy, the government finds that the granting of our requests would prevent the securing of the necessary amount of revenue, it is recommended that a slight increase be made in the sales tax.

These business men are telling the government that they know their business and know what kind of taxation would be fair; each scrutinizing the other, they all agree on a plan and ask for a fair system of taxation, and if the government has not enough money as a result, then they recommend that an increase be made in the rate. But they want to have the injustice of the present system removed. Under the heading "Sales Tax" they set out certain schemes which they think will be practicable and which all these merchants have agreed upon. One of these I will read:

(g) (1) All retail merchants who do business exclusively by retail and who pay a sales tax to manufacturers of 4½ per cent., or to wholesalers of 2¼ per cent., shall be required to keep books or records in either English or French, and to take out a retail merchant's sales tax license, and shall be exempt from all other sales taxes except those above mentioned.

This covers the point to which I referred a moment ago—where books are not properly kept. The memorandum contains other practical suggestions which should be of the greatest assistance to the government.

My purpose in rising this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is to urge upon the government the necessity, expediency and justice of correcting evils which are so apparent that all those interested in these trades and businesses are seriously hampered. These evils are driving the leading men out of the confectionery business in the city of Vancouver, and their fine large stores are being replaced by the little hole-in-the-wall stores run by Chinese, Greeks and other foreigners who make their profits by keeping their taxes at the lowest possible minimum. Such a condition of affairs is neither good for the city nor for the Dominion, and I trust the government will entertain the recommendations that our retail merchants are urging upon them.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): I am pleased indeed that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has brought this matter up for discussion. I did not know he intended doing so to-day or I might have made a little preparation, because I have received some complaints in regard to the sales tax. Retailers advise me that the law as administered causes them a great deal of irritation by way of what they term "pin pricks." They do not wish to evade the tax, but their chief complaint is that it is administered in a way to cause them the maximum annoyance and inconvenience.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has referred to the fact that in all cases taxes are paid by the consumer. Another hon. member pointed out that this was not always so. I should like to draw attention to one case in point; I think I mentioned it in the House on a former occasion. The members of the grain exchange in remitting payment for carloads of grain place the proper amount of stamp taxes on the cheques and then add this tax to the account and pass it on to the farmers. It may not be a strong argument to refute the statement made by the hon. member, but it is one instance at least.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has told us that we must levy taxes because the money must be had to meet our national expenses. If the people felt the government were doing their very utmost to cut expenses to the core, I think there would be greater readiness to pay the taxes imposed. I do not say that this government has not done as much as governments in the past to economize, but the need at the present time for drastic retrenchment is greater than it has ever been before. Economic distress is rampant throughout the country, and for this very reason I did hope that the government would succeed in cutting down their estimates to a greater extent than they have. We are called upon sometimes to vote for the reduction of a particular item, as happened, for instance, yesterday; but I feel that when such a vote is called most of us are not in a position to say whether the particular cut is advisable, for it is conceivable that we may reduce an item that can least stand any reduction.

I believe the people who are called upon to pay these taxes, and who are ill able to pay them, are not encouraged very much when they see large expenditures in the estimates this year on such public works as the Welland canal. I hope to have an opportunity to speak to that later on, but I mention it in passing. Such heavy expenditures do not tend to encourage those who are burdened by taxation and find it most difficult to make both ends meet.

I have thought that much good could be done by taxing luxuries. The hon. member for Vancouver has objected to what my leader has said about candies being a luxury. For the most part, I think, candies are certainly a luxury. An instance came under my notice a year ago where a boy paid eight dollars for a box of chocolates.

An hon. MEMBER: Shame!

Mr. MILLAR: If that was not a luxury, then what is?

Mr. STEVENS: It was the measure of his love.

Mr. JACOBS: Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether it brought results?

Mr. MILLAR: Unfortunately, I am not able to give that information to my hon. friend.

I believe that as far as possible taxes should be levied on the wealthy, but I admit one difficulty. I believe it has been the experience that when governments have taxed the wealthy, the tendency is for the class affected to take the money required for payment of the taxes from their business rather than from their personal expenditure. I am sorry this is so, but I am afraid there is only too much truth in the assertion. We expect to cause them to cut down their personal expenses, but if applied to some of the wealthy people of the city of Ottawa in the expectation that it would influence them to ride in $4,000 motor cars instead of $8,000 vehicles, I am afraid it would work out the other way in many cases, and that the extra money required to meet the taxation would be withdrawn from the industries in which these people are interested, with the result that in some cases perhaps fewer men would find employment. Notwithstanding this difficulty, however, I know of no better method than to levy heavy taxes on those who are best able to pay them, and to make the taxes correspondingly light on those who are poor and least able to meet this obligation. For this reason I have felt very strongly against this sales tax, because undoubtedly it is passed on, and unfortunately the class to which I belong, the agriculturists, cannot pass on their taxes to some one else. We are dealing with Nature, and she will have nothing to do with the sales tax, with the tariff tax or with any other tax. We cannot say to her, "We must have a better crop because our taxes have been increased." I am not sure that the appointment of a committee would be the proper way to deal with this question, for the reason that we have a great many committees appointed already, but I am very glad the question has been brought forward for discussion and that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will give due consideration to these complaints.

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Minister of Customs and Excise): Mr. Speaker, reading the resolution of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) I see that he alludes to the "difficulties of administration and collection and alleged inequities."

There are two issues in this question. Of course, I have sympathy for my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when he has to impose taxes, but God help the man who has to collect them.

Mr. FORKE: What about the man who pays them?

Mr. BUREAU: The man who pays them has a grouch against the man who collects them, and says nasty things to him. New taxes are always disagreeable—Taxes generally —and this is admitted by everyone, even by my hon. friend the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke)—are not very appetizing. Taxes are repulsive to most people. The difficulty is that you cannot see what you are getting for your money. You pay for your roads—they are not really your roads; they belong to the municipality, but you can walk on them and ride on them and see you are getting value for your money. But when it comes to a federal tax for the purpose of carrying on the business of the country, for the paying interest on the country's debt, and so on, you cannot visualize the thing. You know there is a debt—but where is it and what is it? If you subscribe ten dollars for charitable or other like purposes, you do not have the same satisfaction that you get from buying even a luxury—even candy which you may look at; you can see it and you know what it is you have paid for. It is admitted then that taxes are not agreeable to anybody.

Mr. McMASTER: But one only buys candies to give them away.

Mr. BUREAU: Then there are two pleasures, that of seeing and that of giving. Now, the collection of the sales tax presented certain difficulties at the start, but those difficulties have gradually disappeared. The cases mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) have been called to my attention and the matter is being investigated. I understand the trouble is that certain Greeks, or Hindus, or foreigners—to use the same word that is used in the representations made—who are running confectionery stores, do not keep books, and the auditors who are sent by the government to see what sales tax they should pay cannot ascertain the amount and have to guess at it. I do not think, however, that the sales tax generally has worked very great hardship.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has made a suggestion with regard to means for applying the sales tax, and I must apologize to him for I did not exactly catch his idea. I understood him to say he wanted the tax to be imposed upon the manufactured product as it went out to the general public for consumption. Well, let us take the case of leather. I do not know much about the leather business, but we will suppose that a man goes around to gather up hides and then pickle them; that would not be manufacturing. The skins are sent down to the factory to be dressed into leather; that would not be manufacturing. Then it would be made into sole leather, for instance; would that be manufacturing? Suppose the hide as pickled is sold to the manufacturer of sole leather; would that be a case where the tax should be collected? Or would my hon. friend wait until the leather goes to the shoe manufacturer before levying the tax.

Mr. STEVENS: It is not quite in order for me to answer, but my idea was this: the hide is first treated, and then it is tanned and manufactured into leather; then it is sold, say, to the boot and shoe manufacturer; then it is manufactured into boots and shoes. That is the point where the tax should be imposed —at the point where it is manufactured into boots and shoes.

Mr. BUREAU: Then we would have two sources of revenue, one at the custom house, when the importer pays the sales tax, and one when the product is manufactured.

Mr. STEVENS: As I said a moment ago, if you put a sufficient tax on to bring the revenue up to the desired point, you will not have to impose an additional sales tax on the retail shoe merchant, the dealer, in harness, or on the retail sales to the customer.

Mr. McMASTER: It would be pyramided by two profits on it.

Mr. BUREAU: I cannot exactly see where we would better ourselves so far as the ultimate consumer is concerned. It is admitted by everyone that we have to get the money, and it appears to be the unanimous desire of the House to take the line of least resistance in applying taxation; to follow the course which will result in the least friction. It is admitted that the sales tax is a good tax. I know that in certain cases it is working injustices, but we are trying to remedy those. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) seemed to think that the retail merchants had been badly used in connection with this tax. I am free to say that the matter has been a good deal exaggerated, and that considerable propaganda has been carried on by some officer of the retail merchants; and if I were to use my own judgment—I do not want to impute motives—I would say it was with the object of embarrassing the Department of Customs. Every man who took out a license sent in a uniform printed protest, on which he made the statement, "I take my license, but I consider myself a retailer and not a manufacturer," etc. I admit that there are difficult cases. I will tell my hon. friend of one difficulty that I have experienced in connection with the definition of "retailer". A retailer is a man who produces upon the special order of each individual. Now, take the case of the florist; I do not know when my friends are going to get married or when they are going to die, and it is hard for me to know when I am going to need flowers and to order them in advance. There is a difficulty therefore, in connection with the status of a florist in that respect. Another difficult case is that of the manufacturer of chocolates. I cannot tell in advance when I shall want a box of candy for a child. I cannot telephone two days in advance and say that I want a box of a certain kind of chocolates. It is necessary, therefore, for them to keep these goods on their shelf, ready for sale, and those who do that sell them, not only over the counter, but in many cases, also to other small dealers. So that it is difficult to give a definition in cases of this kind that will satisfy the producer.

It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that if the committee asked by my hon. friend were granted, a great deal of trouble and embarrassment would result, not to the government, not so far as the policy of the administration is concerned, but in connection with the carrying on of the business of the department. It is the same with this matter as it is with the tariff; you would not like a committee to go into that question and advise the House what changes to make in the tariff. If we did that, speculation would be rampant throughout the country. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has had sufficient experience in departmental administration to know how difficult it is to carry on the work of a department without having observations offered freely by the public or interested bodies. The question of changes which may be necessary in connection with sales or other taxes may be dealt with when the budget is brought down. I am glad my hon. friend has brought the subject up; hon. members will ponder over it, and when the budget is before us we may have some helpful suggestions. And I would invite suggestions not only as to the way the tax ought to be imposed, but also as to the way it should be collected.

I do not think the expense has been so great. We have not added very much to the staff. Of course, we have had to get additional auditors to go around the various wholesale houses and among the jobbers to examine their books and see that those who ought to pay the tax are doing so, but the expense has not increased at all in comparison with the increase in revenue. The difficulties have been gradually disappearing, and they have been disappearing more especially—and I say this for the benefit of my hon. friend for Vancouver Centre—since that propaganda on behalf of the retailers has ceased. I think a lot of men have been submitting to the Department of Customs and Excise imaginary grievances because we find when we write back to them and ask for concrete instances of how they are affected and are suffering, they are willing to admit that after all it was not so bad as it was first represented to them.

As I said before, I invite any suggestions that may be made, but under the circumstances, seeing how much it would disturb the work of the department if we were to send for the employees and have them receive suggestions from every one and then go to the minister and say, "You should run the department this way, or that way," I would ask my hon. friend to withdraw his motion on the assurance that consideration will be given to any suggestion that he or anyone else may make on this subject when the budget comes down. I can assure him that no one has more at heart the good administration of the department, and has more at heart especially the collection of the taxes with the least possible friction and the least possible inconvenience to the public generally than I have.

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): I am sorry the minister cannot see his way to accede to the request of my hon. friend for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) for a committee of this House to investigate this important matter, because it seems to me it is eminently one for investigation. The object of the mover was not in any way, I think, to embarrass the government. In fact, he made it perfectly clear that he did not intend to impute to this government responsibility for the present unsatisfactory condition in respect to the sales tax and its collection, but rather, he said, it was a condition which has been brought about by unusual circumstances and one which calls for special consideration.

I am inclined to think also that the minister's remarks in reference to the retail merchants were hardly called for, because I believe that this propaganda of which he speaks was not directed as an attack against his department at all. There was no intention on the part of the Retail Merchants' Association as such to enter into a political discussion or to gain a political advantage for any of the political parties in Canada. The association is entirely a non-political body. I have had the honour of meeting several of its committees at the coast, and as a matter of fact I know that some of the leading officials of the organization are very strong Liberals. Their object in issuing this propaganda, if I may call it such, was to my mind an attempt on their part to show to the government that there are grievances which should receive consideration and adjustment.

Mr. BUREAU: If my hon. friend will allow me, I do not want to impute to any members of the association or to the association as a whole the idea that they were trying to make political capital out of the action that was taken by them. The propaganda I think—and I am going to be frank and open about it—was due more to the fact that a certain official wanted to keep his job in that association, than to the body as a whole.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I must accept the minister's statement, but in regard to his second proposition I think I shall have to take exception to that also, because I am convinced that the officials of this organization are imbued with proper motives in carrying out the duties which fall upon them in connection with this matter. It is only right and proper that there should be an organization of the retail merchants, just as other businesses have their organizations.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not deny that.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Then if it is right for them to have an organization there is no reason in the world why they should not have officers, and if they have officers there is no reason in the world why those officers should not be paid.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not object to that at all, but I do not want to be made the goat for them to keep their jobs.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister goes so far as to say that these men are issuing this propaganda merely for the purpose of holding their jobs.

Mr. BUREAU: That is my impression.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I think that is going very far, and if the minister is basing his action on this resolution on that attitude, I think he is really taking the wrong stand. I have met many officers of the Retail Merchants' Association, and I must say that they are very responsible citizens. I believe they are doing their work in a conscientious manner and that they are men who are entitled to every consideration. They certainly are not men who should be criticised in this unjust manner. The Retail Merchants' Association is composed of a very large number of members from one end of Canada to the other. In every city and town they have their representatives and their organization is a large and powerful one. I am convinced that the officers of this association who have issued the manifestoes to the government have done so, not with the object of holding their jobs at all, but for the purpose of trying to right what seems to them a very unsatisfactory condition.

Mr. BUREAU: Do not misquote me. I am not talking of manifestoes. I am talking of the protests sent to the officers of the Department of Customs and Excise at the instance of this officer.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I think it is quite clear from what has been said that the retail merchants are not objecting to paying the tax. I have seen one of the memoranda which they forwarded to the Prime Minister. I have it here.

Mr. BUREAU: What is the date of this memorandum?

Mr. McQUARRIE: The date is January 25, 1923.

Mr. BUREAU: Yes, there has been a change lately.

Mr. McQUARRIE: In this memorandum they say they have no objection to the sales tax being increased, if necessary. It is not the tax they are complaining of. They admit that the money has to be raised and that the sales tax is a means which can properly be made use of. It is simply a question of whether the tax is being collected in a fair and equitable manner, and it seems to me they have grounds for complaint as to the manner in which this tax is applied if one class of merchant has to pay a greater tax proportionately than another class of merchant, and that would seem to be the case in view of the illustrations which have been given by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. I quite appreciate the fact that the retailers, of course, would be inclined to get some other class to pay the tax instead of themselves. I have no doubt the same might be said of the manufacturers and of the wholesalers; there is always that difference of opinion as to whom the taxes should be collected from. It seems to me that the suggestion made by the hon. member (Mr. Stevens) is a reasonable one, and that if you get taxation at the source you will not only derive a larger revenue but its collection will be less expensive.

There are differences of opinion, I admit, among the various classes that have to pay taxes, and all these different organizations have their own ideas as to the remedies which ought to be applied. If a committee of the House were appointed to consider this matter, which would not necessarily involve a great deal of expense, that committee might hear representatives of the various classes interested and might be prepared to make recommendations to the minister and to the government which would be deserving of consideration. We have had many committees appointed by the House in the last few years in the endeavour to adjust troublesome questions, and I think it will be admitted on all sides that all these committees have filled a useful purpose, and that some good, at least, has been derived from their deliberations. If, as the Minister of Customs says, this whole thing is propaganda on the part of certain officers of the Retail Merchants Association who desire to hold their jobs it would, of course, be unnecessary to have a committee; but if there are a number of problems involved—and the minister must know that there are a great many, not only in connection with the application of taxation and the specification of the sources from which the tax should be collected but also as to the manner in which that collection is made—it would seem only reasonable to agree to what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre proposes. I have heard that the machinery which is provided at the present time for the work of the department is not very complete. I do not know whether that statement is true or not, but possibly that machinery may be improved. That is another matter which might be considered by the proposed committee. I do not wish to take up time unnecessarily, but I would impress upon the minister the advisability of reconsidering his attitude in this matter. Let us have a committee and let that committee see if it can assist the minister, and the government also, in satisfactorily adjusting the difficulties which have presented themselves in connection with the application of this particular tax.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): If there is any hon. member who desires to speak he should do so now before the mover of the resolution closes the debate.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): In view of the statement made by the Minister of Customs that the government would welcome suggestions as to any changes in the sales tax I am encouraged to direct their attention to—

Mr. BUREAU: If my hon. friend will pardon, my special duty is the collection of the tax. I said I would welcome any suggestion made that would tend to improve the collection of the sales tax. That is the hard part.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Well, in view of the statement of the Minister of Finance a year ago in dealing with the sales tax, after the budget was introduced, may I direct his attention and the attention of his colleagues to one item, and one item only, which I think has a very important bearing on the prosperity of the country, having to do with the reclamation of waste lands. It has been stated that means to pay the debt of this country must eventually come out of the soil. If that is the case, the greater the improvements made in the land of Canada the greater the returns must be. The item to which I would like to direct the attention of the minister is that of field tile for drainage purposes. I know of cases during the past year where contracts have been let, and the tile purchased and delivered on the land, but no labour was available, and in consequence great loss has been sustained. In addition to that there is the further handicap in the shape of the sales tax which is imposed on this field tile, a tile which is used for reclaiming what are practically waste lands. I am drawing the attention of the minister to this matter so that before the budget comes down he will be in a position to deal with it. I am encouraged to do so by reason of the fact that a year ago he made some alterations with respect to a matter that I brought to his attention, and I am quite sure they had a very good effect. I think splendid results came from the change which he then made, and I am satisfied that the use of field tile for reclamation purposes should also be encouraged rather than hampered by the sales tax.

Mr. L. H. JELLIFF (Lethbridge): There are one or two matters to which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre drew attention which have also been impressed upon me by different organizations in my district. The hon. member referred to the matter of the sales tax on books for public libraries. I have received from the librarian of the public library of the city of Calgary, and also from the librarian of the city of Lethbridge, communications relating especially to this subject, in which the writers complained quite bitterly of the sales tax on the books which they purchased for these public libraries. The libraries in question are supported by public taxation, and the imposition of a sales tax on the books published doubles the burden which these libraries have to meet. The librarians referred to, therefore, urge very strongly that the sales tax be removed, to the end that the usefulness of these libraries may be extended, and the public given the full benefit to be derived from them. I hope that the Minister of Finance, to whom I am going to send these communications, will take this matter under advisement and see if he cannot arrange to relieve these public libraries from the burden of this extra taxation. When the budget was up last year and we were discussing this sales tax I presented a resolution or two from the labour organizations of the Lethbridge district resisting the increase in the tax that was made at that time. They are protesting particularly against the sales tax on the coarser lines of clothing and on boots and shoes. I hope the Finance Minister will carefully consider this matter also when he brings down his budget this year. I do not care to enter into details, but there are many matters in connection with the sales tax that should be adjusted. I believe these taxes are placing burdens upon the people of this country, and especially the class of people who can least afford to bear them, and I hope that every effort will be made this year to see that these articles of necessity are taken off the list to which the sales tax applies.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): In view of the very courteous, and I think very frank, request of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau), the two members of the government particularly charged with the respective duties of imposing and collecting taxes, I am willing to have the resolution withdrawn. But before asking you, Mr. Speaker, to make the request to the House that this resolution be withdrawn, may I make myself clear on one point in regard to my suggestion? I admit that within the confines of a brief few moments' speech it is impossible to properly treat so important a subject, but I will just reiterate what I said a short time ago. I believe that the somewhat complex nature of the existing taxes could be very very much simplified if, instead of imposing a sales tax upon the various branches of trade—the dealer in the raw material, the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer—the taxes were imposed upon one branch, namely the manufacturer of the goods in their finished condition as issued to the consumer, and at the same time retaining the other features of this tax, namely, the sales tax imposed upon imports of an amount corresponding generally with the other tax. In addition to that I suggest that such a tax should be increased to an amount that would ensure the maintenance of the amount received. I know that the Minister of Finance understands what I have very imperfectly stated, and I would ask that, when he is giving consideration to this problem, he would take that suggestion under advisement. I would like to tender another suggestion, that, perhaps between now and the time when the budget is considered by the Cabinet for presentation to the House, officers of the two departments might be detailed to give this matter special study and attention, and to hear the representatives of the manufacturers, the wholesalers and the retailers. In making this request I am quite aware that several delegations have waited upon the government and have submitted memoranda of various kinds, but I think if the two ministers would appoint from their departments one or two thoroughly expert individuals—and I know there are many such in the departments—to give immediate and definite study to the problem, with authority to hear these representatives and instructions to seek finality in the matter, that would certainly be better than even a parliamentary committee such as could make a report this session. These suggestions are given with a very sincere desire to solve a very difficult problem, and not with a desire to embarrass the government. With the consent of the government, I request that the resolution be withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

MARKING OF WOOLLEN GOODS

Mr. J. D. DRUMMOND (West Middlesex) moved:

Whereas the sheep-raising industry of this Dominion is suffering severely from restricted markets and inadequate returns received by the wool-growers engaged in the industry;

And whereas the present markets are further restricted by misrepresentation as to woollen products;

Therefore, be it resolved: That, in the opinion of this House, it is highly desirable that the government should bring down legislation that will adequately protect both producer and consumer by compelling manufacturers of goods sold as woollen goods to mark or label such goods in accordance with the composition thereof; showing plainly the percentage of virgin wool, shoddy, cotton or silk or other materials contained therein, and that importations of such goods be certified in similar or equally adequate manner.

He said: I hope that this resolution requires very little explanation. It is in reality something that has been before the people of the United States for two or three years known there as the "Truth in Fabric Act." The intention of the resolution is not to prevent the use of shoddy, because we realize that if that were done there would not be enough woollen goods in the Dominion of Canada for the purpose for which they are needed, but, as the resolution itself states, to place the public in a position to know what they are buying. Permit me for a moment or two to take up the resolution as it pertains to the producers of wool. It is, of course, a fact that is well known to every agricultural man in the House, that the sheep industry in the Dominion of Canada is on the decline. The reasons for that may be several, but we believe it to be mainly the fact that the wool has not been sold at a price that would return an adequate profit to the wool grower. We believe that the producer of virgin wool should not be placed in the position where he is a competitor with the rag man or the producer of shoddy. To this end we ask that what is contained in the resolution be put into legislation: that is, that manufacturers be compelled to mark or label such goods as they manufacture in accordance with the composition thereof, showing plainly what is contained in those goods, whether it be a percentage of shoddy, or whether it be a percentage of silk, cotton or any other material. This is something that has been asked for by many sheep breeders' associations both in the Dominion of Canada and in the United States. It is something that has been asked for also in a number of newspaper editorials. I have a list of newspapers which since 1919 have taken up this matter and, so far as their influence can go, have ranged themselves behind it. It is not necessary for me to read them; suffice it to say that I have 32 press editorials from Canada and the United States in favour of legislation of this kind. I have also, from wool growers and live stock associations, the National Consumers' Association, etc., in the United States and Canada, some 60 resolutions that have been passed to the same end. I intend to be brief and for that reason I shall not read many of these resolutions, but I might read the following resolution passed by the Ontario Sheep Breeders' Association in Toronto on February 26 of this year.

That we, the members of the Ontario Sheep Breeders' Association, urge the Canadian government to enact fair and equitable legislation that will ensure "truth" in fabric; and in such an effort we pledge them our undivided support.

In view of the fact that the sheep industry is on the decline in Canada, I think I am only voicing the sentiments of most of those who are engaged in agriculture in this country when I say that this is deplorable from the farmers' standpoint, not only in the production of wool but in other ways as well. Those of us who have been engaged in agriculture all our lives, and who have for the greater part of that time had something to do with raising sheep, know that there is no means by which the eradication of weeds can be so successfully accomplished as by the pasturing of sheep. This is one reason why sheep raising should be encouraged in the Dominion.

I do not think it is necessary for me to say much more from the point of view of the producers, but for a few moments I might consider the matter as it affects the consumers, because this is one of the things that do not affect any particular class. It affects, in fact, two classes, the consumers and the producers, who comprise the population of Canada. It is a fact that is well known to those who have given any study to the question that shoddy as used in the manufacture of cloth is sometimes worked over up to eight and ten times. In every process it is carbonized and the dress material and other undesirable elements are eliminated, leaving only the wool. I want to emphasize the distinction between virgin wool and shoddy, because one might go to buy a piece of cloth and be told that it was all wool, whereas it might be shoddy and the merchant might nevertheless be telling the truth. We do not want to eliminate the use of shoddy in the production of fabric, because there is not enough wool produced in Canada to provide more than one-third of the cloth necessary for the use of the people. It is therefore actually necessary that shoddy should be used in the manufacture of cloth. What we do ask, however, is that when it is used the percentage that is contained in the fabric shall be made known to those who buy it. When the United States government and, as well, if I am rightly informed, the government of Canada, were clothing their troops for overseas service, they made it obligatory on the part of those who provided cloth for the soldiers' clothes that they should state what percentage of virgin wool and what percentage of shoddy such cloth contained. If that was necessary in connection with the cloth provided for the soldiers' clothing, surely it is also necessary as regards the clothing that our people in general wear.

This is a principle that has been applied and carried out in the Pure Foods Act. For instance, the manufacture of oleomargarine is not prohibited, but it is definitely laid down in our legislation that the people must know whether they are buying oleomargarine or butter. In the manufacture of maple syrup no one will for a moment say that the addition of cane sugar or any other ingredient is deleterious, but it is the function of the Pure Foods Act to safeguard the public by providing that they shall know whether what they are buying is pure or is an adulterated article. The same thing applies to milk. Nobody will say that the addition of water to milk makes it unfit for human consumption. But the Pure Foods Act clearly and distinctly lays it down that milk of a certain quality must be sold or the buyer must know what he is getting. I do not think it is necessary for me to go much further. I have a considerable amount of material which it would take me an hour or two to consider, but I have no desire to do so. I might refer before concluding to a bill that has been before the Senate of the United States for two years and which has been thrown out on both occasions. That bill is coming back this year with every prospect of being passed. Now, we do not ask this parliament to pass a bill of that character, but it indicates what we are seeking. It provides:

> That every manufacturer of woven fabrics that contain wool, and of garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, shall. . . . cause the said woven fabric to be marked, and all garments and articles of apparel made therefrom shall be tagged in the manner hereinafter provided.

Now, I do not propose to lay down any lines on which this might be carried into effect, but it is something to which I hope the government will give their attention. I trust that something will be provided that will not only help those who are engaged in the important industry of sheep raising in Canada but will afford some protection to the consuming public.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member (Mr. Drummond) who has presented the resolution has introduced in the language of the resolution, a tariff issue that is familiar to many of the people of this country. He suggests that we provide for adequate protection. I should like to submit to my hon. friend that while we all share his views as regards the wisdom of providing the people of this cold country with woollen goods that are really woollen, and while the government are in sympathy with anything that will help to encourage the sheep industry throughout the country, I am not sure how far the gentlemen who sit around him are prepared to follow him in this resolution. It seems to me that this is adequate protection to the limit. For while we are prepared at once to admit that parliament might enact legislation compelling our own manufacturers to visibly brand the products of their mills, I would ask my hon. friend what control have we over foreign manufacturers? If we adopt this resolution, it simply means that we are handing over the whole business in question to the manufacturers of Canada and are keeping out the competition which we believe is in the best interests of our domestic trade.

There are many ways besides a customs tariff of protecting national industries. We have learned that truth ourselves. For many years our cattle were kept out of the British market because it was represented by the British cattle men that our stock was diseased. This was purely a pretence to protect the British cattle industry. We know to-day that certain of our industries are deprived of business in other countries because of restrictions by way of specifications governing contracts. I have in mind complaints that are now before my department. Canadian industries desired to tender for locomotives to be shipped to an overseas dominion, but the specifications framed by those who were able to control that business were such that our Canadian industries were shut out. Only last week we had brought to our attention the case of a manufacturer not far from Ottawa who had secured an order for 30,000 doors to be shipped to the United Kingdom. But he could not ship them because the carpenters there said, "You have not provided certain information as to what you pay for labour." No person is foolish enough to believe that this is done for any other object than to protect the particular industry affected.

If this resolution goes through in its present form, and it becomes an order to the government to bring in the legislation my hon. friend is asking for, it is in the last analysis the highest degree of protection. My hon. friend has debated the question. The government are desirous so far as possible of seeing that all goods sold throughout this country are what they are represented to be to the public, but I submit to him that in the interests of our people generally the government cannot accept this resolution because it is purely a measure of protection, worse even than any he would find in the customs house.

Mr. DRUMMOND: What has the government done along this line to protect the public?

Mr. ROBB: The greatest protection the public can have is competition. This resolution would destroy competition.

Hon. Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb) absolutely and entirely mistakes the motives prompting the hon. member who has moved this resolution.

Mr. ROBB: I am not attributing any motives to the hon. member; I am pointing out the possible results of the resolution if it goes through.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He may not know it, but nothing is being done, so far as I am aware, to help that primary activity which ought to be great in this country—the production of Canadian wools. The subject has been discussed before. We had it up before the tariff commission time and again, when farmers showed what could be done, the kinds of wool that could be grown, and the like. We had it up in connection with our Marking Act. Of course, the present government threw it out.

Mr. ROBB: What, the Marking Act?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was something which was a little troublesome, something which made difficulties. Why, there is a firm in Scotland which turns out the best grades of tweed in the world, and it stamps every yard of its product with its name and a guarantee, as I recollect it, that it is composed entirely of pure wool. The thing can be done. Of course, it will be a little troublesome, of course the trade will come down and make trouble, of course the importers will come down and make trouble, and of course it takes time to convince people in the business of handling shoddy that this thing is right. But why attempt to dispose of the proposal by raising the bugaboo of protection?

Mr. BUREAU: That is what it is.

Mr. ROBB: Does my hon. friend argue that the only shoddy sold in this country is the product of Canadian mills?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is indeed short of argument when he advances a question of that kind. Shoddy? Look at what you are getting through your customs to-day if you want to find shoddy. Let my hon. friend examine the imported article that he is so solicitous for if he wants to find shoddy. I can assure him he will find any quantity of it. The hon. minister says he wants to do everything for this industry that he possibly can—he wants to help the farmer, he wants to help the wool industry, he wants to see that when our people buy goods they may know what they are buying; and yet he will not do the one thing which would render it possible for them to know what they are buying.

This proposal is not anything new. The Marking Act of the United States covers it. That act is enforced when it is convenient; sometimes it is not convenient. But such an act can be enforced. My hon. friend says that the purpose of this resolution is absolute protection. I do not know why. I do not know why it is any harder for the foreign manufacturer to do what my hon. friend would say it is perfectly all right to make the domestic manufacturer do if it did not result in protection—to honestly state what is in his goods. He says, "We have got control over the domestic manufacturer; we can see that he is honest, we can see that in so far as his materials are concerned the Canadian purchaser will know what he is buying." "But", he asks, "what control have we over these foreign manufacturers?" Equally great—greater control because it can be more easily enforced by my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau). Why, all these imported articles have to come through his watchful department, and it is perfectly easy for him to see whether they are pure articles or not—that is, if it is required.

Mr. BUREAU: What would you do if they are not marked?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, I can tell the House what my hon. friend does when goods are not marked. He knows what to do with goods that his government want to have marked in connection with interests that they wish to protect. Why, they feel that it is necessary to mark pencils—one of the smallest and most insignificant businesses in this country.

Mr. BUREAU: Everybody uses them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: An industry employing probably less men by many units than any other we could seriously discuss. But there is a pencil factory in Newmarket the owner of which was the chairman of the election committee of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. BUREAU: Hear, hear. More power to his arm.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend knows what to do when pencils try to get in that are not marked; they simply do not get in, that is all.

Mr. BUREAU: Oh, they do. We mark them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, you hold them up and mark them at the shipper's expense.

Mr. BUREAU: How about printing and lithography?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The same thing about that as well. We thought all these things should be marked.

Mr. BUREAU: Oh, no.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not on the basis of this man's politics or that man's politics, or with reference to the question whether he was chairman of the Prime Minister's election committee, but simply on the basis of what was right.

Mr. BUREAU: And that is why you suspended the Marking Act.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We wanted the Canadian public to know what they were getting. We wanted it not only on pencils but on cutlery, and everything. But no cutlery was being manufactured in that particular place; there was no knife factory there. The knife factory was in Kingston.

Mr. McMASTER: These are cutting remarks.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They happen, Mr. Speaker, to be true remarks.

Mr. BUREAU: Partly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says, "partly". Will he tell me wherein they are incorrect?

Mr. BUREAU: They are incorrect in this respect: My hon. friend stated that we did away with the Marking Act. His government suspended the act; it never was in force.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Now, let us try to get down to facts.

Mr. BUREAU: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The Finance Minister threw away the Marking Act with a wave of his hand in his last budget. But it was found convenient later to hang on to something in order that these privileges might be given. It was convenient to do it, and it was done.

Mr. BUREAU: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says "hear, hear". It was also convenient to give this protection, not to the wool producer, not to the maker of cutlery, but to this pencil manufacturer, and also to the lithographer.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. BUREAU: And printers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And printers. It is right that lithography and printing, a first-rate business in this country, should be looked after, but other industries should also be looked after. My hon. friend has no difficulty whatever in looking after the lithographer, the printer, and the manufacturer of pencils.

Mr. BUREAU: Because they made a good case, and the others did not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, here is a case being made for others.

Mr. BUREAU: I have not yet passed on it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then I hope my hon. friend will give to the wool industry and the farmers producing wool in this country the same measure of protection that he gives to the manufacturer of pencils.

Mr. BUREAU: Has the matter of the pencils hurt my hon. friend more than anything else?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, but I would like to see them all treated alike. My hon. friend cannot say that it is more important to have pencils made in Canada, even at Newmarket, than it is to grow wool on a thousand farms. He cannot say that the wool industry and the farming industry are not more indigenous to Canada than the making of pencils. If my hon. friend is going to see that the farmers get just as square a deal as the manufacturers of lead pencils in Newmarket, I am quite content to say nothing more upon the subject.

Mr. BUREAU: That is a matter of tariff, and I leave it to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. JOHN MORRISON (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised that the matter of protection was introduced into the discussion of this resolution. I did not understand that the motion was made primarily with the intention of asking for protection for the wool growers. There is another class who need some protection—not tariff protection, but protection from the efforts of those who are selling an adulterated product for the pure article—and that class is the great unorganized mass of the people of Canada. They are the victims more than the wool growers. Everybody has to buy clothing. We go into a store and a dealer will say, "This is an all-wool article." But very few articles of clothing are one hundred per cent wool as they are sold for. The shoddy manufacturer will have in stock goods that are eighty per cent shoddy, and the adulterated article is sold as a pure wool article. In this case, who is defrauded most, the buyer of the cloth or the wool grower? Why, the person who buys the cloth. And the beneficiary of the system is the shoddy manufacturer. Should this system be allowed to continue just for the benefit of a few shoddy manufacturers? I do not think so. The wool growing industry of this country is a very small one, but it could be one of our first industries if conditions were as they should be. Very few farmers raise sheep to-day; they have no encouragement to do so. If sheep were raised in greater numbers the result would be far-reaching in many ways. There would be more grain grown and sold; and surely we need larger production to take care of the overhead liabilities that confront us. Every basic industry should be given a square deal. We are not asking for protection, but we are asking for fair treatment. The Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers last year sold most of their wool in the United States, paying 15 cents a pound to get it there, and an equal amount of woollen goods was subsequently shipped back to Canada, the Canadian consumer paying the duty. What is the matter with our having the wool manufactured in our own country? There is something wrong, and I would like somebody who is wise on the subject to explain.

Now, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb), referring to the cattle embargo, pointed out that the contention that disease prevailed among our cattle was merely a pretence; that it was protection our friends on the other side wanted. Well there have been a good many pretences by politicians to try to get by with something. In this case we are not asking that the wool grower should be protected at the expense of the consumer; in fact, if such protection was afforded it would be only the due of every consumer. The great unorganized masses have a claim on the government that all these goods should be marked. We have to sell our wheat, our oats, our flax, our hogs on this basis; they are all graded; why should not clothing be graded? Why should not the manufacturer have to mark on the goods what percentage of wool and what percentage of cotton or shoddy is in it? That would give the buyer a square deal, because the people cannot be good judges themselves. As far as the imported article is concerned, I think the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) is right, that it is easier to check up the importer than it is the home manufacturer, because you could very easily put a mark on the imported article. I very much hope that this resolution will receive the support of the House and become law.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): I should like to express my sympathy with the motion before the House. I have watched the woollen industry in this country for thirty years or more now, and my father before me. He made it an outstanding item in his programme that the first thing Canada wanted was a woollen industry, so that our farmers might produce wool, and in the next place that our factories might make that wool into goods that could be used for clothing.

The only objection I have heard against the proposal made here to-day is that it is one instance more of a system of double-barrelled protection being introduced into this House. The mover proposes that there shall be protection to the wool grower and at the same time protection to the consumer who uses the wool. While it may be protection, and protection in the double sense, I am convinced from my experience in the past, and I have also been impressed by what the mover has said that the wool growing industry in this country is declining. I would like to see the growing of wool become one of the staple industries of this country, and I want to see our farmers encouraged by some kind of protection if protection is being applied to other industries in this country. It may be said that our friends here to my left are inconsistent. Perhaps they are and perhaps they are not, but whether they are or not, inasmuch as the principle of protection has been recognized and applied to many industries in this country, the farmers are entitled to their share of protection.

I also agree with the mover that this question is coming up in the United States, where the farmers' demands are growing, and are being recognized more and more. The outstanding thing in recent legislation at Washington was the putting through of a bill to provide a way for the farmers getting additional credit outside of the banks. I have not any doubt that the next Congress will pass a similar bill to that being urged here to-day, and that under their broad system of protection they will include the farmers as well as the manufacturers. I hope the government that we have in this House to-day, if they are not going to carry out their free trade principles but afford more or less protection, will apply the principle of protection to the wool growers as they are applying it to some of the other industries, as was mentioned here to-day.

Again I say, I shall have much pleasure in voting for the motion and supporting it on this occasion, and later on if it comes up in this House. The agitation will go on, and especially will the farmers continue an agitation for the recognition of the wool growing industry in this country. It is more a basic industry than almost any other I know. Wheat growing may be a basic industry, as they say, but certainly wool growing is. Wool is grown in the West and in a large section of the province of Ontario, but it is a declining industry. I maintain that if there is any country competent to engage in the wool growing industry it is Canada, and if that industry is failing there must be something wrong. It may be within the compass of this parliament to apply a remedy to that grievance, and that grievance does exist. The question is now before parliament and now is the time to give some relief to the wool growers of Canada.

Mr. R. J. WOODS (Dufferin): As I understand the resolution before the House, it is not asking protection for the farmers, but we would like to see encouragement given to the wool growers. We know that the sheep industry is dropping away in this country and that many of the farmers raising sheep consider that the wool, the product of their sheep, is scarcely worth taking off. We have known cases of farmers allowing the wool clip to lie over for one season, considering it scarcely worth while to draw it to market. So if this resolution is going to do anything to encourage the use of woollen goods in this country, it is going to help the farmers to that extent. I cannot understand how it is going to affect the manufacturer of shoddy goods. In no way will he be affected, nor will it affect any man or woman who wants to buy shoddy goods, nor the manufacturer who produces a mixture of cotton and wool or of some other materials, because the people will still be able to buy that class of goods if it is manufactured, and I presume that the manufacturers will still continue to manufacture it. But if this resolution becomes law the consuming public will be protected against buying an article that is not what it is supposed by them to be. It will put the consumer in a position where he will know what he is getting. If he buys woollen goods it will be marked woollen goods, and if he buys a mixture or shoddy he will know it as such. So I think this is a very important thing, not only to the wool growers of this country but also to the consumers who buy and use the goods. For these two reasons I am in sympathy with the spirit of the resolution, and hope that legislation will be introduced bringing it into effect so that the people of this country will know exactly what they are buying, and can get just exactly what they pay for.

[Mr. W. F. Maclean.]

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): I only intend to take a minute or two. I was rather surprised at the jocular manner in which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb) treated this resolution. It also surprises me to see how joyfully hon. members point to some member in this corner of the House and say that he is advocating protection.

Mr. BUREAU: You enjoy it.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, because it is getting to be a joke. I can assure hon. gentlemen that it does not act like a red rag to a bull for us to hear the word "protection" mentioned. Perhaps there is a place for it. However, I do not see any signs of protection in this resolution. Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce wants to adequately protect the people of this country from the cold weather by seeing that they get proper underclothing. I notice that there may be a little difficulty in connection with the working out of this resolution should it become law, but I think the principle is sound upon the whole, and that the difficulty referred to might be overcome. I feel greatly encouraged to see the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) taking up the wool industry and helping out the farmers who are engaged in the very laudable calling of raising sheep. I happen to be the proprietor of a fairly large flock of sheep and I am very much interested in the price of wool, but I do not know how this proposition might act. If you could convince me I was going to get a bigger price for my wool—well we will not say any more; but let us not even mention the word "protection" in regard to the selling and the buying of wool. I remember a little incident which occurred—I am rather afraid I mentioned this last year but I am going to repeat it because it is so good it is worth repeating. I happened to be selling wool and was unable to get enough for it to pay for the cost of shearing the sheep and carrying the wool to market. At that very time I went into a store to buy a small woollen cap. The clerk asked me $3.50 for a small cap. I looked rather suspiciously at him and asked him if he was not ashamed to ask such a price for a cap of that description, and he almost whispered to me "isn't it all wool?" You know it is rather trying on a man who is trying to raise sheep and sell wool to have to buy tweed caps. However, I survived the experience, and I am happy to say that the price of wool has greatly improved during the last year.

While I have this opportunity I want to say to the farmers—I think the observation is applicable, perhaps to farmers throughout the Dominion—that there is no better class of live stock to have on the farm at the present time than a few sheep; it is the best paying proposition we have in live stock to-day. With these few remarks I wish to state that I am going to support this resolution. I recognize there is a little "catch" in it, but that can be overcome and the principle itself is sound.

Mr. J. W. KENNEDY (Glengarry and Stormont): I was rather surprised at the manner in which the Minister of Trade and Commerce received the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Drummond). I would like to draw his attention to the fact that the mover of the resolution did not make the fact of the protection it will afford the wool-grower the main reason for his argument—that was more or less incidental to the argument which he presented. His main argument was that the people of this country were entitled to know the quality of the goods which they were buying.

Mr. ROBB: I fear there has been a misunderstanding, I did not refer to it as protection to the wool grower. What I wished to make clear was that it was protection to the Canadian manufacturer, because he would have all the business.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): I fail to see the force of the minister's argument, because he would not be placing the Canadian manufacturer under a less handicap than the manufacturer abroad who is sending his goods into this country; and I cannot believe but that the manufacturer in Great Britain, as well as the manufacturer across the line, would be willing to comply with the regulations in order to get his goods into this market. The increased demand for wool would largely come about in this way. The people, realizing the value of getting first class goods, would buy more of them; there would be a greater demand and a greater consumption of the best quality of woollen goods, which would result in a greatly increased demand for wool in this country. Why, our manufacturers now import large quantities of their wool from outside. I think, possibly, the greater quantity—yes much the greater quantity—comes from outside of Canada, so that there is absolutely no protection for the wool grower; and although there might be, perhaps, some little advantage to the Canadian manufacturer, I would suggest to the minister that it would be quite easy to overcome that by reducing the customs duty on manufactured woollens. There is no trouble in getting over a little difficulty of that kind and therefore I would heartily support the resolution.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Every grower of wool is familiar with the fact that the industry has got into low water since the war. Although there has been an improvement in the price of wool, nevertheless the industry is not yet by any means in a too flourishing condition. I have been, in common with my staff, casting about to see in what direction we could move to encourage this industry but I must confess that it never occurred to me that a means of rescue could be found in this way. There is no reason in the world why the home manufacturers of woollen goods cannot comply with the conditions laid down and I think there are many reasons why they should. But I do not think that the imposition of these conditions on imported goods of this nature is practicable. I am not familiar with the importation conditions in regard to woollen goods, but I do know that in the case of certain importations with which I am conversant we are obliged by an understanding with the United States to accept their goods in the containers in which they are presented and they accept ours in return. I do not know whether these conditions apply to woollen goods or not but it would be manifestly unfair to impose conditions in the case of home manufactured goods and exempt from those conditions goods that are imported. This should be a matter for the customs and the finance departments to work out together. I think every member of the House must sympathize with the object of the resolution. We should be able to get at a solution of the difficulty somehow. But I understood from the Finance Minister that the thing would be impracticable, it could not be carried into effect, and therefore, I ask, why pass this resolution? The Finance Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the Minister of Customs know infinitely more about this matter than I do. I know something of the requirements of the sheep industry and of the condition it is in, but I am not familiar enough with this phase of the matter to speak as to the conditions to be imposed on the importation of woollen goods. If we impose these conditions on these goods of home manufacture and cannot impose them on imported goods of a like nature, look at the difficulty you are in. Let somebody who is familiar with the business try to solve this riddle and then we are more likely to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. However, there is no sense in advancing a resolution of this nature unless it can be complied with, and my understanding is that it cannot be complied with, as affects the imported article.

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Minister of Customs and Excise): I do not look upon this as a question of protection although really that is involved. The marking of goods is not, in itself, a measure of protection but practically it works out that way. So much for that. Let me say that I am thoroughly in sympathy with the desire to help the sheep industry in this country. As the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) has rightly said, it is one of our industries that should be helped if that can be done. Now what is the purport of this resolution? It is set forth therein that our markets are restricted and that if we desire to help the sheep industry we must enlarge those markets. The resolution declares:

Whereas the sheep raising industry of this Dominion is suffering severely from restricted markets and inadequate returns received by the wool growers engaged in the industry:

And whereas the present markets are further restricted by misrepresentation as to woollen products.

That is the point we have to solve. How are we going to enlarge our markets? The second part of the resolution states that:

It is highly desirable that the government should bring down legislation that will adequately protect both producer and consumer.

If I understand the resolution correctly, the markets are restricted on account of the fact that misrepresentations are made. In other words, you have to deal with unscrupulous merchants or unscrupulous men who either manufacture or retail the wool that is produced by the farmers. That is the only thing that restricts our market. The suggestion is that the men who deal with the product he raises on his farm, when it is converted into cloth or otherwise, are not honest in their representations. As the hon. leader of the Progressive party said, when they sell you a tweed cap they have to whisper in your ear, "It is all wool," because they are afraid to say it out loud. Does my hon. friend think that the marking of the goods is the remedy, and that it is an adequate remedy, instead of using the words "adequate protection" which we have heard so often in this House? That is a debatable question. Another matter which I am most interested in is the question, how will it be possible to do it in a commercial way, or in a way which will not impede trade or prevent the free exchange of merchandise of this particular class? My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton)—and when I say my hon. friend I emphasize the word "friend"—

[Mr. Bureau.]

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Not the other word too?

Mr. BUREAU: Oh, yes, he is a Sir. The word honourable sinks down to that.

In regard to the Marking Act my hon. friend wants to reproach me—and I think for once in his life he is unfair,—with putting lead pencils and printed and lithographed matter on the marking list.

An hon. MEMBER: Six o'clock.

Mr. BUREAU: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House I would move:

That the special committee to inquire into the operation of chapter 12, 8-9 George V, an act respecting the Civil Service of Canada, pursuant to the resolution adopted by the House on the 22nd February last, consist of the following members, namely: Messrs. Brown, Carmichael, Chevrier, Copp, Drummond, Hughes, Garland (Carleton), McBride, McKillop, McMurray, Malcolm, Martell, Parent, Rinfret, Simpson, with power to send for persons, papers and records, to print from day to day its proceedings and the evidence taken for the use of the committee, and to report from time to time; and that rule 74 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. SHAW: Might I ask the Prime Minister if either of the two Labour members is on that committee? I did not hear all the names.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think not.

Mr. SHAW: Well, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment it is highly desirable that one or other of the Labour members should be on the committee. Some 10,000 of the employees in the Civil Service owe, I think, direct allegiance to labour organizations, and there can be no doubt that other branches of the Civil Service are organized and have affiliation with labour unions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend will tell me which one of the two members he would like to have on the committee I shall be very pleased to add his name.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must inform the House that according to rule 11 no special committee may, without leave of the House, consist of more than fifteen members. Of course, if the House agrees to more than fifteen the rule is suspended, and the name may be added.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood the rule to be suspended by the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: No. If the House is agreeable, and if the name suggested is accepted, the motion may be amended.

Mr. SHAW: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the matter stand until to-morrow.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We might pass the motion now and add the name later.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the understanding that the name will be added to-morrow, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the motion should pass on any understanding whatever. I have no objection to the motion, but I think when a suggestion is made that a name be added, and the government is willing to agree to the addition, the name should be added at once.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion can only pass by unanimous consent, anyway.

Motion stands.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL

READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou) moved:

That the report of the special committee to whom was referred Bill No. 15, an act to readjust the representation of the House of Commons, which report was presented to this House on Tuesday, 6th March, be concurred in.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not recall any report save one, a report asking leave to report from time to time and to sit during the sittings of the House. If that is the report, I am quite willing that it be concurred in.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is the one.

Motion agreed to.

SALE AND INSPECTION OF ROOT VEGETABLES

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 52, to amend the Act to Regulate the Sale and Inspection of Root Vegetables.

He said: This amendment is not designed to change the act in any way; it is simply to add to it the following clause as section 14A:

An inspection certificate signed by an official inspector, appointed under this act, shall be prima facia evidence of the grade and condition of the root vegetables or packages to which the said certificate may refer.

In the bill that was passed last year—and it was on the whole a very good bill—this clause did not appear, that is, a provision making an inspector's certificate evidence of the grade. I have conferred with the minister and the officials who have charge of the enforcement of the act, and they agree that this provision should be made.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU: The sales tax returns are not compiled for customs records according to the different commodities, and it would be very difficult to give the information asked for. If, however, having regard to the way our books are kept, I can give the hon. gentleman information respecting any particular item, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution and has been pleased to recommend the same to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

"QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS"

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton): On many occasions this session questions appearing on the order paper have been asked to stand as orders for returns. I would like to ask the government whether the answers to these questions, when brought down, appear anywhere on the records of the House, or are they simply handed to the member asking for the return?

Mr. GRAHAM: They appear in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. CALDWELL: A great many of these questions are matters of public interest, and the replies should be available to hon. members.

Mr. SPEAKER: In cases where questions stand as orders for returns, when the information is made available a few days or sometimes a few weeks later, it is tabled, and any hon. member who is interested in the return can get a copy of it from the proper officials.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to corroborate the view apparently held by the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell). What I understood him to press was this: when questions are made to stand as orders for returns there is no record of the returns in Hansard or in the Votes and Proceedings, and the result of having it so stand is to prevent that publicity being given to the answers which is desirable in many cases. I know it is the right of the government under the rules to have a question stand as an order for return; it is a right that has been very generally exercised—I think too loosely exercised this session. It should be confined only to cases where the record is very long and there is no great importance as to publicity; it should not be done simply as a means of ridding the order paper of the question.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: It was not done under the late government, I suppose?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very rarely.

Mr. BOIVIN: The remarks of the right hon. gentleman are correct in every respect except one, and that is that every return tabled in the House is immediately registered in the Votes and Proceedings and can be there found. Then those returns are submitted to the Printing Committee, and the Printing Committee decides which returns shall be printed and which shall not be printed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is quite true that a note is made in the Votes and Proceedings when a return is tabled, but the return itself does not appear in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. BUREAU: But you get it from the clerk in charge of it.

Mr. FIELDING: I think we might have a useful thought in the matter in this way. Many of the questions that are asked this session are too long, too elaborate, and call for information which I do not think is of practical value. The right of a member to ask a question we do not dispute, but I would suggest to hon. members who put questions on the order paper that they ought to observe the rule with regard to brevity in a larger measure than they do.

Mr. GRAHAM: If I am not out of order, perhaps I may be permitted to intrude on delicate ground and say that in the case of some questions that have been asked of one of my departments, I have discovered that the member in whose name they stood had not put them on the order paper and had no information concerning them. I think members should not allow outsiders particularly, to put questions on the order paper until after full consultation with them, and until they know what those questions really mean. In the case of some of these questions, one or two of them at least, it would take quite a staff working at least a month to prepare the answer. That is easier, of course, for some outside person, than paying a legal man to get the information and work up the case.

As to questions being changed to orders for returns, questions may look innocent, but when they are taken to the departments it is found that they mean pages and pages of information, and I submit that Hansard never was intended to be the medium through which all the records of departments are published. It was intended to be the medium through which the expressions of the members should be recorded, and to give certain other information at moderate length, but not infomation that would cover pages of Hansard.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not at all take exception to the general principle the minister lays down, namely, that questions on the order paper should not be used as a means of getting private information merely for citizens. They should only be used as a means of getting information in the general public interest, and, further some regard should be had to the time and expense entailed in procuring that information. I never was so impressed in my life with the need of that as three years ago, when one hon. member moved that the government procure from Great Britain a list of all the shareholders and debenture holders in the Grand Trunk Railway Company, which return no doubt cost this country many thousands of dollars, which return came over in a large box, and which box I am informed never was opened.

Mr. GRAHAM: They are still in a box.

Mr. CALDWELL: May I inquire if any steps will be taken to have this condition remedied; that is where questions appearing on the order paper are passed as orders for returns, will the answers be incorporated in the Votes and Proceedings or in Hansard?—I do not care which so long as we get the information.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may inform the hon. gentleman that no paper is tabled in the House without reference being made to it in the Votes and Proceedings of the next day. For instance, any reports or any returns that were tabled yesterday are mentioned in to-day's Votes and Proceedings. As to the inclusion of these bulky returns in Hansard, I think it would certainly entail too large an expense and that it is really uncalled for. As the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) said quite clearly a moment ago, the remedy is in the hands of any member who has an interest in any particular return. He can go before the Printing Committee and there move for the printing of the return. I have done it quite often myself when I was on the floor of the House, and it is done, very often in relation to important matters. Surely hon, members will not ask that Hansard be overloaded with bulky returns.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Somebody will have to assume the authority for deciding which returns are to appear in Hansard and which are not. This must not be left to the Hansard staff because it would not be fair to place upon them the responsibility. Either the Speaker of the House, or the Clerk, or Clerk Assistant, or the government, will have to decide which of these returns are to appear in Hansard. These returns sometimes appear as answers to questions. Very often a minister with a lengthy answer will say, "I will not read this but will hand it to Hansard," and then Hansard prints it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: A return was laid on the Table yesterday in reference to some question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Carleton relating to a matter of general interest to the people of this country and a matter which has been discussed in the House this session. I tried to get a look at the return brought down, but I was informed that the hon. member for Carleton had it and consequently I have not been able to see it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Every member is entitled to get a copy of a return. If he will only apply to the proper clerk here in the department, as many copies can be had as are desired. We have a staff of nearly eighty typists and stenographers who are there for that purpose.

[Mr. Caldwell.]

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) stated a moment ago that three years ago an order of the House was passed for a list of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk and that it cost the country a lot of money to get this list, that the names were contained in a box, and that that box was never opened. I may say to the leader of the Opposition that he is badly informed. The box was opened, and we found out that the government had not complied with the order of the House, that the list of shareholders contained in the box was not the list as of the date asked for. It was a useless list. So the leader of the Opposition is wrong again.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The box was not opened for some time after it was returned here. I made inquiries and found out. I called the matter then to the attention of the hon. member who moved for the return. Perhaps he has opened the box since, and it is quite evident that the object he had in seeking the information was not shown to be served by the contents when he opened the box.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The box was opened ten days after it came in.

Mr. BUREAU: Another case of misinformation.

INQUIRY AS TO QUESTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. C. A. GAUVREAU (Temiscouata): Yesterday I had a question on the order paper that was called by Your Honour, and I think the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) gave an answer to it, but I see no reference at all either to the question or answer in yesterday's Hansard. It was about civil service pensions and superannuation.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): I have not read Hansard. I observe, however, that the reply appeared in the morning paper.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I would rather have the information appear in the official report as the Minister of Finance gave it in the House.

[The question and answer referred to are as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE—SUPERANNUATION

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Is it the intention of the government, during the present session, to bring down legislation with regard to the superannuation and pension of civil servants?

2. If not, is it the intention of the government to renew the Calder Act which expires on July 1, 1923, with regard to the superannuation and pension of certain old employees?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: The matter is under consideration.]

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS—HARBOURS AND RIVERS

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The vote is No. 154, to be found at page 36 of the Estimates:

Resolved that a sum not exceeding $293,100 be granted to His Majesty for harbours and rivers in Nova Scotia.

Is it the pleasure of the committee to take each item separately as it appears in the resolution?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Public Works—Annapolis Royal—wharf repairs, $1,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is apparently a new item. There should be some explanation given by the minister.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Public Works): The item is for general repairs, consisting of the renewal of fenders and bearing piles.

Item agreed to.

Mr. HANSON: The resolution calls for the expenditure of a large sum of money, $293,100 as compared with $441,420 last year. Some of the items in it must relate to new work and I think we ought to have an explanation from the minister respecting them.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was resolved that each item should be considered separately. If an explanation is called for I shall be glad to give it in each case.

Black Point—breakwater repairs, $1,150.

Mr. STEVENS: Apparently that is a new item and the minister ought to give us an explanation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for repairs to the projecting portion of the breakwater consisting of 120 feet by 241. A section of the seaward side, 20 feet long by 15 feet wide, requires to be constructed from low water up. The seaward face at the outward end needs to be resheathed and ballast placed in various ways.

Item agreed to.

Canso—wharf, $7,700.

Mr. EVANS: Why was this work not done last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A vote was granted last year for this work, but we had to acquire a site, and by the time the necessary negotiations were completed it was too late to undertake the construction. Therefore we are asking for a revote.

Mr. HANSON: What amount was paid for the site?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was $2,500.

Mr. STEVENS: Are tenders to be called for the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract was let in October, after tenders had been called for.

Item agreed to.

Cape St. Marys—breakwater repairs and renewals, $3,000.

Mr. STEVENS: This is also a new item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to renew the sheathing on the seaward face of the breakwater, and to cover the stringers on the shore end of the breakwater to a length of 200 feet.

Item agreed to.

Chapel Cove (West L'Ardoise)—breakwater extension, $7,500.

Mr. STEVENS: Is that work under way?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, it is under way.

Item agreed to.

Chimney Corner—completion of wharf, $13,400.

Mr. HANSON: Where is Chimney Corner?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In Inverness county, Nova Scotia.

Mr. HANSON: Have tenders been called for the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, tenders have been called for and the contract let.

Mr. HANSON: Who is the contractor?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): W. E. Landry, Antigonish.

Mr. HANSON: This is a large sum for a wharf in what must be, I am afraid, a very small community. I must confess that I never heard of Chimney Corner before. How many people live there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a farming, fishing and mining centre. There were upwards of 2,000 tons of coal shipped from the mines there last year. Some fifteen odd schooners are engaged in the fishing industry and they export fish to the value of $9,400 a year.

Mr. HANSON: What mining company operates in that vicinity?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Chimney Corner Coal Mining Company, I believe.

Mr. STEVENS: It must be a pretty small mining company to be shipping that quantity of coal a year. I would like to invite the attention of the Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie), who represents a Cape Breton constituency, to the fact. This company does not seem to be operating one of the large mines he was talking about the other day. This seems to be a large expenditure for a district shipping such a small quantity of coal, even if there are fifteen schooners plying in and out, it is a fairly generous expenditure for the amount of business indicated by the answer of the minister. Perhaps there is another explanation that could be given for such a large outlay.

Mr. McKENZIE: If the hon. member appeals to me for information about the matter—

Mr. STEVENS: I know it will be accurate.

Mr. McKENZIE: Yes, it will be accurate. I know the place very well and the necessity exists for this work. It is not in my own riding, it is in the fair county of Inverness which is part of Cape Breton Island. My hon. friend will easily find out, as far as coal is concerned, that the northern coast of the county of Inverness from Port Hood to Cheticamp, about fifty miles, is one solid mass of coal, as yet undeveloped, and we have no railway there—for which I am sure my hon. friend will be sorry—except for a distance of thirty-five miles from Canso down to the town of Inverness. The rest of the coast, covering about twenty-five miles, has no railway at all. The mine in question, although not large, is shipping considerable coal to Prince Edward Island, the distance from Chimney Corner to that market being comparatively short—some thirty miles. The development that is now going on at Chimney Corner is small because there is no harbour. This breakwater is to serve the purpose of a harbour. When the breakwater is extended there will be shelter for vessels coming in there, and I can assure my hon. friend that, for the protection of the fishermen and the people generally who have to do business at that place, fishing and mining, the extension of this breakwater is most important.

Mr. STEVENS: The only difficulty with the answer of the Solicitor General (Mr. McKenzie) is that the breakwater happens to be a wharf.

Mr. McKENZIE: It answers both purposes. There is nothing to laugh at, I can assure my hon. friend. I see my western friend, who is strong on wheat boards and the expenditure of money in the West laughs vociferously, at the idea of a few dollars being spent on the coast of the Atlantic to protect our fisheries. I stand up here proudly to say that there is the strongest possible necessity for these developments, and all I have to say is that not enough of this kind of work is being done.

Mr. STEVENS: I would like to ask the minister a question. I thought I was going to get an accurate answer from my hon. friend from Cape Breton. We are left in a dilemma as to whether this is a breakwater or a wharf. Which is it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It serves both purposes.

Mr. BAXTER: Will my hon. friend tell us whether it is coal or fish that require development?

Mr. DUFF: Both.

Item agreed to.

Digby—general repairs and renewals to pier, $3,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is that the large public wharf where the boats come in?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: The estimates indicate that last year there was a vote of $5,000 which was all expended. This is an additional $3,000. Is that under contract? Was there a contract, and if there was a contract were tenders called for, and what were the amounts?

Mr. KING (Kootenay). It was for day labour last year, and a further amount of $2,000 was required for renewal of floors, fenders and freight sheds, rendered necessary by the wear and tear of the wharf.

Mr. HANSON: This is a very important item.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $60,000.

Mr. STEVENS: This is one of the general votes for repairs in the different provinces, and always a very interesting vote. It shows that the vote of $60,000 last year was fully expended. This vote is used generally perhaps for unforeseen and miscellaneous expenditures, and I think the House and the committee are entitled to a very careful explanation of what was done with the $60,000 last year, and what is anticipated to be done with the $60,000 this year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is really a contingent vote—a vote that is used to meet unforeseen conditions that may arise from time to time. We spent out of the vote last year $46,121, all in small expenditures. There are a great many items, filling two or three pages. I do not know whether my hon. friend would like to go into the whole of them.

Mr. STEVENS: Give us some of them.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some of the items are:

Amherst Point	$295
Babins Cove	499
Bass river	211
Baie St. Lawrence	241
Breen's Pond	410
Burlington Centre	49 95
Cariboo Island— repairs to breakwater	124
French river	26 90
Cariboo Island	77 14
Goose Bay	197
Hall's Harbour	99 23

That is the character of the expenditures made under that vote. The items are all small, none of them exceeding more than $1,000. That is the largest expenditure I see here. Then we have Arichat, $2,095.55. That is the largest expenditure.

Item agreed to.

Haulover—repairs to channel protection walls, $4,000.

Mr. HANSON: Where is Haulover. What channel?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in the county of Queen's and Shelburne. The walls which are to be repaired are to protect a channel which connects Negro bay with Fort La Tour harbour, saving a distance of ten miles for motor boats, employed chiefly for fishing. There are over 120 in both harbours.

Item agreed to.

Joggins—breakwater repairs, $3,000.

Mr. HANSON: That is not on the Atlantic coast; it is away up at the head of the Bay of Fundy, on Cumberland basin, if my recollection serves me right. Is it necesary to have a breakwater there? Have they always had one?

Mr. DUFF: High tide.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to repair a section of the wharf 220 feet long, 20 feet wide, by filling in with ballast for its whole length to an average depth of 6 feet and replanking about one-half of its length.

Mr. HANSON: What is the traffic? Is it coal from the Joggins coal mine?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Breakwater and wharf used for the protection of the coal shipping piers at that point. Coal mining is the principal industry of the town, the output being about seven hundred to nine hundred tons a day, showing that there is a very considerable industry going on there.

Item agreed to.

Judique—Baxter's—wharf repairs, $2,700.

Mr. LEADER: I see the name "Baxter". Is that a private wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it is a public wharf.

Item agreed to.

Leitches Creek—wharf repairs, $2,200.

Mr. STEVENS: That is a new item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The top tier of logs, stringers, guard-railing and twelve fenders are now badly decayed. It is really repairs of an old structure.

Mr. HANSON: What county?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Cape Breton North.

Item agreed to.

Lockeport—wharf, $5,800.

Mr. HANSON: Is that a new wharf? It is a revote I believe.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is reconstruction work. There has been a wharf there.

Item agreed to.

Ostrea lake wharf repairs, $2,700.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not like to be too inquisitive; but surely the minister could give a brief explanation of these new items as we come to them. Over one-half of these are entirely new work calling for votes of considerable amounts—$8,000, $6,000, $5,000, and so on.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This work is for renewing piles along the face of the wharf, also new caps and stringers; repairs; planks and stringers for the new portion, and new guards all around this work, together with fenders.

Mr. HANSON: Is this work supposed to be done by day labour under the supervision of some appointee of the government, or are tenders to be called?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is often very difficult to get tenders or to let contracts for repair work, and unless the job is a large one, this class of work is often done by day labour.

Item agreed to.

Port Greville breakwater repairs, $6,000.

Mr. HANSON: This is an important job and the minister has an engineer in charge in this locality. Does the engineer not make a report on the character of the work to be performed, upon which report this appropriation is based? And does he or does he not report as to the way in which the work should be done? I know pretty well how these things are done. As a rule they are farmed out among friends of the administration, and very often value is not received for the money spent. This practice is probably growing.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to rebuild this breakwater to a length of 150 feet, a height of 5 feet and a width of 20 feet, at an estimated cost of $6,000. This breakwater protects the harbour which, without this protection, would soon not be navigable. A very considerable tonnage in lumber goes over this wharf, a total of $175,000
4 p.m. a year being the value. I am advised that this work is on our list with a recommendation from the engineer that the work be done by day labour. His recommendations come to the department calling either for contract or for day labour, whichever in his judgment is best.

Mr. HANSON: This is to be done by day labour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is his recommendation.

Item agreed to.

Yarmouth harbour—dredging, $85,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is it proposed to do this work with the government's own dredges, or to call for tenders?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A contract has been let.

Mr. HANSON: Who is the contractor?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Halifax Dredging Company.

Mr. HANSON: What is the contract price per yard?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is $1.45 per yard.

Mr. HANSON: How deep is it proposed to dredge there?—$1.45 is a very high price.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend should have regard to the nature of the material. This is not considered a high price in the department, because this is largely rock that is being removed from the channel, and it is expensive work. Twenty-two feet is the depth, to conform with the other portion of the channel.

Mr. HANSON: That is 22 feet at low water?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BAXTER: Is that rock in boulders, or in ledges?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Boulders, largely.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When was the work authorised?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was let in August of last year by order in council after tenders had been called for and received.

Mr. STEVENS: There was no vote for this last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We were doing the work under our general vote and we could probably have proceeded in that way, but it was thought better to vote a separate sum this year for the work.

Mr. STEVENS: How much money has already been spent on it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In 1922-23, a total of 16,981 yards was removed, at an expenditure of $24,622.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister expect this appropriation of $85,000, in addition to the money already spent, will complete the contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is proposed to remove 56,500 yards this year, at a cost of $81,925.

Mr. STEVENS: That scarcely answers my question. Will that complete the work, or will further contracts be required later on?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That completes the work, I think.

Mr. HANSON: Does the minister know who compose the Halifax Dredging Company?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no knowledge of that. The information may be in the department.

Mr. HANSON: The contract should show who the officials are.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Hon. Mr. Beasley is president of the company, I think.

Mr. HANSON: Were tenders called for the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, public tenders.

Mr. HANSON: How many tenders were received and what were the amounts?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Tenders were received from the Halifax Dredging Company, their price being $1.45 per yard; and from the Canadian Dredging Company, their price being $1.70 per yard.

Mr. STEVENS: Just two tenders received.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Just the two.

Item agreed to.

Prince Edward Island—harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $14,000.

Mr. HANSON: How much was spent under this item last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To January 31 we have expended $2,660.

Item agreed to.

New Brunswisk—Campbellton—Deep Water Wharf—Repairs, $1,200.

Mr. HANSON: I was under the impression that the Campbellton wharf was part and parcel of the railway. Does the Public Works department control the wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: What is the location of the wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is at the end of Ramsay street on the west bank of Bruce river.

Item agreed to.

Cumming's Cove—wharf repairs, $2,000.

Mr. GRIMMER: May I ask the minister if this wharf is in Charlotte County?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. GRIMMER: Is Leonardville wharf also in the county of Charlotte?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. GRIMMER: Last session I inquired of the minister if any representations had been made on behalf of the people of Grand Manan and the neighbouring islands urging upon the government the necessity for the construction of breakwaters in all or any of these islands. I was informed by him later that representations had been made, and he gave me the names of the places where works were to be constructed. I am disappointed now to find nothing in the estimates in connection with what I consider were representations made by the patronage committee of my county. As I stated last session, prior to the general election assurances were given the people of the islands that if the present administration were returned to power breakwaters and other necessary structures would be built to help the fishing industry in which the people there are engaged. Does the government intend to adopt any of the representations made? If so, what work will be undertaken this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are many works we would like to undertake in the county of Charlotte, but unfortunately the money available is not sufficient. It may be somewhat disappointing to my hon. friend that more items do not appear in the estimates for his county, but we can only carry on such work as in the judgment of the department is urgent. Supplementary estimates will be brought down later, but in their preparation I am not sure what consideration is being given to further expenditures in the county of Charlotte.

Mr. GRIMMER: Can the minister assure me that something will be included in the supplementary estimates to carry on a portion of the work covered by the representations to which I referred?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am very sorry I cannot meet my hon. friend's proposal. The matter will be considered carefully by the government when the supplementary estimates are being made up.

Mr. HANSON: What representations have been made to the government with respect to the island of Grand Manan? Its population are wholly dependent upon the fishing industry, and I submit that they are entitled to quite as much consideration as the people in the county of Inverness, where thousands and thousands of dollars are being spent in every little cove; also the county of Cape Breton North and Victoria seems to have swallowed up a very large portion of the vote for Nova Scotia. Here is a population producing, I am satisfied, more fish, than the whole island of Cape Breton, but not a dollar appears in the estimates for their protection.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The files of the department would disclose the representations that have been made. Those files are available to my hon. friend if he cares to look into them.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the meaning of the term, "patronage committee"?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not anything here on the patronage committee and am not able to answer my hon. friend's question.

Mr. HANSON: If the minister cannot tell my hon. friend, I can show him a patronage committee in active operation in the county of Charlotte.

Mr. DUFF: You are not getting very good results.

Mr. HANSON: Its efficiency is demonstrated by the fact that the new governor, who was defeated six times in that county, has now gone to his reward as a direct result of the patronage committee's work in his behalf. They have a real live patronage committee in that county.

Mr. HOCKEN: What seems to me to be more important is whether there is a patronage list in the department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I know of none.

An hon. MEMBER: The old one is there yet.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $40,000.

Mr. BAXTER: Would this item cover some protection work at Salmon river, the necessity for which has been represented to the minister's department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the expenditure would be too large to be included in this vote.

Mr. BAXTER: Will the hon. minister in making up his supplementary estimates give consideration to the protection work that is needed at Salmon river?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Representations have been made regarding this work, and we are obtaining a report upon it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What amount was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $11,107.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why is it necessary to have an appropriation of $40,000 when the expenditure of that amount is not contemplated?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditures last year were in the nature of repairs at Back bay, Bathurst, Bayside, Black river, Burton, Campbelton, etc.—quite a number of small expenditures. Several items are noted for expenditure this year, but only some six or eight as yet.

Mr. HANSON: I noticed that the premier of New Brunswick was here the other day and I was very credibly informed that one of his missions was to unload on the Dominion the provincial government wharves in tidal waters, especially those on the St. John river. I may say that not a cent has been spent on the repair of these wharves since before the war. They are in an extremely dilapidated condition, and if the government takes them over they will be a liability rather than an asset. I will point out further that in many cases there are duplications of provincial and Dominion wharves, especially on the St. John river, and that is something the minister ought to look into before he agrees to have this legacy unloaded upon him. I understand that negotiations are under way between the two governments, and I would like to know what their present status is and what are their prospects.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand from my hon. friend that he is opposed to the Dominion government becoming involved in the provincial wharves in New Brunswick.

Mr. HANSON: I did not say that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter has been before the government for some time. A survey of these wharves was made in 1918 or 1919 and the late government apparently did have it in mind at one time to take them over. There was a similar proposal from British Columbia, and that province was more successful; we did get a transfer of the provincial wharves to the federal government. The government has given the matter consideration but has not yet definitely made up its mind whether or not these wharves shall be taken over. The matter will be under further consideration in the course of the next few days.

Mr. HANSON: The minister must not misconstrue any remarks I made. I did not either affirm or deny the proposition. I have a very definite opinion upon the subject myself.

Mr. DUFF: What is it?

Mr. HANSON: I think the minister should take over those wharves that are not duplicates of other wharves, but where there is duplication I do not think the federal government should take them all over and maintain two where only one is necessary I think that is a sound position to take, and one that public opinion will support. The premier of New Brunswick went back to the province the other day and said that all he was waiting for was an order in council to put this matter through. Is that correct?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An order in council would bring the wharves under the supervision of the Dominion government, but money would have to be voted for repairs and renewals. I assure my hon. friend that a very careful survey of the situation will be made before action is taken; in fact, I think it has already been made by the department.

Mr. HANSON: Has that order in council been passed, or is it contemplated?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An order in council has not been passed.

Mr. BAXTER: At the time when the Hon. Mr. Carvell was Minister of Public Works, this matter was gone into exhaustively. A list of the wharves was prepared, their values were ascertained by the department, and an order in council was drafted. This will all be on the departmental files. The people of New Brunswick—it does not matter what administration was in power there—were led to believe that the wharves would be taken over by the federal government. There may be criticism on the ground that the provincial government has not in the meantime made any expenditure on the wharves, but the fact is that as a result of the abstinence in that respect of both the federal and provincial authorities, the wharves are, as the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) says, in a pitiable condition. It seems to me that the matter of these wharves is a federal matter just as much as a railway would be, and I would like to see it dealt with on a business basis. It ought to be possible for the two governments to get together. I do not want to suggest anything in the House that will help any sort of political claptrap down in New Brunswick, such as the premier stating that he is only waiting for an order in council. I want to get away from all that political bombast and give consideration to the interests of the people who need the facilities of these wharves, which constitute an important part of the highway of commerce. I would like to see something definite done, and done quickly. I do not think the minister will be subjected to any criticism from those sitting on this side representing New Brunswick if he does act, and we will not find any fault if there should be a little bit of generosity in the action.

Mr. STEVENS: Last year $60,000 was voted for Nova Scotia under the head of harbours and rivers generally, repairs and improvements, and the amount is the same this year. The figures for other provinces are as follows: Prince Edward Island, $14,000 last year and the same amount this year; New Brunswick, $65,000 last year, $40,000 this year; Quebec, $75,000 each year; Ontario, $65,000 each year; Manitoba $15,000 each year; British Columbia $95,000 last year and $75,000 this year. If it is reasonable to take $25,000 from New Brunswick and $20,000 from British Columbia this year, why would it not be possible to make a similar reduction in the votes for the other provinces, especially in view of the minister's intimation that in each case a less amount was required during the year than had actually been voted? I am not seeking to deprive any province of what is its just due or requirement, but there appears to be discrimination against New Brunswick and British Columbia in this respect. If a similar reduction is made in the other cases, very substantial saving will result. I would also point out that, deducting the revote, we have new work this year to the extent of $1,289,000, covering all the provinces—a very considerable sum indeed. So I suggest that the minister might make a saving in the other provinces similar to that in the two I have mentioned.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The vote for New Brunswick last year was larger than was considered necessary for a contingency vote. There was a question at that time of taking over these wharves in New Brunswick. That not having been done, in making up our estimates this year we deducted the sum of $25,000 from last year's vote. In regard to British Columbia, the deduction is arrived at in this way. The Dominion government took over the wharves in 1918, I think, and since that time we have been putting the former provincial wharves in a state of good repair. That having been done, it was found that this year we could get along with a smaller vote for British Columbia.

Mr. HANSON: The minister told us that only $11,000 had been spent out of this vote for New Brunswick. I think that is altogether too small for the province, because I myself know of wharves owned by this government which are quite out of repair and need attention. What is the modus operandi in arranging for these repairs? Does the engineer make regular trips of inspection? I know the engineer on the St. John river very well, and he is a very good man. Does he make inspection trips, and of his own motion make recommendations, or does he wait until somebody draws the attention of the government to some particular wharf, and then act under instruction?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The district engineer is charged with the responsibility of taking care of these works, and it is upon his recommendation that the expenditure is made.

If my hon. friend has in mind any works that are in a bad state of repair, he might very well bring them to the attention of the department, and we will have inquiry made.

Mr. HANSON: I have in mind the wharves at Gagetown and at Oromocto. I ask the question to find out if the minister would take reccommendations from me, for instance, if I called his attention to the matter, or does the engineer himself go round and see what is required?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He is supposed to make his inspection trips from time to time.

Mr. MacLAREN: As the minister has reduced this vote by $25,000 this year, that seems to me to indicate that he is very doubtful about taking over these tidal wharves. The amount was larger last year when this subject was under consideration, but now there is a reduction of $25,000. We have heard with interest that British Columbia has had her tidal wharves transferred: I think it was in the year 1919. I hope the minister will keep this matter in view, but it does not look to me as if the transfer of these wharves was seriously contemplated when we see this reduction of $25,000. I hope I am mistaken in that view.

Mr. BAXTER: Perhaps the minister would reply to the question of my colleague. I hope the government has not determined not to take these wharves over, but if that is the fact, and if this reduction in the estimate points to that, let us have the blow, however bad it may be. I trust, however, that the government has not come to that conclusion, because there are at least two subjects in the province of New Brunswick that I trust some day will be effectively dealt with. One is the taking over of these wharves, and the other I shall not discuss at present; I refer to the taking over of the St. John Valley Railway. I regard these two things as more important than any other matter of public construction in New Brunswick to be taken over. It would be relieving the province of a burden and doing a real good to the people. I am not quite so narrow in my political views that I would want to withhold credit from any administration that would grapple with these questions in a businesslike way. If these things were done, I would unhesitatingly say it was a good thing to do them, and that the administration which had done them was entitled to credit for doing them.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As I have already said, this amount is considered sufficient for any unforeseen conditions that may arise. It does not, however, take into account the transfer of these wharves. That is a matter of government policy, and must first receive the consideration of the government. After consideration has been given, if it is decided to take them over, an item could very properly be included in the Supplementaries.

Mr. BAXTER: May I ask the minister this? Is it his intention to have the matter disposed of before the Supplementaries are down? It seems to me a question of that, or else of putting a blanket vote here that would be large enough to cover the cost. I would be glad to have the minister's assurance that the matter will be settled before the Supplementaries come down.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter has been held in abeyance for three or four years now. I hope that it will receive consideration from the government shortly, but as to the outcome I am not in a position to speak at the present time.

Mr. HANSON: What is the minister's own attitude?

Mr. COOTE: Is there any generally recognized basis for the granting of money for harbours, wharves and breakwaters? The reason I ask is this: I understand that at some of the ports in New Brunswick, St. John, for instance, there is a harbour commission.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not at St. John.

Mr. COOTE: We have harbour commissions controlling a good many of the harbours in Canada, and as I understand it, they do not get any grant from this parliament; they are supposed to be self-supporting. Is it right that we should grant hundreds of thousands of dollars to certain harbours while other harbours have to be self-supporting?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have harbour commissioners in various parts of the country, more particularly at the larger ports. Some of the ports are self-sustaining, such as Montreal and Vancouver. With others, it is merely a matter of control. Some of the commissioners are paid officials, and some are not. There is no fixed principle applied throughout. Some of the harbours are self-supporting and provide moneys for improvements and repairs out of the tolls collected. Others again, are dependent on the grants received from this parliament.

Mr. COOTE: Are there any tolls collected from the vessels using these harbours for which we are making grants to-day?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not sure. There are wharfingers at some of these wharves.

I imagine. These wharves have been turned over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and they would have knowledge of the tolls collected.

Mr. HANSON: Is there any toll on coal shipped over the Joggin's wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have no information in our department regarding that. That would be in the Marine department.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What strikes me, in looking over the estimates for harbour and river improvements, is that the minister is asking for more money than he will require. The committee must bear in mind that this expenditure is spread very generally over Canada. Three of the western provinces get very little of it, I refer particularly to the item which is included for each of the provinces.

The CHAIRMAN: Harbours and rivers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under "Harbours and rivers generally" the amount for Manitoba is only $15,000, and for the two provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta only $20,000, or $10,000 each. Large amounts are granted for the other provinces. Last year the sum of $60,000 was granted under this vote for Nova Scotia, and the minister says $46,000 was spent. For Prince Edward Island last year $14,000 was granted under this item, and two thousand odd was spent. For New Brunswick $65,000 was voted last year and some $11,000 was spent; and I assume that probably the same proportion will be maintained for the other provinces. There remains in the case of each province a large amount of this money unexpended, which is all to the good and to the credit of the Dominion and the minister, but the point is this: If the minister does not require more than one-half or say one-quarter of this amount why vote it, why put it in the estimates? It will only be a few days, or a few weeks at most, before the Minister of Finance comes to parliament with his budget. He will then tell the House "The Estimates amount to so much, I must raise a certain amount of money, and I must do it by taxation." In the meantime we are voting money—without very much inquiry, I grant—voting money that according to the record of last year was not spent—not nearly all spent. Now, would not the minister think it wise, under these circumstances, to revise these figures for harbours and rivers generally? If the amount is not required there is no use passing it now. If we pass it now the plea will be, "There is the amount required and the taxes to meet it must be imposed." I should think it would be in the interest not only of the minister and his department but of the country generally if we would cut these votes for harbours and rivers in each of the provinces by one-third, or even one-half. If an emergency arose, if some storm came up suddenly and washed away a wharf, or something of that kind, during the year the government could always get money, they did it last year; they could get it under Governor General's warrant. But if we vote money, as we propose to vote it now, it has to be made up when the budget comes down and has to be made up out of taxes. I think the minister would do well to reduce this amount.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In reply to my hon. friend I cannot quite follow his reasoning when he complains that we are not building more wharves and more piers in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. If my hon. friend has travelled across western Canada he will know that the requirements in those provinces for piers and wharves are not very great.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I made no complaint of that kind. I said those provinces get very little out of this large amount of money.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is very true. Naturally they do not require a large expenditure.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understand that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As for the vote, as has been stated before, it is a contingency vote to be used for unforeseen expenditures. As I have already shown the committee the items that make up the total expenditure under this vote are very small in amount, and the suggestion that the minister, or the department should go to the Governor in Council for an order in council for five or six hundred dollars each time an expenditure on a wharf were required would not, I think, meet the approval of the committee. This is the usual vote and it is very necessary to the department to have it. The money is expended with care. As shown by the reports this year when expenditures have not been required they have not been made. I am satisfied, therefore, the committee will be well advised in leaving the estimate as it is. I can assure hon. members that there will be no extravagance in the expenditures, but the money will be there for the use of the department if it is required in the public interest.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister has entirely missed the point of what I said, or intended to say. I did not suggest that there was extravagance in the expenditure, nor did I suggest that some vote was not necessary. What I did suggest was, that in view of last year's experience too much money was asked for, I said, lop off one-third or lop off one-half. I cannot see what justification the minister has for asking these large amounts when, according to his own showing, much smaller amounts were necessary last year. I made no suggestion that he is running to the Governor in Council for orders in council to authorize small expenditures—nothing of the kind. I said there was no danger in passing an estimate for a smaller amount because, if storms should arise and cause damage or difficulty occur it was always within his power to provide for such emergencies by a Governor General's warrant. I made no suggestion that he run with an order in council every time he wanted a few hundred dollars; but in regard to the order in council question there is this to be said—that with respect to an item of $85,000 that we have just passed he did proceed, without the authority of this parliament, on the strength of an order in council notwithstanding that he and his colleagues when in opposition so roundly denounced that particular course.

Item agreed to.

Portage River—repairs to breakwaters, $600.

Mr. HANSON: Where is Portage river?

Mr. KING: (Kootenay): In Kent county.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and Rivers, Quebec. Bryant's Landing—wharf repairs and reconstruction, $2,700.

Mr. STEVENS: This is a new item, we ought to have an explanation of it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work to be done is the tearing down of the present crib-work at low water level and building a concrete wall all round, building a concrete floor on the top of the wharf, and repairing the road leading to the wharf. The estimated total expenditure is $2,700.

Mr. STEVENS: Is it to be done by day work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe so.

Item agreed to.

Cap de la Madeleine—wharf repairs, $3,325.

Mr. STEVENS: We ought to have an explanation of this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This expenditure is to renew the flooring of the wharf and approach, and to repair the concrete on the lower platform and on the west side of the approach.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Chicoutimi—wharf repairs and rebuilding shed, $29,500.

Mr. STEVENS: Explanation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is at the request of the district engineer to repair the damage done by fire September 7, 1922. It consists of rebuilding the large shed, "L" shaped, 100 feet each way by 40 feet wide, 19 feet high, replacing crib work and so forth, and moving the temporary shed constructed after the fire.

Item agreed to.

Contrecœur—reconstruction of wharf headblock, $5,500.

Mr. STEVENS: I have asked the minister two or three times if he would spare us the necessity of asking questions. There is no explanation as to what this item is for. I think we should have an explanation of the new items. Was there a tender called for the $5,500? Is it to be done by day work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It consists in removing all the decayed timber of the crib down to extreme low water level, building reinforced concrete wall 4 feet 6 inches at the base, 20 inches at the top, all around the headblock, and laying a 1-foot layer of concrete on the ice-breaker, and a 6-inch concrete flooring on the whole surface of the wharf. The total cost will be $5,000. It will probably be done by day work.

Mr. STEVENS: I understand the general policy of the government is that all work over $5,000 must, under the statute, be done by contract, but that does not necessarily mean that all work under $5,000 shall not be done by contract. Most of the items amounting to $3,000 or $3,500 could be done by contract to the advantage of the government.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I explained to the committee a little while ago that in the case of these repairs it is often difficult to let a contract. The work could be done more satisfactorily under a good foreman by day labour. If it is a renewal of work running over $5,000, the department in all cases, I think, try to have it done by contract, but in the case of repairs it is found they can be carried on better by day labour.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister pleads violation of the statute in such a simple form as that? The statute is there. To be told: why it is better to do it the other way, is only to be told that it is better to violate the statute. Why is it better? What is the difficulty in getting tenders for repair work on a wharf when the repair work runs to that sum? I do not see any difference between the difficulty of the tender system as applied to repairs and as applied to renewals. To merely say that it is better is not any explanation to a fairly intelligent man.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the leader of the Opposition is familiar with the construction of a wharf.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not very.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If he were, he would understand that when you undertake to tear down and remove, or to repair, a wharf, you never know what you are going to find. You may think it is only a small job, and when you get into the interior of the wharf you find the decay has gone further than you expected, and that is the reason why it is better to do the repairs under a competent foreman by day labour. It is hard to estimate what the work will cost until you start to take down the structure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Do you intend to recommend an amendment to the statute, or just to violate it and let it go?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am advised we have a right to do it under the statute.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are certain conditions that have to be lived up to. Does the minister intend to try to live up to them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We will try to live up to them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister know what the conditions are?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If it is shown the work can be done more efficiently and more economically by the department, we have, I understand, the right to carry it on in that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is subject to certain conditions. I am asking what those conditions are.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think those are the conditions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no. Does the minister want to tell us that when we have a statute saying that in all cases where the expenditure is over $5,000 the work shall be done by tender, it is all right for the minister to do it in some other way if he thinks fit? If that is the statute, I think he should introduce an amendment. But that is not the statute. There are some conditions. The minister should know them. I do not know them as I was never in that department, but I remember a discussion and a statement to the effect that there is some provision whereby the reasons must be set out and must in some way be made known to parliament. I am asking that those conditions should be lived up to.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that is the condition. I think I have shown, in regard to this repair work, that it is very difficult to estimate and to know the cost and to let contracts, and in the discretion of the minister we have the right to carry on this expenditure by day labour, if we think it can be done more efficiently and more economically than by tender and contract.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister give the committee again what is intended by this vote. If he will do so, it will show, I think, very distinctly that his argument does not apply at all. It will show, if I recall it, the construction of a concrete wall and certain other specific works, and the item as it stands is not a repair; it is the reconstruction of a wharf headblock, an absolute work in itself, and certainly should be done by tender and contract. Will the minister be good enough to give the committee, in the light of his rather involved explanation of the statute, the explanation of this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The engineer advised the department that in his opinion this work could be done more economically by day labour. We have not made up our minds in regard to asking for an estimate for the work. I am not in a position to say that tenders will be asked for, but the recommendation of the district engineer is that this work can be done more efficiently and economically by day labour than by contract.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We should know the reason the engineer gave. On the face of it this is reconstruction and not repair. This is the reconstruction of a wharf, taking the old one down and putting up another. The reason the minister gives in the case of repairs would not apply at all. Just to be told that the engineer says so is not helping the committee. We might as well go home and allow the engineer to run the department with out the review of parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: Could the minister give us the engineer's report. He will have it under his hand.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think I have that recommendation here, but I am told that that is his recommendation.

Mr. STEVENS: Could the minister give us the engineer's recommendation—his reason?

Give us his whole report, so that we can understand it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not any reasons, as far as that is concerned. The engineer reported to me that that was one of the works he suggested could be done more economically by day work than by tender.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the item should stand till we find out what policy the department has followed. Surely the department reviews the reasons of the engineer, and surely this committee should review these reasons in a case where the committee feels that, on the face of it, there appears no reason in the world for departing from the statutory system. All we have been told, after a long series of inquiries, is that the engineer says we had better not follow the statute and had better do the work by day labour. Each question brings the same answer—"This is one of the cases where the engineer says so." What is the committee for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I might ask: What is the engineer for?

Mr. MEIGHEN: He is there to give his reasons to the minister, and the minister is here to give them to the committee.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The duty of the engineer is to advise the department as to these expenditures, and it is supposed that he is qualified. If not, he should be. On a matter of this kind the department and the minister would naturally accept his advice, unless it was found at times that the engineer was in error or was not carrying on the work properly. As regards the suggestion that the department had adopted a new policy, that is not true. This House has been voting similar supply for many years, and the same manner of departmental treatment has been going on. I do not think we are outside of the statute; I am advised that we are not and that, under the statute, we have power to make expenditures of that character. There is no objection, so far as I can see, to calling for tenders on these items, if the committee should so wish.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister will assure us of that, that will be satisfactory. The minister asks: "What is the engineer for?" The engineer is there to give his recommendations and his reasons therefor. It is the duty of the minister and his deputy to review them and the duty of the minister to give them in the House when they are asked for. If we are here only to hear that the engineer advises this or that, we are superfluous. We cannot deal with every case; but surely this is a case which calls for some explanation, and the minister can give the reasons set forth by the engineer. The recommendation of the engineer in this case might be all right, but we have a right to know what is back of the engineer's recommendation.

Mr. McBRIDE: I have had a good deal to do in connection with building and repairing wharves, and if I did not think the engineer or the man who was put in charge of that work was capable of carrying it out, I do not know that I would have him there at all. If a man gets an architect to draw plans for a house, is the architect not capable of drawing the plans and seeing that the work is properly done? He should be. If he is not, he is not fit to draw the plans. Last spring, we got some repairs done to the Salmon Arm wharf, and as this is in my constituency, I was there a number of times while the work was being done. If tenders had been called for that work, the man who was carrying it on would have put in a bill for accidents; whereas, as the matter was, the engineer put a foreman in charge of the work; the foreman employed his men, and the work was carried out absolutely satisfactorily.

5 p.m.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: This work is very important. I have in my hand the engineer's report, which states that, "this wharf is in a dilapidated condition and must be rebuilt from low water level." This wharf is quite important, because it is the only place around that district where the boat calls for merchandise. The steamer Terrebonne calls at Contrecoeur about six times a week. There is a very heavy traffic from Contrecoeur to Montreal. There are, in the district, two shoe factories doing business to a value of about $350,000 a year, and the raw material received for that manufacture and the finished goods sent out comprise the trade of practically the whole district. There are quite a number of general stores, and the farmers, who also send their products to Montreal, use that wharf. The wharf is in a very dilapidated condition, and, as I can assure my right hon. friend, requires repair.

Mr. STEVENS: We are not questioning the need for repairs. What we are asking for is information. Would the minister now borrow from his colleague the report of the engineer and be good enough to give to the committee the engineer's report which, the minister says, he has not under his hand? I am sure his colleague, two or three desks away, would be glad to lend it to him.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have the engineer's recommendation as to how the work should be carried on. I have not his report as to how it is being carried on. The engineer recommends that in certain instances the work can be done better by contract and, in others, that it can be done better by day labour. That does not necessarily mean that the work will be done by day labour. That question would be left still, I would think, in the judgment of the chief engineer, who would review those recommendations. For the committee to say that an expenditure of this amount should be by contract and not by day labour would be going a long way, and it might mean that the expenditures of the department would be increased rather than decreased, because it is well known that certain of these works, especially these repair jobs, can be carried on more effectively by day labour than by contract.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister bring down the report of the engineer this evening?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think I have given the report that is in the office now. It is just a list indicating his opinion that this work can be done better by day labour or that work can be done better by contract.

Mr. STEVENS: There is surely no objection to the committee seeing that report.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no objection.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What does my hon. friend wish to know?

Mr. STEVENS: We want to know what is in the report.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The engineer states:

> The following works can be undertaken to better advantage and more economically by day labour than by contract.

And he gives a list in which, I think, is this one, Contrecoeur.

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot understand why there is any objection to giving us the report.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have just given the committee the report.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister read the report to the committee and the reasons of the engineer, and this will probably save a discussion on other items of a similar character.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The committee has been given a number of them, but I have no objection to reading the report. The report states:

> With reference to your memorandum of the 3rd instant concerning the amounts in the Main Estimates, and with particular reference to the amounts provided for the province of Quebec, I beg to report as follows:
> 1. Work now under contract.
> 2. Works for which tenders have been received but contracts not yet awarded.
> 3. Works advertised, or yet to be advertised, and for which plans and specifications are ready.
> 4. Works which should be done by contract.

He gives a list of those which should be done by contract. Then he states:

> The following works can be undertaken to better advantage and more economically by day labour.

And he gives a long list of those.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does this one appear in that list?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The recommendation does not comply with the statutes at all. The Public Works Act, section 36, has three subsections. The first part of the section provides that all contracts shall be let by tender. Then there are certain exceptions:

> (a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest.

It is hardlly suggested that this is one of those cases. I presume the minister claims to come in under (b):

> (b) in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

Does he mean to say that he is going to do this by the officers and servants of the department?

Mr. CARROLL: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member suggest that that permits day labour and the hiring of men to get the work done?

Mr. CARROLL: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think a reading of the next subsection will make it clear that the section does not so permit. Subsection (c):

> —where the estimated cost of the work is less than five thousand dollars and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

There the minister is enabled to get the work done by day labour. But if the cost is over five thousand dollars he can only do the work by the officers and servants of the department That is certainly the intention of section 36. This work runs over five thousand dollars, and if the minister is not in a position to do it by the officers and servants of the department he must do it by tender. Undoubtedly this means the regular officers and servants. If you say it means every one you want to employ for this special work, then under that interpretation the whole section is gone. It means work in Ottawa where they have officers and servants already in the service of the department; then they can do it even if it is over five thousand dollars. If it is under five thousand dollars he has wider discretion, but when over that amount he is not allowed to go out and simply hire anybody he wants to get that work performed.

Mr. CARROLL: Exception number two does not mean that the officials of this department can go down to the province of Quebec or of Nova Scotia or anywhere else and hire men themselves. They get the work done under foremen. For instance, they have a public works office in the city of Halifax, and I presume they have one or two in each province, and the work is done directly under the supervision of the department's engineers who visit various places where public works are in course of construction. In Nova Scotia there are probably ten engineers whose duty it is to supervise every bit of construction which is let without tender and contract, and in that way I think the minister may come in under subsection 2 of clause 2 of the exceptions, when the work will be done under the supervision of the department's officers.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member's interpretation simply repeals the section.

Mr CARROLL: Oh, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I should like to know what is left of the section if the minister can simply say to an engineer, "Hire all the men you like and go to work and do that by day labour." If he can still do that, there is no section left. That is not the meaning of the section at all. The section permits the minister, when the work is under five thousand dollars, to do the work by the officers and servants of the department provided the minister takes the responsibility because owing to the nature of the work he thinks it advisable to do it in that way; but if the cost of the work is over five thousand dollars it must be done by tender, unless it can be done, not under, but by, the "officers and servants of the department." The meaning must be the regular officers and servants of the department, not those employed for the special purpose of doing the work. If they are so employed, and that interpretation is accepted, the section is nothing more or less than a farce.

Mr. CARROLL: Surely the right hon. gentleman does not take the ground that subsection 2 only provides for such work being done actually by the officers and servants of the department?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Or by tender.

Mr. CARROLL: How would he get the work done?

Mr MEIGHEN: By tender and contract.

Mr. CARROLL: Who would be the tenderer if the work is to be done by the servants of the department? Are the servants of the department allowed to tender for the construction of public works?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. member will read the section he will not so argue. Certainly, if by tender, the tenderer can hire anyone; but the minister cannot, and his officers cannot. If the work is over five thousand dollars, then the only way he can avoid doing it by tender is by having the work done by the officers and servants of his department under the conditions named in subsection (b). Once the tender system is adopted, the tenderer will employ whom he likes; that is a different thing altogether. But the option of the minister to employ whom he likes to get the work done is confined to works under five thousand dollars.

Mr. CARROLL: If the minister appoints one of his engineers in the province of Quebec, say, to do this work, the right hon. gentlemen then will agree, I suppose, that the minister comes within the exception of section 2 of the act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, he cannot come within section 2 and have it done by an engineer who goes out and employs extra help. Subsection (b) covers a case where the work can be done by the ordinary officers and servants of the department. Subsection (c) allows him to go further, but only in cases under five thousand dollars.

Mr. MARTELL: Will the right hon. gentleman give an example of some work which could be constructed under subsection (b)?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. The Privy Council chamber, for example, a few years ago was repaired by the officers and servants of the department under subsection (b). It was not a case of telling an engineer to go out and hire people to do the work; it was done by workmen in the regular employment of the department. The greenhouse is another example. If the act is to be interpreted in the way the hon. member contends for, then the whole section is utterly valueless.

Mr. MARTELL: Cannot the right hon. gentleman point to instances in the department when sums over five thousand dollars were spent without tender and contract under the administration of the right hon. leader of the Opposition?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Privy Council chamber which my right hon. friend referred to was repaired under the supervision of the architect of the department, who prepared the plans and brought the workmen from Toronto.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He had no right to do so under that section.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister send across the floor the engineer's report that we may have a look at it?

Item stands.

Cross Point—wharf repairs, $3,030.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What are the particulars?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The vote is to renew planking of landing slip at outer end of wharf in 4-inch planks; to renew 300 L.F. of cap pieces; to remove ballast from wharf which is lying at foot of slip; to reinforce easterly side of westerly outer wing with pile sheathing and replace ballast which has been swept out through break in sheathing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this by tender?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): None of these matters have been settled as yet.

Item agreed to.

Descente des Femmes—wharf repairs, $2,700.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister give us particulars of these repairs?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to renew six mooring posts, 8,000 feet B.M. of cross ties, 4,000 feet longitudinals, 12,000 feet of stringers, 10,000 feet 3-inch flooring and 2,000 feet of coping.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The name of the place is not very significant geographically. Where is Descente des Femmes?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in Chicoutimi-Saguenay county.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the recommendation as to tender system here?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My right hon. friend has the recommendation across the way now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the deputy will remember.

Item agreed to.

East Templeton, Wharf repairs, $1,420.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before we go any further I may point out that the name of the engineer does not appear in this report. Who is he? It is unsigned but is marked "For Chief Engineer."

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Cameron.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who is the official who actually takes the responsibility?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He will take the responsibility.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I observe that he has a decided leaning against the tender system. Some of these amounts run as high as $29,500, $23,500, $20,000, and so on—all to be done by a foreman, I suppose, who employs whom he likes, when he likes and how he likes. There are only four as against about sixty that he recommends to be done by contract.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would be his opinion that the work can be done more economically that way. These are repairs to structures that are in decay.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister intend to recommend the repeal of the statute bearing upon this subject? It might as well not exist, under the interpretation the minister is giving to it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There has been no change of policy; the statute is being lived up to as heretofore. The same recommendations were made this year as were made last year and the year before.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not a matter of recommendations. It is all very well to make these general statements, but there appears to be a distinct loosening of the tender system going on. The minister says no; but it is pretty well loosened, that is certain—it is pretty nearly abolished. Here we have all but four cases recommended to be done by day labour. Now, the minister says we do not know, but this is the time the committee must know, or not at all; what is the good of our being told next year that it was done this way or that way? It is too late then; we ought to know when we are voting the money how it is intended to do the work. It is a principle that is at stake; if the department is simply getting rid of the statutory provision, either by slow degrees or fast—and I am inclined to think it is the latter—we ought to know it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have a list submitted by the chief engineer suggesting that these works be done a certain way, and that list is available to the committee. I will not say the course suggested will be followed; when the matter is finally dealt with it may be considered that many of these works would be better carried out by tender. These are simply the recommendations of the engineer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In order that the minister may be on his guard I would like to point out that, whether intentionally or not I do not know, the recommendation of the engineer does not comply with the statute. The object of the law, which has been on our statute book for a long time, is as far as possible to enforce the system of tender and contract, the method of public competition, in connection with these works. A clause was inserted providing that in the case of all works in connection with which the cost exceeded $5,000, the system of tender and contract should be followed.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): With certain exceptions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Except in the case of the exceptions noted, and the engineer in this case is evidently trying to come within the language of the second of these exceptions. He has reported to the minister, on an unsigned report made by Mr. Cameron, I understand, that the work can be more advantageously done by day labour. Well, that is not what the statute asks him to certify. The statute says that the work shall be done by contract except in cases, in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department. There is nothing in it about day labour.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is all right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister says it is all right, but I may tell him that when the statute prescribes a certain line of action which must be followed unless certain things happen, those things which happen must come within the language of the statute. The engineer must certify that the work can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department, and I point out to the minister that his engineer has not so certified.

Mr. FORKE: I am not acquainted with the circumstances, but anyone who has had experience in connection with the making of repairs knows that it is pretty difficult to have a contract on repair work. I have no doubt that for many years past this thing has been done exactly the same way—at any rate, I am making a guess; and I would say that if the procedure is contrary to the statute, then some change should be made in the statute. I honestly believe it is impossible in a great many cases—I do not care what line of business it is—to have a contract on repair work.

Mr. STEVENS: I think it would be well for hon. members to know just what that recommendation is, and if the minister will let me have it again I will read it to the committee. In that list we have practically the whole of this vote, about forty items, including several amounts running up to $20,000, $25,000, $29,000. Surely if we are going to open up the way for the carrying out of public works by day labour without tender, without contract and without regard to the statute, it is time we knew it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If my hon. friend would like the report read, I will read it for him.

Mr. STEVENS: There is a long list which I think it would be well for the committee to have before it. I refer to the works that it is proposed to carry out by day labour.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Batiscan, wharf improvements, $925. That is repair job, and improvements. Beloeil Village, wharf repairs, $700; Bryant's Landing, wharf repairs and construction, $2,700; Cap Chat, wharf repairs, $1,100; Carleton, wharf repairs, $1,950; Cap de la Madeleine, wharf repairs, $3,325; Cap St. Ignace, wharf repairs, $2,500; Caughnawaga, shelter and wharf repairs, $875; Chicoutimi, wharf repairs and rebuilding shed, $29,500. That vote we passed a little while ago. Fire had destroyed a portion of the wharf and the shed, and this is for reconstruction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the minister tell the committee why that could not be done by tender?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would be of the opinion that the shed should be built by tender. But there are wharf repairs, too.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were repairs necessary after a fire.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Possibly some repairs necessary as a result of fire, others resulting from decay. The engineer sets out here that in his judgment this work can be better done by day labour.

Mr. STEVENS: And that is authority for the minister's so doing!

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Cross Point, wharf repairs, $3,030; Desjardins, wharf repairs, $765;

East Templeton, wharf repairs, $1,420; Fabre, wharf repairs, $600; Father Point, wharf improvements, $5,500; Fassett, wharf repairs, $2,000; Fort William, wharf repairs, $950; Fox river, wharf repairs, $1,900; Grindstone, wharf repairs, shed repairs and breastwork extension, $2,050; Grand Mechins, wharf repairs, $1,350; Grosse Isle, wharf, repairs, $1,250; Iberville, wharf repairs, $850; Lanoraie, wharf reconstruction, $5,500; Lavaltrie, reconstruction of wharf and approach, $2,300; L'Islet, wharf repairs, $23,500.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister consider it reasonable to do that by day work simply because the engineer recommends it in his report? The amount is $23,500.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would be a matter for the departmental heads to consider in consultation with the chief.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When will the committee be advised what the department is going to do?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the ordinary course that would be next session.

Mr. MEIGHEN: After it is done. It would be valuable then.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend would like to have it appear that we have changed the policy of the department in this matter. That is not true. There is no change of policy.

Mr. STEVENS: You have just enlarged it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is the policy that has been followed, and it would seem to be a reasonable policy. Surely these men that we employ must have some knowledge and should be able to advise us whether it is better to do this work by day labour or by contract. Does my hon. friend require me to continue with this list?

Mr. STEVENS: Take those above $5,000. We do not object to those under $5,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Pointe-a-Elie, wharf repairs, $5,850; Riviere Ouelle, wharf repairs, $5,600; Ste. Anne de Chicoutimi, repairs to wharf, $8,500. I think that is all.

Mr. STEVENS: There is $20,000 for wharf reconstruction at Rimouski. Does the minister consider it reasonable to do that by day work?

Mr. KING: It would depend on the information we have.

Mr. JACOBS: I am not advocating the violation of the law which declares that where the work will exceed $5,000 tenders should be called for, but if we are doing this we are simply following the lines of the opposition when they were in the government, when Mr. Ballantyne was permitted to build his government merchant marine or a large number of those vessels, running into millions of dollars, without any tenders at all being called for.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member knows better than that. They were not under the Public Works Act to begin with. They were built in strict conformity with the item which parliament passed authorizing them to be built, and furthermore, were built in the only way they could be built. Anybody knows you could not possibly submit to tender the building of vessels like that, owing to the difference in the facilities of the various docks in this country, and besides, in no country in the world are vessels of that character or vessels of any character built by tender, neither in the United States nor in Great Britain; and that by means of the method adopted there and the conditions that were imposed the vessels were built on an equality as to price with even those built in Great Britain, built in Scotland on the Clyde, and built at $20 per ton less than vessels of inferior quality were built for at the same time in the United States. The point is this: They could not have been built in any other way. The conditions did not permit it; the act did not call for it. The authority of parliament was strictly complied with in every regard. But in this case we claim that the authority of parliament is not complied with.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: How much money was saved to the country by building those ships under that system?

Mr. MEIGHEN: About $20 per ton on sixty-three vessels; the hon. member can compute it for himself. It would amount to many millions, and what is more, they were well built. We are not in the position of the United States to-day of having them up for repair on account of poor construction. The reports show that every one of them was well constructed, and at an average of $20 per ton less than theirs which were poorly constructed. There has not been a better piece of work done by this country in so far as cheapness of construction is concerned.

Mr. JACOBS: They all went to pieces on the first opportunity.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not one of them has gone to pieces. I defy the hon. member and his ministers to produce a report to this House of the faulty construction of one of these vessels.

Mr. JACOBS: Practically half a dozen of them are now at the bottom of the sea, due, it is claimed, to faulty construction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are lots of good vessels at the bottom of the sea—the Lusitania, and others as well. That is not the fault of the vessel. The vessels were well constructed, as everybody in this country knows, and what is more, the time will come when hon. gentlemen opposite who derided and decried them will be standing up in this House and claiming to be the fathers of the Canadian Government Mercantile Marine. We have had experiences like that before.

On this item, when the minister makes his very general statement, I think it would be well for him to bring instances in support of it. Of course, I know that items under $5,000 were done this way under previous governments, and that items over $5,000 were done this way, but there was never brought to my attention a case over $5,000 where it was not brought strictly within the meaning of subsection (b). If there was, I would like the minister to bring it forward, and not take refuge behind a very general assertion. As long as he does that, I take no exception at all. It is not, of course, an argument to say when you are violating the law, that it has been violated before. If the minister thinks that, he should have the law amended. We do not object to ordinary repairs being done that way. Ordinary repairs come under $5,000 almost always.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not necessarily.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Pretty nearly always. There may be cases where they go over, I admit that; but there is no great difficulty in getting that work done by tender and contract. When you get away from tender and contract the door is open to abuses of all kinds, and that is why the act was passed, and it is the duty of this House and of the opposition to see that the act is complied with or to get complete reasons from the minister why any exceptions are made and to see that they come within the exceptions as provided in the statute. That is the duty of parliament. That is all we are trying to do. We are not trying to harass the minister, but if we are going to say any time the minister tells us "The engineer told us to do it this way, that is enough for the committee," all well and good. But it is not enough for the committee. We want to know, and it is our duty to know, whether these cases come within the three exceptions the act provides for, and that is all we are trying to do.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. HATFIED: I think I can supply the leader of the Opposition with a case where there was an item in the estimates of $10,000 for the extension of a breakwater, all new work that was done by day labour under the old administration, and wisely and properly so, I think. That was at Bluff Head breakwater in the county of Yarmouth.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In what year?

Mr. HATFIELD: I think it was in 1919-1920.

Item agreed to.

Grand River—Wharf extension, $29,000.

Mr. STEVENS: We ought to have a statement from the minister in regard to this work.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This revote of $29,000 is required to continue the construction of a cribwork extension along the front, a distance of 65 ft. by a width of 24 ft. and a heighth of 26½ ft., and down the south side for a distance of 99 ft. by a width of 20 ft., the extension, when completed, to have a landing face along the front of 65 ft. and along the south side of 123 ft., the portion of construction under water to be built with creosoted timber; and to raise the height of the present wharf by an average of 6 ft. on a length of 261 ft.

Mr. STEVENS: Is the work being done by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will be under contract.

Mr. STEVENS: An item of $3,000 has been already spent. This is a revote. Has the contract been let? If so when, to whom, and at what figure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, the contract has not been let as yet.

Mr. STEVENS: How much work has been done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There has been an expenditure of $2,814. I have not the details of that expenditure; I will advise my hon. friend later if he wishes to get that information.

Mr. STEVENS: It is rather a peculiar circumstance. Here is work to be done by contract and approximately $3,000 has been already spent. The work has been commenced, and is under way, but there is no contract. My hon. friend was trying to make a case a moment ago in support of the rather extraordinary stand he took respecting entering into contracts and the difficulty of making them, but certainly he is raising an almost insuperable obstacle by starting to work spending a portion of the money by day labour, and then saying that at some time when the work is in progress he will ask for tenders and award a contract. That is a most extraordinary course to pursue. It is a large item. The sum of $32,000 was voted last year and $29,000 is a revote. This is certainly work which should be done by contract after calling for tenders.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have my notes on this matter now and I see that a small expenditure was made last year with a view to holding the structure together and permitting it to be carried over for another year.

Mr. STEVENS: Will tenders be called for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is on the list of works for which tenders will be called.

Item agreed to.

Grondines—Wharf, $50,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister give us an explanation of this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required to carry to completion the contract awarded the Doran Construction Co., Ltd. of Ottawa for the construction of a wharf 300 ft. long by 22 ft. wide, consisting of two concrete walls filled with rock, tied together with 1½ inch tie rods and surfaced with bituminous macadam, the whole resting on a solid rock foundation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will this amount complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No it will not complete it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How much more will be needed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will take about $130,000 to complete the structure.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When was the work started?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract was let October 7.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If I understand the matter aright the House last year appropriated $12,000 for this work. Now, apparently, a contract has been let running into how much money?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract has been let for the work that was undertaken last year. There will be a further contract for the amount this year. The contract was let by tender, and there were some nine tenders, the lowest tender being $15,586.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The whole work when completed will run into what amount of money?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About $130,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was the House informed last session that any such work was in contemplation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I imagine so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My recollection is otherwise.

Mr. STEVENS: Have tenders been called for the second contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: One hundred and thirty thousand dollars is a very large item, especially on a vote of $12,000 for the commencement. I think the minister should give us some explanation as to the grounds upon which this immense expenditure appealed to the department as a necessary expenditure, what the country is going to get for all this outlay, how much is to be spent each year, and when the work is to be completed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This matter has been under the consideration of the department, I think, for some time. The district engineer reports on the subject as follows:

> There is no deep water wharf between Batiscan and Quebec; all the wharves in this section are tidal wharves. Therefore it is absolutely important, if not imperative, to have a deep water wharf at this place, for the accommodation of the public, and to facilitate the importation of this important district.
> At the present the steamer Etoile, plying between Montreal and Quebec, and the steamer St. Croix, plying between Quebec and St. Jean Deschaillons, land at Grondines when the water is sufficiently high, but do not stop when the water is too low. By this fact, the exporters are never sure whether the boat will stop or not, and very often, this is a cause of serious losses for them when their shipments consist in perishable merchandise such as cheese, butter, meat, etc.
> The parishes interested in the general traffic of the proposed wharf are, St. Ubald, St. Marc, St. Alban, St. Thuribe, St. Casimir and Grondines, representing a total population of about 8,500 inhabitants. The welfare of the trade and commerce, and the general production to the above mentioned places depend on the shipping facilities and accommodation by water.
> The exports consist of farm and dairy products, meat, vegetables and general merchandise, etc., which may average when a deep water wharf is built, from 3,500 to 4,000 tons per season.
> The imports consist of the necessities of life for the above-mentioned population, and average 20 tons per week, but will increase considerably when the deep water wharf is built.
> The proposed deep water wharf is a public necessity, and if not built, it would be most detrimental to the general production of this community.

That is the report we have from our district engineer on the advisability and the necessity for this wharf.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Last year parliament was asked to appropriate for this wharf $12,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This year parliament is asked to appropriate $50,000, and of that $12,000 is a revote, so that up to the present time, if I understand it aright, nothing has been spent on the vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A contract has been let for $15,000 odd.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When the vote was before parliament last session, did the minister give any information at all to the House or the committee as to the extent of the work on which he was starting, or which he had in contemplation, when the vote of $12,000 was passed? The minister will understand that an item of $12,000 might go through with very little discussion or consideration on the mere statement, but when we know that the contemplated work will run to $130,000 or $150,000, a much more serious condition arises. Did the minister, when the $12,000 was voted last year, inform the committee or the House of the expenditure which he had in contemplation? My recollection is that no information was given.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If my information is correct, this matter was in the supplementary estimates last year, and I do not know that we were asked for an explanation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister surely would not need to be asked to let the House know the significance of a vote when the consequence was so vital as that. The House naturally assumes that what is asked for is all that is wanted, unless the House is informed differently.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But the point is this: Does the hon. minister think it proper practice, or is it treating the House or committee with proper respect, to allow an item to appear without giving us information? A very small sum might be placed in the estimates, say $1,000, for what might appear a very ordinary work. The results would be that it would not be very much questioned. No question at all might be asked, but the government or the minister might have in contemplation a work involving millions of dollars. In the interval, contracts could be let in respect to the money voted, not confined to the item voted. Last year we voted $12,000 for this item, but in the interval the minister has let a contract for $15,000, exceeding the amount voted, which I complain of, and which I think the House has a right to complain of. We were evidently entering into a work of some significance, involving a very large expenditure of public money, at a time when we were all assured in this House and in the newspapers that this economic government was not launching on any large or any new expenditures for public works. This is the way in which this matter was launched by an innocent, insignificant $12,000 with no information, and consequently little discussion and no inquiry. I protest, Mr. Chairman, that that is not treating the House or the committee with proper respect. I appeal to the minister to know whether in his own opinion we should not have had the fullest information, if he had at that time in contemplation a work of this magnitude.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I might say I had the information last year, just as I have now, when the vote was before the House. I do not think any explanation was asked for or offered. There was no desire to mislead the House. The work is important and necessary for the district which is a large farming district. It is required in the public interest. It is true we are not voting the total sum. We would like to do that if we could, but we vote this year an additional sum, and hope to come to parliament next year for a sum to complete it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister says he has no intention of deceiving the House, but the House is inevitably misled through the omission of the minister. When a $12,000 item appears in the estimates, the presumption is that that is what is required for the work. Now, we are told it is going to cost from $130,000 to $150,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the amount?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I said $130,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is one of the figures I mentioned. I fancy $150,000 will likely be next year's figures, but taking $130,000, that is ten times the amount, that was voted last year. Why should we have to ask for something that the minister obviously should tell the House? If he does not tell the House, the House is misled. The House had no reason in the world to assume that that was the commencement of an undertaking that would cost $130,000.

Mr. DUFF: It might be quite possible that the minister did not give to the House last year all the information in regard to this work, but I do not think it lies in the mouth of the leader of the Opposition to criticize either the minister or the government for doing it that way. I remember distinctly the matter referred to a moment ago, the vote for the construction of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. The first vote was $25,000,000, although the government wasted $80,000,000 in the construction work, but when the first money was asked for very little information was given to the House. We were not told that 63 ships were to be built, and we were only asked for $25,000,000. The next year Mr. Ballantyne was minister and instead of asking for $80,000,000, he only asked for $30,000,000. The following year he asked for another vote, if I remember correctly, of $20,000,000, and the following year a vote of $8,000,000, which was put through by closure, when the right hon. gentleman was the leader of the government.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not know just why hon. members opposite will inject into the discussion to-day a debate which occupied the attention of this House time and again, and which I think, all fair-minded people will agree was settled without any discredit whatever to the then government. As a matter of fact, this discussion took place in the House on two or three occasions. My hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), the hon. Speaker of the House (Mr. Lemieux) then, a very prominent member of the opposition, my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Duff), I think, and two or three other very prominent members on the other side of the House, commended the government. The former leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Crerar) was a member of the government when the contract was entered into. The war was proceeding at the time. The only possible reflection, or excuse for a reflection, upon that contract was that the war collapsed, and because the war collapsed sooner than people expected the ships were not then as much needed as when the government undertook their construction.

Mr. JACOBS: Is it not a fact that the contracts for those ships were let after the war?

Mr. STEVENS: Every one of those contracts was let before the conclusion of the war.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member is absolutely wrong.

Mr. STEVENS: It is true the construction of all the boats was not commenced until after the conclusion of the war; of that there is no doubt, but that has nothing to do with the question before the House at the present time. If we are going to have a debate on that whole question, let us have the debate with all the facts before us. Let us discuss the important question if it is necessary to do so, but to raise a remnant, in a distorted fashion, of a debate held two or three or four sessions ago, in order to protect the minister on the item we are discussing to-day, and discussing, I think, in a fair manner without any intentional recrimination of any kind, I think is very poor tactics indeed. Now in regard to this item we have before us, the House was asked for a vote of $12,000. No explanation, as far as we can learn, was given to the House at the time. The minister replies "Well, I do not remember any explanation being asked for." Three or four times this afternoon I have had to suggest to the minister, in the most courteous possible way, that he should give to the House as we go along a general outline of what these new items are for. The minister did not give an explanation unless we persisted in asking for it. We were quite willing to facilitate the passing of the estimates; but now we are confronted with what certainly appears, I think, like a lack of courtesy to the committee. That is what occurred last year, and we do not know but what in these items which we have been passing, similar incidents will occur or will be discovered next year. The minister should certainly give the committee a more complete explanation of this appropriation than he has already done. There is a contract for $15,000. Will the minister explain what the contract is and what portion of the work is included in that contract?

Mr. DUFF: I think I was quite justified in making a comparison between the way in which this government was letting those contracts or doing the work and that of the old government. The leader of the Opposition brought the matter up. We on this side of the House did not bring it up.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member's hon. friend across the floor brought it up.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) made the remark that all the contracts for the Canadian Government Merchant Marine were made when the Hon. Mr. Ballantyne brought down his first estimates.

Mr. STEVENS: I did not say that at all.

Mr. DUFF: What did the hon. member say? That is exactly what he said.

Mr. STEVENS: No, I did not.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member said that all the money was voted and the contracts let and brought down when the first vote was asked for.

Mr. STEVENS: I made no such statement.

Mr. DUFF: The truth is that the last contract was made in 1920 and the first vote was asked for in 1918. It seems to me that there is absolutely no difference except that on that occasion the total amount was $80,000,000, and the total cost of this work is $130,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not like, when I am chasing a bear, to be diverted by a rabbit trail—

Mr. DUFF: My right hon. friend would run from a bear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But in this case the distinction is important to the House.

Mr. DUFF: He would scare the bear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not want any member of the House to feel that I am saying that in bringing down every estimate, you should bring down the whole amount required to complete the work for which that estimate provides. I am not saying that at all. The invariable practice of parliament has been to bring down the amount required for the year, but to state to parliament the total commitment the government is entering upon, toward which this is a contribution. In the case of the mercantile marine the government came down in 1918 with a programme for a certain construction and not for the whole amount of money required for that construction. The government got the amount of money required, told parliament exactly the number of vessels, the tonnage and the estimated cost. Then in 1919, the government deciding on an extension of that, got the unanimous approval of parliament, without a single criticism, for a further programme and secured the vote required for expenditure that year. In 1920, there was some little objection; but the great row was raised in 1921, when the vessels were nearly completed, no further contracts being asked for, and no further programme, but merely a completion of what parliament had unanimously agreed to. What I am emphasizing is this: In every case the government told parliament the whole commitment into which parliament was entering when asking for the amount that would be required for that year. I am complaining that the minister did not do that last year. It is impossible now to remedy that default; but I would impress this on the minister, that he should never come to parliament and let the House assume that that is all the commitment of the country that we are entering into in relation to that estimate, merely taking refuge under the fact that no question was asked. It is his duty to let parliament know the significance of an estimate. I ask the minister if that is not reasonable. I am prepared to let this go if the minister will agree to that. He should let parliament know the significance of an estimate whether questioned or not.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I quite agree with my hon. friend. That is true. The expenditure, last year, of $12,000, with the $15,000 tenders received, will construct the first section of this wharf. The additional sum asked is to carry on and continue another section. This is a large structure. We did not go beyond our authority in the vote given us last year. I quite agree with my right hon. friend that it would have been better—and I would have done so if the matter had occurred to me—to have informed the committee as to the commitment.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me read to the committee what occurred last year when these estimates were up:

> Harbours and Rivers, Quebec—$236,785.
> Sir Henry Drayton: Just one question. I take it from what my right hon. friend has said that these are for essential repairs. You are not going on with new works?
> Mr. Mackenzie King: There may be one or two very small exceptions, but the votes would be for work that has been long standing and should really have been undertaken before this.
> Sir Henry Drayton: There are some extensions here—$32,000.
> Mr. King (Kootenay): Not extensions, but necessary additions. It is not new work.
> Item agreed to.

The opening was there for the explanation; the request for information was all there, and yet that was the answer—that no new work was being undertaken, no extensions, but just ordinary repairs.

Mr. JACOBS: Is that the $12,000 item?

Mr. STEVENS: That is the item included in the supplementary estimates.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering the item on page 37 of the Estimates, Grondines wharf, $50,000. Shall the item carry?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) had the floor at six o'clock. I think he intended to make some severe strictures on the government in connection with this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I suggest we let the item stand for the present.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I find the minister was right in stating that last year the item of $12,000 for this wharf did not come up in the supplementary estimates. Unfortunately the supplementary estimates for harbours and rivers, Quebec, amounting to $236,785 went through with very, very little discussion, but what discussion did take place would certainly lead one to believe that no new works of any importance were contemplated by the government. The discussion will be found at page 3545 of the Hansard of last session. The item was called in the lump sum, and the discussion was as follows:

Sir Henry Drayton: Just one question. I take it from what my right hon. friend has said that these are for essential repairs. You are not going on with new works?

Mr. Mackenzie King: There may be one or two very small exceptions, but the votes would be for work that has been long standing and should really have been undertaken before this.

Sir Henry Drayton: There are some extensions here—$32,000.

Mr. King (Kootenay): Not extensions, but necessary additions. It is not new work.

Item agreed to.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): What item were we referring to then?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The whole item in the supplementary estimates for harbours and rivers, Quebec, involving a total of $236,785, the particulars of which are to be found at page 9 of the supplementary estimates of last session. In that list is the item of $12,000 for this particular wharf. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when that item came before the House last session with the practical assurance of the Prime Minister, who happened to be in the chamber at the time, that no new works of any importance would be undertaken, any one then present would naturally conclude that this was one of the small works in his contemplation when he replied to my hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton), or that it was merely a repair or extension of some old work. There was nothing in the information given to the committee by the Minister of Public Works, there was nothing afforded by the discussion, to lead us to believe that we were launching on a work of considerable magnitude. I am not in a position to judge whether this work is or is not a proper work for the locality. I heard the statement from the minister this afternoon that it would serve a scattered population of about 8,500.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I made the statement that it would serve an agricultural population of 8,500.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, if it is an agricultural population I may assume it must be a more or less scattered population. It is not a population contained in a town or city.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To serve that community of 8,500 a proposal such as we had last session to expend $12,000 would certainly not be inappropriate. I am inclined to think that when the minister brought down his estimate last session he himself felt that $12,000 would be about the right amount for a wharf for that community. After having obtained the authority of parliament to expend that money, in the interval he has let a contract for $15,000 for this work, which is not very far wide of the mark; but he comes to parliament this session with the first information we get on the subject, namely, that the work is or soon will be under construction and will cost in the neighborhood of $130,000. That is a large expenditure for a government that announced that it was not going to spend large sums on new works. It may be a proper expenditure; I am not in a position to judge that, but the manner in which the vote was passed last year could hardly be called a proper one. Hon. members are entitled to be given the facts in regard to these matters; surely the committee is entitled to know what is in the minister's mind when he launches a proposal of this kind. If, as I believe, the minister contemplated last session an expenditure of only $12,000 on this work, his course to-day should be to say so rather than to put in $50,000 for this year and then say that the ultimate cost is to be about $130,000. We know that these estimates are generally overrun; in all probability even that proposed expenditure will be increased by another 25 per cent for additions, extras, and the like, before the work is completed. I want to register my protest in respect to the manner in which this matter was brought before the House and dealt with last session, without a single particle of information to enable us to judge whether we were voting correctly or incorrectly or whether we were spending money wisely or unwisely. I have no desire in any away to reflect on the minister in this matter, but I do not want to see such a system gain ground in this House, and in order to make my protest as strong as I can I propose to move that this item be reduced to the sum of $15,000, which is the amount for which I understand, a contract has been let.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I quite agree, as I did this afternoon, with the statement of the right hon. leader of the Opposition that an explanation should have been given to parliament last year, but in the rush that took place the statement was not made. Not one dollar of the $12,000 that was voted last year has been spent. A contract has been let. It is in the province of the government to cancel it and pay damages to the contractor. But we are in a position to-day to give the explanation that should have been given last year; in fact, I did give it this afternoon. This work is important to the community it will serve, and the government believes it is justified in asking parliament now for another $50,000 with which to proceed with it. Nothing having been so far expended, the whole matter is open for discussion and review, but from the reports we have in the department I submit that this is a necessary public work and that it should receive the support of parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not dispute that the work may be of use, but is there no relationship between use and cost? At first sight, passing by entirely the question of the way the vote was obtained last year and accepting the minister's statement that it was not obtained in the proper way, that is to say—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I did not state that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not mean improper in the moral sense, but that it was not obtained in the right way; an explanation should have been given and the facts made known to the House. I accept the minister's statement in that regard and pass it over. But on the surface it does not look justifiable to have a $130,000 wharf when, according to the minister's own statement, there are only 8,500 people in the community it will serve, and they not engaged in anything that particularly requires ocean transport. I do not say that the community does not require a wharf; no doubt it does. But the amount suggested is about $13 or $15 per head for the wharf alone. If the minister goes on that principle, how much is it going to cost to string the whole province with wharves? Will the minister make it clear just what facilities these people have now? What have they been doing all along to get their produce to market? What is going to be the saving to them per annum on account of the wharf being built, taking into account, of course, the fact that they will still be at some expense? Will the minister tell the circumstances as they exist without the wharf and then state the advantages that are expected to accrue to that small number of people from the building of it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think I gave the information to the committee this afternoon. My hon. friend speaks of 8,500 people. It is true that it is an agricultural community, the shipments from it being largely the products of the farm. They are a great distance from their markets, Quebec and Montreal. They have been using a wharf which serves at certain heights of water, and it is proposed to build a wharf that will afford them communication with these large centres during the summer season. We have investigated the matter very carefully since last session and we are satisfied that the proposed expenditure is a proper one.

Mr. CANNON (Translation): Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on the motion of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), I wish, as a member for one of the ridings of the Quebec district, to express my great astonishment at the sense of economy displayed by the ex-Minister of Militia just at a time when it is proposed to carry out public works in the province of Quebec. I should have liked, and I think the majority of the members of this committee are also of the same opinion, that this sense of economy, no doubt inspired by the public interest, should have rather existed in the hon. member at the time of the general elections in 1921. Indeed, very large contracts suddenly became necessary in the riding of the hon. member at the last general election, and, if I am not mistaken, a sum of almost $50,000 was spent during the campaign so as to enable the hon. member to further represent his electors. I might suggest to the hon. member not to try and economize always at the expense of the same people, but to allow the government to make the expenditures which are actually needed. Grondines is one of the most flourishing parishes of the beautiful county of Portneuf, and if the hon. member for Wellington were to visit that place I have no doubt that he would be the first to withdraw his objections. Those places are highly populated and prosperous, they are parishes where the wharves are of the greatest usefulness and all expenditure made there at present is in the interest of the public. Certainly, like the hon. member, I favour a sound economy, but economy in the public interest is part of a reasonable and sound policy, and it would be useless for the government to try and practise economy by not spending a few thousand dollars where it is necessary to keep in repairs wharves for which large sums have been spent. I think the hon. member could, during the present session, practise his sense of economy to a greater advantage if he proposed, for instance, to decrease the expenditures which are made in the harbour of Toronto, where there will never exist a satisfactory harbour, rather than oppose expenditures on public works in the province of Quebec, for the parishes bordering the St. Lawrence river, where the wharves, as I mentioned a few moments ago, are necessary and useful and where this expenditure will evidently be for the public welfare.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. member persuaded the minister to give us the information we asked for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I hope my right hon. friend is now convinced that this public work is a necessity.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am sorry that I could not follow my hon. friend for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) in the remarks which he has just made, but this I was able to gather, that he is in some way or other under the impression that my objection to this particular item was that it pertained to the province of Quebec, and I think he said it would be better if I directed my attention to Ontario.

The only criticism I have offered on these estimates so far has been in respect of the harbour improvements generally in the Maritime provinces. I am not objecting to the item as an item, nor do I regard the fact as important whether it applies to Quebec or any other province. What I am objecting to is the principle. I am afraid that a system may grow up or is growing up whereby a minister or a government can pass an insignificant vote through parliament and start some considerable work, and then come back to parliament the following year and ask for more money to carry on the work, whereas had parliament had full knowledge of the situation when the first vote was asked it might never have been authorized. The same thing applies to half-a-dozen items we have passed this afternoon for public works. They are evidently new works. Nothing was voted for them last year. We have passed them in the belief that the two or three or four or five thousand dollars which is presented in the estimates was the final amount required. Now it may be that some of these items are only the entering wedge, the beginning of a heavy expenditure.

What I wish to point out particularly is this, that if the minister at the time he brings in his estimates has in contemplation the expenditure of a large sum of money on any public work, he should first make the facts known to the House when he asks for the initial amount required. In this case that was not done. I am satisfied that in this case the House voted $12,000 last session believing that they were voting that sum for a wharf for this particular locality, and I believe it is news to every hon. member on this side of the House that the $12,000 was only the beginning of the matter and that it is going to cost at least $130,000 before this wharf is in place. It matters not whether it is in Ontario or Quebec or any other part of Canada; the place is a matter of no consequence.

Mr. CANNON: Is not the item under consideration Item No. 157?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. It is Grondines wharf, $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN: The first item on page 38, resolution No. 157.

Mr. CANNON: And that resolution covers the province of Quebec.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am only objecting to the first item at the top of page 38 of the Estimates. I am not criticising the other items. I am directing myself entirely to this one, and to a practice which has sprung up, and which I trust will not go any further. As I said in my opening remarks, it is to protest against that practice that I move that this vote be reduced.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. member objects to the principle involved in the vote of this money, and not to the particular item, why does he not move that this whole resolution for harbours and rivers be struck out? Then he would not be in the position of having the criticism made that he has selected a particular place in the province of Quebec and made that his target.

Mr. MARTELL: He does not like Quebec or Nova Scotia.

Mr. POWER: Why does he not move to cut out the whole resolution?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Because I do not think the whole of it is objectionable. I have agreed to pass item after item.

Mr. POWER: But it is a question of principle.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think any one either in the government or outside can conscientiously support this practice. The minister has to excuse it himself. He says the vote last year was rushed through in the last days of the session.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Did you not agree to it?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did through ignorance because the information was not given me at the time. That is what I complain of. I say that the principle is a bad one. We have passed item after item to-day and the same thing may occur next year with regard to them. The minister may come back next year to say that parliament authorized these expenditures of two or three or four thousand dollars this year and that that was only the beginning. I know it is the practice of the department and has been for twenty-five years, whether the practice be good or bad, that when a vote for a public work passes this House the department goes ahead and lets contracts irrespective of the amount voted by parliament, the assumption being that the House has committed itself to the principle of the work, and if we vote ten or twenty or twenty-five thousand to-day the department will go ahead and let contracts for $100,000 or $150,000. That has been the practice for the last twenty-five years to my knowledge.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That has not been done in this case. If there is any objection to this particular item, the matter is in the power of this House. We have only let a contract for $15,000 on a vote of $12,000 passed last year. We have not abused our privileges. We have inquired into the matter and satisfied ourselves that this is a proper vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister will see this, that if on a vote of $12,000 you can let a contract for $15,000, surely the same reason applies and you could let a contract for $50,000 on the same vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): But it was not done.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I know, but during the last twenty-five years it has been done time and time again on the assumption that when parliament votes the money it approves the work. Then the department goes ahead and carries out the work. If that is a good practice, and it always has been the practice in my time at least, then on each of these items for two or three or four thousand dollars, contracts might be let and new works undertaken and the House in the meantime have no knowledge of what the ultimate expenditure is going to be. What I complain of is that what we did, we did in the dark. We should have had the information. The minister should have come down to the House with a new proposal and candidly said: This is a new proposal to complete a work which will ultimately cost $130,000.

Mr. CANNON: In answer to my hon. friend, who claims that this is a matter of principle and that his criticism is not applied to any particular province, I would draw his attention to this fact: Resolution No. 154 "Harbours and rivers" applies to Nova Scotia. This was passed without any objection, I understand, from my hon. friend.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Oh, no; it was not, I criticised it.

Mr. CANNON: Resolution No. 155 "Harbours and rivers" applies to Prince Edward Island; resolution No. 156 "Harbours and rivers" applies to New Brunswick; resolution No. 157 "Harbours and rivers" applies to Quebec and is now under consideration. The most peculiar feature of the case, however, is this: My hon. friend professes a desire to protect a principle in the public interest, but his objection to the conduct of the Public Works department is only awakened or aroused when we reach this particular item No. 157 which covers public works in the province of Quebec. If my hon. friend really wishes to fight for a principle why does he not, as suggested by the hon. member (Mr. Power), move an amendment which would apply to all the items generally, so that a reduction of expenditure would be required in all cases and not simply in the case of the province of Quebec? If my hon. friend does that he will have a better chance of making good his claim that he is fighting for a principle, and not merely trying to reduce public expenditure in the province of Quebec notwithstanding the smallness of the amount involved.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for Dorchester is an intelligent man.

Mr. CANNON: Thank you.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think he could have been in the House for any very considerable length of time prior to six o'clock or he would not have made this address. I do not think it is worthy of him, endeavouring to make out of this instance a case of prejudice on the part of members of this House against his province.

Mr. CANNON: If my right hon. friend will allow me, I am not trying to make a case, I am trying to help my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) to modify his position so as not to lend himself to misinterpretation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I want to assure the hon. member that when his ingenuity is applied to the creation of that misinterpretation, it would take a very skilful man indeed to find a method of avoiding it. He argues that because we apply our objection to this resolution 157 we are consequently animated by prejudice against his province. The objection raised, and the point has been conceded by the minister, was against the practice which developed only in this single instance applied not to resolution 157 but only one item in it namely: the Grondines wharf. In relation to that the minister admitted that he obtained last year a vote of $12,000 without giving to parliament, or to the committee of parliament, the vital fact that the $12,000 was only for a commencement, and that the whole work would cost $130,000. The protest of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) is against that fact. It has not been revealed that that practice was adopted—it may have been but it has not been revealed that it was —except in regard to this Grondines wharf and objection could not be applied to other items in resolution 157, or to resolutions 156 and 154; the ground of objection relates only to the one item. Objections in relation to the Nova Scotia estimates were taken on other grounds and protests were made. It is only in connection with this particular item that we object on the ground stated; and I find some hon. members, in more articulate and dignified form, or more frequently, protesting that we are prejudiced against Nova Scotia. How foolish this is. We object to such a practice. I must commend the minister. He was rather frank in the matter; he admitted it was not the right practice. I accept that statement and only hope it will not be repeated.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): I have personal knowledge of what took place when the item for this work was voted last year because I happened to occupy the Chair at that time. The item came up in the Supplementary Estimates in the closing days of the session, and with the exception of one or two questions the whole of the items were adopted without discussion of any kind. It has been the experience for many years when these things are done, that a certain amount is voted to begin the work, and the work is continued the year following, and so on, until the contract is completed. It has been suggested here over and over again that we might adopt a system, which I am told exists in England, by which when the estimates are prepared and a new work is undertaken a statement is made out showing the details of the work, what it will cost and so on, and the members can see at a glance exactly how the matter stands. If members will look through Hansard in past years they will find that with respect to any particular item very little information is given unless a question has been put concerning it; and the estimates themselves only state the amount to be expended during the year, or the amount voted the year previous. Whether there should not be a change in our present system is a matter which is well worth consideration.

With respect to this particular item I can say with respect to Grondines, which is forty miles from Quebec, that there is there a tide of fifteen feet, and a twelve or fifteen thousand dollar wharf there is out of the question entirely. It is a place much frequented during the summer season by the market boats of Quebec, and by the boats running to the south shore of the St. Lawrence. It has a population of over 8,000 people and is one of the most productive districts situated near the city of Quebec. Not far from Grondines is Donnacona where there is now one of the largest pulp mills in the province. The district is developing very rapidly, and if anything of substantial value in the way of a wharf is to be provided at that particular point, we must construct a wharf that will stand. The tides of the St. Lawrence at that place are tremendous, and a twelve or fifteen thousand dollar wharf is out of the question there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the pulp mill to which my hon. friend has referred use this wharf?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): It is a benefit to the district I am told. Grondines is the nearest place to that settlement. As a result of the erection of the pulp mill the whole district is developing very considerably.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the pulp mill use this wharf?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): I cannot state that, but I do know that the whole district has benefited very considerably from the erection of the mill in question. I think the committee should adopt this item on the assurance which the minister has given that the matter will be thoroughly investigated, and if the expenditure is not justified no other outlay will be involved except that under the contract now entered into. At a subsequent session, when a further amount will be necessary if the work is to be pursued, the committee with fuller information will be in a position to pass judgment on the matter. I think we should not hastily pronounce on it now with the limited information in our possession, especially when the minister has assured us that the whole matter will be thoroughly investigated.

Mr. GUTHRIE: With that understanding I have no objection to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FORKE: I think the manner in which this vote has been submitted to the House is wrong both in principle and in practice. However, the Minister of Public Works has admitted that it was not a right thing to do and I think we should accept his explanation. I would like to add that I believe the leader of the Opposition and the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) have done a good service in bringing this matter to the attention of the committee. As I said before I believe it is a wrong practice. I can easily see where the principle might be abused and work carried on from year to year in an irregular manner, if the appropriations could be obtained in such a way without parliament being cognizant of all the facts. I should like very well if the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) would withdraw the amendment, because I will vote for the item as it stands in the estimates.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I will withdraw it.

Mr. DELISLE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to draw the atttention of the committee to the fact that this wharf will be built in the interest of the agricultural class. Not only the farmers of Grondines have signed a petition requesting the building of this wharf, but also those of the parishes of Deschambault, St. Gilbert, St. Marc des Carrières, St. Casimir, St. Thuribe, St. Ubalde, and even those of Ste. Anne de la Pérade in the adjoining county; as it is far more advantageous for the farmers to carry their products by water than by rail.

I reiterate my statement that the construction of this wharf will especially be to the advantage of the farmers and I express the hope that the committee will approve of this item.

Amendment withdrawn.

Item agreed to.

Grosse Rouche—wharf repairs, $3,500.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this a similar case to the other? I see the item is $3,500, and it was $1,350 last year. What is the estimated expenditure, and why was it not given when the vote was asked for last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The vote last year was for urgent repairs. We are completing a certain amount of work this year to renew the superstructure of the wharf for the top three or four feet and paint the shed shelter and railing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was the work expected to be completed with the $1,350 last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The House should have been informed on that point.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $75,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was spent of the $75,000 voted last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $63,341.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was it spent on?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): On small repairs to various structures throughout the province. It is a very long list.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the largest item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The items vary from $85 to $916.

Item agreed to.

La Malbaie—wharf, $12,000.

Mr. HANSON: We should have some explanation of that. Is that in the same category as the Grondines wharf? It is a large sum.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I think not. This is for the construction of a crib and span wharf 299 feet long by 16 feet wide, including the headblock 24 feet by 36 feet.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is the work under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, it is under contract?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who is the contractor?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): J. O. Poliquin.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Were tenders called for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, this was the lowest tender. There were some eight tenders in all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was the contract for? What is the estimated cost of the entire work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The contract is for $10,889.45 and inspection and contingencies $1,100, making $11,989.45.

Item agreed to.

Lavaltrie—reconstruction of wharf and approach, $2,300.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Last year's item was all spent, was it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditure last year was $2,796.

Item agreed to.

Lanoraie—wharf construction, $5,500.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this by tender?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why?

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is one of the items the minister said it was proposed to construct without tender. I would like to ask if he is ready to reconsider that proposition.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I could not state that I am. The report that I have would indicate this work can be done better by day labour, and pending further inquiries I am not sure that I could suggest that a change should be made. That is the recommendation I have before me.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is reconstruction—no difficulty in telling what is to be done. It may be better politically, but not better commercially.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that is hardly fair. This work consists in the removal of timber all around the headblock down to extreme low water level, in building a reinforced concrete wall all around the headblock and in laying a six-inch concrete flooring on the whole surface of headblock and bridge. It is a question of removing old work and renewal. I imagine that as the work progresses there will be an opportunity for the engineer in charge to guide his expenditure by what he finds in the removing.

Mr. BOYS: Where is the wharf and what vessels use it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in the county of Berthier. Besides the Rita B and the Three Rivers, which stop there occasionally with excursionists the steamboat Soulanges calls regularly twice a week and collected during the last navigation season more than $2,500 in freight. Several barges of hay are also shipped yearly from this wharf and during the last few years many barges of stone and gravel have been unloaded there every year for the maintenance of the Quebec-Montreal highway.

Mr. BOYS: Is this inland or tidal water?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is on the St. Lawrence.

Item agreed to.

L'Islet—wharf repairs, $23,500.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is apparently a remarkable case. Last year the vote, without explanation too, was $1,500. Now the minister asks for $23,500. Why was parliament not informed that the appropriation involved this expenditure?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year, we made just small repairs to the flooring of the wharf. The report of the engineer this year would indicate that it is necessary to replace 80,000 feet of face timbers, 60,000 feet of cross ties, 15,000 feet of longitudinals, 65,000 feet of stringers, 100,000 feet of 3-inch flooring, and 500 square yards of gravel surface.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is another case similar to those as regards which the minister told us a little while ago the work would be done by day labour. This is surely a work that should be done by contract.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, allow me to add a few remarks in regard to the vote for repairs to the wharf of L'Islet. It would astonish me if the House paid more attention to statements emanating from a member who resides hundreds, nay, thousands of miles distant from my county, rather than be guided by information which I can personally extend. The leader of the Opposition, just now, told us that the vote of $23,500 was a similar case to the one of $50,000 asked for on behalf of Grondines. Well, Sir. if parliament is called upon, to-day, to vote such a large sum, it is due to the fact that the government, while the leader of the Opposition was at the helm, neglected to carry out the necessary repairs to this wharf. The wharf at L'Islet dates back over a hundred years. It serves as a refuge harbour and is utilized by three or four hundred farmers. Goods to the amount of a $1,000,000 consisting of farm products and lumber are carried over it each year. At present five parishes handle at this wharf both the products they ship and the goods they import. The public works could, I think, economize considerably, and, one of the first ways to do so would be to carry out the necessary work at the proper time and thereby not allow public property to deteriorate as it has unfortunately happened during a certain number of years, especially down on the lower St. Lawrence. One of the reasons why this work is so costly is that the government is obliged to buy its lumber in the summer season. If it was possible to have the lumber prepared by the farmers in winter, it would not only be an economy but at the same time a help to the rural class. Not only the present system of carrying out the work is of a more costly nature but it has for effect, in many cases, to delay the work for more than a year.

I sincerely regret that the majority of my hon. friends on the other side are not able to understand me; but I can assure them that my remarks have been made in a very good spirit, and that the money that will be voted for the wharf at L'Islet will be spent as economically as possible.

Mr. BOYS: I have had a little experience in my part of the world as regards the construction of wharves, and I know the most costly wharf we have, one of very considerable proportions, cost from $12,000 to $15,000. Now we find an appropriation of $23,500 asked for, not for construction, but for repairs only. I should think that would not repair, but construct a fairly large and very substantial wharf. We ought to know something of the size of this wharf, the nature of its construction, whether tenders have been called for and, if so, the amount of the tenders.

9 p.m.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The wharf is 1,104 feet in length. The work comprises:

Gravel surface, 500 sq. yards, at 50 cents per yard	$ 250
Face timbers, 12 x 12—80,000 ft. board measure at $80	6,400
Cross ties, 12 x 12—60,000 ft.	4,800
Longitudinals, 10 x 10—15,000 ft.	900
Stringers, 9 x 12—65,000 ft.	3,900
Flooring, 100,000 ft.	5,000
Total	$21,250
Contingencies	2,250
	$23,500

Mr. BOYS: What is the width of the wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The report of the engineer reads:

After consulting a number of merchants, I have come to the conclusion that the traffic from May to November will be as follows:

Drygoods	$550,000
Pulpwood	90,000
Firewood	75,000
Agricultural products	125,000
Bricks	25,000
Miscellaneous	15,000
Total	$880,000

All going over the wharf.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does the government get any wharf charges for this traffic?

[Mr. Fafard.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Wherever a wharf is turned over to the Marine department and a wharfinger is appointed, some revenue is collected. I have not that data here, and I am not sure as regards this wharf.

Mr. CHAPLIN: A little while ago I asked the minister if he would reconsider his determination and allow this work to be done by tender. I did not receive an answer.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In view of the discussion which has taken place to-day, I purpose reviewing the situation; but the recommendation I have before me from the chief engineer is that this work can be done more economically and better by day labour than by contract.

Item agreed to.

Matane harbour improvements, $100,000.

Mr. BOYS: It must be apparent that hon. members should receive the very information which the minister gave us regarding the last item. I personally thank him for giving that information. It has an effect on me at once and I realize that the wharf at L'Islet is one of very considerable importance.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BOYS: This work of improving the harbour at Matane is of considerable importance, and it is surely not the desire of hon. members opposite that these items should be rushed through without any information being given.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I was on my feet about as soon as my hon. friend, with the intention of giving some information regarding this matter. This expenditure is required towards a fairly large project—the improvement of the harbour at Matane. It has been under the special study of an investigating board of five Public Works' engineers in charge of the assistant chief engineer on the understanding that if it were found practicable to build the harbour required we would ask for an estimate. The board of engineers have reported favourably. It is not a new project, it has been before the department for some years, but it has always been considered as a very large expenditure for the public benefit to be gained. Representations were made again last year. They were not entertained. But during the interval between last session and this session one of the large would-be users of this proposed harbour—the Hammermill Paper Company who are operating large pulp limits in this district—advised the department that they were prepared to contribute practically 50 per cent of the cost.

Matane is situated between Rimouski and Gaspe, a distance of about 150 miles, on a very bleak coast, and it is important that we have a harbour of refuge to accommodate that extensive coast line. Large undertakings in the way of fishing and lumbering are being carried on and there is a very heavy marine traffic on the river. Having received a bona fide proposition from the Hammermill Paper Company to pay to the government $10,000 a year for twelve years towards the cost of this work—estimated to amount to about $210,000—or to pay a lump sum of $100,000, we carefully investigated local conditions and fully considered the offer. As a result it is felt by the department and by the government that in the interests of the community at Matane and of the mariners who use the river, it would be good business for the people of Canada to supplement the cash offer and construct a harbour at Matane. Matane itself is a prosperous community.

Mr. BOYS: What is it, a village or a town?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A small town of 3,500 people, but there is a scattered population throughout the parish of approximately 7,000. Large lumbering operations are being carried on in the district. The Hammermill Paper Company have a very large pulp mill at this point and intimate that they will carry on operations over a term of twenty or twenty-five years, paying in wages some $300,000 per annum. In addition to its local industries Matane is the base for the operations of the big pulp and paper companies on the north shore. The St. Lawrence broadens out at this point and there is a very large expanse of water down beyond Rimouski, so that it is very important for the men who earn their livelihood along this bleak coast line to have a harbour of refuge between Rimouski and Gaspe.

This matter has been carefully considered not only departmentally, but by the government and by special committee of council, and the government has reached the conclusion that arrangements should be entered into with the Hammermill Paper Company and the work undertaken. So far as the company are concerned, they have already deposited $35,000 in cash and given a bond for the balance, the money to be paid over by them as the expenditure is made from time to time by the government.

Mr. HANSON: There is no natural harbour at this point as I understand from the minister. Are the Hammermill Paper Company actually in operation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, the government have a harbour there. Last year $15,000 was voted for improvements, but this larger project having been put forward we have only expended $11,000 of that amount.

Mr. BOYS: Was last year's the first expenditure for harbour improvements at this point?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work has been going on for many years.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister give the committee an outline of the proposed new works?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There will be considerable dredging at the entrance to the channel, 134,000 cubic yards, estimated to cost $60,000; dredging at the turning basin, 155,000 cubic yards, estimated to cost $69,750; extension to eastern breakwater $40,320; dredging for crib seats, 1,000 cubic yards, estimated to cost $450; foundation crib for beacon, $2,550; crib work wharf connecting old wharf and western breakwater, $26,000; pile protection work, etc., $2,500. The total expenditure will amount to $201,875.

Mr. PELLETIER: This item refers to work in my riding, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to add a little to the information which the hon. minister has so well conveyed to the committee. We have no place where vessels can shelter between Rimouski and Gaspe, and this has resulted in considerable loss of life and property year after year. The various companies operating on the north shore are: Ontario Paper Company at Franquelin, Shelter Bay and Maniquagan; North Eastern Pulp and Paper Company at Maniquagan, which has bought 3,000,000 acres of land and intends to build a pulp mill at a cost of between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000; Franquelin Lumber Company at Franquelin; St. Regis Paper Company at Godbout; Gulf Pulp and Paper Company at Clarke City, and H. F. Amory at Mingan. Several of these companies are waiting for the construction of this harbour in order that they may be able to bring their product across and ship it by rail from this point. The construction of this wharf will afford better transport facilities; it will increase the traffic of the Canadian National Railways as well as of the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway. The minister has mentioned the Hammermill Company; I may say that Price Brothers are also operating at Matane and I know that Sir William Price himself is in favour of these harbour improvements. The minister has fully explained this vote and it it not necessary for me to repeat what he has said.

Mr. HANSON: Is it intended to do any export business here, or will it be local traffic along and across the St. Lawrence?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will accommodate both.

Mr. HANSON: What export traffic will there be?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Pulpwood.

Mr. PELLETIER: Price Brothers are exporting.

Mr. BOYS: Is this expenditure dependent upon an agreement between the company and the department? In other words, is it stipulated that the company must pay $10,000 annually for twelve years as a condition of this vote? To what depth of water is the dredging to extend at low water? Was this work the result of a request by the company, or did the government itself feel that harbour improvements at that point were necessary? It is a little unusual that important works of this kind should be undertaken by the department at the instance of a company who, naturally, would want the work done for their own private gain. I can appreciate, on the other hand, the fact that such work might be warranted on account of the magnitude of the proposed operations of the company.

Mr. PELLETIER: I have been asking for improvements at that harbour since 1917; I have repeated my request every year, but have up to now been unsuccessful. Petition after petition has been filed each year with the Department of Public Works, but without avail. These petitions were signed by the people of Matane, Ste. Felicite, St. Luc, St. Leandre, St. Ulric, and other communities whose merchants receive their goods through Matane harbour. There is no proper accommodation for the vessels, and I have seen them at times riding at anchor six or seven abreast. It is high time that something was done to provide proper facilities at that harbour. I have endeavoured for years to have something done in this line, and I have finally succeeded in arranging for the payment of a certain sum by a company interested in development there. As my request year after year met with refusal, I came to the conclusion that if I could not get some assistance from other sources it would be impossible for me to succeed in the object I had in view. So I made a success of it, and I sincerely hope that the item will carry.

Mr. BOYS: I am glad for my hon. friend's sake that he has at last found a sympathetic ear. I am not surprised to learn that he did his utmost to secure a grant in the past. For some eight or ten years, being a supporter of the late government I made many similar requests on behalf of my riding, but as that government was a most economical one, I was unsuccessful, and I am not surprised that my hon. friend also was unsuccessful. It is quite evident now that he is making up for lost time, for he is getting a pretty good chunk. I should be glad, however, if the minister would give us the information we seek.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is proposed to have a channel of a depth of nine feet at low water. A great deal of credit is due the hon. member for Matane (Mr. Pelletier) in the matter of securing a contribution from the Hammermill Company; it is due entirely to his efforts that this arrangement has been made. The government like to help those who help themselves. There are times—they rarely occur, of course—when an industry is so interested in development that it can be prevailed upon to contribute something toward the cost of a work like this. The hon. gentleman has succeeded in going much further than is usual in negotiations of this kind. The company will carry on extensive operations, and they believe that with proper harbour facilities their undertakings will be successful. The government are taking advantage of their offer and are supplementing their contribution with an equal sum. We believe the result will be to afford a harbour of refuge not only to the people of Matane, but to those of the surrounding country as well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: How much has been spent up to the present time on this harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Over $121,000 has been expended since the inception of the harbour some years ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The minister stated that for many years it had been considered that this large expenditure would not be justified. The hon. member for the constituency makes a very strong plea respecting the need of refuge at this point. But has there not been a harbour there sufficient to give that accommodation to the people?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The expenditure seems very large, considering the depth to be obtained in the harbour—nine feet.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The present harbour could not afford refuge to the larger craft.

Mr. HANSON: What is the depth now?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not more than four or five feet, I am advised.

Mr. BOYS: Is it hardpan, rough bottom or mud?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it is mud,—soft material.

Item agreed to.

New Carlisle—wharf repairs, $1,200.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much was expended on this last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount expended last year was $999. The present amount required is to renew 8,000 square feet of three-inch flooring.

Item agreed to.

Peribonka—wharf repairs, $4,650.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I think the committee would like to have some information with regard to these various votes for wharves. I was not aware that there were so many ports in this particular locality. Would the minister give some information to the committee as to what the money is needed for as the items come up?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to give any information that is requested, but I do not want to block the work of the committee by interjecting unless it is necessary. This expenditure is recommended by the district engineer in order to lower the wharf approximately two feet, to cut some piles that are decaying, replace stringers and flooring. Apparently it is a necessary expenditure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Is the work to be done by day labour or contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This being repair work, I presume it will be done by day labour.

Mr. HANSON: Going back for a moment to the harbour improvements at Matane, is that work to be done by tender?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. The contract has not yet been let.

Item agreed to.

Piche Point—wharf repairs and improvements, $1,500.

Mr. BOYS: What in the world is wrong with all these wharves? Are they all going to rack and ruin since my hon. friends opposite came into power? There are no less than forty-nine votes for wharf repairs or improvements, aggregating $572,785. What is the trouble? Why is it that so many of these wharves are needing attention all of a sudden?

Mr. CAHILL: We were in opposition before.

Mr. BELAND: There is such a river as the St. Lawrence.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think the list is larger than usual. These are not new works.

Mr. BOYS: I do not suggest that they are new. They are repairs.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These items are mainly for repairs and maintenance. There is an annual upkeep in connection with these wharves. It will be remembered, of course, that during the war many of these works were allowed to go without the usual repairs and we are now getting them back into a normal condition.

Item agreed to.

Point au Pic, Murray Bay—wharf repairs, $18,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is this for the large pier at Murray Bay? Is that pier owned by the Dominion government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: There must be a very considerable revenue from that wharf.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the information as to the revenue. This work is owned by the Dominion government. Large steamers call at the pier.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is it proposed to do this work by day labour or by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Apparently we have not received a recommendation from the engineer with regard to this work, so I am not in a position to say. It is a large amount, and evidently it would be preferable to have it done by contract.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would think it would be preferable, but some works for which we have passed large amounts the engineer is evidently of the opinion should be done by day labour. Murray Bay is a place of considerable importance, particularly in the summer time, and there must be many competent contractors there. It is a place of fine residences and fine buildings. I think at a point like that the engineer should not hesitate to recommend that the work be done by contract.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would imagine it will be done by contract.

Item agreed to.

Pointe a Elie—Magdalen Islands—wharf repairs and improvements, $5,850.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much of last year's vote of $11,400 was spent? It looks to me as if these wharves were getting worn out very fast. I wonder if it is because of all the shells and boxes that are being moved over them.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount expended last year was $9,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And it is proposed to spend nearly $6,000 this year. What is in contemplation? Is there any more to follow next year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no knowledge of that. Apparently they are trying to get the wharf into a state of repair. It is proposed to build a shed, and to extend the breastwork for a length of 150 feet, and to renew the stringers.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this work to be done by tender or day labour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is recommended that it be done by day labour.

Item agreed to.

Pointe aux Trembles—wharf repairs, $15,200.

Mr. HANSON: Is this one of those cases where a large undertaking was started without information being given to the House as to the ultimate cost? I do not think there should be much criticism of the previous item for repairs to the wharf in the Magdalen Islands, for anything we can do to better the condition of these people should be done, as they are very isolated. But that is not the case with the item under consideration. This is a very large amount. You must be rebuilding this wharf, or building two or three wharves, judging by the amount. You are spending $40,000 in two years. It does occur to me that some very considerable explanation ought to be given to the House as to why $25,000 was asked and probably spent last year, and why it is necessary to ask for almost as much again this year. The money is being largely wasted, I presume.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend has not got that right. If he will look at the vote again he will find that we are asking for a revote of $15,200. The contract was let for $21,266 and there are contingencies, $2,234, making a total of $23,500. The probable expenditure for 1922-23 is $8,300 on the contract leaving a balance of $15,200 as the revote this year.

Mr. HANSON: To complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The vote last year was $25,000 for this. It is all marked for repairs?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How could the repairs to a wharf cost $25,000. The wharves that have been brought to my attention, seemingly pretty large ones, cost about half of that to build new. Is it not merely a re-constructed wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not? How much has this wharf cost up to date, how much has been the capital cost to the country of this wharf up to the present time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In June 1904 a contract was entered into for the construction at a cost of $33,775. The construction cost $32,944, and since that date $14,308.75 has been expended in repairs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There has been $46,000 spent on it up to this new venture in repairs?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Forty-six thousand and $25,000 more, seventy-one thousand odd dollars in capital cost outside of interest. Now, will the minister tell us how much revenue has ever been collected from it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I cannot tell, I have not the information. That might be secured, but these wharves are not revenue producing, as a rule, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not saying anything as to that now but I would like to know the exact situation. Commencement was made apparently in 1904 and up to now, including the repairs under way, it has cost $71,000. Could the minister not give us an approximate estimate of the revenue collected from that wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Department of Public Works would not know what the collections are. I will inquire from the Marine department what revenues they are collecting.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would it amount to anything appreciable at all?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Practically nothing.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not very much I think.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now, let me put this to the minister: Does he know of any reason why public works of this sort, that are utilized in trade, should not pay a reasonable interest on the cost? Does he know why they should not when, say, government elevators that are utilized in trade are compelled to pay interest on their cost? Will the minister explain the principle that distinguishes the one class from the other? What is the reason for applying one yard stick to one class and a different kind of yard stick to another?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no objection to my hon. friend making representations of that character. He knows well that his government—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): — did not advocate such a policy, and this government has not been carrying out a policy of that character either. It is a matter of policy. We know that in many of these country communities it would be subjecting the people to great hardship to collect wharfage charges for package freight.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am very much interested in the minister's statement because our farmers in New Brunswick pay wharfage charges for loading their potatoes on the wharf at St. John, and I do not see why we should have to pay such charges if farmers in other places are not paying for the same service. In this connection, Mr Chairman, it is just possible I am hardly in order, but due to the fact that I was serving on a committee which sat this afternoon I was not in the chamber when the estimates for New Brunswick were under consideration, and therefore I would ask the minister if it is proposed to bring down any estimate for the breakwater in St. John harbour called the Negro Point breakwater. This is a very great necessity. It is not, like some of the works we have had under consideration to-night, a local work. St. John is the winter port of the East for the whole shipping of Canada.

An hon. MEMBER: No, Halifax.

Mr. CALDWELL: My hon. friend called attention to Halifax. Well, there is a little place called Halifax from which they ship a few apples. But I still contend that St. John is the winter port, not because it is a bigger place or that the harbour is possibly better than that of Halifax, but due to the fact that St. John is nearer the bulk of freight that is sent east for ocean shipment. We have a condition there of such a character that unless this breakwater is built we shall not benefit from the wharves constructed by the government. There is a dock already constructed, I think it is dock 17, on which there is no building as yet, and it will be useless to construct sheds on that dock to handle traffic until the breakwater in question is built. The government have already constructed the foundation but the wharf is so exposed to the weather that until the Negro Point breakwater is built it will be very little used as a freight handling proposition. I do hope the government will bring down a supplementary estimate to take care of the Negro Point breakwater.

Now as to the point I spoke of first: Our farmers this year have been getting only a dollar a barrel for potatoes that cost them $2.50 a barrel. We have been getting less than 50 per cent of the cost of growing, and still we have been paying wharfage on our shipments over the wharf and through the shed the government provided for us this year and which we appreciate, I can assure the minister. Still I would like to insist that if this kind of traffic is not charged for over other government wharves, we should be refunded the money that we have paid this year and be relieved of the charge in the future.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my hon. friend is probably under a misconception. In the larger ports undoubtedly there must be wharfage charges made. It is in the small outlying communities where the individual brings his package to the wharf. or takes it from the wharf, where fees are probably not collected. In the case of the larger ports charges must be made for the freight or traffic going over the wharves.

Mr. CALDWELL: I realize that it is the practice but I am still not convinced of the justice of it. It is the same class of freight absolutely, and I doubt if there is very much freight handled out of Canada to-day that is paying the producer as little as potatoes are paying the New Brunswick farmer. As I said before we have not received over a dollar a barrel of 165 pounds for our crop of potatoes this year and it cost us $2.50 to grow them. Still we are paying wharfage fees when farmers who happen to live at smaller points of shipment apparently are not paying these fees.

Mr. HANSON: I think the practice outlined by the minister is all right. The two cases are not analogous at all. The one case is the case of a small farmer bringing down his little cart load of stuff to send to the market, and the other case is that of a great export trade which runs into hundreds and thousands of dollars. As a matter of fact you never could collect wharfage on these little shipments, and nobody would ever be foolish enough to try it.

Mr. CALDWELL: It is a matter of principle.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In the case of the particular item under discussion, what is the nature of the traffic over this wharf?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are about 5,500 inhabitants. The exports are largely farm products; there having been exported last year 75,000 bushels of potatoes and 20,000 bushels of other vegetables; 80,000 pounds of butter; 800 head of cattle; $100,000 worth of pork, and 80,000 baskets of fruit.

Mr. MILLAR: I believe there are thirty-five of these wharves items in which money is expended to repair wharves. In some cases it is mentioned as "wharves repaired"—just a little variety. How many of these have had to pay any interest at all? I was thinking it was rather strange that so much money was being expended without any thought that the people using those facilities should pay the interest thereon, as has been pointed out by the right hon. leader of the Opposition. In the case of grain elevators and similar facilities we expect to pay a rate that will enable them to pay their way. An hon. member on the other side was referring to the fact that he had asked the government on several occasions to have these improvements made, and now that he had succeeded in his request I could not help thinking of the times that the farmers in certain districts—not one but many—have asked for branch lines that were already graded to be completed. In many cases the ties and rails were lying there ready to be laid down, and yet they have been refused. Surely it is not good business. However, I will not discuss that matter now, but I hope the same generosity as is shown by the government at this time, in going forward with new work because it seems to be needed, will be exhibited when the Minister of Railways brings down his estimates and we take up the discussion of branch lines.

Mr. CANNON: Do the railways out west pay any more interest on the capital invested than the railways in these other provinces?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The western railways pay all right, but it is the hon. member's "idols of the past" built in between that do not pay.

Mr. MILLAR: I assure hon. members that the railways in the West are the railways above all others in the Dominion that help to make the dividends.

Mr. PARENT: Is that the case of the Hudson Bay?

[Mr. Hanson.]

Mr. MILLAR: Yes, there has been a grant set aside for the building of that line for many years back.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: I can give my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) a case in which one of these wharves has brought some revenue to the country. We have a small wharf in my own constituency that cost the government $22,000. It was built 21 years ago, and since that time it has afforded free wharfage to 1,500 fishermen. It has been the means of bringing to the railways of this country an average of 365 carloads of freight every year. This shows what a small wharf built in a fishing section can bring to this country in the way of revenue. I believe that, so far as wharf accommodation is concerned, it should be left free to the fishermen. I think the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) has overlooked the fact that for the past 50 years, in fact since confederation, the fishermen of this country have enjoyed free wharfage on all the wharves built in the Dominion of Canada, and I believe that money spent for the building of wharves at the gateway of the country is money spent, to the advantage, not only to the fishermen of eastern Canada, but of the agriculturists of western Canada and all the provinces of this Dominion.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am not rising to criticize the estimates at the present time, but to make a suggestion, which suggestion was made and acted upon in this House two years ago, when the little group I belonged to occupied a small pen down in the corner, where they could not hear anything when the estimates were going through.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member calls it a pen.

Mr. CALDWELL: At that time we asked that the minister when putting through his estimates might move down nearer the middle of the chamber. The "not still small voice" at all, but the voice of New Brunswick reminded me that some hon. members down in that end of the chamber do not hear a word of what is going on up here, and I would ask the Minister of Public Works, and the other ministers who still have their estimates to put through, if they would adopt that suggestion. We in this section of the House are entitled to hear everything that is going on, but a great many hon. members do not hear anything at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am quite aware that the government is only practising what has been practised since confederation, but inasmuch as of recent years we have extended government activities into other spheres of public utility, such as grain elevators, it would appear to me pretty hard to account for treating the two cases differently, and if it is essential for the wharf to be maintained, it looks to me as if that principle can fairly be extended to government elevators. Those elevators feed the railways, as well as the wharves, and infinitely more so, in fact. When I was a minister and was asked to explain why we adopted a policy, I at least tried to do so. I am afraid the Minister of Public Works has felt himself unequal to the task on this occasion. He has sought rather to jockey his estimates through without giving us an explanation.

Mr. BUREAU: That is hardly a fair statement.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I hardly think that is correct. I have made myself very clear. In the larger sections where we have a wharf there is a charge made, but in the smaller districts it would not pay the government to hire a wharfinger to collect the charges, and it would only be a source of annoyance to the people, and I do not think he will recommend such a policy to be adopted throughout the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the charge in the case of large wharves representative of the interest on the cost at all, or is it merely negligible?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not advised as to that. The matter of charges is in the Marine department. I have no doubt that information could be had, but I have not got it.

Item agreed to.

Pointe Shea (Amherst)—Magdalen Islands—repairs to pier, $5,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it is not under contract.

Item agreed to.

Repentigny—wharf improvements, $3,400.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a repair or improvement to the old construction. The old crib structure will be protected by dumping stone on each side of it. The top of this stone will be hand rip-rapped on a slope of one in one from the new slope built along the approach up to the headblock. A concrete wall three feet thick at the base and eighteen inches at the top will be built. The estimated cost is:

Stone	$1,650
Concrete	600
Riprapping	700
Demolishing of concrete, inspection and contingencies	440
Total	$3,390

Item agreed to.

Rimouski wharf reconstruction, $20,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is this under contract? Last year $15,000 was voted. Will this appropriation of $20,000 complete the work of reconstruction? What is the nature of the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This expenditure is required to rebuild upon its whole side and for a length of 115 feet, the easterly wing of the old wharf which was destroyed by a storm in September, 1922. The construction is to be " closed face," and its easterly face pile sheathed. The work is to be done by day labour.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Where is all this labour being obtained? Is any attempt being made to bring labourers into this country to do all this work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the work is being done largely by day labour.

Mr. BOYS: I should like to make a little correction. A few minutes ago, in speaking of these estimates which I observe total $572,000, I mentioned that the total number of items was 48. I observe now that was the number on page 38 of the Estimates and the total number is 75, or, in other words, one item for every single member and senator from Quebec. It is evident that most of these hon. members are in their places, and I congratulate them on their splendid attendance to-night. I notice, as certain items are passed, certain gentlemen leave the chamber. By the time we reach the bottom of the list, I do not believe there will be a quorum on the other side of the House.

Mr. CANNON: Would the hon. gentleman point out any item in my constituency?

Mr. BOYS: No doubt the hon. member's turn is coming.

Mr. HANSON: The hon. member is being overlooked.

Mr. BOYS: In this proposed expenditure amounting to over $500,000, there must be something entirely wrong if there is not an item for the hon. member. I understood that this was a time of economy, and that this government of all governments was proposing to practise economy. I have before me the estimates of this department for the province of Quebec in the year 1921-22, and I observe that the total then was $303,000. In the estimates before us the total is $572,000. In Ontario, a somewhat important province, in the year 1921-22, the total was $370,000. The total for 1922-23, or last year, when the government got its first opportunity of practising economy was $643,000, and this year, it is $463,000.

10 p.m.

Mr. CANNON: A decrease.

Mr. BOYS: We may be getting economy in some departments although we have not seen it yet, and it is quite evident that economy does not exist in this department, certainly not in connection with the province of Quebec.

Item agreed to.

Rivière du Lièvre— Lock and dam—reconstruction of protection walls, $10,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is this to be done by day labour? It occurs to me that if the country knew that so much of this work was being done by day labour, in face of protestation of hon. members opposite when they were in opposition, the country would be greatly shocked. I have an impression that a very large portion of this expenditure is wasted on account of the work being done under that principle. I do not say that there is any corruption or anything of that sort; but we all know that under day work for governments, you do not get a good day's work for a day's pay. The minister ought to direct his attention to endeavouring, especially on these larger items, to see if he cannot get this work done by tender. I had some experience in municipal work in days gone by, and I would not think of spending sums amounting to from $18,000 to $25,000 on reconstruction, without seeing first what could be done by way of tender.

Mr. CAHILL: What province was that in?

Mr. HANSON: New Brunswick.

Mr. CANNON: The boys like it.

Mr. HANSON: That is the secret of the whole situation. The hon. member for Dorchester has revealed the whole scheme.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This particular item is under contract. I do not think it would be wise for me to repeat my argument in reply to remarks which the hon. member has made on numerous occasions this evening. I know that in the case of renewals and repairs, the department can, at times, do work more advantageously by day labour than by contract.

[Mr. Boys.]

Item agreed to.

Roberval wharf repairs, $4,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Would the minister give the committee some information regarding these matters? Those of us who live in some of the other provinces are not familiar with these localities and their requirements.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is in the Chicoutimi-Saguenay district. It is recommended by the district engineer. The work comprises:

Renewal of flooring, 30,000 feet, board measure	$1,500
Renewal of 10 x 10—stringers, 15,000 ft..	900
Renewing 12 x 12 cross ties and longitudinals, 15,000 ft..	900
Repairs to hoist apparatus, painting..	200
Contingencies..	500
Total..	$4,000

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What is the nature and volume of shipping at this point?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Roberval is situated on the west side of lake St. John and has about 2,000 inhabitants. It is the business centre of the region.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this work to be done under contract or by day labour? Straight work, such as the minister has described, is eminently work that should be done by contract.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think this is recommended for day labour.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What rate of wages is paid, by the day or by the hour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The foreman is, I think, paid by the month and labour by the hour.

Mr. HANSON: What wages is the minister paying for ordinary labour on work like this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That depends on the locality. We pay the prevailing wage in the district.

Mr. BOYS: Does the minister pay more for day labour in one part of Canada than another?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my hon. friend understands that contracts for public works have a clause stating that the prevailing rate is paid, and that is the rate that is paid by the government.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Some work was done on this last year, so that the minister can surely tell us the wages paid on the last job and the prevailing rate.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the wages paid, but I can assure my hon. friend they were at the prevailing rate in the district. The work included renewal of floors and stringers to a length of 250 feet. The foreman was paid $5 per working day.

Item agreed to.

Ste. Anne des Monts—reconstruction of training pier, $11,000.

Mr. HANSON: What is a training pier?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A pier to train or direct the current.

Mr. HANSON: Where is this place, and what does the work consist of?

Mr. CAHILL: Carried.

Mr. HANSON: No. We are not unduly critical, we are mindful of the "boys," but we want a little information.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in Gaspé county. The pier is also used by coasting schooners and lighters in shipping lumber. Four steamers ply weekly between Quebec and the principal ports of the Gaspé peninsula. The lumber shipments alone amount to $800,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much of last year's vote of $8,600 was spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The whole amount was spent—or probably will be spent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will this $11,000 complete the work, or is it just a regular hand-out year after year to the "boys" that we hear about?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is an unfair and improper statement. These works are necessary public works, and I am informed by our officials that the expenditure is proper. The information I gave a moment ago should indicate to my hon. friend that this is not a hand-out. When you get $800,000 worth of business going out of a harbour, it is certainly important that that harbour should be kept in shape.

Mr. MARCIL: It is only fair to the county of Gaspé, represented by His Honour the Speaker, to say that Ste. Anne des Monts is the largest settlement on the south shore of the St. Lawrence in that county, with a population of over 2,000. It is a rough mountainous country, without communication except by the maritime road which skirts the shore and which was built and is maintained by the province. I think this small grant is money well employed, especially when it is remembered that the locality is deprived of all railway communication, the nearest railway station being at Matane, thirty miles away. I think if the Speaker were here he would be able to convince the committee of the wisdom of this expenditure.

Mr. HANSON: How much money has been spent at this point in the last twenty-five years?

Mr. CANNON: It may be well to mention that this place has been known as a harbour for several years—Jacques Cartier landed there.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount expended is $172,000. I do not know whether that dates from the time Jacques Cartier landed there.

Mr. HANSON: During the last ten years?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): During the last thirty or forty years.

Mr. HANSON: During the last two years the equivalent of a bonus of $5 a head has been handed to the 2,000 people in that locality. On the same basis it would have cost this country millions of dollars to look after the rest of the people on the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. MARCIL: The hon. member for York-Sunbury should remember that these people have no railway communication whatever. They have seen railways spring up all over Canada, and have contributed their share of the building costs, without receiving any direct benefit. The nearest railway point is Matane, thirty miles away, and this small wharf is the only facility they have for carrying on their business. If the hon. member resided at Ste. Anne des Monts I am confident he would consider the money well spent.

Mr. BOYS: What bothers me is this: The minister asked last year for $8,600 for repairs to this pier. I presume inquiry was made at that time and it was found that that expenditure would complete the work then contemplated. If that estimate was accurate, I cannot understand why the minister now asks for another $11,000 for the same work. Are we to understand that this is not a sufficient sum to complete the repairs and that next year the minister will come back for a further sum to finish work that perhaps should have been completed this year? There have been a number of items of this kind, and if the work is properly estimated I cannot see why there should be any necessity for these further expenditures. One can understand a fourth or fifth of this amount being required, but this is quite a large item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Urgent repairs were made last year. It is proposed this year to build the shore end of the training wall—a different portion entirely.

Mr. BOYS: But was not that as necessary last year as this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The engineer did not report it as necessary last year.

Mr. HANSON: Have we any assurance that this vote will fix the pier up for some years, or may we expect a request for another hand-out next year?

Item agreed to.

St. Alexis—wharf repairs, $8,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is that a contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was the $15,000 in last year's estimates also under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. $3,500 has been spent on the contract. This is a re-vote of $8,000.

Item agreed to.

St. Charles—wharf reconstruction, $1,300.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Where is this wharf located?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): St. Hyacinthe-Rouville county.

Item agreed to.

St. Jean d'Orleans—repairs to wharf, $2,250.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much of last year's estimate was spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We spent $3,008.50.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Item agreed to.

St. Michel de Bellechasse—repairs to wharf, $16,000.

Mr. BOYS: Last year $40,500 was voted for this work, and this year the vote is $16,000, of which only $4,000 is a revote. That makes $52,000, which seems to me to be a very large sum for repairs. The committee should have some information regarding this large expenditure.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount asked for this year is to complete a contract entered into last year for $31,111. To that we add inspection and contingencies, $3,100; total, $34,000 odd. The expenditure on this contract in 1922-23 was $18,500, and $16,000 is now asked to complete the contract.

Mr. BOYS: Surely the minister must be wrong there. If he was able to secure a contract for $32,000 when the cost was expected to be $40,500, I congratulate him, but if that was the case and the money was not spent, the minister actually had more money than he needed, and the whole of this item should be a revote. The revote, however, is stated here to be only $4,000. Moreover, if the minister has $40,500 already voted, he has until the 31st of March to spend it, and if the contract calls for only $32,000 he should have a balance of $8,000 on hand and should not now be in need of anything.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The explanation here is not quite as clear as it might be. I find that there were two contracts, the first for $31,111 and the second for $18,600. The second was necessitated through recent damages to the wharf.

Mr. BOYS: That information satisfies me at once. That shows a total of about $49,600, and the difference between that and the $52,000 of which I spoke is made up by extras. In other words, instead of getting the contract for $32,000, the minister has entered into two contracts totalling $49,000, and finds he still needs another $3,000 to clear himself.

Mr. MILLAR: I have been tempted to ask a question, and I hope the minister will not think I am offensive in doing so. It is addressed more particularly to hon. members from Quebec, and I hardly expect an answer to it. I was wondering whether the excessive moisture in that province owing to the lack of prohibition had anything to do with the rapid decay of these many wharves. I would like to ask the minister if in view of the large expenditure on many of these wharves this year, it will be possible to make heavy cuts in expenditure next year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work being done should be of a permanent character, but my hon. friend will realize that these structures are subject to very great pressure from ice runs in the spring and often great damage is thus caused.

Item agreed to.

St. Omer—wharf reconstruction, $6,600.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Ville Marie—wharf repairs, $1,450.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I notice last year we voted $2,400 for this work. Will the amount asked for this year complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is the amount the engineers are asking for repairs. It is to be used for 20,000 feet of new flooring, and to supply wheel guards for two lines of traffic, and to paint the wharf capping.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What body of water is this wharf located in?

Mr. CAHILL: Lake Timiskaming.

Item agreed to.

Ontario harbours and rivers—Bayfield—repairs to piers, $4,750.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What constituency is this in?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): South Huron.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this work under contract?

Mr. KING: I think it will be done by day labour.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much was expended of the vote last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $4,034.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Who had the overseeing of the contract last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Murdock Ross was the foreman last year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: How far is this wharf from the city of Goderich, and what is the nature of the shipping at this point?

Mr. BLACK (Huron): I might tell the hon. member that nine fishing fleets go out from Bayfield harbour to fish on the lake. A year ago part of this wharf was taken away.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What took it away?

Mr. BLACK (Huron): A storm.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is this to complete the work started last year or is it additional work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is to complete the renconstruction of the inner pier and also for repairs to superstructure requiring 4,080 feet, board measure, lumber costing $480. To complete the reconstruction of the inner end of the pier will require $4,250.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the amount asked for this year be sufficient to complete the whole job?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is the report of the engineer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: How much of this is for dredging?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not for dredging.

Item agreed to.

Big Bay Point—wharf repairs, $2,500.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think we ought to have some explanation of this item.

Mr. BOYS: We have now come to the garden of Eden. This wharf is in the well-known county of Simcoe. All I am concerned in is to find out whether or not the item provides for the removal of a sunken vessel about which I have had occasion to write to the department. There is a sunken vessel there which has been a source of danger to navigation and certainly should be removed, and if the item provides for that—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It does.

Mr. BOYS: I am glad to hear it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Upon whose recommendation is this expenditure made? Is it asked for by the member or the engineer?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The engineer makes the recommendation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the recommendation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is asked for by District Engineer Wilson to repair damage done wharf by ice pressure and sunken wreck, and to remove this wreck.

Mr. CANNON: Does the department draw any revenue from this wharf?

Item agreed to.

Blind River—wharf reconstruction, $21,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this to be done by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is suggested that it be done by contract.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In what constituency is it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In East Algoma.

Mr. CANNON: How are ships steered up this Blind river?

Item agreed to.

Cobourg—breakwater construction, $25,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this work being done by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally, Ontario—repairs and improvements, $65,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How much was spent on this harbour last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditure amounted to $21,669.

Mr. GUTHRIE: May I again call the attention of the minister to the fact that in every instance he is asking amounts far in excess of what he spent last year for what is described as a contingent vote. I think I am within the mark when I say that he did not spend last year more than 50 per cent of the amount he is asking for this year, and as the Finance Minister has to raise by taxation the money we now vote why not reduce the item? The minister cannot get into trouble if he does that because if money is needed for an emergency he can always get it. Surely it is in the interest of the minister and the government to have the estimate reduced.

Mr. CANNON: Why does not the hon. member move for a reduction?

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend was not in the House this afternoon when I went pretty fully into this matter and did suggest a reduction in item after item. In the case of the estimates for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Northern Ontario I did suggest that the resolution in each case might be reduced and reduced with safety. If, owing to storm conditions, or something of the kind, larger amounts are wanted they can always be got. I would think it was in the interest of the department and of the government itself to keep the estimate down. Not more than half of the amount voted was spent last year and therefore why not cut off some of it?

Mr. MANION: Before the item carries I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that a wharf is required by the farming section at Cloud Bay. I may say that I have already written to him on the subject. I think that when such a sum as $65,000, or any part of it, is being spent, the interest of the farmers in the section referred to should be considered. Like the northern part of the province of Quebec, northern Ontario is a bush farm country and those who go out into such districts to do pioneer—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: I am not speaking of the districts represented by my hon. friends. As I say it is a bush farm country and those who go into such districts to do pioneer work deserve the consideration of those of us who do not follow suit. Therefore, I hope that when the minister is looking over the expenditures for the coming year he will give due consideration to the farmers in the Cloud Bay district who have no railway accommodation and who require needed assistance. I hope that he will take their case into consideration when the proper time comes.

Item agreed to.

Kincardine—repairs to piers, $10,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this work under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, it is under contract.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amount is $21,676.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Last year, evidently, there was an expenditure of $24,000, or was that the amount of the outlay?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, there was an expenditure of $14,000 I think, last year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And $10,000 is a revote? Will this amount complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is the expectation.

Item agreed to.

Little Current—dredging, $38,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the contemplated expenditure here, and for what purpose?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a dredging contract.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is Little Current in Manitoulin Island?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it is in the constituency of East Algoma. The amount of $38,000 is required to provide for a contract to dredge a through channel 150 feet wide to a depth of 22 feet, averaging about 125 feet long. The lowest tender for rock was $4.95 and for clay and boulders, $2.

Item agreed to.

Chatham—repairs to revetment wall and sheet piling, $16,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In whose constituency is this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in Kent county, I think.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That would be the constituency of the Minister of Labour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this new work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is to tear down and reconstruct for a length of 182 feet the present concrete revetment wall at the junction of McGregar's creek and Thames river, Tecumseh park, Chatham.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is the work being done under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It has not been contracted for yet.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the intention of the government as to this work? Is it to be done by contract or by the more popular system?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The recommendation is to carry it out under contract, I understand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: How much has been spent on this work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Previous to March, 1923, a total of $62,884.

Item agreed to.

Meaford—repairs to pier, $5,400.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There was an item for this work last year of $5,100. Now there is another item for the same work of $5,400. Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a continuation of a work undertaken last year. The sum of $5,281 was expended of last year's vote.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the present estimate complete the work, or will a further vote be needed next year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I presume this will complete the work. It is all that has been asked for by the engineer in charge. In his letter he asked that the work done in 1922-23 be continued to completion. So I take it this estimate will complete the undertaking.

Mr. BOYS: There is no contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I think not.

Item agreed to.

Midland—repairs to wharves, $9,400.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Did the department spend $3,000 at Midland last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $2,999 was expended last year.

Item agreed to.

Port Burwell—repairs to harbour works, $17,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this item under contract.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, it is a contract to repair damage to piers and breakwater occasioned by storm in September 1921.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $38,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What is the volume of traffic at Port Burwell?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is very large—a great coal centre. The revenue at this port 31st March, 1921, was $2,211,908. The revenue for the fiscal year ending 31st March last would add $200,000 to it. That is the duty on coal coming in. There has been a large expenditure on that harbour from its inception up to March 31st. The total freight carried by car ferry from 1906-1907 to 1921 amounted to 6,171,799 tons. There are three car ferry routes for the transport of coal and other merchandise across lake Erie from New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio points to Ontario. This combined lake and rail route offers a considerable reduction in the freight which has to be paid on coal and other commodities necessariiy imported from the United States.

Mr. BOYS: The contract calls for $38,000. Why is the total vote $42,000; that is $17,000 plus $25,000 voted last year?

Mr KING (Kootenay): There is an item for inspection and contingencies, $1,939.

Mr. BOYS: Is the difference made up of extras.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think it is just inspection and contigencies.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The item is very small considering the importance of this point and the volume of shipping. It is a main point on lake Erie and the transport of coal from this point is very great. The harbour is not in a very good state of repair at the present time, and a considerable amount of work should be done. I think the item is barely large enough to meet the requirements at this point. The figures just given the committee indicate the importance of this place. It is the main coal receiving point on the Canadian side of lake Erie. The Canadian Pacific Railway make this their chief point of entry for coal brought across the lake, and I am afraid that the amount in the estimates is not going to meet the requirements of that port during the present year.

Item agreed to.

Rondeau—repairs to piers, $10,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this work under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not under contract.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Will the minister inform the committee of the volume of shipping that is done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is an important coaling station. The exports and imports during the year 1921 were as follows:

Imports—	Cars
Coal imported	5,129
Steel	143
Miscellaneous	60
	5,332

Exports—	Cars
Scrap steel	6
Miscellaneous	30
Total	36

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the nature of these repairs?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): General repairs to timber sections of both piers, $7,600; 48 fender piles, 45 to 50 feet long along west pier, $1,200 and 52 sheet piles $1,000, incidentals $200, making $10,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Could this not reasonably be let by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is apparently recommended for day labour in the discretion of the engineer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is in Kent county also?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe it is.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who is the engineer who recommends day labour work in Kent county?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): District engineer Craig.

Mr. MEIGHEN: John Craig?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it is Hugo Craig.

Item agreed to.

Southampton—breakwater repairs, $6,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this under contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, recommended for day labour.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Tell us the nature of the work.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): East breakwater, renewal of face timbers costing $560, and west breakwater, renewal of face timbers, crossties, sheeting, stringers and decking, $5,280, incidentals $160, total $6,000.

Item agreed to.

Thames River—repairs to lighthouse wharf, $1,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Where are these repairs to be made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Thames river in Essex county, I think. The note I have is, "Renew the south side wall for length of 100 feet."

Item agreed to.

Toronto Island—breakwater protection, $30,000.

Mr. CANNON: What is the reason for those expenditures. Was there any report made and if so by whom?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to complete a contract entered into with the Randolph Macdonald Company for the construction of rubble mound breakwater 1,700 feet, and for repairs to the old breakwater by depositing at various points along the face, large stones. The total cost is $30,000.

Mr. CANNON: When was the contract first let?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): May, 1920.

Mr. CANNON: How much money has already been expended?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $216,000.

Mr. CANNON: What is the nature of the shipping there?

Mr. DUFF: Why was all the money not voted at one time?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Maybe the minister could give the corresponding figures for Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. DUFF: We are discussing Ontario now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Are the parties that have this contract the same parties that had the original contract?

Mr. DUFF: They are the same Tories.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are the same firm.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I hope the minister will be able to give us some assurance that the recommendations which were made to him regarding the large work that the government has contracted with the city of Toronto to perform, will be carried out, in a measure at least, by a larger appropriation in the Supplementary Estimates. The minister has inspected the work to be done, and I think he fully realizes the need for it. I think he is advised also of the Privy Council Order, I believe, No. 1426, wherein the government contracted with the city of Toronto to do a certain work.

11 p.m.

The city has gone ahead on the basis of that contract; it has expended very large sums of its own money, and having faith in that contract, the city is looking forward to a larger expenditure in connection with completing the breakwater, which is an absolute necessity in view of the work that has been done. I feel that Toronto has the sympathetic consideration of the minister in this matter, and I hope he will realize, in pursuance of the undertaking, the contract already entered into, the necessities of the case as regards Toronto.

Mr. CANNON: Will this $30,000 enable the government to complete the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will complete the present contract.

Mr. CANNON: Will the present contract finish the work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are in the department recommendations for further work at that point; but we are not providing for any further expenditure at this time.

Mr. BOYS: Are there any extras in connection with this large contract?

Mr. CANNON: I am sorry to see that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) is not in his seat. This is certainly an item where his economy would be applied to good purpose. This money is not being spent to improve shipping facilities or to help trade; but hon. members will, no doubt, be surprised to learn that this is for an amusement park at Toronto, and I do not think this government should provide amusement places, even—

Mr. RYCKMAN: Will the hon. member pardon me? I should like to ask him where he gets his information that this is for an amusement park. I may tell the hon. member that not one dollar nor one cent of the money that has been spent or that will be spent by the Dominion government will go towards the end he suggests. The fact of the matter is that the city of Toronto has spent in the neighbourhood of $22,000,000, and I will admit that some of that money has gone into making a very beautiful city; but not one dollar of the money that the hon. member is so careful about in this item is going in the way he suggests.

Mr. CANNON: What is the use of this government spending $246,000, if it took $20,000,000 of the money of the city of Toronto to try to make a harbour and they have not yet succeeded? Everybody knows about this amusement park. My hon. friend wants to know my sources of information. I read the Toronto papers very carefully every day.

Mr. GRAHAM: Including the Orange Sentinel.

Mr. CANNON: Including the Orange Sentinel. That is where I get my information. I am very sorry the hon. member for South Wellington is not present. I should like to have him repeat, in connection with this item, the lesson in economy which he gave us earlier in the evening. Moreover, is Toronto a fit place for the government to build an amusement park? It is altogether immoral to do so. It will disturb the population from its religious and holy thoughts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not like to appear in the role of a pedagogue towards the government party; but I really think it would contribute to the usefulness of this Chamber if the government would see to it that some little preliminary instruction was given to its members on the facts associated with the government's estimates. The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) has clearly been under the influence of a delusion for some time. There has never been a dollar of public money spent towards any amusement ground in Toronto, and I do not think there is in this Dominion a city that has itself contributed so much towards those purposes for which, in other places, the Dominion government provides, as has the city of Toronto. If the hon. member will commence his oration by showing that a dollar has gone to any amusement purpose in Toronto out of the treasury of Canada, from that on there will be an intelligible lesson to be drawn from his remarks. But the onus is on him to show that, and it cannot be done. Not only can he not show that; but he cannot succeed in showing that the city of Toronto itself has not done very much that, in other places, has been wholly done by the Dominion government in the way of navigation and port facilities.

Mr. CANNON: I withdraw absolutely nothing of the remarks which I have just made, notwithstanding what the leader of the Opposition has said. As to the lesson which he has intended to give me—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I meant that his minister should give it.

Mr. CANNON: —I might say to the right hon. gentleman that I know parliamentary rules and customs well enough to dispense with any lesson from him. I have shown this on former occasions, and if my right hon.

friend again uses towards another hon. member in this House the fatherly language which he has just adopted, he may find that I am a rather unruly child.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That the hon. member is an unruly child, I have found out already; I do not need that lesson again. I did not suggest that he did not know the rules of the House. I know he does. I suggest that before he endeavours to raise some fun at the expense of Toronto by intimating that it has received special favours, he owes it to this House to prove that the money of Canada has gone to afford amusements for the people of Toronto. That he has not done, and that he cannot do.

Mr. SPENCE: It is a pity hon. members are not better posted when they get up to speak. I would tell my hon. friend across the way that this is not to add to the harbour, but to protect the eastern entrance to the bay, which is government property and the city gets no benefit from it whatever.

Mr. CANNON: Is not the bay in the harbour?

Mr. SPENCE: No, sir.

Mr. CANNON: Or the harbour in the bay?

Mr. SPENCE: The harbour is on this side of the bay. If my hon. friend will come to Toronto—

Mr. CANNON: I am going next week.

Mr. SPENCE: —and see what sports we have there, he will be very well satisfied.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Before the item carries I wish to state the position in which the hon. member for Dorchester places himself by declining to withdraw a remark which we are told upon authority is untrue, namely, that of asserting something which he cannot prove.

RUSSIAN TRADE MISSION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): In the Manchester Guardian of 2nd February, in the report of an interview with Litvinoff by Arthur Ransome, it is stated that the Canadian government has refused to admit the Russian Trade Mission which we ourselves had previously invited. I should like to ask, has Canada a treaty with Russia, and has the Russian Trade Mission been refused admission as stated? And, if so, why?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce):- There was an understanding arrived at that Canada would accept the conditions agreed upon between Russia and Great Britain, that Canada would send a trade mission to Russia and that Russia might send a trade mission to Canada. But in looking into the possibilities of trade with Russia we discovered that the principal source of purchase for Russia was in London, and the department considered that it was not advisable that Canada should spend money in sending a trade agent to Russia in view of the fact that all her purchases were made in the city of London. Russia proposed sending a trade mission to Canada and submitted certain names as members of that mission, but in view of reports presented it was considered that certain members whose names had been submitted were undesirable citizens, and an intimation was given that it was not advisable to admit these citizens with a record against them into Canada. Canada proposes to advise the British government, which is handling the matter, that we will be prepared to admit any Russian trade delegation which has a clean record in the British Isles.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not catch the answer to the first part of my question. Have we a treaty with Russia at the present time?

Mr. ROBB: No. We have accepted the conditions agreed upon between Great Britain and Russia, and that allows us to have trade relations with Russia.

PRIVILEGE—MR. SHAW

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (Calgary West): I rise to a question of privilege. An article appeared in the Grain Growers' Guide under the heading of "Our Ottawa Letter," apparently from the Ottawa correspondent, under date of 14th February last, in which the following reference was made to myself:

> The fourteen Progressives who voted against the Shaw amendment did so because not only was it, in their opinion, surperfluous, but they for the most part thought that it was presented somewhat as a result of an understanding with the Conservatives, who refrained from submitting a motion. Reports had been going the round to the effect that there was an understanding in this direction.

I want to say that there is not the slightest foundation in fact for the insidious suggestion contained in the portion of the article which I have just read.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is very damaging, too.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not blame you.

Mr. SHAW: I make this statement because I think it is only fair not only to myself but also to the Conservative party. I think it is also only fair to state that it was not a member of the Press Gallery who wrote the article in question. Readers of this paper, the Grain Growers' Guide, will, however, be interested in noting that the Ottawa correspondent is the press representative in this city of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and in addition writes for a well known Wall Street financial journal.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I owe it to the hon. member (Mr. Shaw) to say that his words as respects anything in the way of an understanding are absolutely true; I had no knowledge direct or indirect of his motion. I may add as well that now I hope that he, and others more or less associated with him, will understand how I as leader of the Conservative party have been, at the hands of this same journal, very frequently done grave injustice to.

COMBINES, MONOPOLIES, TRUSTS AND MERGERS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers; for the administration of the proposed act by a Minister of the Crown to be named by the Governor in Council; for the appointment of a registrar to receive, register and deal with applications for such investigations, and for the appointment of commissioners from time to time by the Governor in Council to hold investigations; for the payment of the registrar, commissioners and witnesses and to establish such offices, with assistants, as may be required; for power to remit or reduce duties where combines are proved to exist; for the revocation of patent rights in certain cases; for prosecution by the Attorney General of any province, or upon his failure to act, by the Solicitor General; and for the imposition of penalties for violation of the provisions of the proposed legislation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Explain.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I will make the explanation at the moment that I thought of making on the introduction of the bill. It will cover the same ground.

There is at the present time no effective legislation against combines which are operating or may operate to the detriment of or against the interest of the public, whether producers, consumers or others. Such legislation as has been enacted by this parliament on the subject of combines in restraint of trade, the enhancement of prices and the like, is divisible broadly into three groups: first, the legislation with respect to conspiracies and combinations in restraint of trade which is embodied in the Criminal Code. It was originally enacted in a statute passed in 1889, which statute was to all intents and purposes declaratory of the common law. In 1892 this act was repealed by the Criminal Code, but the substance of its essential provision was re-enacted in section 520 of the code of that year. The section of the code was amended in 1900 and again I think in 1906 when the Criminal Code was under consideration. It now stands as section 498 of the Criminal Code in virtually the same words as the original enactment of 1889.

The second group of provisions dealing with combines in restraint of trade, or operating to the detriment of the public, were those of the Combines Investigation Act of 1910 which provides for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers.

The third group is comprised in the legislation embodied in the Board of Commerce Act and the Combines and Fair Prices Act of 1919.

The Combines and Fair Prices Act repealed the Combines Investigation Act of 1910. Such protection, therefore, as that act may have been presumed to have afforded to the public was removed by the Combines and Fair Prices Act of 1919. On the other hand, the Combines and Fair Prices Act of 1919 was itself dependent upon the Board of Commerce Act and the functioning of the Board of Commerce under that act. As hon. members of the House know, the Board of Commerce, under the Board of Commerce Act, never did function properly and has ceased to exist, so that such protection as might have been presumed to be afforded consumers or producers under the Board of Commerce Act and the Combines and Fair Prices Act also no longer exists. While the Board of Commerce Act is not effective in any of its provisions so far as the protection of the public is concerned, Section 11 of the Combines and Fair Prices Act provides that no prosecution can be commenced under section 498 of the Criminal Code except under the written authority of the Board of Commerce. That section is still in the statute and as long as the statute remains, such protection as the Criminal Code may be assumed to have afforded producers and consumers is also of no effect.

The legislation which the government proposes to introduce, repeals the Board of Commerce Act 1919 and the Combines and Fair Prices Act 1919, in that way freeing the statutes of two enactments which have become dead letters. On the other hand, this repeal will have the effect of reviving what there may be of virtue in section 498 of the Criminal Code which relates to conspiracies or combinations in restraint of trade.

Now, it is recognized that there are distinct limitations in the matter of the protection of the public under the provisions of the Criminal Code. The legislation which the government is introducing proceeds on the theory that the reason why section 498 of the Criminal Code is of so little effect is not that there are no combinations that are detrimental to the public or that such combinations are rare, but rather that the existence of these combinations, and their method of operation is difficult to discover; that what is needed is effective machinery of investigation which will disclose the existence of combines operating to the detriment of the public, and afford the information whereby proceedings under the Criminal Code can be made really effective in the case of individuals who are violating its provisions, or who are associated with combines that are operating to the detriment of the public. The legislation to be introduced provides machinery for investigation which it is hoped and believed will be effective toward this end. I will describe the proposed method of investigation a little more in detail when I refer to that particular phase of the subject.

The bill proposes to supplement the clause in the present Criminal Code by a provision creating a new criminal offence; making it an offence for any person to be a party or privy to or knowingly to assist in the formation or operation of a combine operating to the detriment of the public—a combine as defined in the legislation which is proposed. It will be readily observed that to be effective, the definition of the word "combine" must be made sufficiently comprehensive to include any agreement or arrangement, whether tacit, implied or expressed, which has the effect in practice of creating a combination that is operating against the public interest; and the definition of the word "combine", as set forth in the proposed legislation, has been drafted with the end in view of having it sufficiently broad to include all possibilities under that head. On the other hand, that parties may be properly protected in the matter of criminal prosecutions and in order that no one may be prosecuted without having the advantages which the courts of law and the procedure in the courts throw about one who is brought before them for trial, a provision is included in the proposed legislation to the effect that no prosecution can take place except at the instance of the Attorney General of a province or the Solicitor General of the Dominion.

The remedies that are proposed are first of all, as indicated, the remedy of publicity. There are some offences as to which publicity is more effective as a remedy than penalty. The law is drafted so as to make possible the widest publicity with respect to any offence under its provisions.

Then there is the remedy of penalty, to which I have already referred, as a result of criminal prosecution. There are other remedies which may be exercised as the circumstances warrant—for example where it would appear that in the case of an article of commerce the parties concerned were profiting by virtue of the tariff as it is, power is given to the Governor in Council to reduce or to abolish duties with respect to that particular article. Similarly, where a patent is being used to limit manufacture, or in other ways limit conpetition, to the detriment of the public, power is given for the revocation of the patent.

In the proposed legislation the government has sought to be guided by such experience as the country has had in the workings of previous legislation; to retain what may have been of value in the Combines Investigation Act of 1910, and what may have been of value in the Board of Commerce Act and the Combines and Fair Prices Act of 1919, but to meet, as far as may be possible, what has been found defective or in the nature of limitation in the successful working of both these enactments. The Combines Investigation Act of 1910 provided that where any six persons were of the opinion that a combine existed which was detrimental to the public they might appear before any judge of a high court and make out a prima facie case. If they succeeded, the judge was required to report accordingly to the registrar appointed under the act. The registrar thereupon called upon the parties who had made out the prima facie case, and upon the parties concerned in the combine, each to name a representative for a board, the two to agree upon a third representative, and the three thus named were constituted a board of investigation, which board was given all the powers of a court of record. When the board had made its report the Governor in Council was then free to take such action as was thought best in accordance with other provisions of the statute, provisions similar to those respecting the reduction of customs duties, the revocation of patents, and criminal proceedings, to which I have already alluded.

It was found under the Combines Investigation Act that obliging individuals in the first instance to associate themselves together and make out a prima facie case before a judge discouraged in large measure any investigation. The parties seemed to be under the impression—although the law did not give ground for it—that they would necessarily have to bear the expense of the preliminary investigation, and might have to bear the expense of the investigation before the board that was subsequently appointed. For that reason, and possibly others as well, the Combines Investigation Act of 1910 was not used to the extent expected at the time that that measure was passed.

In the present proposed legisation the objection which I have just referred to has been removed by not obliging the parties to get together and prove a case before a judge in the first instance, but by permitting parties who believe a combine is operating in restraint of trade to make direct application to the registrar to be appointed under this act, and giving power to the registrar himself to make an investigation to satisfy his own mind as to whether such a combination does exist or not. The act gives the registrar very full powers. He may, if he so desires, proceed on his own initiative. The act further provides that the government may appoint one or more commissioners, where it is shown before the registrar, or for other reasons there are grounds for believing that the combine is operating to the detriment of the public. The government may appoint these commissioners with all the powers that commissioners have under the Enquiries Act, take evidence under oath, visit the premises, inspect books, compel the production of documents, if they like. Ample provision is made to secure the due exercise of these powers. Under the Board of Commerce Act there was created an extraordinary court, a court of record with powers of inquisition, accusation and judgment, all exercisable by the same body. I will not go into the reasons which seemed to render a court of that kind valueless for the purpose for which it was instituted. I will simply point out that it had functions which seldom are combined in any one body, that namely of beginning investigation, of laying information, of prosecuting, of pronouncing judgment and seeing to the enforcement of that judgment. It moreover was a single court, constituted of a definite personnel; it was supposed to have and did have virtually the whole say as to what prosecutions should be commenced, even as I have already indicated, for violations of the Criminal Code. Experience has shown that a board of that kind cannot be expected to function properly, and instead, therefore, of a board of that character, this measure proposes to give full power of investigation to commissioners to be specially appointed from time to time as occasion may require.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that that broadly is the outline of the proposed legislation.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I do not think any great object could be served by a prolonged discussion, but I felt that I could say something anent the historical summary given by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). I remark first of all that the title of the bill, as it appears in the introduction of bills, and as it is summarized again, reflected at least in this motion, is not in accord with what was promised in the Speech from the Throne. The Speech from the Throne promised legislation "to safeguard the interests of producers and consumers" against Trust monopolies and combines, thereby foreshadowing, not investigatory legislation, but executory legislation, legislation that would itself have a controlling and final authority over such trusts, monopolies and combines. The promising language of the Speech from the Throne was considerably modulated when the title of the bill came down—"an Act to Provide for the Investigation of Combines, Monopolies, Trusts and Mergers." The Enquiries Act today would give us as ample powers of investigation as anyone would wish, that is to say, if the contemplated legislation is for investigation, and nothing further. The Combines Investigation Act was, it is true, repealed by the Combines and Fair Prices Act, 1919. The Combines Investigation Act provided for the investigation of trusts or mergers upon information of six persons and certain responsibilities taken by them not of a financial character. That act was on the statute books for a good many years. It was an investigatory act, that is to say, it looked to investigation and investigation alone. There could be no prosecution under it but there was one investigation commenced, in the course of its long existence. That was against the United Shoe Machinery Company. That company was charged with being a trust combine within the meaning of that act. The necessary complaint was laid, and the whole paraphernalia of the act was gone through. It lasted some years, went through some of the courts, cost many thousands of dollars, and as the end approached, it appeared that by the time the end was reached we would be exactly where we began, assuming we would succeed. In a word, after all the machinery of the act was exhausted, one had to start all over again and prosecute the alleged combine monopoly or trust, adduce again the evidence before the court, call upon the court for injunction restraining proceedings, and in the meantime of course the company under investigation would simply have to alter its procedure by such degree or by such angle as evidently would comply with the dictum that may have been secured from the judge in the process of the investigation, which done, it would be quite absolved from liability under the effective prosecution that would follow. In a word, the presence of the act, in so far as it was a necessary preliminary to prosecution, was really a buffer as between the consumer and producer on the one hand and the trust and merger on the other. It would have been better and more effective legislation to have had the criminal code in effect alone, and have machinery provided whereby the company, the trust or combine, could be prosecuted under the terms of the code. The Combines and Fair Prices Act was passed in 1919, and that, in conjunction with its accompanying legislation, the Board of Commerce Act, provided a body and endowed it with power to do what the Prime Minister fairly describes, namely, lay—not institute—proceedings itself when it had reason to believe that trusts were operating in restraint of trade, a combine against the interests of the public. Whatever may be said of those two acts —I do not for one moment say they were not subject to criticism, and that weaknesses did not develop—it cannot be said that ample powers were not given to the Board of Commerce, the board that was entrusted with the enforcing of both statutes. The powers given were wide and sweeping—wider than had ever been given before in any country in the world; in fact they were undoubtedly in my judgment too wide, and as a consequence of that—perhaps there were other causes as well —when the proceedings brought were called in question and challenged before the courts, the courts held that parliament in endeavouring to arm the board with power to control the depredations of trusts and combines had gone beyond its jurisdiction. Since that time, while the statutes have remained, they are not effective statutes because there has been no board operating. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) states that a section in one of these acts, I think the Combines and Fair Prices Act, provides that the interposition of the Board of Commerce and its authority should be secured before there should be criminal prosecution under section 498 of the code and that, inasmuch as these two acts still exist, although not operative, criminal presecutions are now forbidden. If that be the case, it had not been drawn to my attention. Undoubtedly that should be removed and there should be a re-establishment of the full right of prosecution under the code.

Another section provided for the repeal of the Combines Investigation Act of earlier years. This, of course, was necessary as a new, much more complete and drastic method was being adopted.

The experience of these years has led me to one main conclusion. Before I mention it, I will make some reference to what I understand by the Prime Minister's explanation. So far as I can gather from his explanation, what he purposes to do is substantially to reinstate the old Combines Investigation Act, not in its exact terms, because there are some alterations. There are to be registrars or commissioners appointed before whom complaints are to be laid and who are to have investigatory powers. Apparently, they are to exercise some of the functions which under the old act, were exercised by the courts of the land. I have not much hope of that being an improvement. What I apprehend is this, that this bill, when it comes, will not get any further than the old act, and that means that it will simply compel prosecution to travel in a circle and to traverse the circle twice instead of once.

In the United States, they have approached the subject in another way. The Federal Trade Commission has certain powers; but the government of the country, having established laws which define trusts, monopolies, combines and restraints of trade, having limited the activities in scope and character, of trusts, monopolies and combines, then take it upon themselves to execute these laws and to institute prosecutions for violations of their law, such prosecutions requiring the readjustment of the whole merging companies. They operated this legislation against the United Shoe Machinery Company; but they had much better success than we could ever have had under the old act. The government of the United States, carrying on its prosecution, obtained the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, declaring that this company's methods of operation were illegal, assessing them with damages for the same, and demanding that within a certain time the whole method be altered. It has been altered, very much, undoubtedly, to the loss of the company; but at all events effective curtailment has taken place, because the principle of government responsibility for prosecution is embodied in the United States legislation. The initiative is there; the powers are there, effective powers and not merely circuitous, ambitory and purposeless powers. I hope this bill will go further than we are led to expect from the title; in a word that there will be something executory, final and effective about it, and it will not be merely a repetition of the old act, the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would ask my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) to judge the proposed legislation, not by the title, but by its provisions. As he well knows, a title is meaningless when it comes to courts of law and positive action, but the provisions of an enactment are everything. I think my right hon. friend will find, that all that was promised in the Speech from the Throne that:—

> A bill will be submitted to you to safeguard the interests of consumers and producers from undue enhancement of prices or unfair restriction of trade by combines, monopolies, trusts, or mergers.

—has been adequately met in the proposed legislation.

I may mention to my right hon. friend the reason which has prompted the government to lay particular emphasis on the investigation aspect of the legislation. I pointed out, in speaking on the measure at the outset, that the difficulty of proceeding under the Criminal Code has been found to be due, not to the circumstances that combines are rare or that they do not occasion restraint of trade, but to the fact that their existence and particularly their method of operation, is sometimes very difficult to discover, and the only way in which it can be brought to light is by thorough and full powers of investigation. The section in the Criminal Code relating to conspiracies and combines in restraint of trade differs from most other sections of the code in this particular, that other offences under the code are, for the most part, obvious, whereas the existence and operation of combines is not. If murder, or theft, or perjury is committed, the fact is known at once, and the main difficulty of those whose duty it is to enforce the law is to apprehend the offender and bring him before the courts. But when the matter is one of the existence or operation of a combine, the difficulty is, not to apprehend the offender, once he is known, but to find out first of all to what extent he is operating against the public interest; to make clear the nature and extent of the offence. That can be done only by giving very full powers of investigation, and for that reason the government has thought it well to lay particular emphasis on the investigation feature of the legislation.

As to the proposed legislation being something more than a mere act of investigation, I would like to quote just one clause which appears in the bill and which is in the nature of the creation of a new offence. I only hope that when we come to enacting this clause, my right hon. friend and those who sit around him will not raise the objection that it goes too far and that it is likely, perhaps, to effect more in the way of concrete, executive action than he and his friends would like. The clause reads:

> Everyone is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding $10,000 or to two years' imprisonment, or if a corporation to a penalty not exceeding $25,000, who is a party or privy to or knowingly assists in the formation or operation of a combine as defined in this act.

The definition of "combine" as given in the act reads:

> The expression "combine" in this act shall be deemed to have reference to such combines immediately hereinafter defined as in the opinion of the registrar or any commissioner have operated or are likely to operate to the detriment of or against the interest of the public, whether consumers, producers or others; and limited as aforesaid, the expression as used in this act shall be deemed to include (1) mergers, trusts and monopolies socalled, and (2) the relation resulting from the purchase, lease, or other acquisition by any person of any control over or interest in the whole or part of the business of any other person, and (3) any actual or tacit contract, agreement, arrangement or combination which has or is designed to have the effect of (i) limiting facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing; or, (ii) preventing, limiting or lessening manufacture or production; or (iii) fixing a common sale or a resale price, or a common rental, or a common cost of storage or transportation; or (iv) enhancing the price, rental or cost of article, rental storage or transportation; or (v) preventing or lessening competition in, or substantially controlling within any particular area or district or generally, production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, storage, transportation, insurance or supply; or (vi) otherwise restraining or injuring trade or commerce.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And now I might say a word with reference to the re-enactment of some sections of the Combines Act of 1910.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the Prime Minister goes further would he explain at this point wherein that is at all more stringent than the provisions of section 498 of the code as it now stands?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Section 498 of the code uses the words "unduly" and "unreasonably",—"unduly enhancing", and "unreasonably advancing" prices; and—

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not always. The word "unduly" appears in subsection A in regard to certain matters, for example, unduly limiting the facilities for transportation. In subsection B, however, it is not used in connection with trade or commerce in relation to any article or commodity. In the general clause about injuring trade it is not used at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have not the two provisions side by side, but if my right hon. friend will make a comparison of them when we are in committee on the bill he will find that of the two definitions this is very much broader and goes very much further than the Criminal Code as it stands to-day. As my right hon. friend has pointed out, the word "unduly" does appear in the code where it does not appear in this definition; and he will also find elsewhere in the code the word "unreasonably". But there are other particulars in which this definition is broader, and I will indicate them to the House when I have the two provisions side by side so as to be able to compare them. With respect to what my right hon. friend has said as to this legislation re-enacting some of the provisions of the Combines and Investigation Act of 1910, let me say to him and to the House at once that it does. But I would draw his attention to this fact, that the legislation of 1919 also re-enacted certain of the provisions of the act of 1910. For example, the Combines and Fair Prices Act and the Board of Commerce Act between them re-enacted the provision giving the Governor in Council power to reduce duties, which appeared for the first time in the Combines Act of 1910, and also re-enacted the provision with respect to the revocation of patents, and as well, I think, with respect to providing information for criminal prosecutions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: These are in the Combines and Fair Prices Act of 1919; they are the law to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They are in the act of 1919, but they were all taken from the act of 1910.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I have said, the object of this legislation is to retain anything of value in the previous legislation. I am quite willing to go halves with my right hon. friend as to the previous legislation, both his and the legislation I had to do with, not meeting the case fully. I think it has all been by way of experiment with a very difficult subject; and I believe that the experience, both under the act of 1910 and under the legislation of 1919, will be helpful to this House in deciding upon the worth of the parts of the legislation which we have retained and of the new clauses which we have introduced. Our aim has been to take from all existing or past legislation what is likely to be effective and helpful and to add additional features where there has been something lacking in the law as it stands or previously stood; for our desire is to place on the statutes an act which will be of real service to consumers and producers alike in protecting them against the operations of combines which may be detrimental to the public interest.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mackenzie King thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 54 to provide for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS—HARBOURS AND RIVERS

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Public Works—Manitoba—harbours and rivers generally, $15,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under this heading I want to ask the minister what he has done towards restoring to the city of Portage la Prairie the facilities for its sewerage outlet of which this government deprived it by the construction of a ditch in the Assiniboine river in 1908. I have been in communication with the minister on the matter, as also have the city and the hon. member for that constituency (Mr. Leader). The latest information I have is that no progress at all has been made and I see nothing in the estimates to indicate that there will be any progress. This estimate is the same as it was a year ago; but this sum stipulated here, if it were all applied to the one purpose, would not, according to my information, be a beginning towards the repairing of the damages which the government caused that city. We are right now at the edge of spring; the minister knows the circumstances, I need not at this moment detail them, because he is fully aware of them. But already about eight months of delay have occurred and no matter what the government does now there are sure to be somewhat serious conditions. I am sorry indeed that no provision is made here, because this vote is not for Portage la Prairie work and in any event is quite insufficient for anything practical. The government cannot make speed enough to repair this damage, and apparently no effort is being made to do anything at all. I hope for a more favourable reply and a more definite statement than has yet been obtainable from the department.

4 p.m.

Mr. LEADER: On December 6, 1921, I was elected representative for the city of Portage la Prairie.

Mr. DUFF: Whom did you defeat?

Mr. LEADER: For the information of the House, and incidentally for the information of the right hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Meighen), I want to say that up to this time I have not delegated my duties to anyone else, nor do I intend to do so. I leave that to a higher tribunal.

Now, let me say a word in regard to this item. Last year a serious condition prevailed in Manitoba through the overflowing of the Assiniboine river. I brought the matter to the attention of the government, and instead of throwing brickbats at the administration, as we sometimes have to do, I want to throw a bouquet to-day; I want to thank them for coming to the assistance of the settlers along the Assiniboine river and to voice the appreciation of my constituents in Portage la Prairie for the prompt action taken in that connection. I pointed out last year that this question of repairing the dykes along the Assiniboine river had been a live one for the last forty years. The banks of that river overflow periodically, and usually no attention is paid to the matter until on the eve of an election, when some candidate is promised that assistance will be given. In that respect I cannot exonerate either of the late governments; both were guilty. I suggest to the government to-day that they take this matter up and, in conjunction with the province or perhaps with the municipalities, enter into some kind of arrangement under which such a situation may be taken care of in the future. As it is now, nobody seems to be willing to take the responsibility. There is no doubt in my mind that the Dominion government is liable, because the river, having been declared a navigable stream, is certainly under the jurisdiction of the federal authority, and the province has very properly declined to assume the responsibility. But I believe that an arrangement could be made whereby the situation would be taken care of without reference to election promises—that is Progressive politics. I have been negotiating with the government for some time with respect to the diversion of the waters of the Assiniboine river from their original channel and the resulting exposure of the mouth of the sewer outlet from the city of Portage la Prairie, but I must admit that the government have been very slow in the matter. I know, however, that they have had their engineers over the ground; various estimates have been made and various solutions of the problem advanced. I would like to know from the government—in fact, I may tell the House that I do know, but for the information of the hon. members I would ask the minister to tell us what proposal he has in mind to take care of the situation that has developed at Portage la Prairie.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Public Works): The right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) are right in assuming that there is no appropriation under this item for taking care of the sewers at Portage la Prairie. The right hon. gentleman stated in his opening remarks that this government had failed. That is not right; the government are dealing with conditions as they found them. The government of Canada probably did fail. This work was designed and carried through at the request of the people of Portage la Prairie and adjoining districts. In 1908, on account of the lands being flooded, they asked the Dominion government to construct a channel that would carry off the overflow during the high water period. If the work had been carried out as designed by the engineers, probably the difficulties we find to-day would not exist. However, appropriations were not forthcoming and the work was neglected, with the result that the main stream became diverted and to-day the bed of the river is in the new channel, leaving the sewer pipe from the town of Portage in the old channel and causing it to discharge at this season of the year on an empty river bed. That is undoubtedly a serious matter from the point of view of the public health of the citizens of Portage. When it was brought to my attention last year I took a sympathetic attitude and instituted a careful investigation to see in what way the Department of Public Works could afford relief in connection with a difficulty that had developed, to some extent, through its own activities. But we found a rather peculiar disposition on the part of those controlling the affairs of the people of Portage la Prairie. Evidently they are going to sit back and continue to cry for help from the Dominion government. I am desirous of assisting them, but I would like to see them try to do something for themselves. Undoubtedly the work was originally carried out for the advantage of the people of the town and the adjoining territory; in fact, it was constructed on their application. We are trying to negotiate with the council with a view to arriving at an agreement in the matter. I have had a report made by the district engineer, supported by a report submitted by the late Chief Engineer, Mr. St. Laurent. I have a recommendation that I propose to make to council if we can succeed in our negotiations with the citizens of Portage la Prairie. I am of the opinion that the Dominion government should supply the funds necessary to extend the sewer pipe from its present position into the new bed of the river or into another portion of the river, and that, I think, is as far as the Department of Public Works should go. Apparently, however, that is not the wish of the citizens of Portage la Prairie; at least, they have not so stated to us. The matter is under negotiation. I think that is a fairly clear statement of the facts.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What does the government propose to do about the Assiniboine a little higher up, at the town of Brandon—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the hon. member will permit me to interrupt; we are not through with this phase of it yet. I did not know I had represented myself, Mr. Chairman, as the member for Portage la Prairie. I quite recognize that the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Leader) was elected for that constituency at the last election. Notwithstanding that fact, however, it so turns out that I have been requested to take this matter up by the council of the city of Portage la Prairie. Having such authority I do not require the further authority of the hon. member. I have been written to repeatedly and asked to assist the city in the matter, by the clerk as well as by the mayor. What I want is to get this work done and get the minister's promise to do it now. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie can have the glory—if he so desires. I had in no way reflected on him.

Mr. LEADER: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes.

Mr. LEADER: The hon. gentleman is very kind. He said he had been requested by the mayor and council and by different citizens of Portage to take the matter up. Does he not think it was an ungracious act to bring it up here in the parliament of Canada without consulting the proper representative of Portage la Prairie?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am looking after the city as I was asked to do—I am not looking after the representative. I was about to remark that when an hon. member of this House spurns assistance in any effort for his constituents, it does not speak very highly of his judgment.

Mr. LEADER: I did not spurn the efforts; I objected to his manner of presenting them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am presenting the matter to the government, not to the hon. member. I wish to give some history of this matter, and I think it will show to the committee that I am not at fault in being somewhat concerned. I know of the subject from its commencement, I say in answer to the minister's assertion that there should be an effort on the part of the city to help themselves out of this difficulty that the difficulty in which the city finds itself is due originally to the action of the government of Canada, and it is now due to the inaction of this government—to its delay in meeting the situation. The cause of the trouble was the work of a former government, the government of 1908. When I give an account of this construction as it developed in the fall of that year, hon. members will understand that the responsibility is not on the city but on this government, and that this government has no reasonable excuse for not coming to parliament now and in this vote and asking for an appropriation to remedy a state of affairs created by the government of 1908. The responsibility for finding a solution and putting the city in the position it was in up to 1922 is on this administration and it is on no one else. It is not on the city at all.

The city of Portage la Prairie is situated to the north of the Assiniboine river. The Assiniboine river immediately to the south takes a bend in the shape of a horse shoe, the ball of the horse shoe being projected northward almost up to the city. In the years 1902 and 1904, years of great flood in that locality, the river overflowed its banks, not at Portage la Prairie, but to the east of Portage la Prairie, and flooded farm lands in very large area between that city and the city of Winnipeg causing very considerable damage. The government of the country was appealed to, to remedy that situation. The method of doing so was not directed at all in the petitions to this government. The method was left to the government. The government chose to seek a remedy by digging a ditch across the horse shoe between the one extremity and the other, thereby diverting to the extent the ditch would divert the course of the river from going around the horse shoe. Such was the method the government adopted. It was pointed out indeed it was feared at the time that if this were done there would be a probability of the horse shoe drying up. Now at the time this was done in 1908, at that very time and for three years before the city had had constructed a sewerage system which emptied into the horse shoe, which emptied into the part from which the water was about to be diverted. All went well, of course, until the ditch widened in extent, and that happened gradually through these years, but chiefly of late years, and last year it had proceeded to such an extent that the ditch the government dug in 1908 became the course of the river, and the whole horse shoe was deserted by the water altogether and dried up. The consequence is that the sewerage of the whole city is emitted on dry land at the very verge of the city right in the neighbourhood of a fairly well populated farming district. Such is the consequence of the government's action.

Now the minister wants to imply that in some way the city of Portage la Prairie was a party to the action of the government in 1908. Not at all. But before I come to that let me give just another phase of this story. This was a piece of work done on the favourite plan of the present government, the foreman and day labour plan. The floods were in 1902 and 1904. The petition was on January 10, 1905. The communications to the then government, the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, of which I see more than one member sitting in front of me now as a member of this government were in 1905. The communications came in January, 1905, the only petition that ever came was presented in that month. On that petition there is not the name of one man who was a citizen of Portage la Prairie at that time. All were farmers or residents between that city and the city of Winnipeg. Not only did the city not petition or become a party thereto in any way, but no resident of the city was a petitioner. The government did it without any acquiescence of any sort and without consulting in any way the city of Portage la Prairie.

Did the government do anything in answer to the petition? Not in 1905, not in 1906, not in 1907. In these years there was no general election on or pending. The government waited until the general election of 1908. The election was on the 26th of October, 1908, and the 19th of September of that year the Laurier government placed down there a number of men, a very large number for the work, and put them in charge of a good Liberal foreman, kept them all well corralled in the ditch, and marched them up in caravans on election day in order to make sure of defeating me in that contest. Of course, when the election was over, the government's sense of responsibility ceased because the government's object ended, and the men were all taken out on the 31st of October, five days after the election was decided.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The government's responsibility did not cease then in regard to this ditch, although that government has disappeared.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I am trying to impress upon the minister. I seem to have succeeded more rapidly than I expected. It did not cease, it still exists. On the 31st of October, the election being safely by, though they were frustrated in Portage la Prairie, they took all the men out, did not complete the work that was projected then, just left it as it was. What was apparently projected, though at that time I did not know it, was that there should be something in the nature of a weir placed at the entrance of the ditch so as to provide that a share of the water would still flow around the curve. This was not done. As a consequence, the ditch that formerly was 20 feet wide at the bottom now is nearly 200 feet wide, and very deep; The whole river is diverted, and the city of Portage la Prairie is entirely without an outlet for its sewerage. Who then can suggest for a minute that the responsibility for such a state of affairs is not on the government, and the whole responsibility? The responsibility for finding a remedy is on the government. It is not on us.

I put a question on this subject in parliament on the 3rd of February, 1909, and I obtained an answer which I have now before me showing that the petitions all came in in January, 1905; that nothing was done until September, 1908; that everything was done between the 19th day of September and the 31st day of October of that year, the election being safely passed; that it was not done by tender and contract, and that no provision whatever was made for taking care of the sewerage outlet of the city. Here is the weighty reason given by the government for not doing so. I asked:

> What, if any, provision has been made by the government for disposal of the sewerage of the city of Portage la Prairie, as the present method of disposal of same is said to be interfered with by the work so done?

Here is the answer:

> No provision has been made as this is a public work, constructed by the government, at the request of citizens of Portage la Prairie, and for the benefit of the city and the adjoining country.

It was not for the benefit of the city at all; it was not at the request of the citizens, nor of any of the citizens. It was done for the benefit of others farther down, or supposed to be for their benefit. I presume it did work for their benefit, although a better method could have been found. The city of Portage la Prairie was a stranger to it altogether. Why all these months of hesitation? It was a political ditch dug for a political purpose, to defeat an opponent of the government at that time. That is why the work was done at the time it was done and in the way it was done. The damage caused the city is now seen. Work that originally cost some five thousand odd dollars has caused the city damage which to repair along the line now suggested by the minister, but for which he does not provide,—by extending the sewer on to meet the ditch—will cost according to the minister's engineer, $65,000.

Mr. CANNON: Will the hon. gentleman state what he did as private member for Portage la Prairie, as Solicitor General, as Minister of the Interior, and finally as Prime Minister to remedy the situation?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The situation did not need remedying when I was there. The water was flowing around the bend. But if the present condition had developed it would have been remedied and eight months would not have been lost with the sewerage emptying into the dry bed of the stream.

Mr. CANNON: But two years were lost.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We were often called upon when in office to remedy the blunders of hon. members opposite, but we waited until the evil appeared before applying the cure. If we had set out to take care of this case before the damage arrived then we would have been told we were wasting money and that no damage would ever develop.

Mr. CANNON: If the evil did not exist how could my right hon. friend mention this matter in 1909?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I asked some questions in 1909. I had a fear it would come and I said so. There is no need of meeting damage until it is at least in sight, but a government that puts off dealing with an evil when it does appear is responsible for the consequences. If we had been in power when the time for action arrived, we would have been obliged to remedy the consequences of the folly of hon. members opposite.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend no doubt is taking a great interest in this question and has made a reference back as far as 1909. But he is probably also aware that in 1917 and 1918 the engineers did deal with this work. They made certain recommendations, and my right hon. friend failed to get a vote to carry out those recommendations. Had the recommendations been carried out this condition would not have existed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In 1917 and 1918 there was no damage done, and there was no damage pending. There was no pressing need then for anything being done. The damage was apparent this last year; that was the first year that the stream was dry. I had no request from the city—I feel sure I had not until 1922. Now, that situation has arisen, and the minister sits inactive with the damage existing and continuing, and that is why I find fault with him. If he had come down this session with an estimate for the repair of this damage I could have found no fault with the minister; none could have been found with him. But he has not done that. Now I was assured and I hope it is true—although I find no sign of it in the minister's speech—that he has a plan and that he is going to carry out his plan. Why is he not at work, why is he not seeking money to-day for the purpose? There is no excuse at all for his delay. If ever there was urgency in any matter there is urgency here. Suits are threatened to-day not only against the government but against the city as well. The government, of course, can say "We cannot be sued unless we give a fiat," but the city has no such shelter. The government of Manitoba has called upon the city of Portage la Prairie to remedy this nuisance. The provincial government has a right to call upon the city to do so, and the city, in the face of that demand from the provincial authorities, knocks in vain at the door of this government which is in office and responsible for providing a remedy.

What I am pressing for is that provision for a remedy be made in these estimates now; that we get to work at once, so that when the soft weather of the spring and summer comes the city will not find itself without an outlet. I am prepared to work with anybody to that end, and if the minister will promise to do so, I am prepared to end the discussion here and now. If the minister is prepared to state that he will insert an item in the estimates at once to take care of the situation I am prepared to support it and to press him no more. I am prepared to support such effective plan as may be devised by the officers of his department to carry off the sewage of the city. I have seen the estimate of his engineer as to what the plan intimated by the minister will cost, but the government's responsibility is to remedy the existing condition and to do so now. I am not responsible for finding a remedy; I am not obliged even to put my imprimatur on the government's remedy. The government is responsible for finding a remedy and for installing it, and should have been at the work before this.

Mr. LEADER: Day by day and in every way I am learning more about politics. The information which the right hon. the leader of the Opposition has conveyed to the committee to-day was dug up as a result of a lot of hard work and at my own private expense and submitted to the city council of Portage la Prairie. What my right hon. friend has said in regard to the digging of this canal in 1908 is true. I am not a politician. I do not owe allegiance to either one of the old parties and I never shall.

An hon. MEMBER: You are too young yet.

Mr. LEADER: I want to be fair in anything that I say. When the right hon. gentleman was a minister in the federal government and the Hon. Robert Rogers was Minister of Public Works in the same administration, the Provincial Treasurer of Manitoba, Hon. Hugh Armstrong wrote Mr. Rogers a letter on the eve of the provincial election, telling him that if he would grant some money to do work along the Assiniboine river in the constituency of Lakeside no doubt it would prove very popular. The right hon. gentleman, (Mr. Meighen), as hon. members know, was member for Portage la Prairie for a great many years but ceased to occupy that position in 1921. This situation has been developing since 1913, and I saw a letter sent from his law partner at the last Dominion election, subsequent to dissolution, asking the city of Portage la Prairie to take this matter up. Consequently I assume that the right hon. gentleman was fully conversant with the situation while he was member for Portage la Prairie. During that time why did he not do something to relieve the situation? Why he is doing so much worrying now I cannot understand. I realize that I have not had much experience in politics, but so long as I am member for Portage la Prairie I am going to represent that constituency to the very best of my ability; and when I want anybody to help me I will ask for that assistance. I asked the right hon. gentleman to help me when I came down to Ottawa last year and he said "Harry, I will do anything I can for you." Yet he makes a long statement to the committee this afternoon on this matter without saying a word to me on the subject. My right hon. friend says that I am thin-skinned. Let me inform him that he has been discourteous to me, and I resent it.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It is not my intention to speak at any great length, but I must say that I am pleased to discover that Portage la Prairie is so happily situated as to possess two members. In that respect Portage la Prairie is one of the most favoured constituencies in the Dominion. I was considerably surprised to find only the paltry sum of $41,265 in the estimates of the Public Works department for Manitoba. Of course we have no harbours in my riding although we have lots of home brew. However, what I want to mention is this: The Assiniboine was in flood last year and if it had risen about six inches more a lot of water from Portage la Prairie would have been thrown into Provencher. We would not like that, because the electors of Provencher do not want the waters of Portage la Prairie running over their ground; those waters are very troublesome waters. I think the Minister of Public Works should really give this matter prompt and earnest attention because it is very serious in its nature not only to the electors of Portage la Prairie but also to a certain number of electors in the county which I represent. If the Minister of Public Works does not take this matter into very serious consideration there will probably be some very hot arguments, and perhaps even fighting, between Provencher and Portage la Prairie.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I am most anxious about is to get some statement from the minister as to what he is actually going to do and when.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not wish to prolong this discussion, it is not really in order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, it is.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): However, let us get done with it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, the discussion is in order.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think not, not on the present item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When would it be in order?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Do not let us misunderstand the situation. This is not a new matter. We find that the district engineer in 1917, and again in 1918, recommended widening the cut, but not deepening it, as he feared the cut might become the main channel of the river and leave the city sewer outlet dry. It was proposed as part of the work to build a weir, or barrier, at the mouth or upstream end of the cut to prevent further scouring from deepening the cut, but funds were not made available for this purpose. Had it been constructed, its efficiency for the purpose intended would be doubtful in the soil at that point. Between 1918 and the flood of 1922 the yearly floods had widened the cut to about 50 feet and deepened it to 12 feet below top of bank.

Now if it is a question of fixing the responsibility it is not difficult to do that in the light of the report which I have referred to. If the work had been carried on as recommended by the engineer in 1919 there would not have been the condition we find to-day. It is true that a great flood occurred in the spring of 1922. As far as we are concerned, this matter has engaged the attention of the department, and we are prepared to deal fairly with the city of Portage. I have made a proposal to them. We have an estimate of the cost of replacing this sewer in connection with the new channel and the figure has been placed at $45,000. I will recommend to the government of Canada, and I hope to this House, that a sum be given for that purpose. We will give the money to the city and let them restore the sewer. But it is not the intention of the Department of Public Works to construct the sewer system for the city of Portage la Prairie.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister proposes to offer the city $45,000 to continue the sewer on down. I presume that is the estimate of the department as to what it will cost.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I saw it stated as $65,000. Suppose the department, which will exercise some supervision over it, finds that it costs more, will the department provide the money?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am advised that this will be about the cost. The department has received a report on the matter. I may say the department does not want to injure the city. We want to help them, and this is an estimate which has been made. The thing will be checked carefully and a proper estimate made for the work.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The intention of the government is to provide for the extension down, such extension to be constructed of course at reasonable cost.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand the minister gives an affirmative answer.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am very glad, and now I only add, no petition came from Portage la Prairie to me to have this work done while I was in office. There may have been individual communications, but I cannot recall one. The matter never came to a head till 1922, as the hon. minister said, and there was no reason to take action sooner. It was time enough in 1922 to deal with the matter. All I am complaining about is the delay since August, 1922, because the communication reached the minister, if not in July, early in August, setting forth fully the situation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a further matter in connection with the Assiniboine river. On the westerly part of the city of Winnipeg that river is eating away part of my constituency. As any one who knows these western rivers will realize, the rivers are apt to encroach. This river continually curves and is apt to encroach on the land with very serious damage in the case of urban municipalities. There has been considerable communication from the municipality of St. James with regard to the waters in that district encroaching on the land. It seems to me that some provision should be made to take care of this situation. I should like to call attention to the situation as it prevails higher up the river, at the city of Brandon. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) is not here, but we have talked over this matter, and I think I am not encroaching on his territory when I speak of this. There was a very serious flood in Brandon last spring. In the district generally known locally as "the flats" hundreds of homes were flooded. Immense damage was caused, not only to the houses but to the gardens in the vicinity. Many of the poorer people of that district lost their all. I understand that the department gave assurances that, although damages could not be given—and I do not see why damages could not be given for this—that at least an investigation would be held and the department would see to it if possible that a similar flood would not recur. It is a very serious thing when it is considered that several thousand people live in the north end of Brandon and that in springtime when the water is high they may have their homes flooded. Is anything definite being done to prevent a recurrence of this flooding?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The government does not hold itself responsible for the natural erosion caused by floods in Canadian rivers. That would be a tremendous undertaking. It is being grappled with throughout Canada. I know that in our far western provinces the municipalities and the provincial governments do a good deal towards the protection of the banks. At times the Dominion government have assisted where it seems the public interests have demanded it. But it has never been intended or acknowledged that the government would undertake to prevent erosions of these banks from floods or other natural causes, or to give protection to a community where lands have been flooded at times.

Mr. HOEY: In the absence of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) I would like to ask the minister if a survey was promised in connection with the district immediately surrounding Brandon city, and if so has that survey been undertaken? I was given to understand that this survey had been promised with the object of readjusting conditions, so that floods in the future would be rendered almost impossible.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think there was a suggestion last year and we did instruct the district engineer to keep in touch with the flood conditions and I am advised that he made a report during the summer on that question.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: Is there any provision in this particular vote for improvement on lake Killarney as recommended by the engineer of the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think not.

Mr. BANCROFT: I would like to call attention to conditions on a part of lake Manitoba. That lake has been steadily rising for the last three years, to the great damage of the settlers in that vicinity. Very much of the land has been flooded in that district. I think some 5,000 acres in one municipality have been submerged in the last two years. It seems this condition arises periodically. It was flooded I think in 1902. About that time there was a period of high water for a few years and a great part of the country was flooded. For the last three years it has been rising again. I am informed that if the water rises another foot fifty per cent of the people west of Dog lake will have to leave their farms, and many have had to leave them already. Mixed farming is carried on very largely in that district and the farmers depend very largely on the wild hay to feed their cattle. This hay land has been flooded for the last two or three years, and they have to import the hay to feed the cattle. At the present price of cattle, a farmer cannot afford to pay the freight on hay for a long distance, let alone buy it, and I hope the government is doing something in this connection. I think it was stated last year that they were taking measurements and trying to do something in this connection. Is this work being carried on?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think there have been some investigations carried on, but as to committing the government to an expenditure of public money, that has not as yet been broached.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: With regard to the improvements at Killarney, the minister's deputy the other day informed me that this improvement had been provided for in this vote. Apparently it has not. Will the minister reconsider his estimate and include that small amount? It is very necessary that it should be attended to.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not sure, but it is quite possible that it might be taken out of this vote of $15,000; I have not the information in regard to it with me.

Red river—repairs to channel protection work, $4,000.

Mr. BANCROFT: Is this for the protected channel at the mouth of the river. Is the work to be done by contract, or by this popular day labour system, or by the Department of Public Works at Selkirk?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work consists of placing riprap alongside and inside the protection work, so as to strengthen it and to prevent damage by storms. In all probability this will be done under the direction of the engineering staff.

Item agreed to.

Selkirk wharf repairs, $13,665.

Mr. BANCROFT: Are transfer works provided for in this figure for the repair slip at Selkirk?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think not. The work consists of renewing the decking, replacing piles and deck structure where necessary, and placing stone filling and gravel on the approach.

Mr. BANCROFT: Is it the purpose of the government to provide in this amount for transfer tracks? This winter there are eight steamboats on the repair slip at Selkirk. There is not room for them and they have to be carried out on the side. No transfer tracks are provided for this purpose. I understand provision of transfer tracks would not entail a very large expenditure, and at the present time the Department of Public Works had to supply blocking for keeping the ships in position. If transfer tracks were provided, there would be no necessity for supplying blocking for this purpose. I understand the government gets a fee for bringing those ships up, and this would, in a measure, cover the expenditure.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would seem that transfer tracks are a necessity to the work there, and I am advised that a recommendation has been made to that effect.

Mr. BANCROFT: Was the recommendation that something would be done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I did not intimate that. There has been a recommendation from the engineering staff for that work; that it is necessary work. Provision is not made in this estimate.

Item agreed to.

St. Andrews dam, repairs to fishway, $1,100.

Mr. BANCROFT: Will this work on the St. Andrews dam and also the work at Selkirk be done by the Public Works department at Selkirk?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Wanipigow, (Hole river) reconstruction of dam, $3,600.

Mr. HOEY: This is for the reconstruction of a dam that was formerly built at the mouth of this river as it enters lake Winnipeg. I visited that district last summer, and I should like to remind the minister that building this dam will, in my humble judgment, be of comparatively little use unless the river itself is cleared of logs. I traversed that river some eight miles east of lake Winnipeg, and I experienced the utmost difficulty in doing so. I learned from the residents up there—there are not many of them—that the river was cleared some years ago; but it has become badly congested, particularly at certain points, and it seems to me that, in the interest of economy, this work of clearing the river of logs should be undertaken at the same time that this dam is being rebuilt. It is scarcely necessary to remind the minister that there is at present considerable traffic in this river owing to the operations of the Selkirk Mining Company. I should like to get a promise from the minister that this matter will be taken into consideration.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Is my hon. friend speaking of drift wood resulting from lumbering operations?

Mr. HOEY: The natural fall of the trees across the river.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I did not have it brought to my attention that it was necessary to clear the river. I will have inquiries made.

Item agreed to.

Saskatchewan and Alberta—harbours and rivers generally, repairs and improvements, $20,000.

Mr. KNOX: This does not seem to be a very large item for two provinces such as Saskatchewan and Alberta, and when we compare it with the items we were discussing yesterday, I think we should receive credit when we take up some other items in connection with those provinces. I see that $20,000 was voted last year. How was it expended?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditures apparently were very light last year. At Fort McMurray, East Edmonton, there was an expenditure of $435, a small expenditure at Banff and another at Craven. The total expenditure was only $459.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Out of the $20,000 voted last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I suppose this is put in just for padding, to make it appear that something is being done in these provinces.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would not say that. This has been the custom for many years.

Mr. KENNEDY (East Edmonton): What is the nature of the work done as a result of the expenditure of $450?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Launching three floating wharves and putting them up on the river bank in the fall. The largest expenditure was made at Fort McMurray.

Mr. SHAW: What works are in contemplation for the present year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am informed nothing is noted for expenditure under this appropriation at the present time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is done with the $19,600 that is not spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not being expended, it would lapse.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What does the minister do with it? Is it left in the public treasury or is it spent for some other purpose?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It lapses entirely.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Voting of this amount of money, if there is no expenditure expected, seems to be an absurdity.

Mr. MILLAR: It will be readily seen that Saskatchewan is at a great disadvantage in not having room to place its wharves. The amount expended there is very small. The minister is probably aware that my attitude towards this "free gift" is that I do not favour it. Quite seriously. I am going to ask the minister for his reply to a question that has been passing through my mind. Let us suppose that two types of men whom I will describe, were to ask him a certain question. First, I will describe the two types of men. One of them has been producing grain at a loss for the last two years, and I need not more than state that such is the case, because many members know that is a fact. This man does not lack in either industry or efficiency, and through no fault of his own he is producing grain at a cost of perhaps $1.25 a bushel and selling it at 90 cents. That is one type. Another is the stock raiser who is producing stock that he cannot sell for more than about half of what it actually cost. I know that this is true because I have purchased such stock. Indeed, I should be ashamed to state the prices at which I purchased some last fall, were it not for the fact that I bought it at an auction sale which was open to everybody. What would one expect these men to say to the minister? Why, they would say: We are carrying on our business at a heavy loss, drawing from our capital, and getting no assistance; and why should we carry our own burden and the other fellow's as well? Why should these people pay in taxes, as they do, their share of the hundreds of thousands of dollars that are levied—yes, and more than that, one might say millions—

Mr. MARTELL: We are all paying for your railways.

Mr. MILLAR: I see that the truth strikes home. You can always tell when it cuts, because you hear a howl. As I was saying, however, why should these people carry their own burden and be called upon to shoulder the burden of other people by enabling the government, not to carry out great undertakings for the good of the whole country, but to do little things to help industries which are in no greater distress than their own? I do not want to be offensive, but I ask a plain question to which I should like a plain answer: Why should these men carry their own burden and the burden of those who are not as badly off as themselves?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I should desire to be sympathetic with both parties.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia—harbours and rivers generally, $75,000.

Mr. CLARK: Is any provision being made for the renewal of the work on the contract relating to the dry dock in North Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not under this item.

Mr. CLARK: Is there any other item under which this matter might be discussed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend will have an opportunity to deal with this matter under the item relating to governmen dry dock expenditures at Victoria, which will come up later. I shall be glad to have the subject discussed then.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is in regard to Victoria. But this is the item under which are discussed all matters connected with docks and waters in the province. This is where the general discussions take place. The discussion might be admitted under the item with regard to the Victoria dock, but there would be far more reason for ruling it out under that item than under this one. In fact, there could be no reason for ruling it out here. It is under the vote for harbours and rivers generally that all matters of this kind come up for discussion.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not objecting to the hon. member discussing the matter he has raised. He asked me whether there was any other item under which he might bring it up and I simply informed him that there was.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not objecting to the answer that the minister has given the hon. member. I am merely pointing out that it would be more in order to discuss the matter now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I was evidently misunderstood. I suggested that it might be an opportune time to take up the question when we were dealing with dry dock expenditures. But I have no objection to the discussion taking place now.

Mr. CLARK: It would probably be advisable to refer briefly to the history of this matter. In 1910 an act was passed to encourage the construction of dry docks throughout the Dominion of Canada. That act provided that the chief engineer of the department should certify as to the necessity for dry docks in various parts of the country, and the chief engineer has on various occasions certified to, and three governments have recognized, such a necessity in Vancouver. In February, 1920, authority was given for a subsidy under the act for the construction of a second-class graving dock. The parties to the contract were the Dominion government and the Coughlan Shipbuilding Company, and the subsidy was based on a valuation of $2,500,000, at 4½ per cent, for a period of thirty-five years. A contract to that end was executed on October 27, 1920. In 1921, the Coughlan Company apparently found that it was not practicable to erect this second-class graving dock. It was an odd sort of dock anyway, and apparently they could not finance it. The result was that another shipbuilding company in Vancouver, the Wallace Company, negotiated with Coughlan's, and an arrangement was arrived at between them whereby the two interests should combine and erect a floating dock. These two interests then came back to the government with revised plans for the floating dry dock. I may observe at this juncture that it was early in the summer of 1921, before any election was contemplated, that the negotiations were completed. And it was arranged with the government of that day that in consideration of the surrender of the old contract a new contract should be executed confirming the revised plan and giving the same subsidy. That contract was executed shortly before the election of 1921, and I have the personal assurance of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) that it is above suspicion. Since the execution of that contract the company has expended a very large sum of money; its commitments already amount roughly to $400,000. Just after the election a telegram was sent by the department placing on the contract an embargo which has not been removed. Protests have been made by every conceivable organization in British Columbia interested in the matter, including the Vancouver Board of Trade, and boards of trade representing practically the whole of the lower mainland of British Columbia. The Shipping Federation of Canada has unanimously adopted a resolution urging upon the government the necessity of this project. Even the government's chief organ in British Columbia, the Vancouver World, has expressed in no uncertain terms its opinion that this work is necessary. I quote from an editorial in that paper:

> In view of these facts, repudiation is impossible and unthinkable. Every consideration of national policy, of national honour and of national necessity—as well as every commercial necessity of the port of Vancouver—requires the carrying out of the contract and the keeping of public faith. On the issue of public honour, there is no room for evasion, repudiation or compromise. On the fact of commercial necessity there is no room for argument—the need of docking and repair facility is a recognized need of every active port. There is no answer to the justice of this claim and right.

In answer to these protests the Prime Minister stated that the Minister of Public Works would, at the close of the session of last year, proceed to Vancouver and investigate the matter further; he had already made some inquiry into it. The time for investigation has now passed, but we have no statement as to what is to be done. The contract still stands; the commitments made by reputable firms are such that the shipbuilding industry on the coast may be ruined. It is a recognized fact that there will be no shipbuilding for at least a period of years, and the only possibility of carrying on the industry is in securing the repair of the ships entering the harbour, the numbers of which are rapidly increasing. Cases where great loss has actually been sustained have been brought to the minister's attention. For instance, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have intimated that they are quite prepared to have repairs made in Vancouver that would run into at least $120,000 a year. Balfour, Guthrie and Company stated that in less than four years they would have spent almost $200,000 in dry dock work at Vancouver had there been facilities for doing so. The same applies to many other lines. A few years ago there were only two steamship lines entering Vancouver; to-day there are seventeen. The number of ships entering that port is increasing daily; it now largely exceeds the number entering the port of Montreal. Facilities have been provided for dry docking at practically every port in Canada. St. John has a dry dock; Halifax has one; Quebec, two; Montreal, two; Kingston, Collingwood, Toronto, Fort William, Prince Rupert and Victoria, all have their facilities, but the port which does the greatest volume of shipping has no facilities. If Vancouver is to continue as a great terminal shipping port, something will have to be done in this connection. Shipping companies will locate only in those ports where proper terminal facilities are available, and one of the prime requisites is dry dock facilities. Seattle has several dry docks, and for that reason many shipping companies will go there instead of to Vancouver. The delay in providing proper dry dock facilities at Vancouver will result in great loss of revenue to the country through loss of volume of business. The expense of the project would not be great, because the capital expenditure would be provided by private interests. The first year's outlay could not exceed $40,000, and for a period of thirty-five years the expenditure would be about $112,000 per annum. The Dry Dock Subsidies Act was passed for the express purpose of encouraging the construction of dry docks in our various ports, and to my mind it is unreasonable to refuse to grant a subsidy to the port which has a larger volume of shipping than that which can be claimed by any other port in the Dominion.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am very glad my hon. friend has again brought this matter to the attention of the House. Dry dock construction on the Pacific coast seems to have had a rather stormy career; agitations have taken place over a period of very many years. What seemed rather to disturb the government on taking office was to find that a time when governments and people were trying to practise economy, we had two large works launched on the Pacific coast for dry dock purposes. There was a large commitment in respect to the dock at Victoria, which is now under construction and presumably is to be operated under government control; and there were also commitments under the Dry Dock Subsidies Act. It was found that no large expenditure had been made in connection with the work at Vancouver. It is true, the companies had arranged their organization, and purchased some plant and material, but the outlay was not very large.

Mr. CLARK: I understand that figures have been furnished to the minister indicating an outlay on the part of the companies concerned of $398,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Expenditures, as I say, have been made, but not in proportion to the expenditures made by the government at Victoria. It was considered wise to hold this work in abeyance. The matter is receiving the attention of the government and I am in hopes that we may be able to advise the House of some conclusions in regard to it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I wish to say a word in reference to the Fraser river improvements. The minister is to be commended upon the interest which he has displayed in this important work. I appreciate the fact that it is receiving his attention. I also think that it is pretty generally agreed that he and his department are doing their best to provide a proper, safe and reliable channel from New Westminster to the gulf. We are not asking for a harbour to compete in any way with the harbour at Vancouver, which is only a matter of some fifteen or twenty miles from us by water and less than that by land. We appreciate the fact that Vancouver harbour is suitable for large shipping and we believe in the necessity for the improvements at Vancouver harbour. But on the Fraser river we have a somewhat different proposition. What we require there is a channel which will enable us to bring in ships more particularly for the purpose of taking care of the lumber which is manufactured on the Fraser river. It may not be generally known, but I think I am correct in saying that approximately one-third of the lumber and shingles manufactured in British Columbia and that is a very considerable amount, of course—is manufactured on the Fraser river; I am referring now to the main channel and also to the north arm. We have mills there which are doing an export business and shipping lumber to the markets of the world. A very large trade has grown up, and a much bigger trade is in prospect providing it is possible for us to ship our lumber at reasonable rates. The rate by water compares very favourably with the rate by rail. For purposes of comparison I might mention that the rate from New Westminster by water to the eastern states, say to the port of New York, is no greater than the rate by rail from New Westminster to Calgary. That means that we have a very big market for some of our manufactured products, more particularly our shingles for which there is a very great demand in the eastern states. There is also a great demand, of course, for our other manufactured products. Our lumber is shipped to various parts of the world, and the demand for it is constantly growing.

Now, in order to economically ship our products we have to be able to bring vessels right into our docks. There is no reason why we should not do that providing the channel is put in proper shape, because with the exception of one or two shallow spots, the channel is sufficiently deep to take care of any lumber-carrying ships which might be expected to come in there. In that connection I might point out that the draught of lumber-carrying vessels is increasing. They are using much larger ships now than they did a few years ago. At one time the department under the previous government appointed a board of engineers to inquire into conditions on the Fraser river, and that board reported as to the class of vessels which might be expected to take lumber from our ports. In that report it was stated that the great majority of the ships which might be expected to do business with us were of comparatively light draught. I believe that that condition has changed and that larger ships are now in the business. It is necessary for us to have a depth of at least thirty feet. I believe that a good deal has been accomplished, and in this connection I would like to pay my respects to the late Chief Engineer of the Department of Public Works, who was out at the Pacific coast last year. It was my privilege on a number of occasions to confer with Mr. St. Laurent and I always found him very courteous, very much interested in his work, and more particularly did I find him very much interested in the problem of endeavouring to improve the Fraser river. I think that his death is a distinct loss to this country.

I would urge upon the minister the advisability of continuing this work on the main channel of the Fraser river. I think that we have obtained results, and I am glad to see that the present minister is carrying on the work which was started by the previous administration, that he has taken hold and given this work a good deal of consideration. The business is there. What we require is a good safe and reliable channel so that our ships can take out our manufactured products to the various parts of the world. Our business is a very large one, and in that connection I might refer to the fact that the development of the Fraser river will mean something to this government, because the government owns something like four billion feet of standing timber in the Fraser river valley, which would pay dues to the Dominion when taken out. That timber is all in this district and is all available.

I should also like to refer to the fact that we have on the Fraser river sites for elevators. We have land already owned by the Dominion government or by the Canadian National railways at Port Mann, at New Westminster, and at Woodward's Landing, with water front suitable in all respects for the construction of elevators. If the government is going to build any elevators it will not be necessary for them to buy land any place else, they have it already on the Fraser river, and that land is already connected with their own railroads. If you establish elevators on the Fraser river you are going to assist the Canadian National railways because they have direct access to that land and sufficient trackage is available. The railway is already there. The Canadian National railways are already established at Port Mann. Perhaps that would be an ideal site for an elevator. At Woodward's Landing, if you wished to get lower down and closer to the mouth of the river, you have half a mile of water front, which is also connected up with a line of railway built by the Canadian National system, but which is not at present being operated. It would not require a large expenditure to put that railway into shape. If you have elevators on the Fraser river your operating expenses for unloading the grain would be considerably less than at any other place. I quite appreciate the fact that the minister is very familiar with conditions, and I would impress upon him the advisability of giving very serious consideration to the necessity of establishing at least one elevator on the Fraser river. But if the government are not going to enter into that business—and, of course, they may feel that should be left to private enterprise —then I would say that if the improvement of the Fraser river channel is attended to, private concerns will have available a great many miles of very desirable sites for elevators. I am looking forward to the day when we will not have simply one elevator on the Pacific coast but dozens of them. The development of trade towards that end is bound to come. The feasibility of the Pacific route has been demonstrated. It used to be thought at one time that the Panama canal could not be utilized, and that grain could not be shipped economically or safely from a Pacific port. However, that day is past and we know now, it has been established beyond question, that the Pacific route is a desirable and a profitable one, and that from an economic standpoint a very large proportion of the grain that is grown on the prairies could be shipped through Pacific ports. Now, I would say to the minister that the Fraser river is the place that this grain should be shipped from; I do not think there is any doubt in the world as to the desirable locations we would have if only our channel were placed in proper condition.

There is a point in connection with the sawmilling industry, which is not generally known and which I would like to mention. That is that fresh water is better adapted for the operation of sawmills than salt water, owing to this fact: In a salt water the logs will be badly affected by the teredo and damaged to a very considerable extent in a few months. That is not the case at all in fresh water. It has been proved by experience that sawmills should, wherever possible, be located on fresh water. Sawmill concerns are now taking advantage of that fact and are to a large extent removing their mills from salt water to fresh water. That is where the importance of the Fraser river comes in.

There is another branch of the Fraser to which I would like to refer for a minute and that is the north arm. The minister knows the north arm very well. He has been over it several times and he has also, I think, been presented recently with a petition asking for some further improvement of the channel of the north arm. Now the north arm is a different proposition, inasmuch as we cannot expect within a reasonable time to have any great depth of water, but we may look forward to seeing industries located along that channel which require attention. Now, the minister has before him a petition dealing with this matter and I would urge upon him the necessity of giving that petition every consideration. I do not wish to take up time unnecessarily but, as I see it, the main channel and the north arm of the Fraser river provide a fresh water port for the peninsula upon which Vancouver and New Westminster are situated, and it is very necessary, if the future of that district is to be assured, that the channels in both cases should be improved. I hope the minister will continue the good work which he has been doing and that it will be proceeded with as rapidly as possible.

Mr. McBRIDE: I do not intend to take up very much of the committee's time but I would draw the attention of the minister to the riding of Cariboo. Although that riding contains 165,000 square miles these estimates do not contain one dollar for the carrying out of improvements within its limits. Not only does the riding contain the area I have stated, but it also contains 1,500 miles of navigable waters in the shape of rivers, and indeed one lake has no less than 800 miles of shore line. Now I do not see why the minister has entirely ignored improvements for that immense district. I certainly think he should pay some attention to the Cariboo riding.

There are three matters that I would like to bring to his notice. First, Canoe wharf. This wharf has been recommended by the engineer for the last three or four years, the estimated cost of the work being $4,500. Before I came down here I went over the ground with the engineer and we agreed to cut the estimate down to $1,200. The wharf was built some eight or nine years ago, at a width of 16 feet and a length of 500 feet. When a team goes out to the end of the structure it has got to back out to the shore again, indeed, the wharf is practically useless in its present condition. The $1,200 in question would widen the wharf at the outer end so that teams could turn. I would ask the minister if he can see his way to including this improvement in the estimate of $75,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It could not be included in the present estimate.

Mr. McBRIDE: Then I would ask whether the minister could see his way to including the item in the Supplementary Estimates to be brought down later?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I thought he was discussing "Fraser river improvements $75,000." My hon. friend, however, was discussing the general vote?

Mr. McBRIDE: Yes. I would ask the minister to see whether he cannot make provision for carrying out this work under the general vote.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter will be considered.

Mr. McBRIDE: There is still another matter, in connection with Salmon Arm, to which I wish to draw attention. Last year the government voted $4,500 to improve the wharf there. That work was carried out very satisfactorily and the people of the locality appreciate it. However, there is a channel that was dredged out, I think about thirteen years ago, and owing to the dredge being dismantled some time during the war nothing has been done since to keep the channel clear. Now that channel needs to be dredged out, in fact the wharf is of very little use unless that dredging is done. I hope the minister will see his way clear to have that work carried out without delay.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand that the dredge is to be reconditioned, and it is the intention of the department to do some dredging on the lake this year.

Mr. McBRIDE: There is another item I want to bring to the attention of the minister, although possibly it may be out of order under this heading. In Kamloops there are some five buildings being rented by the government at a cost of $9,000 a year. A building could be erected for less than $100,000 which would accommodate all the departments now using the buildings referred to. I would like to know from the minister if he is prepared to recommend the carrying out of something along this line. Even if the outlay reached a total of $100,000 the money would not cost the government more than 6 per cent and there would still be a saving of $3,000 as compared with the cost under the present system of renting. Not only that, but the employees concerned would be provided with far better accommodation than they now enjoy. The buildings now occupied are far from being fire proof, in fact, the post office at Kamloops has been twice condemned by the sanitary inspector there. For many reasons it is very important that the improvement which I have suggested should be carried out without delay. I would like to know from the minister if he will also give this matter his consideration?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the minister replies I would like to take the opportunity of expressing, in common I know with others, the high appreciation I feel, and have always felt, of the services of Mr. St. Laurent who, unfortunately, has died lately. I came in contact with them very intimately, and over a long period of time. I was the means of having him appointed on the Dominion Power Board, and in other special matters of great engineering difficulty I availed myself of his services. I found him a man of high professional capacity, and as well, possessed of a keen sense of duty; to duty he devoted himself unceasingly throughout all the period of our acquaintance. I learned with the very deepest regret of the death of a servant of the public such as he, and I desire to record before this House my sense of our loss.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am sure I can concur in every word that has been stated by the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) and the member for New Westminster. It was my good fortune as minister of the department to come closely in contact with the late Mr. St. Laurent while he was acting in the capacity of Chief Engineer of the Department of Public Works. As has been stated, he was a man not only of excellent engineering knowledge and ability, but of excellent parts and character, a very lovable man, and his loss is and will be greatly felt by the department and in government circles.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister give us a short statement of what he proposes to do on the Fraser river?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have listened with great interest to my hon. friend's address on the requirements of the Fraser river, and the north arm of the Fraser. These are two important waterways in British Columbia and the Department of Public Works has tried to solve certain natural difficulties that exist there. During the flood season great quantities of alluvial material come down the Fraser and are deposited in the lower region, which results in the necessity of a very large expenditure being made from year to year in dredging and keeping the channel clear. Under carefully prepared plans, and after consultation and so on, the Department of Public Works, or the engineering board, did make certain recommendations. Last summer when going west I had the chief engineer the late Mr. St. Laurent accompany me, in order that he might have local knowledge of conditions for himself, and if possible concur in the recommendation of the engineering committee. He made that trip and spent considerable time on the Fraser river and did concur in the plans and suggestions made by the engineering commitee. That being so, we have let the contract for the construction of a retaining wall, amounting to something over $100,000, and this vote is for the purpose of taking care of that contract. It is hoped the construction of this wall will bring about a deepening of the channel and will also elminate the annual loss which now takes place through the filling up of the channel at that point.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What depth of water would that give us?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Thirty feet. In regard to the north channel, the department has from year to year carried on certain dredging operations, and at one time built a retaining wall at the mouth of the river. The matter of extending that wall further out to sea, or continuing our dredging operations, is now under consideration in the department.

Mr. LADNER: I presume the minister refers, in connection with the extension of the wall, to the jetty on the north arm.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. LADNER: Apparently the present vote does not cover it, and my purpose in rising is to urge upon the minister and the government the expedience and the necessity of making that extension. With the presence of the Minister of Finance, (Mr. Fielding) I feel that my appeal is particularly strong, because if we cannot justify the request on the basis of business necessity then we would not ask for an appropriation for the extension of that jetty. In making this appeal to the government and the minister, which I hope will have their favourable consideration when the Supplementary Estimates come up, let me urge upon the minister the fact that I speak not only in behalf of private individuals, who favour this project, but I make the appeal for the reeves, councillors and boards of trade of South Vancouver, Point Grey, Richmond, Burnaby and New Westminster, all of whom have met on two or three occasions, coming from great distances to get together. They have given the matter consideration and are of the opinion that, both in the interests of preserving the channel on the north, and preventing filling by cross drifts at the mouth of the Fraser river, and in order to provide booming grounds for the large quantity of logs that are towed up the river, an extension of the jetty there is necessary. It is a business justification. At the present time the mouth of the north arm of the Fraser river fills in with silt caused by the cross currents in the river. There are two projects I believe under consideration, one being to clear the channel by dredging and the other to extend the jetty. I believe reports are being forwarded to the minister and that these reports are favourable—at least so I would judge—to the extension of the jetty. This is regarded as the least expensive method of preserving the investment the government has already made on the north arm, which investment exceeds $600,000. The extension will only cost, I believe, in the neighborhood of $40,000, and it will be a direct benefit to a very large number of industries. I would draw the attention of the government to the fact that there is a capital investment of $3,000,000 in the different industries along the Fraser river, which depend upon the channel of the north arm on which they carry on their business. There are four large shingle mills, having a daily output of 3,000,000 shingles, and six sawmills with a cut of 130,000 feet of lumber each day. They have 1,035 employees with a monthly payroll of over $22,000. There is not only the question of keeping the channel clear of the sand and silt that come in there so that the sawlogs and other traffic can be carried up the river but there is the equally important, and perhaps more important, question of the extension of this jetty in order to provide a booming ground there. At the present time the booms coming from the northern coast of British Columbia are brought down to a place called Howe Sound. They are brought down in large quantities, and at Howe Sound they are split up into smaller booms, and are brought down to the north arm of the Fraser to supply these mills. Sometimes they have to remain there for a considerable period before they can get up the river, or they have to be broken up into still smaller booms. The extension of the jetty is necessary, not only to protect the channel, but to provide facilities so that these large booms which come down from the north can be taken to the north arm of the Fraser river, split up there into smaller booms and taken up the Fraser river. Competent men engaged in this industry state that there will be a saving of 50 cents per thousand on logs if the booms can be broken up at the mouth of the Fraser river. It is well known that a saving of 50 cents per thousand to the lumber and shingle mill industry in British Columbia would be of the very greatest advantage in competition with the many American mills just across the line, some few miles distant. Therefore, on behalf of the reeves, councillors and boards of trade of five large municipalities and cities, with some 75,000 of population, tributary to the north arm, who are asking for this improvement, I would strongly urge on the government the wisdom and necessity of including that in the Supplementary Estimates as it is not mentioned in the present appropriation.

Mr. CLARK: I wish to draw the attention of the minister to the Girrard Bridge Company, whose object it is to bridge the Narrows, separating Vancouver from North Vancouver. Last year a three-year extension of their charter for doing this work was granted in this House. The company has recently filed plans with the Department of Public Works to complete that work without financial assistance from the government. Have those plans been approved, or is there immediate likelihood of their being approved?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The plans are under consideration now with a view of approval or non-approval, depending upon what the finding is of the engineers in the department.

Item agreed to.

Port Renfrew, wharf reconstruction, $10,000.

Mr. DICKIE: I would just like to urge on the minister that action be taken in connection with this appropriation as quickly as possible because the people in this locality are at a great disadvantage. I quite realize why the appropriation of last year was not expended. The people have no means of getting to the steamers except in small boats, and I can assure the minister the need is great. I do not know any item that requires more immediate attention.

Item agreed to.

Vancouver, Stanley park, foreshore protection, $8,000.

Mr. CLARK: What is the total amount required for this work?

[Mr. Ladner.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is some seashore protection at Stanley park. Ten thousand dollars was voted last year and will be expended before the end of the fiscal year. We are asking for an appropriation of $8,000 to construct 800 feet of protection work. This work is being done in connection with the park board, they contributing a portion of the cost.

Mr. CLARK: What is the ultimate amount required to complete this work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The whole scheme will cost probably $71,000.

Mr. CLARK: Why is the work being shut down this year? My instructions are that about $20,000 worth of work was planned for this summer, and that it was urgently necessary that this should be done in order to preserve that part of the foreshore.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the estimate is sufficient for the year. My reports are that this is the more urgent work, and that if this 800 feet is constructed, it will be sufficient for this year.

Mr. LADNER: Will these moneys be available almost immediately, because there happens to be a particular urgency.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not until the 1st of April.

Mr. LADNER: Perhaps the minister is aware that on account of the tide at Stanley park, the flood goes in and out very quickly, and the work has to be done during certain periods. I was informed on the coast that it is very important that the money should be available as soon as possible.

Mr. MacKELVIE: Before we leave this question of wharf repairs, I should like to ask the minister if he has made provision in any way for several small repairs to wharves on Okanagan lake which have been recommended by the district engineer?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some repairs are, I think, being considered, possibly for the Supplementaries later on.

Item agreed to.

Quebec—Contrecœur, reconstruction of wharf headblock, $5,500.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I should like to go back to vote No. 157, Contrecœur. The other items were passed yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN: Has the minister the consent of the committee to go back to the item, Contrecœur?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally, $30,000.

Mr. SHAW: Perhaps the minister would give us particulars of the work proposed under this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a contingent item. This amount is required to cover travelling expenses, telegrams, printing, stationery, instruments, etc., which cannot be conveniently charged against anyone in particular of the general appropriations for construction, improvements or repairs in each province. The chief engineer asks for an allotment of $15,000 out of this appropriation to pay expenses of staff in making test borings in connection with materials. He states that $2,000 will also be required in connection with the laboratory for testing materials.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS—DREDGING

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Dredging—Maritime provinces, $600,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How much was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): All but $20,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the programme in the Maritime provinces for the coming year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The details are as follows: Pictou bar, dredging of 121,050 cubic yards; Miramichi bay, 151,000 yards; Dalhousie, 10,600 yards; Restigouche river, 152,750; Miramichi bay, Grandoon flats, 100,000; Newcastle, Ritchie's Mill wharf, 1,850; Newcastle to Bridgetown, 20,000; Bathurst, 100,000; Lunenburg county, Riverport, 200,000; Liverpool, 60,000, Malagash, 8,676; Georgetown, P.E.I., 9,540; Panmur island, 8,112; Montague river, 103,770; 1,370; Inverness, N.S., 15,000; Alberton, 8,000; Miminigash, 8,667; Red Point' wharf, 16,000; Mount Stewart, 65,000; Conway inlet, 60,000; Port Hawkesbury, 26,000; Cape Anget, 11,175; Margaree, 50,000; Smith's cove, 22,500; Little Bras d'Or, 12,000; Sydney, 9,000; Port Hood, 15,000; Rose bay, 12,000; The Squam, 4,800; Sperry's Cove, 3,000; Yarmouth, 150,000; Beaver harbour, 1,310; Centreville, 2,300; Chocolate cove, 340; Curry's cove, 5,725; Haulover, 1,350; Miramichi, Northumberland, some snags to be removed; Pictou Landing, 15,000 cubic yards; Richibucto cape, 4,200; St. Andrew's, 7,625; St. Nicholas river, Kent, 4,700; Shediac island, 530; Windsor, 5,160. That is the tentative programme suggested by the engineers for the operation of the government plant during the coming summer. It will probably be carried out in the main, though it may be found necessary from time to time to adjust the amounts in order that the more important works may be carried on.

Mr. BROWN: I presume this dredging is necessary, but those of us who live so far inland do not know why these large expenditures are required. Is it that the harbours are filling up with silt carried down by the rivers, or is the draught of the vessels increasing? Why has it been necessary last year and this year to spend so large an amount as $600,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The dredging is necessary chiefly because of silt coming down and filling up the harbours. There is a very long coast line, as my hon. friend knows. Where possible the department is constructing retaining walls to try and keep these deposits out.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is this work to be done entirely by contract?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is departmental work largely.

Mr. MacLAREN: Can the minister say how the money will be spent proportionately as between Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the information here in that form, but if my hon. friend desires it, I shall be very glad to advise him later.

Mr. MARTELL: The hon. member for Lisgar asked why it was necessary to repeat this expenditure from year to year. Now if he were down to the province of Nova Scotia and saw the Atlantic ocean throwing itself up against the rocks and upon the coast he would not wonder why it was necessary for the minister of this or any other government to come and ask the House for an appropriation for this work. Often when the work has been done a storm will come up in the fall, or in the spring or winter months and beach rocks and stones and all sorts of debris will be thrown up and the work has to be done over again.

I rose particularly to call the minister's attention to the needs of the port of Windsor on the river Avon in the county of Hants. As my hon. friends all know, Windsor is one of the oldest ports in the Maritime provinces, standing near the mouth of the Avon river. This river is subjected to tremendous tides, and the dredging work which is done one year must of necessity be repeated next year in order to make navigation possible. Besides being one of the oldest ports in the Maritime provinces Windsor is, if not the third, at least the fourth most important port in the province of Nova Scotia, from the standpoint of shipping. We have great gypsum deposits there, and the Wentworth Gypsum Company of Windsor, the J. B. King Company of New York export annually about 200,000 tons of gypsum. We have also the Mosher quarries and other plaster companies using that port. It is also a great lumbering section, and the people have no other way except through the port of Windsor to get their stuff to market save over the railway, which costs a great deal of money by way of freight. There are many hundreds of thousands of feet of lumber to be shipped to the United States annually through that port, and it is necessary that it be put in proper shape to enable the shippers to get their gypsum and lumber and other products to the markets of the world. There is also a great potato growing country, as well as a great apple growing country, adjoining the port, but to-day we are in such a position that it is impossible for us to get vessels to come to that port owing to the unsatisfactory condition of the harbour. There is urgent need for dredging there.

It is all very well to follow the policy which has been followed in the past of getting some ten or fifteen men to shovel some of the mud away from around the docks, probably at a cost of $2,000 or $3,000 annually, but while that does some little good it is practically worthless work, as it is not nearly sufficient to enable the port to be a success. When the tide is out the vessels lie aground and it is necessary that the mud be shovelled up and taken away so that these vessels can lie at the docks. It is utterly impossible to charter a vessel to come to Windsor to-day without paying a higher freight percentage than she will get for going to any of the other ports of Nova Scotia, and the result is that the trade of the town is becoming stagnant or is being taken to other places. We have been hampered through the condition of the harbour for a great number of years.

Windsor is the fourth most important port from the standpoint of customs receipts in the province of Nova Scotia, and in the old days it was one of the most wealthy ports of the province, and a great shipbuilding place. To-day some thirty or forty thousand people from the town and surrounding country are dependent on the port of Windsor for getting their goods to market. In 1914 we had public docks in the town of Windsor, but for some reason or other the government of the day leased these wharves to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, along with the railway to Windsor Junction for ninety-nine years at an annual rental of about $22,500 a year. Prior to that time there was an agreement whereby the wharves were held by the people, but the railway was leased on a basis of one-third of the gross receipts, and in 1913 the gross receipts were something like $43,000. In the year 1914, notwithstanding the fact that the receipts had reached the amount of $43,000, the railway took over this wharf and the railway for a term of ninety-nine years at an annual rental of $22,500. We have a very small wharf there, and we were told at the time of the lease that this would be extended and that considerable dredging would be done and the waterfront put in a proper state for shipping. But as a matter of fact we have a small wharf there to-day at which a vessel of 150 tons cannot lie, and she is a very small schooner, without the bowsprit projecting over the old government wharf, which is now in the hands of the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, and the main boom extending over the Smith wharf on the other side. I would therefore ask the minister to consider well the needs of the port of Windsor and to put a substantial item in the estimates this year for dredging and a wharf at that port. It is all very well to say that we will allocate from this general vote two or three thousand dollars for dredging, but the port of Windsor needs from $50,000 to $60,000 for the improvement of the wharf and harbour and for dredging in order that the channel may be made safe and efficient, so that the port of Windsor shall take its rightful place in the province of Nova Scotia and be able to maintain its record. I believe that if we get adequate shipping facilities, Windsor will be at least the third most important shipping point in the province. If we had the adequate dock facilities we enjoyed in days gone by, there would be sufficient return from these wharves in wharfage charges to pay the interest on the capital expenditure. I therefore bespeak from the minister his most earnest attention to the needs of this port, which is one of the oldest in the Maritime provinces, and whose hardy people do need proper facilities to get their goods to market.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister be good enough to inform me what the distinction is between this vote and some of the items in resolution No. 154? This vote is for dredging; in resolution No. 154 there is also an item of $85,000 for dredging Yarmouth harbour; then in the list my hon. friend read to the House a few moments ago there was a further item for Yarmouth. What is the distinction?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The dredging referred to in resolution 154, as I explained the other evening, is under contract. In addition to that the government have one of the units of their own plant in Yarmouth where it is proposed to remove a certain yardage this year, and that will come under the general vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the minister given —I have not been in regularly—details of the contemplated work of dredging in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have not reached that item yet.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How many dredges are engaged on this work in the Maritime provinces and are they all owned by the government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The dredges are No. 1, No. 2, the St. Lawrence, No. 4, No. 5, No. 9, No. 11, No. 12, No. 13, No. 15, No. 115, and the tug Lisgar.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are they all owned by the government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are all government plants.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Have any new dredges been added this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, none.

Mr. LUCAS: Does the $200,000 for dredging appear in the item of $600,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is the yardage which I gave, 200,000 yards.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In what constituency?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Lunenburg.

Mr. DUFF: The best county in Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is there any dredge by the name of Duff?

Mr. DUFF: I think there will be one.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—Ontario and Quebec, $625,000.

Mr. HALBERT: What proportion of that has been spent and where?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not sure that the vote is divided as to provinces; the estimate is for the two provinces named. My notes have not been prepared so as to give my hon. friend the information for which he asks, but I will be very glad to have those details supplied to him.

Mr. SHEARD: Has any provision been made for dredging in connection with the port at Toronto? I would also ask whether the western channel, as well as the southern channel, has been provided for and will receive attention from the government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The items referred to by my hon. friend are provided for in the Toronto harbour vote.

Mr. SHEARD: To what extent, may I ask?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To complete contracts, I think, that are now under way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the general vote of $30,000 for harbours and rivers include any dredging?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member was asking if this vote includes any dredging in Toronto?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not this one.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the other one?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the capital vote which we have not yet reached, there is an item for dredging in Toronto harbour to complete the contract we have there. There is none in this vote.

Mr. SHEARD: What amount is provided for dredging? There are two pretty large channels at Toronto, the western channel and the southern channel, through which vessels are passing. It would require, I think, the whole appropriation to dredge out those two channels. I would like to know what amount the minister has provided for that dredging?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To complete the contract of the Randolph Macdonald Company dredging at the eastern entrance, $17,415 is provided under the vote for harbour improvements, Toronto.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Is there anything provided in this vote for the dredging of Port Burwell harbour?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, there is provision in this vote for dredging at Port Burwell by departmental plant.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Could the minister give the amount?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At Port Burwell, 155,000 yards by dredge No. 17, and 50,000 yards by dredge No. 1.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope the minister realizes that the first vote for the Maritime provinces in 1921-22 was $500,000. It is increased now $100,000. The vote for Ontario and Quebec is increased by $175,000. The vote for Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta is decreased by $30,000. The vote for British Columbia remains as it is. Why is there an increase of $275,000 for dredging in the Maritime provinces, Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my right hon. friend will understand the reason. I am advised that during the war there were but small expenditures made, in fact a great deal of the departmental plant was laid up. Today we find that many of these harbours have silted up and require a larger expenditure to get them into proper condition again.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of course the minister was not here then, but if he had been he would remember that we were roundly abused when in power for having such a large expenditure at that time.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Possibly.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Dredging—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, $100,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Could the minister give us some particulars as to where this money is to be spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The work proposed is as follows:

Place—Method—Estimated quantity.
Winnipegosis, Dredge No. 210, 40,000 cubic yards.
Plamondon, Dredge Plamondon, 20,000 cubic yards.
Cumberland lake, Dredge No. 208, 27,000 cubic yards.
Big George island, Dredge No. 205, 12,000 cubic yards.
Grand beach, Dredge No. 201, 5,000 cubic yards.
Mantagao river, Dredge No. 205, 1,150 cubic yards.
Red river-mouth, Dredge No. 201, 73,000 cubic yards.
Winnipeg, Dredge No. 202, Red river at C.N.R. bridge 11,060 cubic yards.
Red river at Lake bar sand and gravel wharf, 2 800 cubic yards.
Red river at Harbour Commissioners' wharf, 3,000 cubic yards.
Red river at Bannatyne to Water ave., 16 800 cubic yards.
Red river at C.P.R. bridge, 1,700 cubic yards.

I think that covers the programme.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Has the department considered doing anything at all in regard to the harbour at Port Nelson?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, we have made no provision in the Public Works department for work of that character.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is the work that is done there appreciating in value—the artificial island?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am sorry I am not able to give the information. That work is in the Railway department, not under the Public Works department.

Mr. LEWIS: Is any work to be done in Saskatchewan at all?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is work at Cumberland lake, Saskatchewan.

Mr. KNOX: Are the dredges at Port Nelson under control of the Public Works department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. IRVINE: We have not very many large harbours in Alberta and our shipping is not very extensive. The biggest sea that I know of there is the large hole we have in the basement of our prospective post office. What amount is spent in dredging harbours in Alberta?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we have nothing noted for Alberta in the way of dredging. At Plamondon, East Edmonton, there will be some 20,000 cubic yards.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Where is that work to be done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Plamondon, East Edmonton.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the necessity of the work there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My note would indicate that this is a village on Horse Creek, which flows into Lac la Biche at its western end. The town of Lac la Biche at the southern end of the lake is a station on the Alberta and Great Waterways Railway and supplies for settlers are brought in and their produce exported by the railway from Lac la Biche station. The lake is the only means of transport and access to and from Plamondon is greatly hindered by the presence of trees, stumps, brush and weeds in the channel at Horse creek, so that to accommodate the population of 2,000 affected it is proposed to clean out the channel where obstructed on a length of 7,000 feet by removal of snags, weeds, etc., and widening and deepening the creek so as to give a depth of 5 feet and width of 23 feet. Total quantities to be removed are estimated at 50,000 cubic yards, so that the work will extend over three seasons. A small dredge was constructed for this work in 1922-23.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is that the total amount for dredging in Alberta?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. IRVINE: I was not quite clear as to what the object of this excavation was.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is in order that the citizens may get access to the lake and may be enabled to move their produce to the railway station.

Mr. KELLNER: Is it the intention of the government to complete the work at Plamondon? I would like to advise the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Irvine) that there are several ports out in Alberta. We have a navigation route of over 1300 miles in the northern part of Alberta in the Northwest Territory, and while there is not very much money in the estimates to take care of them, there is a vast amount needed in that district, especially for expenditure at Lac la Biche. That lake is blocked up now, the water is rising, and the farmers are suffering, as they are suffering in other parts of the West.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the work will extend over two or three seasons.

Mr. BANCROFT: Is it the intention of the minister to have the dredge that is working at Big George island clean out Grassy narrows? They expect to complete the work at Big George island some time during the summer and we want to get the Grassy narrows cleaned out, as it would facilitate shipping up and down the lake.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have an appropriation for Big George island. If my hon. friend will make representations I will have them considered.

Mr. BANCROFT: I have already done so, and I understood from the answer of the minister that the representations would be considered.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter is probably being considered.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much money was spent last year in the three provinces?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We spent $114,000 last year in the western provinces, out of a vote of $144,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I mean in this vote. At what points was that money spent?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We spent $114,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There would only be a few points. Would the minister tell us the points and how much was spent at each point.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amounts are:

Edmonton East, Plamondon, 5,582 cubic yards	$3,307
Mackenzie, Le Pas, Manitoba	12,252
Mackenzie, Le Pas, days labour, boulders	400
Goose river	452 85

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is up at Nelson, in Manitoba. The next item is Big George island $20,031.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is in Selkirk riding, Manitoba. Then the further items are:

Red river, mouth	$12,882 00
Selkirk	595 31
Grand Marais	537 00
Victoria beach	3,746 00
Winnipeg	3,715 00

Mr. KELLNER: I do not think the minister gave me the information in regard to Lac la Biche.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think I gave the committee all the information I have. This item is for the removing of brush, trees and weeds in the channel of Horse creek, to accommodate the population of 2,000 people affected. It is proposed to clean out the channel, to dredge to a length of 7,000 feet to a depth of five feet and a width of twenty-three feet. The total quantity to be removed is estimated at 50,000 cubic yards. The work will be extended over three seasons.

Mr. KELLNER: Does the minister expect to do some work there this season?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We expect to do a portion of it.

Mr. ARTHURS: By a dredge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A small dredge was constructed for this work in 1922-23.

Mr. ARTHURS: At what cost?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am sorry I have not that here. The expenditure would not be very large.

Mr. LEWIS: As regards the item of dredging in Quebec, does that include the dredging of the St. Lawrence?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, that is not done by the Public Works department. That is under the control of the Marine department.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—British Columbia, $400,000.

Mr. MacKELVIE: Is any dredging contemplated at Shuswap lake this season? If so, is there any provision for dredging Shuswap river, between Sicamous and Mara.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are reconstructing that dredge with the view of doing dredging this year.

Mr. DICKIE: Is a dredging programme for the harbours of Nanaimo and Victoria provided for this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is the intention of the department to do some work in both Nanaimo and Victoria harbours this season.

Item agreed to.

Roads and bridges—Dominion roads and bridges generally, $5,000.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is any construction work in forest reserves and national parks under the jurisdiction of the Public Works department, or does that come under the Department of the Interior?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Parks branch of the Interior department. I think, at times, we have done some work for that branch, but such work comes primarily under that branch.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The committee will understand that particularly in Alberta, above all other provinces, a somewhat peculiar situation exists in the extent of forest and park reserves. This has caused considerable hardship sometimes to the people there, for this reason. Roads, as a rule, are, of course, under provincial jurisdiction, and they are looked after as well as finances will permit; but in many cases communities are divided from other communities by parks of forest reserves. Through those reserves and parks, the province, of course, can build no road, and in many cases it is almost impossible to get access to those places because of that fact. If this matter might be discussible under this item, I would discuss it now. If there is another item coming up under another department, I will reserve my remarks, but I want to make a few remarks about a particular situation which exists in my constituency.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the matter would come more particularly under the appropriation for the Dominion parks, but I have no objection to my hon. friend's discussing it if he so wishes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: If it would be more properly discussed under the appropriation for the Dominion parks, under the Department of the Interior, I would discuss it at that time.

The CHAIRMAN: It is not relevant at this time.

Item agreed to.

Interprovincial bridge over Restigouche river at Matapedia—repairs, $4,250.

Mr. LEWIS: Is this work being done by contract or by the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): By contract. S. M. Adams, Matapedia, is the contractor.

Item agreed to.

International bridge across St. John at Edmundston, N.B.—revote of lapsed amount, $14,100.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why is this a federal responsibility?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This work was undertaken some two or three years ago under an arrangement entered into between the Dominion government and the state of Maine, to build an international bridge across the St. John river at Edmundston.

Item agreed to.

Calumet—Bryson bridge, reconstruction, $4,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why is this a federal responsibility?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This bridge was constructed some years ago by the federal authorities, and it has been repaired from time to time. Last year there was an appropriation of $16,000 and the expenditure for 1922-23 was $12,000. This is a revote of $4,000 to complete the repairs under way.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—maintenance and repairs of bridge and approaches, $7,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What bridge is this? Why is the federal government taking it in hand? Is it an interprovincial bridge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This bridge was built by the joint action of the two provinces and the Dominion government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Between Ottawa and Hull, some three or four years ago. It is the replacement of an old bridge that the central authority built, I think, before confederation, and it has always been under federal control.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But it is built.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, but somebody has to maintain the bridge.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Do we maintain it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the bridge over to Hull down near the Chaudiere falls?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. We have maintained it for many years, I think since long before confederation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not understand why we should maintain that bridge.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Neither do I.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the minister ever been over it? I am not saying this because this government is in office now; but really we ought to have some principle that we follow and not just vote money according to pressure. Why do we maintain this bridge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The bridge, I understand, was built many years ago, indeed, I think, before confederation, by the United government. It was replaced again entirely by the Dominion government. It was replaced again in the eighties, and again in 1918 on an agreement with the two provinces, each province contributing one-third and the Dominion one-third. We find the bridge completed with apparently nobody in charge. I think it is well known to residents of Ottawa and Hull that the approaches became almost impassable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On the Hull side?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. We have been trying to interest the municipalities to get them to take over the care of those 9 p.m. approaches. We have not, however, succeeded in doing so. We made temporary repairs last year. The bridge and the roadways must be kept in repair. I quite agree with my right hon. friend that it is doubtful whether the Dominion government should be contributing to the repair of that bridge. It would seem to me that the responsibility should be assumed either by the municipalities adjoining or by the provinces. That, however, is the situation we find.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not know there was any responsibility assumed by the Dominion government. It is the first news I have had of that. Now, I know it is a very unpopular thing to object to any spending of government money around the city of Ottawa. At the same time, however, there is a right and there is a wrong, and we have to defend these things all over Canada. As for the building, I know that that arrangement was made—a third, a third and a third. Possibly that could be justified on the ground of construction. But as regards the maintenance of the bridge, I do not see why 100 per cent of it should be federal when the approaches are essentially a provincial responsibility. So far as I can remember, the approach to the bridge on the Ottawa side is all right, but on the Hull side it is fearful. Is the government undertaking to maintain the streets of Hull?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, that is the only repair I know of that is necessary. I do not know of any expenditures made on maintenance by the late government. What are we going to do? Are we going to maintain other bridges in the Dominion?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Unfortunately, the Dominion government do own and control the roadway and the approach to the bridge. The title is in the Crown, and apparently we cannot get anyone to take the responsibility off our hands.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand it, then, the Crown owns the approaches to the bridge and has given the free use of these approaches to the municipalities.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To the people.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And because the Crown has been so generous as to give the municipalities the free use of the bridge and the approaches, that puts an extra responsibility on the Crown to maintain the whole thing.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Apparently.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I should think the argument would lean the other way. The same view has been advanced to me before and I have always resisted it; I could never see any reason in it. I do not see why the fact that we give the free use of our property should involve us in a liability to maintain it as a road for the use of the municipality.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It does, unless the other fellow will take care of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the municipality wished to buy it I have no doubt the government would sell it. But it seems that, notwithstanding that we are giving the free use of the bridge to the municipality, we are involved in the liability of keeping up the approaches to it.

Mr. McMASTER: The right hon. gentleman should remember the Good Book says that if a man takes your coat you should give him your cloak also.

Mr. LEWIS: Is there much traffic over this bridge, and is that traffic on the increase these days?

Mr. KYTE: I think it is, while parliament is sitting.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister says that the road is vested in the Crown. All highways were originally vested in the Crown, but not in the right of the Dominion; highways are vested in the Crown in the right of the province. Is this road an exception to the general law? Has it been dedicated to the Dominion of Canada? Apparently it is not like all ordinary highways in the province, because those highways are vested in the Crown in the right of the provinces. In Ontario that has been changed recently and now the municipalities own their own highways. I did not know that this road was vested in the right of the Dominion.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Many years ago the Dominion government built this bridge in its entirety, paying the whole cost, and it replaced it in the 'eighties. In the recent arrangement they did succeed in getting the provinces to come in and pay two-thirds jointly. But the provinces did not assume the responsibility of the roadway or approach to this bridge. Now, it is all right to say let the municipality do the repairs, but if they do not do it the bridge is of no use and your money has been wasted. The bridge is in the control of the Dominion government, and the island in the middle of the river is Dominion government property. The matter is one that has given us considerable concern. I allowed that roadway to go in such a state of disrepair last year that I became ashamed of it and we did make some temporary repairs, because someone must assume the responsibility in the interests of the travelling public who use the roadway.

Mr. LEWIS: Will this be an annual expenditure of $7,000, or will the cost of upkeep be less?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think it will be an annual expenditure.

Mr. COOTE: Apparently there has been $7,000 voted for this bridge for the last three years, and in 1920 there was a vote of $34,000. Has the minister asked the municipality of Hull to take care of the approach to the bridge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have had repeated conferences on the matter.

Mr. COOTE: And have they refused to look after it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. IRVINE: What would happen if they kept on refusing? Suppose every province refused to repair its bridges, would this government assume the responsibility for all the bridges that the municipalities might wish not to repair?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This bridge is in a different position from the ordinary bridge. In connection with the ordinary bridges the Dominion government does not own the approaches; they are under the control either of the province or of the municipality. But here is a bridge which we have maintained for many years. When we finally induced the province to come in and pay a portion of the cost of construction, that was the time we should have made some arrangement to divest ourselves of responsibility for the approaches. But the bridge is there and someone must keep it in repair; and apparently it is left to the Dominion government to perform that duty.

Mr. BROWN: What recourse would the municipality have against the Dominion government if we did not repair it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They would have none. But it will not be suggested that after having expended many thousands of dollars in providing a roadway, some governmental body should not take charge of it and keep it in repair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We contribute to lots of bridges, but we are not liable to maintain them. It is inherent in municipal obligation to maintain the approach or roadway. It is true we own the title, but all we have to do is dedicate the roadway to the province the same as we have dedicated all highways, and we thus get rid of that responsibility. If the fact we have been generous in the past brings us under obligation, let us be a little more generous and dedicate the roadway to the province. I go over this bridge quite a little myself. I may explain that this is the road to the golf club; it is not the usually traversed road, and I know friends of mine who are anxious that it be taken care of by the government. But I never yielded to the solicitation, and I do not know where we shall stop if we yield now.

Mr. COPP: Are the approaches not taken care of at all?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not taken care of except on the Ottawa side. The approach to the bridge on the Ottawa side has been all right, but on the other side there are, I should say, two or three hundred yards where it is very bad and has been allowed to stay that way.

Mr. COPP: I understood an hon. gentleman to say that there was a vote in 1920 of a considerable sum of money for the work.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The assumption of maintenance was never yielded to, to the best of my knowledge. I remember that it has always been resisted.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines—Battleford—Isle la Crosse telegraph line, $5,000.

Mr. EVANS: The telegraph line running from Qu'Appelle through Humboldt to Battleford, a distance of some 350 miles, has been maintained for the last fifteen years although, so far as I know, no one has had any particular use for it. This line has always been paralleled by that of the Canadian National Railway. Some six or seven stations are maintained east of Battleford, with line repairers, and so on, at a cost, I should say, of at least $12,000 or $13,000 a year. What is to be done with that line?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is the intention to abandon that portion of line.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia—Vancouver Island district—general repairs and improvements, $2,000.

Mr. NEILL: Does this include an appropriation for extension of the telegraph line from Uchucklesit or Kildonan to Ecoole, a distance of some five or six miles?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No provision is made here for extensions. This is simply to cover maintenance and repairs.

Mr. NEILL: Application has been made for the construction of this line; it is a necessary work and would serve many people. The request has been made for a number of years now. The distance is only short, and the construction would not be expensive.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia—mainland telegraph and telephone lines—general repairs and improvements, $8,200.

Mr. MacKELVIE: What extensions are contemplated under this vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No extensions; simply maintenance and repairs.

Mr. MacKELVIE: Is there any expectation that there will be provision in the Supplementary Estimates for extensions in the Sugar lake district?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have certain recommendations for extensions before us; they are being considered.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—Engineering branch—salaries of engineers, inspectors, superintendents, draftsmen, clerks and messengers of outside service, $465,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Are we not to get any information in regard to the number of employees in these branches?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are 200 employees, with salaries amounting to $457,950. To that is to be added contingencies $7,050, a total of $465,000.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—monument to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, $25,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I remember a year ago there was a determined protest because this work had not been gone on with under the late government. Will the minister explain why it has not been gone on with under this government?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matter has been under consideration—

Mr. MEIGHEN: We got that far.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): But no further. We have gone a bit further; we are arranging for a competition, and I understand that a committee of the Cabinet has had under consideration the matter of location. I believe that the Prime Minister was to confer with my right hon. friend on the subject; I do not know whether that conference has yet taken place. The department is ready to proceed when we get the necessary information from that committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is quite true that the Prime Minister has conferred with me just within the last day or two as to something the government has in mind. All I wanted to emphasize was that the criticism of a year ago was wholly unjustified. It would have double force to-day, for this government has only got to the conference stage.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—National Gallery of Canada, $100,000.

Mr. LEWIS: Why is there an increase of $50,000?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The commission in control of the National Gallery have represented that this is an opportune time to purchase valuable paintings in the Old Country, and they have asked that in the interests of art in the Dominion this vote be increased. We have consented to increase it from $50,000 to $100,000.

Mr. LEWIS: Does parliament have any supervision over the purchases?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The commissioners or trustees make their own purchases.

Mr. COOTE: In view of the statement that it is the policy of the government to practise economy, does the minister think we are justified in spending $50,000 for the purchase of pictures? If so, how much of this vote of $100,000 is to be devoted to that purpose?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend will agree that the development of art in any country is a great asset to the people—is, indeed, a matter of national importance. The National Gallery is serving a very useful purpose. It was reopened in September, 1921, and during the first year after its reopening it was visited by 106,000 people. The year ending March 31 will show an attendance of an equal number. The chief work of the National Gallery during the past year has been the maintenance and development of the national collection and the continuation of the loan exhibitions throughout Canada, of which eighteen have been held. The trustees arrange to take pictures from the National Gallery and have them exhibited in the larger centres throughout Canada, thus giving the people an opportunity to acquaint themselves with activities of the gallery.

In addition, we have the Canadian war memorial paintings. An exhibition of one-half of the paintings is now being held, and it is hoped to have the balance ready for exhibition at the same time next year. I would suggest to any hon. gentleman interested in art that he would be well repaid by a visit to the National Gallery and an examination of the war memorial paintings and the other pictures there. The total amount appropriated by parliament since the establishment of the National Gallery Board in 1907 is $550,000. Making allowance for expenses and maintenance not more than $450,000 has been expended in works of art. The total value of the collection is conservatively estimated at current prices to be worth from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, and in the opinion of competent judges it is one of the best collections on this continent. The trustees have made strong representations that they can secure from the Old Country to-day some very valuable pictures at a very reasonable cost.

Mr. COOTE: I have visited the National Gallery and have seen some very nice pictures there. I think the collection we now have at the National Gallery is as good as we can afford at the present time. I think this vote should not be increased this year, and I am surprised that the Finance Minister has given it his sanction. I know how strong an advocate he is of economy, and when we are taxing the clothing and other necessaries of our people in order to raise the money on which to run this country I do not think it is right to vote an extra $50,000 for the purchase of more pictures. Pictures are nice things to look at, but they will not keep you warm nor fill an empty stomach, and I would move that this vote be reduced by the sum of $50,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Are these gentlemen going to the Old Country to purchase these pictures? Who purchases them?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The trustees serve without charge. I do not know of any charge that has been made in connection with trips to the Old Country.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Who are the trustees?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Sir Edmund Walker, Toronto, Chairman; Dr. F. J. Shepherd, Montreal; J. Auguste Richard, Montreal; Newton McTavish, Toronto, and Warren Soper, Ottawa.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If I remember rightly, this is the former grant.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And it was diminished in what year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In 1915-1916, to $75,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And then to $50,000 later.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): These purchases are not confined entirely to Europe? Several are made in Canada, I understand?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. They are trying to encourage Canadian art. There are many pictures by Canadian artists in the National Gallery.

Mr. FIELDING: There are quite a number of items in the Estimates concerning which the same criticism might be offered as that which has just been made by my hon. friend (Mr. Coote). There are a great many items of which you could say: They do not keep you warm or do not feed people. But after all, there is something in the encouragement of art, and I do not think this is a very extravagant sum for us to vote. We must not be heartless, but we do not want to be artless, and I think the grant proposed, especially as it is simply a renewal of the former grant, is one that ought to commend itself to the House. We ought not to be too materialistic. Let us have a little admiration for the fine arts. If we do not appreciate them as much as we ought to, let us make good our defects by doing what we can for those who do appreciate them. I am not a connoisseur in the fine arts, but I would not like to see parliament reducing this item simply because it will not keep us warm or give us food.

Mr. COOTE: I just want to say a word in defence of my action in moving this amendment. If the estimate had been left at $50,000, the same as last year, I would have offered no objection. I am not objecting to art at all. As I said before, I have visited the National Gallery and seen some very fine pictures there and enjoyed them, but I think we can get a good deal of enjoyment out of the pictures that are already there and out of what may possibly be purchased with the $50,000. Beyond that I do not think this committee ought to go at this particular time, when we have the Minister of Finance reminding us on every occasion that we must practise economy.

Mr. MILLAR: Notwithstanding what has been said by the Minister of Finance and the respect that I have both for him and the minister whose estimates we are now passing upon, I am entirely in sympathy with the amendment. I cannot imagine any member of this House passing through the districts covering hundreds of miles of the prairie provinces and seeing the difficulties in which many of the farmers are, drawing their grain sixteen or seventeen or twenty miles, and they have been doing so for many years, seeing the children ill-clad because of the lack of the wherewithal, seeing the schools closed because they cannot hire a teacher—I cannot imagine anyone who has seen these hardships who would think it wise or right to pass this item and expend the money for this purpose at this time. It may be thought that at times we are over-stating the case, and that we are, as the Finance Minister has said, too materialistic, but I assure you that the difference is this: We come from those districts. We have moved from home to home among these people and have seen the conditions, and that is the reason we have a greater sympathy for these people. While I do not wish to embarrass the government when they are doing what is right and wise I think it is for the reason I have given that the hon. member (Mr. Coote) has been moved to bring forward this amendment, and it is for that reason also that I must support it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Before we vote on the amendment, I think I should give the committee the representations which the trustees, who, as I have already said, have undertaken this work for the people of Canada without any charge, have made to the government. This item was not placed in the estimates until they had come before the department and before the government and made their representations, and I think it is due to them that I should make them known to the committee:

> As chairman of the trustees, National Gallery, I am authorized to apply for sum of $100,000 to be placed in the 1923-1924 Estimates on behalf of the National Gallery of Canada.
> It is only natural that this work requires steadily increasing support on the part of the government if it is to be maintained and to progress in accord with the development of the culture and education of the country. In addition to maintaining the galleries at Ottawa, the National Gallery is conducting a very extensive campaign for the education of the country in a knowledge of the fine arts. During the past three years over fifty exhibitions of Canadian art have been held, and practically every city of importance from the Atlantic to the Pacific has been served in this way. In a great many communities the remarkable progress of art in recent years is almost entirely attributable to these exhibitions from the National Gallery, and in every case they have been the cause of great encouragement and permanent benefit.
> In asking for the sum of $100,000 the trustees are fully cognizant of the necessity for economy and they are therefore only asking at the present time for a return to the appropriation received in the years 1913-

14 and 1914-15 when the activity and importance of the National Gallery was comparatively limited to what it is now and when all works of art were cheaper. The trustees note that the government's grant to the Royal Canadian Academy has risen from $5,000 in 1914 and $2,500 during the war to $7,500. At such a scale of increase the National Gallery would be justified in asking for $150,000.

The trustees also wish to point out that owing to the unfavourable financial and other conditions in Europe at present, one hundred thousand dollars judiciously expended now will be of greater advantage than a much larger amount a few years hence when rare works of art will undoubtedly have still further increased in price or have become practically unobtainable.

I think that is all I wish to say. Undoubtedly the work is an important one. We have some very celebrated artists in Canada and the development of art will prove a benefit to the people of this country. I would be sorry to see the committee refuse this vote.

Mr. IRVINE: I think I can appreciate the point of view of the hon. member who moved the amendment. I agree that there is much suffering and difficulty in the economic world but I do not think this is the best place to begin and correct it. Certainly I am not one who believes in the seemingly cynical popular idea of economy; I think that money well spent is the best kind of economy. Out of the hundreds of thousands of dollars we have voted in the last few days, I do not think money could be spent in a better way than is proposed here. I would not be surprised if this money brought greater benefit to the country than any of the other expenditures we have authorized.

Amendment (Mr. Coote) negatived.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa Parliament building—tablet to the memory of the late Bowman B. Law who lost his life in the fire which destroyed the old Parliament Building, $5,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister give us some information in respect to this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is proposed to erect a tablet in the corridors of the building to commemorate the death of Mr. Bowman B. Law, member for Yarmouth, who was unfortunately caught in the building at the time of the fire and lost his life. A design for this tablet has been prepared and submitted to the trustees of the National Gallery and models have been invited, received, and referred to this committee.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This item, it seems to me, is on an altogether different basis from that to provide money for the purchase of paintings for the National Gallery. I know nothing about the gentleman to whom this tablet is to be erected. We have not been told that he has performed any great or special service to the country. I take it that the chief advantage in this would be that we are to have an ornamental tablet to further decorate the parliament buildings. It does seem to me that here is a case where we might well effect economy. All through the country there are many cases of estimable men who have lost their lives in various ways while engaged in carrying on the industrial work of this Dominion, and many monuments might be erected, from coast to coast, to the memory of such men. It seems to me that there is a danger that we are centralizing these things in these parliament buildings and I, for one, feel that only under exceptional circumstances should we spend money for such a purpose at this particular time.

Item agreed to.

Surveys and inspections, $110,000.

Mr. LEWIS: Where is this inspection taking place at the present time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This vote is required to provide for any surveys or inspections that may be necessary during the fiscal year 1923-24 in connection with harbours, rivers, slides, booms and bridge work, and other services under the control of the Department of Public Works. It is a contingency item. A little while ago some of my hon. friends made inquiry regarding certain investigations made last year in connection with the flooded area in the Northwest. I imagine this expenditure would be connected with work of that character.

Mr. SPENCER: How much was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The sum of $102,687 was expended last year.

Mr. LEWIS: I notice that an item above, amounting to $465,000 seems to include engineering equipment, surveys, etc.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The item my hon. friend refers to is to provide for the salaries of the regular staff. This vote is to meet inspection, travelling expenses, and expenditure of that kind in connection with extra work undertaken.

Item agreed to.

National monument on Connaught place, $10,000.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The possibility of erecting a national monument on Connaught place which my hon. friend probably knows is the square located between the post office, Central Station and the Chateau Laurier, I understand has been under discussion for some years. It has been suggested that some form of national monument should be erected, and we are placing this amount in the estimates with a view to getting the matter under way. There have been several suggestions as to the character and form this monument should take. The whole matter is being considered carefully by a committee of council and the present item is placed in the estimates on their recommendation.

Mr. IRVINE: Is this a preliminary vote?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, it is a preliminary vote.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I for one wish to object to this expenditure. It seems to me that this is also a matter which ought to require very careful consideration indeed before we embark on such expenditure. Men who served in the recent war are walking the streets to-day without work and their families are on the verge of starvation. I submit that we ought to fully provide for every one of these men before a cent is expended in the erection of a monument of stone.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I must also express my objection to this item. I think it is a very unwise expenditure at this time.

Mr. HOCKEN: I would like some further information respecting this matter. What form is the monument to take?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think that has yet been determined. I tried to make it plain to the committee that a committee of council are giving this matter consideration, with a view of developing something that would be suitable as a national monument. There have been several suggestions made, one being that we might have a monument in the capital city of the Dominion to commemorate confederation. Since the Great War it has been suggested that the efforts of the Canadian soldiers in France should be commemorated and that it would be a fit and appropriate thing to have a monument of that character in the capital city of Canada. There have been several suggestions. I think the desire of the Prime Minister was to put a small item in the estimates this year, in order that the matter might be given consideration, and that a monument that would commemorate some of the phases of Canada's history might be erected in the capital city of Canada.

Mr. HOCKEN: What does the minister hope to accomplish by an expenditure of $10,000? How will the money be spent to accomplish this object.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These matters are usually arranged by the government advertising a competition. The artists will prepare designs and submit them in competition. These designs will be judged according to their merits, the successful competitor securing the contract for the final work. That will be the first step.

Mr. LEWIS: Is parliament to bear the whole cost. In other districts the cities have to contribute to any monument erected in those cities. It seems to me the city of Ottawa which is just about as rich as any other city in Canada should bear a part of the expense of the erection of the monument.

Mr. HOCKEN: The hon. member does not know Ottawa.

Mr. MacLAREN: It seems to me this is rather vague. There is no definite object apparently nor is there any concrete idea in this proposition, except that we should have a national monument? I think it is an excellent idea, provided there is some special reason for it, and the time is suitable. I would suggest to the minister that the time is hardly suitable. It is not a pressing matter. There is no urgency about it, because the minister cannot tell us what it is for. I think this is a fair case for delay. Let us have this monument some time, but I do not think this is the appropriate or suitable time. I think we should withhold that expenditure for a few years to come.

Mr. HOEY: It seems to me that before we pass this item we should have some idea from the minister as to what the total cost of the monument when finished is likely to be. Is it going to be $10,000 this year, $100,000 next year, and $300,000 the following year? Before we can pass intelligently on this matter, we should have some idea as to the extent of the project.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I must apologize for not having a better knowledge of this item. It was inserted at the request of a committee of the Cabinet who had been giving considerable consideration to this matter. I would prefer to let the item stand for the present and bring it up at a later date, when further information might be given.

Item stands.

New Brunswick—St. John Quarantine Station Partridge island—repairs and improvements, $3,000.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is that in reference to supply of water?

Mr. FIELDING: No, the next item is.

Item agreed to.

St. John Quarantine Station—Partridge island water supply, $1,000.

Mr. MacLAREN: I would like some particulars in reference to the water supply. What improvement is being made in the supply?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required for general repair to the pipe line conveying supply of water from the main land to Partridge island.

Item agreed to.

Maritime provinces generally—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $38,000.

Mr. IRVINE: What is the difference between this item and the others we have had? Why separate them? This amount of $38,000 is for the Maritime provinces, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a general vote to maintain the Dominion public buildings in the three Maritime provinces, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. It also includes the items that formerly were voted separately for the cities of Halifax and St. John. It is all included in the one item. The expenditure under this item is $25,268. The items vary from $1,568, down to $558. It is for repairs to the buildings which take place from time to time.

Item agreed to.

Montreal ordnance stores building, $26,000.

Mr. BANCROFT: Is this a new building? or repairs to the old one?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount of $26,000 is required as a third payment on the purchase of Grant garage, No. 1 Hillside avenue, Westmount, as authorized by order in Council dated April 16th, 1921, which is being used to house the ordnance and barracks stores and garage service previously located in the Head building, which was given up on the expiration of the lease May 1st, 1921. This is the third payment. The payments extend over ten years. The total price is $140,000.

Item agreed to.

Ontario—Kitchener—government's share of cost of local improvements, $1,750.36.

Mr. HOCKEN: Why should the government pay for the local improvements?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount of $1,750.36 is provided for the payment to the city of Kitchener of the government's share of the cost of asphalt pavement on Benton street in front of the Kitchener public buildings. The municipal council of the city of Kitchener, under authority of by-law No. 1616, passed on 16th May, 1921, constructed a concrete asphalt pavement on Benton street, between King and Alma streets. This pavement had a total frontage of 698 feet and the cost of it amounted to $7,745.11, of which the city paid $1,798 for street intersections, culverts, etc. The balance, viz., $5,947.11 is charged against the properties which have a frontage of 581 feet. The cost per foot frontage therefore amounted to ten decimal 236 dollars and as the government property has a frontage of 171 feet along the street, the government's share of the cost amounts to $1,750.36. In other words, government properties, like other properties, are paying for local improvements at Kitchener. That is the common practice.

Mr. HOCKEN: Is that the practice in all other cities?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, for local improvements.

Mr. HOCKEN: I did not understand it in that way.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am rising, not to object to this item, but to get a little information which will apply to some other items also. As I understand the matter from the information of the minister, the government, in the case of all public buildings, is liable for its share of municipal improvements according to frontage, but it is not liable for any other form of municipal taxation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We do not pay any general taxes; but with the government consenting we do pay for local improvements.

Mr. HOCKEN: With the government consenting? How long has this practice been in vogue?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For about twenty-five years.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa printing bureau improvements, $1,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is a new building not to be erected for the Printing bureau? If so, is it necessary to put any improvements on the old one?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is the balance of a contract that was let for some improvements to the present building.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—towards purchase of Daly building, $148,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to provide for payment of the third instalment of the purchase price of $1,000,000 for the Daly building. This building was leased to the government at an annual rental of $85,000. The owners of the building offered to sell it for $1,000,000, payable in ten annual instalments of $100,000 each with interest at 6 per cent. This is the third instalment, and there will be seven more payments.

Mr. McQUARRIE: When was the first payment made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): August, 1921.

Mr. LEWIS: What was the original cost of the Daly building? It seems to me that $1,000,000 for that kind of a building is out of all proportion to the cost.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This building was not constructed by the government. This is a purchase, and the chief architect of the department, in a memorandum 10 p.m. dated May, 1921, recommended the purchase of this building on the above-mentioned basis of $100,000 a year with interest at 6 per cent; spread over a period of ten years, as such a purchase was manifestly to the advantage of the Dominion government, if we regard it only from a rental basis, but a further consideration of this renders it desirable also as a rounding out of the property already purchased by the Crown.

Mr. LEWIS: How much will it cost to put this building into shape for government offices?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We were in occupation of the building under a rental costing $85,000 a year, and it was apparently considered advisable at that time to purchase the building, extending the payments over a period of ten years.

Item agreed to.

Saskatchewan—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $17,000.

Mr. LEWIS: Last spring I brought to the attention of the minister the post office facilities at Swift Current. I understand some years ago that the government bought certain ground in order later on to build a post office. Last year, when I was speaking to the minister, he said that he intended to look over the situation. Has he looked over the situation and if so, what conclusion has he reached? Is there in this appropriation any money for a post office at Swift Current?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have made some inquiries, and we have entered into a new lease at a reduced rental for a term of one year for the property that we are now occupying.

Mr. LEWIS: Does the minister consider the present building suitable for a post office at Swift Current at the present time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our reports are that it is suitable.

Item agreed to.

Moose Jaw public building—improvements to heating, $12,000.

Mr. BANCROFT: What does this comprise?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to provide for the installation of new boilers to replace the five existing boilers which are in poor condition and which cannot adequately heat the building, and also for the installation of 2,000 square feet of additional radiation which is necessary in order to maintain a temperature of 70 degrees inside the building during zero weather. It is asked for by the chief architect and requested by the mechanical engineer for the western provinces.

Mr. LEWIS: I think I asked, under the former vote of last year of $17,000, where the money was intended to be spent, and I think the minister said last year that a certain amount of this $17,000 was to be spent at Swift Current. How much of it was spent at Swift Current last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year, $880.

Item agreed to.

Alberta—Calgary—customs examining warehouse—local improvement taxes, $3,737.10.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is this a rented building and so subject to general taxation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a government owned building.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The explanation given in regard to the last item applies to this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There is some discussion as to the general taxation that can be levied by municipalities on public lands or properties. The general principle is that no taxes can be levied on the Crown in that respect, and sometimes, of course, it works a great hardship on the municipalities. It struck me that, in the matter of taxation, pavements fronting government buildings would almost come under the same class as roads fronting government lands or properties. Is this item arrived at by arrangement between the government and the municipality concerned?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Improvements on the sidewalk leading to government property is a fair charge against that property. The matter is one of consent on the part of the government.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I was not objecting to the item. I was simply referring to the application of the principle and as to how far it extended.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $17,000.

Mr. IRVINE: I want to make a few remarks with regard to the Calgary post office. The Calgary post office, as a matter of fact, is something that does not exist. I quite understand that the matter has been under consideration by the government, for representations have been made, I believe, on numerous occasions by the people of Calgary, through the mayor and council and other public bodies, requesting attention to that post office. The minister, no doubt, is aware that the Calgary post office was pulled down by a previous government, that, I believe, of Sir Robert Borden, the intention having been to prepare the way for a better and more commodious building. For some reason or other it was found advisable, it seems, not to carry on the work, and since then we have been looking at a huge hole in the ground instead of a post office. Before the government pulled it down the post office was giving reasonable service, and the city of Calgary has a reasonable and urgent claim upon the government at this time for a new building. The government is paying $50,000 or so annually for the rental of public buildings, all of which could be saved if a post office building were put up. This unseemly hole that is left in the ground now is a disgrace to the city and perhaps a greater disgrace to the government that made the hole. The building of a new post office has been urged by the city council, organized labour, and other public bodies, and I should like to know whether the minister intends making any provision for the work this year. It is badly needed; the people want it; and the appropriations for our province are comparatively small. Besides this, the building of a post office at this time would materially relieve unemployment.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are well advised as to the necessity of a public post office at Calgary, but to construct a building suitable for the district would mean a very large expenditure at this time, and it is not the intention of the government to proceed with the work this year.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia—Bamfield—public building, $1,500.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is this for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for work in connection with the public building at Bamfield, which is situated on the west coast of Vancouver island where there is a cable station.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $35,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What are the details of this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is required for improvements, renewals and repairs in connection with the maintenance of public buildings in British Columbia, including those in the city of Vancouver for which previously a special appropriation was taken. This year, up to January 31st, we have spent $33,595. It is the usual maintenance vote.

Item agreed to.

Victoria—Old Post Office—taxes due city for 1922, $1,482.62.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An explanation was given of this vote last year, but the committee may have forgotten it. This is an old public building in the city of Victoria which the government have been renting, and for that reason, it being in competition with other property, for many years a tax has been paid on it as on other property. The government are now going to use the property for their own purposes, and once it reverts to that position we shall not pay taxes.

Item agreed to.

Armouries—fittings and alterations, $37,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is this appropriation for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is required for fitting up rented buildings throughout the country for use as armouries as requested by the Deputy Minister of National Defence in a letter dated November 27th, 1922, in which he states that this estimate represents the minimum amount required by the department for repairs and alterations to non-permanent active militia headquarters, and it is therefore requested that the amount be included in the estimates for the fiscal year 1923-1924.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings generally, $30,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This includes travelling expenses, stationery, drawings, instruments, etc. The appropriation for 1921-22 was $30,000; the expenditure was $29,767. This year our expenditure to January 31, was $18,775, leaving a balance unexpended of $11,000.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings—power for running elevators, stamp cancelling machines, etc., $76,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister give the reason for the increase there?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The increase is accounted for by an appropriation of $5,292 due to transfer of an amount formerly paid out of another vote, together with an increase of $743 in the allotment for contingencies. These two items amount to $6,035, but there are a few slight decreases throughout the Dominion which reduce the total to $6,000.

Mr. KNOX: How much of the vote for Dominion public buildings, which totals $5,135,500, is to be spent in Ottawa?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): All the items under the heading "Ottawa public buildings" relate to Ottawa services. The others are for buildings outside Ottawa.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings—rents, $1,450,000.

Mr. JELLIFF: Will the minister please explain that? There is a big increase there.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The increase is due to provision being made for the rental of premises for the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and the Soldier Settlement Board, for which no provision was made in the estimates of 1922-23, and which were formerly charged to demobilization vote; and to increases in rentals and new rentals entered into in 1922-23. Under Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment we have rentals of $115,000; Soldier Settlement Board, $43,582; increase in rentals, $31,486; new rentals, $46,322.

Mr. KNOX: Is any portion of that for the city of Ottawa?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.
