HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO LEADER OF OPPOSITION ON ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTHDAY

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all hon. members will want me to wish the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) a happy birthday and many happy returns.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say, on behalf of all those who sit on this side of the house, that the sentiments you have expressed are those of each and every one of us. We frequently have exchanges and even clashes of ideas on all that concerns the public service of the country, but I am sure that those are always the result of the honest endeavour of each and every one of us to discharge to the best of his ability the responsibilities placed upon him by his fellow citizens. I think those clashes strengthen rather than lessen our respect for each other and our rejoicing on an occasion like this in the opportunity to express good wishes to each other. I can assure the hon. gentleman that those I express for the members who sit in this house are sincere. We wish him a long and happy life and many more years of public service to his fellow citizens.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, this was an occasion when I hoped the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) would express congratulations not only from those who sit on his side of the house but from all of us all over the house. We join heartily in the sentiments he has expressed.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I do not look forward to birthdays coming to me, but I look forward to their coming to other people, not just because I want them to grow old so that we can vanquish them but rather because it gives us an opportunity to express to them our good will, as the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) did this afternoon. On behalf of the group I represent I want to join with him in the expression of good will. We want the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) to know that we should like to see him enjoy a good many more birthdays and useful years of living.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I express to you my appreciation of the kind good wishes that you have extended. May I say that they come with particular significance in view of the fact that it is so short a time ago that you yourself were receiving similar compliments, although not in relation to the same figures connected with the day. May I say that I am deeply grateful for and deeply moved by the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and of the leaders of the other parties in the house who have expressed their good wishes today.

I think it is a wonderful thing that here in this house, where we have real differences of opinion, the Prime Minister could put into words the thoughts that I know most of us would wish to share at all times, namely that out of the vigorous exchange of ideas there grows an increasing respect for the sincerity behind the different points of view that are expressed. There is always something a little bit, shall I say, forbidding about it when you see these years in increasing numbers being marked up on the board. However, I am always encouraged by the recollection of a birthday party that was given to Sir William Mulock in Toronto on his 90th birthday. I still remember the thrill with which, as a much younger man, I heard Sir William on that occasion, with straight back and high head, assure his audience that he was still looking forward to the hills of enchantment ahead of him; and he in fact went forward for many happy years. Perhaps it is too much to follow the words of Shakespeare and to suggest that "this day shall change all . . . quarrels into love"; nevertheless I express my appreciation of the generous and, I know, sincere good wishes extended by the Prime Minister and those who have joined him on this occasion.

TRADE MARKS ACT

COMING INTO FORCE—NEW TRADE MARKS RULES

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest which has been expressed in the house on one or two occasions, and particularly on April 26 last by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), I am tabling a copy of the order in council, approved yesterday, authorizing the issue of a proclamation to bring the Trade Marks Act into force on July 1, 1954.

I am also tabling another order in council revoking the trade mark registration regulations now in force, and substituting therefor the trade marks rules, with effect on July 1, 1954. A copy of the new rules is annexed to this order in council.

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT ON PROPOSED TARIFF CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In presenting the question I do so without having given notice to the Prime Minister because it is based upon a telegram I have received regarding the effect of the subject matter of the question. Have representations been made to the government of the United States with respect to the possible effect of the tariff changes that were announced as likely to take place in connection with fish, zinc and lead, having particular regard to the effect that would have not only on the metals that are being exported but on our fishing industry in Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I am quite sure there have been conversations, but I will take the question as a notice and have an investigation made to be in a position to say exactly what was done in that respect.

POTATOES

REGULATIONS RESPECTING IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McBain (Elgin): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder whether the minister is aware that imported new potatoes are now being served in the parliamentary restaurant. If so, will the minister explain the import regulations on these new potatoes in view of the surplus of potatoes now on hand in Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I obtained some new potatoes in the parliamentary restaurant so I presume there are some being served there. The arrangement between this country and the United States in connection with this matter is that seasonal duties are imposed on different vegetables, including potatoes, that apply from one date to another. In the case of potatoes a higher duty is applied from June 15 to July 31. In other words a higher duty is imposed when our new potatoes come on the market. At other times the duties are lower, so that American potatoes do come in at this time of the year.

I would suggest it is not a bad thing either from the American point of view or from ours. At least, it has not been considered to be during the twenty-four or twenty-five years that these seasonal duties have been in force. Their potatoes and vegetables of different kinds come in fresh to this market at a time when we do not have them to put on the market. Then at a later date, when our products come on the market, there is a higher rate of duty on the United States products which tends to prevent them coming into this country during the period of time that our own products are being marketed. Therefore I have no doubt that we are eating American new potatoes at present, but I am sure there would be a great outcry from the housewives of Canada if they were compelled to prepare for their tables only old potatoes of last year.

STATEMENT AS TO DISPOSAL OF 1953 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): I should also like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he give the house any figures with respect to carload shipments of potatoes from the maritime provinces and other parts of Canada to the United States since last season?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): I do not know that I can give figures to indicate the carload shipments of potatoes. Yesterday the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton asked me a question and I had some information prepared which I might read to the house. I do not know that I should read all of it, because there is quite a bit; but there will be copies available for any member who desires to have one.

The general summary of the statement is as follows: Based on April 1 figures of storage stocks of potatoes in Canada, it would appear that if sales remain at about the same level as in 1953 there will be a market for most of the potatoes remaining in eastern Canada. The stocks less 1953 marketings from the maritimes, less seed for use in spring seeding probably on a reduced acreage, less expected shrink, will leave few, if any, 1953 potatoes in eastern Canada by June 30.

Part of the problem at the present time is pressure by producers on the buyers to accept deliveries immediately when the marketing should be spread out from now till June 30. The boards in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have set up policies to provide for the orderly marketing of potatoes throughout the remainder of the season. In New Brunswick producer allocation is being carried out. No doubt there will be considerable complaint since each producer will consider that his potatoes should have top priority, but the government considers this is a matter to be worked out by the boards concerned in their respective provinces and does not propose to interfere.

The meaning of that is that the boards that have been set up are, we think, marketing the potatoes in a reasonable way. While this statement does not include the exact figures asked for, it does include the results, namely, that there are not any more potatoes being offered from the two provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick this year than were offered last year, and if sales this year down to the 30th of June are as good as they were last year the potatoes will be pretty well marketed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

General services—

129. Departmental administration, $315,090.

The Chairman: Hon. members will find the vote on page 21 of the blue book and the details on page 187.

Mr. Pearkes: Would the minister care to make a statement?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): I could make a statement now or speak on each item. If hon. members would rather have a short summary of what has happened in the last year, perhaps we could go on from there.

Mr. Pearkes: I think it would be helpful if the minister would make a statement.

Mr. Sinclair: Perhaps I should start off, for the benefit of the new members, by just touching briefly on the division of jurisdiction between the federal Department of Fisheries and the provincial departments of fisheries because there is some doubt in some members' minds about that point. Under our constitution the federal government has complete jurisdiction over fisheries, but over the years we have worked out with the provinces what is a very satisfactory arrangement under which they usually administer sport fisheries, which are of course of primary value to them in recreation and the tourist trade, and we handle the commercial fisheries, especially those of the two coasts. The federal government passes all regulations concerning fisheries, even for the sport fisheries of the provinces, and of course do the research work, and the inspection of fish for interprovincial trade or for export.

Last year, when our estimates were before the house, our principal concern was about markets because the market for fish was quite depressed which, of course, reacted through to the industry and to the fishermen. Here in Canada we are on the front doorstep of two of the greatest fisheries in the world. We produce a great deal more than we consume, so actually between 75 per cent and 85 per cent of our fish is exported. We are, therefore, very vulnerable so far as changes in price or changes in export trade are concerned.

Last year we had a carryover of about one million cases of salmon on the west coast. Salmon is our most valuable fishery. Last year it netted the fishing industry about $47 million. Over and above that carryover, we had a prospect for a very large pack of salmon from the incoming runs.

Mr. Macdonnell: What percentage would it be?

Mr. Sinclair: It is about one-third of the total value of the fisheries of Canada, that is the west coast salmon.

You will recall that we had a very difficult situation in the maritimes in connection with the sale of filleted fish, which is their great export, to our best market the United States because there was a great influx of fish from Europe. There was a boundary dispute between Britain and Iceland and as a consequence a great deal of European fish had been diverted to the United States. This was one of the causes of the tariff hearing mentioned earlier by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). Of course, this had a bad effect on our exports of fillets.

Newfoundland, where the principal product has been dry salt cod, experienced great difficulty in its traditional markets. Even those markets in which we could compete in price were blocked to us as a result of currency and other difficulties. As a consequence of these circumstances, this time last year the whole fishing industry was in a quite depressed condition.

I am very happy to report today that there has been a great improvement since last year. So far as salmon on the west coast is concerned, we have cleared off this million case carryover. We had as well the record pack we expected, but today there is no surplus salmon in British Columbia. We have been able to get back into the British market in a substantial way mainly, as I told the house earlier this session, through the efforts of the fishing industry on the west coast. They stepped up their purchases of British equipment to enable the British to earn the dollars to buy more salmon.

As a result of the activities of the Minister of Finance at the commonwealth conference at Sydney last fall, we are back into both the Australian market for $500,000 worth of fish this year and the New Zealand market for $600,000 worth of fish this year. We have heard that there is likelihood of another commonwealth country opening its doors again to the product their people want, British Columbia salmon. We have had increased European sales in some of our markets there such as Belgium, France and Italy. We have had increased sales in the markets of the United States. Generally, they depend on their own salmon out of Puget sound and Alaska. There has been quite a decline in the Alaska fishery, and because of that we have had the largest sales in recent years to the United States. Above all things, we are proudest of the great increase in salmon sales here in Canada as a result of an aggressive merchandising campaign by the industry, helped by the lower price of salmon. This year we have sold nearly one million cases of salmon in Canada, and that is about twice our pre-war sales in Canada.

So far as salt cod is concerned, it is another one of our major fishery products. There has been quite a change there, too. Salt cod is produced in Newfoundland and sold in export trade. It is produced in Nova Scotia substantially, and to a lesser extent on the Gaspe coast, in Saguenay and New Brunswick. The largest single block of salt cod on the markets of the world comes out of Newfoundland. Under the commission form of government, a single selling agency had been set up. There was a good reason for that, because almost all the countries to whom Newfoundland sold had single buying agencies. The agency was called the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, and down there it is known by its initials, NAFEL.

When Newfoundland entered confederation one of the terms of confederation was that NAFEL be continued as a single selling agency for five years. When I became minister some changes were made in NAFEL. For the first time we put representatives of fishermen on the consultative committee. When Newfoundland was a separate country the Newfoundland fisheries board controlled export to Canada through NAFEL, but when Newfoundland came into confederation that was a barrier to interprovincial trade to have a single selling agency controlling sales to other provinces. We had that changed a little last year in that we allowed mainland firms to go into Newfoundland and buy wet fish directly from the fishermen at competitive prices.

We were able also for the first time to have the industry offer the fishermen firm prices. It is a practice on the west coast, of course, where the fishermen will not go to sea unless they know what price to expect for their fish. In Newfoundland we tried to model policy rather after the policy used on the prairies to sell wheat, by having the trade give the fishermen an initial payment of what we could reasonably expect would be about 80 per cent of the final sale price, and then a share in what was realized beyond that. This was quite an innovation in Newfoundland and it took some explanation. Some fishermen still are not convinced it is a good thing to do. Fortunately, it has worked out quite well. This week the fishermen and the industry are discussing opening firm prices for the coming year. This policy has brought a stability to the industry that it had not known before.

On April 1 of this year the condition in the terms of union that export marketing of salted fish should continue under the joint supervision of the federal and provincial governments for five years came to an end. From that date forward the federal government has the sole responsibility for the export of fish from Newfoundland. Because of this situation, it was no longer right that I, as Minister of Fisheries, should be in the position of controlling export trade. The management of salt fish export, therefore, has been turned over to my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who will handle the export of fish just as he handles all other export trade of Canada.

During the year we were able to strengthen the market for salt cod by two gifts of salt fish, bought by the government at commercial prices to two markets that have always asked for salt cod, Korea and Greece. The earthquake in Greece caused great suffering there, and the Greek government asked us to help with food. The food they wanted was salt cod. In the rehabilitation of Korea food was requested from this country, and all told we have supplied these two countries with $950,000 worth of salt cod purchased at commercial prices through the usual trade outlets in Newfoundland, the maritimes and Quebec.

As a result of the success of our trade commission on salmon to Britain last year, members from the maritimes asked me whether or not a similar commission should not go to the traditional markets for salt cod, the Mediterranean, Portugal, Spain, Italy and Greece. My colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, saw value in this suggestion. A group of our trade experts are now in Portugal and Spain attempting to negotiate a treaty. Next week, my colleague the Minister of Public Works will go with my deputy minister and a trade official to those countries to negotiate trade agreements that will, we hope, expand our markets for salt cod. The Minister of Public Works is not going as Minister of Public Works. He is going as the son of the skipper of a Lunenburg banker, and a man who has lived in a fishing town all his life. He is a man who can certainly speak well and understandably about the problems of the maritime fisheries.

One of the things we are now pressing in Newfoundland is the improvement in quality of salt cod. Up until now the processing of the salt cod has been largely in the hands of individual fishermen. In our Newfoundland development program we are trying to stress improved processing, packaging and quality. We have two pilot plants down there that are engaged in artificial drying instead of sun drying, and better methods of curing and packaging. We hope this will result in a more attractive product, which in turn will mean a better return to the fishermen.

Now the maritime provinces, of course, have export trade in products in addition to lobsters, which there is very little difficulty in marketing. The market for cod fillets and haddock has developed over recent years. The housewife demands that the food she uses be put up in as presentable a fashion as possible, and in a manner so that it is easily used. The old sale of round fish maybe is going out, and the consumer can now get fish without the head or tail and without the skin on, in filleted form. The market for fillets has substantially strengthened over the last year, and the fishing industry is in a better position than it was a year ago. I think perhaps the best evidence of that is contained in a weekly bulletin we issue to the fisheries trade of Canada on the prices of all the principal species of fish found on both coasts. We have this information for the current week, the previous week and for the corresponding week a year ago. I feel that hon. members would find it interesting and, if I have the permission of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask that it be incorporated at this time in Hansard, so that hon. members may see for themselves the steady improvement that has taken place in the price of fish to fishermen in the last year.

The Chairman: Has the minister leave to place this information on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sinclair: The information is as follows:

There is one more new development in the fishing industry which most certainly has captured the imagination of the industry in this country, and even to a greater extent the imagination of the industry in the United States. Last week I attended the meeting of the National Fisheries Institute, which held its annual meeting in Cleveland. That is a meeting of the entire fisheries industry, including fishermen, fish processors, fish distributors and fish retailers of America. The head of the largest frozen food corporation in the United States, in opening the forum concerning this new development, said that it was the greatest revolution in the industry since the process of the quick freezing of food was first developed. I am referring to the development of fish sticks. One of our Newfoundland processors was among the first in the business. One of the difficulties in connection with other forms of fish has been overcome. Housewives have found difficulty in cooking fish of different sizes and thicknesses; and the trade, which includes hotels, restaurants, schools and the like, which buy fish in large quantities, have always found difficulty in controlling the amount of servings.

Two or three years ago one of the American firms discovered a solution by developing a method to freeze small portions of fish in a solid block, which stays solid when thawed. One of the Newfoundland processors—one of the most imaginative processors in Canada—saw a great market for that in disposing of the small cod of Newfoundland. It is a tasty fish, but it is too small for salting and drying, because nothing much is apt to be left but skin and bones. These small fillets were difficult to market; but they are available in great abundance, and they are cheap.

Under this new process, producers fillet fish mechanically with a filleting machine. Then these small fillets are washed in the solution and placed on trays about one yard square and one inch thick, and quick frozen. Then they are shipped in blocks to markets in Montreal, Detroit, Cleveland and New York, where the process is completed.

This is also an entirely mechanical process. These blocks of solid frozen fish go through saws which saw them into strips an inch wide. Then the slab is turned and they are sawn at right angles, ending up in sticks of fish four inch long and an inch square weighing about an ounce and a half. These are quickly dipped in batter and then breaded. Then one of two things happens. Either they are immediately cooked and refrozen, or they are frozen with the batter on them uncooked. Then the housewife has—or the institution, if they are being used by institutions—one solid piece of fish. There is no waste to it. It is of superb quality, because its quality has been controlled all the way through. If it is pre-cooked, she just puts it in the oven for a few moments. If it is quick-frozen she can fry or deep-fry it, broil it or bake it, in six or seven minutes. This is of great advantage for institutional use also. A restaurant which wishes to serve fresh fish need only have a supply of this in a freezer. It can be served very quickly, in uniform amounts, with absolutely no waste.

Just to show what has happened in connection with this revolution in the fishing industry, last year in the United States six million pounds of these fish sticks were sold. This year the average has been a million pounds a week, and last week in the United States 1,700,000 pounds of these fish sticks were sold. Our Newfoundland processor, who has his own finishing plant in Cleveland, finds difficulty in maintaining a supply on hand.

One of the most interesting facts in connection with this development has been that this increase in fish sales has not been at the expense of other fish sales. We have moved into our traditional competitive fields—the fields held by the farmers—where we are in competition with pork, poultry, eggs and other dairy products.

Mr. Coldwell: What happens to the fish that is sliced off?

Mr. Sinclair: I am glad you asked that.

Mr. Coldwell: Does it go to waste?

Mr. Sinclair: No—and that is a most interesting thing. Under the old state of affairs, especially in connection with small round fish such as perch, rosefish, small cod and the like, they were sold whole to the housewife. She gutted and cleaned them, and the fish heads, tails, and intestines were thrown away. But under this fish filleting plan the situation is different. It will be understood that some meat is left along the bone, and then of course there is the head and the tail. These are taken immediately to another part of the plant, the fish-meal plant, which produces one of the most important ingredients in cattle and poultry food. There has been great demand for this product in recent years. In this new process we save both the residue of the fish and the fish. So the entire fish is used in the process of making fish sticks. It is very economical in that you are no longer shipping to distant markets heads, tails and intestines which have no value to the consumer. They now go through the plant, come out as fish-meal, and command a good price.

So we get full value out of the fish, fish-meal for the farmer and a more economical food product which has great appeal to the housewife. Our sales in Canada are not yet as great as those in the United States, but they are developing. These new fish sticks are now available in Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other areas.

The next point about which I wish to speak is our own domestic market. Fish, of course, is a highly perishable product. Therefore the best market for fish is the market closest to the supply of fish. Our own Canadian market should be our target. I am happy to report that the per capita consumption of fish in Canada is steadily increasing. One of the important factors in that is better inspection by the department so as to ensure a high quality in the fish sold. We are increasing our inspection staff, not only in respect of the actual fish but, more important, for the plants in which the fish are processed. I feel that part of the reason for increased sales of processed, canned, smoked, and cured fish, and fresh fish as well as frozen fish in Canada, has been the steady improvement in quality.

And while I am on my feet I should like, as Minister of Fisheries, to pay a tribute to the new chef in the parliamentary restaurant. Those of you who use the restaurant may have noticed that there has been quite a change in both the quality and the preparation of the fish, with the result that there has been a great increase in the consumption of fish in our restaurant.

Mr. McIvor: Brain food.

Mr. Sinclair: I now leave marketing and wish to refer to the factor which is most important, as far as the end result is concerned, from the standpoint of the Department of Fisheries, the conservation, protection and development of fisheries in Canada. The basis of conservation, protection and development is, of course, knowledge—knowledge as found by scientific research. We have here in our department the fisheries research board of Canada. It is not run as an agency of the department, or staffed with departmental men. We have tried to incorporate in it all those groups who are interested in fisheries in Canada.

On the board the fishing industry is represented. The universities of Canada are also represented, because after all they are the source of most of our research in Canada. Our departmental officers are on the board because they have the job, in the end, of carrying out the regulations. We have advisory representation from the great international commissions which help us conserve our deep-sea fisheries on both coasts.

Last year we made a change in the board. Formerly the chairman had been elected from among these members, who were not full-time members. We have felt however that the work of the board was so important that it deserved a full-time chairman. I am happy to say that we were able to secure the services of one of the outstanding men, if not the outstanding man, in connection with fisheries research in North America. I refer to Dr. J. L. Kask. He is a graduate of the University of British Columbia. He was in the same year as I was actually, out there, but he went on to work with the international halibut commission, the international salmon commission and the international tuna commission, then to the fish and wildlife survey of the United States federal government. He is now heading our research board as permanent chairman.

Our research falls into two parts, the biological part and the technological part. The division is as to whether the fish is living or dead. Our biologists try to learn as much as they can about the movements, the habits, the breeding habits and the life cycle of the fish in the sea. Then our technicians take over from the moment the fish is landed on the deck of the fishing vessel. Their job is to advise industry as to how best to keep that fish in as fresh shape as it is there, on to the housewife's table. Fisheries research is a very difficult field. I do not suppose there are many fields of science where research is more difficult. There is certainly no comparison between fisheries research and agricultural research. At our experimental farm our farm scientists have the crops in the field under their control completely. In the barns they have their livestock. They can feed and cross-breed at will. Our fisheries scientist is very different. He is trying to study fish which move in with the seas and move away, how they feed, why they come, what is the relation between their movement and the time of the year, the temperature of the water, the salinity of the water. These are things which can be learned only by the most patient biological research.

In the other part, the technical part, we are dealing with organic chemistry. The many sorts of fish we produce in this country are very difficult to study; the main problem, of course, is spoilage, why fish deteriorates. All living animals at death begin to disintegrate. This is a still more difficult field of study, but we try to guide our research as best we can to industry. That is why on our research board we have leaders from the fishing industry of Canada.

There is another basic problem in research. Last week in Cleveland I heard an excellent speech from the president of the United States fisheries institute on the need for research. He quoted the famous Kettering of General Motors, who had pioneered the great research program of that corporation, in which he said that research ought never to be tied down to specific projects; it should be to hunt for general knowledge over the whole field of learning, because out of that general knowledge often came discoveries which had never been suspected, with practical results. I am afraid our fishery research program is not seeking general knowledge quite in that way. We have so many immediate fisheries problems, that we are trying to direct our research pretty well along lines which we think will bring immediate results to the fishing industry. That is why I want to speak with a little detail on some comments which have been made in this house recently about our fisheries research program.

On the other side, the technological side, our scientists are concerned primarily with fish spoilage. They are concerned, too, with the developments in processing, better ways of freezing, glazing and curing, drying, salting and canning. Our inspection service is on top of this work at all times. The fishermen in the small communities cannot be expected to do that work for themselves; but they have been extraordinarily co-operative with our biological research stations and our experimental stations in this work. A lot of this work is done also in our universities. That is why we are happy to have the university representatives on our research board. They have good facilities for research, they also have the eager young students doing research work, who are very happy to have their research theses tied in with major industry here in Canada, and have their works published in the journals of the fisheries research board.

One other very important thing in research is international co-operation in this field. It is such a big field that it would be very foolish for every one of the fisheries nations of the world to be running their own independent show. That is why there is, happily, a very free exchange of work, of reports of scientific studies under way in the laboratories in the other great fishing nations of the world, Britain, France, Denmark, Norway and Japan, to mention some of them.

That is another reason why we must publish, in very limited form, of course, the current work of our scientists, so that scientists in other lands will know what we are doing. We send it to them and they send us their current proceedings, so we avoid duplicating their work. It is a real measure of economy, avoiding waste by duplication of effort just through limited publication of our current investigations.

Hon. members know why I am mentioning all this. Earlier this session the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace—I am sorry he is not in his seat at the moment—and the hon. member for Moose Jaw, who I hope is in his seat—he is out temporarily—drew attention to some of the publications issued by our research board. The hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace went through a long list of scientific publications published over the last thirty years by our fisheries research board to draw attention to a few titles which he thought were indicative of scandalous waste of energy and money. I find this very difficult to understand, because in his speech on the budget two or three days ago he dealt for some time on the sort of concessions he wants the government to make for research in manufacturing lines. Both these hon. members could very easily have telephoned our research board, when they saw these titles which excited their curiosity, and found out why those publications were made. That was too easy, and of course they would not have got the publicity they wanted if they had done that.

I cannot describe the work of our research board better than by taking the list of publications the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace put on record in Hansard to show the type of work we are doing and why we are doing it. The first two publications he singled out were on the technical side. I suppose it was the titles that interested him. I said that organic chemistry is a very difficult thing. The title of the first one is: "The Effect of pH on the Enzymatic Reduction of Trimethylamine oxide". It consists of one page. The second one is: "Bacteriostatic Action of Hydroxylamine". In our labs in Halifax we are continually trying to find some wash which will kill bacteria or, if not kill the bacteria, retard the bacterial growth which immediately starts in any organism the minute it has died. We have done a great deal of work in that field for the fishing industry. One of the things that has been successfully developed is a very mild wash used on the lobster before canning which keeps the lobster meat from discolouring in the can. This is a very important development as far as the trade is concerned. The two studies mentioned are in this class. These studies were the effect of slight acidity in a chemical which was commonly used for this purpose. They are very technical. But the industry understands them and why they were done. The cost of each one when published, just to show how expensive they are, was five cents. One was published in 1945 at the Pacific research station and one in 1949 at the Atlantic station. Circulation is limited to the scientific institutions who give us documents and to our universities, and there is a small number left over for independent scientists. Thirty-two of the first one are left, and at five cents a copy that amounts to $1.60. Twenty copies of the second are left, and at five cents a copy that amounts to $2 or a total of $3.60.

No matter what the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace thinks the important thing is that the fish filleting industry in the maritime provinces thinks this work is important. They are the people who urge me to have more and more money spent on this very valuable type of technical research.

Of course, the next one is much better, "The Moon, and when to eat Mussels". Obviously this is silly to the hon. member. Well, mussels are a very important shellfish. In Europe there is a great market for mussels. Here we are so rich in shellfish that there is not so much of a market for mussels. But many people do eat mussels.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sinclair: I hear, "hear, hear" from New Brunswick. There was however a myth about mussels, that there is a time in the month when they are poisonous. We told one of our scientists to turn out this little short paper on mussels. If the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace had read it he would have understood why it was published. Mussels spawn at full moon. Therefore the time to eat them is a week or so before a full moon, not when they are spawning, and certainly not a week after they have spawned, at which time they are spent. It also points out that mussels are only toxic when they are in a toxic area. These all cost five cents and we have 91 copies left which means that we have a $4.55 stock of this bulletin to inform the people of the maritime provinces of the truth about mussels.

Mr. Stick: Ruining the country!

Mr. Sinclair: The next title is "Ling cod". If the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace had been a westerner he would have known that the ling cod is the second most important kind of ground fish on the west coast, as the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich knows, second only to halibut. In the interests of our fishermen and our industry as a whole we had to gather together into a single pamphlet the work of our scientists on ling cod, particularly as regards their feeding and breeding habits, their movements, and the type of gear used to catch them, together with investigations into the type of processing required and whether they should be killed immediately or put into tanks for transportation to the markets. All that information is incorporated in this bulletin, at a cost of 25 cents. There was a great demand for this publication. We issued many copies but we now have sixteen left which at a cost of 25 cents amounts to $4.

Now an even better title of course for the hon. member's purpose is "On Themisto Libellula in Baffin Island Coastal Waters" at 20 cents a copy. We have 24 copies left which makes a total of $4.80. This study was actually made by McGill University at the request of the Arctic Institute, and was published by our board. Again, if the hon. member had read this pamphlet he would have easily found out why it was done and why the Arctic Institute thought it important enough to ask McGill University to carry out this work. The key sentence is:

> There is no doubt that in the eastern arctic of Canada this is one of the most important organisms in any habitat, terrestrial or aquatic.

Fishermen have described this as the grass of the arctic. It is a small plankton, a tiny little shrimp, on which the different fish feed. The Eskimos and residents of that area feed on the fish. They depend very heavily for their existence on the fish population. When this plankton disappears then the fish population also disappears as of course it is their primary food upon which they must depend. The Arctic Institute therefore asked that this study be made and McGill University carried out the study and we published this little pamphlet at what the hon. member feels is a scandalous waste of public funds. As I have said, we now have 24 copies left at 20 cents each.

Mr. Hodgson: But the minister has not told us the full story. Tell us how many were published and mailed out.

Mr. Sinclair: That is the most interesting thing of all. Usually about two hundred or so are printed. The important point as far as waste is concerned is the amount which is surplus. There is this small residue of 24 copies left on this study on the grass of the arctic on which life in the arctic depends so much. I would emphasize again that this was a scientific study carried out by our own universities at the request of scientists and scholars who wanted information on this particular aspect of survival in the arctic.

Now there are two other titles in the hon. member's list. The one which excited most comment, I believe, was "The Speed of the Goldfish in Relation to Water Temperature", published in 1947. We have 13 copies of this left at 20 cents each, which means a surplus cost of $2.60. You may say, "Why in the world is the fisheries department of Canada primarily concerned with commercial fisheries wondering about how fast the goldfish swims at different temperatures?"

An hon. Member: That is a very good question.

Mr. Sinclair: It is a very good question. Most people in this house have not much knowledge about fisheries. If I were to say my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare had published a bulletin on the effect of tobacco tar in causing cancer in mice, probably the hon. member for Moose Jaw, who is a practical businessman, would say, "Well, suppose mice do get cancer? It would save us the cost of traps. Mice do not smoke anyhow." Others would know that this relates to lung cancer in humans. Questions with regard to this pamphlet are just about as sensible as that. In pathology medical people use, not human beings but two organisms, mice and guinea pigs, on which to conduct their primary experiments in order to determine the reaction on the research work they are carrying out. Most hon. members are aware of the study of genetics in regard to livestock. In that regard, not the cow but the fruit fly has been the guinea pig. In fisheries we use the goldfish for the same purpose. It is cheap, it is plentiful and it can be used in our laboratories as a guinea pig for our purposes. We asked the University of Toronto to carry out this study for a very good reason. We did not care much about the goldfish one way or another, but we wished to get the answer to certain important questions. We wanted to know how fish act under different temperatures, to study the migration of fish from the Pacific into our rivers. Our international salmon commission did a remarkable job in forecasting when the fish will arrive at our coast points, which was important information. We wanted to know the effect the temperature would have on the fish movement at different times of the year.

The second problem with regard to fish speed and water temperature was also an important one. The construction of fishways such as Hell's Gate in the Fraser river canyon is of great importance to our salmon fisheries. Hell's Gate was a barrier in the canyon that choked off the Fraser river salmon and the Hell's Gate fishway was built to overcome that. It is not an ordinary fish ladder we had built in because the river rose and fell ninety feet during the seasons and such a ladder would be useless. It is a series of baffles through which the water is channelled leaving eddies behind the baffles and the salmon dart up these eddies in successive stages. This experiment was carried out successfully with sockeye salmon. However, one problem we had to overcome was how far apart each baffle should be made, what the speed of the water should be which the salmon could overcome. We wanted to have a number of baffles designed so as to allow most of the salmon to get through at most temperatures. Fish, like people, get sluggish under certain temperatures. This goldfish study was carried out in order to determine the range and cruising speed of the fish. It is true we used salmon after the pattern was established, but this was one of these cheap little lab experiments such as those carried out by the agricultural scientists on the fruit fly to establish primary facts.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw mentioned another pamphlet and if he had read the whole title he would have found out why it was published. The title he read was "The Effect of Fin Clipping on the Cruising Speed of Goldfish". That is where he finished, but the rest of the title goes on—"and Cohoe Salmon Fry". We carried our experiments by clipping the fin off the goldfish and by these experiments we were able to obtain important information with regard to the west coast salmon run.

The little fingerling starts off in the stream where it is born and is lost out in the Pacific for two years. We wanted to know where it went and if it always came back to the stream in which it was born. We cannot tag a fingerling, it is too small. What we can do, however, is clip one small fin, either dorsal or ventral, off a number of fingerlings from our streams, and check on the adult fish that way.

One thing that bothered the scientists was what effect the removal of one of these rather superfluous fins had on the fingerling in its ability to swim. We used goldfish first, then cohoe fingerlings, and through our experiments we proved that this fin was as superfluous as an appendix is in most people and the removal had little effect on their ability to survive.

The last one referred to by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace was "Amdominal Width and Sexual Maturity of Female Lobsters on Canadian Atlantic Coast" published in 1944 and which is out of print at the moment. Hon. members laugh. I do not know the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace except for seeing him across the floor of the house, but he is old enough to know about the birds, the bees and the flowers. Lobsters do it too. It is quite true that we can leave it to the male lobster to be able to recognize when the female lobster matures, but what we have to know is under what conditions and at what size she is mature. The lobster fishery is the most important fishery we have on the east coast. All our fishing regulations must be framed around this one important point: First of all, at what time of year and under what conditions do they breed. We want to know the size of the female lobster when she reaches what I suppose in the human world is called puberty. You cannot have any rule of thumb on the matter of size, no more than you can have one with regard to people. The system dvised by one of our own scientists, which is something we will understand, is the actual pelvic width, if you will, of a female lobster in relation to her length. The effect of temperature of the water is also important. In warm waters female lobsters are bigger; it takes them a shorter time to come to sexual maturity than it does in the colder waters on the Nova Scotia coast. It is for these reasons we framed the conservation rules which the hon. member for Charlotte knows so well, as do other maritime members, in order to see that, first of all, the size is such that at least these female lobsters are going to have a chance to come to sexual maturity so that they will reproduce and so so that we shall have a continuing harvest. So much for research.

The other two things which are of major concern in fisheries are first of all conservation. Unless we conserve our fisheries as well as we can without impairing the chances of an equal harvest being taken next year, then we shall have dwindling fisheries. On the east coast we are concerned with two problems. One is the decline of the Atlantic salmon. The Atlantic salmon is not as important in dollars as is the west coast salmon commercially but it is of great importance in the life down there commercially and as a sport and tourist attraction.

The provinces have been concerned about the steady decline in Atlantic salmon. This is in great contrast, of course, to the west coast where, since the thirties, our salmon run, because of our conservation, has steadily increased. As I pointed out, the provinces have been concerned about sport fishing. This spring we had a happy meeting here in Ottawa with the Atlantic provinces, and agreed for the first time on uniform conservation laws. We closed down on the season. We closed down on the catch allowed to sport fishermen. Instead of being regulated by provincial boundaries we now have regulations for scientific boundaries of three main areas, the Atlantic area, the bay of Fundy area and the gulf of St. Lawrence area. I cannot speak too highly of the co-operation we received from the provinces concerned, including associations down there such as the Atlantic salmon association, and a group I met yesterday, the Miramichi salmon association. They are agreed with us on the value of this work. It is going to be tough for the first three or four years because shorter seasons are going to mean less fish and there are few enough fish now. But we feel very keenly that we can bring back the Atlantic salmon fisheries as we have brought back the west coast fisheries.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the minister this point whether he is doing anything about seals, which are supposed to be quite a menace to the Atlantic salmon?

Mr. Sinclair: Yes. Federal study of this problem indicates two things, increased protection of the rivers to cut down poaching, because the scarcer the salmon the worse poaching is, and then increased action in the other field on other predators such as the harbour seals and hair seals. We pay a bounty on them. We stepped it up. Our own officers kill these seals, but we do not pay any bounty on what they kill. But the worst predators are the mergansers. There is a variety of uncouth names which are usually attached to them. These migratory birds feed principally on salmon spawn and small smolts. We had a little bit of difficulty in getting permission to kill them because they are protected under the migratory game birds act, but we have now extended our program of killing off mergansers. The program in one river has been so successful that an increased number of fingerlings has been noted for the first time.

But on the east coast the main problem is the lobster. Studies of this sort which refer to lobsters are slow and painstaking. The lobster grows about 50 per cent each year for the first five years. We have to determine the period of sexual maturity in order to allow at least one breeding season. Thus our aim should be to have the fishermen catch the lobster when it is at its best size, from the point of view of growth and the point of view of marketing. As hon. members know, we slightly increased the size for lobsters on the east coast only last year. That action has met with understanding in almost all parts of the maritimes except two areas, where the fishermen feel that we are crowding down on them. One or two years' enforcement of the larger size is going to result in larger size. They will see the reflection in their catch. I may say that the Nova Scotia fishermen are completely in favour of this regulation. As with all conservation regulations, it is difficult at the time you enforce it; but in the end, when the fishermen see that they are getting bigger catches, they understand what we are trying to do.

Out on the west coast we have an entirely different problem in conservation. We can pride ourselves that, over the years, the Department of Fisheries has done a good job on these fisheries, which produce almost half the dollar value of all the fisheries in Canada. We have three main species out there, namely salmon, halibut and herring. All of them are what we call controlled fisheries. They are under complete scientific control. We have done enough work on them to know exactly how much we can get each year, and exactly how much we must allow to go upstream to spawn in the case of salmon, to spawn in bays in the case of herring and to spawn on the banks in the case of halibut. More and more fishermen have been getting into the fishing industry on the west coast, using better and better gear, bigger boats, better nets—nylon nets—and better and better electronic gear in order to find the fish faster. The trouble is that there are still only so many fish. We have more and more fishermen using bigger and bigger gear and only the same number of fish. What happens there is easy to understand. The annual catch per fisherman goes down. In order to survive he tries to catch a higher price per unit of fish. Fish in the end have got to compete with farm products, so that there is no easy solution by driving up the price of salmon, halibut or herring.

We are therefore faced with trying to obtain a controlled fishery and control over the fishing operations. There are four ways that can be done. The first and most obvious is licence limitation. We have a limited fishery. We should limit the licences. Today the only limit is that the holder of the licence must be a British subject. This year we are going to change that to a Canadian citizen. Then British subjects who are not yet Canadian citizens will be unable to get a fishing licence. But that is only scratching the problem. Licence limitation means that we will quickly get rid of two groups who are nuisances. One is the sport fisherman in British Columbia who takes out a commercial licence in order to get by the catch limit. The catch limit is six. He can catch 300 or 400 with a commercial licence. The other one is the part-time fisherman who at the time of the big run on the Fraser river gets a boat, a couple of hundred feet of net, goes down there and gets a good share of the fish which properly belong to the man who fishes the year round and the years round.

The objection to licence limitation is that those who have a licence are in preferred positions. The licences which cost only a dollar become things of value. The real worry is this question: How do young men who want to begin in the fisheries get a licence? The best source of fishermen, of course, is from among the sons of men in the business. This year we are going to make a thorough study of the situation. The second way to limit the catch is by means of gear limitation, or limitation on the size of the gear or on the type of the gear. We have eliminated traps in all but one area at Sooke. We have made restrictions on the size of gill nets, on the size of seines, on the size of mesh and the areas that they can fish in. In general, in order to prevent a tremendous drop in the fish population, we want to get the fishermen as far away from the spawning areas as we can. On the Nass river, on the Skeena river and Rivers inlet, we have constantly pushed the boundary further and further out to sea to give the fish a better chance to get in and spawn.

Then, the last thing, and the thing we use most of all, is season limitation, both a long closed season and then weekly closures. We have had forty-eight hour, seventy-two hour, ninety-six hour closures, four-day closures, in a week. More and more gear just means a five-day closure or a six-day closure, and the fishery is going to become more and more uneconomic because the people cannot expect to make a living with expensive equipment when just working one day in the week.

During this next year there is no question the most important matter facing our department on the west coast is to attack this problem of trying to match fishermen and fishing gear with the limited fishery which we have under scientific control. There is one special problem which has been mentioned by several members, the hon. member for Vancouver East, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, the hon. member for New Westminster, the matter of the closure of the upper Fraser which I announced when I was speaking to the fishermen's union in Vancouver. For the benefit of those non-fishing members who are kind enough to listen to us fishermen during our one day in court, let me explain the movement of fish in the salmon streams, especially the Fraser.

We have six kinds of salmon. There is the sockeye salmon, a little salmon of five or six pounds which is our richest fish and is all canned. Then we have the spring salmon, with red and white flesh, our largest species, the biggest one on record being 121 pounds. Then there is the cohoe salmon. The last two salmon take bait. The others do not take bait. Then we have the pink salmon and the chum salmon. These latter salmon are just two-year salmon. They go down the river, out to sea, are lost and come back again in two years. The other salmon are four-year salmon. The salmon are lost out in the Pacific and then they return almost like clockwork.

Our scientists can pretty well forecast when they will first turn up off the south end of Vancouver island. They sweep around through Puget sound on the American side, then up into the gulf of Georgia on our side and mill around the mouth of the Fraser river. They start up the Fraser river and by some uncanny instinct they go to the little creek where they were born. It may be 500 or 600 miles up but they are able to find it by some device that our scientists have as yet been unable to detect.

The sockeye salmon comes in first. It is our finest salmon. It is a very rich fish. In its years in the Pacific it has stored oil in its body, but the moment all these fish hit fresh water they stop feeding. From then on they are living on their own bodies, which means they are wasting. The sockeye has the farthest to go and it is in there first. When it comes in the river it is still in pretty good shape. However, the two late runs, the pink and the chum salmon, are different. They are coarser fish. The pink salmon weighs around five pounds and the chum possibly ten pounds. Most of them spawn very close to the mouth of the Fraser. By the time they come into the Fraser they have stopped feeding. They are feeding off their own bodies and the quality of the fish is going down very rapidly. They become very ugly fish with splotches of colour showing all over their bodies. They get to the spawning ground, spawn and then die.

Since we have had a fishery in British Columbia the problem has been how much fishing we should allow on the Fraser river. In the old days there was no restriction at all. Fishermen fished as far up the river as their boats would go, to Sumas, almost seventy miles up the river. The quality was poor. The fish were then dying. They were on their way to perform their last function. In the early days the canneries would not accept either pinks or chums caught in the river. They would not accept any sockeye which had any colour on it at all.

In 1905, because of this condition, a royal commission was appointed to investigate the problem of fishing on the river and it sat for two years. When the fish are in there they are at the most valuable period to Canada of their whole cycle. These are the little fingerlings that went to sea, survived all the hazards of their years of life at sea, fought their way back through all their enemies around Vancouver island, avoided all the nets in the river and headed up to their spawning ground. These are the ones which are going to perpetuate the species. They are in a narrow stretch of the river and in a most vulnerable position to be caught with nets right down to the bottom and right across the river.

Before the royal commission which conducted this investigation from 1905 to 1907 the scientists recommended that the fishing be closed at Westminster on the grounds of both quality and conservation, but other witnesses before the commission presented the argument on compassionate grounds that above Westminster there were settlers clearing land of timber, that these fish were food for them and that they could sell clean fish to the canneries. As a concession the royal commission said that fishermen above the bridge who lived there could fish in that stretch and only in that stretch.

In 1905 there were forty-two of them. In 1912 there were only seventy. They were still settlers. In 1922 there were 112 and last year there were 611 fishermen in this thirty miles of river going after these salmon heading to their spawning ground. The quality is poor. There are more fishermen there today than there were in the days when the royal commission investigated conditions in 1905. All connection with clearing land has gone. These are fishermen who never go to sea, who fish two or three days a week for a period of three or four months in that narrow stretch of river and expect to make a living. Our other fishermen range the whole coast from Oregon to Alaska. They fish the year round. They catch the salmon at sea when it is in first class shape. I would ask those hon. members who are farmers what they would think of a farmer who did not harvest all his wheat at the proper harvest time but waited until the fall when the wheat was frost killed to harvest it. That is just about what we are doing with our salmon when we allow salmon, which are first class salmon in the sea, to be caught up the river when the process of deterioration has started.

It is for that reason that our scientists and officers recommended, with respect to these slow moving fish, the pinks and the chums, that fishing above the bridge be stopped in the future. I announced to the fishermen at the union meeting in Vancouver that we would stop that fishery on September 16. That would mean they would still get spring fishing and summer fishing for sockeye salmon which go much farther up the river and are in better shape, but not for the pinks and the chums. Naturally a great protest was raised by the people who were affected. They said that they could not go to sea, that they did not have the gear or the boats. I met the union, I met the gill netters, I met the local mayors and reeves and pointed out that we were interested in quality and conservation. When I met them I promised to look at the question again. Their main point was that this might be the right thing to do but I was doing it too quickly, that I should take it in steps.

Since I came back to Ottawa we have discussed the matter again with our research people and our officers, and it is probably right that we are doing it in a little too big a sweep. Therefore we have changed the closing date this year from September 16 to three weeks later, October 8. They will have the tail end of the sockeye and the first of the pinks and the chums. The hon. member for New Westminster applauds. I want to tell the committee that next year it will be September 30 and the year after it will be September 15 because it is felt that in the interests of quality and conservation we must close this fishery. But because of the reasons put forward by these people for a little more gradual closing off, we have agreed to make that change.

There is one other point which was raised by the hon. member for New Westminster, the question of whether we are going to have fish or power in British Columbia. The Columbia river down south was as great a river as the Fraser in its day, but the construction of the Bonneville dam, the construction of the Grand Coulee dam and the Libby dam, has greatly reduced the fishery there. We are determined that is not going to happen in British Columbia. We feel, and I think we have proved, that we can have fish and power, that all these power developments can be designed to allow the passage of the fish up the river and the fingerlings down.

Since 1945 our department has come in conflict—I use the word "conflict" but I do not really mean it—with every major industrial concern on the coast of British Columbia except the telephone company over power, over pollution of rivers, over obstruction of rivers, and in every one of these cases we have been able to work out a harmonious solution with one single exception. This case involved one small run of fish up a river where there was a drop of 1,800 feet. We had a look at the power development but there was no practical way of getting the fish up that height. We tried to transplant the small run instead.

But aside from that we have been able to work out a solution to all these problems in British Columbia. Our Fisheries Act does give us that power. If after a dam is completed we find that it interferes with the fishery we can order changes. Actually that is a little late. Out of experience the companies that build these dams generally come to us first and say: What sort of a dam should we build so that we will not have trouble with you afterwards? I am very happy that the government of the province of British Columbia, of which, incidentally, I am not a supporter, passed complementary legislation on this power question at its last session. In this way, before permission is given for the construction of a power dam, provision has to be made to satisfy the fisheries department that the fish will get by. The fishing industry of British Columbia now feels quite a bit safer, and feels that between the two of us we certainly have the power to see that any obstruction to the fisheries that is planned will make provision for saving our fisheries. I hope that the provinces on the east coast that have similar problems will follow this line of introducing complementary legislation.

The last thing about which I want to speak is this matter of international conservation. There is not much point in our trying very hard to conserve our fisheries in our own territorial waters, and build up stocks to make sure that our fishermen are going to have a perpetual harvest, if just offshore on the high seas other nations come in and ruthlessly exploit these national stocks. Over the years we, and our neighbours to the south, have been pioneers in international co-operation on the high seas. The halibut treaty of 1923 was the first act Canada ever signed by herself. It was the first fisheries act for the high seas ever signed by any country. In 1923 the halibut catch had fallen down to less than 30 million pounds and it took the fishermen of both nations a year to catch it. Following 30 years of international co-operation and control we have doubled the catch, and we catch it in one month.

Last year I told you that there was one weakness about these joint commissions, in my opinion. We have our scientists, industrialists and officers on these commissions, but we have never had a commercial fisherman as a member of these bodies, a man with the practical experience that comes from daily contact with the industry. I said that at the first opportunity I would appoint a fisherman to these commissions. Two opportunities did come. The first was the halibut commission, when I was able to appoint Harold Helland of Prince Rupert, who had been fishing with his own boat for 20 years, as one of our own members on this commission.

Incidentally, I refer to the sockeye salmon commission, the most extraordinarily successful example of international co-operation. When this commission was established the salmon run was just about through, and last year we had the greatest catch on record. All this was brought about by the joint efforts of these governments through this commission, to the mutual profit of our fishermen and their fishermen.

This has been so successful that our fishermen are very anxious we take another stride and establish such a commission for the pink salmon. We have not the same control over the pink salmon which sweep in from the sea and enter Puget sound. The United States fishermen therefore get the first crack at them and our fishermen in the gulf of Georgia then get their crack at the broken schools before they go up the river to spawn. We have never caught more than 5 per cent to 20 per cent of those fish that spawn in our rivers. We have not very big boats on the west coast because most of our fishing is in sheltered waters, but we encouraged some of our big boats to go out and get these fish before they got to the American waters. For the first time in history our fishermen picked up 40 per cent of these fish. We are going to have more boats out there this year, and by the time the fishery is in balance we will be able to work out a joint treaty with our friends in the United States similar to the sockeye salmon treaty to control this fishery.

One of the oldest international conventions is this one about which the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich told us a story last year, the international sealing convention. By 1914 the seal population in the Pacific had fallen to 150,000 because of ruthless killing. We now have a convention to protect them, and there are between 3 million and 4 million of them up in the Pribilof islands. Each summer the cows and their puppies come all the way from California by sea, and the bulls are up in the Bering sea in any event. We get 20 per cent of the annual kill, and we clear about a million dollars a year from our share in that operation.

One problem that arises is that when you have between 3 million and 4 million seals in the north Pacific eating fish at the rate of at least 20 pounds a day, a great deal of fish is consumed. The two seals we had in captivity at our biological station consumed 20 pounds of fish a day. At this rate of consumption the 3 million seals consume more fish than the population of Canada. The Japanese are very exercised about that, and want study made to ascertain whether or not it would be more economical to have fewer seals and more fish. That is one of the things we are looking forward to studying this summer.

The northwest Atlantic fisheries treaty is a new one, including 10 nations, and it covers what is, after 400 years of fishing, still the greatest fishing grounds in all the world, the Grand Banks. We are one of the 10 nations in that commission. This summer a new nation has been seen off the Grand Banks, when for the first time two Russian trawlers were sighted. As yet, Russia has not joined the northwest Atlantic commission. We are very proud of the fact that our deputy minister of fisheries, Stewart Bates, has been chosen as chairman of the northwest Atlantic commission. We are just as proud —I do not know if it was because he was the chairman—that the commission selected Dalhousie University in Halifax as its base of operations. It will be a good thing for the fisheries school down there and a good thing for the maritimes to have this great commission based in Halifax.

In the north Pacific we have a new treaty which was passed by parliament last year, the north Pacific treaty. It includes Japan, the United States and Canada and is concerned with the conservation of the great fisheries of the north Pacific. Here again, I was able to appoint a fisherman, a fisherman who was the son of a fisherman and the grandson of a fisherman, and who has fished over the entire coast, James Cameron. He has already attended the first meeting and has done very well. This appointment has given the fishermen of our province an increased confidence in that they have a direct voice in the proceedings of this international commission.

Here again I am even prouder to announce that the same Stewart Bates was selected as chairman of the north Pacific commission. Once again the pattern repeated itself and it was a Canadian university, the University of British Columbia, that was chosen as the permanent base of this new scientific commission to control the fisheries of the north Pacific.

One other treaty is the international whaling convention, and we are one of the 17 nations belonging to it. We have had, at various times, a number of whaling stations on the Atlantic coast. Whaling in the north Atlantic has greatly diminished, but we have one whaling station on the Pacific coast at Coal Harbour. Last year they killed 539 whales. The next meeting of the commission controlling whaling on the high seas, and which sets the methods by which whales can be killed, is going to be in Tokyo. It is of special interest to us because the north Pacific is the only area in which we do any whaling, and we share that whaling industry with Japan and Russia. There are two things of interest to us. There is the recommendation that, for the first time, a limit be put on the number of whales to be killed in the north Pacific. This is a matter of concern to our fleet.

Secondly, the meeting is going to discuss whether or not helicopters can be used to kill whales. Helicopters are now used to spot them, but as to whether or not they will be allowed to carry harpoons and kill whales is a matter that is on the agenda for study. This is of interest to us because we do not operate any large whaling boats but our operations are land based and might be suitable for helicopter operation.

In telling about the success we have had in working out these international treaties to conserve the fisheries on the high seas, I might mention one inland fishery that is extremely valuable and that is the great lakes fishery which we share with our neighbour, the United States. In recent years there has been an alarming decline in that fishery, and the reason for it has been an incursion of sea lampreys which feed by sucking the blood of the other fish. The lamprey is spreading throughout lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron and Michigan, and is now just entering lake Superior. The commercial fisheries in Ontario are under the control of the Ontario government. They have been very anxious that we help.

We approached the United States government with the thought that we would have another international treaty for the purpose of getting rid of the lamprey and building up these fisheries as we have done on the two coasts. Unfortunately, there was jurisdictional trouble in the United States because the fisheries there are primarily under state control. I think there are seven different states along the lakes, there. Apparently some one or more of the states were not too willing to surrender jurisdiction to the United States federal government. Whatever the situation was we could not sign a treaty, but the federal government here with Ontario and the government in Washington have undertaken a parallel program, the sort of thing we carry out together, on a program of lamprey control through scientific research.

Our scientists think that it is not just the lamprey, but that it is the introduction of a great number of less valuable fish in the lakes, which have taken food away from the valuable whitefish, lake trout and pickerel. In this program the government of Ontario has joined with us and I am pleased to say that we have had the most pleasant relations with the fisheries branch of that province. We have a joint vote of $30,000 to begin a scientific study of the fish population in the lakes.

In the matter of lamprey control, we are doing the work ourselves. We have $150,000 in the estimates this year for the commencement of lamprey control at the entrance of lake Superior, where they are just beginning to show up. I am hopeful that in the next year or two the program carried out on both sides will convince everyone of the need for a similar international treaty to restore this great fishery. It is a great fishery, not only because of the value of the fish, but because it is one of the few fisheries in the world immediately adjacent to a high concentration of population. The market is right there. It is the heaviest concentration of population on the continent—which makes it all the more important for them and for us that we arrange an international treaty which will bring back these fisheries.

Mr. Chairman, this short review is now ended.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the minister for the most interesting review he has given of the work of his department. I am sure the committee will feel it was well worth while listening to him while he made his report. I am glad I asked him to do so, rather than bring it out in a piecemeal fashion in reply to various questions. Actually, I think time has been saved, because many of the points I had intended to raise have now been answered.

I am sure all hon. members who represent seaboard constituencies will be delighted to hear of the improved conditions in the industry. A year ago the minister had to report that the industry was in a depressed condition. Everybody knew that; we all had representations made to us. Now, partly through the efforts of the industry itself, and partly because of the assistance given by the minister and his department, he has been enabled today to report improved conditions.

I should like to say a few words regarding the industry on the Pacific coast. I shall not touch the Atlantic coast, because I have not had the opportunity of visiting the fisheries there recently. My remarks will not be in the form of criticism of the policy followed by the department, but rather to urge a more concentrated and a greater effort on some of the endeavours the department is now taking in order to solve the problems facing us in connection with our west coast fisheries.

I think those problems can be summarized under three main headings. The first is that of conservation, the second is that of the methods of taking the fish out of the ocean, and the third is that of marketing. The minister has described fully some of the research work that has been carried out. This has been going on over a number of years, and has been concentrated mainly—and I say "mainly" because there is other work going on as well—on our salmon run, our halibut and our herring fisheries.

As a result of those investigations there have been a number of international agreements. Government regulations have been laid down to prevent the depletion of our fisheries. As the minister has said, had it not been for the international salmon commission, our sockeye run might actually have been wiped out some years ago. A great deal of time has been spent in the study of the habits of this species of salmon, with results extremely beneficial to the industry.

The desirability of a similar commission being set up with reference to the pink variety of salmon has now become evident. I am glad the minister has made reference to this point, and I am going to urge him to proceed with the utmost vigour toward the completion of whatever steps have been taken to ensure the completion of some agreement with the United States for the preservation of the pink salmon run. Because if that is not done, the pink salmon will be in exactly the same position as were the sockeye salmon a few years ago.

As the minister said, the pinks enter Canadian waters through the strait of Juan de Fuca, and then pass on into Puget sound, and up into the Fraser river. I believe that only a few years ago American fishermen were taking three pinks for every one our Canadian fishermen were able to obtain. However, because of the trend which has taken place, and the encouragement given by the Department of Fisheries, there has been a movement of the fishermen farther out to sea. This affects my own constituency because such ports as Sooke and Port Renfrew have now become the habitat, if I may say so, of the seiners, whom I have seen in increasing numbers in the last two years fishing for the pink salmon long before the pinks have reached fresh water.

What is going to develop, if some international agreement is not reached, will be a race between American and Canadian fishermen to catch the pink salmon as far out at sea as possible, and in as large quantities as possible. With the larger boats and the improved gear available this will mean that the pink salmon will be caught long before they reach the Fraser river.

What will be the consequence of this? Either the department will have to close right down on any gill-netting by a fisherman who, with his son, may go out in a boat—it will have to close down on the small fisherman in his small boat, or else it will have to allow them to go on fishing with their gill nets, with the result that in a few years time the whole pink salmon run will be depleted.

Hard as it may be on the traditional fishermen who for many years have been fishing in the Fraser river, there is no question that the fish are in better condition when they are caught further out to sea, and it is more economical to use modern gear and bigger vessels in order to catch the fish before they have used up their body oils when they come into the fresh water. Therefore, I do say that in order to preserve the means of livelihood of the gillnetter and to preserve the pink salmon, it is imperative that in the very near future an agreement be reached with the United States in order to preserve that pink salmon run.

I make this suggestion at this time, not as a special pleading for my own constituency. There is a need for harbour facilities for our fishermen along the south coast of Vancouver island because we are going to fish beyond Port Renfrew. Sometimes fall storms do come and fishing vessels have to seek shelter. At the moment the harbour at Port Renfrew is very exposed and the harbour at Sooke needs considerable development. I hope the minister will make representations to his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, regarding that point.

Since we are talking of conservation, I was interested to hear of the steps which the scientists are taking in regard to their methods to control those various agencies which prey on the fish. I have thought in the past that perhaps sufficient attention was not being paid to that type of conservation, and we were spending most of our endeavours on trying to conserve the fish themselves when they went up to spawn. But continual and constant warfare is carried on on all marine life. The commercial types of fish are attacked by animals, by birds, by reptiles, by other fish and by various parasites. I believe we can do much to conserve the catch in the future by further investigation along the lines of exploring to see how we can control those pests.

I am going to say just a word about my pet aversion, the fur seal. The time has come when we have got to reduce the herds of fur seals. The fur seals spend most of their winter off the coast of British Columbia, from about the month of November until June; and, as the minister was saying, the experiments which have been carried out show that these animals eat from twenty to thirty pounds of fish every day, but they destroy from thirty to fifty pounds each day. And where you have herds of four million seal destroying thirty to fifty pounds each a day you can see the havoc which is being wreaked on our fish. We do give a small bounty for the destruction of the hair seal on the west coast. Well, the hair seal and the fur seal are really the same animal, and they both live on fish.

A very interesting article was written not very long ago by Captain M. E. Lohbrunner, who has spent a lifetime with the seal-fishing fleets. He was very emphatic that thousands of pounds of fish are destroyed yearly by the herds of fur seal while they are feeding off the coast of British Columbia. A few years ago the pelts were considered of the greatest value, but there are so many other forms of fur used—and synthetic furs are used for apparel—that I do not believe it is so essential to maintain such large herds of fur seals as are extant. I hope that an international agreement—it would have to be an international agreement—will be entered into which will provide for the depletion—I do not say complete elimination—of those herds of fur seals.

The next group of problems come under the question of the methods by which the fish are taken out of the ocean. The minister again referred to this set of problems. An attempt is being made now to control them by limiting the season and limiting the number of licences which are being issued. As more and more efficient means of catching the fish are brought about, if no more fish are to be taken out of the ocean, then of course the season has to be limited, and the result is that there are fewer and fewer fish for each man to catch. Until our methods of conservation are developed much farther than they are now, it will not be possible to increase the total catch.

The minister referred to the sport fishermen. He called them sport fishermen or holiday fishermen. It is immaterial, but there are more and more, professional men, businessmen and people who have seasonal unemployment during the fishing season, who do augment their incomes by going out and catching fish commercially, not only in the Fraser river, but also on the high seas. Some of these people have very expensive gear and they do add materially to their income. I know one professional man who goes out regularly every summer and enjoys his holiday fishing commercially. He goes out with his son. He sells his fish commercially and it is not really considered an essential part of his income. He enjoys the life. Of course it is not easy to say that he must not go fishing. The oceans are open to everybody, and the minister will have to be careful how he limits these licences. The elimination must be such that it does not play in favour either of the unions or of the fishing industry. A very large number of licences, an unlimited distribution of licences, would result only in competition between the various packing houses in order to get the fishermen to deliver their fish to their packer. A few licences would inevitably mean an increase in the price. But the fact does remain that our fishing industry on the west coast is overcrowded at the present time, particularly in so far as the salmon industry is concerned. It may happen to other types of fishing.

One solution seems to me to be an encouragement of the real commercial fisherman not to specialize solely on one species of fish but to have the gear, equipment and the type of vessel which would enable him to catch other fish. I am glad the minister is limiting the licences this year to Canadian citizens only. There have been immigrants, coming in from Scandinavian countries particularly, who have gone into the fishing industry in the past. They have been excellent fishermen, as have been some of the orientals who have engaged in the fishing industry, and I think it is well that commercial fishing licences should be limited to Canadian citizens only. I would like to ask the minister whether the price of a commercial licence is not too low? The fee is very small and I am not certain that the smallness of that fee may not encourage more people to go into the commercial fishing industry. I would like the minister to tell me whether consideration has been given to the advisability of increasing that fee, which might have the effect of eliminating the tourist and holiday fishermen, whereas the commercial fishermen would still be in a position to pay perhaps a larger fee.

As regards marketing, the minister's remarks were most encouraging. We were all pleased to learn that there is now no carryover of the pack and as the new pack comes in there will be other markets opening up. A year ago the industry sent representatives to the United Kingdom and made what might be called a bilateral agreement, which was not exactly in the form of a barter, but under which the United Kingdom authorities were prepared to take some of our canned salmon if we would do our best to purchase more fishing gear, fishermen's clothing, tinplate and that sort of thing from the United Kingdom. That has worked out very satisfactorily. That arrangement showed great initiative on the part of the industry itself and I must pay the minister credit for having contributed his part to that agreement. I am not a supporter of the government of which the minister is a member, as he well knows, but there is no question that this agreement assisted the industry.

I would like to stress the importance of a more thorough inspection not only in the canning plants but also on the boats themselves. The fishermen sometimes become careless in regard to the way in which the fish are handled in the catcher boats and in the packers and I believe that perhaps the quality of our fish might be still further improved if there was more rigid inspection. We realize that that means more money and also means employing more personnel on patrol services, but if anything could be done to encourage the fishermen themselves to take more care in the way the fish is handled I think that would be of advantage.

Lastly I would like to deal with the problem to which the minister himself made reference, and that is the question of international agreements and the control of the fisheries in those waters which are immediately adjacent to our coast. A year ago the minister informed us that a commission had been set up under Dean Curtis to consider the definition of our territorial waters.

I have previously urged that a line be drawn up on the west coast of Vancouver island and the west coast of Queen Charlotte island and that all waters east of that line, if they cannot be considered as territorial waters for all purposes, should be considered as waters over which the Canadian government through the fisheries department should exercise some control. I would ask the minister when he is replying to tell us what progress has been made by that commission headed by Dean Curtis and how far they have got and whether they have been able to submit any reports to the government or to the international committee in connection with the United Nations which is also studying that point.

I am pleased to note that commercial fishermen have already been appointed to many of these international boards. I can only say that I wish that that had been done at the time when the international agreement between the United States, Japan and Canada was being drawn up. I think such appointments would have eliminated much of the misunderstanding which existed amongst the actual fishermen when that agreement was first published and when there was so much heated discussion in the unions and in the industry itself as to those agreements. I am sure that perhaps some of the unions were themselves to blame by not taking advantage of the opportunities offered to them, but at the same time had there been fishermen more actively connected with the drawing up of that agreement I believe there would have been less misunderstanding.

In closing, and as I said at the commencement of my remarks, I believe that the general policy adopted by the minister, particularly as regards conservation and the encouragement in the catching of fish under the most favourable circumstances as well as in marketing, is in general along the right lines. I can only urge him to concentrate on these endeavours and to intensify his efforts along these lines.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich thanked the minister for the very comprehensive statement he made in introducing his estimates. I think I can go a little farther than the hon. member and congratulate the minister on making that comprehensive statement. I think it is probably the best statement made by any minister on the estimates for a very long time.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich mentioned that the minister's statement would probably shorten preliminary debates on the first item of the estimates dealing with administration. I do not know whether it will have that effect on the hon. member but it certainly will have that effect on me because the minister has answered most of the questions I intended raising. I really would be repeating some of the things the minister said and some of the matters outlined by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat if I were to extend my remarks. I think one of the best things the minister was able to report was the improvement in the fish marketing over this time last year.

I think it is really a remarkable achievement in which I presume the fishing industry itself, as well as the government, had a part. But as I understand it, last year there was not only the one year's catch to be sold but there was a carryover from one or two previous years. It is really a most gratifying thing to know that, in this time of dwindling markets, in this particular instance we should have had such good results.

In connection with the conservation regulations on the Fraser river, may I say that I had a number of communications from persons and organizations who would be affected by those regulations. While I am pleased that the minister or the department has seen fit to extend the time, I certainly would not press the minister to do that because it is a situation in which the layman must walk warily. I do not know all the problems involved but I know the importance of conservation; and I know that it would be much better to conserve this year and next year, even to the point where it hurts, so that we may have better fishing in the years following. While I wish to thank the minister for taking this matter in easy steps—I am sure it was done after consideration—it is something that I myself would not press or plead for because, as I say, I do not know what the results would be.

I could, of course, refer to several other matters but by doing so I would not be adding anything to this debate. I will merely say again that I wish to congratulate the minister for the excellent statement he took the time to give to the committee. I know it was not such a great achievement for him because he has been talking about this thing for the last few months. He or his department was good enough to send me a copy of the speech he made when he spoke in British Columbia to the convention of the united fishermen and allied workers, and in which mention was made of these things. I thought the speech was a forthright one and that it said the right things at the right time in the right place.

Mr. Sinclair: May I just say this, Mr. Chairman. Earlier I said that it was the hon. member for Vancouver East who had come and had the discussion with me. By force of habit I had used the name of my hon. friend's old riding. It was the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who came and had this long discussion with me about the Fraser river.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a good deal of enthusiasm and interest to one of the most enlightening talks which I believe I have ever had the pleasure of hearing, especially with respect to fishing. We in British Columbia are extremely proud, as we have been for some years, of our Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. MacInnis: Do not say so publicly.

Mr. Hahn: Yes; I will say it quite publicly. I say it because someone earlier said "This day shall change all quarrels into love". At this time I should like to congratulate the minister particularly on the fact that he put considerable effort, I know, as an individual and as Minister of Fisheries particularly, into helping the fishermen in British Columbia to get rid of the huge stockpile of salmon they had there which amounted to approximately a million cases. The research work that he spoke of so fluently and so well is, I would say, possibly more necessary than ever in this scientific world in which we live today. I should also like to make a suggestion in this respect and it is this. Probably we should have freer circulation of that type of material. Then we would not have quite the same amount of objection as was indicated by some hon. members who voiced their opinions in earlier addresses.

I am particularly pleased to have heard him announce that the closure of the Fraser river above the Pattullo bridge will not be put into effect until October 8 this year, that he has taken these steps and has at this time announced the closure for the next two years. At least the fishermen on the west coast know where they are at in that regard. I believe it is something which the fishermen have requested for a long time and which they possibly had a right to expect. Under our democratic system the minister recognized that desirability and let us have the answer to it in today's sitting.

I have one question to put to him, though, in this regard and it is this. Will full-time fishermen above the Pattullo bridge be permitted to fish below the Pattullo bridge after October 8? We are all aware of the fact that some of these fishermen are full-time fishermen, though possibly not the majority of them; but the evolution of numbers in our fishing industry would indicate that since there were 611 fishermen this year in that area. Certainly they are not temporary fishermen or part-time fishermen, or sports fishermen for that matter. I should like to know for their information whether it will be permissible to fish below the Pattullo bridge after October 8. A large part of my particular riding happens to be below the Pattullo bridge. Now that steps are being definitely taken to close the fisheries above the Pattullo bridge I am interested in knowing whether or not such a move is being contemplated below the Pattullo bridge in the near future, in order that the fishermen can govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, for those of us who are interested in fisheries, it is most gratifying to note that the minister has judged it to be advisable to introduce his estimates before the committee at this time. His masterful presentation this afternoon has been most educational and enlightening to all of us. An industry which yields landings of over two billion pounds annually, with a market value of nearly $200 million, deserves study and serious consideration. Our sea and freshwater fisheries are among the most extensive in the world and, with a potential still unknown, are bound to contribute largely to the world's food requirements in the years to come.

The Minister of Fisheries deserves congratulation on the vast growth and improvement which have taken place in his department during his tenure of office. His department has now passed the stage of being a minor department and its present organization is evidence of the wise management required by the ever-growing fishing industry in our country today. Various policies adopted in the last twelve months indicate the progressive advancement of the industry and the desire of our energetic and able Minister of Fisheries to cope with these developments and to be prepared for future expansion.

It is my intention, on the occasion of the presentation of the 1954-55 fisheries estimates, to express briefly my views on certain aspects related to the fisheries department, mainly on the Atlantic coast and in the province of New Brunswick. I have great admiration for the efficiency and sincerity of the fisheries officials, with a large number of whom I have been personally connected in my fifteen years of service in the federal and provincial fields, first as federal fisheries inspector and then as provincial director of fisheries for

New Brunswick. I realize the difficulties these men have to face as officers enforcing regulations in the protective or in the inspection fields, or acting in the markets and economics branch, or in the information and educational services. In discussing briefly these various branches of the fisheries department it is my intention to try to offer what I may call constructive suggestions which I hope the minister will accept with the same good intention and spirit in which they are being suggested.

An estimate of over $3 million is proposed to take care of the operation and maintenance of the protective branch. The maintaining of officers on land and at sea, the protection of closed seasons, restricted areas, limitation of gear, size limit of fish or shellfish, etc., necessitate large expenditures. We realize that the department has to maintain a well organized and well equipped staff for the enforcement of the Fisheries Act and its regulations. Unfortunately, in limited areas the results obtained are not always as satisfactory as one would expect. There appears to be in certain localities a lack of understanding between enforcing officers and the fishermen. These fishermen are by far the most colourful and courageous primary producers on the North American continent. They are a gallant, independent breed with pride in their heritage and in their profession. They are resourceful, adventurous, staking their all, including their lives, against the elements. They are what we would call a true picture of proud individualism and of free enterprise at its best.

It is essential that the Department of Fisheries, while allowing extensive exploitation of known fish population, must at the same time assure, through protective measures and wise management, the maintenance of production for future generations to come. Unfortunately in the discharge of their duties a small number of enforcing officers are more eager to protect by force and apprehension than by education and a preventive attitude. More efforts should be directed to educating the fisherman and making him understand the purpose and value of existing regulations. Lesser then will become the need of apprehending him and taking him into court for conviction. A fishery officer should be the fisherman's best friend. Better results can be obtained by a fishery officer through a friendly chat at the end of a wharf or even by offering a helping hand than by trying to impose himself as one too self-conscious of his authority.

I was pleased to note the statement made by the Minister of Fisheries when addressing the annual meeting of the fisheries council of Canada on April 28 last, as reported in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of April 29. The report reads:

> Fisheries minister Sinclair Wednesday said lobster fishing regulations will be more strictly enforced this year. If this and an education program against illegal fishing does not cut down illegal catches, the fisheries department will ask that minimum fines be imposed, he told the annual meeting of the fisheries council of Canada.

It is gratifying to learn from the minister himself that lobster fishing regulations will be more strictly enforced this year. What is most gratifying and encouraging is the statement of the minister that an educational program against illegal fishing will be launched this year in certain localities where illegal fishing has become a common practice. Better public relations and co-operation between fishery officers and the fishermen are a necessity if the conservation service of the department is to prove its effectiveness. Fortunately this unhealthy situation is limited to a very few fishing communities. I feel confident, however, that if an educational and publicity campaign were launched through the public schools in co-operation with provincial or local authorities its results would be most satisfactory.

The fishermen of our fishing communities have been neglected from the point of view of education. The federal government, through its training payments to the provinces for vocational school assistance, could easily work out a program whereby fishing communities could benefit from a practical and efficient training system, as well as from a better understanding of the purpose of existing regulations.

On March 31 last, as mentioned by the minister in his statement this afternoon, the New Brunswick fishery regulations were amended to effect changes in the commercial and angling salmon fishing seasons. Similar changes were made in the other four Atlantic provinces. In an answer to a question I placed before the house on April 7 last, the minister said, as found at page 3855 of Hansard:

> In recent years a decline in the Atlantic salmon fishery has been giving great concern to both the federal authority and the five Atlantic provinces. On the federal side we have stepped up our research program, have increased predator control and stream clearance and improved our hatcheries. There was also the problem of having uniformity in the length of the fishing seasons, both commercial fishing in the sea and sport fishing on the rivers of the provinces.
> On March 1, we had a conference here in Ottawa of deputy ministers from the provinces who met with our officials and discussed and agreed upon a joint program which was taken back to the provinces. I am happy to say we have now received the consent of the five provinces concerned to the introduction of uniform salmon fishing regulations in the whole Atlantic area. Instead of having five provinces all with different seasons and different sizes of catch, we will now have uniformity over the three areas: the Atlantic coast area where the salmon comes first, then the bay of Fundy, and then the gulf of St. Lawrence.

This program will involve the shortening of the open season for both commercial fishing and sport fishing. This is the type of program which has met with conspicuous success on the west coast, where we are happy to see the salmon fishery increasing each year. I am sure we shall have a similar result on the east coast. I feel I should say that we are very happy about the warm co-operation we received from the five provincial governments concerned.

I fully realize the urgent need for the introduction of protective measures to save this most important fishery from complete depletion. The commercial salmon fishermen as well as anglers have been asked to sacrifice a portion of their regular season and accept a shorter fishing period. It is not my intention to question the decision of the department in shortening the season and adopting uniform salmon regulations for the Atlantic coast. It is unfortunate, however, that the commercial salmon fishermen have been asked without warning to accept this cut in their regular season. I wish they had been given the same warning that the minister gave this afternoon to the western salmon fishermen. If angling is cut down to a period of say seventy fishing days, the sportsman or angler is still in a position to spend almost as many days as he desires with his fishing rod. Of the average of 40,000 salmon caught annually by anglers in the rivers of the maritime provinces, the larger proportion are caught in the Miramichi and Restigouche rivers in New Brunswick. I have my doubts if a shorter season will result in fewer rod-days and a reduction in the number of salmon caught by anglers in New Brunswick rivers.

The commercial salmon fisherman, whether his system of fishing is by trap net, set net or drift net, is the one who has been asked to sacrifice, not a few hours of leisure or relaxation but a substantial part of his earnings which are so urgently needed for the support of his family. The commercial fishermen are upset by this new legislation which is being imposed on them on the eve of the opening of the 1954 fishing season. They are concerned because they have incurred thousands of dollars in expenses to prepare their nets and fishing gear on the presumption of a regular period of operation.

These same fishermen, however, understand the seriousness of the situation and the purpose of the program launched by the Department of Fisheries. Representatives of commercial fishermen from Restigouche and Miramichi areas have been here in Ottawa to present their case before the department. Delegations approached me when I visited my constituency during the Easter recess and all were most sincere and logical in their claims. If the salmon are going to be allowed to go by the commercial fishermen's back door what assurance have these fishermen that these salmon will reach the spawning grounds and contribute to the conservation and the reproduction hoped for by the implementation of these new regulations.

If the Department of Fisheries and its officials are sincere, and I have every reason to believe in their sincerity and willingness to co-operate, consideration should be given immediately to the provision of adequate protection to those fish allowed to reach the upper waters of our salmon rivers. An additional expenditure of less than $15,000 a year for the next four or five years could provide adequate protection of the spawning grounds in the main salmon rivers of New Brunswick, and convince the commercial fishermen of the advisability of the department's action. I stress the importance of the minister and his department giving this request immediate consideration. Unless this protection is provided, the change in seasons could be of little advantage.

I am pleased to note that progress has been made in the concentrated study undertaken on the Atlantic salmon problem by the fish culture development branch and the fisheries research board. The predator bird control project on the northwest branch of the Miramichi river, the survey of all salmon rivers to record the presence of obstruction to migration, or possible pollution, is a step in the right direction. I would suggest that a careful study be made of existing conditions in the Nipisiguit river to determine the possibility of salmon reaching the spawning grounds. I would suggest also that additional consideration be given to the control of harbour seals at the mouth of Miramichi bay.

Activities in the oyster culture field have been most encouraging in the last ten years. Over 450 private leases for the culture of oysters have been granted along the northeastern shore of New Brunswick, most of those being located in Gloucester county. The oyster crop for New Brunswick increased from a mere few thousand barrels in 1940 to 32,000 barrels in 1948. Oyster leases in the Maisonnette and Shippigan areas deserve all the assistance and service available from the oyster culture section. Rumours have reached me that the staff at the Shippigan substation will be reduced to a minimum. Here again I wish to stress the importance of this particular service and ask for further expansion of facilities, rather than a curtailment of the present organization.

An estimate of slightly over $1 million is set aside for the operation and maintenance of the inspection branch. I want to congratulate the minister and his department for the responsibility that has been assumed in assuring that the fish reach the buyer and consumer in prime condition. A rigid system of inspection is necessary for raw material as well as for the operating methods and plant sanitation. Considerable progress has been achieved in this field during the last three or four years and further efforts should be made to train help in the various operations involved in handling, curing and preparing for market the various fish products.

I was pleased to see the minister, his deputy and his chief of the inspection staff attend the annual meeting of the National Fisheries Institute of America at Cleveland, Ohio, earlier this week. I am convinced, from the minister's own statement this afternoon, that he and his deputy minister came back impressed by what was said and what they saw at the National Fisheries Institute meeting concerning the possibilities for our deep-sea fishing industry. This new method of marketing frozen or pre-cooked cod fillets, known as fish sticks, could easily revolutionize our cod fishing industry. It could easily mean an additional outlet for approximately 30 million pounds of frozen cod fillets or 90 million pounds of fresh ground fish. Here again I strongly urge the minister and his department to closely follow this new development and, through adequate controls, prevent abuses that might lead to the loss of this important new outlet.

It was with satisfaction that I listened to the minister earlier this afternoon tell the house about the improvement in market conditions for the different varieties of fish. The sending of a trade mission to Portugal, Greece and Italy should be of great benefit to the salt cod industry. His statement concerning the condition of our domestic market was most encouraging, and his department is to be complimented for its achievement in this field.

The newly created markets and economic service has added much needed statistical information on the fisheries of Canada. The department is to be commended for its activities and close attention to current events affecting the market for fish, as well as its closer relationship with the trade commission service of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The establishment of a program of insurance for fishermen's boats and gear is another evidence of the department's determination to improve the social welfare of Canadian fishermen. Let us hope that the minister will consider the advisability of extending this benefit to a wider field, covering additional types of gear and larger fishing vessels.

I should like to bring to the minister's attention a resolution passed at the last annual meeting of the fisheries council of Canada held in Ottawa on April 26-28 last. The resolution reads as follows:

> Therefore be it resolved that the fisheries council of Canada request the government of Canada to amend the present regulations so as to permit fishing craft over 65 feet in length of Canadian registry to fish to within three miles of the coastline of Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to question the advisability of such a move. I realize that foreign registered craft are permitted to fish to within three miles of the Canadian coast line. I understand also that there is no indication that within the near future there may be international agreement on the twelve mile limit for coastal waters. I would suggest, however, that before taking any decision to amend existing regulations serious consideration be given to the condition of deep-sea fishermen along the Quebec, Prince Edward Island and northeastern New Brunswick shores.

In Gloucester county we have one of the most modern and most effective deep-sea fishing fleets on this continent. In less than eight years our fishermen, with federal and provincial assistance, have built up a fleet of 50 modern draggers valued at over $1·75 million. This fleet has revolutionized the entire fishing industry of the area, and in the last few years Quebec and Prince Edward Island have adopted our fishing methods. All these vessels measure less than 60 feet in length, and their yearly operation is limited to less than six months because of ice conditions. In view of this situation I would suggest that the interested fishermen be consulted before any decision is reached concerning this resolution.

Before closing my remarks I should like to call to the minister's attention a matter of great concern to our commercial fishermen. It is unfortunate that our fishermen cannot qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. It is true that this particular problem comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labour, but I am suggesting to the Minister of Fisheries that a joint committee be formed representing the departments here to study the possibility of covering commercial fishermen by unemployment insurance. I cannot see why an engineer, cook or deckhand employed for a period of five or six months a year on a fishing vessel, cannot be asked to contribute to the unemployment insurance fund in order to qualify for benefits during his period of unemployment in the winter months. We must not forget that the fishing season closes in October or November, and it is late for the fishermen to look elsewhere for employment. Let us hope that something will be done to remedy the situation and that we can count on the co-operation of the Department of Fisheries in this case.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the minister's review of the fishing industry of the country. I should like also to congratulate his deputy minister upon having been appointed chairman of the international commission for the northwest Atlantic fisheries. With that congratulation goes an expression of my happiness concerning the site chosen for the headquarters of that organization which, we are told, is to be at Halifax. It is most fortunate that it should be in the maritime provinces. I am particularly interested in this organization because its activities cover the gulf of St. Lawrence, an area in which I am directly interested.

In the province from which I come, Prince Edward Island, while perhaps in terms of some other provinces the fishing industry is not large, it is of relatively great importance. In that province our chief industries are agriculture, fishing and the tourist industry. In an indirect way the fisheries are of interest to the tourists, and serve as an attraction to them.

I was interested in what the minister had to say with regard to the conservation of fish and other marine life, but I am not too sure that some of the solutions he suggested are as simple as the figures he gave would indicate. While the minister pointed out the amount of fish required to feed one seal, and that the amount of fish destroyed by seals was greater than that used for human consumption, I would observe that before the balance in nature was artificially disturbed by the colonization of North America, especially on the east coast, there were great numbers of seals. They were present at that time in much greater numbers than at present. Yet, the whole area was teeming with fish.

This was specially true of the gulf of St. Lawrence, not only in the matter of seals but also what we call sea cows, and other marine animals which feed on the fish. If the reason given by the minister were the only explanation, or even one of the main reasons for the depletion of the numbers of fish, the supply would have been depleted at that time.

I think one of the reasons our natural wealth in fish has been depleted is perhaps a more obscure one. It is possible that it may be due to the pollution of our streams, or to other causes of that kind which are not so readily seen. I would hope that there will be success in any endeavours made to restore the potential fishing wealth of the gulf of St. Lawrence to something approaching what it was a few years ago, or perhaps what it was a great many years ago.

While it may not be generally known, the fact is that when eastern Canada was first colonized, or when the coasts of that part of Canada were first fished by European fishermen, one of the greatest fishing grounds was that of the gulf of St. Lawrence, and it is said that it compared favourably at that time with the Grand Banks. During the sixteenth century the gulf of St. Lawrence was perhaps the greatest whaling area in the whole world, and attracted large numbers of whalers. As the minister has said, today no whaling is carried on along the east coast.

In the middle part of the sixteenth century large numbers of Basque sailors came annually to hunt whales in the gulf. Perhaps hon. members would pardon me if I were to substantiate this point by quoting from some early personal observations of conditions in the gulf of St. Lawrence as they are set out in volume VIII of Hakluyt's Voyages. The first has to do with a voyage of Charles Leigh and divers others to Cape Breton and the isle of Ramea who, in 1597, passed through the Magdalen islands and entered the gulf of St. Lawrence. Speaking of their first entry of the gulf he states:

> In that place we caught great store of cods, which were larger and better fish then any in Newfoundland.

Later on he says:

> And upon the lesse of these Islands of Birds—

And the Bird islands were discussed yesterday in reference to their use as a bird sanctuary.

> —we saw great store of Morsses or Sea Oxen, which were a sleepe upon the rockes: but when we approched nere unto them with our boate they cast themselves into the sea and pursued us with such furie as that we were glad to flee from them.

Apparently they were in a small boat.

> The 16 we arrived at Brians Island, which lyeth 5 leagues West from the Islands of Birds. About this island ther is as great aboundance of cods as in any place can be found. In little more then an houre we caught with 4 hookes 250 of them.

Then in 1534 Jacques Cartier had this to say about his entrance to the gulf of St. Lawrence:

> A point of land being passed about a league from white Sand, there is a port and passage found called the Islettes, a better place then white Sand: and there is great fishing.

And then again, speaking of his observations made just after leaving the baie de Chaleur, he wrote:

> In the meane time wee sawe a great multitude of wilde men that were fishing for mackerels, whereof there is great store.

Then there is another very interesting reference with regard to whaling. This is in relation to a voyage made from Bristol in the year 1594 by a ship called the Grace of Bristol, owned by a man named Mr. Rice Jones. It made a voyage to the gulf of St. Lawrence at that time. He speaks first of the island of St. Pierre, which he calls S. Pedro:

> In these isles of S. Pedro there is a faire harbour which we went into with our barke, and found there two ships of Sibiburo fishing for cod: where we stayed two dayes and tooke in balest for our ship.

Then a little further on he has this to say:

> Then wee departed thence, and as we came out of the harbours mouth we laid the ship upon the lee, and in two houres space we tooke with our hookes 300 or 400 great cods for our provision of our ship.

Further on he had this to say, after they entered the gulf of St. Lawrence:

> In this bay of Saint George we found the wrackes of two great Biskaine ships which had beene cast away three yeeres before, where we had some 700 or 800 whale finnes and some yron bolts and chaines or their mayne shroudes and fore shroudes.

Then he mentions that there was a great store of whale oil in puncheons at that time, but it had been destroyed in the meantime by the surf. That was in the year 1594. At a much later date, just after confederation apparently, the resources of the gulf fishery were still very great, and I quote from a booklet which is put out by the Canadian citizenship branch. It has this to say in connection with the fisheries resources:

> Great concern was felt over the violation of Canadian waters by American fishing vessels. The extent of their operations was such that there were often "between 400 and 500 United States fishing craft in the gulf of St. Lawrence alone, with a tonnage of over 30,000, manned by over 6,000 men, taking fish to the value of over $1 million."

It would seem to me that at the present time the gulf of St. Lawrence has lost its pre-eminent place as a great fishing area. But I am pleased to see that new methods have been brought into use recently. I refer to the draggers which are now being used in the gulf. I hope the venture proves successful, and I think it has possibilities of proving successful from a marketing point of view, because of the new methods which the minister mentioned with regard to filleting of fish. A new and very energetic little plant is operating in Souris in Prince Edward Island. Although it is not in my constituency I am very pleased to say that up to now at least it seems to be progressing very well and quite successfully. The real key to the success of reviving the fishing industry of the gulf of St. Lawrence so that its potentialities can be fully realized lies perhaps in further research into the causes of fish depletion, and then of course the framing of suitable regulations to correct the cause of that depletion.

In that connection I should like the minister to review briefly, but perhaps in greater detail than he did, if I am not imposing on him too much, the success that is attending the conservation of the chief types of fish which are taken in that area, with special reference to lobsters, oysters, cod and also Atlantic salmon.

There is not too much more I want to say, but I should like special reference made to the benefits, if any, which are accruing from the new type of measurement of lobsters, the carapace method, which is brought into use and the new regulation with regard to the measurement of lobsters. I would also be pleased if the minister would give us some information on the operation of a new scheme of insurance as far as lobster fishermen are concerned. I refer to the insurance that is now available to them for insuring their gear. I do not intend to take up any more of the time of the committee just now, but I have a few questions that I shall put on the appropriate item.

Mr. Dickey: I too want to congratulate the Minister of Fisheries on the interesting and excellent review that he gave us of the operations of the department and some of the more important aspects of the international work that is being done over the broad field of fisheries research and conservation these days, in which Canada is playing such an important and essential part. It was a good speech, and the minister deserves the compliments that he has received upon it. But I think it should be said that his speech was only an example of the intelligent and vigorous effort that the minister is putting into the carrying out of his responsibilities in this important portfolio of fisheries, and it bespeaks well for the future of the department and of the department's work that we have a minister such as the hon. gentleman who holds this portfolio at the present time.

I should also say that we all recognize the minister receives excellent support and co-operation, and I am sure good advice, from his deputy minister and the other officials who are experts in their fields, and who have over the years obviously exercised good judgment and have taken a very long range and sensible view of fisheries problems, and have made great contributions to the advances that have been achieved.

The fishing industry is one of great importance to my province of Nova Scotia, and of particular importance to the constituency of Halifax. In Halifax we have important shore fisheries; we have a long coast line with good small harbours, and from those harbours the fishermen go out in small boats to prosecute the very important and valuable lobster fishery and also in other seasons the mackerel, herring, cod, and haddock fisheries as well. In addition, we have quite a bit of activity in the important sword fishing part of the industry, and over the last few years some of our boats have had great success in this field.

We also have in Halifax a very important concentration of the deep-sea fisheries, both the salt fishery and the fresh fish industry. The deep-sea draggers, trawlers and long-liners come in out of Halifax to land their catches at the fish plants of the salt fish producers, and more importantly at the modern and efficient plants of the several large companies that specialize in fresh and frozen fillets and other fish products of that kind.

The fresh fish side of the industry is greatly assisted in Halifax by the modern cold storage facilities which are maintained there by the national harbours board and which are used almost exclusively by the fishing industry. Recently these facilities have been modernized and extended to the great advantage of the fish companies which rely on the freezing, cooling and ice capacity of this plant, and I am sure the importance of the existence of these facilities is recognized by the fisheries department as a real contribution to the expansion of the industry throughout this whole area. I might add that further extension and improvement of the cold storage facilities is required, and I am sure that in due time these additional improvements will be brought into effect.

However, Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I wanted to make particular reference in my few remarks to the research activities being carried on under the direction of the Department of Fisheries at the northwest Atlantic fisheries experimental station at Halifax. The studies proceeding there are of both a practical and scientific nature. The practical studies are in the field of the techniques, machinery and other requirements for the modernization of our methods of handling and catching fish. The problems of properly storing fish which are caught on the high seas and bringing them into port in prime condition are very great indeed. The experimental station at Halifax, and the experimental station at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, have been conducting studies and experiments which have resulted in the improved design of fishing boats, trawlers, and draggers, and in the inclusion in newly-constructed boats of this nature of special means of cooling and keeping fish clean and fresh until delivered at the processing plants.

So far as the equipment of the processing plants are concerned, they have made important contributions to the design of automatic filleting, skinning and cutting machines, and to the design and operation of automatic driers for the drying of fish; and of smoking machines for the production of various kinds of smoked fish. All these practical improvements and advances have been made freely available to the industry and they have been gladly accepted and put into use by the various branches of the industry to the great advantage, not only of the people directly connected, both operators and fishermen, but also of the consumers who as a result have received a better, more nutritious and more delicious product for their tables.

I was very interested in the reference the minister made this afternoon to the development of fish sticks. This is typical of the kind of advance that can be made in the fishing industry, and it certainly exemplifies the fact that if sufficient thought is given by the people connected with the fishing industry to new methods and new means of getting their product to the ultimate consumer in a form which is not only palatable but acceptable, also finished and easy to use, then their marketing problems are well on the way to solution.

Besides this work in the practical field, the experimental station also does important work on the basic science connected with the fishing industry. Studies are being conducted on the effect of the natural slime, with which the fish is encased in its natural habitat; on the keeping qualities and flavour of the fish; on the salts that are required in certain processes of preserving fish; and on the elimination of impurities and that sort of thing. All these basic and important studies are being carried on and there is no doubt they are producing information which will lead to the solution of various basic problems in the fishing industry.

The existence of this experimental station was, I believe, one of the main factors in the decision which was reached to establish the headquarters of the council of the northwest Atlantic fisheries council at Dalhousie University in Halifax. I believe that decision was justified in every sense of the word. We are all, I think, very pleased and consider it most appropriate that the permanent headquarters of this council should be in Canada. To us that was the main consideration, but so far as we were concerned in Halifax we felt that not only should it be in Canada but that the ideal place for it was in Halifax. Over a period of several years many of us had brought to the attention of the various officials who were considering this serious question the reasons why it appeared to us that Halifax was the logical and best place for the establishment of these headquarters. I am delighted that our views were concurred in and that this step was taken. I hope the members of the secretariat of that headquarters are finding their stay in Halifax a pleasure, and that they will find the scientific and library facilities available to them there of great assistance in the carrying on of the important work being done by this organization.

As I understand it, the purpose of this northwest Atlantic fisheries council is to control the exploitation of what the minister referred to this afternoon as the greatest single fisheries in the world. I refer to the great fisheries concentrated around the Grand Banks in Newfoundland, and the fisheries which stretch up north into the Arctic circle in the vicinity of Greenland and Labrador, and stretch into the gulf of St. Lawrence, to which reference was made by the hon. member for Queens who immediately preceded me, and which stretch down the Atlantic coast along the banks which lie off the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia and around into the bay of Fundy and along the Atlantic coast of the United States. This whole area is tremendously productive in fisheries. More and more we are coming to realize that the best long-range interests of everyone connected with this great industry lie in the proper conservation of these great resources and the prosecution of the fisheries in a way which will contribute to their maximum productivity without damaging the long-range future of the industry.

The hon. member for Queens read to the committee from historical works a number of quotations which indicate the prolific fishery which existed in the periods to which he referred, three hundred or four hundred years ago. After four centuries of extensive fishing we could not expect that these conditions would still exist, nor should we expect that these conditions can be brought back again without an almost complete closing off of the fisheries. However, I think we can look forward to and expect a similar experience to that which has been realized in other places. As a result of policies of conservation and proper exploitation of resources of this kind I think we can look forward to establishing in the Atlantic provinces extensive modern facilities for the preparation and production of modern fish products, with an assurance and confidence that there will be maintained a fish population sufficient to provide the raw material which these great industries require.

[Mr. Dickey.]

I am sure that few members of the committee and perhaps few members of the public, even in the Atlantic provinces, realize the tremendous expansion, in terms of capital expenditure, that has gone on in the fishing industry since the end of the war. On the Atlantic coast over the last four or five years large and important new processing plants have been built in various locations such as Louisburg, Arichat, Petite de Grat. Facilities in the industry have also been modernized and increased in Halifax, Canso, Lockeport and in many other locations too numerous to mention. These capital expenditures, for their usefulness and for their productivity, depend on the maintenance of a supply of raw fish. That is one of the main objectives of the council to which I have referred. These fisheries are international fisheries and must be shared. If they are to be shared between nations the only sensible way to organize those fisheries is by a co-operative international council such as the one that has been established with headquarters at Halifax.

In this connection I should like to mention a problem that was also mentioned by the hon. member for Gloucester. A rather embarrassing and difficult situation exists in connection with the limits which are imposed upon trawlers and draggers of Canadian registry and Canadian ownership and those which ply their trade in our waters which come from other countries. The situation is brought about by a difference in ground rules, as we might say.

Under international law non-Canadian ships are entitled to come within three miles of the coast. In other words, they are entitled to drag right up to what Canada regards as her international boundary at sea. However, Canadian vessels over a certain size are restricted to twelve miles from the coast line. In other words, there is an additional nine miles of ocean. I think that this is a situation that should not be permitted to continue. I know that it is not exclusively a problem of the Department of Fisheries. It also involves our concept of international law and would involve the Department of External Affairs. I am also aware that this question of territorial waters and international regulation of the use of such waters is an extremely confused one. However, I submit that it would not contribute greatly to the confusion if Canada were to take a firm stand that would at least put our own fishing vessels on a basis of equality with those from other countries.

I was also pleased to hear the minister refer to the steps that have been taken to organize the conservation of the Atlantic salmon fisheries over the whole Atlantic area. I think these arrangements were necessary and perhaps somewhat overdue. The Atlantic salmon is one of our important commercial fish on the Atlantic coast and its future must be safeguarded. Not only is it an important commercial fish but, as the minister mentioned, it is an important sport fish as well. So far as sport fishing is concerned, in Nova Scotia the fisheries are free to all who wish to enjoy them. Therefore when we speak of sport fisheries for Atlantic salmon, trout or anything of that nature in Nova Scotia, there is no question of thinking of something that is exclusively the privilege of those who are better off and have plenty of leisure time to enjoy this sport. It is a sport that is open to every citizen in our province; and I am glad to say that it is enjoyed by a large majority of our people. However, they are more and more coming to recognize the necessity, in their own best interests, of co-operating with measures of conservation particularly with respect to the Atlantic salmon.

The guardian services of the Department of Fisheries have been improved over the past few years to my own knowledge and to my own satisfaction. However, I think that improvements could still be made. From contacts that I have had in my own county, I am sure that the officials of the department will find ready co-operation from a vast majority of the people with whom they will have to come in contact in connection with matters of this kind. I am sure the officials in that area will report to the minister that they find that kind of co-operation.

I was delighted particularly to hear the minister refer to the steps being taken to deal with the predatory birds that are a real problem on our streams. This matter has been discussed by the fish and game associations in Halifax. They were especially concerned about it, and I was delighted to hear the minister report that arrangements have been made whereby this scourge can be at least brought under some sort of control. I do not want to detain the committee any longer at this time, but I should like to repeat my congratulations to the minister and to tell him that the east coast fishermen and fish operators are very pleased with the way that he has taken over the responsibilities of his department. We are glad to welcome a man of such knowledge of the west coast fisheries to the east coast, and we wish him well.

Mr. Stick: Much has been said today regarding fish, and the minister has given us a splendid survey of the fishing industry for the whole of Canada. I think he has worked hard and energetically since taking office. His report today shows just how hard he has worked and the progress that has been made since he assumed office. In no sense of criticism may I say that I noticed that he spoke in greater detail of the fishing on the west coast than he did of fishing on the east. That is quite natural because he knows from a personal standpoint the problems of the fishery of British Columbia. However, we hope that in time he will familiarize himself just as much with the fishery of the east as he has with that of the west.

Newfoundland was born and spawned on fish. Over 450 years ago it was the discovery of the tremendous quantities of fish around our coasts that led to the discovery of Newfoundland and the settlements which were formed there later. Fishing has been a national problem to us through those 450 years. It is still our national problem. Anything which concerns fishing concerns the great majority of our people and the economy of the province of Newfoundland.

I was very glad to hear the minister say that the market for salt codfish is improving. I must take his word for it, but when I was home at Easter there was great concern about markets among those who export our fish. They told me that there was no improvement in sight as far as prices were concerned, and certainly they were not exporting as much as they had at the same time last year. Perhaps that situation has improved since then. If it has, I am very glad to hear it.

Mention has been made of the curing and grading of salt codfish. That has been a problem with us for very many years. May I suggest to the minister and his officials that they should give serious consideration to the grading of our fish. I suggest that instead of having a sworn culler employed by the merchant the government should take over this service and appoint government cullers so that there will be no dispute when the fishermen sell their fish as to what quality they are going to receive. The problem has been with us for many years and causes us a lot of concern. It is the cause of much dispute. I know something about the problem because I am a culler myself, and I have culled fish. If you are going to have one grade whereby the fishermen are paid according to that grade then the government will have to take over the service so that there will be uniformity of grading. I bring that to the attention of the departmental officials and I ask them to give it serious consideration.

Mention was also made of fish sticks. This is a new process for the fishing industry and it is capable of tremendous expansion. I was informed when home that one big firm in Newfoundland has had an order for 10 million pounds which it cannot supply. The hon. member for Gloucester said that this market is capable of expansion to 30 million pounds. I would double it and call it 60 million pounds if we have the facilities to supply the market. We have the greatest and the best market in the world right on our front doorstep. That is the market that I think we should cultivate and go after. If we do I think many of our fish marketing problems will be solved.

There are over 170 million people in Canada and the United States and there is a natural increase of three or four million a year. These people have to be fed and they need fish. If our fishing industry is alive to the situation and its possibilities, if they go after this market, I feel sure it will solve many of the marketing problems we have on our hands today.

I am sorry to say that the salt codfish industry in Newfoundland has been in a depressed state for a number of years. This is not the fault of the fishermen or anybody in particular. The problem has been with us for many years and it is not easy of solution. So much so is the problem with us that our people are giving up fishing, and if it continues for a few more years we will have very few people fishing. An effort has been made this year, through the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to set up a different marketing system. I do not wish to speak about it because the government has not made any pronouncement with respect to it yet. However, the minister said this afternoon that there will be a guaranteed price to our fishermen, and that in itself will do much to get them fishing again this summer.

When I was home one fisherman asked me about it and when I informed him of this he said: "I am going fishing again". I am glad the announcement was made by the minister this afternoon because I think it is a very important one. I hope the price will be announced in the near future so that our fishermen will have some guarantee as to where they stand this year and some encouragement to prosecute the fishery as they have done in the past. This is very important, and I hope the minister or those responsible will make the announcement as soon as possible because in a very short time now our fishermen will be getting ready to prosecute the fishery.

I have one thing to say regarding scientific research. Much has been going on in Newfoundland and eastern Canada in the last few years with respect to research into our fisheries. There is one type of fish that I want to bring to the attention of the minister and his officials. It is a fish that we call capelin and it rolls in on our beaches in the hundreds of millions. Nothing has ever been done with it although it is a tasty fish and one that I think has great possibilities. I do emphasize here and now that the minister should take steps to get his research department to do something about research on this fish because in my opinion there are great possibilities if proper research is carried out. At the present time it is used mostly for fertilizer in Newfoundland. This is a waste of good food, and I think it should be stopped. I think some method should be found to process the fish and market it. I believe if it gets to market people will take to it.

Mention has also been made of the trade mission to Europe of the Minister of Public Works. We have a problem that arises through fishermen from European countries coming to fish on the Grand Banks. It has been said that this is the greatest reserve of fish in the world today. The Grand Banks lie some 110 to 120 miles off the coast of Newfoundland. So much intensive fishing has been done there in the last few years that there are signs of depletion. The international commission that has been set up must look into the matter, and if these people are to enjoy the privilege of coming to our shores and getting supplies, which they do every year and which we want to continue, then they must give us something in return. This is a bargaining point which I hope will not be overlooked by the minister when he goes to Europe. I hope he will emphasize that point. We have enjoyed the friendship of Portugal and Spain in these fishing grounds off Newfoundland for hundreds of years. We want that to continue, but trade is a two-way street. We do not want to give all the privileges to them and get nothing in return.

I mentioned this fact, and I mentioned also that I hoped the personnel of this commission going over to Europe would include a representative of NAFEL. If the minister wishes to reply, I would ask him to give me the names of the gentlemen who will form that commission. I feel that it is important that a representative of NAFEL, our marketing agency, should be a member of that commission. I advocated that a year ago when the trade commission went to South America, but nothing was done. I advocate that again now, and stress the fact that I consider it essential.

Now, we come to international conservation. Mention has been made here of the three mile limit. Foreign trawlers, some of them up to 2,000 tons, come by the hundreds to fish in Newfoundland waters. They can come within three miles of our coast. There is a lot of confusion about this three mile limit. It is not a definite international law. It came into being many years ago when Newfoundland had a dispute with the French people over the fishing grounds, and an award was made on that basis by The Hague court. I spoke about that two years ago. It is not a definite limit, and the matter was under review by the old league of nations, who did not settle the problem, and I believe it is now under review by the United Nations.

Until a definite ruling is made there is no reason why we should adhere to the three mile limit. Our shore fishermen in Newfoundland fish beyond three miles from our coast, and there are many good fishing grounds within the twelve mile area from our coast. I feel the time has come when we should review this situation and establish a twelve mile limit the same as the United States did when they had this rum row situation some years ago. It only needs a little courage to take the step. Norway has a four mile limit. If we press for a twelve mile limit we will protect our fisheries as they were never protected before.

So far as conservation is concerned, the Grand Banks are the breeding ground for a lot of our fish, and that fish comes to our shores in enormous quantities. Any depletion of the Grand Banks is going to affect our shore fisheries. For that reason I stress the point that under these international commissions we should take up this matter of the draggers going over these grounds and spoiling the spawning grounds. This is vital to us and it is a matter which must be given grave consideration.

Another matter I wish to mention has to do with the fisheries on the west coast, and the new methods of catching herring. These herring come into the Bay of Islands in the millions, but for the last few years they have not been coming into the bay. The fishermen say it is because the draggers go out and catch them in the deep water. If these operations continue the herring will be depleted. Some people say that is the cause of it, but I do not know. It is time we had a study made, a proper survey made of that important industry so far as the west coast is concerned.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that if we could have a set-up on the east coast the same as they have on the west coast, which I saw in 1950, we would have no complaints in regard to this department. They have the best organized set-up that we have in Canada. We want a similar set-up on the east coast, and the quicker we get it the better. When we get it I believe a lot of our fishing problems will be solved. We are beginning a new era so far as the east coast fishery is concerned. I have far more hope today for our fishing industry than I ever had. However, it needs constant supervision; it needs the best men we can get in the industry; and it needs push and go from this department and the provincial government. It needs a strong pull and a pull all together. By doing that, I believe we can put this important industry on its feet. Then, we will not have to come here with complaints about a depressed industry.

I bring these matters that are of vital importance to the minister's attention today, and I trust that these matters will be given proper consideration and that we will have a happy industry. I know that is the aim of the minister. We will have an industry that will be a credit to this country, an industry that will be valuable to the country, and one that will grow in value as time passes.

Mr. Barnett: May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, like other members in various parts of the house I found the preliminary speech delivered this afternoon by the Minister of Fisheries a most interesting and fruitful one. I must say that on the basis of such knowledge as I have been able to acquire in the relatively short time I have been a member of the house I find myself in agreement with most of the policies of his department, as he outlined them this afternoon.

That is particularly true in reference to his remarks in connection with what is being done by the department in the field of conservation, and of national and international work to protect our fishing resources. I was particularly pleased to note that he mentioned the appointment of Dr. Kask as permanent chairman of the fisheries research board, because I feel from such knowledge as I have been able to acquire that the most important thing about knowledge in connection with fisheries is the somewhat astounding lack of knowledge of mankind concerning this subject, even though fishing is one of the oldest means of providing a livelihood.

There was one item the minister mentioned, about the real significance of which I have been wondering. I wish he might have expounded a little more upon it. When referring to British Columbia, as I recall it, he said that we could have our power and our fishing, too. He is probably as much or more familiar than I am with the various suggestions advanced from time to time as to the development of the power potential of the Fraser river system; and he has probably seen more than I have of those diagrams showing the Fraser river with a long series of dams and lakes. I am wondering whether his statement means that actually it has now become possible for the full power potential of the Fraser river system to be developed and, at the same time, not interfere with our Pacific coast salmon fisheries.

He made mention of the experience in connection with the Columbia river system. I recall having read some time ago the suggestion that it was discovered in connection with that system that the principal problem was not that of getting the salmon up the stream to spawn as much as it was one of getting the young fish down. As I gathered from the article I read on the subject, when they first made power installations on the Columbia they had not realized that that was going to be the problem it eventually became, or that they were going to lose the young fingerlings as they went through the mill-races of the various power plants.

I am under the impression that some research has been under way in regard to that particular problem, and I would hope that before the discussion is completed the minister would clarify for us as to whether that research has reached the point where we have the techniques which would make it possible, as it is there, to use the full power potential of the Fraser river system and at the same time be assured that our fisheries resources could be preserved.

There is only one other point I should like to mention. I wished the minister might have said something more with respect to the plans he has in mind concerning the recently inaugurated fishermen insurance scheme. I think it is important that some consideration be given to this matter. This is particularly so in the light of the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Finance in which he proposes amendments to the Income Tax Act which, if they become law, may affect adversely the fishermen's co-operative insurance scheme operating on the Pacific coast at the present time.

Certainly I know, as the minister probably does, that the Pacific Coast Fishermen's Mutual Marine Insurance Company is somewhat concerned about item No. 6 in the resolution where the amendment to the Income Tax Act is proposed. I would suggest that if that particular amendment does go through, and has the adverse effect the organization fears it may have, there may be need for increased consideration to be given to the extension of the present form of insurance. I realize this is not the place to debate in detail proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act. However I do feel there is a very definite connection in view of the fact that the fishermen on the Pacific coast have themselves developed a co-operative insurance plan to assist in protecting them from loss in connection with their boats and gear.

I believe that concludes all I have to say at the moment.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I must admit this evening that I have not spent much time during this session speaking on behalf of the fishermen in my own riding or in any other part of the country. The reason is that I have more or less left it up to the hon. member for New Westminster who, on a number of occasions has presented various arguments and made pleas on their behalf. I have lent my support to these statements as he has made them on different occasions. This afternoon I too enjoyed very much and benefited very greatly from the speech made by the Minister of Fisheries and I feel that I understand a little better the problems of fishing and fisheries than I did this time yesterday.

I was thinking that there must have come to the minister a sense of satisfaction when he listened to all the verbal bouquets that were handed to him. He has done very well in comparison with some of the other ministers who have preceded him. I fear that some of them did not receive too many bouquets. However, I am reminded of the fact—and I should like to mention this—that when the proposition regarding the closure of the Fraser river above the Pattullo bridge was first advanced I asked two questions on the orders of the day. The first one was, as reported at page 3029 of Hansard:

> Will the minister state whether or not a decision has been reached with respect to the closure of the Fraser river above the New Westminster bridge to commercial fishing?

At that time the minister replied:

> The answer to his question is no. I hope to be able to announce a decision before I meet the fishermen's union in convention next week in Vancouver.

I asked a supplementary question on that same occasion as follows:

> Before any such decision is made, will the minister consider the possibility of giving the fishermen in that area one year's notice so they will have an opportunity to dispose of their equipment, if they so desire, and secure a livelihood in some other occupation.

The answer of the minister to that question was that my question was not quite applicable because all they were considering was a little earlier closure on two species of salmon in that area. Later on, a definite announcement was made that the closure was going to be put into effect. This brought forth a great many objections on behalf of those engaged in the fishing industry. I received a letter from the Albion local of the united fishermen's union protesting the measure, and there were some other submissions which set forth alternative proposals. But we are very happy to hear that the minister has given further consideration to this matter, and instead of setting the date in September as he had already stated, it is being placed at October 8 this year. I trust that before next year's closure date is reached circumstances will be revealed that will make it unnecessary to shorten further the fishing season in that area.

Although we are very appreciative of the action that has been taken by the minister, and we want to express our appreciation to him for that consideration, we trust, as I say, that further consideration will be given and some new facts brought to light that will enable him to allow the fishermen to continue fishing operations in the area between the New Westminster and the Mission bridges.

Mr. Goode: I do not know whether it is in a spirit of surprise or not, but everyone seems to think that the Minister of Fisheries has done an exceptional job on his estimates. I think the final conclusion is that he comes from British Columbia.

In regard to fishing between the New Westminster bridge and the bridge at Mission, may I point out to the hon. member for Fraser Valley that I would not say too much to my people at home about the Minister of Fisheries not doing what he says. He has been very kind this time, and I think very reasonable, in allowing these chaps to have another year, but I do not know that I would agree that fishing above the New Westminster bridge should be continued after this year.

But again I must take the proposition brought up by the hon. member for New Westminster this evening when he said that some of his people would be down in my territory to fish. The Minister of Fisheries and I will have to have a consultation about that, I hope, before the next fishing season comes around, because we have too many fishermen at Steveston now. These men are full-time fishermen. We have very few part-time fishermen. Most of my people own $6,000 to $12,000 boats. They do not do anything else but fish. That is their livelihood, and that livelihood should be protected. If you are going to allow part-time fishermen from the Fraser valley to come into the lower part of the Fraser river and fish, then I think the member for Burnaby-Richmond will again be on his feet making the same kind of fight for his people.

There is a suggestion regarding licences on the Fraser river that I hope the Minister of Fisheries will take into consideration. I am fully in agreement that there are too many people fishing on the river. The difficulty seems to be this: What are we going to do about it? Why not do this? Why not create a different type of licence for deep-sea fishing and for fishing in the Fraser river? Why not make this a solution to the whole matter, that a man must be a full-time fisherman, using that phrase "his only means of livelihood" before he can get a fishing licence. Let us stop those sport fishermen from getting commercial licences. Too many men running small cruisers are working in Pacific waters or waters adjacent to Vancouver catching more fish than they should.

As an example, perhaps I am one of those at fault. I have a small boat, and in 1952 I went to the fisheries inspector of Steveston and got a commercial licence to see just what you had to do to get one of those important documents. All it meant was that I paid $1, signed a piece of paper and I was a commercial fisherman. I do not say this to the minister in a spirit of criticism, but it should be looked into because every Tom, Dick and Harry with an outboard motor can have a commercial fishing licence.

I want to bring this to the attention of the minister. He and the Associate Minister of National Defence were kind enough to assist, and in fact did most of the work in getting the new fishing harbour at Steveston which will take care of most of our small boats during southeast gales. There is a matter, though, that I wish to bring to his attention and that is the matter of $70,000. That amount of money represents the difference between the amount in last year's estimates for this fishing harbour and the amount that was finally awarded to a contractor on the lower mainland. That $70,000 would just about take care of floats for the men at Steveston. And if the Minister of Fisheries will kindly speak to his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, and get that $70,000 spent on floats for the fish harbour at Steveston I know my people would be very happy.

I want to say something about the trade delegation that the Minister of Fisheries spoke about this afternoon. Again I think my riding can take a little credit. Mr. Ken Fraser, who is manager of the Imperial cannery at Steveston, led that delegation. In conjunction with other executives of the fishing industry of British Columbia, and with the very great help of the Minister of Fisheries, certain negotiations were conducted in Great Britain and, as we know, a contract was given to Canada for $5,200,000 worth of canned salmon for this year. I do not think too much can be said for Mr. Fraser and his associates. That work was done by an industry working for itself and for the fishermen on the river. Too few industries in Canada try to do this work on their own behalf.

Usually when an industry gets into difficulty they come to the government for assistance. I have taken my part in this house in asking the minister to do something about canned salmon stocks in British Columbia to the point where, at one time when things were desperate, I asked for some type of subsidy. The Minister of Fisheries did not agree with me at that time and I think the reason why he did not agree with me was because he had this other arrangement prepared whereby representatives of the industry were to go to Great Britain. They did a wonderful job there and I think Mr. Fraser and his colleagues are to be highly commended and I offer my compliments to these gentlemen.

I do wish to say in conclusion, and I am keeping my remarks brief because I do not wish to speak at too great length, that there is a matter I would like to bring to the attention of the minister and that is the problem of poaching in Queen Charlotte. The minister this afternoon mentioned that a helicopter service is being used in the Atlantic. It seems to me that the problem of dealing with poachers in the mouth of some of the small rivers in Queen Charlotte could be handled in the same way. Poachers cannot be tracked down entirely by fisheries patrol boats and I believe a helicopter should be used to great advantage and I hope the minister will consider that suggestion.

I would like to mention one other thing. The minister's department has a man by the name of Mr. Rothery who is the inspector in charge of part of the river at Steveston, and I would like to say to the minister and his deputy that that man is doing a very fine job there. Things at Steveston are very good fisherywise, and I think this gentleman is responsible for the very fine relationship which exists there between the industry and the fishermen on the river.

In conclusion, I would again compliment the minister on the finest presentation of the work of a department I have heard in this house since I first came here.

Mr. Ashbourne: Mr. Chairman, I would like to avail myself of this opportunity to add my congratulations to those that other hon. members have proffered the Minister of Fisheries for the very excellent review he gave us this afternoon on the work of his department. His speech was extremely interesting and it seems to me that rather than being like a fish out of water he was entirely in his element. He has certainly obtained a very fine grasp of the problems of the fishing industry since he became the minister in charge of this department. However, being aware of his great capabilities and knowing of the success he has already achieved in the field of finance this was not altogether surprising.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is all to the good because the Department of Fisheries is very important and we are all very proud that the minister is making such a great success of his job. We believe that as time goes on the industry will see the great benefit which will arise as a result of the aggressive work already carried out by the minister and his officials in the Department of Fisheries.

In this regard, sir, I would like to say how glad the people of Newfoundland were last year to receive a visit from the deputy minister of fisheries. He spent some time in Newfoundland and I believe that from now on we shall see a great improvement in fishery development in that province. There was perhaps a little misunderstanding in Newfoundland last year with regard to the broadcast the Minister of Fisheries made at that time, but that has now been cleared up and I understand that definite plans have now been made as regards improved marketing facilities for the sale of codfish so that the producers will obtain increased benefits from their products.

Five years have now passed since Newfoundland entered confederation and perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I might have the indulgence of the house in saying that all hon. members from Newfoundland, and we have seven in this house, are delighted to be here and I think I can speak on their behalf in voicing sincere thanks to other hon. members for the courtesy and friendship which they have shown us. I would also like to express the hope that the progress which has been evident since confederation will continue to be satisfactory and continue to be to our mutual advantage.

I would like to address myself to some of the problems facing our people today, with special regard to our fishermen. We are still, so to speak, in a transition period and we are grateful for the progress which has been made. We are very glad that an insurance scheme has been incorporated in the plans which have been brought into existence so that fishermen can obtain some compensation for the loss of gear and boats due to the ravages of storms which in the past have caused great distress.

However, there is one other aspect of the insurance scheme which I would like to bring to the attention of the minister. I have no doubt he and the Minister of Labour already have this matter in mind. I refer to unemployment insurance and I would like to emphasize that this is one thing fishermen lack. During autumn when fishing comes to an end and the fishermen have to hang up their nets they are unemployed and have no claims for unemployment insurance. I believe though that this matter will receive the minister's full attention and I have every confidence that in time something will be worked out to assist our fishermen.

In Newfoundland we had in the past three different kinds of fishing. We had inshore fisheries which were carried on by shoremen; then we had bank and deep-sea fisheries carried on by the men who sailed the bankers. Then we had the Labrador fishery which was operated by shoremen who went to Labrador and also by floaters. Unfortunately since confederation we have seen a great decline in some of these fisheries, particularly in the bank fishery and most particularly in the Labrador fishery.

The shore fishery is dependent upon the winds and the tides. We know, of course, that fish must eat and that they have to go in search of food. Sometimes it happens that the winds are onshore winds. Just at the moment, on the northeast coast I believe there is quite a blockade of ice on account of the prevailing northeast winds that are operating down there at the present time. The fish, of course, have to depend on the winds, the tides and the currents. Generally speaking, when you have a lot of inwind it brings in food upon which these fish feed, thrive and grow. Then we get a good inshore fishery.

But sometimes when the winds are offshore the food on which these fish exist is taken far out into the deep water. Then these fish, of course, have to go out into the deeper water. Then there is not so much profit, return or proceeds from the catch because the fishermen have the toil of hauling their nets, and oftentimes they do not take many fish. Thus the necessity for going out after these fish is today more evident than it has ever been in the past. We realize that it has been necessary for fishermen to get long-liners, draggers and other vessels which go out and get the fish from the fishing banks.

In the past I think Newfoundland has suffered from the fact that too little capital has been available for investment in the fisheries. Today we realize that more fish plants are necessary. There is a need for modern fresh fish plants which will take the fish from the fishermen as they come in, split them, freeze them and get them ready for the most productive market, or in other words the market which would produce the largest number of dollars for our fishermen. To us, of course, that is the great United States market.

There was a time when Newfoundland was producing over a million quintals of codfish, most of which was salted. Today, however, we realize that many of our customers who used to buy our fish are producing their own. That has been especially so since the war. Of course, during the war there was little difficulty in disposing of fish. The greatest problem in those days was transportation. It was easy then to sell fish, provided the transportation was available. We now see that these people who used to buy our fish in days gone by are, as I said before, producing their own. They come to the Grand Banks and look for fish. The result is that we are not able to sell such a large quantity of fish as used to be sold in days gone by.

As far as the Labrador fishery is concerned, I think something special will have to be done. This is not the first time that I have brought to the attention of the minister of fisheries—not the present minister but his immediate predecessor—the need for something being done for the Labrador fisheries. There is a long section of the Labrador coast line where there is an abundant fishery. In fact, as to the fishery around the island of Belle Isle—a large producing area—I understand that at one time in Paris, France, berths for Belle Isle were drawn. That fact shows that in those days when the French were fishing on the French shore—the treaty coast, as we call it even today—there was an abundance of fish around this section. It is still a large-producing section. We realize that those who go there in schooners have gone to great expense in providing themselves with vessels and gear, and that they get an abundant harvest of fish. But the market for the Labrador fish is not what it used to be. Costs of twine, netting and other equipment have gone up to such an extent that there is not much money in fishing. The result is that many people have given up fishing on the Labrador.

As Labrador is in my riding I should like to mention another matter of which I learned during this past summer when I was visiting the Labrador coast. I refer to the great scarcity of salt which existed during last year. I think something special will have to be done in the way of providing salt depots for the Labrador. I believe this is a matter which will have to be looked into. As we know there was the royal commission on fishery development which was investigating fisheries and which brought in its report last year. This report is being implemented. I hope that something will be done to see that salt depots are provided so that when the fish are at hand the fishermen will have a ready source of salt which will enable them to preserve the fish. In that way they will be able to have some earning power. Fishing, of course, is practically the only means of employment they can have in the summertime.

At La Scie, at which I believe a large plant is to be installed, there is also available a large catch for the fishermen. In the past they have had to salt their catch, thus getting, so to speak, a much smaller earning power than would be available to them if a filleting plant were in operation there. With the implementation of the recommendation of the report of the Walsh fishery development commission I believe that there will now be installed in Newfoundland some of these up-to-date plants which will look after, not only the filleting of the fresh fish, or the utilization of the fish in the fresh state, but will also, by modern up-to-date dryers, take care of some of the salt fish which requires to be cured.

There was a time in Newfoundland when most of the fish drying was done on the flakes, a great deal of it being done by the women of Newfoundland. In those days there was quite an art in making good fish. I noticed that this afternoon the minister emphasized the quality of fish. In those days, provided the weather was good and the climate favourable, there was no lack of good merchantable fish. But, unfortunately, it seems that in the last few years the export of merchantable fish, the best quality fish, has fallen off to a considerable degree.

The fishery, which means so much to our fishermen and which, as I said before, is the only means of livelihood for many of these people, is being looked after, and I think the provision of loans for fishermen is most necessary. These men do not have a great amount of money. They need dollars in order to procure gear and fishing boats, and an opportunity should be afforded them to obtain loans more easily in order that they may equip themselves to catch fish.

Emphasis was placed this afternoon on the question of conservation, and it is most essential. The international treaties are of mutual advantage. The Grand Banks are and have been throughout the centuries a most important reservoir of food and we should realize that there is great need for conservation of the supply so that throughout the centuries to come the fish will be available that are so essential and necessary to provide the protein that our people need.

Then there is the question of the great seal herds that come south each year and are found off the strait of Belle Isle. During the past few months several vessels have been prosecuting the seal fishery. Unfortunately there have been some losses and the catch this year was not very good. We are very thankful that the government has provided an aerial survey so that statistics can be gathered respecting the quantity of seals available. I should like to point out the great loss to our nation in the past through allowing carcasses of seal meat to go to the bottom of the ocean when they could have provided good edible food for our population. In fact the kidneys and livers of young seals are very nutritive. I think that there should be further study of the sealing industry in order that there may be utilization not only of the pelts, the seal oil, fat and skins which in the past the fishermen have been in the habit of bringing to port, but also of the by-products so that the greatest possible benefit may be derived from these materials which are our natural heritage and which in the past have gone to waste.

Today the oil markets are depressed. The demand for oil seems to be very small. We realize also that the introduction of plastics has affected the production of leather goods. Air travel has created a need for very light luggage. This of course has reacted against the leather trade and has brought into being new synthetic materials. This has affected the livelihood of those people who engaged in catching seals for their pelts and skins and to whom the industry meant so much.

I should also like to refer to the whaling industry which is also practically extinct in Newfoundland. However, I think that perhaps a closed season is all to the good. When whale oil is so low in value it is better to let the whales go and allow them to increase until the market for oil becomes better. The territorial limits for our fishermen need to be extended and the interests of our shore fishermen protected to the utmost extent.

The delegation which will be going to Europe will be trying to bring about additional sales in our codfish markets of Portugal, Spain and Italy. We are glad to know that the Minister of Public Works is going along and we believe that he will do a good job. There was a time when we used a lot of Spanish salt to salt our fish. When I was a boy it was a common sight to see barques, brigantines and other vessels, some of which had been built in Wales at Portmadoc, coming into port with cargoes of salt from Cadiz in Spain and from Cagliari in Italy, but today we get a lot of our salt from the West Indies rather than from European countries.

Then there is the matter of nets and Italian hemp. As we know, nylon is quite expensive. It makes a good net and good cordage, but in the old days we used a lot of Italian hemp. Perhaps that is a matter that the delegation will look into to see whether or not we might not be able to get more of that hemp from Italy because, as we are all aware, rope is a very important article in the catching of codfish. It seems to me that we must be prepared to utilize the great resources that lie at our doorstep. Today we see Russian trawlers coming to our banks to fish and Norwegian steamers steaming to our icefields. We see the value of the harvest which nature has so bountifully provided for our use slipping away from us to be used to provide products which will enter into competition with our own exports, thus further restricting the markets which we can supply.

At this point I should like to say a word to the fishermen of Newfoundland who endure such hardships in the fisheries. I would point out that so far as the Newfoundland fishermen are concerned—I do not suggest this is limited to Newfoundland—their interests are being well looked after by the Minister of Fisheries. In addition we have as our cabinet representative the Secretary of State. I am assured that everything possible will be done, in co-operation with the minister who is responsible for Newfoundland's cabinet work, to assist our fishermen in every possible way.

The prosperity of the fishing industry is dependent upon exports and world trade. Our home market is relatively small, and the loss of the world markets would deal a severe blow to the industry. Thus we see that we are in need of a more aggressive trade policy. The marketing problem is not an easy one. We are extremely thankful for the great work that has been done by the fisheries department in the marketing of the catch of Newfoundland fish, in co-operation with NAFEL. We realize the serious problem presented in the sterling area where so many of our competitors have sterling balances by means of which they can exchange their products and get other products as well. Today in Newfoundland we are dependent upon the Canadian dollar. When our customers are short of dollars, we find it is not so easy to market our fish.

The expansion that is envisaged in the Newfoundland fishery is not a mirage. It is there, so to speak, right on the horizon. The transition from salt fish to fresh fish is being realized today, and we are aware of the additional revenue that will place in the hands of our fishermen. As we get more plants, we realize there will be more employment and our fishery will have an increasing export value. We shall have an increased ability to compete in the world markets. The export markets we are able to supply are limited because of exchange difficulties, when compared with other countries that have no currency problem.

As I said before, the frozen fish markets are more lucrative markets and with the improvement in technique and lower costs we shall be in a better position to compete with other people. We are only too anxious to supply those markets that we regard as necessary if our fishermen are to maintain the standard of living we feel is necessary for them. Unfortunately, in Newfoundland there is too little hydro power. If there were a greater hydro development I feel we would be able to instal more mechanical fish driers and thus lower our costs. It would also relieve the fishermen from so much of this backbreaking work of spreading the fish on their flakes. I feel that we can be most optimistic in our outlook for the fisheries.

Personally, I have great faith in our fisheries. While in the past there have been problems which seemingly would engulf us, today we are in a better position. We can look upon the future with more hope and a better realization of our great heritage. We must put forth a united effort in striving towards this goal, with a firm faith in our ability to achieve success and full prosperity in the great fishing industry.

Mr. Gillis: While listening to this discussion, Mr. Chairman, it struck me that within the past few years our fisheries have become rather important to the government, and have received considerable attention. I can recall the time in this house when there were perhaps two of us, and I was one, who took part in this debate. The reason was that up until the appointment of the Hon. Mr. Mayhew I thought that the fisheries department was a place in which a member was put to get him ready for appointment to the cabinet sometime if he showed promise. The result was that not much was done about fisheries.

Listening to the minister this afternoon, with his comprehensive survey, it was rather encouraging. He has taken hold of a department with which he was unfamiliar when he started. Today he exhibited a good grasp of the subject, to the extent that I feel he has disarmed practically everyone who had some criticism to make. While the minister is entitled to all the credit we can give him, we must not forget that the minister cannot do the job alone. A good minister, and a smart minister, will always have smart men around him. The smart men around him, like the deputy minister, cannot do very much either unless the minister has some intelligence and some flexibility. It appears that the fisheries department is now fortunate in having that combination. They have a team that is working. There is no doubt but that the whole industry will benefit from this.

Listening to the last speaker I was struck by the fine speech he made and I want to agree with him about expanding the Unemployment Insurance Act to take in the fishing industry. We have had this subject up in the house on a good many occasions. The Minister of Fisheries does not have jurisdiction in so far as that question is concerned, but he could use his good offices and his persuasive powers upon the Minister of Labour to make sure consideration is given to bringing these fishermen under the Unemployment Insurance Act. The last speaker made a good survey of the fisheries in Newfoundland. He said he could look forward with a great deal of optimism to the future. I do not want to be a wet blanket but it is going to take more than optimism to solve the problem for the fishing industry.

For the past number of years the fishing industry has been going through much the same change as most industries in Canada, and that is a technological change. The fishing industry is becoming a mechanized industry, and that is true all over the world. There is more and more fish being produced. Before the minister puts his estimates in final form, there is something I should like him to look at and comment upon.

A good deal of our fish production goes to the United States. This evening's news indicates that the United States is giving authority to those responsible for imports and exports to set up quotas and/or tariffs on fish. Well, it is going to take more than optimism to get around that. If a country that takes a large share of our fish is arriving at the conclusion that it can solve its problems by fencing itself in, by putting up tariffs and embargoes against imports from this country, such action of course can be followed only by retaliation and chaos so far as international marketing is concerned.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Before the conclusion of his estimates I would ask the minister to take a look at the proposals made within the last few hours by the United States to see how it will affect our industry in Canada. I am concerned about this because a large share of the fish caught on the east coast goes to the United States. While my own home town is recognized as a mining town, there is also at that point a large sword fishing industry valued at about $2 million a year. Almost the total catch goes to the United States. I am wondering if the attempt in that country to fence themselves in, so far as fish, lead, zinc and other commodities are concerned, will militate against the continuing of the industry as it is today, to say nothing about its expansion.

That was my principal reason for speaking at this time. In the final analysis the minister and his department are up against the question of world trade. While he has done an excellent job in making the people of Canada fish conscious, more can be done. I believe it is correct to say that more information has been disseminated among the people of Canada from his department during the past couple of years than has ever happened before in the history of this country. That has been good work, and there can be no doubt that while we wish to build up our own home market we depend largely upon the export market.

With trends as we see them today there is a possibility that we may run into some difficulties. Many valuable things have been done by the Department of Fisheries during the minister's term of office. The finalizing of the agreements in the Pacific and the Atlantic, and the setting up of these commissions were things that were badly needed. It was also a great honour for Canada when the deputy minister of fisheries was selected to head one of these commissions. I believe this is an indication that perhaps Canada is paying more practical attention to the problem than any other country. I believe it is generally recognized and appreciated that our deputy minister is just about the last word, so far as a knowledge of fisheries is concerned. Of course there is a very good reason for that: He got most of his practical education from the standpoint of administration in Nova Scotia. Then, like many others from that part of the country, he has had to go far afield to demonstrate his ability. A good job is being done in formulating the kind of organization that not only protects the industry and assists in marketing, but also adds to the general education on the subject. The machinery is in good hands, and it is clear that some planning is being made in connection with the whole question of production and marketing, as well as technological changes, and all that sort of thing.

However all this is not going to do much good unless we can sell the fish we catch. I would appreciate it if before we finish discussion on the fisheries estimates the minister would give an analysis of what is going on in the United States, with particular reference to its relationship to the future of our fishing industry.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Chairman, in view of the discussion that has taken place, and the comments made by so many hon. members, I shall endeavour to make my comments brief. However there are two or three observations I should like to make.

May I say at the outset that a year or so ago the Minister of Fisheries visited the constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare; in fact he visited on two different occasions. On each occasion he made an excellent impression, not only on the members of the fishing industry but also upon the fishermen in the boats. He talked with many of them, and they felt that there was at the head of the Department of Fisheries a man who was really interested in their problems. I do feel the excellent presentation he made this afternoon, when he gave a résumé of the work of the department during the last year as well as an outline of future plans for expansion, research, inspection and the like, was such as to make hon. members realize more than ever how fortunate we are that the Minister of Fisheries is a man of the calibre of the present incumbent.

Last year when we were discussing the fisheries estimates those of us from the fishing constituencies were extremely worried about the marketing situation. However we went through that bad period. We know the situation has been getting better, and we know also that right now it is much better than it has been for some considerable time. When I was home at Easter, and on another occasion three weeks before that, I talked with many persons engaged in the fishing industry. They told me that some of the markets were improving, that others had improved a great deal, and that they looked for improvement in other directions. There was an altogether different spirit to that I had noted in the previous year. Those of us from Nova Scotia are particularly pleased that it should be our own Nova Scotian minister (Mr. Winters) who should be heading the delegation to the Mediterranean countries with a view to improving markets in that area.

I was greatly pleased by the description the minister gave of the method of manufacturing fish sticks. I know many people are asking what these fish sticks are. His explanation was clear, brief, and concise, and I believe it will mean that people throughout Canada who will read about the speech he has made will have a better idea of what this product is, and that it will lead to further sales. It appears to us that the manufacture of fish sticks is going to mean a great deal in increasing the consumption of fish.

I recall that two years ago when speaking in this debate I was very much upset about the loss of fishing gear, particularly boats and lobster traps. I remember that on that occasion members in all parties spoke about the need for some form of insurance or indemnity plan. Last year, when the estimates were discussed just before the close of the session we had very little time to speak about the matter, other than to thank the minister for having introduced the plan. I would like to say that although it was received with some doubt, as is usual in connection with any new plan, I have found upon talking to fishermen in my constituency that more and more are accepting it, and are finding it most helpful. I would appreciate it if, before the discussion is completed, the minister would give us some idea of the number of fishermen who have applied for coverage, and those who have applied for an indemnity because of losses they have suffered. I believe that in a free enterprise economy the setting up of some sort of indemnity plan is by far the best procedure. I do know that many fishermen in my area are pleased with it, and I am sure that as time goes on we will find most of them will seek this form of coverage.

I speak of the insurance plan particularly as it covers boats and lobster traps. I would ask the minister if at a later time he would give us some idea of the success of the new metal lobster traps. I know that in the first instance there were fishermen who felt that lobsters would not enter a trap unless it was made of laths. I am now given to understand that the lobster is not so particular, and that he will enter a metal trap if it is the right shape and the right size, provided it contains the necessary bait. I know experiments have been carried on, and I would appreciate his telling the committee as to their success or otherwise, and whether the cost can be brought down to a point where metal traps would compete with traps made of laths.

I mention problems concerning lobsters particularly because the constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare, which I have the honour to represent, is the constituency which does an exceptionally large lobster business. In fact, it is in that constituency in the course of a year, during those months of the lobster season from December 1 to May 31, that about 10 million pounds of lobsters are caught, which are shipped to the United States. The net return to the fishermen is $4 million or more for that amount of lobsters, and it is new money that comes into the country. Not only that, but it is that constituency—I may be pardoned if I mention such a fact—in Nova Scotia which in point of production, that is in poundage and dollars, does a larger fish business than any other constituency in the province.

On other occasions when I have spoken on the fisheries estimates I have referred to this anomaly which we have on the coast of Nova Scotia because of our two limits, the three-mile limit for draggers of all other nations but our own, and the twelve-mile limit for our own draggers. This means that there is an area of water from the three-mile limit to the twelve-mile limit; in other words, there is a nine-mile preserve for fishermen of every country but our own. I have discussed this with departmental officials; I have read articles about it; I know of the troubles of defining territorial waters, but I do hope that the studies that are being carried on at the moment may lead to some solution to this problem so that our fishermen are not penalized as they are at the present time. In other words, it appears as though all of us should have a twelve-mile limit, or all should have a three-mile limit.

There is one other point that always comes up when draggers are mentioned. The inshore fishermen continually complain of the wastage of draggers. I know that in the past I have been told that the wastage is only 5 per cent or 10 per cent, but the fishermen tell me that sometimes it runs as high as 50 per cent. I do not know how one can prove the percentages. The larger meshes that are being used will of course make some improvement. I understand a great deal of that is being done voluntarily, but to the best of my knowledge there is no international decision that there shall be an increase in the size of the mesh.

I promised to be brief, Mr. Chairman. May I ask the minister when he speaks again to tell us of the success of the steel traps, and make some comments about the problem, particularly along our coast, with respect to the three-mile and the twelve-mile limit. Then, I should like him to give us some idea as to the success of the insurance or indemnity plan for traps and boats.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, it is a very bold thing for a man from an inland town to try to venture into a talk on fisheries. We have some water in Greenwood. We have a little river that runs through it called the Don, and some of you have passed over it, but I would not willingly give my Liberal opponent in the next election any fish that came out of the water to which I have referred.

Really the only excuse that I have for getting to my feet is to come to the protection of the minister. I come to his protection before he is completely swamped, flooded, overwhelmed by the avalanche, the cataract, of praise which he has received. But it is not because I could not join in it. I was not able to hear the minister's speech but I went and read it in Hansard. I found it very interesting. But I think there is really a limit to everything, and I thought I would at least give him a few minutes' respite. He thanks me, and I am grateful that he does.

There is another thing that occurred to me, too. It is a matter of regret that I see that the Secretary of State is not in his seat. It seems to me a great pity that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not going to take part in this debate because we have heard sagas of his election. We have heard echoes of his addressing audiences on the shore with a heaving stomach from heaving ships, and I do feel that he should be heard. It seems to me it will be too bad if he does not speak in this debate. Why, it would be as if a man from Toronto did not refer to the subway; as if an hon. member from Saskatchewan did not speak of the Saskatchewan river and the pollution thereof; as if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not take part in a debate on pensions.

Having said that, I just want to come back for a minute not to criticize but really on the minister's behalf to express relief that apparently there is still something left for him to do. As I listened to some of the speeches I felt that he was like the Creator with nothing left for him to do except to survey his work and say that it was good.

As time went on I began to see that there are things to do, and it greatly relieved me because I am sure the minister is industrious and he does not want to have time hanging heavy on his hands. As I listened to the speeches I felt sure at first the situation must be that the price of fish had ascended inconceivably high; that the costs had gone inconceivably low; that the profits were inconceivably great. I am not quite sure that is so. The minister will tell us when he comes to speak further.

I have gathered, as I listened to the speeches, that there are some things still to do. I gathered that the kidneys and liver of young seals still need some study. That is a matter for the minister to concern himself with. I gathered the price of twine is not all that it might be, and I did gather also that there is such a question as international trade, and it is on that, that I should like to ask the minister just one question. I read his speech carefully enough, and I did not observe that he said anything in it about Brazil. He mentioned several other countries, but he did not mention Brazil. I noted also that the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay did point out that the trade in Newfoundland was not nearly as great as it used to be, and I gathered that Brazil used to be one of its great markets.

In that connection I just want to raise the question in general so that the minister can explain it to us. When he comes to that he might perhaps in his stride explain the statement which was made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who I gather has now taken over the trade aspect of matters, in a speech made last February, in which he said something that I could not understand and which has never been explained yet. The minister said, as reported at page 2105 of Hansard:

> Today I was reminded that our sales to South America are off, and it was suggested that my trip may be the reason.

Hon. members will recall that the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a trip to Brazil early in 1953, and most of us had the idea that he went down there in order to try to increase trade with Brazil. It is a fact that when he came back there was a rather remarkable falling off. The minister explained that in a way which was really something. I pass this on now to the Minister of Fisheries who is a very resourceful man and I am sure therefore he is going to have a very good answer to this:

> Today I was reminded that our sales to South America are off, and it was suggested that my trip may be the reason. May I say that the reason I went to South America was that our markets at that time were abnormally high. Since then dollar difficulties in several of the South American countries, particularly Brazil, have caused restrictions of exports from dollar countries.

I am going to be commendably brief, too. I shall be glad if the minister will make a note of that and perhaps comment on it later. He will no doubt deal more particularly with the question of prices, and include that among the other things which he comments on in his reply.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, hon. members who have spoken tonight have tried to be brief, and although it seems a little doubtful that we might finish with fisheries estimates today I shall try to be brief myself. I would wish, however, to congratulate the Minister of Fisheries on the presentation he made here today. I am not going to be a bit backward in doing that because I feel it was the finest presentation of fisheries that I have heard in the House of Commons in the nine years I have been here. At the same time I also wanted to say I believe that in the short time that he has been at the head of this department he has gained the confidence of those in the industry, including the tens of thousands of fishermen right across this country. They believe he is doing a good job, and I believe he is doing a good job.

In his remarks today the minister hit on one thing with which I would like to deal for a few minutes. The minister referred to the quality of fish being produced today and compared it with the quality of fish produced a few years ago. That, to my mind, is the key to the whole situation. In years gone by we did not have the equipment and were not in a position to send high quality fish into the cities in this country and in the United States, but with the help of the research board and other branches of the Department of Fisheries there has been a great improvement over the last few years. I believe that the inspection service which has been set up is doing a very good job in this regard. The thing for us to do now is to fight for better quality and when we do get that better quality there will be better markets, and I am sure we will have much happier fishermen.

I would like to address myself briefly to the situation within the industry generally and just emphasize a few points which the minister, in the short time at his disposal, did not have time to deal with. One hon. member a few moments ago pointed out that last year the fishermen were not looking forward to a very bright future. But I believe we have passed over that period and at the present time it would appear in the maritime provinces that the stocks of fish are practically cleaned off the shelves and out of the warehouses.

In the sardine industry, in which I am particularly interested, the only thing we have to worry about now is catching the sardines. The stocks that were on hand two years ago are completely exhausted but the price today is very reasonable and the demand is good. If we can now catch the sardines for the canneries I am sure our sardine fishermen will be happy once again.

On two occasions since I came to this house last November I have brought up the matter of loans for fishermen. I realize that this is an immense problem for the minister of the department in endeavouring to work out a plan which would provide loans for fishermen in all parts of Canada. However, I know that the minister has taken this matter under consideration and I hope he may be able to devise some plan whereby these particular primary producers, when they find the going a little tough, will be able to borrow sufficient to enable them to carry on in that business that they, their fathers and forefathers have been in for so many years. We have had short periods of prosperity in the fishing industry, but to a greater extent we have had those periods when it is nothing but long hours, hard work, and insufficient returns for the amount of work and worry involved.

There is one other subject I wish to bring to the attention of the minister and I hope he will be able to give it his serious consideration. I believe that on the Atlantic coast line, in the bay of Fundy area particularly, we should have a scientific study to see if we can determine the cause of the great variation and irregularity in the catch of sardines such as we have had over the past few years. It may be a problem which is nearly insurmountable, but it is one which I believe can be solved. I am not going into this matter in detail, but I was in the sardine industry as a very young boy and I remember 1917 was a year of scarcity all over the bay of Fundy. We had an average year in 1918 and it carried on like that until 1923 when we again had a year of scarcity when we caught practically no sardines at all. We have had periods of plenty and even longer periods when we were unable to get sufficient sardines to take care of our costs.

Oil engines were first introduced when I was a boy and I remember that the fishermen in those days were convinced that the oil engines were responsible for the great decrease in the catch of sardines. Then as time went on other electrical devices were introduced into the sardine industry such as sounding equipment and some fishermen were convinced that they were responsible for the great decrease in the catch. Others are firmly convinced that winter seining is responsible for the great decrease in the catch in other years. But during the last sixteen months the catch of sardines in that area has been well below average and at the present time it is a great worry to the fishermen and to the canneries also who employ hundreds of men and women on that coast line.

If we could get some assistance from the fisheries department and from the research board in this type of survey I know it would be much appreciated by those in the canning industry and by the fishermen themselves. I am not criticizing the fact that we are furnishing funds in other parts of the world to make studies of a similar nature. I think they are wonderful investments and I support them one hundred per cent. But I believe this is one particular branch of the industry which should have a thorough investigation and I believe it would be well worth while.

I would just like to refer briefly to a statement made in this house a few days ago by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. His name has been mentioned here today already. But in the speech he made when he set out to save many millions of dollars for the Canadian people he mentioned and criticized the fact that this government had—but perhaps I should read his remarks. He said as reported at page 4333 of Hansard:

> In the year 1952-53, according to the public accounts, 20,000 Canadians were treated under the provisions of the act—

That would be the sick mariners act, as it is known on the coast line.

> —and 89,000 foreign seamen. That year the cost of the service to the taxpayer was $588,000. Yet, the revenue collected on duties was only $340,000, or a net loss of about $250,000. Perhaps there are reasons why my suggestion would not be feasible, but it seems to me that it would be logical to increase the duties which are charged for this service until they cover the cost. If that could be done I suggest that the taxpayer could be saved in the neighbourhood of $250,000 a year.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw goes on to say that this would constitute a great saving which could be made for the Canadian people. I want to be fair at the outset and state most sincerely that I do not believe that the hon. member's statement meets with the approval of the majority of the members of the C.C.F. party.

Mr. Herridge: You are quite correct in that statement.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): But nevertheless the statement was made, though I do not believe the hon. member stopped to consider that this is a reciprocal agreement. If we had Canadian seamen in some foreign port without a dollar in their pockets and in need of hospital care or a doctor's attention then it would be provided under this agreement. I paid into this sick benefit fund for many years and I was fortunate enough never to be obliged to seek benefit under it and for that I am thankful. However, I do believe this is one matter the hon. member for Moose Jaw might well have left alone, particularly in view of the fact that he has strongly supported the building of the South Saskatchewan dam at a cost of well over $100 million. He has supported that project in the House of Commons even though competent engineers have decided that they could not make a favourable report on that project.

The hon. member has also suggested on various occasions since I have been in this house that a federal fund should be provided to supply fresh water for the city in which he lives. He has spoken on that matter on several occasions and all I can say is that in eastern Canada when we want a water supply in the cities and villages the taxpayers in the particular locality set out to provide it for themselves.

But in this case when the men who go down to the sea in ships are protected by this insurance fund the hon. member for Moose Jaw saw fit to criticize the fact that it was costing the taxpayers of this country $225,000 per year. Let me say at this point that I stood on my feet and supported a grant of $65 million for the western farmers of Canada and I would add that it would take something like 260 years, if my figures are correct, for that same amount to be claimed by the fishermen and seamen in this great country of ours.

Another comparison I might make while I have this matter in mind is that this sum mentioned by the hon. member would be only 50 per cent of the amount paid out in annual grants to the maple sugar producers of this country for the purchase of aluminum pails. I regret that the hon. member for Moose Jaw saw fit to suggest this great saving of $250,000 at the cost of those men who go out with no other protection than their own two hands, and that he would apparently deny them the protection which they have enjoyed for a great many years under this act.

I could point to individual cases with which I have had to deal over the past year in which men were hospitalized when they did not have a dollar to their name, and without this protection I am doubtful as to whether their families would have been able to carry on. I am sorry that the matter was ever raised in the House of Commons. If the hon. member for Moose Jaw had just taken a few minutes to get some particulars, not only in this case but in other cases that he mentioned, I am sure that he would not have put on record some of these great savings that he was going to make for the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Herridge: I agree with you.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I was greatly interested in one statement made by the Minister of Fisheries today. That was when he stated that 80 per cent of the fish and fish products of this country of ours must be exported. When my friend to my left, the hon. member for Greenwood, was speaking just a few minutes ago, I thought I might bring that matter to his mind. He and others in the House of Commons—and I am not criticizing them for it because it is their belief—made a great plea for protection. There is a good example that I can bring to his attention tonight showing why I am bitterly opposed to protection. That example is that 20 per cent of what we produce in the fishing industry in this country is consumed in Canada.

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the hon member permit a question?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Gladly.

Mr. Macdonnell: I just want to ask him if he is aware of the fact that the party to which I belong supported GATT and the trade which it sought to bring, throughout the years ever since it was brought in?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am not disputing the hon. member's word, Mr. Chairman. But I have seen him get to his feet in the House of Commons since last November on two or three occasions and plead for these poor manufacturers of electrical appliances in Canada who are being so terribly pushed around.

Mr. Macdonnell: Will the hon. member permit another question? Did he ever hear me ask for an increase in tariffs?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I certainly did.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask the hon. member when?

The Deputy Chairman: I think I should point out to the committee that two hon. members cannot have the floor at once. The hon. member for Charlotte has the floor.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am asking the hon. gentleman if he will be good enough to look in Hansard. I am quite satisfied that he wil' find no reference to an increase in tariffs made by me.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I cannot tell the hon. member the page of Hansard but when the legislation in connection with dumping in Canada was being discussed in this house the hon. gentleman to my left, standing where he stood just a minute ago, stated to the Minister of National Revenue that he was most hopeful that when this matter was under consideration those who manufacture electrical appliances in this country would not be forgotten. Is that asking for protection or is it not? I can find that in Hansard, and I shall be glad to do so tomorrow.

What I wanted to say was this. The figures put on record today by the Minister of Fisheries give a clear indication why the people down in the maritime provinces are bitterly opposed to protection. The matter was raised today by the Leader of the Opposition when he was anxious to know from the Minister of Fisheries whether this statement in the press or over the radio was true with regard to embargoes that were being put on Canadian fish going into the United States. We have always enjoyed those markets in the United States. We have always had free entry into those markets in the United States. I can assure you that we appreciate them. I do not wish to see anything done in this country—and I realize that at the present time there are many people who want it—to create a feeling between those two countries which might bring about a tariff war. That is the last thing I want to see. The freer exchange of goods there is over this great boundary of 3,500 miles, the better we like it down there. This is just another example. There are many other commodities I could mention but they would not come under the matter we are now discussing. I could mention wood pulp and many other products which would be in the same category.

We are most dependent on foreign markets. For that reason we do not want to see anything done that would be harmful in any way to those markets which we have enjoyed for many years. I really hope to see the day when the barriers might be taken down completely. When that is done I believe you will see much more happiness on this side of the border. You will then see a much better chance of having a peaceful world to live in. As I have stated on many other occasions, the troubles we have encountered down through the years in too many cases have been brought about by one country refusing to do business with another. You can never have a happy and contented people when one is trying to be just a jump ahead of the other all the time in connection with tariffs.

There is just one other subject I will mention. I have now spoken much longer than I had intended to speak. In his remarks today the minister also mentioned the fact that out in British Columbia they had been most successful with the provincial legislature, the federal legislature and business generally in making arrangements which were agreeable to all concerned where rivers were being obstructed by dams for power purposes and others. This has been a problem down in our section of the country also, but to a much lesser extent than in British Columbia because our rivers are much smaller. However, I want to bring to the attention of the minister the St. Croix river which is the boundary line between the state of Maine and the province of New Brunswick, and in fact of Charlotte county. For many years we enjoyed an extensive salmon industry on that river. Dams were built for mills that are operating there today. There was pollution which was never properly taken care of. For many years the river was neglected and it was considered perhaps to be a hopeless case. But the officials in the state of Maine have been interested in the project for quite some time and in a recent survey it was determined that the water there was "B" water, as I think it is called; at least it is water in which fish thrive without any worry.

I talked to some of these officials myself, and I have found that they are firmly convinced that this river can be made a great salmon river once again. Below the Canadian Cottons mill there is a fishway that has not been kept in repair for many years. In their estimation it would not be a costly matter to have that river put once more in a position so that salmon could go up the river. In their estimation it would mean hundreds of thousands of dollars to the citizens in that county if the river could again be opened for sport fishing. I would ask the minister to look into this matter carefully. I am sure he will find that the officials in the state of Maine are prepared to go ahead with this project at any time the department here would be interested in doing so.

I shall now resume my seat. But before doing so I again thank the minister for a most comprehensive statement. I am sure that the fishermen in the section from which I come will be most pleased to receive the story he had to tell in the House of Commons. I believe there are one or two more hon. members who wish to speak tonight; it is quite apparent that we shall not finish. However, I shall resume my seat at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Green: Before the minister replies, I should like to ask him two questions. The first one has to do with a submission that I received—and no doubt he received it also—from the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union about three months ago concerning the Japanese sending out expeditions to catch salmon in the vicinity of the Aleutian islands. It is apparently what is called an offshore salmon expedition. This submission shows that they are catching increasing numbers of salmon each year and indicates the fear that these particular salmon may be salmon which have spawned in British Columbia rivers and lakes. I should be glad if the minister would explain just what the view of the department is on that particular question. The minister said this afternoon that the fishing is being done farther and farther out to sea. It may be just possible that this particular type of offshore fishing will affect our own coastal fishing very seriously.

The other question on which I would ask him to advise the committee has to do with the crab fishing in Hecate strait. As he knows, I raised that question last year. My information is that the Americans are taking a larger and larger proportion of the crabs from that strait. In fact one informant says that they will get 80 per cent of the crabs that are taken outside the three mile limit. Apparently Canadian fishermen cannot get their catch into the United States market without paying duty whereas American fishermen take these crabs from what we consider are Canadian waters and get them into the American market as American crabs. There is a fear that the whole crab fishery in Hecate strait will be ruined by the Americans. Apparently they are running short of crabs in their own waters and there is some danger that they will move into Hecate strait in a big way and clean out the fishery there.

I know there is a commission going into the whole question of what should be considered Canadian territorial waters, but I suggest to the minister that Hecate strait is really between two parts of Canada, the Queen Charlotte islands and the mainland, and should not be considered in the same light as territorial waters on the ocean itself. It does seem to me that Canada should take the position that Hecate strait is Canadian territorial waters. Other nations have taken a similar position in recent years. I have a list here of quite a few countries. Referring to one of the bulletins of the fisheries council of Canada, I see that the Australian government, for example, apparently has imposed strict territorial control over pearl fishing in the waters on the continental shelf. Other countries have taken a stand.

The present government policy seems to be to wait for the report of the commission and then after that take up the question at the United Nations. By the time we get all that rigmarole finished there will be no crab fishing left in Hecate strait. I do suggest with regard to that particular strait that it should be possible for Canada to take the position that these are Canadian territorial waters.

Mr. MacLean: Would the minister be kind enough to permit a brief question before he answers? Will he make a statement clarifying the significance of the news report from Washington this afternoon—

Mr. Sinclair: I have already been asked.

Mr. MacLean: Yes, by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, but I should like clarification particularly as to what effect, if any, this will have on the export of lobsters to the United States.

Mr. Fairey: In view of the Japan-United States-Canada treaty, perhaps the minister would like to explain to the house if anything is being done of an exploratory nature in the search for other areas of fishing on the Pacific coast.

Mr. Sinclair: In the fifteen minutes left I will try to touch quickly on the main points raised by various members. First of all I want to express my appreciation for the many kind things said. It was refreshing to have my friend from Cape Breton and my friend, the financial critic, the hon. member for Greenwood, bring me down to earth with the remarks they made. I completely agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South that whatever has been done in the fisheries department has been due mainly to the very excellent staff in our department, in the research stations and on our international commissions.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich spoke first and asked what we were doing about the inspection of fish on boats and packers. It is quite true that that is the place where some careless handling does occur. At the moment what we are trying to do is to step up our inspection of plants. The co-operation of the provinces is necessary in that because they do the licensing of these plants, but we expect in the next year to have very much closer inspection in the plants themselves, and that of course will apply to the fish going through the plants. Perhaps at a later stage we may actually get to the inspection of the fish on the boats.

As far as territorial waters are concerned, several members have raised the question. It is quite true that we have a special legal committee making our submission to the government on the matter, but in the meantime two of the extensions in other countries to which the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra referred are being taken to the international court. It is easy for a country to shove out its boundaries and declare that their boundaries are farther out, but other countries, who have had historic rights to fish these waters protest that action. I do not think that any action will be taken until there is a decision, if the case of Britain and Iceland is taken to the international court, the case which has given rise to this whole question. A country like ours, which has valuable inshore fisheries, is naturally anxious to have more than a three mile limit.

That is one of the reasons we keep our own trawlers twelve miles out, to show other people that we do believe we should have control out to twelve miles.

The hon. member for New Westminster asked me whether, when the closure goes into effect on a portion of the Fraser river, the fishermen who are prevented from fishing there will be allowed to fish elsewhere. They will be so allowed. At the present time they are of course restricted to their own part of the river during the open season.

The hon. member for Gloucester asked whether or not we could not give a warning of changes in the regulations. We do that on the west coast. Every year the whole industry, fishermen, fish plants, our scientists and the sport fishermen, send their suggestions for changes in the regulations to the department. We print all those and circulate them without comment. Then the comment comes in, and at the end of that period we make our decisions on changes. We are going to start a similar process on the east coast.

The hon. member also mentioned the oyster development on the east coast. Oysters are one of the few fish which we cannot produce in sufficient abundance for our own market. We certainly are anxious to increase our oyster production in Canada in every way we can.

The senior member for Halifax and the hon. members for Trinity-Conception and Gloucester all mentioned the matter of our trawlers. We do keep our big trawlers twelve miles offshore. We do this partly because we believe that is where our territorial waters should be and also to give our smaller draggers a better chance inshore. Of the three members who spoke one wanted the trawlers kept out and the other two wanted the trawlers let in. However, that policy is under study today.

Several members spoke about unemployment insurance. The Minister of Labour is conducting a further study and the fisheries department of course is offering all the facilities of our department to aid in that study.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask a question with respect to the twelve mile limit? I was not quite clear whether the minister said we were respecting that as a matter of principle or just for the larger vessels.

Mr. Sinclair: As far as we ourselves are concerned, we keep our large vessels, the Canadian trawlers, twelve miles out. The embarrassing thing is that other nations can bring their trawlers up to our three mile limit because they are on the high seas. We have no control over them on the high seas, but having control over our own ships we keep the big trawlers out twelve miles.

The hon. member for Queens asked me about the increase, if any, in the lobster catch. The lobster is like the salmon on the west coast. It is a completely controlled fishery. We think we are just about at maximum production now because of the even level of the catch in recent years. What we are trying to do now is to increase the size of the lobsters caught by a slight increase in the legal size.

The hon. member for Halifax spoke very glowingly of our experimental station in Halifax, which is one of the best in this part of the world, and on the work that has been done. He asked for an improvement in the guardian service on the rivers. We are increasing our seasonal protection staff in the Atlantic provinces in line with the increased conservation program that we are launching with the provinces.

The hon. member for Trinity-Conception seemed to suggest that I was spending more time on the west coast than I was in the maritimes. The whole fisheries department, I think, spends much more time on the problems of the east coast, especially those of Newfoundland. The west coast is a highly organized fishery. Both the operators and the fishermen are highly organized and they pretty well take care of themselves. It is in Newfoundland and on the Atlantic coast that most of the fishery problems seem to arise.

He mentioned the depressed state of the salt cod industry. It is quite true that we are taking a first class fish, processing it in a rather primitive way that has not changed much in 400 years and then selling it in low price markets of the world, the Mediterranean and the Caribbean areas. We are trying to get away from that in our development program. We are trying to get more and more of that cod turned into fresh and frozen form and sold in the highest priced markets of the world, Canada and the United States. This fish stick development will certainly be of great aid in that.

Then, there was the matter of the capelins. The capelin does come in millions, and it is a very tasty little fish in the fresh state. It is very like the eulachon. It is, however, a very oily fish and it is difficult to preserve, but it does serve as the main food for cod.

My friend asked for the names of the members of the trade delegation over in Spain and Portugal now. There is Mr. Bull, the deputy minister of trade and commerce; Mr. Schwartzman, a tariff expert from trade and commerce; and Mr. Laws, the secretary-manager of NAFEL. They are there negotiating on tariffs. The actual signing committee which will go later will be made up of the Minister of Public Works and my deputy, Mr. Bates.

The hon. member asked also for an increase in herring exploration on the west coast of Newfoundland. We have done quite a bit of work on herrings in the gulf of St. Lawrence. There is still a great deal to be learned about the herring runs there and the sardine runs. This is one of the reasons for switching of the heads of the biological research stations. Dr. Hart, on the west coast station at Nanaimo, who has had a great deal of experience with herring and salmon, is being transferred to the east coast station at St. Andrews. Dr. Needler from there is being moved to the west coast because he has had a great deal of experience on international commissions. We want to make studies in British Columbia on groundfish and crustaceans.

Then the hon. member for Comox-Alberni spoke about the problem of dams. It is quite true that it is not an easy problem to get the spawning fish up past the dam, but it is a much more difficult problem to get the little fingerlings down. Often in going over the dam they are dashed to death, and if they go through the spillways about 25 per cent are lost because of skin burns. Our research people and those in the United States and on the commissions have done a great deal of work on guiding fingerlings down the ladders by sound, by light and by electronic impulses. Progress is being made, although we have no certain solution as yet.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond asked me to help him with some public works project relating to fishermen. The final decision, of course, rests in the hands of my colleague, the Minister of Public Works. I hope to press forward with those developments that are of help to the whole industry, and not just individual ridings. He mentioned the hope that we would use a helicopter to curb poaching in the one area in which it is apt to be most prevalent, the Queen Charlotte islands. We have that under consideration. We are using two helicopters in Newfoundland because of the transportation trouble we have down there. If in Newfoundland we build too large a patrol boat it cannot get into the harbours, and if we build a small one it will not stand the Atlantic storms. The hon. member spoke of a good man, Rothery, we have as fishery officer. In fact, he is so good we are moving him to the supervisor's office in Vancouver, so the hon. member may be losing him.

The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador spoke about the decline in schooner fishing on the banks on both the east and west coasts; we should like to get more of our fishermen out deep-sea fishing. For too long a time now most of our men have been shore fishermen. We have two of the greatest fisheries in the world on our coasts and if we do not fully exploit them other nations will come and fish those waters. We hope to have more offshore Canadian boats out instead of so many shore fishermen.

The member for Cape Breton South spoke about a change in fishing practices and the mechanization of the industry. He asked about the effect of the United States tariff commission announcement made public today. This problem with United States tariffs—it is just on ground fish like cod and haddock fillets—was aggravated by a territorial waters dispute between Britain and Iceland. As a result of that dispute the British fish trade refused to handle Icelandic fish, so the fish came in unusually great quantities to the United States. Our own relations with the United States have been very good. We both serve the same North American markets, have the same wage scales, and so on. I do not think the full details of that United States tariff commission announcement have been reported as yet.

Mr. Stick: I have heard that the Icelandic fish is now going to Russia. Is that correct?

Mr. Sinclair: I understand some of it is, and some of it is now going back into Britain.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare spoke about the need for an insurance plan to cover boats and lobster traps. Perhaps I could answer that question when we come to the item in the estimates covering losses. He asked about the success of steel traps for lobsters. Big steel traps are used very successfully for crabs on the west coast, but on the east coast the old wooden traps which they make are still used. We are experimenting with the steel traps, but the experiments have not gone far enough to make any statement on the matter.

The hon. member for Greenwood was asking whether prices were really so good that everyone was making a lot of money in the fishing business. They are not. Everything in this world is comparative. They are just better than they were last year. The fishermen, like the farmers, are optimists and as long as there is an uptrend everything is fine.

Mention was made of the fact that we used to have a good market for salt cod in Brazil. For some years the market was closed. But recently the Brazil government did again make dollars available for buying salted cod. I am sorry, but I cannot explain the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on South American trade. Perhaps he can explain the remarks he made.

The member for Charlotte spoke of the need for high quality of fish and also the need for loans to fishermen, and I shall say a word on that a little later. He dealt with the irregular catch of sardines, and that is related to the herring problem in the gulf and off the west coast of Newfoundland. I hope we will do more research on these. We have got our research pretty well in shape in British Columbia so that we can forecast fairly accurately the herring run, and we should be able to do that on the Atlantic coast.

The member for Vancouver-Quadra asked two questions about the fishermen's union's statement that the Japanese were again fishing off our shores. The main point of the new north Pacific treaty is that for the next ten years, five years certain and five years in review, the Japanese agree to stay on their side of the ocean, in so far as these species of fish which are thoroughly studied, fully exploited and thoroughly protected are concerned—the salmon, herring and halibut. Despite the traditional freedom of the sea the Japanese agreed to abstain from fishing those three species on our side of the ocean. As an indication may I say that in the peak year before the war the Japanese caught 200 million salmon in the whole Pacific, and last year they caught 7 million on their own side under the treaty.

Mr. Macdonnell: It came down from 200 million to 7 million?

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, that is when they fished the whole ocean, and they caught 7 million last year on their own side.

We are anxious to see this treaty a success. The only way we will know what salmon go to Siberia and Japan and the Canadian and American rivers is by a study. This study is to be made by the north Pacific commission of which Mr. Bates is chairman. The commission met in Washington, and their first scientific studies are starting in Tokyo this month. We hope to find the answer to where this dividing line is in the Pacific between the two stocks of salmon.

Then, there was the question of territorial waters, and I have covered it. We have always said that Hecate strait is Canadian territorial waters by the declaration of 1908 or 1909. Despite incidents, we have never taken the United States fishermen to court about it, even though they fish those waters. Probably if nationals of other countries did so, we would take them to court.

Mr. Green: Has the minister any figures on the crab fishery?

Mr. Sinclair: I will have them when I come back.

The last question asked by the member for Victoria, B.C., was what we were doing about fishing on the high seas. Well, we are trying to encourage our fishermen to go out to sea, but most of our fishing boats on the west coast have been suited only for inland waters. They do most of their fishing in sheltered waters because the salmon and other fish come in to the coast and rivers.

The B.C. industry said it was too great a risk to build expensive boats for deep-sea fishing which may or may not be successful. They said they could get some boats at a reasonable price from the tuna and sardine fisheries in the United States. These boats are available at a reasonable price. We have permitted our industry to bring in 15 of these boats for a trial effort, to get out to sea and catch more salmon, to find tuna and to do the sort of fishing that fishing nations should do.

If this experiment is a success, then there will probably be new boats built in Canadian yards. In the meantime our Canadian yards will get work, and it will be a lot of work, in refitting these boats for deep-sea fishing.

Mr. Green: That is on the east coast?

Mr. Sinclair: No, on the west coast. We want to get our boats out to deep-sea fishing off British Columbia. That covers most of the questions raised. There are one or two specific questions I will answer when we come to the particular items affected.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: On Monday we will take the resolution in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs to appoint a committee on certain veterans' legislation; then the resolution in the name of the Minister of Transport with respect to certain branch lines of the Canadian National Railways; then second reading of the bill to amend the Pension Act; then the item concerning the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act in committee of the whole.

Business of the House

Mr. Green: May I ask if we will take the bill respecting the Research Council Act on Monday?

Mr. Harris: No.

At 10.03 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

General services—

129. Departmental administration, $315,090.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 10, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRIBUTE TO THE DEFENDERS OF DIEN BIEN PHU

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would allow me to inform the house at this time that on Saturday our ambassador in Paris was asked to convey a message to Prime Minister Laniel of France, on behalf of the Prime Minister and government of Canada, to express to the French government and people the sincere and heartfelt tribute of Canadians for the matchless heroism of the soldiers of France and Viet Nam. With all free men, Canadians, while lamenting the tragic ending of the legendary conflict at Dien Bien Phu, salute with pride and honour the heroic defenders of the fortress. Hon. members will note that this message is very similar in content to the message released Friday evening by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at Geneva, of which he gave a copy to the French delegation there.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all hon. members will wish to express their approval of the message which has been sent and to join in the sentiments of admiration for those who have died in the cause of freedom. Without in any way referring to the military conditions, there is not one of us who can fail to have been deeply moved by the thought that others have been dying in these past few days fighting against that evil force to which all of us are so strongly opposed. Whatever the outcome of this struggle may be, their sacrifice will not have been in vain if what has happened at Dien Bien Phu serves to bring home to the free world a full realization of the nature of the evil against which we are at this time building up our strength. Let us hope there will be peace; but it will only come if we recognize the reality of the things to which we are opposed.

As we pay tribute to the men who died I think all of us should also pay attention to an incident that happened in the French chamber of deputies last Friday. If anyone ever had any doubt where the loyalty of communists in any country lies, it was clarified on the floor of the French Chamber of Deputies when Premier Laniel asked the deputies to rise in tribute to the dead at Dien Bien Phu. When the communist members refused to rise, disloyalty in all its naked ugliness was then disclosed. There was a symbol for the whole world of what the communist in every free land really is. He expresses loyalty to no flag, to no faith, to no country. There is no loyalty except to the Kremlin itself. We should bow our heads for those who died and carry in our hearts the warning that came to us from Paris on Friday.

QUESTIONS

ARMED FORCES ENLISTMENTS AND DETACHMENTS

Mr. McGregor:

1. During the fiscal year 1952-53, how many enlistments were there in the (a) army; (b) navy; (c) air force?
2. Of these, how many were (i) men; (ii) women?
3. During the fiscal year 1952-53, how many detachments were there from the (a) army; (b) navy; (c) air force?
4. Of these, how many were (i) men; (ii) women?

Mr. Blanchette:

1 and 2.

Active Force Enlistments in 1952-53

	Navy	Army	Air Force
Men	3,645	10,165	10,035
Women	17	39	1,790

3 and 4.

Active Force Releases in 1952-53

	Navy	Army	Air Force
Men	1,577	9,234	2,991
Women	5	35	938

Note: Most of those released by the army during this period were personnel who had returned from Korea or Europe and taken their discharge.

As the armed forces approach maximum strength, figures for releases will tend more and more to approximate those for enrolment until enrolment and releases become actually in balance.

POST OFFICE BUILDING, SALTCOATS, SASK.

Mr. Castleden:

1. What was the total cost of acquiring the post office building in the town of Saltcoats, Saskatchewan?

Questions

2. From whom was this building purchased?
3. What was the total cost of remodelling the post office building?

Mr. Bourget:

1. (a) Purchase of lot No. 17 with building thereon, $3,500; (b) purchase of adjoining lot No. 16; $750.

2. (a) Mrs. M. P. Fea; (b) H. V. Partridge.

3. $24,488.50.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE RECIPIENTS

Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many veterans, by provinces, are in receipt of the war veterans allowance?

2. How many veterans, by provinces, have been granted war veterans allowance each year since 1949?

3. How many recipients of war veterans allowance, by provinces, (a) served in Canada only; (b) in the United Kingdom and European theatres of operations?

Mr. Bennett:

Statistics are maintained by districts of the Department of Veterans Affairs. The following table shows the location of the eighteen district offices in Canada.

RADIO STATIONS—NIGHT COVERAGE

Mr. Robinson (Bruce):

1. How many broadcasting stations in Canada are required by means of directional array or other devices to reduce their power or effective coverage at night?

2. What is the reason for this?

[Mr. Castleden.]

3. Of this number how many are required to protect to the southward?

4. Why is this particular direction selected for such requirements?

5. Has any government authority ever made a survey of how many Canadian homes receive inferior service or no service after dark from Canadian stations because of these requirements?

6. What is the permissible signal strength in terms of millivolts per metre permitted for Canadian stations with class 2, 3, and 4 frequencies, in each of (a) metropolitan or industrial districts; (b) others?

7. Does this requirement differ from that in the United States, and if so, for what reason?

8. Is there a specific distance at which Canadian stations must locate their transmitters from the centre of the city in which any such station operates?

9. Does this requirement vary from that in the United States, and if so, for what reason?

10. Has any government authority ever made a survey of how many Canadian homes receive better service or single service after dark from United States stations than from Canadian stations, and if so, with what result?

11. Who represents Canada at international conferences called to discuss the allocations of frequencies and regulations governing their use?

12. Does such representation vary in any respect from that provided by other North American countries, and if so, for what reason?

13. Do the proper authorities of the Canadian government entertain favourably applications for slave or satellite stations to improve reception from Canadian stations in areas where such reception deteriorates, at night, because of Canadian requirements?

14. How many United States stations are permitted by terms of any treaty to which Canada is signatory to operate on class 1 or 2 frequencies?

15. How many Canadian stations other than those owned by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are permitted to operate on these frequencies?

16. What steps, if any, are taken to assist Canadian stations in overcoming interference caused after dark to their signals by the operation of United States stations on class 1 or 2 frequencies?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

1. 90.

2. The demand for use of broadcasting frequencies is so large that international agreement is necessary in order to achieve maximum national use in each country and avoid interference with stations in other countries. By allowing stations to increase their power at periods of the day when covering of distance is more limited, and by use of devices which limit the distance which signals may travel in certain directions, it is possible to allow stations to use greater power and therefore obtain greater local coverage without interference with stations in other countries. Standards to cover this are set up by international treaties to which Canada is a signatory.

3. 90.

4. Answered by No. 2.

5. Field officers of the department maintain continuous review of local conditions affecting transmission and reception with a view to elimination of sources of difficulty and improvement of conditions wherever feasible.

6. (a) and (b), maximum 150 millivolts per meter, minimum 25 millivolts per meter.

7. Not substantially.

8. No.

9. No.

10. Answered by No. 5.

11. Officials of the departments of external affairs and transport.

12. No.

13. Such applications are accepted for consideration in accordance with normal procedures.

14. All countries may use all channels in the standard broadcast band subject to the engineering requirements of treaties to which Canada is a signatory.

15. 48.

16. All channels assigned to Canadian stations are monitored to ensure the compliance of all stations with the engineering standards of international treaties. Deviations from the engineering limits of the treaties are brought to the attention of the administrations concerned.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

IMMIGRATION, 1953

Mr. Hansell:

1. What was the total immigration to Canada during 1953?

2. From what countries did these immigrants come, and what number from each country?

3. How many of these immigrants registered for or came from the various categories of employment such as: tradesmen, farm employment, the professions, etc?

Mr. Harris: Return tabled.

ORDER OF PRECEDENCE OF ITEMS ON ORDER PAPER

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe it would meet the approval of the house if you would call the resolutions in the name of the Secretary of State and the Minister of Transport in order that His Excellency's recommendation may be signified, then call orders of the day and upon reaching that point call the motion in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that the minister wishes item No. 15 on the orders of the day to be called now?

Mr. Harris: You might call the third and fourth notices of motion, then orders of the day, and then go back to the first government notice of motion.

Mr. Speaker: The first one will stand until later this day.

Mr. Harris: Yes.

PUBLIC SERVANTS' INVENTIONS

PROVISION FOR OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT AND PAYMENT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting inventions by public servants to provide a uniform legislative scheme to govern the ownership and management of and the payment of awards for inventions made by public servants of the government of Canada in connection with the duties or employment of the inventors.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the house.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTROL OF GOODS IN BULK

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the governor in council, for a limited period of time, to provide for transport control of goods in bulk.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the house.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT SERVICE—REPORTED SUBSTANDARD WAGES FOR IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration based on a news report of the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, May 8. Is the Department of Citizenship and Immigration by-passing the national employment service in an effort to obtain jobs for immigrants at lower than standard wage rates?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? I do not believe the minister should allow the statement that appeared in the Citizen on Saturday, concerning which the member for Kootenay West asked a question, to go by with that short answer, although it is satisfactory in its way. Will the minister comment on this article and state what measure of truth, if any, is in it?

Mr. Harris: These charges are made from time to time, Mr. Speaker, and are always investigated by the department. We are doing that in this particular case. We have asked the person who made the statement to produce to us any evidence which would lead us to believe there is some reason for the statement he has made. This morning he indicated he would be glad to get the evidence and send it to us. We note in the report that a committee was appointed to see us in connection with this particular matter, and we shall await the time when they come.

However, I might say that quite obviously he has not got all his facts correct because he refers to three officers being employed in the settlement branch in Ottawa, whereas we only have one. As a matter of fact, none of the persons referred to in the report have, to our knowledge, been placed by us at less than the going rate.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can the Minister of National Defence indicate when the annual report of his department will be tabled? There have not been many opportunities during this session to discuss defence, and the tabling of that report before the consideration of his estimates would be most helpful.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): The annual report of the department for the last year has been tabled. I believe the hon. member is referring to the customary white paper called "Canada's Defence Program". My hope would be that we would be able to table that in a very few days.

MEAT

ALLEGED INFRACTIONS OF PACKING REGULATIONS BY THREE TORONTO FIRMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Can the Minister of Agriculture inform the house whether or not his investigation into infractions of the meat packing regulations by three Toronto firms is completed? If so, what penalty was imposed?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): The answer to the first question is no. Some investigations have been made and matters concerning them have been turned over to the mounted police, but they have not as yet reported.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CLEANING STAFF AT WINNIPEG—SUMMER HOLIDAY SCHEDULE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister tell me if additional staff will be engaged in Winnipeg this summer to ensure the cleaning staff in dominion public buildings getting adequate holidays?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The request for vacation relief for the charwomen employed by the Department of Public Works in Winnipeg has been granted. Five additional women will be taken on shortly with a view to providing holiday relief.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That a special committee consisting of 31 members, to be designated by the house at a later date, be appointed to consider the bill to amend the War Service Grants Act and the bill respecting benefits for members of the Canadian forces, and such other legislation relating to veterans affairs as may be referred from time to time to the said committee; that the said committee shall have power to send for persons, papers and records, to print from day to day its minutes of proceedings and evidence, to sit while the house is sitting and to report from time to time; that the quorum of the said committee shall consist of ten members; and that the provisions of standing orders 64 and 65 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. Brooks: Is the minister going to make a statement on the resolution?

Mr. Lapointe: It is not my intention to make any lengthy statement at this time. In the past I have expressed the government's policy, as my predecessors have done, that whenever any important or major changes in veterans legislation were introduced, a special committee on veterans affairs would be set up in order that these major changes might be given more detailed study in this committee. I believe the last committee was established in 1952.

This year the government has put forward substantial changes in veterans legislation, and for this reason we have thought it advisable the special committee should be set up. As hon. members know, some of this legislation has already been introduced in this house, and has been referred to the committee we are about to set up. I am referring to the War Service Grants Act, and the bill concerning benefits for members of the Canadian forces. These two pieces of legislation were introduced in order to put into statutory form the benefits given to members of our armed forces who had seen service in Korea, and make those benefits parallel to those given men who served in world war II.

One other piece of legislation has been introduced and has already been passed by this house without reference to this committee. I refer to the educational assistance bill. At that time it was not thought necessary to send this measure to the committee, because only minor adjustments were made and the need for them had only become apparent after the legislation had been in force for a period of one year. There is on the order paper now a bill to amend the Pension Act. It is my intention at a very early date to introduce further legislation to amend the Veterans Land Act, bringing about some major changes in that act.

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): I wish to thank the minister, Mr. Speaker, for his explanation of the resolution. I believe everyone is familiar with this resolution. If they are not, there is no reason why they should not be, because I do not know of any resolution that has been on the order paper for such a long time as this one to set up a veterans committee. We asked for a veterans committee when we came to this session of parliament last November. Resolutions and bills have come and gone; but this resolution which was put on the order paper over three months ago is just being passed today. I am sure if the minister has used the word "stand" once in connection with it, he has used that word at least thirty or forty times. There is no doubt he has established a long-distance record, so far as the resolution is concerned.

However, we are pleased today to find that at last it has been moved, and we hope that it will be passed—indeed we know it will be—so that a veterans committee will be set up. It is hard for many of us to understand why it has taken so long to bring the resolution before the house. We are now approaching, we hope, a time near the end of the session, a time when all members are crowded with work both in the committees and in the house. The estimates are now being considered. There are many important matters mentioned in those estimates, and most members like to attend while they are under consideration in order either to criticize or to get information concerning estimates affecting their own constituencies.

Also we hear at this time rumours about morning sittings. As I say, at this crowded period of the session we have placed before us this resolution to set up a committee which, to my mind, should have been set up many months ago. I have heard no explanation from the minister as to why he has waited so long. My own opinion is that the government has not been able to agree on the legislation to be brought before the committee on veterans affairs.

To my mind the most important legislation with which we will have to deal at this session will be that referring to the veterans. I say that legislation of other departments should not have preference over that dealing with this very important subject.

What I have said serves as a further argument for what we have sought on many occasions, namely the setting up of a permanent veterans affairs committee. Time and again we have pointed out the great advantages there would be in having such a committee. We have also pointed out that since 1916, when the first veterans committee was appointed in the House of Commons, some twenty committees have been set up. This in itself I suggest is an indication that this is a permanent matter, and that there is a necessity for setting up a permanent committee to attend to veterans affairs.

Before the second great war we had before us only those matters dealing with the veterans of the first great war. Today however the situation is entirely different. Not only must we consider the problems of veterans of the first war, but we have also those of the second war. Added to this we must consider the problems of veterans of the Korean war, the men who are serving in Europe, and the men in the reserve army. All these subjects are included in veterans affairs. Today the problems of those who served in the first war are entirely different from those who served in the second war. We know that veterans of the first war have today reached the age of sixty or seventy. So far as they are concerned, their particular interest is that having to do with pensions, hospitalization, war veterans allowances, old soldiers homes and other subjects along those lines.

We know that men who served in the second world war have been established in different professions, and that their problems are quite different. Again, the problems of the young men who have served in Korea are different. Briefly, it will be a long time, Mr. Speaker—it may not be in our time, or even in our children's time—before the House of Commons will not be dealing with veterans problems.

For these reasons I say a permanent veterans committee should be set up to deal with matters of this kind. In the past we have criticized the size of the veterans committee. Perhaps no great argument could be advanced against the committee of thirty-one members now suggested, other than the fact that it is not broad enough to include a large number of members in the House of Commons who wish to serve on it. During the term of the last parliament I believe there were eighty veterans who were members of the House of Commons. While I have not made a count of the veterans in this parliament, I understand there are more than in the last one. I know many of these members are disappointed that they are not permitted to serve on this committee. For instance, the party to which I belong is allowed only six members. Yet, in it there are twice that many who would like to serve on this committee. And I believe the same could be said of the other parties in the house.

There is a good precedent for establishing large veterans committees. I recall that when we were studying a veterans charter after the second world war the late Ian Mackenzie, who was then minister of veterans affairs, wanted a large committee. The result was that in 1945 a committee of sixty members was established, and again in 1946 a committee having the same number of members. But in 1948 the number was reduced to thirty-five, and in the last few years it has gone down to thirty-one. I would like to see the present committee a larger and perhaps a more representative one.

I now come to the object of setting up veterans committees. As I said a moment ago, we must deal with the problems of veterans who have served in different wars—and when I referred to the matter earlier I might also have mentioned the veterans of the South African war and those of the Riel rebellion. The object of setting up the committee should be that of dealing with the many problems these veterans must face. After the second world war the veterans committee met for many weeks with the result that we produced what has come to be known as the veterans charter. Members of that committee, and of the committee in parliament in general, have been proud to call that charter one of the most up-to-date pieces of legislation to be found anywhere. But there are weaknesses in all legislation, and, as time has proven since 1945 and 1946, many amendments have had to be made to this legislation to meet changing conditions and circumstances. Today when a committee is set up it is set up not to consider what we think are all the problems concerning veterans but those few problems which the government itself feels should come before it.

The most important part of the resolution which is now before us is, of course, our terms of reference. Again we have the same criticism to make of the terms of reference setting up this committee as we have had of the terms of reference setting up committees in the past. It should be the duty of a veterans affairs committee to investigate each and every problem which concerns veterans.

We have been told by the minister this afternoon—and it is mentioned in the resolution—the matters which we shall be allowed to consider. We know that we shall be permitted to deal with and consider Bill No. 82, as he mentioned. In his remarks the minister stated that the government sets up these committees when there are major changes to be considered in the act. Well, as far as Bill No. 82 is concerned, no great major changes are being made in the War Service Grants Act. The bill has had second reading. It has been before this house, and I do not think that veterans across the country believe that any great major changes are being made in the act.

It was found that certain veterans had not taken their re-establishment credit; others had not applied for their gratuities. It is a matter of routine, Mr. Speaker, that is being dealt with in Bill No. 82. We are asked to extend the time so that these returned soldiers may make application for re-establishment credit and for their gratuities.

Bill No. 101 is another piece of legislation that is being sent to this committee. Is there any hon. member who will say that there is anything urgent contained in Bill No. 101; that there are any great major changes such as the minister would lead us to believe the government felt was necessary as far as Bill No. 101 was concerned? It simply extends the benefits received by veterans during world war II to the men who fought in Korea. It is an obvious thing; it is routine. We have been extending benefits for the last three or four years.

We now come to Bill No. 339, which was mentioned by the minister this afternoon. Perhaps there is more reason for the Pension Act to be sent to this committee than there is for those others which I have mentioned. But no great changes are being made in the Pension Act. When it comes before the committee the minister will find out that more changes are left out of the bill which should be considered than are contained in the bill. The only great change that I see is that referring to benefits for adopted children. It affects very few. Then again, it takes away from parliament the right to set the salaries of the commissioners and places it in the hands of the governor in council. I ask you, Mr. Speaker; is there any great demand in this house or across the country, and more particularly by veterans of this country, for this particular legislation? These are the great major changes that the government wants us to deal with. I assure them that these are changes that do not affect to any great extent the veterans of this country.

I was pleased to hear the minister say that the Veterans Land Act would be amended. We have had rumours to that effect. It has been asked for by veterans. Legislation will have to do with housing, which is one of the great problems not only of veterans but of all people in Canada. We are pleased that there will be amendments to this act. We hope that the amendments will be such that they will be of great benefit to the veterans. But here again, if the rumours I hear are true, it is not going to involve any great financial outlay as far as this government is concerned.

My understanding of the amendments to the Veterans Land Act is that they are going to decrease the amount of land which is necessary upon which a veteran may wish to build a house; they are going to make arrangements so that it will be easier for him to borrow money. But it is to be a revolving fund that the veteran will have to pay back. The veteran will have to pay back to the government the money which is borrowed for the building of his own house. No, Mr. Speaker, I contend that in setting up this committee the government should have made the terms of reference wide enough to deal with veterans affairs. We should not be told that these are the only matters to which we can give consideration, because there is no body of men in Canada better qualified to judge the problems of veterans than the veterans themselves, veterans who are members of the House of Commons, and the veterans organizations across Canada who would appear before this committee to point out some of the great weaknesses in the act and some of the requirements of veterans.

This committee is to be given absolutely no initiative. We are simply told that this is the legislation that we shall have to deal with and that is all we can deal with. As I said a moment ago, we know of the existing problems but our hands are tied as far as being able to deal with those problems is concerned.

I now come to what I consider to be the outstanding problem of veterans in Canada today. It is not those amendments to the War Service Grants Act; it is not those amendments to Bill No. 101; it is not Bill No. 339. To a certain extent it is the Veterans Land Act, because, as I said a moment ago, it deals with housing. That is one of the great problems; but the great problem which is on the tongue of practically every veteran in Canada today is: What is this government going to do regarding war veterans allowances? That is the problem that should be before parliament and this veterans affairs committee. It is the one that should have been given first consideration. It is the one which receives the first recommendation from every veterans organization in Canada, whether it be the Canadian Legion, National Council of Veterans, the Amputations Association or any other organized veterans association in this country. It is also one which, as I said a moment ago, the individual veteran across this country feels should have first consideration. In the past when veterans affairs were being considered, especially when the war veterans allowance was under consideration, I have taken the time, as have other hon. members, to set out the history of war veterans allowances. The pages of Hansard contain the details of that history and I am not going to take the time of the house this afternoon to review it because I do not feel it is necessary. I believe the history of the war veterans allowance is well known to every hon. member in this house. That legislation is recognized and has been for some time as one of the great steps forward in veterans legislation, and I might add that it has been and is a great blessing to thousands of veterans all across this country as well as to their dependents.

Hon. members will recall that legislation was passed in 1930 and at first the amount was $20 per month. It was raised to $40 per month, which was the basic rate, and it is now $50 per month. That is the amount the single veteran receives in war veterans allowance, and the married veteran and his wife receive a total of $90 per month. Possibly we might ask ourselves why this legislation should be considered at this time. Well, there are many strong arguments and they have all been presented to the government. Old soldiers, now in their late sixties and many of them now seventy, have no other income but $50 per month. With the high cost of rent and the high cost of everything which goes to make the cost of living, he is finding it very difficult to exist, and many of them are living below subsistence level. There are other old soldiers with small disability pensions which are augmented by the war veterans allowance, but they are not allowed to receive the full amount of war veterans allowance because of the ceiling which has been set on that allowance. I believe the most absurd provision in the war veterans allowance at the present time is this ceiling.

[Mr. Brooks.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am very sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I would imagine it is in the general interests of all hon. members to adhere to the rules. I think that at this moment one rule is being violated and that is the rule of relevancy. The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) has complained about the fact that this resolution is perhaps not wide enough in scope, and he has indicated that it should be wide enough to include other bills which should be referred to the committee. But now he is discussing the merits of the War Veterans Allowance Act, and dealing with various benefits paid out under that act. Bearing in mind that if I allow the hon. member to carry on in this vein I will have to allow other hon. members who may follow him in this debate to discuss not only the War Veterans Allowance Act in detail but all the other acts which compose the veterans charter, I think that it is my duty to intervene at this moment and inform the hon. member that he is wandering away from the subject matter which is now before us.

What is before the house at this moment is a motion to set up a committee. It is true that the resolution states:

> . . . and such other legislation relating to veterans affairs as may be referred from time to time to the said committee;

But that does not justify the hon. member in wandering all over the various acts which are now in existence and which form part of the veterans charter. At the moment at which the hon. member was speaking about some benefits paid under the act and some improvements which, in his opinion, could be brought about, I was reading page 165 of the book by Campion "An Introduction to the Procedure of the House of Commons" where, for example, it states, dealing with relevancy:

> Where the business before the house is a motion to provide machinery, it is not in order to discuss the merits of the policy which it is sought to put into operation. For instance, on a motion to make a sessional order a standing order it has been held that the order itself is not open to debate . . .

There are other citations, of course, which I could quote at this moment, but whereas it is the sense of the house to have as generous latitude as possible on this question of veterans affairs, I want hon. members to know, so that this discussion may not be taken as a precedent in future discussions where the question of relevancy is involved, that they should keep in mind as much as possible that what is contemplated by this resolution is not all statutes which have been passed and which could be referred to that committee if bills amending them were being introduced through this house, but merely the two bills mentioned in the resolution, and only a passing reference to all such other legislation which may be referred to the committee at a future date is now allowed. However, let us keep this in mind. It is not the merits or demerits of the improvement of various acts which are now in existence which is contemplated in this resolution; it is the desirability of appointing a committee.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Speaker, I was discussing this matter on the basis that this resolution contains terms of reference which are certainly open to discussion, and I consider that the terms of reference are too narrow and the argument I am submitting is to the effect that it should include other legislation besides that which is included in the resolution. We have always argued along these lines, Mr. Speaker, and in regard to a number of resolutions before this house in the past we have always had a full opportunity to discuss the matter along the lines that we were not satisfied with such terms of reference. In regard to, as you pointed out, "such other legislation relating to veterans affairs as may be referred from time to time", in my opinion that is broad enough to include any legislation we think should be included in the terms of reference. I am speaking now, Mr. Speaker, to the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has pointed out that in the past resolutions setting up committees have been wider, and he has been complaining about the fact that this one is narrower in scope. It may be because of that that he is finding it more difficult to discuss—

Mr. Brooks: Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, but you misunderstood what I said. I said the terms of reference in the past were not considered wide enough and we argued that the terms of reference should be broadened. That is exactly what I have been doing.

Mr. Speaker: I listened to the argument submitted by the hon. member and at one point he was going into detail with regard to the War Veterans Allowance Act. I followed his argument when he said that the terms of reference should be wider and he went into detail on that particular subject. But at one point he rather decided to step into the War Veterans Allowance Act; then he dealt with the amount of money paid to the various recipients and went further into this matter as to how much more they should receive. He is dealing with proposed amendments to a statute. That is what he is dealing with. Nowhere in this resolution does it say that the committee should consider appropriate amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I think the discussion that has taken place has been helpful and I believe those of us on the floor and Your Honour can get together on the point under consideration. I certainly am prepared to go along with Your Honour's suggestion that we should not go into great detail concerning any pieces of legislation that we think should be amended any more than we should go into detail concerning the War Service Grants Act, and the bill respecting benefits for members of the Canadian forces which are mentioned in the resolution.

The resolution is one that calls for the setting up of a committee and for spelling out its terms of reference. It does not deal with the details of legislation. However, I think Your Honour will agree that members should be entitled to argue that those terms of reference should be broader than they are. Specifically, since the resolution refers to other legislation that may be referred to the committee, I submit that we are entitled to argue that there are certain pieces of legislation other than those announced thus far that should be referred to that committee. As Your Honour knows, from time to time we have asked whether consideration was being given to amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. The last word we had from the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) did not close the door finally. I think Your Honour will agree that we have the right to argue that that door should be kept open and that such amendments should be brought in and referred to this committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has perhaps indicated more clearly than I did the exact purport of my remarks. Hon. members should not go into details with respect to the two bills which are now being referred to the committee in this resolution. These two amending bills were introduced through the proper channels, namely on resolution, then later first reading and second reading. The principle has been debated and after second reading, in accordance with the provisions of standing order 50, they were referred to a special committee to be appointed later. We are now discussing the terms of reference of the committee, and these two bills, namely the War Service Grants Act and a bill respecting benefits for members of the Canadian forces are now referred to this committee. Hon. members should not go into the provisions of those two bills. By the same token, while they may argue that the terms of reference should be widened, they should not go into the provisions of the bills which they would like to see covered by the terms of this resolution.

There is, however, one point that I should like the hon. member to examine carefully. Let us examine what is meant by "such other legislation relating to veterans affairs". What is meant by that phrase? It does not mean such other statutes as are now in existence. What is meant by that phrase is such other amending bills as may be introduced in the same manner as that in which were introduced the two bills mentioned in this resolution. They are the ones that are contemplated by those words "such other legislation relating to veterans affairs". If they are introduced by the government, the discussion which is now taking place about them may be completely superfluous. That is a point that I should like the hon. member to consider because, as he knows, if it was existing statutes such as the War Veterans Allowance Act which were contemplated by "such other legislation", the terms of reference would not read as they do now. The terms of reference would be "to consider such appropriate amendments to be made to the War Veterans Allowance Act". What is contemplated by "such other legislation" is a bill. As hon. members know,

> The most important functions of a parliamentary body may be stated as—

I am now quoting from "An Introduction to the Procedure of the House of Commons" by G. F. M. Campion, at page 6. To continue:

> —(1) power to express an opinion on executive action, (2) legislative power, . . .

Then further down the paragraph we find the following:

> . . . for these differing powers different forms of procedure were evolved: for the first,—

That is power to express an opinion on executive action.

> —the motion; for legislation, the bill; . . .

Then what is a bill? A definition will be found at page 84 as follows:

> A bill is a draft of a legislative proposal which, when it has been passed by both houses and received the Royal Assent, will become an act of parliament or statute. The first division of bills is into public bills and private bills, the former dealing with public general interests and the latter with local personal interests (see chapters VI and IX).

[Mr. Speaker.]

> In the class of public bills the important distinction for our present purpose is between a government bill and a private member's bill, the former being introduced and piloted through the house by a member of the government and the latter by a private or (more technically) unofficial member.

What is contemplated by "such other legislation" is government bills which may be introduced in the future.

Mr. Knowles: That is what we are hoping for.

Mr. Speaker: I know that is what the hon. member is hoping for; but no matter how hard he may be hoping for it, he must not at this moment deprive himself of the pleasure which he may have later either of heralding the decision of the government on a point in which he is interested or of criticizing the government if they have not brought in the legislative measures which he would like them to introduce.

As I said, on this resolution hon. members may discuss the desirability of appointing the committee. They may discuss the opportunity of widening the powers contained therein. However, they must not go into the merits of existing legislation or proposed changes therein and discuss the various provisions which are contained in that legislation. Otherwise there will be no end to the discussion. It will be difficult for the Chair to preserve order in debate. I do not know how many pieces of legislation are contained in the veterans charter, but if I were to say there were 15, I may not be too far wrong. Maybe there are more. That is a considerable number. On a resolution for the appointment of a committee to consider two amending bills with respect to existing legislation, where members would like to see perhaps 15 amending bills referred to the committee, if I allow them not only to say that the committee's powers should be widened but to discuss the various merits of the provisions of each and every one of these bills, I ask hon. members this question: Where do we stand as far as the rules of the house are concerned? I know that we are all greatly interested in having them preserved.

Mr. Green: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. There is one feature I should like to draw to Your Honour's attention. If a member is to make the argument that a certain act should be considered by this committee, then surely he should be allowed to say why it is essential that that act should be considered by the committee. I submit that that is all that the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) was doing. If Your Honour makes a ruling that we cannot say why we believe a particular measure should be considered this year by the committee, then in effect Your Honour makes it impossible for us to make a reasoned case for the broadening of the reference to the committee. I submit that that is all that the hon. member for Royal is attempting to do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), when a point of order was raised on April 4, 1951, made exactly the same argument. I could quote him as reported on page 1625 of Hansard, April 4, 1951, where he says:

> . . . if you should rule this amendment out of order, then for all practical purposes it would be impossible to move an amendment to any notice of motion of this kind; because there could not be a case in which the amendment would be more relevant to the contents of the notice of motion than is this one.

Then he carries on with the same argument as he put forward a moment ago. As I said, I want to be as generous as I can be, but I do not think hon. members would forgive me if I knowingly permitted the rule of relevancy to be violated in flagrant fashion. I have indicated what my feeling is on the matter and I know that it is understood. I think hon. members are perhaps too much tempted to enter into a certain discussion for which, unfortunately, the motion on the order paper does not provide as amply as they would like it to. That is the position.

Having pointed out what my position is, I know that hon. members will not abuse the rules, and I hope that we will be able to continue this discussion in an orderly fashion. As I said, the hon. member may refer to other measures which he would like to see covered by the terms of reference of the resolution. He may indicate reasons why, but he knows what proportion of his time he should use in putting forward certain arguments. He is entitled to speak for a certain length of time. If the hon. member spends all his time on what should be the provisions of the War Veterans Allowance Act then he is certainly violating the rule I mentioned a moment ago. But if he makes a passing reference only and spends most of his time on what is relevant, then I am quite sure we will have an orderly discussion.

Mr. Brooks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had made the point that I thought the chief problems of the veterans should be the ones to be considered by the veterans affairs committee. That was the basis of my argument. I followed that by pointing out that the terms of reference of the resolution do not permit us to consider what we believe are some of the big problems. I mentioned particularly the War Veterans Allowance Act which I believe is not to be considered. My basis for so stating is the information given us here a few days ago by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) when he gave the house a list of the legislation that it is intended to bring forward during the balance of this session. The War Veterans Allowance Act was not included. At that time I asked the Prime Minister if it was intended to introduce legislation respecting the War Veterans Allowance Act at this session and he told me that there would be no further legislation other than that which he had mentioned.

It was for that reason that I was arguing today that the War Veterans Allowance Act should be included. I have not undertaken to say what should be contained in any amendments to that legislation. I have studiously stayed away from that. I have not said that the basic rate should be so much or that the ceiling should be raised. These are things which I feel should be considered by a committee. The committee would obtain information on all these points and would make its recommendations to the government as to what amendments should be made to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

I am not going to labour the point any further. There are other arguments I could use but I do not think it is necessary. I will say, though, that when veterans throughout this country learned that a veterans affairs committee was to be set up at this session I received a great many letters and telegrams expressing the satisfaction of the individual soldier or veteran that such a committee was to be established. Almost invariably the fact was mentioned that now there would be a committee to consider the question of the war veterans allowance. I could read many of the letters and telegrams if I cared to do so. I am sure all other members received similar letters and telegrams.

I might also say that since the announcement of the Prime Minister a few days ago, that the war veterans allowance would not be a subject considered by the committee, I have received many letters from veterans expressing bitterness, regret and disappointment that this very important subject is not going to be considered. It is not too late yet. There is still time for the government to reconsider the resolution. There is still time, before the resolution is passed by the house today, for the minister to include in the terms of reference the question of the war veterans allowance. I am going to move an amendment. I hope the minister and the government will take into consideration the great necessity of having the question of the war veterans allowance included and that this amendment will meet the approval of the government and the house. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green):

That the motion be amended by inserting after the word "consider" in the third line thereof the words "the War Veterans Allowance Act."

The amended motion would then read:

That a special committee consisting of thirty-one members, to be designated by the house at a later date, be appointed to consider the War Veterans Allowance Act, the bill to amend the War Service Grants Act and the bill respecting benefits for members of the Canadian forces, and such other legislation relating to veterans affairs as may be referred from time to time to the said committee; that the said committee shall have power to send for persons, papers and records, to print from day to day its minutes of proceedings and evidence, to sit while the house is sitting and to report from time to time; that the quorum of the said committee shall consist of ten members; and that the provisions of standing orders 64 and 65 be suspended in relation thereto.

I commend the resolution as it would be amended to the very careful consideration of the minister and the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Royal has moved an amendment which is quite similar to that which he moved on an earlier occasion. On an earlier occasion his amendment was in this form, "such as the War Veterans Allowance Act." This time it is more direct in that it is right at the beginning of the motion and would follow along with the other two bills that are to be referred.

Consistently since 1939 at least my predecessors have ruled out of order all amendments designed to give a committee wider powers than those set out in the notice of motion. I refer hon. members to citation 546 of Beauchesne, third edition, and to rulings by Mr. Speaker Casgrain on March 13, 1939, Journals, page 185; and by Mr. Speaker Macdonald on March 16, 1950, Journals, page 121; on April 4, 1951, page 243 of the Journals; on November 2, 1951, Journals, page 67; and on April 29, 1952, Journals, page 240; then again on April 12, 1948, page 344.

Then in Hansard for April 4, 1951, will be found a lengthy discussion having to do with an amendment of this type, and amongst other members taking part in the discussion were the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), the hon. member for Melfort, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). I believe hon. members will understand that after so many of my predecessors have ruled so many times in the one direction on this matter, I would be establishing quite a departure in procedure if I were to say now that amendments of this kind are to be allowed.

[Mr. Brooks.]

I feel that the rulings I have mentioned are ample evidence of sound parliamentary practice with respect to the setting up of committees, and especially with respect to the notice which has to be given prior to the setting up of the committee. The rule is well established, and is to the effect that no amendments should be made to the motion for the appointment of a committee that would give the committee greater powers than those set out in the notice. The explanation I gave a moment ago as to what was meant by "such other legislation" pertaining to veterans affairs is quite apropos on this occasion because the hon. member is moving that the committee be empowered to consider the War Veterans Allowance Act.

The War Veterans Allowance Act is an existing statute. Perhaps, in the laudable desire to have the matter examined by the committee, hon. members are mistaking what, in my humble view, is the point. As hon. members know, according to our procedure legislation may be introduced by the government or by the opposition. In this instance a piece of legislation has been introduced by the government and has gone through the various stages required. It is only after second reading that such legislation can be referred to the committee of the whole or to a special or standing committee. There is no standing committee to take care of this class of bills, and a special committee has been constituted. "If it is the desire that, instead of referring the matter to a committee of the whole house, it be referred to a select committee or a joint committee of both houses, such a motion is made immediately after the second reading and, if carried, the bill is referred accordingly." This statement is found in May's fifteenth edition, page 478. The bills we are now referring to this committee are two bills that have gone through the preliminary stages and have been given second reading. After second reading, instead of being referred in the normal way to the committee of the whole, it was considered they should be referred to a special committee and that is the committee now being established. What the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) contemplates by his amendment is not the reference of the same class of bill, but the reference of an existing statute. An amendment should read that the committee should consider appropriate amendments to the statute, and not just consider the statute. Before hon. members pass judgment on that matter, they should know exactly what they are being asked to consider with respect to that act. It is for that reason it is so important that notice be given, then no one will be caught by surprise.

This is a right that the minorities in this house are always quick to claim, and they should therefore respect it when it refers to their amendments just as they do when it refers to amendments that the other side tries to introduce and of which they are not completely aware. This requirement of notice is just as old as the origin of parliamentary practice. When there was no printed order paper, the clerk had to read all the motions that had to be presented, and even in those days an oral notice was required. Now that we have, with the advent of modern machinery, a printed order paper, our standing order says that the notice must be printed forty-eight hours before it is called. I feel that the various rulings I have mentioned, plus citation 546, should be sufficient to make hon. members understand what my position is in this respect. I cannot accept the amendment.

Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wish to speak?

Mr. Knowles: I want to say a brief word, if I may, on the comment you have been making as to the propriety of the amendment. All of us naturally distinguish between the substance of the amendment and whether or not it is in order. For my part, I support wholeheartedly the request made by my hon. friend, the member for Royal (Mr. Brooks). I am inclined to agree with Your Honour, however, that the rulings made in the past leave you no alternative but to rule the amendment out of order on procedural grounds.

However, since Your Honour is doing such an extensive amount of homework and compiling such an extensive list of rulings on points of this kind, I hope you will include in that list, as an unfortunate example, the ruling that was made on January 13, 1953. On that occasion the motion before the house was one made by the Prime Minister for the appointment of a special committee, but an amendment was moved by the Minister of National Defence, which—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member. I remember that incident very well.

Mr. Knowles: So do we all.

Mr. Speaker: At that time the ruling was that the amendment gave instructions to the committee. The committee had the power to do those things, but if instructions had not been received—did that not have to do with the consideration of the Currie report first?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I remember that incident, and the ruling of the Speaker was to the effect that the order of reference gave the power to the committee to consider the Currie report, and the motion moved by the Minister of National Defence made sure the committee would consider that first. That was all the motion purported to do. At that time Mr. Speaker Macdonald made the ruling that the committee had the power to do what the house was asking, and it was the desire to make sure the committee would do that first.

Mr. Knowles: My point was that that amendment violated an important point which Your Honour has just now laid down, namely, that amendments of this kind violate the principle that notice must be given. In that case no notice was given, and yet the amendment was allowed. I am prepared to accept Your Honour's ruling today, but I hope it will be a precedent for future occasions rather than the one of January 13, 1953.

Mr. Speaker: I am not at this moment prepared to condemn entirely the ruling that was made on that particular occasion, because the house was not caught by surprise. If within the powers conferred by the terms of reference in a notice certain instructions are given by the house, by way of amendments, I do not think hon. members can complain—although I am willing to consider that particular phase of the matter, because it is my understanding that the notice is a procedure of great importance. This is one which has for its purpose the protection of the minority. I think I would be inclined to help hon. members in that direction, whereby no motion should be made amending the terms of any motion which requires notice, and which, if made, would catch hon. members by surprise.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have had an education in procedure this afternoon which is all to the good, but has not changed anything very much. I wish to join with the last hon. member in stating that in my judgment the whole status of the veterans affairs committee has been changed within the last few years. This committee, up until the time of the setting up of the last committee—and I believe that is where it showed up clearly—was always considered non-partisan. It was picked largely from members of the house who were ex-members of the forces. For a good many years politics, so far as veterans problems were concerned, were completely divorced from the question.

That was done, I think, because previously the committee set up had power to amend and to initiate legislation that was in the best interests of veterans generally. But in the committee now to be established, and in the last committee that was set up, no longer have we had a veterans affairs committee of that kind. Now it is merely a legislation examining committee, and has power only to deal with legislation that has already been adopted by the government and treasury board. Inevitably, in those circumstances, when such matters are brought before the veterans committee the result is to line up along political lines. It is that change in the status of the committee that is responsible. I suggest it is a bad development.

In the last sitting of this committee on veterans affairs—and I am reasonably sure the condition will be the same with this one—the chairman was placed in a position where he could bring before the committee only those bills referred to it. As we know, such bills represent the opinion of the government. Despite the fact that members serving on the committee want to be non-partisan, and look at the matter in a reasonable way, they are placed in a position either where they have to go along completely with the government, as represented by the bills, or make a fight for it, with the result that the government and the opposition parties are divided in the committee.

I think this is a bad development. Further, the fact that the resolution has been on the order paper since February 11 indicates bad judgment on the part of someone in the government. I am not blaming the minister entirely because I know that he, too, is in the hands of the board of strategy and treasury board. The fact that the resolution has been on the order paper a long time has served as an aggravation to veterans organizations outside the House of Commons. They have been clamoring for amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. In the face of that fact we find placed on the order paper a motion to set up a committee, and the fact advertised that by that motion the very act that is agitating the veterans, the one they think needs amendment so badly, is omitted. The motion is left on the order paper for three months. It is just like waving a red rag at a bull. There is no doubt that that is why hon. members are receiving great numbers of resolutions and telegrams.

Several times in the house we have moved that the committee on veterans affairs should be a standing committee of the house, rather than having it as a committee to be called together by the government, if it sees fit. The government is under no obligation to take such action.

I believe the veterans affairs should be a standing committee. There is a motion on the order paper now which, if passed, would have the effect of making it a standing committee. And I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that you will tell me I have no right in this debate to discuss a resolution on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I will tell my hon. friend that I would—if I did not know that there is no chance of reaching that particular order.

Mr. Gillis: Thank you very much. It would seem that the rules are, after all, a bit flexible.

I have said that in my view the committee on veterans affairs should be a standing committee of the House of Commons. Surely the thousands of veterans who fought in the first and second world wars, who fought in Korea, who are now serving in Germany, and the hundreds more who are now in this country in uniform, prepared to offer their lives if necessary, are just as worthy of consideration as other matters which are discussed in standing committees. There comes to my mind the matter of transport—

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Gillis: No, perhaps not transport. However, there are sixteen standing committees of the house, including the committee on the restaurant, the library, divorce, miscellaneous private bills, and many other subjects. They are necessary, of course, although some of them never meet.

Do not hon. members feel that in the interests of the general welfare of the country, and in the light of the changing pattern in the services from year to year, it is necessary now that we have a standing committee of the house which, so far as possible, would consist of members who have served in the armed forces? Such a committee would be called, not just when the government thinks it is necessary, but when a private member might think it necessary. I suggest he should be in a position whereby he could rise in his place and ask for the setting up of such a committee.

In this way it would be possible to have a continuous examination of veterans problems, and they would not be permitted to reach the state of turmoil we now find in connection with war veterans allowances. In the procedure I have suggested it would not be possible to set up a committee which would fail to deal with those matters about which the veterans have become agitated. I suggest the establishing of a standing committee would be helpful to the minister, because I am sure he knows there are many members in the house who are quite reasonable and who also have contact with veterans organizations. Let us keep in mind that the brains are not all in the civil service, the fellows who draft these complicated amendments. If a standing committee were set up the minister would receive much valuable advice.

Let us not continue along the line now suggested, where we are developing a division of hon. members along political lines in the matter of veterans problems. Those problems have always been considered sacrosanct. I recall that for many years, indeed right up to 1939, any politician who attempted from a platform to raise controversial issues respecting veterans affairs did not generally get many votes. He was put in his place by any meeting where he attempted to raise a subject of that kind. That is the way we should keep it, because there should be no politics in matters having to do with veterans affairs.

When this committee begins to function it will not have very much to do. The bills that are to go before the committee are necessary adjustments to existing legislation, but there are not many changes in them. Changes in veterans legislation are necessary but they are not included in these bills. I am not going to discuss details now, but I have some opinions about the War Service Grants Act and the act respecting the Canadian forces as well as the other matters that have been referred to. Many things in veterans legislation need expanding, but this is not the time to do it.

I point out to the minister that his mediums of publicity are not good. For example, people outside this house and a lot of members in the house have always taken a dim view of casual earnings with respect to veterans allowances. I am not going to discuss the details of that except to tell the minister that this business of making changes in basic legislation by order in council and then issuing a directive based on that order in council does not get a very wide circulation, and that is responsible for a whole lot of misunderstanding that exists with respect to much of this legislation.

I met the parliamentary assistant to the minister the other day over a cup of coffee in the cafeteria, and he put me straight on something. Despite the fact that, as I said, a directive was sent out recently by the minister's department—I may as well give the number, W.V.A.B. No. 25-53—that pretty well revised the whole matter of casual earnings, I have been receiving letters on this subject and I did not know anything about it until I got a copy from the parliamentary assistant. I have given some publicity to it myself in my own area to bring it up to date. A lot of changes were made there, and they are good ones as far as they go. Quite a number of people were throwing rocks at the Department of Veterans Affairs on this very matter. A lot of this trouble goes right back to the local districts. I am talking about my own now. They may be very efficient in other sections, but a lot of the difficulty over publicizing these changes from time to time goes right back to the local districts. Very little is known about it unless of course you walk into an office and sit down and discuss it with someone. I am merely leaving that thought with the minister. First, I do not agree with changing basic legislation by order in council in a matter as important as that affecting the casual earnings or part-time earnings of a recipient of veterans allowances. When a directive of that kind is issued it should go to the press in every part of the country. In addition to that, the district offices and the sub-district offices that enforce or handle that type of order should also be instructed to publicize it and see that all veterans who are entitled to the benefits because those changes are made are made acquainted with them.

In regard to the procedural question that came up, I am just going to say that because the War Veterans Allowance Act was not included in the terms of reference I, too, am very disappointed. I know from experience here that you cannot amend the terms of reference in the way that the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) tried to amend it, but I still hope—we have a month and a half to go before the end of the session—that this committee—

Mr. Lennard: The hon. member is a little optimistic, is he not?

Mr. Gillis: The end of June. I hope that the committee that will be set up will be able to deal with this matter. I know the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) is just as anxious as we are to have the necessary amendments made to the War Veterans Allowance Act, and I hope that he will prevail upon the treasury board, and those who may be reluctant at this time to let us have a look at it, to permit the necessary amendments to that act and have it referred to the committee.

I could talk all afternoon on the reasons why this act should be amended, but I am not going to place Mr. Speaker in the position of having to declare me out of order. Before the minister closes this debate I would like him to clarify something in my own mind. This matter that I am now about to refer to is dealt with in one of the bills that we are to examine. Previous to the armistice in Korea, the Korean veterans were entitled to all the benefits that accrued to veterans of world war II under our legislation. I have had many protests from different parts of the country to the effect that since the armistice was declared, by some decree on the part of the government, it was decided to discontinue the benefits such as gratuities and credits for Korean veterans as from the time of the armistice, and that relieving veterans who go to Korea from Canada are in the same position as the 27th brigade in Germany. If that is so—I am not sure it is except from the correspondence—in my judgment there is no justification for it, because there is no similarity of service as between the brigade in Germany and the troops in Korea. The troops in Germany are living under peacetime conditions, but the Korean troops are in a country that is completely devastated. They are living under war conditions at the present time. No one in this house or outside it can say that war in Korea is over. That has still to be determined. It is merely a cease-fire, and the duties they perform are in effect war duties. Their conditions, their circumstances, their recreation, their method of living, their housing in that part of the world bears no resemblance whatsoever to that of the troops in Germany. Since we are to deal with the Canadian forces and the legislation that should be applicable to them, I hope the minister and hon. members will keep in mind that that is a point we should work over pretty thoroughly, because the veterans organizations who have written to me about it have said emphatically that they consider it unjustifiable and completely rank discrimination as far as the Korean troops are concerned.

Hon. members are pretty restricted in this discussion, but the plea that I made to the minister at the beginning is that I hope he may be able to drive home to the government the fact that the method of setting up this committee, and its terms of reference, which say that only the legislation already determined by the government and passed to the committee in the form of a bill can be considered, are too restrictive. The government is completely disregarding the non-partisan spirit which existed in that committee previously. They are submitting bills for consideration by members of that committee, including members of the opposition who previously examined such questions on merit, bills which are designed to implement government policy and which will force these opposition members to think along political lines rather than attempt to maintain the non-partisan spirit which existed previously. In my view the strength of the House of Commons in safeguarding the interests of veterans was concentrated in that committee due to the impartial manner in which it considered veterans legislation. I hope the government may give serious consideration to making this a standing committee so that when problems arise from time to time, as they must during our lifetime, and which will affect veterans particularly in this changing world, the members of the house who are interested may be able to ask the minister to set up the committee to consider these problems rather than wait for someone in the government to determine in his judgment when veterans problems should be considered. It appears now that they not only determine when these problems should be handled, but they write the legislation and then throw it before the committee to fight over along partisan lines.

I think that is the most important aspect of the matter which confronts us at the present time and it is my belief that the government has neglected to place before that committee necessary amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. That act is the focal point in all problems affecting veterans today. Adjustments are necessary in other acts, but a change in the status of that committee from a veterans committee to a legislative examining committee which can act only on government legislation is very bad, and I trust that by the time we get around to dealing with veterans problems the minister will be in a position to announce that a standing committee of the house will be set up for the purpose of a continual review and survey of veterans problems as they arise from time to time.

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this resolution designed to set up a committee on veterans affairs, but I feel I have to go along with the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) and the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) in the view that during the last few years the committee on veterans affairs has drifted away from its original attitude and is not now concerned with a sincere discussion on veterans affairs. During the last three or four years we have not had the opportunity to thoroughly discuss the entire realm of veterans legislation, and I have found that the committee is what I might call a "me too" committee. The government suggests changes in the legislation; the committee talks it over; the government members of that committee say "me too"; the chairman says "me too"; he comes into the house and makes his report and the report says "me too"; the house then discusses it and the majority of hon. members in the house, of course, say "me too".

I too, Mr. Speaker, think that this committee on veterans affairs should be made a standing committee of this house because it would appear that we are going to have veterans affairs problems for a good many years to come. We had the first world war; the second world war; then we had Korea; we have men in Germany; we have men in Korea, and there is a possibility of some sort of action in Indo-China. The United Nations' troops are carrying out police actions all over the world and members of our armed forces are travelling all over the world. We never know when we might be taking part in another war. That danger has often been underlined. We have a very delicate situation in Korea today, and with the international situation as it is we cannot avoid maintaining a strong standing army or at least carrying out a strong armed forces program. In the light of these facts we must have some sort of veterans organization within this house in order to keep pace with events.

I know it has been pointed out on many occasions that such a standing body is not necessary because we can always set up the veterans affairs committee, and it is asked, "Why set it up if we do not require it?" I wish the same sort of attitude could be taken with regard to some of the other standing committees. I have been a member of some of these committees for four years now, and they have not been called together and probably never will be, at least during my tenure of office. In spite of that, something that is as important, long lasting, and as near to us all the time as veterans legislation is ignored and we have to set up a veterans affairs committee whenever the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) and the government decide that we should do so. This is not good enough. We need a permanent committee on veterans affairs which could be called together at any time to discuss matters arising in relation to veterans legislation.

Other hon. members have pointed out that this resolution has been on the order paper for something like two or two and one-half months, and I think it should have been brought before the house a long time ago. It is getting late in the session now. The minister has pointed out that he wishes to submit other legislation which will then be submitted to the veterans committee, but we still have not heard anything about that legislation and it has still to come before this house before it is submitted to the committee. In my opinion that legislation should have been introduced and brought before the committee on veterans affairs at least a month or two ago, because from now on all hon. members will be up to the ears in work with the estimates before us in this chamber, and we are not going to have much opportunity to be absent in order to attend the sittings of the committee on veterans affairs. Sometimes I wonder if that is not the reason, and that this resolution was held over so that members of the veterans affairs committee would not be in the house to discuss the estimates of various departments.

As regards the terms of reference, I cannot help sharing the view of other hon. members who have already spoken on this topic. The terms of reference are much too narrow and I hope that if the minister does not see fit to extend the terms of reference we might at least be given sufficient leeway within that committee to discuss the entire realm of veterans affairs, and hear briefs from the various veterans organizations.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, on that particular subject I would like to know if the minister has invited veterans organizations to attend and present their views in the legislation which is to be submitted to this committee. As I was saying, I hope that we will have sufficient leeway to cover the whole field of veterans legislation because, in my opinion, veterans have been held down far too long, living at subnormal standards and being forced to merely exist when they should be living comfortably. For example, the Pension Act should be thoroughly overhauled and there should be a substantial upward revision in the amount paid to recipients.

I am not going to dig into the relative merits of the War Veterans Allowance Act. However, I may say that act was brought forward because it was said that the veteran preaged by at least ten years. I should like to tell the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) that many of these veterans are ageing extremely rapidly from trying to get along on the pittance the government is giving them at the present time.

As to the terms of reference, I do not think they should be laid down by the government. The members of the veterans affairs committee of the House of Commons are themselves veterans. The problems of the veteran are close to them and are matters of concern to them. I think the members of the committee are the ones who should determine just what its terms of reference are in order to be able to dig into all of this thing and to make a complete revision of the veterans legislation; it needs it. If this committee is going to be set up, let us leave it to that committee to do a job so as to give the veteran something instead of being set up just to look into some minute amendment which is brought down by the government, is introduced to a predominantly Liberal committee and which we know is going to be passed as it was introduced to that committee, while all we can do, so far as the committee is concerned, is to blow off a little bit of steam and let people know exactly what we think. Under the existing statute, we cannot do anything concrete other than that.

Mr. F. E. Lennard (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to say a few words as one who has been on every veterans affairs committee of this house since 1935. Like every hon. member who has already spoken, I feel that this committee should be a standing committee and that it should be composed of a greater number of members than 31. It must be remembered that since 1945 we have had in this house a great number of veterans not only of the first great war but also of the second great war. A moment ago I mentioned that I had been on every veterans committee since 1935. I know that I am not being put on this committee this year. I could have been put on it but I voluntarily gave way to a younger member, a veteran of the second world war. Therefore, being deprived of the opportunity of again serving on this special veterans affairs committee, I felt that I should take part in this debate.

I certainly feel that it is a great mistake that this committee has been reduced, over the years, from some 60 members, when the veterans charter was discussed, until at the present time it numbers 31 members out of a house that contains possibly double the number of veterans it contained in 1945. I think it is a gross injustice to the veteran members of this house that the committee should be such a small one.

I also wish to say that I am greatly disappointed that amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act are not to be considered this year, and I know that veterans throughout Canada are also disappointed. As to the Veterans Land Act, which I believe is to be amended, I most certainly hope that the small holding limitation of two acres will be reduced. As I have said on many occasions in the past, half an acre is more than enough for any veteran to care for.

I have another matter that I wish to bring to the attention of the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, because I feel it is a matter that should be discussed by the veterans affairs committee this year. I realize that it might more appropriately be taken up by possibly another department, but it is a veterans problem and I feel that the Department of Veterans Affairs should press for immediate elimination of the difficulty. It is the case of a veteran who in applying for old age security is being denied it for several years because the time he spent overseas during the first world war is not allowed as residence in Canada. I fully realize that where an applicant has been a permanent resident in Canada for the entire 20 years, with a part of that unbroken 20 years spent overseas, it is allowed. But in this particular case to which I refer—and there have been similar cases—they run into the difficulty of not having resided in Canada for a long enough period to qualify. The point I wish to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, is that while the veteran is being denied the pension for some two years because his service overseas in the first great war was not allowed as residence in Canada, his wife, who remained in Canada while he was overseas, has been granted the pension. It was granted to her in April of this year, last month. The veteran who served overseas will not receive his pension until November of 1955. That is a point that I feel should be taken up by the minister. Perhaps I should not have raised it at this time but as I am not to be a member of the veterans affairs committee I felt that I should take the first opportunity to direct attention to it. I might say that this condition has been known by the minister of another department for several years. I would say that is one matter that should be taken up immediately and corrected. It could very well have been changed by an order in council. I sometimes wonder, Mr. Speaker, just how stupid people can get. I feel that it is a great injustice to a man who has served his king and country on the field of battle to be discriminated against to that extent; it certainly is a disgrace.

These are just a few remarks that I wished to make at this time. I want veterans generally and the members of this house to know that I am still just as much interested as ever in veterans affairs. As I said previously, however, I have relinquished my right to sit on that committee. Only six members were allocated to the Conservative party, and I have given my place to a younger man, a veteran of the second world war.

Mr. R. F. L. Hanna (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) has pointed out, some of us have had a valuable lesson in procedure this afternoon. As a result of the rulings handed down by Your Honour I feel that I shall have to discard a good many of the notes I have here on the war veterans allowance. However, I should like to congratulate the minister and the government on bringing in this resolution to set up a committee on veterans affairs. While the personnel of the committee has not yet been announced, I am sure that every veteran member of the house as well as every other member will watch with considerable interest the deliberations of this committee. Perhaps some day we can convince the minister that this committee should be a permanent one. I notice that the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) asked for this concession. Then he proceeded to criticize the matters which are being referred to this committee in the resolution. I say to him that I think all changes in veterans legislation should be referred to this committee, whether those changes are large or small. Like other members who have spoken, I am disappointed that the matter of war veterans allowance was not specifically mentioned in the resolution. Perhaps the minister will yet bring this matter before the committee. I earnestly hope that he will although, as Your Honour has pointed out, hoping will not necessarily make it so. However, as I read the terms of reference of the committee there is scope there for the question of war veterans allowance to be brought before the committee before the session ends.

During my first speech in the house on November 26 last I urged the government to consider favourably the excellent brief presented last fall by the Canadian Legion, particularly that part relating to the war veterans allowance. In my opinion there are many reasons why an increase in the war veterans allowance is warranted at the present time, but I shall not attempt to go into them all. The case for the war veterans allowance recipients is well set out in the Legion brief for all to read. I still think they have a very strong case and I urgently commend it to the government for their further consideration.

There is a situation developing in my own province of Alberta at the present time involving recipients of war veterans allowance which is particularly serious. In our province, as in British Columbia, there is a supplementary old age pension allowance of $15 per month, bringing the total old age pension, with the means test of course, up to $55 per month for a single person. If a married couple both qualify they will receive together $110 per month. I should say at this stage that the additional $5 added to the additional $10 supplementary allowance will not be paid until the first of June and thereafter.

I am informed, Mr. Speaker, and I have no reason to doubt it, that there are many cases of persons in Alberta who are not even citizens, much less veterans, who will be receiving $110 per married couple per month as old age pensioners. Such persons may even have fought against us in world war I, but they will still receive old age assistance in the amount I have indicated provided that they qualify by having resided in Canada for twenty years or more and can pass the means test. I am not suggesting for one moment that these needy people are receiving too much by way of assistance, but the situation I have outlined does point up the urgent need for some revision of the War Veterans Allowance Act.

On the other hand, war veterans allowance recipients who also qualify for the old age pension—and I already have a letter from one such person—are limited to $100 per month under the $1,200 per year maximum permissible income ceiling. Surely this is not fair to our aged veterans who, incidentally, had to see service in an actual theatre of war in order to qualify for war veterans allowance. I think I should also point out that there is a war veterans allowance assistance fund up to $15 per month for those who are in dire need. I simply want to point out to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) the situation that is developing in Alberta and ask him to look into the matter very closely in order to make sure that our war veteran recipients in that province do not come out second best.

Of course I realize that the federal government cannot always be changing its policies because of the actions from time to time of various provincial legislatures, but at the same time the situation I have outlined with respect to the recipients of war veterans allowance is one that should not be allowed to persist indefinitely. Because of the rigorous means test prescribed, I am not afraid of the war veterans allowance going to people who do not need it and who do not deserve it, but I am very much concerned about whether those in need are getting a square deal, and I am confident that the government shares that view. I can only repeat what I said in the house on November 26 last, that in my opinion both the basic rate and the permissible income figures for the war veterans allowance are too low at the present time.

Having said that, I must in all fairness add something more. First of all I should like to say that I have great confidence in the Minister of Veterans Affairs, as I had in his predecessors. Between them they have done an outstanding job for the veterans of Canada. I think it is generally agreed that the treatment this government has meted out to Canada's war veterans is without equal in any other country in the world. The veterans charter of Canada, as we call it, has never been equalled anywhere, much less surpassed. Almost literally our war veterans have been looked after in a hundred and one different ways. This is only as it should be. They have not received too much for no amount of assistance would repay or compensate them for what they have sacrificed for Canada. By their actions they have brought victory and freedom, unity and strength, not to speak of fame and glory, to our beloved country.

But the government has not forgotten these veterans. In Saturday's paper we read that the government is spending $127 million a year in war disability pensions alone. On top of this, the government is spending some $26 million in war veterans allowances each year. The newspaper article pointed out that this was in the order of $242 per minute for disability pensions or, if the war veterans allowance is included, we have a figure of approximately $290 per minute being spent by Canada in veterans pensions and allowances. But this only covers two items of veterans legislation. Actually hundreds of millions of dollars have been invested and are being invested in many other forms of veterans rehabilitation.

I appreciate that the government feels that the line must be drawn somewhere. Theirs is the responsibility of seeing that the country, in all its aspects, is run in a manner that seems to them to be in the best interests of Canada as a whole. But in my opinion the government is hewing too close to the line in the matter of the war veterans allowances. It will be my endeavour to try to persuade the government, as I am now doing, to reconsider this particular matter. As I have said, I have confidence in the Minister of Veterans Affairs and in the government. One has only to study the veterans charter to find ample reason for that confidence. Already in this session amendments to the veterans charter have been introduced in favour of the war veterans in several different respects. More amendments are to be brought in at this session, as the minister has indicated today. I am sure that these amendments will prove to be of further assistance to the men and women who have fought Canada's battles in the past.

I am particularly interested in the amendments to the Veterans Land Act that the minister is going to introduce. Having had the privilege of serving with the Veterans Land Act administration for seven years I know what a tremendous benefit the provisions of that act have been to our farmer, fisherman and small holder veterans, and I think any amendments to that act will be further well earned assistance to these veterans. Judging by what the government has done for our veterans since 1945, I have every confidence that they will continue to do the right thing by those who have done so much for Canada. To our war veterans no sacrifice was too great when Canada needed sacrifice. Therefore I urge the government to take another look at the matter of the war veterans allowance. I hope that they will do this and come forward with a proposal for an increase in both the basic rates and the permissible income ceiling. As I have said before, there is scope in the resolution for such amendments, and I still have hopes that something will be done about it at the present session of parliament.

Mr. O. L. Jones (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that so far every speaker, irrespective of the party to which he belongs, has referred to the particular resolution before us as being too confining in its nature. I agree with them 100 per cent. It is thirty-five years since the first war ended and there are problems affecting the veterans of that war that are still unsettled. There is nobody to which they can come to have those problems aired in a proper manner. I do not feel that the paid officials, who are there to administer the act, are the right people with whom to discuss proposed changes in the act. The veterans themselves or the veteran members of the house should have some say in the matter. Since these problems have remained unsolved, as they have for thirty-five years, it is time a change was made in the method of dealing with them. I feel that in this particular instance the reference to the committee should cover all veterans problems.

The veterans themselves had some hope that when the committee was set up it would deal with all their problems, and particularly veterans allowances. These problems have been brought to the attention of the government, and it is a slap in the face to the veteran and the veterans organizations who have consistently asked for the opportunity to discuss veterans allowances, that this matter is not to be considered.

I agree with the member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) that we should have a standing committee on veterans affairs. As a matter of fact, on December 9 last I had the following proposed resolution put on the order paper:

> That standing order 63 be amended by inserting therein immediately after subsection (l) the following new subsection:
> (m) on veterans affairs, to consist of 35 members, 10 of whom shall constitute a quorum.

This idea is not entirely my own, but is general throughout Canada. An opportunity for airing the grievances that are continuously being brought up through veterans organizations and directly to the member of parliament by the veterans themselves ought to be provided. I feel it would eliminate a great deal of dissatisfaction that we have at the present time. It would eliminate dissatisfaction with what the department calls borderline cases, because in most instances the department takes the line most favourable to the government. This happens in spite of the fact that time and time again we have been told the veteran will be given the benefit of the doubt. I can prove that in some instances such has not been the case. I feel that such a committee would be of immense help to the minister. Through the members the minister could be kept up to date on conditions throughout the country.

There is no family in the whole dominion that is not, in some way, touched by veterans problems, either through the husband, son, daughter or other relative who served in one of the forces. The importance of this subject is so widespread that I feel a standing committee should be set up immediately. The recent sittings of the agriculture committee have been of interest to me. This committee had to consider the report of the Canadian wheat board, which was placed before the committee in its entirety as well as the recommendations resulting from the year's operation. Members of the board were there to answer questions. I thought the idea was a good one because the matter was dealt with by a group who understood wheat problems and who understood what they were doing about them. This arrangement proved very satisfactory. I believe that the committee that is now being set up for veterans affairs should be asked to consider the Canadian Legion brief in its entirety, as presented to the government last November 10, just as the agriculture committee considered a brief that was not sponsored by a minister of the crown.

I feel that in that way we could deal much more satisfactorily with the problems so far as the veterans are concerned. These problems go beyond the bills referred to the committee. These bills hardly go anywhere at all, but merely remedy one or two little things the minister feels should be remedied. I feel this brief was prepared by a body in much closer touch with the needs of veterans than those who administer the act in Ottawa would be. I should like to comment upon one or two aspects of the brief, but in view of Mr. Speaker's ruling I shall satisfy myself by mentioning the need for revision of veterans allowances. This brief contains suggested remedies for the protection of these veterans. I could give instance after instance which I hope I shall be able to do later in the session, illustrating the injustices created by the administration of this act—I am speaking of the veterans allowances now.

There are other recommendations in the brief equally as important concerning veterans who live outside of Canada. These veterans are few in number, so the cost would not be very great if the minister acceded to their request. In many cases, these men must live outside of Canada for health reasons.

Another point that I think is important, and I have taken it up with the department, is the arbitrary way in which a veteran's allowance is affected by his earnings on a ranch. I have several veterans on small holdings in the Okanagan. I know of one whose income from operations was just about $1,000, but his total operating costs—he is a cripple—were over $1,200. He showed a net loss for the year of $200, but under the new ruling the department said, no, 50 per cent of your gross must be regarded as net profit. In his case, as a result, he and his wife had about $21 per month on which to live. I feel that such matters as that should be dealt with by the standing committee. I have cited one example and could go on to others. There are several others who have been treated in the same way.

The other matter that I believe is urgent concerns widows' pensions. I have mentioned the subject before, but I am going to do it again because the departmental ruling is still the same. If a disabled pensioner dies while receiving only 49 per cent or less, the widow gets nothing. If he received 50 per cent or more, the widow gets a substantial pension. I claim that the line is too hard and fast. It would not cost the government any money because it would merely be a continuation of the pension received by the husband before he died. He would have been paid had he lived, so it is a continuation of a part of the pension to the widow after he has died. Such action would remove a condition that is very unfair, especially if the matter was discussed in the proposed committee. Without going into detail, I would suggest to the minister that he again review the Canadian Legion brief and see if he cannot agree with me that it is a comprehensive one produced by experts in the field of veterans affairs and presented fairly and truthfully. If that brief were presented to the committee, with a request for recommendations, I believe the minister could be satisfied that veterans problems were on the road to being solved.

I would point out that it is the duty of every member of the house, and particularly veteran members, to deal with veterans' problems. If we cannot get that opportunity we are frustrated, the Legion is frustrated, the veterans are frustrated and everyone is frustrated in presenting veterans problems. Today we have seen an attempt made to curtail the discussion of this vital subject. The day may yet come when we shall want to call upon the young people of Canada to fight our battles in perhaps still another war. If the treatment accorded the veterans of the three previous wars is not satisfactory, there will be little chance of being successful in the recruiting program for the next war. I think to a certain extent that is the reason recruiting today is 25 per cent less than the target set for last month by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton).

I hope the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) will take heed of what has been said by hon. members and, before it is too late, either suggest a standing committee on veterans affairs or enlarge immediately the scope of the committee now to be set up.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members are pleased that this committee is to be set up again at the present session. We do regret however that the time of the session is fast running out, and we can see no particular reason why the resolution could not have been presented to the house earlier in order that the committee might have had ample time to cover the work now placed before it. We cannot help that; but the fact remains that the motion to set up the committee has been put off time after time, indicating to me that perhaps the minister was waiting for some representation or other in order to make an important decision.

However, the resolution is now before us, and all hon. members are pleased that the committee is to be set up. We have reason to congratulate previous committees on the work they have done over the years. I do not know that I can agree altogether with the suggestion that the committee is deteriorating. It may be that I have not paid sufficient attention to it. Some members have made reference to this suggestion, but I can see no reason why the effectiveness of the committee should deteriorate in any way. I believe if we have the proper men on the committee it will do admirable work.

While at times we may appear critical of veterans legislation, compared with the legislation brought down immediately after the first world war, I am sure the veterans of the second world war have reason to believe that they have been treated with a high degree of consideration. I was talking to a veteran of the first world war, one who is now growing older and has become a successful businessman, who indicated to me that veterans returning from the first world war would have been mighty glad to have had the privileges and opportunities afforded those returning from the second. He did admit that veterans of the first world war are now covered by various forms of legislation which apply also to those of the second world war.

A good deal has been said this afternoon about the terms of reference to the committee, and the suggestion is made that they are not wide enough in scope. I agree with what has been said in this connection, recognizing always the fact that we cannot go into a discussion of the missing piece of legislation, namely, the War Veterans Allowance Act. I am reminded by my leader however that a previous speaker created a precedent by discussing that matter. I am not going to follow his example, but shall state briefly that the fact the War Veterans Allowance Act is not included will be a source of great disappointment to many veterans, particularly those of the first world war who feel that further consideration should be given to the War Veterans Allowance Act, and certain necessary changes made in it.

The fact that the resolution has been on the order paper for so long has given a good deal of hope to these older veterans. They have been waiting in the expectation and anticipation that something more was going to be done for them.

There is a class of people in Canada today who are seriously neglected. I refer not only to the older war veterans but also to their widows—women who have passed the age where they can find suitable employment. To my mind they are more or less a forgotten class. I am not saying they are not properly dealt with where the legislation covers them; I know the officials want to do all they can for them under that legislation, but the fact is that the legislation does not go far enough. I suggest that the terms of reference to the committee should have been wide enough to have permitted it to study this matter and to make recommendations in the matter of war veterans allowances.

An amendment has been moved previously and declared by you, Mr. Speaker, to be out of order. In the light of the fact that it referred to the inclusion in the resolution of a specific act, and the further fact that Your Honour cited many previous decisions, I am afraid we will have to concur in your ruling. However I have here an amendment that I believe covers the point and is also in order. Otherwise I would not present it.

I do present it because I believe the committee should be master in its own household. If it so desires it should be able to discuss other matters that it might consider should be discussed.

Therefore I move the following amendment, and I suggest it is only a slight one:

That the sentence, "and such other legislation relating to veterans affairs as may be referred from time to time to the said committee" be deleted, and the following substituted therefor:

"and such other matters relating to veterans affairs as the committee may decide."

The resolution would then read:

Resolved that a special committee consisting of thirty-one members, to be designated by the house at a later date, be appointed to consider the bill to amend the War Service Grants Act and the bill respecting benefits for members of the Canadian forces, and such other matters relating to veterans affairs as the committee may decide; that the said committee shall have power to send for persons, papers, and records, to print from day to day its minutes of proceedings and evidence, to sit while the house is sitting and to report from time to time; that the quorum of the said committee shall consist of ten members; and that the provisions of standing orders 64 and 65 be suspended in relation thereto.

That will not harm the resolution in any way. It will not prevent any other matter being referred to it. It will also make the committee freer to go into a discussion of all matters relating to veterans affairs, as the committee itself may decide.

I move this amendment, Mr. Speaker, and commend it to the consideration of the house.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; may I draw your attention to the rulings that have been discussed this afternoon at some length? The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) has felt that in wording the amendment as he has he has shifted the onus to the committee and thereby from the house. It is the house, however, that sets the terms of the appointment of the committee, and its terms of reference. I think my hon. friend is in the same difficulty that any other amendment might be in because of the ruling made in 1951 which has been referred to, as I say, on more than one occasion. May I read very briefly from the ruling? It had to do with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks):

Mr. Speaker ruled the proposed amendment out of order on the ground that an amendment cannot be moved giving the committee wider powers than those which were set out in the notice of motion.

I suppose my hon. friend can say that this amendment does not extend the powers of the committee; that the committee itself might decide that it would not consider any legislation except that referred to in the original notice of motion. But since he gives them power to do so, I think we ought to assume that they would exercise it, and for that reason it is extending the scope of the motion of which notice was given in the proper manner. I am afraid I cannot add anything to my point of order except to say that it does seem to me that it is on all fours with the decision of Mr. Speaker of Wednesday, April 4, 1951.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand that previously this afternoon Mr. Speaker ruled an amendment by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) out of order, and I believe he cited at that time several decisions, one of which will be found in the Journals of 1951, at page 243, and the other of which will be found in the Journals of 1952, at page 240. In each case the amendments to a similar motion as that under consideration at this time were ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker on the ground:

. . . that an amendment cannot be moved giving the committee wider powers than those which were set out in the notice of motion.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Macleod would add the following words to the motion:

and such other matters relating to veterans affairs as the committee may decide.

Should the word "matters" refer to legislation, then under the terms of the original motion, which refers to certain specific legislation which will be referred to the committee and certain other legislation which may be referred to the committee, in my opinion the amendment is a nullity and would be out of order.

On the other hand, if the word "matters" refers to things other than legislation, then I can only feel that the effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Macleod would be to widen the powers of the committee, and as any such widening of powers under the rulings previously cited has been ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker, I believe that I can only rule the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Macleod out of order.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that this resolution to set up a special committee on veterans affairs has at long last been moved. It is difficult for me to understand why it has been sitting on the order paper for three months instead of having been moved shortly after it first appeared. As a result of it having been delayed for this three months' period I am afraid that the work of the veterans committee will now be rushed in a way which is not at all necessary.

Possibly the reason for the motion not being moved earlier was the fact that these matters that are specifically referred to it are not matters which are going to take a great deal of time and are not matters on which there is going to be a great deal of disagreement. As was stated by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks), to some extent they are almost what you might call routine matters; extension of veterans benefits enjoyed by people in the second great war particularly to those who served in the Korean war. Therefore possibly the reason that this motion stood so long on the order paper is that the government was determined not to have some of the matters with which veterans are more concerned at the present time, such as war veterans allowances, dealt with in the committee.

I was extremely sorry that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal was ruled out of order, and also the amendment just moved by the hon. member for Macleod. There is no question that the matter about which veterans are more concerned than any other is the rates of war veterans allowances and the allowable earnings which the recipients of war veterans allowances can receive. It is the most pressing veterans' question we have, and it is the one above all others which this committee now being set up should consider.

It would appear that the terms of reference are quite narrow, and that has been the case in the last two or three veterans committees that have been set up. I think it is a great mistake, as nearly every hon. member who has taken part in this debate today has also said. In spite of the fact that war veterans allowance is not specifically mentioned in this resolution, I would hope that the committee will be able to discuss it. That, as a matter of fact, was the situation in one committee.

It was not specifically mentioned in the terms of reference of a committee of two or three years ago, but veterans organizations, the Legion, the navy, army and air force veterans, and others appearing before the committee, made recommendations in regard to war veterans allowance, pension matters and other matters, and as a result of our discussing these questions with those veterans representatives, the matter of war veterans allowance was discussed, although it was not in the terms of reference. I would hope that the same thing might take place in this year's committee. I certainly hope that it will because if the committee is set up and is not ready to devote any time or give any consideration to improving the matter of war veterans allowance it will not do the job which the veterans of this country expect it to do. It will prove to be a great disappointment to Canadian veterans.

Now, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Hanna) made a strong plea for an improvement in the war veterans' allowance, and he said he was fully confident the government shared his views in that regard. But I am afraid the government's statements and actions so far this session do not justify that confidence. I hope the hon. member is correct, and I hope it is the government's view that improvements require to be made in the amount of payment under war veterans allowance and the amount of earnings veterans are allowed to make should be increased. I hope other hon. members on the government side who believe this action should be taken will put sufficient pressure on the government so that this matter may be referred to the veterans affairs committee and that some legislation will be brought in to cover these points.

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) dealt with the legislation which is still to be introduced at this session a few days ago, and I was extremely disappointed that he made no mention whatever of war veterans allowances. As I have already pointed out, it is a matter of very pressing concern and one in which I believe nearly all hon. members in the house feel the government should make concessions so that the necessary amendment will be brought into the War Veterans Allowance Act to improve it in the two particulars I have mentioned.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this group is particularly fortunate in having as one of its members the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), an outstanding and recognized authority on parliamentary procedure. I am therefore sure hon. members will realize that if there had been the slightest opportunity of introducing a successful amendment to this resolution, such an amendment would have been moved by this group after the usual careful drafting by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I have had the honour and pleasure, Mr. Speaker, of being a member of the veterans committee since 1945, and I have always enjoyed working on that committee. As usual I am going to be very brief this afternoon, but first of all I will deal with the question of war veterans allowance and other matters brought to the attention of the government by the Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations whose views I outlined during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Along with other hon. members who have spoken in this debate I am very glad that at last, and I emphasize that, the government has seen fit to introduce this resolution which provides for the setting up of the committee on veterans affairs.

There is only one matter in regard to that question that we in this group regret, and that is the fact that the government has not seen fit to make this a standing committee. That has been the policy of this group, and also the Progressive Conservative group throughout the years. We regret that omission on the part of the government because, as previous speakers have pointed out, under changing conditions and circumstances there are always new problems being created and new aspects in administration which arise and have to be considered. We believe that an annual review of veterans legislation before a standing committee would be of benefit to all hon. members in this house, and of particular benefit to those who come under veterans legislation.

However, like many other speakers, I very much regret that the terms of reference are so limited and that so far there has been no evidence of the government's intention to give the committee an opportunity of dealing with amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act which will amend it in such a way that the veterans organizations of this country will be pleased.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, although it is late in this session for the establishment of this committee, we hope that no further time will be lost and that as soon as the resolution is approved the committee will be established and we will get down to work. I believe that is the reason why hon. members who have taken part in this debate this afternoon have kept their remarks very brief.

I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) with respect to the fact that sometimes the department is criticized unnecessarily, though sometimes it is the fault of the department, as I have pointed out on many other occasions. But I would like to take this opportunity to compliment the administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs because I believe they have done a splendid job. What we have to fight for now is amendment to the legislation now on the statute books. I do believe they are sometimes at fault in their public relations, and in this regard I refer particularly to the matter raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton South when he referred to the latest explanation in regard to casual earnings which, in effect, broadens the concept of casual earnings and will be of some benefit to a great many veterans in this country.

Since that directive was published I have received criticism from veterans in my own constituency concerning certain aspects of the limitation on income under the War Veterans Allowance Act. When I informed them of the latest explanation in regard to casual earnings most of the complainants found that their case was covered. However, in again supporting the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South I would urge that the department take note of our suggestion with regard to public relations.

I want to take this opportunity to mention a few matters which have been brought to my attention and which are of particular interest to veteran constituents whom I have the honour to represent. First of all I would like to mention that a number of Legion branches and veteran organizations, and in some cases their dependents, are very interested in the veteran legislation which has been passed in this house, and also in the legislation dealt with by the committee on veterans affairs.

In 1946, I believe, the department provided people interested in veterans affairs with loose leaf folders which contained in loose leaf form all the veterans legislation which had been passed up to 1946. Legion branches throughout Canada have these loose leaf folders and many were distributed to individual veterans who were interested in this legislation. These branches and individuals could from time to time send to Ottawa and obtain loose leaf copies of legislation approved by the house, which they could then insert in these folders so that they had in their hands the entire legislation covering veterans affairs up to date. Various branches in my constituency and various individuals have tried to obtain loose leaf copies to complete these folders from 1946 up to the present day, but without success. I have made inquiries at the department and I have found that it has been the practice of the Canadian Legion to keep a certain number of copies for distribution among their members. However, their supply has now been exhausted. I took this matter up with the queen's printer and I was informed that their supply has been exhausted. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the minister, who has a great interest in this subject, may find it a worth-while expense to have copies of the legislation from 1946 onward reprinted by the queen's printer so that people interested in this subject can obtain copies of these acts and place them in their folders.

I was very pleased to note, Mr. Speaker, that an amendment will be introduced to the Veterans Land Act which will provide veterans with greater opportunities of obtaining housing. I note that Mr. Speaker is looking at me as though I am beginning to get out of order. May I say that I trust I am not. I am interested in that matter particularly because many veterans in my constituency are extremely anxious to obtain homes for themselves but to date have been unsuccessful in doing so. When the legislation comes before the house I hope it will make it possible for a great number of veterans not only in my constituency but all across Canada to obtain a decent place in which to live. In that respect, in order to indicate the interest there is in the matter, I want to read a resolution passed quite recently by the Nelson branch of the Canadian Legion:

Whereas it is generally recognized that there is a serious shortage of adequate housing throughout Canada.

Therefore be it resolved that this zone council request that the dominion housing committee of the Canadian Legion bring all possible pressure to bear on the government of Canada to make low-interest money available to all veterans who wish to build their own homes.

That the committee be further requested to explore the possibility of drafting and estimating the cost of modern type homes for veterans.

I am greatly pleased that the government is introducing that legislation. However, not only is the question of loans for housing one of great interest in my constituency but so is the question of obtaining sites upon which to build houses, especially in rural districts and particularly, to date, under the small holdings section of the Veterans Land Act. In that connection the Nelson branch of the Canadian Legion recently passed this resolution:

Small Holdings V.L.A.

Whereas under the present conditions of the above act it is practically impossible to purchase land suitable for small holdings.

And whereas in mountain districts where most work must be done by hand, it is not feasible for a veteran who is permanently employed, to farm this amount of land properly.

Therefore be it resolved that this zone council again request the government to amend the act making the minimum requirement one half acre in place of the present 1·6 acres.

And be it further resolved that the present maximum amount of $6,000 less 10 per cent be raised to $3,000 less 10 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, that matter has been brought to the attention of the house repeatedly. I have brought it to the attention of the house, as have many other hon. members, particularly from British Columbia, because of the difficulty of obtaining the three acres or less that are required under the present regulations of the Veterans Land Act. I hope the minister and the government will give serious consideration to amending the regulations—the resolution says the act; I understand it is the regulations—so that a veteran may acquire a small holding provided he can obtain half an acre of suitable land.

There is one other resolution which is extremely interesting because there are several cases of this type which have arisen in my constituency. This is a resolution that deals with the necessity of protecting the wife of a veteran who has purchased a home under the small holdings section of the Veterans Land Act. We have had two or three cases where the husband and wife have worked together since the war to obtain a small holding and build a home, then the husband has failed to live up to his responsibility and the poor wife, although she has done her best to build up the estate and has worked hard, was left high and dry because she has no legal interest in the property. It was on that account that the Nelson branch of the Canadian Legion adopted this resolution, which I commend to the minister for his consideration:

Whereas under the existing agreement made between the director of the Veterans Land Act and the veteran, the wife of the veteran is not protected in the event of desertion, as under the wives' protection act.

And whereas in the event of desertion by her husband she may be forced to vacate the property which she has helped to build up.

Therefore be it resolved that this convention strongly appeal for a revision of the Veterans Land Act, to permit joint ownership, which would provide protection for the wife.

I am not quite sure, Mr. Speaker, whether the remedy suggested there is the best one from a legal point of view, but I bring the resolution to the attention of the minister in the hope that something will be done to protect those unfortunate women who have made a joint contribution with a veteran to the building of a home. Fortunately these cases are few and far between, but where they occur they are the cause—and I say this from my personal knowledge—of considerable hardship on the wife concerned.

Like others who have spoken, Mr. Speaker, I greatly regret that the government has not paid attention to the repeated suggestions of the Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations in Canada for an increase in the war veterans allowance. We all know that we have without a doubt the finest veterans legislation to be found anywhere in the democratic world. I think there is no question about that fact. Being a member of the committee I have had the opportunity, as have other hon. members, of studying the legislation passed in Great Britain, the United States, Norway, Finland, Denmark, Belgium, France, New Zealand and Australia. After an extensive study of legislation passed on behalf of veterans and their dependents in other countries, I think it is quite fair to say that Canada can proudly say she has the best veterans legislation in the world. I therefore think it is rather unfortunate that we have failed to remove one or two illiberal blots on the legislation at this time.

Along with others who have spoken, I regret that the government has not seen fit—as was said by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Hanna)—to send to the committee a bill which would provide for amendment of the War Veterans Allowance Act so as to increase the war veterans allowance and hence make the lives of a number of veterans and their dependents much happier. As a result of this debate and as a result of public opinion in the country I hope that before this session ends the government will respond to our pleas and representations.

In conclusion I want to say a word or two about the committee. I think it is quite fair to say—and I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South will back me up in this statement—that throughout the years, generally speaking, the approach of the members of the veterans affairs committee has been a non-partisan one. I have found that to be the situation. Even government members on the committee, when they find that the government cannot be moved to do what the opposition members have been suggesting and what they themselves have suggested on occasion, feel quite uncomfortable about it. I must say that the tone of the debates in the committee and the working of it have been non-partisan. The colonel from Royal, the burly and rugged coal miner from Cape Breton South, that gentlemanly representative of the legal profession from Vancouver-Quadra, and the peasant farmer from Kootenay West all had one thing in common and one spirit. They look forward, as usual, to the spirit and tradition of the veterans affairs committee being carried on. That tradition and spirit is that we work together for the welfare of the veterans and their dependents.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, it is significant that every hon. member who has spoken in this debate, after the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe), has shown grave concern that this committee which is to be set up will not have the power to deal with the War Veterans Allowance Act. I personally feel that a great injustice is being done to these front-line veterans who either are now qualified for that allowance or may become qualified before there is a suitable change in the act. I hope to place before the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and more particularly before the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) who is now in the house, a few words which will have some effect; I am optimistic enough to hope that the government will take another look at this question.

These special committees on veterans affairs are only set up occasionally. Time and again the request is made that there should be a standing committee to deal with these subjects but, as we all know, that request has been turned down. Once, twice, perhaps three times in a parliament, a special committee is set up to consider veterans affairs. The resolution we are considering today will set up the first committee of the present parliament on that subject. It is possible that there will not be another committee on veterans affairs during the whole life of this parliament. The setting up of this committee is extremely important, far more so I believe than is the case with any other special committee of the house.

As has been pointed out, the terms of reference are limited; they refer only to legislation. In the first place they mention two bills which have already been given second reading, a bill to amend the War Service Grants Act and a bill respecting benefits for members of the Canadian forces. Then the terms of reference go on to refer to "such other legislation relating to veterans affairs as may be referred from time to time to the said committee".

When the Prime Minister spoke on April 30 he gave the house a list of the legislation to be introduced before the end of the present session. The only bill in that list that affected veterans affairs was one to amend the Veterans Land Act. There is also of course a bill to amend the Pension Act already standing on the order paper which obviously will be referred to the committee. Therefore the present position is that we can expect to have only two more bills for consideration by the special committee. On the same day the Prime Minister was asked about the possibility of amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. The question and answer will be found at page 4276 of Hansard of April 30. The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) asked the following question:

> I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has not forgotten to bring in an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act. I am sure there will be great disappointment if no amendments to that act are brought in at this session.

The Prime Minister answered that question as follows:

> I have stated a complete list of the government's program for the remainder of the session.

It is perfectly obvious therefore that unless there is a change of mind on the part of the cabinet there will be no bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act at this session and therefore the special committee, under its terms of reference, cannot consider the question whether or not the present War Veterans Allowance Act is adequate. That, I am sure, is contrary to the expectations of veterans from one coast of Canada to the other. I have here a press dispatch reporting on a letter written by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) which shows that he too expected that this subject would be considered by the special committee. In Vancouver quite a campaign has been carried on with respect to the question of war veterans allowances by the West End branch of the Canadian Legion. Reports of their activities have appeared in a district paper known as the West Ender each week. I have here a copy of that paper for March 17 which contains this report concerning a letter written by the Minister of Finance:

Canada's finance minister, Hon. D. C. Abbott, is a very busy man but he took a few minutes to reply to our petition in behalf of the W.V.A. pensioners. Mr. Abbott states that veterans problems are under continuous study by the veterans affairs department, and legislation providing benefits are continuously reviewed. In conclusion he adds—

This is the part I wish to emphasize.

—that all due consideration will be given to W.V.A. recipients and that the problem will come before the special committee on veterans affairs to be set up during this session.

You see, Mr. Speaker, this question of the war veterans allowance is far and away the most important question worrying the veterans of Canada today. It is of course of concern to every war veteran who is interested at all in veterans problems, and to the great veterans organizations of Canada. For example, when the Canadian Legion appeared before the cabinet in November of last year their first and main submission had to do with the war veterans allowance. I have no doubt the Prime Minister was present at that interview and that he will remember that the Legion placed the greatest emphasis on the need for amendment of the War Veterans Allowance Act.

It has also been the most important question concerning veterans affairs in this house. It was considered at great length and with some care by the last special committee on veterans affairs which met in 1952. I draw to the attention of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Veterans Affairs the recommendation which finally came out of the special committee in 1952 respecting war veterans allowance. It was a unanimous recommendation; in fact, it was moved by the members of the Prime Minister's own party. Members of the opposition had previously moved a stronger recommendation but it was voted down. Then the Liberal members on the veterans affairs committee brought in this recommendation which was passed unanimously. It read as follows:

Your committee further recommends to the government continued and sympathetic study of the needs and requirements of recipients of war veterans allowance, keeping in mind the recommendations of veterans organizations in that respect—

It will be noticed that here the committee picked out one particular point.

—and particularly with regard to permissive income.

In practically every other case in my memory where there has been a recommendation from a special committee on veterans affairs it has been acted upon by the government, usually during the same session. It is two years ago that this recommendation was made and yet the government has never acted. I do not say that the government failed to consider the question, but if the cabinet did consider it at all they obviously turned down the recommendation of the committee. Putting the matter on the basis of fairness to a committee of this house, on the basis that a committee of this house just two years ago made a definite recommendation for consideration of the need of amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act, I suggest that the committee now being set up should be given the power to consider this question even though the government is not prepared at the moment to take any action by way of introducing an amendment.

The committee could hear from the department. No doubt there is a story to be told by the department with respect to the War Veterans Allowance Act. No doubt the officials would say that a special new provision was written into the act in 1952 which took care of many war veterans allowance recipients. However, I have here a return tabled for the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) giving the number of veterans who have benefited by reason of that change as of the 31st of October, 1953. They only amounted to 761 out of a total of 31,234. In other words, just slightly over 2 per cent of the recipients of war veterans allowance at that time were able to take advantage of the amendment which was put into the act in 1952.

This committee could hear from the veterans organizations. Surely, we are not to be put in the position where they are called before that committee but are not allowed to make any recommendations concerning war veterans allowances. I repeat that is the main problem facing the veterans of Canada today. If the veterans organizations are allowed to make submissions, but the committee cannot make any recommendations, where is the sense of the committee being in that position? I suggest the committee should be given the power to deal with this question, to hear representations and to make recommendations to the house just as it did in 1952. If the government does not see fit to accept those recommendations, then that of course will be the responsibility of the government, as it ought to be.

This action of setting up a committee and depriving it of the power to deal with the main veterans problem amounts, in effect, to putting a lid on the problems that are worrying the veterans at the present time. In fact, it amounts to making this veterans affairs committee nothing more nor less than a rubber stamp to approve the four bills introduced by the government, and with practically all the terms of which everyone is in agreement. The work of the committee is reduced to such an extent it is hardly worth while setting up a committee at all.

I am not going to go into the reasons why the War Veterans Allowance Act should be amended. I believe they are well known to every member on the government side, just as they are to every member on this side. This afternoon I was struck by one fact brought out by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Hanna). Incidentally, he is the only government supporter who has spoken in this debate, outside of the minister. This hon. member had the courage to say he thought this question should be faced at this session. He pointed out that now in Alberta a civilian can get an old age security payment from the dominion of $40, and an additional $15 from the province, whereas a veteran of course is limited to a total of $50.

The same situation exists in my own province of British Columbia. There have been amendments this year that have changed the law so that now a civilian, even a man who served in the German army and came to British Columbia afterwards, can now get $55 a month, whereas a man who was fighting in the front lines for Canada can only get $50 under the War Veterans Allowance Act. There is also the fact that the permissive income is only $10 a month, both in the case of a single veteran and of a married veteran. This is absolutely unfair. When the veteran reaches 70 and becomes eligible for old age security he cannot get the full $40 like everyone else in Canada. He is discriminated against because the ceiling on his permissive income is so low. However, this is not the time to go into these details. They are bad enough, but I think everyone here knows about them.

It seems obvious that the veteran is being put on the basis of a welfare case. The war veterans allowance recipient is being treated the same as a civilian welfare case. It is for that reason we cannot get any improvement in the situation, and The Legionary put that quite clearly in the January edition in an article entitled "1953 in Retrospect":

> Time and again we have been told by the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet that war veterans allowance rates and ceilings cannot be permitted to get too far out of line with other social benefits such as old age pensions, pensions for the blind, etc. Time and again we have pointed out that citizens of Canada are not required to render any special service to this country in order to become eligible for the usual social benefits available to all under certain conditions. On the other hand the veteran, before becoming eligible for war veterans allowance, must have served in a theatre of actual war and we are satisfied that the Canadian people would in consequence place him in a preferred position.

Leaving the act as it is means that the government is ignoring the fact that this is a claim by the veteran for services rendered. It is in the nature of a debt owing him by his country, and I believe is recognized as such by the Canadian people even if it is not so recognized by the government.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, to the private members on the government side of the house that they could force the government to introduce amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act during this session if they took a stand in this debate today. This is the time to do it. Do they believe that the War Veterans Allowance Act should be amended at this session or do they not? If they do, let them stand up and indicate to the government what they think should be done. Every single member on the opposition side, no matter to what party he or she may belong, stands firmly for changes in this act, and stands firmly for the veterans problems being aired in the special committee on veterans affairs. I believe most members on the government side feel the same way. I would hope that the Prime Minister would make his supporters feel free to express their opinions on this question rather than make it a party matter. Surely where the vast majority of the members here who have been elected by the people of Canada believe some action should be taken, the government should not make them go against what they feel on such a question.

I do not doubt that practically every member here today, including the members of the cabinet, told the veterans last year that this War Veterans Allowance Act would be amended. I do not think there are many here who did not take that stand in the election just one year ago. This is the time to act. I hope this parliament will not put itself in the position of raising the pay of members and senators, then two or three weeks from now of every judge in Canada, but not giving any help to these front-line veterans. They have a far greater right to consideration than anyone in this house or in the Senate or on the bench in this land. Now is the time to see that they are given that consideration to which they are so fully entitled.

Mr. Hanna: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether I might correct the misinterpretation placed on my remarks by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). I am sorry he is not in the house at the present time. I was out of my seat for a few moments this afternoon, and I am informed the hon. member told the house I had said I was confident that the government shared my view in the matter of war veterans allowances. That is not what I said. I am not confident that the minister shares my view, although I hope he does. I was speaking particularly of a situation that is likely to develop in Alberta where veteran old age pensioners may receive $10 a month less, as a couple, or $5 a month less for a single person than does a non-veteran old age pensioner. I had intended to say I was confident that the government would share my view that the veterans who are pensioners in Alberta should not be placed in a less advantageous position than non-veteran old age pensioners.

Mr. Winch: In other words, you have lost confidence in the government.

Mr. Hanna: Not at all.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, whatever confidence or lack of confidence the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Hanna) may have in the government, I dare to believe that most private members on the government side of the house are still hoping that before this session ends something will be done with respect to the War Veterans Allowance Act. It seems to me that the way in which the ball might be started rolling in connection with this important question would be for the government to agree to an enlargement of the terms of reference of this motion so that this important question might be discussed by the special committee to be established when this motion passes.

Most hon. members who have spoken this afternoon have referred to this motion as one for the appointment of a committee on veterans affairs. I suppose there is a sense in which that is the correct terminology. But I am inclined to agree with the view expressed by my colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), when he says that this is not a committee on veterans affairs in the sense in which we have known those committees in years gone by.

I recognize that when the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) announced to the house on February 11 that he was going to place a motion on the order paper he used these words:

> It is therefore proposed to set up a special committee on veterans affairs this session.

But I suggest—and in this I do not think I am just being technical or legalistic—that this is not a motion to set up a committee on veterans affairs at all; this is a motion to set up a committee to which will be referred three bills. Two of those bills are named in the motion—a bill to amend the War Service Grants Act and a second one respecting the benefits for members of the Canadian forces. The third bill, as we know from what we have been told on other occasions, will be one to amend the Veterans Land Act.

Members supporting the government may argue that this is, in effect, a veterans affairs committee because the bills with which it will be dealing are bills relating to veterans affairs. But the committee suggested is not a veterans affairs committee as the House of Commons has known it in the past. And I must congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs upon not having tried to say in the wording of his motion that this is a veterans affairs committee. It is just a special committee to deal with three bills the government has decided should be referred to such a special committee. It is not a committee to go into the broad question of what our veterans in Canada need at the present time, as previous veterans affairs committees have been permitted to do.

I feel strongly that the whole question of the terms of reference of the committee should be reconsidered. I would hope that the Prime Minister, who has listened to all the appeals that have been made this afternoon, might reconsider the terms of reference. I would hope that the strong appeal made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) might lead the Prime Minister to reconsider this whole question.

As I indicated earlier, I could not but go along with Your Honour's attitude toward the amendments that were made, so far as the procedural position is concerned; but it is still possible for the government to respond to the wishes of the house and to ask the consent of the house to change the terms of this motion.

Since it is not possible to move an amendment asking for the inclusion of other matters such as the War Veterans Allowance Act, it is therefore not possible at this time to get a vote on that specific question by itself. Perhaps that is one reason that there may be more speakers in this debate than might otherwise be the case, because members generally in all parts of the house feel so keenly on this issue that they are anxious to express their views.

So far, as has been pointed out, apart from the minister who introduced the motion, we have heard only one speaker from the government side of the house, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I hope there may be other speakers. Indeed I am waiting anxiously to hear from the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott). On February 11, when the Minister of Veterans Affairs announced that it was his intention to file notice of a motion for the setting up of this committee, the hon. member for Vancouver South made a very short speech in which he expressed his pleasure at this announcement. He even went on to say that this would now give him an answer to the 427 postcards that were lying on his desk upstairs. I would like to know what answer he gave on that occasion to those 427 postcards, and I would like to know further whether he has amended that answer.

When one reads the very brief statement the hon. member for Vancouver South made on that occasion it becomes quite clear he had confidence that the bringing down of a motion for the setting up of this committee meant that consideration was going to be given at this session to amending the War Veterans Allowance Act. As I say, now that he knows it is the government's intention that that matter shall not be referred to the committee, and that there shall not be a bill amending the War Veterans Allowance Act, I am wondering what amendment he is sending out to the answers he gave to the 427 veterans who sent him the postcards.

I have referred to the hon. member for Vancouver South, not to be critical of him for the view he expressed on February 11, because the same view was expressed by members in all parties. We were delighted with the announcement. It came as a surprise, right in the midst of another debate. I repeat that we were delighted with the announcement that a special committee on veterans affairs was to be established. What we are now disappointed in is that we are not getting a special committee on veterans affairs; we are getting merely a committee to consider three bills and nothing more. The terms of reference are limited, so limited that it will not be possible to discuss an important matter such as the War Veterans Allowance Act.

And so I hope that, even yet, before the debate goes much farther, Liberal members, like the hon. member for Vancouver South and others on that side of the house, who I am sure are just as anxious as we are that something be done on this question, will enter the debate and join with us, as private members on all sides of the house, in making it known to the government that this session must not end without something having been done about the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, just before the house rose at six o'clock I had expressed the hope that we might yet hear, during the course of this debate, from the hon. member for Vancouver South. I am pleased to see that he is in his seat at this time, and I dare to hope that he will accept my invitation. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express very strongly the hope that a number of hon. members on the government side of the house will speak for at least a few minutes during the course of this debate. We would like to hear from the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. MacDougall); we would like to hear from the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker); we would like to hear from the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), as well as from others whom I could name.

Some may be asking: Why do the members on the opposition side of the house want to hear from government members in a debate of this kind?

Mr. Harris: It is a little unusual.

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration suggests that it is a little unusual.

Mr. Pearkes: Perhaps he will speak.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich suggests that it may be a good idea to hear from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Pearkes: He is a returned man.

Mr. Knowles: His contribution would be listened to with a great deal of interest. All levity aside, the reason why we would like to hear from private members on the government side is that we attach extreme importance to our contention that the terms of reference of this motion should be enlarged. We can make that appeal from the opposition side of the house. We are doing so. I imagine it will continue to be made during the course of the debate this evening. It is quite clear what it is we mean when we say that the terms of reference should be enlarged. We mean that this committee should be given the right to discuss the amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act which we believe are very necessary.

Let us be quite frank about this. There is no doubt that people in the country will approve of the stand that the opposition members are taking during the course of this debate. There is no doubt that in time we shall win our point but time can sometimes—

Mr. Lennard: Just before the next election.

Mr. Knowles: —stretch out. The hon. member for Wentworth has just put in a very apt comment; but, Mr. Speaker, this question is serious. We want action, not just approval of the speeches we are making; we want action on this matter at this session of parliament. We believe that it would strengthen our efforts, that it would bring something about for the veterans of this country, if the Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet knew from what was said on the floor of this house that the private members on the Liberal side of the house are just as concerned about this issue as are members on the opposition side of the house.

It has been said by a good many already that it is a bitter disappointment to be told that there are to be no amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act at this session of parliament. As hon. members know, questions on this point have been asked repeatedly during the course of this session. I have asked a number of them myself. The last time that a question on this subject was asked on the orders of the day was on April 30, when the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) put a question to the Prime Minister, after the Prime Minister had listed the remaining items of business for this session of parliament. He asked the Prime Minister whether he had not forgotten to announce an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act. This was the brief reply made by the Prime Minister, as found at page 4276 of Hansard of April 30:

> I have stated a complete list of the government's program for the remainder of the session.

That statement seemed to close the door on any possibility of an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act at this session of parliament. But, Mr. Speaker, we have seen doors that were apparently closed, pried open on previous occasions, and I am joining with other hon. members on this side of the house in asking private members on the government side to join with us in trying to pry this door open so that we might get consideration at this session for those veterans who depend upon the terms of the burnt-out pension or the war veterans allowance.

Of one thing I am sure, despite my lack of confidence in this government. It is that this government would not think of bringing in legislation decreeing that any veteran, or any number of veterans, should be asked to starve. To a great many veterans that is just what it seems like when, with all the rest of the legislation that has been brought in at this session of parliament improving the position of other people, there is nothing to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act. I am sure that this government, in its most callous moments, would not bring in a bill discriminating against our burnt-out pensioners, our burnt-out veterans, particularly those of the first war. It would not bring in a bill saying that their services should be forgotten. But many of those veterans—other hon. members know it as well as I do from the letters they receive from them—feel that that is exactly the kind of treatment that is being accorded them by virtue of failure of the government to do anything about the the War Veterans Allowance Act at this session.

What the government will do regarding legislation is a matter that has to be decided by the cabinet, but surely this simple request that we are making is one that should be met; namely, that this committee's terms of reference should be broadened so that the members of that committee will have the unquestioned right to discuss the War Veterans Allowance Act.

I appeal to the government to consider enlarging the terms of reference. I appeal to Liberal private members in this House of Commons to join with us in making that plea to the government.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I was informed that the hon. member for Oxford would like to say a few words on this resolution; and because he has to go away, would the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and other hon. members please give way to the hon. member for Oxford? I am sure he will appreciate it.

Mr. Pearkes: I am pleased if you will see the hon. member for Oxford, and if you will see me later.

Mr. Speaker: After the hon. member for Oxford has spoken, I will see the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to thank the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Pearkes) for his courtesy in this matter; I thought it had been brought to his attention. At long last, Mr. Speaker, the resolution having to do with the committee on veterans affairs has been brought before the house. Many veterans throughout Canada and their families will be pleased that the resolution has been acted upon. However, it is something like the very famous old proverb that appears in the Good Book. If I am not correct in this I am sure somebody will call it to my attention. In any event the proverb goes something like this: The mountain laboured and brought forth a mouse. I am quite willing to agree that a mouse, albeit small, is better than no mouse at all.

Hon. members who are to be members of this committee will be very glad to have the committee set up so that we shall be able to get to work on the legislation, such as it is. I should like to agree with the numerous hon. members who have already expressed certain thoughts with respect to this committee, and have also expressed their opinions.

I believe this committee rather than being a special committee ought to be a standing committee of this house. I think the subject of veterans affairs is sufficiently important to justify the appointment of a standing committee. I also agree with other hon. members who have suggested that this committee should have a larger membership. There are a great many members in this house who have served in one or both world wars and who should like to have an opportunity of sitting on this committee. But since the committee is comprised of only 31 members not many of us will have the opportunity to do so.

I was interested in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) and his opinion of the manner in which this committee conducted its affairs previously, namely in a non-political manner. Problems concerning war veterans were brought up by committee members themselves and that was an excellent way of running a committee such as this, and I think it would be agreeable if that type of committee were set up again at the next session of this house. I believe all hon. members will agree that veterans affairs is not a subject which should be made a political football.

However, I would like to congratulate the government on the excellent veterans legislation which has been passed in the years since the war. I agree with other hon. members that there may be other countries which have legislation just as good, but certainly no other country has better legislation. Nevertheless, there is always room for improvement. Since 1945 there has been a great change in conditions in Canada. For example, our population has increased a great deal and the number of new houses has increased considerably in the suburbs of our large cities. Certainly most Canadian cities large or small in Canada have expanded their boundaries and veterans who previously had two or three acre plots in the townships now have their homes in urban areas and carry a much heavier burden of taxation. Moreover, I believe it has been found by experience that while the two and three acre plots were supposed to make people independent in the event of a recession, these plots are much too large to be worked by hand and too small on which to operate machinery. That is just one example of the change which has taken place in Canada. In addition, because of the expansion of our urban areas it is now very difficult for anyone to obtain a plot of a suitable size near his place of employment.

I had hoped that when this committee was set up it would be able to deal with the recommendations set out in the brief presented to the government by the Canadian Legion last fall. I believe the recommendations suggested in that brief were fair and reasonable and not at all out of proportion. These recommendations were carefully thought out and have taken the changing conditions I have outlined into consideration. I am expressing these facts not because I happen to be a member of the Canadian Legion, but because I really believe the recommendations set out in that brief are all worthy of consideration at this time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to comment briefly, without transgressing your ruling today, on certain matters which will be discussed by this committee. The first question to which I would like to refer is the suggested change in the Veterans Land Act. From what we have been able to gather these changes seem very appropriate and will probably be of considerable benefit to veterans and will serve to bring the present legislation into line with conditions existing in this country at the present time.

There is one matter which unfortunately will not, it appears, come before this committee and that is the question of possible amendment to the Pension Act. The minister is no doubt aware that section 13, subclause 1, paragraph (a), and section 13, subclause 1, paragraph (c), which ameliorates the first section I mentioned, cause a great deal of hardship. I just mention that in the hope that the minister will give it his consideration. I see Mr. Speaker looking at me and I must be rather careful and avoid going into detail.

The last thing I would like to mention in passing is one which has been mentioned by almost every hon. member who has spoken in this debate and that is the matter of veterans allowances. I agree with other hon. members who feel it is a great pity that this committee when it sits will not have an opportunity to consider legislation in this regard. I believe I am quite safe in saying every veterans organization in Canada, and the Canadian Legion in particular, feel this matter of veterans allowance is the prime problem which concerns every veterans organization at the present time. As other hon. members have pointed out, the matter of increasing these allowances and raising the ceiling of permissible income should be brought before this committee. Certainly legislation in this regard is very much needed, and of great importance to veterans generally.

I have heard it said by some veterans that after all in the first year after the election one cannot expect too much, and that possibly some legislation will be introduced at another session, closer possibly to the date of the next election. I am quite sure the government would not like to give veterans the impression that this matter of veterans allowances is being used as a political football. I just mention this because as Shakespeare said: It is not what is truth, but what people believe to be truth. Unfortunately I am afraid a great many veterans will gather that impression.

In conclusion I would just like to reiterate that I hope before the session is concluded that the door may be opened for the committee to examine this question of veterans allowances.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, reference was made by two previous speakers this afternoon to directive No. 25, 1953. It will be recalled that during the fall session of this parliament I asked questions of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) regarding this directive which had been issued during the summer when this house was not in session. That directive made changes with respect to casual earnings. At that time casual earnings were defined as that amount of money which might be obtained through odd jobs but not exceeding $2 per day. The minister explained that there was some ambiguity about that definition and very kindly offered to look into the matter. As a result of his investigation and the investigation undertaken by the chairman of the war veterans allowance board this amendment was introduced. Casual earnings are now defined in a far more generous manner than hitherto. The directive refers to earnings obtained through work in jobs not of a regular nature, and it goes on to say:

> Earnings by a recipient and/or his wife resulting from part-time regular employment such as a caretaker for a church or school, a canteen attendant, a crossing guard, self-employment at home on a part-time basis, etc.

Such earnings would be considered as being exempt. Then in another paragraph it goes on to say that earnings by a recipient and his wife resulting from full-time temporary employment of limited duration such as at summer camps, guard duties, collecting tickets at race tracks, replacing a regular employee on holidays, harvesting or other similar activities of relatively short duration would not be considered under the title of that income which would have to be deducted. All those are excellent regulations. I am highly pleased that the minister has been able to authorize that extension. But that extension does not cover the whole field. When this committee is set up I would hope that there will be discussion of these regulations which are in many respects more far-reaching than any of the minor amendments which are being introduced under the different bills to which specific attention has been called in this resolution.

I am not asking for a general discussion necessarily on the War Veterans Allowance Act. I am asking that this memorandum be placed before the committee, partly so that the memorandum may be brought to the attention of the nation. As was said by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), little publicity has been given to this memorandum. It was issued at the time of the Easter recess and there was little opportunity for anybody to discuss it. If this memorandum is placed before the committee with the amendments to the various other bills which are to be introduced the committee would then have an opportunity to discuss the extent to which this memorandum meets the problem of the older veteran.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to delay the house for long. I am an old soldier, and I am getting older every year. I suppose I am getting more and more cantankerous as the years march on. I am sick to death of pleading with this government for the old soldiers of Canada. I think the time has come when this government needs an urge to do something rather than pleading to do something for the old soldiers. It is my great good fortune—I served in a number of units during the first war—to have had the opportunity of meeting many of the men who forty years ago this year left Canada to fight for the then king and for this country. Those men are advancing in years. They have given so much in the past that they are finding it utterly impossible, in hundreds of cases, to keep up with the modern trend of life today. They have been looking to this government to do something now to help them meet the critical situation with which they are faced in their declining years.

They have the approach through the Canadian Legion; but only a comparatively small percentage of veterans are in the Canadian Legion; they are not all in it. I wish that every ex-serviceman was a member of the Canadian Legion. Then perhaps the government would pay more attention to what the Legion has to say. They sort of brush them aside because there are only perhaps some 300,000 members in the Legion out of one and a quarter million veterans in Canada. But the Legion speaks for that one and a quarter million veterans, even though they are not all members of the Legion. The Legion has been demanding that something be done for these old soldiers.

It is all very well to ask for extensions of this resolution, but extensions are quite unnecessary. Right there in the wording of this resolution there is ample opportunity for this committee to be given the chance of examining the legislation which is passed. The government itself is issuing a challenge. The government says "and any other legislation which the government may be prepared to place before the committee." All this government has to do is to come forward with amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act and then the committee can discuss it. It is not for the members of the opposition or for the House of Commons to say whether this problem is going to be discussed in the committee; it is for the government to say that. The government can introduce an amendment. The government knows full well what amendments are required. If there is any doubt at all, then let the committee discuss the matter and make a firm recommendation as to what are the best types of amendments to be made. The amendments suggested by the government can be discussed in the committee and, if necessary, can be modified. But the government is afraid to come forward with any amendment. The government is afraid to place an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act before the committee which it itself is recommending to be set up to consider such legislation as it may choose to place before the committee.

Let the government make the decision. Let the government now choose to bring forward an amendment which will relieve the doubt, uncertainty and suffering with which these old soldiers are now faced. The matter is up to the government. If the government refuses to measure up to its own challenge to place before this committee such legislation as it feels should be placed before it, then that government is guilty of most callous indifference and utter failure to realize the situation which is facing the veterans of Canada today. The government knows what is the situation. The government can bring in the legislation. If it fails to do so, I consider it to be an atrocious affront to the ex-servicemen of this country.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who was extremely anxious to hear what I was going to say, does not seem to be in the house. I have something to say which I am fairly sure he would like to hear. I cannot help recalling to the mind of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Pearkes) that I had the honour, a great many years ago—in 1917, I think it was—to occupy the next hospital bed in the field dressing station during the same week that the hon. gentleman won his Victoria Cross. My regard for the hon. gentleman was high then, and it is higher now, even though I think he has developed a louder voice in the subsequent 30 or 35 years.

If my hon. friend and my friends generally in the opposition were sincerely to forget party politics just for a minute I think we would all come to the conclusion that, in spite of all the things that we have done or left undone in this Canada of ours in the past 30 or 35 years, no one could ever accuse this country of being ungrateful to the men who served it in the theatres of war. I say that because there is not an hon. member in this house, there is not an intelligent citizen in the whole Dominion of Canada or, for that matter, in the entire British commonwealth, who does not know that Canada's veterans legislation is the best veterans legislation bar none in the entire world.

I know a little about veterans legislation from both ends, the giving end and the receiving end. I think that I have been in as many veterans hospitals as a patient as probably most hon. members in the house. I must say that I fooled the doctors a bit because after they had washed me up about 30 years ago and had given me only a few months to live I kept out of the hospitals for about 30 years. When I went back into the hospital last year, probably because of my very bad temper at the change of government in British Columbia, and stayed there for a couple of weeks to recuperate I could not help but be impressed by the fact that in the 30 years since I had been in that hospital the change in the whole veterans administration was really something wonderful. I venture to say that those of us who go next Sunday to see the opening of the wonderful new veterans hospital at Ste. Foy will come to the conclusion that there is not a finer hospital in the country and that the veterans hospitals are on a par with the very finest institutions in this land.

I am frank to confess that I would have preferred it if the government had made the terms of reference of the committee a bit wider. But as the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich suggests, any aggregation of men with good common sense and intelligence can always take terms of reference and interpret them liberally even if they are good, staunch, true blue Tories. I am sorry to say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could not have read the full text of my speech, part of which he quoted this afternoon.

Mr. Knowles: Oh yes, I did.

Mr. Philpott: If he had read in full the speech to which he referred this afternoon he would have seen that while I hoped the government would make the terms of reference wide open, I had had enough experience of the democratic process to know that intelligent people could take any terms of reference and pretty well say anything that requires to be said within those terms.

Mr. Brooks: I tried that this afternoon.

Mr. Philpott: When someone asked our own Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) at the United Nations one time whether such and such a question would come up I remember that he said he was quite sure that, regardless of the agenda, the delegates there would find ways and means to discuss anything that required to be discussed. Therefore I for one have no hesitation whatever in believing that the veterans affairs committee will be an intelligent committee and will find ways and means to discuss anything that falls within its common-sense purview, including the Legion brief or anybody else's brief.

I am sometimes a bit amazed at hon. friends opposite, especially hon. friends immediately opposite me, who always clamour to the high heavens for more welfare legislation. They are for everything so long as it does not have to be paid for. I remember what they said when we introduced the 40-hour week for the post offices.

[Mr. Philpott.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I realize now how right I was this afternoon when I asked that the rule of relevancy be observed. If there is a wide open discussion there will be rebuttals. I think the hon. member understands that on this resolution, which after all only involves a discussion of the desirability of appointing a committee, something that apparently meets with everybody's approval, his remarks should be relevant to the matter under discussion.

Mr. Philpott: May I say again how delighted I am—

Mr. Knowles: You see that you do have to stick to the terms of reference.

Mr. Philpott: —with the setting up of the veterans affairs committee. It seems to me that it is one more step in the creation and maintenance of the finest welfare state in the entire world, one other brick in the structure of which will be placed when we get the allowances this week for disabled persons.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, several times during this discussion hon. members have referred to the excellence of the legislation on our statute books concerning the problems of the veterans. No one, I think, is disputing that point and I see no need to continue to emphasize that particular aspect of the topic. Certainly those veterans of world war II, who have benefited from certain phases of the legislation, would agree 100 per cent. When I was discussing the veterans legislation with a certain group of individuals on one occasion they were quite surprised to discover that I had received benefits following the last war. One of them made the observation that perhaps the legislation would have been somewhat different if the government had thought that it was nurturing a viper in its bosom by means of the generous terms accorded to the veterans of world war II.

But I say that to emphasize that particular aspect in our discussion today is really begging the question. As I look at the resolution and try to interpret and understand the terms of reference from the point of view of how far they extend, it seems to me that they will narrow the scope of the veterans affairs committee, and that to do so is a retrograde step in the maintenance of the high level of veterans welfare legislation that we have already achieved in this country. I would suggest that the reason for the high quality of our veterans legislation is the fact, as was pointed out this afternoon by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Lennard), that the committees which considered this subject during the war had very broad terms of reference and were widely representative of all groups in the house. I submit that it is because of the wideness of those terms of reference that the legislation we have today was finally realized.

Looking at the resolution, it seems to me that we are moving away from that broader interpretation that has been so successful in the past. We cannot dwell on the past continually, and it is obvious there is some dissatisfaction concerning certain features of veterans legislation. The length of the discussion today would indicate that considerable pressure is building up. As I look at my mail from day to day I find in it letters pertaining to one or two controversial aspects of veterans legislation, and this would tend to suggest that there is some need for a more comprehensive consideration of the legislation than is indicated in the resolution before us this evening. With all the enthusiasm that I can muster I would support the representations of other hon. members that the terms of reference of the committee should be substantially broader than they now are.

Furthermore, I should like to support the suggestion that there should be a standing committee of this house on veterans affairs. I believe this as a result of my experience as a member during the past three years. I am discovering that a good deal of a member's time is spent in the consideration of veterans' welfare problems. I discovered further, as I discussed these matters with the members of the various departments, that there is a great duplication of the information requested concerning problems that arise repeatedly. I am sure that were a committee placed on a standing basis, the administrative officials would welcome the suggestion. It must be a source of great exasperation to them to be repeatedly considering the same problem, going over the same issues, when if we could get together at regular intervals we would find that these problems had assumed a general pattern and helpful solutions could be considered and a broader approach to these recurring difficulties could be realized. I would contend that if we had a standing committee it would have to be larger in terms of numerical membership than the committee indicated by this resolution. In this house there is a growing number of veteran members. I am sure there is not one of them who would not be anxious to have the opportunity to serve on a committee that might be dealing with such an important subject as the welfare of the veterans.

I do not need, Mr. Speaker, to re-emphasize the burning issue that has been repeatedly discussed today. The problem raised by every hon. member is that of changes in the basic rates and permissible earnings ceiling of war veterans allowances; that seems to be the crux of the controversy here this afternoon. I am sure much time could have been saved and this discussion could have been considerably abbreviated had the resolution, instead of referring obliquely to other legislation relating to veterans affairs, referred specifically to changes in the War Veterans Allowance Act. We could have then moved expeditiously to the establishment of the committee and there, in the close contact that is possible in deliberations of that kind, some successful solution could have been realized in regard to representations being made by all veterans groups concerning changes in the war veterans allowances.

I refer particularly, of course, to the work of the Canadian Legion in this respect. Again the Canadian Legion deserves much of the credit for the high quality of our veterans legislation. It is my hope that during the committee sessions we shall have an opportunity to hear from responsible representatives of the Canadian Legion. It would still be possible, as a result of those representations, to come to grips with the urgent need of doing something about the upward revision of the terms of the war veterans allowance.

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) is now well aware of the fact that the subject of veterans legislation is of serious importance to the members of this house. It is not a subject that can be introduced and disposed of in a few minutes. It is a subject that is treated with great seriousness by the members of this house and the people across the country.

I hope the minister realizes that there is great disappointment in his action in bringing this resolution to the attention of the House of Commons. It has been on the order paper for three months and we expected something different when the minister made his announcement on February 11 that the committee would be appointed. We thought then he was going to meet the demands that have been made from time to time in this house for a committee to consider all the problems affecting veterans. Instead of that we have a bit of camouflage in this resolution, and we have a so-called committee on veterans affairs that is really a special committee to deal with several bills affecting veterans.

According to the terms of reference, it is not intended that the committee shall look further afield and look into some of the pressing problems affecting veterans. The terms of reference are restricted. From time to time a request has been made for a standing committee on veterans affairs, and with good reason. People in the house today, and on other occasions, have mentioned the excellence of the veterans legislation in Canada. I do not question that at all. I have not had the opportunity of making comparisons that others have made. It may be excellent, but that does not say it could not be improved. The fact our veterans legislation is better than that of some other country is no reason for resting on our laurels and not making the necessary improvements.

Mr. Brooks: It has never been proved.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Royal suggests it has not been proved. I believe there are serious weaknesses in the veterans legislation. Perhaps those weaknesses are not in the charter but in the field of administration. This places the matter right before the minister. It is for that reason that a standing committee on veterans affairs, convened early in the session and given the opportunity to investigate the whole field of veterans legislation, would be able to find out the reason for the weaknesses that are only too apparent in the management of veterans affairs in Canada.

Let us just consider the need for investigating veterans problems. They are continuing problems. There are veterans of the first world war, ageing but many of them still alive. There are the veterans of the second world war and the veterans of Korea. Then for the first time in our history we have a large active army. We have no reason for too much confidence that there may not be other conflicts in which our young men may be engaged. We are faced, therefore, with veterans problems for many years in the future. So it is a matter of necessity that we carefully examine our veterans legislation and improve it from time to time to meet changed conditions. That is what has been asked for in this house. That is why we have objected to the terms of reference of this committee, which are so narrow. That is why we draw attention to the fact that one of the most pressing problems in Canada, that of war veterans allowances, is not being dealt with at this session.

Just consider the magnitude of the task with regard to veterans problems. Pensioners alone number 115,000, and each year applications are received for pensions, or for the reconsideration of pensions. An enormous amount of work is being carried out by departmental officials, by representatives of the Legion and by other organized veterans bodies across this country. I doubt if there is a member of the House of Commons who is not faced with some pressing veterans problems every month.

The magnitude of the task encourages us to press for an investigation of the veterans charter itself, and the administration thereunder. For example, last year there were 3,820 new awards for pensions. Of that number we are told 311 were for first-war applicants. Yet 35 years have elapsed since the conclusion of that war. Do we never solve the problems of the men of the first war, or do they have to die before the department is released from its bond?

One would have thought that by now, after all these years, there would be very few cases concerning veterans of the first war. What is the reason for the recurrence of these problems? Why are there so many of them? The report of the minister's department indicates that each year there are successive appeals, or applications for pensions by men of the first world war. These are followed by second hearings, by third hearings, by appeals and so on. The applications alone numbered more than four thousand in the last year. Of those a thousand were concerned with first war problems.

So I suggest that this is a matter of considerable magnitude. When we turn to the war veterans allowances branch we find again that the numbers are large. In the last 23 years 100,000 have been considered for war veterans allowances. The present figure is just under 40,000. Obviously soldiers of the first world war are dying off, so that from the financial point of view the problem is not as serious for the government. But the problem is still there. And with the men of the first world war now in their sixties and seventies—and I believe the average age is somewhere in the sixties—these are the ones requiring attention; and that attention should be given to them.

After 35 years surely we can meet this final obligation to men of the first world war, and settle this problem. But it is a problem to which the minister will not face up; because we know this question has been before the House of Commons year after year. We have been led to believe or have inferred that something would be done about it; yet once again nothing is being done. Hence the protest on this occasion concerning the narrow terms of reference in the resolution before us, and the attitude of the government toward this one problem affecting the veterans which, in the last two or three years, has become a problem of major importance. The number of men applying for war veterans allowances is increasing from year to year; but the number who remain on the roll does not get very much larger because the older ones are dying off.

This is the situation we are asking to have settled; and it can still be done. The minister can alter his terms of reference to suit the events of the moment. Other members of the House of Commons can join in the demand that the terms of reference be widened. It could still be done this year, so that these older men who have served their country so faithfully may receive their just reward. And let us not forget that that was the purpose and the intent of the veterans legislation. In the book published by the minister of veterans affairs who held office in 1947, the late Right Hon. Ian A. Mackenzie, at the back there is a chapter headed "The History of Veterans Legislation in Canada", and at page 285 I read these words:

"The Veterans Charter", states the Hon. Ian A. Mackenzie, K.C., M.P., Minister of Veterans Affairs, "grew in spirit, substance and final form, out of the hearts and minds of a united people dedicating themselves and the lives of their sons and daughters to victory. Its basic provisions were the result of a desire to deal in a just manner with all who served."

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to deal in a just manner with all who served we must approach the problem and get to grips with it. We have to have a committee that will deal broadly with all the problems of the veterans, a committee that will solve the problems of the older veterans and that of veterans allowances, a committee that will examine the whole system of the administration of this department, of the administration of the pension commission and of the veterans bureau, a committee that will determine what if anything is the matter—and I think there is something the matter—with veterans legislation itself, or the administration thereof.

Why are there so many cases each year? Why are there so many first hearings, second hearings, third hearings, fourth hearings and further hearings—and sometimes I notice that if you reach the fifth hearing you get results. But you do not get results on the first, second, third or fourth. Surely there is something wrong with our legislation or the interpretation thereof when it results in this type of extensive review of cases. Why is a case, which on its fifth hearing is settled favourably to the applicant, not settled at the first or second hearing? What is wrong? I cannot think new evidence is being brought forward, because everything is documented from the day a man enters the army until the day of his discharge. In some instances there may be new evidence; but I think the defect lies somewhere in the act, something that should be written into it, some interpretation of it that has to be revised. I find the pension commission and the veterans bureau have to deal with the problem of interpretation and put forth arguments as to how this or that phrase in the act may be interpreted. Are we informed of this body of interpretive law that is being built up with regard to the veterans charter? We would be if we had a standing committee on veterans affairs. These cases would be brought to our attention.

A standing committee on veterans affairs, looking closely into this matter, would ask for an interpretation of sections of acts that are not clear. Perhaps they would be able then to suggest amendments to the minister so the act could be clarified. By that means we would come not only to the assistance of the veterans themselves but also to the assistance of those people who are doing the hard work in the veterans bureau and in the pension commission. I am sure they would like to have some guidance from parliament in the solution of some of these borderline cases and some of the difficult problems that face them. I am not at all of the opinion that they are being too strict with veterans applications, or anything of that nature. They are bound by the instructions that they have to follow, and it is up to parliament itself to make those instructions broad enough and clear enough so that we do justice to those who served.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, that is the reason for this protest of mine against the action of the minister on this occasion. On February 11 he promised us a committee on veterans affairs, and he ended up three months later with a special committee to discuss two or three acts, with small amendments thereto, and avoided the main issue of all that has been before us during the last two years, namely, the problem of war veterans allowances, and he certainly avoided a broad investigation of the veterans charter itself and the administration thereof.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): I have been in this house a short while, but time seems to have passed very quickly. I have never been disappointed with the ministers of veterans affairs and the legislation they have brought in. The opposition are doing a pretty good job at this time in trying to show the weaknesses of this resolution, but I admit that they have a stiff job to prove it. I should like to ask the minister a question, which he can answer when he speaks to close the debate. In the resolution I find these words:

and such other legislation relating to veterans affairs as may be referred from time to time to the said committee.

My question to the minister is this: Can any member of the committee not stand up and ask that a veteran of the first war have his old age pension without a means test at 60? Can he ask that question and any other questions? This resolution is just as wide as the English language can make it, and the committee can ask any question. What is the business of the committee? What are they appointed for? Let them do their job and ask these questions of the minister, and I think we shall have legislation that the veterans of this country will be proud of.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the veterans and veterans organizations welcomed the government's notice some time ago that a special committee was to be set up to consider veterans legislation. Certain measures have been referred to that committee for consideration, such as the War Service Grants Act and a bill respecting benefits for the members of the Canadian forces, and perhaps one or two others. I know that the veterans and those associations are grateful for the legislation that has been brought in over the years, and without question it has brought many advantages to them. However, even if we admit that, we must also recognize the fact that they are far from satisfied with the present legislation on the statute books.

I discussed the matter with a number of the leaders of the Legion in various sections of my riding. They mentioned several things that they would like to see done, and other matters they would like to have considered. They find it difficult to understand why the government is not willing to accede to the request for a standing committee on veterans affairs, since we realize that these problems are with us and apparently will be with us for some considerable time.

It is the general feeling that if such a committee were set up it could deal with these problems as they arise. I am sure that veterans are going to be far from satisfied with the terms of reference of this particular committee. I may not fully understand the terms of reference, but it seems to me that some hon. members who have spoken this afternoon have said that the terms of reference are wide enough, or that we can get around them or under them or over them. That does not seem to fit in with my conception of terms of reference, and certainly this afternoon we were kept pretty close to the line. We were not permitted to discuss too much that went beyond the actual matters that were brought to us in this resolution, and it would seem to me that in the committee the same thing will happen. We will not be given too much latitude as far as discussing the other problems is concerned.

In my conversation with leaders of the Legion group they have mentioned several problems, and I am sure that the matters referred to the committee are not the major problems as far as the war veterans are concerned. They may be the concern of some, and I have no doubt they are, but I believe that once again the government is failing to face the problems and measure up to the expectations of the veterans and the veterans organizations.

Some major problems have been referred to today, and perhaps I could do no better than just say that I agree with the statement that certain things of paramount importance have been omitted. For instance, there is the matter of war veterans allowances, which we feel are far too low to meet the needs of men at this particular time, and at the present cost of living. I spoke to one particular leader who was on his way back to the coast. I am not sure of his name, but I think it was Williams. He told me that one of the things that helped the war veterans considerably was the fact that they could buy tinned meat so cheaply at the coast. He said it was a Godsend to them because they could not afford to buy fresh meat; they could not afford to buy the better type of meat and therefore they were living on the very cheapest that they could obtain. I feel that this is one of the problems of major concern, but apparently the government is not planning to give any consideration to the matter at all. I fear they will see to it that these terms of reference are tight enough to restrain anyone from dealing with it very effectively.

Another problem has been mentioned to me, namely, the problem of permissive ceiling, which again reminds us that at the present cost of living these ceilings are far too low. I would like to call attention if I could to some articles, but I suppose the Speaker would rule me out of order and therefore I shall refrain from referring to them. But I should like to ask by what process of reasoning is this ceiling maintained? Are we afraid that the veterans are going to get too rich? Just why do we maintain that ceiling on permissive incomes? I have heard it suggested that it is done to keep them more or less in line with the old age pensions and so on. Well, the same thing obtains there. I cannot see why it should be retained on the old age pension basis. I feel the veterans should be encouraged, rather than discouraged, to supplement their allowances to a point where they can maintain an adequate and a decent standard of living.

Another matter has been brought to my attention, and I believe that this could be considered and will be considered by the committee, since it falls within the terms of reference. I refer to the changes in the regulations relating to earned income. I have been given to understand that that regulation stipulates that 50 per cent of the gross revenue derived from agricultural operations shall be considered as income for the purpose of the War Veterans Allowance Act. Now, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why we should consider that regulation just and proper. However, I believe the Department of Veterans Affairs is giving consideration to this matter and I trust their ruling will be fair and equitable as far as the veteran engaged in agricultural activities is concerned.

There are other matters to which I would like to refer, Mr. Speaker, but I do not wish to presume on the time of the house. Nevertheless, I feel there are three reasons why at this particular time we ought to give serious consideration to the plight of the war veteran. I believe gratitude demands that something further be done for these men who have hazarded their lives in the defence of the things we hold dear. They were willing to sacrifice everything they had. They sacrificed in their own lives everything that was dear unto them, and they were willing and to all intents and purposes did lay down their lives, just as did others, in the defence of the sacred things we enjoy. Therefore, I would suggest that we take a look at this situation again and reconsider some of the major problems. We request that the minister give consideration to these problems at this particular time and deal with them more effectively than has been the case in the past.

Again, I believe it is our responsibility to see to it that these men have sufficient to maintain them in a decent standard of living. I say we are grateful to them, and our gratitude demands that we do something to discharge the responsibility which devolves upon this government at the present time in regard to these war veterans.

Finally, I believe there is one other consideration, namely that consistency demands that the government do something further for these men at this time. A short time ago legislation was introduced in this house which was bitterly opposed by some and supported by others. I happen to be a representative of a group which supported that particular legislation. All hon. members I believe will realize that I am referring to the recent increase in indemnity for members of parliament. The government introduced that legislation and it was approved and we are all much better off for it. I supported that legislation and the group to which I belong supported it, but I feel that because of that there is an added responsibility upon this government to deal with problems affecting our war veterans. I cannot speak for other hon. members but I can say that I received some letters which were far from complimentary, and I was charged with feathering my own nest, and being interested only in myself. But I assured these individual war veterans, old age pensioners and others that I was just as anxious and more anxious to do something for them than I was in doing something for myself.

In view of that I would urge the government that they shoulder this added responsibility which devolves upon them, and do something now for those who are less fortunate, those who have given so much and who are suffering so much in so many ways. I would urge the government to take note of the privations being suffered by these men and request the minister to give further consideration to this matter and bring in legislation at an early date which will deal effectively with this situation.

In closing I should like to read a letter addressed to the editor of the Vancouver Sun and signed "Old Vet". The letter reads as follows:

> We who are about to die salute you. I speak for the burnt-out pensioners between 70 and 90, first war men.
> We appeal to you and your intelligent readers against the action of the D.V.A. in reducing war veterans' allowances. We find as we go on the old age pension they cut our W.V. allowance as veterans to $20, making a maximum of $60 a month.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member started out with very good intentions, but I think in reading a letter into the record without divulging the source he is getting away from the rules. The hon. member is aware that he should not read documents, telegrams, or letters unless he is prepared to give the source. It may be that before I resumed the chair he had given the name of the person whose letter he is now reading.

Mr. Patterson: I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, that you have found it necessary to call me to order, but this letter was written to the editor of the Vancouver Sun and was signed "Old Vet". However, it goes on to say that because of the mere pittance upon which these men were forced to exist they could not pay for necessities, and because of lack of suitable clothing could not attend "the means of grace" on Sunday, and the letter urges that hon. members as they take their place in Ottawa support these people in their request.

Mr. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, like most of the veterans across this country I was very pleased when I saw this resolution appear on the order paper three months ago tomorrow. There was one reservation though with regard to it, and that was the fact that it did not specifically mention any legislation with the exception of the two bills which are to be referred to this committee when it is set up.

Nevertheless, there is a line in the resolution which reads:

. . . and such other legislation relating to veterans affairs as may be referred from time to time to the said committee . . .

This held out a hope in the minds of most veterans, especially those who are veterans of world war I, that the government during this session intended to present amendments to other veterans legislation which could be dealt with by this same committee.

As time went on it became more and more evident that in effect the terms of reference were not to be widened and, in addition, that this line as it relates to other legislation will probably be meaningless. Added to that there was the disappointment that this committee was merely to be a special committee for the session rather than a standing committee. I believe it is important that we should have a standing committee. I believe it is important that we should have a standing committee of this house on veterans affairs. After all, we in this country have perhaps a million and a half veterans from four different wars, veterans who served in different theatres of war in different circumstances, and it is very difficult to draft legislation which can be interpreted in a manner which will be fair to all. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, at this time I want to express my disappointment that this committee has not wider terms of reference which would allow it to examine the additional legislation which it was hoped this government would bring before parliament during this session.

It is not my intention to transgress the rules of the house by discussing in detail the legislation I believe should have been brought down at this session and referred to this committee. Therefore I conclude my remarks by saying that I hope to deal with some of these subjects when the estimates of the minister's department are before the committee of the whole house. The matter can be discussed more fully at that time, if in the meantime the minister does not relent and decide to bring in some additional amendments to some of the veterans legislation now on the statute books. The whole veteran body of this country hoped that such amendments would be brought down.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, a number of hon. members have mentioned the melancholy fact that it is 35 years since the first world war ended. I say "melancholy" because for those of us who are veterans of that war it brings to mind the unfortunate fact that we are now becoming old men.

Today at noon I took a walk on a pathway around these buildings. If the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) were here I would give him a piece of my mind about the condition of those paths. It is almost 40 years—39 to be precise—since I took that walk previously when I was in Ottawa waiting to go overseas in the first war. During these last few days, Mr. Speaker, knowing that this particular resolution was coming before us, I have been thinking of just what one should say in order to try to bring home to the members of the House of Commons of Canada the obligation they owe to the men who now survive from the first world war. Not many of us are left. Some of us, more by good luck than good guidance, are in a position in which we do not have to come to the people of Canada to enable us to live decently; but a great many are forced to come to the people of Canada.

I am going to suggest this to you, Mr. Speaker. A country such as Canada is today, in 1954—which is a far different country from the Canada of 1914—has no excuse whatever for niggardliness, caution or parsimony in the method of its treatment of the survivors of the first world war. I am not suggesting that those who went away from Canada in that distant summer of 1914 or 1915 were all heroes. We were not; we were ordinary, common human beings. However, I suggest this, Mr. Speaker. A vast number of those who came back from that war came back crippled physically or mentally or perhaps psychologically, and they were unable to find their place in a world to which they were not accustomed. Many of them perhaps, like myself, went into the army as mere boys, straight from school. We were not trained to find our way in a world of peace; we were trained to survive in a world of war. We were trained, in fact, to die and not to live. However, some of us survived and we had to learn how to live. It has not always been easy to do this.

I am going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the record of Canada with regard to the veterans of the first world war is not so noble and so high-minded as the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) would have us believe it to be. I realize, of course, that the hon. member for Vancouver South is the self-appointed leader of the Greek chorus of paeans of praise for everything the Liberal government does. Nevertheless, I am going to suggest that the Liberal government and its predecessors have not always been models of generosity. I am going to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that on occasion they have been deplorably mean and small-minded.

It has been stated here that the government has done a very good job with regard to veterans affairs. Undoubtedly it has done a fairly good job. Like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), I am not in a position to measure their accomplishments against those of other governments. However, I doubt whether Canada will stand so very far ahead of other nations of the world in that regard. I also greatly doubt whether our record is commensurate with our ability to carry out our obligations to those whom we asked to risk their lives in the service of this country. I am going to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) and this government if they really think that even the most extravagant demands from those who served Canada—those who, incidentally, not many years ago were practically promised the moon in exchange for their patriotic services—are going to break Canada? Do we really have to watch our pennies so carefully? As to every man who comes to us and says "You owe me a pension because I gave service in the armed forces of this country", do we have to be quite sure that he is not going to cheat us? Does it matter, Mr. Speaker? I for one would rather have the government and the people of Canada cheated by a hundred charlatans than to have one deserving case treated in a niggardly manner.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I would ask this government to take a second thought and to give us a wide-open committee, one which will have power to consider all the problems of the veterans of the first war, of the second world war and of the Korean war and to advance the most generous proposals. I suggest to you that the people of Canada will support their government in the most generous considerations they may make with regard to the situation of those whom we have called upon from time to time to risk their lives in the defence of this country and of the values for which this country stands. We cannot take one position when we are in danger and another when that danger has been removed.

I have never been able to forget an incident when a number of young men who had been wandering, homeless and destitute, across this country came to see me in Victoria to say good-bye before they left on the adventure of the second world war to defend a democracy that had given them destitution and a country which had had no use for their services. I cannot forget that those young men, nevertheless, went to deal for us with the appalling danger of the nazi menace to human civilization. I say this to you, Mr. Speaker. No matter what the circumstances of what any of those individuals may be or no matter how weak a character such a man may be in civilian life, you and I owe him a duty. We owe our self-respect a duty. I trust that this government, which is spending money with such a lavish hand on some extremely dubious enterprises for which I have yet to hear any reasonable justification, will on this occasion decide to listen perhaps to the voice of the opposition and to alter the terms of reference of this committee.

It may be, as the hon. member for Vancouver South says, that on this occasion, unlike all other occasions, this committee will be able to disregard its terms of reference. It may be that this Liberal government is different from other Liberal governments which I have faced in earlier times. But unless it is different I know very well that the committee will be held down rigidly to the very letter of the terms of reference, that no member will be allowed to stray one inch beyond. I am going to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this government and this parliament will not be discharging their responsibility to the people of Canada and to the veterans of the Canadian armed forces unless they insist that the terms of reference of the committee be widened and that the committee be constituted as a standing committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my recollection I have never spoken in this debate before. When I first had the honour of being a member of this house I felt that the affairs of veterans were in good hands. I think they were in good hands all through the house. The late Ian Mackenzie, who had much to do with them in those days, was a man of the widest sympathy who really made the cause of the veterans his own. And all through the house there were others. But I feel that tonight I should like to add a very few words. I hardly know why except I think as time goes on and as those of us with whom life has dealt more kindly meet the comrades of those years we realize more than we did then that those who were most useful in war are often not the most useful in peace. We remember them as they were then, how brave, how gay, how humorous, and we often meet them now and realize that they have not fared very well in life. I suppose that as we and they grow older that feeling grows.

There is only one point I want to make. It seems to me that there is a very small difference dividing us at the present time and that it could easily be resolved. What is being asked of the government is that they extend the terms of reference. I am not going into the merits of that. It has been adequately dealt with, I merely want to stress the fact that I think the difference is not a very great one. On the other hand, I think that for the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) to suggest that a committee that is appointed to deal with A, B and C could rollick along and deal with D, E and F is not very sensible. That does not seem to be a serious contribution to the debate because even a person who knows as little of the rules as I do knows that we would not get very far if we did that kind of thing.

On the other hand, I feel that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) was absolutely correct when he said this afternoon there were many in all parts of the house who would like to see this matter discussed in broad fashion. I think many people agreed with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he said that this was not a committee to deal with veterans affairs but a committee to deal with the War Service Grants Act and the bill respecting benefits for members of the Canadian forces. I think that was true. I repeat that I think the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was representing the feelings of the house when he said that there would be a widespread disposition to have the matter discussed. And why not? Has the government not got ample safeguards? They will of course have a majority on the committee itself which I take it will not be wholly deaf to their wishes. They will then have their majority in the house which also is not deaf to their wishes. Why in those circumstances should it not be possible to have this matter discussed freely, frankly and in broad terms?

No one is asking—at least, I am not and I do not think anyone else is—for a committee committed in advance. All that we are asking is that this matter, which I believe is dear to the hearts of every member of the house, should be discussed in wide-open fashion. I find myself somewhat embarrassed perhaps in suggesting what may involve extra expenditure, but I would just conclude these remarks with these words: If we find what the amount is, if we find that we think something more should be done, then whatever else we do, whatever other economies we make, we should not make economies at the expense of what is right and just to these men.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, in two terrible wars the noble youth of Canada have risen, marched, and stood, sufficient in their generation. But for their strivings, their sacrifices, and those of the hundreds of thousands of others from the vast expanses of the British Empire and commonwealth, we should not be sitting in this house today, or dwelling in the matchless land of Canada. The best we can possibly do is too little to compensate them for the measureless losses numbers of them have sustained. Considering the rich and varied wealth of production of which this nation is capable, and of which this nation has proved herself capable by actual achievement, the treatment that Canada has accorded to far too many of her veterans, right from the beginning, has been meagre, if not downright niggardly.

The requests of our veterans have in the main been moderate indeed. Their present requests are moderate. Take, for instance, the request that the war veterans allowance be raised to $60 a month for a single man. Who can possibly call that extreme? Take the request that the allowance be raised to $120 a month for a married man. I should like to see any member of the cabinet of Canada get out and try to live with a wife on $120 a a month. Far too many of our people have been raised with silver spoons in their mouths. They just do not know what it means to be up against rough going.

Mr. Harris: A good many of us have.

Mr. Blackmore: Take another instance, the request that the ceiling on permissive income be raised to $1,000 for a single man. To deny any man in Canada the privilege of earning as much as that is to subject him almost to slavery. The same is true of the request that permissive income be raised to $2,000 for a married man.

For years now I have been contemplating the treatment we have been giving our returned men. During recent sessions I have not voiced my disapproval to any great extent, although in former years I did. But it has always been a conundrum to me what could be the basic reason for the way we treat our men. Is it, Mr. Speaker, that some hidden hand behind the government of Canada is deliberately causing the Canadian government to mistreat our returned men so as to discourage the youth of the rising generation from joining the forces, thereby weakening the fighting potential of this nation? Could that be the reason? Certainly it is not financial. It is not the fact that we cannot produce enough. There must be some sinister, hidden reason.

Mr. Speaker, when you contrast the loyalty, the fervent devotion, faith and confidence with which the boys of my generation arose and flocked to the colours, then marched off to die, contrast it with the cynicism that prevailed far too commonly amongst the boys who entered world war II, and to a worse extent than that, prevails in the hearts of too many men today, you wonder how it can have come to be. They are of the selfsame blood, of the same race, bear the same names; they have over them the same flag. What has caused the appalling deterioration?

I do not propose to enter into that tonight. I suggest that if we desired to destroy this nation—I sometimes wonder if the members of the government do not want to do that—if we desired to destroy the British commonwealth, drag down the union jack and trample it in the mud or see some foreign people do that, I do not see how we could possibly guide ourselves more unerringly to that goal than we are doing in the way we are dealing with many of our returned men.

I am not saying that we are not giving many of the boys fine opportunities. I have been delighted with the consideration, the tenderness and the earnestness that I have seen manifested by the men in our departments when dealing with veterans. The difficulty is that the damage is done before these people ever get a chance. The damage is done when the bills are passed, the rules are drafted and the directives are issued.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Could the hon. member make these remarks when the estimates for the Department of Veterans Affairs are before the house? I have asked hon. members not to deal with veterans affairs generally, and I think they have been trying to do that. I know the hon. member wishes to conform with the rules, just as the others have. I do not want to be less generous in my attitude towards him than I was towards the others, but it seems to me we are getting rather far afield in the resolution stage of setting up a committee to study two bills and other legislation that may be brought before the house.

I do not want to have to intervene too often. I know it is always disagreeable, both to the hon. member who is being interrupted and to myself. I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the subject matter of the resolution.

Mr. Blackmore: I thank you most earnestly for your most gracious way of pointing out to me that I have been deviating. May I assure you that I shall discontinue, having left those questions for every hon. member in this house and every person in the country to answer.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): In rising to close the debate on this resolution to set up the committee on veterans affairs I feel that my remarks should be brief. I feel that first because I believe there are very few matters pertaining to the subject that have not been dealt with already by the speakers who have taken part in the debate. Secondly, any statement I might make in answer to the charges that have been levelled at the minister and the government on this particular resolution is limited by the ruling that you rendered this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

There are a few remarks, though, that I should like to make dealing with some of the points raised by hon. members. During the course of the debate everyone expressed particular pleasure, in a rather sarcastic manner, over the fact that this resolution had, at long last, been called. I do not feel I have to make any apologies in that respect, Mr. Speaker. I have explained to some hon. members privately when they asked me the reason for the delay in calling this resolution. Some of the legislation the government wants to introduce, and which will be introduced in a few days I hope, is still in the drafting process. This is something of a technical character. The amendments to the Veterans Land Act are rather lengthy, and in the face of a considerable amount of work the staff whose special work it is to draft this legislation has not been able to produce the bill within the time I had hoped.

I have felt, and I think rightly, it would be preferable to wait until I was sure I would not have to bring the committee together to study some of the legislation, and then postpone further hearings for a matter of weeks. One of the reasons for this is that in the past it has been the practice of national veterans organizations to come before the committee to express their views on matters which interest them, regardless of the terms of reference.

These gentlemen come from all parts of Canada and so I felt it would be more appropriate to wait until I could bring all the legislation before the committee and have these groups make only one trip to Ottawa to make their representations to the committee. I feel I have no apologies to make for this.

Many members have expressed the view that the government should accede to the demand made in the last few years that the veterans affairs committee should be a standing committee, that is a committee under standing order 63. I believe that the whole matter of parliamentary committees is one of the subjects being studied by the rules committee which has been set up to look into the rules, standing orders and procedure of the house. I believe this committee is inquiring into the whole structure of parliamentary committees and reporting upon them. I have no doubt if that committee, of which many of those who spoke are members, does make such a recommendation the government will certainly give it most serious consideration.

I might point out, however, that I believe some hon. members, in making that suggestion, have in mind an objective that might not be accomplished simply by setting up a standing committee on veterans affairs. I am not an expert on parliamentary procedure, but I have no doubt that if my assumptions are wrong hon. members opposite, and particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), will set me straight.

My understanding is that a parliamentary committee, whether it is a special select committee or a standing committee, can deal only with matters that are referred to it by the House of Commons. And the fact that our standing orders might be amended so that the veterans affairs committee would be made a standing committee would not necessarily mean that this committee each year, on its own authority, could investigate and inquire into every phase of veterans legislation, and report upon it to the House of Commons. I think this should be remembered. However, as I say, I have no particular views to propose on the matter. I have no doubt that this and other committees are subjects which will be looked into and reported upon by the rules committee of the house.

Hon. members have complained considerably of the fact that the terms of reference of this committee are very restricted. I believe it was the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green)—and if I am wrong I should be pleased to be corrected—who said that the only bills mentioned were minor amendments. He intimated that the Veterans Benefit Act and the War Service Grants Act amendments were minor.

Mr. Green: On a point of order; I did not say that.

Mr. Lapointe: I am sorry, then; I was not sure. Then, I think it was the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) who said that.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. Brooks: No, I did not say they were minor amendments. I said they were not as important as the minister tried to make out they were, as compared with other amendments.

Mr. Knowles: Try again.

Mr. Lapointe: I think the record will show that the hon. member used the word "minor". However, I am willing to accept his correction. I would like to point out that these bills, as I said earlier, are the bills which put into statutory form the various legislation applicable to Korean veterans. I recall very well that when the Veterans Benefit Act was introduced in the house by myself on the first occasion hon. members asked why these provisions were not put into statutory form, and why the legislation was going to be carried out by orders in council. I explained at the time that it was necessary and that it would make it more flexible. I pointed out that we did not know yet just what the circumstances of the service would be. And when each year I introduced a bill to continue the powers of the governor in council under the Veterans Benefit Act, to implement those provisions, I was told that it should be put in statutory form. Now hon. members say that it is minor legislation which really did not require the creation of a veterans affairs committee.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is other legislation of equal importance. On the order paper there stands a bill to amend the Pension Act. The resolution has already been passed, and second reading of the bill was called for today and would have been proceeded with if this debate had not continued all day.

I might point out to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), who in his criticism of the resolution mentioned various aspects of the Pension Act and regretted what he considered a restriction in the terms of reference of the committee, that there is a bill concerning the Pension Act that will be referred to that committee. He will be able there to inquire into each one of the points he mentioned when he was making his criticism of the terms of reference.

Then, as I pointed out earlier there is legislation concerning the Veterans Land Act. I hope to be able to introduce it in a few days. I am awaiting final draft from the legal experts.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that in the past the veterans in this country have benefited by the joint work of all members of the House of Commons who have served on veterans affairs committees. They have done good work over those many years under terms of reference that have varied greatly. When

hon. members say that only in the last few years have the terms of reference for veterans affairs committees been restricted, I would suggest that they go right back to the first committees which were set up after the first world war and find out for themselves what the terms of reference were. If they will read the reports of those committees they will find that most of the subjects which this committee will be able to discuss, when it is appointed and nominated, were not and could not be discussed under those terms of reference.

I hope we will be able—and I see no reason why we should not—to continue to work in the veterans affairs committee as we have done in the past, in that same spirit of co-operation, and with the same aim as previous committees have had, namely the general welfare of all the veterans in this country.

Mr. Pearkes: One question; has the minister nothing to say about the omission of the War Veterans Allowance Act in this resolution?

Mr. Knowles: Silence.

Mr. Drew: The silence speaks for itself.

Motion agreed to.

Business of the House

PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the special committee on legislation relating to veterans affairs, appointed this day, consist of the following members: Messrs. Balcom, Bennett (Grey North), Brooks, Cardin, Cavers, Croll, Dickey, Dinsdale, Enfield, Forgie, Gauthier (Portneuf), Gillis, Goode, Green, Hanna, Harkness, Henderson, Herridge, Jones, MacDougall, MacLean, Murphy (Westmorland), Nesbitt, Philpott, Quelch, Roberge, Stick, Thomas, Tucker, Weaver and Weselak.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we will take second reading of the bill to amend the Pension Act; then the resolution with respect to the extensions of the Canadian National Railways; then another resolution in the name of the Minister of Transport with respect to the control of goods in bulk; then the resolution in the name of the Secretary of State with respect to inventions by public servants; and then the resolution to approve the Japanese trade tready. If, however, not all those items are carried during the day, we will continue on Wednesday with the resolution concerning the Japanese trade treaty.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 11, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SEASONAL UNEMPLOYMENT—RECOMMENDATIONS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, yet in a position to table in the house the recommendations made to him by a committee of the national advisory council on manpower for the minimizing of seasonal unemployment? Can the minister say whether any action will be taken on these recommendations?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of this question. The report to which he refers, I take it, is a report prepared recently by the national employment committee at the request of the national advisory council on manpower. The report itself is based upon a survey conducted by quite a number of people, including manufacturers associations, labour organizations, our own department and so on. Copies of both of these documents are now going to members of the committees who were especially active in preparing them. I have not thought of tabling them. They are quite lengthy documents, but I am prepared to make copies available to any member of the house who would care to apply to my office.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES IN ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, inform the house as to what steps, if any, the government has taken to direct an inquiry into the activities of that part of the Department of Public Works charged with the responsibility for the supervision of the trans-Canada highway?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I shall have to take the hon. gentleman's question as notice and consider its terms because I would not be in a position to make any intelligent answer at this moment.

Mr. Drew: I presume the Prime Minister is aware of the circumstances to which my question relates.

Mr. St. Laurent: No, I am not.

Mr. Drew: If the Prime Minister is not, I would direct him to today's press, and suggest that along with the notice I have already given him he make inquiries as to whether the department was not well aware of the fact there were reasons for inquiry, which have now become evident?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Perhaps I could say a word. I am familiar with developments, and have been for some time. The situation is that the Ontario government has run into difficulties with some of the employees of its department of highways. Some of the difficulties relate to the construction of the trans-Canada highway, and of course the federal government is responsible for half of the cost of the trans-Canada highway. The federal government's responsibility relates to seeing that the highway, when completed, conforms to the geometric specifications set forth in the trans-Canada highway agreement. The responsibility for constructing the highway rests with the provincial government, as all hon. members know.

When the Ontario government informed us that they were suspicious of the operations of some of their people, we at once called in the federal engineers who had opportunities of being in association with the people who, the Ontario government indicated, were under suspicion. Subsequently, we summoned the gentleman to whom I am sure my hon. friend has reference to Toronto and gave the attorneys for the Ontario department of highways an opportunity to question this gentleman. We have not been informed by the department of highways or anybody in the Ontario government as to his arrest or what the purpose of it is. It may well be that it does not relate to any operation concerning the federal government. That is the position to date, and until the government of Ontario informs us just what is behind this warrant for the arrest of one of the employees of the trans-Canada division of the Department of Public Works, I will not be in a position to answer the question further.

Mr. Drew: Is it not correct that the inspectors of the trans-Canada highway division of the Department of Public Works have the responsibility of examining plans, and in respect of which they approve payment?

Mr. Winters: No, that is the responsibility of the provincial government. The responsibility of the federal government is to see to it that the road, when finished, conforms to the specifications laid down in the agreement for the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Drew: So, there is no check on the cost, if that is correct?

Mr. Winters: As my hon. friend knows, when one enters into a partnership with a provincial government, there must be some element of mutual confidence. We naturally assumed that the Ontario government would discharge its responsibilities to the people it represents, in the same manner that I like to think we discharge our duties to the people we represent. We have, as my hon. friend knows, and as I indicated at the outset several months ago, stopped all payments for those areas in which there were alleged irregularities. There are sufficient funds held back by the federal treasury in respect of these contracts to pay any possible deficiencies that could occur because of irregularities.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I would direct simply this question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it correct that the inspectors charged with the responsibility of passing on plans in different sections of the trans-Canada highway are therefore not asked to go in any way behind the plan that is placed before them?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered the question.

Mr. Drew: No, you have not.

Mr. Winters: I think I have delineated the federal government's responsibility. Of course we require the provincial governments to deliver a highway that meets the specifications. They know that; we know that; our inspectors know that; and the provincial engineers know that. They know full well what their responsibility is. I do not see any evidence on the part of the province of Ontario that they are avoiding their responsibilities.

[Mr. Winters.]

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY INTO RESIDENCE OF HAROLD C. BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can the minister say whether a board of inquiry has yet been set up to investigate the residence of Mr. Harold C. Banks?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Fairclough: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it contemplated that a board of inquiry will be set up?

Mr. Harris: It is being studied, having in mind the fact that the Immigration Act has been changed since he came here.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR ADOPTED CHILDREN, CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. 339, to amend the Pension Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned when I moved the resolution preceding this bill, it is the intention of the government when second reading has been given to the bill to move that it be referred to the special committee on veterans affairs. During the course of the debate on the resolution I indicated the broad lines of the bill and at this stage I do not think that I can add very much to the statement I made at that time.

I appreciate the fact that during the course of that debate most hon. members who spoke indicated their approval of the contents of the legislation. Some objections were raised and specific points in the Pension Act were brought up by hon. members. However I think I am right in saying that the principal objection brought forward by some hon. members of the opposition was to a section which I indicated would be included in the bill and which would have the effect of having the salaries of members of the Canadian pension commission determined by order in council rather than by statute.

Some hon. members expressed the fear that by so doing members of the pension commission would be subject to some pressure on the part of the cabinet. It was suggested that individual members of the commission would be under the cabinet's thumb. I think I explained at the time that the purpose of the amendment was to make the act more flexible as regards this particular subject so that when a general raise occurred in the salaries of the public service the members of the commission could be given the advantage of such general raise without the matter having to be brought before the house and a bill introduced for this purpose.

It was suggested that the independence of the commission might be affected. I can assure hon. members of this house that there is nothing further from my mind or from the minds of my colleagues in the cabinet. However, I may say to the house that if the committee on veterans affairs, while studying this bill, should wish to move an amendment which would eliminate any such fear, perhaps it could be done. I have in mind an amendment which might specify, for instance, that the salaries of all members of the commission would be uniform. The government would be quite willing to accept such an amendment and I think that would take away the fears which hon. members may have on this subject.

Outside of this I do not think there is much more I can add to the statement which I made on the resolution.

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the further explanation he has given of this bill the principle of which, as he says, was discussed at considerable length when the resolution was before the house. It is not my intention to make prolonged remarks with regard to this bill. As I say, the principle of the bill was discussed on March 4 at the resolution stage and we will have an opportunity to discuss it in the committee which has been set up to deal with veterans matters.

At the hearings of that committee we will have an opportunity to hear representatives of the Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations with regard to different sections of the bill. We shall also have before us officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs who will explain the different sections of the bill. In that way we will have the opportunity of better understanding the sections of the bill.

When I was speaking on the resolution I told the minister that there was general agreement with regard to the different principles which had been enunciated, and I think that was the general opinion of practically all hon. members who spoke. I know objection will be taken to some sections, which I shall not indicate now. There are some sections being deleted which we feel should not be deleted, and I refer to those having to do with the extensions of time given to veterans of the second world war for the preparation of their cases to be sent to the commission and of their applications for pension.

Some problems are not being considered, and I am sure they should be. It is not my intention this afternoon to discuss them. I know that the Canadian Legion will be before the committee and they will outline some of the problems which we believe should be considered further by this veterans committee, and hon. members will do the same.

The minister has mentioned the fact that the principle in the bill, which was objected to strenuously when the resolution was before the house, is that which dealt with salaries for the chairman, vice-chairman and commissioners being fixed by the governor in council. This matter was discussed nearly three months ago, Mr. Speaker. At that time there was a heated debate in the house, and I had really hoped, and I am sure other hon. members had, that that section would not appear in the bill. The minister tells us that the bill will be sent to the committee with the section included; but, if the committee so desires, it can recommend an amendment.

In my opinion the amendment that he suggests does not go as far as it should. The governor in council should not have the responsibility for fixing salaries. As I said before, this subject will be thoroughly discussed in the committee, but again I should like to point out, as was pointed out by hon. members when the resolution was under discussion, we feel that it does take away from the independence of the commission to have their salaries fixed by order in council. We also feel that it interferes with the supremacy of parliament to have salaries fixed by the governor in council. I know, and all hon. members who have anything to do with veterans affairs or veterans pensions know, that when an application for a pension is made the applicant thinks of the government as being on one side and of himself on the other. He thinks of the government possibly trying to save money by not giving him as large a pension as he thinks he should have. He, being on the other side, feels that he is trying to get justice. In between the governor in council and the individual is the commission, which in his mind, and I am sure in the minds of all, should be absolutely independent. This is the great objection that we take to this particular clause.

The pensioner feels that there should not be even the appearance of any obligation of this commission to the governor in council. This matter will be urged and argued and I hope the minister does not think that the amendment which he suggested this afternoon will be the only one which this committee can consider. I am satisfied that some members of the committee at least will desire to make such an amendment as will delete entirely this section from the bill, as I feel it should be.

I am not going to discuss this matter further this afternoon. The bill is to go before the veterans committee, and all the sections and principles will be thoroughly discussed at that time.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): I do not know whether something is wrong with these microphones, but I could not even sort out what the hon. member was saying. I just mention that because you, Mr. Speaker, had a demonstration made, but they are not very good in this corner.

I am not going to discuss the bill in detail either. It is going to the committee. We do not disagree very much with the amendments that are proposed, with the one exception. There are a lot of grievances. They are not very great, but they are sore spots for the people affected. I might mention the means test in a dependent's pension when you reach the age of 70, but we shall go into the details in committee.

The fact that this bill opens up to some extent the Pension Act will likely give us an opportunity of discussing many of the details that I have in mind. I just make these observations because I am a member of the committee. I think it would be a waste of time for me to start arguing now on the details of the bill. If I did that, Mr. Speaker would stop me and he would likely make a twenty-five minute speech and a lot of time would be wasted. Any further comments I have to make on the bill will be made when we are in committee.

I agree with the principle of the bill, and that is all that is before us now. I agree with the principle of amending the Canadian Pension Act, and I shall reserve whatever criticism I have for the bill in committee and maybe in the house later.

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin): Along with the hon. member for Royal, I hope that when this bill goes before the veterans committee we will not be held too closely to the amendments contained in the bill. I hope it will give us the opportunity to dig rather deep into the Pension Act and to make recommendations other than those contained in the bill now before us.

Along with other members who have spoken, I agree with most of the amendments suggested, but I do not think many of them go far enough. If the terms of reference are to be such that we have to adhere strictly to the amendments, then I do not think they do go far enough. I do not intend to discuss the bill except to say that probably I shall have more to say on it in committee. We are pleased to have the opportunity to get back into the veterans committee, although on a previous occasion I indicated what I thought of the amendments. We can work on this and other bills and, as I said before, I shall have more to say at that time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the special committee on veterans affairs.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ST. FELICIEN AND HILLSPORT LINES—PROVISION FOR FINANCING

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a measure conferring authority upon the governor in council to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to construct lines of railway from St. Felicien to Chibougamau and from Chibougamau to Beattyville, all in the province of Quebec, and from Hillsport on the main line of the Canadian National Railways to Manitouwadge lake, both in the province of Ontario, being on the whole approximately 321 miles at a total estimated expenditure of $38,750,000. The measure will make provision for the issue by the company of securities, which may be guaranteed by the government in respect of the cost of construction. To enable the company to proceed with construction forthwith, temporary loans may be made to the company out of the consolidated revenue fund, upon terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council and secured by company securities.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Green: Will the minister explain this resolution?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. This resolution seeks to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to construct a branch line from St. Felicien to Chibougamau and from Chibougamau to Beattyville, all within the province of Quebec, a distance of approximately 294 miles, and a branch line from Hillsport to lake Manitouwadge in the province of Ontario, a distance of approximately 27 miles.

Dealing first with the proposed branch line between St. Felicien and Beattyville including the short line to Chibougamau, this line of railway would commence at Beattyville, the present terminus of the Barraute branch line constructed in 1949, and would run in a northeasterly direction to Cache lake, a distance of approximately 149 miles. From Cache lake the line would run in a south-easterly direction approximately 139 miles to St. Felicien on the Canadian National Railways line in the Lake St. John area. At the Cache lake junction the line would extend northerly a distance of six miles to Chibougamau.

The estimated cost of constructing that part of the proposed line which would run from Beattyville to Cache lake is $17 million. The line from Cache lake to St. Felicien would cost another $17 million, and the short branch line from Cache lake to Chibougamau $1 million, making the total estimated cost of the line $35 million.

During the summer of 1953 the Canadian National Railways made a preliminary survey and established an exploratory line for the purpose of locating a line from St. Felicien to Beattyville. The whole area is heavily timbered throughout its entire length. The area between Beattyville and Chibougamau is staked out as mining claims with excellent promise of development. Among these mining properties are the Dome property at Bachelor lake and the already proven Opemiska and Campbell Chibougamau properties near Chibougamau. The whole territory between Beattyville and Chibougamau is favourable prospecting ground. The country throughout, excepting the immediate Chibougamau area, is heavily timbered and offers large quantities of mill size and pulp timber. The forest resources of the area between Beattyville and Chibougamau are very large, estimated at over 30,000,000 cords of pulpwood and capable of a sustained annual yield of about 617,000 cords. Most of this forest wealth will be tapped by the railway.

The bulk of the prospective traffic on this part of the proposed line would consist of mining concentrates moving to the Noranda smelter, as well as pulpwood and timber. The railway has obtained a guarantee from Opemiska Copper Mines (Quebec) Limited, and Campbell Chibougamau Mines Limited, under which these two companies guarantee shipment of a daily average of 325 tons of ore concentrates over the proposed line from Chibougamau to Beattyville, for a period of six years from the date the line will begin to operate. The Howard Smith paper interests have undertaken to guarantee the movement of 30,000 cords of pulpwood per year for a period of six years from the area between the Bell river and Chibougamau.

The area which would be traversed by that part of the proposed line running from Cache lake to St. Felicien is heavily forested with an estimated 15·7 million cords of pulpwood, capable of sustaining an annual yield of 366,000 cords. Traffic for this part of the line would consist mostly of lumber, pulpwood and supplies.

From an industrial point of view the economic development of the industrial area in the Lake St. John district, with availability of cheap hydroelectric power and convenient access to a seaport, would stimulate the opening up of the territory to be served by this line and increase the rail traffic.

The directors of the railway consider that the construction of this part of the proposed line is in the general interests of Canada. The Chibougamau area has been traditionally connected with the Lake St. John area. Developments in the Chibougamau area depend upon transportation by highway from St. Felicien. The large resources of hydroelectric power available in the Lake St. John area and the trend of industrialization make it practically certain that the natural resources of Chibougamau and of the Abitibi district should lead to industrial development in the Lake St. John area. If railway connection is afforded it is also likely that electro-metallurgical industry will develop in the Lake St. John district drawing its raw materials from the mines in the Chibougamau-Abitibi areas. It must also be considered that the port of Chicoutimi situated at the head of navigation on the Saguenay river has a legitimate claim to a hinterland. At the present time the influence of the port of Chicoutimi extends only to the Lake St. John basin. With the construction of the line from St. Felicien westward to join with a line from Beattyville to Chibougamau, the influence of Chicoutimi would extend not only to the Chibougamau area but would also embrace the Abitibi area.

The government and the railway management regard the construction of this whole line from Beattyville and St. Felicien to Chibougamau as a good development in the general interests of Canada, even though the probable traffic over the next few years does not appear to be sufficient to make the whole line profitable without some element of subsidy. Some subsidy on such a line may well be justified as it was in the case of the northward extension of the Pacific Great Eastern in 1949, but the government has not yet been convinced that any departure from the practices and policies of the past with respect to the amount of subsidy paid to assist in further railway construction is necessary or would be justified in the general interests of Canada. The directors of the railway have satisfied the government that the immediate prospective amount of traffic warrants commencement of construction from the western end of the proposed line forthwith, in order that the development of the timber resources on the western part of the line can proceed as soon as possible, as well as the development of the mining properties in the Chibougamau area and other properties in the promising area opened up by this portion of the line. It is expected that by the time the proposed line is completed from the western end into Chibougamau, if not before, projects for new industrial development in the Lake St. John-Saguenay area which are now being considered by prospective investors will have reached a stage which will justify the construction of this line and a decision can then be reached about any subsidy required and warranted in respect of the line. In the meantime, the Canadian National Railways will proceed to assist and encourage further developments in the Lake St. John-Saguenay region as a means for building up potential traffic for this new line.

Secondly, with respect to the proposed branch line to Manitouwadge in the lake Superior area in the province of Ontario, this line would commence at Hillsport, a point on the Canadian National Railways 42 miles west of Hornepayne and would run in a southerly direction to lake Manitouwadge, a distance of approximately 27 miles. The estimated cost of the proposed line to lake Manitouwadge is $3,750,000.

Recent discoveries of copper, zinc and silver deposits of major proportions have been made in the Port Arthur mining district of Ontario in the vicinity of lake Manitouwadge, about 25 miles south of the main line of the Canadian National Railways. It appears that at the present early stage of development one large mine is assured and two relatively small mines are anticipated. In the expectation that further development will confirm the early promise of this area, the railway desires to be in a position to give prompt service to the interests who are developing the property and will be requiring transportation in 1955.

Up to the present, access by air has been from Geraldton. Supplies were initially moved from points on the Canadian National over roads of the Marathon Paper Company to a point about 12 miles west of the Geco property and thence by tractor trail through the bush. At the present time the main access route is by way of a road of the Ontario Paper Company from a point near Hemlo to within 10 miles of the Geco property.

It is quite conceivable that the Manitouwadge area will produce ore at the rate of 10,000 tons per day and that this would involve inbound traffic of mining supplies and general merchandise estimated at 60,000 tons per year with the system earnings estimated at $1,900,000. The total outbound traffic, if fully realized, would amount to an estimated 665,000 tons per year, with system revenues of about $4 million, making potential system earnings of $6 million per annum.

It seems apparent that the proposed branch line would be a profitable addition to the Canadian National Railways, and that only a fraction of the potential mine production of the area would be required to justify the construction of this branch line. The construction of the proposed line would be contingent upon the railway company's appraisal of the traffic to be expected and the assurances as to the development of mines in the area. The president of the railway company anticipates that this development will justify construction of the proposed branch line commencing in the fall of this year.

The growth of Canada is proceeding rapidly and it is fitting that the Canadian National Railways should continue to play a great part in the development of the country.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the report just presented by the Minister of Transport has been very interesting, very hopeful. When the bill has been given second reading I presume it will be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines so that we may have the opportunity of examining the railway officials and of finding out all the details in connection with these proposed extensions. In any event, I place that suggestion before the minister and I hope he will agree to that course being followed. It has been the practice to refer these bills to that committee. In fact, during the present session the bill which was introduced by the Canadian Pacific Railway was referred to and dealt with by that standing committee.

To the official opposition the proposed extensions seem to be in the best interests of the nation. They are based primarily on mineral development in Canada's pre-Cambrian shield which, of course, is one of our great sources of wealth. I was interested today to hear the minister describe the forest assets in the Chibougamau area as well. I had not realized that so much pulp timber was available. I had thought that these extensions depended almost entirely on the mineral wealth of the areas through which they would run.

The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys tell me that in the Chibougamau area there is now one producing mine known as Opemiska Copper Mines Limited. The minister referred to it in his opening remarks. I am told that the production through the mill in December of last year was about 400 tons of ore a day, the ore being largely copper with a small gold content. Then there is another property, namely Campbell Chibougamau Mines Limited which is not yet in the production stage but which I understand is planning to mill 1,700 tons a day. There again the ore is largely copper with a small gold content. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys report a further promising property known as Chibougamau Explorers which, however, has not yet developed to the stage where one can forecast the amount of production.

There is one other feature about this Chibougamau development which the minister did not mention, namely the fact that the Eastern Smelting and Refining Company Limited is to build a nickel-copper smelter and refinery at Chicoutimi. I may have misunderstood him, but I did not hear him make any reference whatever to such a plant.

Mr. Chevrier: I was keeping that in reserve.

Mr. Green: The minister says he was keeping that in reserve. May I say that I brought it out into the open?

Mr. Macdonnell: Are there any other reserves?

Mr. Green: Yes; has the minister any other reserves?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, indeed; quite a number.

Mr. Green: This plant too is extremely important. As a party, Conservatives believe that these resources should be used in Canada to the maximum possible extent in order to provide work for the Canadian people. We hope this ore will be smelted in Canada. Chicoutimi is one of the national harbours of Canada and we should be extremely glad to see it get this additional development.

I was somewhat concerned about the minister's statement that the work on the line from Chibougamau to St. Felicien is to be delayed. Apparently it is not the intention to start building from both ends at once, a procedure which would seem to be the ordinary one in the construction of these branch lines. If I followed the minister correctly, the plan is to build from Beattyville up to Chibougamau this year and then to let the other part of the line, which is 139 miles in length, wait until it can be ascertained whether or not construction should be carried out. If this plan is as good as the minister makes out it is, I can see no reason why the whole railway should not be built right through from Beattyville to St. Felicien, and the whole job finished rather than having half of it done and then letting the other half wait until perhaps some time later on when it might be done. That procedure does not seem to be a particularly satisfactory one.

The minister intimated that the Canadian National Railways have investigated this whole development and have received guarantees of traffic from different industries. That is a wise course to follow and it is the course which they followed in connection with the extension from Sherridon to Lynn Lake in northern Manitoba and from Terrace to Kitimat on the west coast. It seems to be the plan followed now by the railways whenever they put in an extension. The Canadian Pacific Railway also had a guarantee before they asked for a bill permitting them to build a branch line from Havelock to Nephton in the province of Ontario. But when the minister came to the branch line in Ontario from Hillsport to Manitouwadge lake, he said nothing whatever about any guarantees from the industries in that area. Apparently the railway company has not obtained any guarantee of traffic from those industries. The reason may be that they consider there is going to be so much traffic anyway that it is unnecessary to get a guarantee. However, I would ask the minister to explain to the committee, before this resolution goes through, just why it is that no guarantee has been obtained in that case.

I realize that the Manitouwadge lake area is a promising district as well. I understand that the main property there is owned by a company known as General Engineering Company and that though they are not yet in production they hope to produce 5,000 tons of concentrates a day. There the minerals are copper, zinc and silver. I also understand that the officials of that company gave evidence before a committee of the Ontario legislature this spring to the effect that the number of employees would run between 750 and 1,750 and that in from 5 to 15 years the town is expected to have a population of from 5,000 to 15,000 people. This is therefore no small development. I also understand that by February of this year, which was only a short time after the initial discovery, 3,600 claims had been staked in this area over a length of 70 miles. This looks like an extremely wealthy mineral area.

I hope that the members of the House of Commons and the Canadian people, in their thinking, are now past the stage where they do not want any more railways built. For a good many years that has been the attitude, that because Canada had overbuilt in the earlier part of this century we should put a stop to building further railways. Because of that attitude of mind it has been very difficult to get railways built where they should be built. But now we seem to be getting into a new era where we are willing to have railways built in the areas that need development. I have here the report of the royal commission on transportation, known as the Turgeon commission, which reported three years ago in 1951. They dealt with the Chibougamau lake project. The reference will be found at page 133 and I propose to read what they had to say. It reads as follows:

In the year 1948 the Canadian National Railways completed the construction of a line about forty miles in length from Barraute to Rapide des Cedres in the Abitibi region, Quebec. The representative of the Abitibi economic planning council appeared before the commission to submit that the Canadian National Railways should continue construction to Chibougamau lake, through Bachelor lake, a distance of about 165 miles. The commission has since been informed that the Canadian National Railway Company is considering this matter and is awaiting further information to decide whether potential traffic will warrant the building of the extension.

It has taken six years to get around to the building of this extension. In the meantime apparently the government of Quebec has built a road from lake St. John to the Chibougamau region, and I think should be given great credit for its development work in the northern part of Quebec. The same is true of course of the government of Ontario. They have been very progressive in their approach to the development of the northern part of their province. These two great provinces of Canada have set the rest of the country a very good example in the way in which they have gone about the development of their northern territories.

The commission made a general recommendation respecting the building of new railways in Canada which I think sets out what should be the policy of any Canadian government. It is to be found at page 130 of the report. First of all they refer to the situation in the United States which is a good deal different from that pertaining in Canada because the Americans have not a great area to the north that has not yet been opened up. In Canada by far the largest part of our territory is north of that part of the country where most of the people live. The commission had this to say:

In Canada the situation is somewhat different. There is still room for railway expansion where it is called for by the needs of settlers already established in productive areas or by the necessity of making available new areas possessing mineral and other natural resources attainable only by railway. It seems to be generally assumed that most, if not all, railway expansion in the foreseeable future will be carried on by the government of Canada or by the Canadian National Railways which the government owns.

[Mr. Green.]

Incidentally, I do not think I would go as far as to say that the C.N.R. has to build all the new lines. The report continues:

The day of ill-conceived and therefore excessive construction seems to have gone by, and our people can feel reasonably assured that from now on no railway ventures will be undertaken excepting after thorough investigation of each project and always with due regard to the financial commitments involved.

The extensions covered by this resolution seem to qualify under the terms of this recommendation of the commission. I think that some day, Mr. Chairman, we will have to have a railway right across the northern part of Canada. Perhaps that would not be necessary across northern Ontario or northern Quebec, but in western Canada I think, after most of us are gone from the scene, there will be a railway running across the northern part perhaps by way of Lynn Lake and lake Athabasca right across to Stewart on the west coast of British Columbia, or even possibly into the Yukon. I am absolutely certain that the future of this country lies in the north. That is the area in which we are going to make great advances. There will of course be developments in the settled part of Canada, and millions more people will settle in the areas where there are now large settlements. But I believe our real bonanza is to be found in northern Canada, and this party is very much in favour of any reasonable project that will open up the northern part of the nation.

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Chairman, the people of my own constituency of Villeneuve, as well as those of the constituency of Chapleau, have noted with great interest the federal government's decision to introduce the necessary legislation to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to construct lines of railway to facilitate the development of that rich mining belt which extends from Senneterre to the districts of Chibougamau and Mistassini. They are also pleased to learn that the construction of the railway will be extended to St. Felicien in the lake St. John district. The people of northwestern Quebec and the lake St. John district are very grateful to the Minister of Transport and the Canadian government for having taken that decision.

The extension of the Canadian National Railway line from Beattyville to Chibougamau and St. Felicien will not only be beneficial to our national system of railways but will also be of great advantage to the province and to the country as a whole. It will contribute to the development of a district which is in itself almost as large as the whole of those parts of western Quebec and Lake St. John together which are settled at the present time. It will add to the general welfare of our own district and that of Lake St. John. It will permit the utilization of a tremendous amount of natural resources which otherwise would not be transformed into national wealth.

It is the opinion of all economists that the extension of the railway line from Beattyville to Chibougamau is more particularly of the utmost importance. It will be built in a general northeast direction and it will follow the centre of a belt rich not only in minerals but also in timber stands and fertile land.

The fact that the geological structure of that region which extends from Senneterre to Chibougamau and Mistassini is favourable to important mining developments is indicated by the astonishing results already attained. Prospectors and mining companies have long since started to survey the district, even in the absence of any adequate system of transportation. Many good mining prospects have been discovered at Wedding river, Cameron lake, Burge lake, Bachelor lake, Opawica, Opemiska, Chibougamau and Mistassini. Large-scale explorations have been carried out in some of those areas and important deposits have been outlined. Opemiska Copper Mines (Quebec) Limited is already in production. Campbell Chibougamau Mines Limited, Merrill Island Mining Corporation and Chibougamau Explorers Limited will be producing within the next two years.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra mentioned Eastern Metals. He said that there may be a danger that if we do not encourage that new industry, some of these concentrates may have to be treated in the United States. I shall tell the hon. member that he does not have to worry. The idea of building a line from Chibougamau to Beattyville is to permit these mining companies operating in that district to ship their concentrate to the Noranda smelter in Noranda, in the constituency of Villeneuve, in the province of Quebec, Canada.

Many other companies such as O'Brien, Dome Burge, Lake Goldfields, Empire Oil, Siscoe, Obalski and others have discovered and outlined interesting deposits of minerals and are presently waiting for adequate means of transportation in order to start their operations. Moreover, if we look at a map of the district we can easily see that prospecting is only beginning. The geological structure of that region is formed by three belts of volcanic rocks of the Keewatin type which meet at their extremes and are separated by masses of intrusive rocks. Those green rocks of the Keewatin type contain such base metals as copper, nickel, lead and zinc as well as precious metals. The richest ore deposits are found near the contacts of the greenstone with the intrusive rocks, above all in the zone of the least resistance and of major faults. Those faults are frequent in the region and geologists have even observed a major fault which crosses the said territory from the southwest to the northeast along the route of the proposed railway.

Under present conditions, research work is difficult and expensive. The construction of the proposed railroad will make it easier and will greatly reduce its cost. Furthermore, the realization of this project will facilitate access to the territories immediately to the south and to the north of that belt where geological formations are also favourable to mineral deposits. According to conservative estimates, the forests of that section contain at least 30 million cords of merchantable timber ready for exploitation. The composition of that forest, the high quality and the accessibility of that timber contribute to increase its value.

Only the construction of the proposed railroad makes it possible for the economical exploitation of those forest resources. The whole reserve of 30 to 50 million cords will be accessible to the proposed railroad. Moreover, a large portion of that forest has attained maturity. It ought to be exploited within a reasonable length of time because it represents an unproductive capital asset, always exposed to partial destruction. A program of rational exploitation will permit the transportation of one-half of one million to one million cords annually.

There are also extensive tracts of favourable land for farming in that district. Many townships containing thousands of acres can be profitably devoted to agriculture and a great number of settlers can be established in that area. Potential waterpower is estimated at more than one million horsepower, and it is well distributed within the region.

Mr. Chairman, I can visualize the tremendous development which will take place along that railroad line once it is built. I can foresee what will happen because for the last 30 years I have been virtually living in that district, and I know it almost as well as my own constituency of Villeneuve. In the immediate vicinity of the area that the railroad will pass, I have surveyed many hundred miles of lines from one end of the district to the other. I have established meridian lines, parallel of latitude, township lines and I have surveyed and staked more than 1,000 mining claims.

In the not too far distant future along the proposed railroad, there will be thriving centres at Barraute, Barville, Despinassy, Champneuf, Bartouille, Laas, Beattyville, Rapide des Cedres, Quevillon, Wedding Lake, Cameron, Burge Lake, Sullivan River, Bachelor Lake, Opawica, Laparent, Opemiska, Lac Cache and Chibougamau.

Some of those places are already nice little villages but they will be growing fast. Others are only what you call locations on the map. There are no people there yet but they will soon come and they each will be the pioneers in their own capacity—the miners, the settlers, the missionaries and the educators, the civic minded citizens, the professional and the business men. Those will be the ones who will really open and develop another new section of our northern reaches.

Each one of those new settlements will have to be provided with its churches, schools, post office, civic, medical and business centres. There will be opportunities for all and I predict that within the next 15 years the population of that area will be well over 50,000 people. I am not exaggerating when I say this, Mr. Chairman. We have only to look back on what happened in northwestern Quebec during the last 30 years to realize that what took place there can be duplicated in even a shorter period of time.

Thirty years ago, during the summer of 1924, as a student, I had the opportunity of going on a survey expedition in the very part of Quebec that I now have the honour of representing in this parliament. At that time in the whole of the constituency of Villeneuve there were less than 1,000 people. There were no roads, no railroads, no airfields, fewer industrial centres or large communities. The only two places which were inhabited at the time were the actual parish of La Motte and the prospecting centre of Rouyn-Noranda.

Today, in the same district which is now the constituency of Villeneuve, we find a thriving population of more than 70,000 people, some of them cultivating rich farms located along the northern part of the constituency, others working at the gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc mines located in Val d'Or, Malartic, Cadillac, Duparquet and Rouyn-Noranda areas. Where 30 years ago there was nothing but bush, muskeg, rock and water, we now have progressive towns and cities, rich mines and productive farm lands of which we can be proud. And what is more important, we have a group of people who, as pioneers, took up the challenge offered by that part of the shield in Quebec. The fact that they met it successfully has procured substantial benefits for every home in the province. Not only does northern Quebec provide the whole of Canada with metals, lumber, pulpwood, farm products and furs, but the growing population of that district, its purchasing power and its needs, stimulate the manufacturing industries of our cities to the south.

Nor has northern Quebec yielded all its richness to the province and the rest of Canada. The geological structure of those adjoining areas where the proposed railroad will be built, their similarity to other districts to the south whose mineral resources are abundant, the discoveries already made, the quality and accessibility of vast timber limits, the potential water power, as well as the unanimous opinion of the experts regarding the possibilities of that region, entitle us to forecast that this district will become an essential factor in the economy of our province.

The construction of this railroad line is an important step toward the economic conquest of the Canadian shield which contains immense natural resources that are essential to the welfare of Canada and its people.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, one of the thrills of being a Canadian is the realization that the story of the development of this country is not confined to the past. I am sure that all of us are fascinated by the realization that we possess tremendous natural resources which are largely untapped, and that they hold for us and for those who will follow us a great future. It has been the privilege of many of us who sit in the House of Commons today to support other measures similar to this one which were brought down in years gone by for the purpose of helping to open up and develop areas in this country which are rich in mineral, timber and other natural resources. We of this group are pleased that this resolution has been brought in and it will have our support.

I think hon. members generally will not be surprised if I take advantage of this opportunity to draw attention once again to the fact that although most of the members of this house, indeed, all but those of this group, subscribe wholeheartedly to the notion that private enterprise can do everything, despite that fact there come occasions such as this when the private enterprisers of this country look to the government, look to public enterprise, for the expenditure of public money to make possible the development of our great natural resources. Some day the lesson that flows from that fact will be learned and put into practice for the benefit of all our people.

Since this resolution has the support of most hon. members it need not be the occasion for a lengthy debate and I shall not repeat the things which have been said by previous speakers. But there is one request I should like to make of the Minister of Transport. As the minister knows, there have been various complaints in recent years when other lines of railway were being constructed concerning labour conditions. I need not go into detail and I admit that when some of the charges that have been made were investigated they were found, in the opinion of the investigators at any rate, to be exaggerated.

Nevertheless there were complaints in connection with the labour conditions in connection with the construction of the line that was built from Sherridon to Lynn Lake. Those complaints involved certain companies to whom contracts had been let and in some instances they also involved activities of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

While something else I want to say is not directly related to this bill I think it is close enough that I should be permitted to refer to it in passing. From time to time complaints have reached some of us concerning labour conditions in connection with this same Welch company to which I have been referring in connection with contracts let to them by the Canadian National Railways. In the main, these complaints are of two types. The union affected does not like the way in which its collective agreements are by-passed when track or maintenance work is let out to a company of that kind. The other complaint is that labour conditions under this company are not very satisfactory. As a matter of fact I have on my desk at the present time a letter dealing with some of these unsatisfactory labour conditions.

I mention this fact so that I may ask the Minister of Transport to take up this matter with the Canadian National Railways when the time comes to build these lines of railway. I ask the minister to see to it that the Canadian National Railways does not leave itself open to criticism with respect to labour conditions and with respect to the conditions under which workmen will have to live and work in connection with the building of these railways.

These are important lines of railway. It is good that they are being built. Let us see to it that in the building of them those who do the hard work in this northern country have the best possible labour conditions. Let us see that none of the principles which we have accepted as right and proper in this field, including those principles which are covered in our various labour codes, are violated or by-passed in any way.

With these few remarks, I may say that we are glad to support this resolution.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, also in a few words I should like to concur in what has been said by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and also express my admiration of the hon. member for Villeneuve and of his enthusiasm for this area which he knows so well. I want to tell him that his reputation as a surveyor has reached even as far as the remote city of Toronto.

I have had the privilege of visiting Chibougamau, first when it became accessible by the road built by the province of Quebec from St. Felicien. I have some appreciation of the great mineral possibilities as well as the great forest resources along that road. A further extension of that road will give access to smelters which I suppose are essential for the development of that mineral area.

I have also some knowledge of the Manitouwadge discovery and development which has been one of the sensations of the mineral world and in which many of my constituents who are engaged in engineering have had a part. This district holds great possibilities. I am advised that the tonnage indicated by diamond drilling is in the neighbourhood of ten million tons and that it would not be unreasonable to expect that there would be a tonnage from one of the original discovery properties of between two and four thousand tons a day. I suppose that that will produce a relatively large volume of freight in the form of concentrates which will have to go to the smelter unless one becomes possible in the camp itself. There are other properties which show great promise and there are many prospects under development.

This kind of railway operation is one which appeals to me more particularly when it has to do with the development of mines and forest. I have had some personal experience with the Ontario Northland Railway, formerly the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway. This line opened up an area which then had no great economic prospects at the time but it provided a means of access to mines and forest as well as agricultural lands in the northern part of the province. As the minister well knows, it has turned out most successfully, and is now a profitable railway. We have hopes that both of these ventures will turn out in the same way.

There is just one question I should like to raise that occurs to me as I consider the position of the Manitouwadge area. As the minister knows, it lies between the Canadian National railway on the north and the Canadian Pacific railway on the south. It is probably midway between the two. The C.P.R. skirts the north shore of lake Superior and the Canadian National railway is 70 miles or 80 miles to the north at this point. Both of these railways lead out to Sudbury, which is a great smelting and refining centre, and either could serve this Manitouwadge area equally well if the branch line were constructed to either. Can the minister tell me whether the other railway, which could have undertaken this development, was interested in it, is interested in it, and has given any indication of a desire to serve the new area, or just what the situation is in that respect? In asking that question for information I should like to give my general concurrence in and support to this motion.

(Translation):

Mr. Gauthier (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, the Chibougamau district is unquestionably one of the most promising mining centres in Canada. The Canadian government and the Canadian National Railways have both confirmed this by deciding to build a branch line from St. Felicien to Chibougamau and from there to Beattyville; that project will benefit not only the Lake St. John district, but also the province of Quebec and the country as a whole. That undertaking will prove an asset for the Canadian economy. Experts are of the opinion that this extension of the C.N.R.'s line will be of considerable importance. In fact, it will promote the development of mineral deposits in the Chibougamau area and neighbouring districts. That will constitute a further step towards economic conquest of our immense natural resources which are vital to the welfare of our people. The rich mining discoveries in the Chibougamau district are more than enough to warrant this $35 million outlay and no doubt the future will confirm the foresight of our present leaders in introducing this bill which will make it possible to develop and use our natural resources. The Canadian government thus contributes to maintain a high level of national income and that decision will result in a more buoyant and stable Canadian economy.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) has just told us that the Canadian National Railways will begin with the Beattyville-Chibougamau stretch of line. The people of the Lake St. John district are most anxious for this work to be started. I am asking the government on this occasion to authorize the Canadian National Railways to begin the two sections at the same time.

To all the suggestions which have been put forward up to this time, I would like to add the following personal idea. In its May 4 issue, Le Progrès du Saguenay, over the signature of Georges-Henri Daigneault, in a well informed editorial, stated, among other things:

> The fact that the district is extremely rich in hydroelectric power, should also promote establishment of new ore and metal smelting plants.

This editorial prompts me to say that to speed the mining development of the region the Canadian National Railways could, and should, undertake in the Lake St. John district the construction of an ore smelting plant. I am sure that the Canadian National Railways would find in such a development the means to make that new line a paying proposition.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be as long in my remarks in favour of this bill as I was in the representations I made on a previous occasion for the building of that line. As a matter of fact, on three previous occasions, in this house, I asked that this project be carried out. Only last year I had the honour to introduce to the hon. Minister of Transport a large delegation led by the Saguenay economic planning council. All these delegates received from the minister a warm and sympathetic welcome.

The hon. Minister of Transport will go down in history as the man largely responsible for the St. Lawrence seaway. The people of Lake St. John will be doubly grateful to the minister for having also authorized the building of the railway from St. Felicien to Beattyville.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I listened carefully, a moment ago, with particular interest and much pleasure, to the appropriate words of explanation which the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) was kind enough to give us in connection with the bill now before the house.

Representations have certainly been made, over the years, to the government in order to obtain construction of this railway. I am glad to be able to say a few words about this bill, so that I may commend the hon. Minister of Transport and the government for their present decision.

The districts of Chibougamau and Lake St. John are, as everybody knows, rich in mineral deposits. It is therefore time, I believe, to give particular credit to the pioneers, to those men who, from the beginning, opened up to civilization this new area full of an abundant wealth that will be profitable, not only to Quebec, but to Canada as a whole.

We must remember that the first to go to the Chibougamau district did so at the cost of great sacrifices, since there were then but two means of transportation, either by water or through the woods with dog teams. They surely deserve much credit and we must pay tribute to their courage as they are primarily responsible for the expansion of this rich mining district in the province of Quebec.

It must also be said, I believe, that private enterprise has contributed up to now its fair share of expenses and sacrifices during the last few years. It seems to me that we must also give credit to the government of the province of Quebec for having understood the need of a carriage road into this remote district and for having spent millions of dollars for the construction of that road. Therefore, it was high time, Mr. Chairman, for the government of Canada to do its share by helping the Canadian National Railways to construct a railway line, so that the ore produced in the Chibougamau district may be shipped more favourably.

The government has yielded to the wishes of the whole province of Quebec but more particularly to the request made last year, on March 2, 1953, if I remember correctly, by a delegation representing the council of economic planning of the Lake St. John district, which submitted at that time, to the government and to the hon. Minister of Transport, a brief carefully prepared by outstanding economists, on the economic advantages to be expected from the construction of that railway line.

I extend my most sincere congratulations to the minister for having introduced the present bill. It does not matter, Mr. Chairman, whether this railway operates, during a certain time, at a loss. Besides, it would not be the first time, for we know that railways have operated at a loss in the past. However, the Canadian National is controlled by the government and the loss brought about by insufficient revenues will be, no doubt, largely compensated by other revenue resulting from the economic expansion that will surely follow its construction.

I am particularly pleased with this bill because it will make transportation easier between the Saguenay-Lake St. John district and my own district, that is, the city of Quebec.

It will first of all contribute to provide work for hundreds of unemployed who ask nothing better than a chance to earn their living honestly and provide for the needs of their family and their children. Secondly, the building of that railroad will increase our national wealth and, thirdly, it will ensure the economic stability of the Saguenay-Lake St. John district.

Mr. Chairman, before concluding my remarks on the matter, may I be permitted to remind the minister—and I hope that in doing so I shall not be out of order—that there is between Quebec and the Lake St. John district another railroad of which mention has been made on several previous occasions in the house. That railroad is in such poor repair that it should be completely rebuilt. The fact that it is possible, on the one hand, to travel from Ottawa to the provincial capital of Quebec, a distance of 289 miles, in six hours while, on the other hand, it takes exactly 10 hours and 35 minutes to go from Quebec to Dolbeau in the Lake St. John district, a distance of only 233 miles, gives a good idea of the pitiable condition of that railroad.

(Text):

The Chairman: Order. I wonder if the hon. member might not more properly direct these remarks on the estimates of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps it would be much better if my hon. friend did so because he is really out of order.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Very well, Mr. Chairman, I do not mind, but I will return to the subject later.

I would like to close my remarks by congratulating the government once again, and more particularly the hon. Minister of Transport—I have not been applauded very often by the other side of the house—for this most outstanding development and more particularly for the particular attention he has given to this subject. I wish, once more, to support the government most wholeheartedly in this connection. This is a move which will, among other things, foster the growth not only of the Saguenay region and of the province of Quebec, but of Canada as a whole.

Mr. Villeneuve: Mr. Chairman, when I requested from the electors of Roberval constituency the mandate which I am now carrying out, I promised them that I would fight for their rights and their interests, as well as for the projects dearest to their hearts.

Consequently, on November 13, 1953, when I seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I spoke in favour of the building of a railway to the Chibougamau mining district, in the Lake St. John district.

Canadian National Railways

On April 29, last, the government deemed it advisable to grant the wishes not only of the people of Lake St. John district but also of the citizens of Abitibi.

Thus both parties are satisfied and get a railway that will link Abitibi and Lake St. John, a link which they have had to do without so far and which will make for a greater development of those regions around a new centre of gravity, the Chibougamau mining district.

I now have a very pleasant task to perform, that of thanking the government, and especially the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) for such a wise move, the economic outcome of which will be so important for the whole of the Lake St. John district and particularly for Roberval constituency which I represent in this house, since a branch line of that railway will extend to St. Felicien.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my first word should be one of thanks to the committee for the manner in which it has received this resolution having to do with the construction of two branch lines of the Canadian National Railways, one in the province of Quebec and the other in the province of Ontario. I can only express the hope that the rest of the legislation which I have to bring before parliament this session, and it comprises some seven or eight bills, will receive the same enthusiastic reception.

I do not intend to make any lengthy remarks because I do not think the resolution stage is the place where this should be done, but I think the committee, in view of the temper it is now in, would wish me at least to reply to some of the suggestions made during the course of this debate.

It has been suggested that the bill, when it reaches the appropriate stage, should be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. While it is not the practice to make that kind of announcement at this stage, I think, in view of the manner in which the house has received this resolution, that I should say now that it is the intention to follow the usual practice. As a matter of fact, I believe it would be a serious mistake not to do that because this is a matter which involves many millions of dollars and should be carefully considered by the committee.

At this committee there will be officers of the Canadian National Railways who will be able to discuss with the committee the profitability or non-profitability of the various aspects of the two lines. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra indicated that there was probably no reason for building the west section alone without at the same time building the eastern section. I think his words were to the effect that he did not think it was satisfactory to build at the west end first and delay the building of the eastern section, that is, St. Felicien to Chibougamau until after. But if the hon. member reads carefully what I said in my opening remarks I do not think he will glean that suggestion from the statements which I made to the house.

The government and the Canadian National Railways consider this whole line as a single enterprise. They believe it will be in the general interests of Canada to build it all. The Canadian National Railways have guarantees and will be able to establish the profitability, the financial betterment to the Canadian National Railways of that part of the line which extends from Beattyville to Chibougamau. As a matter of fact, that is only a continuation of the line they were authorized by parliament to build in 1949, and it has been proven to be profitable. It may be possible, though I do not affirm this, that by the time they complete the construction from Beattyville to Chibougamau, they can begin and continue construction on to St. Felicien, but that will depend upon industrial development in the area at that time. Indeed, it may depend on the industrial development in the immediate future.

My hon. friend referred to the zinc refinery about to be built at Chicoutimi. I hope it will be built, but I have no assurance on that score. The Canadian National Railways have tried on several occasions to have a zinc refinery built at Chicoutimi.

Mr. Green: Is that zinc or nickel?

Mr. Chevrier: Zinc. If that zinc development were forthcoming—if there was private initiative that would establish it—and if there were a guarantee similar to that which I have mentioned in connection with the western part of the line, then there could be no difficulty or no objection about the continuation of the line. It might well be that that position will obtain by the time the line has reached Chibougamau.

Then my hon. friend put a question in connection with the fact that there was no guarantee on the Ontario line from Hillsport to lake Manitouwadge such as there was on the western part of the Quebec line. The reason for that situation is obvious. The position of the Ontario line is so profitable in the eyes of the Canadian National Railways that no guarantee is necessary. I think the hon. member for St. Paul's covered that point perhaps as well as I could do it. The reason is this. In view of the potential traffic which exists in that area, the Canadian National Railways estimate that the revenues on the Canadian National Railways will be bettered to the extent of $6 million a year by the construction of this line from Hillsport to lake Manitouwadge. In fact, the inbound traffic alone would warrant the construction of the line, let alone the outbound traffic; and the outbound traffic will be far more important than the inbound traffic. As a matter of fact, the minimum amount of traffic required for a profitable position on the Ontario line would be 700 tons per day; and that amount will be more than reached by the potential mining development in that area.

Then another reason why no guarantee is necessary is that this is in a completely different section of the Pre-Cambrian shield than are the Quebec lines. The Quebec lines are in entirely undeveloped country whereas the Ontario line is built almost between two main railway lines, that of the Canadian National Railways and that of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In fact the distance from lake Manitouwadge to the Canadian National Railways is 27 miles and to the Canadian Pacific Railway the distance is a little bit greater. Although I am not too sure just what it is, I think it is perhaps 35 or 40 miles.

To deal with the question raised by the hon. member for St. Paul's, namely whether or not the Canadian Pacific Railway had indicated any interest in the line, I can only say that I am sure they are interested. In fact, any railway company would be interested in that amount of potential traffic. However, they have certainly given no indication to me or, so far as I am aware, to any others connected with the government of their intention to build such a line. I presume, however, that if the Canadian National Railways felt that such a line should be built, they might feel similarly. However, that consideration in itself is not a reason why they should. Even if the Canadian Pacific Railway wanted to construct a branch line into that area, it would be for parliament to decide whether, having regard to the charter which we will, I hope, approve here, they should give a second charter to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

My friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised the question of labour relations and labour conditions in connection with the subcontracts or the contracts which the Canadian National Railways give on these lines. He referred more particularly to one which had been given in connection with a branch line authorized in the House of Commons from Sherridon to Lynn Lake some two years ago. I remember the charges which were made, I think, by a Winnipeg paper. I brought them to the attention of the Canadian National Railways and they were immediately investigated. I must say that they were highly exaggerated. I do not think there was any doubt about the exaggeration of the conditions under which men were alleged to be working. I also know that the Department of Labour carried out an investigation. The results of both the investigation by the Department of Labour and that by the Canadian National Railways were made public at the same time. However, I am glad the hon. member brought to the attention of the committee the conditions that appertained there. I shall see that the Canadian National Railways officials are made aware of the position—not that they are not already aware of it—and that in granting any contracts or subcontracts, they shall keep in mind the consideration that the general labour conditions should be in accordance with the laws and the labour code of this country.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. members for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas), Lake St. John (Mr. Gauthier), Roberval (Mr. Villeneuve) and Quebec West (Mr. Dufresne) for their contribution to this debate. I see that the first three of these hon. members, whose names I mentioned, are most happy over the decision taken by the government with regard to the construction of these railway lines. I am convinced that the representations made by these hon. members, as also those which they have made through delegations from their constituencies, have had a fortunate effect on the decision taken by the government to undertake the construction of these railway lines.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Chevrier thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 442, respecting the construction of lines of railway by Canadian National Railway Company from St. Felicien to Chibougamau and from Chibougamau to Beattyville, all in the province of Quebec, and from Hillsport on the main line of the Canadian National Railways to Manitouwadge lake, both in the province of Ontario.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTROL OF GOODS IN BULK

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the governor in council, for a limited period of time, to provide for transport control of goods in bulk.

Department of Transport Act

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I presume that the minister has ready for the committee one of his able statements setting forth the background and purpose of this resolution. May we have it from him?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, my able statement is not with me at the moment. Unfortunately, I left it on my desk in my room. However, I think I can summarize fairly well what the position is.

Mr. Knowles: The minister can probably do even better without it.

Mr. Chevrier: The resolution reads as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the governor in council, for a limited period of time, to provide for transport control of goods in bulk.

As the committee knows, under the War Measures Act—

Mr. Knowles: The Emergency Powers Act.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; I should say the Emergency Powers Act. I thank my hon. friend for the correction. Under the Emergency Powers Act the governor in council passed an order providing for regulations for the movement of goods in bulk. This order in council has to do with movement by rail and on ships. The legislation referred to in the resolution will be contained in a short bill to be introduced later and seeks to continue for a period of two years only practically the same powers that are contained in that order in council.

As the committee knows, following the appointment of the transport controller there was provision whereby goods in bulk as defined in the regulations could be moved in adequate volume and at the times required. I believe that the transport controller and his assistants have done a very good job. As the situation is now, the transport controller has a representative in Vancouver with one stenographer. There is also a deputy controller in Montreal, and a secretary in Ottawa, because of necessity the transport controller must spend most of his time away from his office here. All told there are but six employees in this branch of the department.

The aim of the transport controller has been to ensure the movement of bulk commodities such as grain and grain products, ore, coal, pulpwood, pulp and timber of all kinds in order to meet export requirements. Since transport control was established there has never been a shortage of box cars in western Canada to move Canada's grain crop. There have always been approximately fifty thousand cars in the west which is sufficient to keep terminal unloading and cleaning capacity operating efficiently and to meet all export and domestic commitments.

Vessel transportation has been ample to meet all shipping requirements. The transport controller has had tremendous co-operation not only from all rail companies but also from shipping companies. For instance, in 1952-53 exports of the five major Canadian grains together with the grain equivalents of wheat flour, rolled oats and oatmeal, totalled 583,200,000 bushels. This was a new all-time record for foreign shipments of Canadian grain during one crop year, exceeding by 15 per cent the previous high volume established in 1951-52 when over-all exports amounted to 506 million bushels.

In 1952-53, for the second time in their shipping history, the Pacific coast elevators topped 100 million bushels of wheat destined overseas. More than 104 million bushels were exported through these ports to break the record of 103 million bushels set in 1951-52. The same can be said of Canada's Atlantic ports. They also had a record year for wheat, loading out nearly 189 million bushels, 24 per cent more than the previous record of 151 million bushels. The same can be said of the port of Churchill where 8,600,000 bushels of wheat were shipped in the 1952 season and over 10,500,000 bushels in the 1953 season.

As I indicated earlier, all of the transportation agencies, railways, exporters, elevator operators, owners of ocean-going vessels, the federations of agriculture and others, have co-operated with the transport controller to the fullest extent, and I think the committee will be of opinion that it is in the general interests of the trade and commerce of this country that the transport controller be continued in existence so that the movement of these goods in bulk can be carried on efficiently. For that reason I am confident that the resolution will commend itself to the committee.

Mr. Brooks: Has the transport controller authority to say through which ports bulk commodities are to be shipped overseas?

Mr. Chevrier: He has that power under the present emergency powers. I do not know that he has ever used it.

Mr. Churchill: I thank the minister for his statement, which gives us some of the particulars concerning this matter. In looking back I noted in Hansard of 1951 that the member for the then constituency of Souris,

Mr. Ross, advocated some such system as was later instituted, the appointment of a controller so that the box car situation in the western provinces would be under better control. In 1952 that request was again brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for Prince Albert. Apparently in appointing the controller the minister and the government recognized the need for some supervision over the box car situation, particularly in relation to the shipment of grain.

I noted, however, that the minister in his remarks said nothing about the situation which apparently disturbed those two members on the occasions when they spoke, namely, Canadian box cars being in the United States and not being returned for Canadian use as rapidly as seemed desirable. Perhaps the minister may comment on that later and let us know whether or not the transport controller has supervision over that and makes the necessary arrangements with the railway companies so that a proper balance is maintained between American box cars in Canada and Canadian box cars in the United States.

I am not at all clear whether the transport controller simply arranges for a sufficiency of box cars in the west, as the minister set out, or whether he goes further and has some control over distribution. As I understand the situation, a problem frequently arises because, although box cars may be available in certain localities, a need for them arises elsewhere. Perhaps the minister might comment on that point later. In view of the fact that this appointment was recommended in the past by those of our members thoroughly familiar with the situation so far as the shipment of grain is concerned, we are naturally interested in the continuance of this method of control. I note that it is only for a two-year period and will come under review again in the future.

Mr. Argue: At this period of congestion in the shipment of grain some organization has to have the kind of authority that the minister has said the transport controller will continue to have. I believe that these powers were first brought into effect when there really was a shortage of railway box cars compared with the demand for shipment of scrap iron of all kinds, lumber, ferrous metals and grain. The situation today is entirely different. There is an oversupply of box cars and no shortage whatsoever. There is a shortage of markets for various commodities and therefore there is congestion in grain. The powers under this legislation need to be used to allocate box cars so that shipment quotas for grain may be kept in effect on a fair and equitable basis. There is certainly no shortage of box cars, because we in western Canada know that box cars coming into various points with lumber or coal are often sent out of those points empty, even though the elevators are bulging with grain. It may be that these regulations, as they are now constituted, and as I presume they will be in the legislation, are necessary in order to have a fair allocation of box cars to maintain the quota system.

We should not fool ourselves into thinking that the transport controller is really controlling the allocation of box cars. I have heard him say that it is the Canadian wheat board that decides the amount of each kind of grain that it wants. It is the Canadian wheat board that decides the number of box cars of grain it will take from each elevator company. The wheat board informs the railway companies of the amount of grain that is required and the transport controller tells the railway companies to make sufficient box cars available to move that grain.

The trouble is that these powers have not been used in a way that is fair and equitable to the producers in western Canada, and which would allow them to deliver to the elevator of their own choice. As a matter of fact the kind of powers that are embodied in this legislation, whether they are used by the transport controllers or whether they are turned over to the railway companies or some other body, have resulted in definite discrimination in the allocation of box cars and have removed the freedom of choice of elevator company from the producer. Certainly, if the powers in this legislation are to be used in a fair and equitable manner, some very definite changes in policy will have to be made.

I have before me a table of the relative position in the handling of grain in Saskatchewan. These figures are taken from various government publications, and are compiled by the Sanford Evans statistical service of Winnipeg as of March, 1952. These statistics show that when the farmers in Saskatchewan have the opportunity to deliver grain to the elevator of their own choice, their own elevator system, controlling 40·7 per cent of the capacity, obtained 50·4 per cent of the patronage. As the elevators became plugged and as space available in the elevators was made possible only through the allocation of box cars, this allocation resulted in a definite loss of business to that farmer owned organization. There was a gradual and continuing loss until now that elevator system, which has increased its capacity in the intervening years from 40 per cent to 44 per cent, has found its handlings drop from 50 per cent to 45 per cent and according to the current information those handlings are down now to about 43 per cent.

These handlings are down to 43 per cent because that elevator system is allocated 43 per cent of the box cars. That is all there is to that. Because of the action or lack of action, there is a definite discrimination in the allocation of box cars. I, for one, would like to see the producers given the right to decide the elevator to which they wish to haul their grain. I feel the powers we have in this legislation are necessary, but I should like to see those powers exercised by the producers themselves. Rather than have those powers built into the legislation that is likely to be brought forward, there should be legislation amending the Canada Grain Act that would allow the farmers themselves to decide where they wished to market the grain, and allow the farmers to post their intentions in their wheat board permit book. Then, the box cars could be allocated on the basis of the producer's own interest.

I feel that would be much more satisfactory than the arbitrary method that is now being followed of allocating a certain percentage of box cars to various elevator companies based only on handling capacity or the number of country elevators in that system. Certainly, there is congestion in the handling of grain in western Canada now. The majority of delivery points are still on a five bushel quota, and that means the majority of the farmers at those points have delivered much less than five bushels per seeded acre. As I understand it, this legislation is to remain in effect for another two-year period. Certainly on the basis of the present surplus of grain and the likelihood of a crop this year, I believe the legislation is being extended for a minimum period of time.

When parliament approves of this legislation, I am hopeful that a new system of allocating box cars for the hauling of grain will be devised, a fair system that will take the wishes of the producers into consideration so that in the future they may be able to haul to the elevator of their own choice. This is something they have not been able to do under the legislation now. As I say, we believe someone has to have the powers that are set forth, and which are now used by the transport controller. We hope that these powers will be used to provide a fair distribution of box cars, and we would like to see those powers in the hands of the producers so that the producers themselves could select the elevator company to which they wished to deliver their grain.

Mr. Campbell: I had two criticisms to make of the allocation of box cars, but one criticism has been made by the member who has just taken his seat. So far as the other point is concerned, I want to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that the branch lines in our province did not get cars until well on into the summer, although the farmers living on the main line were able to deliver all their 1952 crop. The farmers who lived on the branch lines still have a large proportion of their 1952 crop on their farms. In so far as my own constituency is concerned, I am certain about this matter I am mentioning.

I feel this subject should be given detailed consideration. I am hoping this measure will go before one of the committees of the house, perhaps the agriculture committee, where we could have the transport controller before us and the whole system of the allocation of box cars could be examined. I do not know who is responsible for the fact that the railways cleared out the main line elevators and left the branch lines to the last. I do not know whether or not it was the transport controller or the railways. I feel we should find that out. I do believe that those elevators situated on branch lines should have their share of box cars when a distribution is being made.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister one or two questions. Will the transport controller have authority over all sorts of bulk goods? The minister mentioned, in addition to grain, ore, coal, pulpwood and timber. Why is it necessary for this controller to have authority over commodities of that type. Would it not be sufficient if his powers were restricted to grain because apparently it is in connection with that commodity that all the difficulty arises.

Would the minister explain what control there will be over goods carried by ships, particularly foreign ships. I can see where it would be possible to control a Canadian registered ship, but just how would this control work, say in the case of a Japanese ship?

Will the controller have any authority over rates charged? Will he have any authority over the price charged for grain at different ports in Canada?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I presume I will be closing the debate at this time.

Mr. Green: We are in committee.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I think many of these questions will be answered when the legislation is before the house. My hon. friend wants to know what authority the controller will have over certain goods in bulk. There is a definition of goods in bulk in the legislation over which the controller will have authority. I do not think that we have reached the stage when that information should be given.

There is a definition of ship in the legislation. Pretty much the same authority is given as is to be found in the Department of Transport Act.

I am positive that there is nothing in the proposed legislation having to do with control over rates.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre asked what authority the controller would have over cars which are in the United States, and about the box car situation generally. I think it can be said that there is no shortage of box cars at this time. It has been the practice in the past for the transport controller to meet from time to time with his opposite number in the United States when one existed, and with officials of the American association of railroads, and obtain from them some assurance that box cars would be returned to Canada when there was a shortage. The last statement which I saw indicates that there is quite an over-all surplus of all kinds of cars, box cars, hoppers, flat cars, and the like, as between Canada and the United States. I am unable to say what the situation is in the box car field alone, but it should be quite easy to have a statement when the matter is up for discussion on the second reading of the bill.

I do not want to go into the questions which the hon. member for Assiniboia raised, as they are matters which concern my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Perhaps there will be an opportunity to deal with these questions when we are on second reading.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, we have not spoken extensively on this resolution because we realize that it precedes a bill. However, I should like to ask the minister just three simple questions. I was not able to be in the house when he made his statement.

The resolution indicates that this authorization is for a limited period of time. Is the minister in a position to say now what that period might be, if he has not already done so in the remarks he made previously?

As this is only the resolution stage I should like to ask the minister what effect, if any, this measure will have upon the trucking industry. The trucking industry of Canada is becoming a very large industry with millions of dollars invested which must be protected. There was a day when a five-ton truck on a highway was considered a big haul, but today it is nothing to find trucks able to haul twenty-five tons plus a trailer. I wish the minister would answer that question if it is considered to be a reasonable one.

My third question is whether the bill to follow will be referred to the appropriate standing committee.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, answering the first question, the limitation of time is two years.

My hon. friend wanted to know what bearing this legislation would have upon the trucking industry. I do not think I or anybody else would be able to say that. I can say that by virtue of this measure the transport controller will have no authority over highway transport.

My hon. friend wanted to know whether the bill would be referred to a committee. I doubt whether it would be advisable to refer the bill to a committee. I think it might be just as well if we discussed it in committee of the whole.

Mr. Knowles: A few minutes ago the minister said that he had several other pieces of legislation to bring before the house at this session. Are any of the other items similar to this one in that they seek to carry forward in statutory form matters which are presently covered by orders in council under the Emergency Powers Act?

Mr. Chevrier: I am afraid that that will have to be answered by someone other than myself. That is a matter of government policy and it will have to be made known on the order paper from time to time as it is determined.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Chevrier thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 443, to amend the Department of Transport Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PUBLIC SERVANTS' INVENTIONS

PROVISION FOR OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT AND PAYMENT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting inventions by public servants to provide a uniform legislative scheme to govern the ownership and management of and the payment of awards for inventions made by public servants of the government of Canada in connection with the duties or employment of the inventors.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Fulton: The Secretary of State should outline for us the scheme envisaged by this resolution.

Inventions by Public Servants

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to add much to the excellent description that is given in the resolution itself, and which I forecast in the house when I had another piece of legislation here on February 11 last.

Mr. Knowles: That is unusual.

Mr. Pickersgill: For some considerable time there have been four different statutes which dealt with the rights of different groups of public servants who happened to make inventions which were patentable and for which patents were secured. There were certain provisions in the Patent Act which applied to what I suppose would be described as the ordinary kind of civil servants. Then there were provisions in the National Defence Act which applied to that department and to some extent to the forces. There were also certain provisions in the Atomic Energy Control Act and in the Research Council Act. I could give the reference to the rights under those various statutes if anyone was sufficiently interested. The rights differ from one another. It was felt by the government that there was a reasonable ground for certain public servants to feel that they were being discriminated against in certain circumstances as opposed to others, and in any event that we ought to have, as soon as it could be conveniently done, uniform legislation applying to all public servants.

A scheme for such legislation was drawn up before I became a minister. It was impossible to find the time to introduce it at the last session of parliament, and it might not even have been introduced at this session, sir, but for the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in his other ministerial capacity, has a bill on the order paper to amend the Atomic Energy Control Act. In that legislation he is dropping the provisions relating to inventions. Therefore, there is some importance in getting this legislation through concurrently with the other bill.

The scheme itself is set out quite clearly in the bill. In general it follows the line now followed in the national research council practice, where there is perhaps the largest practice, and which on the whole seemed to have the best scheme.

Mr. Fulton: The scheme as outlined by the Secretary of State seems to be a reasonable one, if I understood him correctly, to bring together in one statute all the provisions relating to rights of government employees concerning patents of inventions made by them in connection with the duties or employment of the inventor. Two questions occur to me. What general principle is being followed in the way of encouraging public servants to make inventions? For instance, the resolution itself contemplates the payment of awards for inventions. I would appreciate it if the minister would say a few words on what pattern they intend to follow in that connection, and also whether there is to be any provision in the legislation for financial benefit, apart from the award, from an invention to accrue to the inventor. Without going into any detail, there will be general agreement that with respect to inventions and discoveries made in the course of the employment for which the inventor is employed, work which is in the line of duty, the benefits should accrue to the crown, although there might be some award to the inventor; but not if, for instance, a public servant who has been employed to work along certain lines of research finds his interest aroused along what you might call a sideline, although it may be connected, and he goes off and does research on his own, on that other aspect of the matter. Then it seems hard that he should, simply because he happens to be working for the crown, not receive financial reward in the way of royalties or patent rights. We would appreciate it if the minister will say whether that matter is to be covered by the legislation in a form which will encourage public servants to employ their inventive capacity in the same way that private inventors are now encouraged.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I should say that anything I do have to say on this subject will be very tentative. This is probably a question the Minister of Trade and Commerce is much more competent than I am to deal with, because in his ministerial capacity he deals with these things, and I do not think it will surprise the committee to know that very few inventions are made in the Department of the Secretary of State, so far as I know.

Mr. Fulton: Only political inventions.

Mr. Pickersgill: They are made mostly by the minister, and they are not patentable. With respect to the term "awards", some consideration was given to what term should be used. To the ordinary layman, and perhaps even to so distinguished a lawyer as the hon. member for Kamloops, the word "award" suggests a simple lump sum, but it need not be that at all. It might be an award of a certain percentage of any benefits such as royalties which might be derived. As I understand it, the national research council has had quite a lot of experience with inventions that have been made, and they have worked out a kind of scheme which they apply to these things, which is working pretty satisfactorily and which seems to have accomplished the very results that the hon. gentleman thinks are desirable.

In the main it is the pattern that is followed in the legislation that is now to be more generally applied, if the house sees fit.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 444, respecting inventions by public servants.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Fulton: Five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Since it is five o'clock the house will now consider public bills.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO ADD CHURCHILL AS DELIVERY POINT

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort) moved the second reading of Bill No. 441, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act and I will make a further explanation of that in a moment. I introduce this bill in the knowledge that a similar bill has been introduced before. But circumstances have changed since that time, and I believe that some of the factors which at that time seemed so highly debatable can now, in the light of recent developments and future prospects, be introduced and justified to a greater extent than ever before.

The intent and purpose of this measure is outlined clearly in the explanatory notes. The only change sought by the introduction of this measure is the insertion of the words "or Churchill" in the appropriate places in two sections of the act. As the explanatory note states:

> The effect of this change will be to permit producers in the area accessible to the port of Churchill to get the advantage of the cheaper freight rates to Churchill, wherever such cheaper rates apply. The implementation of this provision will not involve any increase in expenditure either by the government or by the Canadian wheat board.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a statement made by Mr. Robbins of the Canadian wheat board speaking at the Hudson Bay Route Association meeting in Moose Jaw on March 4. He said he felt that the farmers in the area accessible to Churchill should have the benefit of the cheaper freight rate to that port as against the port at Fort William. Subsequently a resolution was passed at that meeting which reads as follows:

> Be it resolved that the wheat board be requested to credit the individual growers of wheat with the saving in freight that can be made through shipments to Churchill and thus place Saskatchewan farmers in a similar position to Alberta farmers residing in the preferential freight area of Pacific coast points.

I am tempted at this point to go into all the aspects of the Hudson bay route as it affects and will affect in future the over-all economy of western Canada, but I do not propose to do so. I will rather confine my remarks to the bill before the house at the present time.

Wheat producers in the area accessible to Churchill feel very strongly about the fact that the wheat board has not seen fit to make the port of Churchill a basing point. In other words, we feel that the port of Churchill should be designated a port of delivery for wheat bought by the wheat board, thereby placing us in exactly the same position as those producers in the area accessible to the port of Vancouver and, by the same token, the port at the lakehead. Producers in western Saskatchewan and in Alberta are in a preferential area. That means that if you live on or west of a line roughly through Battleford, instead of shipping your wheat to Fort William you can ship it to Vancouver. You will realize, Mr. Speaker, that as you get farther west your freight rate progressively decreases. If you live east of that line through Battleford and on into Manitoba your freight rate also becomes progressively less as you come closer to the lakehead.

We in the area adjacent to the port of Churchill believe that we should have the same treatment as those producers who live in these two preferential areas. We believe that we have contributed substantial sums of money toward the building of this Churchill project. I do not intend to go into that, except to say, for the benefit of those hon. members who are not too well acquainted with that project, that the government of Canada set aside in western Canada certain lands amounting to approximately 14 million acres. I believe that land was subsequently sold for some $42 million and that money was spent on this so-called Churchill project. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) indicated some time ago that up to 1945 the dominion government had spent some $51 million on this Churchill project, and that of course included $6 million spent at Port Nelson, which was subsequently abandoned in favour of the port at Churchill. We believe that out of that sum of $51 million we contributed something like $42 million toward that project. In the light of that we think we have a claim to any benefits which may accrue from the cheaper freight rates to the port of Churchill.

I am well aware that the minister will probably criticize that statement and point out, quite rightly, that any savings made because of cheaper freight rates go into wheat board revenues and that such savings will eventually be reflected in the final payments made by the wheat board. That statement is quite correct, but the same is true of the grain hauled to the port of Vancouver and Fort William. Any savings made there go into the general revenue of the wheat board and are distributed fairly to all the members.

However, in addition to that, those people in these preferential areas gain something over and above that because of the fact that they pay a lower freight rate than we do. To emphasize the problem further, I would point out that the producers in the Melfort and Wadena areas of Saskatchewan, for example, had a great deal of their grain shipped to Churchill, yet they paid the freight based on the Fort William rate. I will admit that the freight paid on wheat sent to Churchill at the present time does not constitute a very great burden. As a matter of fact, I believe that in the most preferred area the cost is four cents per hundred and that is the best price anyone in that accessible area could expect to get. Of course, as you go farther away from the preferred area it falls from four cents to three, and so on. In other words, as you get near the fringe area the differential is not so very much. The Saskatchewan wheat pool in March of last year made an estimate of the benefits which would accrue from the cheaper freight rate if that area and the port of Churchill had been designated a basic point for the wheat board.

Here is the way it would have worked out. All companies combined shipped some 11 million bushels of wheat last year. Of that total, 5,748 bushels came from outside the designated area; 438,453 bushels came from the so-called fringe area around the outside where there was only one cent of differential in freight rate; 1,975,216 bushels came from an area with a preference of two cents; 2 million and some hundred thousand bushels came from an area where the differential was three cents; and 360,040 bushels came from the most preferred area where they would have got a preference of four cents per hundred pounds. At the present time, this is not a large amount of money, as I said a moment ago. As a matter of fact, it amounted to only $188,275. The minister can argue, and rightly again, that that amount will all be eaten up in diversion charges. Incidentally, I should like to say something about diversion charges a little later on—

Mr. Knight: Why do you assume he is going to oppose it?

[Mr. Bryson.]

Mr. Bryson: —in the light of what we were told here the other day by the Minister of Transport to the effect that the elevator capacity is going to be doubled and I think something else that should be taken into consideration is the statements made by some of the shipping companies that the shipping season at Churchill can be extended ten days at the start and ten days at the end of the shipping season. In the light of those things happening, I think that this freight rate differential takes on an entirely different aspect.

It is estimated on the best of authority that there are some 60 million bushels in an area that is accessible to the port of Churchill. It is only reasonable to believe that possibly 30 million or 40 million bushels could be handled through the port of Churchill in any one season. When we were selling wheat in 1946 or thereabouts, it was argued that you could not fill the elevator at Churchill with wheat, leave it there for ten months of the year, and expect the people in the rest of western Canada to pay for those carrying charges. I agree that, at that time when we were disposing of wheat, that argument was sound. Now, however, that argument does not apply because it does not cost any more to store wheat at the port of Churchill than it does to store it at Vancouver or at Fort William. You therefore cannot argue that point on that ground any longer. As a matter of fact, according to a return made in the house here the other day the elevator at Churchill was full last winter and almost full the winter before.

I am therefore going to suggest that if we designate an area accessible to the port of Churchill, in spite of the fact that we cannot send the 60 million bushels to Churchill, we should ship what we can to Churchill and ship the rest of it to Fort William but pay the producer in that area on the freight rate preferential basis, on the Churchill basis. Even if he had to send it to Fort William, let us pay him on the differential basis as it would apply to Churchill in any case. We are doing that. We have done that before. As a matter of fact, when the war was on a great many producers in the area who normally would ship to Vancouver shipped their grain to Fort William—the long haul to Fort William—and the freight rate was equalized by all the producers in western Canada. As a matter of fact, I believe at the present time that line which was designated as the line where grain would go east or west—a line through Battleford—has now been moved east to the Watrous area. I think there is a good reason for that. I am all for it because it is going to mean that producers in the Watrous area can now ship grain and their quotas will be raised so that they are on a par with some of those points in Alberta that are now on a seven-bushel quota. I believe that is the thinking behind that move. I am all for it. But again I say that the differential in freight is being equalized and is being paid by the producer.

There is one other point I should like to make. I have here a statement made again by Mr. Robbins of the wheat board who showed how the buyer of wheat from the in-store position at Churchill will benefit by 7¼ cents a bushel over Fort William. If that is the case, I should like to make this suggestion to the minister. I do not believe that the buyer should get all the breaks. If you would take possibly a cent and use it to pay the cost of the equalization of the freight in this area accessible to Churchill, I think you would find matters could be so organized that any grain you had to ship to Fort William could be from a fringe area, which grain would amount to maybe 30 million or 40 million bushels. The freight differential, of course, is one cent or less per hundred pounds. I think that if you would take some of that 7¼ cents, as the statement looks to me, that would help to defray a good deal of these equalization costs.

A while ago I said something about diversion charges. The freight saving on the approximately 11 million bushels that were sent to Churchill last year amounted to $188,000 but the diversion charges amounted to $186,000. The diversion charges almost equalled the savings that could be made on the freight differential as against Fort William. I am opposed to diversion charges. I cannot understand these things called diversion charges. I think the principle is wrong. I understand that these charges are negotiated every year. For the life and soul of me I cannot understand why any elevator company has the right to ask for diversion charges. They say: "We have built our elevators at the head of the lakes." They did not build them there because they are benevolent societies or anything like that. They built them there because they are going to make some money out of them. I say that, in spite of the fact that I am a wheat pool contract holder. As to the saving that is made anywhere along the line, whether it is diversion charges or not, as far as the wheat pools are concerned I know it will be reflected in the dividends paid back to the contract holders. But in spite of that fact, I say that the principle is wrong. They say: If you are going to go on shipping our grain to Churchill you have got to pay us 1½ cents a bushel because our facilities are there at the head of the lakes and they are sitting there empty. That would be the thinking of the average person. But their elevators are full down there. Still they are going to penalize the wheat board and the farmer in the end by 1½ cents a bushel because they say: You are making us put our grain where we do not want it. If it is reasonable to think that, is it not just as reasonable to think that I as a wheat pool contract holder can say to the wheat board, because of what I think is an inequity in the distribution of box cars: "You people are making me haul my grain to an elevator to which I do not want to haul, so I want diversion charges"? I think there is just as much sense in the one as there is in the other; and I am opposed to both. But I think if the principle is right in the one case, it is right in the other.

I think there is one other thing that we cannot overemphasize. I do not think we can overemphasize the fact that the United Kingdom buyers of wheat at port Churchill can take that wheat home to Britain at a cost of 24·395 cents per bushel as against a cost of 40·894 cents a bushel from Fort William. Then there is another point. If he buys at Fort William he has got to pay the freight from Fort William to the eastern seaboard which is 19 cents a bushel or about half of the total, in sterling. On the other hand, if he takes it from Churchill he only pays 24 cents in all and he can finance the whole thing in sterling. I think that is a pretty important consideration. If we are going to worry about markets and the effect of competition as far as wheat is concerned, I do not think we can go very far wrong by building more elevator space at Churchill and establishing more loading facilities there. When we can offer our wheat at such a saving in the competitive market of today I think we should give every consideration to this proposal. As I have said over and over again, I believe that those producers who live in the area accessible to the port of Churchill should have the benefit of the lower freight rate that applies on this route. I would ask that the bill be given early and serious consideration by the government.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, wheat may be outside my field, but I am very interested in the success of the Hudson bay route and the port of Churchill. I have watched the situation fairly closely for a number of years and I have had the pleasure of going to Churchill. It is interesting to me to see that the present member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson) has adopted and is pursuing the course of his predecessor, the former member for the then constituency of Melfort who thought, when he introduced a similar bill, that it was a matter of some importance to himself as a farmer and to the other farmers in the area contiguous to the port.

My hon. friend has asked me to speak in support of his bill for a moment or two. It is true that he has presented all the arguments in favour of the bill but I might say a word or two on it. Just before I came downstairs I was looking at the debate that took place in 1949, a debate largely between the former member for Melfort and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). It can be found at page 589 of Hansard of October 6, 1949. On that occasion Mr. Wright moved second reading of Bill No. 13, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. He argued that a good deal of the funds used to build the railroad came from the sale of western lands and pointed out rightly that the people who contributed have been looking for some return for that money since that time.

I believe it was in 1940 when the act was amended to add the word "Vancouver" to the words "Port Arthur and Fort William" for the purpose of making Vancouver a basing port for wheat. At that time the people of Alberta and western Saskatchewan too to some extent derived considerable benefit from that move. To be the devil's advocate for a moment, I will have to admit that the port of Vancouver is open the year round, and we must face it that that is a point that is relevant to this argument. On the other hand we will be told—in fact, we know—that the port of Churchill is only open for two and a half or three months in a year. Therefore the argument might be used that the advantage that would accrue might only accrue to those people who actually ship grain whereas in the larger area of Alberta and western Saskatchewan the mere geographical fact that the people live in those particular areas gives them that benefit whether they use the port of Vancouver or send their wheat to the eastern ports.

That is an argument against the bill now before us that we have to face, and I think it is fair to mention both sides of the question. But we feel that those people who live close to the port of Churchill should get some such benefit as do the people who live in Alberta and western Saskatchewan because of the fact that they are in the Vancouver shipping area.

My hon. friend has mentioned the question of diversion charges, and I have discussed it several times in the house. Like him I simply cannot understand the purpose of the diversion charges and I do not know why that particular iniquity is inflicted on the western farmer. I believe that once I characterized the diversion charges as money paid for service not rendered, and I do not know a better way to put it. I know that at times the minister has tried to explain the matter but I suppose we are a bit dense. I know that the western farmers simply do not understand it and I wish it could be explained more clearly for their benefit.

There are one or two other points. I remember that in opposing such a bill on other occasions the minister used certain arguments that in my opinion are not as valid today as they were then because of changed conditions. One argument that the minister used in October, 1949, was that wheat had to be kept at strategic points so that it would be available immediately for current needs and demands. That was certainly a good argument on that occasion. We were operating under the world wheat contracts then and wheat had to be placed at strategic points. I might say that this fortunate condition does not exist any more. In those days wheat could be delivered freely. There was a market for wheat and a shortage of wheat then compared with now. Wheat is not now moving with the same speed and we do not have to worry about strategic points.

Another argument that the minister used was that we could not afford to keep wheat stored at Churchill because it was an expensive business. That also was true in those times, but as my hon. friend has pointed out we now have to store wheat willy-nilly somewhere, and not only are we not avoiding the storage of wheat at Churchill but we are in the position where we wish we had more room at Churchill for wheat to be stored under almost any conditions.

I also remember that the minister said that at that time only 12½ per cent of the actual wheat grown in this area, which would be the area around Churchill if it were made a basing point, was actually shipped through the port of Churchill. That condition has now been changed because with the increase in the amount shipped to approximately 11 million bushels I would venture to say that the percentage of wheat in that particular area shipped through Churchill must have doubled. The figure is now 11 million bushels compared with 5 million bushels in those days. Therefore if this measure had any validity at all at that time it has more validity now.

There is also the fact that we are going to have more wheat at Churchill and that we are, I am afraid, going to have a greater carryover and more wheat stored in this country for a period of a year or two at least. If the plans for storage go ahead we will have storage there of 5 million bushels instead of the present 2,500,000 bushels. Therefore there will be more wheat available and ready. As my friend has pointed out, the elevators there are full now even in winter. But under ordinary circumstances we would at least expect to have wheat delivered there starting in May or June, and certainly in time so that the elevators would be filled ahead of the coming of the ships in September.

The relative price of the handling at Churchill as compared with Port Arthur and Fort William I feel has some bearing on this matter. The minister himself admitted that, and I am quoting now from page 595 of Hansard for October 6, 1949. The former member for Melfort said:

> . . . if a favourable price is obtained for wheat at the port of Churchill under the world contract,—

We were under a world contract at that time.

> —a price in excess of the price at Port Arthur or Fort William, then I think it is doubly necessary that the people adjacent to that port should get some advantage from that price.

The minister replied:

> I would agree.

For those reasons then, Mr. Chairman, I am supporting the bill advanced by my colleague.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): In adding a few words in support of this Bill No. 441, I think it is clear to the house now that the intention of the bill is only to grant this privilege on freight rates to the areas within reach of Churchill, in the same manner as rates now apply to Fort William, Port Arthur and Vancouver. The effect of that would be to permit producers in the area accessible to the port of Churchill to get the advantage of cheaper freight rates wherever such cheaper rates would apply. The implementation of the provision would not involve any increased expenditure by the government or the Canadian wheat board and therefore we see little reason for not implementing it.

At this time I believe attention should be given to the facilities at the port of Churchill, because of its great importance as a port, its value to Canada as a nation and the development of the northern part of Canada, both economically and for defence as the whole economic and military picture of the world develops. The constituency that I represent would be in that area designated, perhaps only the small outer fringe of that area, but at the same time we feel that in justice to that area Churchill should be given that advantage. It seems only right that the port of Churchill and the people shipping there should have the same opportunities and privileges as are available to the people shipping to other points.

The matter of grain in the world today, particularly in western Canada, is a subject that is attracting particular attention of the people involved in this business because of the fact that expanding production seems to be a sort of constant thing now. With the changing techniques in the production of wheat, with the use of chemical weed killers and with better facilities, we are able to grow more and better wheat than we have ever grown before. Unfortunately this is true not only in Canada; other countries are learning how to grow wheat more effectively and more efficiently. The result has been that markets for Canada's wheat are gradually declining. It is, therefore, necessary that we look to every facility we can for the storing of our grain.

It appears that within 90 days we are going to be faced, we hope, with another big crop in the west. The problem of storage is then going to tax us, and it will be difficult. I believe I have advocated before in this house that preparations should be made now to have storage facilities available so that this grain can be obtained at the place and time we need it. Statements have been made that some of us seem to look upon a large crop as a calamity. I do not believe any of us have ever said that. The only thing that has been calamitous, so far as the farmer is concerned, has been his inability to deliver grain. If the establishment of storage space at Churchill and other places in Canada will help alleviate that situation, it will be of benefit to the farmer and others as well.

I believe that most of the arguments concerning the value of this bill have been presented. There is nothing more that can usefully be added. I will just say that for the good of Canada and as a means of aiding in making preparations for a situation that is rapidly developed, this would be a good move. It would give some equity to those people who ship grain to that area, and we would like to give it our full support.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have listened with a great deal of interest to the presentation of my neighbours from Saskatchewan in connection with this bill. While my constituency is not in an area that would be directly affected by the change in the bill, I must indicate at this time that I am vitally interested in anything that would affect the extent of the commercial activity at Churchill. The port of Churchill is in the province of Manitoba, and Manitobans whether they live in the south of the province or in the north, are vitally concerned with any move that would promote increased use of the port facilities.

The progress of the port of Churchill has been comparatively slow. That has been due to several factors. There is the basic problem, of course, of the battle against the elements because the port is located so far to the north. As has been indicated in the discussion this afternoon, the period of activity each year is relatively short. Notwithstanding that fact, there has been gradual expansion in the length of the season, particularly since the end of the war and the availability of modern electronic navigational aids. As the situation improves in this regard, no doubt maximum benefits will be derived from the use of the port facilities at Churchill.

There has been also the battle against vested interests in this country. It has been a long, uphill struggle to get recognition of the port as a suitable site for commercial activities in Canada. Gradually the resistance is being broken down. This afternoon some reference was made to the problem of diversion charges. This is the question in which I have been interested since I came to this house, and like other members from the wheat growing areas I find it difficult to understand why this diversion charge on grain flowing through the port of Churchill has been perpetuated from year to year. It seems to me that an unnecessary financial burden is being placed upon the use of the port. It seems to me that it is one small surviving unnecessary discouragement to the expanding use of the port facilities.

As I listened to the discussion I came to the conclusion that the bill as put forward by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson) this afternoon is one step forward in the development of Churchill as a channel of commerce to and from this continent and hence I rise to speak in support of it. The development of northern Manitoba is moving forward rapidly especially in recent years with the coming into operation of mining activities at Lynn Lake and with the completion of the railroad extension to that point. There is every possibility that one of the difficulties of a wider use of the Churchill facilities for two-way traffic will be overcome. There is no doubt at all that in the not too far distant future the port will be used to export the rich ore resources that are being discovered and exploited in the northern part of our province.

With the doubling of the storage capacity of Churchill this year there will be an even greater possibility than heretofore of more incoming traffic from European countries. It seems to me that the proposal in this bill to equalize freight rates and to place Churchill in line with the other major ports of this country is just another step forward in the progress that has been made down through the years toward a more adequate use of the excellent port facilities at Churchill. For these reasons I support the bill which has been presented by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, bills in similar terms to this bill have been debated in this house on other occasions, particularly in 1949 and 1950. I suggest that the real situation has not changed greatly since those debates took place. The proposal is that an area be designated as tributary to the port of Churchill and for which Churchill would be the basing point for freight rates. It has been said that this departure would cause no expense to the government and no expense to the wheat board, but I would point out that it would cause expense to farmers who were not within that particular designated area. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) says that his people are not concerned, but I suggest that if this bill goes through they would be concerned because they would pay their portion of the expense involved in making Churchill a basing point.

It is proposed that about forty to fifty million bushels of wheat would be based on Churchill, that is, there would be that much wheat grown in the logical area tributary to Churchill on the basis of existing freight rates. Although the port has been handling more business each year and is creating new records—last year was quite a step ahead—unfortunately it has never been able to handle as much as eleven million bushels during a shipping season. Obviously there would be in addition some thirty to forty million bushels of wheat enjoying the freight rate to Churchill even though the wheat board would be paying the extra charge involved in shipping that grain to where it would actually go, namely Fort William-Port Arthur.

On the ten and a half to eleven million bushels that actually moved to Churchill last year there would have been a saving to the farmers within the designated area, but there was in fact no real saving to the wheat board. While there would have been a theoretical saving of $169,000 in freight rates, there was a payment made on the grain that moved to Churchill of an amount within $1,000 of the first amount in the form of diversion charges. So that we are asked to create a situation by legislation that does not really exist.

Mr. Knowles: The minister has often created situations that did not exist.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We did create another basing point at Vancouver. This is a fairly recent development; I think it is within the time I have been in the house. However, we have a factual situation at Vancouver. The points within the designated area with freight rates favourable to Vancouver actually ship their grain to Vancouver. It is only correct that farmers in that area should have any benefits that accrue from pricing on the basis of Vancouver rates. All their grain actually goes there.

There is an area along the dividing line between rates tributary to Vancouver and rates tributary to Port Arthur where circumstances often make it desirable to ship grain to the port which is not the cheaper as far as freight rates are concerned. For example, because of the record movement of wheat from Vancouver at the present time and the limited movement from Port Arthur we have shifted the boundary east by several hundred miles. Today points as far east as Regina are shipping to the Pacific coast even though the freight rate to the lakehead is three or four cents cheaper. We are doing that so that the quota system may be worked out fairly. The wheat board is paying the extra cost. In other words, the man in Regina is being paid on the basis of a freight rate to Fort William when his grain is actually being shipped to Vancouver.

I have outlined a situation which we believe works out to the benefit of all concerned. It is a temporary situation and we think it is justified under present circumstances. But I do not think it could be justified to establish an artificial situation so that the man within a designated area will continue to be paid more for his wheat when we know that the greater portion of the amount that is paid would come out of the pool as a whole, rather than represent a direct saving on the shipment of that grain to Churchill.

So you have two situations. One situation is where you have fifty million bushels in a designated area where the rates would be favourable to Churchill but to where you could ship only ten million bushels; that being the present handling capacity of that port. The other situation involved is that on the ten million bushels shipped, the saving in freight is actually offset in full by diversion charges that must be paid if any grain is to be shipped to Churchill. You ask: Why do we not have diversion charges on grain shipped to Vancouver? The reason is that elevator systems are organized to ship to Vancouver. For example, the Alberta wheat pool terminal elevator at Vancouver is supported by a line of country elevators owned by the same company in Alberta. The United Grain Growers terminal elevator at Vancouver is also supported by a line of country elevators in Alberta owned by that company. There are other elevators owned by other elevator interests which are in the same position. For example, the Richardson firm built a terminal elevator in Vancouver and own country elevators in Alberta to support that elevator.

I am sorry there is so much difficulty about understanding the reason for diversion charges. The government owns grain elevators. We own a grain elevator at Fort William. We do not operate that elevator. Why do we not operate the elevator? Because it is not supported by a line of country elevators, and so that it may be operated, we lease it to the McCabe Grain Company who have a line of country elevators and are able to support the terminal elevator.

We have an elevator in Prince Rupert that was closed up for a number of years. Why? Because the government had no line of country elevators to gather grain for that terminal and to support it with shipments from the country. It takes a very considerable investment to establish a balanced system of country and terminal elevators. It is no good building a terminal unless you have country elevators; and if you have country elevators you do not get the full earning power out of them unless you can ship to your own terminal. Systems have been built up on that basis; investments are made in that way. They are not made by greedy capitalists; they are often made by the farmers themselves. I suppose the pool chains of grain elevators are far and away the biggest chains. The pools have a great investment in those chains, and if you say to the Alberta wheat pool: "You cannot ship this grain to your own terminal. It is true, you built a terminal at Vancouver so that you could get the earnings from your country elevators. We are not going to allow that; we are going to say that you must ship from country elevators that you own in Alberta to the government elevator at Prince Rupert." Well, the pool would say: "Is that fair? This system is built up to operate as a unit. We are entitled to handle grain at Vancouver that we collect in our country elevators in Alberta". I say, "Well, it is not fair, no, and you are entitled to a diversion charge equivalent to about the earnings that you would have made on the grain had it been shipped to Vancouver". It is exactly the same situation if grain is being diverted to a flour mill.

Grain is collected by an elevator company, and that company would normally expect to deliver the grain to its own terminal. If it is denied the privilege of shipping to its own terminal, it is the usual custom to pay a diversion charge on the grain. That is a reasonable expense. The principle has been agreed to over the years for a great many years. It is a logical expense in connection with shipments from privately-owned country elevators in Manitoba or Saskatchewan to Churchill.

I think therefore that this bill should be defeated. It creates an illogical situation. It gives a few people benefits to which the facts of life do not entitle them. However, I think my hon. friend, if he would like a suggestion for a bill in the future, is overlooking the real advantages of shipping to Churchill. There are earnings at Churchill, not in delivering grain to Churchill, but in shipping grain from Churchill. There is a benefit of about 9 cents a bushel on ocean freight rates from Churchill to European markets, as against shipments from Fort William to European markets. And he might logically say that that benefit belongs to the farmers in this designated area. Well, I still think that would be a poor argument. It would be a better argument, but after all we ship grain from where we can and to our best available advantage. Grain is a national problem. We build national ports; we spend taxpayers' money, great sums of it, in building facilities to market the grain crops of Canada. The advantages shift from year to year. Ocean freight rates have a good deal to do with differentials, and the savings are not the same from year to year. Therefore I think the present practice of marketing grain where we can, pooling the sums recovered and distributing them among all the producers, is a fair method of handling the marketing of Canadian wheat.

I just mentioned that suggestion so that my hon. friend will not bring this bill down again. We have had this proposal too many times. I do not think it is a logical bill; but if he really wants to get a debate on this subject he may lay claim to the extra 9 cents a bushel that represents the savings on shipments from Churchill. He might get some supporters. I do not know that I have anything else to offer other than to say I hope this bill will be defeated.

Mr. Speaker: Shall I call it six o'clock, or does the hon. member wish to start using his right of reply?

Mr. Weir: I would prefer that you call it six o'clock. I was going to make a few observations with respect to this bill, but since it is one minute to six o'clock I am afraid it is a little too short a time for me to get wound up.

On motion of Mr. Weir the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

RESEARCH COUNCIL ACT

AMENDMENTS TO ENABLE COUNCIL TO ACQUIRE FUNDS, ETC.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 375, to amend the Research Council Act.

He said: The amendments to the Research Council Act which this bill proposes are fundamentally designed to remove certain ambiguities and clarify certain financial arrangements that have assumed greater importance as the research council has grown in size. These amendments do not change in any fundamental way the principles and procedures which have guided the council in its operations over the years, and which, I think, have made possible the very effective work which that institution has been able to do in the promotion, organization and coordination of scientific and industrial research in Canada.

As there appears to be considerable interest at the moment in the broad aspects of industrial research in this country, I think it would be appropriate for me to say something at this time about how research is organized from the government standpoint, what is being achieved and what we may look forward to. I realize, as will all hon. members, that the research council is by no means responsible for all the scientific and industrial research but it does have very broad responsibilities and has had a great influence in guiding, directing and coordinating such activities over the past two decades. There can be no doubt about the value of scientific research to the country's industrial strength, as well as to its health, prosperity and well-being.

World war II demonstrated our nation's dependence on research and I have never heard in a debate in this house or elsewhere any question of the value of that research. The only difference of opinion is on the scale of support, and the best methods of coordinating the various activities. The important point to realize is that large-scale industrial research as we know it today is a very recent phenomenon in the English-speaking countries. It is true that by the turn of the century Germany had built a large industrial empire on fundamental and applied research facilities, but before world war I there were relatively few large research laboratories either in government or in private industry on this continent. Between the world wars, however, major industrial companies in the United States such as the General Electric Company, Westinghouse Company, Dupont Chemical Company and the American Telegraph and Telephone Company built up very large competent scientific research laboratories. The same thing was true in England. But in Canada no corresponding development took place. This is quite understandable and was due to the fact that most sizeable industrial companies that expanded in Canada during those years were branch factories, and those in turn were dependent on research facilities in either the United States or Great Britain.

There were a few exceptions such as the Shawinigan Company, and the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, but generally speaking just before world war II broke out one could say that there were few real research laboratories in Canadian industrial plants.

Just to fill out the picture I would like to give the following figures which were contained in an address in 1949 by the then president of the national research council. The figures were given to indicate in a general way the expenditures and activities in the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada just before the outbreak of war. I realize that such figures are difficult to obtain in precise form but these difficulties, I think, can be taken as representing at least the order of magnitude of activity and prove the point I wish to make.

In 1938-39 government expenditures, which of course reflect activities and facilities on scientific and industrial research in the three countries, were on a per capita basis almost the same: from 40 to 50 cents. On the other hand, the per capita expenditures by industry were markedly different in the three countries: $1.70 in the United States, somewhere between 30 and 50 cents in the United Kingdom; and about 20 cents per capita in Canada.

It will be seen then that in 1938-39 in the United States private industry was supporting industrial research on a scale eight to ten times greater on a per capita basis, and perhaps 100 times greater on the basis of total dollars, as compared with what was being done in Canada. Further, in the United States at that time private industry was spending three to four times as much as the government, while in Canada government expenditures on research were over twice that of industry.

During and since the war the relative burdens of research expenditures have changed radically, particularly in the United States where government expenditures are now approximately equal to those of industry. While the picture here has also changed, and is changing, it is necessary, when considering how industrial research has developed in Canada, to keep in mind the comparative lack of private industrial research facilities in this country before world war II.

Let me illustrate by mentioning one problem we faced in 1939, namely the development and production of radar equipment. In developing such equipment in the United Kingdom and United States it was possible to place development contracts with the large research laboratories of private industries. In Canada, as I have said, comparable industry had no research facilities and, owing to war security restrictions, our branch factories were cut off from all contacts with the laboratories of the parent companies in such military work. As a consequence the development work in radar had to be organized by the national research council, and a crown company, Research Enterprises Limited, had to be set up to do the engineering development and production. The same thing had to be done to produce optical glass and many other special devices, and for work in the field of atomic energy.

The situation was slightly different in some of the chemical industries, especially those involved in the manufacture of explosives; but generally speaking when special and novel research and development were required the primary facilities could be found only in our government laboratories. As the result of our war activities the situation has changed a great deal, and many private industries are now doing good research and development work. But even yet it has been my experience that when one desires to place large development contracts with industry it is usually not possible to find facilities comparable to those which exist in the United States and United Kingdom.

During world war II research expenditures and activities went up phenomenally in all countries. Our expenditures in Canada for government research are at least ten times greater than in 1939, and a comparable expansion was experienced in the United States and United Kingdom. The result is that today our government expenditures and activities on scientific and industrial research are of a very different order of magnitude than those of 1939. For instance, it is I think interesting to note that in the matter of dollars and cents the Canadian government today is spending more than the total sum spent by the United States in 1938-39, and it will be recalled that the United States at that time had a high reputation in this field. Our current expenditures are likewise several times the total expenditures in Great Britain in the pre-war days, and no one would suggest that Great Britain at that time had negligible scientific research activities.

There is another comparison I think is interesting. While all countries have increased greatly their expenditures since 1939, the research expenditures of the Canadian government today for peacetime purposes are, on a per capita basis, of the same order of magnitude as the comparable expenditures in the United States and the United Kingdom. All of this, I think, indicates the Canadian government has not been negligent in supporting sound research and in building up national research facilities and resources. Certainly in the over-all picture Canada's relative position in research is far different from what it was during the 1930's. I think, therefore that, when listening to speeches which purport to show the lack of Canadian relative efforts in the field of research, we must be careful to inquire whether we are discussing the conditions as they were in pre-war days or as they are today. While we are on this point I should like to emphasize that, since the end of world war II, the progress in research in Canada has been even greater than it was during the war, so that one may even be talking about conditions as they were in 1946 and still be drawing erroneous conclusions as to what the 1954 conditions are.

I should like also to emphasize that research is not a static thing. It is continually changing to meet changing conditions and also, like an organism, must grow from small beginnings. The development of research is not merely a matter of money. Money will not buy trained men if they are not available, so that in looking at and assessing the growth and development of research in any country, one must always keep in mind that it is a changing picture and that it is often impossible to provide at any moment everything that may be desirable.

I do not think there is any room for complacency in this particular field. As I have said, it is a rapidly moving one, and no sensible person would dogmatically claim that at any time, in any country, at any place there is in existence a universally acceptable and permanently best arrangement of research facilities. On the other hand, I do feel that the advances made in Canada over the past twenty years have been absolutely first-rate. I think the research council has done an extraordinarily good job and when I talk to people in other countries of the world, as I often do, I hear nothing but commendation for the work of that body. I have heard many say how much they wish their own national organizations were more similar to ours. The credit for all of this does not rest with any one government, any one individual, or any one institution; support has come from all parts of the country, from industry, governments, universities, and provincial institutions. But I do claim that this government merits a fair show of credit for guiding affairs during the period of the greatest growth and development.

I should like at this time and in passing to pay my personal tribute to the members of the honorary council. These gentlemen receive very little public recognition, yet over the years successive councils have rendered outstanding and unselfish service to this country. These men bring freely to the council deliberations their talents, experience and achievements that could not be purchased by money. They come to Ottawa three or four times a year and devote many days of hard work to the business of the council. They are men eminent in their fields, such as university presidents, deans, professors, industrialists, engineers and labour leaders. Not only can they speak with authority on professional questions but they bring to the council as well the viewpoints of the different parts of the country, and they receive no monetary remuneration at all. I think these gentlemen deserve the gratitude of this house and of our country.

I have been dealing with a few of the broader aspects of industrial research and have submitted certain generalizations. I should now like to take a few minutes to indicate how these general considerations have influenced government programs and decisions. As I have said, owing to conditions which I suggest were perfectly normal at that time, there was no appreciable growth of industrial research laboratories in Canada following world war I. The government of that day and successive governments, realizing the need for research, set about doing something which time has proven to be very wise. Without laboratories and without scientific staffs, the first national research council embarked after 1918 upon a program of scholarships to trained research personnel, and grants-in-aid to research which enabled universities across Canada to provide facilities for research. This program naturally was small at the start as there were few scholars applying, and the facilities in our graduate schools were limited. However, this program has gone on and on, increasing in size and effectiveness, since that time, and it was perhaps the major factor in making possible our scientific effort in world war II. In 1939-40 when the great need and demand for military research became apparent, we in Canada were able to organize for the first time a sizeable corps of competent research people, and we had also a large national research laboratory which enabled the research council to provide working facilities for a staff of several thousand which they were able to recruit. Had such trained people and government facilities not been available, Canada would have played little part in military research during world war II.

But great as was the significance in war, the results of those long-term preparations are even more significant today in our peaceful pursuits. We now see in Canada a great surge of industrial research activity, not only in our government laboratories but in our private industries and in our universities. Such developments take time, and ours has followed a slightly different course from that followed in the United Kingdom and the United States.

The strength of a modern industrial nation is dependent on the quality, quantity and vigour of its applied research rather than on any detailed organization chart and, as I have suggested, it is not really useful to compare the general research organizational plane of any one country at any one time with that of another. We should rather consider our ultimate objectives, what progress we are making, and what the picture will look like in 10 or 15 years.

I think that Canada has probably made greater relative progress than has any other country in the last 10 years. I think our scientific and industrial research output is comparable, on a population basis, to that of other leading industrial trading nations. I have no desire to be complacent about the present situation, but I think we are heading in the right way, and I think we are making rather unusual progress.

I should like to say something about the way the national research council operates in fulfilling its responsibilities. As I have said, the national research council for the past 25 years has been awarding scholarships to assist in the training of scientists and has been making grants-in-aid to provide physical facilities. This program has expanded, and today between $1 million and $2 million are being spent, as compared with something less than $100,000 in 1939. My information, and I think it is reliable, is that the honorary council, who recommend all such scholarships and awards, would unanimously subscribe to the principle that no brilliant young student should be prevented from receiving training by lack of scholarships or grants. The national research council, as you know, also operates extensive laboratories, and these laboratories were designed not to duplicate or overlap other facilities but to provide facilities in fields which were not covered in any other place in Canada, and which were needed badly. No doubt you are familiar with the general work of the divisions of applied chemistry, applied biology, radio and engineering, physics, mechanical engineering, building research and so forth.

Most of the council's laboratories are in Ottawa and vicinity. While some might argue for the decentralization of all laboratories, I think it will be found that in those countries where extreme decentralization has either been inherited or superimposed for political reasons there are serious disadvantages. The centralization of facilities makes for greater efficiency and reduces costs, and does, in my opinion, carry no disadvantage to any other part of the country. This policy, however, does not mean that where certain areas have a peculiar interest in certain aspects laboratories dealing with those projects should not be located regionally. The council therefore has a regional laboratory in Saskatoon, in the middle of the prairie provinces, which works on the utilization of farm crops and allied problems. Again, in Nova Scotia there is another regional laboratory which has been set up to deal with some of the problems that are peculiar to the maritime provinces.

I come now to the manner in which the council serves individuals and private industries. You will recall that the organization of the former department of reconstruction made provisions for setting up a research and development division in an attempt to bring the benefits of scientific and industrial research to those smaller industries which could not afford to set up their own research laboratories. We worked out a service called the technical information service and placed, in the various provinces, field men whose duties were to visit and call on all industries in their respective areas and to assist with the problems they had and give what aid we could. The research council, with its extensive headquarters information and library services, undertook the administration of this service. Over the years literally thousands of reports have been made, advice has been given, and help offered. There is no doubt that such service is of great benefit to industry.

As experience was gained, the national research council felt that this "grass roots" work, where individuals were approaching local industrial companies, could be better done by people with local associations than by employees of a federal department. Again, provincial research councils in most provinces were also supporting work of this nature, and friendly discussions between the national and provincial bodies resulted in the suggestion that it would be more effective if the provincial bodies employed all field workers, who would be provincial employees but who would have available to them the library and consulting services that exist at the headquarters' library in Ottawa.

The national research council also offered to make grants to the provincial bodies to cover the expense of such professional officers. I am happy to say that the movement has grown, and today this system is operating in most of the provinces from British Columbia to Nova Scotia. This system makes available to small industries and large industries as well the help, advice and experience of council and all other scientific laboratories in Canada. It is a service that is effective and widely used.

The research council has also organized many associate research committees. These committees are set up to support and deal with research problems that are of interest to many industries. Corrosion is an excellent example of a problem which is basic to most industrial and other activities. On such committees, and there are many, will be found research directors and technical officers of industries, universities and government departments, all of whom are intimately associated with the activities of industries throughout the dominion. From time to time suggestions are made that we in Canada should follow what is called the research association scheme which has been reasonably satisfactory in England. Research council officers have visited England many times to investigate this system, and while most officers at first felt such a system might work well in Canada, all responsible authorities came eventually to the same conclusion, that such research associations, while workable in England, are, except in certain fields, not suitable to the present Canadian situation, and for a different set of reasons the same conclusion has been reached in the United States.

There would, of course, seem to be obvious advantages in bringing together many industries in the same field for the purpose of research and development. In Canada there is one excellent example of such an association, namely, the pulp and paper association, which is supported jointly by industry,

McGill University and the dominion government. The results in this case, I think everyone agrees, are excellent, but it has been almost impossible to extend this type of co-operation through other groups in Canada. I am not going to take up more time on this point, but I should like to say that while this scheme of co-operative research works with reasonable satisfaction in the United Kingdom it does not seem to suit the Canadian picture at the present time. On the other hand, the national research council laboratories and the laboratories of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and other federal bodies do have a very intimate and close contact with individual industries which I think is an advantage found only in smaller countries.

The research council laboratories are visited daily by technical engineers and scientific officers from industry, and our national research council experts are willing and anxious to visit industries for the purpose of conferring and consulting on problems and giving expert advice whenever it is wanted. The national research council also undertakes, by contract, work for private industries, and over the years many profitable co-operative ventures have been completed.

All in all our government laboratories are far more closely in contact with the industries of the country than a superficial examination of organization charts would indicate. The national research council is not a bureaucratic institution interested only in its own laboratories and its affairs in Ottawa. It has most intimate contacts with bodies all over the country. It supports financially the provincial research councils and universities. It gives service to private industry and undertakes work when requested.

The honorary council which directs the over-all policy is made up of 18 men who reflect comprehensively the over-all problems in various regions of Canada. To illustrate: On the present council we have the directors of two of the provincial research councils, and in that way the research council is intimately acquainted with the problems of these local bodies. We also have one of Canada's leading industrialists who takes an active part in the deliberations and presents the needs and responsibilities of industry. As well, there are university presidents, deans and other scientists.

I have indicated that in pre-war days there was not very much research activity in industry. That is far from the truth today. As a result of the developments I have indicated, many industries in Canada have established research laboratories since 1939, and in many cases staffs for those laboratories have been recruited from government laboratories.

A large part of the research that made possible the building of the plant of the Polymer Corporation was carried out in the national research laboratories. Today Polymer has its own laboratories, at Sarnia, built for its own particular purposes. We all know that applied research is one of the basic strengths of that company, and that research is responsible for the fact that Polymer has had its best year during the period when the cost of natural rubber has been abnormally low. The Polymer Corporation does not regard research as something that should be carried out in good years and cut back in poor years, but rather as essential if Polymer is to hold its place in a highly competitive industry.

The atomic energy plant at Chalk River is essentially a research laboratory, the work being entirely devoted to solving the problems of peace. The success of the Canadian aircraft industry is also based on its own applied research.

Today the position as far as industrial research laboratories are concerned is very different from the situation, say, in 1939. We have every confidence that in the next five or ten years the facilities for scientific and industrial research will build up gradually and continue to build up to a point where they will be comparable to similar facilities in other countries.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that while we do not feel that research development in Canada has reached its final and permanent form, we do feel that progress is being made in the only way in which sound scientific progress can be made. We feel that the government research organizations are co-operating with industry as effectively as research laboratories are co-operating in other parts of the world. We feel that any suggestion that our facilities should be broken up and distributed to other parts of the country is neither based on an intimate knowledge of our existing conditions, nor would it be supported by knowledgeable scientists and experts.

I have dealt with this subject in some detail, but it seems to me that, as we are amending an act under which one of the most important scientific bodies in Canada operates, it is appropriate that we should take an over-all look at the way scientific and industrial research has developed in Canada, and consider in general terms any suggestions for its improvement.

I would also like to thank the members of parliament who have served on past committees to review the activities of the national research council and the atomic energy establishment. While we naturally may disagree on details, I think it is to the credit of this house that the important activities of scientific and industrial research, so basic to our national well-being, have never been viewed on a narrow or party basis, but rather on broad national grounds.

Mr. Speaker: Order. When I read the motion for second reading of this bill, I considered it to be a motion for the second reading of a simple amending bill that did not provide as much scope as the minister has covered. I did not want to interrupt the minister while he was making his statement, witnessing the attention that he was receiving from hon. members.

As hon. members know, the Speaker may call a member to order or hon. members may rise to a point of order. At this moment I ought to say that this amending bill covers only a few points, and it might be that during the day there was a tacit understanding that a general discussion concerning the activities of the research council would take place on the second reading of this amending bill. I want to be fair to all hon. members. It may be that hon. members, not knowing the discussion would cover as much territory, have come here tonight merely to discuss a simple amending bill and are not prepared to discuss the activities of the national research council as fully as the minister has done.

It would have been preferable in my view to have heard the speech just made by the minister on items 289 and 290 of the estimates in committee of supply. The position is that a statement covering all the activities of the national research council has been made on the motion for second reading of a simple amending bill. If hon. members wish, therefore, I shall have to allow a wide open debate on the national research council activities.

Mr. Green: May I point out to Your Honour that this bill is very far-reaching. I refer particularly to clause 3, which contains the new provision and reads as follows:

(c) to undertake, assist or promote scientific and industrial research, including, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, . . .

Now, that gives a very wide power to the research council. I submit to Your Honour that the minister was quite right in making the comprehensive statement that he has made. Since he has done so, I submit other members of the house should be permitted to deal with the subject in the same way as the minister has done.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Green: This is a question in which many of the members of the house are vitally interested. I do hope Your Honour will not prevent an adequate debate by trying to rule out any attempt to discuss the wide aspects of this research program.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If I may speak to the point of order, I would suggest there is a great deal of interest in the house in research. There was some discussion between the hon. member and myself about a committee on research. I feel that this debate would be the appropriate place to have any discussion that we may have on research, and I suggest it would suit hon. members if some latitude could be given so they could cover the whole problem. I hope it will not take too much time.

Mr. Coldwell: Did Your Honour not say you would allow the same latitude to other members of the house as to the minister? I take it there is no need to discuss the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) has missed the point I was trying to make. It is that, although normally this discussion should be restricted to the principle of the amendments contained in the bill, because of the wide statement made by the minister, I shall allow what to me is abnormal, a general discussion as wide as that which is called for by the statement made by the minister.

The other point I was making is that if hon. members of the opposition, for instance, or on the government side, are not prepared to discuss research activities as fully as the minister did in opening the discussion, I feel they would have a right to raise a point of order. They could say, "We did not come prepared to discuss all the activities of the research council because we did not expect this amending bill provided the scope for such a wide discussion." That is the other point I was trying to adduce. It is in line, I believe, with the spirit of the rule to the effect that members should not be caught by surprise when they are called upon to discuss a measure in this house. Since there is general agreement as to the wide discussion which is to take place, I shall be pleased to resume my seat and listen to the discussion.

Mr. Pouliot: In listening to the minister, Mr. Speaker, for whom I have deep admiration, I must say that very few men can speak as he has done of personal accomplishments.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pouliot: He has done so with modesty.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Temiscouata should not deviate from the point at issue. I think the point has been well explained and discussed and it is now settled. The hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Pouliot: I cannot understand it.

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for what the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) said when he opened this discussion and mentioned that there was great interest in this particular subject. First I should like to say that I would be most ungrateful if I did not express my personal thanks and gratitude to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris) for his courtesy and consideration in having this matter brought up at a time convenient to me.

In rising to speak to Bill No. 375, to amend the Research Council Act, I propose to submit an amendment. For this I offer no apology because, beneficial and necessary as this proposed bill may be, it comes as a pitiful effort by this or any other government to answer the crying need for action in order to accelerate research in this country.

I should like to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it has been my good fortune to serve on a committee of our party dealing with resources and development which was under the chairmanship of our late distinguished member, Rodney Adamson, who then represented York West. In whatever contribution I make to this debate I should like to pay tribute to him for the part he has played in what I have to say.

At the outset of this session of parliament, almost six months ago, there was a resolution placed on the order paper recommending the establishment of an all-party committee of members to study the question of research in Canada and report what action, if any, should be taken to accelerate activities in this field.

The restriction on time allotted for consideration of private members' resolutions effectively excluded the opportunity for parliament to consider this important question.

While I have no desire to obstruct proposed amendments to the Research Council Act, and on the contrary welcome even this minor and belated recognition of the importance of this question by the government, I avail myself of this opportunity to again place before members of the house the suggestion that parliament establish now a committee to review research activities as now carried out in Canada, and report its findings and make suggestions to parliament.

The importance of research and the part it must play in the development of this nation is only recently becoming recognized, and is certainly more widespread throughout the country than the government seems to recognize. If there is one national function the national parliament of this nation should perform, and perform now, it is to ascertain the best means possible whereby it may facilitate achieving, in the interest of the people it was elected to represent, the advantages and opportunities the application of scientific knowledge offers in the greater utilization of our resources and assured gainful employment of our people.

Until a few years ago, scientific research in Canada was a question left almost entirely to academic institutions. Today, scientific research, and even more important its practical application in the interest of the nation and its people, is more than the concern of educational institutions, governments, industry, agriculture and labour. It constitutes the hopes and conclusions of the ordinary man in the street, in his search for a better standard of living, security of employment and greater opportunities for members of his family than he himself enjoyed. These worthy objectives constitute, if they constitute anything, the objectives of good democratic government.

The press of the country, which by and large reflects public opinion with an amazing degree of accuracy, has for some time now directed public attention to the need for accelerated research in Canada. The Hamilton Spectator, back in May 1945, commenting editorially on this question, made this very realistic observation, and I quote:

> There are certain matters of first importance to the nation, theoretically known before the war, which have been demonstrated beyond all doubt during the last five years.
> One of these is the fact revealed by war that unemployment can be mastered.
> A second, scarcely less important, is the fact that the total output of all the labour of the country can be vastly increased and improved by the unstinted application of scientific thought and experiment. The industry and excellence of our scientists have been necessary to our salvation in war.
> It is now coming to be understood that they will be no less essential to our salvation in peace.

A former minister of finance in this country, and a great Canadian who not only served his country well in the legislative field, both provincially and federally, but whose ability and foresight was equally recognized in other spheres of activity in the building of this nation, the Hon. C. A. Dunning, recognized, and so stated in this House of Commons, the importance of research as a means of expanding our markets, both at home and abroad. In his budget message to the nation, delivered to this parliament on April 25, 1939, Mr. Dunning said, and again I quote:

> Can we not, in other fields, manufacturing, merchandising, transport and the service industries, apply new methods and modernize equipment in order to reduce costs, lower prices and thereby expand our markets both at home and abroad?
> Cannot we adopt new ideas developed during recent years in other countries, without waiting for branch plants or refugees with capital to bring them to us?
> Have our other industries explored at all fully the possibilities of research which have proved such a profitable investment in the nickel and the chemical industries?
> Have we fully explored the possibilities of processing our raw materials before exporting them?
> Have we sought out all the opportunities for the profitable investment of capital in new industries, particularly small industries?
> These are vital questions, Mr. Speaker, for Canada's future.

Today, Mr. Speaker, fifteen years later, those questions are just as vital for Canada's future. Mr. Dunning, when he made that warning to this parliament, and through it to the nation, and speaking as the fiscal director of the economy of the country, frankly admitted that he did not know all the answers. Nor do I, Mr. Speaker, as an ordinary member of this parliament, striving in my humble way to best serve the people I have the honour to represent.

However, I sincerely believe that in the best interest of this nation and its future, the responsibility rests, not alone on the government of the day, but on that greater authority, parliament itself, to undertake now a thorough study and review of the possibilities and opportunities accelerated research and its intelligent widespread application affords this nation at this very time in our economic development.

I am confident that no responsible person representing any branch of government, or any segment of our economy, whether educational, industrial, labour or agriculture, professes to know the answer any more than the Hon. Mr. Dunning did fifteen years ago.

We do know, however, from experience over the past fifteen years, the almost unbelievable accomplishments achieved under the impetus of war.

Surely, in the light of this experience, and facing as we are today serious problems arising from lost export markets and increased competition from abroad in our domestic markets, swelling rolls of unemployment, which this past winter reached their post-war peak, and the vital necessity of maintaining a high level of economic activity if we are to carry the heavy load of taxation which defence and necessary social services make mandatory—this parliament is warranted, if not obligated, to authorize a committee of its members to study in co-operation with the best minds that industry, agriculture, labour and educational institutions can provide, the advisability of accelerated research and its application in the Canadian economy and recommend to this parliament at its next session how this can best be accomplished.

When one considers the lack of initiative by the government on the question of research in relation to the tempo of development of this nation, several questions come to mind that should be a matter of concern to this parliament:

1. Are we doing enough in the way of research in this country, in view of the vast and varied natural resources now known to exist in commercial quantities in Canada?

2. Are our universities in a position to continue to provide the trained scientific minds and undertake the fundamental research necessary to assure the continued development and productive expansion of this country?

3. Would accelerated efforts in the field of industrial research, resulting in new products, new uses for old products, improved techniques that lower production costs, enhance or help us, an exporting nation in ever-increasingly competitive world markets?

4. Are our present fiscal policies, in relation to research expenditures, adequate to induce private industry to undertake the amount of research that should be undertaken other than by government agencies, if we are to continue to enjoy a high level of capital investment so essential to high employment and general prosperity in this country?

5. Does the government do enough in the way of agricultural, medical and other research, in fields where this can best be accomplished by the state in the common interest of all its citizens?

6. How does the degree and extent of research in this country compare with comparable efforts in the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries with whom our primary and secondary producers must compete in export markets?

7. Is the national research council, efficient and beneficial and all as this council is, the right type of organization to accelerate research, particularly applied research in Canada, or should there be some additional organization more representative of the different units of the Canadian economy?

These are questions of vital importance to the future economic and social welfare of this nation. The most accurate information available relative to these questions should be made available to the representatives of the Canadian people, and for this reason I believe parliament should authorize a committee of its members to review all aspects of research in Canada, as now provided for, and make recommendations to parliament as to what, if anything, should be done to accelerate efforts in this regard.

In the United Kingdom there exists a continuing parliamentary and scientific committee that deals primarily with questions related to research in that nation. The membership of this committee in the United Kingdom is composed of members representative of both houses of parliament, and in addition, one representative each from recognized scientific societies, research associations and other scientific and technical bodies.

This committee meets regularly in a House of Commons committee room to discuss subjects on which there is some legislation or other parliamentary interest. In the past, this committee has studied and made recommendations on such matters as: 1. A national fuel policy; 2. scientific agriculture; 3. development of underdeveloped countries; 4. technical assistance policy; 5. scientific relations with other countries.

Over a period of years, the committee has provided the medium for a large exchange of views between scientific people and parliamentarians. In Britain, the committee on research, representative as it is of all political parties, has earned for itself a voice in public affairs and has had considerable influence on political thinking in that country.

I think the record of the scientific and parliamentary committee in the United Kingdom conclusively proves that such a medium is capable of forming a real and effective connection between scientists and parliamentarians, something which is sorely lacking in this country.

I believe that a committee of the type that exists in the United Kingdom could serve a very useful purpose in this country, particularly in view of the tremendous challenge facing not only those qualified in the field of research, but as well those Canadians who, by virtue of their vocation, assume the responsibility to assure this nation of a continuing supply of scientifically-trained personnel to develop this country.

Just recently, a leading British scientist, Sir Robert Watson-Watt, speaking to the professional institute of the public service of Canada, expressed the view that there was a very positive and definite need for better understanding between government and scientists in Canada. This eminent British scientist, who pioneered the development of radar, no doubt speaking from years of experience in the scientific field and its application to the economic life of a country, strongly urged consideration of the establishment of a top-level council of parliamentarians and leading scientists to help guide the development of Canada's unlimited potentials.

Commenting on the need for such a committee in Canada, this scientist, who himself was once a consultant to the Department of Defence Production and other branches of the Canadian government, had this to say:

> Of all the great powers Canada most needs best use of her limited numbers in developing her unlimited potentials.

As a means of achieving this objective, a council of top-rating governmental and scientific minds was suggested. Such an advisory council on scientific policy in Canada could advise the government on the whole civilian field of scientific endeavour, and whether or not the various spheres of research were adequate.

Scientific and industrial research, agricultural research, research on natural resources, would all be co-ordinated in this one advisory council, which is not the case in Canada today. In the United States the president just recently directed the national science foundation to survey federal research and development programs in that nation, where today that government spends over two billion dollars a year on research.

The purpose of the survey is to co-ordinate efforts in research with a view to accelerating activities in this field. In the United States the dependence upon and importance of science to maintain the military and industrial position of that nation has been realized by the government. The national science foundation in the United States was created in 1950, about the time the United Kingdom and other countries were amending their legislation regarding research, with a view of action to enhance the competitive position of their respective countries in anticipated competitive world markets.

In the words of the act, which established this national science foundation, the purpose was:

> To develop and encourage the pursuit of a national policy for the promotion of basic research and education in the sciences.

Last year, the national science foundation completed plans for a survey of the nation's effort in research and development. This was motivated by the fact that preliminary surveys fairly clearly indicated that basic research, the very backbone of technological development in that country, has not been adequately supported.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, when such nations as the United Kingdom and the United States, both of whom are more advanced in their stage of development than Canada, find it advisable and necessary to take governmental action to co-ordinate and accelerate research in their respective countries, we in this parliament should seriously consider the establishment of a non-partisan parliamentary committee to study research in this country and what action we also should be undertaking if we too hope to develop as a nation and continue to compete in ever-increasingly competitive world markets.

It matters not which side of the house or from what party the suggestion for a committee comes. The important question is the authorization by this parliament, now, of a committee of its members, empowered to thoroughly study all aspects of research in this country and recommend to parliament what action this nation should be undertaking at this time. When we realize what has been done elsewhere, this country can do no less.

In Canada, we have our national research council and our scientific and research branches of health and agriculture. In my opinion, these branches of government have done and are today doing excellent work in their respective fields. However, much of the time of the national research council has, for the past decade, been taken up with matters of defence, made necessary by the fact that we were, during these years, either actually at war or building up our defences against possible aggression.

Agricultural research in Canada is concerned largely with the practical problems of agriculture, and in this regard contributes greatly to this industry. Research, however, viewed as a specific program of finding wider outlets for agricultural products, is not a primary function of existing agricultural services in Canada. Agricultural research in Canada has never been designed, planned or provided for on a long-term basis, to widen the field of edible and inedible uses of agricultural products.

While the interdependence of agriculture and industry is recognized, it cannot be said this was the motivating factor in undertaking agricultural research.

As our industrialization expands, the demands for industrial raw materials expand. Much of this can come from agricultural production.

Today, research in Canada should encompass work in the field of greater uses for agricultural products. Individual farm units cannot be expected to make expenditures on research, even though they stand to benefit materially from research efforts on their behalf.

In the United States last year, research in this regard resulted in more than $1·5 billion worth of farm raw materials being purchased by chemurgic industries. Much of this was previously classed as waste material because prior to the necessary research work being undertaken we lacked the knowledge of how to utilize this waste material or other by-products.

True, this did not solve the question of surplus farm production in the United States, but it has gone a long way to provide convincing evidence that research, resulting in new uses and new crops, offers a sound approach to this problem.

The agricultural industry in this country, given the opportunity that accelerated research can surely provide, is equally competent to explore whatever agricultural frontiers appear to offer promise.

With agricultural surpluses accumulating in this country, and our export markets threatened by accumulated surplus production elsewhere, I sincerely believe it is to the advantage of the agricultural industry of this country, and through it the nation as a whole, that a committee, as proposed by this resolution and my amendment thereto, study the possibilities of research in this field.

In the field of industrial research there is much that can and should be undertaken, not under any form of state subsidy, but rather by industry itself under the inducement of revised fiscal policies designed to encourage and accelerate research as a means to assure a continuing high level of employment and capital investment in Canada.

Research is a principal factor in the discovery of new products, the production of which creates capital expenditures and employment for our people. Research creates new wealth, which in turn broadens the basis upon which to carry our heavy burden of taxation.

Research advances production techniques, which in turn result in new modern products at lower costs of production. This enhances our ability to compete with imports in our domestic markets and the products of other countries in competitive world markets.

The extent and direction of industrial research has, by its very nature, been directly related to the economic situation in this country. It was only natural that during our pioneer stage of development research efforts were largely confined to primary industries, agriculture, mining, forestry, and to a more limited extent, fisheries. It is a natural evolution that, as this country develops, the importance of research in secondary industries should become more apparent.

In Canada, this pattern of development of research facilities has been directly affected by the large number of branch plants located in this country, who obtained their information from their parent organizations in other countries.

For years, it was a case of the parent carrying out research, leaving the Canadian subsidiary to produce the rubber stamp copies of designs perfected in the United States or the United Kingdom.

The Massey report clearly indicates the extent to which this happened, when it points out that of 12,000 patents issued in Canada in a recent year, over 11,000 of these were the work of scientists and inventors in other countries. While this report points up the need to encourage our industries to undertake greater research, adequate action has not yet been taken towards meeting this recommendation. Until the last few years, nearly everything we used in this country was designed outside of Canada, or, at best, a copy of a foreign design.

Again, this was the result of the close co-operation between many Canadian, United States and British manufacturers, and in no small degree due to the influence of American advertising contained in the multitude of American magazines distributed throughout Canada.

Today, however, we are forced to recognize a new phase in Canadian history. We are beginning to grow up in spite of ourselves. We are beginning to realize that the belief that research in Canada must, of necessity, be on an essentially low level is just not good enough.

Two world wars have contributed much to the industrialization of this nation. Under a wartime economy it was not difficult to keep our factories running, our people gainfully employed and retain our position as the fourth largest trading nation in the world.

Today, however, with war-devastated countries back on their feet and fighting for world markets, we are facing ever-increasing competition in world trade. Today, the words "Made in Canada" must be the hallmark of good value, must represent modern production designed and produced to meet the consumer demand of a modern-day world trade. We can no longer rest on our laurels or depend for our future economic welfare on a continuing high export of raw materials to sustain our economy.

Our products must be modern and of high quality. It is not good enough to say this is a challenge to labour and management to exercise restraint in wage and price demands, lest we price ourselves out of world markets. The Canadian people have achieved a standard of living that they are not prepared to sacrifice. To continue to compete in highly competitive export markets, so essential to our economy, entails a constant effort to lower costs of production.

In my opinion, this can best be achieved by governmental fiscal policies which offer inducements in the way of taxation reductions designed to encourage research in this country. To the extent that research can lower production costs, a widely recognized fact in other countries, Canadian exporters will be able to compete in highly competitive world markets.

It will also materially assist Canadian producers to compete in their domestic market against stiff competition from abroad, and is, in my view, an infinitely better solution than a return to the outmoded practice of increasing tariff barriers to world trade.

In this country, at this very moment, we are facing the danger of swelling rolls of unemployment, a vivid memory to many who lived through the early thirties. If we are to avoid widespread unemployment in this country, we must maintain our economic growth. This cannot be done by exporting raw materials alone in their raw, unprocessed state.

Even now, lucrative, but in the long run costly as this policy has been, the end of the seller's market is in sight. Stockpiles of essential and strategic raw materials purchased from Canada are now commencing to accumulate in importing countries. Much of these raw materials have gone to the United States, but the stability of that export outlet for many of our raw materials is now in question.

As evidence of this fact, I draw to your attention the recent recommendations of the advisory board to the United States secretary of agriculture, where they recommend the exercising of authority by the C.C.C. to accept strategic materials in return for agricultural surpluses.

If this virtual barter policy becomes operative, this will materially reduce an already declining demand for raw materials from Canada. Certainly, we cannot accept agricultural surpluses in return for strategic raw materials, when we are presently confronted with the problem of finding export markets for similar surplus production in this country. We can hardly expect to maintain the economic growth of Canada on an already indicated decreasing demand for primary products.

The United States recognizes how essential it is to maintain economic growth in that country as a bulwark against unemployment. Accelerated research is an integral part of the solution they are presently endeavouring to work out.

In 1954, the United States proposes to spend over $4 billion on scientific and technological research, which will rapidly make many of their present industrial plants obsolete. This, in turn, will give rise to a high level of capital investment, which spells employment for their people.

We, too, are a world trading nation. Our economy is dependent, in no small degree, on our ability to compete in world markets. That competition will not be made easier by the visionary action in the field of research in the United States, with whose industrial might we must compete.

The adequacy of research carried out in Canada has been a matter of concern to provincial governments for some time. These governments are primarily interested in industrial uses of the natural resources of their respective provinces, because they are closer to the problem of improving and maintaining the living standards of their population.

The experience of the research council of Alberta clearly indicates the advantages of accelerated research. The following is a quotation from the report of the royal commission on provincial development and rehabilitation, 1944, volume I, part VII, page 10:

> The scientific members of the staff of the university were constantly receiving appeals for information concerning the possibility of the development of the so-called resources, to which it was impossible to furnish definite answers. Similar appeals were coming from the government of the province. The situation became intolerable. A beginning was made by forming a "Science Association" and a survey was undertaken to determine pressing problems. This resulted in a small booklet presenting to the government 36 problems concerning natural resources, all of major importance, for which no solutions were available in the then present state of knowledge. There were problems requiring solution before industrial development could possibly be instituted, and of which the National Research Council was not cognizant. In order that systematic work could be inaugurated, the association recommended the formation of a "Provincial Research Council" whose responsibility it would be to set up co-operative research on problems of local interest and especially to urge upon the national council those of large dimensions and of more general interest.

The record of development in Alberta today conclusively shows the advantage of accelerated research.

In 1943, the Dawson commission on development in Nova Scotia clearly recognized the need for accelerated research when it stressed the overwhelming need for more work in research, in order to keep up with the economic progress of the modern world.

This commission pointed out that before the war per capita expenditures in research in various countries were estimated as follows:

Russia	$1.80 to $3
United States	2.40
Great Britain	.70
Canada	.25

Again, as in Alberta, the Nova Scotia report strongly indicated the need for accelerated research.

In his brief to the Massey commission on research, Dr. J. W. T. Spinks of the University of Saskatchewan said:

> It is necessary to look ahead to the time when we shall be compelled to do more of our own research to keep up with developments in the industrial field. The importation of scientific ideas is bad for the intellectual development of a country—particularly when coupled with the export of scientific brains. In time of war it leaves the country in an extremely vulnerable position. In time of peace it weakens its competitive position with other nations. Today, research has a profound influence on our national welfare and security.

I draw these expressed opinions of experts from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia, on the importance of accelerated research, to the attention of this house with the question: Is it not time that a committee of this parliament was set up to review the possibilities of accelerated research in this country?

In suggesting a parliamentary committee to review research in Canada and recommend what action, if any, should be taken to co-ordinate and accelerate activities in this field, I recognize the progress already accomplished.

Achievements in the field of medical, agricultural, fundamental and, to a more limited degree, industrial research, warrant a justifiable feeling of pride in a nation as young as Canada.

Marquis wheat, insulin, and the cobalt bomb are but a few examples.

During the war years, Canadian scientists, in co-operation with government and industry, devised ways and means to provide substitute products or alternative sources of supply for raw materials essential to a successful prosecution of the war.

The great Polymer Corporation in my own constituency is a case in point, as was pointed out by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I wish to reiterate what he emphasized and to quote from the report of that great industry. Its last annual report includes this particular statement:

> The research that Polymer has carried out to date has not only increased our revenue but has also enhanced our position in the rubber industry throughout the world. It is our firm belief that industry should not depend on public institutions for its research work. Research, when properly directed, pays handsomely. The expansion of industrial research in Canada is a necessity if we are to keep pace with other countries and utilize our natural resources to the full.

That view on this important question, Mr. Speaker, is from the annual report of one of the government's own corporations.

The production of liquid sulphur dioxide from smelter gases met the urgent demand from the pulp and paper industry when imports of sulphur were in short supply. This made it possible for the largest earner of foreign exchange to continue to operate at capacity when gold and U.S. dollars were so necessary to a sound Canadian economy.

But I would point out that these things were achieved under the stress of war, and at a time when urgency, in a sense, relegated costs to a matter of secondary importance.

Today, in what history may yet unfortunately record as but an interval between wars, we should be directing greater effort towards accelerated research in this nation.

Certainly this can be accomplished more efficiently and at considerably less cost in peacetime than under the urgency of war.

Certainly, as an exporting nation, facing ever-increasing competition both in our home markets and abroad, we should, as a parliament, direct greater attention to the possibilities research offers in improved techniques and lower costs of production.

The present limitations of our national effort in the field of research become only too apparent when one realizes that one single corporation on this continent, namely General Electric, provides more money for research in a year than do all branches of the government of Canada, excluding research for defence purposes.

It should also be a matter of vital concern to this parliament that other nations, anxious to enhance their position in competitive world markets, have seen fit to alter their fiscal policies to accelerate research as a means toward new and better products and reducing costs of production.

In the last British budget, presented to the parliament of that nation on the same day as the Canadian budget, the Hon. Mr. Butler,

Chancellor of the Exchequer, made this statement, which I quote from that speech as reported in the British Hansard of April 6, 1954, pages 224-225:

> I now wish to end as I began with our primary need; that is to improve our competitive power. Our rate of industrial modernization is strikingly less than that of America, and it seems probable that the Germans are now moving ahead of us. We shall not long continue to compete successfully in the export field with these our principal rivals, unless our plant and equipment is completely up to date.

Again I remind this house that we in Canada are an exporting nation, dependent upon export trade for approximately one-third of our gross national income.

We, too, have to compete against the United States, the United Kingdom, Germany and more recently, Japan, in competitive world markets.

The British Chancellor of the Exchequer in his budget speech, stated:

> The importance of scientific research to our economy can hardly be over-estimated.

To accelerate research in the United Kingdom there was included in the budget a new system of investment allowances of 20 per cent for agricultural buildings, and plant and buildings used for scientific research. This to be in addition to the full annual depreciation allowances.

I suggest that a parliamentary committee of this house should review our present fiscal policy with regard to research, and the relationship this bears to policies in other countries with which we have to compete in world markets.

Another matter I believe warrants the establishment of a parliamentary committee to study research activities in Canada has to do with greater co-ordination of our efforts in this field. Last November the Canadian Westinghouse Company did a great public service in organizing a "Canada's Tomorrow Conference", which was held at Quebec city and attended by over 300 leaders in Canadian industry, finance, education, government and other fields. One of the speakers at that conference was Dr. R. K. Stratford, scientific adviser to Imperial Oil Limited and president of the research council of Ontario. In that speech Dr. Stratford suggested the formation of a federal research council in Canada, designed to provide closer scientific co-ordination between federal and provincial research groups. Dr. Stratford also recommended the establishment of a reasonable number of small research units from coast to coast, on or near the campuses of universities, as a means to assist in keeping research costs to a minimum, and at the same time place Canada in the forefront of world science. For these reasons among others I feel, as a Canadian, that the time has now come—if it is not past due—for this nation to grow up scientifically, at least to a degree comparable to the already established estimate of our wealth in natural resources.

The industry and ingenuity of the Canadian people is more than adequate to meet this challenge. For years our universities have been training young men and young women to fit themselves to make a material contribution in the field of research. On graduation, many of these young Canadians have found it necessary to leave this country in search of gainful employment. That exodus of Canadian brains must be stopped by giving these young Canadians an opportunity to find gainful employment in Canada and make their contribution to this, the nation of their birth.

Our industrial potential is just beginning to become apparent, but it needs encouragement; it needs inducements to nurture its growth and development. What we have done in medical research, for example, insulin and the cobalt bomb, can be done in the industrial field. What our universities are doing today, even under severe financial handicaps, must now be extended to the industrial field so as to encourage greater processing of our raw resources in this country, as a means of providing employment for our people.

To longer ignore this necessary action is to doom Canadian workers to be hewers of wood and miners of metals to be processed at higher standards of living in a foreign land.

I have sufficient confidence in our democratic system of government, and our ingrained respect for our institution called parliament, to believe that a non-partisan committee of the house, delegated by parliament to study and report upon the possibilities and need for accelerated research in this country, can and will materially benefit the welfare of every Canadian.

I suggest that the tremendous development of our natural resources in the past decade challenges parliament today to pick up the cudgels laid down by those men of vision four decades ago, when they laid the basis for research in their day and age.

For reasons which I have stated, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Nickle):

> That Bill No. 375 be not now read the second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to a special select committee representative of all parties of this house with instructions that they have power to call witnesses and send for documents and papers for the purpose especially of more effectively providing for the promotion and acceleration of research activities in Canada.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I did not come here tonight prepared to discuss the national research council, but I am very happy indeed that the minister gave such a comprehensive outline both of the genesis of the national research council and of its work. I think that it was good to have this information placed on the record tonight, and perhaps the minister took the opportunity of doing so because this bill is before us. May I say at the outset that the amendment to the motion for second reading of the bill comes, I think, at a very inopportune time. We are now approaching the end of the session. If a committee were set up it would be necessary for the officers of the national research council and the department to prepare the material and data that would have to be placed before such a committee for it to make a thorough investigation of the work of the council.

I would also say that the amendment orders that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the committee. I am in agreement with the Speaker when he said that the subject matter of the bill was fairly narrow, and I can see no good purpose in referring it to a parliamentary committee. I do think, however, that the hon. member is quite right in his plea for the appearance of the officers of the national research council before a parliamentary committee, but I suggest to him that at this stage of the session it would not be possible to make the necessary preparations and to have the kind of discussion that I think this subject warrants. Consequently I shall suggest to my colleagues that we should vote against the amendment moved by my hon. friend, although I want to make it perfectly clear that if it had been moved earlier in the session in time for the preparation of data we would have voted for it. To bring the national research council before a parliamentary committee would be a good thing not only for the council but for the members of the house.

I am one of those who appreciate the splendid work that this organization has done for Canada over the years. I do not think that the minister, the council, or, if I may say so, the government, need offer any apologies for the work of the national research council. As the minister has said tonight, when the council was set up years ago there was nothing worth while in the realm of scientific research in our country with the exception perhaps of the field of agriculture because our experimental farms, filling quite a different role and occupying a different field from the national research council, had already laid the foundations for the remarkable agricultural development which occurred, particularly in the prairie provinces. If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to say that the west owes a very great debt of gratitude to the men who worked on our experimental farms and produced the new varieties of wheat and other grains thus enabling our western farmers, in years when the season was short and when grains were affected by various plagues such as rust, to produce a crop and therefore to get some returns for their labour.

We had then some agricultural research on the experimental farms, but the minister is quite right that during the years from the end of the first great war until the outbreak of the second great war not too much was accomplished in the realm of industrial research although there were competent people on the national research council directing its activities. I should like to mention the name of General McNaughton, who gave distinguished service, and of course his successor, Dr. C. J. Mackenzie, of whom those of us from the province of Saskatchewan are very proud because of the contribution he made not only in building up the engineering department of the provincial university but also in his position as head of the national research organization at Ottawa. He made a contribution, particularly during the war years, for which I think this country should be ever grateful. Dr. Mackenzie has now retired, although his advice is still available and will be given freely. He has been succeeded by a scientist who, I believe, will also have the confidence of the house and of the country in the person of Dr. Steacie, and I am sure he will make a worth-while contribution in the days to come.

Tonight the minister outlined something of the contribution that the research organization had made to this country, particularly since the outbreak of the second world war. Those of us who know the part that radar played in the defence of Britain during the war are aware of the tremendous contribution made by the Canadian research council in the development of that very important instrument. But radar is perhaps even more important in peacetime than in wartime because of its long-term uses. I have had the opportunity, as other hon. members probably have, of crossing the ocean on a liner equipped with radar or, perhaps more significantly, of coming through the narrows off Vancouver island on a rainy and foggy night and being invited into the captain's quarters to see the radar in actual operation. The feeling of confidence that instrument now gives to those who go down to the sea in ships is something that is really remarkable. Canada played a very important part in the development of that great scientific instrument.

Then, too, in the field of aeronautics the national research council has done a remarkable job. Much of the industrial development in the development of the Canadian aeroplane industry stems back to work that was done by the research council. Those of us who have been on the atomic energy committee more than once have seen the atomic pile at Chalk River and know the extent to which the young men and young women engaged there are the products of developments made effective through the activities of our universities, encouraged by the national research council. We know the contributions that have been made in that regard to the welfare of our country.

I am always happy to know that the young scientists, the products of our own universities, encouraged often by our own research council, who are engaged in the development of atomic energy, are engaged in that development not because they believe it is an instrument of war but because they believe it will be of great benefit to the people of Canada and the world in civil affairs in the future. One could go on discussing the services of the council in the field of applied physics, chemistry and so on, and refer to the fine group of young men and women who have been recruited from our Canadian universities and have been used in research in this country.

I should like to emphasize this point. If there is now considerable industrial research by private enterprise in this country, it has largely been promoted by the activities of the national research council. We must not forget, and I think the minister tonight indicated, that there was very little private industrial research before the second world war, or even during the war years when research in this country was led by this most significant national organization. The results of this research by this public organization have been available to industry, so that industry benefited from the expenditures we have authorized in this parliament. The products of industry have been improved because we, in the House of Commons and the Senate, have supplied funds for this particular purpose and have thus contributed to the development and to the profits of industry.

I want to say something to the minister that I have thought for a very long time. I believe that not only should we make available to private industry in this country the results of industrial scientific research, but we should make available those results to the consumers of this country, especially concerning the wares and articles that are offered for sale. Those of us who went over the national research council building two or three years ago will recall that we actually saw certain experiments that were made in connection with the laundering of clothes. We saw that after clothes had been washed with certain widely advertised products a certain number of times, the clothes were eaten away; they were destroyed. Why should not the consumer in Canada know that some of these widely advertised products, greatly puffed up, can cause serious damage to the articles that are used in our homes?

One such product that I remember well was advertised as "no rinsing required." If one did not rinse the clothes, one soon found there would not be very much of the clothes left to rinse. I know of other fields in which research has taken place relating to consumer products, and articles for sale in this country, the results of which should be given to the public of this country so that the public might be guided by those results. In the United States there is of course a co-operative organization—I shall not call it a private organization—headed by Professor Colston Warne of Amherst University, which publishes a monthly consumer's guide. People may read in that guide the results of research into products that are offered for sale to the public of the United States. We have not such an organization in this country. This country is not big enough to afford the facilities to do that kind of investigation. But we have a public organization in the national research council, an organization unlike anything they have in the United States and unlike anything they have in the United Kingdom. Since the public, including the consumers of Canada, are paying for the operation of this national research council, which is doing such a magnificent job for industry, let that council also do a similar job for the consumers of this country. Let the consumers know some of the results of the appraisals and investigations concerning products that are advertised from one end of this country to the other.

Then, too, the national research council has encouraged our universities in the realm of research, and has assisted the universities in educating and encouraging the young men to go into the fields of physics and chemistry, as well as many of these new fields that are associated with both physics and chemistry. This is a very valuable service to the country and to industry.

Contributing as we do to the Colombo plan, it is satisfactory to know that we have been able to help the countries which are themselves encouraging new scientific research, by inviting some of the young scientists in those countries to come to our country to study, not only in our universities but at our national research council under the Colombo plan. I was interested in hearing in the external affairs committee that we have received over 400 young students in many of these fields into Canada under the Colombo plan, most of them for our universities, but some of them have been studying physics, chemistry and so on at our national research council in the city of Ottawa. That is one of the great contributions that we can make through the Colombo plan towards improving the standard of living in those countries that are just emerging from an underprivileged condition in the world.

I am not going to go exhaustively into the council's activities. I believe that in the realm of medicine the national research council is performing a very useful service to the country, as I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) knows. I believe that could be extended. We could perhaps extend that and go into research, and not only along the lines of cancer; for there are other dread diseases into which research should be encouraged. I am not going to mention them in particular but several of them will come to the minds of many of the members as well as to mine.

In a country like ours I think there is another field to which more attention should be given than has been given in the past, and I refer to housing. When we think of the rigours of our climate, the heat in the summer and the cold in winter, we must realize that our housing is still inadequate to meet our needs. A great deal of research could be done in connection with insulation and the types of buildings best suited to our climate and so on. I repeat that much more could be done in that field. I am not unaware of the fact that something has been done, that some investigation has been carried on, but I think more could be done.

The hon. gentleman a few minutes ago referred to the utilization of waste products of all description, waste from our lumber and other mills, the utilization of poorer grades of lumber and timber. Research could be carried on in connection with these and other resources such as coal so that we might not only develop our natural resources but use them more scientifically and economically.

I do not want to speak at any greater length except to say that I believe that more and more scientific research will be relied on to develop industry and to promote the welfare of mankind. I think that any appropriation we make to assist the development of the national research council, to make it more efficient, to make its operations more widespread will be money well spent. We are spending a great deal of money for defence, and that is all very well under the conditions that exist in the world today. We have to spend great sums of money for defence, but I believe that if we think in terms of our domestic economy—not in a world-wide sense—what we spend on research will be in the defence of the Canadian standard of living, in the defence of Canada's welfare in the days to come. I know that I would be prepared to support a much larger appropriation for the national research council in order to encourage in every way its development and enlargement in the sphere in which it operates at the present time.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, I think the amendment moved by the hon. member is inopportune. It is too late in the session. The subject matter of the bill is too narrow to refer to a committee. But I would like to say to the minister and to the government that when parliament next meets we should have a committee again. I think it is three years—I may be wrong and it may be only two years—since we had a committee looking into the operations of the national research council. Since that time we have had a committee on atomic energy, but I would suggest to the government and to the minister that early in the next session a committee be constituted to review once again the work of the national research council. If that is done I am quite sure that when the committee comes to report its findings to the house in connection with the council we shall find, as we did before, that we have a remarkably efficient and praiseworthy organization operating in the field of scientific research on behalf of the people of Canada.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the C.C.F. has suggested that he is not ready to support this amendment because of the lateness of the session. I take objection to that. We are here to do the nation's business and, no matter how late it may be in the session, if a committee is necessary we should set it up and get the work done as it should be done.

Mr. Coldwell: You have to let the research council prepare for the committee.

Mr. Hahn: I am quite aware of that. I feel sure that we should go ahead and make preparations for that committee. The scope of this bill is quite large. I would say that the necessity for a research council is probably more apparent to the nation today than it has been at any other time in our history. It is true, as the minister has pointed out, that the work of the research council was accelerated during the times of war. I believe the same thing could be done today.

I am one of those who did not come prepared to speak at great length on this particular subject because I felt that as the bill was a short one it would not require too much debate. However, sometimes one feels that if things are to be said there is a time when they should be said, and probably I had better say what I have in mind at this time.

There are certain aspects of our economy which should be given particular consideration in the way of research. I refer to the conservation of our soil, agriculture, mining, fisheries, forests, water conservation and many others. We are faced with the fundamental problem of the conservation of our soil. As an illustration, our research council might investigate the utilization of waste wood products in British Columbia in the conservation of the water content in our soil.

In recent years we have made great use of fertilizers and this has come about directly as a result of the work of the research council. The research council brought into being the wonderful Marquis wheat and many other rust-resistant grains.

If there was no other problem requiring the setting up of a research council or a committee, I would say that the coal problem as it affects Nova Scotia and Alberta would be sufficient to keep the research council going for a long while. In the railway and shipping committee the president of the Canadian National Railways was asked the tonnage of Alberta coal that his company expected to use. He indicated to us that this was going to drop from approximately 790,000 tons this year to approximately 400,000. The dieselization of engines on the Canadian National Railways will most likely mean that in the near future the remaining 400,000 tons will not be used.

We are going to have a tremendous coal field on our hands, not just in Alberta but also in Nova Scotia and, as was pointed out, probably in British Columbia around Nanaimo. Even with the advent of science we have not learned how to utilize these products which are left over at the present time. It is necessary that a committee be set up to study every aspect of this particular problem.

There are many different fundamental factors involved and I for one would be quite willing to stay here a few extra weeks if a committee were set up to study this problem and do a real job in the utilization of our wastes, in connection with our conservation problems and other matters.

During the latter part of last week we had the privilege of hearing the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Sinclair) indicate how necessary he found research in his own particular field. He used the example of goldfish, but I am not going to discuss that at this moment. He indicated the need for a research council to study the spawning of salmon, to aid them in getting up the higher falls, and to discover the speed of various species of fish. He indicated the particular need that such a research council would fill. Mining is a business of wasting assets today. To put it another way, and it means much more, mining wastes much of our assets today. We have so many by-products in the minerals of British Columbia and in the great fields of Ontario and Quebec and in the various provinces which we do not use. We call them waste material. If we could find a proper use for those particular wastes I am sure that we would have no difficulty in reducing the price of our commodities to the point where the public would find them much cheaper, and they would be much happier to accept them.

I would say that the value of by-products has a direct effect upon the price of the main product manufactured. In my own province we have found that the discovery of minerals is important. To illustrate the work that a research council might do I should like to read from the sixth British Columbia natural resources conference for the year 1953 on page 79, in which William H. White, associate professor of geology of the University of British Columbia, had this to say:

> Another tool, long known, but only recently applied to mineral exploration, is a method of investigating the minute metal content of plants, soil, and water. Plants growing on mineral deposits, and the concealing soil in which they grow, and surface waters draining mineralized areas, may contain abnormal amounts of metals such as copper and zinc. Methods now in use will detect one part per million of copper or zinc in plants or soils, and as little as one part per billion in water. Tap-water by comparison is a concentrated solution of zinc. These methods are as yet imperfect and the interpretation of results is not well understood. In the United States geological survey the investigation of geochemical and biochemical techniques is an important project to which large funds are allotted; in Canada practically the only research of this sort is done in the department of geology and geography at the university of British Columbia.

I feel, and I am sure many hon. members must also feel, that if it is important that a province such as British Columbia should set up a research department to study the particular needs in the geological and geophysical field, then certainly we should have a national body which would do likewise. I am sure that each member of the group of which I am representative would only too heartily support the setting up of a committee at this time to determine the scope of study of this research council work.

Take the matter of forests. That field is itself of tremendous importance to Canada. Much of Canada's surface is covered by natural forest regions. During the war years we learned to make use of practically every portion of our wood products that it was possible to use. We have tried to do away with unnecessary waste. We feel that a wasted product represents a wasted dollar. Forest products are a subject that should be given every study. The price of Canada's forest products, the paper that we get from those forests and other substances that can be produced have a value related to all our forest industry. I would go so far as to say that the large paper companies, the large firms having to do with paper products, and many other industrial plants which use the industry of forestry, have done their share in trying to set up a research council and to make use of every bit of their products so that they could keep the costs down. That factor in itself is well worth recognizing.

It is not so many years ago that we did not have such a thing as the various types of plywood that we have today. We did not have the many types of nylon and other wood products that we have today. We could carry on a careful study of our forestry through a research council, and I am sure that by so doing we would soon find that we could bring our wood and wood products into a world that would soon purchase them all, and be only too happy to get them. We would not have such a thing as a product we could not sell.

If those surpluses of which we speak so frequently that we have no actual use for at the moment because we cannot find a market for them, such as wheat, were turned into another product by means of research, we might have the answer to the question of disposition of our surpluses. I do not believe that we have a surplus of wheat. It is considered as such by many in the dominion today, and as long as it is not being used, but left in the fields to spoil, it will eventually become a waste. We must guard against this waste because the world is starving today for these things. I would say that Germany illustrated during the war something that we should take a lesson from. She showed us that it is simple, if you set up a research council and use your scientific ingenuity, of which Canada has such an abundance, to make use of products. She had no trouble turning her coal into various synthetic products when the need was there. She went ahead and set her scientists to work on this research, and they did something about it. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that if we were to set up a research council to study carefully the problems on which we feel we should spend money, if we got some of these young men and women who have marched south into the United States because they could get more there for their research work than in Canada, we would accomplish a great deal. They want to be Canadians. They have been Canadians; they are Canadians, but they are living under a strange flag. Invite them back to Canada, and let us make use of the knowledge which we imparted to them.

From time to time many of our universities indicate that the scholarships that the Canadian universities or the institutes in Canada offer are not of sufficient amount to keep these young men and women interested in the Canadian field. I am sure that if we were to make a study of the efforts of the Northwestern University, of Columbia, of Yale, or of any one of these particular institutes of learning, we would find that many of our best Canadian youth, the scientists that Canada taught and made, are there today.

Since it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I see that an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy). It reads as follows:

> That Bill No. 375 be not now read the second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to a special select committee representative of all parties of this house with instructions that they have power to call witnesses and send for documents and papers for the purpose especially of more effectively providing for the promotion and acceleration of research activities in Canada.

As one reads this amendment he cannot help but remember a notice of motion which stood in the name of the hon. member in the month of January, and I now read from the order paper of Wednesday, January 13:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of setting up a special committee representative of all parties, with the power to call witnesses and send for documents and papers for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the advisability of providing inducements to promote and accelerate activities in the field of research.

Now, the hon. member should consider at this time standing order 45, which states:

> Forty-eight hours notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for placing a question on the order paper;

Now, the hon. member probably had in mind citation 657, which states:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees, commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence or the opinion of judges.

I would draw the hon. member's attention to the following words:

> . . . or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees . . .

Now that means by existing committees and I have no doubt hon. members will realize the import of those words. In 1947, when, on the second reading of a bill to amend the Canada Grain Act, it was moved by Mr. Bracken and seconded by Mr. Brooks that the bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter be referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

Mr. Speaker ruled the amendment out of order because the standing committee on agriculture and colonization had not yet been appointed. See Journals, February 10, 1947, page 55. Now what the amendment calls for is the appointment of a special committee, and it is a substantive motion which should be introduced as a distinct question after notice has been given, and I therefore rule it out for that reason.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, ruling it out without there being an opportunity presented to argue—

Mr. Speaker: I can hear representations on this question. In the meantime my remarks may be considered. If hon. members wish me to adjourn at this moment and carry on the discussion when the debate on this bill is resumed, then I am quite prepared to do that.

Mr. Drew: I would suggest that that be done, Mr. Speaker, because I believe it will save time if we adjourn now and then when the debate is resumed we will be in a much better position to present our arguments at that time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall take the resolution to approve the Japanese trade treaty. On Thursday and Friday we shall take estimates, Thursday beginning with the department of northern affairs. Then we shall go on to transport.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 12, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

DENTIFRICE ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Knowles:

1. Is the Department of National Health and Welfare aware of any public protests made by the American Dental Association concerning dentifrice advertisements?

2. If so, what study has the government given to such protests, or what action has the government taken on the basis thereof?

Mr. Martin:

1. The American Dental Association has made no public protests concerning dentifrice advertisements. However, the whole question of acceptable and unacceptable dentifrices has been dealt with in the journal of the American Dental Association and in a yearly booklet entitled "Accepted Dental Remedies", both of which publications are directed to the dental profession and not to the general public. There has been some newspaper discussion in the United States on the material on this subject in the two publications but this could not be construed as a public protest by the American Dental Association.

2. See answer to No. 1 above.

TELEVISION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Hansell:

1. How many applications for commercial television stations have been received up to January 1, 1954?

2. What are the names and addresses of these applicants?

3. How many applications were granted and to whom?

Mr. McCann:

1. Thirty.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION PROPERTY

Mr. Hodgson:

1. What is the full legal description of the whole of the property on the Montreal road on which the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation head office and buildings are situated?

2. From whom was this property purchased?

3. What was the purchase price and date of purchase?

4. Is there a swimming pool included in these buildings?

5. Has the auditorium a spring dance floor?

6. What has been spent on this property for (a) surveys, subdivision plans, ect.: (b) buildings, giving details; (c) landscaping; (d) furnishings; (e) extras?

7. What was the total cost?
8. Has the government used this property for any other building projects, or does it contemplate doing so?
9. If so, for what purpose?

Mr. Bourget: Return tabled.

WHEAT—LOCAL ELEVATOR PURCHASES AND STORAGE

Mr. Argue:

1. What was the total amount of bushels of wheat, less dockage, purchased at local elevator points in the crop year 1952-53?
2. Of such amount, what was the number of bushels in each respective grade from No. 1 hard to feed wheat, and how many bushels in each of said respective grades were at the time of purchase at said elevator points (a) tough; (b) damp?
3. What was the total amount of bushels of wheat in store by grade and condition, tough or damp, from No. 1 Manitoba hard to feed wheat in store in all country and terminal elevators at the beginning of the crop year 1952-53, and in store in all country and terminal elevators at the close of the same crop year?

WHEAT SALES, 1952-53

Mr. Argue:

1. What was the total number of bushels of wheat sold in the crop year 1952-53, by the wheat board and by all elevator companies and licensed grain dealers, including sales from warehouses and terminal elevators?
2. Of such amount, what was the total number of bushels in each respective grade, from No. 1 hard to feed wheat, and how many bushels in each of said grades were sold or disposed of as (a) tough; (b) damp?

DRIED WHEAT, 1951-52

Mr. Argue:

1. How many bushels of wheat in each grade from No. 1 northern to feed, both tough and damp, were artificially dried in the crop year 1951-52?
2. What was the total gross weight of the above grain before drying?
3. What were the total net bushels as shown by adjusted warehouse receipts after drying?

DOMINION STEEL AND COAL—FEDERAL PAYMENTS

Mr. Gillis:

What moneys were paid Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation in the years 1952 and 1953, as (a) a subsidy for the movement of steel; (b) a drawback for coal used in the manufacture of steel; (c) a bonus for the manufacture of coke; (d) a grant for plant expansion and/or any other purpose related to the steel industry?

POTATO IMPORTS, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Hahn:

1. How many tons of potatoes were imported into British Columbia each month, during the period March 31, 1953 to March 31, 1954?
2. What was the total value of such importations?
3. What was the total revenue collected on these potatoes?
4. Were any potatoes allowed into British Columbia on a consignment basis?

[Mr. Hodgson.]

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT ON PROPOSED TARIFF CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the Leader of the Opposition inquired about representations to the government of the United States with respect to possible United States restrictions on imports of lead, zinc and fish. As I understand the present situation, it is as follows:

The United States tariff commission has been conducting investigations into imports of groundfish fillets, and lead and zinc, in accordance with its customary procedures. The Canadian government of course has been concerned about the possibility of import restrictions arising out of these investigations by the United States tariff commission. When the inquiry into groundfish fillets was undertaken last summer, official representations were made in a note to the United States state department concerning the effects of any restrictions on the trade in groundfish fillets. Our general views on such restrictions on imports have been conveyed to the United States government on several occasions. Recently at the meeting of our ministerial joint committee on trade and economic matters, they were fully discussed and the Canadian representatives drew specifically to the attention of the United States representatives our concern about zinc and lead.

On Friday last, the day the hon. gentleman asked his question, the tariff commission sent its reports on groundfish fillets to the President, but no announcement has yet been made on the nature of the commission's findings or on what action the President may take. And as to zinc and lead, the tariff commission's report has not yet been completed.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the information given and I would merely ask that when the Prime Minister is informed the house be given the information, because I understand that in addition to the ordinary concern there might be over limitations on the export of zinc and lead, any action in regard to groundfish fillets would have a very serious effect, particularly in Newfoundland. We will be hopeful that the representations that have been made will meet with appropriate response.

Mr. St. Laurent: I can assure the hon. gentleman that they have been made in very positive terms, and no doubt at all has been left in the minds of those to whom they were made regarding our concern about these restrictions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FAR EAST—EXCLUSION OF INDIA FROM WAR CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton). In view of the protest of India at her exclusion from further Far East war criminal proceedings, as reported in the New York Times yesterday, would the minister state the Canadian government's position on this matter?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I should answer this question as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. The position of the Canadian government is that the power to grant clemency to and to parole persons sentenced by the international military tribunal for the Far East is determined by the terms of the Japanese peace treaty. Articles 11 and 25 of that treaty, when read together, confine the exercise of this power to the governments that have both signed and ratified the treaty of peace with Japan, that is, Australia, Canada, France, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the United States. If India had also signed and ratified the treaty of peace with Japan, India would have been eligible to participate in the exercise of clemency with respect to persons sentenced by the international military tribunal for the Far East.

This position was made known to the representative of the government of India in December last. Recently the Indian government informed the Canadian authorities that it found it necessary to reaffirm its objection to being excluded from participation. The position taken by the Canadian government remains unaltered, and I understand that a similar attitude has been taken by the other countries concerned.

HIGHWAY TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF FEDERAL LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation this session respecting interprovincial truck transport, even though only five provinces, Ontario, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have agreed to the proposed formula?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): It has already been indicated in the house that, dependent upon the reaction of the provinces to the proposed draft bill which was submitted at the conference, the government would give consideration to the introduction of legislation at this session. My hon. friend has said that five provinces have indicated their approval, and until replies have been received from the four other provinces—

Some hon. Members: Five other provinces.

Mr. Chevrier: I was correct—four other provinces—because there were nine only represented at the conference. It would be premature for me at this time to say whether legislation would be introduced, but I am hopeful that all the provinces will reply affirmatively.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Is it necessary that all provinces must agree before the legislation is brought in?

Mr. Chevrier: It is necessary that the provinces give some reply, and it is at least courteous that no consideration should be given to the legislation until a reply has been received from the remaining provinces.

BRIDGES

MARPOLE—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Public Works? Now that the city council of Vancouver has agreed to sell Sea Island airport to the federal government, can the Minister of Public Works tell the house what assistance the federal government will give in building a new bridge at Marpole to serve the Sea Island airport?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been the subject of consideration by the government recently and it has been decided that, because of the nature of the airport, and the fact that it is located on Sea island, there is some reason for federal government financial participation in a bridge to replace the present inadequate Marpole bridge.

It has been estimated that a suitable bridge would cost about $1,200,000, and there was a suggestion previously that the federal government's involvement might be in the amount of one-third. The present decision is then that the federal government will participate in the cost of a bridge from Vancouver to Sea island to replace the present Marpole bridge up to a maximum of $400,000.

Mr. Green: You will have to do better than that.

BURLINGTON CHANNEL—CORRESPONDENCE WITH ONTARIO GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. E. Lennard (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister received a reply from the Ontario government to his letter to them of April 5 in respect of the proposed new bridge over the Burlington channel?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

NATURAL GAS

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION BY FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION ON APPLICATION OF WESTCOAST TRANSMISSION COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he can give the house any information concerning the application for a licence to import gas from the Peace river district into the northwestern states? I ask that because this morning's press dispatches report that the attorneys of the federal power commission have made an adverse report.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As I understand the situation, the hearings on the application of the Westcoast Transmission Company have been completed up to the time of rebuttal argument. The case of the company is in, and the staff of the commission have put in an adverse report based on the information that has been presented up to this time. It is my understanding that that is more or less usual procedure, the purpose being to point up the items that, in the opinion of the staff, have not been adequately covered. I believe the objections named were the location of the line in the Coquihalla pass that the staff thought might be dangerous to continuous operations. I think there was also some question raised about the deliverability of gas. There was no question about the gas being available in the fields, but question has been raised whether the applicant company could deliver the volume of gas in the time specified.

I understand that the applicant will deal with both of these subjects and with the other subjects that are questioned when presenting his rebuttal, which I believe is timed for about June 1. I would say, from what I know of the situation, that the application is proceeding normally. There is no reason to become unduly depressed or unduly elated. The ultimate decision will depend upon the case that is presented in rebuttal.

Mr. Green: Has the minister any idea when a final decision may be expected?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I have reason to believe that after the rebuttal is filed a fairly prompt decision will be given. I would not like to put a time limit on it, but the presentation of the rebuttals would finish the case.

Mr. Regier: May I ask a supplementary question? In view of the government's giving permission to United States gas being imported into eastern Canada, has it given any consideration to helping the Westcoast Transmission Company in its efforts to obtain a favourable decision for the export of gas?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The two situations have no relation whatever. With regard to the Westcoast situation I may say that the government has endeavoured in every way possible to assist the Westcoast Transmission Company in prosecuting its case successfully. I know of no suggestion that has been made by the applicant to the government that has not been complied with by the government.

Mr. Nickle: I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister did indicate of course that the government had done everything possible to encourage Westcoast Transmission. Can the minister indicate whether or not the government has ensured, or is now prepared to ensure, to the federal power commission of the United States security of both supply and price of Canadian gas to Westcoast Transmission for a sufficient period of years to amortize the heavy investment in transmission lines and distribution systems of gas supplied to the United States northwest? I ask that question, sir, because of fear of insecurity which has a great deal to do with the present—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the news collecting agency of the very efficient periodical my hon. friend publishes has broken down, because the supply of gas has been assured for 22 years, that being the period of the licence granted by the province of Alberta. The federal government has nothing whatever to do with the price. It has no legislation which would enable it to interfere in that connection which is purely a provincial matter. However, I may say that in the report I have of the document filed by the solicitor for the federal power commission none of the points mentioned by my hon. friend are raised.

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. I disagree with the minister.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nickle: In connection with the Electricity and Fluids Exportation Act this government—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nickle: —retains authority by order in council to impose an export tax—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nickle: —on gas exported from Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nickle: Could the minister assure us that he has given the United States an assurance that the federal government will not impose an export tax during a sufficient period of time to ensure the amortization of the investment on the United States' side of the pipeline system?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we have neither been asked to give nor have we given any such assurance. I suggest that my hon. friend is raising points with which the commission have not interested themselves up to date and I would hesitate to give any unsolicited commitments on these points.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

STATEMENT ON ARREST OF ALFRED VALDMANIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, of which I have given him notice. In view of the criticism in connection with the arrest of Alfred Valdmanis, and in fairness to the R.C.M.P. involved, would the minister care to make some statement in this regard?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. friend for having given me notice of his question.

T.C.A. flight 465 from Newfoundland, carrying Corporal Clark of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, with a warrant to apprehend Dr. Alfred Valdmanis, was delayed by weather conditions and arrived at Fredericton airport at 10.15 p.m. of April 22. By the time Corporal Clark had been driven in an R.C.M.P. highway patrol car to Petersville and thence to St. Andrews, it was approximately two a.m. of April 23.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Corporal Clark was accompanied by another member of the force and on arrival at St. Andrews they were joined by Constable Winter of the St. Andrews town detachment. All of them were in plain clothes. Constable Winter introduced them to the local police magistrate who backed the Newfoundland warrant. Proceeding at once to the home of Dr. Valdmanis' brother at Chamcook, they effected the arrest of Dr. Valdmanis and left the house at 3.20 a.m.

Corporal Clark's instructions had been to return immediately to Newfoundland after effecting the arrest, but owing to weather conditions the party could not leave according to schedule and did not leave until the afternoon of April 24, arriving at St. John's, Newfoundland, on the same date.

In view of the fact that this was an important case and that Chamcook, New Brunswick, is close to the United States boundary, it was considered the course of prudence to effect the arrest of Dr. Valdmanis as soon as possible after the backing of the Newfoundland warrant by the New Brunswick police magistrate.

While I am aware, as minister in charge of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, that the arrest in this case has caused some criticism, I am of the opinion, in view of the importance of the prosecution and the large amount of money involved in the charges, that the arrest was handled with efficiency and discretion.

TRADE AGREEMENTS

CANADA-JAPAN—RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENT SIGNED AT OTTAWA MARCH 31, 1954

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament approve the ratification by Canada of the agreement on commerce between Canada and Japan, signed at Ottawa on March 31, 1954, and that this house do approve the same.

He said: An agreement on commerce between the Canadian and the Japanese governments was signed in Ottawa on March 31. An announcement was made in the house at the same time and the text was released for publication. The agreement will enter into force when it has been ratified by both governments. Because of the exceptional importance of this agreement, and because of the widespread interest in it, a resolution has been tabled to obtain the approval of the house in advance of ratification.

It has appeared for some time to be in our national interest to work out a mutually advantageous trade agreement with Japan.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I be permitted to interrupt the minister for one second in order to ask hon. members for their co-operation with respect to observing silence. It is very difficult to hear the minister, although normally he speaks loud enough, but if hon. members' conversation competes with his voice the loudspeaker system will be of no assistance at all, and I know many hon. members are interested in the question now before the house. I would ask hon. members if they wish to converse to do so in a very low voice or, which is better, use the lobbies which I think have been provided for that purpose.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Japan has already become our third largest customer. It seems probable that Japan will continue in the future to increase in importance as a market for our exports.

Japan is assuming the status of a major participant in world trade. A great deal of reconstruction and reorganization has taken place in the Japanese economy since the end of the war. Certain aspects of these developments bear great promise for the future of our own trade.

This new agreement provides, among other things, for the exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment. This is the normal and established treatment which we extend to other friendly countries with which we trade. Quite clearly, we could not continue for much longer to withhold most-favoured-nation treatment from a country such as Japan, which is one of our largest customers.

In recent years we have been imposing the high rates of our general tariff upon imports from Japan. In consequence, we have imported very little from there, even though we have been selling large and increasing amounts of our exports to that country. It has become more and more difficult in these circumstances to justify the fact that we were not extending most-favoured-nation treatment to Japan. In the new trade agreement we are now proposing to correct this anomaly.

Hon. members know that the government is constantly helping to increase and diversify Canada's export trade overseas. On behalf of Canadian producers we attempt at every opportunity to improve the terms upon which our goods are admitted into the markets of other countries. We try to keep our trade agreements up-to-date. In this connection, this new trade agreement with Japan is an important step in strengthening our whole system of trade relations. It should provide a stable and beneficial basis for trade to take place between Canada and Japan.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

In negotiating this new agreement, we set out to obtain and consolidate advantages in the Japanese market, and at the same time to safeguard in a reasonable way the position of our own Canadian manufacturers in our home market. The negotiations were carried on in Ottawa, over a considerable period of time, with representatives of the Japanese government. At each stage, the various aspects were given careful consideration by my cabinet colleagues and myself. The negotiations were recently concluded in a friendly way and both sides regarded the results as satisfactory. Good trade relations and effective trade agreements are based on the willingness of countries to recognize each other's difficulties. They are based also on the desire to make well-balanced arrangements which will operate to the advantage of all concerned.

Let me give a short outline of the essential features of the agreement, and I will then go into some explanatory details. Briefly, there are three important ways in which this agreement will facilitate the access of Canadian goods to the Japanese market. In the first place, our exports will be guaranteed most-favoured-nation treatment in Japan, Secondly, we will be assured that there will be no discrimination whatsoever against Canada and in favour of any other hard currency country with respect to quantitative restrictions, exchange controls, or any other matters. Thirdly, with respect to a list of nine important Canadian export products, Japan undertakes not to discriminate against Canada in favour of any other country regardless of its currency position. This list of products includes wheat, barley, woodpulp, flaxseed, primary copper, lead in pigs, zinc spelter, synthetic resins and milk powders. These are all very important concessions to have received. I shall return to these points a little later, to explain them more fully.

On our side, we undertake to make certain concessions to Japan. The agreement provides that Canada will extend most-favoured-nation treatment to Japanese goods. This means that imports from Japan will be entered under our most-favoured-nation rates of duty, which are generally applicable to the non-commonwealth countries with which we trade. This will involve reductions in the duties on imports from Japan, which have hitherto been subject to the much higher rates set forth in our general tariff. It is, of course, to be predicted that imports from Japan will increase under these new arrangements.

In 1953, Japan purchased almost $119 million worth of Canadian goods. This total was exceeded only by our sales to the United States and to the United Kingdom. In the same year, Canada bought less than $14 million worth of goods from Japan. For every dollar Canadians spent on Japanese goods, in other words, the Japanese bought more than $8 worth in Canada. We could not reasonably expect to continue to enjoy such high sales to Japan if at the same time Japanese goods were to continue to be restricted from entry into Canada by the high rates of our general tariff. Japan legitimately expects to sell more in this country. For my part, I do not believe we need to be afraid of such increases. Under these new arrangements, Japan will be in a position to compete for a share of the Canadian market on an equal basis with other foreign suppliers, such as the United States and Germany. Importers may well find it advantageous to obtain some of their requirements from Japan in competition with their former sources of supply.

Canadian imports from Japan have increased in value as compared with pre-war years, but they are still relatively small. Last year, they included a range of items such as iron and steel, toys, oranges, pottery and chinaware, silk and other fabrics, tuna fish and a variety of manufactured products. Only in two items did our imports from Japan amount to as much as $1 million. Aside from these items, the value of individual import items from Japan was in each case considerably below a half million dollars.

When it is remembered that total imports into the Canadian market in 1953 amounted to $4·3 billion, it is clear that there is considerable scope for Japan, from its present level of $14 million, to obtain an increased share of our large import market. Out of every $100 worth of goods imported into Canada last year, about 30 cents' worth came from Japan. There is obviously room for a considerable increase in imports, which would contribute to a healthier balance of trade and at the same time be of such dimensions as to be readily absorbed.

In case injurious competition should materialize for particular Canadian industries out of such imports, careful safeguards have been provided in the agreement. We have been mindful of the fact that a sudden influx of low-priced imports might seriously affect some particular Canadian industry. In the agreement Canada therefore reserves the right to apply special duties on Japanese goods in legitimate cases of emergency where, as a result of increased imports, there is a serious threat of injury to domestic producers.

I hope, however, that Canadian trade with Japan will develop in such a way as not to create serious problems for Canadian industry. Japan, like ourselves, is vitally dependent on foreign trade. The Japanese government is no doubt fully aware of the fact that no lasting trade relations can be built up except on the basis of mutual good will and of adherence to fair trade practices. It is reasonable to expect that Japanese exporters will try to avoid creating problems which would undermine good relations. Japan has in recent years instituted a comprehensive system of control and inspection for its exports, in a positive effort to prevent dumping of goods, misrepresentation of trade marks and patents and other undesirable methods, and to abide by internationally accepted fair trade practices.

I shall go on now to explain in a little more detail some of the concessions we have received. It is important that we are now to be assured by Japan of most-favoured-nation treatment as regards tariffs and all related matters. Since the Japanese maintain at present a single-column tariff, this agreement does not have the immediate effect of lowering their rates of duty on Canadian goods. However, the Japanese tariff does provide for heavy surcharges on goods from countries which discriminate against Japan. It is also possible, of course, that Japan may in the future decide to revise its present tariffs. With respect to all such eventualities, this agreement assures Canadian exports of the lowest rates of duty and of the most favourable tariff treatment that may be accorded by Japan to any country.

We have recognized in this agreement that, in view of their continuing balance of payments problems, the Japanese may from time to time find it necessary to enforce certain import and exchange restrictions on a temporary basis. However, the agreement provides that Canadian exports to Japan shall receive treatment no less favourable than is accorded to our competitors in other dollar countries. There can be no discrimination of any kind against Canadian goods as compared with goods from other countries, such as the United States, whose currencies are convertible. This is an important guarantee which applies over the whole field of our exports to Japan.

In addition, the very significant concession is made by Japan of guaranteeing against all discriminatory restrictions whatsoever the list of nine important Canadian products, including wheat, which I have already enumerated and which make up a very high proportion of our trade with Japan. For these goods, Japan has undertaken to grant licences and exchange without regard to currency considerations. We are thus assured of our freedom to compete, on a normal commercial basis, with all other suppliers, wherever they may be and whatever currency they may use. There are certain agreed exceptions to this rule but they affect only a limited number of the nine commodities listed, and they apply only to specific quantities and for specific periods. These special exceptions have been provided to permit the Japanese government to fulfil undertakings it has entered into in trade agreements with certain other countries.

Last year Japan was our second largest market for wheat and it is also one of the leading markets for Canadian barley. The growth of Japanese imports of wheat and barley has been a remarkable development of recent years and constitutes in effect the creation of a new and continuing market for these basic Canadian exports. Our exports of wheat to Japan have increased from less than $1 million in 1949 to $52 million last year, representing almost 10 per cent of our total wheat exports. We sold about 800,000 tons of wheat to Japan in the last crop year and we expect to equal this performance in the current year. Similarly, while we sold no barley to Japan until three or four years ago, Japan last year purchased over $17 million of Canadian barley, representing almost 13 per cent of our total barley exports in 1953. Japan has become for the first time a major grain importing country.

This very significant increase in grain exports to Japan is not the result of temporary factors. On the contrary, the dietary changes that are taking place in Japan, the improved standard of living, and the development of an efficient milling industry in that country, all point to even higher levels of grain consumption in future years. Representatives of my department and of the Canadian wheat board, who visited Japan last January to discuss the grain trade, were very favourably impressed with the potentialities of the Japanese market. They were told that consumption of wheat flour in Japan in 1953 was 50 per cent higher than in 1952, and that the production of processed barley for human consumption in Japan in 1953 was 30 per cent greater than in the previous year. It is my belief that this increasing trend of Japanese requirements will continue. I am happy that Canada is in a position to supply a large proportion of these needs.

Japan is also one of Canada's major markets for woodpulp, for flaxseed, iron ore, copper and other important products. For example, Japan was our third largest market for dissolving pulp last year, taking 10 per cent of our total exports, and substantial amounts of other grades of pulp were also shipped. Our exports of flaxseed to Japan in 1953 represented about 10 per cent of our total flaxseed exports. Non-ferrous metals were our leading exports to Japan before the war and Japan continues as a potentially important market for these products. Canada's expanding synthetic resin industry is also finding a valuable export market in Japan.

In fact, Japan, with her 85 million population and with her highly developed industries, is one of the world's largest markets for foodstuffs and raw materials, and for other products which we can supply. The maintenance of high levels of exports of these products is of fundamental importance to the whole Canadian economy. It is of direct benefit to our agriculture, our forest and our mining industries. By contributing to a buoyant economy and a prosperous domestic market in Canada, it is of vital importance to our own manufacturing industries which sell their products in the Canadian market. We have no monopoly on the supply of such products, of course, and other countries are also anxious to expand their share of the Japanese market.

Ratification of our agreement should open a new era of fruitful trade relations between Canada and Japan. Our two economies are to a large degree complementary and have much to gain from close and constructive co-operation. We are happy to play our part in helping Japan to take her place as a partner in the world trading community.

It will be recalled that at the last session of the contracting parties to the general agreement on tariffs and trade in Geneva, Canada voted in favour of inviting Japan to participate in the work of the contracting parties. This did not, of course, mean full membership for Japan; nor did it mean that Canada and Japan undertook the rights and obligations of the agreement with respect to each other. We also indicated at that time, however, that we were negotiating a trade agreement with Japan and that, once a satisfactory agreement had been concluded, and subject to the terms of that agreement, the Canadian government would be prepared to consider bringing the GATT into effect as between Canada and Japan.

Subject to the terms of this new agreement, we intend to apply the GATT to our trade relations with Japan, thus joining with the other GATT countries which have decided to bring their trade relations with Japan within that framework. It should be noted that our agreement with Japan already contains many of the essential features provided for in the GATT, with respect to most-favoured-nation treatment in tariffs and other matters. This new agreement is in fact somewhat stronger and more specific than the present provisions of the GATT with respect to the non-discriminatory application of exchange and import controls. Similarly, the Canadian government's right to adopt safeguarding measures against unfair or injurious competition is established in a more precise and explicit manner in the agreement with Japan than it is under the corresponding provisions of the GATT. At the same time, we regard the agreement with Japan as being consistent in all respects with the principles of the GATT.

Hon. members will recall that when I announced in the house the signing of the agreement on March 31, I pointed out that its importance goes beyond commercial considerations. This agreement should contribute to stable and friendly relations between the two countries and to the peace, security and progress of the Pacific area. I am confident that this agreement will prove to be in the long-run interests of both Canada and Japan. I would remind the house that other important trading countries are taking steps to consolidate their trade relations with Japan. The United Kingdom government has recently renewed and to some extent liberalized its payments agreement with Japan. The United States, which already has a most-favoured-nation agreement, has indicated that it contemplates tariff negotiations with Japan and it is seeking special authority for such negotiations.

We have tried to obtain a carefully formulated and well balanced agreement which should go a long way in itself to reassure those of our producers who are afraid of being seriously hurt. When we think of the present importance and the potential growth of the Japanese market for many of our export products, there can be no doubt of where our interest lies. This agreement will help over the years to provide employment and income in agriculture, in our forest and mining industries and in other industries across the country. For these reasons I hope the resolution will receive cordial and widespread support.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that no member of the house entertains any doubt about the importance of the measure now before us. Trade is a factor of high importance in the outlook of this country both with respect to peace and our economic future and, indeed, the whole development of this country with which Providence has blessed us. Our trade and economic relations with Japan must, in the light of existing conditions in the world and in the light of our trade and economic relations with that country in the past, claim a place of high importance in the consideration of hon. members of this house.

In the resolution submitted to the house, Mr. Speaker, the house is invited to express its approval of the ratification of the trade agreement signed by Canada and Japan on March 31, 1954. May I point out, sir, that the procedure does have the effect of restricting consideration of this measure. This is a debate on a resolution. Only one stage of discussion is afforded. I should think with any measure of such great importance it would have been desirable, were it possible, for the measure to receive careful consideration in a committee of the house where it would be possible for hon. members to ask those many questions which naturally arise in their minds in relation to a trade treaty of such high importance. It would also permit those who have views to express to do so.

I recall, sir, that in the session of 1948, when the general agreement on tariffs and trade which had been signed at Geneva in the fall of 1947 was brought to the house for ratification, the government did follow a suggestion that I think came from Mr. Bracken, the then leader of the opposition, that the treaty, after an initial debate, should be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce for further consideration. In that committee the matter was given more detailed consideration and was the subject of a more informal discussion than is ever possible in a debate in this house. Indeed, sir, the procedure that we are following today is such that it is not possible to ask the government any of the questions which I am sure crowd into the minds of hon. members in relation to so important a matter.

This subject, sir, can only be fairly considered against a background which must embrace our consideration of our economic and political relations with Japan in the past. The history of our pre-war trade relations with Japan is, frankly, not altogether happy. The mention of trade with Japan to those who recall the conditions attendant upon our trade with Japan in pre-war years is to invite the recollection of the days when Japanese goods, particularly textiles and toys, flooded the Canadian market and undersold Canadian products by reason of the very low standard of living of the Japanese people and the Japanese workman in particular, in comparison with our own.

Then, of course, came the war. To think of the war, of course, is to invite the recollection of deep wounds. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I think we would not be true to the trust imposed in us as legislators of Canada, nor would we be true to the responsibility that rests upon Canada as a great democratic nation in the world today, if we did not believe that those deep wounds inflicted from 1941 to 1945 are capable of being healed, and that it may be possible to restore to our relations with Japan that healthy mutual regard that did once exist.

We recall, sir, that Canada and Japan entered into a treaty of peace two years ago. We recall that it was generous in its terms. We recall that it followed a treaty of peace between the United States and Japan which was signal in the generosity of the terms extended by the victor to the defeated nation. This house on June 16, 1952, gave unanimous approval to this treaty of peace and the ensuing legislative measures. Why did we do this, Mr. Speaker? Why did we seek to be generous in the terms of the treaty of peace we approved with Japan at that time? I am certain that one factor that was high in the consideration of hon. members of this house was our hope that Japan would come to hold a position of respect and mutual regard amongst the democratic nations of the world. We wanted to leave no stone in the path of Japan taking that kind of position amongst the civilized nations of the world. The behaviour of the Japanese government and nation since the war has been such as to encourage the hopes we expressed at that time.

The Japanese government has sought to follow a path of co-operation with the western nations. The Japanese government did not, as her own economic interest might have dictated, recognize the communist, so-called people's government of China. It chose rather on June 18, 1952, to recognize the existing nationalist government of China. She applied to become a member of the United Nations, and would have become a member had not the Russian delegate on September 18, 1952, exercised the 52nd Russian veto to defeat Japan's application for membership in the United Nations. Last December Japan became a party to the statutes of the international court of justice. Only Russia abstained in the voting in the security council and the assembly.

The hope of the western world in a substantial degree in that quarter of the globe can fairly be said to be put upon the basis that Japan is, and shall continue to be, the major outpost against communism. It is proper, sir, that we should have regard to the political and economic conditions existing in Japan today. I affirm that these are matters of concern to us. We cannot take a narrow approach to questions of this kind. If conditions in Japan, either in the political or economic field, were to suffer drastic deterioration, who can say how long it would be before communism would rear its ugly head and challenge the government? In so far as political conditions are concerned, it may be unwise to say more than that at the moment the government in Japan is not in a too strong position. But we may properly examine, and in greater detail it seems to me, the economic conditions subsisting today in Japan. The economic conditions today are not too sound.

Japan is a nation confined within narrow geographical boundaries. She is poor in the possession of natural resources. Her economy is such that she must depend upon export trade for her economic health. Only 16 per cent of the soil of Japan is arable. Next to The Netherlands and Belgium, Japan has the densest population in all the world in relation to her arable land. The population in Japan is 3,600 per square mile, and the total population today is about 86 million. It is increasing at the net rate of 1,200,000 per year. It is estimated that by 1960 the population of Japan will have increased to 95 million people. In very truth, sir, Japan is bulging at the seams. As a result of the war she no longer has those colonies with which she had built up a very substantial trade before the war. Japanese immigrants are not being received in numbers in other parts of the world. The United States is now receiving about 150 per annum, and the number that Canada receives is, of course, slightly smaller.

Before the war 42 per cent of Japan's exports went to China, Formosa and Korea. She has been stripped of her colonies and her loss in that regard is serious when we look at the trade she enjoyed with Formosa and Korea as well as Manchuria. As a result of the war she lost her colonies, which constituted 46 per cent of her pre-war territory.

There are other disturbing features in the economy of Japan today. As a result of the stress of war and post-war conditions, inflation has been rampant in Japan. Taking 1937 as a base of 100, her wholesale prices by the middle of 1952 had jumped, according to official Japanese statistics, to 27,300. The cost of living in Japan has soared to very great heights and taxes are very high. Interest rates are abnormally high. Indeed, the Japanese economy has been maintained in effect by United States assistance—United States assistance in the form of direct aid and in the procurement policies followed in relation to the occupation of Japan by American troops, and in the hostilities in Korea.

By late 1953 Japanese exports were only 31 per cent of what they were in pre-war days. Her imports then were just 54 per cent of what they were in pre-war days. The ratio of her total trade volume to national income is 22 per cent today as against a pre-war percentage of 37 per cent. The average annual income per capita in Japan is $150. It is the highest in Asia but it is very low compared with the Canadian income of roughly $1,000 per capita.

United States aid to Japan has been indeed substantial. From the end of the war up to September 30, 1953, net grants for economic aid from the United States to Japan were $2,439 million. Those figures are for direct aid alone. Even with the substantial procurement policy followed by the United States in Japan that country in 1952 suffered a visible trade deficit of $570 million. Allowance, of course, must be made for certain invisible figures in the trade accounts, but Japan's trade position today is unbalanced. She has had to resort to import restrictions and other protective devices.

Japan's exchange position must be as well a matter of concern. She has suffered from a lack of foreign exchange—sterling in particular. This is in part the result of import restrictions which existed until recently in the colonies of the British Empire. On September 20, 1953, Japan's holdings of foreign exchange had been reduced to the equivalent of $1,008 million United States dollars, of which $872 million were in the form of United States dollars.

Japan has been seeking to expand her exports. In 1953 she partially lifted the ban on exports to Red China and placed a number of carefully selected items on a so-called free list. The trade volume under those special arrangements is expected to reach a volume of only $15 million on a strict barter basis.

These, it seems to me, are all important considerations in approaching a trade treaty between our country and Japan. Before the war Japan had a very great market in Asia. Her pre-war market in Asia accounted for 64 per cent of her total exports. That figure dropped in 1951 to 51 per cent. This has had a very restrictive effect upon the Japanese economy. We must take account of that factor because it is the political factors in which we have direct and lively concern which are responsible in substantial measure for the curtailment of the markets formerly enjoyed by Japan in Asia.

Then, sir, what of our own trade relations with Japan? I do not wish to weary the house with statistics, but it seems to me that an intensive study of the trade figures pertaining to our trade with Japan in recent years is extremely illuminating. On the import side the average figure for Canadian imports from Japan from 1935 to 1939 was $4,649,000. In 1939, the last pre-war year, the figure had risen to only $4,864,000. By 1948, when conditions were becoming more settled in the East, our imports from Japan were just $3,144,000. They increased in 1949 to $5,551,000. In 1950 they were $12,086,627; in 1951 $12,577,000; in 1952 $13,162,000; and in 1953, $13,629,000.

There has been, it will be seen, a substantial increase in these post-war years over any figures that had existed up to that time. The figures have been relatively stable during the past four years.

What now of our exports to Japan? The pre-war average, from 1935 to 1939, of our exports to Japan was $21,880,000. I give only the round figures. In 1939, the last pre-war year, we exported to Japan $28,168,000 worth of goods. In 1948 when, as I mentioned, conditions became more settled, we exported to Japan $8 million worth of goods. In 1949 that figure dropped to $5,860,000. In 1950 we advanced the figure to $20,533,000. In 1951 there was a huge increase to $73 million, and the increase has continued since. In 1952 the figure was $102 million and in 1953 an all-time high was recorded of $118,500,000.

Sir, the nature of our commodity trade with Japan, as the minister has indicated, is a matter of high importance in our consideration of this subject today. Wheat has been our leading commodity export to Japan. Last year we exported some $52 million worth of wheat to Japan. Our barley exports have been a feature of our trade with Japan during the last several years. In 1952 we exported $39 million worth of barley. In 1953 that dropped to $17,500,000. Our export of wood pulp sulphite and wood pulp sulphate, which go into the making of Japanese rayon, advanced from $6 million in 1952 to something over $8 million in 1953. Our exports of copper, ore, and scrap advanced in 1953 to $4,300,000. Our scrap iron or steel advanced in 1953 to $3,862,000, and flaxseed from a mere $27,000 in 1952 to $1,380,000 in round figures in 1953.

It will be seen, sir, that our trade with Japan, both import and export, has now reached all-time records. The second striking feature of these figures is the extraordinary imbalance of our trade with Japan. Now, even making allowance for the invisible figures that should enter into our consideration of any of the figures on visible exports and imports, the fact is that for some time we have been selling to Japan eight times as much as we have been buying from her.

Among the best customers of Canada Japan in 1950 stood ninth, in 1952 fourth, and in 1953 third. This has been at a time when on the continent of Asia there has been an increasing tendency towards independence or self-sufficiency in trade matters on the part of countries there, and Japan, which is more dependent upon export trade than any other nation in Asia, has naturally felt the adverse effects of that policy on the continent of Asia.

We must now look, sir, at conditions in our own country which may be affected by the terms of this treaty. Sir, textiles and steel products, electrical goods and pottery are likely to play a leading part in the export hopes and plans of the Japanese people under the terms of this treaty.

It is an unhappy, an inescapable fact, I suppose, that in the last nearly decade and a half this is perhaps the most unfavourable time for the Canadian textile industry and the other industries I have just mentioned to face the rigour of Japanese competition in the Canadian market. It is an inescapable fact that not one more textile import today is needed to hurt the Canadian industry. Canadian industry has suffered a good deal of economic deterioration in recent months. Let us then examine the treaty in the light of this background.

I do not wish to review the ground which the minister has covered in his speech this afternoon. The purpose of the treaty, as has been stated, is to offer unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment in all matters on a mutual basis between the two countries. There are exceptions. One exception of course is made in article I, paragraph 5, which stipulates that the agreement is not to affect the advantages accorded by Canada to members of the British commonwealth of nations. Then we have in article III, paragraph 3, some provisions that may come to play a very important part in the effect of this Japanese trade treaty; that is, the provision in relation to balance of payments.

In considering the weaknesses of many of the nations of the world today in relation to their exchange position we should have due consideration for the effect of this article. It provides, sir, that:

> Both contracting parties recognize that the existence of balance of payments difficulties in many countries, and the widespread inconvertibility of currencies, do not permit the immediate and full achievement of non-discriminatory application of trade and exchange restrictions affecting imports.

And for that reason provision is made in this article that either contracting party may:

> . . . in the application of trade or exchange restrictions affecting imports for the purpose of safeguarding its external financial position and balance of payments, temporarily deviate from the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article——on two conditions which are in the form of a proviso:

> Provided that:
> (a) its restrictions shall be applied in such a way as to avoid unnecessary damage to the commercial or economic interests of the other contracting party;
> (b) its restrictions shall not be applied in such a way as to result directly or indirectly in discrimination as between countries which are treated as part of the United States dollar area under its exchange control regulations, or as between countries whose currencies are or become convertible in the hands of persons who are treated as non-residents under the exchange control regulations of the countries concerned.

The next article of direct concern to us in this debate, sir, is article V, in relation to the maintenance of fair trade practices. It provides:

> Each contracting party undertakes to conform in its trade and commerce to internationally accepted fair practices, particularly in matters relating to trade marks, marks of origin and rights under patents, and to co-operate with the other contracting party with a view to preventing any practices which might prejudicially affect the commerce between the two countries.

Article VII defines the duration of the agreement. It is to continue in effect for a period of one year from its entry into force, and thereafter until three months from the date on which either of the parties shall have given notice to the other of the intention to terminate the agreement.

The correspondence which has been exchanged between the contracting parties on March 31, 1954, has also been made a part of the treaty by protocol. One of the letters written by the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) contains a provision which I suppose, in the view of many of us in this house, will be regarded as of crucial importance, for under its provisions Canada "reserves the right to establish values for ordinary and special purposes in the following terms." I do not propose to read these terms, sir, with the exception of one paragraph, and I do read it in extenso because of its importance:

> If, as a result of unforeseen developments and of the effect of the obligations incurred by Canada under the aforesaid agreement, any product is being imported into its territory in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic producers in its territory of like or directly competitive products, Canada will be free, in respect of such product, and to the extent and for such a time as may be necessary to prevent or remedy such injury, to establish values for ordinary and special duty purposes.

Canada's right to proceed in that manner is recognized by the next following letter from the ambassador of Japan. Then in the following letter the government of Japan undertakes to accord unconditional non-discriminatory treatment with respect to the importation into Japan of nine designated commodities, namely, wheat, barley, wood-pulp, flaxseed, primary copper, lead in pigs, zinc spelter, synthetic resins and milk powder.

Sir, the safeguards to which Canadian industries will look are undoubtedly those in relation, first of all, to the duration of the agreement; second, those in relation to the maintenance of fair trade practices; third, the provision that I have read in regard to the imposition of special duties in certain cases. Most-favoured-nation status is to all intents and purposes the same status as any nation derives under GATT. There is one further feature as well, that the legislation passed in this house in December last in amending the Customs Act will have application to imports from Japan as well as the provision which I have read in relation to the establishment of special duties.

I make just this comment on the importance and value of those safeguards, sir. First of all, in regard to duration, if it should happen that for any reason the treaty proves to be a disappointment and this house desires that steps be taken either to terminate the agreement or to seek changes in it, it will not be a very easy matter to terminate it. Hon. members may say, "Well, all you need to do is to give notice." But the fact of the matter is that in the relations of one country with another the sudden termination of trade treaties oftentimes provokes unhappy differences, and it is not the sort of thing any country in times like these desires to do to a country with which it is seeking to foster friendly and close relations.

As to the value of the provision in relation to the establishment of special values for commodity purposes, I would draw your attention, sir, to what may be considered a somewhat narrowing provision. It is to be observed that this clause can be invoked only as the result of unforeseen developments and the effect of obligations incurred by Canada under the agreement on products being imported into Canada in such increased amounts and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to Canadian domestic producers.

Let me stress that this clause can be invoked only where the unhappy results contemplated by this provision arise as the result of "unforeseen developments". Now, I do not know that any hon. members of this house can say that a very substantial increase in Japanese imports into Canada, and not least in those commodities where there is substantial unemployment today in Canada, will be unforeseen. I think it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that there is going to be a substantial increase in Canadian importation of Japanese products, and therefore I put it before the house that under this provision, which has been stressed by the minister both in the statement he made today and the statement he made in this house on March 31, and has been stressed in the thinking of many people and the writings of some in relation to this Japanese treaty, the right can be invoked by Canada only where the unhappy conditions contemplated of a threat of injury to the Canadian domestic producer is unforeseen today.

Now, sir, I pass on to examine this treaty in terms of the ledger balance. It does undoubtedly offer benefits and against those benefits we must weigh whatever cost there may be to Canada.

In the face of the condition of imbalance in trade with Japan, to which I have made reference, it is quite clear that even if we were to achieve by this treaty no more than an assurance of a continuation of the kind of market we have been enjoying in Japan, it would have important value for Canada. Canada is to achieve most-favoured-nation status in the Japanese market. But the minister has not said, as I followed his statement today, that Canada is likely to increase her exports to Japan in any substantial measure. He did lay stress today on the maintenance, through the instrumentality of this treaty, of the position that Canada enjoys in the Japanese market today. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while we would like to see this treaty made the means of increasing our sales to Japan of Canadian goods, I think it well to remind ourselves that that hope has not been expressly held out today by the minister. Of course, it will remain with Canadian businessmen and the Canadian wheat board to take advantage of the position that is ensured to Canada under this treaty for its duration.

We would like to see Japan substantially increase her purchases of Canadian wheat. Her record purchases of wheat amounting to $52 million last year, and $17 million worth of Canadian barley, may give us hope that we will be able to enlarge the sale of these important commodities to Japan. With the surplus of wheat which exists in Canada today we hope that the dietary trend in Japan, which has been moving people more and more from the position of rice eaters to the position of wheat consumers, will continue. We wish naturally to be in the forefront of the sale of wheat in the Japanese market. I leave this matter of the benefits to Canada, Mr. Speaker, simply with this note of warning, that the minister has not indicated or has not held out any glowing hope of an increase in Canadian sales to Japan.

On the import side there are many commodities undoubtedly which will be available to the Canadian consumer at lower prices, but I ask the house to consider this also in relation to the other side of the ledger balance of this treaty. The effect of extending most-favoured-nation treatment to Japan under this treaty will be to reduce the present tariff rates on the products concerned. Gloves will be reduced from 45 per cent under the general tariff to 25 per cent under most-favoured-nation treatment; toys, 40 per cent today, will be 25 per cent under the treaty; pure silk clothing, 45 per cent today plus seven cents per ounce, will be 30 per cent under the treaty; pottery and chinaware, 35 per cent today under the general tariff, will be 20 or 25 per cent under the treaty, depending on the particular commodity.

Now, sir, what of the other side of the ledger balance? Perhaps we can consider this best in relation to the Japanese hopes of the benefits which will accrue to them under the treaty. There have been statements from high sources in Japan indicating that the Japanese hope to double their exports to Canada. If they double their exports to Canada it will mean increasing their exports to us to something like $25 million a year. The opinion that one may form in relation to this subject, Mr. Speaker, is that the Japanese hopes must be set much higher than that. The hopes of Japan with respect to increased exports into the Canadian market are centred largely in the field of textiles, steel products, and, of course, the extension of those sales to Canada with which she has been successful in the past, toys, cameras, tuna fish, oranges, pottery and ceramic products, and she hopes to extend her sales of shirts and gloves to Canada.

What has been the reaction in Canada to this treaty? It is only natural, sir, that the Canadian textile industry should demonstrate very serious concern about the treaty. Statements came from the Canadian textile industry when the treaty was announced objecting to it and contending it was unjust. The statement issued by the Primary Textiles Institute reads as follows:

> It is unjust that the textile industry is apparently to bear the main brunt of increased Canadian imports from Japan, now that a trade treaty is being signed. This comes at a time when imported textiles already hold a commanding share of the Canadian market.

[Mr. Fleming.]

> Japan has already become the world's largest textile exporter. Low wages, skilled workers and a completely rebuilt modern industry has restored them to that position within a few post-war years. Japan has captured this position by selling great volumes at low prices and will not be content with any small sales in Canada now that tariffs on many of their textiles are to be sharply reduced.

This statement proceeds to draw attention to the fact that "Japanese textiles packaged in clear imitation of well known Canadian brands are a recent example" of what are described as unfair practices.

> Another is a "dual price system" whereby Japan sells products abroad for less than the price at home, described by the Manchester Guardian as a "flagrantly unfair system".

That is the end of my quotation from the statement from the Primary Textiles Institute of March 31.

I was interested in what that statement had to say about the existence of a two-price system in Japan. On looking into the matter further I found this statement in a recent review of economic conditions in Japan published in the Oriental Economist of February, 1954. This is a Tokyo publication in the English language. In it I find this paragraph:

> Yet, from around the autumn 1952, certain items began to be quoted at lower levels for export than in the domestic market; and since early 1953, the gap between domestic and export prices has tended to widen appreciably. This dual price problem is particularly bad with cotton piece goods, rayon, galvanized sheet, ammonium sulphate, non-ferrous metals, vessels, and certain other items.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand the provisions of the treaty in relation to fair trade practices it will be the duty of the government to see that this dual price system is not used by Japanese exporters for the purpose of selling goods in Canada at a lower price than that which exists in Japan. If that is not the effect of the provisions of the treaty, then I think the minister owes it to the house to make a clear statement on this subject of the two prices.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I interject that our dumping laws are explicit on that point. In other words, if sales are made in the export market at prices lower than those in the domestic market, the provisions of the dumping act would apply.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister will have to go beyond that statement. If he will recall the discussion we had in this house last December on the government's amendment to the Customs Act, he will find that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) denied that a sale in the market of origin at a lower price than that which existed in Canada would be conclusive evidence of dumping. I think the minister must go beyond that. It seems to me that the government must either give much more resolute and realistic interpretation to the Customs Act or it must make some use of the safeguards in this treaty to which I have made reference this afternoon. If we have entered into this treaty with the knowledge that there exists in Japan today a dual price system in the case of those commodities that are going to be exported in increasing quantities to Canada, then it cannot be said to be an unforeseen development if, as a result of those increased exports to Canada, conditions of acute economic distress follow here.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the Japanese have entered into that treaty with the knowledge of our dumping laws. If we apply valuations based on the price in the home market, that is the treatment we give to any country that attempts to dump goods in this market.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I still think that statement of the minister does not go the full length of giving the assurance the house should have on this point. The anti-dumping laws are limited in their effect. We found that to be so in the debate last December. The anti-dumping laws, as they existed prior to that time, were inadequate to cope with the dumping that went on here; and that fact was admitted by the government. The effect of the amendment that parliament passed in December was quite limited. It applies only to end-of-season and end-of-line goods whereas in the case of Japanese exports to Canada, the lines that they are going to be selling here are not the end-of-line and end-of-season goods that we were dealing with, broadly speaking, under that amendment of last December.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, but may I say that if there is a two-price system, under the old law, before any revision, and under the newly amended law, the higher price must apply as a basis for duty.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the minister's statement does not agree with my understanding of the practice followed by the Canadian government in its valuation, and as that practice was interpreted by the government ministers last December in participating in that debate.

I have drawn attention to this matter of the dual price system, Mr. Speaker. It is within the knowledge of the government and I think it will be the intention of this house to hold the government accountable for seeing to it that Canadian products are not permitted to be prejudiced by the existence in Japan of a dual price system, or any attempted continuation of it.

I was speaking of the reaction in Canada that followed the announcement of this treaty. Canadian labour has expressed itself. Even before the treaty was announced, but when it was understood that negotiations were approaching a consummation, Mr. Bengough, president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, expressed fears in regard to the treaty, particularly for labour in the textile industry. He urged more consideration before any action was taken to admit more freely into the Canadian market Japanese textile products manufactured under conditions that cannot be compared with our Canadian standard of living. These fears that have been expressed, to which I have made reference, and others as well, emphasize the importance of those reservations and safeguards in the treaty to which I have already alluded. I repeat that we in Canada do not need to import one more textile product in order to create unemployment. Unemployment of serious proportions exists here today. Toy manufacturers have expressed their concern as well. They have drawn attention to the fact that in a recent publication, under authentic sources, average wage rates in Japan last September were shown to be 16·8 cents per hour compared with average wage rates in Canada of $1.10 per hour.

In our approach to this problem we naturally must have regard for what is being done in other countries. What is the United States doing to make it possible for the Japanese to sell more of their products abroad? I have already made reference to the fact that the United States has been most generous in outright economic aid, in giving to the Japanese up to September 30, 1953, since the end of the war net grants totalling $2,439 million. In 1951 United States commodity exports to Japan amounted to $592 million and United States imports from Japan amounted to $204 million. In 1952 United States exports to Japan amounted to $620 million and United States imports from Japan amounted to $226 million. The figures for 1953 are not yet available, but the estimate for 1953, based upon actual figures for the first six months of the year, indicates that United States exports to Japan in 1953 will amount to $574 million and United States imports from Japan to $250 million. That indicates that the United States is increasing somewhat its imports from Japan, but the United States is still selling to Japan far more than twice as much as she is buying from Japan. The United States gave Japan most-favoured-nation treatment by the peace treaty signed between those two countries in September, 1951. The peace treaty included economic provisions that had the effect of a trade treaty. That treaty was superseded by a regular trade treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation signed in April, 1953, which went into effect on November 4, 1953. That treaty included the same trade provisions as the peace treaty.

Now, sir, there are voices being raised in the United States warning that country that she must increase her imports from Japan if she would see the economy of Japan maintained in sufficient strength, in the face of a rapidly increasing population, to stand the economic rigours in the world of 1954. A press dispatch from Washington of February 23 last reports that Walter S. Robertson, assistant secretary of state for Far Eastern affairs, had testified to the house appropriations committee that he believed an outlet must be found for Japanese trade "or we will inevitably throw Japan into the communist orbit". Then the quotation proceeds:

> "I think we should be doing everything within our power to develop trade for the Japanese throughout southeast Asia", he said. "We must have the co-operation of the British to do this. I think we have to be willing to open our markets and accept Japanese goods here in America to a greater extent than we are doing. It poses a very difficult problem for us. It poses political problems on which there are great differences of opinion".

Undoubtedly, sir, there will be great differences of opinion in the United States over increased imports from Japan, and it remains to be seen whether the United States will follow the high note struck by Mr. Walter Robertson in his testimony before the house appropriations committee on that occasion. Canada does not want to be found wanting in taking her fair and rightful share of the burden and responsibilities of assisting, in the world in which we live today, in promoting a degree of health in the Japanese economy when we consider the strategic position that that country holds in east Asia. But, sir, I do not think that we propose to prejudice the interests of Canadian workmen unless the United States is prepared to take her full share of the burden and responsibility.

What of the United Kingdom? The United Kingdom, after the difficult trade and balance of exchange position that developed in 1951 and 1952, took steps to impose restrictions against the importation of Japanese exports into British colonial markets, particularly those in southeast Asia. That was done in view of the difficulties facing the whole sterling group. On January 29, 1954 it was felt by the government of the United Kingdom that conditions had sufficiently improved to warrant their signing a new agreement with Japan. It was discussed in the British House of Commons on February 1, 1954. The agreement did remove the restrictions that had been imposed on Japanese imports into the British colonial markets, and it meant of course that the advantage that had been enjoyed under those restrictions by the textile and pottery manufacturers in particular of the United Kingdom was gone.

There was a substantial outcry in the United Kingdom over this treaty, particularly from the textile and pottery industries, and it was attacked by the Labour opposition in the House of Commons. Nevertheless the position taken by the British government was that regard had to be had for the position of Japan and that the British government was not justified in continuing to impose import restrictions in the British colonial areas against imports from Japan. While I do not propose to dwell on the subject, I do draw attention to the fact that the British government, taking note of the fact that the sterling area had sold to Japan in the previous year twice as much as the sterling area had purchased from Japan, decided that it must face up to the fact that a way had to be found to permit the Japanese to sell more goods abroad in the sterling area.

Now, sir, I come to my conclusion, and I apologize to the house for having been so long in coming to it. I can only say in extenuation that this is a matter of high importance on which I think none of us can come to a conclusion without very careful regard for all of the factors I have sought to lay before the house today.

How should the house react to the resolution now submitted to us? Sir, I cannot dismiss from my mind measures such as the Colombo plan and the spirit in which we entered into them. Under the Colombo plan we took note of the economic conditions in the three self-governing nations of the British commonwealth in Asia. We indicated that we Canadians were prepared to take a share of the responsibility of assisting those sister nations to strengthen their economies. It is quite true that the Japanese trade treaty is not quite the same kind of plan as the Colombo plan. We are not being asked to make gifts to Japan. Nevertheless there are some facets of the spirit of the Colombo plan that it seems to me are directly relevant to our consideration of the Japanese trade treaty.

We took account then of the necessity of strengthening the economies of free nations in Asia, knowing that on the northern border of India today stands communist China, having swallowed up Tibet. We took account also of the pressures upon the economies of those countries. We took account of the fact that the communist party is active today in countries like India and Ceylon. We thought that we had some share of responsibility for trying to assist democracy in those countries to survive these attacks of a sinister, cruel and materialistic creed. We believed that we could make a contribution to the peace of the world through better trade relations.

Are we justified today, sir, in shutting out Japan from our consideration in matters of that kind? It seems to me that, while we do not put Japan in the same position as we do our sister nations of the commonwealth in Asia, the spirit that dictated the action that we have taken in making annual contributions through the Colombo plan cannot be dismissed from our minds in relation to the resolution before us today.

All of us here believe that we can make a contribution to better understanding, to more friendly relations between the peaceful nations of the world if there is trade between them on a proper basis. I believe, therefore, that in deference to our responsibility to make Japan feel there is a place for her amongst the democratic nations of the world, we must take account of the necessity of maintaining a degree of health in the economy of Japan which depends so substantially upon export trade for her economic survival.

The second factor that I mention in this conclusion, sir, is this. We have entered into an era of competition such as we have not known for a decade and a half. The atmosphere of world trade is going to be far more competitive in these days immediately ahead of us than it has been since the outbreak of war in 1939. Britain is finding it today. Germany, due to the tremendous exertions of the German people in this postwar period, is a factor in the export markets of the world today, far greater than we have experienced since 1939. Now Japan, under this treaty, will possess a position in the Canadian market that will enable her to come into the most direct form of competition with Canadian products. It will be a calamity for all Canada if rigidity in the Canadian economy, high costs of production including the high cost of government, prevent the Canadian producers from meeting that competition on fair terms.

In this respect I should like to quote from a statement that appeared recently in a newspaper that is normally regarded as favourable to this government. It is the Ottawa Citizen of April 2, 1954, commenting directly on this treaty. It says:

> Rather than respond by giving Canadian manufacturers additional tariff protection, the Canadian government might well consider revising downward its own sales taxes. This would put Canadian business in a better position to compete with American goods, and incidentally with those from Japan and other outside sources. It is true that the lost revenues must be made up. Apart from resort to higher taxes in other fields, the government might find itself taking in more money from taxes at the reduced level, because of the stimulating effect on domestic business.

If Canadian producers—and I am thinking principally of Canadian workmen—find themselves confronted by competition from Japan which they find to be unfair, then I say that the government will have to bear its full share of responsibility for what it contributes through high cost of government and high taxes towards high Canadian costs of production.

There is one matter that I think should also be mentioned, Mr. Speaker. It is not a matter of the same far-reaching importance and extent as the matters I have just mentioned, but I do recall that the Canadian Manufacturers Association, in a submission to the government on November 12, 1953, on this subject, among other recommendations, said this:

> That a marking provision be incorporated into the agreement—

That was the forthcoming trade agreement between Canada and Japan.

> . . . requiring that all fully-finished manufactured Japanese goods be marked, stamped, branded or labelled in legible English or French words, in a conspicuous place, so as to indicate the country of origin. In advancing this proposal we desire to point out that all goods which are imported into the United States from Japan are required to be clearly marked with an indication of the country of origin.

It is no disparagement of the Japanese to say that they are great imitators. For that reason, as well as for other reasons that are too obvious to require mention now, I do urge that effect should be given to that recommendation that was submitted to the government last November.

The safeguards under this treaty which have been stressed by the minister, both today and on March 31, are something that we rely upon in giving our support today to the treaty. These safeguards can remain simply a dead letter, a jumble of words in this treaty, unless there is and will be on the part of our government a resolute determination to make these safeguards effective for the purpose for which they have been written into this treaty and for which we are relying upon them today. If they are permitted to remain a dead letter, if the kind of occasion contemplated by these safeguards arises, then we will be calling this government to account. In the meantime, we say to the government we are taking due note of these reservations and safeguards. You have stressed them in asking the house to give adherence to this treaty. We are relying upon your assurance. We look to you to make that assurance good one hundred per cent.

Then, sir—and this is perhaps something that confronts any opposition in relation to a government measure of this kind in recognizing its far-reaching importance—the government has, by a series of secret negotiations, arrived at an agreement with the Japanese government. The country was told singularly little, indeed nothing of any importance, about the course of these negotiations. We do not even know who were the negotiators on behalf of Canada. The government, with the knowledge that is available to it in the departments of government principally concerned, has chosen to enter into this treaty and to ask the house to approve it. A very heavy measure of responsibility consequently rests upon the government.

We in this house can deal with this only in general terms, in principle, and it is on the basis of principle that I have approached the treaty today. I remind the house again, and I hope if questions later arise the country will bear this in mind, that all that is afforded in this House of Commons in relation to this treaty is an opportunity at one stage today to discuss the treaty in general terms. There is no opportunity afforded to us to ask questions, to dig into this question and that question that naturally arise in relation to the treaty. We have no opportunity to question the minister. We have no opportunity to question the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of External Affairs. The government takes the responsibility for negotiating this treaty. It takes the responsibility for asking the house to approve the treaty. We are prepared to do so in principle with the reliance that I have indicated that we place upon the solemn assurances given to us—and it is on that basis and that basis alone that we proceed today.

Finally, sir, may I express the hope that I am sure is entertained by every hon. member in this house, that in approving this treaty today we are not unmindful of the problems involved, we are not unmindful of the problem it presents particularly to producers of Canadian textiles, steel products, electrical products, and others of the various categories that I have mentioned, we are not unmindful of the responsibility that will rest upon us as an opposition to see to it, so far as we can, that the government is reminded whenever occasion arises of the responsibility that it assumes under this agreement to make those safeguards effective.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, it is I know in the mind of every member of this house that we today, in an angry, tumultuous world, a world in which there is still so much of strife, of discord and bloodshed, may somehow through this means make a contribution to the restoration of a spirit of friendship and good will for the people with whom we were not long ago engaged in deadly war, but who we hope, through means like this, may be brought into a wholesome and friendly and lasting relationship with our country and with other democratic and peace-loving countries in a family of nations who desire that their relationship together shall be characterized by friendship, good will and neighbourliness.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in common with other members in the house and all parts of the house we welcome the opportunity to discuss this treaty. I am sure that throughout the house it is hoped that this treaty may prove beneficial to Canada, beneficial to Japan and beneficial to the world as a means of promoting good will and peace among all men.

As I sat here this afternoon listening to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) and the exhaustive analysis he gave of both the treaty and matters connected with the formulation of such a treaty, I thought that his speech illustrated the difficulties and, indeed, the contradictions which abound in relationships of this sort in the world at the present time. I think that on a reading of the speech that he has made those contradictions will be quite apparent to the reader, as they were to those who listened to the speech this afternoon.

First, I want to say that I agree with him that it would have been preferable to have referred this treaty to the banking and commerce committee in order that we might investigate it rather more fully. I fancy I heard him say ". . . as we did with the general agreement on tariffs and trade". If he said that then it is not my recollection. My recollection is that the general agreement on tariffs and trade came into this house, the house was called especially to consider it, but it more or less died on the order paper without going to committee. I think it was the intention of the government of the time that it go to committee but I have no recollection of it going there and certainly no recollection of any report coming back or of this house having had an opportunity to approve or disapprove of that agreement.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The government has never ratified that agreement.

Mr. Coldwell: No. We have never had an opportunity of expressing approval or disapproval, and the government has never ratified it. I do not think it went to the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Quelch: It went to the committee but the committee never made a report on it.

Mr. Coldwell: I was just trying to think what happened to it.

As I was saying, there are contradictions in trade relationships, but nevertheless I think the house has to approve of a treaty of this description because, after all, Japan is a great and important nation. My thoughts this afternoon wandered back not only to pre-war years when we were supplying Japan with copper, scrap iron and all the rest of it—material that was used at Pearl Harbor and other places against our own people and own allies—but I was remembering the speeches that were made in this house during the war. I do hope that out of the revived Japan we shall get a democratic Japan; that we shall not get another Japan rearmed and led by militarists once again to become something of a threat to the world, alone or even in co-operation perhaps with others who may threaten the peace of the world at any time. There is no saying what may happen because Japan today is cut off from the markets which she once had as her primary outlets—Manchuria, Korea and China. She is competing for what trade remains in southeast Asia.

As the hon. member for Eglinton said, a population of 85½ million people, increasing at the rate of 1·2 million per year—I think that was the figure he gave—occupying a territory two-fifths of the size of British Columbia with only 15 per cent of the whole area arable, is bound to seek both food and outlets for the commodities which it must manufacture in order to obtain both food and raw materials.

For example, in the years 1934-36 manufactures exported from Japan represented 80·7 per cent of the country's exports; 71·6 per cent of the imports by Japan were in the form of foodstuffs and raw materials. That indicates how dependent Japan is for her very existence both on the food with which she must sustain her people and on the exports which she must send abroad in order to pay for the raw materials and the commodities she requires.

We are told that—and this is the year 1952 that I am speaking of—90 per cent of all exports were manufactured goods and that foodstuffs and raw materials accounted for 86 per cent of the imports. All ten of Japan's most important imports are raw materials. Silk is the only raw material exported in quantity. I think that gives a very clear picture of the position in which Japan finds herself. It offers opportunity for Canada—if we can grasp that opportunity. Representing as I do a western and wheat growing area I am, of course, impressed not only with the possibilities of maintaining the market we have established in that country for primary products from the prairie provinces, but also with the possibility of extending those exports.

The demand for Canadian wheat, as the minister indicated this afternoon, has grown steadily over the past several years. The rising demand for wheat products in Japan stems of course first of all from the very rapid increase in population in that country, the changed habits of food that they have acquired in the post-war years and the fact that they have been cut off from the sources of rice upon which they so largely depended in bygone days. The result is, we are told, that not only adults, but more particularly the young people in adolescent years, are becoming accustomed to new cereals, and those new cereals are of particular interest to us because, as the figures produced by the minister and by the hon. member for Eglinton indicated this afternoon, they are wheat and barley, two very important cereal products that we produce in vast quantities in this country.

The United States has been the leading supplier of wheat in the post-war years, but our supplies of wheat to that country have been increased quite markedly. Of course Japan does raise wheat herself, but oviously from the amount of arable land in the country and the fact that rice is grown in large quantities in the country it is certain that Japan will never be able to raise enough food, and particularly cereals, in order to feed herself.

Then of course we are given to understand that over the past few years there has been an increase in meat consumption. To some extent the Japanese have turned from fish to meat for their proteins, and that again means that there is demand for cereals for stock feed and cattle feed, and so we can take that into account.

What our wheat board has to bear in mind is that under the present circumstances, with the amount of cereals available for disposal on the markets of the world, they are in a very competitive area when they try to sell wheat in Japan, and they should do everything possible to promote the sale of it. But it is not only the sale of our wheat that is necessary. If Japan is to buy Canadian raw materials, lumber, minerals, wheat, barley and so on, then she must be enabled to pay for those products, and there is only one way in which nations can pay for the products that they buy, that is by sending abroad something that is saleable and something that will give them the necessary funds with which to pay for their imports. Therefore a trade treaty of this description is of primary importance to the producers of our raw materials in Canada, and, as the hon. member for Eglinton has well emphasized, of primary importance also to the people who work in industries that may be competitive or that may find some competition from the Japanese sources.

When this trade treaty was under discussion, and of course before we knew anything about its contents, in its initial stages I was very pleased to see that the representative of Japan in this city made it very clear on November 3 last that Japan could never balance her trade with Canada even if we gave her lower tariffs. He then went on to say that she would have to reduce the gap between her imports from Canada and her exports. He said:

> . . . if the agreement goes through, Japan likely will be concentrating on Canada's big market for capital goods, rather than on such consumer items as toys, novelties and other sundry items.

And further:

> These sundry items, small in price, did not help to boost the total sales figures to Canada by any great amount. Capital goods involve expenditures of great sums of money and thus might help narrow the trade balance gap.

Well, we all hope that that is so. It seems to me that in this treaty the government has attempted that, without raising tariffs, indeed lowering tariffs, because let us bear this in mind that the increase in trade with Japan in the last few years has been an increase under the general tariff, and it is now proposed of course to give Japan the most-favoured-nation tariffs.

As the hon. member for Eglinton pointed out, there are attempts in this treaty to safeguard Canadian industry which might be affected by unfair competition. Unfair competition is very difficult to define. I am one of those who believe that we should do everything we possibly can to remove the barriers to trade across the world, and to give our own people an opportunity of entering world markets as well, at the same time, doing whatever we can to see to it that our producers are not subject to what might be termed unfair competition, though the words "unfair competition" are at best very difficult indeed to define.

It seems to me that this treaty will help to bring about better relationships and may give us a better market for certain of our products that of necessity we must send abroad. I noticed the figures given by both the minister and the hon. member for Eglinton of the exports and imports of last year. In round figures our exports to Japan amounted to $119 million worth, and our imports, in round figures again, to about $14 million worth. I also read—I have not it before me, but my recollection is quite clear—the speech that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) made in Tokyo when he was visiting there on his world tour. I read that speech very carefully at the time, and I remember the Prime Minister pointed out that while there seems to be a very large gap, $8 for $1 in connection with this trade, yet this does not present a wholly fair picture; that we do import certain Japanese goods indirectly by way of some other countries. Possibly the Prime Minister was thinking of the United States. If that is so, it would help our trade relationships with Japan if we could import those commodities directly into this country, Japan thereby earning Canadian dollars instead of United States' dollars with which the Japanese importers could purchase Canadian goods. I hope that that may be one result of this treaty.

There are a number of provisions in the treaty, which I am not going into because the hon. member for Eglinton went into them very thoroughly, which may be applied, duties which may be applied and evaluations which may be applied, and so forth. The main interest that any of us can have in this treaty is that we hope it will promote the welfare of Canada as well as of course the welfare of the people of Japan; that it will be mutually beneficial; and in spite of the fears that have been expressed this afternoon, we are doing the proper thing in approving of this treaty today and giving it at least a fair trial.

I know it can be said, and said quite accurately and truthfully, that prior to the second world war certain unfair trade practices were indulged in by Japan. A couple of weeks ago, while doing a little packing for storage purposes, I had a look at some china and I noticed on one piece the quite large letters "U.S." and then very small letters "Pat"—"United States patent", and almost so small that you had to have pretty powerful glasses to read the little word underneath "Japan". You would imagine if you picked it up casually and took a look at it that it was of U.S. manufacture. Those people from British Columbia will recollect how there were certain cans of fish marked "Can" and most people thought that that was indicative of an article produced in Canada and of course it was not. Now the Japanese government agrees to discontinue these unfair trade practices. I hope that if we indulged in any unfair trade practices ourselves that we too will undertake to do away with them.

A short time ago I brought to the attention of the house weaknesses in our legislation regarding the marking of countries of origin, and the new act has now been proclaimed. I hope it will have some effect at least in this particular matter.

However, in spite of the fears which have been expressed, fears which I know are legitimately held by the workers, for example, in the textile industry, I hope these fears will be unfounded and that we may find this treaty of benefit to all classes of producers in Canada, because there is one thing to be said and that is that if we have prosperous producers in one field of industry, then that in the main is reflected in other fields of industry. If our western farmers are able to dispose of their cereals advantageously then they have money with which to buy, not Japanese textiles, but large quantities of Canadian textiles, although they may still buy a small number of textiles originating in Japan. In other words, I hope a treaty of this description will assist the health of the entire economy of this country. I do not wish to repeat what the hon. member for Eglinton has said. I know he will not misunderstand me when I say he has put before us all the contradictions to be found in trading relations of this description. But I hope we may straighten out these contradictions and find this treaty mutually beneficial to Canada and to Japan.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with real interest this afternoon to the speeches made by the minister and the spokesmen of the other two parties in connection with the agreement on commerce between Canada and Japan. As I listened to those speeches I could not escape the feeling that it is terribly difficult, when we come to consider matters of trade and commerce, to lay down any hard and fast rule which will work successfully in all cases for our people. I hope I shall not be guilty, therefore, of trying to lay down any hard and fast rule in connection with what I shall have to say this afternoon.

I was very pleased to see that Canada has not treated Japan as vanquished countries have so often been treated after wars in the past. I take real satisfaction out of the fact that Canada, through this treaty and in other ways, is according to the Japanese people the kind of honourable treatment which ought to be extended to them by a mature people with a well developed social conscience, and I do believe that that is the kind of treatment Canadians are according to the Japanese people.

I have examined the terms of the agreement most carefully. I have listened to the speeches made this afternoon by the minister and the hon. members who followed him. It seems to me that the agreement adequately safeguards Canada's interests. I say that because I discovered through my reading of the treaty that British preferences are not interfered with, and we are free to apply dumping duties in the event that Japan at any time should resort to dumping goods on to our market at unreasonable prices. It just occurs to me though how absurd the world situation is when we have to cry out against being able to buy things too cheaply. However, there it is; it is just one of those absurdities you come across when you talk about the world of trade.

Coming back to the safeguards which I think are in the treaty, though the most-favoured-nation principle occupies a prominent part of the agreement escape clauses have been provided which make it possible for either party to apply trade or exchange restrictions if necessary in order to safeguard its external financial position and balance of payments.

I would like to comment just briefly on the most-favoured-nation principle. That principle plays a very prominent part in the treaty. It is included in article I, as a matter of fact. Now, this is sometimes called non-discrimination, and in my experience a good many people have been bowled over by the sound and connotation of that expression "non-discrimination" and they chew on it, adhere to it, or so they say, with almost religious zeal and fanaticism. But what they do not seem to realize is that the unconditional, and I emphasize that, most-favoured-nation principle was invented by the United States as a means of completely destroying the British preferential system so that whenever it suited her purpose she could break into the game and with her great industrial power dominate world trade.

The United States has demanded the acceptance and the inclusion of the unconditional most-favoured-nation principle in all international trade treaties and agreements for many years. All during that time, strangely enough, she has been striving with all her might, and one can say with her magnificent capacity, to make herself self-sufficient. Now, if you ever want some contradictions take a look at that. Today, the United States, for all practical purposes, is in that position of self-sufficiency. All during the days when

Great Britain, Germany and Japan exported goods to the amount of no less than 20 per cent of their total national income, the United States was exporting only six per cent gross, and if inter-company relationships were eliminated from that six per cent the total of her exports would not be more than about three per cent of her national income.

I cite these figures only to show that while most countries in the world have continually to depend upon foreign trade to a very large degree and therefore have done nothing to adjust their thinking toward the development of home markets, the United States was moving deliberately and rapidly toward a position of self-sufficiency, in which position she would not have to depend to a very large extent on foreign trade.

The other nations were blind to what was going on, or they appeared to be; and therefore the unconditional most-favoured-nation principle was slipped over on them. But since the adoption of the unconditional most-favoured-nation clause in trade treaties, we have operated on the escape clauses more than on the principle itself. It appears that in the present agreement with Japan provision has been made to continue on this line, namely operation on the escape clauses more than on the principle.

The agreement we are considering is, in reality, a bilateral agreement including the qualified most-favoured-nation clause. I was particularly glad to find that we did not insist upon inserting in this treaty the unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment. That fact indicates that we are really ready and willing to give the Japanese people a reasonable chance in the world of trade.

Finally, the present treaty expresses Canada's right to apply export or import restrictions under our security legislation. It therefore seems to me that there is little to worry about so far as the wording of the treaty is concerned. How it will work out in the future we do not know at the present time. We certainly hope that it will work out well. I notice, however, that one of the terms of the treaty is that it shall stand for one year and after that period can be terminable upon three months' notice by either party. Hence it is not a thing which could not be corrected if we found conditions under it growing intolerable.

Many Canadian people are showing some concern lest the agreement with Japan result in harm to them and to industrial enterprises in this country. What are we to say to these people? For example, a few days ago I received from certain toy manufacturers in Canada a letter in which they complained about the possibility of harm to their industries under this treaty. The question is this: What are we going to say to such groups as that?

In the first place, the agreement itself says that either party may deviate temporarily from the terms of paragraphs 1 and 2 to prevent undue damage to the industries of either country through the full application of the terms of the treaty. That provision in itself is some safeguard. In the second place, I think we ought to keep in our minds the thought that to be fair in this world today we must adopt a policy of "live and let live". Certainly that should be the cardinal principle of all our external relations. Japan therefore must be allowed her proper place in the world of trade and must be allowed an amount of trade which will make it possible for her people to find employment and to live on a decent standard.

The terms of the trade agreement are not, in my opinion, more generous towards Japan than they should be. We ought to have regard to what was done to Japan by the peace treaty which was signed in 1951, if I am not mistaken. Let us not forget also that Japan felt she had been forced to resort to war in order to break out of unbearable restrictions that, over the years, had been imposed upon her trade before 1940 or 1941. I have read statements by high-placed Japanese in the pre-war years which definitely point to a feeling of aggravation at those restrictions, particularly the restrictions placed upon Japan by the unconditional most-favoured-nation clause.

I am conscious of the fact that for many years perhaps Japan practised unfair trade arrangements; that is, she resorted to unfair trade practices. That matter has already been stressed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) this afternoon. But they had the feeling—and they have expressed it in no uncertain terms—that they had to resort to force in order to break out of the extremely vicious type of aggravating restrictions placed upon them in their trade relations prior to 1941.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we should also be reminded that the treaty of peace signed with Japan in 1951 substantially reduced Japanese territory. As I pointed out at the time when we were discussing that peace treaty, that reduction was exceedingly serious as it had left 85 million people with not nearly enough land on which to produce the food they needed. Some of the richest and most important rice-producing areas were taken from them, a circumstance which doubtless accounts for the fact that in this past year they have been importing substantial amounts of wheat and barley from Canada.

I was well pleased to hear the minister say this afternoon that Japan had become our third largest customer so far as wheat is concerned and that she had also bought substantial amounts of barley from us. In these and other things Japan is now and, in my judgment, can continue to be for many years, one of our best customers. She is nearest to our great Pacific ports from which we export great quantities of cereal grains. However, we in this group adhere to the principle that trade must be a two-way street. The Canadian people should take note of the fact that last year we bought from Japan, according to the minister's own words this afternoon, only 30 cents' worth out of each $100 worth of our Canadian imports. That is a fairly small figure for imports from a country that is our third best wheat customer.

I agree with the minister that there is plenty of room for imports into Canada from Japan. Indeed if we want to cultivate markets in Japan for our products, we must buy Japanese goods in return. As was said by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, that is the only way in which the Japanese people can pay for the things they want to buy from us. It is of particular importance that we cultivate a permanent market for our wheat. I say "particular" in the light of the huge carryover from previous years that we have in Canada of cereal grains. Japan is and always has been seriously short of food materials, particularly good cereal grains and proteins. When I mention proteins, let me say that perhaps the years ahead may see an expansion of our exports to Japan of protein foods if we make wise use of the opportunities afforded by the agreement we are now considering and of the concessions granted to Canada under that treaty.

Those concessions spoken of by the minister this afternoon put the Canadian producer into a fair competitive position in Japan. Those Canadians who oppose the ratification of the treaty—and I suppose there will be a number of them—should be told that, generally speaking, a fair-competition policy will handle the situation for them as it will for everybody else. We put forward the view that our aim should be to build up in Canada a balanced economy, one wherein agriculture and industry are in fair balance. We think that is the safest type of economy in all times—in wartime and in peacetime—and the most useful type in a world which so often is the scene of conflict and strife. It therefore seems that we must have in Canada more industry employing more people. But of course the big question everybody asks is this: What industry?

Again we face a problem of trying to lay down something like a hard and fast rule, but we cannot do it. Therefore we have to be guided by considerations of the time and of the circumstances under which we live. There are, it seems to me, those industries which are absolutely essential at all times, in wartime and in peacetime. There are those industries that are essential in times of war and of world dislocation, but perhaps only desirable in times of peace. Then there are those that are essential neither in time of peace or war. These could be called desirable just the same as the others if they turn out useful goods and services and give employment to our people under fair conditions.

But in any case where any of these industries do put pressure on the government for protection against Japanese fair competition in our market, we think that the government should most carefully examine the whole situation in each individual case to make sure that we do not in any case militate against Canadian consumers by extending protection to industries that have not done their utmost to keep down their costs to efficient levels by every means possible, including the plowing back of a substantial part of their profits into plant improvement and modernization. Here again, Mr. Speaker, I say that it is pretty difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule, but that at least seems to be the expression of a principle that might guide us in determining what should be done in any case where an industry feels that it is in danger as a consequence of this treaty.

We are likely to hear protests from the textile industries. How are we going to treat those protests? That is another question, and certainly it is hard for me to say what should be done. But I remind the house that some years ago the government of Canada established what was known as the Stevens committee to investigate the textile industries and others. It had to do with price spreads and that sort of thing. The Stevens committee discovered that Canadian textile industries were inefficient. They paid poor wages and took large profits, little of which was turned back to modernize plants and keep them up to date.

It seems to me that kind of industry does not deserve protection against fair competition at the expense of the Canadian consumer. Maybe the situation has changed. It may possibly be that the Canadian textile industries have improved the whole situation since the days of the Stevens investigation, and if so consideration should be given to that fact. But let me emphasize again that the government should not be pressured into extending protection to any industry without the fullest consideration of all the facts and careful measurement of the value to our country and the world of those industries, as well as the position in which our consumers would be put as a consequence of what might be done.

We are not forgetting, Mr. Speaker, that the success of this treaty, as well as the health and vigour of Canadian industry, will depend very largely on how we put our own house in order. There must be a careful and critical review of our taxation structure to ascertain what effect our taxes are having on costs and on our competitive position. I agree with the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) that as we enter this period of intensive competition with countries like Japan, Germany and others that have revived wonderfully from the effects of war we have got to be more cost conscious than ever before in our lives. Consequently it seems to me every effort should be made to reduce taxes, especially those that are imposed on commodities and that pyramid costs and push up prices.

To be in a healthy condition our home markets should constantly be in possession of adequate purchasing power to enable the Canadian people to purchase all of the production of Canada if they want to buy it. In that favourable position we can, when we export goods to Japan or any other country, import goods of equal over-all value from those countries with confidence that these imports can be sold and used by our people. Under circumstances like that we would not have to resort to the practice of maintaining unfavourable trade balances at the expense of other countries, and therefore one of the main causes of war would be removed.

I think it might have been wise to have the agreement considered by the banking and commerce committee, and perhaps the minister may yet agree to have that done. In any event we think that the treaty does adequately safeguard Canada's interests while at the same time giving Japan a chance for a fair share of our trade. Consequently we approve ratification, and in approving it we express the hope that the treaty will be one of the big factors in cultivating peace, good will, security and prosperity in the Pacific area and in the whole world.

Mr. A. W. A. White (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on the Japanese trade agreement because I feel that the agreement when it is ratified will have a far-reaching effect on many industries in this country, chief among which is the textile industry. In my maiden speech last year I attempted to direct the attention of the house to the decrease in the number of people employed in the fourteen textile mills in Galt, Preston and Hespeler, and since that time the situation has not improved but has grown gradually worse. In the year 1950 the textile industry in Canada which is composed of two branches, primary textiles and secondary textiles, employed approximately 200,000 people or one-sixth of our total industrial labour force. This industry is therefore one of the largest employers of industrial labour in Canada.

The number of people employed in the primary textile industry has gradually dwindled until today there are less than 82,000 textile workers employed in this branch of the industry in Canada, and a large number of these are on short time. During the past number of months nineteen textile mills have closed their doors and it is very doubtful if any of them will ever open again under present conditions. A number of the larger mills are located in large industrial cities and undoubtedly many of the unemployed textile workers in these centres have since been absorbed in other industries, but the majority of the textile plants are located in small communities and are the main source of employment. Such is the case in the town of Hespeler in my riding. In this small town, with a population of 3,400 people, there were 1,415 people employed in 1950 in the Dominion Woollens and Worsteds mill and the Artex mill whereas today there are only 847 people working in these two plants, and they are on short time.

While I was home during the Christmas recess workers and management voluntarily accepted a 13 per cent cut in wages to help keep the Dominion Woollens and Worsteds mill operating. Many of the employees of this mill have their whole life savings tied up in their homes in the town of Hespeler, and the closing of this mill would cause them to lose everything that they have worked for. This was a sincere effort on the part of management and employees to protect their jobs and their homes by this action. In addition, the entire business life of this community is almost entirely dependent on these mills continuing to operate. I know from communications that I have received from the board of trade of Hespeler, as well as the workers, that they are not too optimistic about the future of the textile industry under conditions as they exist today.

What has happened to the textile industry in Canada? Certainly any suggestion that the industry has overexpanded or is inefficient in my opinion is not borne out by the facts. In the period from 1935 to 1939 the textile industry in Canada was supplying 73 per cent of the domestic market. In 1950, with full employment, this industry was only able to supply 68 per cent of the domestic market. I do not believe, therefore, that the suggestion the industry has overexpanded is true. These statistics establish, in my opinion, that with the increase in population and the increase in purchasing power of the Canadian people the textile industry was not able to supply as large a portion of the domestic market in 1950, even with full employment, as it was able to supply in the years from 1935 to 1939.

It was pointed out also in this house by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair) that the textile industry had spent $450 million for modern equipment since the end of world war II, bringing the production of the industry to the highest point of efficiency. Any suggestion that the textile industry in inefficient, therefore, is in my opinion not a valid one. The amount of textiles being purchased in Canada has been increasing each year since 1950, yet the amount of textiles supplied by the Canadian mills has gradually dwindled until today the textile mills in Canada are only sharing the domestic market to the extent of 51 per cent. I can only conclude from this information that the depressed condition in which the textile industry finds itself today is, to a large extent, due to the ever-increasing quantities of imported textiles being sold on the Canadian market.

The Canadian textile industry faces competition from cottons and synthetic materials from the United States and Japan, while their competition in woollens and worsteds comes from the United Kingdom and the rest of Europe. The average rate of wages paid textile workers in the United States is $1.37 per hour, compared with $1.11 per hour in Canada. This difference in wages, with the addition of the present rate of duty applied against the American textiles, is offset to a large extent by the fact that the United States manufacturers have a potential market ten times greater than the Canadian industry, which is limited almost entirely to the domestic market because of the higher rates of duties prevailing in other countries.

The United States textile manufacturer, with his greater potential market, will run off an average of 100,000 yards of one material, whereas the Canadian textile mill will have only an average run of 1,000 yards. This, in itself, increases the production costs of the Canadian industry by approximately 35 per cent, because after each run of cloth it is necessary to make certain changes and to clean all the cards. The Canadian textile manufacturer is also confronted with another type of competition from the United States. It is the dumping of surplus goods. I was very glad this government recognized that this unfair trade practice existed, and took steps to correct the situation by the passing of Bill No. 29 at this session.

As I stated before, the Canadian textile industry is also confronted with competition in the field of cottons and synthetics from Japan, where the average hourly rate of wage is 13·9 cents per hour as compared with $1.11 cents per hour in Canada. This competition is serious enough with the present rate of duty, and will become more serious if Japan is given most-favoured-nation treatment. The Canadian textile mills are now facing competition in the fields of woollens and worsteds from the United Kingdom, where the hourly rate of wages is approximately 40 cents per hour and from other countries in Europe where even less wages are paid.

I know that there are many reasons why a trade agreement with Japan is necessary. I know that last year Japan bought Canadian wheat and other primary products, as well as some of our natural resources, to the value of $119 million, and that Canada purchased during the same period from Japan only $14 million worth of the goods that Japan had to sell. It is quite obvious that Japan cannot continue indefinitely with such an unfavourable balance of trade with this country. I recognize also that Japan is the one bulwark of democracy in that part of the world. If we refuse to trade with her on some fair basis, we would inevitably be driving her into the hands of the communists.

I am convinced, however, that if Canada and Canadians are going to continue to enjoy the second highest standard of living in the world, then there will have to be a complete revision of our tariffs in relation to those countries where wages are so much lower than our own. If that is not done we will be confronted with more and more industrial unemployment. In my opinion it would be a backward step to lower our standard of living in order to compete with these nations. The member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), in his speech during the budget debate on April 13, 1954, as recorded at page 4036 of Hansard, said:

If you want to correct unemployment in Canada, put some purchasing power in the pockets of western farmers. Take steps to buy their grain, and in my opinion there will be no unemployment in a matter of a few short months.

The western farmer is no different from anyone else, and if he can buy imported goods cheaper than he can buy Canadian-made goods he is going to do so. This scheme is not going to correct industrial unemployment in this country. No Canadian industry can ever hope to compete with manufactured goods in those countries in which the wages paid are so much lower than those paid in the Canadian industry, no matter how much the industry improves its efficiency or methods of production. The impact of competition in manufactured goods from these low-wage countries is being felt by some other industries in Canada in addition to the textile industry.

Another such industry is the machine tool industry in this country, which was so important to Canada's war effort. The Canada Machinery Corporation in the city of Galt, which normally employs 300 or more persons, now has a payroll of only 90 people, and the R. McDougall Company is equally hard hit. There is no doubt in my mind that Japan has a substantial machine tool industry because such an industry was very essential in order for her to participate in the last world war. Since the machine tool industry in Canada is in a depressed condition from competition with the low wage countries in Europe where skilled mechanics get 50 cents or less per hour compared to $1.62 an hour paid in Canada, it would seem to me that any large imports of machine tools to this country from Japan would almost be a final blow from which the industry would find it exceedingly difficult to recover.

The devaluation of the pound and the premium commanded by the Canadian dollar has had the effect of reducing the present tariffs still further. Therefore I would suggest that the tariff board should be authorized and instructed to review our entire tariff structure in the light of conditions as they exist today in order to determine what impact foreign manufactured goods, especially those from low wage countries, have on our domestic industries. I believe that this should be done as soon as possible so that the government will have this information before it when the general agreement on tariffs and trade comes up for review next year.

In going over the Japanese trade agreement I was very glad to see that the agreement is only for one year and can be terminated by either of the contracting parties on three months' notice at the end of the year. I was also very pleased to see that in this agreement there was included an escape clause which allows Canada to place its own values for duty purposes on any Japanese products which, as a result of the said agreement, are being imported into Canada in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to threaten serious injury to Canadian producers of competitive products.

This agreement secures for Canada another potential market for its primary products and natural resources which is very desirable, but in return Canada has extended most-favoured-nation tariffs to Japanese manufactured goods which in effect applies the same rates of duty against Japanese manufactured goods as are at present applied against manufactured goods from the United States and other nations who are included in the general agreement on tariffs and trade. This places Japan in a preferred position in competition for the Canadian market since the wages paid in their country are so much lower than those paid in the United States and other countries of Europe. Even if the escape clause is used it only means that Canadian industry has another competitor for its domestic market in the same category as the low wage countries of Europe.

I therefore repeat again and strongly urge that the tariff board should be directed and instructed to investigate our entire system of tariffs in order to determine the impact imports from low wage countries have on our domestic industries so that with this information adjustments can be made in our tariffs that will permit Canadian industries to have an opportunity at least to compete in our domestic market with manufactured goods imported into Canada from countries where wages are so much lower than in our own.

In my opinion we would then be creating an economic climate in our country which would permit industry and agriculture to prosper side by side.

Mr. A. B. Weselak (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity at this stage of the debate to say a few words of a general nature in support of the government's action in entering into the trade agreement with Japan. My reasons for so doing stem from several considerations, foremost among which are our export trade and our continued resistance to the expansion of communism in eastern Europe and Asia.

Japan in the last war was one of our bitterest enemies and fought us and our allies with all the resources at her disposal. Upon the termination of the war, on September 8, 1951, the treaty of peace was signed with Japan at the city of San Francisco. This treaty was the subject of considerable criticism throughout the western world but the wisdom shown in pressing for its finalization has justified this action on the part of the western allies.

As a result of this treaty the western world has gone along with Japan and assisted her in rehabilitating herself in a democratic manner.

We must not forget that following the war and it is no secret that even today the peoples of Japan are divided as to where their loyalties should extend and to what extent they should participate in world affairs. The first minority group in Japan consists of the communists who urge the newly elected Japanese parliament to break its ties with the west, refute the San Francisco peace treaty, reject its present mutual defence assistance agreement with the United States and line up with the communist-dominated peoples of Asia.

The second group—the neutralists or right wing of the socialist party—advocates an isolationist policy whereby Japan would take no part in world affairs. This obviously is not a practical solution to their problem in view of their geographical position and the present state of world affairs.

The other group, which is by far the largest, favours a rejection of the communists' attempt to make Japan another satellite of Russia and China. Japan, situate as it is close to the shores of Asia, cannot be neutral but if it is to stand against communist aggression and expansion in the East it will require the military and economic support of the United States, Canada and the other western powers.

Hon. members know from their personal experience that many lasting, trustful and valuable personal friendships are created among individuals as a result of business and professional association. In their daily contacts they get to know those whom they can trust and to what extent. I think a parallel can be drawn in international relations. The hand of friendship has been extended to Japan by the western world. It has been gratefully accepted. This was particularly evidenced when our Prime Minister visited that country on his world tour, where not only was he met by the Japanese dignitaries but also by the school children who lined the streets in an expression of friendly welcome.

It is my opinion that friendly trade relations with Japan will do more than anything else to convince the Japanese people that we are sincere in our desire to have Japan as an ally; that we are prepared to assist her in her resistance to communist domination and welcome her membership in the fraternity of free and democratic nations. In the last war we found that Japan was a power to be reckoned with and no opportunity should be lost to encourage her alignment with the West in the world power struggle.

The considerations so far enumerated would be enough in my opinion to justify the entry of Canada into a trade agreement with Japan, but there is another very important consideration and that is our need for foreign markets. In Canada, which is so dependent on international trade, every sensible person wants more trade with everybody. There is no doubt that more than any other country in the world we depend on our foreign trade for our prosperity. The United States, which is the only other country of the world with a standard of living comparable to ours, relies for her prosperity on exports to the extent of only about four per cent, whereas Canada is dependent upon her exports for about 30 per cent of her national income.

To agriculture our continuity of trade is of paramount importance. Our wheat crop is now averaging in excess of 500 million bushels of which domestic consumption, including grain used for seed and feed, would not exceed 140 million bushels. Of a crop of 136 million bushels of oats we exported 65 million bushels, and of a crop of 176 million bushels of barley we exported 119 million bushels. In addition to the export of grain, substantial stocks of other farm and dairy products have been exported to other countries to add to our national income.

In addition to the export of farm products, our exports of minerals, processed and manufactured goods have been substantial. The export of these commodities is very important, not only to agriculture but also to labour and to industry.

Since the war our trade with Japan has grown steadily and at the risk of repetition I would say that in the calendar year 1953 our exports to Japan totalled $118,500,000 while our imports amounted to $13,600,000. Our chief sales to Japan consisted of $52,433,562 of wheat, $17,496,915 of barley, $7,014,280 of pulp, $1,380,565 of grass seed and other lesser items. In the year 1953-54 Japan's crop quota was 36,744,000 bushels. She had purchased from Canada to April 30 of this year 11,690,000 bushels of wheat. This, together with purchases from the United States, has almost filled her quota. This figure includes only purchases registered under the international wheat agreement and information available indicates that other sales outside the agreement have been made. Since April 30, 14 further cargoes have been sold, which at 350,000 bushels per cargo, would amount to approximately 5 million further bushels, bringing the total well over 17 million bushels to date with the remainder of the year's purchases to be anticipated. These facts, together with the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to the effect that "steps have been taken to safeguard the position of Canada in the Japanese market for the next two years" furnish, I believe, sufficient evidence to justify a favourable and optimistic attitude in regard to our future trade with Japan.

On this occasion I would like to take the opportunity to commend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) upon his work, the work of his department and the agencies under his direction, for their increasing vigilance and their aggressive policy in seeking markets for our products. The department's trade representatives in foreign countries have been doing a tremendous job of promoting Canadian sales. In addition the wheat board has maintained a vigorous policy of seeking out and maintaining markets for our grains.

A Canadian grain and flour mission of the Canadian wheat board, headed by Mr. Riddel, recently returned from a tour of the Asiatic countries where they had been seeking markets for our Canadian grain. The delegation was well received in Japan and found that Canadian wheat was very well liked, particularly in relation to quality which they found to be better than the average quality of American wheat they had been receiving, and all indications were that Japan would continue to be a good market for Canadian wheat in the years to come.

Factors which have contributed toward the popularity of wheat products in Japan in preference to rice have been, firstly, the shortage of fuel for cooking purposes in the homes and, secondly, the fact that many Japanese women are occupied in working during the day. Bread is a much more convenient form of food by reason of these considerations and is growing in popularity. It, therefore, seems reasonable to assume that our wheat market in Japan is established and that in the course of time it will increase, provided Japan can obtain the foreign currency to purchase our products. A similar consideration applies to barley. Our exports in the past year of barley were valued at $17 million and the prospects of increasing our exports to Japan of this commodity are also very good.

Our great exporting industries are also searching for larger outlets and industries in British Columbia have again taken the initiative as they did in the matter of marketing their fish products, and a delegation of the Vancouver board of trade, including an official representative of the British Columbia government, went to Tokyo early in April to seek new markets for Canadian goods. The prospect of obtaining further markets are bright. A recent estimate in Foreign Trade, a government publication, showed that Japan is urgently in need of over three million housing units to ease the serious housing shortage in Japan. Assuming that the average two or three-room house requires about 7,000 board feet of lumber, then, a market exists for a considerable amount of Canadian lumber. There is no doubt that if the needs of the Japanese people were given careful study other buyers could be found for many Canadian products and raw materials.

We must face the fact that if Japan is to continue buying from Canada at her present rate, or if as may well be, her imports from this country are to increase, then she must sell more to Canada. I believe this agreement is a recognition of this fact and a step toward retaining this market which we have had the good fortune to obtain. If the agreement has the effect of more Japanese goods being imported into Canada, which will likely be the result, they necessarily must compete with the Canadian manufacturers and indications are that this competition will be felt mainly in the toy, textile and electrical products which Japan can make much cheaper than can our Canadian manufacturers.

One of the terms of the agreement, incorporated by way of a communication addressed to the ambassador of Japan from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), dated March 31, 1954, and set out in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons for Wednesday, March 31, 1954, at page 7 of the addendum, provides, and I quote:

1. If, as a result of unforeseen developments and of the effect of the obligations incurred by Canada under the aforesaid agreement, any product is being imported into its territory in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic producers in its territory of like or directly competitive products, Canada will be free, in respect of such product, and to the extent and for such a time as may be necessary to prevent or remedy such injury, to establish values for ordinary and special duty purposes.

2. In determining whether values should be established in respect of any product pursuant to paragraph 1 and in determining the level at which such values should be established, Canada will take into account the prices of like or directly competitive products, if any, being imported at that time from other countries.

The inclusion of the right of Canada to establish values for ordinary and special duty purposes for the purpose of preventing serious injury to domestic producers of competitive products, together with the provisions relating to unfair trade practices, provides industries affected with an adequate safeguard against indiscriminate competition from Japanese imports. This power will have to be exercised by the government with great care in accordance with the spirit of the agreement and in such a manner as to promote the national interest.

Large surpluses of goods, especially agricultural products, hang over the market. We must maintain our present huge trade in other markets, and that is our basic problem. This problem will not be cured but will be greatly worsened by restricting the international trade on which this nation largely lives, and therefore I urge the government on this occasion to exercise the power reserved to it in the agreement only when conditions warrant their use and, if possible, sparingly, but always in the interest of the Canadian economy as a whole.

In conclusion I would like to emphasize that this trade pact is not only a trade agreement as such; it is a symbol of Japan's desire to join the fraternity of nations in the free world, to work with them in friendly co-operation toward a solution of the grave problems which face the world today. Our government, in negotiating this trade treaty, has accepted the fact that Japan must sooner or later live by her own exports; that she cannot subsist upon voluntary gifts, nor can she carry on the one-sided exchange of goods which has been the case in the past. The Japanese people must be assured that their alliance with the West is not only sound in military strategy but assures them a tolerable life.

Motion agreed to.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING CO-ORDINATION ACT

AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES, CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

On the order:

House in committee of the whole on Bill No. 326, an act to amend the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act. (Without amendment).—The Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that I do now leave the chair?

Mr. Green: There was no announcement last night that this would be up. In view of the fact that it is ten minutes to six o'clock, I suggest that the house adjourn.

Mr. Harris: I have no objection to the house adjourning. I hope the practice will not grow of visiting on the house leader his inability to predict the length of any debate, and thereby closing the house early. If it were the final closing, I would not object. I move that the house do now adjourn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall begin with the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources; then transport. On Friday, if northern affairs are not completed tomorrow, it will be continued, but the Minister of Transport will not be here and will not be able to go on on that day, so we would take, after northern affairs, post office and mines and technical surveys.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 5.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 13, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

Mr. Buchanan:

1. How many persons are employed at the Point Edward naval base, (a) civil service; (b) casual?
2. Of such employees, (a) civil service; (b) casual, how many are from (i) Cape Breton North and Victoria; (ii) Cape Breton South?

Mr. Campney: I am answering part 1 of this question. In view of the fact that the department does not keep records of the employees on the basis of part 2 of the question, I have spoken to the hon. member who asked the question and I understand he is willing to drop it.

1. (a) Classified employees, 211; (b) prevailing rate employees, 317.

Mr. Speaker: Part 2 dropped.

FARM LOANS, SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Studer:

1. What was the amount of loans approved under the Canadian farm loan board to farmers in Saskatchewan for the year 1953?
2. What was the total amount of approved loans to Saskatchewan farmers under the Canadian farm loan board, since April 1, 1944?

Mr. Benidickson:

1. Fiscal year ended March 31, 1954, $2,436,000.

2. April 1, 1944 to March 31, 1954, $12,608,200.

CIVIL DEFENCE—WELFARE

Mr. Macnaughton:

1. To date how many persons have been given courses by the federal government in the welfare aspects of civil defence?
2. Who bears the cost of courses given by the federal government in the welfare aspects of civil defence?

Mr. Martin:

1. Almost 500 persons from all over Canada have taken courses in civil defence welfare conducted by the Department of National Health and Welfare and now held at the federal civil defence college at Arnprior. These courses enable the persons completing them to give training in civil defence welfare to others in their own province.

2. All expenses in respect to these courses, which are given by the Department of National Health and Welfare to persons nominated by the provincial civil defence authorities, are borne by the federal government. These expenses include travel, maintenance, and the actual provision of training facilities at the civil defence college at Arnprior.

ROME, ITALY—PROPERTY PURCHASED

Mr. Hodgson:

1. How much did the government pay for property purchased in Rome, Italy?
2. When were such purchases made?
3. Is any construction contemplated?
4. If so, how much is the estimated expenditure?

Mr. Pinard:

1. $186,391.65 (in blocked funds).

2. March 31, 1950.

3. If the site is retained, and no decision has been reached on this point, the department will either renovate the existing building or demolish it and build a new residence.

4. An amount not exceeding $325,000.

ROYAL TRAIN STATIONERY, 1939

Mr. Pouliot:

What crest was engraved on the stationery of the royal train of 1939?

Mr. McCann:

There was no crest engraved on the stationery of the royal train of 1939.

The bulk of the stationery requisitioned carried the following words in black:

"The Royal Train
CANADA"

There was a smaller quantity of stationery requisitioned with the following words in red:

"The Royal Train
CANADA"

with a red maple leaf under the word "Canada".

Questions

BUILDINGS LEASED, NEW WESTMINSTER

Mr. Hahn:

1. Does the federal government lease any buildings to house departmental branches in the city of New Westminster?

2. If so, (a) what branches; (b) what is the name of the owner of such building or buildings; (c) in each case, what is the annual rent paid and the date of termination of lease?

3. Which of these branches are to be housed in the new federal buildings?

Mr. Bourget:

1. Yes, space in the Perreault building, Belyea building, Mott Electric building and Hess building.

2.

(a) Occupants	(b) Owner	Annual rental	(c) Date of termination of lease
U.I. commission (audit office)	Henri Perreault	$ 1,620	Aug. 16, 1954
U.I. commission	Belyea & Co., Ltd.	12,200	Jan. 31, 1958

HEALTH INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare? In view of the announcement a day or two ago from the Ontario medical association concerning proposed increases in doctors' fees, will the government consider moving a little faster in the introduction of nation-wide health insurance, with provision for the provinces to participate as they may wish to do so?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that the government is always giving consideration to these important matters.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question? Was Dr. G. E. Wride speaking for the government a day or two ago when he said that health insurance will continue to be a live issue with the government?

Mr. Martin: I do not know what Dr. G. E. Wride said. The only persons who can speak for the government are members of the government.

ALASKA HIGHWAY

REPORTED TRANSFER OF ADMINISTRATION TO DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence? Is the department transferring the administration and cost of maintenance of the Alaska highway-northwest highway system to the Department of Public Works?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Associate Minister of National Defence): All I can say at the moment is that the departmental administration of the Alaska highway is at present under active consideration. If it is decided that any department of government other than the Department of National Defence shall administer it, an announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Pearkes: Was a press announcement made yesterday by the Department of Public Works in that connection?

Mr. Campney: I am not aware of it; I was not here yesterday.

COAL

WESTVILLE, N.S.—OPERATION OF DRUMMOND MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. McCulloch (Pictou): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has the minister any information as to the possibilities of reopening or continuing the operation of the Drummond mine at Westville, Nova Scotia?

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, a representative of the government of Nova Scotia, accompanied by town mine officials and union officials, visited Ottawa and presented a proposal to the dominion coal board whereby the government of Nova Scotia would assist the Drummond Coal Company of Westville in the cost of production to the extent that it now appears that it would be possible to make the necessary arrangements for the marketing of coal from that mine within the limits of the subvention provisions. If these arrangements can be made as proposed, it is anticipated that this should prolong the life of the mine for approximately five months and facilitate orderly readjustment of the miners.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Engineering and water resources branch—
Water resources division—
314. To provide for studies and surveys of the Columbia river watershed in Canada, $377,400.

The Chairman: Hon. members will find the vote on page 45 of the blue book and the details on page 387.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Chairman, when this item was allowed to stand on Thursday last the hon. members for Vancouver-Quadra and Kootenay West were discussing the jurisdiction of the international joint commission in regard to the Columbia river reference.

I have now looked pretty carefully into the whole matter and I may give some of the conclusions to which I have come and draw the attention of members of the committee to the agreement "between the United States and Great Britain relating to boundary waters and questions arising between the United States and Canada". That agreement was signed at Washington on January 11, 1909. The articles of the treaty which outline the jurisdiction of the international joint commission are mainly articles VIII and IX. Article VIII reads for the first part as follows:

This international joint commission shall have jurisdiction over and shall pass upon all cases involving the use or obstruction or diversion of the waters with respect to which under articles III and IV of this treaty the approval of this commission is required, and in passing upon such cases the commission shall be governed by the following rules or principles which are adopted by the high contracting parties for this purpose.

I do not at this time need to read the rules, but article VIII refers to articles III and IV. Article III deals with boundary waters and boundary waters are defined in the "preliminary article". Article III gives jurisdiction over boundary waters to the international joint commission, but may I point out right now that the Columbia river cannot be considered as a "boundary water" according to the definition of "boundary waters" which is given in the preliminary article. With the permission of members of the committee I will now read that definition:

For the purposes of this treaty boundary waters are defined as the waters from main shore to main shore of the lakes and rivers and connecting waterways, or the portions thereof, along which the international boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada passes, including all bays, arms, and inlets thereof, but not including tributary waters which in their natural channels would flow into such lakes, rivers, and waterways, or waters flowing from such lakes, rivers, and waterways, or the waters of rivers flowing across the boundary.

It is clear that the Columbia river and its tributaries are not boundary waters. They are not included in the general definition, and, moreover, they are excepted. They are definitely excepted by the words, and I quote:

. . . or the waters of rivers flowing across the boundary.

Let us examine now what could be the general jurisdiction of the international joint commission over the Columbia river, the Columbia river basin and its tributaries according to article IV. Article IV reads:

The high contracting parties agree that, except in cases provided for by special agreement between them, they will not permit the construction or maintenance on their respective sides of the boundary of any remedial or protective works or any dams or other obstructions in waters flowing from boundary waters or in waters at a lower level than the boundary in rivers flowing across the boundary, the effect of which is to raise the natural level of waters on the other side of the boundary unless the construction or maintenance thereof is approved by the aforesaid international joint commission.

That is what I said last Thursday—that if a dam was built on the other side of the border on any part of the Columbia river where it flows into the United States which would have the effect of elevating the levels of the water on the Canadian side, then the permission of the international joint commission would have to be sought. This provision covers one of the situations which I mentioned last Thursday. If the downstream state desired to build a dam which would have the effect of raising the water level at the boundary, then the permission of the international joint commission would have to be sought. That is why an application was made to the commission in the case of the Libby dam. That application was later withdrawn so that the international joint commission did not have to adjudicate thus far on the question of the Libby dam. It was, however, clearly a case where an application had to be made to the international joint commission under article IV of the treaty.

The other article which deals with rivers flowing across the border is article II, which reads as follows:

Each of the high contracting parties reserves to itself or to the several state governments on the one side and the dominion or provincial governments on the other as the case may be, subject to any treaty provisions now existing with respect thereto, the exclusive jurisdiction and control over the use and diversion, whether temporary or permanent, of all waters on its own side of the line in which their natural channels would flow across the boundary or into boundary waters; but it is agreed that any interference with or diversion from their natural channel of such waters on either side of the boundary, resulting in any injury on the other side of the boundary, shall give rise to the same rights and entitle the injured parties to the same legal remedies as if such injury took place in the country where such diversion or interference occurs; but this provision shall not apply to cases already existing or to cases expressly covered by special agreement between the parties thereto.

That is another thing I said last Thursday —that unless there is a case such as the one mentioned under article IV the remedy is a legal one.

I also said that at the beginning of my remarks this afternoon that the other article of the treaty which gave general jurisdiction to the international joint commission is article IX. Article IX is the article under which the Columbia river reference has been made by the governments of the United States and Canada.

The high contracting parties further agree that any other questions or matters of difference arising between them involving the rights, obligations, or interests of either in relation to the other or to the inhabitants of the other, along the common frontier between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, shall be referred from time to time to the international joint commission for examination and report, whenever either the government of the United States or the government of the Dominion of Canada shall request that such questions or matters of difference be so referred.

The international joint commission is authorized in each case so referred to examine into and report upon the facts and circumstances of the particular questions and matters referred, together with such conclusions and recommendations as may be appropriate, subject, however, to any restrictions or exceptions which may be imposed with respect thereto by the terms of the reference.

Such reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted either on the facts or the law, and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

If it is agreeable to the members of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I would at this point ask to be allowed, with the unanimous consent of the committee, to put on Hansard the text of the Columbia river reference which was made jointly by the government of the United States and the government of Canada.

The Chairman: Has the minister leave to do so?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lesage: The text of the reference is as follows:

Columbia River Reference

In order to determine whether a greater use than is now being made of the waters of the Columbia river system would be feasible and advantageous, the governments of the United States and Canada have agreed to refer the matter to the international joint commission for investigation and report pursuant to article IX of the convention concerning boundary waters between the United States and Canada, signed January 11, 1909.

2. It is desired that the commission shall determine whether in its judgment further development of the water resources of the river basin would be practicable and in the public interest from the points of view of the two governments, having in mind (a) domestic water supply and sanitation, (b) navigation, (c) efficient development of water power, (d) the control of floods, (e) the needs of irrigation, (f) reclamation of wet lands, (g) conservation of fish and wildlife; and (h) other beneficial public purposes.

3. In the event that the commission should find that further works or projects would be feasible and desirable for one or more of the purposes indicated above, it should indicate how the interests on either side of the boundary would be benefited or adversely affected thereby, and should estimate the costs of such works or projects, including indemnification for damage to public and private property and the costs of any remedial works that may be found to be necessary, and should indicate how the costs of any projects and the amounts of any resulting damage be apportioned between the two governments.

4. The commission should also investigate and report on existing dams, hydroelectric plants, navigation works, and other works or projects located within the Columbia river system in so far as such investigation and report may be germane to the subject under consideration.

5. In the conduct of its investigation and otherwise in the performance of its duties under this reference, the commission may utilize the services of engineers and other specially qualified personnel of the technical agencies of Canada and the United States and will so far as possible make use of information and technical data heretofore acquired by such technical agencies or which may become available during the course of the investigation, thus avoiding duplication of effort and unnecessary expense.

Mr. Herridge: Has the minister finished his statement?

Mr. Lesage: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask one question. Under what authority do the engineers of a United States company undertake to do surveying on a navigable river such as the Columbia?

Mr. Lesage: According to my information the Kaiser interests or the Kaiser company of California, I believe it is—if my memory serves me aright—have asked for a permit from the British Columbia government. I understand this permit is a survey permit only without any priority. This permit, according to my information, has been given to the company by the British Columbia government.

Mr. Herridge: I have just one more question, Mr. Chairman. Where would the international joint commission or the federal government come into the picture if, for instance, the company in question proposed to build a dam across the Columbia river which is a navigable river used by steamships, tugs and so on?

Mr. Lesage: May I refer the hon. member to section 4 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, which is chapter 193 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, and which reads as follows:

> 4. (1) No work shall be built or placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water unless the site thereof has been approved by the governor in council, nor unless such work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with plans and regulations approved or made by the governor in council.
> (2) The provisions of this section do not apply to small wharves or groynes or other bank or beach protection works, or boat-houses, if in the opinion of the Minister of Public Works
> (a) they do not interfere with navigation, and
> (b) do not cost more than one thousand dollars.

Mr. Herridge: Then no one could give the green light to go ahead without the approval of the governor in council in such a case. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. Lesage: Anyone who wants to build any work or have it placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water has to obtain permission from the governor in council.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you.

Mr. Green: Since this item was under discussion in the committee, those of us who are members of the external affairs committee have had the opportunity of hearing a thorough and comprehensive report on the whole Columbia river basin from General McNaughton, who is chairman of the Canadian section of the joint commission. I believe the situation is that there has been this reference to the joint commission, and that the minister's department is merely conducting surveys, borings and investigations on the Columbia river system within Canada on behalf of the Canadian section of the joint international commission. Is that the situation?

Mr. Lesage: That is right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Green: It is unlikely that any such thing as a dam across the Arrow lakes would be permitted until there had been a report from the international joint commission. Is that not correct?

Mr. Lesage: The waters resources of the Columbia river on the Canadian side, as far as the development of power is concerned, come under the jurisdiction of the British Columbia government.

Mr. Green: That may be so. But under the Navigable Waters Protection Act the dominion government has the power to prevent any such dam being built on the Arrow lakes which are really only a broadening out of the Columbia river. Is that not the case?

Mr. Lesage: Yes; that is the case. The only thing is this. I do not believe I should be asked to answer the question: Could we use section 4 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act to prevent the building of a dam if there was no difficulty as to navigation and if the only reason we had to withhold permission was the fact that we did not have a complete report on the Columbia river reference? I do not believe I should be asked to answer that question. That would be asking me to state government policy on a matter which has not been envisaged. It is extremely difficult to give a legal opinion on these matters involving jurisdiction as between provincial and federal governments and involving the application of international law without having in front of us the complete details of the facts—a thing we do not have now because the situation has not arisen.

Mr. Green: Is it not a fact that the Canadian section of the international joint commission is, in effect, acting as the agent for both the Canadian government and the British Columbia government in conducting this investigation, so that for all practical purposes there is no way in which any difficulty can arise?

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that we can say that the international joint commission is acting for the British Columbia government.

Mr. Green: The Canadian section of the international joint commission.

Mr. Lesage: I am not sure we can say that the Canadian section is acting on behalf of the British Columbia government. I would say, however, that it is acting with the agreement of the British Columbia government.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: May I now remind hon. members that we proceed to vote 321 which is to be found at page 45 of the blue book, and the details at page 393.

Northern administration and lands branch—
321. Lands division—administration of territorial and public lands; seed grain collections, $383,632.

Mr. Simmons: I understand this item includes the cost of a head office and field staffs engaged in the administration of mining, land and timber matters in the Yukon and Northwest Territories and also some land matters in the provinces. It is hard to figure out "how much is to be spent where". However, I note that there is in this item an increase over last year of $70,783 which seems to be taken up mostly by increases in salaries. There has been an increase in mining business in the Yukon Territory during the past two years. Important mineral finds have been made in many places throughout the Yukon and thousands of claims have been staked. The Yukon has every appearance of being on the threshold of mining developments of importance not only to the Yukon but to the economy of Canada. I have no hesitation in saying that if these mineral finds had been made in the older and less remote parts of Canada where better transportation facilities are available and where transportation costs are lower, many new mines would have been in operation today. I am sure that the minister knows and appreciates these things and will keep them in mind when considering improvements in transportation facilities and in strengthening the administrative staff in line with these important mineral developments. I understand that the minister and the deputy minister intend to visit the Yukon next summer. I can assure them of a most cordial welcome. I hope they will be afforded every opportunity to visit some of the more important developments which mean so much to the Yukon in particular and Canada in general. I am sure also that the minister realizes the needs of these northern areas and that the people expect encouragement and help from the federal government. They have every confidence that the minister will rectify the situation in due course.

The cost of living in the Yukon is from 30 to 75 per cent higher than south of the 60th parallel of latitude, and the scale of wages in effect in the Yukon does not compensate for the high cost of living. This fact is recognized by the government as federal civil servants in the Yukon are paid, in addition to their salaries, a living or subsistence allowance of $1,500 per year for a married employee and $900 per year for a single employee. I would suggest that provision should be made to allow a greater exemption by way of personal income tax deductions which would offset this condition to some extent.

Mr. Green: Under this item would the minister say whether or not it is intended to proceed with the second reading of Bill No. 8, which is described as an act to amend the Territorial Lands Act and to repeal the Yukon Quartz Mining Act and the Yukon Placer Mining Act? This bill has been on the order paper since November 16. I understand that it places the control of mineral claims in the Yukon under regulations passed by order in council rather than under a statute, and that there is very serious objection to the legislation by the men who are the actual miners in the Yukon.

Mr. Lesage: Some of them, not all.

Mr. Green: By a great many of the individuals concerned. The mining companies may not be objecting, but I am referring to the prospectors and the men who actually do the work. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with this bill at the present session?

Mr. Lesage: In the face of the contradictory views that have been expressed on the matter, and which are evidenced by the interchange between the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and myself, and in the face of all the difficulties, I and the officials of my department have felt that we should send an experienced man to study conditions in the Yukon. Two weeks ago, I believe, the governor in council appointed Mr. Cole who for years was the director of mines in the province of Manitoba, a man of great capacity and reputation, to make an investigation of the whole situation and to report to me. In the meantime the matter is left in abeyance.

Mr. Green: Then the bill will not be proceeded with at this session?

Mr. Lesage: I believe hon. members can draw their own conclusions. Mr. Cole has just left or is about to leave for the Yukon. I am leaving for an extended trip on the 20th of June in response to the invitations I have received from hon. members to visit the parks. I will spend a full month in complying with the invitations that have been extended to me by the hon. member for the Yukon and the hon. member for Mackenzie River.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Will parliament be over by that time?

Mr. Lesage: If it is not, I hope the hon. member for Peterborough will excuse me.

Mr. MacLean: Will the minister be good enough to explain the words "seed grain collections" in the heading for this item?

Mr. Lesage: I would not like to read a book this afternoon but, as the hon. member knows, from 1876 to 1926, before our time, the federal government made advances to settlers in the west for seed grain, fodder and relief. Liens were attached to the properties for these advances. There were thousands and thousands of them. In the fiscal year 1953-54 1,170 accounts were discharged. There were 390 payments received, and the balance of the accounts was written off. As a result $466,768.27 comprising principal and interest was written off and $62,917.26 was received in payments. A total of 4,193 liens was discharged last year alone. As of March 31, 1954, there are 2,500 federal accounts and approximately 3,600 joint federal-provincial accounts still outstanding. In the last fiscal year 4,193 liens were discharged, leaving the number of accounts outstanding at only 6,100. The operation is really being wound up.

Item agreed to.

Northern administration division—
322. Administration including a grant of $5,000 to the Arctic Institute of North America, $212,515.

Mr. Green: This item has to do with the northern administration division and as such I presume it covers expenditures in the Arctic islands of the northland. I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the current issue of Time magazine, that of May 10. On page 68, in the section dealing with science, there is an article with the heading "Under-ice Mountains" reporting discoveries made by Russian scientists. The article reads in part as follows:

> Much of the rest of the Arctic sea's bottom is mountainous too. The Russians said that earth folds run across it from eastern Siberia to Ellesmere island, north of Canada. They did not say how they got this information; presumably they did it by echo-sounding through the Arctic ice or through holes cut in it.

The point I wish to make is that the article says that Ellesmere island is north of Canada. It is my understanding that Ellesmere island is a part of Canada.

Mr. Lesage: That is right.

Mr. Green: There is also a map here indicating the same thing, that Ellesmere island is north of Canada. I think it is of some importance that Canada should never lose an opportunity to assert her sovereignty over these islands in the Arctic ocean. I am wondering whether there is any action that could be taken by the minister with respect to this article. It might be a good idea for him to draw to the attention of the editors of Time that Ellesmere island is part of Canada. This sort of thing, if allowed to go without comment, could possibly lead to difficulty in the years ahead. I believe that these Arctic islands are going to prove of great value to this nation. In any event, we do not want another nation stepping in there and asserting sovereignty.

[Mr. Fraser (Peterborough).]

Mr. Lesage: I quite agree with the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that we should do everything to assert our sovereignty in those Arctic islands, of which Ellesmere is the most northern. About a year ago the Royal Canadian Mounted Police established a second post on that island. Just two or three months ago I announced in the house that a group of islands had been named after Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth, and that group includes Ellesmere island.

If I were to follow the suggestion of the hon. member it might very well be that the editors of Time would draw my attention to the fact that they had used some kind of telegraphic style and what they meant was north of continental Canada, but since they were trying to save space, they had omitted the word "continental". I am grateful to the hon. member for drawing my attention to that article.

Mr. Knowles: Time cannot do that to us.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): If the Royal Canadian Mounted Police post is on Ellesmere island, then a Canadian flag is flying there now?

Mr. Lesage: There are two, because there are two posts. There is no question of our sovereignty, and there is no question of occupancy. We occupy that island.

Mr. Churchill: There is an item shown of more than $5,000 for the Arctic institute. Will the minister say something about the Arctic institute, its history, purpose and accomplishments?

Mr. Lesage: The Arctic Institute of North America, Mr. Chairman, is a joint organization including United States and Canadian citizens who are making special studies of the Arctic. This institute has done a lot to make the Arctic known to the rest of the world. The United States government and the Canadian government are contributing to the operation of this institute, to which I believe I should at this time pay tribute for the work it is doing for the development of the Arctic and having this part of the North American continent, this part of Canada, better known.

Mr. Churchill: I suggest to the minister that next year in his report he include an item concerning the Arctic Institute of North America, since it is of such importance. This procedure might obviate in the future the necessity for a question such as I asked.

Item agreed to.

Northwest Territories, including Wood Buffalo park and Eskimo affairs—
323. Operation and maintenance, $1,031,746.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I notice in the details for this item on page 395 there is reference to publication of a book of wisdom for distribution to Eskimos. In what language is that written?

Mr. Lesage: It is written in both English and Eskimo.

Item agreed to.

Yukon Territory, including forest conservation—
327. Operation and maintenance, $517,910.

Mr. Simmons: This item covers the cost of federal administration of the Yukon Territory, and assistance in the construction of roads. As I said previously, none of this goes towards the cost of the territorial government. I notice there is a decrease of $68,837 from the vote provided for the same purpose last year which is made up of a decrease in the federal contribution towards the construction of roads. In view of important mining developments taking place in the Yukon and the need for encouraging these developments by improved road facilities, I feel this is regrettable. I wonder whether the minister would tell me how this decrease came about?

While we are discussing this item, I should like to ask the minister if he would give some consideration to some arrangement whereby the elected members of the Yukon council would have a real voice in the direction of territorial affairs, and in the administration and actual operation of public business. There has been a marked tendency, especially in the past few years, to centralize the administration of territorial government affairs in Ottawa rather than to decentralize them. Many people in the Yukon feel that the territory should work steadily, step by step, towards greater autonomy and the eventual achievement of full-fledged provincehood in the Canadian federation.

Mr. Lesage: I am sure the hon. member for the Yukon is aware of government policy with respect to road building in the Yukon. Since 1951 we have classified the roads according to three types. One is trunk roads, then secondary roads and resources roads. As to secondary roads, of course, they all come under the jurisdiction of the territorial government. There are those which are within the area or territory of one given community.

The trunk roads are those connecting various settlements. The responsibility for their construction and maintenance is borne by the territorial government but in some cases, as I believe the hon. member is aware, the federal government agrees to pay a portion of the construction and/or maintenance. As to resources roads, the capital and maintenance is borne by the federal government or it is divided between the federal government and private interests in the Yukon who are developing a mine or, we hope, water resources in that country.

Mr. Simmons: May I interrupt the minister? Is there any federal assistance combined with territorial assistance to help a private mine in the construction of what could be classified as a mining road?

Mr. Lesage: There has been some help with construction, yes. There is one instance that comes to my mind at this time, where we participated in the construction on the condition that the company would look after maintenance.

As I said the other day when talking about the problems of transportation in the Northwest Territories, after the problems of education and health, which are basic of course, the main problem that we have to deal with in the Yukon and Northwest Territories is transportation. One of the factors, if not the main factor, in the high cost of living in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, is the cost of transportation. As I said the other day, the officials of my department are now going into that question very thoroughly. This problem may be less difficult in the Yukon than it is in the Northwest Territories because of the outlet we have to these via Whitehorse and Skagway. I can assure the hon. member for the Yukon that there is nothing more to the forefront of my mind that the development of the north country, and since the transportation problem is one that we have to cope with mainly for economic development it is one to which I have given and will give the highest priority. For example, the hon. member has drawn my attention to the possibility of building a road from Carmacks along the Little Salmon river to the Pelly river and we are at present considering that possibility. I hope we can come to the conclusion for which my hon. friend hopes and have an amount in the supplementary estimates which will make the survey of the road possible this year. Of course, we have to be careful, for there have been instances in the past where we have built or participated in the building of roads which were later abandoned because the mines in which there had been placed a high degree of confidence turned out to be uneconomic to operate.

I agree that some risks have to be taken and I do not mind taking a few risks, but a balance must be kept and a certain amount of care exercised. Such a balance is difficult to keep at times, but I can assure my hon. friend and all members of the committee that I am working hard on these matters in view of the need for development of the north country, and they may rest assured that I would be the last one to cause any delay. What I want is action and action now.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to thank the minister for the attitude he has taken in regard to the north country. I am sure the people there will be very pleased to learn of it.

Item agreed to.

Yukon Territory, including forest conservation—

328. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $58,395.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Chairman, on this item I notice there is a decrease of $85,600 in the amount voted for this purpose last year. I suppose items of this nature vary from year to year and the department will erect a building one year and the same expenditure will not be required the following year. However, I wonder if the minister would be good enough to let me know how this decrease came about.

Mr. Lesage: I believe the greater amount which was provided last year was justified because of a number of residences which were erected in Whitehorse mainly for officers of the department. This year the amount which is provided will cover the finishing of these homes, but the residences that we needed were built with the money provided for last year. This year there is an item of $22,000 for the extension of water and sewer mains in upper Whitehorse, $10,000 for new residences, and various small amounts for the finishing of the work undertaken last year in Whitehorse.

Item agreed to.

Forestry branch—

329. Branch administration, $111,646.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say a word or two on this item. When the first item on the estimates was under discussion I suggested to the minister that his estimates should be referred to the committee on mines, forests and waters, not with particular reference to the amounts to be expended but in order that the hon. members of this house could have more information about the very useful work this department does. I speak on this item because on Tuesday night we had a debate on an amendment to the Research Council Act and I think some of the remarks made by some hon. members indicated a lack of knowledge of the good work being done by this branch. Several hon. members suggested studies in the utilization of wood and forest wastes and things of that sort, and it is quite obvious those hon. members have no knowledge of the good work which has been going on for years in the forest products laboratory at Vancouver and in Ottawa. I think that clearly indicates the necessity for these estimates being presented to a committee so that members may be informed of this work. I once again make that suggestion to the minister. It is too late to put it into effect this year but I hope he will consider it before introducing next year's estimates so that we will have an opportunity of hearing of the work being done by the members of his department. I would like to get the minister's response to my repeated suggestion.

Mr. Lesage: As this is the first time I have brought these estimates before the house, I have to admit that I have been so busy preparing them that I have not had much time to consider the hon. member's suggestion to refer the estimates to a committee of the house. I will consider his suggestion and I will certainly let him have my views on it before too long.

Mr. Hodgson: On the question of reforestation, I wonder if the minister could tell us what has been done in this regard and whether he would give us a breakdown of the cost, though the latter point may arise later. I would also like to point out that in this department alone the minister has 104 engineers and technicians. It must take a considerable amount of money to pay that number of men, and I have no doubt the committee will be looking forward to a considerable amount of work being done by them. Another aspect of the matter is that over the whole of his department the minister has more than 400 engineers and technicians. That factor alone should have the minister's consideration and I hope that before another year rolls around the minister will take a look and see if these men are earning their money, and whether we require more men or have enough at the present time. The number of men employed seems rather large and I hope the minister will be able to tell us something about their work. However, perhaps he can give me some information on how much reforestation has been done.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, we require a great number of technicians, of course, in the forestry division. One has to remember that one person out of ten in Canada is employed in or connected with forestry or forest products. Forest production is one of the main economic sectors in Canada and it is of course important that we see to it that the forest and wood products are used to the best advantage. In addition, a great deal of research has to be carried out in connection with forests. We have research in wood utilization. We also have forest operations in the department. We have six stations on forest experimentation all across Canada. We have two laboratories on wood utilization and other forest products research, one in Ottawa and one in Vancouver. As the hon. member for Kootenay West says, in this branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources a great deal is done for that most important sector of the Canadian economy.

We are spending $1 million a year to assist the provinces in making an inventory of their forests, and we are also contributing toward reforestation in the provinces under the reforestation agreements that we have with six provinces. Last year over 9 million trees were planted.

Mr. Hodgson: Was that done by the minister's department or by the provincial governments?

Mr. Lesage: It was done by the provinces with our assistance under the Canada Forestry Act, under which we paid 20 per cent. We assisted up to 20 per cent in reforestation. As far as inventories are concerned, our contribution is 50 per cent.

Mr. Hodgson: Can the minister give me a breakdown? How much money do the provinces receive?

Mr. Lesage: Yes; toward forestry inventories in 1953-54 the provinces received just a little over $1 million; and in the two fiscal years 1951-52, 1952-53, $1,578,192. Eight provinces out of ten have signed agreements. Quebec and Newfoundland are the only ones that have not signed. About 66 per cent of the inventory of our forests in those eight provinces was taken as of the 31st day of March, 1954. I am sorry, I am told that it is 66 per cent of all Canada, not only of the eight provinces.

Mr. Montgomery: Does that include an inventory of the private lands in the provinces such as the New Brunswick railway lands?

Mr. Lesage: Yes, it includes all forest lands.

Mr. MacLean: I am concerned about the diseases which are destroying a lot of trees in the maritime provinces, apart from the insect destruction, such as the budworm. I am thinking of dieback in birch and things of that sort. I am curious to know whether or not the minister's department is doing any research in that connection, or is that done by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Lesage: It is done by the science service of the Department of Agriculture.

Item agreed to.

Forestry research division—
330. Operation and maintenance, $989,491.

Mr. Hodgson: This is the item to which I should have referred before. Under this item alone there are 104 engineers and draftsmen and only one technician.

Mr. Lesage: Well, in the broad sense, an engineer is also a technician. I agree that perhaps I was not absolutely exact, but a forest engineer is usually a learned technician.

Mr. Hodgson: The minister used the word "engineer" and not "technician".

Mr. Knowles: The minister probably knows that this is an item on which I could make a speech that would take a few minutes, but I am not going to do that. There are two reasons why I shall yield not to the temptation. The first is that the minister is new in the department. I would like to give him time to familiarize himself—

Mr. Lesage: Maybe he has.

Mr. Knowles: —with the department, and with the point that I have in mind. My second reason for making only a brief reference is that we had a discussion about this matter when the Criminal Code was before us earlier in this session. I refer to the question of the loss of forest resources as well as other property and the loss of life that arises because of certain kinds of cigarettes. I rise merely to say to the minister I hope that the very excellent research done by this division of his department in response to requests I have made for such research in former years will be continued. I would not want the minister or his department to think that because I have raised this question with the Minister of Justice that absolves his department from any responsibility for doing whatever can be done about this question. After all, the loss to forest resources by fire is a very serious matter, and because of that, as well as for other reasons, his department and his officials are interested in this matter. I trust that the research into this question which has been started by this division of the minister's department will be continued. I shall ask about it again next session.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I should like to revert for a moment to the question we were discussing a while ago. I think it can be discussed under this item. I refer to the 20 per cent contribution the minister spoke of just now. Can he tell me what is the status of the lands in British Columbia held under the forest management licensing system of the provincial forest act with respect to this 20 per cent contribution for reforestation?

Mr. Lesage: I am informed that according to the agreement this assistance is given only in the case of unoccupied crown lands.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): That was the point, Mr. Chairman. Technically these are crown lands.

Mr. Lesage: It includes the management type of unoccupied crown lands, I am informed.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): These are crown lands held under leases and licenses.

Mr. Lesage: Yes; but they are not included.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Part of the terms of the forest management licences is that the licensee shall take the responsibility for reforestation. That is the point I want to get cleared up. Are these licensees drawing funds from the treasury after agreeing to undertake that on their own responsibility?

Mr. Lesage: I will have to check on the agreement, but I am informed by the director of the forestry branch that the agreement covers unlicensed crown lands.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Thank you.

Mr. Lesage: Unlicensed crown lands only.

Item agreed to.

Forestry operations division—

333. To provide for contributions to the provinces for assistance in forest inventory and reforestation in accordance with agreements that have been or may be entered into by Canada and the provinces, $1,225,000.

Mr. Herridge: Can the minister tell the committee what is the procedure when a grant is made to a provincial government for making a forest inventory? Does the provincial government report to the federal government how they have expended that money and what areas have been dealt with, and so on?

Mr. Lesage: Yes.

Mr. Green: This item reads:

To provide for contributions to the provinces for assistance in forest inventory and reforestation in accordance with agreements that have been or may be entered into by Canada and the provinces.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Now, according to the Canada Forestry Act I find that considerable emphasis is there placed on forest protection. That appears first throughout the statute and protection from fire is the first type of protection—yet I understand that this assistance is not given for forest protection at all; that it only applies to forest inventory and reforestation. The bulk of it is for forest inventory. There is apparently $1 million for forest inventory and $225,000 for reforestation.

I wonder if the minister would explain why there are no agreements whatever for forest protection?

Mr. Lesage: Forest fire protection?

Mr. Green: Yes, forest fire protection.

If he will remember, the provincial government of British Columbia submitted a brief to the dominion government and included in that brief was a request for an agreement which would provide for some assistance in fire protection. It is pointed out that the forests provide the main wealth of the province of British Columbia. In fact, lumbering, logging and the production of pulpwood and paper are by far our largest industries. The brief goes on to indicate that the biggest problem faced in that province is protection from fire, yet they have not been able to reach any agreement with the dominion government on this particular activity. The two final paragraphs dealing with this point read as follows:

The federal-provincial agreement of 1951 makes no provision, however, for federal participation in financing fire protection, which is the primary problem affecting the conservation of the forest resources of British Columbia.

Such participation is essential and is warranted by the national interest in the protection and development of a basic natural resource which is a major factor in national production, national income and federal tax revenues.

Accordingly, it is submitted that the government of Canada should now enter into an agreement with British Columbia for equal financial participation in an approved plan to provide adequate protection of the forest resources of the province.

Newspaper dispatches subsequent to the submission of this brief held out some hope that the dominion government would listen to that plea. I wonder if the minister could explain to the committee today whether there is any possibility of an agreement being reached with the government of British Columbia concerning fire protection, and, if the dominion government is unwilling to make an agreement of that type with any province, why it is that government policy does not include fire protection which was stressed when the Canada Forestry Act became law.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, first things, of course, must come first and the first thing to be done according to the advice that was received in the department was to have an inventory of the forest resources of Canada. As I said, this inventory of forest resources is now 66 per cent complete.

Mr. Green: How much?

Mr. Lesage: Sixty-six per cent complete as of the 31st of March. Now, of course, I know of the brief to which my hon. friend refers and which was presented to the Canadian government. On the evening of the day when the premier of British Columbia presented his brief to the cabinet I had a long discussion with him, his finance minister, Mr. Gunderson, and my deputy minister, in my office. We discussed the possibility of putting into application, not only for the province of British Columbia but for all provinces, that section of the Canada Forestry Act which deals with assistance to the provinces for forest fire protection. Since then I can assure members of the committee, and particularly my hon. friend who is from British Columbia, that we have that possibility under very active consideration. It is a difficult question and I have gone into the details of many possibilities. We are still working on it and I cannot say any more at this time than that it is presently under very active consideration.

Mr. Green: The department has in mind entering into agreements with the provinces covering fire protection?

Mr. Lesage: Of course, I am studying all the possibilities; but the decision to put into application that part of the forestry act is a matter of government policy and I would not be in a position today to announce what government policy on that score will be.

Item agreed to.

Forestry operations division—

334. To provide for a contribution to the province of New Brunswick for assistance in a program designed to combat the spruce budworm infestation, in accordance with an agreement entered into by Canada and the province, $500,000.

Mr. Brooks: I just wanted to make a few comments on this item which affects my province particularly. I also want to say a word in appreciation of this vote.

This is a very important matter as far as the province of New Brunswick is concerned. Possibly hon. members may not just know what the situation has been in our province in the last few years with respect to the budworm. The budworm as a forestry pest is not something new but its ravages in the last few years have become worse than they were in previous years.

In 1951, as the minister will recall, the government of New Brunswick and the International Pulp and Paper Company decided that the situation was so serious that they would organize some scheme to see if they could eradicate this pest. In that year the government of New Brunswick and the International Pulp and Paper Company agreed to spray and did spray some 200,000 acres of spruce forests in the northern part of the province. In 1953 they found that the results had been so good that it was decided to cover more territory. The provincial government at that time organized what was known as the forest protection company. The New Brunswick government and four private companies, International Pulp and Paper Company of New Brunswick, Fraser Lumber Company, Irvine Lumber Company and Bathurst Power and Paper Company combined. To show you how extensive the work is, five airplane landing fields were constructed in the area and in that year over 1,800,000 acres of forest lands were sprayed with DDT and some sort of oil solvent which was found to be very satisfactory.

In 1954, that is this year, I understand there are to be two more airfields added to the five which have already been constructed. There are also, I believe, some 50 aircraft to be in operation. Hon. members will understand just how extensive this operation is when I say there are 50 aircraft being used, seven airfields and many hundreds of employees. I just thought I would call this matter to the attention of the house because it is not something which concerns only the province of New Brunswick. It is something which concerns the whole of Canada, and the neighbouring state of Maine is also very much concerned over the situation.

I would also like to ask the minister in connection with this item why there has been a decrease from $1 million in 1953-54 to $500,000 in 1954-55, and whether it is the opinion of his department that the situation is well under control and possibly does not require the larger amount? In this connection, if I may, I should also like to read from a report which appeared in one of our papers recently with regard to the anti-budworm operations. It reads in part as follows:

> The plan is to cover new ground where the epidemic is reaching the critical stage, southeast of last year's operation. It aims to destroy the spruce budworm which, if left unchecked, could cause a major economic disaster.

Then Mr. Vernon E. Johnson, president of Forest Protection Limited, the company that was set up, had this to say in his report:

> "Achievements of the last two years in the New Brunswick 'battle of the budworm' are of tremendous importance to the Canadian forest," . . .

Not to the New Brunswick forest particularly but to the Canadian forest, Mr. Chairman. The quotation continues:

"We now consider it economically feasible to keep five or six thousand square miles of valuable and productive forests alive for as long as we have to, to save them from destruction by an insect epidemic".

In this connection I should also like to ask the minister whether this infestation has spread to other parts of Canada, and just what the general situation is with reference to the budworm in the province of New Brunswick and in Canada generally.

Mr. Lesage: I wish to thank the hon. member for drawing this vote to the attention of the members of the committee because I believe what we call the budworm operation is one of the largest operations of its kind ever attempted in the world. As a matter of fact, in 1953 the spraying operations were carried on by a corporation which was set up for this purpose, namely Forest Protection Limited. As my hon. friend knows, the federal government is supplying one-third of the expenditure, the provincial government one-third and the interested company or companies one-third. Last year nearly 1,100,000 gallons of DDT insecticide were sprayed from 77 aircraft over approximately 1,800,000 acres in New Brunswick.

Mr. Brooks: Seventy-seven aircraft?

Mr. Lesage: Seventy-seven aircraft last year; 50 is the figure for this coming year. According to the reports I have obtained of the work done last year, subsequent studies by forest entomologists of the federal Department of Agriculture showed that the average mortality of budworm larvae from spraying ranged from 87 to 99 per cent. Enough foliage was left on the trees to justify plans for respraying only a small part of that area this year. However, there is no evidence of a decline of the budworm in unsprayed areas and plans have been made by Forest Protection Limited to spray in 1954 an additional area of about one million acres, the forest on which is now threatened. This is, of course, the reason for the cut in the expenditure. The interested companies have judged that this year they would spray only one million acres instead of 1,800,000 acres. After an interview with Mr. Johnson, the president of New Brunswick International Paper Company who is also the president of Forest Protection Limited, it was agreed that an item in the estimates of half a million dollars would be sufficient for the operation this year.

My hon. friend has asked me about the situation with regard to the budworm menace in other provinces. I know that the menace exists in the province of Quebec and I have read in the papers that the government of Quebec would come into the picture, together with the interested companies, to do some spraying operations in eastern Quebec. This government was not asked to participate.

Mr. Brooks: Quebec is spraying?

Mr. Lesage: I have seen in the papers a report to that effect. No assistance was requested from this government.

Mr. Montgomery: The hon. member for Royal has covered this subject much better than I could do it, but there is one supplementary question I should like to ask the minister. Are these agreements entered into year by year or are they for any specific term? I notice that this year the amount is half a million dollars. Is there assistance for the next year under the agreement or is the agreement entered into as the case arises?

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, there has been an agreement between the Canadian government, the government of New Brunswick and—

Mr. Montgomery: Forest Protection Limited?

Mr. Lesage: No, not Forest Protection Limited. It is between the two governments. As far as the Canadian government is concerned, it has relations with the government of New Brunswick, not with the companies themselves which deal with the provincial government. As far as we are concerned, the assistance is given to the provincial government.

Mr. Hodgson: In money?

Mr. Lesage: In money.

Mr. Hodgson: The province administers it?

Mr. Lesage: No; Forest Protection Limited administers it. It is a company which has been organized on the provincial level. We have agreed to pay the government of New Brunswick—and we make our payments; we make our payments to the government of New Brunswick—one-third of the cost, up to a maximum of $3 million, of the aerial spraying operations against the budworm during the period from September 30, 1952, to March 31, 1956. Last year our contribution was $1 million. This year it will be $500,000. That is one-half of the total of $3 million which will have been spent, as far as we are concerned, at the end of the present fiscal year.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Hodgson: The minister has made reference to an offer or an arrangement the government have made with the government of the province of New Brunswick. I think he also mentioned the fact that Quebec has not asked for any assistance or taken part in any arrangements. Would that same offer be open to the province of Ontario?

Mr. Brooks: We will give the hon. member's province some budworms so that they may get this assistance; they can have ours.

Mr. Lesage: We have no request from Ontario.

Mr. Hodgson: The reason I asked that question is this—

The Chairman: Order. The item deals with New Brunswick, and I am afraid that we cannot, under this particular item, discuss problems relating to Ontario.

Mr. Hodgson: I am going to discuss a problem relating to the Dominion of Canada. It is like the measles. It spread from New Brunswick across the province of Quebec into the province of Ontario. The dieback in birch is as bad now in the province of Ontario, I think, as it ever was in New Brunswick.

The Chairman: Order. Will the hon. member please confine his remarks to item 334 which deals with budworm in the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. Green: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Where there is a vote for a forest pest of this kind, which originated in New Brunswick and when that forest pest has now spread to Ontario, surely an hon. member is entitled to rise and to suggest that the department should make some arrangement to deal with the pest in the other provinces. To try to prevent discussion of that kind seems to me to be limiting it altogether too much.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Lesage: I do not know how to answer the question. We do not know where this budworm started. Maybe it came from Ontario. I do not know. According to my information, it is carried by the wind over long distances. The request for assistance in this case came from New Brunswick and, as I said a few moments ago, the same situation so far as the budworm is concerned exists in eastern Quebec, but no request for assistance has been received by the federal government from the government of Quebec. The same applies to Ontario, but up to this time I have not heard of any budworm menace in Ontario.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to enlighten the minister. I can quite understand he is new in the department, but I should like to point out that the budworm menace started in the maritimes, has also resulted in the destruction of about half the timber in Quebec and is very prevalent in the province of Ontario. We also have another menace that came from New Brunswick. We have the dieback affecting birch trees. It is very detrimental to such trees in the province of Ontario at the present time. Where winds blow across provincial boundaries I think that the dominion government cannot help but accept some responsibility.

Mr. Brooks: I think I must deny the statement that all these diseases come from the province of New Brunswick. Mr. Johnson, president of Forest Protection Limited, said in his report:

> Achievements of the last two years in the New Brunswick "battle of the budworm" are of tremendous importance to the Canadian forest.

I should like to point out that this item does not only benefit the forests of the province of New Brunswick. The destruction of the pest in New Brunswick is keeping it from spreading to other parts of Canada which is probably of immeasurable benefit to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. As it is a national problem, we are certainly entitled to consideration.

Mr. Hodgson: It has probably helped to drive it out of New Brunswick and into the other provinces.

Item agreed to.

Forest products laboratories division—

337. Grant to Canadian Forestry Association, $10,000.

Mr. Herridge: I am very pleased that the government has recognized the good work being done by the Canadian Forestry Association by raising the grant from $6,000 to $10,000 annually.

Item agreed to.

338. Grant to Pulp and Paper Research Institute of Canada, $100,000.

Mr. McBain: Would the minister explain this item? I know that in the hardwood-growing areas of the province of Ontario we are confronted with the fact that after the log is cut and utilized we have quite a problem in some instances in marketing the top part of the tree. I have been informed that the research council or the pulp and paper institute has been conducting research into the matter of utilizing hardwood in the manufacture of pulp and paper. Has the minister any information concerning how much progress has been made along that line? Would he also say whether this matter comes under the provincial government or is it the federal government that is carrying on the research work?

Mr. Lesage: I am informed that a process has been developed to make pulp out of hardwood.

Item agreed to.

Eastern Rockies forest conservation board—
339. Remuneration and expenses of federal members of the board, $12,350.

Mr. Shaw: Those of us who are privileged to represent the western section of the province of Alberta have no hesitation at all in supporting the appropriation for this board. My own constituency extends to the border of British Columbia and embraces substantially what is known as the foothills area. I have no criticism whatever to offer. In fact I rise merely to suggest that in my opinion the board is doing a most excellent type of work. In the first place I should like to inquire whether there is any publication available setting forth the actual work of the board and its aims and objectives. In the second place, as a result of the number of questions directed to me by residents of that section of Alberta I wonder whether the board has given adequate consideration to its public relations. I am thinking, for example, in terms of the odd radio broadcast in that section of Alberta.

We all know that in matters of conservation of this kind in particular public understanding and co-operation are most essential. I do not make these remarks by way of criticism in any sense at all because I have no grounds for criticizing the work of the board. I simply commend them for what they are doing, but I do wonder whether the press and radio are used enough to keep people fully informed about the actual work of the board and what it intends to do.

Mr. Lesage: An annual report is published by the board which is tabled every year in the house.

Mr. Shaw: I was thinking more in terms of the public being informed. I am only judging from the number of questions directed to me. The people of my area know, for example, that a road is being constructed through the district. Many of them do not seem to realize the purpose of the road, although I do. Of course I get the annual report, but so far as public relations are concerned I think it would be a fine thing if the board would take under advisement the possibility of slightly better public relations in that section of Canada.

[Mr. McBain.]

Mr. Lesage: Do I understand that the hon. member's suggestion is that we should spend more money on public relations?

Mr. Shaw: I realize that criticism has been advanced from time to time, but I have never criticized. I will support any legitimate expenditure, and I certainly think that would be most legitimate.

Item agreed to.

Canadian government travel bureau—
340. To assist in promoting the tourist business in Canada, $1,561,407.

Mr. Herridge: I have in my hand a copy of the report of the department for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1953. I should like to refer to the section dealing with the activities of the Canadian government travel bureau.

Mr. Lesage: What page?

Mr. Herridge: Page 129. Under the heading "Functions of travel bureau" there is the following:

> The Canadian government travel bureau is the federal agency responsible for the promotion of travel to and within Canada and for the interests of the tourist industry in general.

It is the words "in general" that I want to use as my text. I have followed the advertising of the Canadian government travel bureau in the United States and Canada considerably, and while I admit the excellent work done by the bureau in general I have come to the conclusion that the advertising tends to direct tourists, particularly those from the United States, to those areas served by the hotels operated by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways. I would judge from the advertising that possibly the officials of these large organizations meet with the Canadian government travel bureau director and assist in planning the advertising. This is my point. I quite agree that this advertising should take place in order to bring to the attention of tourists these valuable hotel and resort facilities, but I do not think the small operators should be overlooked. There are thousands of small resort owners and I am of the opinion that they have been overlooked to some extent by the Canadian government travel bureau. For instance, Mr. Chairman, I live in one of the most beautiful districts in Canada, an area full of loveliness, as British Columbia generally is.

Mr. Sinclair: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Yet I have not seen a line of advertising about my district in United States periodicals and magazines. There are dozens of very nice tourist resorts in British Columbia generally that are situated on small lakes or in the mountains, but the attention of tourists is not directed to the efforts of these smaller operators to provide recreational facilities for tourists. I suggest to the minister that more attention should be paid by the Canadian government travel bureau to bringing to the attention of tourists the thousands of small resorts we have in Canada, in some cases in isolated places, resorts that people prefer to go to rather than to the larger hotels. I remember on one occasion speaking to the general manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia, not the present general manager but a former general manager. I spoke about that steamer service that I have mentioned several times this session, Mr. Chairman. He told me that the policy of the company, so far as that service was concerned, was to make certain that the tourists proceeded along the main line of the C.P.R. and stopped at Banff, Lake Louise, the Vancouver hotel in Vancouver, and then proceeded on to Victoria and so on. We do not expect the railways to advertise the smaller resorts. I believe the Canadian government travel bureau should do more advertising of these small resorts and delightful spots to which people would go in larger numbers if they were directed to them. I should like to hear the minister's comments on my very mild criticisms and suggestions.

Mr. Lesage: I should like to be sure, first of all, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member has not taken for advertisements of the travel bureau in the United States the numerous and expensive advertisements of the railway companies and large hotels that are advertising in the United States. So far as the travel bureau is concerned, it is accomplishing a difficult job.

Mr. Herridge: I admit that.

Mr. Lesage: We have to be very careful to try to give an equal amount of advertising to all parts of Canada, and Canada is a large country with a tremendous number of beautiful resorts and wonderful places to which tourists can go. Then, too, we advertise our national parks in the United States. We are advertising the beautiful spots that we have all across the country on a basis that is as fair as we can achieve. Again it is a difficult task.

Each year we have a federal-provincial conference on tourism. Last year in the early part of December I had the privilege of presiding over the federal-provincial conference on tourism. There were representatives of all the provinces, and there were no complaints from them that the travel bureau advertising in the United States was doing more for one part of the country than it was for other parts. So far as this mild criticism by the hon. member is concerned, as to the possibility of giving more importance in advertising to some places of beauty which might have some attraction for tourists, in which there is not a large hotel, I shall certainly look into the matter. I shall investigate the possibility of giving more prominence to the places where facilities are offered by small operators.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): There are a few remarks I should like to make at this time. I must say that I believe the travel bureau has been doing a fairly good job of advertising our public parks and summer resorts in Canada. In fact, they have done such a good job, our recreational places in Canada have been receiving tourists in ever-increasing numbers. As a result of that good job we are confronted with quite a few difficulties in connection with the tourist trade. I want to point out two of those difficulties confronting tourists who travel in Canada, especially as those difficulties pertain to Banff national park.

Banff national park is, of course, the outstanding national park in Canada. One difficulty is that the travel bureau has been advertising the fishing possibilities in Banff national park. The national film board has put out pictures depicting the wonderful possibilities in this for those who like fishing. I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that this is causing a great deal of comment from some of the tourists who come to Banff in that when they go there they find that all this high pressure advertising is not what it was cracked up to be. When they go with their fishing tackle to spend the day on some of our rivers and cannot catch any fish at all there is keen disappointment.

Mr. Lesage: Well, well—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am not a fisherman.

Mr. Lesage: I am.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The hon. member for Acadia, who is now in the banking and commerce committee, is, and he will verify what I am saying. He is an outstanding fisherman. I am told that there are not many fish in Banff national park. I recognize that we have a fish hatchery there, but the tourists and the people who live in Banff have told me that there are not nearly enough fish to meet the demands of the tourists who go to that park. I believe something should be done about that. I should like to know what the minister intends to do in order to have a more adequate supply of fish in the streams and lakes so that our tourists may be assured of a reasonable amount of fish in that park.

One of the other things about which I want to speak is tourist accommodation. The fish situation is bad, but the tourist accommodation is much worse. I do not believe there is a place in Canada that is being more troubled over tourist accommodation than Banff. About two weeks ago a person who deals with tourist accommodation in Banff was visiting Ottawa. This lady came to visit me, and incidentally I took her over to see Mr. Coleman, who is in the parks administration branch at Ottawa—

Mr. Lesage: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; the hon. member has just touched upon the reason why he is out of order. He is talking about national parks. The complaints he is making now pertain to the national parks to such an extent that he brought this person to the national parks branch. All the items concerning the national parks branch were passed last week, and we are now dealing with the travel bureau, which has nothing to do with national parks except the advertising of them in the United States.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am speaking about tourist accommodation. I am speaking about the very thing with which this item deals.

Mr. Lesage: Tourist accommodation has nothing to do with the travel bureau, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Certainly; it is as a result of the advertising done by the travel bureau that we have this problem. If we did not have the travel bureau putting out this expensive advertising, we would not be faced with this problem. As many as five hundred tourists in one night, who come to visit Banff park, have had to sleep in their cars because there was no accommodation for them. These tourists were attracted by the advertising put out under this very item. I could not possibly be out of order in speaking about this problem as I am now.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member is discussing an item which reads:

To assist in promoting the tourist business in Canada.

As the hon. member knows, a great deal of this item is for promotional advertising and I feel that perhaps the point of order raised by the minister is well taken in that the hon. member had an opportunity of discussing accommodation at national parks under a previous item. I really do not think the hon. member, under item 340, should continue discussing the matter of accommodation in national parks.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, on those other items I discussed matters which came under those items. On that occasion, for example, I discussed highways and so on, but this is the only place which deals with the travel bureau and advertising put out by that bureau which attracts tourists to the Banff national park, as a result of which we in Banff find ourselves in a very bad situation. Indeed, the situation is so bad that when tourists come there as a result of this advertising put out by the bureau we sometimes have as many as five hundred people who have to sleep out at night in their cars, or in the depot if they come by bus or train.

Mr. Lesage: On a point of order. Do I understand the hon. member wishes us to stop advertising in the United States?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I made no such suggestion in that regard. I am not criticizing the travel bureau particularly for putting out such advertising. What I am criticizing is the department's failure to allow the Banff residents to provide accommodation for these people who come there as a result of this advertising. We are spending over $1,500,000 on advertising under this item and that is an increase of nearly $33,000 for this year. If that extra amount is to be effective at all it will result in an increasing number of tourists visiting Banff. What will the situation be then? The people in Banff will not be able to take care of these tourists and they will have to remain parked at night on the streets and in the parks and sleep in their cars and at the depot. Surely there is no other place to discuss this particular matter than under this item. In fact, we have spent so much time on this already that I could have been finished.

The Chairman: If the hon. member is asking me whether there is a proper place to discuss this matter then I would point out that I have already given him my ruling on this point. The proper place to discuss this is under the items dealing wtih national parks. This is essentially an advertising item and I do hope the hon. member will devote his remarks under this item to the advertising activities of the Canadian government travel bureau.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Well, Mr. Chairman, with your permission could that item be reopened for the purpose of discussing—

The Chairman: Only with the committee's consent.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): But, Mr. Chairman, this is a borderline case. When we were discussing items dealing with national parks it was my belief that this particular matter could be discussed under this item. That is why I refrained at that time from discussing it. If we are not going to be permitted to put forth arguments in connection with advertising of these national parks under this item, then I do not know under which item it could be discussed.

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member has misunderstood me. That is exactly what I am asking him to do, namely, to devote his remarks to advertising. I am in no way preventing him from discussing advertising by the Canadian government travel bureau.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Then I would like to ask the minister this, Mr. Chairman. Just what plans have the government in mind to take care of the tourists who come to Banff as a result of the advertising put out across this country by the travel bureau, the expenditure for which comes under this item? Are we going to allow tourists to sleep in the depot at Banff? Are we going to allow them to sleep in their cars all over the park? Certainly that is not the way of developing good relations with tourists who come to Canada. In addition, I would point out that the income from tourist travel is no small item. It runs to over $300 million a year. This is a very serious problem and I would like to know what the government is going to do to take care of this problem which arises as a result of advertising under this item.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I believe one of the best ways to prevent tourists from coming to Canada from now on would be to circulate prints of the speech just made by the hon. member. It is one of the worst services I have ever heard being rendered to the Canadian tourist industry. First of all, it is quite possible that a lot of these people who go to Banff like to sleep in the open. I know a lot of people who go camping and who take a delight in sleeping in the open in these beautiful spots around Banff and the national park. As far as complaints about accommodation for tourists in Canada are concerned, I might say that the government travel bureau sent out their usual questionnaire to tourists who had visited Canada last year. Out of 12,941 returns only 376 people, that is to say 2·9 per cent, had complaints to make about accommodation. That is a very small proportion.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, the minister is quite wrong in saying that these people who come into Banff by car, bus and train sleep overnight in their cars and at the depot because they desire to do so.

Mr. Lesage: Some do.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am not asserting that some people do not like to sleep in the open in a tent, but I think they are very few in number and such people who do like to do that would certainly come prepared. Certainly the people who come there and have to sleep in their cars, sometimes as many as 500 per night, have not come prepared to do that and no one can tell me, Mr. Chairman, that these people go away satisfied. The minister has been discussing the very matter which should be discussed under this item. It presents a very serious problem to us in that section of the country, and that problem will become more serious this year. The Banff advisory council which, as hon. members may not be aware, is an elected body from the town of Banff, discusses these local matters with the park administration. Now it is true—

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: The hon. member is now completely out of order. He is discussing the Banff national park and the Banff advisory council. This advisory council is not a municipal council because the people at Banff do not pay municipal taxes. It is a council they themselves elect to deal with matters of interest to the town of Banff and they make representations to the Canadian government. But it has no authority at all, and in any event the point raised by the hon. member concerns national parks and has no relation to the travel bureau.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, may I just say that the minister has not kept in very close touch with the situation in Banff—

Mr. Lesage: I have.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): But you are not very well informed.

Mr. Lesage: I will visit you this summer.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): All right, and I hope you will have to sleep in your car.

Mr. Lesage: I will sleep with you outside and teach you how to fish.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Well, you had better bring a sleepingbag along because you might have to sleep in your car overnight.

Mr. Lesage: I will keep you out though.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I did not say that the advisory council had any legislative authority. Such matters are handled by the federal government but the council do sit in an advisory capacity with the park authority and their relationship with Mr. B. I. M. Strong, the park superintendent, is harmonious. The council discuss with the park authority this particular matter of tourist accommodation. I have a letter before me from the advisory council dealing with this very problem. If I took this opportunity to read it into the record I know that you, Mr. Chairman, and probably rightly so, would say that I was getting beyond the terms of this item. Therefore, I do not intend to do that. But it does to a great extent follow along the very lines I have been suggesting. Regardless of what the minister has just said, I hope that when he does come to Banff this summer he will take into consideration some of the difficulties I have pointed out and see whether there cannot be some relaxation of the present regulations, particularly as to construction of tourist accommodation, and also see to it that the people in Banff are given such regulations as will enable them to take care of the tourist trade when it arrives there during the tourist season.

Mr. Simmons: I shall follow a different line from that of the previous speaker. It is interesting to know the bureau estimates that approximately 65,105 people visited the Yukon Territory in 1953. Automobile entries from September 1, 1952, to August 31, 1953, from Alaska were 14,365 as compared with 10,062 for the same period in the previous year. The number of entries by train, bus and aircraft during the period is estimated to be 6,609. Accurate figures for visitors entering by car over the Alaska highway from the south were not available at the time I got those figures.

In view of the scope of this tourist traffic, it would seem advisable that serious consideration should be given to the establishment of a tourist bureau to advertise our scenic and other attractions. Tourist traffic is vigorously encouraged and valued by the various provinces, and this type of activity means much to the future prosperity of the Yukon. I would respectfully recommend to the minister that greater publicity be given to the Yukon by the Canadian government travel bureau. I realize they have been rendering a wonderful service so far, but I think they could still do better to give more publicity to our northern areas.

Mr. Hodgson: I have just a word. I do not want to hold up the estimates when we are about to finish them, but after listening to the hon. members for Bow River and the Yukon and the minister, if starting an argument in this committee would induce him to come up to my section I would do so. If he comes I will guarantee him he will not have to sleep in a sleepingbag. We will provide him with a good road and good fishing, and I will be the best host that I know how to be.

To get back to the travel bureau, I think they have been doing a fairly good job. The only fault I can find with them is that they have been making too many pictures and doing too much advertising of Banff. I happen to represent an area from lake Simcoe, east as far as the Hastings boundary, the Victoria boundary in Ontario and Haliburton. About half of that is water. That gives the committee some idea of the tourist area we have. We are glad to have the advertising done, but do not forget this area right in the centre of Ontario. It is like the hub of a wheel. Do not forget to give us a little advertising when you are making those pictures, gentlemen. Bring some of your officials and we shall take care of them. If our accommodation is not good enough we shall make it bigger when you get us tourists.

Mr. Green: Is the travel bureau still housed in the old supreme court building?

Mr. Lesage: Yes.

Mr. Green: Some change should be made in the accommodation. The Canadian travel bureau is engaged in interesting United States tourists, and certainly if any of them ever have to go to the office of the travel bureau down in the old supreme court building they would head right back to the United States within fifteen minutes. I doubt very much whether the staff of the bureau are being given the opportunity to work under the best conditions in that accommodation. Is it not possible for the minister to secure better quarters for them?

Mr. Lesage: The allocation of office space in and around Ottawa to the various departments and government agencies is the responsibility of the Minister of Public Works. I understand that he is doing whatever he can to try to give decent accommodation to everyone. I can assure the committee that the Minister of Public Works is receiving constant representations from all of his colleagues for better accommodation, and he has to try and do his best with what is available. I can assure my hon. friend of course that among his colleagues I am one of the most insistent on that score.

Mr. Churchill: I have two or three questions to ask with regard to this matter of tourists. I noticed in the report of the department for the year that the number of tourists from the United States exceeded the number of Canadians going abroad by only about 4 million. I noticed that the amount of money spent by Canadians who go abroad to the United States and elsewhere exceeds by $36 million that spent by the people coming from the United States to Canada.

Mr. Lesage: Last year it was $25 million; it was $37 million two years ago.

Mr. Churchill: The balance on the tourist trade industry is not in our favour.

A great deal of useful work may be done by the Canadian government travel bureau which I do not dispute at all. I wonder whether it is always directed in the right channels. Can the minister give us an indication as to the distribution of tourists coming into Canada from the United States by various areas, not necessarily by provinces? The hon. member for Yukon, who spoke just a few minutes ago, seemed to have information concerning tourists who entered his particular part of the country. The reason for my question is this: If we have some knowledge of the number of tourists from the United States coming into the various areas of the country, then we might relate them to the advertising program in the United States. I will stop at that point to see if the minister can give me an answer, and then proceed with my argument.

Mr. Lesage: As the hon. member has just said, we have for the past two years been experiencing a deficit in our tourist balance with the United States, if I may put it that way.

As I said a few moments ago, it was $37 million in 1952 and $25 million in 1953. In 1950 and 1951 we had surpluses in our tourist balance with the United States. The reasons that could be given for these deficits are many, but of course one is the fact that the Canadian dollar is at a premium, and it has been at a premium for the last few years, while the United States dollar was at a premium in the previous years. This encourages Canadian tourists to travel to the United States more than the United States tourists to travel to Canada. The average expenditure per United States tourist visiting Canada last year was $10.15 while the average per capita expenditure for the Canadian traveller to the United States was $13.40, if my memory serves me correctly. More Canadians went to the United States and Canadians who went to the United States spent more per capita than United States tourists who came to Canada last year.

One of the reasons for the increased numbers of Canadian travellers not only to the United States but to other parts of the world was the fair economic position in Canada—due in large part, of course, to the good administration of this government. That has been one of the reasons; and one of the other reasons, of course, has been the premium on the Canadian dollar.

With respect to the number of tourists who have visited various parts of Canada, I believe I gave some figures regarding the national parks when we were studying this part of my estimates. I do not have the numbers now before me of visitors to Canada from the United States, but I have the proportion spent by tourists in 1952 by province of entry, if that would help my hon. friend. It is a proportion based on a total of 100 per cent. Of the United States tourists' expenditures in 1952, 50·6 per cent were made in Ontario and 18·3 per cent in Quebec. I might give the figures for 1953 which may be more up to date. In that year the figures of expenditures were 51·5 per cent in Ontario; 18·6 per cent in Quebec; 14·6 per cent in British Columbia; Atlantic provinces, 8·1 per cent; Alberta, 2·9 per cent; Manitoba, 2·5 per cent; Saskatchewan, 1·8 per cent. According to my arithmetic that makes a total of 100 per cent.

Mr. Churchill: I have still one or two questions on this matter but I thank the minister for the information which he has supplied up to this point.

In commenting on his statement about Canadians going into the United States and the reasons therefor, I would say he omitted one reason—that there is a better highway system in the United States than in Canada. I am well aware that in discussing highways and accommodation for tourists in this country I would be out of order at this point, but those matters do have to be taken into consideration in respect to tourist traffic because they are of vital importance to those touring the country.

My reason for asking about the distribution of tourists throughout the different provinces, which the minister has answered by means of giving the expenditure of money, was to relate those figures to the advertising of Canada in the United States. I note in the report of the department on page 129, at the bottom of the page, that the tourist bureau operates a ground floor information office in New York, maintains an information office at Chicago, and another one at Los Angeles. Perhaps on the basis of the figures given it is a proper distribution for main offices under that arrangement. On the other hand, on a rather extensive tour that I took last summer in the United States I met a great many people who, noting that I had a Canadian licence, said, "Oh, I have been to Canada."

I asked what part of Canada and invariably it was some place in Ontario. They were not too well informed about the other parts of Canada.

I appreciate the difficulty there is in informing people in the United States with regard to Canada, and there are very good reasons for that. However, it may be that our publicity through the travel bureau is not reaching people in the United States to the extent that we perhaps think it ought to—and it may be that certain areas of our country get more emphasis than others. I would think that in the mid-west states there should be more mention of the prairie provinces than there should be of Ontario and Quebec, for instance. I do not know whether that is done but I think it should be done.

I was in Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma and so on but I do not recall seeing at garages, tourist camps and places where we stayed any information relating to Canada in the way of literature. I could, however, find information with regard to the various states of the union. It may well be that our publicity through the travel bureau should be directed at a wider distribution of road maps at filling stations and tourist camps in various parts of the United States. A person who starts off on an automobile tour does not always have the tour planned in advance. He does not always start off with full information. He sometimes makes diversions and the diversions may occur part way through his trip. If he is able to find information about some other point of interest at a tourist camp in the state or province within which he is moving he may change his direction. That is exactly what I have done on more than one occasion when going from coast to coast. A United States tourist might very well do that if he could get information about various parts of Canada at United States tourist camps and filling stations. That might well result in increased United States tourist travel in parts of our country which are not visited to the same extent as the two central provinces are visited.

I intended to ask another question. I notice in the report, on page 132, that the seventh federal-provincial tourist conference was held on December 2 and December 3, 1952. Was the eighth one held recently? Has there been a similar federal-provincial tourist conference within the last twelve months?

Before the minister replies to that, may I just point out that the tourist business is obviously of as much concern to the provinces as it is to the dominion. The provinces undertake a certain amount of work with regard to attracting tourists and

I presume that it is through these conferences that the work is co-ordinated. I would like to know in what way it is co-ordinated. I would like to know who pays the expense of those conferences when they are held; and, generally, I would like to have a report on the subjects that are discussed at these federal-provincial tourist conferences and what results appear to come from such gatherings.

Mr. Lesage: The eighth federal-provincial tourist conference was held in Ottawa, as I said about 15 or 20 minutes ago, in the first days of December last year under my chairmanship. More accurately, it was November 30, December 1, and December 2. The expenses of the delegates of each government are paid by that government. The report is a very bulky one. I have it in my hands now and I will be pleased to send a copy to the hon. member.

Mr. Churchill: Instead of sending me a a copy, can the minister summarize the main features of that report? What are the things that were emphasized in that conference?

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, may I place on Hansard a résumé of the nine resolutions which were adopted at the end of the conference? Would that be all right?

Mr. Churchill: Very well.

Mr. Lesage: May I have the consent of the committee to do that?

The Deputy Chairman: Can the minister indicate the approximate length of the document?

Mr. Lesage: It is one page.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the minister the unanimous consent of the committee to place that document on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lesage: It is entitled "Resolutions passed at Eighth Federal-Provincial Tourist Conference, November 30th-December 2nd, 1953". The document reads as follows:

Resolutions Passed at Eighth Federal-Provincial Tourist Conference November 30-December 2, 1953

The conference endorsed the following resolutions submitted by Chairman E. G. Rowebottom and the other members of the resolutions committee, R. A. Tweedie, Ronald A. Keith, W. B. Fraser, O. L. Vardy, C. D. Crowe and G. V. Fraser:

1. Resolved—that this conference express its approval and warm appreciation to the Canadian government travel bureau for the excellent manner in which all phases of this country's travel business have been promoted.

2. Whereas space rates, publishing, TV, radio and other promotive media production costs have risen sharply.

And whereas competition for the travel dollar is constantly increasing.

Therefore be it resolved that this conference respectfully urges that these facts be given the utmost consideration when Canadian travel bureau estimates for the next fiscal year are under review, to the end that Canada may be enabled to maintain and extend the favourable position she now holds in the field of travel.

3. Whereas offices operated by the Canadian government travel bureau in the United States have proven their worth in furthering travel to Canada.

Be it therefore resolved that this conference recommend that more favourable premises be obtained in the city of Chicago and that a ground floor office in Los Angeles be established as soon as possible.

4. Resolved that this conference commend all public bodies and other organizations for their efforts to preserve the natural assets of this country.

And be it further resolved that this conference urge that all such steps and efforts be accelerated and extended to the end that these priceless benefits be preserved in perpetuity.

5. Resolved that this conference urge the appropriate authorities to seek to have all provinces adopt uniform regulations governing the transportation by tourists of firearms and other sporting equipment.

6. Resolved that this conference extend its appreciation to the Hon. Jean Lesage, Minister of Resources and Development, for convening the eighth federal-provincial tourist conference and for the leadership given during the meetings.

Be it further resolved that this conference express its sincere thanks for the kindness and hospitality shown to the delegates.

7. Resolved that this conference extend its thanks to the chairman of the national film board, and all other federal officials who gave so generously of their time and counsel thus contributing greatly to the success of the conference.

8. Resolved that this conference extend a vote of thanks to the press and radio for reporting the conference in such an excellent manner.

9. Resolved that the report submitted by the special committee regarding the co-ordination of advertising between federal, provincial governments and the transportation companies of Canada be adopted and that the committee report its findings at the next annual meeting of this conference.

Mr. Nesbitt: There are one or two questions I should like to ask the minister about this item 340. The minister made some explanation as to what it is based on, but I was not quite sure on one point. The item reads "To assist in promoting the tourist business in Canada". Does this department receive funds from any other department?

Mr. Lesage: No. We are of assistance to provinces, the transportation companies and the various people who deal with the tourist industry. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was asking me about the co-ordination of the work. May I say, just in a few words, that there is an agreement or an understanding which is known to the provinces and to the federal government and the federal government travel bureau, under which the federal bureau advertises mainly outside of Canada, such as in the United States, while the various provincial tourist bureaux advertise the facilities in their own provinces not only outside of Canada but also in the other provinces of Canada. We do not do any advertising in Canada itself. Of course that would be even more difficult than is advertising in the United States. What should we advertise in Quebec, for instance? What should we advertise in Ontario or in the other provinces? That would put us in an extremely difficult position. We therefore have an understanding that we advertise in the other countries—mainly in the United States, of course; I believe it is only in the United States—and that the provinces do their own particular advertising in Canada and in the United States, if they wish to do so.

Mr. Nesbitt: There is another question I should like to ask the minister. Can the minister explain exactly how the amount of income from United States tourists coming into Canada every year is estimated?

Mr. Lesage: Of course it is done by the dominion bureau of statistics. I do not know exactly what the process is, I must confess. Immigration and customs officers at the border, of course, have the exact number of United States citizens coming into Canada. As to the expenditures they make, I understand that there is a form which tourists coming to Canada must fill in; they are asked how much they are going to spend or how much they have spent.

Mr. Nesbitt: I gather that would include people who have travelled maybe for a few days or a few weeks in Canada. But as to the number of people going into and out of Canada, there are a great many Americans who may be travelling just for a few hours or who may be travelling back and forth daily. Would they make any such record of what they spent?

Mr. Lesage: No. Of course, one of the ways of measuring the amount of expenditures is, according to my information, through our balance of payments with the United States. It is a complicated calculation. I am in no position at the moment to give details about it.

Mr. Nesbitt: It is just an estimate?

Mr. Lesage: Oh, yes; it is just an estimate. It is certainly not a definite figure.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have one further question. I note that there is a $1 million item for advertising in American newspapers and magazines. Has the minister a list of American magazines that are advertised in?

Mr. Lesage: Yes, Mr. Chairman; it is a fairly long list. It covers three full pages. I do not believe that I should read it at this time. However, I may say that in it are included general magazines, educational magazines, outdoor and sporting magazines, auto club publications, travel magazines, miscellaneous, and a long list of newspapers.

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps I can assist the minister by telling him what I am getting at. Since the minister indicates that these magazines are put in the list by categories, can he tell us what is estimated to be the amount that will be spent, for instance, in advertising in sporting magazines?

Mr. Lesage: Outdoor and sporting magazines, $29,080.

Mr. Nesbitt: Has the minister the figures as to the amount that would be spent in Life and Time magazines?

Mr. Lesage: For general weekly magazines, the amount to be spent is $200,485.

Mr. Nesbitt: Can the minister indicate how much of that amount, if any, is to be spent in Life or Time magazines?

Mr. Lesage: As to Life magazine, if my hon. friend is interested in knowing what is the circulation of the magazine, I may say that it is 5,400,000.

Mr. Nesbitt: I know that. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. Lesage: In Life the cost of advertising will be $54,400; and in Time magazine, $24,500.

Mr. Nesbitt: How many times would advertisements appear in Life and Time magazines? Can the minister indicate that?

Mr. Lesage: How many insertions?

Mr. Nesbitt: Yes.

Mr. Lesage: In Life magazine, five; in Time magazine, four.

Mr. Nesbitt: There are two more publications I should like to find out about, namely the Saturday Evening Post and the National Geographic. Has the minister the number of insertions and the amount of money spent with respect to those publications?

Mr. Lesage: As to the Saturday Evening Post, $70,540 for six insertions of one-half page; four insertions in four colours and two insertions in black and white. What is the other one?

Mr. Nesbitt: The National Geographic.

Mr. Lesage: In 1954 there is $42,500 for five insertions in four colours in the National Geographic.

Mr. Nesbitt: Are these full-page insertions?

Mr. Lesage: A page each time in the National Geographic magazine.

[Mr. Lesage.]

Mr. Nesbitt: I am not interested in the figures, but does the department advertise in Collier's or the Reader's Digest?

Mr. Lesage: Collier's, yes; Reader's Digest, no.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister if most of this advertising is still placed—

Mr. Lesage: I was not able to hear.

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry to interrupt those friends of the minister who are talking behind him. Does the department still follow the practice of placing this advertising for the most part through a firm like Cockfield Brown—

Mr. Lesage: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: —and paying them a commission or, since it is routine, has the government given any thought to placing the advertising directly?

Mr. Lesage: We pay no commission, but it is through Cockfield Brown.

Mr. Knowles: Does Cockfield Brown do this work for nothing? Of course not.

Mr. Lesage: As my hon. friend knows, the travel bureau pays the same rates for this advertising when placed through Cockfield Brown as it would pay if it placed directly. The commission is paid by the publishers to Cockfield Brown who do all the detail and administrative work involved in the placing of this type of advertising. It does not cost the government a cent more. If we placed the advertising directly we would have to hire a lot of people and we would pay the same price. By using an advertising agency not only do we not pay any commission but we are saving money.

Mr. Knowles: Has the government ever inquired whether they would have to pay the same advertising rates if they placed it themselves?

Mr. Lesage: That is a very well known rule in the trade.

Mr. Nesbitt: Is the department satisfied, in the opinion of the minister, that a sufficient amount is spent on advertising and is it satisfied that it is allocated as well as it can be?

Mr. Lesage: Yes. I am convinced it is certainly well allocated. How could I say anything else? If I felt it was not well allocated I would see to it that it was allocated otherwise. Therefore I could not blame myself. With respect to the amount spent on advertising, if I were to listen to the hon. member for Bow River I would have to conclude that too much is spent, but I believe that in line with what the government can allow for this item we spend a fairly reasonable amount every year compared with what is spent by the various provincial governments and by private agencies.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I never indicated at any time that there was too much advertising for our tourist business. I want that noted.

Mr. Nesbitt: In the past few months has the minister observed the position where these advertisements are inserted in such magazines as Life, Time, the National Geographic, the Saturday Evening Post and others?

Mr. Lesage: I have seen some and I think they are fairly well placed in the magazine. They are pretty conspicuous. I think it is good advertising and it is well placed.

Mr. Tustin: I should like to ask a question respecting the type of advertisement that is used. We are spending $1 million, and I should like to know whether it is general advertising that applies to all of Canada or whether we advertise certain sections of the country. I ask this question because I come from a part of the country that has a very extensive tourist trade. The county council of the county of Prince Edward, the town council of the town of Picton, and the chamber of commerce of Prince Edward county spend considerable money each year in putting out a tourist pamphlet which is sent to all parts of the United States. Of course we think it is good business to do so. What I really want to know is whether the advertising in all these publications is general in its nature; or is some part of Canada advertised as being better than others?

Mr. Lesage: In the national magazines the advertising is general. In the magazines I have mentioned the advertising is for Canada as a whole. However, so far as advertising in newspapers is concerned, we may at times advertise a region like the maritime provinces in a New York paper and advertise Manitoba or central Canada in a Chicago paper. That would apply to newspapers, but as far as magazines are concerned the advertising is of a general character applying to the whole of Canada.

Mr. Nesbitt: Who designs these advertisements? Are they designed wholly by the advertising agency, or are the designs submitted by the department?

Mr. Lesage: They are designed by the agency, Cockfield Brown, under the direction of the director of the travel bureau who, as my hon. friend knows, has quite a lot of experience in that field.

Mr. Herridge: Does that mean that Cockfield Brown chooses the areas to be advertised?

Mr. Lesage: No, I just said that it is under the direction of the director of the travel bureau. The director of the travel bureau is not the one who does the drawings, but he directs the work.

Mr. Gillis: Most of the discussion on this matter would lead one to believe that there is some doubt whether or not the advertising is national. I wonder whether the minister could settle that by taking two typical advertisements, one in a newspaper and one in a magazine, so that we may determine how national they are.

Mr. Lesage: I am sorry, but I have none here.

Mr. Gillis: Oh, I see. Well, we are still in doubt. The provinces do considerable advertising. We are approaching the tourist season now. British Columbia has put out some very attractive literature and the other provinces do a reasonably good job, but I should like to know how national in character the advertising done by the federal government is. From the few advertisements I have seen it is my impression that the advertising largely deals with the two central provinces. Mind you, from most of the discussion I have heard in this house on any subject that arises one would take it that Canada ends at Montreal anyway. I should like to take a look at the advertising that is farmed out by the department to some Montreal firm to determine for myself as to whether the same emphasis is put upon British Columbia and the maritime provinces as upon Quebec and Ontario. I have my doubts as to the national aspect of that advertising.

Mr. Lesage: I can assure my hon. friend that in our advertising in those magazines in the United States, we have some pictures of Cape Breton Highlands park, Fundy park and a lot of these places. We advertise the whole of Canada. I shall send my friend some examples of the kind of advertising that is being done by the travel bureau. I am sure he will be satisfied, as I must be because I come from Quebec, that Canada does not end at Montreal.

Mr. Nesbitt: Has the department ever received information or requested information from other Canadian or United States advertising agencies concerning the quality of the advertising now being put out to advertise Canada?

Mr. Goode: There seems to be some doubt in the minds of some hon. gentlemen opposite as to whether or not the department should be placing the advertising in the manner in which it is. I should like them to know that any large business firm in this country spending this amount in advertising would use the same method. It is the proper method when you are placing a large amount of advertising. It does not cost one nickel to place it. What happens, I expect, is this. The department tells the advertising agency the type of advertising they want. Experts in the agency base their program on that and submit it to the department. It is on a strictly business basis. It does not cost the department one nickel. I can say that so far as the department's advertising of British Columbia is concerned, it is first class. We agree with it most heartily.

Mr. Nesbitt: I was not asking the hon. member a question, and in any event he misunderstood the question. I was asking whether or not the department or the director of the department had ever made an inquiry from other firms than the firm presently being used or had received designs from other firms to see what someone else could do.

Mr. Lesage: I am told that an agency in the United States, which specializes in evaluating the advertising done in that country, has examined the advertising the travel bureau has been doing and it has rated very high indeed.

Mr. Nesbitt: That answers my question. I had heard the view expressed that possibly the advertising was not as good as it might be.

Mr. Bell: Before we leave this item I should like to say that in criticizing the estimates here we should point out there is no reflection upon Mr. Dolan, the director of the travel bureau. He comes from New Brunswick, and we are very proud of him. He has done a good job up here, just as he did down in New Brunswick. I believe it is today that we are honouring him in Fredericton by presenting him with an honorary LL.D. The criticism would be of the bureau itself.

Mr. Herridge: How is this agency chosen? Is it as a result of tender or by competition? Is there any other firm or agency that has been consulted?

Mr. Lesage: This agency has been doing this work quite satisfactorily for years. It does not cost us anything, so why should we change? There is no tender, because it does not cost the government a cent.

Mr. Knowles: Does that mean you have never re-examined the question as to whether you should give it to some other firm or handle it in some other way?

[Mr. Goode.]

Mr. Lesage: We are satisfied, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder why.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: We shall now take up the estimates of the Department of Transport. Hon. members of the committee will find these estimates starting on page 59, and the details are on page 509.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

443. Departmental administration, $1,456,640.

Mr. Small: Before you commence with this item, Mr. Chairman, I should like to start with another matter. It is not the first item; it is almost the last and concerns the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. I contend it properly should be the first—

The Deputy Chairman: I am not quite certain of the point the hon. member is trying to make. Did we carry an item too fast in the last department?

Mr. Small: No, I am talking about the Department of Transport.

The Deputy Chairman: We have just called the Department of Transport, item 443.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): In presenting the estimates of my department, Mr. Chairman, I have for the past few years given a short statement in which I have reviewed the estimates according to the summary of standard objects of expenditure and special categories, which is inserted at the back of the estimates book. In my statement I called attention to the major projects and attempted, in the time at my disposal, to explain the more significant changes. Inasmuch as such a review seems to have been of assistance to hon. members, I propose, if it meets with the approval of the committee, to follow the same practice this year.

Before turning to an examination of the needs of the Department of Transport proper, I wish to point out that the estimates of the department, the air transport board, the board of transport commissioners, the Canadian maritime commission and the national harbours board aggregate $135,212,000 for 1954-55, roughly $13 million more than in 1953-54. The estimated net expenditure for the department alone in 1954-55 is $123,635,041, an increase of $14,678,972 over last year, mainly on account of the four following items.

First, civil salaries and wages, where the increase is $2,600,000. This was to give effect to the general salary revision which took place effective on December 1, 1953. Then, in construction and acquisition of buildings and works, there is an increase of, roughly speaking, $2 million. Most of this increase is due to the celerity with which work has progressed on the Canso causeway. The third item has to do with construction or acquisition of equipment, $1,400,000, and there the increase arises mainly from the construction of vessels for the department.

Then under the heading of contributions, grants, and subsidies, there is an increase of $7,478,000, which is due chiefly to the decision of the government to implement one of the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation, namely, that which recommended a subsidy of $7 million for the maintenance of the railway tracks of the two main railways of Canada over the bridge which extends between the head of the lakes and eastern Canada. The increases in the estimates for this year therefore are in the main explained by the figures I have just given.

In addition to our own commitments my department will carry out services for the Department of National Defence such as air traffic control, meteorological services at establishments operated by the R.C.A.F., army, navy, or the defence research board, and construction and operation of facilities required under the NATO plan, estimated to cost $2,500,000.

Under object 1, that is salaries and wages, which amount roughly to $33 million, we have been obliged to provide for an increase of approximately $2,600,000. As I indicated, the greater portion of this, some $1,900,000, is required to cover the general salary increases to government employees authorized in November of last year. The balance is due to normal changes such as reclassifications, promotions and annual increases.

Here I would like to say a word or two about the number of employees in the Department of Transport because I know from time to time there is criticism in the house over the increase or decrease, though mostly that criticism is directed to the increases, in the number of employees in the department.

The total number of employees in the department at this time is 11,129. This is a reduction of 229 from last year and 412 from the year 1952-53. As is to be expected, this decrease is a net figure. By that I mean there are increases in certain units of the department and offsetting decreases in others. For example, in canal services there is an increase of 84 operating positions on the main line canals authorized to permit a six-day work week; in steamer operations we will need 44 positions for a new supply and buoy vessel at Saint John, New Brunswick; a reduction of 56 appears in aids to navigation, due chiefly to electrification of minor lights. In the telecommunications division, the sale of our facilities in British Columbia, coupled with the abolition of the private radio receiving station licence, results in a decrease of 385, but some 44 extra employees were needed to staff Loran stations in Newfoundland taken over from the U.S. coastguard, and new marine radio stations at Channel Head and Bicquette.

In the field of civil aviation there are 100 positions less, although in that sphere we contemplate no major changes in the general pattern of operation of airports. My department continues to be responsible for 102 airports and landing fields, although I am glad to say there have been signs of increasing municipal interest, with the cities of Sudbury and Timmins taking over operation of new municipal airports. We have agreed to take over in 1955 the operation of the airport at Vancouver which is the major Canadian international terminal on the west coast. At the present time negotiations are under way with the city of Vancouver with reference to the actual possession of the site, but I am informed by the city authorities that another plebiscite is required sometime in the near future and that it will not be possible to take over the airport until after that.

Mr. Green: What is the price that has been agreed upon?

Mr. Chevrier: One million dollars. I will skip for the time being several of the objects such as civilian allowances and professional and special services, there having been decreases in the latter, and move on to object No. 5, travelling, transportation and removal expenses. Here there is a decrease of $21,381 due largely to the sale of the British Columbia government telegraph and telephone system. I might say at this point that the sale of these facilities to private or semi-private enterprises is in accordance with the government's policy of disposing of public enterprises to commercial interests wherever it is economically feasible to do so.

The bulk of our travel and removal expense is chargeable to the air services branch. The nature of the duties performed by the civil aviation, telecommunications, meteorological and engineering divisions necessarily calls for a great deal of travel on inspection duties, and the transportation of people to and from the arctic, the subarctic and isolated points in Canada. Experience has shown that it is inadvisable to leave an employee for more than two years in isolation. It has been our experience, too, that young men of this generation insist on getting married and taking their wives and families with them. Feeling this, it is next to impossible to fill these posts. The price, therefore, is what we pay for operating isolated stations in the middle of the twentieth century, in spite of which we have, by careful scrutiny, managed to show a slight decrease this year.

With reference to object No. 8, telephones, telegrams and other communication services, there is an increase here of $93,397 which results chiefly from the operation of the national facsimile circuit. That circuit was put into operation last year for the defence services and it is operated at Dorval. It is a system by means of which it is possible to improve weather observation programs in northern Canada, and it is a direct outgrowth of the defence program. It will help in giving a better weather reporting service and better general knowledge as to the climate.

These increases are due also to new weather reporting stations which will be operated at places such as Baker Lake, Fort Nelson, Aklavik and Coppermine. In rendering those services, either for the Department of National Defence or for the public generally, the leasing of wire facilities is essential to the rapid transmission of meteorological data.

I think I can leave that item for the moment and come to a major item which I know is of interest to this house, and that is object No. 13, construction or acquisition of buildings and works, including land. The amount in the estimates this year under this object is $33,741,791, and I should like to give the committee an outline of the major works or programs under way or projected, and in so doing I shall deal with the operating branches in the order in which they appear in the estimates.

In canal services there is a reduction of $1,230,000. This is due to the fact that the Atwater avenue and St. Remi tunnel installations will be practically completed.

As a matter of fact, I should have said the St. Remi development has been completed and the Atwater tunnel, now practically complete, is expected to be opened officially some time next month.

The Atwater avenue project embodies two double-lane vehicular-controlled access roadways 24 feet 6 inches in width and 2,400 feet in length extending from the intersection of Notre Dame street and Atwater avenue north of the Lachine canal to Centre street and Atwater avenue south of the canal, carried under the waterway in a tunnel 787 feet in length.

The tunnel proper consists of two tubes in each of which is provided a two-lane roadway as well as a 6-foot pedestrian sidewalk. The most modern lighting, ventilating and pumping equipment has been installed. The Atwater avenue project was constructed at a cost of approximately $6,750,000, and the St. Remi project, a somewhat similar installation, cost $4,500,000.

Under aids to navigation there is one large project, namely the second stage of the work involved in the construction of a 60-foot diameter lighthouse pier, with machinery and equipment, off the lower end of White Islet reef, some 80 miles below Quebec city. The amount of $600,000 is included for this work.

Under the strait of Canso improvements, since it is anticipated that this project will be 85 per cent complete by the end of March, 1955, we are placing in the estimates this year an amount of approximately $10 million, or $9,670,000, to be exact, which is $3 million in excess of last year's commitment. The committee will recall that the principal features are the rock-fill causeway across the strait, the ship lock on the Cape Breton shore, together with the necessary construction and relocation of railway trackage and highways. Here I may say that I visited the causeway not many months ago and flew over it. I was able to see for myself the excellent progress which was made at the time. In fact, the work by the contractor, the Northern Construction and J. W. Stewart Limited, is considerably ahead of schedule. There are three contracts involved there, the one for the construction of the causeway which has been awarded to the contractor whose name I have just mentioned, and the contract for the navigation lock, which was awarded to T. C. Gorman Limited, a subsidiary of Canadian Dredge and Dock, in March, 1953, at a cost of $5 million, roughly speaking. Here, too, the firm has made excellent progress.

The other contracts were awarded to the Maritime Steel and Foundries Limited of New Glasgow for the fabrication and erection of a combined highway and railway bridge across the upper entrance of the ship lock and for the sector gates of the lock.

Contracts for grading railway diversions have been awarded to the Modern Construction Company and Wasson Construction Company.

Then, dealing with the North Sydney-Port aux Basques ferry terminals, the terminal facilities at North Sydney include a pier 800 feet long by 163 feet wide, to provide on one side a berth for the William Carson, a vessel which was recently launched at the yards of Vickers in Montreal, and on the other side berths will be provided for the Canadian National Railways who will be operating the ferry. There is also a large transit shed with a floor space of some 100,000 square feet which is under construction. The contract for the pier and shed foundation was awarded to T. C. Gorman Limited; for the structural steel frame of the transit shed to Robb Engineering Works Limited, and for other work on the shed to A. F. Byers Construction Company Limited.

The total estimated expenditure at North Sydney is in the neighbourhood of $3,900,000.

Then the facilities at Port aux Basques: wharf and other facilities are to cost $7 million, of which $2,250,000 is being provided in these estimates. We are also providing for the Yarmouth-Bar Harbor terminal. The Department of Public Works will undertake the construction of a dock together with the requisite terminal facilities at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. An amount of $1 million is included in this year's estimates to provide for a loan to the Canadian National Railways to be applied to the construction of dock and terminal facilities at Bar Harbor, Maine. The town of Bar Harbor has provided a free site, and the state of Maine is advancing $1 million, subject to annual repayment without interest over a period of 30 years toward the construction.

I now deal with telecommunications. It accounts for more than $3 million of the object with which I am dealing. Some of the more important activities proposed for this field of operations are the continuation of the program for the installation of the new type of radio range system. It is a visual range between Montreal on the east and Windsor on the west. There is also provision for a ground control approach system at Gander to serve transatlantic flying; construction of radio range at lac Eon, reactivating radio range station at Fort Chimo, construction of radio range at Terrace to assist Kitimat aluminum development.

Under the meteorological heading there is construction for the meteorological division, owing to increased work in the north, and the major expenditures for this purpose have to do with the development of rawinsonde stations at Coral Harbour, Coppermine, Baker Lake and Nitchequon. This is an advanced form of weather observation through the use of balloons carrying equipment which sends back radio signals, giving a wide variety of detail on weather and wind conditions at various altitudes. It is a part of a general program to ensure complete weather coverage of northern Canada for defence purposes.

Under the heading of civil aviation are our airports programs which will call for the heaviest construction for the air services branch. The proposed outlay this year is $10 million, and as opposed to last year, the accent will be on terminal buildings this time rather than on runway facilities. I do not mean, by that, that we shall neglect runways, but we have a certain amount of money placed at our disposal, and the time has come when we have to renovate and give considerably more attention during the fiscal year to new terminal facilities. For instance, the major expenditures in this category will be made at Gander airport. The new terminal building at Saskatoon should be brought to a close. A civil terminal building at Harmon field, which is the United States base at Stephenville in Newfoundland, is proposed, provided that we can reach agreement with United States authorities. We also intend to make a start on a new and major terminal building at Dorval.

There will be as well substantial continuing work on runway development. A second runway at Gander is being lengthened and strengthened. At Windsor and lakehead, runways will be altered to accommodate the Viscount aircraft which Trans-Canada Air Lines are acquiring. Other locations I might mention are at Winnipeg, Fort McMurray, Yellowknife, Grande Prairie, Prince Albert, Rimouski, Rouyn and Quebec city.

A glance at the summary will show that we are proposing a total expenditure of approximately $13 million under the category of equipment, construction or acquisition, which is about 12 per cent over last year's figures, namely, $1,400,000 more than last year. This increase is related for the most part to the construction of vessels I mentioned earlier. I wanted to give the committee details of the construction of those vessels and I do so now, because I know the committee will be interested in this construction, which accounts for approximately $10 million of the $13 million referred to earlier.

The funds with reference to these are allocated as follows:

(1) a lighthouse supply and pilotage tender required at Goose Bay. The estimated cost is $90,000;

(2) a lighthouse supply and buoy vessel at Quebec. The estimated cost is $1,100,000, but we are providing $50,000 for preliminary expenditures only this year;

(3) a lighthouse supply and buoy vessel for Saint John, New Brunswick. The amount provided for completion of this item is $1,900,000;

(4) a lighthouse supply and buoy vessel for Victoria, British Columbia. I explained last year that we proposed to construct this vessel at an estimated cost of $1,250,000. The sum of $800,000 is provided to cover expenditures this year;

(5) the Pacific ocean standby weather ship, St. Stephen, is in urgent need of refitting. We have provided $400,000 for this purpose;

(6) the ferry vessel for the North Sydney-Port aux Basques service, on which we expect to spend $2,600,000;

(7) the Yarmouth-Bar Harbor ferry vessel, the keel of which was laid last summer, will be ready for operation in 1955. The reports I have indicate her construction is proceeding in a very satisfactory manner, and in these estimates provision is made for the expenditure of $4,100,000.

The last vessel to be named is a ferry vessel, for which we have included an initial amount of $250,000, and which will operate between Wood Island, Prince Edward Island, and Caribou, Nova Scotia. The government has decided to undertake this construction in view of the serious need for improving the service. The estimated cost of the ship is $1,500,000.

There are a number of other items that I could deal with either generally or in detail, but I think I have given the committee a sufficient idea of what the department intends to spend in the various divisions, namely, rail service, marine service and air service, and I think this should suffice for the purpose of the consideration of the estimates at this time.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I do thank the minister for giving us this summary of the moneys which he asked to have voted this year, based on the summary of standard objects which has been distributed to us with the annual estimates. I often wonder why the other departments do not make use of this summary. The minister is about the only one in the cabinet who does give us the story based on that summary.

As he explained, he is asking for about $135,200,000 in rough figures. That is an increase of $13,150,000—in other words an increase of more than 10 per cent over the expenditures in the last fiscal year. This increase is the fourth largest of any of the departments and it is asked for in spite of the fact that there is a decrease in the national harbours board vote of approximately $1,730,000, and a saving to the government because of selling the government telegraph and telephone system in British Columbia of about $975,000 under the administration item and about $645,000 under the construction item. Incidentally, I am afraid that the government did not make a very good deal when it sold those two systems. It certainly did not get the top price or anything near it.

Referring to the standard objects, we find that most of the items have been increased. The minister mentioned briefly telephones and telegrams. They are now up for the department, as distinguished from the boards, to almost $3 million, which is a very large sum to spend for service of this kind. This year there is an increase of $90,000 over the amount in last year's estimates and I find it very hard to believe that such a large increase was necessary.

Another item which has gone up a great deal is that for office stationery. The minister did not deal with it when he spoke, but his department is to spend $659,000 for office stationery, supplies, equipment and furnishings. That is an increase over the preceding year of $105,000. I suggest to the minister that items like this are ones on which a determined effort to make reductions would be far more beneficial than the amounts involved, because it would teach thrift. It would help to spread ideas of thrift throughout the department. I do not understand why there should be that increase in this particular item.

I will next turn to repairs and upkeep of equipment. We find that item is up to $2,372,000—an increase of about $150,000. That is not for the purchase of equipment but merely for repairs and upkeep of equipment owned by the department. Then we have rentals of equipment—practically doubled this year. In fact it is more than double, it has gone from $83,000 to $190,000. The minister did not say anything about either of the last two mentioned items and I think before this first item is passed he should just explain why there are these large increases in these items.

There is an increase in the special category called deficits of $1,265,000. He did not attempt to explain that and I would ask him to do so.

Mr. Chevrier: Which one was that?

Mr. Green: It comes under special category 33 of the summary, deficits, which are up to $5,164,000. That is an increase over last year of $1,265,000.

Those are only some of the items I would ask the minister to explain.

He said that the staff of his department had been decreased. Well, there must be something wrong with my figures because I worked it out that he had an increase of about 165 after taking into consideration the fact that he was able to cut his staff by about 244 because of the disposal of the government telegraph and telephone system in British Columbia. We will have to try to get together on those figures. I had intended to censure him for such a large increase under present conditions.

I have another point in connection with his estimates and it is this. I would like to know why it would not be possible to have the Department of Public Works do some of the construction work for the Department of Transport. This year the minister is asking for $33,740,000 in round figures for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works and land. That is almost one-half of the amount that we voted the Department of Public Works for the same type of expenditure—and the Department of Public Works is supposed to be the building department in this governmental set-up. When their estimates were up I pointed out that the government has been getting into the very bad habit of setting up little building branches in all other departments—and I think the Department of Transport has the largest building department outside the Department of Public Works. I do not see why much of this construction should not be brought under the Department of Public Works.

The minister referred, for example, to airways and the fact that construction of airways and airports totalled $10 million. He mentioned that his department was going to build terminal buildings. Why does the Department of Transport have to build terminal buildings at airports when the Department of Public Works builds all the other buildings at those particular centres? I suggest that we would economize if we had the Department of Public Works doing building of that type. I admit that there are some types of construction which can well be carried out under the Department of Transport, but I hope that during this year the minister will go through all of these construction items and see if it would not be possible to hand over some of the work to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Chevrier: They are specialist jobs.

Mr. Green: He is asking for $2,345,000 for construction work for the radio aviation service; another $9,670,000 for the Canso causeway.

Mr. Chevrier: Surely my hon. friend would not suggest that be given to public works?

Mr. Green: It may be, as I said a moment ago, that some of this work should be done by the Department of Transport. We have the dock at North Sydney, $956,000. I do not see why the Department of Public Works cannot build a dock. As it is, they build docks all over the country. Why can they not build this dock at North Sydney? The same thing applies to the dock at Port aux Basques where there is a vote of $2,555,000. Then there is the meteorological service, $970,000; telegraphs and telephone, $310,000; northwest communication system, $205,000; radio aids, $516,000. There must be a lot of construction which is to be covered by those votes which could very well be done by the Department of Public Works. The minister has mentioned tunnels in Montreal to be built. Why could not the Department of Public Works build them?

Mr. Chevrier: Those are all facilities that have to do with transport. They are connected with the Canadian National Railways either directly or indirectly. I think it would be a bad principle to divide them giving a proportion to public works and a proportion to transport.

Mr. Green: They may be connected with the railways but they are public works. I think the onus should be on any department to show that the Department of Public Works cannot build a particular work before a department such as the Department of Transport undertakes to do it. The national harbours board, for construction, are asking $5 million. I should like to know why some of that work cannot be done by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a question?

Mr. Green: I would prefer to finish my statement.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Green: What about the St. Lawrence waterway? Is the Department of Transport going to do all the construction work on the St. Lawrence waterway and in that way become a far greater building department than is the Department of Public Works? I should like the minister to explain just what part the respective departments are going to have in the construction work that will be done on that waterway.

Another point is this. There have been great changes in the Department of Public Works. An extensive face-lifting has been going on there for the last few months. At least, we are told that is what has been happening, and I think perhaps the information is correct. I am wondering whether anything of the kind is taking place or is about to take place in the Department of Transport.

I have here an extremely interesting book called "The Canadian Bureaucracy" by Taylor Cole. It deals with Canadian government.

At page 22, referring to these two departments, namely public works and transport, we find this statement:

Certain other departments are still known as "patronage departments" in popular parlance. These include the departments of public works and transport, which have an appreciable number of "prevailing-rates" employees not subject to the jurisdiction of the civil service commission.

Mr. Chevrier: I had never heard that this was a patronage department.

Mr. Green: This is the opinion of this author who wrote the book entitled "The Canadian Bureaucracy". I hope his views are incorrect. But perhaps it would not be a bad idea for the minister to take a look around his department in order to see whether that charge is a fair one. After all, his department is not free of faults.

Why does the Department of Transport not permit the opening of tenders in public? I am told that it is the only department of government that refuses to have tenders opened in public, apart from the war departments. I have here a brief of the Canadian Construction Association which was submitted to the government on February 22 of this year. In it we find this statement:

Endorsation was also given to another policy statement advocating the calling of competitive tenders on all construction work involving public funds and the public advertising and opening of these tenders except with regard to work in the "secret" or emergency categories. We are happy to report that all federal agencies conform to this policy with but one exception—

And I believe that exception is the minister's department.

—and that the procedures followed by such agencies as the Department of Public Works and the national harbours board are frequently cited as examples to other governmental bodies. During the past year, a number of departments carrying out relatively small construction programs agreed to conduct public tender openings with a representative of the association present and currently there is only one department that does not make construction tender information available. It is hoped that this situation will soon change. The privilege of attending the tender openings for federal construction projects is very much appreciated by the association in that it enables bidders to be advised quickly as to their relative standing. This information is most helpful for it enables decisions without delay concerning equipment movements and whether or not to tender on other projects. It also is a further indication to potential bidders that their tenders will be considered on an equitable basis. From the department's standpoint, public tender openings constitute good public relations and will tend to encourage greater competition and ensuing better prices for its projects.

That suggestion was made to the cabinet. I hope that the department either have already acted on it or will do so in the future.

I intend to devote the rest of my time this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, to one subject which comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, namely Canada's deep-sea merchant marine. We in the opposition are greatly concerned about the merchant marine. We regret that adequate steps have not yet been taken by the government to avert the disappearance of the Canadian deep-sea fleet. We believe it is not yet too late to prevent this tragedy, and we urge the government to take another look at the situation.

After world war II the government studied the problem of Canada's deep-sea fleet. We came out of the war with a substantial merchant navy; I believe we had the third or fourth largest merchant fleet in the world. As a result of the studies made, it was decided that we would have a merchant navy with modern fast ships. I have here the pertinent report of the Canadian maritime commission, namely their second report which is the one made in 1949. At page 51 they sum up this policy as follows:

It appears to us that in the next few years Canada's chief problem will be to dispose of her exportable surpluses.

Of course, that statement is true today. The quotation continues:

It is not possible or advisable to force overseas buyers to ship in Canadian bottoms if they have not dollars to pay in freights. It is therefore obvious that the Canadian flag fleet must be drastically reduced. We believe, however, that with the advantage of trade routes developed during and since the war and under normal conditions the Canadian shipping industry has a reasonable opportunity of continuing in existence with a comparatively small well-balanced fleet composed of modern fast ships suitable for the trades in which they are employed.

I believe there was a later recommendation by the Canadian maritime commission in which they recommended to the government that there should be a nucleus of about 50 ships in the Canadian deep-sea fleet, including those ships belonging to Canadian National Steamships. I believe the recommendation also indicated that there was only one way in which such a fleet could be acquired, namely to subsidize operating expenses of, for instance, 25 or 30 ships. Apparently the cost of operating a Canadian ship is about $100,000 a year higher than that of operating a British ship. That recommendation therefore would have involved a subsidy of about $2,500,000 or $3 million.

Then I believe there was, from an interdepartmental committee known as the external trade policy committee, a recommendation to much the same effect with regard to a merchant fleet. But these recommendations have been ignored or rejected by the government. I admit that various plans, such as the tonnage-replacement plan, have been tried; but they have been unsuccessful. We now find ourselves in a position where the Canadian merchant fleet has practically disappeared.

Mr. Chairman, at that point may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I had just commenced to deal with the question of Canada's deep-sea merchant marine and had pointed out that the government had adopted a policy shortly after the war of having a merchant navy composed of a reasonably small number of modern fast ships, but that in spite of that policy having been adopted it had failed and that we now have reached the position where the deep-sea fleet is practically gone.

The last statement of policy was made by the Minister of Transport in November of last year. It set out that the ship owners could sell their vessels but that the proceeds must be placed in the escrow fund which had been established some years earlier and must be used to buy modern cargo vessels. There was also a change in what had been followed previously in that it was provided that any new vessels need not necessarily be built in Canadian yards. That of course was designed to enable the ship owners to have their ships constructed in British yards where they could be had for a good deal lower price.

But it was stated in the policy that the government would not pay any operating subsidy at the time. The paragraph dealing with operating subsidies read as follows:

> It is further announced that, after due consideration, the government has decided that the request made by the Canadian Shipowners Association for operating subsidy could not be approved at the present time. However, if it appears feasible to establish modern Canadian flag vessels on certain routes that would be of benefit to the development of Canadian trade, Mr. Chevrier indicated that consideration might be given at a later date as to whether or not some form of assistance ought to be provided in such cases.

The government also refused at the time to allow the ship owners to sell their ships outright without any conditions.

A few days later, on November 26, I spoke in the house during the debate on the speech from the throne and asked the Minister of Transport this question: Are we going to have a Canadian merchant navy or are we not? I pointed out that the sixth report of the Canadian maritime commission, dated June 29, 1953, had shown that there only remained 65 deep-sea dry cargo vessels in the Canadian merchant fleet as of March 31, 1952. At the time I spoke in November, 1953, that number had already been reduced to 44, and it was only too clear at the time that the whole fleet was on the way out unless some drastic action was taken by the government.

The minister replied the following day, November 27, and his remarks will be found at page 410 of Hansard. He argued that the country would have to find some $100 million to $200 million if there was to be a modern cargo fleet. He based that figure on a cost of $4 million per ship and argued on the basis that the government would have to pay either the whole cost of the new ships or at least half of the cost. Nobody has ever suggested that. I have never heard it suggested by the ship owners or by anyone else. Certainly I did not suggest it. The only suggestion that had been made was that there should be an operating subsidy of $100,000 per year per ship.

Then the minister went on to argue that we had 90 ships under United Kingdom registry and that they could be brought back if we needed more ships. The facts are that those ships are all old ships. They were all built during the war, and they are manned of course by British officers and seamen. The manner in which they are used is under the direction of the British authorities. When they have major repairs done that work goes to British shipyards, and they could not be operated by Canada even if they were brought back at the present time.

I asked the minister a series of questions which were answered on February 18. The answers are to be found at page 2201 of Hansard. One of the questions was:

> What plans, if any, has the government in hand to man and operate these vessels—

The reference is to the Canadian vessels which had been transferred to United Kingdom registry.

> —if they should be returned to Canadian registry?

This was the answer:

> In the event of the return of any or all of these vessels to Canadian registry their Canadian owners, operators or managers would man and operate them as they did in the past.

That sounds very good, but the fact is that the officers and seamen who were in the Canadian merchant navy have gone to other work. They had to leave. They had to find other jobs. I know quite a few of them in Vancouver who have given up the sea as a career and have gone into other work.

They are not available to man these ships if they should ever be brought back from the United Kingdom.

Then the minister argued that everything was all right because if there were a war there was going to be a North Atlantic Treaty Organization shipping pool and we would be taken care of out of that pool. I understand that other nations are not quite so simple. They are retaining ships which are not being placed in the pool so that they may protect their own interests. If Canada gets into the position where the only ships she may have in the pool are those that have been transferred long since to British registry—most of them have been gone quite a while—then her voice in that pool will not be very loud.

The statement of policy made by the minister on November 12 was followed by the flight of further vessels from the Canadian flag. I understand that at the time my questions were answered in February, applications had been made for the transfer of 21 more ships to British registry. Those applications have been approved. In addition I believe a few ships have been sold, but not one modern cargo vessel has been built or is about to be built as a result of this policy announced on November 12.

The position is that at the end of June Canada will have approximately 21 dry cargo deep-sea vessels in her merchant marine. Of those 21, only 14 are engaged in the deep-sea trade. Only two of the hundreds that were built during the war, 10,000-tonners, are engaged in foreign trade. There is one 4,700-tonner, eight Canadian National steamships and three other vessels that were built since the war, but apparently they are not fast modern cargo vessels. The eight vessels owned by Canadian National Steamships may very well be sold. The company operated at a deficit, I believe, last year, and there have been press reports to the effect that the Canadian National Steamships may go out of the freight business, in which event 8 of those 14 ships would be gone. The other 7 ships, making a total of 21, are all plying in coastal waters.

The situation can very well be illustrated by what has happened to the ships that were steaming out of the port of Vancouver. In 1947 we had 46 Canadian cargo vessels working out of that port. This year that number was reduced first to two and then to one. I believe the transfer of that one to United Kingdom registry has already been approved, and as soon as she returns from her present voyage she will go to the United Kingdom registry. The great port of Vancouver, therefore, will have no deep-sea cargo vessels under the Canadian flag.

[Mr. Green.]

Canada will have, at the end of June, the smallest tonnage of dry cargo vessels in 35 years. This situation, Mr. Chairman, is tragic and yet the government has no effective policy to meet it. The government is acting as though we had a fleet. I point out to the minister that in his own estimates, vote 453, we find under the particulars at page 527 there is money to be voted for a training program for the certification of able seamen, and incidentally for campaign stars and war medals for merchant seamen. These men are getting their medals a good deal more easily than they got proper benefits. Then, under vote 473 of the Department of Transport, we find there is to be $300,000 voted for degaussing and strengthening for armament sea-going merchant ships of Canadian registry of 1,000 gross tons and over. I point out that if the minister does not get this work done quickly he will not have any ships left to degauss. Then under vote 188, for the Department of Labour, the general description states that this money is to be used in part for the training of personnel for the merchant marine.

These votes are being asked, yet actually the government is just letting the Canadian merchant navy die out. As I said, officers and seamen have gone to other jobs. Canadian operators are going into other businesses. Foreign vessels are moving in, and to me this is one of the greatest failures of the present Canadian government. The official opposition believes that Canada must keep the nucleus of a deep-sea fleet, composed of at least a reasonable proportion of modern fast vessels; that we must keep a certain number of trained personnel and experienced operators. It is obvious that that should be Canadian policy, and I should like to give the committee some of my reasons for making that statement.

First of all we need a merchant marine to carry our trade. We have to export to live, and we have to export more per head than the people of any other nation. Yesterday this house approved of the Canada-Japan trade treaty. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, who is to carry that trade. It certainly is not going to go in Canadian bottoms. Japanese merchant ships are already coming into Vancouver harbour, bringing in their goods and taking away iron ore and other materials. Practically all this trade is going to be carried in Japanese bottoms unless the Canadian government changes its policy.

Then, let us consider the St. Lawrence. Here we are about to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. All of the ports on the great lakes are looking forward to a large foreign trade. There will not be very many Canadian cargo vessels coming in with that trade. Practically all the trade that is carried in deep-sea vessels is going to be carried by foreign vessels, unless there is a change in Canadian government policy so that we do retain a Canadian merchant marine. Then, too, we should not make ourselves subject to the whims of other nations in so far as deep-sea shipping is concerned. We need a merchant navy for defence. What is the use of building a big escort fighting navy when we have not any ships to escort? That is the position in which Canada stands today.

I have here a press dispatch of June 9, 1950, reporting a speech by Vice Admiral Grant, who was then chief of the Canadian naval staff. He said:

> No one has yet produced a substitute for the merchant ship . . . We should make no mistake, in the event of an attack on the freedom loving nations, we must be prepared to carry the war to the enemies' gates and the maintenance and supply of our allied forces overseas would require all the merchant shipping of the free world afloat today, plus every ton we could build.

Three months ago, on February 12, a further press dispatch appeared reporting a statement by J. A. S. Peck, naval architect with Canadian Vickers Limited. He pointed out Canada's need for a competent merchant marine in time of national emergency. He is reported as having told members at the annual meeting of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association that a merchant marine was needed, not merely to transport men and material to particular danger points but to act as the nation's economic lifeline at a time when externally-owned tonnage may be in critically short supply.

We need a merchant marine to help Canadian shipyards. The construction of naval vessels is nearing an end, and when there is no more of that work our shipyards are going to be in serious trouble. We should have Canadian merchant vessels that could keep these yards busy with repair work, and new vessels could also be built in these Canadian yards. We need a merchant marine for the retention of management and operational skills and for the prestige of the nation; for the development of Canada into one of the greatest nations of the world and because a merchant marine is part of our general transportation picture. A merchant marine is just as much a part of the transportation problem of Canada as is transportation within our boundaries; it is all part of one transportation picture.

I would point out that no other nation has followed a policy such as the one this government has now adopted. Back in 1936 the United States decided that they were going to maintain a merchant navy and in their merchant marine act of that year we find this declaration of policy set out in section 101:

> It is necessary for the national defence and development of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine (a) sufficient to carry its domestic water-borne commerce and a substantial portion of the water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States and to provide shipping service on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of such domestic and foreign water-borne commerce at all times, (b) capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, (c) owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States in so far as may be practicable, and (d) composed of the best-equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels, constructed in the United States and manned with a trained and efficient citizen personnel. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine.

That policy was investigated this year by a committee set up under the under-secretary of commerce. In his report, published on May 3, we find this as his first conclusion:

> Our basic national maritime policy is sound. Indeed, its objectives are so fundamental to the national interest that their attainment should be given primary consideration at all times.

Japan and Germany are moving rapidly into the field. Last year, 1953, the British built the largest tonnage of new ships, but Germany was second and not very far behind, while Japan was third. Those two countries had great merchant fleets before the war and they are rapidly getting back into the same position.

Even Switzerland has a merchant marine which will be bigger than the Canadian merchant marine at the end of June. I have here the foreign trade publication of the Department of Trade and Commerce for December 19, 1953 and in an article entitled "Switzerland's Merchant Marine" I find the following:

> Berne—Switzerland's dependence on foreign sources of supply for foodstuffs and for the raw materials for its industries has led to the creation of a Swiss merchant fleet. Without the fleet this country would, to a certain degree, suffer starvation and its industries would be severely crippled, in wartime, as they were in the world wars of 1914 and 1939.

And further down:

> At the end of the last war, the Swiss people agreed that this fleet should be maintained and the confederation sold its ships to private shipping companies, which have gradually developed the Swiss merchant fleet. In June 1950, at the outbreak of the war in Korea, the fleet totalled 90,000 tons deadweight.

And then further:

> The Swiss fleet comprises 33 ships totalling about 191 thousand tons deadweight, of which 20 have been built since 1948. The ships are modern and fast.

Why are these other nations adopting this policy of having a merchant marine? I submit it is because they know from experience that they must have their own ships. Is Canada to be the only nation taking the position that she has no need of a merchant navy? That is the problem. That is the question which must be faced by the government today. Time is running out. Unless something is done very quickly Canada will be in exactly that position, namely, that she has no deep-sea merchant navy.

We believe that there is still time to avert this disaster. We urge the government to have another look at this question. We urge them to bring about a change of policy. We believe that it will be one of the greatest tragedies in Canadian history if the Canadian merchant navy is allowed to disappear.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, it is always a pleasure to discuss the estimates of the Minister of Transport because he always supplies us with a most comprehensive statement. I was very pleased to hear him announce tonight that he was interested enough in the Canso causeway to have had a recent look at it. Of course he was always interested in it, much more so than a lot of people who are claiming credit for that job.

I am glad that he had a recent look at it. I did also. It is about 85 per cent completed. It is a big undertaking and one that was long overdue. I know that when the minister goes down there within the next year or so to open that bridge—by the way I named it some time ago in the house as the Chevrier causeway—he will appreciate how important it is. Both he and I know that many difficulties that would never have been gotten around were overcome because of his own interest and faith in the project at a time when others were claiming it was an engineering impossibility, merely a visionary dream and simply a piece of old-time politics.

Nevertheless it is a reality there today and will serve a most useful purpose. The island of Cape Breton contains one-third of the total population of Nova Scotia and it is the largest industrial section east of Montreal. The transportation bottleneck that existed held back its development for many years. I am confident that when the causeway is completed and the bottleneck removed it will do a lot for the economic future of that island.

I am glad to hear also that the contracts for the diversion of the road and the construction of the lock on the Cape Breton side have been let. I know the minister is going to be quite proud of that project some day and that day is not too far away.

I should like to say a few words on another item which I think is quite close to these estimates, and I refer to the St. Lawrence seaway. The minister is well aware that when this matter was under discussion a few months ago I was the only member who got up and voiced objection. When the Leader of the Opposition was welcoming the news that the United States had decided to come in and do their share of the project he said that every member of the house would welcome the announcement. I notice that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was a little more cautious when he said "nearly every member".

As far as I am concerned the matter is settled. I have sense enough to know there is no use continuing to fight after the referee has counted you out. You are not fighting any more, you are just imagining you are. First I should like to say that I would have been more pleased if Canada had decided to build the seaway alone. It would have been an indication that we were grown up, that we no longer found it necessary to get help from our grandmother.

I know the minister can tell me when he replies that an international agreement is necessary and that a certain amount of that work has to be done on the other side of the line. Nevertheless, we could have done that job ourselves. But now that we have the United States as a partner, and of course that matter is settled, there is no use of beating it any farther. I would say this: If we had built that seaway ourselves—it is a good project in this time of recession; it is a good project in the light of the fact that we have around 10 per cent to 12 per cent of our working force unemployed; at least it is going to give some employment—the tolls paid by foreign shipping and by United States ships would have liquidated its cost in the years to come.

We could have done the job ourselves. It would have been an indication that we were getting a little independent and capable of standing on our own feet. It would have indicated that we were able to develop anything that it was necessary to develop in this country.

I took objection to the seaway as a member from the maritimes because I knew that it was not going to help the economy of the maritime provinces at all. First, it makes the iron ore deposits of Ungava and Labrador much more readily available to the steel plants of the United States. Secondly, I am convinced that if the seaway were not built many of the steel industries both in the United States and Canada would have to shift to the Atlantic coast, because that is the logical place in which to turn out raw steel. Lots of labour is available there; your coal is there; all the ingredients necessary to turn out raw steel are on the Atlantic coast. Your iron ore deposits are close at hand, and it would not be necessary to haul your coal and your raw materials across the country to have the raw steel turned out some place else. I am convinced that the seaway prevented the development of basic steel both in Canada and in the United States.

I know that it will also open up a waterway for United States coal, and of course competition for maritime coal is difficult at the present time. Maybe a little more because of the seaway will not do it very much harm. As far as the seaway is concerned I am pleased with one thing. During all the time that I was in opposition to it I said that our opposition was not unalterable; that if the St. Lawrence seaway was viewed in Canada as the Tennessee valley project was in the United States it would be a great boon to the country. The Tennessee valley project was a government project. It is worked on a co-operative basis. That great development in the United States stands out as perhaps one of the greatest co-operative developments financed by a government in the history of the world.

I was sceptical as to whether it might take place in Canada, but I notice in the press that there is a possibility of the Minister of Transport becoming the first chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority. First, I hope we do not lose him from the House of Commons. He is a valuable man. He does a good job. But if anyone is to head the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the minister is the first chairman it will nullify a lot of my doubts about it because having worked with him I know, and every hon. member knows, that he is a pretty co-operative chap. He will go along where things are reasonable. In case they do make him chairman I hope that when he is working out the details of the power projects at Niagara and in the state of New York he will take the position that if we are to do this job in the interests of all of Canada, and if the seaway is to benefit the whole of Canada, the maritimes must not be forgotten.

Many hon. members said it would benefit the whole of Canada. Western members said it would move more grain at a cheaper rate. Of course we will have to take the railways up if we replace all the traffic that goes over the roads. Hon. members said it would benefit the whole of Canada; it would open Canada up. Well, when the minister sets in to work out the details of power in the province of Ontario I hope he will remember that in addition to any power project that is contiguous to the St. Lawrence seaway, that is within reasonable reach and whose costs are not prohibitive, there is also a power project in New Brunswick that the people there have been asking for, for a good many years.

That, too, is a project that will require United States co-operation. My information is that the United States has been ready for quite a long while at least to discuss the matter. I refer to the Passamaquoddy project. The minister will become quite familiar with it after he takes over his new duties. He will say: we told the members of the House of Commons and the people of Canada that this was a great national project and that we were all going to pay our share of it. It was going to benefit the whole of Canada. If Ontario is entitled to power—and of course they are paying for it, they are doing the job themselves, but without the St. Lawrence seaway authority being set up and the assurance that the federal government was going to push the project, I do not think that power would have been touched. You have to have federal co-operation. If we are to assist in the power project, then the minister will remember the power project in New Brunswick.

In my opinion there is not a province in Canada that needs power more than does New Brunswick. A lot of mineral development and so forth could take place in that province if they had the power. We, too, have a power problem. When I talked about the St. Lawrence seaway the first time nothing very much was done about it. Within recent months the federal government has sent an expert into Nova Scotia to consider the possibilities of thermo-power developed from coal. That is being worked at now.

When I talked about the seaway, part of my argument was that if we were to support the St. Lawrence seaway by taxation then at least we were entitled to some kind of a survey in regard to the development of power from our basic resource of coal. That is being done. And since it is being done it modifies my disagreement with the St. Lawrence seaway. I trust it may work out as hon. members visualize it, and that it will benefit the whole of Canada; but I still have my reservations. They are somewhat relieved because of the rumour that the Minister of Transport may be the first chairman of the seaway authority. At least we have this assurance. He is the kind of person that I can walk in to see, sit down and tell my troubles to and be sure of getting a sympathetic hearing. He is not going to be some import from some other part of the world, with a whole lot of hypothetical knowledge that I cannot understand, or cannot get in to see without having to get past a whole battery of secretaries.

Now I have your chin all fixed up I want to say a few words along the lines pursued by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. While he was talking he reminisced about the period during and after the war and he dealt at some length with the merchant marine. There can be no doubt that we are falling down on the job as far as the merchant marine is concerned, and our failure to protect our own coastal shipping is evident. I believe Canada is the only country in the world which permits foreign ships to come in and ply her coastal trade. That is taking place at the present time and, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra emphasized, a country which exports one-third of its total production must have a merchant marine service and, of course, in addition to that a good repair service. Our country must maintain its shipping yards so that they are adequate to repair our ships.

It would appear to me at the present time as though we did not have any ships of our own. What is the reason for that? I do not think the Canadian government is completely to blame. I believe that the people who have something to ship in this country are deliberately by-passing and sabotaging any possibility of developing a merchant marine in this country simply because they wish to use foreign ships. I think the reason for that also is that very low wages are paid on these ships. I will take my own end of the country as an example.

In 1939 the war broke out and the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation had the Dominion Shipping Company as a subsidiary with 12 or 14 boats of their own, and they employed Canadian seamen and paid Canadian wages. These boats were requisitioned and put into overseas service during the war, but since the war that fleet has not been built up. In fact, I do not think they own even two boats at the present time. I have here a clipping from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of Wednesday of this week, and it points out the kind of difficulties into which we can fall. It states here that Dominion Steel and Coal have at least 12 boats carrying coal from Sydney to Montreal and they are all foreign-flag ships. The crew of one of these ships went on strike in Montreal recently because the wages being paid on that ship were as low as $90 per month. The crew was arrested because they refused to take the ship to sea. The crew of the next ship which came into port went on strike in sympathy. Now the point I wish to make is this, that in a situation like that Canada has no authority. These are foreign-flag ships and if the crews of these ships go on strike in the port of Montreal there is nothing we can do about it because these men are subject to the laws of their own country, particularly in the matter of wages.

In the meantime the transportation of coal from Sydney to Montreal is tied up. There are eight other boats in that fleet which may be working under similar circumstances and we can get into a tangle there which may mean that shipments of coal up to Montreal will be tied up for the rest of the summer, and as far as we are concerned we have no authority to deal with that situation. Mind you, I want to say this for the benefit of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. The reason why this company did not build up their own fleet, hire their own seamen and pay Canadian wages after the war was simply because they could get these foreign-flag ships for about one-third the cost and of course they found it cheaper to do it in that way. The result has been that our merchant fleet has gone down the drain right along the line. The government must take an equal share of the blame for not having a policy which would encourage the people who have freight to move by water across this country to build up a fleet, and a policy which would discourage the idea of lowering standards in this country and throwing our own sailors onto the beach.

If we are going to be patriotic I think we should start with ourselves. We should be loyal to our own institutions and to our own people, and if we are going to have wars every few decades we should try and remember some of our high sounding slogans rather than forget them as soon as the war is over. We must offer our people a better solution than we are doing at the present time, and instead of saying "You have got to lower your standards or you are going to become unemployed because you cannot compete with people who ship in vessels from countries where standards are very low", we should offer something much better.

This is not completely a government responsibility. It is the responsibility of everyone in this country. It is our responsibility as citizens to maintain our own standards and do what we can to raise the standards of others. I agree completely with the argument advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra to the effect that we should encourage the building up of a merchant marine service in Canada, and we should encourage the training of merchant seamen in Canada.

If we just think back to the period during the war and at the end of the war we will no doubt recall that practically all the ships and officers who manned these ships were brought from the other side of the water. They had to be brought over here to operate our ships because between the wars we did what we are doing now, namely neglected to maintain a merchant service.

The only way we can maintain our standards is by driving it home to every Canadian that as citizens, regardless of what business they are in, it is their job to get standards up and not to lower them simply because for the moment they might be able to get something cheaper coming in from outside. I would point out, in addition, that no foreign ships are allowed to ply the coastal trade in the United States, Great Britain, or in any other country, but these foreign-flag ships can come into Canada and go from port to port throughout the country. When the St. Lawrence seaway is completed they will be able to take over all the shipping in this country.

The merchant fleet was the fourth arm of the services during the last war and there can be no doubt that the army, navy and air force would have starved to death in Britain if it had not been for the merchant seamen going across the Atlantic in convoys and delivering munitions, foodstuffs and everything which was required. I think we will be very shortsighted if we neglect to build up our merchant marine and I think it should be made quite clear that any corporation in this country which wants to use foreign-flag ships because they provide lower rates has an obligation to the people of this country to support our own merchant marine.

Another matter I would like the minister to consider when he is in conference with some of the people in the shipping repair industry in this country is that there are many small yards in this country, particularly in the maritimes, which grew up during the war when they were needed. The big yards can take care of themselves but these small yards, perhaps 50 or 60 in number and which are without very large facilities, could be used to repair many of our small ships. I would suggest to the minister that he might take a look at that section of his department some time because I am convinced that many of these yards that may be necessary in the future are not getting a fair share of the work. Many of them may be obliged to fold up. There was a time—and it may come again before long—when these yards were badly needed.

I agree with two things pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra with regard to the re-thinking of this proposition of maintaining a merchant marine service in Canada. It is something that is absolutely essential and it is something that it should be possible to give to people who have freight to move from port to port in this country. I would ask the minister to remember this example I gave with respect to shipment of coal from Sydney to Montreal because it can be repeated. If that kind of thing develops there is not anything we can do about it. They are ships of another country in our ports. The season is short enough in the St. Lawrence in which to move coal up by water, and we should not lose any time about it.

I am not going to occupy any more time of the committee with general remarks. There are some things we shall have to say on the specific items as we reach them.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, since we are dealing with transportation tonight and as it goes hand in hand with development, I should like to say a few words in connection with railways and, in that connection, federal-provincial co-operation. If I appear to wander afield I hope you will bear with me because I assure you that what I have to say is all tied in with transportation.

In times past on many occasions the federal government has, I think, acknowledged the principle of co-operation between provincial and federal governments in respect of transportation. I suggest they have accepted the principle having regard to some of the projects which have been undertaken. In the maritimes there was the strait of Canso bridge for rail and road traffic in 1951 and the maritime marshlands rehabilitation project and so forth in 1948. There was also the Bow river irrigation project. I think we can readily see that the federal government has accepted the principle of co-operation between provincial and federal governments.

At this time I should like to comment for just a moment on the St. Lawrence seaway. A few days ago the Prime Minister indicated the willingness of Canada to "go it alone", as it were, in the matter of the expense of the St. Lawrence seaway. I think that that statement was well put, and I think to a great extent it gave the people of Canada much satisfaction in that it showed that we, as a Canadian government, were willing to take on a project of this size. The removal of the obstacles referred to by the Prime Minister in respect of United States participation in the St. Lawrence seaway is certainly a factor that we cannot overlook.

There is one other aspect I should like to mention just in passing. By reason of United States participation in the St. Lawrence seaway Canadians are going to be saved the expenditure of a considerable amount of money. At least that is my hope. I think there is every reason to believe that we shall receive great benefit by the participation of the United States in the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. If there is a great deal of saving in respect of the building of the St. Lawrence seaway owing to United States participation, I feel that a good place to spend some of that money would be out in the province of British Columbia.

After all, British Columbia is located a long way from the St. Lawrence seaway. We believe that a fair share of the tax money should be spent in transportation facilities within that province. As I have the thing figured out in my mind, the St. Lawrence seaway will benefit those provinces from Saskatchewan east and perhaps Alberta to a small extent. But I feel that we in British Columbia are much in the same position as that in which the hon. member for Cape Breton South finds himself; we feel that the seaway possibly is not going to help us at all. By this I do not mean to suggest for a moment that we are against the building of the St. Lawrence seaway; we are for it. But at the same time we feel that we ought to be recognized by means of assistance in the development of our province through transportation facilities.

The British Columbia tax contribution to the federal government is extremely high. I think you will agree that this fact should have a great bearing on the consideration of the minister in this respect. In 1951-52 we find that the amount of corporation and personal income taxes and succession duties per capita in British Columbia was $199.88 as compared with the over-all Canadian figure of $152.74. In 1952-53 we find that the figure in British Columbia was $211.14 as compared with the over-all Canadian figure of $175.42. Canada then has a great deal of interest in the development of the great wealth of natural resources in British Columbia.

Since development is dependent on transportation, the first place to look for a chance to give that assistance to the province of British Columbia would be in the matter of increased transportation facilities within that province. The great Peace river area is badly in need of an outlet to the coast. In this area we have vast tracts of agricultural and forest land, as well as huge quantities of gas, oil and coal. The Pacific Great Eastern Railway is one place where this government could well place some of the money that it would save on the St. Lawrence seaway by United States participation.

[Mr. Leboe.]

We also have the new Japanese trade agreement, discussed in the house yesterday, which means increased trade from the west coast. Here again there is the necessity of adequate transportation facilities for the movement of carloads of agricultural and timber products from the central and northern parts of British Columbia. I understand from reading the press that the premier of British Columbia is now making application to the federal government for a contribution to extend the Pacific Great Eastern Railway from its terminus at Squamish into Vancouver, some forty miles, and from Prince George to Dawson Creek, some 274 miles.

I understand that one proposal is that the Canadian government, through the Canadian National Railways, should take over the Pacific Great Eastern, and that the other proposal is for a fifty-fifty participation in the railway itself. That would mean of course that a price would have to be set for the existing railway and that amount of money would have to be spent in extending it before the British Columbia government would take over its 50 per cent. The precedent of federal participation in the development of the provinces through the building of railways has been set on many occasions. We have the Kitimat line that is being built from Terrace to Kitimat in British Columbia. We have other railroads in Quebec and Ontario, and I see no reason why consideration should not be given to federal participation in the development of British Columbia through assistance in obtaining the railway facilities necessary for that development.

The question of providing access to the north country is one that affects other departments of the federal government, particularly the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. At the present time our provincial governments are faced with the problem of providing north and south highways, and the federal government, in its administration of the affairs of the northern territories, is dependent upon those highways. Therefore I think we have every reason to feel that consideration should be given to the request of the British Columbia government for assistance in the matter of railways.

I do not want to take up any more time. I think I have stated my case as clearly as I can tonight. However, I should like to say that I certainly agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and the hon. member for Cape Breton South with respect to the Canadian merchant marine. They have spoken at some length, and I certainly agree with what they have said. I should like the minister to show a spirit of good will towards the province of British Columbia and to view the matter from an absolutely fair point of view so far as the distribution of the tax dollar is concerned. British Columbia is a very lucrative place for the federal government to obtain tax money with which to carry on its affairs. We do not mind paying our share of taxes but we like to feel that in the spending of those tax moneys throughout Canada we are going to get a fair share.

Mr. Dickey: Mr. Chairman, in considering this first item of the estimates of the Department of Transport and in listening to the speeches that have been made by hon. members opposite, it is quite apparent what an important and varied department the Department of Transport is. I think hon. members recognize the very considerable responsibilities that are placed upon the shoulders of the Minister of Transport, and I think they likewise recognize the responsible manner in which the present minister has discharged these duties.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra spoke of a variety of matters, all of them important, as have the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I certainly have no wish to delay the committee in the consideration of this first item but there are several matters about which I wish to say a few words. There are a number of functions of the Department of Transport that are of great interest to all the people of the province of Nova Scotia, including the constituents of the constituency of Halifax which I, together with my colleague, have the honour to represent.

The marine services of the department are of course one of the vital functions which enter into the maritime life of Nova Scotia at every turn. I should like to compliment the minister on the manner in which the marine services of the department have been carried out over the past few years and the the very great strides that have been made by the minister and his officers in providing the aids to navigation required by the small fishing vessels and the large ocean-going vessels that use the various harbours of Nova Scotia. There has been a very extensive modernization of these aids to navigation. Radar has been applied to navigational problems. Aids to navigation have been quickly fitted with radar reflectors, and other steps have been taken to see that all vessels that have been equipped with modern equipment of this nature get the very best use out of it. I was interested to note in the last annual report of the department that from the Halifax marine agency alone 231 lights of various classes are serviced and kept in operation in that area. This is a most essential and important contribution to the maritime life of the whole province of Nova Scotia. There is one point, however, that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister and his officials for their consideration. I refer to the introduction of automatic equipment at locations where it is felt that the maintenance of a light tended by somebody who is responsible for the performance of the light is a matter of great importance. We recognize that in certain locations automatic equipment has definite advantages, and we should take note of those advantages. However, I would ask the minister to see that his officials consider each one of these cases in accordance with its special circumstances, and not to move too quickly in bringing into operation the use of automatic equipment where it really is not justified.

There is one other aspect of the operation of the marine service in Halifax that I feel deserves special mention at this time, and that is the administration of Sable island. This is a very specialized duty falling upon the department, the maintenance of the lighthouses, the communications station and the life-saving station on that island 100 miles off the coast of Nova Scotia which has become known as the graveyard of the Atlantic. I believe that the arrangements that have been made to maintain these services, to improve the buildings on the island and to improve living conditions there for the employees of the department who are required to live on that island all the year round, were very much needed. They have been carried into effect in a satisfactory manner. It is a most interesting life, I am sure, but a difficult life. I feel the department is to be congratulated upon the efforts that have been made to make the arrangements for the maintenance of these people as pleasant as it can be.

However, the one big remaining problem is the delivery of mail more regularly and on a more satisfactory basis. There have been suggestions with respect to the delivery of air mail to Sable island. I know that there are administrative and other difficulties in the way, but I would suggest to the minister that the matter be given careful consideration to see if it is not possible to improve the conditions of life on the island in this additional respect.

I want to say something with respect to the very important matter of pilotage services. As the minister knows, after the end of world war II there were a number of rather difficult problems in connection with pilotage services in the port of Halifax as well as in some other ports in Canada. I am glad to report to the house and the minister, as I think he already knows, that by and large I believe these problems have been efficiently and satisfactorily met by the minister and his officials. I believe there is a very much better understanding between the active pilots and the officials who are responsible for the administration of the pilotage policy in the department. The main questions, with respect to the provision of pilot boats and the difficulties arising out of the superannuation fund, have been very largely met. There may be a continuing problem with respect to superannuation, but certainly the very special problem we had in Halifax arising out of the unfortunate loss of the pilot boat Hebridean during the war has been met.

I understand that the active pilots regard the present situation as quite satisfactory. We appreciate the initiative the minister and his officials took to make the changes which were required, and I am sure that the efficiency and care with which the responsibilities of the pilotage service have been carried out over the last few years has been very gratifying to the minister. I noticed in the report for 1952-53 that in Halifax, for example, there were only eleven instances where there were any accidents causing even minor damage in connection with the movement of ships in the harbour. I believe that amounted to approximately one-third of one per cent of all the pilotage jobs performed during that year, which is a very excellent record indeed.

In connection with the port of Halifax, Mr. Chairman, I want to mention also the matter of the provision of port facilities at Halifax to handle general cargo as well as the grain cargoes which flow through that port. I believe the facilities have recently been very satisfactorily extended in so far as the elevator and storage space is concerned. The galleries have been modernized with the replacement of the old No. 1 wooden gallery by a steel gallery, but I should like to point out to the minister that if the movement of grain through the port of Halifax increases, as we hope it may, with the additional elevator space, we will require, and consideration should be given to, the installation of additional gallery facilities to create new berths which could handle grain cargo. I think that is not a matter which should be pressed for immediate decision. I know the minister and his officials will keep that in mind, and as the need develops will be prepared to take whatever steps are required to meet that need.

In so far as general cargo is concerned, the volume of traffic through the port of Halifax this past winter season has been most satisfactory. As a matter of fact, the experience during the winter shows that there is quite a pressing need for some additional berthing facilities in the port. It is recognized that the provision of new deep-water berths is a job that cannot be attended to very rapidly. I hope that the minister and his officials are considering taking the necessary steps to have the pier A job undertaken and pressed to the construction stage as quickly as possible. However, before that can be done I think there will be a need for additional shed and berthing facilities.

One way in which the problem could be met rapidly, and with at least some satisfaction, would be the provision of a new steel shed on a portion of pier 9, which is at the deep-water section of the harbour and where several berths for coastal shipping at least could be made available. Then, with the necessary shed facilities, a number of coastal ships could be worked, leaving free for the larger ocean-going vessels the berths which are now taken up by these coastal vessels. I would hope that some steps can be taken immediately to have shed facilities provided at this location and that a long-range program will be undertaken at the same time.

The expenditures made on harbour facilities in Halifax through the national harbours board over the last two years have been quite substantial and the results obtained have been most satisfactory. During this winter we saw the benefit of those expenditures. I believe that since the end of world war II there has been expended in Halifax on new facilities in the way of capital account a total of $5,890,000. Up to the end of 1954 the amount spent on maintenance will be $2,220,000. Those are very substantial amounts. We recognize what has been achieved by these expenditures and we recognize that the provision of those facilities have made it possible for the port to handle the volume of business which was handled this year.

Fortunately during the past few years the volume of summer business has been increasing. The experience in the past year or so, which we hope will be the same this year, has shown the volume of summer business through the port to be at least 50 per cent of the business done during the winter season.

Another matter to which I should like to refer is the future of the Canadian National steamship service to the West Indies. I followed with considerable interest the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and the hon. member for Cape Breton South in connection with the Canadian merchant marine. I agree without hesitation with the principle which they enunciated of the importance of the government doing everything it reasonably and properly can do to maintain at least a minimum of a Canadian flag deep-sea fleet.

However, I was struck by the fact that the Canadian National Steamships company, by its operation of the West Indies service, has given an example of the maintenance of a Canadian merchant marine in a most competitive field of deep-sea operations. I congratulate the Canadian National steamships and the minister upon the fact that the freight service afforded by the Canadian National steamships between the West Indies and the Atlantic ports of Canada has been maintained. The minister made it plain in the house during this session that the purpose is to continue and maintain that service.

Unfortunately the last two survivors of that famous fleet of "Lady" boats which provided such excellent passenger service between the Atlantic ports of Canada and the West Indies and South America were withdrawn from service last year. We were all sorry to see the "Lady" boats go, but apparently it was an inevitable step. However, from the point of view of the maintenance of trade between the maritime provinces of Canada and the West Indies, which is a most important aspect of the trade of the maritime provinces, a cargo service is most important. We congratulate the government upon having been able to maintain that service and we look forward with confidence to its continuation in spite of the great difficulties which Canadian merchant marine operators are finding in keeping Canadian ships on the trade routes of the world. The fact that the government and the Canadian National steamships have been able to keep their ships under Canadian registry, to employ Canadian crews, and to pay Canadian scales of wages is I think a real accomplishment. It shows that the will of the operator is an important factor in the problem of keeping the Canadian merchant marine on the seas.

In referring to Canadian National Railways operations I should like to bring to the attention of the minister the need for the extension of the Nova Scotian hotel in Halifax operated by Canadian National Railways. We are glad to note that the Canadian National Railways are going to provide much-needed hotel facilities in Montreal which will form an important part of their operations in central Canada.

The Nova Scotian hotel has been one of the successful operating hotels of the Canadian National system ever since it was opened in the early thirties. I am sure that the minister is aware that last year Halifax had the highest percentage of occupancy of hotel rooms of any city in Canada. The facilities of the Nova Scotian and the other hotels in Halifax were taxed more than were the facilities of any other hotels in this country. There is a real need for additional hotel accommodation and I hope that the railway and the minister will consider the possibility of some extension to the Nova Scotian hotel.

Another matter of real importance to Halifax is, as the minister knows, the provision of a civilian airport to meet the needs of Trans-Canada Air Lines and other operators of civil air transport in the area. Over the past several years the department has conducted a careful and thorough weather survey in order to find the most favourable site for such an airport. We were pleased when the minister announced some weeks ago that the results of the weather surveys in the Kelly lake area were sufficiently favourable to justify a ground survey in order to establish the feasibility of constructing an airport at that point.

I hope that that survey will proceed as promptly as possible and I hope that as a result of the findings therefrom the department and the city of Halifax will be able to get together and negotiate an arrangement for the construction of that much-needed addition to the transportation facilities of the province of Nova Scotia, the city of Halifax and the surrounding communities.

The concluding matter that I want to mention this evening, Mr. Chairman, is in connection with the building of the causeway across the strait of Canso. This very beneficial and important project is proceeding most satisfactorily. I had the privilege of visiting the scene of the operations late last fall and was taken over the whole project by the contractor's superintendent. It is really a most impressive work. The volume and weight of rock involved are somewhat staggering, and the progress being made was most satisfying.

I was delighted to hear the minister say this afternoon that the rock-fill dam portion of the work is proceeding ahead of schedule. To some extent that is because the tide and ice conditions in the strait during the winter were not found to interfere with the operation as much as had been originally expected. The department is to be congratulated on its participation in the project and in the excellent co-operation which it is giving to the Nova Scotia department of public works and highways, which is jointly financing this great undertaking. It was known to be the ambition of our late premier, the Hon. Angus L. Macdonald, that on the opening of the causeway he would be able to lead one hundred pipers across this great new highway playing "The Road to the Isles". I do hope the minister will do what he can to see that when that great causeway is opened those one hundred pipers are there and perhaps he will lead them across, playing that great Scottish anthem.

Mr. Bell: Before beginning my brief remarks this evening, Mr. Chairman, may I say it is significant that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has complimented you on your very fine presentation of the various estimates of the department. It was a pleasure to be able to line up generally the various expenditures that will be taking place.

As many may know, this coming Sunday, May 16, is "Battle of the Atlantic Sunday". That is the day when we pay tribute to the men of the Canadian navy and to the men of the Canadian merchant marine. It is appropriate that we are discussing the merchant navy tonight. I should like to go back to 1945 and review the picture. At the end of the war all countries were in an abnormal condition. We saw them all making plans for their future trade and merchant navies. Finland comes to my mind first. They had a very poor merchant marine. I know it was considered to be perhaps the oldest in the world. They have made great strides and now have one of the most modern merchant navies afloat. I think of the Irish boats, too, which come into Saint John. They have also increased the Irish line to quite a considerable extent. Germany also is now back in the business with a vengeance. I had the pleasure last winter of viewing a German ship in Saint John, and I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that there are none finer at sea today. We also have heard in recent days of Russia making overtures to twenty different shipyards across the country in an effort to have some ships built here by us.

We know also of the position of the United States and Great Britain in respect to their merchant marines. But what is Canada's attitude today? After the war there were 176 ships in the Park Steamships lines. This was a crown corporation, and we all had hopes that some ships would at least be continued in the post-war years. There are statements on record in the various reports of the Canadian maritime commission. The second report is significant in this regard. We also have statements of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce that generally some effort would be made to continue a small fleet. But what is the position today? It is obvious that the government is scrapping our merchant fleet. The thing that annoys me more than anything is that they are not even scrapping it in a businesslike way.

A lot of statements have been made to the effect that there is no definite policy about Canada's merchant marine. I feel that there has been a definite policy right along, namely, they are not going to do anything about it.

I should like to review one or two points without being too repetitious, Mr. Chairman, in this respect. There is ample justification for a merchant marine in Canada. I think firstly of trade. We all know that trade and merchant shipping go together. If we are to be considered as a great trading nation we must have a worth-while fleet. Secondly, I also think of shipbuilding. It is important to me down in Saint John that we continue our great shipbuilding of the war years. To be building only a few naval vessels is not enough. When one travels around the world he finds it wonderful to be able to say: "There is a ship which was made in Canada, flying the red duster".

Thirdly, and I think the most weighty argument, is that of defence. During the last war we pooled our ships. The ships of all the allies were pooled into a corporation called the British war transport, and they had the allocation of the ships to needy places around the world. I understand that a plan similar to that is being considered by NATO today. We know from the last war and we know today that it is just like sitting down at the table for a game of cards. You have to be able to back up your hand, and if you want consideration in wartime you must have a merchant fleet.

I think of the training of personnel and the difficulty we had to place men on our merchant ships in the second world war. It takes at least three years to train men. We had to go to the United Kingdom for those personnel. We must continue to have a merchant fleet if only for the training of personnel.

Another thought that comes to my mind in defence is the business of naval escorts. We are building up a very proud fleet of naval escort vessels that are second to none in the world; but I ask this question, Mr. Chairman: What are those vessels to escort? There must be some ships for them, and surely we want to go all the way and have some merchant ships of our own to escort.

I ask the question: Why have we no merchant fleet, or why is it dwindling away? There have been suggestions that seamen were the cause of our decline in the merchant navy. Various criticisms are made of the strike in the post-war years which crippled our fleet. I hold no brief for the seamen, but I do not think this was the cause. I do not think that the ship owners are entirely to blame. There have been charges of excess profits; but the basic trouble that we know is the high cost of operation of those ships at sea. Naturally it is owing to the fact that we have an artificially high standard of living in Canada. You cannot blame seamen who are going to sea wanting conditions similar to those of their friends at home.

It is an indisputable fact that we have high costs with which to contend, but there is one far more significant reason in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, which has not been dwelt upon by anyone this evening. I suggest the main reason we have not now a merchant fleet and have not had one since the war is that we are a nation of landlubbers. Ottawa reflects the national mind and no consideration has been given to our seafaring provinces. When the time arrives to build a Canadian railway and subsidize it we can do that very well, but when it comes to building a fleet then the people of central Canada who do not know or understand the sea cannot visualize the problems facing these provinces.

Our trade with Britain is an example of this attitude. We have lost our traditional United Kingdom markets, though our trade picture is not too bad at present. The traffic now is across the border and it is impossible to get anyone in the central provinces to listen to the fact that trade with the United Kingdom is a lost cause.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I thought of trying to obtain a piece of poetry which would present this case, but on reflection I decided the situation had gone too far. Those of us who live in Halifax and Saint John do not like to see foreign flags flying on all the ships in our harbours. I feel that if we had someone with a strong voice here in Ottawa to speak about these things then conditions might perhaps be better. The Minister of Transport is interested in the St. Lawrence seaway; the Minister of Agriculture is interested in wheat; but who have we in the cabinet here who is interested in the sea and the merchant navy? There is no one. I suggest that that is the main reason why no consideration has been given to the establishment of a merchant navy.

I would like to draw to the minister's attention one other matter in connection with the subsidy which has already been mentioned this evening. I do not feel we should be alarmed about this subsidy and accept the suggestion that we are only throwing our money away. The only time since the war when our merchant fleet had a subsidy was in 1949, and I believe then there was a subsidy of $3 million on 37 vessels. Statements have been made in the press and elsewhere that this money was merely thrown away and that our fleet was at an end, but I would like to put on record, Mr. Chairman, that this subsidy led to $12 million in federal and provincial taxes, $16 million in wages paid to Canadians and the spending of $7 million on repairs in Canadian shipyards.

There is one other matter to which I would like to refer and that is that with atomic warfare changing the picture every day surely this is the time for us to make plans for a new modern fleet. We would be the first in the field in this connection. In that regard I would like to read a short excerpt from an article in the Globe and Mail dated February 13, 1954, written by William Sclater who has a merchant navy and R.C.N. background. He is considered an authority on modern sea warfare. The article is entitled "A-Subs Pose New Problems for Sailors" and it reads as follows:

> Canada, which has been getting rid of her obsolete war surplus freighter fleet by sale and by transfer of some to British registry, with a proviso that they be returned to Canadian registry in the event of war emergency is in an excellent position to set about laying the foundation for a real modern merchant marine of her own, for the first time.
> With her atomic resources, good shipyards, marine architects and designers, she has plentiful ability, nor is there any real lack of sea-minded Canadian youth to man a small merchant fleet. The coming of the St. Lawrence seaway is another factor. There is, too, the possibility that a modern properly operated merchant marine may do what previous attempts with obsolete ships failed to do, and that is pay its way.
> With British seapower at its lowest ebb in centuries and our present reliance being placed in what, at the best, could only be described as a doubtful dependency upon the sea power of other nations for war emergency, the need for an efficient small merchant marine of our own, comprising perhaps 50 ships built in our own shipyards, so that they, too, may be maintained, and built to the requirements of war emergency, is now a paramount need in the interests of our national security.

I leave these thoughts with you, Mr. Chairman, on the merchant marine.

I would like now to refer briefly to the St. Lawrence seaway. I would not like to say that we in the maritimes are unhappy about the seaway, but we are still wary and doubtful as to just what it will mean to us. I myself am a little bit disappointed that in our acquiescence to the seaway project we did not take a lesson from those in the New England states who lobbied for various compromises while we were rendering our full support. That may be the fault of our political system. It may be the fault of hon. members here or there may be other reasons, but I know that Senator Kennedy in Boston and Senator Margaret Chase Smith in Maine were able to bicker and lobby at that time and obtain considerable concessions for their own areas. I feel that as the St. Lawrence seaway project develops we should be given consideration in regard to the problems which we ourselves face.

There is one other matter the St. Lawrence seaway brings to my mind and I will be pressing the minister for some kind of statement. I would like to know what is planned in regard to this seaway during winter months. I have not seen very much in the press, with the exception of one article, in this regard and I am interested in the probability of keeping the St. Lawrence seaway open. We should have had an engineering report on that matter for though it is obvious that ships cannot go up the St. Lawrence today for danger of fresh water ice, we do want to know what the department plans in this regard.

I would like to say a word or two on the national harbours board as its operations apply to Saint John. We hope that the dredging which has been conducted in the past will be carried out in the same manner in future. There has been some difficulty lately in getting tankers into the city. I am not sure whether the difficulties arise in connection with the national harbours board's section of our port but I do hope dredging will continue in the same fine manner in which it has been conducted in the past.

Another matter is the fishing licences issued for the port and I am given to understand that the national harbours board has certain authority and rights regarding the auctioning of weirs in the harbour along the west side of the port. However, they are not authorities on fishing and they set arbitrary reserve prices for the weirs and consequently when the reserve price is not met the weirs are not used for the three-year term and they fall into decay. I feel that if these weirs are the responsibility of the national harbours board then they should be turned over to the Department of Fisheries where they can be administered to better advantage.

We are pleased to see that the Pugsley extension in Saint John is being continued. It is much needed there and we hope that pretty soon we shall see some lovely gleaming sheds on this new Pugsley wharf. We are also pleased to note that a new lighthouse supply and buoy vessel is being lined up for Saint John. In that regard we note the consideration given to us.

I should like to mention a remark or two made this evening. In his remarks the hon. member for Cape Breton South said that the season in the St. Lawrence is short enough. I hope nobody will agree with that statement. The complaint we are making—and it is the one that I have made before—is that the season in the St. Lawrence is much too long now. The hon. member for Halifax also made a statement which I, coming from the maritimes, would not wish to be associated in any way. It was to the effect that they were satisfied with the traffic through their port. Please, Mr. Chairman, do not think that I am satisfied at all with any port traffic that we have in Saint John or anywhere in the maritimes.

Mr. MacInnis: Coming as I do from probably the greatest maritime city in Canada, I suppose I should say something on this item. Like most other members—at least those from the two coasts—I have been bombarded during the last two years with propaganda from those who want a subsidy for the building of a Canadian merchant marine. That may possibly be the best way of building a merchant marine in Canada. But having regard to what has been accomplished following both world wars by those who are asking for the subsidy, in my opinion we should look at the matter carefully before we provide the subsidy. We should know exactly how much that subsidy is going to cost. If the Canadian government is going into the merchant marine business it seems to me that it had better go into it as a government itself and run the thing rather than by giving handouts to others. I am getting a little bit tired of those who are always extolling the virtues of private enterprise but who the moment they get into any sort of difficulty run to the government for a handout. That is exactly what we are up against at the present time.

Following the war we had a fairly sizeable merchant marine. Possibly those ships were slow and they might have had other faults. But those ships were turned over to private enterprise at extremely favourable prices. If private enterprise were not able to make a success of the thing, when they had this subsidy, what hope have we that they can make a success with any subsidy within reason that this or any other government would give them?

It seems to me that the time has arrived, not only when we should but when we shall be obliged to look upon the economy of this country as a whole in its relation to that of other countries. If we are going to try to be self-sufficient in every part of our economy, where are we going to find the markets for the things that we produce naturally in great abundance and have to sell? For instance, if we are going to build and man all our own ships, Great Britain, to whom we look to sell our wheat, salmon, lumber and fruit, to that extent at least will have to look somewhere else for the purchase of those things because evidently we are not going to give her an opportunity to pay for those things in the only way in which she can pay for them.

A few years ago in Vancouver I, along with some other members of parliament, attended a meeting called by the shipbuilding workers. One of the resolutions moved at the meeting was to the effect that the federal government be asked to pass legislation providing that all Canadian ship repairs would have to be done in Canadian yards. Two other members of parliament besides myself were at the meeting. When they were asked for their opinion on the matter they said that they did not have any. When I was asked for my opinion I told them that I was opposed to the motion because the moment we began doing this sort of thing, other countries would retaliate by insisting that their ships be built in their yards. I said then the same thing as I say now, namely that if we expect other countries to buy our goods we shall have to give those countries an opportunity to provide us with the goods and services with which they can provide us.

We have come to the stage where we must adopt co-operation in economic matters not only in our domestic affairs amongst ourselves but amongst nations. The nations of the world will have to adopt co-operation instead of competition in economic matters. The mere suggestion now that Canada should subsidize a merchant marine is proof positive that private enterprise in this country cannot operate a merchant marine without government assistance. As I said before, every time industry gets into difficulties are we going to provide means, either by tariffs or by subsidy, to see that that industry is going to be self-sufficient or to stay in the competitive field? That is not competition at all.

I do not know what the government's intention is in this matter, but I would just offer to it the advice that before it subsidizes a merchant marine it should lay before the House of Commons a comprehensive plan of what that subsidy involves, showing not only what it will be necessary to provide this year but what it will be necessary to provide in succeeding years. It might be desirable that we should run our own merchant marine. But let me say again that if every country today is going to make itself self-sufficient in those things in which it thinks it should be self-sufficient, or if we are going to make ourselves self-sufficient in all things, all we shall be doing is to make ourselves self-sufficient in poverty. That is not the way that we shall have to carry on from this point forward.

Item stands.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall start with the Post Office Department and then take the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. After those have been disposed of, we shall take whatever legislation may be on the order paper.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Engineering and water resources branch—

Water resources division—

314. To provide for studies and surveys of the Columbia river watershed in Canada, $377,400.

Northern administration and lands branch—

321. Lands division—administration of territorial and public lands; seed grain collections, $383,632.

Northern administration division—

322. Administration including a grant of $5,000 to the Arctic Institute of North America, $212,515.

Northwest Territories, including Wood Buffalo park and Eskimo affairs—

323. Operation and maintenance, $1,031,746.

324. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $340,032.

Forest conservation and wildlife management including Wood Buffalo park—

325. Operation and maintenance, $448,219.

326. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $111,157.

Yukon Territory, including forest conservation—

327. Operation and maintenance, $517,910.

328. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $58,395.

Forestry branch—

329. Branch administration, $111,646.

Forest research division—

330. Operation and maintenance, $989,491.

331. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $65,870.

Forestry operations division—

332. Administration, operation and maintenance, $216,100.

333. To provide for contributions to the provinces for assistance in forest inventory and reforestation in accordance with agreements that have been or may be entered into by Canada and the provinces, $1,225,000.

334. To provide for a contribution to the province of New Brunswick for assistance in a program designed to combat the spruce budworm infestation, in accordance with an agreement entered into by Canada and the province, $500,000.

Forest products laboratories division—

335. Operation and maintenance, $577,589.

336. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $35,265.

337. Grant to Canadian Forestry Association, $10,000.

338. Grant to Pulp and Paper Research Institute of Canada, $100,000.

Eastern Rockies forest conservation board—

339. Remuneration and expenses of federal members of the board, $12,350.

Canadian government travel bureau—

340. To assist in promoting the tourist business in Canada, $1,561,407.

Loans, investments and advances—

539. To authorize and provide for a continuing special account in the consolidated revenue fund to which shall be charged expenditures incurred by the Lake of the Woods control board in respect of the regulation of the waters in the Winnipeg river watershed and expenditures incurred under the terms of the Lac Seul Conservation Act, 1928, recoverable from the province of Manitoba and to which shall be credited amounts recovered, in the case of Lac Seul, under the terms of agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Manitoba appearing in the schedule to the British North America Act, 1930, and in the case of the Lake of the Woods control board, under the terms of the agreement among the government of Canada, the government of the province of Ontario and the government of the province of Manitoba, appearing in the schedule to the British North America Act, 1930; the balance outstanding in the account at any time not to exceed $35,000.

Loans, investments and advances—

540. To provide for loans in the present and ensuing fiscal years not exceeding in the aggregate $1,000,000 to the government of the Yukon Territory for the purpose of lending such money to the city of Whitehorse for providing adequate water distribution and sewage disposal systems, the loans to be made to the said territory in accordance with the terms of an agreement to be entered into between the government of the Yukon Territory and the government of Canada; and to authorize the commissioner in council to make ordinances for the borrowing and lending of such money by the commissioner of the Yukon Territory on behalf of the territory; amount required in the present fiscal year, $700,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 14, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay upon the table a report from the civil service commission respecting the staff of the library of parliament.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF UNITED KINGDOM SEAMEN—REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg). It arises out of a press dispatch in this morning's Montreal Gazette captioned "Eighteen More U. K. Sailors Arrested".

Can the minister inform the house if any action is contemplated by his department to intervene in the dispute so as to assure uninterrupted coal deliveries from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Montreal?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Cape Breton South for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The situation appears to be as follows:

(1) The ship to which reference is made in the Montreal Gazette report is under United Kingdom registry and the members of the crew have been engaged under United Kingdom articles.

(2) The members of the crew are affiliated with the National Union of Seamen of the United Kingdom.

(3) Neither the owner nor operator of the ship nor the crew members, as far as industrial relations matters are concerned, are under the jurisdiction of the federal Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

(4) The United Kingdom National Union of Seamen has repudiated the strike action on the part of the crew members.

(5) No request has been made to this department by the owners or operators of the ship or by the union for conciliation services.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT LOAN ON CURRENT INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). Would the minister care to comment on the likely effect, if any, on current interest rates, of the new loan being currently floated?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I always hesitate to assume the role of prophet and I do not think I should do so here. The return on the new bond is in line with the present return on outstanding long-term government bonds.

Mr. Fleming: That is very informative.

FLOODS

FRASER RIVER—REQUEST FOR REPORTS ON WATER LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters)? The people of Burnaby-Richmond are expressing concern over the late run-off of water in the Fraser river, and I would ask the minister to instruct his officials in New Westminster to give him daily reports on the situation.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): I think that would be a matter more properly within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is responsible for the water resources division.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am infomed that daily reports on the level of the Fraser river are sent to our water resources office in Vancouver. It is understood that, as in previous years, if the situation warrants it those daily reports will be sent to Ottawa.

TRADE

PROSPECTIVE AGREEMENTS WITH SPAIN AND PORTUGAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, if, as one is informed, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) is about to leave for Spain and Portugal in the hope of assisting in the negotiations for a trade treaty there, may one wish him bon voyage and success in his mission.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

341. Departmental administration, $1,316,383.

Hon. Alcide Coté (Postmaster General): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a brief statement in regard to the operations of the postal service which I hope will be of assistance in the discussion of these estimates.

In the first place, I wish to refer to the financial result of the operations which terminated on the 31st March this year. As I indicated during previous discussions, the outlook was that there would be a deficit for the fiscal year 1953-54. This is actually the case.

The total revenue is slightly more than for the previous fiscal year. It is approximately $130 million. In other words, the increase in revenue due to increased volume has more than counterbalanced the reduction in revenue due to the elimination of postage for tax purposes.

Expenditures have sharply increased from approximately $123 million to approximately $132,500,000 so that instead of a surplus of $6,500,000 recorded at the end of the fiscal year 1952-53, there is a deficit of approximately $2,500,000.

No doubt hon. members will be interested in knowing what have been the results of the adjustments made in the rates of payment to mail contractors under the amendments which were agreed to by the house in May 1953. Approximately 4,000 applications for adjustment have been received. Of this number 3,700 have already been processed and 300 are still under consideration. Of the 3,700 cases already dealt with, 2,600 increases have been granted. The average amount of the adjustment is 18 per cent or a total of $700,000 per annum. The applications received were not as numerous as we had anticipated. In some cases, the applications were received late in the year so that the total payments authorized were not as great as we had expected. Applications continue to be received and although the amount authorized so far is, as I have already indicated, $700,000 per annum, it is expected that by the end of the present fiscal year the total amount of the adjustments will be reasonably close to the $1,500,000 which it was estimated the adjustments would cost.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Dealing with the general question of land transportation, may I say that the amount expended during the fiscal year just closed was approximately $17 million. The estimate for the fiscal year 1954 is close to $20 million, an increase of about $3 million. Of this amount $1,500,000 is to cover adjustments already authorized last year and those which will be granted this year as a result of applications which undoubtedly will be received. It is estimated that the number of applications will be about the same as last year. Many contractors who were not eligible last year will now qualify in view of the fact that they have held their contracts for at least the two years stipulated in the amendments to the Post Office Act. In addition to this $1,500,000 for adjustments, it is estimated that a further $1,500,000 will be required for improvements, modifications, extensions, changes in frequency and the like in the various types of service which come under this heading.

As hon. members are aware, two major changes became effective at the beginning of this fiscal year: the introduction of the five-day 40-hour week and the increase in letter rates of postage. It is rather too early to give any comprehensive statement of the effect of these two major measures. I can say, however, that the forecast made in regard to the additional expenditure required seems to be confirmed. In other words, the cost of the increase in salaries will be in the neighbourhood of $7 million and the cost of the five-day week will at least reach the amount we estimated, namely, $5 million. These two items together with the amount to cover the payments to mail contractors for rate adjustments bring the total additional annual expenditure for these special items to $13,500,000, the estimate I gave during the previous discussion on letter postage rates. To this of course must be added additional amounts to provide for developments, such as extensions of mail services, increased frequencies, new routes, et cetera. The estimate for increases in land services is $1,500,000 for the present fiscal year. This is in addition to the amount required for rate adjustments.

It is estimated that the total increase for 1954-55 over expenditures for 1953-54 will be approximately $17 million. This will be offset to a large extent by the additional revenue which we expect to derive from increased rates of postage and we hope by continued efficient and economical operations also to overcome the deficit of $2,500,000 for the fiscal year which ended on March 31.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, the statement which the minister has made has given us a little bit of information with regard to operations for the year which has ended to which I should like to refer in a few moments. However, before doing so, I should like to make a few general comments, and to say again what I have said on previous occasions, namely that it is my opinion that of all the services which the government is called upon to render to the people of the Dominion of Canada, probably that rendered by the post office is the closest to the individual. When that service goes awry, it is a matter of major importance not only to members of the staff but also to every individual who has suffered by reason of even the slightest deviation from the usual services which the department is called upon to supply. If the administration is guilty of inefficiency or if it makes mistakes which are more or less costly, the result cannot help being an unsettled condition in the staff with resultant unhappiness.

A few months ago this house saw fit to sanction the increase in the postal rates. The new rates came into effect on the 1st of April, a little bit over a month ago. As I said at that time, the increase in rates was scarcely consistent with the services which had been curtailed in the past little while by the department. In particular I referred to the institution of the one-a-day delivery on residential walks in urban centres. This system has been in effect for some time now and while there has been some slight adjustment I would strongly urge the Postmaster General to reconsider this whole question again this year.

I believe that the two-a-day delivery could easily be instituted without any great increase in cost. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, if you will recall the time when the first reports were received after the introduction of the one-a-day delivery, you will remember that it was apparent that rather than there being a saving of money, there had actually been a loss. Of course it is understood that, when any system is changed, there is a consequent dislocation which causes some inefficiencies for the time being. But this particular matter of one-a-day deliveries has not improved in the intervening months. People are suffering today by reason of this restriction of service just as much as they did at the start. I know of a number of cases—and I daresay the minister will have a number of specific instances brought to his attention because they have certainly been brought to mine—when quite unreasonable delays in delivery resulted from the one-a-day delivery and the hours at which mail reached the central clearing station.

Some time ago when the deputy postmaster general was asked whether or not there would be a return to twice-a-day delivery, he said he had heard of no plans to resume the two-a-day delivery. I hope that in the intervening time the department has reconsidered its decision and that before long they will find it expedient to reintroduce the two-a-day delivery on residential walks in urban centres.

In his remarks a few minutes ago the minister spoke about the amount that would be needed for extension of services. At another point in his remarks he referred to new routes which he expected would be instituted.

I should like to draw particular attention to the situation that exists in practically all fast growing suburban areas. These suburban areas, areas on the fringe of settled urban areas, are being built up and the people there are frequently placed in the peculiar position of having to go four or five miles to pick up their mail. At the same time there is mail delivery service that goes past the end of their streets, possibly one or two blocks away, but it has not been extended to the streets on which they are residing. These are particularly irritating matters to the householder. In some cases they have been going on for a long time. It seems as though it takes months, sometimes even years, to institute a mail delivery route in an area which is otherwise almost completely urbanized.

I would urge the minister to pay particular attention to the requests that will be made to his department from time to time for the extension of routes to areas which in all other respects are certainly urbanized. I had one specific case brought to my attention not long ago in the Walkerville area. There is a suburban area there called Riverside. The people have all sorts of delivery services, delivery of bread, delivery of milk and so on, but there is no mail delivery. The postman walks past the end of the streets a mere block and a half away but these people have to travel four and a half miles to pick up their mail at the Walkerville post office.

There are many matters that throughout the months cause irritation to the individual taxpayer of this country. There is one in particular I want to draw to the minister's attention. I refer to the charge made for government postcards in the post offices. It is about three years, I think, since it was decided to make a charge for the actual stock on which the stamps are printed. I might point out that there is no other printing on the card. Now that the postage rates have gone up to two cents for printed matter and four cents for regular post cards, it means that the post office is charging an extra cent on each card for the stock on which the postage stamp is printed. If people who use these cards commercially go to a post office to procure a supply of 100 or more they find that they pay 16 cents a hundred for them.

Having had some little experience in the calculation of costs of printing stock, I inquired into the matter and found that the stock from which these post cards are printed can be purchased wholesale for a little better than 12½ cents a hundred, about $1.26 a thousand. I realize there is some work entailed in cutting the cards and in banding them in lots of one hundred, but nevertheless it would seem to me that the department is at least covering its cost at 16 cents a hundred. The price of 16 cents a hundred is approximately a sixth of a cent per card and yet the average individual who wants such a card pays a cent for it.

In addition, I would think that the department certainly does not pay the same rate for this stock at which it is sold to the average industrial user because undoubtedly they buy in such quantities that they get quantity discounts. That would lower the cost considerably below the figure I have cited. I would also point out that in any store a person can purchase very nice looking picture postcards printed in several colours, printed not only on one side but on both sides, at the price of four for a nickel. The producer of these cards makes a profit. It is a commercial enterprise. He buys the stock, prints the cards on both sides and sells them for a cent and a quarter while the government does nothing but print the stamp on the card. They would have to print the stamps in any event and the result is that they are charging people a cent for a blank card.

I think the minister might be well advised to take this matter into consideration. I would suggest, even if it were found necessary to sell commercial quantities at 20 cents a hundred rather than 16, that when these cards are sold one, two or three at a time they should be sold just for the price of the stamp alone. The department should forget about the stock because undoubtedly much the larger proportion of these cards is sold in commercial quantities in any event. Such a move would not affect the revenue of the department to any appreciable degree. In fact, I think the minister will probably find that the number of cards sold individually is very small. Particularly now that the rates have been raised, this matter is a source of great annoyance to those persons who buy one card and pay their two cents or four cents as the case may be in that they have to pay an additional cent for the piece of paper on which it is printed.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

I should also like to ask the minister whether or not he can inform the house as to the practice of carrying consignments of magazines and newspapers in passenger seats on T.C.A. routes. I think this matter was brought up before when we were discussing another phase of postal activity but no answer was given. I should like to know whether this is a practice of the department and, if so, is it a special arrangement between the Post Office Department and Trans-Canada Air Lines, and on what basis? Why is it thought wise to transport second and third class mail, newspapers and so on, in that manner, when first class mail is carried in the regular luggage or mail compartments of the planes?

When the Prime Minister announced to the house the other day the list of further legislation to be introduced at this session he mentioned that there would be a further amendment to the Post Office Act. I am sure every member of the house is curious as to what is contemplated by the Postmaster General. We would be very glad to know just what is the nature of the amendments to the Post Office Act which the Prime Minister mentioned on April 30 along with several other matters. I would think that some intimation of what is contemplated would have a definite bearing on the discussion of these estimates. I had hoped that when the Postmaster General was making his preliminary statement he would inform us of the nature of the amendments to the Post Office Act that it is intended to introduce at the current session.

I should like to speak for a few moments on the subject of the staff of the Post Office Department. I must say this is a matter on which I feel rather strongly. In the last few years there has grown up in all parts of this country a most deplorable antagonism between the staff and management of the Post Office Department. In fact I do not know of any other department of the government where such antagonism exists, certainly not to the degree that it does in the Post Office Department. I think it is about time that we asked ourselves what is the reason for this feeling within a service that is so close and so necessary to the people of this country.

When the minister announced a few months ago that the letter carriers in certain areas would be placed on the 40-hour week there was considerable discussion as to the method by which these arrangements were to be put into effect. For some time there had been what were known as supervisory letter carriers. I think that those who are familiar with the work done by the supervisory letter carriers would agree with me that the name itself is definitely a misnomer. The position is not a supervisory position but is a relief position. These men are relief men who pick up various walks when the regular carrier is having a day off or is on holidays. It seems to me that the Post Office Department could very well have augmented the staff of letter carriers and worked out a rotation system without enlarging the position of the supervisory letter carrier. It stands to reason that whether the carriers rotate day by day or whether they rotate week by week, you are going to have to increase your staff by the same number of men. I still cannot see the necessity for this supervisory position.

As I said before, it is a relief position, and not a supervisory position at all. The department has not been satisfied to dignify the position by a properly descriptive name. When suggestions were made that the man might be called a relief carrier, they came up with somewhat of a tongue twister and said they wanted to call him a multiple walk carrier or some such name as that. It does seem that everything must be done in the most complicated way and called by the most complicated name.

Originally a carrier had to have at least one year's service before he could apply for this position. Now any carrier, regardless of the length of his service, can apply and some have been appointed to this position with less than six months' actual experience. It is just one of the problems that is causing considerable concern to the members of the post office staff, particularly amongst the carriers who have had years of experience. It appears to me that about one in every four carriers will be a supervisory letter carrier. He works on a higher salary and has certain advantages over the men with longer years of service. As I said before, this is a peculiarly non-descriptive title for the position, and undoubtedly has been a cause for concern and annoyance to the experienced carriers.

I hope that the added problem of seniority in the granting of holidays has now been ironed out to the satisfaction of all staffs, and we will not have any more of this "monkey business" of placing a supervisory carrier over those with longer experience when it comes to the selection of holidays. In my estimation, this whole matter is just one more instance of the provocative steps which have been taken by the administration of the department, and which have resulted in the bad feeling which undoubtedly exists in many parts of the department.

Further with regard to the staff, I notice from the details of the estimates on page 416 that it would seem apparent some of the stenographers have been reclassified as senior transcribers; at least, that is the only explanation I can draw from the information contained on that page. There is quite a reduction in the number of stenographers in the grades 2B, 2A and 1, and then there is a new position, senior transcriber, grades 1 and 2, which did not exist previously. I would assume, therefore, that these stenographers must have been reclassified. I would ask the minister if he could give us an explanation of that particular incident, because it would be interesting to the house to know whether it is a doubling of staff or whether it is actually the creation of a new position.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, it is now well over a year since the date of the last report from the Post Office Department. It is true that the minister gave us a few figures concerning the financial results of the last year of operations, but there are other matters in which the members of this house are keenly interested. Undoubtedly it will be some time before we can expect a full report of the department for the year ending March 31, 1954. In the meantime, some indication of the extent to which the recommendations of Woods and Gordon have been adopted, and the implementation which has been effected, would be welcomed by all members of this house.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that the items which appear in the estimates under the minister's department are few in number and it is rather difficult to pinpoint your questions to any one particular item. I would ask the minister to answer at the suitable place in the debate, some of these questions that I have asked him today.

Mr. Knight: I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to make any comprehensive survey of postal affairs. I do want to draw to the attention of the minister some of the things that employees in my own city feel at the moment. Before doing that I might say that I have been having my ear to the ground and I find rather general dissatisfaction with the new increase in postal rates. I suppose that was only to be expected. People do not like to pay out their money in any case, and it does not help when they realize that the four-cent rate did give sufficient return to carry on the work with some profit in the first class division. They do feel that if certain periodicals—I am not here speaking against it—or some weekly newspapers are to be carried on a second class rate or under a subsidized rate, as was mentioned in the house some time ago, the burden should not be borne by the people who use the first class mails.

I should like to say that I do not think we have any complaint in our city about the service so far as the general public is concerned. I believe the service is good. I feel our employees, and the organization generally, is efficient. But like my colleague, the member for Hamilton West, I feel I would be correct in saying that labour relations in the Post Office Department are not good. The employees have certain grievances, and one of them is that mentioned by the hon. member and which has certainly been mentioned many times. I note from a letter I have in my hand that there was a meeting of certain of these employees, the Saskatoon joint branch of Canadian postal employees and federated association of letter carriers. At this meeting certain resolutions were passed, copies of which were sent to me and I have no doubt to the minister as well. I feel it incumbent upon me, however, as the member for Saskatoon, to lay these matters before the minister publicly and ask him to comment perhaps on each of them.

One of these matters concerns priority in the matter of holidays. For years the principle of seniority has been established for choice of work and for holidays; that precedent has now been broken. There are certain arduous routes, particularly so because they are being carried by a man who is not familar with them, and who changes from one route to another, so is not familiar with the streets and addresses as the regular postman is. It seems to me that the Post Office Department is reluctant to pay anything extra for the men who work under these difficulties on these particular routes. The department has perhaps taken this other action as a sort of inducement—I do not like to use the word bribe—to induce these supervisory carriers to undertake that work. I do not think the supervisory carriers were particularly interested, even at a raise in pay, but I am going to suggest that some of the ordinary men would have been very pleased to carry on these duties for an additional $20 per month. I feel they should have been given that as an inducement, first of all, to do it, and as compensation for doing it at the end of their term.

Now, that is pretty much the situation. The letter which I have here accompanying the resolution states:

> This year, when the department wanted more supervisory letter carriers to provide relief in the 40-hour week set up, and not enough men volunteered for it, even with the $20 higher pay attached to it, it was apparently thought necessary to offer a sort of bribe, namely, the first choice of holidays over all carriers.

As I have said, this is a new precedent. It seems to me to be true that the idea of the rotation of holidays, while that would be a more equitable way of solving this problem, seems to be impossible in the post office service, or at least it has been found impossible up to the present.

Now before I go any further I wish to put on the record the three particular grievances these men have. I have already discussed the first one simply because my hon. friend from Hamilton West gave me a lead in that direction. The other can be discussed much more briefly.

The resolution as passed by the association of postal workers is in three parts. The first deals with supervisory letter carriers. They protest against the supervisory letter carriers being given seniority of holiday choice over all other letter carriers, regardless of length of service. That is the one with which I have just dealt.

The second one deals with grade 1 clerks getting less pay in smaller offices, though the work and the annual examinations are the same all over Canada. Personally I see some justice in that. I do not see why a man engaged in an industry or a factory in one part of the country should get less for doing the same kind of work. I would say that the principle of equal pay for equal work should operate in this regard. Looking at this from my general study of post office conditions, it seems to me that the cards are pretty badly stacked against the little fellow. You have a situation there where there is not equal pay for equal work just because these men happen to work in a smaller post office. I presume these people are working the same hours and working equally hard and I see no reason why the pay should be less in some districts than in others.

The third grievance deals with the question of why so many offices have not yet received the 40-hour week, and in this regard my claim would be largely the same. After all, I suppose the 40-hour week was granted on the principle that industry in these particular places worked on the same basis. I do not know whether that is a good criterion on which to judge. Again, I would point out that these people are surely all working for the same department. Their work is similar everywhere and I would suggest that a person in a small town would appreciate being on a 40-hour week just the same as those in the city where industry happens to have, shall I say, the habit of the 40-hour week.

For example, we have a little town on the edge of my constituency at Sutherland and

I do not suppose we ask our mechanics in that particular town to work for less money or longer hours than the corresponding worker in the larger city of Saskatoon. Yet, we find this anomaly existing everywhere in the Post Office Department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that is all I wish to say at present but I hope the minister will answer each of the points I have raised or give us his view on the matter in order that I may, as it were, render an account to my own constituents, who are particularly interested in regard to these three matters.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that we have any very harsh criticism to make today of the operation of the Post Office Department of Canada. I think people generally speaking are fairly well satisfied with the services they get, and frankly I must admit that while it is becoming rather a big business—at least its operating costs, running to about $128 million, are in the realm of big business—I do not believe the people of Canada have much to complain about.

There is one thing, though, I suppose we all complain about, and it is past history now by reason of the fact that the increase in postage rates went into effect on April 1. I have had quite a number of letters protesting against that increase. It has to be recognized, of course, that if people want a service from the government then they must be prepared to pay for it. Here is a service which is absolutely necessary. We must have our post offices; we must have our mail deliveries; we must have a system by which mail can be carried from one person to another and from one part of the country to another. That is an established service, and it is a service everyone requires. It is an established service in this as well as every other country in the world and it has been ever since the days of the ancient courier messages which had to be carried from one place to another.

In Canada, of course, it is getting to be what I might call big business. I think any department which costs between $128 and $130 million to operate must be recognized as big business. It would cost much more than that, of course, if we were to take into account the cost of their buildings as well, and therefore that figure is not quite an accurate picture.

The Post Office Department of Canada, whether big business or not, has still to be paid for, and I am not one of those who believe in the government going into anything when they are not able to swing it financially. We know many things have to be subsidized, but I do not believe the government should begin engaging in the types of business which are run at a loss. Here is one service we have to operate by the very reason of the necessity for it, and if we are not going to subsidize it then of course the cost must be met out of revenue.

The five cent rate has now gone into effect, though there is one advantage being derived from this increased rate, and that is that the five cent rate for the most part will carry mail much more rapidly because it is in reality an air mail service throughout Canada except in places where air transport is not available. Just the same, though, that five cent rate is quite a burden on the entire nation. It may not constitute much of a burden for the individual who writes a letter once a month. But it is a burden for those who write very many personal letters and for families and children who have to keep in touch by mail. One cent more on the rate may not be considered a great deal, but it must be added on to the over-all cost of living. Even if we disregard the cost to the individual we must remember that every business has to pay that five cent rate and this must be added on to their operating expenses and be reflected eventually in the general cost of living.

Therefore we cannot blame the people if they protest against this increase. There was a day when we used to talk of the penny postage, but that day has gone, I suppose forever. It would be very nice if we could return to the day when we could lick a one cent stamp and know that the letter would eventually arrive at its destination. But over the years there has been a continual increase until we have now reached the day when the first class mail rate is five cents. When the minister replies to the questions, I should like him to answer one or two of mine. Perhaps he is unable to answer this one; but I should like to know—if it is not too early and the figures happen to be available; he has had only one month to work on them—whether during the month of April, under the new rates, the revenues were higher or lower than those of the same month a year ago. I do not think we can get an accurate picture of what we want by taking the first month that the new rate was in effect. To get an accurate picture we would have to average it over the next year. Of course we cannot do that. We have been operating at the five cent rate for only a month. If the figures are available we should like to know what they are.

There is one other matter that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. It is not a new thing at all. I refer to the small country post office and the facilities that are available to carry on a dignified and adequate postal service. The minister will agree that the amount of money available in these post offices is such that the average country postmaster is not able to carry out that service with very much dignity. Our country post offices are usually pretty small and miserable affairs. I know it is a problem where there is not very much mail delivered in a small community. In a small rural community it is an expensive job if we are to put very much dignity into it. I refer not only to the rural post office in the sense of its being away from an inhabited community. Take communities of anywhere from one thousand people to three thousand. I must say that most of those post offices are not what they ought to be. The postmaster is dependent largely upon his own business or his own revenue to keep things going. Perhaps they have to rent small buildings and space is not available. Perhaps they are cramped in their quarters. There are many other features that make it almost impossible for a postmaster in one of those communities to carry on his postal service with the dignity that should be required in this service. I know that once again, if we say we should give a certain standard requirement, the answer is that the postmaster has to be paid more or the government must fork up still more money. The problem is there; I recognize that. But I do believe the minister can give some expression of views on what might be done in respect to the matter.

I have another matter to bring to the minister's attention. I understand that when new public buildings are contemplated, when the government feels that certain public buildings are needed—and I refer mostly to post office buildings—the general practice is that the Post Office Department will make recommendations to the Department of Public Works to have a post office built in this or that community. I should like to know from the minister whether that is the correct assumption, and, if it is, what is the backlog of recommendations that have not yet been adopted or accepted by the Department of Public Works.

It is very easy to make recommendations, and I know that the Post Office Department wants the best facilities possible and may—I am not sure that they do—recommend the building of many public buildings that will never be built. I do not know whether they would go that far or not, but I should like to know whether there is a backlog, and when the minister is answering I should like him also to tell us whether or not the recommendations are put before the Department of Public Works with any degree of priority. Are they taken in the order of their priority? In other words, if in one year, we will say, there are 50 public buildings recommended—my figures may be entirely out of line; it is only an illustration I am giving—there must be a first and there must be a last one recommended. Is there a priority there? Suppose the Department of Public Works does not go forward with these buildings: is it possible that next year the recommendation that was at the top may suddenly be shifted to the bottom and the priority upset in that fashion? I should like to know that. I have very good reasons for asking the question. Parliament has already approved certain public buildings that are not included in this year's estimates, and we do not want those that have already been approved to be dropped to the bottom somewhere and some other building take the priority. That would not be fair; it would not be just; it would not be good business and it would smack of politics. I should like the minister to give me some definite answer along that line.

Before I sit down may I thank the minister—perhaps this is under the public works department but it was not done without the recommendation of the Post Office Department—for what was done in my own little town of Vulcan, Alberta, where I live. It is a small village of about 1,500 people. It has not had the best post office, but, you know, it is surprising how people get used to something. It is not good enough, but they get used to it over the years. If we are not careful we can get accustomed to living in a very dirty room, especially if we live there long enough. It is strange, but people act that way, too. They get accustomed to things. Well, I believe the officials of the Post Office Department recommended that. They must have recognized that Vulcan needed a little better accommodation, and they must have made that recommendation because our quarters have been enlarged. We have not a public building there. Other communities in my constituency are larger, and I think they should have public buildings before my own town. Nevertheless the post office quarters in my own town have been enlarged; new boxes have been put in; a new front was put in and the people are quite pleased with the alterations.

I wish to say that I have not had a great deal to do with the officials of the Post Office Department who are responsible for post offices in my particular area, but on the occasions when I have had to approach them I have always found them courteous. I have always found them to be men who want to do a good job. They have to operate within regulations—they cannot break them; and I believe the officials there are men of integrity and men who want to do a really good job. I wish to say these things to them because it is nice to be able to meet officials, have them greet you courteously, and have them take your problems to heart and say: "Well, we will just see what can be done"—and then tell you in a straightforward way the reasons why certain things cannot be done. They are doing their business in a good way and we are pretty well satisfied.

The officials in the Calgary office who are responsible for much of my area have treated me quite courteously, quite well, and have gotten through a number of problems which I have presented to them—and I appreciate that.

In this group most of us live in rural areas —although some do not. The hon. member for Lethbridge, the hon. member for Medicine Hat, the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Edmonton East live in cities, but the rest of us are pretty well confined to the rural areas. I have not heard very much complaint and I do not rise now in any particularly critical spirit, except to make these observations and ask these questions.

Mr. Philpott: May I ask a question which might be answered when the other questions are being answered? I refer to the colour of first-class stamps. I understand that a few years ago there was some kind of an international convention requiring that all first-class stamps be red or of some standard colour. Now I see that the new ones are blue, and they are a lot like the colour of the purple ones which are four cents. I wonder if the minister could tell us if we are going back to the old standard first-class stamp—because I am getting quite a lot of mail on which I have to pay extra postage because people have not put enough on it.

Mrs. Fairclough: Blue is a good colour.

Mr. Nicholson: When the five-cent postage rate was up I was trying to get the minister to make a statement with regard to the policy of his department with respect to recommendations by defeated candidates and members of parliament. I find myself involved in a discussion in the paper with the former member for Mackenzie, Mr. Ferrie, my predecessor. I wish to make it clear now that I do not want to be consulted regarding the appointment of postmasters or on other decisions that should properly be decisions of the Post Office Department, and I would like the minister to give us some information as to what his policy is.

I have before me a sessional paper that was brought down some years ago, No. 159 of 1943. Colonel Underwood, who is with the Postmaster General now, played an important role in connection with this case and I would like to know whether he still has the sort of duties he had at that time and whether this same procedure is still followed.

I have a file here which goes back to April, 1942, when the postmaster at Endeavour, Saskatchewan, was short of funds. The inspector, who is now the superintendent in Saskatoon, found the shortage, took over the office, consulted the local Legion and appointed a person who seemed to be the best person in Endeavour to be acting postmaster. He reported to his superintendent in Saskatoon and the superintendent there in turn reported it to Ottawa. The next move was when Colonel Underwood notified the secretary of the provincial legion. He also wrote to Mr. Ross Barrie of Pelly, Saskatchewan, who happened to be the defeated candidate for Mackenzie at that time.

I want to make it clear that Mr. Barrie and I are very good friends. As a matter of fact, I think this is the sort of experience which persuaded Mr. Barrie that life was too short to get bogged down in this kind of controversy which took a lot of his time and made a lot of enemies.

Colonel Underwood wrote to Mr. Barrie on the 13th May; he wrote again on the 20th May, on the 1st June, on the 11th June, on the 23rd June and then on the 3rd July. That is very good service from a busy person like Colonel Underwood, who was then chief superintendent of the service. Now, I will just get the file before me. The Endeavour legion on July 5th objected to the decision that Mr. Barrie made. The man who was nominated by Mr. Barrie no longer lived in the district, and, according to post office regulations, he was not eligible. The president of the legion, as I said, took objection and Colonel Underwood wrote again on July 18th to Mr. Barrie. That letter is page 56 of this record. Then there is the official nomination. In this connection I would like the Postmaster General to state definitely whether this form is still used by the post office. It is a form of nomination for postmaster signed by Mr. J. Ross Barrie and the Postmaster General might indicate why they asked for a nomination at that time—and if they are still so asking. It is not known why this was done—just that Mr. J. Ross Barrie nominated Mr. Nelson R. McGregor for the job. This nomination is printed on government stationery—"Nomination for Postmaster"—there is given here the electoral district, the province, the office, revenue, and remuneration. Revenue for the previous year was $996.82 and the remuneration offered was $1,000. As I have indicated there was a great deal of correspondence. There was a personal and confidential letter from Mr. Barrie to Colonel Underwood. It appears in the file and, since it is dealing with public business, I am sure it was not considered as personal or confidential.

There is an official notification on the 8th August—everything was supposed to be signed, sealed and delivered. Mr. McGregor was appointed to take over. Then the Liberal executive came into the picture—the local Liberal association, provincial and federal. They wrote a letter to Mr. Hunter in Saskatoon and said:

> We kindly ask you to hold us abeyance the appointment of the postmaster at Endeavour and the appointment of Mr. McGregor. We, as association, recognize that Mr. McGregor is not a residence of Endeavour and do not wish him to succeed Mr. Izdebski as postmaster.

To make everything aboveboard they enclosed the minutes of their meeting, giving names of movers and seconders of various motions.

Things were getting pretty hot and I guess Mr. McGregor decided that life was too short to get into this controversy and he turned it down.

On the 28th August Mr. Barrie wrote to Mr. Underwood and there was a further air mail letter, and, on the 31st August, there is a letter to Mr. Barrie. There is another on the 3rd September and the acting chief wrote on the 21st September. A second appointee came into the picture and things were still hot. He finally declined. Then there was a letter of Mr. Barrie to the acting chief on October 7. Then there was a letter from the acting chief to Mr. Barrie on October 15 and one from Mr. Barrie to the acting chief on October 30. To bring the story to an end at last—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: Yes; I agree with the "hear, hear". It is a rather ridiculous story, but I am quoting from official documents.

Mr. Goode: Would my hon. friend answer a question? What year is he talking about?

Mr. Nicholson: I told the committee that when I started.

Mr. Goode: Is it 1943 that the hon. member is talking about?

Mr. Nicholson: That is right.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Noseworthy: He will bring it up to date later.

Mr. Nicholson: Colonel Underwood, who featured in this correspondence, is holding a responsible position. I hope that the Postmaster General will be able to tell us categorically that neither Colonel Underwood nor anyone else in the Post Office Department is placed in the ridiculous position that this file would indicate.

Finally, On December 18, Mr. Barrie threw up his hands. I remind the committee that the country was at war and the man who was appointed in the first place was a veteran of the first war. The only thing against him was that he did not have the O.K. of the local defeated Liberal candidate at the time. After all this correspondence, on December 18, Mr. Barrie finally threw up his hands and said, "Whatever the Post Office Department does will be O.K. with me", and the man who was appointed as temporary on April 16 became postmaster. The file was closed on January 7 of the following year with a final letter from Colonel Underwood to Mr. Barrie telling him that it is settled.

As I said, I should like the Postmaster General to tell us whether the form that was used at that time is still being used by the post office and whether or not his department must consult with the defeated candidates in various constituencies or with sitting members. I think it is fairly clear that if any department is going to be able to administer its business efficiently, it must get away from a system wherein the chief superintendent has to write so many letters. I find that 17 letters were writen by either the chief or the acting chief to Mr. Barrie whose status was that of defeated Liberal candidate at that particular time. I hope that the Postmaster General will give us a clear statement indicating how things now stand in the post office.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring some matters to the attention of the committee. I should like to preface my few remarks by the general observation that, in the nine years that I have had the honour to be a member of parliament, there has not been another time in my experience when so many complaints have reached me with regard to poor postal delivery service. I am not speaking simply of my own riding. I am speaking of complaints that one receives from various quarters about poor postal service. I have made it a point, I think in almost every case, to put these complaints before the minister. The minister is always courteous but the results are not particularly gratifying. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that the public of Canada feel, with justification, that when it was called upon, beginning April 1, to pay substantially increased postal rates, it was and is entitled to receive better service than it is now receiving. I do not refer only to the matter of the two deliveries a day in residential districts, although I include that matter. If we are going to have these substantially increased postal rates, we should have that kind of service. However, I am referring to other matters of wider effect as well.

The minister is aware of the fact that in the city of Toronto particularly, with the new metropolitan area established by law, there has been a good deal of confusion with regard to what is the local urban area within which the four cent postage rate applies. A great many people are still under the impression that with the enlargement by law of the metropolitan area, it is at least archaic that the postal service should set tight limits on the area within which the four cent local delivery rate applies. To a great many people in that area it has been annoying to find not only that their letters are required to bear on their covers the penalty of inadequate postage but that, under the new regulations, those letters are now returned to them. For instance, if someone in the metropolitan area puts a four cent stamp on a letter that happens to be going, we will say, to Willowdale or to some place within what is the Willowdale area but is nevertheless within the Toronto area according to general understanding, the letter is returned to him for increased postage plus penalty, and valuable time is wasted by that return. I would urge on the department that there should be a rationalization of the local delivery system with regard to deliveries within a metropolitan area like that existing in the Toronto district.

I do not intend to delay the committee, Mr. Chairman, by referring in detail to all of the complaints that have reached me with regard to inexcusably delayed deliveries. However, I wish to mention some of these complaints because I think they illustrate, as clearly as anything that one can place before the committee, precisely what their nature is. For instance, I have before me a cover addressed to a lady living on the street on which I live here in Ottawa. It is a perfectly proper address. This letter was mailed from Sudbury. It bears the stamp "Sudbury, December 16, 1953, 10.30 p.m." It reached Ottawa. It is properly addressed in a perfectly legible hand. I know the house well. Nevertheless this letter, on reaching the Ottawa post office, was returned marked "not in directory". Yet it is a residence in this city that anyone can see, and the envelope is very clearly addressed. The letter was returned to Sudbury and finally reached the recipient in Ottawa away on in January after a loss, as a result of poor handling and inefficiency in the department, of something like three weeks. Even taking account of the pressure on the postal services at Christmastime and the fact that temporary help is employed in such cases, I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that there can be no excuse whatever for inefficiency so glaring as that.

Then I have before me the cover of a letter which was mailed from Victoria, British Columbia, and which took from December 21 to January 11 to reach the addressee. I have another here with a Toronto postmark, December 19, 1953, perfectly clearly addressed to a proper address in Toronto. This one, if you please, was returned with the notation "not known here", although it was the address of the recipient and she was there. It is quite obvious there was no inquiry made. After being shuttled around in the mail it was eventually redelivered to the original and proper address on January 26, 1954.

It is for service like that that the people of this country are being called upon to pay substantially increased postal rates. It is no wonder they are not only irritated but outraged by these further impositions. Just yesterday I was spoken to by a gentleman who resides in Ottawa and he showed me two covers which suggest a very striking contrast. He received the two of them at the same time, on April 26, in the daily delivery in Ottawa. One came from England and was postmarked from Stoke-on-Trent at 5.30 p.m. on April 23. It was posted on the afternoon of April 23 and was delivered here in Ottawa on the morning of Monday, April 26. That was very good service by the trans-Atlantic air mail.

But let us see what happens with domestic mail. In the same delivery he received a letter postmarked from Toronto on Thursday, April 22. It took that letter from Thursday, when deposited in the Toronto post office, until Monday morning to be delivered here in Ottawa at an address which is quite accessible and well known. It was placed in the post office twenty-four hours before the letter posted at Stoke-on-Trent in England, and they arrived at the same time. Poor postal service between Toronto and Ottawa is not new. It has been referred to in the discussion on the estimates of the Post Office Department every year for a good many years past. Surely it should be possible to have overnight service between two large cities as closely connected as Toronto and Ottawa with a high volume of first class mail moving between them. I do not think any hon. member is going to condone service deliveries like this where mail is placed in the post office in Toronto on a Thursday and is not delivered in Ottawa until the following Monday. There was no holiday intervening, except Sunday.

It was not a case of a public holiday at all. It was simply a case of poor service, delays in the post office. At which end the delay occurred one does not know, but certainly a delay did occur somewhere in the post office. If the government is determined to levy these very high postal rates, increased to figures that the public of Canada resents, then surely the least that the Post Office Department can do is to jack up its service.

Mr. Enfield: Before the minister is called upon to answer some of the questions and queries that have been put to him, I should like to deal briefly with the post office situation. It is a matter that is rather close to my heart inasmuch as I have had a great deal to do with the problem in my own riding. I think that the problem with which the Post Office Department is faced is so obvious that sometimes some of us more or less do not see the woods for the trees. As we all know, there has been tremendous industrial and domestic expansion in the construction field in Canada in the last few years and the Post Office Department, like every other organization that has to supply public services, has been faced with the problem of rapidly expanding its services, taking on new employees and training them to provide these much-needed new services.

The Post Office Department is not the only organization that is having trouble. Go to some of the big metropolitan areas and you will see what you run into so far as other services that people require, sewers, water, roads, are concerned. I saw a reference in an Ottawa paper the other day to "tulip time in Pothole". There is the problem of providing these services right here on our doorstep. I think my area exemplifies more than any other in Canada the type of problem that the Post Office Department is encountering at this time. I should like to outline it for you and show what we have been endeavouring to do to iron out the situation.

Metropolitan Toronto is a most difficult area to provide service for because there is the hard core of the urban area, the rapidly growing suburban areas spreading out from that and then a completely rural portion encompassing the whole. Therefore you have three problems of distribution, urban, suburban and rural, right in the one large unit. The change is very rapid. For example in Scarborough township alone there was an increase in population last year of 18,000 people, 18,000 people in one area the size of a small city that has grown up within an already rapidly expanding area. Of course, when all these people move into the area the first thing they think of when they get settled in their new homes is to demand all the services that make for a convenient existence, including mail delivery to the door.

There are twenty-one mailing addresses in my riding alone, and it is not a rural area comparable to some of the vast ridings represented by many hon. members. It is supposed to be an urban area. People sorting mail in the city of Toronto post office have as many as 10,000 different points of reference to remember when they are doing their sorting. The problem is how to take care of this rapid expansion so as to provide people with good, efficient service. Some would like it to be at the same cost as before, but obviously that cannot be done. When you are capitalizing, when you are setting up new post offices or new systems, taking on new men, providing new equipment to handle the mail and new means of transportation, there is bound to be an increase in the amount of money you spend. I am surprised that the increase during 1953-54 was not greater than the $17 million that the Postmaster General mentioned.

When I look at the number of new employees the department is taking on, as found in the details of the estimates, I am surprised that there are not more than the odd few in each section. Considering the vast amount of work that has to be done, the number is surprisingly low and bespeaks the efficient handling of the help by the organization. Therefore I do not think we should complain unduly about the increase in rates. Of course, as the hon. member for Macleod and others have mentioned, naturally people are going to complain about an increase in rates, but I feel that if we tell them the story of what the department is up against they will agree, as reasonable people, that you cannot have something for nothing. If we want to follow the very good principle—I think it is a good principle—that the post office should endeavour to pay its own way, then obviously increased revenues have to be obtained from somewhere.

How have we attacked the problem in my riding? I think the metropolitan Toronto post office is to be commended for the aggressive and forthright action taken. In the last few months door to door delivery service has been extended to nearly 4,000 people. We have set up one new semi-staffed post office that I am aware of. We have plans under way for a new post office in Scarborough, Ontario, that will provide delivery, we feel, for many more thousands of people within that particular area. I must say, too, the co-operative work of the Toronto district post office has been excellent in this regard. I think if the department could attack the problem other members are finding in their riding with the same energy and forthrightness that I have seen in my particular part of metropolitan Toronto, they would not have very much to complain about.

As I say, this question has been uppermost in the minds of my constituents, perhaps more than any other matter concerning the federal government. I have not had, however, very many personal complaints from my people regarding the service. I know the hon. member for Eglinton seems to have a curious capacity for collecting these complaints. I recall that when we were discussing this matter last Christmas he was complaining that a letter addressed to Mr. D. Fleming, Toronto, which should have found him immediately, took a little longer than usual. I have not had, as I say, more than a few letters from anyone in my particular part of metropolitan Toronto complaining about actual delays that had occurred in the delivery of mail.

Actually, two of these complaints occurred at Christmastime when the mail was very heavy. In another case the cover was sent with the complaint, so I was able to have an investigation made and an explanation given of that particular item. I feel it is significant, when we have such rapidly expanding areas and when this problem is uppermost in the minds of the people, that I have not received many more direct complaints concerning delay in mail deliveries. Mind you, I am not suggesting that we have not received complaints, as the Postmaster General knows. I say again that a good attack upon the problem by the Post Office Department will provide the necessary service and gradually solve this problem with which the Post Office Department will be faced as long as we are growing so rapidly. We hope our growth and expansion will continue at the same rate as we have experienced it in the past.

Mr. Regier: The area about which I wish to speak is not a new area at all, and therefore it is not an area that has any of the growing pains of these new areas that are arising on the outskirts of these large cities in Canada. After listening to the member for York-Scarborough, I feel that some of the Postmaster General's top assistants from that area ought to be moved over to the area from which I come so that he would receive some of that good advice which he apparently received in connection with the situation in the hon. member's area.

I feel this is the proper time for me to raise this matter of a Burnaby post office, especially since we are discussing the item containing the minister's salary. I was saying to someone that I hoped we could get out of the minister an executive ability to match his charm and personality. I was rudely reminded that the two do not necessarily go together. However, I feel that any faults that have existed under his short administration so far are only due, as the member for Vancouver East said the other day, to some very rotten advice he has received from the west coast.

At this time I should like to pay tribute to the efforts of other members who have, for the past twelve years, represented this area that I now represent. The people back home used to be taken in by the line that if you have a Liberal elected, and get your member on the government side of the house, you will get much more out of the government. The people have since been thoroughly disillusioned. They knew they had most able men. One man has since been honoured and is today the hon. Minister of Fisheries. He represented this area for a period of eight years and, I am sure, did his utmost to obtain a fair deal from the Post Office Department. The other member still sits in this house as the member for Burnaby-Richmond. This is not a partisan matter. I have with me today numerous editorials in which the people at home congratulate their two members on presenting a united appeal on this matter.

Our area of Burnaby is one of the oldest on the west coast. Burnaby was in existence when possibly wild animals were still roaming the swamps of what is today called Vancouver. It is a thoroughly organized municipality, having some 70,000 inhabitants. They feel they have been getting a raw deal, from a political standpoint, and simply fail to understand how various Postmasters General have had the nerve to let down their local member. I think the whole of the population back home would endorse the statement that their members of parliament, even though they sat on the government side, have been let down by former postmasters general.

One member, whom I recall, was elected as late as 1949. One of the main reasons for his election to this House of Commons was the fact he was an effective organizer and advertiser. He built up the native pride of the people in their area and said that if the people would elect him Burnaby would be put on the map as it ought to be. We have seen some action since that time. Not too long after that 1949 election two sub-post offices were erected. There has been a lot of amazement as to the manner in which these sub-post offices were set up. We see the same pattern in other areas, and I am thinking of the riding of New Westminster. Apparently it has become the policy now that when the department need a new post office they no longer get the Minister of Public Works to erect a public building. They deem it expedient to award a long-term lease to someone who will then undertake to erect the building that will house this post office.

Now, people do not erect public buildings for the love of it. They erect them for one purpose only, and that is to make money. I hope that we have seen the end of this policy, because it was a poor policy. However, that is all past and gone. We have these sub-post offices in operation and, for the time being, and as the minister knows, the staff there are doing a splendid job. At this time I should make it quite plain that I am not, as the member for Eglinton did, going to complain of poor service. I feel that the service back home is excellent when we consider the conditions under which the men there have to work. I hope that good labour relations are going to be re-established very soon, and that the morale of that part of the civil service we have at the lower levels is not going to deteriorate.

We were told also that we had some reason to look forward to getting a federal building in Burnaby. I went along with the idea that we could not reasonably look for a Burnaby post office until we had a federal building. I shall have something to say about that a little later. I am only rather amazed that the federal building item in the estimates of the Minister of Public Works for last year has somehow disappeared this year. We are rather apprehensive about it. At the time of the Christmas recess, a conference was held in the area of all interested organizations. That meeting was attended by North Burnaby and South Burnaby boards of trade; postmasters from respective outlying cities; top-notch postal officers; and members of the local municipal council. An agreement was reached and that agreement, although not formulated in the manner of a resolution, recognized first of all that we would likely have to wait until we obtained a federal building before we could expect a post office at Burnaby. However, in the interim there was the general desire expressed that a useful purpose would be served if Burnaby could be divided into regions or zones, and these zones labelled Burnaby 1, Burnaby 2 and so on. What was the result? We did not get the zones even though we wanted them, but we did get some zoning and there is now listed in the official guide such places as North Burnaby and South Burnaby. The reaction to this was immediate. Here I would like to read the opinions of each of the eight elected municipal officers, the reeve and the seven councillors, and may I point out that only one is C.C.F. The others are solid supporters of the Liberal party, though there may be one supporter of the Conservative party for all I know. However, Reeve C. W. MacSorley said:

> It is not what we wanted at all.

Councillor Sam Hughes said:

> An insult to council's intelligence . . .

Councillor Murray Morrison said:

> He wanted us to speak with one voice but this further divides us.

Councillor Gerald Charlton said:

> North Burnaby has only just gone on record against any change at present.

Councillor Mrs. E. O. Wilks said:

> We want Burnaby alone in the address, not north and south Burnaby. We must not give approval to this change.

Councillor W. P. Philps said:

> It takes no account of East Burnaby.

Councillor Fred Philps said:

> This does nothing for Burnaby. I am thoroughly dissatisfied.

Councillor Arnold Hean said:

> We will now wait for the editorials!

I will not read the editorials. However, after that I went and made a personal appeal to the Postmaster General, as he knows, and I asked the following: First of all, Mr. Chairman, that he use his influence so that an early beginning would be made on the construction of a federal building; secondly that Burnaby be divided into postal zones, Burnaby 1, Burnaby 2 and so on, and if it was found necessary to be able to do that, that all mail for Burnaby be sent through either New Westminster or Vancouver post office. I further asked that the whole of the lower mainland area, where no rail, water, or air transport for letters is necessary, be given the benefit of the drop letter rate, as in large areas of Montreal and Toronto.

Then I added this, and I really meant it as I indicated at the beginning, and I mean it even now:

> We do, however, feel that you are competent and willing to give it the recognition that this second largest centre of population in British Columbia is asking for.

In answer to that I received a short reply dated April 15, the second paragraph of which reads as follows:

I am asking my officials to make a thorough study of the situation and as soon as their report is received, I shall get in touch with you.

I would like to read that part again, Mr. Chairman, "—a thorough study of the situation—" What followed? As a result of that letter I received an acknowledgment from the corporation of the district of Burnaby in which, among other things, they said:

The council . . . would ask you to continue pressing for a unified system of postal distribution in this municipality.

That letter was signed "Charles B. Brown, Municipal Clerk". Upon coming here after Easter, as the result of what apparently has been a "thorough study of the situation", I received a letter from the Postmaster General. But, Mr. Chairman, before dealing with that letter I would submit that there has been no thorough study of the situation whatsoever, and that fact emphasizes what the hon. member for Vancouver East said the other day, namely, that some of the advice being handed over to Ottawa from postal officials is horribly wrong.

To return to the letter I received, point No. 1 deals with the existing sub-post offices and the dates upon which the leases for them will expire. Point No. 2 states:

A central building could not be utilized to serve both north and south Burnaby because of the topography of the area.

I think that sentence is enough to make any member from British Columbia laugh. Whoever wrote that sentence has obviously no idea of the topography of Burnaby. We have five major highways running through the municipality east and west; we have excellent paved roads running through the municipality north and south; and to say that the topography of the area does not permit the construction of a central building when Liberal members of parliament have been asking for such a building, and when local municipal organizations have been urging for one for years, seems the last word in bad advice. The letter then goes on, and this is the part my people are going to resent more than anything else:

However, if a federal building were erected in either north Burnaby or south Burnaby, possibly space in such a building could be used to replace the rented premises now occupied.

That sentence, Mr. Chairman, makes it seem as though the Postmaster General had never heard of any plans for a federal building in Burnaby, and would also indicate that if we are going to get one it might be in north Burnaby or south Burnaby; but we are certainly not going to get one where the people of Burnaby want one to be constructed. Again I would emphasize that there is a modern, well-paved highway running right through the centre of Burnaby, so if anyone wants to lead the people to believe that that is a place where wild animals live, he is badly mistaken. The centre of Burnaby is well settled and it is a wonderful area.

The letter goes on:

The suggestion that all mail for Burnaby be channelled through either New Westminster or Vancouver is not practical from a postal service standpoint.

Then it goes on to explain that because one part of Burnaby is nearer to New Westminster and another part is nearer to Vancouver there would be a delay in the service if it were all channelled through one major post office at either New Westminster or Vancouver. But that is even more ridiculous than anything heretofore in this letter. Surely it does not take any longer for mail to be hauled from the centre of New Westminster to the centre of Burnaby than from the centre of Vancouver to the centre of Burnaby. At least the suggestion of serious delay is really stretching the imagination, and I know it will be resented by the people back home because they know it is just not so.

Then the minister goes on to remind me there is one organization in my riding which is not in favour of an all-Burnaby post office. I would like to point out that the north Burnaby board of trade has never stated that they did not want a Burnaby post office. Their representatives were at the meeting during the recess and they voiced no objection whatsoever. The only thing about which they are concerned is that any reorganization should not be permitted to interfere with the excellent service they are now getting because of the loyalty of the local postal worker. They want it considered on a metropolitan basis, and when we are asking for a Burnaby post office we are not violating that principle of a metropolitan distribution of mail in any way, shape or form.

Then, point No. 4 reads:

There appears to be no necessity for mail for Burnaby to be zoned.

I should like to ask the Postmaster General: If there is no necessity for that mail to be zoned, why is it zoned now? We have it zoned; Burnaby, north and south Burnaby, are at least several of the zones. We have the post office of Barnet, and a part of the municipality gets its mail through New Westminster. As a member of parliament, I ought to know my riding fairly well; yet I am having a difficult time when I read somebody's address and want to send him a letter. I do not know whether such and such a number on such and such a route should be sent to New Westminster, to north Burnaby or to south Burnaby. I am forever finding I have to keep on resorting to the map and asking: Now, what zone is that particular letter supposed to be sent to? I maintain that the population is going to go up by leaps and bounds, and I am more concerned with the long-term outlook for Burnaby mail than I am with the immediate situation.

I do not hesitate to say that in ten years' time, instead of 70,000 people, we shall have 140,000 people, and what is the situation going to be like at that time? Right now I hear the New Westminster postmaster and the Vancouver postmaster voicing complaints that Burnaby mail is still being wrongly addressed by those who write to people in Burnaby. I submit that unless a thorough study of this situation is made it is going to be worse than ever instead of becoming better.

The last point in the reply is this:

As regards the drop letter rate, the situation in Burnaby is not comparable to either the Montreal or Toronto postal areas.

This may interest some of the members from there:

In the case of Montreal, the drop letter rate of postage applies only within the area served by letter carriers in the Montreal postal service.

We had a number of editorials in our papers back home lately calling for the drop letter rate in the lower mainland. I also know that they have written letters. I have been in the constituency of Verdun, which most people look at as being a suburb of Montreal. Some 90,000 people live there. I understand that the sitting member for that area won his election apparently because he pledged them a new post office. Why 70,000 people in Burnaby, one of the oldest areas of Canada, should be denied any post office recognition whatsoever and a place like Verdun receive a new post office is a little beyond my comprehension. My people voted Liberal for three parliaments in a row, and they are getting a rotten deal out of it. I know that the people of Verdun can send a letter to Ville La Salle for four cents and also to Montreal itself; and to use the argument, "areas served by letter carriers", brings me to ask this question: Does the minister think that in Burnaby the mail is still delivered by ox-carts from one settlement to another? We also know of such people as letter carriers. The New Westminster people have letter carriers, as do the people in Vancouver North and West Vancouver. If the area served by letter carriers is going to be the basis on which the service of four-cent postage is given, then West Vancouver, North Vancouver, Burnaby and New Westminster, other than the rural routes that exist and are part of the New Westminster system, should get the lower rate.

The minister goes on to say:

In the case of Toronto, a metropolitan municipal area has been created by provincial legislation.

So that is it, now. We rely on the provincial government to designate the metropolitan area, when all the time the minister has been telling us that they disregard municipal boundary lines. But here, because the province of Ontario has seen fit to declare a metropolitan municipal area, that is given as an argument. Well, it should be known that we also have such a thing as a metropolitan Vancouver area, and we have many organizations and public services that are based on the greater metropolitan area. The letter goes on:

Furthermore, the complete area is under the jurisdiction of the postmaster, Toronto.

That, Mr. Chairman, is exactly what I am asking for; that until we get a federal building and a post office of our own the whole of our mail for Burnaby be channelled either under the direction of the New Westminster postmaster or the Vancouver postmaster; that we be entitled to address our mail to Burnaby, and that the names of these zones be Burnaby 1, Burnaby 2, Burnaby 3; and, if Barnet is included, Burnaby 4. We think that is a reasonable demand to make. I think our minister is a very sincere man. He is new at his task, just as I am. Doubtless he receives some bad advice. I hope I do not get any bad advice, but I am hoping that he and I are able to learn, and he at least has the great advantage of a charming personality. I say again, I hope that when we vote his salary this time we will get the executive ability to go along with it.

However, in conclusion I want to read a rather long sentence. It is only one sentence, even though it is long. It is from bulletin No. 4 published by the South Burnaby board of trade. It outlines what everyone there wants. It speaks here of an Easter conference which it was intended to convene and which we were not able to have. The purpose of the conference was to be to:

. . . settle once and for all why 70,000 people cannot have a post office address that will give due recognition and publicity to the corporation of Burnaby and not further divide the community as the present plan will do. Other communities with smaller population have solved their problem by a zone system with full recognition of their corporation name and nothing short of this will satisfy the majority of Burnaby citizens.

Mr. Goode: Mr. Chairman, it is most refreshing that someone now can help me with this fight. Perhaps when you sit on this side of the house there are supposed to be differences politically between the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the member for Burnaby-Richmond; but in this case that is not so. I do not agree with everything he says, in this instance, but I do agree with 99 per cent of it.

As I have said in this house before in his presence, this is a matter of two gentlemen, I hope, coming from British Columbia who want the same thing and who are trying to represent their people in the best way possible; regardless of where they sit in the house—they are going to co-operate. I have fought this fight of the Burnaby post office since 1949. The Postmaster General may not be in possession of all the facts. As my hon. friend mentioned, the Postmaster General is comparatively new, but I have fought this fight not with the Postmaster General but with senior members of his department. I have a file on this problem. I measured it this afternoon because I knew I was going to speak. It is fourteen inches thick and consists of letters back and forth, conferences held with the director of operations and other gentlemen in his department. That has gone on to the point where, as I said when I started, it is refreshing that I have some assistance.

Seventy thousand people live in Burnaby with a small city east of them, and with all due respect to the hon. member for New Westminster, it has only 26,000 people. The 70,000 people in my municipality have still the postal facilities as though we were only 16,000 or perhaps 1,600. There are two small postal stations doing very fine work, though in very limited quarters, but with four postal addresses in the municipality. A portion of the western part of our municipality comes under Vancouver and has to carry Vancouver addresses. Edmonds and east to the New Westminster boundary carries a New Westminster address and we have a North Burnaby address and a South Burnaby address.

I was rather pleased when the Postmaster General's first action to alleviate the situation was to give me the right to tell my people that we at least had a North Burnaby address and a South Burnaby address, but that is not being received very well. I do not entirely agree with it. Municipal pride comes into this. Burnaby has growing pains. We think we are entitled to a Burnaby address, but it was a move in the right direction and I accept it as such.

We have come to the point, however, where we have got to go farther. We have small cities and small towns around Burnaby with small post offices. Coquitlam and Barnet are small places in comparison with their own identification and yet I have been told by officials of the Post Office Department, after these many conferences and some hundreds of letters, that we have arrived at the place where a survey has been made. May I tell my friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam that we have a survey on top of many other surveys and we arrive at the position still where 70,000 people in British Columbia are not considered to be entitled to their own postal identification.

May I tell the Postmaster General that this municipality of mine houses some very large commercial concerns. I think the Postmaster General will recognize these names. We have the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company. We have refineries for most of the major oil companies in Canada. We have the Simpsons-Sears Company which opened the other day. I understand they are one of the largest users of mail facilities in Canada. I understand too that 80,000 people went through that store in two days. We have the large firm of Kelly-Douglas, one of the primary wholesale grocers in the country. We have the Continental Can Company. The Postmaster General will recognize these names. They have their headquarters in the municipality of Burnaby and it is getting beyond the stage where a member of parliament must stand up session after session and fight for something to which his people are entitled.

I know that perhaps a member on this side of the house has no better facilities than my hon. friends on the other side, but we are supposed to have if you listen to the stories from the other side. In this case, though they have elected a Liberal from Burnaby-Richmond, I do not seem to have had too much success. Perhaps it has been my presentation of the case. Perhaps I did not know the story too well, although I should know it with these hundreds of letters, conferences and so on. Now, I have someone to help me and may I tell you, sir, that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and I are going to pound this matter until postal identification is given to the municipality of Burnaby—something that it was entitled to before 1949.

There is one other matter that concerns the constituency. I will give it now because the Postmaster General might as well have all of my problems at one time so that he can consider them. The municipality of Richmond, which I have the honour to represent, has 27,000 or 28,000 people. The minister has heard me speak of Richmond many times. We have not even got a postal station there. I have a large file of representations to the department from the 27,000 people who live there. There is in that municipality the largest fish cannery in the commonwealth. It includes the Vancouver international airport, and more industries are coming there every day, and yet we are still doing business down in Richmond with a few sub-post offices in drugstores. They get the mail from postal station "L" of Marpole in the riding of my hon. friend from Vancouver South. It is a very fine place, a fine building, but it does not seem to matter that the postmen have to come across the Marpole bridge about which hon. members have heard me speak. They have to go some miles before they can arrive at their destination to start first delivery of the mail. Some of these places still have the rural routes which they carried 25 years ago.

It is just about time that some of the officials of the Post Office Department of Vancouver changed their way of thinking. I fully agree with my hon. friend that the Postmaster General is not getting too sound advice. I do not know that I would like to go as far as my hon. friend did, but the advice which the Postmaster General has received in these two matters is not sound. My case is sound. I will not stand in this house and make a definite statement unless I am absolutely positive that I am right. We are entitled to identification. I do not ask for a federal building in Richmond but I do say they are entitled to a postal station where mail carriers can work from. I doubt if any official from the Post Office Department can argue against me here, and it is just about time someone in Vancouver advised the Postmaster General as to what these conditions are.

I hope the genial minister can check these matters and tell me in his reply whether I am right or wrong.

Mr. Brooks: My remarks are going to be very brief. I too have a large file up in my office but I do not think it necessary to bring that file down and to read all of the letters in it to the minister. I am sure that we ought to be very grateful to the hon. member from Burnaby-Richmond that he did not read his 14-inch file to the house.

Post office matters were discussed very thoroughly when the question of increasing the four-cent stamp was before the house. I think that most of what hon. members intended to say was said at that time.

I agree with the hon. member for Hamilton West when she said that the Post Office Department touches the homes of individuals more than any other department of government. When we say "homes of individuals" we mean homes of people living in both rural and urban centres. This afternoon we have heard very little about post office conditions in the rural centres. We have been mostly concerned with urban centres.

I might say that my constituency is probably 90 per cent rural and that there are as many rural routes in the two counties which make up my constituency as there are in any other constituency in Canada. I would also like to say that I was not very much touched by some of the remarks of members from urban centres when they complained of the fact that their residents could not get two mails a day. The minister knows that in many rural sections throughout this country the residents are not getting one mail a day. As a matter of fact, I know of many sections where they are only getting three mails a week or two mails a week, and until that situation is corrected I, for one, fail to think that residents in any city or in any town in Canada should receive two mails a day—when country residents are only receiving one mail every three days or every two days.

There is some argument that business houses in large centres should receive two mails a day but we all know that in the larger cities and larger centres post offices are established at very focal points. It is an easy matter for someone from those large business houses to go down and collect the mail from the post office, not just twice a day but perhaps half a dozen times a day. I cannot see that there is any great suffering in the towns and cities of this country as far as our mail service is concerned.

I make this appeal for the people in the rural districts because they have not the facilities for obtaining news. Many of them have no radios. In many instances they have not telephones. As I say, they do not get the daily papers because they do not always have daily mail. All these many facilities which are found in towns and cities and the more populated areas are not found in some of the back rural areas, with the result that many of our people are leaving the back areas simply because they have not those facilities which can be found in other places. I make this appeal to the minister and his department to see whether better conditions cannot be given to some of those areas.

I am greatly pleased indeed that the rural mail carriers are to receive more pay and more attention than they have received in the past. I believe one of the main reasons for increasing the postage rate in this country was in order to increase the pay of rural mail carriers and possibly that of mail carriers in the towns and cities, although I think they are being very well looked after at the present time. In the country districts we are handicapped by rules and regulations which I think must have been drawn up many years ago. For instance, you cannot get a daily mail in a rural section unless you have four boxes to a mile. You may have an average of three and one-half or three and three-quarters, but unless you have the four you cannot get a daily mail. To my mind that regulation must have been drawn up many years ago, in the days when mail was carried by horse and buggy. But today, when we have good roads which are plowed in the winter and are kept open all the year round, when the mail is carried by cars and when long distances can be covered, I think that regulation is much out of date. I think the rural mail routes could be greatly extended. I think a route could be extended so that it would include an area in which there are three people to the mile along with an area which has seven, eight or ten people to the mile, and that the figures could be averaged up. As I say, with better roads and all these other facilities, I think that is something that could very well be done.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Chairman, this is the main point I wish to bring to the attention of the committee this afternoon; I refer to the matter of rural mail. Let us try to give better mail service to the people in the country districts. Unless we do so we are going to have in the country areas more vacant farms than we have at the present time. I could have brought into the chamber a file as thick as that of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond with reference to the Burnaby post office, and it has to do with the Rothesay post office in my own constituency. I spoke to the minister about this matter the other day. I have raised it in the chamber a number of times. I know that the minister is cognizant of the situation at Rothesay. It is one of our finest villages in the maritime provinces, and is probably one of the finest in Canada. As I pointed out on previous occasions, in that village we have the poorest mail accommodation of any village in the whole country. The minister has been kind enough to mark this an urgent matter at the present time. The present situation has not been altogether the fault of the Post Office Department. The Department of Public Works has also been a little bit negligent in the matter. I was speaking to the Minister of Public Works the other day. He has taken a kindly interest in it. I think a site will be obtained. I have every reason to believe that, between the Postmaster General and the Department of Public Works, before this year is out Rothesay will at least have a start on a post office which is greatly needed. That is all I have to say in this connection, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, apparently quite a number of members of parliament have copious files on the Post Office Department. I am one who also has a file, only I brought mine with me. This file is sessional paper No. 94-H, some of which I intend to quote later. It is a file which was asked for or which was passed by the house on February 15 and which was referred to the Postmaster General on April 21. There is a long gap of time there. It was finally brought down on May 4.

Some months ago, when the post office legislation was before the house, I mentioned the word "patronage" several times and I said there was patronage in the post office. The minister was pained; the minister was astonished; the minister was astounded. The minister was innocent. The minister answered that patronage is something that was not known in the post office, and that it is the sort of word which is not used in the post office. This afternoon I notice that my friend the hon. member for Mackenzie asked whether certain form letters were still being used by the department. I think he also was sniffing around this forbidden subject of patronage. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that there are form letters which the post office sends out. For instance, I have in this file a form letter. I gather that it is the sort of form letter which is sent either to the Liberal organization or to the defeated Liberal candidate or, for all I know, to Liberal members of parliament. For instance, this letter is signed by Mr. R. H. MacNabb, director of operations, to a defeated Liberal candidate in my riding in Winnipeg. This is an official letter, and it is a form letter. It states:

Dear Sir:

In previous correspondence the department asked for your recommendation—

Here we have the department asking for the recommendation of a defeated Liberal candidate.

—of a suitable person for permanent appointment as postmaster at—

A certain area in my constituency is there named. If that is not patronage, Mr. Chairman, then what does that word mean? The form letter goes on to say this:

The order of preference which, according to law, is observed in making such appointment is as follows:

And they give six orders of preference. Then the form letter goes on as follows:

The department is desirous of placing this office on a regular basis as soon as possible and would appreciate receiving your recommendation within the next two weeks. In the absence of word from you the department will conclude that you are not in a position to make a recommendation and will examine the qualifications of persons who may have applied for or who may be interested in obtaining this position.

Only after the defeated Liberal candidate has been given the opportunity to make a recommendation, and has failed to make one, does the post office graciously condescend to look into the qualifications of those who have applied for the job. Yet the minister tells me that there is no patronage. He infers that "patronage is a dirty word which we in our department would never use". The letter continues:

The selection will then be made according to the result of the inquiry and with the preferences as outlined in paragraph 2.

I am going to say this quite frankly and quite bluntly. The minister today has been the recipient of many bouquets. The time has now come for some brickbats. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that in certain appointments the post office is polluted with this concept of patronage. I am now going to give, to a modified extent at least, chapter and verse of my case. In this file also there are three letters from opposition members of parliament. By coincidence they happen to be three members of the party which I represent here in the house. One is from the former member, Mr. Bryce, who was concerned, as I have been for some time, about a sub-post office in a new area of north Winnipeg, West Kildonan. Mr. Bryce wrote this letter on April 9, 1951. I want to quote it extensively, indeed, the whole of it, to show the sort of letter it was. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Rinfret:

I would be very much obliged to you if you would have the officers of your department check into the possibility of a post office being set up at the corner of McGregor and McAdam streets in West Kildonan, Manitoba. I understand it will not be possible to have an accounting post office but that in all likelihood it would be possible for a non-accounting post office to be set up. This is in one of the districts where hundreds of new homes have been built up on what was bald prairie two years ago.

Thanking you in anticipation, I am,

Sincerely,
Scottie Bryce.

I read that letter to show that Mr. Bryce's desire was to have a post office in that area to serve the people of the area and for no other purpose. Apparently he had no idea at all of anyone who might perhaps act as postmaster. But I find in going through this file, as I have said, many letters from the defeated Liberal candidate in my constituency, who now is the defeated Liberal candidate in the constituency of Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Does he now handle the patronage for both ridings?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): This is an example of the sort of letter which is sent to the defeated Liberal candidate in Winnipeg North from the director of operations of the Post Office Department. It reads:

Dear Mr. Taraska:

I received your letter dated the 31st August in regard to the position of postmaster at Winnipeg-Louise Bridge post office. Instructions are being issued for the appointment of Reverend P. H. Kohlmeier to the postmastership of this subpost office.

He was the person of course who was nominated by this prominent member of the Liberal party. On another and earlier occasion, dealing with that sub-post office, there is a letter from Mr. MacNabb to Mr. Taraska which reads in part as follows:

In view of your representations in the matter when you called at the department recently, this matter was given further consideration. However, as the postmaster has at least shown that he is incompetent, it is considered that he could not be continued in charge of the office and that steps should be taken towards his replacement.

But does the post office itself decide what sort of postmaster shall take the job there? Far from it. The letter continues:

I would therefore appreciate hearing from you again and receiving for the consideration of the Postmaster General your recommendation of some suitable person for this position.

Does my hon. friend tell me that is not patronage of the most flagrant kind? Let me go on a little further and quote a letter on page 68 of the file. Again this is a letter from Mr. MacNabb to Mr. Taraska, and it reads as follows:

In accordance with your recommendation contained in your letter or June 16, 1951, instructions have been issued concerning Mr. . . . in the position of postmaster at the above named sub-post office, his permanent appointment dating from the 25th of June, 1951.

Again the appointment is dependent entirely upon the desire either of the local Liberal organization or of the local defeated Liberal candidate. We are told that there are certain rules and regulations concerning sub-post offices, and that one of them is that the establishment of sub-post offices is approved by the department after the need has been definitely established by suitable inquiry by field officers. I can only conclude that the field officers that the post office has had at its disposal in North Winnipeg are the defeated Liberal candidates for election. I wish the Post Office Department would do something about the situation and get the whole matter into much more competent hands. Here is another letter. This time it is addressed to Mr. MacNabb and is signed by Mr. Peter Taraska. It reads in part as follows:

In answer to your letter of October 26—

But first let me say this was one to Mr. MacNabb. The Post Office Department is very busy corresponding all the time with defeated Liberal politicians. I do not know what the cost must be to the country, but I would suggest to the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre that he might have advocated the cutting out of this sort of correspondence for it would certainly save the taxpayers a very substantial sum of money. Here is Mr. Taraska writing to Mr. MacNabb. I should say here, Mr. Chairman, that as a member of parliament I have the habit of signing my letters "Alistair Stewart, Winnipeg North". I find that the defeated Liberal opponents do the same thing because the signature is "Peter Taraska, Winnipeg North". The letter reads:

In answer to your letter of October 26, and after making the necessary inquiries, I am pleased to recommend for the appointment of postmaster for the above named sub-post office Mr. . . .

I do not want to embarrass these people by giving names.

—resident returned soldier and the new owner of the present post office premises. Mr. . . . has the necessary qualifications and experience—

None of which I deny; it may be true. What I am objecting to is the way it is done. What I am objecting to is the fact that the minister stands up and states that there is no patronage in the post office. My hon. friend is an innocent abroad. If he will see me at the dinner hour I will give him much more proof than I shall be able to give before five o'clock. In connection with that same sub-post office there was a letter to Mr. Taraska, again from Mr. MacNabb, reading as follows:

In accordance with your recommendation . . . instructions have been issued confirming Mr. . . . returned soldier, in the position of postmaster at the above named sub-post office.

Yet the minister says this is not patronage. I do not know what it is if it is not patronage and, as I said before, of the most blatant type. I find so many examples on this file. Here is another one, a letter to Mr. Taraska of January 4, 1952, from Mr. MacNabb. I do not know whether Mr. MacNabb is the political commissar of the Liberal party in the Post Office Department or what his job is, but he seems to be in charge of the patronage end of it. The letter reads:

In accordance with your recommendation dated the 12th December, 1951—

—they have appointed so and so as sub-postmaster. Whether there is a recommendation from anybody else I do not know. I do know that there is a form letter that goes out to the Canadian Legion, but there is no record in this return of any recommendation from the Legion. Indeed, I suspect if there were one the recommendation of the defeated Liberal candidate would supervene and his ideas would be the ones which would be accepted. Here is another letter. This one is signed by Mr. McFarlane. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Taraska:

A request has been received in the department for the establishment of a sub-post office at 1615 Salter Street, Winnipeg, Manitoba. Conditions in the district are favourable and the department is prepared to open a sub-post office. Mr. . . ., who operates a drug store at that address, is the only applicant for the position of postmaster. Would you kindly furnish your recommendation of the postmastership of a sub-post office in this area.

One would think that the Post Office Department would investigate the qualifications of this applicant and, having decided that they were satisfactory, appoint him or, if they were not satisfactory, they would not. But far from it. They do not do that. They go to the local field officer, the defeated Liberal candidate, and ask him for his advice. There is another letter here signed "Peter Taraska, Winnipeg North" to Mr. MacNabb, which reads as follows:

In answer to departmental letter dated 14th October, I beg to inform you that after making the necessary investigation—

The field officers are ardently at work.

—I am pleased to recommend Mr. . . . who operates a drug store . . .

This gentleman of course was appointed and, for all I know, probably quite rightly so. As I say, what I am objecting to is the system, the fact that patronage does exist and that we ought to get rid of it because it is no good either for Liberals or for anybody else.

I was going on to read some more of these letters from some defeated Liberal candidates, but I think I shall go on with one which is not from a Liberal candidate but from one who was a member of parliament and whose judgment was sought by the department and who gave his decision to the department. The person to whom I refer is a former member of parliament, and one who was always greeted in the house with loud applause, Mr. J. S. Sinnott. I have a letter here from Mr. MacNabb to Mr. Sinnott which states:

The appointment in this case rests with the Postmaster General.

I thought the appointment in all cases rested with the Postmaster General.

Would you be good enough to submit for his consideration, your recommendation of some person for permanent appointment as postmaster at this sub-office.

Notice the charming courtesy. Then, Mr. Sinnott replies also most courteously that he has not, as yet, the information but he will let Mr. MacNabb have it at the earliest convenience.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps he should have recommended himself.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Then, Mr. Sinnott wrote again as follows:

I wrote to you on June 15 in connection with the nomination of someone to fill the place of the former postmaster, Mr. Lloyd Winston Hall, . . .

I wish to advise you at this time that the nomination of . . . is quite satisfactory, and Mr. Hall thinks the location and facilities will meet the requirements in that district.

Mr. MacNabb writes back on July 3, 1950, and states:

Dear Mr. Sinnott:

In accordance with your recommendations contained in your letter of the 22nd June, instructions have been issued confirming . . . as permanent postmaster at the Winnipeg-East Kildonan sub-office.

There is not a word here about the Postmaster General doing it. It is in accordance with Mr. Sinnott's recommendation, and that is how the Post Office Department makes its appointments.

Now, there was another time when Mr. Sinnott was not so fortunate. I do not want to suggest for a moment that the Post Office Department is always a spineless organization and does not stand up to members of parliament. Sometimes it does. Mr. Sinnott desired to have the Morse Place sub-post office changed. The whole matter is set out in the correspondence, and it is at this point that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre comes into the picture. He also has a letter here in this file to Mr. Bertrand, which reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Bertrand:

You wrote me on December 9 in reply to my telegram of December 6, with reference to the proposed transfer of the Morse Place post office, indicating that any action in connection with this matter had been suspended until further inquiry could be made.

You will recall that I pointed out in my telegram that this sub-post office has been in its present location for some thirty-three years, and that there was a wave of protest amongst the local residents over the suggestion that it might be moved.

Again in fairness to him I am reading my hon. friend's letter in full. It is quite a brief letter.

Your action in suspending the proposed transfer was appreciated by the residents of Morse Place, but there is still some concern over the fact that the matter does not appear to have been finalized as yet. May I ask, therefore, whether the inquiry referred to in your letter of December 9 has been made, and whether it is now definite that this sub-post office will remain on the Anderson premises where it has been to the satisfaction of all concerned for such a long period.

Thanking you for your further attention to this matter, I am . . .

As a matter of fact, the post office was kept there because the postal authorities in Winnipeg knew very well that is where it ought to be kept no matter what an importunate member of parliament might say about it.

There was another matter which I raised early in the session—

Mr. Cote: You are not complaining about that one?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): No, I just want to put it in the record to show that the post office sometimes says "no". But a non-Liberal member of parliament usually stands a poor chance against someone who is the defeated Liberal candidate. An opposition member of parliament is just a nuisance so far as this department is concerned.

Here is another case.

Oddly enough, this correspondence starts with a letter from myself, which I really think is worth reading again. It is to the Postmaster General.

Mr. Cote: Are you quoting yourself?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I could quote no one who was more accurate or authentic so far as patronage in the Post Office Department is concerned. The letter is dated June 15, 1953 and reads:

I am writing in connection with the application of Mr. Morry to have continued at St. John's Pharmacy sub-post office No. 27, Winnipeg.

There are certain gaps in this letter which my hon. friend will appreciate for I do not need to put the whole story in again in black and white. I go on to say:

A few months ago I complained about an attempt which was made to remove a sub-post office from Sinclair's Pharmacy where it had been for almost 40 years. A well-known member of the Liberal party went to Sinclair's Pharmacy and demanded $500 or the post office would be taken from there. As I told Mr. Turnbull this was the most outrageous blackmail and I am glad that the sub-post office was not changed.

I am very happy to say it was not. I go on in the letter:

I hope the new owner of sub-post office No. 27 is not going to be penalized and I would request your personal attention to this matter.

Well, the minister did give it his personal attention because he wrote to me, and that letter will come up in due course. As I said, this letter of mine was dated June 15, 1953, by a happy coincidence, in the middle of the election campaign.

There was a letter dated June 25, 1953, again sent by the commissar of political operations, Mr. MacNabb, to Mr. D. W. W. Revie, 803 Charles building, Winnipeg. The house might be interested in knowing that Mr. Revie is associated with the Manitoba Liberal Progressive Association, so one can assume at least that he is not a Conservative. This is ten days after I drew the attention of the Post Office Department to the matter. The letter reads:

> The above sub-post office was temporarily closed on the 15th June owing to the resignation of . . .
> This sub-post office is located in the drugstore known as "St. John's Pharmacy". This business has been purchased by Mr. Manuel Morry, resident civilian, who has forwarded an application for the postmastership of this sub-office.
> Would you please be good enough to furnish us with your recommendation of a suitable person to act as sub-postmaster at this office.

Then, four days later, which is 14 days after I wrote to the minister, he answered me and said:

> In your letter of the 15th June you expressed interest in having sub-office No. 27, Winnipeg, retained in the St. John's Pharmacy.
> The department has just received the resignation of Mr. . . . , who has been sub-postmaster of the office located in St. John's Pharmacy, and an application from Mr. Manuel Morry, who apparently has purchased the St. John's Pharmacy from Mr. Bland.
>
> Your representations on behalf of Mr. Morry and the retention of the office in the St. John's Pharmacy has been noted and will be given every consideration.

I would be the happiest man in this house if I thought that were so.

Mr. Cote: To whom is it addressed?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): It is addressed to me; but, as compared to the head of a Liberal organization, who am I to say my letter or my opinions would receive consideration. I would feel gratified if I had a slight hand in this, but modesty forbids my believing I was the one who was responsible.

Mr. Revie writes to Mr. MacNabb, and his letter is dated June 7. Under the date "June 7", the department has noted "dated June 7 but received in department July 9." By that time, the Liberal party in Winnipeg were having a very rough time, and one cannot blame them if they were a month out in their calculations. The letter reads:

> I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of June 25th, in the above connection. Our recommendation is that Mr. Manuel Morry, who has forwarded an application for the postmastership of this sub-office be appointed.

Then there is a courteous word from Mr. MacNabb who writes back to Mr. Revie:

> In accordance with your recommendation . . . etc., etc.

I did not get a letter from the minister. But Mr. Revie was told and that is why I assumed Mr. Revie was the man who had done it. But here is the letter to Mr. Revie:

> In accordance with your recommendation—

Not Mr. Stewart's but Mr. Revie's.

> —received in your letter of the 7th July, instructions have been issued for the re-opening of the above post office under the charge of Mr. Manuel Morry as postmaster.

Now, does the minister tell me I am being too modest?

Mr. Cote: No, you are not too modest.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): My modesty is justified in this particular case. But let me go on to some other defeated Liberal candidates. We have lots of them in our part of the country. Here is another one dated December 22, 1953. That date is rather interesting. The letter is addressed to Mr. Frank Chester and it informs him a sub-post office will become vacant at the end of December owing to the resignation of the postmaster. Here is a tip-off. The letter states that a note of this vacancy has been sent to Colonel Cairns. The post office does not know what is happening on every occasion but when it can it certainly tells the Liberal organization and sometimes Colonel Cairns.

Mr. Cote: Who is he?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): He is the provincial secretary of the Canadian Legion. Let me say to my hon. friend that many of these notices are sent to Colonel Cairns but we do not know what he says as there is no information from him among these letters and I therefore cannot say anything about that part of it. I know Mr. Chester is asked "We would appreciate receiving a recommendation of a suitable person to act as sub-postmaster at this office."

I remember around about Christmas reading in a newspaper somewhere that Mr. Frank Chester had been appointed to a quite responsible position in the civil service. I take it for granted of course, Mr. Chairman, he would do nothing further in this matter because no one in the civil service would write a letter advising Mr. MacNabb who should be appointed to this sub-postmastership. But on the 4th of January of this year Mr. Chester states:

Dear Mr. MacNabb:

I wish to acknowledge and thank you for your letter of December 22, re the above vacancy and after going into this matter carefully—

Another field inspector promoted in the department.

—and considering only one application has been received I recommend that this office be re-opened as soon as possible and that the application of Mr. Myron Hunter, 1785 Main Street, be accepted.

I mentioned this because I asked questions in the house about the matter for there was another gentleman who also wanted this office and I advised him the proper thing to do was to make an application for the post office, find out if the people in his vicinity wanted the post office, get a petition and send it to the Postmaster General. This is what that man proceeded to do. But what a futile waste of time. The Liberal party were hard at work. Here is Mr. Chester writing to Mr. MacNabb, though I regret very much to say that the post office was not very much impressed with the letter sent out. It apparently thought Mr. Chester's recommendation was not much good because it decided to ask one who shall be nameless, but who is a cabinet minister from Manitoba, as to what he thought about the situation and his advice was that they should appoint a certain one of three applicants who were, Mr. Beek, Mr. Gunn and Mr. Hunter, and the letter continues:

In order that the sub-office be re-opened as soon as possible—

But just let me say for the moment that this is really going to the top brass. Mr. Chester's recommendation was noted, but there follows a letter from the anonymous minister's office to Mr. MacNabb in regard to who should be selected for this post. But the post office never sent another letter to Mr. Chester in this regard for Mr. Chester was lost to the Liberal party. He had gone to his reward and therefore he could not recommend anyone. But Mr. MacNabb wrote to this anonymous minister as follows, and the letter is dated February 4:

In accordance with your minister's recommendation of the 25th January 1954—

A very exalted fieldman.

—instructions have been issued for the appointment of Mr. Myron Hunter for the position of postmaster at the above sub-post office.

The Liberal organization in North Winnipeg had given up and I do not blame them. Now the post office has to go to the very fount and origin of Liberalism in Manitoba. Obviously the Postmaster General decides nothing. Obviously if a sub-postmaster is going to be appointed the people in West Kildonan need not send any petitions. It will be a matter for the Liberal party to decide who the sub-postmaster is going to be. Of course, Mr. Chairman, you know as well as I do that there is no patronage in the post office. The minister protests his innocence; he is virtuous; he is as above suspicion as Caesar's wife; indeed he out-Calpurnias Calpurnia. I have never seen such innocence.

I could go on here and give chapter and verse on what I consider to be patronage within the post office, but, Mr. Chairman, I think I have said enough at this stage to persuade even my innocent friend across the house that he has in his department, in some sections of it, this political commissariat which unknown to him is telling defeated Liberal candidates all over the country, "We want your advice as to whom should be appointed to the sub-post office." I have given my hon. friend all the details. He may not have known about them but now that I have told him his eyes will be opened and he can go into the post office now, take a very sharp cleaver and start to chop off some heads. If he does that we might have a post office in this country without patronage.

Mr. McLeod: Mr. Chairman, I have no files covering lengthy correspondence which I need to go through for the benefit of the Postmaster General, and after listening to the speech of the hon. member for Burnaby I have come to the conclusion that my own remarks, in so far as the post office is concerned, and the complaints I have to bring to the minister's attention, are of a minor nature.

However, there are a couple of points I wish to bring to the minister's attention. In the recent news item I noticed that the C.P.R. branch line from Sicamous to Kelowna through the Okanagan valley in British Columbia will discontinue hauling mail, and that such a service will be taken over by the trucks. I can understand that such a course would prove to be economical as it would eliminate delivering from the train to the post office at these small places. However, I would like to have an assurance from the minister that in making this change the service we will be receiving will be at least equally as good and perhaps an improvement on the service we obtained in the past.

I cannot pass up this opportunity of bringing to the attention of the minister, as I have done on previous occasions, the question of the Vernon post office. The lack of postal facilities in Vernon has been recognized by the department for some years. I have had proof of this in the interviews I have had with the deputy postmaster general and officials of the department. I know the genial Postmaster General will tell me that his genial colleague, the Minister of Public Works, will not proceed with the erection of a public building there. But, Mr. Chairman, I must remind the Postmaster General that his department must take the blame for this situation. Four years ago the Vernon post office was declared inadequate by the postal authorities. Since then both the urban and rural population have increased rapidly, the facilities have not yet been improved, and the larger volume of mail is adding daily to the congestion. Therefore, I would suggest it is imperative that the problem which has existed there for years should be corrected. It is to the Postmaster General that we look for help. It can be argued of course that it is the Department of Public Works that must provide these buildings; but nevertheless, in considering the problem of an adequate mail service, it is not likely that the people of any district take that into consideration. They are looking to the Postmaster General for results.

When the Postmaster General replies to the questions that have been raised in the committee I would like him to refer fully to the two problems I have raised.

Mr. Dinsdale: After the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North this afternoon I am afraid that any other contribution to this discussion would be anti-climax. In his remarks, however, he indicated that there is a close relationship between the Post Office Department and the public, and perhaps between some groups of the public more than others. Down through the years the people of Canada, as well as the people of other countries, have come to associate very intimately the activities of the Post Office Department with the activities of the government. This being so, I feel that any changes in post office activities will affect quite directly the attitude of the public toward the government. Some developments in our Canadian Post Office Department are rather significant in this regard, and I should like to draw the minister's attention to them this afternoon.

It seems to me that in recent months the Post Office Department has been pleading poverty. I do not know why this should be so. It might be that because of its close contact with the public there is a desire to convey the impression that the government is beginning to pull in its belt and that economy is the order of the day. From a perusal of the blue book of estimates, of course, we know that is not so. But in the Post Office Department there definitely seems to be an attempt to convey this impression to the public. I have mentioned this fact before. The annual revenue for the fiscal year 1925 in the local post office in the city of Brandon was $110,600.95, and the staff employed numbered 44. In the year 1952 the revenue had increased to a figure of $217,122.15 and the number of employees had dropped to 41. That seems to be very creditable progress so far as economy is concerned. However, if you pursue the problem a little further you find that such economy is effected by a sacrifice in service, particularly in the new suburban areas of the city of Brandon.

I should like to suggest this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps the saving effected is not in the best interests of the reputation of the Post Office Department so far as efficiency is concerned. Also on this general theme of the desire to plead poverty or financial hardship on the part of the Post Office Department in recent months, we need only refer to the rate increase in April last. There seems to be some contradiction between these two facts, curtailment of expenditure in certain areas on the one hand and the increased revenue that will be realized from the increase in postage rates on the other. Somewhere along the line this is going to result in a decrease in the volume of mail, which of course will work against the buoyancy of post office revenues. These matters, however, are incidental to the main point that I wish to bring forward this afternoon.

Throughout the prairie provinces in recent years there has been a tendency toward a decrease in the number of rural routes. I look into the annual report, however, and I notice that as between the fiscal year ended March 31, 1952, and the fiscal year ended March 31, 1953, there has been a 37 per cent increase in the number of rural routes serving the Canadian people. In the west, as I have indicated, and from personal knowledge of my own constituency, on the other hand, there has been a continuing process of discontinuation of rural routes that have been in existence for a good many years in this country. The last episode in my own constituency was the cancellation of three rural routes operating out of the town of Reston. The official explanation of this state of affairs emphasizes loss of patronage with the advent of the automobile age and further emphasizes the prevailing undesirable road conditions. In particular, in regard to the road conditions, the official explanation states that the roads are impassable in the wintertime. That is true. We must admit there are a good many roads in Manitoba that are impassable. That is not a new fact. That is a problem we have contended with from time immemorial in that part of the country. I imagine the real explanation lies in the first observation, namely, loss of patronage as the town post office becomes more accessible with the increase in the use of automobiles. That is quite true, but it places the patrons who have no automobile in rather an unfortunate position.

I do not know what the final solution to this difficulty is. There are special conditions in the west that have to be met in regard to the provision of any public service. We have the great distances, with very sparse populations, to contend with. Nevertheless, during recent years our population in the rural areas has tended to decrease and this has aggravated the difficulty of continued loss of patronage. However, I can foresee that if we continue to decrease the public service available to the citizens in our rural areas it is only going to make the trend that we refer to as a rural-urban drift all the more noticeable and obvious.

With the continued increase in mechanization of grain farming it is quite possible for one or two individuals to farm a very large area. Unfortunately if this trend that seems to be under way in the prairie provinces—of closing down rural routes—continues, it is only going to add to the process of depopulation. I say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not know what the solution is. Apparently the Post Office Department has taken the easy way out and is simply closing down the routes. With loss of patronage and loss of customers there is not sufficient left to warrant a rural route—so, close the routes. As I look over the rural routes in my constituency it seems that it will not be long until we have no rural route service at all.

I would just like to close by asking the minister the policy in this regard. Is there any clearly defined policy or is it just a formula applied right across the Dominion of Canada without taking into consideration the special circumstances that do exist—the circumstances that I have already outlined that do exist in the prairie west?

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I do not know much about what is going on in other constituencies with respect to the post office but I do know what is going on in Fort William. If the rest of the service is anything like that which we have in Fort William I would be surprised if anyone condemned the post office. Our post office in Fort William has been splendidly efficient. We have had a postmaster who was always young. He retired this year although he was good for twenty years more.

When the postmaster was changed they did not even consider me or ask me anything about it and I had enough common sense to let the civil service commission make the appointment—and they appointed the deputy. If they had brought in someone from North Winnipeg I suppose they would have heard from me, but they did not do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIvor: They did what I thought was fair and just—a young man who had served the post office since he was a boy was appointed to the position.

With respect to the retired postmaster, may I say I never heard of any complaints about his service. Not only was he an outstanding postmaster but he always had a little time to take care of the boys who played hockey.

I have not written a letter this year which did not find its destination. I have never written to the post office officials and received other than a courteous and decent reply. When new streets were opened it was my duty to co-operate with the people on those streets to see that they received service. The retired postmaster was very efficient, very courteous, and he saw that the letters were delivered to those people when there were sidewalks.

The only complaint I have heard about rural routes was away up near Hymers where they could not get mail in the wintertime because the roads were snowbound. I reported this but anybody knows that it is not the business of the Dominion of Canada to keep roads open. That is the duty of the provinces—to keep the roads open so that mail couriers may carry mail on their routes.

We received several increases for men who were carrying rural mail and those were outstandingly needed because the individuals were not making sufficient to carry on.

I have just one thing to say to the Postmaster General and it is this. People operating local post offices in the country are not being paid enough. When I found what some of them were receiving, for having to attend to the mail and keep an up-to-date office, I was surprised that the dominion government was so hard up. I think the minister should take that into consideration. People who are trusted with the queen's mail should receive a proper remuneration.

May I pay my tribute to the officials in the Post Office Department and to the deputy for the treatment I have received in the past year. If everyone else got the same treatment I think you would not have anyone finding fault.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a good deal of interest to the story told by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I do not intend to go into that aspect of the situation but my impression is that as far as British Columbia is concerned the digging for information would not be as fruitful. I have a suspicion that matters of that sort are carried on much more skilfully in British Columbia.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I must express to the Postmaster General my appreciation of his courtesy in dealing with any complaint or suggestion that I have had occasion to take up with him. He always has an investigation made into the particular complaint and I have always received a report as a result of that investigation—a report in detail giving reasons for the department's decision—whether I agreed with it or not. I appreciate that very much because I have been in the habit, formerly, of getting one- or two-sentence letters which practically said "no" in terse language, with little explanation.

I do want to say that, from my experience in the constituency and from my knowledge of smaller post offices, I have come to the conclusion that the basing of salaries of certain postmasters in these small post offices on the sale of stamps is unfair. I think it is an obsolete system and unfair because it is not in all cases a true reflection of the amount of work which the postmaster is required to do. I know of cases where, owing to geography and local circumstances, some people buy their stamps and get their mail at post offices other than in their own district. I do suggest that the system is completely outdated and that there should be a new system established to provide at least for a minimum salary in all cases.

Now, may I say a word or two with regard to rural mail contracts. Before proceeding, Mr. Chairman, I might note that my experience generally speaking has been that the Post Office Department has given remarkably good service under circumstances which, in some cases in my constituency, are very difficult. I am sure the Postmaster General, or if not the Postmaster General, his officials, will realize that some very peculiar circumstances arise in a constituency such as mine, where isolated places have to be served despite poor transportation facilities, poor roads and the difficulties they create. I want to say a word in commendation of the work of the people in the smaller post offices and in the service generally, and of those who carry rural mail. I am thinking of a particular case where the courier takes mail between Kaslo and Nelson and return every day. Sometimes it is very hazardous travelling along the Kaslo bluffs, under winter conditions. The person who carries that mail has occasionally made trips when no other vehicle would travel the road owing to the risk from snowslides and an icy road surface. I think that service is worth mentioning, but if I could take the time I could give the Postmaster General several illustrations, of service rendered under difficulties.

While I realize that contracts for carrying rural mail, according to law, must be awarded to the lowest tenderer, provided he or she has the equipment and the capacity, I do think that more consideration should be given—and I think there is sufficient latitude in the wording of the act—to such departures from that principle as are, shall I say, justified because of local conditions and circumstances. Sometimes the person who puts in a tender for carrying mail is only a few dollars higher than the lowest bidder but the former person is sometimes carrying on a service that is very necessary to the district. When that person obtains the contract, it makes it much easier to carry on the service in question. I just throw out that suggestion because I think on some occasions the department is fully justified in giving consideration to these local circumstances, and opinions.

I now want to bring to the minister's attention the necessity for the restoration of the mail service between Revelstoke and Nakusp and points on the lower Arrow lakes. There is no service at the present time. The famous steamer Minto, which has operated for 53 years, is now tied up at the dock because I understand the whole matter is not yet finalized. I am hoping that the Minister of Transport will soon hear from the minister of public works in British Columbia that the government of British Columbia is willing to join with the federal government in a subsidy to keep this steamship service running. Anyway, in the meantime there is no commercial transportation between Arrowhead and Nakusp, and persons travelling back and forth are obliged to use planes or small launches. Whether or not the Minto service is resumed, I am quite certain that some form of commercial transportation will be established in the near future—there must be—to serve the needs of the district.

I suggest to the minister that when a service is resumed, consideration should be given to the establishment of a mail service between Revelstoke and Nakusp. Revelstoke is on the main line of the C.P.R. All our mail from east and west goes conveniently from Revelstoke to the upper and lower Arrow lakes as far south as Edgewood. Revelstoke is the centre for several provincial government offices that are important so far as the lands and taxation departments are concerned. It simply means the dispatch of a bag or bags from Revelstoke, to Nakusp directly from which place points on the lower lakes could be served, and a bag for Halcyon and St. Leon. I mention this matter again because that service would be a tremendous convenience for that area. At Halcyon we have a sanitarium. At St. Leon we have a summer resort. We also have extensive logging operations along the upper lake. When I tell the minister that in those logging camps last year, between Nakusp and Arrowhead, over a million dollars' worth of forest products were produced, he will realize what a letter mail service means to that area. At the present time if you send a letter to Revelstoke it goes to Nelson which is 100 miles south. Then it goes to Calgary via the Kettle Valley railroad and from Calgary back to Revelstoke on the main line. Then if the letter is posted from Revelstoke, it goes in the reverse direction to Nakusp or other points on the Arrow lakes. It is an extremely slow service and is most inconvenient for the industries and businesses concerned and for the ranchers in the district. I again urge that consideration be given to making provision for a direct mail service between Revelstoke and Nakusp and way points.

I now come to a subject I think I can properly mention under this estimate. For years the post office facilities in Trail have been most inadequate. For years—for ten years at least—there has been a shortage of space. There is poor lighting, there is poor ventilation and the basement is definitely unsanitary. It is unfit for postal employees to work in. I wish the Postmaster General could see that basement when the sewers are full in Trail on account of storm water. The sewers back up into the basement and as a result there is a most offensive odour and at times a filthy situation. In recent years the conditions have been so bad that, to my knowledge, the department has lost a number of employees from the Trail post office, particularly letter carriers. The letter carriers are required to sort their mail in the basement under conditions at times that no person should be asked to work, because of the unsanitary nature of the basement. Some of these letter carriers have stayed on year after year in the hope that this new proposed federal building would be erected in Trail and that their working conditions would be remedied.

We have been promised the building for five years. Money has been voted by the House of Commons on three occasions. Money was again voted at this session for the commencement of this federal building. The latest information given me by the minister was that, owing to a revision of the plans, he did not think it possible for tenders to be called until late this fall. I want to draw to the minister's particular attention the fact that I have also been informed that there has been considerable delay owing to representations made by the Post Office Department for changes in the design of this building, and that the Post Office Department has taken considerable time in advising the Department of Public Works with respect to changes required in the plans for the new building. I understand there has been a revision of plans owing to the internal requirements of various departments and a revision of plans because of a certain type of entrance that was necessary for the mail bus to conveniently pick up and deliver mail. I am told that a considerable part of this delay has been occasioned by the time it has taken the minister's department to accurately inform the Department of Public Works of its needs and requirements. In fairness to the public of the district—and it is a great wealth producing district, Mr. Chairman—and in fairness to the employees, I urge the minister to do everything he can to press for an early commencement of the construction of the proposed federal building in Trail so that his department will be able to render the service that is necessary to the district and so that his employees will work under proper conditions.

Mr. Holowach: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say a word or two on this item. I intend to make my remarks brief and as much to the point as possible. I feel that I will be expressing the point of view of many members in this chamber when I say that we feel fortunate in having our new minister in charge of this vital department. Apart from his affable nature, by the manner in which he has responded to criticisms in the past, he has given evidence that he is willing to bring about whatever improvements are possible in his department. In the matter of patronage and political string-pulling, we trust that his feelings are the same as those of the other members of the House of Commons who do not condone these things. For these reasons, I am sure my remarks will receive the attention of the minister and that he will give sympathetic consideration to the solution of a problem which has arisen in an important part of Edmonton East. I refer to the town of Beverly. The town of Beverly, like other towns in Alberta, is growing by leaps and bounds. Beverly is, in fact, a suburb of Edmonton. It is a most vigorous and ever-expanding residential as well as business area. At the present time the population of Beverly is over 4,000. The population there has tripled within the last three years. I may say that at the present time negotiations are being carried on with the city of Edmonton looking to the inauguration of water service, and other public services for that town. I should also like to point out to the minister that Beverly, lying on the borders of Edmonton, is inhabited by a great many industrial workers employed in the chemical plants and refineries around the city of Edmonton. At the same time an important commercial road passes through Beverly, from the heart of Edmonton, to this highly industrialized area.

In view of the tremendous expansion of the area, the people of Beverly have felt for some considerable time that they are justified in asking for improvements in the postal buildings as well as in the service given to them. The present buildings are very small and cramped, and while they perhaps served the needs of the community well in the past, the present size of the town certainly justifies better buildings as well as additional delivery service. Of course I am not reflecting in any way on the service that is being given now. Under the circumstances, the public servants there have done an excellent job, but I would appreciate if the minister would seriously investigate the possibility of inaugurating a postal delivery service for that area at the earliest possible date.

(Translation):

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Chairman, last year parliament approved a $250,000 appropriation for construction of a public building in Chicoutimi. A few days ago, when I asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) where this project stood and why there was no mention of that amount in this year's estimates, he answered that the Postmaster General (Mr. Cote) had told him that he would like to make a survey of postal services in that district and that his department was not in a position to proceed with this building before this survey was ended.

I would therefore like the Postmaster General to tell me what point has been reached in this survey and whether he will soon make a report to his colleague, the Minister of Public Works.

The minister knows full well that for the past twenty years and more the people of Chicoutimi, through civil authorities and chambers of commerce, have been requesting the erection of a suitable building. Present accommodation is inadequate, considering the growing needs of those people. A few years ago some land was acquired for that purpose. I know that the minister is well acquainted with Chicoutimi and that he also has some good friends there. I would therefore like him to tell me, when he speaks of his department, what his plans are with regard to Chicoutimi.

(Text):

Mr. Noseworthy: Mr. Chairman, as consolation to the minister, who has been receiving considerable criticism this afternoon, may I say that this session I have in my file fewer criticisms of his department than in any other session since I first came to Ottawa. Many of the difficulties about which we have complained in the past have been ironed out, but there are still a few left that I want to bring to the minister's attention. I want to remind him that I have been asking for a post office for York township ever since I came to Ottawa twelve years ago. I do not want him to forget it. I am still asking for it. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond talked about a community with 70,000 people having no post office. For their consolation may I inform them that York township is a community, now seeking incorporation as a city, with a population of over 100,000 and yet it has nothing but a number of sub-post offices located in drug stores, hardware stores and so on throughout the area.

The people there all have to go into the city of Toronto for the services which only a postal station can give. That is not what I want to deal with. I take up that matter by correspondence with the minister from time to time. I want to deal with a few matters pertaining to the labour relations within the post office in Toronto. I cannot deal with the relations in the post office in my riding because we do not have a post office, so I have to content myself with dealing with the grievances of the Toronto postal employees or those from my constituency who work out of the Toronto post office.

There is still considerable dissatisfaction on the part of the night workers over the differential that was established when the 40-hour week was introduced. As the minister knows, before the introduction of the 40-hour week there was a five and a half hour differential between the night and day workers. The day workers worked forty-four hours and the night workers thirty-eight and a half hours a week, making a five and a half hour differential. I understand that the post office has now wiped out the time differential, has required the night and day shifts to work forty hours and has replaced the time differential with a cash differential of $6 a week worked out on the basis of 15 cents an hour.

The postal employees association and the night workers feel that is not a satisfactory differential. As far as I can gather, they would much prefer the time differential to the cash differential, if not five and a half hours, possibly five hours or something less. That is the recommendation of the postal employees association and all the night workers to whom I have spoken.

Then there is the question of holidays for some of the night workers. There are women workers in the Toronto Fleet street post office who work until twelve and one o'clock in the morning six nights a week. However, because they are considered to be part-time workers they are not entitled to any holidays with pay. They tell me that if they are in the good graces of the man in charge they may be able to wangle a holiday occasionally, but otherwise they cannot. There is a feeling there that these women, who are steady workers, who work six nights a week, should be given some concession by way of holidays, even though they are considered part-time workers. If the minister will take cognizance of these two small grievances, that is all I want to put before him now.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Montgomery: I do not intend to take very much time, but I should like to make a few remarks in connection with the first item of the Postmaster General's estimates. I must say that I have some criticism of the postal department, but so far as the minister is concerned I really appreciate the courtesy that he has extended to me on the inquiries I have made. There is one exception to that, and I shall bring that to his attention before I finish my remarks.

I feel the Postmaster General should know that while the increased postal rate was strenuously debated in this house and has now become law, it is not a popular thing. In my own constituency I have found that the increase has been thrown up to me quite often. The most unfortunate part of it is that this increased cost seems to be the basis for increased demands for service throughout the rural areas and that is going to be the basis of my remarks this evening. There are not a great many areas that do not receive daily mail under the rural carrier system, but there are some. These people feel very strongly that they are being discriminated against when they cannot qualify under the present regulation of three or four boxes to the mile for receiving daily mail. Some of these people receive a great deal of mail, but have to wait three or four days to get it.

It seems that these complaints arise as a result of the carrier being on a holiday one day, and then not delivering the mail the next day, as he does not have to do under the regulations. Some of these people will have a pile of five or six daily newspapers that are all delivered at once. The same remarks apply to stormy or wet weather. I do not believe that a mail carrier should have to go out in stormy weather, but if he does not go that day because of the storm and the roads are plowed out the next day, he should go that day. The people feel that in view of the fact they are paying an increased cost for the service and the cities are getting at least one delivery a day—in some places consideration is being given to two deliveries a day—then the people in the rural areas should get mail delivered once a day if the roads are passable.

There are places that cannot expect daily mail deliveries, but I am referring to places in which there are almost enough settlers to qualify under the regulations now. There was not too much complaint before the increase, but I find I am getting a lot more demands now. This is due to the fact the people feel if they are going to pay increased costs, they should receive service. As I said before when the bill was before the house, the increased postal rate and the lower air-mail rate benefits a great many people but not those who are living in rural areas. I realize it might be difficult for departmental officials to understand this because a great many of them are not people who have lived out in the back areas such as that from which I come. These people feel they are contributing to the revenues of this department, and they feel that a five-cent postage rate is too much, to put it bluntly. If they have to pay that rate, then they feel they are entitled to some service, especially when they read in the newspapers that the cities are demanding deliveries twice a day. I feel they have some reason for complaint, and I do not hesitate to stand up here and plead their case. Before there are two deliveries a day in the cities there should be some change made in the regulations to enable the people in these rural areas who can almost qualify under the four boxes per mile provision to receive daily mail.

I can recall one case in my constituency that has been brought to the attention of the district headquarters inspector, but upon which I have had no report. I asked for a report some time last fall. Perhaps the minister or some of his staff would look up the files and verify the fact that I have never received a reply. No doubt the matter has been investigated because, as I said in opening, the minister has been very courteous with respect to my inquiries. I am going to ask him about that one exception I mentioned. I am referring to the Saint John district. If investigations were made of certain complaints, some changes could be made and daily service established in some places for which it has been requested. Perhaps this could be accomplished through a rearrangement of the routes. I do not feel it is a member's place to go out and conduct that investigation. The departmental officials are the ones who can work that out better than anyone else.

There is one place in particular, and I think the minister or deputy minister knows about it because I have been asking about it for over a year, called Glassville. There are two routes there, one daily and one tri-weekly. They could easily be amalgamated, and it could be worked out so there would be no hardship on anyone, with the exception that one mail carrier may have to be dropped. I do not like to see anyone lose his job, but the consideration of the people comes first. That is a matter that the departmental officials in Ottawa and Saint John know about, and I am asking that further investigations be made.

I do not think I need to say anything more about that. I want to compliment the minister and his department on the way most of the applications of rural carriers for reconsideration have been treated. I have had a few complaints but on the whole I believe they have been treated fairly well. Everyone cannot be satisfied, but on the whole I believe they have been treated well under this system. At the same time I do not feel the amendment that was passed last year should be treated in a manner that will enable old carriers to be left on because of—I hesitate to say this but I am going to say it—political considerations.

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Mr. Montgomery: You might be surprised to find that there is some in my constituency. I think we should face the fact. I think the elected member is the man who represents the constituency, not the defeated candidate. I am not saying that the Postmaster General is doing this in particular, but I did hear a lot about it this afternoon. I also hear about it in my constituency, whether it is true or not.

Changes must be made from time to time but I should like to see these changes based upon the recommendations of the people along the route. If a man has been doing a good job I think he should be given another chance. If he has not been doing a good job and satisfying the people along the route, then when his contract runs out consideration should be given to calling tenders.

I presume that the Postmaster General will be answering a lot of questions that have been asked and when doing so I wish he would tell me something I have been waiting for since December 17. I am quite sure that he has overlooked this. He wrote me on that date that he was going to bring me up to date on the situation at Plaster Rock. They have been after a post office there. They did own a piece of land but apparently it was not large enough and I believe another piece has been secured. I am sure that this is just an oversight but I have been waiting patiently for a report on this matter. Will the minister please look up to the file as I am sure additional information must have come in since then. I would like him to bring me up to date. If he cannot do it when he is answering questions, it will be all right if he will drop me a letter and give me that information. All sorts of rumours are going around and I hope they are just rumours and not facts.

I was not able to be here when the estimates of the Department of Public Works were dealt with but I want to say that I appreciate the co-operation the Minister of Public Works has given me in regard to the public building, which will contain the post office, in Woodstock. All that is appreciated.

I do not think there is anything else at the moment that I want to go into. I ask the minister again to keep the Plaster Rock situation in mind and bring me up to date on it. I have not bothered him about it because I felt that when he got the information he would give it to me. He must have a lot of information by now. If the rumours are true, he has that information; if they are not true I would like to know.

Mr. Mang: Mr. Chairman, I represent a rural constituency in Saskatchewan in which are located a great many rural post offices.

There has been considerable criticism of one kind and another of certain individual items in connection with the administration of the Post Office Department, but I am one of those who does not judge a whole situation because one small part may not be all that is desired. Some people enjoy picking out one small part and endeavouring to make that represent the entire picture. I would not be happy doing that.

A great deal has been said about laxity in the delivery of mail. When this house closed at six o'clock I went down to the post office and obtained a letter from my sister in the town of Edenwold, Saskatchewan, which is nearly two thousand miles away, on a branch line running northeast from Regina. This letter had been written last night at a quarter to seven and I am sure it was in the box waiting for me at five o'clock this afternoon.

May I say that this is not the first time I have been subjected to such maltreatment by the Post Office Department. I get it quite regularly. If I only had the ability to express myself dramatically which is possessed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North I would attempt to dramatize this alacrity on the part of the Post Office Department. However, as I am lacking in those dramatic qualities which are found in such profusion on the other side I must forgo that pleasure.

The postmasters and postmistresses are the forgotten people in many cases. These people render a great service and I often think that the payment they receive in return is not at all commensurate. I mention this in order to emphasize a point which was touched upon this afternoon. The postmaster or postmistress in a small village, say of 185 or 200 people, has a strong personal relationship with the community. No matter what hours are prescribed by the Post Office Department as to the post office opening at such and such an hour or closing at such and such an hour, these postmasters and postmistresses find quite often that those hours do not mean a thing. Very often they are called at ten o'clock or eleven o'clock at night and if a person has come in eight or ten miles the postmaster or postmistress will oblige and let him have his mail. They are on call nearly all the time. This is particularly true where the post office is located in a dwelling, as is quite often the case.

When the post office is located in a dwelling people come and go all the time and there is a constant stream of visitors throughout the whole week. They have not the same privacy they otherwise would have if the post office was in a store or somewhere else.

The situation I have described is true in connection with many of the smaller post offices.

Coming back to the question of remuneration: The basis of remuneration is the revenue of the post office. The revenue decides the classification, and the postmaster or postmistress is paid according to that classification. That does not take into account the huge volume of handlings that are taken care of in that post office. In a little village, such as my own village of Edenwold, I have known catalogues to the number of eight or ten bags to come in at one time. I have given this example before. It takes a considerable amount of work—not that they come in every day—to handle that great volume of mail.

I would suggest that the Post Office Department, if it has not already done so, give some consideration to the volume of actual pieces of mail handled in an office. The revenue that comes in is not always a true criterion upon which to base the activity that takes place in an office. At Christmastime, at Eastertime and at valentine time and so on, on these special occasions, there are literally thousands of pieces of mail handled. With the business upswing that we have had in the west, a great deal of business mail has also had to be taken care of. I would suggest that in some way the Post Office Department find out just what the volume of business is in these post offices, apart from the actual sale of stamps and so forth, because it is considerable at the present time, and then probably pay a bonus in places where the volume is greatest.

As for patronage, with respect to almost every problem that you can think of you can find something in the Good Book, which was given to us for guidance, to take care of it. It is so with the matter of patronage. I have in mind the text:

> He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone.

Since I come from Saskatchewan I know full well that that is a very significant text to quote to my hon. friends opposite, and I know that they have no post office to use in a patronage way. I am not convinced that it is so used by the Post Office Department, in spite of all the things that have been said.

There is no government in any part of the world so pure that it is not without its human element, its human influences and its party feeling. I think that text should be borne in mind when those voluminous documents are read which tend to show that there is patronage and that there are patronage difficulties. As I said, it is true that in Saskatchewan we have learned what patronage can be.

Mr. Castleden: The hon. member is talking about the old Gardiner machine, is he?

Mr. Mang: If so, you have learned the lesson very well; you have doubled and trebled it.

Mr. Castleden: Heaven forbid.

Mr. Mang: If so, you have doubled and trebled it.

Mr. Castleden: We lived under it for years, that is why we changed it.

Mr. Mang: I would repeat that as far as the post office is concerned, it is a department that reaches into every home; the five-year-old youngster will be mailing a card at Christmastime; the eighty-year-old gentleman will be sending a letter once or twice a year.

Mr. Knowles: That is about all he can afford.

Mr. Mang: My remark would not apply to the hon. member for Fort William; but the department reaches into every home and almost every person has some connection with it. For that reason it is a difficult department to administer. All in all the Post Office Department is to be commended on the very efficient service it is rendering, as I have proved by the letter I have just mentioned and which I received only tonight.

In closing I say I am thankful that after a few years' effort, Kipling, the newest town in my constituency, is going to have a post office in the very near future.

Mr. Hahn: I have only two or three short questions that I should like to have answered. I would have been surprised if I had not heard the hon. member for Qu'Appelle wondering what had happened to socialism or has it not had any patronage in its ranks. I find he came through nobly. To me it is a strange state of affairs to have a Liberal member in the house suggesting that a C.C.F. member can be 99 per cent right. Strangely enough, I find myself agreeing in one or two instances in this respect.

What I have in mind is the question of the drop letter rate in the Burnaby-Coquitlam-New Westminster area. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam made an excellent case this afternoon when he drew the attention of the committee to the need for such a letter rate. I am quite sure that the minister is not too familiar with the geography of New Westminster-Burnaby and the city of Vancouver or we should have had such a drop letter rate long ago. One must understand that the whole area is a metropolitan area. It is entirely within a division known as the county of New Westminster. Therefore, I would urgently request the minister to give consideration to including New Westminster in the drop letter rate. As I understand it, south and north Burnaby and Vancouver come under one letter rate, namely the drop letter rate but because east Burnaby and Barnet and New Westminster are in separate postal divisions they have not that particular privilege. If the minister were just to come to the British Empire games in Vancouver this year he would be privileged at the same time to see that the whole thing is one large city. Of course each one is a separate entity but is anxious to be assured of a four-cent letter rate as far as postage is concerned between their various post offices.

Another question I have to ask is, when will letter carriers begin house-to-house deliveries in south Westminster and areas south of the Fraser river. The section has been enumerated for letter carrier purposes but up to date we have nothing very definite as to when the letter carriers are to start making deliveries.

One thing further is the justification for a federal building to house the post office. In the Whalley area we have a post office. We are paying approximately $6,000 a year rent for the post office and it serves a large area; but that is quite an expenditure expecially when you pay, in addition to $6,000 a year, another $300 and some odd to have it insulated so that the outside range of temperature does not disturb those inside too much. I would again urge the minister to come out and visit this particular region, and it is part of the whole suggestion that we have it included in one postal area. We have a post office and a new federal building to be erected in New Westminster, but we have rented a building at approximately $6,000 a year in the Whalley area. It is poor business to spend $6,000 a year for rent when we could probably build the same type of structure for about $20,000 or $25,000 and keep it as a national asset.

One other problem has arisen during the course of the year and this is one that touches not just my own riding but several others. The question I have in mind happens to be a post office and the appointment of a postmaster as well. In this case, as was suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, patronage may be involved but I have not checked the files to see and I am not interested in that at this time. What I am interested in is seeing that something is done to change the act. At the present time those who wish to become eligible for a job as postmaster in a certain area must all get their mail from that particular post office. To give hon. members a full picture of the situation I would like to give this illustration. We have a rural mail delivery throughout the whole of our area and within that area we have one small post office. Now there might only be 50 or 60 people being served with mail from that particular office. But if we require a new postmaster the government will have to send out a questionnaire requesting the names of those who would be willing to apply for that job. But those who are eligible are limited to the number of persons who receive their mail from that post office.

The whole area is surrounded by a postal route. None of the people get their mail from the post office because it comes from cities such as New Westminster. However, these people buy their stamps from the post office and yet they are not eligible to become postmaster or postmistress as the case might be. Certainly I believe there should be some change in the act, or some form of exception written into the act, which would allow these people to become eligible for this office. That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman, and if I can have an answer to these few questions I will be quite delighted.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to take up a very few moments to bring to the attention of hon. members a subject which I have no doubt has been raised in this house on many previous occasions. I refer to certain tactics used by the Post Office Department, though I might add that department is by no means alone in adopting this procedure. I am sure most hon. members would agree that the tactics I am about to describe are discourteous to certain hon. members in this house and an affront to the people of the ridings which they represent.

As an example of this I would like to bring to the minister's attention a situation which arose in regard to a post office in my own riding, namely the post office at Beachville, Ontario. This post office is being built by a syndicate and not by the Department of Public Works, and a certain portion of the building is to be leased to the Post Office Department. The architects in the Department of Public Works approved the plans, and I might say, having had some dealings with the Department of Public Works in this matter, that I received every courtesy from the officials in that department. However, after the architects have approved the plans they go subsequently, I understand, to the treasury and the post office for approval, and approval, of course, is also given to the terms of lease.

Having spent some time on this problem I was very surprised, and I may say not very pleased, to note in the March 24 issue of the Woodstock Sentinel Review the following item:

> Clark Murray, former M.P. for Oxford, announced receipt of word from Ottawa that government approval had been granted to the proposal to erect a suitable building at Beachville to provide postal accommodation.

It may be all very well for the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to say, as he did a few moments ago, that the government after all is human and that we should forgive these little human failings, and wink an eye at them, but I would like to submit that such tactics, which I have heard referred to as "pork barrel politics of the 1890's" are a bit out of date nowadays.

Mr. Mang: I did not say "wink your eye at them".

Mr. Nesbitt: I apologize to the hon. member. But it is no excuse to get up and say that other governments have done this and therefore it must be all right. To perpetuate a wrong does not make it one bit better.

However, the Post Office Department is by no means alone in this regard and in order to make the Postmaster General feel a little better I would like to refer to one other item of much the same kind. I have here an extract from the London Free Press dated March 31, 1954 which refers to improvements to the Canadian National Railways station at Woodstock. I will not quote the entire article but it states in part:

> News that the C.N.R. station would be renovated was first announced here by Clark Murray, former M.P. for Oxford, who received word from the federal government late today.

Now, that is another example, and perhaps it will enable the Postmaster General to feel a little better and realize that it is not only his department which can be criticized in this regard.

An hon. Member: But his is the only department being run by Clark Murray.

Mr. Nesbitt: I would not wish to imply that the government have been doing something immoral, because the word "immoral" would imply that there was a certain code of ethics. I would rather say that this behaviour is unmoral and I am sure most of the senior ministers in the government are now aware of it. Certainly the Prime Minister, for whom everyone in this house has the greatest respect, cannot possibly be aware of this for I am quite certain he would not countenance such behaviour if he were made aware of it.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to take up much more of the time of the committee in dealing with this matter, but I am sure we all know of the three letters LPP, sometimes meant to refer to the Labour-Progressive party, but I have heard them referred to as "Liberal, Post Office and Patronage."

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to take the minister's mind back to British Columbia for a few moments, I would like to assure him at the outset that the constituency I represent is not part of the county of New Westminster and I have no intention of suggesting that he extend this drop letter rate to include my territory as well.

If I recall correctly the very first problem with which I was called upon to deal after my election was a problem related to the Post Office Department, so I suppose in a sense that makes the department the most important one in the government as far as I am concerned, and I am quite sure the minister would be willing to agree with that. The particular problem to which I have referred had to do with the reduction in an air mail service which had been provided on the west coast of Vancouver island. It was a question of whether a mail service should be provided for that area on a thrice weekly basis, although the service had been reduced to less than that.

I think the minister will readily understand that people living in isolated communities on the west coast of an island such as Vancouver island, where they have no railway, no highways, and what they consider to be a very infrequent boat service, find it difficult to understand why the plane which was coming into their community three times per week could not at least carry their mail in and out of the island. It did not take me long to discover the reason for this reduction. However, I would like to assure the minister that the officials of his department in British Columbia were working out the best arrangement they could within the limits of the directives which came from a city known as Ottawa, with which I have since become a little better acquainted.

The reason why I am raising this matter at this time is to indicate that I was one of the members who were quite pleased when the Minister of Finance announced on December 8 that all first class mail would be carried by air if air carriage would speed delivery. I hope the minister is aware of the fact that Canada does not stop at Regina nor at the community mentioned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, nor at Vancouver. I rise at this time simply to express to the minister the hope that when I return to my constituency at the end of the session I shall be able to discover that the statement made by the Minister of Finance on December 8 last means exactly what it says and that this policy of carrying mail by air wherever that carriage will speed its delivery is going to apply to places on the west coast of Canada as well as to points between Vancouver and Montreal. I should like to feel that the minister and the officials of his department recognize that to people living in the more isolated communities, where in many cases no other practicable alternative means of carrying mail exists, it is as important, if not more so, that the fullest possible use should be made of all existing air services. I would even go so far as to venture to hope that the Post Office Department will take an interest, wherever it is possible and feasible, in stimulating the development of air service to the more remote parts of Canada as a means of improving the service the department can provide.

I think it is important to realize that one of the results of the existence of air travel, as far as areas like the west coast of British Columbia are concerned, has been a decrease in the frequency and quality of the steamer services available to many points and that, as a result, many communities today are getting a poorer mail service than they had 20 or 30 years ago. For that reason, as I previously stated, this announcement that all mail is to be carried by air if that move will speed its delivery is a most important one to the people living in the coastal areas of British Columbia at this time.

I have only one other matter on which I should like to say a few words before I sit down. I think I expressed myself on it once before when we were discussing some of the matters affecting the Post Office Department. I expressed some surprise at the rather unnecessary difficulty, as it appeared to me, the department was running into in connection with their personnel relationships. As I think the minister may recall, I mentioned the fact that I happen to have had some association with the organized trade union movement wherein we have developed, in our day to day dealings with the employers in the industry with which I was connected, quite a good working relationship on many matters. Some of the points which have been raised by members in various parts of the chamber as to the problems in the relationships between the employees of the postal department and the department are rather startling to someone who has had experience with the kind of relationship which is an everyday matter in much of the industrial field today. I think this problem which has been mentioned in connection with supervisory letter carriers is one of them.

I know that seniority is always one of the more difficult matters to arrange, particularly when it comes to the question of leave. Without attempting to go into all the details, may I say this. On reading through the report of the arrangement that has been worked out here, may I say that it strikes me as being a rather topsy-turvy sort of arrangement where senior men are not going to have the opportunity to pick their holidays which their seniority would warrant. I think the crux of the matter is a point which has been raised on a number of occasions by spokesmen for the party to which I belong, namely, that the people who work in the civil service of Canada have not, so far, been allowed to have full bargaining rights as workers in industry understand those rights. I think it is a rather silly thing that members of parliament should have to stand up, in effect, to do the bargaining as bargaining agents for the civil service. That is a lot of nonsense. Those are things which those people who are employed should be able to bargain on directly with their employer, as is done by workers in other fields of endeavour in Canada. The very fact that circular letters addressed to members of parliament come from various branches of the civil service from time to time is, I think, an indication that the time has come when the people in the civil service of Canada should have the ordinary bargaining rights that are assured, by law in many cases, to other workers in Canada.

Mr. Leboe: I will not be more than a few minutes, Mr. Chairman; I can give you that assurance. There are only one or two questions that I have in mind. I do not think we need worry too much about the people wanting post office jobs in British Columbia because the wages are quite high over there, and I do not think they are too greatly interested. But there is one matter about which I should like to ask a question of and to receive an answer from the Postmaster General. It is in connection with the Edmonton-Prince George railroad post office. I believe that about the 26th of April a switch was going to be made and was called off at the last moment. Just in case it was called off only temporarily, I should like to get a few details as to just what it implied. It has been called to my attention—whether it is right or not, I do not know—that T.C.A. mail loadings have at times been so heavy that certain seats have been taken out of the aircraft in order to allow mail to be put on and, as a result, passengers have been unable to travel and to get space bookings. I do not know whether or not that is true but it has been one of the complaints that have come to my attention. I should just like to have the Postmaster General's comment on the matter.

There is one other matter that I should like to mention. We have the C.P.A. plane that leaves Vancouver in the morning and goes through Kamloops, Quesnel and Prince George and return. I understand that it does not carry mail. With the growth that there is in the interior at this time, it would seem to me that many people in the Kamloops area and also other communities in the central parts of British Columbia could well use that service. I understand that mail from Prince George that is going into Kamloops is carried by air from Prince George into Vancouver, and sent out at night on the Canadian Pacific railway train and into Kamloops that way, and vice versa to get back up to Prince George.

These are two or three of the things that I had in mind. I should also like the Postmaster General to comment on the Dawson Creek federal building. I understand it has been promised for a long time now, and since it is going to house the new post office I should like the minister to say something about it.

Mr. Cardiff: I do not wish to take up very much time, but there are a few things I should like to draw to the attention of the Postmaster General. I do not think it would be very difficult to criticize but I do not intend to criticize the Post Office Department because of the fact that in most places we are getting very good service. I wish to say a word or two about the rural mail couriers. Some little time ago, when an effort was made to increase their salaries, it was suggested that the route of a person who was complaining should be compared with two or three nearby routes. That may be all right, but perhaps the remuneration on those two or three other routes is too low too. In that case the poor fellow would not have a chance to get much of an increase. In several places this has been corrected but some of the couriers are still dissatisfied with the amount they got.

I should like to remind the Postmaster General of one particular case, that of Albert A. Gammie of Lucknow, Ontario. He got an increase but he did not think it was sufficient. Whether or not he has made representations to the Postmaster General since I do not know. I did have the information as to the amount of the increase he received, and apparently it was not sufficient to satisfy him. I know of several others. I also know that quite a number of rural couriers who have not even put in an application for an increase are complaining that they are not getting enough money. I do not blame the Post Office Department entirely for that because of the fact that when these men were tendering they had the opportunity to tender high enough to give them a decent wage. The trouble is that they tendered low to get the contract and then, after finding that they could not carry out the contract as cheaply as they thought they could, they started to complain that they wanted more money. I think the Post Office Department has been very fair in a great many of these cases but there are still a few that I hope the department will take note of and correct if possible.

I should like to say a word about postmasters. I want to congratulate the postmasters in my entire riding. I have not had a complaint about a postmaster in my riding since I first came into office. I think that is a credit to them. The postmaster is one of the most important men in any community because he probably knows more about the people in the community than any other one man. If he is doing his job properly he has a lot of friends. I can remember the postmaster we had in our own town some years ago. Looking back over the years I would not complain about him now as I would have then. He was a man who was getting on in years. He was over 70 years of age and possibly a little irritable. He stuck strictly to the law. If the post office was supposed to be closed at a certain minute he would close it right in your face and would not give you your mail. There are not very many of them like that. I have not heard any complaints about any postmasters in my riding. I think they are giving a wonderful service.

I should like to say a word about extending mail routes. The postage rate was increased to five cents and I am sure many people are perfectly satisfied with the five cent air mail service. However, we find that many people on the back concessions have to go a considerable distance to get their mail. I think that perhaps the requirement of four boxes to the mile is too many, and these people deserve consideration just the same as others. I think it should be lowered to two to the mile. It would be a wonderful thing for some of these people living on the back concessions to be able to get their mail at their gates. The roads are all open now in the wintertime. It is very seldom that a road is blocked for any considerable length of time, and there is no difficulty in getting down the back roads. I suggest to the Postmaster General that perhaps consideration could be given to lowering the number to the mile in future.

Then there is a matter which I took up with the Postmaster General some time ago but so far I have not heard anything about it. I have a letter from the town clerk of the town of Exeter which reads as follows:

> Please find enclosed letter to the Postmaster General which is self-explanatory. The members of the town council would appreciate anything you can do to help in this matter.

I am going to read the letter that was sent to the Postmaster General. It is dated January 21, 1954 and reads as follows:

> I have been instructed by the town council of Exeter to bring to your attention the gross inadequacy of the accommodation provided by the post office building here. The building was constructed in 1928 when Exeter was a village of 1,600 and postal facilities were not used as extensively as they are today. Since then the town has grown to over 2,600 and has become the shopping centre of an ever-increasing area.
> As far as the public is concerned, the lobby is far too small and the number of private boxes available does not begin to supply the demand. At least every mail the place is so crowded that it is impossible to carry on business properly. Many persons go to the door and turn away to come back later. It is also evident that the working space for the staff is much too small.
> Fortunately, there is space for enlarging the building. The town council request that action be taken as quickly as possible to alleviate the present unsatisfactory condition and to make Exeter post office a building of which the Post Office Department and the town may be proud.

I might tell the Postmaster General that I visited that post office. It is a building that has not been up very long and there is plenty of space behind it on which to erect an extension. I do not think there is anything in the estimates this year to take care of it, but I hope that the Postmaster General will take the matter into consideration and that conditions there will be corrected. It is a flourishing town and a lot of business is done. I had a report as to the increase in the volume of business. It has almost doubled in the last few years, and I think they are deserving of some consideration. I believe that is all I have to say. I do not know whether the Postmaster General has any report on the findings at Exeter, but if he has I hope he will tell me about it when he replies. If not, I would be glad to get the information as soon as possible.

Mr. Ellis: The hon. member for Oxford directed the attention of the minister to an incident in his own locality. Just in case the minister may think that is an isolated example, I should like to say at this time that some time last fall an item appeared in the Regina Leader-Post to the effect that mail delivery service was to be commenced in a new area of the city. This announcement was made by the defeated Liberal candidate in the last election, and the item contained the information that he had received word about this move from the Postmaster General. I do not know the source of the former member's information but I was not worried about it. I do not believe that sort of thing does a defeated candidate any good, but I do believe it is discourteous. I do not know whether or not that is the policy of the department, but when the minister replies I should like him to comment on the suggestions brought up by one or two other members, and tell us whether it is the intention of the Post Office Department to continue having announcements of this kind made by ex-M.P.'s or defeated Liberal candidates.

Mr. Argue: A new conception of democracy.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Nicholson: I believe there are quite a number of questions the minister should answer.

Mr. Harris: Why not carry the item and get the answers later?

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Argue: Then somebody would rise on a point of order.

Mr. Cote: First of all I want to thank those hon. members who have contributed to the debate. Some were most complimentary in their remarks while others had a lighter form of speech, though the tone was very cheerful. I shall not attempt to answer all the questions. Some of those that I cannot answer now I shall study, but I shall try to answer as many questions as possible.

The hon. member for Hamilton West spoke of two deliveries a day. I have made several statements about this, and my views have not changed. I hope that sooner or later we will be able to return to two deliveries a day, but I shall ask hon. members to bear in mind that it would cost at least, if not more than, $6 million. I repeat what I have already said on this subject, that I hope sooner or later we will be in a position to return to two deliveries. However, that time has not yet arrived. In the meantime we are making whatever improvements are possible. Some hon. members appreciate the fact we are already giving two deliveries a day in the business centres. On the other hand, some of the members said that we should not give two deliveries a day in the cities before we give at least one delivery a day in the rural areas.

[Mr. Ellis.]

Not only this question, but the whole postal problem, is a very complicated affair. I wish all hon. members would take the opportunity of visiting not only their own post office, but also the post offices in the larger centres. They will see then how complicated the problem is. They will probably ascertain that the department is doing all it can to settle the problem. At the same time hon. members should keep in mind that those who participate in the postal administration are human beings. Out of a possible 100 per cent, 99 per cent of the service provided is very good. We do not hear any criticism of that service. We are bound to listen to complaints about the remaining one per cent of the service. We understand that. I do not want to avoid criticism. On the contrary I invite constructive criticism, that kind of criticism that will keep us alert and enable us to ascertain the errors. I believe hon. members will find that out of a possible 100 per cent our average is very high, and the errors are limited to not more than one per cent.

The hon. member for Hamilton West mentioned the price of printed postcards. She made some suggestions, and I was glad to receive them. I do not know how far I can go eventually in correcting the situation, if correction is feasible, but I shall carefully read in detail the suggestions made and will make the necessary inquiries. She also brought up the subject of newspapers shipped by air. Newspapers are shipped by air, but not through the mail. They are carried as air cargo by the transportation companies. I mean we transfer only first class mail and parcel post by air, but it is possible that the transportation companies carry newspapers as air cargo.

Then there was the question of the supervisory mail carrier mentioned by the hon. member for Hamilton West. This seems to be a question of title, either "supervisory" or "relief". These men perform more difficult duties than the regular letter carrier who is assigned to only one walk. My hon. friend seemed to suggest these supervisory carriers should not be paid for this added responsibility. The positions were advertised and anyone could apply. Only where the senior man did not apply did we appoint a junior man. I am sure my hon. friend would not suggest that we should have delayed the implementation of the 40-hour week until all these positions were filled by senior men. I do not want to deal with that at any length, because I think every member knows about it. The job had to be done, and whenever it was possible to have a senior man do the job we did not ask for more than that.

In some offices the senior men did not apply for the job, but the job had to be done even if the senior men did not want to do that work. In some instances a supervisory or relief man has to learn five or ten routes, whereas the ordinary man has to learn only one route. It is a more laborious job and in those instances where the senior men did not want the job the junior men had to be appointed.

Mr. Knowles: Can the Postmaster General tell us at this point what the present arrangement is as between supervisory letter carriers and regular letter carriers with respect to the taking of holiday leave?

Mr. Cote: If my recollection is correct, I believe the relief man has the privilege of taking his annual leave first.

Mr. Knowles: In all cases?

Mr. Cote: No, only where we did not get enough men.

Mr. Knowles: But within a group of thirteen, I believe it is, the supervisory letter carrier gets first choice even though there may be regular letter carriers in the same group with many more years of service?

Mr. Cote: I do not know if I have made myself understood. What I meant to say was, where it was possible to find senior men to do the job we did so. When a senior man applied, there was no question of priority. It was only when we had to employ junior men.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether the Postmaster General understands the point about which we are concerned. We are not discussing the pay differential. We understand there is a pay differential, and for my part it is justified. But the grievance some of the senior men have is that men who are new in the service, because they took on this more arduous work, not only get a pay differential but also get priority in the matter of holidays. Those who have expressed this grievance have suggested the pay differential should be sufficient so you do not have to deprive the senior men of first choice as to holiday leave.

Mr. Cote: In 86 centres there was no need to grant priority, there was no change; it was only in 26 offices that we had to grant this incentive in order to get men to do the work. Otherwise we would not have been able to get the job done. I think that summarizes the situation.

Mr. Knowles: You are relying upon the vacation leave priority as an inducement rather than trying to attract these people with higher pay?

Mr. Cote: Exactly, because in these circumstances none of the senior men would do the job. The first offer was made to the senior men. As I say, there were no changes in 86 centres.

Mr. Knowles: Does the Postmaster General not realize that in effect the senior men who did not want to undertake this more arduous work are being penalized for failing to do it by losing the priority they had with respect to vacations?

Mr. Cote: In a sense, yes, but we had to implement this 40-hour week and there was no other way to do it.

Mr. Knowles: You could have paid them more.

Mr. Cote: We did pay them more.

Mr. Knowles: You could have made the pay differential sufficient instead of penalizing the senior men in respect to priority for holiday leave. I am sure that the Postmaster General realizes that in the 26 centres he refers to this grievance is very real.

Mr. Cote: It was not the intention to penalize any man in the service. We had to employ new men to do the job; that was the only way we could get it done.

Mr. Knowles: They do not think so.

Mr. Cote: If the senior men would not do the job who else could we employ?

Mr. Knowles: Why penalize the senior men?

Mr. Cote: The term "penalize" is employed by my hon. friend. We did not have any intention to do that. We do not think we have penalized anybody. We were faced with the fact that we had to implement the 40-hour week and to do that we had to employ these people as relief men. It was done in 86 centres without any change being made. In 26 offices the senior men did not accept. There was no question of going over the senior men, but somebody had to do the job. Since they did not want to do that job, we had to employ other people.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, was this matter discussed by the senior officials with the representatives of the men's association? I do not think a matter of this kind should be brought up here until an effort has been made to arrive at an understanding with the officials of the association. I am not blaming the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for raising it as he has had correspondence on this the same as I have had. However, I think it would have obviated discussion here if the department had followed the practice that is followed in industry where matters of this kind are discussed by the administrative officers of a company and the representatives of the men. If that had been done here perhaps a satisfactory solution could have been arrived at. If it was not done, I suggest that it should be done.

Mr. Knowles: It was done unilaterally.

Mr. MacInnis: That is not the way to do it; it should be done through the accredited representatives of the association. If it was not done, it should still be done in order to give the men a feeling that no one is being unjustly discriminated against for one reason or another. I appreciate that sometimes seniority must be disregarded in promotions and matters of that kind which depend upon fitness and a lot of other things, but where all things are equal then seniority should apply. As I said before, this is a regular practice in industry where the men are organized.

Mr. Cote: In answer to my hon. friend may I say that this question was discussed by my officials with the representatives of the unions and the situation was explained to them at the time.

The hon. member for Hamilton West referred to the Woods-Gordon report. This report has practically been implemented in toto or is in the course of implementation, although there are two or three items still in abeyance. The first is the recommendation in regard to the discontinuance of the savings bank, and the second is the suggestion that we could save $200,000 in Toronto alone. It has been decided not to make any change at this time so far as the savings bank is concerned.

With regard to the possible saving at Toronto, I think I should report here that it was not possible nor practical to implement the recommendation in that regard. This was a theoretical suggestion that was made but in practice it is not possible to implement it. It was indicated that a saving of $200,000 a year could be made in Toronto alone. According to the Woods-Gordon report that saving could be made by substituting belt sortation for the present facing-up and primary sortation.

The idea is not new. It has been tried by many postal administrations and discarded. We built a prototype machine twenty-five years ago and ran a lengthy experiment before coming to the conclusion that it was not practical. It was inevitable that the Woods-Gordon report would contain such a recommendation; in theory it is admirable, but it does not work in actual practice. However, we are still keeping an open mind on the subject in case there is some feature or gadget which we have overlooked and which would make this scheme practical. So far this has not materialized.

The hon. member for Saskatoon referred to the lower rate of payment for smaller offices. The duties and responsibilities of a small office are not as difficult as those of a larger office. In a city the size of Toronto a sorter must memorize the boundaries of 600 carriers. Compare that with the work of a sorter in an office where there are only ten or a dozen carriers. The rates are determined by the civil service commission.

The hon. member for Macleod made similar remarks about the revenue postmasters. I have every sympathy with these people, and may I say that the salaries of people in this class were increased recently. We are now considering some other method of payment. I think the hon. member for Huron North also asked about the method of payment of revenue postmasters. They are now paid out of revenue. For at least ten or twelve months we have been working on a new method of payment on a unit of work basis and we hope that eventually we will be in a position to more adequately pay these public servants.

The hon. member for Macleod referred to revenues. There is an indication that there will be an increase of revenue, but it is too soon to make a positive statement in that regard.

With regard to public buildings, we now have about 300 recommendations before the Department of Public Works. We base our recommendation upon the need for postal service accommodation, and we make our recommendation accordingly to the Minister of Public Works. Naturally the Minister of Public Works has other features to consider and he decides on the priority to be given. We do not make a recommendation for the erection of a public building for postal services unless the revenue is at least $10,000 per annum.

The hon. member for Vancouver South asked about the colour of the stamps and if there was a regulation that the stamps must be blue or red. There was an international regulation that the postage stamp for unit letter rate should be red. This must not be confused, however, with the domestic unit letter rate. We feel that the present five-cent stamp is attractive, both as to design and colour.

The hon. member for Mackenzie brought up a point similar to the one raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. As a matter of fact, it is the same point which was dramatized by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. For many years we have asked the advice of many people, including the Legion, the defeated candidates, members of parliament and others. It is nothing new.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Opposition members?

Mr. Cote: Members of parliament and residents of the localities.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Opposition members of parliament?

Mr. Cote: Oh, yes. My hon. friend himself even quoted a letter which I wrote to him.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I have never been asked at any time to commend to the department a certain individual. These form letters do not come to opposition members of parliament; they may come to members of parliament but not opposition members.

Mr. Cote: Maybe the form of the letter could be written otherwise, but these letters are sent to people in the field, in the locality where we are seeking information, because they are presumed to know better than anybody else. A member of parliament makes recommendations, but, as I said before, there is a lot of difference between suggestions, recommendations and appointments. I can assure my hon. friend that after the information is obtained we make the appointment only after an objective inquiry.

Mr. Nicholson: When the postmaster at Endeavour, for example, is asked to resign how does Mr. Underwood—and I should say that I appreciate the outstanding work that Mr. Underwood has done for many years; he has been very helpful—happen to know that Ross Barrie at Pelly should be the person who could tell him who a good postmaster at Endeavour, 70 miles away, would be. How does Mr. Underwood or Mr. MacNabb, the one who is featured in the correspondence of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, write to Mr. Taraska in Winnipeg. How did he happen to pick out these names?

Mr. Cote: My hon. friend talks about a case of 1943, ten years ago. He gave some lengthy explanations about it.

Mr. Nicholson: Three months ago.

Mr. Cote: My hon. friend opposite knows that I do not know of the details. He mentioned Mr. Underwood. I do not know the details of this case, but as far as the information—

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister know Taraska?

Mr. Cote: I do not know Taraska. I did not mention the name; it was brought up by my hon. friend. I presume that Mr. Taraska is quite a good person.

Mr. Knowles: He is a good Liberal.

Mr. Cote: I do not know Taraska. I know hardly anybody mentioned by my hon. friend. But again this is given only as a suggestion or information. I do not think my hon. friends opposite would deny that a member of parliament and even a defeated candidate is in a position to do that. I remember it was mentioned a few minutes ago that a defeated candidate in Ontario was trying to get credit for postal accommodation that had been provided. I think it was the hon. member for Oxford who said that. Well, I hope my hon. friends will not hold me responsible for anybody in the country trying to get credit for postal accommodation in the country. It is quite natural.

I also remember that many, if I may use the word again, recommendations have been made by my hon. friends opposite in many instances, and I have always considered those recommendations as a natural thing coming from members of parliament.

Mr. Nesbitt: My only objection was not to his making the announcement but receiving the information before the duly-elected member did.

Mr. Cote: I do not know anything about that.

Mr. Nicholson: Before we leave this—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps it is time to point out to the committee that actually the Postmaster General has the floor and should be interrupted only with his consent. At the same time I think the committee is of the opinion that if we finish one feature of the Postmaster General's reply before going on to the next, perhaps it would be more expeditious in the long run. However, I must ask hon. members to observe the fact that the Postmaster General has the floor and is to be interrupted only with his consent.

Mr. Nicholson: Before he finishes my point, and we are just about through, I think the case that I discussed would indicate that it is a real handicap for the staff of the Postmaster General to have to go through the procedure that I outlined that prevailed ten years ago, and that outlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, which indicates it still prevails. My case briefly was that the inspector made a decision on the spot, and after seventeen letters were written by a very prominent public servant here in Ottawa, the decision made by the inspector was finally maintained. In the year 1953 I think the Postmaster General should agree to give the responsible people in the field the right to make the decision, to canvass the Legion and local organizations that have the information rather than to ask Mr. Barrie to travel 70 miles back and forth and burn up all the energy he had to burn up and make so many bad friends.

Mr. Cote: The hon. member for Eglinton also talked about two deliveries a day. I have already dealt with this subject. As regards the specific complaints made, I would appreciate it if he would be good enough to give me the covers and I shall have the necessary inquiries made. In this regard, I wish to make the following statement about delay, and again I want to stress the point that the work done in the postal department is done by human beings.

There have been quite a number of complaints during a short while back in regard to delays in mail particularly between Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. We are doing all we can to eliminate these delays, and wherever practicable are using planes for the carriage of mail instead of the trains so as to give more time for handling at the post office of destination.

There is no doubt that some of the delays are due to mishandlings and errors on the part of employees. It is not possible entirely to eliminate the human element, especially when they are working at high speed. For example, in Toronto we handle approximately one and a half million items daily between five in the evening and ten o'clock. I repeat, one and a half million items between five in the evening and ten o'clock. These items are handled by over 1,000 men and it is very difficult, if not impossible, to place responsibility in all cases. We have a group of officials especially assigned to study this problem and to make whatever improvements we can.

The period of time during which we must handle this great volume of mail is restricted on one hand by the time of mailing and on the other by the time and departure of planes and trains. Naturally the transportation companies do not run their trains to suit the Post Office Department. They determine the times, generally speaking, in the interests of the travelling public. We are not particularly objecting to this, but it does intensify our problem. The situation would be greatly eased if the business and commercial concerns in Toronto, Montreal and other large points would spread their mailings during the day instead of concentrating everything just after five o'clock at night. If it is impossible to handle the mails in time to catch the planes, then obviously delays take place.

I might mention particularly the question of mails between Toronto and Ottawa. If we can get it sorted in time to catch the evening plane out of Toronto, then it will arrive in Ottawa in time to be sorted by the letter carriers for delivery the next morning. On the other hand, if on account of the terrific volume and the restricted period available for sorting and handling, we cannot make the plane and have to send the mail by trains it means that the mails cannot be delivered on the first delivery as the train does not arrive in Ottawa in time to permit the mails to be processed through the Ottawa post office and routed by the carriers. There are many cases in which the mails cannot be delivered by carrier until the following day.

We have that kind of situation in Toronto and Ottawa and elsewhere, and I can assure hon. members that we are doing everything we can to improve the service and I believe we are achieving some results. There will, of course, always be delays due to the human element which we are not entirely able to prevent. I can quite understand the annoyance of the patrons if a letter is delayed, even though that may only happen on occasions. The public can help, of course. They sometimes create delays by holding their mail until the peak load period at night. Mailing early and often will undoubtedly assist the Post Office Department in dealing with this problem. We are as much if not more interested than the public in improving the service and we are making every effort to do so.

My hon. friend indicated that the drop letter rate of postage did not apply between Toronto and Willowdale. I must say this is not correct. I would refer him to the statement I made in this house on March 29 which appears at page 3413 of Hansard.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, as well as the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, raised the question of postal services to Burnaby. I understand that what they have in mind is the erection of a public building, and the dividing of Burnaby into postal districts, these districts to be numbered Burnaby 1, 2, 3 and 4. I can assure my hon. friends that I will look into the first question with my colleague, the Minister of Public Works.

As regards the question of delivery, this also will be given consideration but I want to warn my hon. friends that this is not a new procedure. We have endeavoured to introduce a similar arrangement at other points but with indifferent success. Toronto has been zoned for many years and we have spent a great deal on publicity, though at the present time not more than 20 per cent of the mail bears the zone number in Toronto.

In Burnaby the indication is that it is imperative. One portion of the mail is handled through Vancouver and another portion handled through New Westminster. Unless this designation is shown there are bound to be delays. However, I will look again into this matter though I want my hon. friends to fully understand the implication of their suggested change. There is another point which must not be overlooked. If the change involves an independent postal area apart from Vancouver, then the drop letter rate between Burnaby and Vancouver, and vice versa, will no longer apply.

The hon. member for Royal brought up the question of the service in the rural areas. At the present time I am more in sympathy with my hon. friend from Royal in regard to the frequency of the service in rural areas than in the re-establishment of two deliveries in the residential section of urban centres. In this connection let me point out that our estimate for land mail service includes $1,500,000 for improvements in service, in addition to the $1,500,000 for adjustment in rates of pay.

As regards a public building for Rothesay, as my hon. friend is aware there is an item of $30,000 in this year's estimates.

Mr. Montgomery: Did the minister say that was the hon. member for Royal?

Mr. Cote: Yes.

Mr. Montgomery: That should be the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton.

Mr. Cote: I am sorry. I am glad the hon. member has corrected me. The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke brought up the subject of a public building at Vernon. I might say that an item of $25,000 for that project is in the estimates. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris mentioned the problem of the decrease in the number of rural routes in the west, while there is a general increase all over the country. The discontinuance of service on the rural routes does create a problem but it has been noted that in most of these cases the patrons are going to the cities, or using the facilities of other post offices. But the hon. member may rest assured that every case will be examined on its merits and that we are trying to maintain the service at the highest possible level commensurate with our financial obligations.

Mr. Dinsdale: Could the minister indicate how many routes have been discontinued in the prairie provinces over the past two years, and in what places they have been discontinued?

Mr. Cote: I am sorry but I have not that information available at the moment because some of these routes have been readjusted. But I will be glad to look into this matter and if I have not the time to tell him before the end of the discussion on the estimates I will give him this information personally.

The hon. member for Kootenay West mentioned mail services and I can assure him that these services will be looked into. As regards the building at Trail, the information I have is that expropriation procedure is under way and final plans have been approved.

As far as the hon. member for Edmonton East is concerned, I am sorry to say that I am not familiar with the situation at Beverly but I will look into this matter.

(Translation):

The hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Gagnon) mentioned the proposed post office at Chicoutimi. It is true that this project is under consideration and that an item has been placed in the departmental estimates for that purpose in order to ensure that it be proceeded with. My hon. friend knows, however, that there has been considerable expansion in his district. Quite recently I received a delegation from Port Alfred, I think, where there is a similar problem. As far as the Chicoutimi project is concerned, I do not remember whether the plan called for a building to accommodate various federal departments or whether it was only to be a postal station. I know that we had to revise this project and hold it back for further study. I will look further into the matter and will be glad to give more detailed information to the hon. member. I must add that the project has not been abandoned but that it is simply under further consideration.

(Text):

The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton—am I right this time?

Mr. Montgomery: Yes.

Mr. Cote: The hon. member brought up the question of a building at Plaster Rock and I am pleased to inform him that there is an amount in the estimates this year of $25,000. The site has been approved and so also have the plans. As far as the Glassville services are concerned, I am sorry I have no information available at the moment. But I will be glad to look into the matter.

The hon. members for New Westminster, Oxford and Comox-Alberni brought up several subjects, one of them being a question of mail service, though I cannot remember the name. However, in all these cases I will be glad to look into the matter further. I have no information here and when it is available I will be glad to pass it on to my hon. friends.

Again I must say this that the Post Office Department does not like to be the object of excessive criticism, though we are always very glad to receive constructive criticism. There might be some cases where we are entirely at fault, but there are many cases where those who complain have contributed to a certain extent. We want the co-operation of the public. We ask for that co-operation and I do not lose any opportunity to tell, not only my officials but the employees of the department whom I meet at postal conventions, that we are civil servants and we must give good service.

But this service that is given is subject to human frailty and there is always the possibility of errors; however, we are trying to keep those errors to a minimum. As far as the policy of the department is concerned, may I say that everything cannot be done in one day. I have talked about the Woods-Gordon report. We are actually in the process of implementing the recommendations contained in that report. We are decentralizing. We are setting up what we call area superintendents. We therefore think it is apparent that, when the report is completely implemented the men in the region on the spot will be in a better position, not only to correct errors but to prevent them. We are sure that eventually the service will continue to improve. That is the main objective, not only of the department but of every member of the committee.

Mr. Cardiff: Can the minister tell me whether his officials have made any survey yet of the Exeter post office?

Mr. Cote: All over the country?

Mr. Cardiff: No; the Exeter post office.

Mr. Cote: Yes. It has been referred to the Department of Public Works with our recommendation.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): The minister said a few words which I should like to have clarified. My quarrel with the minister is not over the professional post office which I think is doing a good job of work; my quarrel is with the political post office. When the minister rises in his place in the House of Commons and tells us that members of parliament are told about vacancies in sub-post offices and that these members of parliament know all about it, may I say that I do not think it is true of opposition members of parliament. I do not want it to be true. Quite frankly, may I say that I want to have nothing at all to do with it. I think the postal officials are far better qualified than am I to decide who should be a sub-postmaster or where the locality should be. My hon. friend said that great numbers of letters were sent out. That is quite true. But those letters are decidedly different. There are two types of letters sent to my constituency; and if they are sent to my constituency, I assume they are sent to others. They are form letters sent by the director of operations. The one type is that which is sent to the Canadian Legion in language which is as follows:

Dear Sir:

There is a vacancy at the above-named post office and as the appointment comes under the control of the department, the necessary steps are being taken to appoint a new postmaster.

At the request of the Postmaster General, I am bringing the matter to your notice in case any member of your organization who is a patron of the vacant office should care to submit his application. Anyone desirous of applying for the position should submit his application to the department at the earliest possible moment.

I have no quarrel at all with that sort of form letter which is sent out to responsible officers of the Legion because I think ex-servicemen should always be given consideration. My quarrel is with the other type of letter which, as I said earlier, apparently is sent to only a select group; and it reads like this:

Dear Sir:

In previous correspondence the department asked for your recommendation of a suitable person for permanent appointment as postmaster . . .

The position I take is this. In Winnipeg the postal officials know much better than does anyone else, whether he is a successful politician or a broken-down politician, where the sub-post office should be and who the sub-postmaster should be. I should be extremely happy to leave this matter entirely to the post office. I have seen them at work before and I have no quarrel at all with them as a professional group. I think they are doing an excellent job. I think what is hurting the post office—and what in the long run hurts any political party—is the animosity which is aroused through this form of patronage. Earlier today I said that those who were appointed through patronage were probably just as good sub-postmasters as were others. I have no quarrel with them; my quarrel is with the system. It is a system which I think is bad and one which I maintain should be eradicated. I should like to know whether the minister can tell me precisely to whom this second type of letter is sent. I refer to the letter which asked for the recommendation of a suitable person. To whom is this form letter sent?

Mr. Cote: I would ask the hon. member to excuse me; I was talking to the messenger.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): The second letter I read was a form letter sent to certain individuals asking for their recommendation as to the appointment of a sub-postmaster. The question I was asking was this. To whom precisely is this letter sent? My hon. friend will recall that earlier this evening he said that I had written. That is quite true. I have written to the post office on several occasions about the location and the type of man who should be in the sub-post office. The minister has acknowledged my letter. That is also quite true. But this is a form letter sent out by the director of operations. Perhaps the minister knows nothing at all about it, but it is to an individual asking for his recommendation or nomination of the sub-postmaster. My contention is that the post office can do a better job there than can be done by the recommendation of an individual. What I want to know is this. To whom is this sort of form letter sent?

Mr. Cote: It is sent to members, defeated candidates, the Legion or other people in the field who we think could give us information about proper candidates.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): May I correct the minister there. I do not think this sort of letter is sent to the Legion. There is a form letter that is sent to the Legion.

Mr. Cote: My hon. friend has asked me a question and now he is telling me the answer to his question. I think he at least should take my word for it.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I am prepared to take the minister's word; but I have a return here and in it there is no such letter sent to the Legion. There is one sent to the Legion with which I do not quarrel. There is another type which asks for nominations. That is not so with regard to the type of letter sent to the Legion. If the minister tells me this is sent to defeated candidates—and may I say that we know that is so—may I ask this question? Does he think it is a good idea?

Mr. Cote: I will study the matter.

Mr. Goode: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say something with regard to this matter. I have never known of an occasion of the change of a sub-post office in my riding or of the establishment of a new one when the Legion has not been notified and has not received from the Postmaster General an invitation for a recommendation.

Mr. Hahn: One question I asked the minister to answer and in which I was particularly interested has also been raised in this particular letter to the Legion and the point that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond raised, namely that the Legion receives this form of letter. It was the response to one of these letters, and the wording of it, that made it so difficult for the legionnaire, in the instance to which I referred, to apply for the post. The question I raised earlier was this: Was any consideration given, or could any consideration be given to allowing those people on rural routes who are not patrons of the post office to be eligible for the position?

Mr. Cote: I will look into the matter.

Mr. Hahn: Would the minister care to answer that question now?

Mr. Cote: I am informed that it applies to rural routes, depending on the post office in question.

Mr. Hahn: That is the point. I was wondering whether the minister would contemplate changing that particular act in order to make it possible for the legionnaires and other people who are on that rural route but who do not receive their mail from that post office, even though they might get their stamps, money orders and so on from the office, to be eligible for appointment. The point in question happens to be a post office in my own riding. The Legion was notified and they have that difficulty. No one was eligible.

Mr. Cote: I am not familiar with the case my hon. friend is talking about, but if he will write to me giving details I will be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to ask the minister two questions about letters that I wrote him. I carried on some correspondence with him in February of this year at the request of the New Waterford board of trade with respect to an extension and improvements to the post office in that area. The last correspondence I had from the minister indicated that the matter was under consideration, and I should like to know whether he can bring me up to date. On February 5 I also wrote the minister about the possibilities of establishing rural mail delivery at Westmount, Nova Scotia, at the request of a co-operative housing group. I wrote the minister on February 5 and I never received an answer.

Mr. Cote: I am sorry. Did you not receive an acknowledgment of the letter at least?

Mr. Gillis: No, it is neglect on your secretary's part.

Mr. Cote: I will look into the matter.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to be brought up to date on these two matters if it is possible for the minister to do so.

Mr. Cote: I see that the only information with respect to New Waterford is that we are actually considering an addition there. I am sorry I have not got the information about the Westmount rural route, but I have taken a special note about that and will let my hon. friend know.

Item agreed to.

342. Operations—including salaries and other expenses of staff post offices, district offices, railway mail service staffs, and supplies, equipment and other items for revenue post offices, also including administration; and including, notwithstanding section 16 of the Civil Service Act, payment, in such amount or amounts as may be approved from time to time by the treasury board, to civil servants who are hired as casual employees, $76,007,630.

Mr. Knowles: Before this item carries, I should like to say a word. As a matter of fact, this is the largest item in the minister's estimates, and the details make it clear that it covers some 20,354 employees. That is quite a large staff, and I agree with those who have already paid tribute to the very efficient work that is done by this very large band of faithful public employees. I think too that the Postmaster General was quite justified tonight in calling attention to the complicated nature of the process of handling mail, illustrating it as he did by the example of what goes on in a large city like Toronto between five o'clock and ten o'clock in the evening.

The reason I rise on this item and refer to this large group of workers is to stress something about which I feel very strongly, namely, that while this also applies to a smaller group as well, when you get a large group of workers such as that in the minister's department, labour relations become extremely important. I am ready to give the minister every bouquet and compliment that is coming to him and to his department, but I must say that the labour relations in his department do leave considerable room for improvement. We have already discussed tonight one other issue, and during that discussion my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, expressed the view, with which I agree, that it is unfortunate that we should be in the position of having to raise these matters on the floor of parliament. It should be possible for such matters to be settled between the recognized representatives of the employees and the management.

Sometimes I think it might be a good idea if the Postmaster General were to invite his colleague, the Minister of Labour, to send to his department some of his labour-management co-operation experts. I have in mind the sort of letter that comes back to associations of employees when they have written to the deputy postmaster general setting out a grievance. Here is a letter dated March 10, 1954, signed by W. J. Turnbull, deputy postmaster general, which is contained in sessional paper No. 94-G, tabled in the house on Monday, May 3, 1954. It has to do with another thorny question, that of the night differential. It is a matter which I think could have been negotiated. It seems to me that the case the men put up was a valid one. Maybe there is something to be said on the other side; maybe a compromise could have been effected. But after stating that it was the intention of the department to stand by the decision that had been taken, the deputy postmaster general concluded this letter by saying:

> I have no wish to tell you how to run your own affairs, but my observation is that the sympathy and patience of the public towards operating service employees is rapidly running out. We intend to establish a 40-hour week for all and could very well drop the idea of any night differential.
> Yours sincerely,
> W. J. Turnbull,
> Deputy Postmaster General

I suggest to the Postmaster General that that is an example of very poor labour relations.

Mr. MacInnis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: In this same file which I have in my hand—it is not as voluminous as the one my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North, had but it is a rather unfortunate one—there are other letters similar in tone. I suggest to the Postmaster General that he take seriously the point that was made a while ago by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and that he do his best to establish the kind of labour relations in his department with this band of over 20,000 employees that will make it unnecessary for us to bring up these labour matters on the floor of parliament. These 20,000 employees are good, faithful public servants. They have chosen their own organizations. They have elected their representatives. There are good men on the management side, on the government side, and there is no reason why they could not sit down and bargain in good faith, not in the one-sided way set out in that kind of letter, but in good faith. In that way they could work out the best of relations. I may be speaking pretty strongly, but I am interested in the response the Postmaster General is making to our pleas, and I hope he will do something about this very important matter.

Mr. MacInnis: Before we adjourn, may I add a word to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said in addition to what I said before. Like almost every other member of parliament, I presume, I get letters from associations such as the letter carriers association and others, and I invariably reply to them that the matter they refer to is one that they should settle in discussions between the administrative officers of the department and the association. This is an age when workers' organizations are and must be recognized, and such matters as this have no place here at all. It is extremely unfortunate that they should be brought up here but they will be as long as shortsighted people in important positions do not understand the needs and feelings of those who perhaps do the menial jobs in our public service.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: On Monday we shall move to go into supply, and then a motion for ways and means. If we succeed in doing that we shall call the budget resolutions and then proceed with legislation in the following order: The resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance with respect to crown corporations; the house in committee again on the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act; second reading of the Canadian National Railways bill; second reading of the act to amend the Department of Transport Act; second reading of the act to amend the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, and the resolution in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply]:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

341. Departmental administration, $1,316,383.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 17, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

RADIO ACT

AMENDMENT TO AUTHORIZE EMPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES PERSONNEL AND IMMIGRANTS AS RADIO OPERATORS

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 446, to amend the Radio Act.

Mr. Knowles: Explain.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the Radio Act provides that no one shall be employed as a radio operator unless he is a British subject. By virtue of the Emergency Powers Act the Minister of Transport was authorized to enter into an agreement with the United States government providing that it could establish radio stations in northern Canada and employ operators who were not British subjects. The object of this bill is to amend the Radio Act in order to implement, by way of legislation, that arrangement and also to include certain landed immigrants to be employed as radio operators and who are not yet British subjects.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENT TO REPEAL THE DECLARATION OF INTENTION

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the first reading of Bill No. 445 (from the Senate), to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

SECURITY SCREENINGS—WORLD WAR II RECORDS

Mr. Dinsdale:

1. In the case of veterans of world war II re-enlisting in the Canadian armed forces, is any reference made to world war II records for screening purposes?
2. If so, when was this practice introduced?
3. Has this screening process been made retroactive to cover world war II veterans who re-enlisted before the practice became operative?
4. How many applicants for the Canadian armed forces have been screened as a result of unsatisfactory world war II service records?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. Yes.

2. This practice was introduced at the end of the second world war during the reorganization of the Canadian armed forces.

3. Not applicable.

4. Until quite recently it has not been considered useful to keep statistics of the numbers of applicants rejected because of previous unsatisfactory military service. However, in January, 1953, the army began to keep such statistics and has so far rejected 649 applicants whose previous service record was considered unsatisfactory.

RADIO RECEIVING STATIONS—INSPECTION

Mr. Hansell:

1. Does the inspection of receiving stations referred to on page 148 of the 1952-53 annual report of the Department of Transport refer to radio receiving sets? If so, what was the total cost of this inspection?
2. What is the nature of the inspection of amateur experimental stations, and what was the cost of this for 1953?
3. Does any revenue accrue to the government from any radio inspection services? If so, what was the revenue for 1953?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

1. Yes. For the purpose of investigating radio interference to private receiving sets and for the obtaining of evidence for prosecution of unlicensed private receiving stations. No breakdown of cost made as this work is carried out coincident with general inspection duties.

2. A technical inspection to assure that stations are operating in accordance with domestic laws and international agreements. No segregation of cost made because duties performed by same staff when on general inspections and interference duties.

3. The fees for licences for radio stations, other than private commercial broadcasting stations and private receiving stations when the latter were collected, were established on the basis of defraying in part the cost of licence issuance and inspection service. Such fees totalled $130,358 for the fiscal year 1952-53.

WOOD PULP EXPORTS TO RUSSIA

Mr. Pearkes:

1. Have any permits to export rayon wood pulp to the U.S.S.R. been approved since January 1 1953?

Questions

2. If so, (a) to what Canadian firms have such permits been granted; (b) what quantities of wood pulp have been authorized for export to the U.S.S.R.; (c) what is the value of the shipments authorized; (d) is the type of wood pulp to be exported used in the manufacture of textiles or explosives?

Mr. Dickey:

1. Yes.

2. (a) It is not in the public interest to reveal details of private transactions of individual companies;

(b) 9,850 tons;

(c) $1,678,000;

(d) for the manufacture of textiles.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING FOR UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Zaplitny:

1. Is the government providing any assistance for the vocational and/or technical training of the unemployed in Canada?

2. If so, on what basis and to what extent is this assistance now being given?

3. Is the assistance provided on a dominion-provincial arrangement? If so, what is the basis of such arrangement?

4. Which provinces are at present participating in such an arrangement?

5. What amount has been contributed by the federal government to each province in 1953 and up to the present in 1954?

Mr. Gregg:

1. Yes.

2. Unemployed persons who require training to fit them for suitable employment may be referred to the national employment service for short-term training, not exceeding twelve months, in classes operated under the Canadian vocational training program. 1,660 such persons were referred for training during the past fiscal year.

3. Yes, under the provisions of the vocational training agreement which provides for equal sharing of the costs by provincial and federal governments.

4. British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Ontario provides such training for disabled persons only.

5. Federal contributions for the fiscal year 1953 were as follows:

Nova Scotia	$78,289.25
Quebec	21,828.28
Manitoba	30,370.60
Alberta	53,621.76
New Brunswick	37,438.75
Ontario	18,235.99
Saskatchewan	27,673.18
British Columbia	10,432.14
Total	$277,889.95

No claims for federal funds have yet been received covering expenditures for the current fiscal year.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

Mr. Zaplitny:

1. Has Canada extended formal recognition to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics? If so, on what date?

2. Has Canada, at any time, extended separate recognition to Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania?

3. If so, does Canada still recognize these three states?

4. Which countries known commonly as soviet satellite states are at present officially recognized by the Canadian government?

5. Does Canada recognize Byelorussia and the Ukraine as separate and sovereign states or only as integral states of the U.S.S.R.?

Mr. Benidickson:

1. Yes. On March 24, 1924.

2. Yes.

3. There has been no occasion when the government of Canada considered it necessary to reaffirm or withdraw formally de jure recognition of these states. However in 1947, in the course of an action in the Exchequer Court of Canada, the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed the court that the government of Canada recognized that Estonia had been de facto incorporated into the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics but did not recognize this de jure.

4. It is assumed that this question refers to Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Roumania. These came into existence as states at different times in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Recognition of their existence as states has been accorded by Canada in many ways at different times and has never been withdrawn.

5. Canada does not recognize Byelorussia and the Ukraine as separate and sovereign states but regards them as constituent parts of the U.S.S.R. However, Canada, in common with other members of the United Nations, accepted the Byelorussian and Ukrainian soviet socialist republics as members of the United Nations when the organization was formed in 1945.

ROSEHALL NURSERIES LIMITED

Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has the Rosehall Nurseries Limited, Brantford, Ontario, had contracts with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in 1953?

2. If so, how many and what was the total amount of money involved?

3. Has Rosehall Nurseries Limited, Brantford, Ontario, had any contracts with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in 1954?

4. If so, how many and where are the contracts being performed?

5. Have all contracts between Rosehall Nurseries Limited, Brantford, Ontario, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation been completed?

Mr. Bourget:

1. Yes.
2. Contracts—3; total value—$10,035.
3. No.
4. Not applicable.
5. No.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS

Mrs. Fairclough:

1. Who is the chief investigator for the Post Office Department?
2. When was he appointed?
3. What is his salary?
4. Who is the regional director of the Post Office Department for the Quebec region?
5. When was he appointed?
6. What is his salary?
7. Were either of these offices created or established as a result of the Woods and Gordon report?
8. If so, was the appointment handled by the civil service commission?

Mr. Cote:

1. S. Chartrand.
2. April 1, 1953.
3. $8,500.
4. Vacant.
5. See answer to No. 4.
6. Position carries salary of $7,800 to $8,400.
7. Yes; chief investigator.
8. Yes.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE—SUB-POST OFFICES

Mr. Knowles:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged between any person or persons and the Post Office Department, since January 1, 1949, concerning sub-post offices in the federal constituency of Winnipeg North Centre, together with a statement showing the locations of all sub-post offices in the federal constituency of Winnipeg North Centre as at December 31, 1953, and a copy of post office regulations in connection therewith.

VETERANS LAND ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE FOR HOME CONSTRUCTION, ETC.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Veterans' Land Act to provide financial and technical assistance to veterans for home construction and also to provide further financial assistance to veterans presently settled under the act as full-time farmers or who may be so settled in the future and to veterans who may in the future become qualified as part-time farmers or commercial fishermen.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the house.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO SPEECH MADE BY PRIME MINISTER AT STE. FOY, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of press reports of the speech that he made at Ste. Foy over the week end? When the Prime Minister referred to Canada's continued confidence in the possibility of securing peace through negotiation, did he have in mind any specific negotiations or any specific leadership which Canada is intending to initiate at the present time?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No. I had in mind the efforts that are being made by all those who are assembled at Geneva to try to work out a peaceful settlement of the problems that are before them there.

FLOODS

FRASER RIVER—REQUEST FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Conditions of run-off on the Fraser river are causing concern in British Columbia. Should the situation worsen will the Minister of National Defence give assurance that the services of the army, navy and air force will be offered to the people of British Columbia, and will sandbags be available to fight flood should the necessity arise?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is not for the navy, army or air force to offer their services. If those services are required, that matter would be decided by the governor in council in accordance with section 35 of the National Defence Act. If they are required, the armed forces are prepared to do anything within their capacity to deal with the emergency. In the meantime they are keeping in close touch with the provincial authorities and also with the actual situation in the river.

With regard to the question of sandbags, may I say that I understand that the Department of Public Works of the province has approximately 1 million sandbags. There is also a productive capacity for sandbags now in the western provinces; that is in addition to the large quantity the Canadian army has on hand.

SUPPLY

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

MUNICIPALITIES—EXEMPTION OF PURCHASES FROM SALES AND EXCISE TAXES

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, following the accepted practice I propose to take this opportunity to rise on a question which is assuming increasing importance throughout the whole of Canada. The same subject has been discussed on earlier occasions, but new emphasis has been placed upon the need of the municipalities for a thorough re-examination of their position as a result of many of the new demands which are being imposed upon them. There seems to be some tendency to accept a satisfactory surplus in the federal financial position or in the provincial position in any province without due regard to the fact that there are many municipalities in Canada today, at a time of high earnings and high revenues, that simply cannot make ends meet.

This is borne out by resolutions presented by the municipalities themselves and by the repeated resolutions of meetings of mayors and reeves in their various organizations throughout Canada. The fact is that the municipalities, which, after all, provide that form of local government closest to the people, and which give many of our most important services to the people, find themselves caught between the millstones of rapidly mounting costs on the one hand and limited tax resources on the other.

There is a particular reason why the federal government should seek the support of parliament to ease the burden upon municipalities in every way it can. It is sometimes forgotten that when the provincial governments entered into the tax arrangements in 1942, under which they gave up certain taxing powers, many municipalities gave up their taxing powers at the same time. This was recited in the statute which approved of the agreement signed at that time. They have never been restored to their position in relation to those taxes, nor has their taxing power been restored in any corresponding field.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I interrupt the Leader of the Opposition at this point? If he does not relate his subject very shortly to one which is covered by the scope of federal affairs I will have to inform him that it is not in order, even on a motion to go into supply, to bring forward as a grievance a matter with which this parliament has nothing to do. The municipalities are creatures of the provinces. There may be a relationship between the provinces and the federal parliament but I do not see a direct link between the parliament of Canada and the taxing powers of the municipalities. It may be that my remarks are inopportune or premature, but I should like the Leader of the Opposition to know that if he is going to continue with the subject that he has introduced, without linking it specifically to affairs over which this parliament has jurisdiction, I will have to tell him that he is not in order.

I am informed that there is on the order paper a resolution having to do with a measure to be introduced to extend the benefits of the Municipal Grants Act and to provide for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act. I do not want to anticipate what the arguments of the Leader of the Opposition are going to be, but if he is going to contend that larger benefits should be paid to municipalities by way of grants in lieu of taxes I will have to tell him that in this respect he will be discussing a matter that involves legislation already appearing on the order paper, and that too is not in order on a motion to go into supply.

Mr. Drew: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to discuss that subject. That subject will be discussed at the time that the resolution is given consideration. I am confronted with the problem that always presents itself as to how long an introduction should be. Nevertheless, I think that the remarks I make are very clearly related to something that is directly and exclusively within the jurisdiction and authority of the government of Canada and this parliament. I am going to discuss the urgent need for reconsideration of the position of the government in relation to the sales and excise taxes charged on purchases by municipalities throughout Canada. This is in no way covered by the resolution to which Your Honour has referred.

Mr. Harris: On a point of order, that matter is before the house in the budget resolutions which, according to the order of business, will be called later this day if reached.

Mr. Drew: The subject matter I am raising is not covered by the resolution that has been mentioned. That resolution relates to a very limited proposal. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is proper to place before the house considerations which should be borne in mind in dealing with any matter that has not already been disposed of and is not covered by a motion before the house. There is no proposal before the house that the municipalities be exempted in whole from the sales and excise taxes on their purchases of machinery, equipment and things of that kind which they need. It is to that very urgent requirement that my remarks are directed.

The need for consideration of this subject has received new emphasis in recent weeks because of the discussions which have taken place with respect to the problem of equipping the municipalities to meet such plans as are prepared for the civil defence of this country. I raise this point by way of illustration only. I would point out that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), under whose department civil defence has been placed, has emphasized the vital importance of preparing to meet this situation. If his advice is accepted, then there are many new requirements which must be purchased by the municipalities and which will in no way be covered by such limited exemption as will be afforded by the resolution referred to by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris) if it should be the will of parliament to adopt it. I would also point out that right across Canada there is increasing evidence of the need for revenue, a need that is not covered by local taxation or by any compensating grants made by the provincial governments to the municipalities. At the point where His Honour asserted that I had not yet clearly indicated the purpose of my remarks, I had intended to point out that there has been some compensation to the municipalities in respect of the taxing rights which they were called upon to forgo under the agreements of 1942. Nevertheless it is only necessary to ask any mayor, any reeve, or the member of any urban or municipal council across Canada whether or not the present situation is satisfactory to find out that today the municipalities are unable to continue to meet the increasing demands for those vitally important local needs unless some new method of taxation is found.

I do not intend to embark today upon a discussion of the need for a conference between the various levels of government in this country. I have already made that request to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) who is the only person who could call such a conference. I have emphasized my reasons for believing it should be done. I leave that where it stands because the Prime Minister has indicated he is not prepared to accept that proposal. I do strongly urge, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any immediate discussion of a general readjustment of the taxing position as between the national, provincial and local authorities, that this tremendously important relief could be granted, and should be granted having regard to the practice that is already being followed.

It need not be pointed out that the whole strength of our society, and in fact the real foundation of our democracy, rests upon municipal government. It is there our whole democratic system begins; that is where the concept of personal representation is first made evident to the people of our country; that is where the relationship between the government and the elected representative is most effective; that is where we see the real supervision of the business of the people themselves. I suggest that at this particular time we have reason in this House of Commons to realize that the plans for housing, the plans for the general improvement of our country and the plans for the development of Canada, initiated in this House of Commons and approved by the parliament of Canada, in themselves impose new burdens upon the municipalities. Unless the municipalities are able to meet them, then many of the plans are rendered ineffective or hindered by difficulty in finding the appropriate conditions in which those plans can be advanced.

In no single case is this more evident than in the case of housing where the burden of the municipalities is to provide adequate services, not only such services as sewers, roads, water works and things of that kind, but educational facilities, health facilities and everything of that nature, which form an essential part of any particular program of development for the advancement of our society which may be contemplated. There is another reason, Mr. Speaker, why it seems to me that action along these lines is long overdue. The municipalities, as Your Honour pointed out a short time ago, are the legal creatures of the provincial legislatures. I hope that no member of any municipal council will feel that I am using any term that does not recognize the full dignity of the municipalities when I make that simple and unchallengeable statement.

Under our constitution, the municipalities take form under the municipal acts of the various provinces. The way in which they elect their local governments, the way in which those governments serve the people and the way in which their many activities are carried out, are defined and supervised by the provincial government. There is, therefore, a close, intimate and continuous association between the municipalities and the provincial authorities. In fact, in many cases the municipal councils are an integrated part of the general provincial activities. For that reason it has been difficult for many of us to understand why it is appropriate that the provincial governments should be able to buy exactly the same things that are bought by the municipal councils, and yet they should pay no sales or excise tax while the municipal councils are called upon to do so.

I sometimes wonder why a device has not been employed which could, in some substantial measure, overcome this difficulty. I think it might be one that perhaps might commend itself. If the provincial governments created a purchasing organization for the municipalities, it would seem quite evident that a provincial organization of that kind would be free of sales tax and excise tax, and could pass on that benefit to the municipalities. Nevertheless, that is a cumbersome procedure that should not become necessary, and certainly will not become necessary, unless this parliament fails to carry out the obviously necessary reform.

In saying all this, it is not my intention to discuss the motion which has been referred to by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris), beyond saying its effect is so limited it offers little or no relief to the municipalities, and particularly in regard to those purchases which are of the greatest importance and cost. However, this subject is one that has been presented to the government by resolution on many occasions. The municipalities find themselves more and more reduced to taxes on real estate for their increasing needs. The very things done by this parliament throw a burden on the home owner, the farm owner and the owner of small business properties in the municipality. This is something that should be borne in mind. This is not an act of mere generosity we are suggesting, but a practical reciprocal recognition of the fact that the municipalities are called upon to do many things that, in themselves, are essential if the programs initiated here are to be carried out.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the figures in themselves are interesting and revealing. We find, for instance, that last year the mayor of the city of Edmonton stated that if the dominion had paid its share of the general obligations that the municipalities have been asking the dominion to bear, there would be a saving of approximately $600,000 in that city. That is certainly a substantial figure for any city. Whether that be the right amount or whether it should be a lesser amount, we do know what this amount of sales tax is for the city of Montreal. For the financial year 1951-52, the city of Montreal, on materials and equipment purchased either by the city itself or by contractors, paid $382,000. Mr. Speaker, I repeat these are only amounts that illustrate what is happening in varying degress across this country. These payments are largely due to things that must be done in order to carry out programs initiated on behalf of our people by the government of Canada and by provincial governments in the general advancement of our society.

I believe that there is no single reform in taxation more greatly needed today than a readjustment of taxes which would relieve home owners, farm owners, owners of businesses and property, of the present burden of taxation. Nothing would, of itself, encourage more greatly a still more extensive building of homes and farm buildings and things of that nature, when reason suggests that it should be done. When this very thing is being done for provincial governments in relation to the very same things, then I submit that the municipalities, which are brought into existence as corporate bodies under the laws of the provinces, should have the same right and courtesy extended to them.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell):

That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which would provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of dominion excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax."

Mr. Speaker: As I had occasion to inform the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) earlier, an amendment to the motion to go into supply should not involve legislation placed on the order paper. The very effect of this amendment is that legislation be introduced similar to that contemplated in a budget resolution.

I hold in my hand May's fifteenth edition in which, at page 706, I find this:

The ordinary rules of debate are applicable on this occasion.

That is, on a question for Mr. Speaker to leave the chair. It continues:

For instance, a matter which should be considered upon a substantive motion, or which would anticipate a more effective form of proceeding of which notice has been given cannot be discussed. A subject, or matter of detail which should be discussed in the committee, has been held to be out of order. The rule which prohibits reference to matters involving legislation—

Then there is a reference to page 717, to which I shall refer later. It continues:

—having been found too rigid, was relaxed, on the recommendation of the select committee on procedure of 1946.

Well, so far as we are concerned, that rule was not relaxed by any committee of procedure of this house.

And then, if hon. members will look at the reference to page 717, which is mentioned here in brackets, they will find this under the heading "General Restrictions on Debate in Committee of Supply":

> Regarding the general conduct of debate in the committee of supply, it may be observed that remarks on the conduct of a servant of the state, made on the grant containing his salary, must be restricted to his official conduct. The committee of supply does not afford the proper opportunity for discussing from which house of parliament a minister should be chosen, or whether he should be in the cabinet or not, or which minister should represent the government in respect of the estimates under consideration. The administrative action of a department is open to debate, but the necessity for legislation and matters involving legislation cannot be discussed in committee of supply.

It has also been a rule in this house that if an hon. member wishes to introduce legislation or to amend legislation there is a definite form of procedure. The Leader of the Opposition may say, "Well, if it involves the expenditure of money or the imposition of a tax, I cannot move it. It has to be moved by a minister of the crown." That is the very basis upon which our parliamentary procedure is founded. Matters having to do with the spending of money or the imposition of taxation have to be introduced by the executive. The opposition has the right to criticize and to censure by amendment or by motion. But in this particular instance, on a motion to go into supply, what has to be heard is a grievance, but not a motion involving legislative matters which are to be dealt with later as they appear on the order paper.

Of course I am prepared to hear comments on the ruling. However, in view of what I have said, which is fully explained in May, I would be inclined to declare that the amendment cannot be received.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, there seem to be two points raised in connection with this matter, the first of which is that of an amendment dealing with possible legislation, and the other being the question of a matter already before the house.

If Your Honour's ruling has the effect of denying the right to place before the house the proposal that consideration be given to certain legislation, then I submit that the long history of the effective employment of a motion to go into supply to present positive proposals to the House of Commons will have been destroyed. I submit further that, over and over again, in every session, the procedure I have suggested has been followed with a regularity which embeds it firmly into the practices of the House of Commons.

And I would say this, that in so far as the legislation is concerned, the amendment is very carefully drawn to propose that consideration be given to legislation which is not now before the house, and which is not in any way suggested to the house in the speech from the throne, in the budget, or in any resolution on the order paper.

And, so far as the second point is concerned, if the fact that some resolution dealing with a particular aspect of a problem is to deny the opportunity to propose consideration of a general approach to the problem, then I would point out that a very effective blocking device could be employed simply by introducing a series of resolutions dealing with very limited aspects of every question that might come before the House of Commons. The hands of the house would be tied in that hon. members would not be in a position to present this kind of resolution which in the past, both here and at Westminster, has over and over again formed the basis for positive and effective discussion—discussion which, in many cases, has had satisfactory results and received the acquiescence of the government. Even within the last two or three years we have had encouragement in that we have seen certain of these proposals actually accepted.

I would point out that if a resolution of this kind—which, I might add, has been introduced every year for several years, in a somewhat similar form—is to be withheld from discussion by something dealing with a limited part of it, we would have a serious situation. How could this be done? Well, certainly the government could anticipate that such a resolution would be brought forward, in view of the fact that this argument has been presented before. Under such a ruling it would only be necessary to introduce a motion that the sales tax on school rulers be removed, and there could be no discussion on the broad subject of the relief of municipalities in regard to purchases of machinery and equipment either for municipalities or for schools. Surely the intention of the rules and the rulings made in this house should not be to restrict the opportunity to place positive proposals before the house. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that on the contrary, the rules should be so interpreted as to encourage positive recommendations dealing with those matters that are obviously of considerable concern to the people of Canada, and particularly the municipal taxpayers of this country.

Mr. Coldwell: May I just say a word, Mr. Speaker? I agree with the Leader of the Opposition in regard to the suggested objection you have made to this particular amendment. This amendment follows strictly the line that has been laid down in this house ever since I have been here at least. It merely asks for the consideration of the introduction of certain legislation which is outlined.

I am in sympathy of course with the purpose of this amendment, though, if you suggested that this might not be in order on account of resolutions which we are considering in connection with the debate on the budget, I would have agreed with you. But if the ruling is made merely on the basis that the form of this is not compatible with the usual procedure of the house, then I certainly could not agree with you, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect.

I think that you might, if I may suggest it, give more consideration to this amendment because on the ground that you have just suggested the ruling made might be on very shaky foundations. On looking it over I find it is quite compatible in form with many resolutions that have been moved and accepted from time to time in this house.

Mr. Fulton: May I just say a word on the various points that have been raised? Dealing firstly with the last point made by the leader of the C.C.F. party, I would remind you, sir, that we had an amendment earlier in this session dealing with the unemployment situation and advocating immediate action, as I recall it, not only advocating measures to reduce unemployment but also, certainly by inference, at any rate an amendment to the unemployment legislation. Perhaps I should put it this way. The action urged in that resolution would have required legislation, and that amendment was allowed as being in order at that time. In fact there was an amendment and a subamendment. I suggest that on the same principle this amendment, although it might be that it does require legislation to implement it, is within the rules laid down by the ruling on amendments to the motion to go into committee of supply.

Very obviously, sir, in the vast majority of cases of redress of grievances or of matters that are put forward at this stage from this side of the house as being grievances requiring redress, it would require legislative action to deal with the request which is put forward in the resolution. If you were, sir, to embark on the kind of rulings which meant that only a resolution, the implementation of which would not require legislation, could be moved at this stage, then I submit, sir, that the raising of grievances and the moving of formal amendments with respect thereto would be virtually impossible. Therefore I would echo the words of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and ask you carefully to reconsider your ruling before you put it on that basis. On the other basis which was alluded to and on which I understand at present you are not ruling it out of order, I think it is sufficiently obvious, sir, from what has been said by the Leader of the Opposition, it does not confine itself in any way to the particular subject embraced in the budget resolution which is, it is true, on the order paper.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar was inviting Your Honour to give further consideration to that matter, but I simply suggest to you, sir, it goes so very much beyond what is embraced in that budget resolution that it would be impossible to rule it out of order on that ground. Therefore I respectfully submit that it stands on all fours with similar resolutions moved at this stage in the past and should be allowed as being in order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I trust that you will meet the request that has already been made that you reconsider the opinion that you have tentatively placed before the house. I have been looking through such references as I have under my hand, and I find no instance of an amendment of this kind being ruled out of order. On the other hand, I find several instances of amendments almost, if not exactly, the same as this being allowed. It seems to me that if Your Honour focuses attention on the word "legislation" you should not ignore the governing phrase "the opinion that consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation".

I confess that the other amendments that I have looked up thus far do not use the word "legislation" but they do express the opinion of the house that certain steps should be taken; that provision should be made; that measures should be taken. As a matter of fact, this amendment could be corrected on that point, if Your Honour thinks it needs correction, by just striking out the reference to legislation. I do not think such a change is necessary, but it could be made to read:

> this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to the exemption . . .

And so on. Now, bearing in mind that these are amendments that do not have an operative effect, the results are the same either way, and with all respect I must say that Your Honour pays too much attention to the word "legislation" which appears in this amendment, bearing in mind that the amendment is one of those abstract amendments that do not have an operative effect.

It seems to me that in citation 345, which is one of the general citations providing for the redress of grievances, there is wording that covers this amendment where it says that the amendment need not be relevant but may relate to every question connected with public administration.

Then there is citation 444 as well, which refers to motions. I think Your Honour will admit that it covers amendments as well. It reads as follows:

> Private members may introduce resolutions that do not directly involve the expenditure of public money and have no operative effect but simply express an abstract opinion on a matter which may necessitate a future grant.

Whether one is asking for the expenditure of money or asking for legislation that may result in the expenditure of money or the loss of revenue to the public treasury, the result is the same. Citation 444 appears to have formed the basis of decisions made by former Speakers which I shall not read. But I would mention that they may be found at pages 519, 529 and 537 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition. In all these cases what was involved was a motion that indirectly could involve legislation or the expenditure of money. But the Speaker in each case allowed them as motions or as amendments because they were abstract; they were inoperative in their effect; they just expressed the opinion of the house. Surely, if I may read it again, that is what this amendment asks for when it says:

> this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which would provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of dominion excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax.

There have been a number of motions of this kind. Indeed, a number of them have come from members of this group. The former member for Melfort, Mr. P. E. Wright, presented a motion that called for money in connection with wheat on June 5, 1950, and it was in order. Similarly, there was a motion on March 9, 1951, which was moved I believe by my deskmate, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), and it called for an initial payment of $1.75 for wheat in that year. On May 11 last year, just before the end of the session, I moved an amendment which read as follows:

> "this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to increasing the payments made to our old age and blind pensioners, under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Old Age Security Act and the Blind Persons Act, to an amount commensurate with today's cost of living."

That, Mr. Speaker, can be found at page 5110 of Hansard for May 11, 1953. Now, Your Honour might point out that that motion did not have within it the word "legislation", but the effect would have been the same if my motion had been adopted. If it had carried it would have been the expression of the opinion of this house that that step should be taken and it was a step that would require legislation either by the government then in power or the one which would have taken its place if the government had been defeated on the motion.

I therefore submit, with deference, Your Honour, that you have paid too much attention to the word "legislation" as it appears in this amendment. It is my belief that, in accordance with the excerpts you have quoted from May, to move the direct introduction of legislation on the motion to go into supply would be out of order. It would not be in keeping with the grievance procedure. But that is not what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) is doing. He has simply exercised his right on the motion to go into supply to express as his grievance his opinion that consideration should be given to making a certain provision, taking a certain course, and introducing certain legislation. I trust that the arguments advanced by those of us who have spoken from the floor will prompt Your Honour to reconsider your opinion on this matter.

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this matter. On the first point, in reference to which Your Honour cited May, I have always understood that "legislation", there, was legislation which was before the house for consideration at the session which was in progress, and not legislation generally, because the practice, I think, since I have been here, has been on several occasions to have amendments on the motion to go into supply which express the opinion, whether the word "legislation" is used or not, that there should be some change that could not be made otherwise than by legislation. However, I think the citations to which you have referred are still applicable to this case because here this is in effect an amendment which says the resolution that is before the house is insufficient and should not extend the relief from taxation merely to certain items, but should extend it to all items purchased by municipalities. Here we have something before the house which is a proposal for legislation by the government, and I have no doubt that when the resolution is under consideration we will hear it said that it does not go far enough. But I think that will be the time when it will be in order to say that, and meantime it is not in order to say it in the form of an amendment to a motion to go into supply.

When we reach consideration of the resolution on the Excise Tax Act, which reads as follows—

> 4. That the sales tax on the following goods be repealed:
> (c) equipment sold to or imported by municipalities for their own use and not for resale, at a price in excess of one thousand dollars per unit, specially designed for use directly for road making, road cleaning or fire fighting, but not to include automobiles nor ordinary motor trucks;

—we will hear it said that that is very good, but that it does not go far enough and that it should be extended to all equipment and supplies purchased by municipalities.

That being the proposal which is before parliament at this time for debate, I think the citations from May make the word "legislation", as used in these citations, applicable to the present amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank hon. members—does the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) wish to speak?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on this matter. I do not pretend there is much to be added to the arguments which have already been addressed to you on this subject, but I would ask you, in weighing your decision on this matter, to bear at least these two things in mind.

This is a matter of high importance, Mr. Speaker. It is not just an ordinary amendment upon which you are called upon to make a decision, because if the decision you have indicated as being in your mind is given effect by you, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it is going to have the inevitable result of greatly curtailing the procedure which has been recognized here for a very long time of permitting the effective airing of grievances in this house.

I ask you, if you will, sir, to consider very carefully that if the ground upon which you have proposed to rule this amendment out of order is sound it can have the effect of curtailing to a degree I think very few of us in this house can fully apprehend the well recognized and extremely useful and democratic procedure we have on motions of this kind. May I urge, sir, that basically the approach of the Chair to amendments of this kind should be to admit these amendments freely unless there is a clear offence against some rule, order or previous decision.

It appears that some weight is attached in your mind, Mr. Speaker, to the suggestion that there is some legislative effect to this resolution. At any rate that appears to be the understanding of hon. members, including the Prime Minister, in regard to what you said. It seems to me that the use of the word "legislation" in the amendment does not fix the nature of the amendment. It would be mere hairsplitting to say an amendment of this kind is legislative in its nature simply because the word "legislation" is used in some place in that amendment. The essential nature of the amendment, sir, is the governing consideration in my submission, and the essential feature of this amendment is to invite, in the time-honoured word, "consideration" of this matter. If it is adopted it can go no further than to invite consideration in proper quarters of the matter that is referred to here, namely, the exemption of municipal councils and school boards from payment of this tax.

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) made reference to the budget resolution proposing an amendment to the Excise Tax Act, which was introduced on April 6. Now, sir, if the amendment is to be ruled out on that ground I would suggest to you that in effect the ruling then will say that the greater includes the less. If an amendment such as has been introduced by the Leader of the Opposition is out of order simply because there is somewhere before the house a resolution which deals with a tiny fragment—and it cannot be more than that under the language of the budget resolution—of what is proposed in the amendment, then, sir, it is going to be, if not impossible, then virtually impossible hereafter to introduce an amendment to a supply motion, in any event after the budget has been introduced.

It would seem to me, sir, and I say this with the utmost respect, a quite extraordinary thing if, once a budget is introduced with a group of budget resolutions, somehow the whole atmosphere in which we approach these questions of amendments on supply motions should change, because the budget resolutions are very wide in the nature of things they touch. If on a supply motion an amendment suddenly becomes out of order simply because it touches on something on which there is nothing more than the most casual reference or fragmentary provision in the budget resolutions, it is inevitable that under such a decision the power and useful right of members of this house to introduce amendments on supply motions is going to be virtually nullified.

With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I consider that is not putting it too strongly if your proposed ruling is going to stand on the grounds on which it has been proposed and discussed here. I would urge, with the utmost respect, that on a matter of this kind we are dealing with something that goes to the very root of the rights of members of this house. It is the type of matter on which —if I may express this opinion to you, Mr. Speaker—the approach should be not one seeking to confine but one seeking to provide the freest possible assertion of the rights of the members of the house. With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I urge upon you that the subject matter of this amendment does not trespass upon existing subject matter of things that are on the order paper now; far from it. It is not legislative in its scope any more than any resolution introduced by a private member could be legislative as applied to the balance of ways and means, expenditures or taxation. This is the recognized form in which the house expresses itself on these questions.

Mr. Fulton: In the hope that it may clarify the matter and enable you to reconsider your ruling I would propose to move,—and in this I act with the knowledge and concurrence of my leader—seconded by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair):

That the amendment be amended by deleting the words "the introduction of legislation which would provide for"

The amendment would then read:

this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of dominion excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax.

I have no wish to make that motion unless it would be of assistance to Your Honour. If Your Honour's feeling is that the subject matter of the resolution is out of order, then of course the suggestion I have made would not cure it. But I understand Your Honour's opinion to be that the objection to the resolution is that it advocates specific legislation. If that be the objection, then I would suggest that it would be cured by the amendment. It is for that purpose alone that I would move the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have been extremely kind. I must thank them all for having provided me with such valuable assistance. Before I deal further with this point, I should like to reread what I said earlier because it seems to me that I was somewhat misunderstood or that I was not clear enough. I should therefore like to leave the matter as it stands for the time being. If an opportunity is given to me to study it, I will start by rereading what I said earlier. Then later I will be in a better position to give a ruling which I hope will give satisfaction to everyone.

To my mind legislation does not mean an existing statute. It is the kind of legislation which begins, if it is a money matter, with a resolution, followed by first, second and third readings of the bill. It is legislation which Beauchesne talks about, I think in citation 467, where he says that an amendment should not relate to a piece of legislation, namely a resolution of ways and means which is already on the order paper. My point—and the one that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) thought I should have made—was strictly related to his, although I had not amplified upon it. If the hon. member recalls what took place, he will remember that when I concluded my remarks I said that I was inclined to rule it out of order but that I should like to hear observations upon what I had said. I was perhaps keeping until the end what I consider to be the best of my arguments. I have before me here the budget resolution which appears at page 3737 of Hansard. I thought that this amendment was strictly related to a piece of legislation which is now before the house, namely a resolution which is on its way to becoming a bill. That is what we are talking about when we speak of legislation; it is the various processes from the resolution stage to the adoption of a bill. If it has received royal assent, it is a statute. I think it was the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) who the other day said I had spoken perhaps too long. But at that time, as he will recall, I was explaining what was meant in the resolution moved by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) and which contained the expression "such other legislation". I thought that today I did not require to make myself as clear as I tried to do on that occasion. This is what I had in mind. In any event, I have been impressed by the remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and all the others who have taken part in this debate. It is not my intention in any way to curtail the opportunities for members to put forward grievances, because it is a time-honoured right that members have: No supply before redress of grievances. I do not want to curtail that right in any way. On the other hand, it is my duty to make sure that the rules of the house are not transgressed either by reviving debates or by duplicating them. I must deal with the rules as I have them in my hand. Citation 467 of Beauchesne's third edition, towards the end of the paragraph, reads as follows:

. . . if one is moved, shall not relate to any decision of the house during the current session, nor to any item of the estimates, nor to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of ways and means, nor to any matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper.

As I say, we have here this budget resolution which the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) read a moment ago. What I have to examine is what is meant by the word "relate". I should like to consider the matter further before I give a final ruling.

Mr. Coldwell: Then I presume, Mr. Speaker, that for the moment the subject matter of the amendment is properly under discussion? If so, I should just like to say a few words upon it.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will allow me to interrupt him for a moment. I do not think I have read the amendment. I will read it so that it will be proposed from the chair. The Leader of the Opposition, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), moves:

That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which would provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of dominion excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax".

Then the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has expressed the wish to modify this amendment, I assume with the consent of the mover.

Mr. Fulton: Your Honour, what I was suggesting was that if it would assist you in making a ruling, I would be prepared to move that amendment. But if I might have your consent and that of the house to withdraw the amendment, I think it would simplify matters.

Mr. Speaker: Since I have not received the amendment, we will consider that it has not been properly moved—

Mr. St. Laurent: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: —because I do not think it would affect the matter anyway. Whatever decision I may make on the point, I will either accept the amendment or rule it out on the ground that it relates to a resolution already on the order paper to be considered in the committee of ways and means. But I want to think it over further.

Mr. Coldwell: I was just going to say that the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition would not be in the possession of the house until it had been read. I suggest that with your permission the hon. member for Kamloops might be allowed to make the change in the amendment that he suggested. I recollect that on one previous occasion at least my former leader in the house, Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, moved an amendment or a resolution—I have forgotten which—and it was not then read to the house. Mr. Speaker Lemieux suggested that during the supper hour it could be better worded. The change was made and the house accepted the change since the amendment or motion had not been formally placed before the house by Mr. Speaker reading it into the record.

Mr. Drew: With the consent of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, may I make a suggestion consistent with what he has now said. Rather than regard the proposed amendment as an amendment to the amendment, may I suggest that the practice the hon. member has now suggested be followed. For the purpose of avoiding anything that might appear to be presenting unnecessary difficulties in relation to established practice the house might follow the course he has indicated. That would place my request before you for your consideration, if you should find that is an essential part of what you are doing, namely, that the words "introduction of legislation which would provide for the" be dropped so that the amendment would read:

This house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of dominion excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax.

I sought permission to present this suggestion to you in the hope that we might not find ourselves confronted with a ruling which might appear to limit our debate in a way that perhaps might not be fully understood by hon. members.

Mr. Coldwell: I mentioned it in order to give Mr. Speaker the opportunity, if he so wished, to consider whether he would follow the procedure adopted by Mr. Speaker Lemieux in the case I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: So that all discussion pertaining to this particular subject may follow consecutively on the record, may I add at this point that I understood that the hon. member for Kamloops was moving a correction to the amendment already moved by the Leader of the Opposition for the purpose of helping the Chair, by suppressing some words, in making a decision which would have perhaps kept the amendment in order. I have said that whether these words are suppressed or whether they remain will not change anything one way or the other as far as my decision is concerned.

The Leader of the Opposition, perhaps because of a suggestion made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, has said that he would prefer to see the words "introduction of legislation which would provide for the" removed. If I, like Mr. Speaker Lemieux some years ago, had thought that their removal would result in a better wording of the amendment I could have arranged to have those words removed. However, that is not the case because I do not think that it would improve the resolution one way or the other. It reads just as well with those words as without them, and it will not change my ruling one iota.

Mr. Fulton: On the point of order, I quite agree with you, Mr. Speaker, that my amendment was designed to cure what I had thought was a defect that you had indicated in the resolution. I now find, in the light of your subsequent remarks, that that was not the point on which you were going to rule. Therefore I feel there is no purpose in proceeding with my suggestion.

Mr. Drew: May I interject, and then my interjections are finished. Since this ruling is, I believe, regarded as a matter of some importance, I would not wish the record to leave any uncertainty as to my position. In making the suggestion I did I was not conceding for a moment that the resolution as it stood was not in order. I believe it is. I was merely offering the suggestion, should Your Honour feel that it did in any way change the situation, that a device that has been employed on other occasions might be adopted. Since Your Honour has made it clear that it does not change the effect then I would naturally prefer the amendment to stand exactly as it is.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I have almost forgotten what I started to say, Mr. Speaker, because it seems so long ago. I am not objecting because I think this is an important point of order and an important ruling to which you must give consideration. But since this amendment is under discussion for the time being at least, I wish to say that I have every sympathy with the views expressed by the Leader of the Opposition, and I believe that those views will be shared very largely by members in all parts of the house. Some of us, before coming to this parliament, have had a certain amount of experience in municipal affairs. I can look back now more than a third of a century to the time when I was first elected to the city council of the city of Regina. Over those thirty-three years municipal administrations have been faced more and more with problems that require considerable expenditures of money, and at the same time they have found it difficult to impose any more direct taxes on real and improved property than they were imposing before.

The result is that both urban and rural municipalities are faced with difficulties when they find it necessary to import fire fighting equipment or trucks and so forth. During the debate on the budget I referred to this problem and I said that I regretted that the excise tax had not been removed from trucks imported for use by municipalities. I think that the house has to give consideration to ways and means of improving the financial resources of the municipalities of Canada. Of course, because they are parts of municipalities the same applies to the school boards of Canada. Quite frequently school supplies have to be imported from other countries, the United States or Great Britain. Where foreign languages are taught, supplies have to be imported. In the case of science, new apparatus devised and developed in many other countries has to be imported.

In some instances there is duty free importation, but then we find that other forms of taxation are levied. When supplies are bought within the country they are of course subject to the sales and excise taxes in many instances. In view of the difficulties now facing the municipalities and school boards and, indeed, educational institutions generally, including universities that are financed by the provinces and universities financed by endowments or gifts from time to time, the government should give consideration to introducing legislation designed to relieve these burdens as far as it is possible to do so. After all, as the Leader of the Opposition indicated, our democratic system is based upon local government and local democracy. That was the origin of the institutions that we have in democratic countries. Go back to Anglo-Saxon times. There were the village or folk moot and the hundred moot leading up to the national witenagemot and so on down to our parliamentary institutions. If we weaken the local governments, if we make it more difficult for them to fulfil the obligations they have to the people, then we shall be faced with a more acute problem. As a former member of a city council on which I served for many years, I know that the people are more conscious of the things that happen in the municipalities or in the council than they are of what takes place in this parliament. I know that the members of those bodies are closer, in many respects, to the people who live in those municipalities, than are the members of parliament in this House of Commons.

I say that I have every sympathy for the amendment introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). Whether or not it is in order on other grounds, I am not going to say. If it stands, we most certainly shall support it. If it is ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker, we shall see to it that the grounds upon which the ruling is made are good grounds, and we shall be governed accordingly. All I want to do this afternoon is to say that I feel this parliament has to consider ways and means of helping the municipalities and our school boards. My colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight), has frequently suggested federal grants for education, something of which we in this group are very much in favour. He knows much more about the financing of education in the various provinces, and in the various cities, than perhaps I do at the moment. I join with others in this house in urging the government to consider how best this parliament may strengthen the local governmental institutions in our country, the municipalities, the school boards and boards of a similar nature.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I should like to say just a word on the subject matter that has been suggested by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), that is the matter of giving assistance through our federal tax policies to the municipalities and school districts of the dominion. This is a subject in which I have been keenly interested for quite a number of years. Indeed, more than a score of times, I am sure, I have brought before this house the whole question of the exemption of school districts and municipalities from the payment of sales taxes and excise taxes on their purchases of machinery, buses, trucks and that sort of thing.

I want to indicate here that we favour the type of action that is contemplated in the resolution moved this afternoon, and if Mr. Speaker rules the amendment is in order, then of course I shall have to support it. It is true, however, that in the budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) did provide for some relief to the municipalities by granting exemption from sales tax on the purchase of road building machinery. Now, that went only part way towards meeting the requests that have been made so often by members in this house. In the budget debate I expressed disappointment that the minister had not gone farther and exempted the purchases of buses and that sort of thing by school boards.

At the moment, I am not too familiar with the situations in the cities of Canada. I know they are having their troubles, of course, but they cannot be having nearly the trouble the rural municipalities are having because in the cities there are large concentrations of industries that are subject to taxation. You do not find this concentration of industry in the rural municipalities. Consequently, the only source of revenue the rural municipality has is the taxation applied against the farms and the homes of the people. This places a heavy burden on the rural municipalities. Federal policies dictate that on every purchase of road building machinery or equipment to transport children to school, things of that sort, a municipality has to pay a 10 per cent sales tax, and in addition certain other excise taxes.

I have calculated that on the purchase of an ordinary standard model Chevrolet car from the factory the purchaser must pay this government nearly $500 in excise and sales taxes combined; that is more than the labourers receive to build the car. I do not believe it is to the credit of the government of Canada that a situation like that exists. The ordinary, standard model Chevrolet car sells at the factory for around $2,200 or $2,300. What would a school division out in the country have to pay in sales taxes at 10 per cent on the purchase of a school bus, let us say, with which they transport the children to school, costing in the neighbourhood of $12,000 or $15,000? I shall let hon. members make the calculation themselves. It becomes a substantial sum, especially when it is recognized that the sales tax of 10 per cent is applied at the manufacturer's level and is often pyramided into a much greater percentage by the time the school division buys the bus from the retail distributor.

It is because of the extra burden on the school divisions and municipalities that I have spoken on a number of occasions in favour of having this tax abolished, and for that reason amongst others I welcome the opportunity to say something about it this afternoon and to ask the government to give some serious consideration to the extension of the good work they began in the budget this year. They should extend the exemption to cover all these purchases by municipalities and school districts, by means of which they build roads, give services to their people and transport the children to school. It must be remembered that these things are not purchased for resale. They are not bought by municipalities and school boards for the purpose of making money. They are purchased in order to give service, and for that reason the municipalities and school districts should be given every consideration.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): I am not an expert on taxation, but I did serve for a number of years on our school board in Fort William. I cannot see any outstanding reason for this discussion now, because what has been said here could have been said on legislation that is coming along. In so far as the dominion government handing over any money for the support of education in Ontario is concerned, I shall oppose that strongly until the big surplus Ontario now has is used up for education.

This resolution asks for a reduction in taxation. I do not think it is so urgent after all, judging from my own city. We have another need in Fort William, which is suggested by a resolution that comes from Sault Ste. Marie to the effect that the dominion government spend a little more money in extending unemployment insurance benefits. How are we going to reduce taxes and spend more money? I think we have got to look at things in a common-sense way. Why reduce taxation in one way and extend it in another? I would like to back up the government in extending unemployment insurance. While I know it is on a sound basis, and that it is risky to touch it, yet when men are out of work and their unemployment insurance is running out it is far more important that there should be no reduction of taxation at this time.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, apparently my hon. friend would neglect the children of this country for other purposes. But two wrongs do not make a right. We need this support for these children, for their education; and that is what we are asking for. We are not referring to the conglomerate picture of unemployment insurance. Let us stick to the subject matter, and discuss it on its merits.

Mr. McIvor: Why does not the province of Ontario use up its big surplus?

Mr. Ferguson: Why don't you try to run the province of Ontario?

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) has said that he would not support any of these moneys coming from the federal government. I would suggest to him that there are other provinces, outside of Ontario, who are not in as fortunate a position, financially.

Mr. McIvor: I am from Ontario.

Mr. Knight: My leader has said a word in respect of my own work in supporting educational grants, and I do not propose to go into that matter today. To my mind this is not the opportune time to do so; but when that time does come I shall have something to say about it.

I think it is fair to say however that some of the municipalities in some of the provinces —and I think perhaps some of the maritime provinces are particularly unfortunate in this respect—have, as it were, reached the end of their financial tether. They do not know how to keep their educational institutions operating. I have been warning this government and the people of Canada generally about the matter for a number of years. The government must be cognizant of the situation. It is a condition which will have to be remedied eventually, either by the present government or by another one. The situation is becoming pretty bad when we cannot even train the personnel required to man our schools. We find that the province of Ontario, to which the hon. member for Fort William has referred—and I see that he is leaving the chamber at the moment—has been unable to train its personnel and, quite openly, is bringing in teachers from Great Britain on a full-time and permanent basis.

I have no objection to this; but I do say that it is a situation which should not exist in this country. I believe Ontario is doing better than some of the other provinces that have dodged the issue and simply lowered their standard, thus letting the system of education deteriorate.

That is all I wish to say at the moment. As my leader has suggested, I have a good deal of information on the subject, but I shall leave any further arguments until some other day. Meantime, if this amendment is in order, I shall support it.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the real question to be decided here is one of priority, to decide what we think is most important. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) does not think there is any urgent need, because of the surplus in Ontario; and the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) has reminded the hon. member for Fort William that there are other provinces in Canada.

I think the leader of the C.C.F. party has made eloquent reference to the importance of the municipality in our life. As we look back we realize that the basis of our living is to a great extent centred in the municipalities. I remember the time when I had the good fortune to be a country member—that is, before a certain unfortunate incident took place. I discovered, to my great interest, the very large number of people in the country who take a direct part in government—government on a smaller scale, if you like. Nevertheless it is government.

I have tried to do some work with pencil and paper, and my figures show that, roughly, there are two hundred times as many people in the country as there are in the city who have something to do with self-government. In a large city less than a hundred people are directly concerned as members of the city council, the board of school trustees, etc., whereas my mathematics would show that there would be about two hundred times as many in the country for the same population. I think those of us who have not had that experience fully realize what a useful experience it is. We could very well do with some of it ourselves. This all has reference to the municipalities, to their needs, and their importance in our life.

If I might interject something at this point, I would say that we are living in a time when we may be forced to take stock of the basic realities of our political life, to an extent greater than we have before, because we are faced with an extraordinary situation under which those who follow a doctrine which we regard as diabolical, follow that doctrine with a degree of enthusiasm which it seems to me we might do well to show in support of our own beliefs.

Returning from that digression, I should like to read a brief passage from an article by Professor Curtis of Queen's University, as it appears in the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science for August 1951. In this article he speaks about the importance of municipal government, and says—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member for Greenwood that we are now directing our attention to an amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) which deals particularly with the exemption of municipal councils and school boards from the payment of dominion excise tax, including the 10 per cent sales tax. I would also direct the hon. member's attention to citation 469 of Beauchesne's third edition which says:

> When an amendment has been moved to the question for the Speaker to leave the chair, discussion should be properly confined to its subject-matter.

I have been following the hon. member with some attention, and I would ask him to direct his remarks more particularly to the subject matter of the amendment before the house.

Mr. Macdonnell: Well, with deference, my answer must be this, that unless I can argue that municipalities are an overwhelmingly important consideration, and that they are in need, I have nothing to say at all. In what I am now saying I am seeking to set out the importance of municipalities; and I propose then to say something about their needs. If Your Honour rules that I am out of order, then I shall have to accept your decision. But certainly my attempt is to stress the importance of municipalities, and to stress their needs; and on the basis of that to stress the need of making this concession to them.

Returning to the quotation from Professor Curtis as it is set out in the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science, I find he makes this reference to local government:

> I regard it as having a permanent and significant place in our structure of government. It is valuable for the training and interest which it gives to a large number of citizens, making them sources of information and political experience within the community. It serves a useful purpose by keeping many local and controversial issues out of the range of provincial and federal decision. That is, when problems can be settled locally, it means less detail and argument in the administrative and political fields of provincial and federal governments.

I want to remind the house of the importance of the municipalities, going back, as the leader of the C.C.F. has already done, to the city states of Greece and Rome and later on to Italy and Germany.

Then I go on to read briefly from a brief of the federation of mayors and municipalities, from which I seek to show the plight of the municipalities and the basic need of coming to their assistance. I read from page 5 of the brief:

> The stringent nature of the revenue sources available to municipal governments constitutes a very real national problem. While it is felt more acutely in the larger cities and towns it also affects and restricts the efficient administration and development of smaller communities. The problem is nation-wide in scope, differing only in degree in different provinces and municipalities. Because it is a national problem, any long-term solution must be sought within the framework of some kind of federal-provincial agreement or broad national policy with respect to the matter. It is certain that the municipal governments themselves cannot resolve the problem for they do not have the power to do so. It is equally doubtful whether all of the provinces, within the limits of their available resources, can find a fully effective solution.
> What is needed is a national approach and agreement or policy with respect to what is essentially a national problem.

And later:

> The finance-taxation problems of local governments have been recognized in varying degrees by the provincial governments of Canada. The chief form of aid and assistance that is being provided is in the form of grants and subsidies for both specific and general purposes. While such measures are of substantial aid to municipal governments there is an inherent danger that they may weaken the vitality and sense of local responsibility of municipal governments through increasing dependence on this form of aid. In the long run, dependence upon grants and subsidies means a weakening of local autonomy . . .

I wish to read also a word or two from Professor Curtis, at page 300 of this Canadian Journal, because it seems to me he puts his finger on the very crucial point of the whole business and shows why it is that we have the situation which faces us now in the municipalities:

(1) The rapid growth of the real national income and (2) the full exploitation of income and corporation taxes and (3) a mildly rising price level brought a great bulge of easy public revenues which coincided with a period of increasing demands for public expenditures.

He is referring now to the years preceding 1951. Then he goes on to say:

But now, the continued demands for public expenditures, the problem of defence expenditures, and the impact of rising costs have combined to bring all levels of Canadian government, municipal, provincial, and federal, to an agonized search for larger revenues, either from new or from old taxes. It is at this point that the municipal fiscal position must become a part of the general dominion-provincial picture. The problem must be dealt with as a whole or the pressure will have much the same results in Canada as it has had in the United States, where states and municipalities have developed a truly bewildering multiplicity of taxes. A recent survey showed the following situation with respect to American cities: 259 cities tax gas and electric bills; 196 cities tax gross business receipts; 182 cities tax admissions (theatres, etc.); 113 cities tax automobiles; 89 cities tax retail sales; 62 cities tax cigarettes and tobacco; 39 cities tax gasoline; 34 cities tax alcoholic beverages; 24 cities tax individual incomes; 4 cities tax hotels, occupants.

As Professor Curtis very well points out, we have reached the stage where all levels of government have been brought to an agonized search for larger revenues; but of course in that search the municipalities are comparatively weak compared with the others, and therefore they are coming out much worse than the others.

May I say a word as to municipal growth? In population, from 1941 to 1951, the rural growth was 3·4 per cent; the urban growth over-all, 30·3 per cent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have listened for some considerable time to the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood, and I feel sure he will agree with me that I have given him every leniency. I do feel that his remarks are of a very general nature, and in view of the fact that the amendment is now before the house he should confine himself, not to the general needs of the municipalities but to the particular need for the elimination of the payment of the dominion excise tax, including the 10 per cent sales tax.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, my argument for the need of course is the whole position of the municipalities. There is no use in just standing up and saying it would be nice to have the tax burden of the municipalities eased unless I can establish some reason for it. I want to refer very briefly to the growth of population, and then in regard to matters which I feel the municipalities have had thrust upon them, which I do not think are their burden at all, and to give one or two illustrations of that.

As to the growth of population, I wish to draw particular attention to the fact that while the over-all urban growth is 30·3 per cent, on the fringes of the metropolitan centres, such as the city of Toronto, the part outside the original city, the growth there is 66·9 per cent.

The primary responsibilities of municipalities are, I take it, for water, police, roads, fire and education; but actual proximity, the actual impact of other considerations on them, means that they are really forced to subscribe generously to hospitals, for the care of the poor, and to do a good deal for public health and other things as well.

The thing that I want to refer to particularly is roads. One senior municipal official in Ontario said to me the other day that roads were perhaps the greatest source of unfairness to the municipality. He pointed out to me in places like Toronto, where the growth of population has been so great, and where there is tremendous through traffic, how much they have to spend on roads. It interested me very much to learn that in the city of Detroit the city is assisted, in respect to several of the main thoroughfares, by a 50 per cent grant from the federal authority, a 25 per cent grant from the state, and 12½ per cent from the county, leaving only 12½ per cent for the city itself. I suggest that shows the step they have taken to face the situation there, and the utterly unfair burden which is still being left on our municipalities and for which we are asking this measure of relief. I refer again to the agonized search for new revenues. We can understand how limited are the chances of the municipality in trying to extend its taxation rights. The dominion assuages its agony very easily by taking new taxes out of us; the municipalities have very much greater difficulty.

I should like to say a word as to the effect of this financial stringency in the municipalities on welfare work. There is no doubt that the municipalities, with their tremendous expanding services for schools, housing developments and so on, are cramped in looking after other things. For instance, the employable unemployed come back on them in a good many instances. They have increasing dependency and juvenile delinquency as a result of inadequate welfare work. In many ways the position of the municipalities is such as to hamper welfare work and bring about certain deteriorations in civic life.

Another point which has arisen is the extreme disparity in provincial assistance. One of the provinces—and this is a "have not" province where people are not so well able to look after themselves—leaves it to the municipality to carry the whole welfare load itself. As it was put to me, it was practically like the old Elizabethan poor law. On the other hand, another and well-to-do province pays 80 per cent of the relief. Therefore you have those least able to help themselves left with this burden at the bottom of the heap.

It is no answer to shrug off the municipalities. With all due deference, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) is inclined to do that. The municipalities are greatly handicapped in obtaining any new revenue. Real estate has to bear practically the whole load. Real estate raises 85 per cent of municipal taxes, and it is a burden which becomes heavier and heavier.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it all comes back to a question of what we really want, and what we believe is important. Is it more important to have 55 economists in the Department of Agriculture or, including the minister himself, who I think is no mean economist, perhaps we should say 56? Is it more important to have 56 economists in the Department of Agriculture, or to have better rural schools in some provinces which are finding it very difficult to meet the demand? Is it more important that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) should give us a picture of the Robertson family going to the dentist, or that the potholes in the streets of Ottawa should be made less deep than they are now?

Mr. Martin: That whole question, of course, is decided largely by the provinces.

Mr. Macdonnell: Yes, in conjunction with the minister who, I am sure, has the same eloquent speeches ready for them as he has for us.

So, I come back to where I began. It is a question of what we think is really urgent. It is quite true the Minister of Finance has not the same easy surplus that used to rejoice his heart, but nevertheless we have no right to penalize those who are not able, under our constitution, to look after themselves as they might. I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution will receive consideration from the house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest to the house that consideration be given to the vicious nature of this tax, which can be seen if we take a moment to follow it through. Under the terms of the amendment which is now before the house, we are discussing the payment of dominion excise taxes and the general sales tax by municipalities, school boards, and so on. As has just been pointed out by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), about 85 per cent of the revenues of municipal corporations are obtained through the medium of real estate taxes. Hon. members are fully aware of the nature of the sales tax. As we have pointed out on many occasions it is not a tax levied on the basis of ability to pay, which we think should be the principle underlying any fair taxation program. Here you have a tax which is levied on something other than the ability-to-pay basis, which the municipality has to pass on, again on a basis which is not strictly according to ability to pay. This unfair sales tax which municipalities have to pay is in turn levied on the holders of real estate within the municipalities. In other words, it seems to me you have here the case of a tax, which is not on an ability-to-pay basis, being compounded into another tax which is not on an ability-to-pay basis, and in that vein to me it is most unfair.

It means in effect that educational supplies, equipment, and all the things necessary for providing a multitude of services to our people in our cities and municipalities across this country result in a land tax having to be paid so that the municipalities can pay a sales tax. Again I would emphasize the fact that both these taxes depart from the fairest principle in taxation, namely, that taxes should be levied according to the ability to pay.

In some instances this sales tax, which a city or municipality has to pass on in the form of a real estate tax, is a tax on rented property, and in some of those instances the landlord effects a mark-up on that tax which he collects from the tenant. I realize we are discussing a very small proportion of the taxes paid by the owners of real estate in our municipalities, or a very small proportion of the taxes paid indirectly by those who rent homes in our municipalities. But nevertheless the principle is surely quite evident, namely that we are compounding one unfair tax on another, and in some instances providing for a mark-up on that tax. Surely the fairest thing all round would be for the federal government to cease collecting excise and sales tax from our municipalities so that the passing on of tax in this unfair way could be avoided.

It is sometimes put forward as an argument by members on the government side, when they feel it is necessary to defend a tax of this kind, that the money has to be found somewhere. It is always very interesting, of course, to hear government supporters defend the status quo while it exists, then boast of the fact that the situation has been changed when the government some day sees the light. At any rate, it is a fair question. If this sales tax on municipal purchases could be suspended and the exact amount of money lost in that way had to be made up, where could the government get that money? Well, even if it meant collecting more money by means of income taxes or corporation taxes, and even if government supporters were to argue that that means collecting money from the same people, namely the citizens in our cities and municipalities across the country, then I would emphasize the point that in that instance the government would be collecting the money on a fairer basis to the extent that the money which is collected directly in income tax from our people would be paid on a graduated basis, a basis of ability to pay. That is a much fairer method than this vicious sales tax which is collected by means of real estate taxes, and mark-ups in the case of rents where those real estate taxes are paid on owners' rented property. On all counts a graduated income tax is much fairer than the method now in effect.

I certainly hope, whatever happens in regard to the procedural aspect of the amendment we now have the privilege of discussing, that the government will one of these days pay attention to this very justifiable plea made so often by the municipalities of this country, this justifiable plea which is being made from the opposition side of the house today, and that they will do away with the business of requiring municipalities and school boards to pay these unfair excise and general sales taxes.

As the government knows, and as people generally know, some of us feel the time has come to take a much broader crack at the whole question of sales taxes. We feel they should be reduced across the board. However, as Your Honour has pointed out that the subject before the house at the moment is limited in scope, I have risen for just these few moments to emphasize the vicious nature of the sales tax when it is applied to municipal and school board purchases, and to urge the government to accept the principle set out in the amendment which is now before the house.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I have not been more convinced at any time of the value of service in some municipal capacity before entering parliament than on the occasion of a debate of this kind. Members of this house who have had municipal experience, whether in municipal councils or school boards or both, will have a fundamental appreciation of the problem that may not strike others quite so forcibly.

The fact of the matter is that the municipalities in this country—and this applies to the municipalities in all provinces—are sorely in need of a better deal than that which they now enjoy under existing constitutional arrangements. Since 1867 there has been virtually no change in the constitutional formulas as applied to the municipalities, whether on the side of their responsibilities on the one hand or on the side of their revenues on the other. But while these constitutional formulas have remained virtually unchanged for 87 years, there has been not simply a steady increase in municipal responsibilities but a mounting multiplication of them and the attendant financial burden.

I do not propose to review the ground that has been amply covered in this debate, particularly in the remarks of my colleague the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), as to the specific responsibilities of the municipalities. I suppose no one of those responsibilities has increased more rapidly in cost than has the responsibility of providing schools. It repays anyone holding public office at any level of government to sit down and examine the rise in school costs over the period of the last 30 years. These costs have mounted literally by leaps and bounds. The public requires and is demanding newer and better schools. On every hand, with the development of the country, increase in population and shifts in population, new schools are being built in response to public demand and to necessity, at a rapid rate. The cost of construction today has outstripped anything that has been known in our past.

In the province of Ontario I suggest there is not a school that is being built today or extended of which the cost runs much less than $30,000 a room. In addition to that cost, there is the great burden of providing maintenance of school buildings and of paying the salaries of those who are employed in the school system. This burden has fallen on the municipalities with increasing weight. It is quite true that in some provinces, like Ontario, for instance, the provincial government has come to the assistance of the municipalities in helping them to meet their costs of providing schools and school facilities. But, Mr. Speaker, in the whole field of education in Canada, the burden the municipalities are carrying is one that is entirely disproportionate to their means.

Just in the last generation there has been the whole problem of providing for those who are said to be unemployable. Then there are those who are today the employable unemployed for whom no provision is being made except at the expense of the municipalities. Time and again appeals have been made to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) and to the government to face up to this increasing problem, which is quite acute in the larger areas, of providing for the employable unemployed. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the federal government continues to deny any responsibility. These unemployed are on the doorstep of the municipality and they cannot be allowed to starve. The municipality therefore makes provision for them.

There are also the problems of those social agencies which are connected with the municipal government and which have helped so much to provide relief in these cases to which I have referred. There is the increasing burden of providing hospitalization. Although the provinces have increased their contributions to the building of hospitals and also to the per diem costs of providing for patients, nevertheless the municipalities continue to bear a too heavy share of this increasing burden. Mention has been made of the cost of constructing roads. I need not repeat what has been said on that matter.

All of us will have in mind, I know, the extent to which the housing problem has for many years now been thrown in large measure on the municipalities. Particularly in the metropolitan areas where growth has been extremely rapid and the housing problem has been most acute, the burden of providing municipal services has been cast largely on those municipalities. In some of them the problem has become so acute that the municipalities have virtually been obliged to discourage house construction and land subdivision because they could not cope with the problem of providing costly municipal services for the land.

On every hand, Mr. Speaker, the experience of the municipalities has been one of confronting rising costs. If one measures the scale of increase over the past 30 years, one can only describe it as a multiplication. At the same time within that existing constitutional formula to which I have referred there has been no increase of assured revenues to the municipalities. The municipalities are functioning today with the same tax base as that which existed in 1867, and virtually with land taxes as the only source of revenue. There are some minor sources such as licence fees and that sort of thing but they are not material in relation to the total.

The hon. member for Greenwood has stressed the undesirability of providing subsidies. There is much to be said on that subject, Mr. Speaker. Here, however, we are dealing with an aspect of the problem which is pressing and urgent and which illustrates the utter unfairness of the way in which the federal government is proceeding to exercise its taxing powers. For the municipalities—and this applies alike to the municipal councils and the boards of education which must levy through the municipal councils—the base remains virtually the same as it was 87 years ago. The taxes that the federal government applies to the municipalities are hidden taxes. It is a thousand pities that those taxes are hidden. If the citizens of the municipalities were fully aware of the way in which they are being taxed by the federal government there would be an uprising of an outraged public opinion. But as in so many other respects, the federal government applies its taxes in this subtle manner. They are hidden. The taxpayer does not realize or is not conscious of the full weight and the unfairness of them. Every sales and excise tax that the federal government is today collecting from the municipalities is hidden. That is one of the fundamental curses of these anomalies in the constitutional powers of taxing that are being exercised in this country.

The federal government, with its abundant sources, should be devising ways of helping the municipalities to meet these urgent demands for necessary but costly services which they are financially unable to provide. On the contrary, the federal government is not only not helping the municipalities but it is actually levying taxes upon the municipalities.

How can it be said that there is anything inherently wrong in the principle for which I am contending or that there is any insuperable administrative difficulty in applying it when we see in existing federal legislation provision for exemption of purchases made by provinces? If you will have regard, Mr. Speaker, to the provisions of the Excise Tax Act you will see that in sections 45 and 46 clear provision is made for the exemption of goods imported by Her Majesty in the right of any province of Canada for certain purposes, with the exception of three. These three exceptions to the general rule of exemption of provincial purchases are in respect of goods purchased for these purposes:

(a) resale;

(b) to be used by any board, commission, railway, public utility, university, manufactory, company or agency owned, controlled or operated by the government of the province or under the authority of the legislature or the lieutenant governor in council; or

(c) to be used by Her Majesty or by her agents or servants in connection with the manufacture or production of goods or to be used for other commercial or mercantile purposes.

There is a strong case to be made out for treating municipal corporations and commissions which are engaged in any commercial enterprise on the same basis in respect of federal taxation as similar organizations operating under private ownership. But, Mr. Speaker, as to the fundamental principle here, I say that we have in the sections to which I have referred a clear recognition of a principle that the federal government ought not to levy the sales and excise taxes provided for in the Excise Tax Act upon provincial governments. Why is the line drawn there? If it is sound that provincial governments be exempted from federal sales and excise taxes upon their purchases, why should the principle not have equal application at that municipal level of government where the need is very great, where financial pressure is stringent today?

The same principle is not recognized in the Excise Act but there, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the act applies to the products of distilleries and breweries, tobacco and alcohol in various forms, things which municipalities are not normally purchasing. But in the sections of the Excise Tax Act that I have read we have the recognition of a principle, a recognition that emanates from a sense of fairness and a realistic appreciation of the needs of the provincial governments. At the municipal level the need is even more acute today.

What is the extent of the problem? How much is the federal government collecting today in taxes from municipalities, from municipal councils, school boards and boards of education? I do not believe anybody knows. I do not believe any attempt has been made to ascertain the total that is being collected year by year in this way. Some municipalities have made calculations. This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) referred to a calculation made by the municipal authorities of the city of Montreal. Their estimate was that through these taxes the municipal corporation is paying into the federal treasury year by year a sum of about $300,000 annually. I may add that the city treasurer of my own city of Toronto has estimated that the city, through purchases made by the municipal council and by the board of education and separate school board, is paying a total of approximately $500,000 a year in taxes into the federal treasury. It is a shocking state of affairs that this federal government, with all the ample sources of revenue open to it, far from assisting municipalities, handicapped as they are by meagre resources, rising costs and multiplying demands for services, should actually be levying vast amounts in taxes from these municipal treasuries.

Let us not have offered to us today the hoary excuse, the hoary pretext of administrative difficulties. If administrative difficulties were not permitted to stand in the way of the exemption of provincial purchases from federal sales and excise taxes, then certainly there is no case to be made out to justify any refusal to extend that exemption to purchases made by municipalities.

This is an urgent problem. Municipalities from one end of the country to the other are crying for assistance in the form of a realistic approach to their constitutional difficulties. There must be, in my submission, an opening of the eyes of the federal government to the way in which they are increasing the burdens and the difficulties of the municipalities. The time has come for action. Among all the anomalies, among all the injustices in the federal tax structure today that are crying out for reform, none is more pressing than the one we have been discussing this afternoon and which is the subject matter of the amendment, the iniquitous imposition by the federal government of taxes upon our municipal governments in the form of municipal councils, school boards, boards of education and other municipal organizations.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, regardless of what the ultimate disposition of the amendment before us may be, I think this is a matter that is worthy of discussion. The preceding speaker has mentioned that those members of the house who have had municipal experience will perhaps realize the difficulties of the municipalities better than those who have not had such experience. I am in the fortunate position of having had experience on both a school board and a city council. Because of that experience I seldom fail to read items in the daily papers that have reference to municipal and school board matters. In that way I think I keep fairly well in touch. In addition, when I get my city tax notice considerable information is sent with it as to the taxes collected and what is done with them.

I agree with those who have spoken that the plight of the municipalities is a real one. Of the three levels of government, municipal government in its various aspects is the one that is closest to the people. It is the one that has to deal with the people's problems first.

For instance, I see the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris) doing me the honour of paying attention, so I shall just take an example that touches on his department. His department brings in a family of immigrants, a husband, a wife and three or four children. They settle in a city. If the husband is able to find employment, the minister is well pleased as that is one difficulty that has been met so far as his department is concerned. However, it is really then that the problems of the school board, for instance, commences because they have to find school accommodation for three or four new pupils. While ultimately these immigrants are going to be an asset to the country, at this time they become a real problem to the school boards across Canada.

Then let us consider the matter of health for a moment. If the immigrant to whom I referred becomes ill, the first duty of looking after him falls upon the municipal authorities. The minister shakes his head, but despite anything else that may be done for the immigrant, it takes a little time and during that time lag the city has to provide certain services. Then, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) referred to the matter of housing.

After mentioning school accommodation and health requirements, there is this question that has been mentioned, unemployment, and here again the municipality has had to pay out considerable funds this year to look after those who have been affected by the unemployment situation. These are things the municipalities have to do, because if they do not provide for the people in one way they may have to provide for them in another. If they do not provide schools, hospitals and housing, they will have to provide jail accommodation, juvenile courts and that sort of thing. The problem of our increasing population falls, therefore, first on our municipal councils.

In the matter of education, the situation is becoming extremely serious. I know that is the case in my own province of British Columbia. We believe we have as good a school system as any that can be found in Canada. As a matter of fact, we are quite proud of it. During the last several years the incidence of taxation on property owners for school purposes has reached the point where the property taxpayer cannot do any more. There is grave danger now that our educational standards will have to be lowered. Perhaps all these things have been said by others during this debate, and if I am repeating them now it is merely for emphasis.

I feel the time has arrived when the representatives of the three governments should sit down together and decide upon some more equitable distribution of the taxes that are paid by the people of Canada, whether in their capacity as municipal taxpayers, provincial taxpayers or federal taxpayers. They are the same people. At the moment I do not wish to take perhaps the extreme position that was taken by the hon. member for Eglinton, but I cannot believe that the federal government can say that education is a provincial matter and is no concern of theirs. I do not think it is enough either to say that the municipalities are the creatures of the province, and consequently, are not a federal responsibility.

The point that we must get over is that we are dealing with the problems of the same people, whether they pay their taxes or require services as residents of a municipality, residents of a province, or citizens of this Dominion of Canada. Who is to say, "well, it is too bad if you cannot find the taxes for education; it is too bad if you cannot find the taxes for hospital services or for looking after the unemployed, but that is really not our problem". These are problems of the people of Canada, and the people of Canada are represented in this parliament. Every problem that is a problem of the people of Canada is a problem of this parliament, whether under our constitutional set-up at the moment we have direct responsibility for looking after it or whether responsibility has been given to some other governmental organization that we have created.

I am sure that ultimately the people will not take it for granted nothing can be done about their problems because the government with the largest amount of resources is not going to look after this problem. There will be a demand that this government take a look at the picture as a whole, and leave to each level of government sufficient funds to enable it to discharge the responsibilities it has been given. If there are not sufficient funds to do everything we want to do, then we shall have to establish some system of priorities and decide which are the more essential things. The people of Canada, discussing these matters through their various governments, will decide how these taxes are to be allocated and what services are to be provided. Perhaps this is a situation for which no one in particular is responsible. It has grown and developed within our system of government, but we should endeavour to ascertain our collective responsibilities and then discharge them.

Mr. A. H. Hollingworth (York Centre): I rise to make a few comments, mainly because of an article I saw in this morning's Globe and Mail that my constituency of York

Centre, which is comprised mostly of North York, is opening four more public schools this fall. I note that there are 48 public schools already in operation with 589 classrooms, including 20 basement classrooms and 68 portable classrooms. I am quite aware of what the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) has been saying about the need for some kind of relief in connection with the school problem, particularly in the growing municipalities outside the metropolitan area.

I should like to point out what the hon. member for Eglinton did not point out—as a matter of fact, he seemed to avoid it—that the municipalities are the creatures of the provinces. This point cannot be stressed strongly enough. I thought it was rather strange to hear from him that we were doing nothing to help the municipalities, when obviously, as a man who is familiar with constitutional law he should be the first to realize, it is not within our province to look after the municipalities. The direct responsibility is with the provinces. That is something he skipped over very lightly.

Then, of course, we are helping the provinces. In 1951 the Municipal Grants Act was passed; and on the order paper at the present time we see that the subject matter is mentioned again, and that the benefits will be extended. That is something that should be stressed. It would seem to me that within its jurisdiction the federal government is doing a great deal to help the municipalities. I would also point out that, indirectly, municipalities are helped by the tax rental agreements. My understanding is that in 1953 Ontario was granted about $124 million and that in 1954 the amount will be larger.

It is significant also that Ontario had a sizeable surplus, which presumably in part resulted from the tax rental agreement. It seems to me logical therefore that Ontario should help the different municipalities from its surplus. That was one of the important aspects of the tax rental agreement. With the tremendous number of schools being erected it seems to me that is a logical way in which to spend that money.

The municipalities are not looking to the federal government for assistance. It may be that they are to some extent, but certainly not primarily. They are looking to the provinces, where the responsibility lies. Consequently I suggest that we cannot speak glibly about what the federal government should do for the municipalities. It has shown that it is interested in their problems by granting relief in connection with road-building machinery. Primarily however the problem is that of the provinces concerned; that is something we should keep in mind constantly.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina): Mr. Speaker, there are one or two comments I should like to make at this time. The last speaker made much of the oft-repeated statement that the municipalities are the creatures of the provinces. I suggest however that we must take into consideration the great changes that have taken place since the time of confederation. I do not think anyone would suggest that the conditions existing in 1867 were those of today. While it was quite true that in all their wisdom at that time the fathers of confederation saw fit to place certain responsibilities in certain quarters, anyone who wishes to view objectively the changes that have taken place since that time must realize that some of the responsibilities cannot be met adequately with the taxing and fiscal powers possessed by the junior governments.

I believe it is recognized today that many of the problems which formerly were looked upon as municipal or provincial are now considered national in their scope. I do not think anyone can view education as being the problem of any particular part of Canada. We have a very serious shortage of teachers in this country, from one end of Canada to the other. I do not think the shortage is confined peculiarly to any one province.

Then the health needs of Canadians are national in their scope. We do not find any particular part of Canada in a position to take care of those health needs. I suggest therefore it is absurd to dismiss the suggestions made simply by saying that after all under the British North America Act the provinces were made responsible for municipal government within their boundaries. To take that view one would have to ignore completely the developments that have taken place in Canada in recent years.

I know that in my own province one of the most onerous responsibilities of municipal government is the construction of market roads, just as it is the great job of any provincial government to build the highways. We know that the federal government derives a great amount of revenue from the taxation levied against new automobiles. Were it not for the fact that the provincial governments are building highways and the municipal government are building the market roads, no automobiles would be purchased. And if it seems logical that provincial and municipal governments should take care of their road-building problems, then by the same token the federal government should be prepared to leave to those junior governments the full revenue that might be derived from the automobile industry. It seems somewhat inconsistent to be told that certain responsibilities should be borne by the municipal governments when at the same time the federal government is deriving a great deal of revenue from taxes on the sale of automobiles, when such revenue would not be available were it not for the expenditures made by the junior governments.

I believe it is recognized that Canada's health needs are nation-wide. We cannot expect that our junior governments will be able to bear the full burden in these matters. I am thinking of our medical college now being completed in Saskatchewan. It has been estimated that when we begin graduating doctors from that college, in addition to the sums of money paid by way of fees by the students it will cost the provincial government somewhere in the neighbourhood of $10,000 for every doctor who graduates. In many cases those doctors will serve in various parts of Canada. The fact that in a time of war their services are urgently needed by the armed forces indicates that the federal government has a direct responsibility in this field. Consequently any relief it can provide to the municipal and provincial governments is to be desired on that account.

Then, as to education. As a teacher I am fully aware of the great need for granting some assistance for the educational authorities in Canada. I repeat that when in 1867 the fathers of confederation, in their wisdom, set up a certain relationship of powers and responsibilities as between the provincial and the federal governments they could not foresee the great need in future years for an extended educational program. Certainly no one can argue today that if we are going to have the type of educational program across Canada we feel we should have it would not require the co-operation of all governments.

How is this going to be done? For some years in this group we have argued in support of some form of federal aid for education. We feel that if the problem is going to be met and if we are going to provide an adequate number of teachers at proper salaries, and if we are going to have adequate plant equipment and more extended educational opportunities, there will have to be federal participation in a manner such as to leave no suggestion of any attempt on the part of the federal government to encroach upon the rights of provincial governments to provide education in their respective provinces. We do feel however that this can be done, and that the federal government could provide some measure of aid to the provinces in the matter of education.

Now, what we have been talking about this afternoon is not something direct. We are simply suggesting that this is certainly one manner in which some assistance can be given education without in any way encroaching upon the rights of the provinces to control and manage their own educational system. Because if the federal government grants a proper and adequate measure of relief in so far as taxes are concerned to school boards, then I suggest that it will indirectly be making a contribution, small as it may be in scope, toward education in Canada. Therefore, I am suggesting that in the light of the arguments that have been advanced this afternoon a case has certainly been made for the government to give consideration to granting some measure of tax relief to school boards and to municipal governments in Canada in order that they might more effectively carry out the duties that we expect of them in Canada at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: At this time I am ready to discuss the point which was raised earlier with respect to whether the amendment is in order. I regret that the mover of the amendment is not in the house at the moment. If other hon. members wish to speak, I can delay rendering a decision.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps he will be here shortly. In any event, the remarks that were made either by myself or by the hon. members who participated in the debate on the point of order—perhaps I should say mostly the remarks made by hon. members, not by myself—have thrown some light on the subject.

I have examined the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) in the light of the speech which he made on the motion for a committee of ways and means when the budget resolutions were introduced, and by comparing the two speeches and the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) on that occasion I find that the subject debated today and included in this amendment was debated on that occasion. It was also included in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood which was defeated by the house.

The Leader of the Opposition moved today that:

> this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to the introduction of legislation which would provide for the exemption of all municipal councils and school boards from the payment of dominion excise taxes including the 10 per cent sales tax.

In his speech he dealt with the agreements of 1942 under which the municipalities, together with the provinces, gave up certain taxing fields. He dealt with the burdens of municipalities having to do with civil defence, two subjects which he dealt with when he spoke on the budget. Then, he referred to the difficulties of municipalities with respect to housing. The house will remember that we had a discussion on housing earlier in the session, and no doubt those points were also made. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood on April 12, 1954, contained, among others, this paragraph:

(f) has failed to reach agreement with the provincial governments in regard to a clearly defined reallocation of taxing powers so that the provincial governments and municipal council may have adequate financial resources to carry out their rapidly increasing responsibilities.

If the Leader of the Opposition will go over with me the last part of his speech which appears at pages 4383 to 4387 of Hansard I think he will agree that many of the points covered today were covered by himself then. I think he will agree with me especially that in his understanding of what the vote would mean, he said, and I quote from page 4387 of Hansard—that hon. members:

...will also be voting in support of the proposition that nothing now be done to attempt some method of meeting the urgent needs of the municipalities whose tasks are increasingly heavy at this time and who need consideration as much as do any government authorities in Canada.

Prior to that he had been dealing with the same subjects that he dealt with today, as will be seen in the pages of Hansard that I have mentioned. If I look at the attitude of my predecessors for help in similar circumstances I will be forced to say that an amendment of this type cannot be moved at this time. On Thursday, November 24, 1932, a motion was made for the Speaker to leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply. An amendment was moved by Mr. King, seconded by Mr. Casgrain, as follows:

This house is of the opinion that the government should immediately announce what policy, if any, it has with respect to the relief of agricultural distress, and permit full consideration of the same before parliament adjourns over the months of December and January.

Mr. Speaker Black said:

The motion before the house is that the Speaker leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of supply. An amendment concerning agricultural conditions in Canada and agricultural relief has been offered. The point of order has been raised that the amendment is out of order on the ground that it again introduces matter that was debated and disposed of when the right hon. Leader of the Opposition on October 10 moved an amendment to the address including the words: "the government has wholly failed to afford a remedy for agricultural distress." Whatever the object of the amendment may be and whether it concerns past, present or future policy of the government seems to me to be beside the point. The question for the Speaker to consider is: Has the matter raised by the amendment been discussed and debated? The subject matter of the amendment now proposed was undoubtedly discussed and debated upon a former occasion, and to allow a discussion of this question now would be simply to repeat the debate that has been held on agricultural conditions. The amendment moved has not been accepted by the government, and so is a motion of want of confidence. This house refused to condemn the government's policy on agriculture by rejecting the amendment to the address. In view, therefore, of that decision and in view of the precedents I find this amendment, which deals with the questions of agricultural conditions and agricultural relief, to be not in order.

On the same subject, Mr. Speaker Black on Tuesday, November 22, 1932, took a similar line in a similar case, and so did Mr. Speaker Glen, on March 29, 1943, as may be found at page 213 of the Journals of that year. The amendment at that time was:

This house desires to record its opinion that before the marketing policy announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on January 29 with respect to the 1943-44 crop is put into effect it be revised to bring it into conformity with the needs of agriculture, so that the latter may be enabled to make its full contribution to the war effort.

Mr. Speaker ruled the said amendment out of order on the ground that the adequacy of the government's agricultural policy had already been considered by the House, which had rejected the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition to the address in reply to the speech from the throne and, moreover, the said policy providing payment of $2 on each acre less seeded to wheat in 1943 than in 1940 was a financial policy which could not be disturbed by a private member's motion.

In 1949 Mr. Speaker Macdonald ruled out an amendment along the same lines because it did relate to several items which appeared under the heading of "Marketing services" in the estimates. I am dealing with another ground. The first one is that in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood the subject matter of the present amendment was fully debated and decided by the house in the negative. There is on the order paper now a budget resolution which says that the sales tax on the following goods be repealed. This reads:

(c) equipment sold to or imported by municipalities for their own use and not for resale, at a price in excess of one thousand dollars per unit, specially designed for use directly for road making, road cleaning or fire fighting, but not to include automobiles nor ordinary motor trucks;

Now, citation 467 of Beauchesne states it shall not relate to any budget resolution or to any item in the estimates. I was worrying as to what the word "relate" meant, and whether it offered any scope. It appears to me, on examining the precedents, that the relation need not be a very close or direct one. If the subject matter of the amendment comes under the same heading as that which is dealt with in the ways and means resolution, in the estimates or a bill on the order paper then it has been held to be related.

I see some hon. members do not agree with me. Well, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on one occasion moved an amendment on a motion to go into supply and that amendment had to do with income tax. On that occasion, as reported at page 1489 of Hansard for November 7, 1949, Mr. Speaker Macdonald, quoting citation 467 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, said that an amendment to the motion to go into supply cannot relate to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of ways and means. He continued:

> At the present time there is on the order paper, appearing in the name of the Minister of Finance, a resolution to amend the Income War Tax Act and the Income Tax Act which is to be proposed to the committee of ways and means, and as the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also relates to the Income Tax Act, it would appear to be irregular in view of the aforementioned citation 467.

This would also be related—

Mr. Knowles: But the Speaker allowed it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member said "The Speaker allowed it". But his concluding paragraph is this:

> Notwithstanding what I have said, in view of the fact that such an amendment might be in order after the budget resolutions are disposed of,—

Which is not the case now.

> —and also because there has been considerable debate on the proposed amendment,—

This could be said of the proceedings today, but I will suggest another move after I am through.

> —I feel that it would expedite the business of the house if the proposed amendment were entertained and disposed of at this time. In reaching this conclusion, I should like to emphasize that this should by no means be regarded as a precedent to be followed on future occasions.

Apparently that is the message he left for me on that occasion. Hon. members will find another ruling of Mr. Speaker Macdonald made during 1950 at page 47 of the Journals for February 28 where he also dealt with a borderline case and allowed the amendment. However, he did not wish his decision on that occasion to be taken as a precedent.

Now, on these two grounds: (1) that the matter contained in the amendment was already debated and decided upon by the house when the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood on the budget was negatived; and (2) on the ground that the amendment on the motion to go into supply should not relate to a ways and means resolution which is on the order paper, I cannot, as hon. members will realize, agree to allow the amendment.

It often happens that when an amendment offered to the motion to go into supply has been debated at some length hon. members ask that the amendment be withdrawn. I can quote several precedents to that effect. If there are any reasons why hon. members believe that my ruling on this occasion, notwithstanding the short but attentive study I have given to it, might be a precedent which would endanger their future position it might be advisable for them to take this course and by leave withdraw the amendment.

On the other hand, if hon. members wish the ruling I have made on this occasion to remain on record as being either a good or a bad one I have no alternative, in the light of the precedents I have quoted, to declare the amendment out of order.

LIVESTOCK—REQUEST FOR FLOOR PRICE

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour leaves the chair I wish to discuss a matter of importance, and I might say at the outset that the amendment which I shall move eventually has been prepared by a well known parliamentary authority, namely the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The hon. member has a very good memory and a great deal of respect for the decisions Your Honour has made, as well as for those of previous Speakers, and he has assured me that the amendment I propose to move is in order.

The plight of agriculture is a matter which concerns not only my own riding but all of Canada, but on this occasion I propose to confine my remarks chiefly to the problems confronting livestock producers. I would like to refer to two briefs which were presented, one to the government and the other to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), by the Interprovincial Farm Union Council of Canada in regard to what has taken place in our livestock industry during the past two years, and both of which cast serious doubts on the efficiency and justice of the present marketing system.

One brief points out that the prices paid for cattle in Montreal in 1951 amounted to $24.82 compared with $14.31 in 1953. In Toronto the price dropped from $29.70 in 1951 to $17.34 in 1953, and in Winnipeg the price dropped over the same period from $27.40 to $14.70. These figures underline the decrease which took place over a period of 24 months.

An hon. Member: Hurrah!

Mr. Nicholson: I am sorry to hear an hon. member say "Hurrah" because this is a matter which concerns his constituents and all hon. members must, I think, be concerned about the drop in the return earned by any group of primary producers, particularly to the extent of 43 per cent over a two-year period. If one takes into account the increase in the cost of living for farmers during that period then the drop is more in the nature of 50 per cent.

One of these briefs points out that in Canada we consume about 95 per cent of our meat production, and it would not seem reasonable that the five per cent we export should be responsible for the ups and downs in the price of meat products we have experienced over the last few years.

The brief also points out that at the beginning of the century we had 1,278 cattle per thousand population in Canada, compared with 784 in 1953. It is very difficult to understand why we should find it impossible to produce as many cattle per thousand people in this day and age, especially in view of all the experimental work being done in our agricultural colleges. I believe we should be able to increase our production until it meets the levels attained at the beginning of the century. At any rate the situation is so serious that the interprovincial farm union decided that a special brief should be presented to the Minister of Agriculture. In this brief the following proposal was made:

> 1. Effective implementation of the Agricultural Prices Support Act to provide adequate floor prices to the producer determined by a recognized formula on all classes and kinds of livestock;
> 2. Appointment of a federal board of livestock commissioners; and
> 3. Calling a national marketing conference to discuss and explore the possibilities of assisting in a federal livestock marketing program.

So much for this farm organization. I should like to make reference to the views expressed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Their brief presented to members of the cabinet on February 19 of this year points out:

> The relative over-all economic position of agriculture has been on the decline during the past two or three years, with farm prices reduced substantially, and with farm costs virtually at an all-time peak. The future, in farmers' eyes, is uncertain, and the word "surplus" is, with reason, increasingly heard. We need the machinery for a strong policy of orderly marketing and assured price supports for agricultural products in the home market, and a more adequate international program for expansion of trade and the disposal of burdensome surpluses.

In their brief they also have the following point:

> We would urge increased use of the Agricultural Prices Support Act—a key feature in our national agricultural policy.

Then in some of the releases from the federation of agriculture I find that a total of 189,000 farmers in Canada filed income tax returns but only 61,670 were found taxable. The bureau of statistics informs me that we have about 623,000 farm families in Canada. These figures would indicate that about 10 per cent of the farmers in Canada are receiving income sufficient to pay income tax. I think these figures explode completely the fallacy that the Canadian farmer is rolling in wealth. If agricultural products are selling at high prices in the stores—and they have been doing so in some places—the farmer certainly has not been getting the cream of the production. With 10 per cent paying taxes you have a very small percentage who are receiving their cost of production.

The federation also presents a table pointing out that in 1953 the farmer income position in Canada is more serious than it has been for many years. In 1926 the farmer received 14·8 of the total national income. By 1946 the figure was 11·3 per cent. In 1951 it was up a little bit to 12·3 per cent; but by 1953 the percentage was down to 8·7 per cent. With roughly 20 per cent of our people classified as farmers, having 8·7 per cent of the national income going to such a large group certainly is not a fair distribution of our national wealth.

Another federation release tells about the net cost of price support in Canada. It has been small, it is said, compared with what the United States government has spent. The release states:

> Net cost of all price support programs for agricultural products over a period of six years, from 1946 to 1951 inclusive, was only $10,306,000 . . .
> Under the special "disaster" program in livestock, the net cost in pork to the government up to March 31 last was $7,889,493.73, and the net cost in beef was $24,208,595.98.

That was as a result of the foot-and-mouth disease. But taking into account the net cost of the foot-and-mouth disease support program of approximately $32 million, with the net cost of the other price support program of approximately $10 million, it amounted to a total of approximately $42 million.

In the United States there is a far different story. I have here the 1953 report of the president of the commodity credit corporation. In the United States they have been supporting wheat. Over a billion dollars was spent in 1952 supporting wheat. Other commodities include cotton, cottonseed oil, butter, dried milk, cheese, tobacco, wool, flaxseed and peanuts; and what they paid for peanuts really is not peanuts. In 1952 $12 million was paid and in the previous year $73 million was paid to support the production of peanuts in the United States.

Livestock—Floor Prices

One further report from the federation of agriculture sets out what the farmer's position has been during the period from 1949 to 1953. His taxes have gone up 16·4 per cent; farm wages have increased 22·6 per cent; farm machinery, 25 per cent; building materials, 31 per cent; gas, oil, et cetera, 10 per cent; and fertilizer, 28·8 per cent. Farm family living costs have increased 17 per cent.

Another brief that I have before me was presented by the employees in the Canadian farm implement industry. This group of workers in this industry realize how vitally they are affected when farm incomes go down. They point out as follows:

> During the past two years the prices received by farmers for their products have been falling, while farm operating costs have continued to rise, with a resultant decline in the net income of farm operators . . .
> Between July, 1951 and August, 1953, (the latest available figures at time of writing), the D.B.S. index of farm prices of agricultural products (on the base 1935-39 = 100) fell from 308·3 to 240·4, a decline of 22·0 per cent.

With mounting unemployment and with ex-service people available, it is extremely difficult for me to understand why in Canada our consumption of beef, pork and milk should be less than it was during the war years. I might mention the fact that during the time I was in parliament previously in 1946, I had an unusual experience for a private member, namely that of proposing, before going into supply, a motion that carried. My motion made on August 27, 1946, was as follows:

> That all the words after the word "that" to the end of the question be left out and the following substituted therefor:
> "This house desires to record its opinion that consideration should be given to the continuance of the milk subsidy so as to ensure adequate return to milk producers and make possible the consumption of milk for the nutrition of the Canadian people without any further increase in the price thereof to the consumers".

After a debate, there were 69 who voted for it and only 41 who voted against it. Some of those who voted for it were Liberal members like Senator Reid, as he now is; the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Ross); and the former member for Springfield. But although this motion carried in the house, the subsidy was not continued. The bureau of statistics informed me this morning that during the period 1930 to 1935 we consumed in Canada ·8 pints of milk per person per day. The figures of consumption are as follows:

	Consumption of Fluid Milk and Cream in Pints per person per day
1930-35	·80
1935-40	·87
1941	·86
1942	·91
1943	·98
1944	1·01
1945	1·02
1946	1·02
1947	·97
1948	·90
1949	·90
1950	·90
1951	·89
1952	·88

As I have indicated, with over a million of the youngest and ablest Canadians in the war services during the war years and with another large group of able-bodied people in the war industries, including the old and the young, I do not know how we can explain to our children that our Canadian farms were able to produce sufficient milk so that the Canadian people consumed during those war years more milk than we have since. Of course the explanation was that the government of the day thought that it was good for the Canadian people to consume more milk, and so milk consumption and production were subsidized. But here is a piece of legislation that did not receive any criticism in parliament or throughout the country. I do not know of any legislation that was more popular than that which made large quantities of milk available. Some of my friends do not agree with my views on the question of alcoholic liquors but none of them will quarrel with me when I urge that every Canadian should consume more milk. When one considers that consumption of milk is now away below that of the war years, that it is getting back to the level of the hungry thirties, then obviously there is something wrong with government policy when we cannot make the production and distribution of milk sufficiently interesting to the farmers and distributors.

I have figures here regarding beef. In the period from 1935 to 1939 we consumed 54·7 pounds of beef per person per year. During the war years that amount was increased to 69·3 pounds. That was in 1943. That was the peak. We were well up in the sixties. By 1952 we were down to 44·8. In 1951 the figure was 43·7, and last year we were up a good deal, the estimate being 59·1. I have similar figures as to pork which are also interesting. During the period from 1935 to 1939 pork consumption per person per year amounted to 39·8 pounds. We reached a high in 1944 of 61·3 pounds. Last year the figure was 57 pounds. Taking mutton, we dropped from an all-time high of 4·8 pounds in 1944 to 1·9 pounds in 1952. Veal dropped from 10·8 pounds in 1942 to 6·7 pounds in 1952. Poultry meat dropped from a high of 26·6 pounds in 1945 to a low of 19·2 pounds in 1948.

In a little booklet I have here entitled "The Story of FAO" there are some passages that I think are appropriate in the light of the figures I have given. They read as follows:

> A real surplus of food has never existed in the world. There have always been great numbers of undernourished people. Yet governments of the highly developed agricultural countries have sometimes found it necessary to limit their production in order to keep farm prices high enough to provide a good living for rural families....
>
> The farmers of the world can produce enough food to rid the world of hunger—if they can use the best agricultural methods we know now. The hungry people can get plenty of the right kinds of food—if they have some means of earning money to buy food and other necessities. . . .
> This is the job of the food and agriculture organization as stated in its constitution: "raising levels of nutrition and standards of living of the peoples, securing improvements in the efficiency of the production and distribution of all food and agricultural products, bettering the condition of rural populations, and thus contributing toward an expanding world economy".

Then it is pointed out that it should be guaranteed that producing nations will be able to sell their commodities, that buying nations will be able to get as much of the commodities as they need, and that prices will be fair to both. We in Canada cannot control the prices of these things outside of Canada, but if we were able during the war years to organize our own economy so that we not only maintained but increased our production and consumption of milk then I submit that we can certainly work out a program so that our farmers will have an incentive to produce and sell whole milk and so that the people of the country who want milk supplies for their children will have adequate supplies. Therefore I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge):

> That all the words after the word "That" to the end of the question be struck out and that the following words be substituted therefor:
> "in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to demonstrating its support of the principle of orderly marketing through livestock marketing boards by announcing floor prices with respect to cattle and hogs at levels not less than the average of the prices which prevailed during the period from January 1, 1951 to December 31, 1953."

In the year 1951 the average price per hundred pounds for beef was $33.49. In 1952 it was $25.85 and in 1953 it was $20.11. The average prices for hogs per hundred pounds, dressed Toronto, grade B1, were $32.85 in 1951, $25.70 in 1952 and $30.40 in 1953. When the Minister of Agriculture was discussing his estimates he took three-year periods at convenient stages, and by taking the three-year period we get in this case an average for beef of $26.50 and for hogs $29.50.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to second the amendment and to say a few words. I shall be brief as usual because not only do I believe in the conservation of natural resources but also in the conservation of time. I rise to support the amendment because I believe in the principle of orderly marketing. I also rise because I have a real grievance. I understand that the purpose of this procedure is to permit members to bring urgent grievances affecting their constituents to the attention of the house and the people of Canada. That is why the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) has moved the amendment and that is why I intend to deal with a particular grievance. As I say, I believe in orderly marketing, but I also say that you cannot have orderly marketing unless you have orderly transportation, and that does not exist on the Arrow lakes in my district at the present time.

I intend to deal with this problem for a minute or two because I have received a couple of letters this afternoon which clearly indicate the situation of the fruit growers. The whole district is up in arms about the lack of steamer service on the Arrow lakes. I have mentioned this question before, but I repeat, the people there have the support of powerful groups in British Columbia, the associated growers of British Columbia, the farmers' institute, the women's institutes and the chambers of commerce of the Kootenay district. In fact anyone with any common sense at all who understands the circumstances is supporting the protests of the residents of the Arrow lakes region against the discontinuance of the steamer service and urging both the federal and provincial governments to do something to see that the service is resumed.

The loss of this service is a very serious thing to fruit farmers and others in my constituency. If no satisfactory service is provided it will mean the loss to some of their life's work. To illustrate that point, I am going to read a couple of letters I have received today. The first is from Mr. R. O. Forslund of Edgewood, B.C. I have known this gentleman ever since he was a baby, and

I knew his father well. His father was one of the pioneer steamship captains on the Arrow lakes. He used to run between Northport and Revelstoke and was a famous skipper. When the Duke of Devonshire was on the steamer on one occasion he said, "Captain, it looks like rain today, doesn't it?" The captain said, "Like hell it does, Your Excellency; you don't know the Arrow lakes". I mention that story to indicate what roots and interest this person has in the district. Now, I am going to read his letter:

Dear Sir:

I am writing you in hopes that you may be able to do something about the mess we have been left in due to the taking off of the S.S. Minto on the Arrow Lakes run.

There has been a makeshift service started from Robson to Needles, but the rates that are charged are such that they are impossible to pay, as well as the fact that they only run once a week. I have enclosed a ratesheet, and you can see from that how impossible they are.

I would like to know if there is any control, whatsoever, over such rates as these.

I have examined the rates, and they are simply outrageous.

Furthermore, as you know, our most income is out of cherries, and unless they are moved at least three times a week we cannot do anything with them. So if these conditions continue we have no other course than to move out of here, which I certainly do not want to do after spending fifty-two years of my life here.

Might add further that even if there was a boat three times a week, we could not ship on it because of the ridiculous rates. Cherries would have to go by express.

As you know we could not use the road via Nakusp to Nelson due to roughness and distance.

Will add here that the frost damage that hit the Okanagan did not hit here as hard, and looks like we will have a fair crop along this waterway.

I might point out that we on the Arrow lakes do not suffer the extreme changes in weather that are experienced in the North Okanagan.

I am enclosing a letter which I want you to place on the desk where you think it might do the most good. It is only an outline of our conditions caused by the stopping of the S.S. Minto but it may point out how impossible our conditions are, due to transportation, to those in charge.

I want to read this other letter, Mr. Speaker, because this is a serious matter to quite a number of people. It reads:

I want to draw your attention to our conditions on the Lower Arrow lake at Edgewood due to the discontinuance of the C.P.R. boat S.S. Minto, which I certainly think was very unfair to all of us settlers along the lakes—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Surely the hon. member does not think that what he is now reading is related to the amendment that was moved. I believe when the Department of Transport estimates are before the house the hon. member could quite properly discuss the withdrawal of the S.S. Minto from service. However, at this moment the hon. member should be indicating the support he would like the government to give to the proposal for orderly marketing. Of course, he might say that the S.S. Minto provides transportation for the livestock.

Mr. Herridge: That is my point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The one letter the hon. member read was related more to the discontinuance of the service than to marketing. It is the practice in this house when hon. members read a document into Hansard to reveal the source. Perhaps the hon. member has done so for the first letter, since I was conversing with a colleague and perhaps did not hear him. If he has not done so, I would ask him to reveal the source.

Mr. Herridge: I did, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member says this is the last letter. I hope it is not as long as the first one, because we are all anxious to hear him speak to the resolution and tell us how he relates these letters to the subject matter of the amendment.

Mr. Herridge: I bow to your ruling, but my point was that you could not have orderly marketing without orderly transportation. I want to point out that this is a serious matter to these people, Mr. Speaker, and with your permission I shall just read the concluding paragraph of this letter and then make my point.

It certainly seems to me that there is something that our provincial government can do to relieve the situation here, and if it is going to do any good this summer it has to be done at once.

Will add here and now that I for one would very much like to know if the government are going to do anything to relieve this situation or not . . .

He thanks me for giving this my attention, which I am doing, at this time.

There was a press dispatch in the Victoria press recently that indicated that Mr. Gaglardi, minister of public works in British Columbia, had said that negotiations are continuing with the federal government concerning the resumption of this steamer service. I want to bring to the particular attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) the fact that I urge, in view of the serious matter this is to the fruit growers along the Arrow lakes, if the provincial government makes a proposal concerning the joint subsidy to keep this transportation service in operation until other forms of transportation are provided he deal with it promptly. It is a serious and urgent matter. The crops are developing and they cannot be marketed without satisfactory transportation.

Without economic and suitable transportation these good people will simply lose their means of livelihood, after years of toil and investment.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to have this opportunity to enter the debate which began prior to the dinner recess. The amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson), is as follows:

> In the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to demonstrating its support of the principle of orderly marketing through livestock marketing boards by announcing floor prices with respect to cattle and hogs at levels not less than the average of the prices which prevailed during the period from January 1, 1951, to December 31, 1953.

During the introductory remarks of the hon. member for Mackenzie I was surprised to hear a member of the Liberal party interject by shouting "Hurrah" when the hon. member had stated that agricultural livestock prices had dropped drastically. I would want to be as kind as possible to the hon. member who interjected because I should think he must have made that comment in a jovial frame of mind.

On the other hand, if there be anyone in the house who would gainsay the importance of what the hon. member for Mackenzie was saying when he quoted figures showing the very serious drop in the prices of agricultural commodities, I would hasten to say to him that there can be no more important subject for discussion in the House of Commons, and certainly no subject which would affect more every single citizen in Canada than does the prosperity of those who are engaged in agriculture.

The hon. member should be congratulated upon having moved the amendment because already during this session of parliament we have seen delegations coming to Ottawa asking for federal assistance. We know that the ramifications of the situation extend into every home in Canada. It is well understood by all people that unless we have a healthy and prosperous agriculture we will have a serious economic condition among all other industries in Canada.

It is with this in mind that I appeal to hon. members this evening to bear with me when I present the case for agriculture, in its relation to the marketing of livestock. It is now some twenty years—I believe it was 1934—since the price spreads commission indicated that at that time there was a necessity for a national livestock board. That position was taken because it was felt that at that time the producers of livestock in Canada were not getting their proper share from the sale of their commodities. An investigation into the prices farmers were receiving during the depression period indicates this quite clearly.

Since that time however we have come a long way. We know that during the period of the war and in the post-war years livestock producers in Canada have enjoyed somewhat better conditions for the marketing of their product. Under the present system however the marketing of livestock is a precarious procedure, and one with which I can assure hon. members most farmers are not satisfied.

Hon. members will have noticed that in the amendment we ask for two things, namely the establishment of the principle of national livestock marketing and also an announcement by the government in respect of floor prices for cattle and hogs at a price level not less than that obtained in the period of time indicated in the amendment. The farmer is not so much concerned with the income he receives from the marketing of his livestock as with the relationship that income bears to the cost of production.

I say the present government, and former Liberal governments, must accept a great deal of responsibility for the present position in which farmers find themselves so far as livestock prices are concerned. From 1945 on members of this group pleaded with the government to maintain some sort of peacetime price controls. If one were to look into the findings of the royal commission that sat in 1949 he would find that while they did not indicate their belief that a wartime price control policy would be feasible in peacetime, or in a post-war period, yet they did indicate that some peacetime method of price control could have been maintained. As a matter of fact the government did keep for a little while the promise it gave to the people of Canada in the days of war. In other words, it did maintain some of the price controls. One after the other, however, those controls were thrown out the window, and of course prices began to rise.

That is the key reason why today we in agriculture find ourselves in a position where our costs have mounted to such an extent that, taken alongside falling prices, we have been caught in a price squeeze. One should of course look at a farmer's income in relation to his costs. I know the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and other government spokesmen are prone to quote figures of gross national income in respect of agriculture. That of course does not show the true picture of income in agriculture.

In this connection I should like to quote in full an article which appeared in the Co-operator for January 1954. On this occasion the Canadian Federation of Agriculture takes up the cudgel with the Minister of Agriculture and the leader of the government in the Senate, when it says:

> Agriculture Minister Gardiner, in the annual agricultural conference at Ottawa on November 24, and Senate leader Ross Macdonald a day later, in the Senate, deliberately set out to soften the general warning issued by provincial government delegations and leaders of the federation of agriculture alike that the farming industry of Canada was facing a serious situation economically because of continually rising farm costs and declining farm prices.
> For this purpose both the minister and the Senate leader quoted figures respecting the cash farm income and the net farm income of Canadian agriculture in 1953 as compared to 1949. It was quite easy for them to show that the net farm income of Canadian agriculture in 1953 will be about five per cent above that of 1949, although the bureau of statistics has announced that there will be a reduction of 12 per cent in 1953 from 1952.
>
> But what the honourable gentleman failed to do was to co-relate the net farm income figures with costs of both farm operations and farm living. Therefore, without such co-relation, it is unfair to leave the impression that Canadian agriculture is as prosperous, from the farmer's own standpoint, as it was in 1949, for such is by no means the case.
>
> The fact of the matter is that, when all factors of farm operations and farm living have been taken into account, the net result is that, even with the increase in net farm income mentioned, the purchasing power of this income will be 10 per cent less in 1953 than it was in 1949, because of increased farm costs.
> In other words, while there may be no more dollars in income on farms, in mere terms of dollars, those dollars have 10 per cent less value in purchasing power than they would have had in 1949. Figuring 1949 as a basis of 100, the purchasing power of net farm income in 1953 works out at 90.

On this occasion the Canadian Federation of Agriculture pointed out to the public and to the government that there must be a basis of relationship between what the farmer gets and what he has to pay for the costs of production in order to establish his real income.

As I said before, under the present system of marketing it is impossible in practice for the farmers to get a just and fair price for their livestock. From the time that the price spreads commission in 1934 indicated that a national livestock marketing board was necessary to market livestock for the protection of both the consumer and the producer until the present time we find that the situation has grown immeasurably worse from the producers' point of view.

We have four major packing plants controlling the purchasing of livestock in Canada. With this monopoly control it is virtually impossible for farmers to have anything to say about what they get for their livestock. I am sure no hon. member would say that there can be any justification for this state of affairs, or any justice to the producer in it. A farmer can take a carload of cattle and send them to the Winnipeg stockyards and get perhaps 18 cents a pound at the week end. Then on Monday morning another car from another neighbour can come in and there will be a variation of three cents or four cents a pound. Yet there has been no visible change in the situation in regard to the demand and no change in regard to the supply. Hon. members can readily see the injustice of that situation.

The problem that faces agriculture can be laid at the doorstep of the Liberal party, owing to the fact that they did not keep on price controls as they should have until things had levelled off and thereby maintain a decent price relationship between producer and consumer in Canada. Then there is also the fact that we have lost most of our export markets to Britain, which was our historical market, and that has come about because of the policies of this government.

I do not want to go into that in detail other than to illustrate to the house what has taken place by some figures that I received in a return on March 18 to a question I asked of the department. In 1944, the year before the end of the war, we were shipping 980,800 hundredweight of beef and veal to Britain; 11,356 hundredweight of mutton and lamb; 103,751 hundredweight of fresh pork; 21,650 hundredweight of poultry and 6,923,103 hundredweight of bacon and hams; 338,378 hundredweight of canned meats; 142,300 hundredweight of edible offal and 408 hundredweight of other meats. That was in the peak year. In the second peak year, which was 1945, Canada shipped to Britain 1,843,777 hundredweight of beef and veal; 73,579 hundredweight of mutton and lamb; 4,460,693 hundredweight of bacon and hams; 160,441 hundredweight of canned meats; 103,186 hundredweight of edible offal and 6,082 hundredweight of other meats.

Then we have the picture of the post-war period in relation to the livestock products from Canada going to Britain. This is a record of our trade with that country. In the year 1953 we shipped 64,501 hundredweight of beef and veal; no mutton and lamb; no fresh pork; no poultry; no bacon and hams and only 27 hundredweight of canned meats; no edible offal and only 10 hundredweight of other meats.

Is it any wonder that this government, through its fiscal policies and trade policies, has failed to keep that historical market for our agricultural products? I recall very well the hog prices in the period between July 21 and September 22 of 1951, when they dropped 25 per cent. Surely, no one can say that such a condition, when the price of our livestock drops 25 per cent in that period, can be justified.

Then we come into the supply situation. I hold in my hand a submission to the government of Canada by the Interprovincial Farm Union Council, submitted on February 15, 1954. It indicates that there is no justification for the present drop in beef prices to the producers in Canada. In this submission to the government we find the following:

> We note in the September issue of "Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada" issued by the federal Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, that we in Canada consume 95 per cent of our total marketings of cattle, and that only approximately 5 per cent was exported during the first seven months of 1953. Latest statistics even show that stocks of meat held by packers, abattoirs, and cold storage warehouses on December 1, 1953, were 13 million pounds less than on the same day the year before.

I want to draw the attention of the house to the figures which correspond to this period I am reviewing. In Montreal in 1951 the price, taking the over-all average, of beef was $24.82 a hundredweight; in 1953 it dropped to $14.31. The Toronto market in 1951 was $29.76. It had dropped in 1953 to $17.34. The Winnipeg market in 1951 was $27.40, and it had dropped to $14.17. Who makes all the money in the process?

An hon. Member: The farmer.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Somebody said "the farmer". That shows how little he knows about what he is talking. I do not know whether he wants to get a rise out of me. I will not mention his name because I do not think it would be fair to him, but surely he must have a better understanding of the situation than that. When we come back this fall I am sure that the hon. member who is now interfering with my attempt to present the farmers' plight will be one of those who will be rising in his place when we have delegations here wondering what is wrong with the employment situation in Canada.

This whole problem, Mr. Speaker, of a fair and just income to the farmer, is tied up with the welfare of everybody in Canada. The fact that we have already had delegations representing the agricultural implement industry in Canada coming to Ottawa to see this government is an indication that the income of the agricultural producer has been drastically cut in the last two years; and more people will be coming here unless this government takes action and does something along the lines that we are suggesting. What we need today is a national livestock marketing board with producer representation.

This government should take the Agricultural Prices Support Act off the shelf and use it, and not leave it hidden away some place. This act should be used to protect the agricultural industry of this country. It is all right for this government to subsidize the gold mining industry which in five years has been subsidized to the extent of some $60 million. It is all right to dig gold in Canada and then send it down to be buried in Kentucky. But when we come here and ask this government to get busy and set up a marketing plan and use the Agricultural Prices Support Act to protect the agricultural industry of this country then our case is ridiculed by hon. members opposite.

I have posed the question as to who makes the profit when we have a decline in return to our agricultural producers.

An hon. Member: The Liberals.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Well, according to statistics issued by the Department of National Revenue for 1951 the entire packing industry in Canada made a net income of $7,552,000 or 30 per cent on the capital shares of the gross amount earned by the industry. I have already indicated that the market is very unstable under the present conditions and there is nothing to protect livestock producers. Part of their difficulty is due to the fact that these agricultural producers cannot sell their wheat. However, I do not think it is within the orbit of this discussion to go into that aspect of the problem in any detail, but I would like to point out to the house that during the eight-month period of August to March, 1952-53 compared with the same period for 1953-54 there was a 53,167,433 bushel drop in the amount of wheat marketed, and that has resulted in a drastic lowering in the income earned by the agricultural industry.

It is all very well for members of the government or anyone else to go around and say to the farmers, "That wheat in your bins is as good as money in the bank". During the Easter recess when I visited my own constituency I saw piles of grain amounting to as much as 4,000 bushels lying out exposed to the weather. That should not be, and our farmers should have an income sufficient to allow them to bin that grain properly so that it is protected from the weather conditions in western Canada.

I would again point out to the government that due to the fact that our agricultural prices have dropped, and the fact that they cannot sell their grain, farmers today are not in a position to buy the building materials necessary to enable them to store their grain properly. I would therefore appeal to this government to consider this amendment so that our agricultural producers will have some protection. It will not be sufficient to undertake a scheme such as is now applied to the production of eggs where it is not the producer who is subsidized but the packer. A few years ago I consulted one of our local merchants and at that time I understood this government had a floor price for eggs. During that period there was no packing station. The local merchant collected his eggs and shipped them to the packers and he paid the farmer about 22 cents a dozen. I said to this merchant, "Well, I understood the government had a floor price for eggs". He replied: "We see nothing of that. These eggs are packed and shipped to the packer and this is all we get. There is no further payment and the price for which we sell these eggs is the only payment we receive". That sort of scheme will not be sufficient in this case and certainly was not sufficient in the case I have illustrated.

What we want is to see both consumer and producer protected. We do not want the packers to be able to hog all the profits.

Mr. Argue: They can take the squeal.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): We feel there could be set up in Canada the kind of organization suggested to this government by the various farm unions and organizations in Canada. I recall back in the period between 1945 and 1949 when I was in this house, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture appealed to the government to set up a national livestock marketing board. Since that time we have seen the growth of the farm union movement in Canada, and this movement now represents farmers in practically every province of Canada. Through their organizations the farmers have requested the federal government to set up a producer livestock board with producer representation under which the farmers would have some say in the marketing and control of their products.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that many hon. members, at least on the other side of the house, do not seem to be particularly interested in this problem.

[Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain).]

It is my belief that by next fall, unless some action is taken by the government, we will find the hog industry in a much more serious position than it is today. Today the farmer obtains a reasonable price but by next fall, unless the government is prepared to put a proper floor under hogs and beef cattle and relate that to the cost of production, we are going to have a very serious marketing situation throughout the entire hog industry.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the government. During this session we have asked them to take cognizance of the fact that the farmer has not been able to sell his wheat. I recall during the last election campaign there appeared statements in a western newspaper attributed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). Interviewed in one of the maritime provinces and questioned on the sale of Canadian wheat the minister said in effect that he did not think there would be any serious difficulty in marketing that wheat. He advised "if they got a hurry on" the wheat could be marketed. I am now asking the government to pick up its feet and take some action. I would urge them to get cracking on this very serious problem of formulating a program under which we can market our livestock profitably so that the producers of our farm livestock products and the consumer will be protected.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks let me say that we in this group do not like the way in which this amendment has been worded. On the other hand, we dislike even more the situation which is developing in this country in regard to agriculture. However, as we believe in the general principle of supporting agricultural prices at parity we will support this amendment for it at least guarantees a price equal to and not less than the parity price for livestock products.

I am not suggesting for one moment that in western Canada there is what one might call a real agricultural crisis. On the other hand, there are plenty of danger signals for those who are not too blind to see. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in his budget speech pointed out that the price of agricultural products had fallen and that the net income for farmers during the past year had fallen by 14 per cent, while the net income of industries other than agriculture had risen by 8 per cent, leaving quite a disparity between agriculture and other industries.

If you take the fall in farmers' net income for the past two years you find there has been a drop of around 23 per cent. The question of the falling off in farmers' net income combined with the piling up of surpluses is causing a great deal of concern to farmers and farm organizations. I am afraid that the Minister of Finance in his budget speech did not in any way remove that concern because he stated that government intervention would not be a cure for that situation. In order to meet the present situation he said it would be necessary for industry to increase their efficiency, to cut down their costs and to try to find new markets. On the other hand, he said that government intervention, in his opinion, was no cure for the situation.

Let us just examine those points he mentioned so far as agriculture is concerned. Let us first of all take the question of efficiency. Would anybody argue that agriculture today is not as efficient as, if not more efficient than other industries in this country? Let me quote what the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture had to say in his address before the annual convention:

> In our office Dr. Hope attempted to compare the efficiency of farmers with the efficiency of Canadian workmen as a whole. He took the years 1930 and 1950 and compared the value of production per worker in agriculture with the value of production over all workers and made appropriate adjustments to get the results in terms of constant dollars. His calculations turned out favourable to the farmer. He found that production per worker in the whole economy increased from $906 in 1930 to $1,688 in 1950—an increase of 86 per cent, while production per worker in agriculture increased from $357 in 1930 to $685 in 1950—an increase of 92 per cent.

Using that statement as a basis, I think one may well argue that agriculture is just as efficient as are other industries, if not more efficient.

As to the question of costs, there are many people perhaps who will think that the farmers are receiving prices well above their cost of production. If anybody is under that delusion, all he has to do is to read the speech that was made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) before the food and agriculture organization dealing with this matter. I want to quote from that speech. It is reported in the Ottawa Journal of December 8. Speaking before the food and agriculture organization at Rome the Minister of Agriculture stated:

> Our costs of production are very high. I do not think there is any country in the world today which can afford to buy some of our products at the prices our farmers must charge if they are to make a living.

After that statement nobody could argue that the farmers are receiving prices greater than the cost of production. The minister is there pointing out that our costs are so high that he is extremely doubtful whether people in other countries can afford to pay them.

What can we do in order to try to bring down the cost of production? I would say that government policies play an important part in relation to the cost of production. For instance, if the government were prepared to eliminate the 10 per cent sales tax they would be bringing about a considerable reduction in the cost of producing farm products in this country. Then if the government were prepared to restore the value of the Canadian dollar to the level at which it was a few years ago the farmers in this country would be in a much better position to meet the competition of other countries.

Today the Canadian dollar is above the value of the United States dollar. A few years ago it was held at 90 per cent of that of the United States dollar. As a result of that change the farmers are losing 18 cents a bushel on wheat alone. The same thing applies to all agricultural products. As a result of the government's policy in appreciating the Canadian dollar, the farmers of this country are severely penalized. Some may say: That is true of all exporting industries. That may be so; but there was at least one case where the government took steps to relieve an industry of the burden caused by the appreciation of the Canadian dollar. I have in mind the gold industry. We subsidize the gold industry to the extent of about $10 million a year. This year I think it was $17 million. In the past five years we have subsidized it to the extent of over $50 million. When the subsidy was first paid, it was paid largely on account of the fact that we had appreciated the value of the Canadian dollar.

Can anyone argue that there is any justification today for maintaining the Canadian dollar above par with the United States dollar? What is supposed to determine the value of a nation's currency? The determining factor is supposed to be its purchasing power. How does the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar compare with that of the United States dollar? Obviously anyone who has travelled in the United States will know that the United States dollar has a higher purchasing power than has the Canadian dollar; that is to say, the United States dollar will buy more goods in the United States than the Canadian dollar will buy in Canada. On that basis, therefore, the Canadian dollar should be valued below the United States dollar.

Another matter that is supposed to decide whether a nation's currency should be appreciated or depreciated is the question of the balance of trade. For a number of years we have had an adverse balance of trade with the United States. Hence on that score you would expect the Canadian dollar to be valued below the United States dollar. The main reason the Canadian dollar is above par is that the United States is making heavy investments in this country. In other words you might say that the reason the Canadian dollar is above par is owing to speculation. The Canadian government, if they so desired, could easily control the Canadian dollar at 90 per cent of the United States dollar. In that way we would greatly help the exporters of this country—not only the farmers but all other exporters—to compete in the markets of the world. But so long as our currency is appreciated in value in the way it is we are having to face extremely unfair competition with those nations whose currency is depreciated below the United States dollar.

The next question that comes to mind is this: Are farmers justified in expecting the government to underwrite the price of agricultural products? I get sick and tired of reading newspapers in which the charge is made that the farmers are asking for a handout from the government. All the farmers are asking the government to do is to honour their obligations or the promises they have made in the past. The farmers have already paid in full for any help they might get in having agricultural prices stabilized.

Let me go back a few years; let me go back to the 1930's. We all remember how the prices of agricultural products then fell to extremely low levels. When the farm organizations asked the government to guarantee the prices of agricultural products in those years, we probably remember how they were told by the government that the government could do nothing because those prices were set by an international market; in other words, the farmers must sell at world prices. Hence during those years of the depression the farmers had to take extremely low prices for their products and, as a consequence, they went heavily in debt.

Then the war came along. Shortly after the beginning of the war the prices of agricultural products rose. Then shortly after, the government placed a ceiling on the prices of agricultural products. They told the farmers that they could not have world prices because those prices were too high. May I say that you cannot have it both ways. If the farmers had to take world prices during the depression, they were justified in asking for world prices when prices rose. However, when the government placed a ceiling on agricultural prices they told the farmers that this was part of a stabilization program under which they would guarantee to stabilize agricultural prices after the war. I remember that, some days ago, the Minister of Trade and Commerce seemed to be extremely doubtful whether that guarantee had ever been made. I should therefore like to quote from a speech that was made by the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King in a radio broadcast delivered on December 4, 1943:

> I wish to thank the farmers of Canada for their magnificent contribution to the battle of production. I wish again to appeal to them to continue to help hold the front line against inflation by continuing to support the price ceiling. If, to help win the war, the farmers are asked to accept a ceiling on prices, we believe they are entitled to a floor under prices to ensure them against an agricultural depression after the war. As an essential part of its post-war policy, the government intends to ask parliament at the next session to place a floor under the prices of main farm commodities.

We all know that after the war the prices of farm products remained fairly high for a number of years. It is true that the government appeared to implement their promise by introducing the Agricultural Prices Support Act under which the government could guarantee farmers what you might call parity prices. In other words, they would step into the market and buy agricultural products when the prices fell below a level that would bear a fair relationship to the prices of other commodities. They were not required to take any action until 1949. In 1949 the first severe drop in agricultural prices took place involving hogs and one or two other commodities. The government did place a support price under hogs and some other commodities but the farm organizations were not satisfied with the support prices that were established.

I was at the convention in Niagara Falls in 1950 and the farm organizations asked the Minister of Agriculture what was the formula for establishing support prices. The Minister of Agriculture stated that they had a formula under which these support prices were established. He said that the formula was that they would support the price of agricultural products so their price would bear the same relationship to the prices of other commodities as had existed in the three years, 1943, 1944 and 1945. Since that time most of the support prices, with the exception of those applying to livestock, have been below that formula.

Of course wheat does not come under the Agricultural Prices Support Act, but it is rather interesting to note that on the basis of that formula the price of wheat in 1951 should have been $2.53 a bushel. The price of wheat has of course been well below the price that would have been paid if the formula had applied to wheat. But, as I say, with the exception of livestock prices, the support prices established by the government have been below the formula. I think the question that is worrying farmers today probably more than any other is to find out exactly what the government's policy is regarding support prices. The Minister of Agriculture has given farmers reason to believe that no support price is going to be established under livestock products. I have here a copy of the Western Producer of April 29, 1954 which contains an article referring to a press conference with the Minister of Agriculture. It is pointed out that the minister stated to the press that the federal government is not considering establishment of a support price of all livestock.

As a result of the fall in the prices of many farm products that has taken place, a great deal of interest is being shown in the establishment of marketing boards. I believe that enabling legislation has been set up in most provinces but up to the present such legislation has not been passed in the province of Alberta. In Alberta there is a very wide difference of opinion among farmers on this subject. Right at the present time quite a war is going on between one group of farmers and another as to whether or not marketing boards should be set up. The policy being followed by the province is that if the majority of the farmers appears to be in favour of marketing boards a plebiscite will be taken, and if two-thirds of the farmers are in favour of such boards no doubt enabling legislation will be passed.

I think there is a very good reason why the farmers of that province are somewhat leery about whether or not they would benefit under a marketing board for livestock or any other commodity. That reason is that the Minister of Agriculture has made it quite clear that if marketing boards are set up prices will be guaranteed not so much under the Agricultural Prices Support Act as under the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, and that act does not guarantee any security at all for the farmers. It is true that the act provides that the government may guarantee an initial payment up to 80 per cent of the average price of the past three years, but the whole value of that is nullified by subsection 3 of section 3 which reads as follows:

> An agreement made under subsection 1 may include a provision that the minister may on such notice as he deems fair and reasonable require that the delivery of an agricultural product to a co-operative association, processor or selling agency shall be discontinued with the result that the minister shall not be liable in respect of any agricultural product delivered to the co-operative association, processor or selling agency after such requirement.

That just means that if a serious fall in the price of any agricultural product takes place the government can relieve itself of any responsibility by instructing the board to refuse to accept any more of the commodity, and in that case the guarantee would disappear entirely. If we are going to have agricultural products marketing boards set up by the provinces, then we should have a guarantee from the government that they will provide support prices for those products under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. That is what the Agricultural Prices Support Act was set up for, in order to underwrite the prices of farm products. That guarantee was given by the former prime minister during the war. Is the government of today not prepared to live up to the guarantee given by the prime minister of this country during the war? If they are prepared to live up to it, it is time they made that quite clear to the farmers. If that were made clear to the farmers I think we would then find it a whole lot easier to establish these marketing boards because the farmers would know that if a marketing board was set up the initial payment could be made with safety without any danger of the marketing board finding itself in the very difficult position in which the wheat pool found itself in 1929, I believe.

We in this group believe in a two-price system for agriculture, and in view of the fact that about 95 per cent of all agricultural products with the exception of wheat are consumed in Canada we cannot see why the 5 per cent that is exported abroad should be allowed to determine the price of the other 95 per cent consumed in Canada. We feel that the government should guarantee parity prices for agricultural products consumed in Canada. The surplus could be exported abroad and sold for the very best price that could be obtained. We can no doubt help to find markets for our surplus goods by advancing credits to nations unable to pay for the goods they desire, or by being willing to accept their currency in payment.

But the point we want to emphasize is that the all-important market for agricultural products is the home market. In the final analysis the only market we have is the home market because imports brought into Canada in exchange for the exports we ship out have to be consumed in this country. The result is we have to be able to consume the total production of the country or the imports brought in in exchange for our exports. I do not think anybody would argue for one minute that we have anything like developed our own home market.

We have a tremendous potential market in this country. This potential market is represented by the thousands upon thousands of people in low income groups; the people in the old age pension brackets; the war veterans; the people with disabilities, all of whom are having to accept low incomes today. Then there are the unemployed. I know it has been argued, I believe by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), that a program of increased pensions for these people would be very costly. I wonder whether the government has ever stopped to calculate what it is costing the country to have half a million unemployed people?

Supposing the half a million unemployed people were earning a moderate income, say $2,400 a year or $200 a month. This would mean that we could be having in this country another $100 million a month in goods and services, another $1,200 million a year. Would that not more than offset the cost of paying a decent pension to the old age pensioners, the war veterans and the physically disabled? By paying a decent income to these people we would also stimulate the market for agricultural products. I do not think anyone will deny that the world needs expansion in the production of food, and that any surplus produce should be stored to take care of crop failures. Then in years when there were crop failures we would be able to draw upon our stored surplus to make food available to the nations needing it.

I believe that expanding the production of food would bring prosperity to the farmers, provided they were guaranteed fair prices. Let no one forget that as long as agriculture prospers, Canada will prosper because the people engaged in agriculture provide one of the very best markets for the products of other industries in this country.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but because I was in the agriculture committee this afternoon I did not hear the hon. members who took part in this particular debate. However, the two speakers whom I have heard tonight have laid a great deal of stress on the dangers facing agriculture in Canada today. I am fully cognizant of the dangers facing agriculture. As a matter of fact about two weeks ago last Friday, during the debate on the agriculture estimates, I believe I made that abundantly clear. I shall not, therefore, repeat anything that previous speakers have said concerning this difficulty or anything that I said at that time.

Although I am thoroughly cognizant of the dangers facing agriculture, I do not believe the solution proposed by this resolution is the answer. As a matter of fact, the answer to most of our agricultural problems lies in expanded markets for our products. Our difficulties so far as the wheat surplus or what many prefer to call the "so-called surplus" is concerned lie in selling that wheat to people in other countries who could use it, as well as expanding the market for it within Canada. The same remarks would apply to livestock products. When we have sufficient market for our products we do not need to worry unduly about the price, and perhaps we do not need to worry unduly over putting in floor prices, as has been suggested here.

I feel that this resolution was prompted by very grave fears that exist in Canada today concerning what the future may hold for the livestock industry, and as to what may happen to the price of cattle and hogs particularly, the two main products of that industry. There has been a widespread demand, of course, amongst farmers for a long time for some system of floor prices in this country. This demand has been met to a limited extent. A floor price was established for hogs some time ago, and a floor has been established for butter. As I say, the demand has been met to some extent by floor prices under one product here and one product there, but there has been no general system of floor prices for agricultural products. There is undoubtedly a very strong demand amongst farmers in this country for some system of that sort.

In my opinion, if this resolution were put into effect it would be, more or less, complete socialization of the livestock industry. Most livestock producers of whom I am aware do not want their industry socialized. They want to have that industry remain on the basis of free enterprise. As a livestock producer myself for many years the last thing I want is to have control of the sale of my livestock taken completely out of my hands and put into the hands of a government or a board appointed by the government. As I say, most livestock producers want the same thing. The demand for a solution such as is proposed here, a socialized livestock industry, does not come from the majority of the farmers producing the majority of the livestock. There are no producers with reasonably sized livestock farms of whom I am aware who want a solution of this sort. The only people I have met who want a solution of this kind are the people who produce a very small amount of livestock, and I, personally, have met very few of them.

I am not going to go into the extremely complex subject of floor prices for agricultural products; what those floor prices should be, or the formula that should be used to arrive at them. That is a matter upon which one might make a dozen speeches of the length to which we are limited in this house, and still not nearly exhaust the subject. In my opinion this particular proposal comes very close to being complete nonsense, and I think bears no relationship to any realistic conception of what the livestock industry is, what conditions are or anything of that sort. It merely says there should be a floor price put under cattle and hogs of not less than the average of the prices which prevailed during the period from January 1, 1951 to December 31, 1953, a period of three years.

There are many people who would argue that during the early part of that period the price of hogs was too low, and now it is too high. There are other people who would argue that during the earlier part of that period the price of cattle was too high, and now it is too low. The idea of taking any particular three-year period and saying the average price of those three years should be the price for the next one or two years, does not take into account at all the present price of livestock feed stuffs or other important factors. Certainly, it is not the kind of formula that anyone who has made a real study of this matter would recommend. For those reasons, perhaps, the formula is not a reasonable or realistic yardstick to use. The whole purpose of this resolution, if carried into effect, would be to socialize the livestock industry. Personally, I oppose it, and oppose it very strongly.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): When I looked across the way this evening and saw the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was not in his place, I wondered who would tell us the government's position concerning the resolution before the house. I think the speech delivered by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) has filled the bill very well, for the Minister of Agriculture; and it may not be necessary for the minister to make a rebuttal since, I imagine, he would be making about the same type of rebuttal as that made by the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Harkness: You had better let him speak for himself.

Mr. Argue: I think the speech delivered by the hon. member for Calgary North was ridiculous, foolish and downright silly. I have never heard anything quite so ridiculous in this House of Commons for a long time—and I am referring to his statement that the establishment of floor prices would result in the socialization of the livestock industry. Because I say to him that floor prices couldn't possibly result in the socialization of the livestock industry.

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order; I must object to the hon. member's putting words in my mouth which were never there. I did not say that floor prices would result in the socialization of the industry; I said the effect of this whole resolution would result in that, if it were put into effect—but not floor prices. I went on to say that floor prices were themselves a big subject which I would not take the time of the house to discuss tonight.

Mr. Argue: A far bigger subject, I suggest, than the hon. member would be capable of dealing with. But I come back now to my statement, as to the remark he made in referring to this resolution, when he said that it would mean the socialization of the livestock industry; and I say that that remark was completely foolish.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the hon. member any objection to that? Has he any objection to the socialization of the livestock industry?

Mr. Argue: And that is another silly question—it is perfectly silly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Answer it anyway.

Mr. Argue: And the Secretary of State—

Mr. Pickersgill: Answer the question.

Mr. Argue: I will answer it then. I will say that so far as I am concerned, the livestock industry as it is now operated and managed by the producers of livestock is the best possible system for the livestock industry. To my mind it is a system that should be preserved, and this government should not allow farmers to go into bankruptcy because it has failed to act under the powers of any one of three statutes now on the statute books, and which could be used to provide floor prices to deal with this situation.

I come back now to the terms of the amendment, and the suggestion that if it were implemented it would result in the socialization of the livestock industry. We have in the United States right now, operated by a Republican government, a government that is not too often criticized by members of the Conservative party in Canada, a system of parity floor prices established under the main agricultural commodities in the United States.

Mr. Trainor: And what a headache that is!

Mr. Argue: Someone interjects by stating, "What a headache that is!" Well, I would far rather be a farmer in the United States—

An hon. Member: Go ahead, then.

Mr. Argue: —with the headache of receiving more than $2 a bushel for wheat, and floor prices under all the main agricultural commodities than a farmer in Canada producing under a total lack of adequate legislation and adequate floor prices for the livestock industry, as we see it under this government.

Mr. Knowles: It gives a headache even a doctor could not cure.

Mr. Argue: If this amendment we have suggested would result in the socialization of the livestock industry then all I can say is that the Americans socialized their livestock industry years ago, because they have adequate floor prices and adequate parity prices.

The Minister of Agriculture believes in floor prices. During the transitional period from war to peace he has had legislation placed on the statute books for the support of agricultural prices. Under that legislation prices can be supported. Then we know that there is an act to provide for the establishment of an agricultural products board. He could establish floor prices under that act. Then if he did not like the way those two acts read, he could turn to chapter 5 of the statutes to assist and encourage in the co-operative marketing of agricultural products.

The Minister of Agriculture has three separate statutes under which he could do the very thing advocated in this amendment. Of course he likes to have all kinds of legislation to confuse people, and then do nothing about it. For many years western agricultural producers fought to get orderly marketing of their farm commodities. In spite of the many speeches delivered against the principle of orderly marketing, speeches such as the one delivered tonight by the hon. member for Calgary North, they have been successful in obtaining the Canadian wheat board. I submit the wheat board is an outstanding body providing for the marketing of wheat and other grains in an orderly fashion.

The Canadian wheat board establishes an initial price, which acts as a floor price. Yet it has no more socialized the wheat producers of western Canada than in my judgment this amendment would result in the socialization of the livestock producers.

If I were considering the kind of policy we should adopt in relation to the livestock industry one of the first things I would do would be to read the resolutions passed by the various farm organizations. The Saskatchewan wheat pool in its outlined future policy states in its annual report on page 49, and this is the seventh plank in that policy:

> Increased use of the Agricultural Prices Support Act as a means of providing adequate support prices for those farm commodities to which the act applies.

[Mr. Argue.]

> 8. The establishment of support prices on all livestock marketed through licensed stockyards.

That is exactly what we are attempting to have done by pressing this motion. We are attempting to have a floor price set on livestock and to have greater use made of the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

At this time the farm unions of western Canada have taken great interest in the idea of marketing boards, and have established in Manitoba, and I believe also in Saskatchewan, an interim marketing board. It is their hope that they will be able to handle livestock and receive from the federal government support in the way of adequate support prices underwriting the operations of those livestock boards. I hold in my hand the Western Producer for Thursday, April 29. In it is outlined the result of a very successful conference held in Saskatoon regarding the establishment of a livestock board. An interim livestock board was established, and here are the members of that board: Mr. E. A. Boden, Cutknife, prominent hog breeder and wheat pool director for district 12, who will serve in an individual capacity; Mrs. Eric Lund, Borden, S.F.U., woman director; Don Griffin, farmer, Alameda; Jim Gray, S.F.U. official, Saskatoon; Percy Wright, Tisdale, former C.C.F. member of parliament for Melfort, and Fred Messenger, Kelvington, vice-president of the Saskatchewan association of rural municipalities.

The board is headed by a chairman, Mr. Speaker, who is well known to members on both sides of the house, a former colleague in this house, Mr. Percy Wright of Tisdale. I suggest that the honour that was bestowed on Mr. Wright by selecting him as chairman of the board demonstrates something that all of us who have been associated with Mr. Wright over the years have come to know, namely, that he is an extremely able person and was the very best choice in my opinion that this conference could make to head the interim livestock board. I do not have the press report here, but I understand that an interim board has been established in Manitoba and that Mr. Scottie Bryce, an able former colleague, is a member of that board. Scottie, by being back closely associated with the livestock industry, is once again engaged in the work that has been so dear to him throughout his lifetime.

The establishment of those interim boards by the farmers' unions in western Canada, supported as they are by farm unions in Ontario to British Columbia, demonstrates that the livestock producers of Canada want orderly marketing through livestock boards, and further desire that adequate support prices be placed under livestock. I might say in this regard that the report of the conference in the Western Producer states of Mr. Phelps:

> He reported that S.F.U. officials had held a successful conference with federal agriculture minister J. G. Gardiner the previous day. The minister, said Mr. Phelps, had promised that if a producers' board were established, the federal government will provide—

And this is very interesting:

> —financial guarantees under the Co-operative Marketing Act of 1939 to enable payment of an initial price. Mr. Gardiner had also promised consideration of a national board of livestock commissioners.

However, it is perfectly correct, as the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) pointed out, that in the same issue of the Western Producer the Minister of Agriculture is reported as having said that there will be no financial assistance from the federal government. All I can say is that that proves to me at any rate that the Minister of Agriculture was in Saskatoon and discussed with two different sets of people the question of some financial support for the livestock industry. He is now able to get up in the house, or in any other place, depending which side of the argument he takes at the moment—he may take his pick as to which part of the Western Producer of April 29 he decides to quote—and prove that the government is either going to support financially the livestock marketing boards or he can demonstrate that the government has no intention of providing such financial support. I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that since the president of the Saskatchewan farmers' union says that the Minister of Agriculture did say to him that the federal government would provide financial support for livestock marketing boards that commitment of the Minister of Agriculture will be fulfilled.

We want marketing boards; we want financial support for the livestock products that are marketed by those boards. If such floors were provided, then the statistics I have before me show that such a proposal would provide a floor price for good steers, basis Toronto, $26.50 a hundred. I would say that for an average grade steer in the various parts of Canada it would result in something under 20 cents a pound live weight. I suggest that such a floor price is fair and moderate and will give the producer a reasonable return but nothing more. The floor price under hogs would be $29.65 a hundred for grade B1 hogs at Toronto. I suggest that such a floor price under hogs is reasonable and would keep the price of hogs in fair relationship with the stated support price for cattle. I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that all members representing rural constituencies and agricultural ridings will give this motion very serious consideration so that the agricultural producers of Canada may make further progress in their battle for orderly marketing and stability, and may make one further step toward obtaining the same kind of stability that the United States farmer has now enjoyed for a great many years.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): I have a word or two on this matter, Mr. Speaker, which is of particular importance to Canadian agriculture. Most of the arguments have already been made in support of the establishment of a livestock marketing board for Canada and something being done in these days to see that the Canadian people, both producers and consumers, get the same kind of a fair deal.

There are very few people in Canada, and certainly one would not realize it if he listened to the debates in this house, who are familiar with the extent of the livestock marketing industry in Canada. Figures show that it is in volume of gross value of business done the second largest business in the whole of Canada, surpassed only by the pulp and paper industry. However in this industry hundreds of thousands of farmers, and millions of Canadian people indirectly, are involved in the producers' side of this business, and practically every Canadian family is very directly affected from the consumers' side of the question. Therefore I consider that from the standpoint of importance to the Canadian people there is no industry which requires more of the attention of the people than does the livestock industry at the present time. More and more people depend for their livelihood upon the livestock industry, and the cost of living for everyone generally is seriously affected by the amount charged for meat and meat products. There are all kinds of by-products, margarine, animal fat, oil, bone meal, fertilizer, hides—

An hon. Member: Bologna.

Mr. Castleden: If that is a by-product then we are seriously affected by it in this house. The sales of Canadian produce in Canada in 1950 amounted to $757 million. In 1951 they went up to $892 million and—an interesting fact which reveals the trend in Canada and which every Canadian interested in agriculture and livestock production should realize—our exports of livestock are dwindling very rapidly. The Canadian producer is becoming more and more dependent upon the returns he receives from livestock as years go by. In 1947 about 23 per cent of Canada's production of livestock was exported; in 1948 only 22 per cent was exported, and in 1949-50 13 per cent. The following year it fell to 10 per cent, and gradually but eventually we are losing our livestock markets abroad. If that trend continues Canadians are going to be in a very difficult position with regard to our export position.

The one danger, and the one evident factor in the situation today which causes the Canadian people, particularly organized agriculture, to ask for a livestock marketing board, is the fact that competitive markets are disappearing. There are 155 slaughtering plants in Canada, 61 concentrated in Ontario and about 37 in Quebec with the remainder in other provinces, and three large firms control 60 per cent of the entire business. Even the royal commission which investigated prices underlined this in the report they issued for consideration by Canadians and by the Canadian parliament. They said, and I quote:

. . . the processing—

That is meat packing.

—industry shows a high degree of concentration. The three largest firms account for about 60 per cent of the total inspected slaughterings in Canada, which would indicate that competition operates within a fairly restricted framework, though there may be considerable rivalry among these firms. These large firms are efficient in their operations and, though realizing small profits per unit of output, earn substantial returns on their investment. The very heavy capital investment required, together with decreasing cost ratio as the scale of the business expands, tends to keep additional competitors from entering the field.

What the Canadian producers are asking for in almost every one of the briefs and through every one of their farm organizations is that there should be a livestock board established in Canada to see that adequate and proper prices are maintained for the producer, and to see that there is not a wide disparity between what the farmer receives and what the producer has to pay.

Prior to 1950-51 western farmers received for a good steer around $250. Today the average price for a good steer is down to between $100 and $120, but there has been no corresponding decline in the price paid by the Canadian consumer. These large firms which control to a large extent both the price the farmer receives and the price the consumer pays rush out stories to demonstrate the very small margin they receive per pound of beef on each of the groups going through their plants, but they have not yet explained to the satisfaction of the Canadian people why there should be this wide disparity between the price they had to pay for meat products three years ago and the price they have to meet today.

The producer is receiving less and less in actual return and that is why he wants an adequate marketing board. They have no bargaining power whatsoever with the few large firms which buy their commodity. The farmer is in their power and all these firms have to do is to refrain from coming to any formal agreement as to the price. By adopting that method they avoid any violation of the anti-combines act.

Today the pressure on agriculture is becoming more and more severe. When the farmer received a good price for his wheat he could afford to leave the livestock industry to those who were interested, particularly when the amount of return he was likely to receive did not appear attractive to him. But today, when he cannot deliver his grain, when he is cut off from deliveries to the extent in 1954 of about 130 to 140 million bushels, he has to depend to a larger and larger extent on the sale of his livestock.

But cattle prices have tumbled to a terrific extent and the only thing left to him, as has already been pointed out here this evening, is the hog industry. The farmer is now turning more and more to the good prices he can receive today for his hogs. The result has been that at the present time, and government statistics will bear this out, the farmer is turning more and more to raising hogs in the hope that the present prices will be maintained.

However, the fact is that these prices cannot possibly be maintained without a much larger consumption, particularly in view of the fact that Canada's export market for hogs has virtually disappeared and the Canadian people practically constitute the only consumers. Under these circumstances the important thing is to guarantee Canadian producers some decent return for their produce, grant them some form of stability and security in prices. Nothing could do more to guarantee a greater security to the producers of this country than the establishment of a livestock marketing board. Under such an arrangement the farmer would feel satisfied that in accepting a price for his meat he is not contributing to a monopoly in the industry which is allowed to go on at the present time, as it has been for a number of years, without giving an account of its stewardship to the producers and consumers of Canada.

In this connection I would point out that the one thing which has satisfied the western farmers in Canada and given them some hope for the future has been the establishment of the wheat board under which orderly marketing of his produce is guaranteed, and under which he is today protected from the kind of competition he had to face in the Winnipeg grain exchange. The Winnipeg grain exchange enjoyed that competition, but the farmer in effect was being fleeced year after year. The wheat board now undertakes this marketing of the farmers' produce. It is taken in, graded properly, and the board handles the selling of that commodity either on the home or export market. But whatever the price the farmer receives for his produce, whether it be for grain or anything else, it is the actual price less the cost of handling. He sees today an extremely wide spread between that practice and the one which is operating with him with his livestock produce, and this request is uniform throughout the producers.

You will find the same thing coming from producers everywhere that they can possibly get organized to discuss their problem. The basic principle of the livestock marketing board is accepted by the producers of the west and the producers of the east. A livestock marketing board is one thing which will restore some confidence in the hearts of the producers and give to Canadians some assurance that they are not being exploited by those who are able to take control of a commodity, buy whatever they wish at whatever the market can stand for the stuff they get, process it into a commodity for all the Canadian people and then sell it to the Canadian people for whatever price the market will bear. That kind of thing must be eliminated in Canada. We call upon every member of this house, by his vote on this resolution, to show what he thinks of it.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, to hear our friends to my left in the C.C.F. group talking about their theory of how you are going to market beef in this country is certainly not an eye-opener to those of us who have been sitting here for a few years. We have shipyard workers in my part of the country who are out of work. Maybe our friends can suggest some method they know, tried and true, that will put those men to work. They like to pick at and pull apart good industries in the Dominion of Canada who are doing a great service to this country. I am sick and tired of that sort of thing. Have they offered one suggestion by means of which to market the farm beef after it leaves the farm? They like to forget all about the trials and tribulations connected with the handling of the beef until the time it reaches the consumer. Is it the great packers who rob the public, as they have been accused of doing? Is it the retail butcher?

Some farmers are not satisfied with beef prices today. Nobody is ever satisfied with the price at which he sells his commodities. But let us have some honest reasoning from these people here rather than the pulling of people down and the tearing apart of great industries. I have not a share of stock nor have I ever had one in any great marketing organization for meat products; but I hate to sit here and listen to these people being torn apart when they do not deserve it. The farmers in my part of the country would not stand for it. They would not jump into a marketing board as quickly as some of these people suggest until these people here to my left—these great theorists—can tell us how to market the beef after it leaves the farm, how to keep the prices up and how to make me or anyone else eat more beef. Who makes the profit? Is it our butchers? The local butchers slaughter in my own home town. They are not growling. They are fairly friendly with the farmers. I hear many farmers say they would like 34 cents a pound but they also say that they are not doing too badly at 24 cents. What I believe they need—and what I should like to see them have—are parity prices for farmers. But I certainly do not think the time has come when we can tell these fellows who talk like the great Socrates to take over from coast to coast, because none of them, I think, has much business experience.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Castleden: What about the wheat board?

Mr. Ferguson: I should like to remind my friend that the wheat board cannot compel export buyers to buy wheat in Canada. The surplus is just one of those things we are troubled with. We would all like to sell this wheat at $2.25 a bushel. Maybe they could tell us where the market is. There is no market at the present time. They cannot tell us where they are going to get a market.

An hon. Member: It is better than the grain exchange.

Mr. Castleden: Tell us your system. You tell us.

Mr. Ferguson: I am not talking much about something I do not know anything about.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): The amendment that we have before the house at the present time I consider to be an extremely important one. I have listened to the discussion thus far this evening with a great deal of interest. Unfortunately I am in the same position as that of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). I was absent from the chamber this afternoon because of my duties on the agriculture committee and therefore did not hear the discussion that took place in a preliminary way on this amendment. I understand that as yet there has been no statement from the government side of the house on this subject. I think that is an unfortunate situation because it is a matter which is important to the farmers generally and particularly to the livestock producers. The fact that so much enthusiasm and almost emotion has been generated in our discussion this evening would suggest that it is a highly important subject and, at the same time, an extremely controversial one.

I rise to say a few words on the subject because some reference has been made to certain discussions going on in my own province of Manitoba at the present time concerning the matter of setting up a producers livestock marketing board. As I have listened to the references in this chamber to the discussions on this matter that have taken place in Manitoba, the impression I have received is that the farmers generally are in support of the marketing board proposal that is before them at the present time. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is far from being the case. Although I have not been home in the province during these discussions, as I read the press reports from various parts of my own constituency as well as from neighbouring constituencies it would appear that discussion of the proposed producers livestock marketing board that is at present before the livestock producers of my province is producing just as much heated controversy, I might say, as we have seen generated in this chamber this evening.

As a matter of fact, the present plan has been repudiated by the majority of livestock producer groups in the province because it is too compulsory and, as has been indicated by the hon. member for Calgary North, it approximates socialized marketing. Among the groups who have not given their support to the plan are the Manitoba pools, which in a largely attended meeting in the city of Brandon just a few weeks ago, while supporting the broad principle of producer marketing boards, opposed to the extent of 90 per cent the proposal that has been put forward by the Manitoba farmers union. Also the Manitoba cattle producers association is opposed to the present plan.

As a result of the controversy that has arisen, the livestock farmers have organized themselves into a voluntary association which they have named the independent livestock producers association. They are moving throughout the province at the present time, holding very enthusiastic meetings, in order to arouse the farmers of the province to the dangers that are inherent in the compulsory plan that has been put forward and to which I think the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) referred to as being a plan generally acceptable to the livestock producers of Manitoba. I have before me certain of the proposals contained in the plan that has been presented, and to demonstrate their compulsory nature I shall read one or two excerpts. First of all there is this provision:

> The board shall have all the powers of a body corporate and, within the province, shall have power to regulate and control in any or all respects the marketing of the regulated product, including the prohibition of such marketing in whole or in part and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, shall have the following powers . . .

Then a long series of powers is set out. I should like to refer to paragraph (c) of the official document, which reads as follows:

> To prohibit in whole or in part the marketing of any grade or class of the regulated product of any kind or variety thereof.

Paragraph (h) reads as follows:

> To seize, remove and dispose of any of the regulated products marketed in violation of any order of the board and retain or otherwise dispose of the proceeds thereof.

I think that will serve to give some idea of why the majority of livestock producers of my province are so vehemently opposing the plan for a producers' marketing board that has been put before them at this time. While saying that, I must reiterate that from time to time during recent years strong support has been voiced for the principle of a producers' marketing board in the field of livestock. With such widespread general support, it is unfortunate that a proposal has cropped up which has tended to disturb the livestock producers and caused them to repudiate the scheme to the overwhelming extent that I have already indicated. Returning to the amendment before us it reads as follows:

> In the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to demonstrating its support of the principle of orderly marketing through livestock marketing boards by announcing floor prices with respect to cattle and hogs at levels not less than the average of the prices which prevailed during the period from January 1, 1951, to December 31, 1953.

The language is very vague. First of all it makes reference to the broad principle of orderly marketing through livestock marketing boards. Then, having thus sponsored the idea of marketing boards, it moves on to emphasize floor prices based on a certain production period. No one can say whether prices during that period were average, above average or below average. Because of this I would be interested in hearing some spokesman from the government side outline their attitude toward the amendment now before the house. It deals with an important topic of a highly controversial nature. The farmers in my own province are aroused, and before we jump off the deep end and give our support to a measure as important as this I think there should be some clarification from official government sources.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: On Friday night I set out the legislative program for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. We shall follow that in the same sequence tomorrow, except that the first resolution to be taken after we have disposed of the budget resolutions will be that in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs having to do with the Veterans Land Act.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann):

That the report of the civil service commission respecting the establishment and reclassification of certain positions in the library of parliament, laid upon the table of the house on Friday, May 14, 1954, be now approved.

Motion agreed to.

WHEAT

DISPOSAL OF WESTERN SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It arises as the result of communications received from western farm groups. The suggestion is that the minister might be in a position to say something in addition to what he has already said regarding the prospects for wheat marketing and the degree to which his expectations are being realized so that the farmers will know whether or not they will be able to dispose of their wheat now in storage before the next crop season.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Some weeks ago, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Prince Albert, I gave an analysis of the situation as at the 31st of July next. Events that have taken place subsequent to my review confirm my view that the situation will be pretty much as then outlined.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide, among other things:

1. That the excise tax on the following goods be repealed:

(a) furs;

(b) electrical appliances adapted to household or apartment use, namely: blankets; chafing dishes; coffee makers; curling irons or tongs; dish washers; food or drink mixers; food choppers and grinders; floor waxers and polishers; garbage disposal units; hair dryers; irons and ironers; juice extractors; kettles; portable humidifiers; razors and shavers; toasters of all kinds; vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; waffle irons;

(c) firearms and complete parts thereof and ammunition;

(d) golf clubs and golf balls;

(e) fishing rods and fishing reels;

(f) cameras, camera lenses and unexposed photographic films and plates; projectors for pictures;

(g) trunks; suitcases; bags and luggage of all kinds; purses; wallets; billfolds; key and card cases; handbags; jewel cases; dressing and toilet cases; shopping bags; golf and other sports bags;

(h) coin, disc or token operated vending machines.

2. That the excise tax on the following goods be reduced from fifteen per cent to ten per cent:

(a) articles, materials or preparations of whatever composition or in whatever form, commonly or commercially known as toilet articles, preparations or cosmetics, which are intended for use or application for toilet purposes, or for use in connection with the care of the human body, including the hair, nails, eyes, teeth, or any other part or parts thereof, whether for cleansing, deodorizing, beautifying, preserving or restoring, and including shaving soaps and shaving creams, antiseptics, bleaches, depilatories, perfumes, scents and similar preparations;

(b) motor cycles and all other two or three-wheeled motor driven vehicles including motors for attachment to bicycles;

(c) devices, commonly or commercially known as lighters;

(d) coin, disc or token operated games or amusement devices of all kinds;

(e) ash trays; tobacco pipes; cigar and cigarette holders; cigarette rolling devices and other smokers' accessories;

(f) fountain pens; ball-point pens; ink pencils; propelling pencils; desk sets and all other desk accessories;

(g) matches;

(h) tires and tubes in whole or in part of rubber for self-propelled machines or automotive vehicles of all kinds;

(i) clocks and watches;

(j) articles of all kinds made in whole or in part of ivory, jet, amber, coral, mother of pearl, natural shells, tortoise shell, jade, onyx, lapis lazuli, or other semi-precious stones;

(k) articles commonly or commercially known as jewellery, whether real or imitation, including diamonds and other precious or semi-precious stones for personal use or for adornment of the person; goldsmiths' and silversmiths' products; pewter ware;

(l) articles of cut glassware, crystal glassware, cut or not, etched glassware, or metal decorated glassware;

(m) articles of china, porcelain, earthenware, marble, stoneware, or other pottery ware;

(n) carbonated beverages, aerated waters, unfermented fruit juice beverages and imitations thereof and all other compounded or mixed soft drinks and all mixtures or products advertised or sold for making soft drink beverages or imitations thereof, whether sold in liquid, concentrated or in dry form;

(o) candy, chocolate, chewing gum and confectionery that may be classed as candy or a substitute for candy.

3. That the excise tax on carbonic acid gas and similar preparations be reduced from twenty-five cents per pound to fifteen cents per pound.

4. That the sales tax on the following goods be repealed:

(a) oil and gas burners and stokers for use with furnaces for the heating of buildings;

(b) coal crushers and stokers for use directly in the manufacture or production of goods;

(c) equipment sold to or imported by municipalities for their own use and not for resale, at a price in excess of one thousand dollars per unit, specially designed for use directly for road making, road cleaning or fire fighting, but not to include automobiles nor ordinary motor trucks;

(d) wall panels for use in buildings and materials for use in the manufacture of such panels;

(e) drain tile not exceeding four inches in inside diameter and twelve inches in length;

(f) sheet music and materials used in its manufacture;

(g) hearing aids and parts therefor including batteries specifically designed for use with such hearing aids.

5. That provision be made to require the payment of sales and excise taxes on all products packaged and sold as lighter fluid.

6. That provision be made to require the payment of sales and excise taxes on the packaging used to contain goods subject to these taxes and on any other articles packaged with them whether the goods are imported, or are manufactured or produced in Canada.

7. That provision be made to ensure that machines and tools for operation by tractors are not included as accessories therefor in the prevailing exemption from sales tax.

8. That any enactment founded upon this resolution be deemed to have come into force on the seventh day of April, nineteen hundred and fifty-four.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, if I may have leave of the committee, I have to be in the banking and commerce committee later this afternoon and I have a certain proposed amendment to the resolution concerning personal income tax which I should like to communicate to the committee since I cannot be here when the discussion of that resolution will take place.

The Chairman: Has the minister leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Abbott: As the committee is aware, since the budget I have received a large number of representations from members of the house and others regarding paragraph 6 of the income tax resolution which deals with the tax status of mutual insurance companies in the fire and casualty field. I might explain that this paragraph does not introduce new policy with regard to the tax treatment of mutuals but is intended merely to enable past policy, adopted in 1946, to be continued.

In the representations made to me by members of parliament and others it has been emphasized that by far the great majority of the companies affected by this policy are small local companies insuring farm property where there is no organized fire protection. They are not in competition with the ordinary profit-making insurance companies. In fact it is claimed that they are compelled to provide this service in their communities for themselves owing to the reluctance of ordinary companies to enter this field.

In the light of these representations I have reviewed the results of the study of this situation by the McDougall commission. After careful consideration of all the facts placed before them the members of the royal commission recommended:

That the income of any insurer, mutual or otherwise, shall not be liable to taxation when in any year the net premium income in Canada is derived, to the extent of not less than 50 per cent thereof, from the insurance of farm property and other property not protected by municipal or other fire-fighting organizations, or is derived wholly from the insurance of churches, schools, or other religious, educational and charitable institutions.

I am prepared to accept the general principle of this recommendation and I am now suggesting an amendment to the income tax resolution recognizing this general recommendation. The McDougall recommendation dealt mainly with farm insurance. The amendment I am proposing deals likewise with fishermen and applies the same general rule to insurers giving protection to their property.

I would therefore ask one of my colleagues to move:

That the resolution to amend the Income Tax Act be amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

7. For the exemption from taxation for the 1954 and subsequent taxation years of insurers, not less than 50 per cent of whose gross premium income was in respect of the insurance of farm property, property used in fishing or residences of farmers or fishermen.

Mr. Harris: I so move.

Mr. Abbott: I would suggest if the amendment is adopted that it be discussed with the resolution when it is called later, if that meets with the approval of the committee.

Mr. Macdonnell: I would merely like to say that, while one always wants to study carefully the full effect of what is proposed by way of relief, I think that prima facie, at any rate, those who have been appealing to the minister will view with satisfaction what has been done.

The Chairman: The resolution with regard to the Excise Tax Act. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, there is another matter in relation to the resolution respecting amendment of the Excise Tax Act to which I should like to refer. It is not a new matter. It was discussed extensively a year ago when the budget resolutions were before the committee of ways and means on March 31, 1953. The matter was also referred to briefly on that previous occasion, May 4 this year, when the house began its review of the budget resolutions.

The matter I should like to mention, sir, is not to be found in the resolution as such. My purpose is to express regret that no action has been taken by the Minister of Finance in regard to the matter. I refer specifically to the need for extending the exemption from sales and excise taxes to those charitable and welfare organizations that are not now exempt from such impositions.

I believe that it would come as a profound shock to many people in this country to realize that the federal government is levying substantial taxes upon welfare and charitable organizations, engaged in work that commands the respect of all citizens and commands, I hope, the active support of all of us in this house. The fact of the matter is that, with some exceptions, charitable organizations in general are not exempted from the full effect of the sales and excise taxes levied by the federal government.

These organizations exist in large measure, and are enabled to carry on their beneficent work, only because generous citizens contribute to their support. They do not receive assistance from the federal government. Whatever assistance they receive from governmental sources comes at the municipal level. Most of them function entirely upon assistance received from charitably disposed citizens. Yet the federal government is applying to organizations of this kind, engaged in work of the highest value to this nation, the full weight of these heavy sales and excise taxes.

In the year 1950 the house did give some relief in this field by amending the Excise Tax Act to exempt from those taxes otherwise levied under that act certain definite charitable organizations. The group so defined is altogether too narrow in its scope. There was not, as I recall it, any opposition in this house to the amendment then to the Excise Tax Act. The criticism that was made at that time was that the exemption was being extended to an altogether too narrow group of charitable organizations. The group defined by the 1950 amendment is as follows:

> (a) a bona fide public institution whose principal purpose is to provide permanent or semi-permanent shelter and care for children or aged, infirm or incapacitated persons who reside in the institution; and
> (b) in receipt annually of aid from the government of Canada or a province for the maintenance of persons specified in paragraph (a).

The exemption, of course, applies only in the event of purchases by such organizations of goods for their own use, and not for resale. In anything I have to say today on this subject I am confining my request to circumstances under which charitable organizations purchase goods for their own use and not for resale.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, how very narrow is the relief extended by that 1950 amendment. It does not include the vast majority of organizations in this country engaged in charitable and philanthropic work. It does not, for instance, include welfare agencies that, in the bulk, constitute the membership of the various community chests of the larger cities of this country. It does not include, for instance, children's aid assistance, family welfare agencies, the various visiting nurses associations, community chests and welfare councils. My submission to this committee is that this principle ought to be extended to the full scope of all charitable organizations that have a well organized existence.

There may be some charitable organizations that are not sufficiently organized to have established their identity, with the prospect of continued existence, to satisfy any reasonable government demand. But I am dealing in the main here with organizations with well established positions, permanent in their nature, and undertaking to do that work which, unhappily in many cases, is bound to be virtually permanent in its nature.

In 1950 the house recognized the principle of exempting certain charitable organizations. By what authority, by what logic, upon what principle, does the government or this house stop at that point and deny other charitable and philanthropic organizations the same kind of exemption? I make bold to say that if the people of this country fully realized the present situation, the public conscience would be shocked to think that the federal government is dipping into the treasury of organizations functioning with funds contributed by charitably disposed citizens, dipping its big hand into the coffers of those organizations whose only source of revenue is charitable donations.

Let us remember always that these excise and sales taxes are hidden taxes. In the main, those who pay them are not aware that they are paying them. They are levied at the manufacturers' or producers' level. The consumer has no knowledge of the proportion of the price that he pays that goes to pay these federal taxes. Let us remember as well, sir, that because these taxes are levied at the manufacturers' level they attract mark-ups as they pass from hand to hand through the wholesaler, the jobber and the retailer. A tax that starts out at the manufacturers' level at 10 per cent in most cases has doubled itself in the course of these mark-ups applied by those who are handling the goods before they ultimately reach the consumer. In the case of most of these goods it is no exaggeration to say that what the consumer is paying is ordinarily closer to 20 per cent than 10 per cent.

The public, I am sure, has only been lulled into the position in which it is today on this matter by reason of the fact that these taxes are hidden. How much is the government taking out of the pockets of charitable organizations in this country through these sales and excise taxes? Well, nobody knows. There has been no nation-wide estimate prepared. The government does not segregate that portion of its sales and excise revenues that are collected from charitable and welfare organizations. I may say that a study was made a year ago by the Canadian Welfare Council in an endeavour to ascertain, as far as might be possible with the sources of information available, what might be estimated to be the amount collected in a year through the sales tax from charitable organizations. I think it will astound members of this House of Commons who have not seen the figure before when they are told that the result of that inquiry by the Canadian Welfare Council was an estimate that the amount of sales tax collected by the federal government in one year from charitable organizations in this country was in excess of $500,000.

The work these organizations are doing commands the respect and admiration of us all. I am sure each member of the house in his own way and according to his own means is trying to contribute to the assistance of these charitable and welfare organizations. How then do we as members of the house justify the imposition by the federal government of taxation upon these organizations? I hope we are not going to be told by the government that there are administrative difficulties in the way. That old excuse has been worn threadbare by this government.

I submit there could not be any administrative difficulty involved in the proposal I am submitting to the house today that was not already involved in the amendment the house approved in 1950. The same problems exist; the difficulties are in no way different in kind.

I, for one, am convinced that if in the face of any administrative difficulty that might be suggested the government would apply to that difficulty the same kind of ingenuity they apply to many other fields, particularly in the levying of taxation, any administrative difficulty could be overcome quickly and effectively.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, while it is evident that the government is not going to do anything about the problem this year—because there is no provision in the budget resolutions to deal with it—I wish to say that I deplore the fact that the government is taking no action in the budget this year. And I say to them that before another year rolls round I would hope that the government's conscience will be roused in this matter, and that it will set itself resolutely to removing what is a crying and cruel injustice.

Sir, this is not a small matter. It is not a small matter in its scope; much less can it be said to be a small matter in the principle involved. Therefore I am appealing to the conscience of the government in the matter.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the matter the hon. member for Eglinton has now spoken about is one I indicated on May 5 I would like to raise when we reached a later stage, possibly that of second reading of the bill. However, as the parliamentary assistant realizes, my reason for making that suggestion on May 5 was to facilitate the passing of the resolution on that day, if possible. Since that was not done I see no reason why we should not have a full discussion now, and I am glad the point has been raised again by the hon. member for Eglinton.

As I said, when I made reference to the question on May 5, as reported at pages 4447 and 4448 of Hansard, the subject was pretty well covered on March 31 last year in speeches made by the hon. member for Eglinton, the hon. member for Spadina and myself. One of my reasons for indicating last year's Hansard reference when I spoke on May 5 was so that the parliamentary assistant might be prepared to deal with the question on a later occasion. I hope he is now ready to deal with it; and I also hope that that does not mean that he is only ready to say no. I would hope that at this time more favourable consideration would be given to the requests from the charitable organizations which have been made to the government on several occasions through the Canadian Welfare Council.

As the hon. member for Eglinton has just pointed out, there is no way of estimating accurately the total amount of sales tax collected from these charitable organizations and institutions; but it has been estimated that something more than half a million dollars is being collected annually from those agencies which come under what are known as community chests.

Those who have been interested in the matter have tried to address themselves to the difficulties raised by the department. I believe it is correct to say they have gained the impression that the main problem raised by the government is the administrative one. Addressing themselves to that objection, the Canadian Welfare Council has made certain specific suggestions to the government as to how the administrative problem might be handled. It seems to me the suggestions they have made could form a basis upon which the question could be handled.

They suggest that in order to qualify for the exemption from sales tax any charitable organization should be one certified by the Department of National Health and Welfare as a bona fide social welfare agency. They suggest also that it might be required that any such charitable organization should be one to which donations are permitted as income tax deductions. Then there are one or two other qualifications to which these people are prepared to agree in order to assist the government in working out the administrative details.

I share the views expressed by the hon. member for Eglinton as to the vicious nature of this tax. The hon. member has expressed himself in his usual strong language concerning this procedure of imposing a sales tax on purchases made by these various charitable organizations, and it is not necessary for other hon. members to repeat what he has said. However, I do press upon the parliamentary assistant and, through him, upon the government the reasonableness and the responsibility with which the Canadian Welfare Council and others who are interested have made their requests to the government. I would impress upon the parliamentary assistant the fact that these people have set out specific proposals and have suggested specific qualifications that might be laid down. I support wholeheartedly their appeal for the extension of sales tax refunds to these bona fide charitable organizations.

I fully realize the hon. member for Spadina is not in his seat at the moment because he is actively involved in the deliberations of one of the five or six committees meeting today. I mention his name, however, because I am sure if he were in the house this afternoon when this matter is being discussed he would support this year, as he did last, the representations being made.

Earlier this afternoon we had an example of the Minister of Finance paying some attention to representations made to him after the bringing down of his budget. I hope that will not be the only example in this session. I would hope that consideration might be given to these representations and that even yet the necessary amendment might be made to the budget resolutions to provide sales tax exemptions for the benefit of these charitable organizations.

Mr. Thatcher: I do not know whether the parliamentary assistant wishes to answer the particular question asked at the moment. If he does not, I should like to say a few words on this legislation. With the minor tax reductions which have been made under the act, I am in accord, but I am sure the parliamentary assistant will forgive me if I say they are completely inadequate. There is no tax that is pleasant; but, as I see it, these hidden taxes that hit the taxpayer when he is not looking are particularly insidious. Last year, although most Canadians failed to realize it, the government collected about $115 from each citizen in indirect taxes. That amounts to about $575 for a family of five. There is an excuse for hidden taxes of that size in wartime, but I cannot see where there is any justification for them in peacetime. The collection of such a large proportion of our taxes by the indirect method is unhealthy to our economy for a number of reasons. In the first place, these excise taxes bear most heavily on the people in the lower income tax groups. In other words, this taxation is not based on ability to pay. For example in purchasing a car, a poor man, or a man in the lower income tax group, must pay the same amount of tax as a wealthier citizen. Such a principle in taxation is not sound.

In the second place, I feel that these excise taxes are discriminatory because they tend to penalize some industries selling in the consumer market, as compared with others. For instance, our automobiles today have a 15 per cent higher tax imposed on them than furs. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, the automobile industry is one industry that should have been given some kind of tax relief under this bill we are discussing today. The automobile is certainly not a luxury. A modern car is part of our Canadian way of life. Yet during the past fiscal year, the government collected from the automobile industry in sales tax and excise tax $162 million. That amount of money was actually more than the automobile industry paid out in wages. Surely, there is something wrong when a situation of this nature can occur. I say that this level of taxation on the automobile industry is discrimination of the worst kind, which simply cannot be justified. There are about 200,000 persons in Canada engaged in producing automobiles and supplying the automotive industry. In keeping this excise tax of 15 per cent on automobiles today, the government is gambling with the future of thousands of working people in that industry.

In the third place, I think it is fairly obvious that these excise tax levies are keeping up prices in many fields unnecessarily. In the fourth place, I think this deceptive form of taxation is poisonous to our democratic way of life. Today there is not one taxpayer in Canada out of a hundred who has even the faintest idea of the amount of tax he is paying each year to this federal government. The average citizen seems to feel that he, at least, is not the one who is paying very much of the nation's tax burden. Many citizens seem to be confident that it is the corporations or the wealthier citizens of this country who are paying most of the federal taxes. Because of that attitude, they often have no hesitation in asking the government for bigger and better federal spending projects. As I see it, those citizens are mistaken. Today it is the Canadian consumer, directly or indirectly, who is shouldering the bulk of the tax load. Today the average citizen is paying 33 cents out of every dollar he earns to one government or the other, whether it is federal, provincial or municipal. But unfortunately, because many of our people cannot see their federal tax which is absorbed in retail prices, they remain blissfully ignorant of the astronomical figures involved in this federal budget that we are now discussing.

I for one do not believe that any tax should be relatively painless. Every citizen should realize the amount of money he is paying in federal taxes. He should realize that every time he makes a purchase today the government is dipping into his pocket. He should realize that no matter how low his income may be, he is still contributing to the cost of governing this country.

I know that today it would not be feasible for the government to wipe out all excise taxes; but failing that, I suggest it would be a great forward step if manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers were required to label their goods in such a manner that the federal tax would be shown separately and distinctly. Then, when a citizen went to purchase a new car, a refrigerator or clothing he would see how much he was actually paying in federal taxes.

Mr. McCann: Does the hon. member do that in his business?

Mr. Thatcher: No, but I think it would be a very good idea if all retailers did so on a nation-wide basis.

Mr. McCann: Does the hon. member not know that he has the privilege of doing that? I do not want to interfere with his business. Perhaps it is none of my business, but I should be quite surprised if the hon. member did not mark up his goods with the tax included, and take his profit on both.

Mr. Thatcher: The minister need not be so touchy. I made a suggestion which I thought might be a good one. If he does not wish to carry it out, of course that is his privilege. But I suggest it would be a good thing not only for citizens generally, but also for the minister, if it were required that taxes be shown on sales tickets. If such a procedure were followed the citizen would comprehend much more clearly that before any government can spend a dollar or give away a dollar, it must first of all collect that dollar in taxes. If the citizen realized that the dollar which was being spent might be his own, he would exercise greater care in the future in making demands on the government. Most citizens under those circumstances would regulate their demands for government spending, in accordance with their willingness to pay taxes. In other words, I think that such a policy would make citizens more tax conscious and more government conscious. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the government today, in collecting 34 per cent of its revenue by the backdoor method, is making a serious error. If they continue to do so, there may be repercussions in the future.

Mr. Garland: Since the Minister of Finance brought down his budget on April 6 I have had some correspondence from members of the soft drink industry, and I hope the committee will not mind my mentioning the soft drink industry because it is of that industry that I have some knowledge.

The soft drink industry is concerned over paragraph 6, which reads as follows:

That provision be made to require the payment of sales and excise taxes on the packaging used to contain goods subject to these taxes and on any other articles packaged with them whether the goods are imported, or are manufactured or produced in Canada.

I rise merely to have that point clarified. We in the soft drink industry are in this position with regard to packaging. The title does not pass. The bottles in which the goods are contained are put into the store on a deposit basis, and therefore it seems to me that we would not be taxable. But with respect to this section on packaging, the industry has expressed some concern. I merely want the assurance of the parliamentary assistant at this time that it is not the intention to impose any further taxation in this regard.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, with your permission, it is my intention at this time to discuss at some length paragraph 4, subparagraph (c), of the Excise Tax Act. I have made some extensive inquiries among practical experts in municipal affairs, Mr. Chairman, about this paragraph, but I have not been able to find anyone who had a word to say for the government's reply to the many pleas and representations that have been made by the 4,000 municipalities in our country. Nor have I found anyone who could explain the purpose of this, with the possible exception of a few realists who seem to think that this is another one of the government's tokens, tokens to which we have become accustomed in the past. Our hard-pressed municipal administrators are too close to the realities of ever-mounting expenses and the ever-widening gap between revenue and financial responsibilities to be taken in for a moment by the niggardly action described under paragraph 4 (c), which reads as follows:

(c) equipment sold to or imported by municipalities for their own use and not for resale, at a price in excess of one thousand dollars per unit, specially designed for use directly for road making, road cleaning or fire fighting, but not to include automobiles nor ordinary motor trucks;

In the first place it is limited to two classes of municipal expenses, those on roads and those on fire-fighting equipment. In the second place it limits exemption to purchases within these categories where the per unit cost exceeds $1,000. In the third place the road equipment is limited to road making and road cleaning. In the fourth place it attempts to set up a new category of equipment unknown in the business world, and that is the phrase "ordinary motor trucks".

I shall discuss these absurdities in detail in a moment. First of all, however, I think it should be said that the offhand and careless manner in which this important subject has been dealt with in the budget appears to me, and to many others with a special knowledge and experience in municipal finance, to prove as conclusively as nothing else could the complete unconcern of the government at the plight of the municipalities in this matter of excessive federal taxation.

Here in this expression of government policy, Mr. Chairman, we have the evidence that the representations of worried and harassed municipal officials and their associations are regarded by this government as unworthy of serious attention or honest thought, and even of reasonably precise draftsmanship.

The shock with which the budget announcement was received by municipal officials throughout Canada was twofold. First of all, there was the keenest disappointment that the request for fair treatment for the municipal level of government had been so arbitrarily—I might say almost jocularly—brushed aside. The fair treatment which they demanded, and which they still demand, is the same treatment in the matter of tax exemption for the poorest level of government, that is municipal, as that enjoyed by the richer provincial and federal levels of government. Instead they received this thoughtless brush-off, and I for one can only hope that we can impute to it no more sinister motive than political expediency, or a misguided ministerial or departmental sense of humour.

Secondly, there was something close to despair when it was realized that the detailed representations made by the municipalities have resulted only in this impractical declaration of policy with which a first-year school trustee would have been ashamed to be associated.

The first absurdity is the limitation of exemptions to road and fire-fighting equipment. What possible sense can this make? Does this government really think that roads and fires are some special kind of municipal responsibility? Apparently so, and it would seem, therefore, to be time for somebody to make it clear that these are only two categories, of hundreds of categories of municipal services, which are today of the utmost importance to millions of Canadian home owners. I cannot believe that anyone with any knowledge of municipal government would have omitted, for example, school expenditures, hospital and social welfare expenditures, when these exemptions were being considered.

Mr. Benidickson: Hospitals are exempt.

Mr. Starr: Certain items, but not all.

Mr. Benidickson: Everything is exempt in the case of public hospitals and certain institutions.

Mr. Starr: Not in the construction stage.

Mr. Benidickson: Building materials are generally exempt from the sales tax.

Mr. Starr: There are, of course, some general exemptions applicable here, but the fact remains that millions of dollars are still being exacted in tribute by the federal government from the efforts of our municipalities to provide adequate education for our youth, hospitalization for the sick, and comfort for our senior citizens in their old age.

We all know, Mr. Chairman, that in other fields we regard some kinds of money as tainted. I respectfully suggest to the government that any money it obtains from these sources falls into that category. We know that, according to current fiscal policies, some fields of taxation are regarded as especially fair game to the taxing authorities. I suggest that the field of school, hospital and social welfare expenditures by municipal governments is one on which our people would, if they could, post "no hunting" signs, and expect them to be honoured, even by the federal government.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is not too much for the municipalities to ask, even at this late date, that an immediate survey be made by the government of this whole field of municipal expenditures so that whatever action may be taken in the future it will at least be realistic, practical and in keeping with the facts of the situation, not just with the fancies of some dreaming draftsman.

To give only a single example from a jurisdiction with which I am familiar, a general exemption from sales tax of school board purchases in the city of Oshawa alone would mean a saving of some $35,000 to $40,000 to the citizens of that community. To carry the matter further, the decision of the government to grant equal and fair treatment to municipalities in this whole matter of sales and excise taxes would mean a saving to that one community alone of almost $200,000, or more than three mills in the municipal assessment. The second absurdity—

Mr. Benidickson: When my hon. friend refers to $35,000 as a tax saving for the school board in Oshawa, is he including in that amount the expense of construction?

Mr. Starr: No, just ordinary purchases of school supplies. The second absurdity in the token treatment the municipalities received last April is the limitation of the exemption to unit purchases exceeding $1,000. What possible sense can this have? Does it mean that this government believes that there is some virtue, worthy of special reward, in big and better spending? Perhaps so, for we have some evidence that some of our federal departments seem to think so. But, Mr. Chairman, municipalities have not yet, the Lord be praised, caught this glamorous federal government disease. They are not big-time spenders; at least they do not have a big-time spending mentality. Yet, under the present policy of the government, they would be foolish to pay a mere $900 for a road machine, when they could actually win friends in this government, and even save money, by paying $1,001.

But apart from that aspect, I am wondering if the government in its mania for large spending, has completely forgotten that $1,000 in many little items is just as important to the municipal taxpayer as $1,000 spent on a single item. The very nature of municipal financing means an excess of small over large items. It is part and parcel of the thrift and good housekeeping which characterizes municipal spending. Yet it is currently penalized, and penalized heavily, by the federal government.

The third absurdity—I might almost call it a prize boner—is the limitation of road equipment exemptions to road making and road cleaning. Has anyone in this government ever stopped to think that the making and cleaning of roads constitutes actually less than 50 per cent of average road expenditures by municipalities? In other jurisdictions, of course, these may well represent a larger proportion of the whole, but on the municipal level road maintenance is the big item. Then why was it not mentioned? Perhaps some will say that this is a mere technicality, but I cannot agree. The words as they stand are specific and they do not include maintenance; nor do they include bridges which are also an important item in municipal expenditures. If the omission was merely carelessness—as I suspect it was—then our municipalities at least know to what extent they may in the future expect serious, thoughtful and painstaking consideration of their problems by the present government.

The fourth absurdity—and it has already caused endless difficulty—is the careless phrase "ordinary motor trucks". Can anyone on the government side of the house—or anywhere else, for that matter—tell me what an "ordinary motor truck" is? Is it a motor truck to which no snowplow is attached? If so—and I believe that is the current ruling—does it cease to be ordinary when the snowplow is attached? Should the municipality, therefore, pay its toll to the federal government in summer but not in winter, in good weather but not in bad? And what, Mr. Chairman, may I ask, is so terrible or wrong about ordinary motor trucks? Again, are municipalities to be encouraged to purchase extraordinary equipment just because the federal government has some strange animus against municipalities buying the simplest and cheapest equipment that will serve their purposes? I confess that I do not know the answer to these questions, nor indeed do any of the many municipal officials I have asked.

These are absurdities, Mr. Chairman, but I do plead with the government when next it addresses itself to this urgent problem—if it ever does—not to be content with merely removing absurdities. Surely, sir, in all humanity and fairness, it must go much farther. It must give the most serious consideration to the complete removal of the present discrimination by one government against 4,000 others. That, in the last analysis, is exactly what the present situation is. It is more than that. It is a sort of discrimination which is beating the weaker brethren of the family into the ground. That is no exaggeration. Has anyone in this house ever heard of citizens going around from door to door, begging money on behalf of the federal government? Of course not. Even to suggest it seems ridiculous.

The federal government is the well-heeled big-time spender among the Canadian governments. It is one in 4,011 governments in Canada which has no money problems. It has unlimited powers to raise money and it uses them often and flamboyantly whenever a need, or fancied need, arises. We are all admittedly envious; this is especially so of the municipalities. They are so far from well-heeled that, today, every one of the 4,000 has to depend on the charity of its citizens for its most essential services. I wonder if there is, at this moment, a single municipality in all Canada where citizens are not voluntarily going from door to door, from farmhouse to farmhouse, begging for funds for a hospital, a school, a library or a school bus—probably just an ordinary bus, which the federal government would not even give garage room to.

Our people are giving—and giving generously—to these appeals. And yet, Mr. Chairman, those very donations will sooner or later be reduced by 10 or 15 or even as much as 25 per cent, if they are applied against purchases upon which the federal government insists on its preposterous rake-off. Of course, we can warn them not to buy "ordinary motor trucks" and to insist instead on their money being used to buy extraordinary ones; but it is more likely than not, sir, that these charity donations will be applied against a variety of small and simple needs, the very category of municipal expenditure on which the federal excise tax of 15 per cent and sales tax of 10 per cent are levied. It should be added here, perhaps, that every municipal official knows that the alleged 10 per cent sales tax is nothing but a statistician's fiction. Actually, when mark-ups are added all along the line to the manufacturer's price plus sales tax, the federal government is found to add 15 or 16 per cent to the consumer's cost.

The Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has presented many briefs to the government on the subject, because they know that their members regard it as the most urgent matter of relief which they need to face the emergencies of supply before them. Many of them have seen their populations double and even treble in the post-war years, and yet they are allowed a much smaller share of the Canadian tax dollar than at any time in Canadian history.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is an acknowledged principle of our way of life that the strong must help the weak, that the rich must assist the poor, and that great power involves great responsibilities. If those principles, upon which I am sure we are agreed in this place, are applied to this request, I am sure that there still will be no doubt about its disposition. I hope that the government will give this matter more careful consideration and eventually accede to the pleas and demands of the municipalities and the Canadian home owners at this time.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few remarks to make on these budget resolutions. First of all I should like to say that I thoroughly support the remarks that have already been made by the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and that I do not propose to reiterate what they have already said. However, I should like to say that I think the 10 per cent sales tax and the excise taxes that are levied against bona fide charitable organizations and national organizations of a health and welfare service nature such as the Canadian Cancer Society should not be levied and that consideration should be given by the Minister of Finance to the removal of those taxes. In view of the change of mind that we had in the minister with respect to mutual insurance companies already, I hope that before the session ends we might have another change of mind with respect to such organizations as I have just mentioned.

I mention the Canadian Cancer Society because it is an organization that I have had the honour and the pleasure of working with in the past. The matter of this 10 per cent sales tax on material that is purchased by the Canadian Cancer Society is a very real item. I think we all know that the Canadian Cancer Society is doing an extremely fine job in this country in combating one of the most dread of all diseases that we have not yet found a method of coping with adequately. The Canadian Cancer Society spends a great deal of its funds on research and on public education and information so that people can get medical treatment in time for, if not a cure, at least an extension of life. The Canadian Cancer Society also provides free dressings and comforts for those who are unable to provide them themselves. At the present time this particular association is attempting to raise funds. I think it is rather appropriate for me to make these remarks at this time, having regard to the great expenses involved in printing and stationery, advertising and in canvassing material for all the thousands of voluntary canvassers all over the country. If the 10 per cent sales tax were to be removed from all this printing and stationery that is necessary for this purpose it would make a real contribution to helping the society carry out its work which is of a type that could affect every hon. member in this house in a very personal way at some time as well as every person in the dominion.

In closing these remarks, may I say that it has always seemed strange to me that, whereas a person is allowed to make certain deductions from taxable income for donations to organizations such as the Canadian Cancer Society and so on, the government, giving with one hand, should with the other hand proceed to levy a sales tax on those contributions to welfare and charitable organizations. It does not seem consistent. It does not seem to make good sense, and I hope that some consideration will be given to removing this very offensive tax.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to say a word or two. Before the parliamentary assistant closes this discussion, I hope he will clarify in the minds of some of us the question of taxes paid by charitable organizations on purchases that they make. I listened to the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The last speaker said that the Canadian Cancer Society should not have to pay the tax on the dressings that they purchase. They should be entitled to relief, but I am not so sure about the question of advertising. Newspapers are going to charge full rates for advertising and if the tax is going to be charged then let it be charged. Nobody should make any money out of it. I want this matter cleared up in my own mind. Some organizations are entitled to exemption and some are not. Let us know which are and which are not and the reason why. For many reasons I think it is necessary that that should be known.

There is one type of charitable organization that I think should receive some consideration. I have had correspondence with the department in the past about this matter. All across the country you will find church groups organizing boys' camps. It costs a lot of money, and the money has to be collected from the community. When such a camp is established it is necessary to purchase baseball and other equipment in order to promote sports and carry out the purpose for which the camp is organized. Such equipment is taxed. On several occasions I have appealed to the department and have cited specific cases but up to this time the situation remains the same. The tax was not changed.

There is another problem which, although it may be isolated, does arise from time to time in many communities. Many communities throughout Canada maintain local bands. A year ago I wrote the minister about a certain band in a rural community. This band has been in operation since 1914. They do not have very much money. When there are military or other demonstrations in the community the band plays and serves the purpose. Under the regulations a band of this description cannot get an exemption on the purchase of equipment. The band to which I have referred gathered together enough money to buy some instruments and found that by purchasing them in the old country they could save over $1,000. When you have to knock on doors and collect ten cent pieces to buy equipment a saving of $1,000 means a great deal. But when the equipment arrives in Canada the tax on it pretty well cuts the saving in two. This is not a commercial band. The people do not get paid for appearances at Legion gatherings and so on.

In any event, the tax has to be paid. The minister was sorry but the regulations did not permit him to make any changes. Apparently no change is being made by these amendments, but the matter might be taken under advisement for next year. The extenuating circumstances might be looked at and something might be done to relieve that type of organization. There are community bands in many places throughout the country, but I have pinpointed this one because I happen to live nearby. The application of the sales tax to another category is, in my opinion, discriminatory.

Mr. Ferguson: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he suggest that the tax be taken off bagpipes?

Mr. Gillis: I do not suggest that. If the hon. member is asking me that question, I suggest that he get in touch with Senator Reid and ascertain first of all whether the bagpipes are a weapon or an instrument. If it is his interpretation that they are a musical instrument then I will go along with removing the tax. I was about to direct the attention of the parliamentary assistant to another matter involving manufacturers of cabinets and equipment of that kind who employ quite a large staff. The sales tax does not apply in that case because as far as such a manufacturer is concerned he does not sell directly but farms out his product to retailers. He is not taxed on the cabinets, window frames and so on that he manufactures. There is no sales tax.

I have had a decision from the department within the last year involving a small shop. A small shop in the same city may employ two or three people and the owner also works. He turns out the same type of equipment but on a much smaller scale and sells directly.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend must be careful not to mix sashes with cabinets. Sashes are considered to be building material and are exempt, but cabinets are looked upon as furniture and would be subject to tax.

Mr. Gillis: In the case I am talking about the larger plant is exempt. That manufacturer is not paying any sales tax, but the people responsible for enforcing the taxation regulations in the same city have told the owner of the smaller shop that he has to pay the 10 per cent sales tax and include it in the cost of his product. That increases the cost of his product compared with the cost of the product of the larger shop, and so far as competition is concerned the smaller shop is under a handicap.

Mr. Benidickson: I think my hon. friend must be mixing up a sash and door factory with a small furniture factory.

Mr. Gillis: If the parliamentary assistant will look at the departmental files, he will find that I set out the case in detail with all the facts and figures. I regret to say that I did not get any adjustment. That was the way it was and that was the way it had to be. I say it is discrimination against the smaller manufacturer, with two or three employees, who is trying to eke out an existence. It would appear that no change has been made in the regulations, and the smaller manufacturer with not much capital is put in a very bad competitive position when there is a large plant nearby doing the same type of work that does not have the additional handicap of the sales tax.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre and others have referred to the application of the sales tax. Every time I hear that matter discussed I always think about dominion-provincial relations. I cannot understand how some people can reconcile the attitude of asking the federal government to pay everything while at the same time authority remains in the hands of other bodies. I agree with the member for Ontario in his plea for the municipalities, but to help the municipalities you have got to go through the provincial governments. The federal government cannot make any grants or concessions directly to municipalities.

Mr. Trainor: They are already making them.

Mr. Gillis: Well, I do not think it is going to help them very much. There is a lot of thinking to be done on this problem. We have to look at the British North America Act, and at the interpretation the Supreme Court of Canada has put upon it. In my opinion you will find the Supreme Court of Canada has completely nullified the intentions of the fathers of confederation. These things are all tied in with this whole question.

I feel that a municipality that buys fire-fighting equipment, largely on orders from the civil defence organization today which is demanding uniformity of hose couplings and that sort of thing, should at least be exempt from paying taxes on that equipment. This is part of our defence set-up. In the first place, I believe it should be the responsibility of the federal government to supply this equipment, because there are many small communities that would be very important in the chain of civil defence, and who could very well get along with a less expensive type of equipment, that are forced to have this interchangeable equipment because of a large community close by. This expensive interchangeable equipment is a part of our national program today. I am not going to repeat the argument made by the hon. member for Ontario, because I agree with him.

There are many municipalities across Canada that are nearly bankrupt, and that have no means of taxation except the property tax. This tax is about as high as it can go. I feel the problem has to be argued through the provincial government, and some uniform system arrived at. We could make a start by helping the municipalities, as the hon. member for Ontario has suggested.

Now, this sales tax generally, as it is today, does not amount to 10 per cent at all. Take as an example an article you are importing from the United States, such as a part for an automobile. When it comes into the country it costs perhaps $2. The person who imports it passes on the cost of the article plus whatever duty he paid on it, and then on top of that he adds the 10 per cent sales tax. The article goes to someone else in the city of Toronto, and he adds the 10 per cent sales tax on top of the other fellow's mark-up, the sales tax he paid and the duty he paid at the border. By the time the article passes through three or four hands, as it will in many instances, and the consumer gets it in the maritimes or out in British Columbia, that sales tax amounts to over 100 per cent. It is the method of applying the tax that is wrong.

If we are going to have a sales tax, it should be imposed at the manufacturers' level and the article stamped to show the sales tax has been paid. Then, when it is resold, no one in Canada should be permitted to charge any more sales tax on it. The tax was paid at the manufacturers' level and it was worked into the cost; that is where it should end. It is the pyramiding of this tax right along the line, and the tax being added to a profit of perhaps 20 per cent or 30 per cent by someone along the line, that is the thing that really hurts in the application of the sales tax. If the tax is going to be applied by the retailer, then no one but the retailer should charge that sales tax. If the hon. member for Moose Jaw, for example, were to sell me a refrigerator and the sales tax were going to be paid by him, then no one else should impose it. He should mark the 10 per cent tax on the bill he issues to me, then show the cost of the refrigerator so that I would know what I was paying. That would be a direct tax.

The way this tax is imposed now, it is an indirect tax. It has become a tax on a tax, and a tax on a profit, and instead of being 10 per cent in many cases it runs over 100 per cent. I know the department is aware of this because the subject has been mentioned year after year. I have read speeches made in this house years ago that mentioned this very thing. I believe it is time someone in the department began to sort it out. I know the popular thing to do is to say you are against taxes altogether, but if we are going to function we have to have them. I feel they are misused and abused. I believe the government is getting a lot of blame it does not deserve. The only people who set out the tax as a separate item are the printers. If you go into a printer's shop and get a bill you will see that the printing is shown as so much and then the sales tax is added to that. You know what you are paying. This idea of telling the small manufacturer that he is to apply that sales tax but not to show it, to work it into the cost, is bad. The minister has a file on this kind of thing that I sent him dealing with printing in one instance, and dealing with the small—

Mr. McCann: The small lumber mills and so on; they all added the tax and showed it.

Mr. Gillis: There was one chap about whom I wrote, and he was told not to show it but to work it into his cost.

Mr. McCann: By whom?

Mr. Gillis: By the inspector who goes in and looks at the books to see if the tax is being applied.

Mr. McCann: He may have been told, Mr. Chairman, that he need not show it but I would suggest that he was not told not to show it.

Mr. Gillis: What is the difference? The one way would be dishonest and the other would be honest.

Mr. McCann: They both would be honest practices.

Mr. Gillis: I am not going to argue with the minister, because I intended to do so by correspondence last year. I had the whole case outlined; the instructions from the inspector, the fact they were reviewed at Moncton, and I had the whole thing outlined. I was told that was the way it had to be done. I believe that is the wrong way to apply the taxes. I still believe that if the minister and some of his people would have a look at it there would be a possibility of correcting it. I do not believe the practice is in accordance with the regulations as they are today.

The only reason for making these rambling remarks was the question of purchases made by different charitable organizations in this country. I should like to have that question clarified for my own benefit. I should like to know who are entitled to the exemption, and why they are entitled to it. I should like to know why one charitable organization gets an exemption and another does not. As members of parliament, we are questioned along these lines from time to time, and we are not in a position to give the answers unless we get them here.

Mr. McIvor: I was going to make a suggestion, Mr. Chairman. Those who contribute to charitable organizations get an exemption on their income taxes when they have a receipt. I was going to suggest that any reductions in taxes for charitable organizations—and I think there ought to be—should be levied against incomes. I think that would be the logical way to get it. They have to have taxes anyway.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to support the hon. member for Cape Breton South in his plea to have something done about the present method of imposing the sales tax. I am not going to elaborate except to say I support him and the very fine explanation that he gave to the house of the pyramiding there is of that tax by the time the goods are bought by the consumer. The point I wish to make is not contained within the provisions of the present excise tax amendment. Rather, I want to bring to the attention of the committee a point of administration in connection with the act, and also a point concerning the tax itself.

In Canada the excise tax still applies to motor vehicles sold in this country. While this brings in a large amount of revenue to the federal government, I do feel that in this day and age, when it is recognized by all people that a motorcar is no longer a luxury, but that everyone should have the advantage of owning one, a somewhat different approach might be made to the problem.

On March 10 I received a return to a question I had asked the administration concerning the amount of excise and customs taxes collected by the federal government in connection with the sale of motor vehicles, and this return discloses a total amount of about $90,600,000. I realize that it is easy for a member in an opposition party to rise in the House of Commons and advocate certain tax cuts and changes, because we are not responsible for giving the service of government to our people. In the opposition groups we do make demands upon the government to give extended services; and when I say I think either that this tax should be discarded or that it should be greatly lowered, I do so with a full sense of responsibility.

Speaking for myself, I feel there are other ways the government could collect taxes—

Mr. McIvor: Name them.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): —without levying an excise tax on motor vehicles. It could get revenue from the imposition of an excess profits tax, through which of course it would get money from those corporations that are making excessive profits. In any case this is a tax to which consideration should be given by the taxation branch of the government, so that it may be made possible for more people in this country to buy cars, and to buy them cheaper.

During the Easter recess various distributors of motorcars brought to my attention the fact that in the administration of the act there is a provision which works a hardship upon them. My understanding is that under that provision dealers must pay the tax prior to the sale of the motorcars they hold. Hon. members know very well that the larger dealers may have on their showroom floors perhaps twenty or thirty motor vehicles; and the submission I am making will apply in proportion to the smaller dealers holding a smaller number of cars.

My understanding is that at the moment the dealers must pay the excise tax for the cars they are holding. They must finance those cars through their banks. These are all responsibilities charged upon the distributors of motor vehicles in this country. I maintain this is not fair to the distributor.

Mr. Benidickson: Does my hon. friend realize that all these taxes are paid upon the sale from the manufacturer to the retailer, the wholesaler, or whoever it may be?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I understand that when these cars reach the hands of the distributors they have to pay the tax; and where the cars are held five or six months, as happens on many occasions, this is a charge upon the financial abilities of the distributors.

Mr. Benidickson: That is true of any sale from any manufacturer to any dealer.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I am pointing out a feature in connection with the administration of the act which I do not think is a proper one. I am placing before the committee the hardship which, I say, is suffered by the dealer.

Let me say that in my view there is a way in which this could be avoided. The dealers could be allowed to charge the tax on the car when it is sold. The parliamentary assistant may argue that there would be administrative difficulties. My contention is that there could be a recording of the sales, and that the dealers could be charged at the time sales are made. Certainly it would bring about a condition whereby cars could be sold more cheaply. Because, after all, if the dealers are making a greater profit, that would be taken back by the federal government in the form of income tax. If this would mean lower operating costs for the distributors, then in all likelihood, I suggest, the people of this country would be able to get cheaper motorcars.

I bring these two points to the attention of the committee and the government in the hope that the minister will give them serious consideration. A situation has developed now where many of our dealers, owing to a lack of sales of automobiles and trucks, are not having the extent of turnover they had formerly. I suggest the tax is a hardship on the distributors of motor vehicles.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one brief remark. If there is to be any reduction in the sales tax, then I suggest seriously to the minister that every consideration be given to the abolition of the tax on goods used by charitable institutions for the athletic development of the young people of this country. Those young people should be the primary consideration of each one of us. It is very difficult to supply them with the proper athletic equipment. There is a great lack of it; and if by any chance—and I know money is required to run the country—if by any chance he could add the amount to my income tax, and take it off the kids, I would be delighted. Thank you.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the debate yesterday and today has focused chiefly on the question of the remission of sales tax. In particular members in the opposition parties have suggested that it would be a comparatively easy thing to widen the opportunities for rebate or remission. Let me assure them we are not exaggerating the administrative difficulties of this form of rebate. As hon. members know, the federal tax on commodities is levied at the manufacturers' level; and after that article has passed through several hands it is very difficult to arrange a rebate.

The Leader of the Opposition suggested that in the case of municipalities it might be possible to have them organized as one entity under a provincial government, and that by virtue of that situation the number of units with which the federal government would have to deal would be reduced. It is true that at the moment provincial governments are exempt from federal taxation. This is not as a result of any concessions, or because these matters are easy to administer. It results from our constitution. That constitution, established more than eighty years ago, has stated that neither government could tax the other.

That particular constitutional requirement does not extend to municipalities. There are more than four thousand municipalities with which the federal government would have to deal in matters of this kind. I repeat that the administrative difficulties must not be minimized. And in support of that I would draw to the attention of hon. members the fact that in the last few days we have heard a good deal about the closer association between the provinces and the municipalities than exists either legally or constitutionally between the federal government and those municipalities.

Notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding the fact that frequently we have heard the province described as the mother of the municipalities, while sales taxes are imposed by five of our provincial governments I know of none of the five that provides a rebate on purchases of municipalities. In addition to that, even when we get into the field of remission with respect to charitable institutions, it is true that the federal government has provided a certain and a considerable measure of remission to certain defined charitable institutions.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South asked that they be defined. As the hon. member for Eglinton said, we have had this provision since 1950, and the institutions that are free from federal sales tax are those bona fide institutions that care for children, the aged, the infirm, the incapacitated, if the institution qualifies and receives a grant either from a federal or from a provincial government. That means that all this class of institutions, in so far as federal sales tax is concerned, gets a rebate. On the other hand, hon. members will again recognize that there is a much closer relationship, in the field of health and welfare, between a provincial administration and hospitals than there is between the federal government and those hospitals. But I know of no provincial government—and there are many that are imposing sales tax—that provides similar remission on the purchases for hospitals.

The hon. member for Ontario referred, as a specific example, to the possibility that a school board in his city might save considerable sums were they not subject to a federal tax. I indicated to him that practically all building materials are among that wide class that are exempted from federal sales tax; but this is not true in the case of five of the provinces that impose sales taxes. In other words, if a school board in any of those five provinces had to pay out taxpayers' funds for the construction of new buildings, it would be exempt from federal tax in so far as practically all the materials that go into that building are concerned. But in the case of those provinces that impose a sales tax, they would have to pay to the provinces a sales tax, even though, as I say, we have heard frequently of the close relationship, of motherhood, of the municipalities to the provinces.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask a question? In the case of how many of the provinces which do impose a sales tax is that sales tax applicable to construction materials entering into the building of schools?

Mr. Benidickson: Building materials as a class are generally taxable under the sales tax provisions of the five taxing provinces; whereas the—

Mr. Fleming: Will the parliamentary assistant state what provinces do impose sales tax on construction materials entering into schools?

Mr. Benidickson: My point was that exemptions are not provided by those provincial administrations to municipalities or school boards; and since they generally tax building materials, school boards would have to pay the tax on the materials that go into the construction of schools.

Mr. Fleming: Will my friend answer that question, then? Will he tell us in what provinces sales taxes are levied on construction materials that enter into the erection of schools?

Mr. Benidickson: My source of information is a book put out last year for the Canadian Tax Foundation by John F. Due, and in that—

Mr. Ferguson: We would rather take the government's figures.

Mr. Benidickson: —he says that building materials are taxable in these five provinces, namely, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Quebec, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Mr. Fleming: Does the author of the work in question say that the provincial sales tax in that case is applicable to construction materials entering into the erection of schools?

Mr. Benidickson: I think my hon. friend can assume that from the explanation that I have given him. I certainly do.

Mr. Hodgson: The parliamentary assistant does not know that for a fact.

Mr. Benidickson: In addition, so that this question of administrative difficulty is not minimized, I want to point out to the hon. members that in the case of those five provinces that impose sales tax, they themselves have seen the administrative convenience of taxing even the departments of the provinces in connection with their purchases. Again, in the case of the federal government, so difficult and costly is the paper work in connection with exemptions, rebates and remissions, hon. members know that similarly in the case of the federal government the purchases of those departments bear sales tax.

Mr. Nicholson: It is indirect; therefore it is much easier to pay.

Mr. Benidickson: I suggest to my hon. friend the very opposite. I suggest to my hon. friend that when a sales tax is imposed at the manufacturer's level, and when that article is sold at retail level without the tax being specified, administratively it is much more difficult to provide a rebate in connection with the federal tax than it would be in the case of the provinces where the tax is imposed at the retail level and, as my hon. friends have pointed out, is seen.

Mrs. Fairclough: Is it not true that the department does have a formula for providing for these rebates where they are in order?

Mr. Benidickson: In connection with the institutions, there is a rough formula, but it is not, as I say, too easy to operate administratively. We would find a terrific enlargement of the people with whom we would have to deal if we widened it beyond what we are doing.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is done all the time now, though.

Mr. Benidickson: It was suggested yesterday that even when one does a good thing or moves along, as we are in this particular instance, in an experiment or an innovation, there are people who are bound to say: Well, it is not good enough. We have had some very vehement criticism on a couple of points this afternoon from hon. members of the official opposition particularly. I remind them that municipalities have made those same requests during the period in the life and memory of hon. members facing me when administrations that were of their choice had an opportunity to rectify this particular point and did not.

Mr. Fleming: The problem is infinitely more acute today.

Mr. Benidickson: I suggest to my hon. friend again the very opposite. I draw to his attention the predicament of the municipalities when friends of his were in power politically on the last occasion, and I say that most municipalities by no means are having the difficulty financially today that they had then.

Mr. Ferguson: That was right after the Liberal party started the depression, you mean. It started in 1929.

Mr. Benidickson: That opportunity was not taken. The tax exemption suggestions of course come very easily from people in opposition. We have also heard this afternoon about some inequity in taxes of the indirect type. Again I remind my hon. friends that when that government, again of their choice, levied the tax, some 63 per cent of the total taxes received by the federal administration were of the indirect type that has been criticized this afternoon.

Mr. Fleming: The total amount was only a fraction of what it is today.

Mr. Benidickson: In contrast to some 30 per cent at present.

Mr. Rowe: Will the parliamentary assistant permit a question? Will he tell us what percentage the dominion government allowed the provinces to collect of the total tax of the dominion at that time, compared with today?

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps I can give that to my hon. friend at another time.

Mr. Fleming: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend if it is not convenient, but he—

Mr. Benidickson: I listened pretty attentively to my hon. friend yesterday, though I was prompted several times to correct him.

Mr. Fleming: Does my hon. friend not wish to answer the question now? If not, I shall leave the matter until later.

Mr. Rowe: If you could correct him, why would you not answer him?

Mr. Fleming: I was going to ask my hon. friend this question. Instead of talking about the averages, will he deal with absolute figures of taxes collected, both of a direct and an indirect nature, by the federal government? Let him go back to the year 1935 and compare that with 1953-54.

Mr. Benidickson: I think percentages are a fairer comparison in connection with the point that I have just mentioned; but I want to say this—

Mr. Rowe: I hope you can correct him better than you can answer him.

Mr. Benidickson: As I said on May 5, we are taking the first step in this respect. I listened to my hon. friend from Peace River, and I recall that in the debate last year he himself said that if a total exemption could not be provided it would be a very desirable thing to pick out the more costly items of municipal expenditure and provide an exemption with respect to them. That, as an experiment and innovation, is being done this year. My hon. friend from Peace River the other day made certain assertions about the tax on automobiles, and he referred particularly to the weight of tax on school buses. It is true that there is a sales tax on school buses, but I would remind my hon. friend, if he is not already aware of this, that there is no excise tax on a bus or on a truck.

During his speech the hon. member made a reference to the tax on certain motor vehicles and I was a little surprised to find that in the figures he gave he was referring to an ordinary Chevrolet car and gave the factory price at some $2,200. I made some inquiries today in regard to a Chevrolet standard two-door sedan and I find that the retail price, not the factory price, of that vehicle was $2,190 and the tax was not in excess of $500 but amounted to $370.

Mr. Low: That is the manufacturer's level. I referred, of course, to the retail level.

Mr. Benidickson: Yesterday my hon. friend used the word "factory" level.

Mr. Low: I said the tax average at the manufacturer's level.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, but the tax is certainly not over $500.

Mr. Low: If the parliamentary assistant will refer to the other part of my speech he will see exactly what I meant. I said that by the time the purchaser bought the car from the retailer he had to pay over $500 in taxes.

Mr. Benidickson: In this particular case the same point has been made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. He made the suggestion that there should be some special marking of the taxes which are applied, but that is generally true in a large item such as an automobile, and in most cases the dealer indicates not only the sales tax but the excise tax. In my investigation this morning I found that that was done and both these taxes were spelled out on the tag attached to the car.

Mr. Trainor: But may I point out that the motorcar industry is the one single exception in this regard.

Mr. Benidickson: I think there are probably some others, but this is a conspicuous example. In this connection I made another small calculation which may be of interest to my hon. friend from Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. I do not know whether in spelling out certain items of cost he, as a merchant, would also wish to set out the cost price. In the case of the automobile, by the mere fact that they specify the 10 per cent sales tax, it is very easy to determine the manufacturer's price of that vehicle. I checked on another low-priced car. The delivery or retail price was $2,245; I found that the sales tax was $137. With these particulars one can very easily calculate that the manufacturer's selling price is $1,377 and the total taxes amount to $343. I believe my hon. friend told us that generally speaking taxes were the equivalent of the wages paid out by the automobile industry, and perhaps even more. Let us say, the tax and wages would amount to $680. But I have found that the dealer's mark-up accounts for some $525. Now, my hon. friend, as a retailer, can use his own judgment in regard to specifying and marking the 10 per cent sales tax on some of these articles, but I do not think he would do that in his own business.

Mr. Thatcher: I would be delighted to do that for the parliamentary assistant if others would do likewise.

Mr. Benidickson: That is a good proviso.

Mr. Thatcher: There is no sense in my doing it alone.

Mr. Rowe: That sounds like free enterprise.

Mr. Benidickson: We have had some figures presented to the committee as to the probable saving which could be made by municipalities were they not subject to the sales tax, but on some occasions I have found these figures very vague and the language difficult to comprehend. For example, in the case of the city of Edmonton, the Leader of the Opposition used these words, as reported at page 4774 of Hansard for May 17, 1954:

> We find . . . that last year the mayor of the city of Edmonton stated that if the dominion had paid its share of the general obligations that the municipalities have been asking the dominion to bear, there would be a saving of approximately $600,000 in that city.

Hon. members will easily recognize that that certainty cannot be tied down to the sales tax. My hon. friend from Eglinton very quickly accepted his leader's figures in the case of Montreal, and I have no doubt that in the case of Montreal the sales figure referred to includes the other sales tax I mentioned which is imposed by the provincial government.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend should not assume that. The figure given by the Leader of the Opposition was provided by authentic Montreal sources—

Mr. Benidickson: I will quote the words.

Mr. Fleming: —and the figure I quoted as to Toronto in regard to taxes amounting to $500,000 was a federal tax. My hon. friend knows there is no provincial sales tax in Ontario.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend, as was the case recently, is not too careful with his figures. I would like to refer to his last radio address over a national network when he used an astounding figure in regard to taxes on automobiles. He said, and I have a copy of the speech here, that in the United States the sales tax amounted to $90 on certain low-priced cars. Now, I know that the federal sales tax on automobiles in the United States is 10 per cent and I do not know of any car which sells at the manufacturer's level for $90.

Mr. Ferguson: The car does not sell for $90. Surely he did not say that.

Mr. Benidickson: I beg your pardon, $900.

Mr. Ferguson: I beg your pardon for correcting you.

Mr. Benidickson: The other day I made certain inquiries with respect to cars in the low-priced field and I found that across the border the cheapest of these low-priced cars sold for $1,250, and I find that in Canada the same car at the manufacturer's level costs $1,356. I suggest to my hon. friend that he cannot indicate any car in the United States which bears a tax of only $90, and to which he made reference in his radio address. I also want to point out that in—

Mr. Fleming: May I ask my hon. friend what tax that car bears?

Mr. Benidickson: Ten per cent without state tax.

Mr. Fleming: Then that tax would be $125 in the United States.

Mr. Benidickson: That would be the minimum. The factory price is somewhat higher in Canada.

There were one or two other points raised during the debate to which I think I should reply. The hon. member for Nipissing referred to an item in the excise resolutions and asked whether this would have the effect of making the containers or bottles for the soft drink industry taxable. If those containers are returnable, as is generally the case, they will not be subject to excise tax by reason of this change. However, I understand there is some tendency to distribute beverages in cans. If they are distributed in cans that are thrown away, the can as well as the content would be subject to a tax under this regulation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fleming: No, Mr. Chairman. There are some things in the rather bellicose speech of the parliamentary assistant that I think call for some comment.

Mr. McIlraith: It was the interruptions that were bellicose.

Mr. Fleming: No. It was the tone of the parliamentary assistant's remarks that was bellicose. Apparently the hon. member for Ottawa West was not paying attention.

Mr. McIlraith: No; it was the tone of the interruptions.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member for Ottawa West may have lost interest in what was going on in the house.

I wish to refer briefly, Mr. Chairman, to several of the remarks that have fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman. Let me speak first of all about the matter of the sales tax levied by the federal government and of which he spoke. He undertook to take issue with a figure used by the Leader of the Opposition in his remarks yesterday. The Leader of the Opposition referred to the collection by the federal government of sales tax at the expense of the municipal corporation of Montreal. The parliamentary assistant is asking the committee to believe today that that was a figure of combined federal and provincial sales tax. Mr. Chairman, it is no such thing.

Mr. Benidickson: It included contractors' expenditures.

Mrs. Fairclough: No.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, it did. Read Hansard.

Mr. Fleming: May I say to the hon. gentleman that the source of the figure is a publication of the city of Montreal. In that publication we have this statement:

> The city of Montreal has paid in the year 1951-52 an estimated amount of $382,000 for the federal sales tax of 10 per cent on materials and equipment purchased either by the city itself or by contractors who carry out its works.

Mr. Benidickson: By contractors; surely.

Mr. Fleming: That is the direct expense of the city of Montreal. Is my hon. friend saying that, because the city of Montreal has certain work carried out on its behalf by contractors and therefore it is the contractors who have to pay the federal government, by some magic that is not a federal sales tax paid by the municipality? Surely in this chamber we have not reached the point where that kind of sophistry carries any conviction.

Mr. Benidickson: Does the province of Quebec exempt those contractors' expenditures?

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Fleming: I do not happen to know the answer to that question; and from the way my hon. friend runs away from my question I can judge that he does not know either.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. McIlraith: If he would permit a question, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Hodgson: The hon. member is not a minister.

Mr. McIlraith: Can the hon. gentleman tell the committee who retains ownership of the equipment on which that sales tax is paid? Is it the contractor or is it the city?

Mrs. Fairclough: The city.

Mr. Fleming: Evidently the city. We are not talking simply about purchases of equipment that the contractor used in his own business apart from the city. This is put forward by the city of Montreal as the payment by them of sales tax on materials and equipment purchased either by the city itself or by contractors who carry out its works. That is all passed on by the contractor to the city and, in that way, to the municipal taxpayer. That is the whole point.

Mr. McIlraith: I had understood quite differently the quotation read by the hon. member for Eglinton. I had understood it to imply that the contractor retained ownership of the equipment and that all the city of Montreal was saying in its statement was that the tax those contractors paid was a factor of cost to the city. But it did not go on to say that, as is now being argued, the whole of that tax was applicable to the city and a direct cost on the city as such.

Mr. Fleming: If there was anything lacking in my observations, I must express my appreciation to the hon. member for Ottawa West for having clarified whatever was left in need of clarification in my remarks. We have the statement of the city of Montreal. I made a statement yesterday in this chamber as to the payment of federal sales tax by the city of Toronto, and I said that amount had been calculated by the city treasurer or finance commissioner to be in the sum of $500,000 in a year. Those are incontestable facts. Let us not have any beating about the bush with regard to the matter.

Mr. Benidickson: Has my hon. friend any breakdown of the expenditure?

Mr. Fleming: No; I have not a breakdown. However, that was the statement. I quoted it here yesterday. I quoted it in the house last year. At the same time I said that no one knows how much is being collected by the federal government in sales and excise taxes at the expense of the municipalities because there is no segregation of the figures. In the two instances that are under discussion, we know what those two principal cities in this country are paying; and we can properly infer that substantial amounts of money are being collected by the federal government in sales tax and excise tax at the expense of municipal corporations. I believe a figure has been given for the city of Vancouver. Enough figures are available, Mr. Chairman, to leave no doubt in the mind of anyone who wants information on this subject that the federal government is collecting extremely large sums of money at the expense of the municipalities.

Mr. Benidickson: They will likely find the exemptions for these costly items to be very beneficial.

Mr. Rowe: The few that are being given; yes.

Mr. Fleming: The parliamentary assistant keeps coming back and talking about some items. I have been talking about the actual imposition on the municipal taxpayers of these several cities of federal sales and excise taxes. Those figures are incontestable. I do not quite follow the purport and the purpose of the hon. gentleman's present interruption.

Mr. Lennard: He does not know himself.

Mr. Fleming: Let us turn for a moment to his interesting reference to the collection of sales and excise taxes some twenty years ago. It is an extremely poor answer to a strong case to delve back a generation ago and to say that no action was taken by the government of that day to meet the problem that is now under discussion. The fact of the matter is that whatever may have been done or left undone at that time, the needs of the situation are apparent to anyone today who is a realist. My hon. friend excuses the failure of the present government to bring any relief in the field of indirect taxation by saying that in 1935, when the Bennett government went out of office, the federal government was collecting 63 per cent of its total revenues in the form of indirect taxes. I have not the figures before me. I am not in a position to comment on the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's figure. I have no doubt that he is speaking from acceptable government records. However, I wish to look a little bit further into those figures. The budget of the federal government in that year was something between $400 million and $500 million. Actually, if my memory serves me correctly, it was less than $450 million. The budget with which we are dealing today is more than ten times the budget of 1935. My hon. friend's figures of percentages are not particularly eloquent in the light of the actual amounts. What was 63 per cent of $450 million? Mr. Chairman, it was something under $300 million, in round figures. But the federal government today is deriving 40 per cent of its revenues in indirect taxes. What is 40 per cent of a figure which is close to $5 billion? You have to take into consideration the other charges made by the federal government in reckoning up the total they take by these indirect taxes. That 40 per cent, Mr. Chairman—again taking a round figure—of $5 billion is something like $2 billion. Let my hon. friend give figures and not these misleading percentages. Let him compare the less than $300 million taken in indirect taxes in 1935 with the almost $2 billion taken today by this government in the form of indirect taxes. There you have a fair basis of comparison.

Again, Mr. Chairman, my friend speaks of the problem of 1935 as though it were more acute than the problem today. It is quite true that many municipalities were bearing a very heavy burden in 1935. There were many municipalities in default in this country. No one denies that. The fact of the matter is, however, that the federal government today is taking many times more from the municipalities in indirect taxes than it took in 1935.

Let it not be forgotten that when the Bennett government went out of office in 1935 the sales tax was levied at the rate of 6 per cent, and in that fateful year of 1935 the late Mr. Mackenzie King campaigned up and down the country denouncing the sales tax and referred to it as "that iniquitous tax".

Mr. Benidickson: Do not get bellicose.

Mr. Fleming: But right after he came into office he promptly raised that iniquitous tax from 6 per cent to 8 per cent, and it was left for the present government to increase it three years ago to 10 per cent. One does not look for consistency on the part of the government in its utterances. One would look in vain for any fair basis of comparison in any figures they have given. But let us remember, notwithstanding the way in which my friend has hurled about these misleading percentages, that the fact of the matter is that the rate of sales tax today is 66⅔ per cent greater than it was in 1935 when the Bennett government went out of office. Let us remember that the total of indirect taxes on all accounts collected in 1935 was less than $300 million whereas today it is around the $2 billion mark.

Sir, my friend threw about so many figures that I do not know whether I have covered all that I intended to cover. I have this comment to make on what he said about the sales tax on American motor cars. He worked himself into quite a lather over what he said was the astounding figure of $90 that I had used in a radio address as being the federal tax on a standard type low-priced motor car in the United States. I took that figure from published figures of the American automobile industry and I have no doubt it is correct.

Mr. Benidickson: I assure my friend that it is not.

Mr. Fleming: But I draw to the attention of the committee that what my friend worked himself into such a lather over was the difference between his figure of $125 tax on a motor car and mine of $90. Apparently there is such a world of difference between $90 and $125 that my friend is justified in fulminating in the manner in which he did this afternoon.

Mr. Harris: Pretty nearly 40 per cent.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, it is a figure of about 35 per cent more than the figure I used. I am quite prepared to take the figure published by the American automotive industry as an authentic figure. It is a figure that has been published in that country and in this country as well.

Mr. Rowe: This is the first time the government has been so concerned about $35.

Mr. Fleming: If the parliamentary assistant is looking for ways of saving $35, then I suggest to him that he might take another look at the excessive taxes on Canadian motor cars that are being collected by his government. The figure I quoted in my recent radio speech, to which he did me the honour of making reference in his remarks, was contained in this sentence:

> For example, the federal tax on a standard type low-priced motor car without extras is $350 in Canada and only $90 in the United States.

Mr. Macdonnell: He was only 40 per cent wrong.

Mr. Benidickson: It was the hon. member for Eglinton who was 40 per cent wrong.

Mr. Fleming: The fact is that I should like to see the hon. gentleman, with his powers of subtraction, go to work on that figure of the Canadian tax and see what he can do to convince his minister and his government that the time is long past when a substantial reduction should be made in the heavy federal imposition on motor cars in this country. We hear people complaining about the high cost of motor cars in Canada. The fact is that the Canadian federal government is contributing very substantially to the high cost of motor cars in this country and to the extent to which the cost of such motor cars in Canada exceeds that prevailing in the United States.

I shall not try to go over the ground further. We have had discussions in the house on the subject of indirect taxes. The reasons that the federal government chooses to levy its sales taxes at the manufacturer's level rather than at the retail level are that the taxes in that way are hidden and the consumer does not know what tax he pays, and, in the second place, that it is easier for the federal government to do it that way, regardless of the effect on the consumer, regardless of the fact that these taxes accumulate mark-ups as they pass from hand to hand, pyramiding as they go. But that has not given the government any degree of trouble or concern. What has concerned them is that they should find a way in which it will be easy for them to extract these taxes from the people so that the consumer who buys the goods shall not know exactly what he is paying in federal sales taxes.

Of course the provinces have no option in the matter. If they are going to collect a sales tax it must be at the consumer level because they have no power to levy indirect taxes. But in the United States the federal government has been a little fairer with the consumer and, where it finds it necessary to impose a sales tax, does not hesitate to levy it on the consumer rather than on the manufacturer or producer.

I commend that example to the consideration of the government. I have not said that the federal government in the United States collects all its excise and sales taxes in that way but I do say that the federal government in the United States has not found it impossible to collect its sales taxes at the consumer level rather than at the producer level. I commend that to the consideration of the government.

Mr. Knight: It is a little difficult to disentangle the customs tariff, excise taxes and sales taxes, particularly with respect to such a matter as I want to mention, the taxes that still remain on books. I was glad that the government moved considerably in the matter of abolition of the sales tax. It was an important step that they took and I congratulate them upon it, but I am still concerned that there should be any taxation upon the dissemination of knowledge because such, I consider, is any tax upon books. I am not of course alone in that opinion. The people who use libraries are concerned, and may I say that we are woefully deficient in the matter of libraries.

Mr. Benidickson: What kind of books does my hon. friend have in mind? There is a very general exemption, as he knows.

Mr. Knight: I know there is a fairly general exemption, but what about the application of the customs tariff upon books? Novels and fiction at least are still subject to a customs tariff of 10 per cent. Is that not true?

Mr. Benidickson: That may be. Of course we are not on the customs tariff resolution at the moment, but so far as the sales or excise taxes are concerned, there is a very wide exemption. Books exempt from sales tax include books printed and bound that contain no advertising and are solely for educational, technical, cultural or literary purposes, and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture thereof, etc.

Mr. Knight: Is that item 169?

Mr. Benidickson: It is one of the items in schedule III to the Excise Tax Act, and the act itself says that the items in schedule III are exempt from sales tax.

Mr. Knight: I got a return with respect to the matter in 1951, I believe, but I know the picture has changed since.

Mr. Benidickson: Last year we extended the exemption to books of the category that I have outlined.

Mr. Knight: Am I justified in interpreting the parliamentary assistant's statement to mean that there are now no sales or excise taxes on any books that could be considered educational?

Mr. Benidickson: That is correct.

Mr. Knight: I could postpone my discussion of the tariff duty until another occasion when the estimates of the minister in charge of that department are before the committee. I was not aware that the exemption was so complete.

Mr. Benidickson: Last year.

Mr. Knight: I know there are some books that are still subject to the sales tax, but whether or not they could be classed as educational, I do not know.

Mr. Benidickson: Of course, I indicated that one of the exceptions would be books that contained advertising. I am sure that is not what the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. Knight: I am not worrying about those for the moment. I am glad to have the parliamentary assistant's assurance on that point. As I said a moment ago, I am in complete sympathy with the removal of all taxation, I do not care from what source, upon reading material. I congratulate the government upon acceding to our wishes in that regard. This is a fight in which I have been engaged for a good many years.

Mr. Herridge: I have just one point to bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant in connection with books. I wish to draw his attention to the fact that I have two or three groups in my riding who are interested in historical events, who have published books in connection with jubilee celebrations held in small cities or towns. The Kaslo committee in my constituency provides an illustration of my point. Last year, without any knowledge of the advertising terms of the act, this committee published a very good history of the city in question for sale during the jubilee. The book was supposed to be published at cost, but in fact the committee lost money on the publication. I was wondering what could be done about that sort of thing in the future to inform people who may publish a book of great interest and value. In this case the book was circulated amongst those interested in history and the school children and the committee did not think that by accepting a few advertisements they would have to pay sales tax.

Mr. Benidickson: The fact that it is put out with a fair advertising content or any advertising content is justification for considering it a commercial venture, and it is subject to sales tax.

Resolution agreed to.

EXCISE ACT

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Act and to provide, among other things:

1. That the excise duty on malt be repealed and an excise duty of thirty-eight cents a gallon be imposed upon all beer or malt liquor subject to an allowance for wastage.

2. That any enactment founded upon this resolution be deemed to have come into force on the seventh day of April, nineteen hundred and fifty-four.

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps hon. members would like an explanation of the purpose of this change. Paragraph 1 of the resolution proposes that the excise duty of 21 cents per pound on malt be repealed, and that all beer and malt liquor be subject to an excise duty of 38 cents per gallon. It is a change of method. The purpose of the change is to introduce a more modern method of taxation rather than to substantially alter the general level of taxation in the industry.

At present the law also provides that where beer is brewed from a substance other than malt, for example from brewer's corn flakes or other corn adjuncts, an excise duty of 42 cents per gallon of beer will be levied in lieu of the duty on malt. This rate has been in effect since April 8, 1952, when this gallonage duty was set at 42 cents per gallon. I am informed that approximately 2 pounds of malt were used in the production of one gallon of beer, thus making the gallonage duty about equal to the effective rate of duty on the beer brewed from malt.

However, due to changes in the brewing process the amount of malt used in the production of a gallon of beer has been steadily reduced. Consequently beer brewed from malt has been taxed at a lower rate than beer brewed from other substances. Representations have been received from farmers and others engaged in processing corn for use in the brewing of beer to the effect that brewers were reluctant to use corn adjuncts because of the differential in the two rates of duty. Adoption of this amendment will, of course, entirely remove the differential and brewers will have no reason to refrain from using corn products because of the excise duty.

Available information indicates that at present, on the average, about 1·8 pounds of malt is used in brewing one gallon of beer. I mentioned that when the tax was set it was assumed that two pounds of malt would be used in the production of a gallon of beer. This means that the previous duty levied on the malt content of beer was about 38 cents per gallon; that is the proposal in this amendment. Broadly speaking, the introduction of the new rate of 38 cents per gallon will not change the levy on malt beer. On other beer the duty will be reduced to 38 cents from 42 cents, but this class of beer constitutes only about 6 per cent of Canada's total beer production.

Mr. Nicholson: Can the parliamentary assistant indicate what will be the position of the government so far as revenue is concerned when this change is made?

Mr. Benidickson: I indicated there will be a slight reduction in the case of the 6 per cent of beer that is brewed from corn adjuncts, but in the case of the beer brewed from malt there should be no substantial change because of the ratio of malt now going into the brewing of beer which has worked out now roughly to 38 cents per gallon, and that is the proposal in the amendment.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Nicholson: I would think there would be some estimate in terms of dollars and cents as to what the position would be. Can the parliamentary assistant give us that?

Mr. Benidickson: As I said in my statement, we really do not expect much change in revenue, assuming the same quantities are produced. I might indicate that the revenue from the 21 cent per pound tax on malt for the last year for which I have figures, 1952-53, amounted to something in excess of $80 million.

Resolution agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we proceed to the next resolution, the customs tariff? It starts on page 7 of the ways and means resolutions.

Mr. Benidickson: I wonder whether we could have the income tax resolution, Mr. Chairman, because of the personnel of assistants I have with me?

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide, amongst other things:

1. That the exemption of income from metalliferous or industrial mineral mines for the first three years of production be extended to mines coming into production during the calendar year 1957.

2. That the special deduction from income allowed to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum, petroleum products or natural gas or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas, for expenses of exploring or drilling for oil or natural gas in Canada, be allowed for expenses incurred in the calendar year 1957, and that in addition a similar deduction be allowed to corporations whose principal business is mining or exploring for minerals, for expenses of exploring or drilling for oil or natural gas in Canada incurred in the calendar year 1957.

3. That the special deduction from income allowed to corporations whose principal business is mining or exploring for minerals, for expenses incurred in searching for minerals in Canada be allowed for expenses incurred in the calendar year 1957; and that in addition a similar deduction be allowed to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum, petroleum products or natural gas or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas, for expenses of searching for minerals in Canada incurred in the calendar year 1957.

4. That the special deduction from income and taxes allowed to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum or drilling for petroleum and to taxpayers whose principal business is mining or exploring for minerals, for expenses incurred in respect of deep-test oil wells be allowed for expenses incurred in respect of deep-test oil wells spudded in during 1955.

5. That for the 1954 and subsequent taxation years the deduction allowed to an employer or employee in respect of amounts paid or contributed to or under an approved superannuation fund or plan shall be increased from $900 to $1500.

6. For the taxation of a resident mutual insurance corporation, other than a life insurance corporation, as though the surplus arising from its insurance activities on and after January 1, 1954 were a profit from a business, and declaring that a non-resident mutual insurance corporation, other than a life insurance corporation, shall be deemed to be and always to have been subject to taxation on that basis.

7. For the exemption from taxation for the 1954 and subsequent taxation years of insurers, not less than 50 per cent of whose gross premium income was in respect of the insurance of farm property, property used in fishing or residences of farmers or fishermen.

Mr. Benidickson: On May 5, when these resolutions first came before the committee—

Mr. Fleming: Before the parliamentary assistant proceeds with his remarks may I make a suggestion about the way we might proceed?

Mr. Benidickson: I was going to do that. I was speaking to a point of order. As I was saying, at that time a ruling was made that we would vote once on a resolution. In looking at some of the debates in previous years, I recalled that it might be of convenience to the committee to deal with the paragraphs seriatim. I think that some freedom was allowed at the introduction of the resolution for some general discussion, and when it appeared that members had been satisfied in that respect the chairman did direct the discussions specifically to the individual paragraphs of the resolution.

Mr. Fleming: May I suggest that it would contribute greatly to an orderly discussion if the suggestion made by the parliamentary assistant were followed. The first four paragraphs of the resolution respecting the Income Tax Act relate, broadly speaking, to one subject, the petroleum industry. Paragraph 5 relates to quite a different matter, the effect of the exemption of contributions by employers and employees to approved superannuation funds. Then, paragraph 6 applies to something quite different again, namely the taxes on mutual insurance corporations. I would urge, Mr. Chairman, that when we do proceed, if you will call the paragraphs individually it will greatly contribute to orderly discussion in the committee.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to make an observation in view of the remarks that have been made. I feel, in view of the procedure that was carried out last year and the procedure on the Excise Tax Act, there should be a limited general discussion and then the paragraphs should be called in order. Otherwise, those of us who want to make a few additional suggestions would be ruled out of order.

The Deputy Chairman: I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West has pointed out the only real difficulty. If I might be permitted to express a personal opinion, I would say that the ruling, if one could call it that, which I quoted the other day does not in my opinion add to orderly discussion. At the same time it is my duty to point out that we can carry or vote down only one resolution, and that the question cannot be put paragraph by paragraph.

I suggest therefore that whatever we undertake to do should be done by mutual arrangement and agreement. Then perhaps when we reach detailed discussion the chairman might use some such form as, "shall we proceed to the consideration of the next paragraph?" and then the question would be put at the end.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has pointed out that some general observations with respect to the income tax, and points omitted from the resolution, might be in order. I think I shall endeavour to make no ruling. I would suggest that by consent hon. members in the committee would endeavour, if they have any general observations to make, to make those observations; then perhaps the Leader of the Opposition or of the government might indicate that we are prepared to discuss the paragraphs one after another.

I do wish to make it doubly clear that I am not presuming to upset any ruling which may have been made previously. I am just saying that if there is a willingness in the committee to do so, we can discuss the resolution in that way.

Mr. Fleming: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for your consideration and the suggestions you have made. I wish to make a few comments on the question of income tax deductions with respect to individuals and corporations, because they are both mentioned in this Income Tax Act resolution as we have it before us. I wish to refer particularly to some suggestions that are not mentioned in the resolution.

I do not lightly suggest the granting of exemptions, just for the sake of pleasing everybody, because I know we have to collect taxes and to meet our responsibilities. But I do wish to bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant what I consider to be three or four omissions in the present resolution.

The first of these concerns a number of my constituents, and has concerned them for a number of years. I refer to the fact that there is no exemption in respect of what I would term unusual or abnormal travelling expenses. I refer to expenses incurred by workers and other people who have to proceed some distance to their places of employment. The need for this exemption is increasing because, more and more in order to obtain housing and other accommodation, working people, and those who are performing services, find that they must live at greater distances from their employment. For instance some of the workers of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company now live as far as thirty miles away from their employment. They have been forced to go that distance to obtain satisfactory sites for the building of their homes. Without doubt it is an exceptional expense for these workers. I am informed the same situation is found in other parts of the country. It is a constant cost over which these people have little or no control. We provide an exemption for a salesman who travels even a hundred miles to sell bubble gum. In contrast to that provision I do suggest there should be some consideration for the abnormal and unusual expenses of working people who are contributing to the production of this country.

I wish now to refer to another heavy expense experienced by those in my constituency who have to resort to the use of ambulances. Owing to the distances that must be travelled, ambulance charges sometimes run to as much as $50 or $100. Indeed, frequently people have to be taken 150 or 175 miles for treatment, I do think that under such circumstances ambulance charges should be deductible for income tax purposes. When a person requires an ambulance in an emergency he or she is ill or has suffered an accident, and most certainly is going to be unemployed for some time.

Then with respect to farm improvements I would point out that in the resolution the mining and oil companies are given exemptions for the development of their properties on the principle, as I understand it, that they are increasing the total productive capacity of the country. I make a plea for the farmers who are clearing land, or who may be draining or irrigating land. In this way they, too, are increasing our production. The costs incurred in these clearing, draining or irrigating operations should be allowed as deductions for income tax purposes.

There is one further point which is of particular interest to many of my constituents. It is also of interest to me, because I have been interested in the forest industry all my life. I believe those engaged in forestry are entitled to the same kind of exemption as those who are engaged in the mining or oil industries. Those in the forest industry should receive exemptions in respect of work undertaken to increase the conservation of timber on their properties, and in connection with replanting, the building of roads, the proper management of their properties and, in particular, for expenditure on fire protection.

I have brought this to the attention of the house on a half dozen occasions and, in this connection, wish to read from the report of the department of resources and development for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1953. This makes reference to the activities of the forestry branch of the then department of resources and development, and states at page 97:

> During the year, the interdepartmental committee on the relation of income tax deductions to forest management made its report. This committee, set up under the direction of the minister of resources and development was composed of representatives of the departments of finance, of national revenue (taxation division), and of resources and development. The committee, with the director of this branch as chairman, was particularly interested in corporation income tax deductions and their relation to sustained-yield forest operations.

It is interesting to note that they were interested only in corporation income tax deductions. What about the individuals who are also undertaking this kind of work in the forestry industry? The report continues:

> Informal representations by the forest industries and discussions by the committee members resulted in two main changes with respect to income tax-deductions, both of which will encourage sustained-yield management.

I agree with that, and have spoken in favour of it on many occasions. The report continues:

> Access roads and trails are now subject to a generous rate of depreciation, and forest management expenses designed to promote sustained yield are, generally speaking, recognized as current costs for income tax purposes.

That is the very thing several of us have been advocating in the house for a number of years. But according to this report it applies only to corporations. I wish to say that from my knowledge of the lumbering industry in my constituency I have not heard of any of the smaller companies or individual operators receiving any exemptions, or having knowledge of the policy designed as a result of this investigation.

Mr. Benidickson: That is an interesting point; but the act uses the word "taxpayer". So that it does not make any difference whether a taxpayer is a corporation or an individual, the same principle would apply. If an individual had an income from the business of logging or forestry he would have exactly the same rights in the same circumstances as have been read out by the hon. member, although he referred to a "corporation".

Mr. Herridge: I have practically completed my remarks, but I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant this question: What has been done to inform industry of this provision? I am confident, from my personal contact with quite a number of lumber operators who are attempting to carry on their operations along forest-management lines, that they are unaware of this provision. What is being done to inform industry, and would it be possible to obtain a copy of the regulations covering this type of exemption?

Mr. Benidickson: This right is not spelled out in the regulations. It would be the same type of deduction as an expense that people in many other types of business would be using. It is not usual to have to inform people of their rights under the Income Tax Act. It is usually the other way around. A request is made for a deduction. The ground is plowed by the taxpayer, when he finds something new, to see whether it will be treated as an exemption. Usually we do not have to advertise these things.

Mr. Herridge: If an operator were to write to the department and ask for the regulations covering activities for which he could receive an exemption would he receive specific information?

Mr. Benidickson: The best procedure would be for the taxpayer to inquire at the nearest district tax office. These are all based on regions, and he could communicate with his own regional director.

Mr. Herridge: I am quite sure the majority of them know nothing about it. However I think the big companies are well informed about these exemptions.

Mr. Enfield: While we are still in the midst of discussing the general provisions of the Income Tax Act there are a few points I should like to make apropos of some omissions, or to correct some inequities in the act that one would like to see. I merely put these suggestions forward. I should preface my remarks by saying that we are committed, and rightly so, to the principle that you cannot at the same time reduce sharply your taxation generally in a period when demands on government spending are not only very heavy but are likely to increase. I think it is sometimes a pity that that principle is not kept in mind by hon. members when we are discussing taxation. It would certainly help to put the discussion on a higher intellectual plane.

Mr. Knowles: You are not against putting taxes on a fair basis, are you?

Mr. Enfield: The point I want to raise particularly at this time is in respect of section 11 (1) (l). The sidenote of this paragraph is "alimony". I shall read the paragraph and then point out how the interpretation of it can be important. I might say here that no matter how well some of the statutes may be drawn in the beginning, obviously, as we put them into use, we shall find occasions when interpretations by the department and by the courts sometimes reveal inequities in the act itself. It is that kind of thing that I am concerned with here. The paragraph reads:

> —an amount paid by the taxpayer in the year pursuant to a decree, order or judgment of a competent tribunal in an action or proceeding for divorce or judicial separation or pursuant to a written separation agreement as alimony or other allowance payable on a periodic basis for the maintenance of the recipient thereof, children of the marriage, or both the recipient and children of the marriage, if he is living apart from the spouse or former spouse to whom he is required to make the payment.

This sets out what requirement you must fill if you fall within the exception in the statute. The requirements of this paragraph are four. You must have an order for divorce or judicial separation. That is the first requirement. In Ontario, at least, and I think in several other provinces, there is no action for judicial separation, so that that exception is taken out of the picture. Therefore you must have an order for divorce or a written separation agreement under which the husband pays maintenance to the wife or, if you pay alimony, payments on a periodic basis, and under each of the three conditions, if the parties are living apart, such amounts may be deducted from your taxable income.

The problem is this. In Ontario, in a case where no divorce action can be obtained and in a case where the parties are separating and no separation agreement under the circumstances can be entered into, normally proceedings are taken through the family court. The family court handles all matters of domestic relations and, as hon. members can understand, by far the majority of domestic problems are heard in the family court, and by far the greatest majority of payments ordered by any court are by virtue of orders of the family court. There you will find the bulk of your cases. If you have a rich client you start alimony action in the supreme court, but that is not normally the case. We find then that family court orders represent the bulk of the cases where court orders are made for payment of money by the husband to the wife. That is what happens in Ontario, and I am sure it applies in many of the other provinces. The problem is that such payments made by order of the family court are not deductible from the taxable income by interpretation of the income tax department. I would put forward as a suggestion to the department at this time that it would be well worth considering what I have termed an inequity in the act.

A curious by-product has arisen from this situation in that the judges of the family courts in the provinces of Ontario feel very badly. They feel that their courts are not considered as being competent courts of jurisdiction in such matters. Family court officials receive constant inquiries regarding this particular situation. This is one place where appropriate action could be taken to rectify what is an obvious misinterpretation by the department in regard to this particular point.

The other point I had was in regard to family allowances. We have new Canadians coming to this country. They have children but they do not qualify to receive family allowances until they have spent twelve months in the country. At the end of that time they can then get the family allowance, and their children qualify. But after the children qualify the allowable deduction is reduced from $400 to $150. If a child, for example, qualifies and the parent collects family allowance in the month of December they might receive one payment of $5 for family allowance, yet the allowance they are allowed as a deduction is reduced over the whole period of the year from $400 to $150. New Canadians find themselves rather at a loss to understand this situation. Of course it can be pointed out to them that when the children reach 16 they may have been receiving family allowance for eleven months of that year, but due to the fact that the child became 16 during the last month of the year they are allowed to go back to the $400 rate for the whole year. Hence what they lose in the roundabout they gain on the swings, or vice versa.

Mr. Nicholson: But they are lucky to be able to pay income tax the first year they are here. Ninety per cent of the farmers are never fortunate enough to pay income tax.

Mr. Enfield: We hear a great deal about the farmers, although I did not think their problems would be injected into this present discussion. In the case of a child born in Canada it is quite true that it works out in the latter manner I have suggested, but in the case of new Canadians coming into the country they have to wait for a twelve-month period before the child qualifies, and when the child reaches the age of 16 they are not always in the position where they can make up what they lost at the beginning. I therefore think they have a very good point in bringing this matter forward and again, along with my suggestion regarding the family court payments, I would like to suggest this latter question regarding immigrants coming into the country be brought before the department for their consideration while we are discussing these resolutions.

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to discuss matters of general interest?

Mr. Nickle: I want to deal generally with income tax matters in relation to maintenance in the oil industry, covered in part by some of these items.

The Deputy Chairman: I wonder if the hon. member would mind. He will no doubt have noticed that the two hon. members who preceded him have spoken on matters which are not included in these resolutions at all, and we thought it might add to an orderly discussion of the resolution if general remarks dealing largely with omissions were taken first, and we could then proceed to discuss the subject matter of the resolutions.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, could I just intervene at this point, because I would like to reply at the first opportunity to the hon. member for York-Scarborough.

He mentioned two matters in connection with an order issued by the family court and I wish to assure him that some consideration was given to this problem prior to the bringing down of this budget. However, for the moment it was looked at adversely chiefly for the reason that we are informed that this court lacks jurisdiction in the matter of judicial separation or divorce. Now in connection with the second point, also raised by some other hon. members, and I refer particularly to the point raised by the hon. member for Argenteuil-Two Mountains in connection with immigrants, I think he will find that that will be rectified when the bill is brought down.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, along with some other points, I raised this matter in previous years and I remember the regulations were changed a year or so ago in the case of a Canadian so that the allowance took effect as of the date of payment instead of on the date of qualification. It is true that it is very difficult for these people to understand why we have these regulations, particularly so when they first come into this country. At that time their whole exemption is prorated according to the number of months they have been in the country, but they cannot see any reason why the amount of the allowance for children should not be prorated according to the payment they receive the first year. I do not know that I can go along one hundred per cent with that.

Mr. Benidickson: We feel we can correct that in the bill.

Mrs. Fairclough: The only thing I would like to suggest this time is that the department consider doing the same thing for them as it did for Canadian children born in this country, and that is to make the exemption applicable according to the actual payments, rather than according to the date of qualification or eligibility.

I would like to say a word also on the other point brought up by the hon. member for York-Scarborough. The matter he raised creates a very real problem for a good many taxpayers, particularly when a man may be contributing to the support of his family from which he is separated, and he can still be paying a large part of his earnings to them and still be taxed as a single man by reason of the fact that the wife has obtained employment which puts her in the taxable bracket also.

Mr. Benidickson: My hon. friend, of course, is aware that the payment from a husband would be taxable and—

Mrs. Fairclough: But the husband does not get the benefit and this creates a very real problem.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, while we are on the subject of omissions, may I take just a moment to remind the parliamentary assistant, the government and the Minister of Finance of a very serious omission. I refer to the absence in the minister's budget proposals of any reference to the floor under medical expenses so far as income tax deductions are concerned. I need not take the time of the house to relate the history of this question. It is one that is well known to all hon. members of the house and well known throughout the country. But I do think that it is most unfortunate that the job the minister started a year ago of reducing that floor from 4 per cent to 3 per cent has not been continued.

Mr. Benidickson: It was originally 5 per cent, of course.

Mr. Knowles: Well I can go back and give the history of this matter though I did not intend to, even though the parliamentary assistant has asked for it. He is perfectly correct. In 1944, or possibly in 1943, the rate was reduced from 5 per cent to 4 per cent; in 1953 it was reduced from 4 per cent to 3 per cent. I hope we are not going to have to wait until 1963 to get it down to 2 per cent, and 1973 to get it down to one per cent, and 1983 to get rid of it altogether. That would really be a long, long story, considering the fact that members of this house showed considerable interest in the idea of abolishing that floor by allowing a certain motion to go through a couple of years ago. Again, I am not seeking to revive that debate because we might very well get off into the procedural aspects of the matter. But I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the feeling of the people of this country is valid in that many of them have expressed the view that if medical expenses are to be allowed as deductions they should be allowed right from the first dollar as is the case with charitable donations.

Speaking for myself I have no objection to there being a ceiling as to the amount that could be deducted. There are some who think there should be no ceiling, but it is true that a case can be made for a ceiling and the government two years ago raised that ceiling from what it was before. But there is no excuse for not allowing income tax deductibility for the first dollars one has to pay out as medical expenses, in the same way that the first dollars given to approved charities are allowed income tax deductibility.

I might point out once again that the Windsor chamber of commerce has been carrying on a considerable campaign in respect of this matter. The proposal that body makes is, I suggest, a second-best. But if the government is not prepared to go the whole way and to remove altogether the 3 per cent floor, they might give consideration to the suggestion made by the Windsor chamber of commerce and other bodies. That suggestion is that the 3 per cent floor should relate not to the net income, as is the case at the present time, but rather to the taxable income after the statutory deductions have been made. That procedure would make quite a considerable difference, and certainly it would seem to be more reasonable. The way the matter now stands, Mr. Chairman, a great many medical expenses are not allowed at all. That statement applies, I might point out, in particular to moneys paid out for expensive medicines such as insulin, ACTH, cortisone and some of these other modern drugs about which the minister had so much to say when he added them to the list. He was proud of the fact that he was making those items deductible under the heading of medical expenses. Yet many people who thought they were going to get relief because of that change have discovered that what was the 4 per cent floor but is now the 3 per cent floor denies to them the advantage of those drug items being included as deductible, because heavy though their expenses are they do not happen to exceed 3 per cent of their total income.

Since you were good enough, Mr. Chairman, to allow this brief period when members might express their regrets over some of the omissions from the budget presented by the minister this year, I take this opportunity to express once again my great regret that nothing was done this year to remove the 3 per cent floor under medical expenses deductible for income tax purposes. I trust this floor will yet be abolished, and that medical expenses will be allowed as deductible right from the first dollar.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Chairman, I do not always find myself in complete accord with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. However, this is an occasion on which I must say that I find myself in complete accord with him. The matter of the health and welfare of the people is one of the great problems of today. There is no one who feels the heavy burden caused by ill health more than does the person in the lower income brackets. It seems to me to be almost absurd that, when any allowance is made as a deduction for income tax purposes, the whole amount of hospital expenses or medical expenses is not allowed as an income tax exemption.

I am not going to repeat what the hon. member has just said, but I should like to add one other thing that I think might be given consideration by the department or rather one other exemption that might be further extended. I refer to charitable donations or donations in that category by those who wish to help others in the matter of hospital care. Throughout this country there are many people who are helping those who cannot afford to meet their expenses for sickness and those of their families and are helping them to pay their hospital bills. Surely when hospitalization and medical care is as expensive as it is today, an exemption should be allowed to those who are thus contributing, even for nursing assistance and assistance in small hospitals, as is being done by people who feel they can afford to help someone else who is less fortunate. It seems to me that such an exemption would be just as justifiable as that which is given if one were to write out a cheque as a donation towards the building of a hospital. I think the exemption allowed for charitable donations is limited to a percentage of one's income. These exemptions include grants to hospitals and assistance for other charitable services. Surely the department might give consideration to exempting for income tax purposes donations and assistance that are given by those who feel they can afford to do so.

There are many people in this country who have no children but who are financially able to assist those who have. There are many people who are growing older, who have small families or no family at all, who have been extremely fortunate and have estates who feel that they want to help those who are less privileged. I think that is a feeling that should be encouraged. In the older days when we did not have such assistance as that afforded by family allowances and other social benefits it was the common practice for those who could afford it to help those who were not able to look after themselves; that was a more common practice then than it is today. However, I submit that there are still many instances where people who have sufficient means are assisting in the hospital care of incurables and others who are less fortunate. I would urge the parliamentary assistant to the minister to give some consideration, not only to the point suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—and again I say that I am in complete accord with him on the matter—but also to extending the exemptions to those who are assisting in the hospitalization of what we might call the underprivileged or the less privileged people, and to put such assistance in the same category as a contribution to a hospital.

I am not going to detain the committee longer. There are many other items that could be mentioned at this time when you, Mr. Chairman, have broadened the scope of the discussion for the purpose of allowing mention to be made of the things that might have been included. There are many things that I thought might have been included in the whole budget, let alone in this one feature. However, I am not going to delay the committee longer for fear that if I were to point out the many features of omission in the budget generally, I might detract from the force of my argument with respect to the two points that I think are vital at this particular time.

Mr. Noseworthy: I think that practically every political party and group in this house have at some time or other expressed their opinion in support of the matter raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, namely that of getting exemption from income tax of medical expenses. I am sure that if Liberal members outside of the cabinet were given an opportunity of voting freely on this subject they would again—as did similar groups some years ago—support a measure of that kind. All that remains to be done in order to secure for us that legislation is for the Minister of Finance and his cabinet colleagues to decide that not just extraordinary expenses but also ordinary expenses incurred with respect to medical bills should be exempt.

I want to support the request made by the hon. member for York-Scarborough with regard to the family allowance as it affects new Canadians. I have a number of cases which I have referred to the Department of Finance. I have on file a couple of letters from the minister indicating that this matter was to receive his consideration in connection with the present budget. The difference between the new Canadian and the native Canadian is that in some instances the new Canadian brings with him two, three or four children. I have examples of new Canadians coming here with families of three or four children who qualify in December for the children's allowance. The new Canadian who comes here with three children and receives the family allowance for the three children for one month can only claim an exemption of $450 instead of the $1,200 that he would have been able to get if he had not received the one month's family allowance.

I am told that in other countries where family allowances are paid and where they affect income tax the regulations are much more lenient, and that an adjustment is made in the case of those who come to the country in the second half of the year. I would certainly urge the department to give consideration to that point.

There is another matter that has not been raised yet which involves another of these exceptions. It is a question that I have discussed at some length with the department and it has to do with servicemen. When an ordinary civilian citizen is married on the last day of the year he is entitled to married status when filing his income tax return for that year and can claim an exemption of $2,000 as a married person. Taking the case of the serviceman who remains in the service and is married in the latter part of the year, although his income tax has been collected monthly and he can get no refund on what he has paid, as a civilian would under the same circumstances, I understand that it is nevertheless possible for him to get an adjustment with respect to his income tax payments in the months to come whereby he may receive the same credit that a civilian who had changed his marital status in the latter months of the year would get.

In the case of the serviceman who is discharged from the service at some time during the year and marries after his discharge, I understand that he is then treated by the income tax department as though he were two men. For that part of the year during which he was in the service and for which he paid his income tax, although he may have paid income tax as a single man for ten months of the year and was married in the last month of the year, he is not entitled, having withdrawn from the forces, to any return or refund on the amount he has paid, as a civilian would be in similar circumstances. That looks to me as though we have developed for administrative purposes a set of regulations which discriminate against the serviceman. I realize that there may be some administrative difficulties in permitting the serviceman who is married in the latter part of the year after his discharge to get a refund on the taxes he paid as a single man, but surely there are not so many of these cases as to render it necessary for us to perpetuate that discriminatory action.

I have urged the department, and I do so again, to take some steps whereby a serviceman who withdraws or is discharged from the service some time during the year and marries in the latter part of the year may be compensated by way of refund for the taxes he paid as a single man just as in the case of a civilian.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I was at a meeting of new Canadians about a month ago and many of them said that what they noticed about being in Canada instead of in their own country was the lack of security here owing to the fact that if they got sick their expenses were not taken care of as they were in the United Kingdom. In one case a man who was a machinist and had an income of $3,980 had a bill for one daughter of $1,469. He certtainly felt that the 3 per cent floor on medical expenses should be dropped entirely so that he might have a chance to get on his feet again. He not only owes the hospital and the doctors but has just managed, through getting loans, to pay the nurses.

In talking to different people who have had heavy medical expenses I have found that in most cases they receive only a very small deduction unless those sick have been in a hospital and there has been an operation. The parliamentary assistant will know that there really has to be an operation before the taxpayer gets any substantial deduction. I have also said before in the house, and it has been mentioned by other members, that the cost of transportation back and forth to a hospital or to a doctor should be taken care of. Ambulance charges should be allowed as a deduction. I know one case in particular where the man has to go to the hospital twice a week. He is forty-six miles away and has to pay for a taxi there and back because no one in the family can drive.

Before I sit down I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant a couple of questions. When he is speaking later will he tell us what amount of compulsory savings has not been repaid yet? I should also like to mention that there is a feeling that the allowance of $400 for a person 21 years of age or over who is physically unfit is not sufficient. In many cases somebody has to be there all the time to look after such people. I know of three cases where the mothers are unable to look after these children. There are cases where they are not bad enough to be admitted to a provincial hospital, and I feel that something should be done along that line.

Referring to the T.7B form, may I point out that it states that it is for use by individuals who are required to make instalment payments. I had a party come to me and say that he had to make quarterly payments but he did not know just what form to use. I feel that right at the top of that form T.7B there should be a notation that it is for quarterly payments.

Another question I should like to ask is: What was the amount received by the income tax department from fines levied for infractions of the Income Tax Act? There were about 4,741 convictions as compared with 3,601 for the year before.

Mr. Benidickson: Probably I could reply right now to the hon. member for Peterborough because he has asked me some specific questions. In so far as the amount of compulsory savings is concerned, that is a matter for the Department of National Revenue. I am not in a position at this moment to give him that information.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I thought you would have that.

Mr. Benidickson: No. In so far as the total of the income tax fines is concerned, again the answer would be given by the Department of National Revenue. I feel it would probably be better for a question of that kind to be put on the order paper, and the answer brought down.

Mr. Fairey: I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant if consideration has been given to the position of residents of British Columbia with respect to deductions allowed for medical expenses under the new scheme initiated by the present government of that province. Formerly, residents of British Columbia paid a premium on hospital insurance, and medical expenses paid on their behalf from that fund were allowed as deductions for income tax purposes. A few months ago the provincial government cancelled that scheme entirely, and premiums are no longer charged. A 2 per cent sales tax has been imposed, and from that fund medical expenses are paid on behalf of all citizens who are hospitalized.

My question is: Has the government given consideration to the position of the individual, and will medical expenses paid by the government on his behalf out of the proceeds of this additional 2 per cent sales tax be allowed as deductible medical expenses for income tax purposes?

Mr. Benidickson: Some consideration has been given to this problem as a result of the new system. I think my hon. friend knows that a premium paid for health or hospital insurance is not an item that can be deducted under this provision. On the other hand, even though an insurance company was, under a policy, responsible for paying a hospital bill the taxpayer is able to include the bill as one of the items if his total expenses are over 3 per cent of his taxable income.

I believe that the British Columbia act is worded in such a way that it says a portion of the premiums are being paid by the provincial treasury to insure citizens in this health scheme, and therefore the citizen who could obtain a hospital receipt would be able to use it for this purpose.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Before this item is carried there is a question along the same lines I should like to ask. It has come to my attention that in Alberta a similar scheme was entered into. The province, as most hon. members know, pays a portion of the hospital bill and the municipality pays a portion, while the patient pays $1 a day. In one case that was brought to my attention, which I took up with the income tax department, I did not get a very satisfactory answer. I was told to have him send in his bill and then we would see what happened. Apparently down here they had not had a definite case of that kind.

Now, the total bill was $201, if I recall correctly, and that included medicine and everything else. The amount the patient had to pay was $125, and there was a difference of $76. The point is that the patient had to pay the $125, but indirectly he had to pay the balance because the money came out of the municipal taxes and provincial taxes that he paid. Now in what position is the taxpayer in a case like that? He has the total bill from the hospital of $201, but that is not a receipt. He has his own personal receipt for $125. In what position is he placed in regard to the total amount of that hospital bill of $201? Can he get tax exemption for it?

Mr. Benidickson: I am not familiar with the Alberta scheme to which the hon. member for Bow River refers. Is there a universal health insurance scheme in Alberta or is it simply a form of partnership between the province and the municipality in the case of a welfare patient?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): No, it is an over-all scheme. The municipalities pay a portion of it, the province pays a portion and the patient pays $1 a day.

Mr. Benidickson: Some consideration has been given to the British Columbia legislation but the officials before me tell me that, like myself, they are not familiar with the Alberta situation. I believe I can only assure the hon. member we will look into it.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Will the minister have his departmental officials communicate with British Columbia and Alberta to get a ruling on that question, because it is one that I might say affects me personally, as well as the other residents in Alberta.

Mr. Benidickson: I will see that the hon. member's remarks in Hansard are drawn to the attention of the officials.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Following the question asked by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., I wonder whether the parliamentary assistant could tell us the position with regard to the dollar a day that patients in British Columbia hospitals now pay when they are hospitalized. What is the status of that? Can that be deducted or is that part of the premium?

Mr. Benidickson: That would be part of the hospital bill, and provided the amount is in excess of 3 per cent of the amount of taxable income, it could be recovered. It is the total of the hospital bill with which the income tax people are concerned.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): The reason I was asking is that for some strange reason the present government and the previous government insisted on calling this dollar a day a co-insurance scheme, as though it were part of a premium.

Mr. Nicholson: We have had this problem in Saskatchewan for some time, and it has been settled amicably. The patient receives a bill for the entire hospital charges, and the full amount is claimed. However, there is another problem that has not been settled so far as I know. I live in a rural municipality and we have two doctors who are paid out of taxes. What happens when a patient uses the services of one of these doctors for an extended time, and there is never any bill rendered? How does that taxpayer receive credit for what normally would have been paid to a doctor for medical services?

Mr. Benidickson: That is an unusual problem, Mr. Chairman. I am afraid if there is no bill there is nothing to submit to claim a deduction.

Mr. Nicholson: But the taxpayer has paid the two doctors.

Mr. Benidickson: In his general municipal taxes.

Mr. Nicholson: The doctors have been paid in the same way as we pay our hospital taxes. Apparently everybody in the municipality has to pay a tax which does cover the salary of these two doctors. It seems to me there should be some adjustment when you come to pay income tax. Would the parliamentary assistant indicate whether or not it would be in order for one of these doctors to render a bill indicating what the normal charge for that service might be?

Mr. Benidickson: I am afraid not. This is a circumstance that is not covered.

Mr. Nicholson: Quite a large number of municipalities, particularly in Saskatchewan, have prepaid medical service. It would appear to me that the taxpayers in those areas, who have a problem of medical care, should be given some consideration. I think at one time about twenty-five per cent of the rural municipalities had prepaid medical care. It seems to me that if some provision could be made to give consideration in respect of the cost of medical services under this plan it should be done. Would the parliamentary assistant indicate whether he would consider bringing in next year some amendment that would give relief to this fairly large section of taxpayers?

Mr. Benidickson: We shall certainly inquire with a view to obtaining further information as to the type of practice my hon. friend has described. But I cannot give any assurance to him that, in the absence of receipts, we would be able to cope with it.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant to clarify my mind on one point. In Alberta, where the provincial government has an over-all health scheme of some kind, the department is considering ways and means of permitting a rebate for income tax purposes. On the other hand, in Saskatchewan I understand the maximum payment by way of taxation is $40 a year. It is optional whether you consider your hospital expenses on the 3 per cent basis, or whether you put in the $40. That $40 is not allowed for taxation purposes, as I understand it.

Mr. Benidickson: No, under no circumstances, even in private schemes, can you claim for premiums. You submit the actual amount of your receipts showing medical expenses paid hospital, doctor or whatever they may be.

Mr. Gillis: That is the point. There are private schemes across this country that could be considered as charity to the extent of perhaps 50 per cent. In the end of the country I come from they pay subscriptions for doctors and hospitals that run well over $100 a year. I am safe in saying that half the people who pay that amount per year for the purpose of keeping up those hospitals, and helping to pay the salaries of the doctors, never receive anything back by way of services. However at the end of the year, when the income tax is being filed, the amount of money paid into that particular kind of medical set-up is not allowed for taxation purposes.

I suggest to the minister that when you pay over $100 a year merely for the purpose of maintaining a service in a community that you may never use, some consideration should be given to tax relief in that type of scheme. Because I know that without that kind of gesture on the part of the communities, the chances are there would be very little by way of hospital service or doctors in those communities. I have stressed this point time and again.

While I am on this subject of taxation and tax exemptions I should like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant another matter I have stressed for some time. Both the Department of National Defence and the Department of Finance are concerned with this problem. I have pounded this into the ears of several ministers; perhaps the parliamentary assistant will be a little more sympathetic.

I refer to service personnel who contribute to a superannuation fund. I have a case where a soldier has served ten years, and at the end of that ten years died while in the service. His disability was not considered attributable to war service, with the result that no pension was indicated. The superannuation was paid back to the widow in a lump sum. The income tax branch has classified that as income for the current year, and has levied a tax of about $600 against this refund of superannuation payments.

I think the Department of National Defence is at fault in failing to make some provision in their superannuation fund regulations for a case of this kind, and it is also at fault for not having some understanding in the matter with the Department of Finance. It is all very well to talk about it, but the consequences are most unfortunate to those who are affected. I have in mind a widow with three children. She did not receive a pension, despite the fact that her husband had served. She is too young for the war veterans allowance for widows. I think it is pretty rank treatment when we find the income tax branch taking $600 of the superannuation payments.

This is not new. I have been talking about it for two years. The Minister of National Defence knows the whole story. I am wondering whether something could not be done to correct this situation. Young men are being urged to join the services as a career. Then, despite that, we set up roadblocks of this kind, thus preventing many young men from finding their careers in the services. I would ask the parliamentary assistant to consider this matter, and see what can be done about it.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have been following with interest the discussion as to what might be done in connection with deductions for medical expenses and hospital bills. There are one or two other matters I would like to discuss.

I was pleased some time ago to hear the hon. member for Kootenay West discuss the problem of the expenses in which working people are involved in connection with travelling to and from their occupations. As a citizen I have never had any objection to the payment of taxes, provided I felt I was receiving value for that portion of my earnings spent in that direction. At the same time, both as a citizen and now as a member of the House of Commons, I think one should be concerned to see that taxes levied shall fall equitably upon all sections of the population who are called upon to pay them. This is particularly so in the case of the income tax.

I have been concerned by the fact that large sections of the working population in British Columbia must travel long distances to and from their jobs. The necessity of having to move those long distances to their homes does result in a heavy burden, so far as many workers in that province are concerned. And it is a burden for which they receive no consideration in the income tax deductions.

I should like to pursue this matter for a few moments and, as it is now six o'clock, perhaps I might be permitted to do so after recess.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Barnett: There are many things which one might mention in dealing with this resolution on the Income Tax Act and the legislation which it proposes to introduce. I suppose one could deal with the fact that the income tax policies of this government seem to be overwhelmingly weighted in favour of the coupon clippers of Canada. I do not intend to go into that because these matters have been covered by other speakers from this group during the course of the budget debate, and in any event I suppose they are matters of high government policy about which we cannot expect the government to do very much at this time. As I indicated when I rose before the dinner recess, I do intend to attempt to deal with some of the more elementary matters of justice and injustice in the application of the Income Tax Act as it affects the people of Canada.

As I said previously, as a citizen of Canada I have never felt that one should object to the paying of legitimate taxes, and by and large that goes for the great majority of the people of Canada. But it is in those instances where people feel that there is some injustice in the way in which the Income Tax Act applies to them that they are apt to be most concerned. I suggest that one of the instances where an injustice does exist is in the case of a great many of the workers of Canada who have to spend a good portion of their yearly income in travelling to and from the job which they are required to do. I intend to use as an illustration of this situation the manner in which the present working of the Income Tax Act applies to the loggers in the coastal area of British Columbia, because I feel that the situation in which they find themselves does offer a very clear-cut illustration of where an injustice exists.

Many of the loggers of British Columbia who have their homes in cities such as Vancouver and other places are required in the course of their normal employment to travel distances up to several hundred miles in some instances to the remoter logging camps. They have to pay their board and lodging in the logging camps and also to maintain a home where their family is. But in addition to this, they have to pay fares to and from their employment ranging from $30, $40 to $50 in each direction. This is not something which they have to do only once a year; it is something they have to do each time that the camp opens up and closes down. When the camp closes because of snow in the winter the cookhouses and the bunkhouses are closed down and those workers have no alternative but to return to their homes. When they open up in the spring and the loggers go back to work they find themselves confronted with a situation where the camps are closed down because of fire hazards, and once again they have the expensive trip back to the city, and then in the fall when the camps reopen they again have to pay that fare.

Probably those people would grumble about having to pay taxes in any event, but they can clearly see that in many instances they are paying quite large sums for travelling expenses which people in other categories do not have to pay. They realize perfectly well that when any of the executives of those logging corporations travel to and from those camps they travel on company expense accounts, and those expense accounts are deductible as part of the expense of the operation of that company; whereas in their case they have to dig out that amount from their own pockets, and when they make up their income tax return at the end of the year no consideration whatever is given to that as an allowable deduction.

Hon. members may or may not be aware of the fact that the loggers union over a number of years has been attempting to secure as part of their agreement with the companies the concession that these fares to the remote logging camps should be paid. They realize perfectly well that if that arrangement could be written into their collective agreement the cost of those fares would then become part of the operating expenses of those logging companies and would be deductible for income tax purposes. Therefore, on the one hand they feel that the companies should pay those fares, and certainly on the other they cannot see any justice in the situation where, as long as they have to pay them themselves, the fares are not deductible for income tax purposes.

As a matter of fact, under the pressure of some shortage of skilled logging labour during the war years there was introduced what is known in the coastal area as the Queen Charlotte islands differential, which meant that the loggers were reimbursed in part at least for the fare to the more distant logging camps. They realize full well again that the amounts which the companies were paying under those conditions were considered to be part of the operating expenses of the companies for income tax purposes. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, here is a clear-cut instance of what is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander, and that as long as travelling expenses are allowable to corporations or to individuals in business, then they should be allowable when they are the necessary part of an individual worker's means of earning his livelihood.

Some may be inclined to suggest that it is a good idea, but it is impracticable from an administrative point of view. I must confess I have heard that argument advanced, and I cannot see that that is any valid reason why this arrangement should not be made. It seems to me it would be a very simple requirement that the individual concerned would have to attach a receipt for his travel vouchers to his income tax return, and if necessary in addition the travel voucher could have to have the verification of the employer that in fact that expense had been incurred in the course of going to and from his employment. I cannot see how there could be any insurmountable difficulties in the way of putting such a provision into the Income Tax Act and the regulations.

There is another example I would like to give which I think is parallel, and I refer to the case where business firms can deduct certain things as expenses for income tax purposes, whereas the working people are not allowed to do that. I have in mind the case of the skilled workers, technicians, and tradesmen who, in order to carry on their employment, have to make very substantial investment in tools and equipment, and men such as loggers and miners who have to spend considerable amounts on clothing for heavy duty wear. In these cases we find a situation where these things are not deductible for income tax purposes and it is my belief that in such instances the act should be so drawn that it will apply right around the book and these men will be able to make deductions for such expenditures.

I notice in one of the forms put out by the Department of National Revenue, namely the Farmers' and Fishermen's Guide, 1953, there is a statement on page 3 to the effect that people who are covered by this guide are allowed to deduct certain things for income tax purposes. For example, on that page it states that small tools having a normal life of five years or less and costing not more than $50 may be claimed as expenses during the year. I cannot see why it is fair and just that certain people should be allowed to deduct such items when the ordinary tradesman who has to make an investment running into hundreds of dollars on articles which are subject to constant depreciation and replacement should not be allowed some reasonable deduction for income tax purposes.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter to which I would like to draw the attention of the committee. Some hon. members may recall that trade union dues are now deductible for income tax purposes. But there are certain funds which unions require from time to time which are not deductible for income tax purposes. In certain instances the situation arises where the unions feel that they have to adopt some special means to protect themselves, and in the trade union movement we occasionally have such things as an assessment fund. In large measure these funds are collected by the union in an attempt to accumulate, if you like, a bit of a war chest. I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that here is an instance where, due to the necessity of having to protect themselves from unscrupulous action on the part of the employers, the working people of this country have to accumulate funds which should be allowed to be deducted for income tax purposes.

As long as the employing interests in this country are able to deduct certain funds for income tax purposes which they apply for the very self-same purpose, then the working people of Canada should be able to do so too. Anyone who has had any experience with a strike realizes that strikes cost money to operate and I cannot see any reason why such deduction should not be allowed. For example, I have in my hand here a copy of the Gazette for Monday, March 15 and this issue contains an advertisement inserted by Noranda Mines Limited. Such things as that enter into the advertising expense accounts of corporations; and when unions find it necessary and desirable to levy an assessment of one dollar per month or something like that on their membership in order that the union may be in a position to protect itself I do not see why there should be any quibbling about allowing such amounts to be deducted under a trade union heading for income tax purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may I would like to make a brief reference to the amendment introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Finance. I might say that as far as the immediate practical effect of that amendment is concerned—

Mr. Benidickson: I wonder if, as a matter of convenience to other hon. members of the house, it would not suit most hon. members if the discussion on the item my hon. friend has now mentioned could be allowed to stand over until we reach that particular paragraph.

Mr. Barnett: I would be quite prepared to defer my remarks in that connection until later if that is the general wish. I felt it might perhaps save time if I made just one speech covering all these items, but I will leave that matter until later. Meantime, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the parliamentary assistant will at least take under advisement the various points I have raised which I feel are points which have a very practical bearing on the equitable application of the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a word on a subject which was raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton South just before the dinner recess. When a serviceman dies the amount of contributions he has paid into the pension fund are returned to his non-pensionable widow and subjected to income tax deductions for that year, thereby placing a very considerable hardship upon that widow at a time when she finds circumstances very difficult.

I believe this to be an opportune time to give consideration to making that tax easier to bear by the widow by extending the period in which she might pay that income tax. Earlier in this session we passed an amendment which enabled the widow who is pensionable to have her succession duties extended over a much longer period. In fact, she was allowed to commute her pension so that the payments would be extended over a lifetime. It seems to me that this is a time to introduce some sort of similar concession to the non-pensionable widow because she is in a much more difficult situation than the pensionable widow. I would ask the parliamentary assistant to give that matter careful consideration and to see whether we could not bring in line with the concessions made to the pensionable widow the regulations which now govern the payment of income tax by the non-pensionable widow.

Mr. Benidickson: I assure the hon member for Esquimalt-Saanich and the hon. member for Cape Breton South that I will give this matter consideration.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a suitable time to point out one of the shortcomings of the income tax resolutions or one of the omissions. I should like to do so by reference to item 5 of the resolution where a proper recognition is given to the desirability of saving money for one's days of retirement or for one's old age. The Income Tax Act provides—and it has done so for some time—that the contributions made by an employer and by his employees to an approved pension fund or superannuation fund are deductible for tax purposes. To my mind that is a proper provision in the act. In these days of high taxation everyone knows that it is not easy to make any saving for one's old age or to accumulate any reserve against the day when one will not be able to earn further.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I know that the hon. member this afternoon was attending the banking and commerce committee. But at that time there was in the house a general agreement that we would discuss in a general way, probably, what hon. members felt to be certain omissions in the resolution, but that we would come to a point where we would deal seriatim with the paragraphs in the resolution. I think the subject upon which my hon. friend intends to speak is one that he could well defer until we come to paragraph 5 of the resolution. I am sure that other hon. members also have a desire to say something about this matter.

Mr. Michener: If that course is preferable, I have no objection at all. It is an omission not with regard to the substance of No. 5 but related to it, as the parliamentary assistant states.

Mr. Benidickson: In this instance we have in one of the paragraphs an item that is so closely connected with my hon. friend's feeling that I think it would be better and more orderly to have debate at that point when that paragraph is reached.

Mr. Michener: I am quite content with that procedure.

The Chairman: Do I understand that the general discussion has been completed?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Chairman. Now that we are getting so technical that we have to relate every subject to something that is in the resolution or we are asked to defer discussion until such time as it is reached, I think this is the place at which I should raise a matter which I have been considering for a long time and upon which I have felt strongly for a long time. It is one that has consistently escaped the notice, I might say, of the Minister of Finance and also that of the Minister of National Revenue. I refer to the taxation which is paid by individuals on owner-occupied premises in the municipalities. In my estimation, Mr. Chairman, the taxes which are paid by individual taxpayers within the municipalities on the premises which they themselves occupy should be deductible from taxable income for purposes of income tax. I should like to elucidate a little bit.

Those who are familiar with income tax realize full well that the only type of municipal taxation which is not deductible from income for purposes of income tax is the tax which is paid by the individual on the premises which he himself occupies. First of all, we should consider the case of the industrialist. On the premises which he occupies for business purposes he pays a tax or possibly two different types of taxes; he pays possibly a real estate tax and a business occupancy tax. The business occupancy tax, of course, varies according to the various provinces in Canada. He may pay one or two types of tax on those premises. Sometimes he pays both. But those taxes are deductible from the revenue of his business for purposes of assessing the income tax which he as an individual or which the corporation which he represents shall pay to this government.

There is also to be considered the case of the person who owns municipal property and who rents it to various tenants for various purposes. In turn he may deduct from the revenue which he receives from that property the taxes which he pays to a municipality. Whether those taxes be for purposes of school rates or ordinary services, or even if they are for local improvements, he can deduct those taxes from the revenue which he receives from the property before calculating his revenue for tax purposes.

Then let us take the case of the farmer. The farmer is permitted to deduct from the revenue he receives from his farm the amount he pays to his municipality for municipal taxes. But the man who lives in his own home, who has made an investment in his own property and who occupies that property and rents no portion of it to anyone, is debarred from any exemption whatever from his income for income tax purposes.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a matter which I have approached lightly. It is something that I have thought about for a great many years. The more I think about it, the more am I convinced that the man who occupies his own premises—premises which he owns himself and in which he has invested a sizeable sum of money—definitely gets the short end of the stick. It is my opinion that the income tax department could probably do more than could any other department of government to encourage home ownership. It could certainly remove a terrific burden from the shoulders of the owner of small premises, the wage earners within our country, if it would permit such wage earners or owners of any property whatever to deduct from their incomes for income tax purposes the taxes which they pay upon the premises they occupy.

In making this proposal I realize that I have embarked upon a controversial subject. I know of its many ramifications. I know that a small businessman who runs a little store and who lives upstairs over that store in an apartment is not permitted to deduct the portion of taxes which apply to the premises which he personally occupies, but he can deduct those which apply to the portion of the premises which he occupies solely for business purposes. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that this is an oversight on the part of the department. No doubt they have thought of it. I am sure that they have had consultations on the subject. However, for some inexplicable reason they have consistently turned it down. Hence I am prompted to raise the matter at this stage on the resolution in connection with the Income Tax Act and to suggest that the department should take the matter seriously under consideration and should at the first available opportunity bring down an amendment to the act which would permit the deduction from income for tax purposes of those real estate taxes which are paid on owner-occupied premises.

Mr. Benidickson: I think probably at this point I should say something in answer to the hon. member for Hamilton West. Actually I know of no capital ownership by anybody that is as free from taxation as is the ownership of one's private residence. A tenant of course pays his rent out of income after paying his taxes, but in the case of one who lives in a house of his own ownership there is no assessment under income tax for the value of living in that house. I am informed that in the case of Great Britain they do assess a certain value, from the point of view of income taxation, for the fact that the person is living in a capital asset of his own ownership.

Mrs. Fairclough: True enough, that is the case in Great Britain, but I do not think you can take a specific item from any country's income tax regulations and apply it to ours without examining the ramifications of the whole act. It is true that the tenant pays his rent, but just let us ask ourselves what his rent would be if the landlord were not permitted to deduct the taxes he pays from his revenue.

Mr. Benidickson: In that case it is a business. The landlord is in business, and he pays tax because he has an income from a premises other than those in which he lives. Like any other businessman he can deduct the expenses that are incurred before he earns that income.

Mrs. Fairclough: Very true, but if he were not permitted to deduct the real estate taxes he pays do you mean to tell me that the tenant would pay exactly the same rent? Certainly not. If the landlord had to pay another $500 the tenant in turn would pay another $40 a month rent. There is no doubt about that.

The Chairman: Do I now understand that the general discussion is through?

Mr. Dinsdale: I want to present a problem to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance mainly for the purpose of clarification. There is a section in the Income Tax Act which allows a special exemption up to $500 in the case of persons physically handicapped. I believe it is possible to deduct expenses arising from the handicap up to a limit of $500. A case has come to my attention in which the exemption was granted in 1951 and was denied in 1952. There was no explanation as to why it was disallowed in 1952. I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant whether there has been an amendment to the act which has changed the circumstances surrounding this special exemption.

The particular case I have in mind is that of a young woman who works as a stenographer. She is physically handicapped to such an extent that she uses crutches. She is crippled in both limbs and as a result has to incur special expenses in getting to and from work because of the necessity of hiring taxis. It is not possible for her to use public transportation facilities. We have been emphasizing in the house in recent months the need for successful rehabilitation of the physically handicapped. This being so, it would be my impression that every effort would be extended under the special provision in the Income Tax Act to take care of this difficulty in order to assist this person, and others like her, to make her living, even though under difficult circumstances.

The Chairman: Has the general discussion now been completed? The hon. member for Calgary South on paragraph 1.

Mr. Nickle: Having listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion of the omissions from the proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act, I should like to deal briefly now with the first four amendments proposed by the government and then follow with two or three points dealing with omissions because of government policy in so far as they affect these first four items.

The first four items of the proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act are designed to maintain a stimulus to development of Canada's mineral resources, particularly petroleum and natural gas, gold, base metals and other industrial minerals. The first three amendments simply extend for one additional year, the calendar year 1957, policies which are already in effect, and no change of course is involved. The fourth amendment, that covering deep-test wells, involves a one-year extension covering the calendar year 1955 but with one important restriction to the scope of its application.

In his budget address the Minister of Finance stated, as found at page 3733 of Hansard:

> The incentive legislation for the oil, gas and mining industries will be extended for a further year. In the case of deep-test wells, however, this special concession will in future be restricted to more complicated structures such as occur in the foothills.

With the extension of this legislation the Conservative group in the house has no quarrel. In fact we believe that the real question is: Is mere extension of the prevailing policy enough? We strongly endorse the position of adequate incentives to ensure large-scale development of Canada's subsurface mineral resources in order that the nation's economy may be further strengthened, that production may be expanded for both peacetime and emergency needs, that new industries, both primary and secondary, and many thousands of new jobs may be created in Canada and, finally, that the feedbag of income from which governments in Canada secure their sustenance may be progressively enlarged.

Taxation policies of government must do more than simply gouge out from the always unwilling and unhappy taxpayer enough income to meet the apparent needs of government. They must also look ahead to the tax needs of the future by leaving the taxpayer enough incentive to continue working towards enlarged income and expanded production. They must also recognize the nature of problems peculiar to individual kinds of enterprises and take those special problems into account.

Among the industries with special problems peculiar to themselves are of course the metalliferous, industrial mineral and petroleum and natural gas industries. Each mine or well draws upon a strictly limited quantity or volume of solid, liquid or gaseous mineral. The owner of each mine or well literally produces himself out of business as he draws on his patch of subsurface resources or else he keeps himself in business, and thus continues to be an employer, producer and taxpayer, by continuously exploring for new source-beds of minerals into which he can tap with new mines and wells.

The fact that a mine or well is a depleting asset is recognized in Canada and in practically all other nations which have income taxes by provision of depletion allowances providing for some portion of income of a mine or well to be exempt from taxation. I will deal further with depletion allowances after examining the four income tax amendments now before us which relate to minerals. The first amendment provides:

That the exemption of income from metalliferous or industrial mineral mines for the first three years of production be extended to mines coming into production during the calendar year 1957.

This, Mr. Chairman, is an indirect subsidy incentive designed to accelerate the opening up of new mines in Canada.

Item 5 amends section 83 of the provisions of the present Income Tax Act under which mines coming into commercial production prior to the end of the 1956 calendar year are exempted from tax for the first 36 months of that production. It applies to all metalliferous and to most industrial and mineral mines. It does not apply either to petroleum or natural gas wells. The stimulating effect of this tax concession subsidy has already been evidenced by the opening of many new mines across Canada. Without such freedom from taxation during initial difficult years, against the background of high costs and initial low income, it is extremely doubtful that Canada would be experiencing the mining booms of Bathurst, Ungava, Manitouwadge, Sudbury, Lynn Lake and others now under way across the nation.

I might say, sir, the immediate net cost to Canada's treasury for the loss of corporate tax revenue from new mines is largely offset by the increased personal income and other tax revenue that would not exist without the new mining development spurred by the tax concession. In balance over the long-term, the nation and its tax collector will gain heavily from the new industry, production, jobs and revenue created.

I will skip now, sir, to the fourth amendment because it is in the same category as the first, that is, it is an indirect subsidy incentive. This one provides, and I quote:

That the special deduction from income and taxes allowed to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum or drilling for petroleum and to taxpayers whose principal business is mining or exploring for minerals, for expenses incurred in respect of deep-test oil wells be allowed for expenses incurred in respect of deep-test oil wells spudded in during 1955.

This extends, sir, by one calendar year, 1955, the provisions in 5 (a) of section 53 of chapter 25 of the statutes of 1949, as amended. I might say that I have been having a good deal of fun going through the various sections of the statutes on income tax law and the regulations dealing with this particular industry. I find items in a great many different places. Now, this particular amendment permits deduction from income —I should say deduction from income tax payable—of 35 per cent of the drilling costs of exploratory wells that have been qualified in advance by the government as deep-test wells. The tax concession applies only if the wells are failures, that is dry holes.

In effect, the government pays indirectly through a reduction in tax received for 35 per cent of the deep-test dry hole drilling costs. The oil or mining company pays the other 65 per cent of drilling costs plus 100 per cent of the geological and geophysical exploration costs, which in some cases will amount to more than the drilling costs of the deep-test well. If the deep-test well finds oil or gas, that is a discovery, the tax concession does not apply. This concession was designed specifically to encourage the drilling of test wells at least 7,000 feet deep and costing at least $150,000, in areas where the dominion geological survey and Dr. George S. Hume, director general of scientific services, believe significant and valuable geological data can be gained.

I perhaps should point out that, in the act itself, no reference is made to the geological survey by Dr. Hume. To qualify as a deep test requires an actual order in council issued following a recommendation from the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I mention the geological survey and Dr. Hume, sir, to ensure that the committee may not be under the misapprehension that before approving a deep-test purely scientific knowledge is not applied by the government department in passing on this particular feature.

Now, sir, only a very small fraction of exploratory wells have been qualified for this deep-test concession. From now on the percentage will likely be no more than one per cent of all wildcat or exploratory wells because of the limiting of the plan to the complicated deep structures such as those in the Alberta foothills. In 1951 there were only four wildcat wells qualified as deep-test. Of those, two were discoveries of oil or gas and thus lost the concession in taxes but opened up important new revenue sources for the government and for the companies which drilled them. In 1952 seven wells were qualified as deep-tests. Of those, six wells were dry and the government lost in taxes 35 per cent of their drilling costs. The seventh well was a discovery, so no concession was given. In 1953, twelve wells were qualified, and of those three were discoveries. So far in 1954, sixteen wells have been qualified as deep-tests, and the results of course will be determined in the months ahead.

During the three and one-third years covered by this deep-test concession a total of 39 wells have been qualified. During the same period some 3,000 exploratory wells have been drilled or are now under way. This does not include an even larger number of development wells, in areas where oil or gas has been discovered. Thus the deep-test concession has applied only to about one and one-third per cent of exploratory wells.

It can be correctly concluded that the subsidy cost of the deep-test concession to the Canadian treasury has been less than one-half of one per cent of the total sums spent in the past three and a third years by the oil industry on exploration in Canada. Because the concession has ensured drilling of certain exploratory wells valuable to Canada that would not otherwise have been drilled, the deep-test provision has been, and is, important. However, the small cost in lost taxes should be viewed against a background of valuable geological information, discovery, personal income and other tax revenue deriving from drilling of the deep-tests, and of course against a background, too, of the tremendous exploration program in which the deep-test provision plays no part.

I come back now to the second and third amendments to the Income Tax Act affecting the mining and oil industry. One of these provides that:

> That the special deduction from income allowed to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum, petroleum products or natural gas or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas, for expenses of exploring or drilling for oil or natural gas in Canada, be allowed for expenses incurred in the calendar year 1957, and that in addition a similar deduction be allowed to corporations whose principal business is mining or exploring for minerals, for expenses of exploring or drilling for oil or natural gas in Canada incurred in the calendar year 1957.

Paragraph No. 3 is almost the same, with the exception that it relates to the expenses incurred in searching for minerals in Canada, undertaken by both mining and oil companies.

Now, these, sir, are the most misunderstood by the Canadian public and by many members in this parliament, including some members of the cabinet, of the incentive provisions of the Income Tax Act. These two amendments simply extend by one year, the calendar year 1957, the provisions of section 53 (1A) of chapter 25 of the statutes of 1949 as amended, under which mining and oil companies are permitted to deduct from income before taxes the costs of exploration and development of oil, gas, and minerals. Under these provisions a mining or oil company expenses of exploration and development costs are charged off against income, if it has enough income, or are set up as a charge against hoped-for future income now or has income smaller than the expenses for exploration and development.

As many who have invested or gambled money in oil or mining companies know, there is no guarantee that sufficient income to recover exploration and development costs will ever be obtained, for exploration risks are high, and there are even numerous cases where companies have spent all their capital on exploration without success, and have folded up without ever enjoying production income. In these cases, of course, the provision permitting expensing of exploration or development costs has only a paper value.

By no stretch of the imagination is the right to expense exploration and development costs a subsidy or a tax concession, in the sense that the three-year freedom from taxes of new metal and industrial mineral mines and the deep-test well concessions are subsidies.

I regard, and I believe the government and public should also regard, the expensing of exploration and development costs in exactly the same way we all regard the normal operating expenses of normal businesses.

Costs of exploring for and developing mines and wells are just as much a necessary, normal operating expense of an oil or mining company, if it wants to stay in business, as are the costs of advertising to a merchant, the costs of a plant to a manufacturer, the costs of seeding and harvesting to a farmer, and all the other costs which must be taken into account by anyone in any kind of business if he hopes to make a success of it.

I recall that last summer a member of the cabinet of this government spoke in Alberta and was quoted by the press as stating that "the Liberal government of Canada has contributed half the cost of oil and gas exploration and development in the west" in its great desire to assist in getting a maximum development. This was presumably a reference to the so-called tax concessions or incentive legislation whose extension we are now considering.

Without in any way disparaging the legislation, the government which put it into effect, or the minister who made the statement—I must point out that his comment in Alberta indicated an all-too-widely accepted misconception of what this legislation is and does, and to what extent legislation of other nations—particularly the United States—affects exploration and development spendings in Canada.

The first question that arises is this: Are exploration and development costs a normal operating expense which properly should be chargeable against any income before making a split of the net income between the federal tax collector and the company that spent the money to create the income?

If such expenditures are not normal operating expense, then it might be correct to say that the government indirectly contributes half of these costs by permitting their deduction from income under this incentive legislation, in the light of prevailing rates of corporate taxation.

If the expenditures are normal operating expense, then it would be just as correct to say that the Canadian government pays half the cost of a merchant's advertising bill because it permits the deduction of such normal business costs from that merchant's income, before taxes are calculated and collected.

The second question that arises is this: Do other nations, particularly the United States, from which country comes over half of the moneys for minerals exploration and development in Canada, contribute to Canadian development in the same general manner as does the Canadian government? The answer is Yes. The United States for many years has encouraged American companies to risk their capital in natural resources exploration and development in other nations, by permitting deduction of these costs from American income before calculation of American taxes. This policy has brought hundreds of millions of United States dollars to Canada in the past eight years.

If we were to concede that the special deductions from income of exploration and development costs are in the nature of a handout from the government—something which I do not concede—then only one logical conclusion could be made: the taxpayers of the United States are contributing a big slice of the funds for Canadian resources development.

Actually, in so far as deduction of exploration and development costs from taxable income is concerned, I do not believe that the taxpayers of either Canada or the United States are paying a single dollar. What the governments are doing is recognizing that exploration and development are normal expenses undertaken by the companies concerned in an effort to find and develop new revenue, in which the government will share as soon as costs have been recovered.

Of course there is no assurance that exploration spendings will bring discoveries and profit-making production. If they do not, the losers are the companies who have footed the bill. Many of the companies, both domestic and foreign, carrying out Canadian exploration, have yet to make discoveries adequate to pull them out of the red. Many others have made discoveries that will assure an ultimate profit, both for themselves and government. Many, many more discoveries will undoubtedly be made in Canada if the economic climate is favourable.

In fact, the Canadian government has already been assured by discoveries to date of many hundreds of millions of dollars of additional tax revenue in years ahead, as oil, gas, metal and industrial mineral discoveries of recent years advance from the return of capital stage to the stage of paying profits. The Canadian government will draw the same share of those profits, whether the discovering and producing companies are Canadian or foreign.

Since American companies play such a major role in Canadian resources development it might be well to look briefly at how United States and Canadian tax policies function in relation to them. Some operate here as a division of the American parent; others operate through Canadian subsidiary companies.

An American company doing business in Canada may include its Canadian exploration and development expenditures in its parent company's consolidated United States tax returns, deducting these expenditures from this United States income. When and if it develops Canadian income that income will also go into its consolidated tax returns. For Canadian tax purposes the expenditures may be carried forward and charged off against future income in Canada, when and if it is obtained. In order to invoice international double taxation in profit years, tax payments made in Canada may be used as a credit against the United States tax liability.

In effect United States income foots the bills for United States companies' explorations and pays any losses if adequate Canadian income is not obtained. If sufficient Canadian income to leave a profit after recovery of exploration costs is obtained, the profit is shared with the Canadian government.

The second method of operation of United States companies in Canada is through Canadian incorporations as subsidiaries to the parent. In the case of Canadian subsidiary companies, of course, they pay taxes in Canada, after the write-off of prior years' expenditures, the same as for an American subsidiary. The United States taxes at current rates would be paid on dividends transferred to the American parent company.

Sir, I now come to some suggested recommendations which I feel the minister and his aides might well take under consideration in trying to arrive at perhaps an even better program, from the viewpoint of Canada, in so far as the income tax program is concerned, in stimulating or accelerating the development of resources in Canada.

My first recommendation is this: That the provisions under section 53 of chapter 25 of the statutes of 1949 as amended, for the charging off as expense of exploration and development costs associated with oil, gas and minerals search in Canada, should be incorporated in the Income Tax Act on a permanent basis; in contrast with the present practice of dealing with these annually as a special tax concession subject to extension each year.

In contrast with the present practice of dealing with this annually as a special tax concession subject to extension each year, this recommendation refers specifically to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the resolution to amend the Income Tax Act because the special deductions they refer to are designed simply to recover from income the actual costs of exploration and development which are simply normal operating expenses of the oil and mining industries, and they are not a subsidy. This recommendation specifically excludes paragraphs 1 and 4 of the resolution to amend the Income Tax Act on the grounds that these items are in the nature of incentive subsidies.

The first paragraph exempts from taxation the first three years' income from new metalliferous or industrial mineral mines. The other provides for deduction from taxes of 35 per cent of drilling costs of certain deep-test wells drilled in search of oil and gas but which fail to get production. This special concession applies to only about 1 per cent of exploratory wells.

Quite properly, sir, incentive subsidies should be subject to annual review and annual extension, revision or cancellation, dependent upon conditions prevailing at the time of review. I might add, sir, that depletion allowance changes, which I shall suggest in a few moments, could do much to reduce or eliminate the need of these incentive subsidies set up in items 1 and 4 of this Income Tax Act amendment.

The second recommendation is that the definition of exploration costs for oil and gas should be broadened to include all, instead of just part, of the costs incurred in land acquisition. This is the standard practice under the United States tax laws and its adoption in Canada would give Canadian companies closer to an even break with United States firms in the competition for rights to explore potential oil and gas lands in Canada.

Canada has already accepted in part the principle that cash paid for the acquisition of the rights to enter upon lands for the purpose of exploration spendings and drilling are necessary and thus properly deductible in the same manner as drilling and exploration costs. Section 53 (3A) of chapter 25 of the statutes of 1949 as amended provides for deductions of amounts paid to the federal or provincial governments in the acquisition of a legal lease of oil and gas rights, provided the lease is surrendered without production being obtained.

The same principle, I submit, should apply with equal force and similar deductions should be allowed for bonus payments for the rights to do the same exploring and drilling granted under freehold leases and government permits, licences and reservations, items which in total represent many millions of dollars of costs which cannot now be deducted as an expense.

The final recommendation, sir, is this: Depletion allowances, as provided for in part 12 of the income tax regulations, should be revised, particularly in regard to oil and gas wells, to provide for their full application to gross income rather than net. This recommendation is based on two facts: The first fact is that the present depletion allowance policy in Canada encourages Canadian companies to rest on their laurels, drawing production from current wells, and cutting down on exploration; for the depletion allowance is only effective when a profit position has been reached and all exploration and development costs have been recovered.

The second fact is that the present Canadian depletion policy gives the United States company a competitive advantage over the Canadian firm in Canada, because the United States tax law permits deduction of depletion from gross income, prior to recovery of exploration and development costs.

Depletion allowances, basically, are recognition that a well or mine is a wasting asset, strictly limited as to the ultimate production it can yield. To stay permanently in business the owner must continuously explore to replace with new wells or mines the reserves that are produced. In principle, depletion allowances provide natural resources production industries with a lower rate of taxation than applies to industries which do not have the same problem of replacing by exploration the basic products they process. I might say, sir, that depletion does not apply of course to the normal business phases of such an industry as oil; in other words, profits from refining and marketing are taxed at the full corporate tax rate without benefit of depreciation allowance.

Under present Canadian policy the operators of oil and gas wells are permitted a depletion allowance deduction of 33⅓ per cent of the net profits until all the costs of exploration and development have been recovered. In recent years the oil and gas industry has poured into exploration and development many hundreds of millions of dollars in excess of production income. I believe that since the Leduc discovery in 1947 the total expenses in exploration and development have been over $1½ billion in western Canada. The gross value of production before any deduction of costs has been just over $600 million. In other words, to date less than half the total expenses have been recovered. One result is that only about one-tenth of the companies who are actively exploring and producing in Canada are in the position of having net production income against which to apply depletion allowance. The actual depletion allowance benefit to active exploration companies therefore has only amounted to a fraction of 1 per cent of the spendings designed to replace and increase proved reserves of oil and gas. The purpose of the depletion allowance provisions therefore has been largely defeated.

Under present regulations a company could discover an oil or gas pool and if it were carrying on an active exploration program could produce all the oil or gas therefrom and receive very little, if any, depletion allowance. On the other hand, if the company reduced or halted exploration it could derive a very substantial depletion allowance and ultimate profit from the operation of the pool. As the regulations now apply, there is a penalty imposed on the company willing to continue large-scale exploration and that, sir, is an undesirable state in a nation like Canada where our national future depends in no small measure upon the continued risking of large amounts of capital on natural resource exploration and development.

The odds against discovery, in other words, the tremendous risk factor, must be kept in mind when considering depletion allowances as related to the oil and gas industry. To the investor and speculator considering putting his cash into oil the obvious attraction must be that there will be at least as much money left after taxes as would otherwise be available in less hazardous enterprises. With that incentive larger sums of money will be available from Canadian sources and the search to provide oil and gas requirements of the nation will be expanded.

In contrast to the very limited application of depletion provisions to the companies who pay the cost of Canadian exploration and development, we have a depletion allowance of 25 per cent of gross income extended to recipients of gross royalties and similar interests in oil and gas wells; in other words, the groups who do not pay the costs of exploration and development.

I would strongly urge that the government amend its current regulations to provide that the depletion allowance of 25 per cent of gross income be extended to those who provide the costs of exploration and development in place of the current allowance of 33⅓ per cent of any ultimate net profits.

Such a step would go a long way towards providing the continuing incentive for Canadian capital to maintain a large-scale exploration program in Canada and would in addition put the Canadian in a nearer-to-equal position with his friendly and essential competitor, the American, in the drive to develop to the full Canadian resources.

I may say, sir, that United States companies have a choice when it comes to depletion in oil and gas wells. That choice is between the greater of two calculations: (1) percentage depletion 27½ per cent of gross income not to exceed 50 per cent of net income. You will notice, sir, that this division in the United States is substantially greater than the present division under the Canadian act, and also greater in terms of gross income depletion than the proposal I have made.

The second point in the United States is cost depletion method which means a recovery of acquisition costs such as bonuses, et cetera, for the year on a unit of production basis. I do not understand that program myself so I will not attempt to interpret cost depletion.

I believe the existing regulations and policies in regard to encouraging the development of Canada's industrial mineral and metalliferous resources are adequate to accomplish the nationally desirable objective.

So far as oil and gas resources are concerned, government policy has undergone a considerable change for the better in recent years as the government's knowledge of the potentialities and problems of this comparatively new oil and gas industry increase. But present policies and regulations cannot yet be considered to have reached the final form in which they could achieve the maximum benefit for Canada.

I trust the government will give further serious consideration to the amendments I have suggested, preferably now before the legislation is passed or, if not now, at least long before the house again considers these matters a year hence.

In conclusion, sir, may I say briefly that there are four groups in Canada which may be said to be concerned with her natural resources development.

The first group comprises those who pay the shot for exploration and development, the oil and mining companies and those who invest their cash in them.

The second group consists of those who own the mineral rights, mainly the provincial and federal governments so far as the territories are concerned, plus a minority of rights owned by private companies and individuals.

The third group is the federal government which, on behalf of all Canadians, collects a share on the profits of all resource production in Canada, plus a goodly share of the moneys spent on exploration and development.

The fourth group, sir, is the Canadian people themselves who, as workers in the resources industry or in industries which are built up around resources development, and as citizens of a nation to whom the supply of oil and gas and other resources plays a vital part in their future development.

Now, under our existing mineral rights policies and tax policies in Canada, at least so far as oil and gas are concerned, we can reach one conclusion as far as the benefits are concerned. These benefits are spread between the groups I have mentioned and we can say this, that the ultimate net profit so far as oil and gas are concerned under existing regulations, the net profit of which will be realized by the companies who risk all the capital for exploration and development, will be about equal to the ultimate tax take by the federal government resulting from the capital spending and the production income.

This take or net profit to those who risk all the capital will also be about equal to the cash revenue derived by the government and private owners of mineral rights whose minerals are being appraised and developed by the members of the resource industries. Since those who risk all the capital wind up with a cash profit return of roughly equal to one-third of the total cash benefits to be derived in the development of these resources then I believe, sir, it behooves both the provincial governments and the mineral rights owners, as well as the federal government as the principal taxing authority, to do all in their power not to use the public's money for the development of these resources but to ensure that these private companies who actually finance and take the risks of resources development are given a fair deal in terms of tax policy.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there any further discussion on paragraph 1?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Paragraph 2?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Paragraph 3?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Paragraph 4?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the parliamentary assistant if he is going to say anything in reply to the very able address we have just listened to from the hon. member for Calgary South?

Mr. Benidickson: Well, Mr. Chairman, as all hon. members of the house recognize, it certainly was a very interesting, thoughtful and informative address, and we all know that the hon. member speaks from a rather unique position when he is dealing with the petroleum industry because he has a very special interest in it these days.

I think my hon. friend pretty well summed up the intent and tenor of the resolution now before us. He pointed out to the house that the first three paragraphs are not new either in intent or content, and are merely an extension of existing practice. In so far as item 4 is concerned he urged that rather than being somewhat more restrictive, as the Minister of Finance announced he might be, we should continue past policies. Certainly the hon. member's remarks will be given the closest—

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. May I point out that I did not urge that the previous policy in regard to point 4 be continued. I supported the restriction that has been set up.

Mr. Benidickson: The hon. member, of course, very properly drew attention to the expansion of the number of deep-test wells which have been recognized in a progressive way from 1951 up to the present time, but generally speaking we are very conscious of the fact that the deduction in this case for deep-test wells is rather an unusual one, particularly in that it is not only the deduction of the expenses incurred in this drilling, but is the aggregate of the expenses incurred in drilling the test wells and a 35 per cent of cost deduction from the actual tax. The Minister of Finance announced in his budget speech that this has always been an order in council recommendation, and that there is a likelihood from now on that the territory which may be considered as justifying this form of tax consideration may be somewhat narrowed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we pass on to paragraph 5?

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, I hope the parliamentary assistant's suggestion that my proposition be deferred to this point indicates a willingness to consider a revision of paragraph 5. It seems to me there is an almost unanswerable case in this regard, and I shall be very interested to hear what reasons can be advanced against the extension of the principle of deducting pension payments from taxable income in the case of the self-employed. The resolution provides for an increase in the deductions allowed to an employer or employee in respect of the amounts paid or contributed to or under an approved superannuation fund or plan.

My concern is with that great group in the community who are not now privileged to share in those deductions. As I began to say earlier, these deductions commend themselves to everyone as a means by which, in this era of high taxation, a person can lay up some part of his income in the form of a pension and can make some saving to provide for his retirement and old age. As I say, that principle commends itself to everyone because it is extremely difficult for anyone, after providing for the income tax that is at present payable, to save anything from his earnings. So much is that so that I believe that the normal self-employed person, unless he makes some capital appreciation which is not taxable, is unable in these days to build up any estate. I am not so much concerned about the problem of building up an estate as I am about the prospect which is open to employed persons but not to the self-employed, to acquire for themselves the equivalent of an estate in the form of a pension which is payable to them when they retire.

As matters now stand under the law, a man who is employed is not required to pay taxes on $900 of his income which he puts aside in the purchase of a superannuation pension. In fact, that amount can be increased, in the payment up of arrears, to $1,800 and his employer can make a like contribution. The employer's contribution is, in effect, part of the employee's salary; that is a fact which everyone recognizes, because the employer regards the employee as being worth not only his salary but the contribution which the employer makes. Hence today you have the possibility of normal savings of $1,800 of income, by putting it into a pension plan, on which no tax is levied.

That is the situation with regard to the employed. My question is this. Why is the self-employed person in any different position from that of the employed person? Who are the self-employed? My description of them may not be complete, but obviously they comprise a large section of the community. First you have the small businessman. No one will deny that the man who carries on business in an unincorporated way as an individual proprietor usually has a small business and has great difficulty not only in meeting his current expenses but in providing for his future. Then you have the fisherman who is working for himself and you have the farmer who is working on his own. Then you have the professions, that great group which comprises many of the members of the House of Commons and which includes doctors, dentists, lawyers, nurses and accountants. All those people normally work on their own account and have no employer from whom they receive a salary. In addition to them, you have artists. Then if you move on to the trades, you have people who work as plumbers, painters and artisans of one kind and another. A great many people in this country are not employed by anyone but rather exercise their right, their intelligence and their enterprise to provide for themselves in their own way.

Those people are not entitled to the benefits which accrue to the employed. Those people are not privileged to lay up $1,800 of their income each year, tax free, in the purchase of an annuity, a pension or other means of providing for themselves when the inevitable time of retirement comes along. It seems to me that that disability is one which should not be allowed to continue, Mr. Chairman.

I know that this point has been raised before in this chamber. I know that answers have been given to the effect that technically it is not easy to extend to those who are not on payrolls the right to save money in this way as can their associates who are employed. It seems to me that the technical difficulties are not hard to remove if the spirit to do so is present. By way of illustration I should like to put to the committee the simple case of two people, both working in the nursing profession, one employed by a hospital—say the Toronto Western hospital of which I happen to have some knowledge—which has an approved superannuation scheme. She can provide each year for her superannuation by a deduction from her salary, and a similar amount is contributed by the hospital.

In the next room to her may be working a nurse who is not employed by the hospital or is not on the staff, but who is employed by the patient in that particular room on a per diem fee. She has no such privilege as that which is enjoyed by the other nurse. Yet they are both doing identical work. They both have to retire in due course. They are both entitled to save and to provide for their retirement by this method which has been so well recognized in the past for the employed. If there is any good reason for this disability—in fact I would use a stronger term than that; I say it is discrimination against the self-employed—to be continued, I shall be glad to hear what it is.

I know there are thousands of people in this country who would be extremely glad to be put in the same position as that of their fellow citizens whose only difference is that their income comes from a pay envelope instead of through their own earnings but who have exactly the same needs and pay exactly the same rate of taxation on their earnings. It seems to me that an approved annuity, which is payable as a retirement annuity, or an approved pension should be granted recognition. We have pensions purchasable from the federal government; we have retirement annuities supplied by the insurance companies. It seems to me that those provisions for one's retirement, which may not be anticipated, can in every sense be approved and be regarded as the equivalent to the approved pension plans. I therefore suggest that this matter be given immediate attention.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, resolution No. 5 invites comment both for what it contains and for what it omits. It proposes:

> That for the 1954 and subsequent taxation years the deduction allowed to an employer or employee in respect of amounts paid or contributed to or under an approved superannuation fund or plan shall be increased from $900 to $1,500.

That resolution, if approved, will involve amendment of two subsections of section 11 of the Income Tax Act. On the one hand it will permit an increase in the permissible deduction of the employer from $900 to $1,500 per annum in respect of any employee under such an approved superannuation or retirement scheme, and on the other hand it will permit, in the case of every employee under any such approved scheme, an increase in his permissible deduction from $900 to $1,500 without at the same time making any change in the right given to him under the section to deduct as well in respect of contributions to such a scheme for previous years' service.

First of all, as to what this resolution proposes, may I say this. It is evident that it involves a vertical extension of the provisions of section 11 of the act in this regard. What the reasons for this vertical extension are have not been indicated in any way to the committee as yet. We shall await with interest what the parliamentary assistant has to say about that matter. So far as at least some of us in this chamber are concerned, we have not heard any public demand for this vertical extension. It will be interesting to know from what quarter have come the requests for it.

In at least one newspaper I have seen an editorial suggesting that this extension was being introduced for the benefit of members of parliament. This seems to me, Mr. Chairman, about as far-fetched an observation as anyone could well imagine, and I think the parliamentary assistant owes it to the house to say something about this. I think the public ought to be made to realize that the maximum that a member of parliament can contribute in respect of current indemnity is $240 a year. He falls far short of the $900 deduction allowed to him under the law at present, so that he is not going to derive any benefit from the extension of this amount to $1,500. I mention that in passing because it seems that members of parliament are always fair game in these matters for anyone who feels a little jaundiced. But, sir, it will be interesting to know what is the genesis and origin of this particular vertical extension.

So much, sir, for what the resolution proposes. I have more to say about what the resolution fails to do that should have been done. There should have been an extension proposed in the resolution of a horizontal nature rather than a vertical one. This is not a new matter. It was discussed in the house on April 10, 1953, very fully. That was when the house was in committee of the whole on the bill to amend the Income Tax Act. At pages 3702 to 3708 of Hansard is contained what I think was a useful and comprehensive discussion of this question.

The Minister of Finance is not in the house at present. I know his parliamentary assistant will not misunderstand me when I say I wish the minister were here to add to what he said last year because, while he then put forward certain objections and indicated certain difficulties in the way, he did leave us with the impression that he was not dismissing the subject finally, that he was prepared to keep an open mind on it and would review the subject further. Many of us hoped that by this year he would have been ready to propose some remedial legislation. At page 3704 he summed up his view in this way:

> I have not taken a final position but the difficulties, the inequities, still appal me.

The minister is not here to explain what his thinking on this subject has been since we discussed the matter thirteen months ago.

The principle is incontestable in this house that the Canadian people should be encouraged to provide for their old age. We do give recognition to that principle in various ways. The principle is recognized in the Income Tax Act in various respects. For the purpose of the present discussion, the principle is already extensively recognized in the subsections of section 11 of the act which I have mentioned. If these provisions in favour of employers and employees with respect to contributions to approved superannuation funds are allowed to stand and the principle upon which they stand is not to be further recognized then I must say that there is discrimination which must be subjected to close examination.

In the discussion a year ago the minister ventured to suggest that to extend the principle in the manner then proposed by some of us would in effect constitute a discrimination. I absolutely reject the minister's argument. The fact of the matter is that the principle is already recognized. The discrimination, if any exists, has been written into the act now, and the way to meet this situation is not to put an end to all remedial legislative efforts but rather to apply our best efforts to extend the principle and in that way abate any existing discrimination. The principle has been recognized and the statute in this respect is working quite satisfactorily.

So far as any of us have heard in discussion in the house, there has been no criticism of these provisions in section 11 of the act and there has been no complaint of difficulty on the part of the government in administering them. I do not doubt that in the ordinary course problems are presented in the process of administration but, Mr. Chairman, that is what we have administrative machinery for, and it is evident that this legislation has been operating satisfactorily. That cannot be gainsaid.

Those who are excluded, as has been said by my colleague, the hon. member for St. Paul's, are, broadly speaking, the self-employed. Those concerned can be grouped into many categories but generally speaking —and it is for such groups that it seems to me the principle should be extended—they are bona fide agricultural, labour, business, industrial or professional associations or similar organizations. In proposing the extension to bona fide organizations of that kind I am proposing, it seems to me, nothing that is open to attack in principle and nothing that will present administrative difficulty that cannot be readily overcome.

There have been many submissions made to the Minister of Finance on this subject. Probably the most notable was the one made a year ago. It was a joint submission put before him on behalf of the following organizations: the Associated Dentists' Co-operative, the Association of Professional Engineers of the Province of Ontario, the Canadian Dental Association, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Canadian Medical Association, the Certified Public Accountants Association of Ontario, the Commercial Travellers Association of Canada, the Law Society of Upper Canada, the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada and the Toronto stock exchange. It was a very impressive brief that was submitted to the minister in the name of these organizations. The minister must have been impressed with that presentation.

Now, sir, there was some suggestion from the minister last year about administrative difficulties. I submit that there is no administrative difficulty offered in this respect that cannot be overcome in the same way that any administrative difficulties have been overcome in reference to the operation of the existing subsections (f) and (g) of section 11 of the act.

The minister promised to give consideration to this subject during the past year. He has made no reference to it whatever even in introducing his resolution for a vertical extension of the provisions of the present act in this regard. I am afraid that the minister, contemplating his retirement from the office which he now holds, has probably lacked the interest to press these matters to a conclusion. It is evident that in this and in other respects which have come under debate in the house during the past two days he is leaving many problems on the doorstep of his successor, whoever he may be.

There was one difficulty raised by the minister last year that I think warrants special mention. He suggested that what would be involved in the case of the self-employed of the groups to whom I have alluded would be virtually a double deduction. He said in effect: Today we allow the employer a deduction of $900 from his taxable income and we allow the employee a deduction of $900 from his taxable income, so that there is a total deduction of $1,800 in the case of the contributions to a retirement allowance for any one employee. In the case of the self-employed, the minister contended that to put them on a similar footing we would have to allow a similar total deduction of $1,800, and in the case of the self-employed that would accrue entirely to the benefit of one person and not two as at present. My answer is that whatever limitations are necessary to assure equitable application can certainly be devised. That kind of objection is no excuse for doing nothing to meet a situation of this nature where a very serious discrimination now exists.

Looking abroad, sir, there has been since this matter was under discussion on April 10, 1953, one very notable development in the United Kingdom. It is the submission to the chancellor of the exchequer of what is known as the Millard Tucker report. This report was submitted recently to the chancellor of the exchequer by a royal commission which takes its name from the chairman, Mr. James Millard Tucker, K.C., J.P. The committee was appointed in August, 1950, by Sir Stafford Cripps when he was chancellor of the exchequer, and is composed of very eminent men. It has surveyed this whole question of the taxation treatment of superannuation and retirement provisions under the law of the United Kingdom. I am told that the same committee is now extending its investigations into other aspects of taxation law and administration.

This report deals specifically, among other subjects, with the subject of the tax position of the self-employed in relation to provisions being made by them in various forms for their maintenance on retirement. I do not propose to weary the committee by referring to the details of this report. It is a document embracing some 156 pages of very fine type, a report that has about it every mark of learning and of thorough investigation into this subject. The reference to the committee calls for investigation into this and a number of other related subjects. The committee has among its extensive recommendations included one in favour of a scheme for putting self-employed persons on a comparable basis in regard to taxation with employees who enjoy the benefits of a superannuation scheme provided by their employers.

There is a minority report submitted by two members of this committee, which makes certain observations upon the report of the majority, but as I read that it does not attack the basic recommendation to which I have just made reference. The committee covers this particular subject of the tax position of superannuation provision made by the self-employed in chapter 6, and has embodied some 30 recommendations in detail dealing with almost every aspect of the subject and certainly providing every type of safeguard that is required to ensure equitable treatment of those in the self-employed field and to avoid any form of discrimination with respect to that class.

Now that report came only recently before the chancellor of the exchequer. When asked whether he would be prepared to introduce legislation to implement its recommendations at the present session of the parliament of the United Kingdom I am informed he said that the session was so far advanced he did not feel he had time to give this subject the study it required before introducing legislation based upon the recommendations of the Millard Tucker committee. But he did give assurance that before another session of the parliament of the United Kingdom was convened he would give to this subject and to the recommendations of the Millard Tucker committee exhaustive study and consideration.

Exhaustive study and consideration of this subject are long overdue in Canada. At a time when the government has seen fit to propose this vertical extension of the provisions of the present act, it seems to me the government has failed in its duty in coming before the house without any proposal for a horizontal extension of the same provisions. A horizontal extension is unquestionably much more urgently required in the interests of fair play, in the interests of the removal of existing discrimination, than is any vertical extension. The time to deal with a vertical extension, if there is a case for one, is after a horizontal extension has been written into the law of this land to remove the existing discrimination and to give fair play and justice to the self-employed in this country.

Mr. Knowles: Before the parliamentary assistant replies to the statements that have been made by the hon. member for St. Paul's and the hon. member for Eglinton I should like to urge that he give the committee a clear statement as to why the changes set out in this part of the resolution are being made. Without necessarily agreeing to all the specific suggestions that have been made by the last two speakers, I certainly agree with the general statement that a horizontal extension is more important than a vertical one.

What does strike me about these figures is the practical result. It is now possible for an employee to get a deduction for $900 in the course of a year as a current payment into a superannuation fund. What employee can pay even that much into a pension fund? The payments that employees make into pension funds are at varying rates, but 6 per cent of one's salary is a fairly good rate, indeed, shall I say, a fairly high rate. This $900 is 6 per cent of a $15,000 annual salary. It does seem to me if provision has been made for a person on a salary as high as $15,000 a year to get income tax deductibility for 6 per cent of that, that is about as far as we need to go.

If this amount that can be deducted is to be raised to $1,500, that is 6 per cent of an annual salary of $25,000. It seems to me that the government is getting the cart before the horse in being concerned about people up in those brackets before it does something to encourage the broadening of pension plans to cover our people generally. One could look at a lot of different tables and get different results, but speaking very generally and bearing in mind the fact that these contributions are in turn usually matched by the employers, when you are talking about a $900 annual contribution from employees, that usually means a total of $1,800, $900 from the employee and $900 from the employer. Over 25 years that could buy a pension of between $4,000 and $5,000, depending upon when the contract starts and the age at which the person goes on pension.

The proposal to raise the amount that can be deducted to $1,500, according to this very rough calculation I have made, results in allowing income tax deductibility to people who are purchasing pensions of $8,000 or $9,000 a year. It does seem to me we should be concerned about broadening the base of the exemption and encouraging the development of plans that will help those who are now not covered at all before we should be concerned about income tax deductibility for the purchase of pensions of these high orders.

I stress the further point that when you raise the amount that you can deduct from $900 to $1,500, not only does that take you up into the higher income brackets before a pension of that kind can be afforded, but when you get up into those upper brackets it means that the income tax saving that arises from the greater deductibility is that much greater, because you are in the higher income tax brackets.

Perhaps the parliamentary assistant has an explanation for this. He may think it is a good one, and we will be glad to hear it as soon as he is given the opportunity to speak. But I do want to say that this is hardly the sort of thing the government should be bringing in, bearing in mind the fact that we are still waiting for the government to go ahead with the plan that it had before us a few years ago, which was to raise the amount that can be bought under a government annuity.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to get out of order by discussing that question, but I do lay this before the committee as an example. There was an occasion when something was being done to make it possible for people who could buy annuities at $1,200 to have them increased to $2,400. That is down within reasonable brackets. But it was not carried out, for some reason which has not yet been made known to us. But here is this move, which is a help to people in brackets which to most Canadians seems rather high and fanciful.

I think something should be done to encourage the establishment of the kind of pension plans that would enable employees to carry their pension rights with them when they move from one employment to another. And one of the ways that can be encouraged is through income tax provisions providing income tax deductibility where plans are funded, and employees are given the right to move about.

It is one of the things that happens with some pension plans, that sometimes employees seem to be frozen on the job because they cannot lose such pension rights as they have earned. It seems to me that that is the sort of problem, the need for broadening the base, to which the government should be directing its attention, instead of raising these figures to levels which produce the results I suggest they produce—and which, so far as I know, have not been requested. I hope the parliamentary assistant will explain why this resolution was brought in at all.

Mr. Benidickson: One of the questions raised and described by the hon. member for Eglinton was the reason for what he described as a vertical rise in the pension ceiling. This legislation I think was generally approved in 1946, when it was introduced. A ceiling of $900 was established at that time. I think hon. members will recognize that wages and salaries have increased between 1946 and the present time roughly in the proportion of the increase in the ceiling proposed here.

My hon. friend from Eglinton, too, was asking from what quarters the suggestion was made that brought about this legislation. I certainly want to assure him, as he said, that it did not come from members of parliament; because under their pension scheme this change in the act would be of no benefit. The hon. member himself outlined that our maximum contribution is in the nature of $240.

Mr. Fleming: That is per annum.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, per annum. The hon. member for St. Paul's of course was not with us in the last session, and I do not know whether he has read the very full statement that was given by the Minister of Finance at the last session explaining why he felt that this could not or should not be extended to the self-employed.

The hon. member for Eglinton emphasized, and I felt wrongly, the minister's explanation of last year, in that he suggests that he presented administrative difficulties as being the important difficulties in his rejection last year. Then and now, on this suggestion that the self-employed should have a provision in a horizontal way, similar to what is provided for employees, I suggest to the hon. member for Eglinton—

Mr. Fleming: The minister did not confine his objection to the matter of administrative difficulty. He argued on the basis of discrimination and that is why I spent as much time as I did in my remarks in dealing with the subject of discrimination.

Mr. Benidickson: Certainly the preponderance of the minister's argument was on principle. I wish to assure my hon. friend that not only this year but last year the representations that came in from certain groups were very carefully considered. But I am quite satisfied that after a re-examination of the problem the minister came to the same conclusion that he did last year, which the hon. member for Eglinton quoted:

> I have not taken a final position but the difficulties, the inequities, still appal me.

The hon. member referred to the report in the United Kingdom of a commission which was giving consideration to this problem. I believe the commission brought in a report about two months ago. Perhaps it was too early to have it considered by the chancellor in his budget, which was brought down the same night as our Canadian budget. I do wish to point out—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am not calling the parliamentary assistant to order, but rather hon. members who are not maintaining order in the chamber.

Mr. Benidickson: I see it is about ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman. I was going to conclude by saying that there is a very striking difference in the take-home pay, shall we say, after taxes of the self-employed, in the United Kingdom, as compared with the same group in Canada. I have some figures here showing the tax of a married taxpayer with no dependents receiving an income of $10,000 a year. In Canada that person would be paying a tax of $1,660, plus $60 as the old age security tax. The same individual with that income in the United Kingdom would pay a tax of $4,086, plus a social security tax of $39. I think that is the distinguishing point between the situation in this country and that in the country from which this commission report has been received.

Resolution stands.

Progress reported.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. W. E. Harris (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 447, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXCISE ACT

Hon. W. E. Harris (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 448, to amend the Excise Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall begin with the resolution in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, which I understand may not take too long. Then we shall have second reading of the bill with respect to the Canadian National Railways which, upon receiving second reading, will go to the committee. Then we shall take the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act in committee. I understand that since everyone supported it when it was in the house and in committee it should not take too long. We shall then take second reading of the bill to amend the Department of Transport Act; second reading of the bill respecting inventions by public servants, and the resolution with respect to crown corporations; second reading of the bill to amend the Radio Act and second reading of the bill to amend the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act.

Mr. Knowles: And then go into supply?

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 19, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

SEVENTH AND EIGHTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN EIGHTH REPORT

Mr. David A. Croll (Spadina) presented the seventh and eighth reports, of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and moved that the eighth report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

CASH ASSISTANCE, WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. McLeod:

1. What has been the total of cash assistance paid to the farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta under the provisions of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, since the inception of the act?

2. What has been the total cash assistance paid to the farmers of British Columbia under any similar legislation during the same period?

Mr. McCubbin:

1 and 2. Total payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act from 1939 to March 31, 1954:

Province	Total cash assistance
Manitoba	$ 3,924,095.52
Saskatchewan	104,969,869.33
Alberta	36,921,082.80
British Columbia (Peace river block)	290,526.50
Total	$146,105,574.15

T.C.A.—FILMS OF MOOSE JAW CRASH

Mr. Thatcher:

1. Did any motion picture company make newsreel films of the recent crash of a T.C.A. plane at Moose Jaw?

2. If so, has any department or agency of the government censored the showing of such films?

Mr. Pickersgill: I might answer this question orally. It affects more than one department. It was found, after the national film board had made a check of the list of newsreels, that there was no newsreel of the recent T.C.A. plane crash at Moose Jaw. In any event, the film board does not censor the showing of newsreel films. In case the hon. member might feel the C.B.C. was a government agency, which of course it is not, an inquiry was made of the C.B.C. It does appear that a firm in Regina made some pictures of the wreckage, and those pictures were shown on television.

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE, C.B.C.

Mr. Zaplitny:

1. How many different language sections are there in the international service of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and what are these languages?

2. Who is in charge of each of these sections?

3. What is the policy of the government with respect to the purpose of this international service?

4. What department of government is responsible for the administration of these policies?

Mr. McCann:

1 and 2. 17.

Language	Section Head
English	Jack Craine
French	J. M. Marcotte
Norwegian	Krabbe Smith
Swedish	Sture Persson
Danish	Axel Thogersen
Finnish	Erkki Kuutti
Dutch	Miss M. van Steensel
Italian	H. P. Capozzi
German	G. J. Pick
Austrian	Mrs. R. Auersperg
Czechoslovak (Czech and Slovak)	Dr. W. Schmolka
Russian	S. Chripounoff
Ukrainian	Gordon Panchuk
Polish	G. Arthur
Latin American (Spanish and Portuguese)	A. Brassard

3. The purposes of the international service include: spreading knowledge and understanding of Canada in other countries; promoting international understanding and good will with other peoples; advancing the cause of freedom and democracy and combating opposing influences on men's minds; broadcasting to Canadian troops overseas. The operating program policies, appropriately adjusted according to the interests of the peoples in the areas concerned, are made in continuous consultation with the Department of External Affairs.

4. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is responsible for administration of the international service.

Questions

POST OFFICE—REGIONAL DIRECTOR, QUEBEC

Mrs. Fairclough:

1. When was the office of regional director of the Post Office Department for the Quebec region vacated?
2. Who was the former incumbent?
3. What was his salary?
4. Has the position been posted?
5. If so, on what date?
6. Has the work meanwhile been carried on by a substitute or assistant?
7. If so, at what salary?

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare):

1. April 1, 1953.
2. Sarto Chartrand.
3. $8,100.
4. No.
5. Answered by No. 4.
6. The development of the investigations division is not yet completed. In the meantime, in addition to the work of developing the investigations unit, Mr. Chartrand has undertaken special assignments in relation to the regional work. Some of the work formerly performed by the regional director is being assumed by district directors or other competent officials. In the opinion of the management consultants, J. D. Woods and Gordon Limited, as district directors attain their full responsibility their function will merge with that of the regional directors. It is as yet too early to made a positive decision.
7. Answered by No. 6.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

COMPANY DIRECTORS

Mr. Knowles:

1. Who are the directors of (a) Montreal Bronze Limited; (b) Canadian Car & Foundry Company, Limited; (c) Montreal Locomotive Works Limited?
2. Are any of the above directors members of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways? If so, which ones?

Mr. Pickersgill: Return tabled.

DOMINION WHEEL AND FOUNDRIES DIRECTORS

Mr. Knowles:

1. Who are the directors of Dominion Wheel and Foundries Limited?
2. Are any of the above directors members of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways? If so, which ones?

Mr. Pickersgill: Return tabled.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

POSTMASTER, YORK, ONT.

Mr. Charlton:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged between any person or persons and the Post Office Department, since January 1, 1953, relative to the position of postmaster at York, Ontario.

[Mr. McCann.]

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REPORTED NEAR CRASH AT MALTON AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Transport. In view of the narrowly averted air accident at Malton, will the government indicate what plans, if any, it has for eliminating the possibility of such accidents in the future?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Our officers had been asked to check on the veracity or otherwise of the statement that appeared recently, and to which reference has been made by my hon. friend, concerning a near crash at Malton.

However, in order to answer the second part of the question, I may say that I do not think that would be possible until such time as the report that was tabled by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the Moose Jaw tragedy has been completed. It was an interim report to which my colleague referred, and until the final report is complete, I do not think it would be possible to deal with that matter.

FLAX

REDUCTION IN PRICE AT WINNIPEG—ACTION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of a press report in today's Globe and Mail. This report indicates that flax prices skidded 15 cents yesterday on the Winnipeg market. Can the minister inform the house whether the Canadian government was informed of the intention of the United States government to place surplus flax stocks on the world market and whether it is expected this action will affect the price of other grains?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government was not advised in advance of the action taken by the United States to cut the price of flax on the export market. The United States is not a market for Canadian flax. The entry of our flax is barred by a prohibitive duty, and that has been the situation for a number of years. Consequently it is natural that the United States would not think of Canada in connection with the marketing of flax.

Canadian flax is marketed through the Winnipeg grain exchange and I presume that it is a reflection of the prices of flax on foreign markets that has affected the Canadian price, even though the principal market for Canadian flax is in Canada.

So far as the export price of flax affecting the price of other grains is concerned I am of the opinion the price of flax will have no relation to the prices of other grains.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): May I ask a supplementary question. Is not this action a breach of the Geneva trade agreement?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The duty between Canada and the United States is not a bound duty. We would not like to bind that duty at the present level. It is a duty of 50 per cent ad valorem. Therefore there is no GATT agreement regarding flax which could be violated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GENEVA CONFERENCE—POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Will he bring the house up to date in connection with the Geneva conference and, in particular, what Canada's stand is to be, or is, in connection with the five-point program advanced and suggested by the British representative, foreign secretary Eden.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, I am not in a position to say anything that would be either informative or useful at this time about the present position at Geneva. I understand the present plans of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) are to be back here at the beginning of the week. He returned to Geneva yesterday, and I understand he is planning to come back at the beginning of the week, and will no doubt be in a position to supply the house with all the information that can properly be made public at this time.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

MINESWEEPERS—REPORTED CONTRACT WITH UNITED STATES FIRM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the minister in charge of defence production. Has the Department of Defence Production recently let a contract for the construction of laminated pressurized wood keels for six minesweepers to a Bellingham, Washington, shipyard firm? Was there a bid on this construction made by a British Columbia firm and, if so, why was it not awarded the contract?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think I could consider this question as one of urgency. I believe the hon. member for New Westminster would be amply satisfied if his question were inscribed on the order paper.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PURCHASES OF COLD-PUNCHED NUTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport, and would ask that he take it as a notice. Would he inform me whether or not cold-punched nuts purchased for use by the Canadian National Railways are manufactured wholly or in part in Canada, or are imported from foreign countries?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Nesbitt: I realize this question might sound as if it should be on the order paper. But, for a particular reason, which I do not care to discuss at this time, I suggest it has urgency.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): It is not for me to say whether this is a question that would be more suitable for the order paper. However, as the hon. member has said, it is one of which I have received no notice, and I would have to make inquiries. However, I can see no difference between this question and scores of others, such as one the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has asked and which is now on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, but my question has been on the order paper for a week.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION

RECOMMENDATIONS BY WESTERN MINISTERS OF AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the recommendations emanating from the recent conference of the ministers of agriculture of the four western provinces to the effect that the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act be extended to cover all agricultural areas in those provinces? If so, would the minister care to comment on these recommendations at the present time?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have been getting representations of that kind every few months for some years, and there has not been any action taken in the matter up to the present which would extend the area to which the act applies.

TRADE

TURKEYS—IMPORTATIONS FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question either of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) or of the Minister of Finance. Have representations been made by the British Columbia turkey breeders association relative to the marketing of turkeys and the importation of such birds from the United States? If so, will the minister make a statement?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): A little while ago I had representations from our own old friend, Senator Tom Reid, that turkeys were being imported in abnormal quantities into British Columbia. The matter is being looked into, but I am not yet in a position to make a statement.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe he is attracting them with his bagpipes.

VETERANS LAND ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE FOR HOME CONSTRUCTION, ETC.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Veterans' Land Act to provide financial and technical assistance to veterans for home construction and also to provide further financial assistance to veterans presently settled under the act as full-time farmers or who may be so settled in the future and to veterans who may in the future become qualified as part-time farmers or commercial fishermen.

Mr. Brooks: I take it the minister is making a statement?

Mr. Speaker: I would have to tell the hon. member that it is not our practice to have ministers make statements at this stage of procedure. The motion to go into committee on a money resolution is not debatable. Vide—ruling by Mr. Speaker Macdonald, Journals, March 26, 1953.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

[Mr. Zaplitny.]

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, the resolution now before the committee seeks authorization by the house to introduce a bill to amend the Veterans' Land Act by adding to it two new parts to provide veterans with new means of assistance to build their own homes, and to settle on the land for full-time or part-time farming.

The portion of the bill to be known as part II of the Veterans' Land Act is intended further to assist veterans of world war II and the Korean operations to become home owners. It is particularly designed to assist veterans who, because of the nature and location of their employment, cannot be established conveniently on two or three acres of land as part-time farmers under the Veterans' Land Act, and whose income is not sufficient to meet payments on the cost of a home built by a regular contractor under the National Housing Act.

It has been our experience that many such veterans are capable and willing, if given technical guidance and supervision, to put their own labour into building a modern home, and thus bring its cost within their reach. The assistance we propose to provide will consist of training courses planned to give the veterans concerned a general knowledge of housebuilding; supervision and technical guidance during construction; financing on an interest-free basis while the work is in progress; the supply of standard plans and drawings and free legal service up to and including deed and mortgage.

Under this measure there will be no conditional grant as for full-time and part-time farmers, but veterans retain their right to re-establishment credit which, if it has not been used, may form all or part of the down payment required under this proposed legislation.

It is proposed to authorize the director of the Veterans' Land Act to enter into a construction contract with an eligible veteran who, after a course of instruction or another suitable test, is considered to be competent to build his own house, and who has been approved for a loan under the National Housing Act. Before entering into such a contract, the veteran must either pay to the director not less than $800 to be used to purchase a lot, or transfer to the director title to a suitable lot worth at least that amount, or make his down payment partly in land and partly in cash. There will be no restriction as to the size of the lot provided it is suitable for a single family dwelling.

This cash or land requirement will serve, first, as a security deposit during the life of the building contract and, second, as all or part of the veteran's down payment when the property is reconveyed to him, subject to a mortgage in favour of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or an approved lender under the National Housing Act. The cost of construction, up to a maximum of $8,000, will be financed through regular progress payments by the director from a revolving fund of $15 million. Upon completion of the house, the director will convey title to the property to the veteran and register a mortgage in favour of the lender. The proceeds of this mortgage will reimburse the revolving fund.

I know hon. members will recognize in this general outline a very close resemblance to proposals in the brief presented by the Canadian Legion to the government last November. In its brief the Legion drew attention to the success achieved under the Veterans' Land Act build-your-own-home program. Perhaps it would be helpful to refer briefly to this program, which has assisted over 9,000 veterans, most of them with only modest incomes, to achieve the stability and satisfaction of home ownership by applying their own muscle and management.

The build-your-own-home program was introduced in 1949 to overcome the ever-increasing cost of building, so far as to enable veterans to continue to become home owners under the Veterans' Land Act without committing themselves to payments which, considering their incomes, they might not be able to meet. It was realized that additional supervision would be required in connection with these contracts, and, to meet this need with the comparatively small staff of supervisors available, the Veterans' Land Act administration developed the idea of holding evening courses of instruction for prospective veteran builders. This group instruction, carried out during the winter months when construction work was at a minimum, had the effect of spreading the work of the construction supervisors more evenly over the year, and has made it possible for many veterans to undertake the construction of their own houses who, otherwise, would have been unable or have lacked confidence to do so.

As at the end of last December, about 6,650 houses had been completed by veterans acting as their own contractors, and nearly 1,800 more were under construction. Of over 1,700 new house contracts let by the director during the past year, 84 per cent were let to veterans acting as their own contractors.

The saving to the veteran under this program is substantial. Not only does he save the contractor's profit but he generally saves substantially in labour costs by doing much of the unskilled work himself. Workmanship of the houses built to date has been at least as good as that on similar houses built by contractors. While the main credit for this must rightly go to the veterans themselves, I think the success of this program owes a great deal to the construction supervisors who have assumed the dual role of instructors and guardians of a public investment. These men will be performing a similar function under the measure proposed.

In addition to these houses built by veterans settled as part-time farmers under the act, approximately 50 have been built during recent years on city lots under a joint assistance arrangement between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Veterans' Land Act administration. Under this arrangement, the director conducted training schools and gave supervision and legal services during the construction period, while the financing was done by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Included in this number are 29 houses built near the Carleton Heights Veterans' Land Act project, just outside Ottawa, by a group of junior civil servants who, for the purpose of building, formed a co-operative association. These veterans paid $750 for serviced lots, which constituted both security deposit and down payment, and constructed four-bedroom houses for $6,200, which was the amount of their mortgages. The normal cost of these units, including the land, was estimated to be $9,950, or $3,000 more than the cost to the veteran, and they are valued at the present time at over $11,000.

This plan, owing to the financial arrangement, proved rather cumbersome. The difficulties then met will, however, be overcome in the proposed legislation by the revolving fund from which the director will be able to make advances to the veteran-contractors as work progresses.

With this background of experience to draw from, we now propose legislation which will assist eligible veterans who are unable to settle as part-time farmers under the act, but who are able and willing to make substantial labour and management contributions to obtain home ownership through their own efforts.

The section of the bill which will be known as part III of the Veterans' Land Act will make available to full-time and part-time farming veterans and commercial fishermen veterans additional financial assistance in the form of fully repayable loans bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. Repayment will be amortized over a period not in excess of the remaining period of a veteran's existing contract with the director.

The purpose of making provision for these loans is twofold. Firstly, they will assist veterans who desire settlement under the Veterans' Land Act to bridge the gap between the maximum financial assistance now available and the cost of acquiring economic farm units or constructing houses. Secondly, they will provide a source of credit to veterans already settled or to be settled as full-time farmers under the Veterans' Land Act for the purchase of additional land, erecting buildings, clearing, fencing, draining or effecting other improvements which will increase the productive value of the land and promote soil conservation.

While a source of credit for such purposes is available to the ordinary farmer under the provisions of the Canadian Farm Loan Act or the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the fact that the veteran settled under the Veterans' Land Act does not have title to the land he farms, but is considered as a tenant at will, prevents him from obtaining any assistance available under those two acts, with the exception that he is eligible under the Farm Improvement Loans Act for loans to purchase livestock or farm implements.

The additional loans which this measure will authorize the director to make will amount to a maximum of $3,000 on behalf of full-time farmers either already settled or to be settled; and $1,400 on behalf of part-time farmers and commercial fishermen who may be settled in the future. Assistance under this part is not provided for those veterans already settled as part-time farmers or commercial fishermen, who will be able to obtain financing for extensions to their houses under part IV of the National Housing Act, which will make provision for home improvements and home extension loans when it is proclaimed.

I have indicated, Mr. Chairman, the maximum amount of loan that the director will be authorized to make. To qualify for such a loan the veteran will be required to contribute an amount equal to one-half of the loan. That is, if the cost of purchasing additional loans or effecting improvements totals $4,500, then the veteran will contribute $1,500 to be used in conjunction with the loan to be made by the director amounting to $3,000.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

However, a cash contribution by the veteran may not be required in all instances. If a veteran had an equity in a property at the time he was settled under the Veterans' Land Act, or if, since the date of his settlement, he has increased the value of the property by way of improvements at no cost to the director, then the amount of such equity or increase in value will be considered as all or part of the veteran's cash contribution.

With the additional financial assistance which this measure will provide, it will be possible for a veteran already settled, or seeking settlement as a full-time farmer, to obtain total financial assistance amounting to $9,000, so that the maximum funds available for expenditure on his behalf, including his contribution, will be $10,500.

In so far as the new part-time farmer or commercial fisherman is concerned, the maximum funds available for expenditure on his behalf, including his contribution, would be $8,100.

It is believed that the provisions of this bill, in conjunction with the build-your-own-home program and the assistance and service provided by the administration's well-trained and experienced staff of supervisors, will have the effect of bringing the over-all financial assistance available under the Veterans' Land Act into line with the price structure of today without, at the same time, involving any veteran in commitments he might not be able to meet.

It is proposed, Mr. Chairman, that when this bill receives second reading it will be referred to the special committee dealing with veterans legislation where, of course, there will be ample opportunity for full explanations by the responsible officials of the department.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, I followed the minister as best I could during his rather technical and involved statement which was rather difficult to grasp. However, as there will be a bill following this and the matter will be discussed in the veterans affairs committee, we will then have a better opportunity of understanding it and making whatever comments may be necessary.

I might say at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that I am in hearty agreement with the principle, as I understood it, which was outlined by the minister. The only criticism I would make is that it is rather late in coming. I think this is a matter which could have been dealt with some time ago and, as the minister himself pointed out, this principle has been suggested by the opposition on different occasions, and advanced in particular by the Canadian Legion.

There has been great concern during the last five or six years over the serious housing shortage as far as veterans and others are concerned, I think particularly in the case of veterans, because they have been to my mind the greatest sufferers in terms of this housing shortage. The Legion has made a very serious study of this matter since 1948 when they made recommendations to the government on how they felt the housing situation could be improved. They realized, as we all do, that the present housing situation does not meet the need so far as the veterans are concerned, and also that the Veterans' Land Act did not meet the requirements of the Legion.

There has been particular criticism of the fact that under the Veterans' Land Act veterans could not obtain lots and build in towns and cities. I understand from the minister's statement today that this is to be corrected. Many of our veterans build on two and three acre lots and they find that trying to farm, and also carry on other work, is quite impractical. It was more of a rural than an urban scheme and, in order to meet the requirements, this small city lot proposal was introduced which I think will meet the demand.

This criticism, of course, was advanced by veterans who were commuters and therefore did not have time to carry on extensive gardening or farming on their three-acre lot, and many found in addition that the high cost of machinery prevented them from carrying out the work they had intended. They now find that many of these lots are heavily under weeds and that the situation is not at all satisfactory.

The resolution before us suggests that there will be financial and technical assistance, and the minister has mentioned the fact that this assistance will be in the form of a revolving fund which will not place a heavy burden on the taxpayers of this country, since it will be in the form of a loan to veterans which they will be able to pay back under the provisions outlined by the minister. I believe this is a very sound idea, and we can take from what the minister said this afternoon that it is the intention of the government to implement the suggestion in the Legion's brief of November 1953 which called for a substantial extension of the Veterans' Land Act.

The build-your-own-home idea, about which we have heard a great deal from veterans in the past, received the blessing of the then minister of veterans affairs, the present Minister of Labour, in 1948, and it has proved very successful. It is based on the idea of self-help as well as mutual assistance. I did not understand the minister to say whether a veteran building on his own could receive assistance from his fellow veterans, and I do not know whether that is the intention of the government. Perhaps he could tell us now. Is that the intention?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes.

Mr. Brooks: As I say, it is a matter of mutual help as well as self-help. The idea of providing schools of instruction and providing that the veteran himself can attend school and learn something about construction and building, where other veterans also attend those schools and where one veteran will help another, is a good one. It certainly means that by their united efforts they will be able to build their houses much more cheaply than otherwise.

It is a fact also that the veteran will not require to have as much income. When the National Housing Act was under discussion in the house some time ago I think it was stated that a home builder must have an income of at least $3,800 in order to construct his home under the National Housing Act. This afternoon the minister told us that a much smaller salary will be all that is necessary for a veteran to have in order to take advantage of this new bill that is proposed.

The minister also told us that some 6,500 houses had already been built under the build-your-own-home scheme, and that of that number some 800 I think were under construction this year. I understand that in the building of these homes, which cost in the vicinity of $6,000, by this self-help and mutual help the veteran has been able to save anywhere from $2,000 to $4,000 per house. That is indeed a great saving and it is of great benefit to the veteran. The minister has also pointed out that under the present Veterans' Land Act scheme—which I think is operating under order in council—for these build-your-own-homes, schools have been set up and a pattern has already been established which will be of great benefit when this act comes into force.

The Legion makes a number of recommendations which I understand from the minister are being incorporated in the act. As a matter of fact, I think we can thank the Legion as well as the government for this proposed act. From what the minister told us this afternoon I am satisfied that this idea originated back in 1948 under Colonel Price, who was then president of the Canadian Legion. It was recommended by the Legion at that time. As I said at the outset, the only regret that we all have is that the idea was not implemented and carried out long ago.

I should just like to put on the record, if I may, Mr. Chairman, the recommendations of the Canadian Legion in their brief presented to the Prime Minister and his cabinet on November 10, 1953. To me the brief indicates what a thorough study has been made of this matter by the Canadian Legion; and what influence this study and these recommendations have had upon the government is indicated by the minister's speech this afternoon. In the brief presented on November 10, 1953, the Legion made these recommendations:

> We recommend that the facilities of the V.L.A. administration be made available to carry out a "Build Your Own Home" program for veterans on city size lots on the following terms:
> (1) A veteran to be eligible must have service which would qualify him for settlement under V.L.A.
>
> (2) The veteran must have title to a suitable lot supplied with water, or sufficient funds to purchase such a lot; the lot to be turned over to the director as security for original advances and should the appraised value of the lot be less than $800, the veteran to deposit the difference with the director.
>
> (3) A veteran, to qualify, must have a good employment record over a period of at least 4 years, must have taken a course in house construction using the V.L.A. syllabus and standards, and be approved as qualified to take a contract to build his home.
>
> (4) The veteran must be able to furnish a bond of indemnification to the director, payable in case of loss or misuse of material supplied and paid for by the director on delivery and before it is incorporated in the house.
>
> (5) The veteran's plan must be approved as being practical and giving good value, and the veteran must agree to build in accordance with V.L.A. standards and to accept supervision to assure the following of these standards.
>
> (6) The veteran to be given a contract to build at a price not to exceed 80 per cent of the value of the lot and completed house.
>
> (7) The director to undertake to advance money when work is completed by subcontractor or material is supplied to site, up to a total of, but not exceeding 75 per cent, of the appraised value of the structure as it stands, and the material on the site at the time such payment is made.
> (8) Payments to be authorized by the V.L.A. construction supervisor on bills approved by the veteran-contractor direct to subcontractor or supplier of material.
> (9) The lot and completed house to be sold to the veteran at the contract price, the director taking back a mortgage on terms and at interest rate acceptable to C.M.H.C. who may purchase the mortgage, making necessary the appropriation by parliament to V.L.A. of only a circulating fund for the purpose of financing veterans' homes during the period of construction.

As we listened to the minister this afternoon we realized how closely the government is following the recommendations of the Legion in this respect. I think they are to be commended for that procedure. When this act is amended and when these ideas come into force and are acted upon, I am satisfied that it will be of great benefit to the veteran and will assist very greatly in the building of veterans homes.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Chairman, this is a rather complicated matter and one which it is difficult to understand just by hearing a statement from the minister. We shall have ample time to study it when the bill comes down. We shall have further time to study it when the bill is before the veterans affairs committee. We can discuss it later on with more knowledge of it.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, last evening the minister, as I understand it, approached members of the veterans affairs committee, suggested that the committee was meeting this afternoon at 3.30, and requested us to facilitate the passage of this legislation so that it might get into the committee at that hour which will arrive in about ten minutes' time. We agreed to that procedure. I intend to live up to my agreement.

I want to say this for a start. The idea of self-help in the building of homes or anything else did not have its origin in 1948. It had its origin with the Rochdale pioneers in Britain a long time ago. Since 1930 we in the province of Nova Scotia have had a co-operative housing act, with a revolving fund. It is applicable to all citizens of that province who can meet the requirements of the act. It is therefore not a new idea. It is a good idea and it is the only method whereby the average citizen with the average income in Canada is going to be able to secure a home for himself and to own it some time without mortgaging the two generations that will come after him.

I welcome this legislation. I am not going to attempt to summarize or to analyse it. I will look it over in committee. When the legislation comes back to the house after the committee has determined the merits and demerits of it, the members of this group will express their opinions at the subsequent stages of the bill.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I am also going to be very brief because we did agree we would cut our speeches down to a few words in order to make it possible to send the measure to the committee this afternoon. We in this group are glad that this legislation has been introduced because we believe that it will help veterans to build their own homes and will also help those veterans who are already settled and are having difficulty in financing. It is often difficult for a veteran to get a loan from a bank on account of the fact that all his property is tied up under the Veterans' Land Act.

But there is also another reason why I am glad that these amendments to the Veterans' Land Act are being brought down. It will give the veterans affairs committee a chance to review the operation of the Veterans' Land Act since its inception. I think that is important because most of us will remember that the old Soldier Settlement Act failed to re-establish many veterans. I think that much of the blame for that failure arose from the fact that the government of the day did not keep sufficiently close contact with what was happening and thus did not see that steps could have been taken at the time that would have made it possible for many of the veterans who failed to have achieved success.

It is true that changes were made from time to time but invariably they were too little and too late. If we make a close check at this time of the operations of the Veterans' Land Act and find that certain things of an undesirable character are happening, of a character that may result in veterans failing to be re-established, then I take it we will have a chance to make recommendations that official steps be taken. All I will say at this time is that we feel both the proposed amendments will be beneficial, and we will have more to say on the matter when the bill is brought down.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to ask the minister one question with respect to the set-up outlined in the resolution and the explanation that the minister has given. He said that the lot would only have to be large enough for a single-family home. Has the minister given any consideration to veterans who bought their property previously, whose property has now been brought within the limits of a city and who are now finding that the taxes are extremely heavy and are not allowed to sell any of the property. Will such veterans now be allowed to sell any of their property?

Mr. Lapointe: The problem that the hon. member for Peterborough mentions is not one coming within the scope of the amendments to the Veterans' Land Act that will be introduced. He has referred to the acreage restriction provided by the regulations passed under the authority of part I of the act. As I mentioned in my statement, these amendments introduce two new parts to the act and do not deal with this particular problem. However, consideration is being given to the problem at the present time.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): The minister has said on many occasions that consideration is being given, but would this not be an excellent time to bring in an amendment so that it could be done?

Mr. Lapointe: As I have just said, the acreage restriction is one that is imposed by regulation and it does not call for amendment of the act. The act does not specify in any of its sections the acreage necessary. That is done under regulations authorized by the act.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Can they not be changed?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes, they can, but I am saying that the matter is being given consideration.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): O.K. Make it soon.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Lapointe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 459, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time? Now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Lapointe moved the second reading of Bill No. 459, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be referred to the special committee on veterans affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Lapointe moves, seconded by Mr. Pickersgill, that this bill, entitled an act to amend the Veterans' Land Act, be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Pearkes: On a point of order, is this bill being referred to a standing committee on veterans affairs?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should have said "select" or "special" committee.

Mr. Pearkes: Well, I was hopeful.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ST. FELICIEN AND HILLSPORT LINES—PROVISION FOR FINANCING

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 442, an act respecting the construction of lines of railway by Canadian National Railway Company from St. Felicien to Chibougamau and from Chibougamau to Beattyville, all in the province of Quebec, and from Hillsport on the main line of the Canadian National Railways to Manitouwadge lake, both in the province of Ontario.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to construct two lines of railway, one in the province of Ontario from Hillsport, which is on the main line of the Canadian National Railways, to lake Manitouwadge, a distance of twenty-seven miles, at a cost of $3,750,000. The Ontario line will have an average cost per mile of $138,888. Statistics which have been furnished to the government by the Canadian National Railways indicate that this will be a profitable operation. In fact the statistics, which I take it will be established in the committee, prove that the potential traffic in the lake Manitouwadge area is as follows: inbound traffic, 60,000 tons per year, outbound traffic, 665,000 tons per year.

The earning power therefore of this line will be about $1,900,000 from the inbound traffic and about $4,100,000 from the outbound traffic, a total of $6 million. It follows from this that with a potential earning of $6 million per year the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways will be bettered to that extent. There is included in the statistics which have been furnished by the Canadian National Railways a minimum traffic figure and that minimum is 700 tons of ore per day. Even with that volume, the position of this line has been established as a profitable one.

The other line from St. Felicien to Beattyville is 294 miles in length and will cost $35 million, that is, from Beattyville to Cache lake, $17 million; and $17 million for the easterly portion of the line, that is from Cache lake to St. Felicien; and $1 million from the junction of the two lines at Cache lake to Chibougamau itself. The cost per mile of the east end of the line, that is from St. Felicien to Chibougamau, is $122,308, while the cost per mile of the westerly end, that is from Chibougamau to Beattyville, is $114,093.

In 1953 the Canadian National Railways made a preliminary survey of this whole area and found, as they knew before from aerial photographs, that the whole area is heavily timbered. The forest resources of that section between Beattyville and Chibougamau are estimated at 30 million cords of pulpwood per year. The area from St. Felicien to Chibougamau is also heavily timbered, and there the estimate is 15·7 million cords of pulpwood per year. There is, therefore, almost twice as much timber and pulpwood on the westerly section of line as on the easterly section.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

There is another point which is of importance in that regard, and it is this. On the westerly end of the line the rivers flow into Hudson bay, and therefore in the development of this area the railway line will be used to move timber from the Chibougamau into other parts of the province of Quebec. This condition does not exist in the eastern section. In the eastern section the rivers flow into Lake St. John, and therefore this pulpwood and timber will normally flow down the rivers rather than use the railways. It has been possible, for that reason, for the Canadian National Railways to obtain guarantees from certain timber companies on the western end of the line which they could not obtain on the eastern end.

In the area between Beattyville and Chibougamau there is considerable mining development, and it has been staked out by a number of companies. As it is now, the Dome Mines Company has staked a number of claims. The Opemiska and the Campbell Chibougamau Mines Limited are among those companies that have staked out claims, and both have excellent promise of development. The bulk of the prospective traffic would consist of mining concentrates moving to the Noranda smelter. As it is now the Canadian National holds guarantees from Opemiska Copper Mines Limited and Campbell Chibougamau Mines Limited, under which the two companies guarantee the shipment of a daily average of 325 tons of ore concentrates over the line from Chibougamau to Beattyville in a period of six years. It is not possible to obtain similar guarantees on the eastern end of the line.

Mr. Rowe: I do not want to interrupt the minister, but earlier in his remarks he referred to 30 million cords of pulpwood a year. I think he must have been in error. Did he mean 30 million cords altogether in one year?

Mr. Chevrier: No, I said 30 million cords annually from the west end of the line and 15·7 million cords annually from the east end of the line.

Mr. Rowe: Just to keep the record straight, is the minister sure of those figures? I feel there must be a mistake.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the hon. member for the correction. I have the figures here, and I think perhaps I was in error. The forest resources in the west between Beattyville and Chibougamau total 30,200,000 cords of pulpwood, capable of an annual sustained yield of 671,000 cords. On the other line the forest resources indicate an estimate of 15·7 million cords of pulpwood and lumber capable of a sustained annual yield of 366,000 cords.

Mr. Rowe: That is based on a 50-year cycle?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; so I am grateful to my hon. friend for having corrected me on that point.

I was dealing with the guarantees, and I had said that guarantees had been given by the two copper mines that I mentioned. There was also a guarantee from the Howard Smith company, in which they undertake to move 30,000 cords of pulpwood per year for a period of six years. I was going on to say that it was because of these guarantees the Canadian National Railways came to the decision that they should build from the west end, namely from Beattyville to Chibougamau first. However, as I pointed out earlier, the Lake St. John area has a great future from the point of view of economic development. There is no doubt that, because of the tremendous amount of water power that is available in that area, and because of the proximity of an important seaport, it will be possible to continue the line in that area which will open up new territory.

The directors of the Canadian National Railways, after having carefully considered, over a period of time, the economics of the whole line have come to the conclusion that the line should be built as a whole in the general interests of Canada, and we in the government conceive it as one line. We are asking for authority to construct it as a whole. We will start from the west end. There is sufficient assurance of traffic from the west end. Construction from this end can be commenced without a subsidy or special arrangement, and without awaiting further development. With regard to the eastern portion it will be necessary to see what assurances of economic developments exist, and it will be necessary also to ascertain whether or not some sort of subsidy arrangement such as was made in the case of the P.G.E. and the Ontario Northland, in contemplation of northern development, should be made.

However, both the railway and the government feel there is sufficient assurance of future development to ask parliament now to authorize this line, but there is not sufficient assurance on which to base any definite arrangement to finance the whole of the line at this time. It was for that reason I made the statement at the resolution stage of the bill that we would proceed in the manner in which we are. It does not follow from that decision that it will not be possible to begin construction at the eastern end soon, but thus far there has been no tangible evidence of any guarantee of traffic from the eastern end of the line. Until there is I do not think this house would want the government to proceed with a venture in which the Canadian National Railways might involve itself in a serious financial position. I think we are safe in proceeding in the way in which we are. We are taking no chances. There are guarantees on the western portion of the line, in the same manner as there were guarantees on the Barraute-Kiask Falls line. There is no difference at all in the method of procedure here by the Canadian National Railways, and what was done in respect of the earlier line.

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the minister permit a question? Could the minister tell us what happened in connection with the Barraute guarantee? I would be interested in the figures, in a general way, if he has them.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. I think I can safely say this, that the Barraute to Kiask Falls line has worked out far better than had been expected. The house will recall that when the line was built I made certain statements of the estimated profits that would accrue to the Canadian National Railways if that line were built, and I also gave the house the assurance that the Canadian National Railways had obtained guarantees from Canada Pulp and Paper or Howard Smith Paper Mills, Limited, I am not sure which. Those guarantees were given for a period of five or six years. The guarantees have been exceeded; and the position of the Canadian National Railways as a result of the construction of that line has been bettered.

As a matter of fact I have the record here on that point, and perhaps I should give it to the house. At the time the construction of the Barraute-Kiask Falls line was authorized the Canadian National Railways estimated the operating result for the first six years would be as follows: Total gross revenue of the C.N.R., $3,007,000; total expenses, $2,316,000; net system revenue, $691,000 before interest and $97,000 net profit.

The pulpwood traffic guarantee for those years obtained from Canada Pulp and Paper was a minimum guarantee for the first year of 40,000 cords, and a minimum guarantee for the succeeding five years of 45,000 cords, with a total guarantee for the period of six years of 330,000 cords.

Here is what happened: For the first year—that is 1949—the shipments ran to 40,114 cords; in 1950, it was 58,474; in 1951 it was 129,536; in 1952 it was 97,744 and in 1953 it was 123,232, for a five-year period total of 449,100 cords. This means that in the first five years of operation pulpwood shipments exceeded the guarantee for the first six years by 119,100 cords. So that the estimate of the Canadian National Railways in that case has proved to be pretty sound.

When the hon. member interrupted I believe I was about to make the point that the Canadian National Railways have given careful consideration to the economics of the situation. They believe that the economics prove that this line should be built. They would like to begin at the west end, and they believe that by the time they get to Chibougamau they will have obtained traffic guarantees. If they have not succeeded in so doing, I hope that industrial development in that area will be such that they can continue completion of the line.

As I said earlier, at the resolution stage, it is my intention when this bill has received second reading to refer it to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines for consideration.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, there are two features about this bill which I would like to place before the house, in the hope that the minister will give a little further explanation when he closes the debate.

The first point is this, that the resolution we passed on May 11 was one to authorize expenditure of $38,750,000. However, in the bill introduced after that resolution was passed we find that this amount has been increased to $44,562,500. There may be some explanation for this difference, but I do not know what it is.

Mr. Chevrier: Where does it appear that $44 million is asked for?

Mr. Green: In section 4 of the bill. And as I have been asked the question, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to read that section. It says:

> Subject to the provisions of this act and the approval of the governor in council, the company may, in respect of the cost of the construction and completion of the railway lines, or to provide amounts required for the repayment of loans made under section 5, issue notes, obligations, bonds, debentures or other securities (in this act called "securities"), not exceeding in the aggregate, exclusive of any securities issued to secure loans made under section 5, the sum necessary to provide the company with the net amount of forty-four million five hundred and sixty-two thousand five hundred dollars, bearing such rates of interest and subject to such other terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve.

I believe that under the rules of the house the amount contained in the bill should be the amount authorized by the resolution. I draw this to the minister's attention for an explanation. In the figures he gave us today respecting the cost of this line he repeated the amounts contained in the schedule which, of course, add up to $38,750,000. So there is no explanation in the schedule as to how the larger amount is reached.

Then the second point on which I should like to have further explanation is the statement that one part of the line is going to be built first, and then the other part is to be built later, or that it may be built later. Usually when these bills are brought in making provision for the construction of a railway line they authorize such construction from one point to another, and set out a time within which the line is to be built.

I have before me the bill which authorized the extension from Terrace to Kitimat, in British Columbia, as it is set out in chapter 20 of the statutes of 1952. The procedure I have outlined is, I suggest, the normal one—to provide for the building of a line from point A to point B within a certain period of time.

In the bill we are asked to pass today I find a change in this procedure. According to this bill the line may be built in whole or in part at the discretion of the governor in council, and it need not be built until 1964. Well, that is ten years from now. I would point out that in the Terrace-Kitimat bill the line was to be built before November 1, 1954. I think there was a similar provision in the Lynn Lake bill—that is, that the line was to be built right away.

In the bill before us however we find that for some reason or other there is a provision permitting a delay of ten years. The minister has said the company will begin to build the railway from the west end, that is from Beattyville to Chibougamau, and that they have guarantees of a certain amount of freight for that portion of the line. But when it comes to the line from Chibougamau to St. Felicien he is not so clear. He says it will be necessary to see what assurance of economic development exists in the Lake St. John area, to be traversed by this eastern portion of the line. I think he said something to the effect that there was not sufficient assurance to finance the whole of the line at this time. Also he used words to this effect, that there is no tangible evidence of any guarantee of traffic.

He was very indefinite about the building of this other half of the line. I raised this question when the resolution was under debate because it seemed strange to me that the minister would come into the house and ask authority to build a line and not be prepared to build from both ends at once. Instead of that he is planning obviously to build one, and then he can see whether or not the other is to be built, and yet he has authority to go ahead if it is decided at that time to go ahead.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a question? Is my hon. friend arguing that we should begin from each end at the same time?

Mr. Green: Well, Mr. Speaker, that would be the normal procedure in a case like this where you are connecting up two points already on a railway.

Mr. Chevrier: Can my hon. friend point to any other lines that were built in Canada within the last ten years that have been started at each end at the same time?

Mr. Green: Most of the lines that we have built started at a point on a railway and went out into a territory where there was not a railway. That is not so here. Here this line is to be built from one station to another station. Take the Terrace and Kitimat line. That was a case of extending a line from Terrace on the C.N.R. down to Kitimat on the sea coast where there is no railway at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: What about the Rouyn-Senneterre line?

Mr. Green: The Lynn Lake line was the same. That was a case of starting a line at a station known as Sherridon and building it up to Lynn Lake. We had the case of a Canadian Pacific branch line down in the county of Peterborough. There a new branch line is to start at a station on an existing line and be built out into territory where there is no railway. In this particular case it is of importance that the minister make it clear why he is picking out one end of the line to be built and deferring construction of the other. The only assurance that the western end of the line is receiving attention is contained on page 4600 of Hansard where the minister said:

It is expected—

There is nothing definite about it. I continue:

It is expected that by the time the proposed line is completed from the western end into Chibougamau, if not before, projects for new industrial development in the Lake St. John-Saguenay area which are now being considered by prospective investors will have reached a stage which will justify the construction of this line—

Apparently he is expecting somebody to build up industries in the Lake St. John-Saguenay area and then perhaps the railway will build to those industries. The minister continued:

—and a decision can then be reached about any subsidy required and warranted in respect of the line. In the meantime, the Canadian National Railways will proceed to assist and encourage further developments in the Lake St. John-Saguenay region as a means for building up potential traffic for this new line.

To me, as someone coming from a long distance away from where this line is to be built, it would seem that the best way to build up industries in there would be to build this line now and not wait for ten years to build it. It is asking quite a lot to expect others to build up industries when they are not getting a line. I cannot quite see the minister's reasoning in that regard.

I believe that the Lake St. John and Chicoutimi and Saguenay area is being seriously prejudiced by this policy of the government. At the present time the Chibougamau area is tributary to Lake St. John and Quebec city. There is a highway in from Lake St. John to Chibougamau built by the provincial government at an expense of $4 million, I believe, and the Chibougamau area has been opened up by that highway.

If the minister's plan is followed, the railway will come from the west end and tie up the Chibougamau area with the Rouyn and Noranda area. I believe that the Ontario Northland Railway runs into Noranda so that there will be a tie-up right there to the city of Toronto. The result may very well be that the Chibougamau area, which is a great many miles inside the border of Quebec, will eventually become a tributary of the city of Toronto. That might happen in any event if the whole connecting line were built, but the fact of postponing the part of the line which is to run from Chibougamau down to St. Felicien certainly can have no other effect than a tendency to put the traffic and the trade and the interests into the Noranda and Rouyn area and also into the city of Toronto.

Mr. Dumas: Will the hon. member permit a question? Will he tell me whether Rouyn and Noranda are in the southwestern part of Quebec or in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Green: If my geography is correct, I think Noranda is in Quebec, but I point out to the minister and I point out to the hon. member who represents Noranda—he should know whether Noranda is in Ontario or in Quebec, incidentally—that the Ontario provincial government railway runs right into Noranda, if I am correctly informed, and I am sure the tendency would be to make the Chibougamau area tributary to Toronto.

Mr. Chevrier: That argument is wholly fallacious.

Mr. Green: The argument may be wholly fallacious. I am merely bringing the point forward for explanation by the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: I hope to be able to explain it.

Mr. Green: Because I know that if a similar situation existed in British Columbia, where there was a centre in my own province which was going to be drawn away, as far as business was concerned, into Alberta by reason of the construction of a government railway, I would be very much upset about it and so would every hon. member from British Columbia.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Green: I will just get on with my speech. The minister can make his own, and can tell us about Newfoundland. Then there is this feature. The Chibougamau area, if it has an outlet by Lake St. John and Chicoutimi, is fairly close to shipping. The harbour of Chicoutimi is a national harbour, and it would seem is the natural outlet for that area. It would seem that is where there should be smelters or some construction of that kind. Also in Quebec city we have one of the great ports of Canada, and it has a rail connection with the Lake St. John area. One would think that there would have been a tie-up put through so that Quebec city could be connected by rail with the Chibougamau area. Instead of that, for a period of some time, perhaps for ten years, we are going to have the position that if anybody wants to go by rail from Quebec city to Chibougamau he will have to go all the way down through Ontario and around to get into Chibougamau through Noranda.

There is a great power potential in the Lake St. John-Saguenay area; it is a great industrial area, and one would think that would have been an inducement to have this railway line built right through from Lake St. John to the Noranda area rather than doing just one part of the job now and leaving the other for an indefinite period.

The minister said in the debate on the resolution stage, and he said again today, that this line was in the interests of Canada. If it is in Canada's interest let us build it as a whole and not leave half to be built at a later date. The government has come and asked the house for authority to build the line. I suggest they get busy and go right through with the construction.

(Translation):

Mr. Andre Gauthier (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very short in my remarks this afternoon since it is the third time in two weeks that I have the opportunity of dealing with the important question of the construction of a railroad from St. Felicien to Chibougamau. I simply wish to put forward one or two remarks and in particular to ask the Minister of Transport one question.

On May 11, when presenting the resolution, the minister said:

> It is expected that by the time the proposed line is completed from the western end into Chibougamau, if not before, projects for new industrial development in the Lake St. John-Saguenay area which are now being considered by prospective investors will have reached a stage which will justify the construction of this line and a decision can then be reached about any subsidy required and warranted in respect of the line. In the meantime, the Canadian National Railways will proceed to assist and encourage further developments in the Lake St. John-Saguenay region as a means for building up potential traffic for this new line.

Mr. Speaker, the public bodies and the people of the Lake St. John-Saguenay district are satisfied that potential traffic in the immediate future is more than sufficient to convince the authorities of the Canadian National that the eastern and western sections of the line should be built at the same time. On their behalf I beg the government to undertake immediately the building of the St. Felicien-Chibougamau section.

The main factor that was taken into consideration by the authorities of the Canadian National Railways in deciding to build the eastern section was the guarantee of an average traffic of some 325 tons of ore per day, and the promise by the Howard Smith Paper company to ship some 30,000 cords of pulpwood or approximately 175,000 tons per year.

I would like to put the following question to the Minister of Transport:

If the people of Lake St. John district guarantee the authorities of the Canadian National Railways a yearly traffic of 175,000 tons, that is the same quantity guaranteed by the Abitibi district, will the minister give me the assurance that he will immediately authorize the Canadian National to undertake the building of the eastern section, between St. Felicien and Chibougamau?

Mr. Paul E. Gagnon (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us will have far-reaching consequences for the whole Saguenay kingdom, and most particularly for the constituency which I have the honour of representing in this house, provided that a clause be inserted stipulating that the two sections of the trunk line shall be undertaken and completed at the same time.

If the Chibougamau-Beattyville section is built, while the Chibougamau-St. Felicien section is deferred, we will have a trunk line which was started the wrong way and which will benefit the Toronto financiers before the people of Quebec.

Some say that the name Chibougamau comes from an Indian word meaning "land of hope" or "promised land". To the prospectors, mining engineers and settlers who have visited this vast district, Chibougamau is undoubtedly a very promising land, because of the immense wealth of its subsoil. That part of the province will eventually become highly developed and there is no doubt that, one day, it will become one of the great mining districts of this country, taking its place alongside such districts as those of Porcupine, Kirkland Lake, Sudbury, Flin Flon, Noranda and Trail, even promising to surpass some of these.

It is also a new paradise for hunters and fishermen. There are wonderful lakes there, and rivers overflowing with fine trout. These lakes, some of which are quite large, are surrounded by remarkable mountains and valleys with the finest forest cover. It is an attractive district of one thousand square miles, approximately, which pleases and enthralls at first sight.

Its underground wealth was probably first recognized, back in 1906, by one Joseph Obalski, an outstanding mining engineer and geologist attached to the Quebec department of mines, who travelled throughout it and studied it at that time. It was also surveyed by Peter McKenzie, a very experienced prospector, as well as by John E. Hardman, first president of the Canadian Mining Institute.

As long as there was no easy access to that district, its exploration remained extremely costly and its development practically impossible. To reach Chibougamau one had to travel 200 miles by canoe, with about fifty portages, in summer, and a long drive by dog-sled in the cold season. In spite of this, Peter McKenzie and his son kept on with their work of exploration in that area for quite a long time.

A few years ago the building of a carriage road into that distant territory was begun, but construction was interrupted at the beginning of the last world war. Thanks to the Hon. Antonio Talbot, minister of highways of the province of Quebec, and to the Union Nationale government, work on this road was resumed in 1945, and it is possible today to drive comfortably to the very heart of that rich mining district. One of the many advantages of that road, apart from encouraging the establishment of rural parishes and opening up of new territories, is that anyone going in for mining may transport the heavy material needed for that purpose.

That region, as well as the whole Abitibi district with Chicoutimi and the Saguenay river as its natural outlet, is, as the hon. Minister of Transport just said, one of the gems of the kingdom of the Saguenay.

(Text):

Speaking in Arvida on August 19, 1952, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said:

> The kingdom of the Saguenay and the province of Alberta are the two regions of Canada which are the most promising and assured of an extraordinary industrial development.

By plane, the Saguenay district is 50 minutes from Quebec city, two hours and 15 minutes from Montreal and four hours from New York. By car, it is three hours from Quebec city on a first-class three-lane hard surface highway. By train, the district is an overnight trip from Montreal or Quebec. The district is served by Canadian National Railways. By boat the district is in touch with the entire world. The navigation season is from April 1 to December 1. The district has two modern harbours, Chicoutimi and Port Alfred located some 15 miles east of Chicoutimi on Ha! Ha! bay.

The harbour of Chicoutimi is situated on the Saguenay river about 75 miles from its mouth. The Saguenay flows into the St. Lawrence river at a point 120 miles below Quebec. The facilities operated by the national harbours board include 2,500 linear feet of wharf accommodating ships of 26 feet draft and about 8,500 feet of standard gauge railway tracks connecting with the Canadian National Railways. In terms of tonnage handled, Port Alfred is the third largest ocean port in Canada, next to Montreal and Vancouver. It is 2,795 miles from Liverpool, England, and 810 miles from Halifax, Nova Scotia.

(Translation):

Until now the natural resources of the Abitibi region have, in the main, contributed to the wealth of citizens from other provinces. That new branch line must not help in an even greater measure to drain those vast resources which belong first of all to the citizens of the province of Quebec.

It is therefore necessary to build section A at the same time as section B, if not before.

One must first turn to the nearest seaport, that is to Chicoutimi.

The Chibougamau region is geographically related to Chicoutimi and to ignore it would be to work against the natural characteristics of the district and against present—and especially future—economic conditions.

The water power which it will be possible to harness on various rivers—the Ashuapmuchuan, Mistassini, Peribonka, and Saguenay rivers for instance—represents millions of horsepower which will be added to the existing capacity, and that fact is a powerful and fundamental argument in favour of the immediate construction of the St. Felicien branch line. The people of the Saguenay district have been clamouring for that railroad for the past forty years.

If the government truly wishes to provide our district and our province with a means of transportation that will ensure the development of that territory, it should take the whole problem into consideration right now and bring about a solution that will not only take care of present conditions but also of the future expansion and of the permanent interests of Chibougamau.

The authorities of the Canadian National should envision more than the matter of immediate profits. Since water shipping is less costly, it is usually preferred when available.

The distance between Chibougamau and Chicoutimi by rail is 220 miles, of which 139 miles remain to be built. The distance between Chibougamau-Barraute and Mont Laurier-Montreal is 515 miles of which 350 remain to be built, while the line between Chibougamau-Barraute-Noranda-North Bay and Toronto is 750 miles, of which only 165 miles remain to to be built.

The distance between Chibougamau and the port of Chicoutimi is 220 miles less than to the nearest seaport. And even in winter, the distance between Chibougamau and Montreal and Quebec being shorter by way of Chicoutimi, transportation costs to or from Chibougamau would again be greatly reduced. The importance of such a position from a commercial point of view is evident.

Chicoutimi is one of the national harbours which have been entrusted to a federal agency.

It would be of advantage to make use of its facilities, provided they are improved, to ship ore from the north of the province and handle incoming traffic.

This port, which is showing today a deficit, would probably become a paying undertaking of national importance.

The workmen of my constituency, who are second to none in Canada, would also benefit from it, and an element of stability would be added to the prosperity now enjoyed by 100,000 good Canadians. This part of the problem deserves attention. I believe that seasonal unemployment such as is experienced yearly in our cities and towns would eventually disappear, or at least would seriously diminish, were new industries born of the economic development of Chibougamau to be set up next to those already in existence.

Our region ranks first when it comes to the pulp and paper industry which provides employment for 5,000 workers, producing more than 2,200 tons of paper daily and paying out annual wages in excess of $10 million. It also ranks first with regard to production of power, and also as far as aluminum production is concerned, that industry providing work for 6,500 people whose annual income is over $11 million. It also ranks first with regard to lumbering, an industry which provides the inhabitants of the Saguenay district each year with over $11 million in wages.

It ranks first in Canada for rural trade, both wholesale and retail. Furthermore, it has the highest birth rate in North America; its population, in 1851, was 6,000 while its present population is 175,000, hence a natural increase of 34·4 per 1,000 inhabitants.

In his speech of May 11 last, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) stated that the government was not convinced of the necessity to provide subsidies for that line, but he admitted, on the other hand, that subsidies had been granted in 1949 for the extension of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway line from Quesnel to Prince George. On that occasion, that is on November 25, 1949, as shown on page 2243 of Hansard, volume III, second session, the minister stated:

> The bill is a simple one. There is a precedent, not recent but many years ago, and in granting a subsidy to the P.G.E., the bill takes the form of other acts by which subsidies have been granted.

That simple bill provided for a subsidy of $15,000 per mile, on a distance of 83 miles, with an approximate cost of $8,000,000, or an average of $96,700 per mile. The total subsidy amounted to $1,240,500.

The minister added, and I quote from page 1448, volume II of Hansard for the second session of 1949:

> There is a precedent for this practice. In 1913, the government proceeded in the same manner for the Ontario Northland Railway, and paid a subsidy of $6,400 per mile.
>
> The construction of the extension will provide traffic for the railway and assist in developing the natural resources in the area consisting of large tracts of timber suitable for lumber, newsprint, pulpwood and plywood, mining possibilities, sections of agricultural and grazing lands, hydroelectric power potentialities, and sport and recreational attractions.

Mr. Speaker, we find all those resources and potentialities in the district lying between St. Felicien and Chibougamau. If it was deemed advisable to grant a subsidy to British Columbia for the development of those resources, why would the same practice not apply to Quebec? If a smelter and a refinery were not necessary in British Columbia to warrant a grant, why should they be indispensable in the province of Quebec? Why not follow the precedents in the present case and give to the bill before us "the same form as other bills of that kind", as the minister said?

What are the reasons, the motive compelling this government to discriminate as between one district and another? I, for one, cannot see any serious reason.

I know for sure that the Minister of Transport is well disposed towards us and that he is trying to treat everybody with fairness. I am also aware that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), as member for Quebec East and head of the state, has a twofold interest in that project. They alone have the power to order the authorities of the Canadian National Railways to accede to the desire and wishes of the people of the whole province of Quebec and, in particular, of the kingdom of the Saguenay. I would therefore ask them to use their influence and to take this matter up with the proper authorities before it is too late.

In making this request, Mr. Speaker, I am expressing the wishes of everybody in my constituency, of the civil authorities, chambers of commerce or labour unions. I have received letters and telegrams asking me to take this matter up with the government. Among the telegrams which I have received I would like to mention those from the chambers of commerce of Ha! Ha! Bay and Chicoutimi, from the city councils of Chicoutimi, Bagotville and Port Alfred, from the county council of Chicoutimi, from the junior board of trade of the kingdom of the Saguenay, the Chicoutimi junior board of trade and the general council of the national syndicates. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the people of my constituency are unanimous in requesting that the government grant us this railway line which we are entitled to.

We have never been pampered in the past and the minister knows it. The province of Quebec has never had as much trackage as its population would have entitled it to. Unless I am mistaken it numbers 29 per cent of the people of this country as against only 11 per cent of its railway lines. It would not be exaggerated to ask the minister, today, to see that justice is done to us. I rely on his generosity to see that this is done.

Mr. David Gourd (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the debate on the second reading of the bill respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railways of a line between Beattyville and Chibougamau and from Chibougamau to St. Felicien in the province of Quebec, the greater part of which is within my constituency, that is the line between Beattyville and Chibougamau, I wish to thank the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) for this important decision. This gesture proves once again his great perspicacity and understanding—qualities which mark him as an outstanding statesman—and shows that he is always thinking of the economic interest and development of our great country, Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gourd (Chapleau): The St. Lawrence seaway, that great undertaking, will not be the least of his achievements.

I wish to repeat what I said in the house in 1945 and 1946 when a start was made on the trunk line between Barraute and Beattyville. I said to the members of this house:

> You may be sure that the new line will be the most profitable of all railroad lines in Canada!

And I am proud to state today that my forecasts were absolutely correct, as has already been shown. That trunk line from Barraute to Beattyville—a distance of approximately 47 miles—was completed in 1948, and has brought, since it was put into operation, very substantial profits to the Canadian National Railways, and I feel assured that the Beattyville-Chibougamau line—a distance of 160 miles—will be profitable to our national system, as well as to the constituency of Chapleau, to northwestern Quebec, and the country as a whole.

As the Barraute-Beattyville line derives its profits from timber and pulpwood, the Beattyville-Chibougamau extension would likewise make possible the development of extensive natural resources, including pulpwood and lumber and, also, all kinds of minerals, base metals, such as copper, zinc and lead, together with precious metals, such as gold, etc.

We already have there 78 established mining concerns. These now hold over 150 properties which need only construction of this railway line to begin producing. As a matter of fact several are already in production, such as Opemiska, Obalski, Campbell Consolidated mine, Merrill Island Mining Corporation, Chibougamau Explorers' Limited, etc, which now must have their concentrate hauled to Noranda, over 800 miles away, a fantastically costly operation. I believe that should be sufficient to prove that all these companies and prospects are dependent upon construction of this railway for their development. Not only are there 25 to 45 million cords of pulpwood and lumber, and millions of tons of concentrate awaiting construction of this line, but there is also the fact that this will bring about increased settlement.

There are in this district an estimated million and a half acres of arable soil which could well be used for agricultural purposes. I am told that over 25 townships would be suitable for cultivation and that these could support 15,000 farmers.

I wish to point out that this is practically the last area of the province of Quebec with agricultural possibilities.

This line may, moreover, contribute to the development of water power which, according to the estimates, might reach about 1,125,000 horsepower annually.

The construction of this railroad will contribute to an increase of population in my county of Chapleau and northwestern Quebec. In 1912, when I arrived in Harricanaw, now called Amos, on the Harricanaw river, we belonged to Pontiac county, which had a population of about 45,000 or 50,000. This area has since been divided into three counties; first of all, old Pontiac, that still has a population of 50,000, then the county of Villeneuve, with a population of more than 70,000, and, lastly, the county of Chapleau, which I have the honour to represent, with a population of more than 65,000. We are therefore justified in urging the government to carry on with this remarkable development, in the interest of the country as a whole. The extension of the railway from Beattyville to Chibougamau will, I am convinced, within five years, bring about an increase in the population of Chapleau county of more than 60,000, to a total of 125,000.

During the 42 years that I have been living in Abitibi, I have witnessed considerable improvement in temperature since it has dropped about 10 degrees; I am convinced that another like improvement may be expected from further deforestation and from the tilling of the soil along this northeast extension of 165 miles.

Such an important development is of public interest, the more so if we take into account the large revenue that the government will draw from it.

Every time I have visited the northern part of my constituency, I have rejoiced at the sight of the natural resources of that small section of our country and at its potentialities. To prove my point, I would be pleased if the ministers and my colleagues in this house could see for themselves the progress which has been made within the last few years in my constituency and also the potential developments that would benefit our great country, Canada.

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say on the bill now before the house. Personally, I suggest this bill might very well have been entitled simply "An act respecting the construction of a railway line by the Canadian National Railways from Chibougamau to Beattyville".

I know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) has told us that the government intends to build eventually the second part of this railway line which, according to the minister, is to run from Beattyville to St. Felicien, via Chibougamau. Unfortunately, this bill, as it now reads, will bury in oblivion the line from St. Felicien to Chibougamau. The minister has made this very clear this afternoon—and we must admit that he spoke very plainly—when he put forward some very good reasons, of course, for constructing a line from Beattyville to Chibougamau. He was very frank also when he told us that they would build the western end first and that if, after further consideration, they found that the development of the other area could justify the building of the eastern end of the line, well, perhaps the government or the Canadian National Railways would decide to build the section from Chibougamau to St. Felicien.

My argument is, therefore, simply that the present bill only covers the western section of the railroad, from Beattyville to Chibougamau. I may be wrong, but I think that the intention has been either to deceive the people of Lake St. John or have them believe that the government, while not pretending to have forgotten them, was postponing indefinitely the carrying out of this project, as may easily be seen by reading section 1 of the bill, which says:

> That the governor in council may provide for the construction prior to the 31st day of December 1964, or such later date as the governor in council may fix.

Well, Mr. Speaker, according to the information furnished us by the hon. minister this afternoon, no railroad can be constructed if there is no guaranteed revenue to justify such an expense.

It is clear that in ten years from now, if the construction of the eastern end of the line is not undertaken immediately, the chambers of commerce, the economic council of the Lake St. John district and other civic organizations will come back to Ottawa to ask once more for the construction of a railway line between St. Felicien and Chibougamau. It is agreed and indeed the history of Canada proves that the construction of a railway line ensures the opening up of a district, attracts business and industry and brings about a development which otherwise would not be possible.

When the people of the St. Felicien or of the Lake St. John district come here and ask for the construction of the east end of the line, they will simply be told: "Well, we already have a railway line in the Chibougamau district. If you can provide us with the economic means to support this railway, well, we shall see what can be done". When they return home, these people will be in the same position as they are now, for one must not forget that two or three years ago, as I can remember, from 80 to 100 trucks loaded with all kinds of supplies went from St. Felicien to Chibougamau via the road constructed by the provincial government; the suppliers and small manufacturers of the Lake St. John district made a good deal of money and their situation improved every year.

There is no doubt that if a railroad is built between Chibougamau and Beattyville, with the line going from there to Noranda and Ontario, all the mines in Chibougamau will soon get their supplies from that part of Quebec and Ontario, before they can get their supplies from St. Felicien and the rest of Lake St. John district.

I believe that the government is wrong in turning away from the seaport of Chicoutimi. I do not think a more ludicrous instance can be found than that of a government building a very costly railroad to bring mineral ore which lies scarcely 220 miles away from one of the best seaports of the country to blast furnaces established many hundred miles away.

I believe that the population of the Lake St. John region, of Chicoutimi and of the wonderful Saguenay district is entitled to demand from the government an undertaking that if the building of a railroad from Beattyville to St. Felicien via Chibougamau is undertaken, the whole line will be built and that if only part of it is to be built, the eastern branch will be built first for the reasons I have just put forward.

(Text):

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a very few words. We are glad to support this bill. As I indicated when we were at the resolution stage on May 11, we are pleased that this line is to be built by our own publicly owned railway system. Indeed, we are pleased that we have a publicly owned railway system that can undertake projects like this that are good for the whole of Canada.

I was interested in the question that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) raised, as to whether or not this bill goes beyond the financial provisions set out in the resolution that the house passed preceding the bill. The question struck me as an interesting one, and I have been reading both the bill and the resolution to see if I could find the answer. I feel the answer is there, although perhaps it is a bit obscure. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra thought there might be an inconsistency between the figure of $38,750,000 mentioned in the resolution and the figure of $44,562,500 mentioned in a couple of the clauses of the bill. I think if one looks closely he will discover that the reference in the resolution to $38,750,000 is to the total estimated cost of building the line, and that same figure is found in the bill by adding the items set out in the schedule, to which reference is made in clause 3.

On the other hand it appears to me that the reference to the guarantees in the amount of $44,562,500 is covered by another sentence in the resolution, which said:

> The measure will make provision for the issue by the company of securities, which may be guaranteed by the government in respect of the cost of construction.

Where I think there was a little slip in draftsmanship, if I may make that suggestion, is that the additional figure of $44,562,500 was not included in the resolution. I think the sentence I have just read from the resolution should have had in it some reference to the effect that the guarantees would not exceed this figure of $44,562,500. In any event, although it was an interesting question by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra I do not think it leads to any procedural difficulty. In my view the bill does not exceed the authority set out in the resolution.

I am grateful to the minister for having assured me on May 11, as reported at page 4609 of Hansard, that he would see that the Canadian National Railways officials were made aware of the remarks I had made on that day regarding labour conditions. He said he would see to it that the Canadian National Railways, in granting any contracts or subcontracts, would keep in mind the consideration that the general labour conditions under which these lines of railway will be built should be in accordance with the laws and the labour codes of this country.

We are glad to support the bill and to support the building of these lines of railway. But we do urge that every care be taken to see that the labour laws and labour codes of this country are respected. The bill makes provision for the company to build these lines by using its own forces, its own equipment and its own employees, or by letting out contracts to others. Whichever course is followed, or if it be partly one course and partly the other, I urge very strongly that there be no by-passing of labour laws or labour codes, and that there be no by-passing of collective agreements that the railway company has with various unions, but that the labour provisions established in this country be lived up to, both in the letter and in the spirit.

(Translation):

Mr. Fernand Girard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few remarks to what has been said here in connection with the building of the railroad between Chibougamau and St. Felicien.

When it was announced that the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railroad would be built, the whole Saguenay district rejoiced and saw the crowning moment of forty years of efforts and representations. The people felt that at last recognition was being given to an undeniable fact, namely, that the Saguenay district is a natural outlet for the iron ore development of Chibougamau and of great importance to its progress.

On behalf of all important organizations of the Saguenay district the council for economic planning went many times to Ottawa and in a detailed brief stated the case for the building of the branch line between Chibougamau and the Lake St. John district and insisted on its urgency. It is probably following such evident representations, which, by the way, have made known the development and great promises of the Saguenay district, that the district has been, in principle, included in the bill.

The city of Quebec itself, seeing in the outlet of Chibougamau and the Saguenay the best way to ensure for Quebec the refining of its ores, was unanimous in supporting our requests. Apparently, the government had also understood those obvious reasons, and no doubt, it was believed, the action of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) who had himself realized the immediate interest for Quebec in seeing that the project should be maintained and that the bill be now introduced.

Now, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) announces that the Abitibi-Chibougamau section will be built first, and moreover that this section will not be built immediately after the other, but only when the industrial development of Saguenay would urgently call for its construction.

That was, Mr. Speaker, a destruction of the magnificent impact this statement of policy had had. This is giving it, as the member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) said so well, a first-class funeral, as far as the portion which was supposed to extend into Saguenay is concerned. Thus we will be lagging behind the other area equally concerned in this matter. That statement of the hon. minister left the citizens of my county dumbfounded, especially those who live in that part of the Saguenay region which is affected. The government took a step that was called for when it announced the construction of the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railway line, but it will destroy its effect and the whole area will suffer great wrongs if it puts off that construction. That would work out to the benefit of another area which might be equally concerned but which will gain a foothold, I might say, because we would have to set, to its benefit, a precedent which cannot be but detrimental to the welfare of the Saguenay. We are faced with a problem which can be summarized thus: the railway line, it seems, is to be considered first from the financial angle. We consider it from that angle but we get the impression that the government will have to plead our case with the C.N.R. which cannot be interested in both sections.

Mr. Speaker, if all that is said and repeated is that we must immediately give a guarantee as to the number of tons that will be shipped, we are placing the district in an unfair position, because if only one section of the railroad is built at a time, it is quite clear that all smelters will be established in the part of the district served by that line and we shall lose them. I wish to mention the possibility of two smelters being built at Chicoutimi and Roberval and that we are jeopardizing those magnificent undertakings, for they will refuse to make risky investments on mere probabilities. They will say that they are willing to build a smelter provided, it goes without saying, they have a railroad. But the government says: "Wait until you build your smelter and then if the development it brings about can ensure sufficient earnings to the railroad, then we will give you that line". Whatever the outcome, we stand to lose.

The member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) certainly echoed the misgivings felt by the people of the Saguenay district, when he requested that both sections be built at the same time. To delay the construction of the Chibougamau-St. Felicien section would be to jeopardize the whole industrial future of the Saguenay district, and, especially, the erection of smelters which can be attracted only by the railway, as well as all other industrial projects awaiting its completion.

In my maiden speech which I delivered in this house on November 24, 1953, I joined the other members from my district in requesting the construction of that section as being essential to the development of my constituency and of this whole area, and I drew the attention of the government, in particular, to the St. Charles iron ore body in my constituency, the richest known so far in titanium content, stating that the development of that ore body was closely associated with this Chibougamau-St. Felicien line, as the traffic on that line would be increased by the construction of smelters.

Power development in my constituency alone exceeds 2,000,000 horsepower per day, as was so eloquently pointed out by the member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Gagnon). I am very happy that mention has been made of the millions of cords of pulpwood of which no use could be made failing the immediate construction of that stretch. I feel that the railway should be interested in building this line even if it did not feel that this would bring in immediate revenue, if only because it should have due regard to the evident interest of the Saguenay region and the province as a whole. I really wonder, then, if the Canadian National Railways have done everything possible on the Saguenay side, such as it has done on the other side. We are told, on the authority of the operators concerned with the tonnage which could be transported over the Chibougamau-St. Felicien line, that the quantity of lumber in our district is quite sufficient. This is shown by a brief which has just been sent to me by the Saguenay council for economic planning. This quantity would seem to be 75 million feet of lumber, which would be adequate to ensure the railway's revenue. These quantities are confirmed; they would mean close to two million tons transportationwise. That is why I feel somewhat unconvinced of the sincerity of those statements according to which we have no tonnage to transport.

I believe that, as far as the future is concerned, we have the greatest interest and we have the most numerous outlets, and that is why, in addition to the financial interest, I believe that the hon. Minister of Transport must also consider the general interest and the industrial development of a whole area. Therefore I support all those who are asking that both sections of the railway be built at once. Otherwise, it would be unfair and would create a precedent, while jeopardizing the construction of smelters which could only be detrimental to the project already under way in the Saguenay area. A deferred project is always a lost project, and I am under the impression that if the construction of both sections is not ordered immediately, we will be obliged to bring the matter up again, for who can tell that, in 10 or 15 years from now, the financial situation of this country will not be perhaps more difficult for the government, who will then say it is now more difficult and no longer possible to undertake works of that magnitude.

(Text):

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I want to make one or two observations before the debate is closed. I am one of those who believe in the development of our natural resources. In my opinion it is only in the creation of new wealth that we can improve and sustain the standard of living which we enjoy; consequently, it would appear to me to be a good investment on the part of the Canadian people to extend these railroads. No doubt it will help to open up new areas of forests, mines and farms, although I understand the farming areas are more or less limited.

It seems to me that this is a development we can compare with some of the developments that took place in the early days of this country. We would not have made the immense wealth of the west accessible if we had not built the transcontinental railway. This is tapping new areas in the north country that a few years ago we would not have believed it was practical or possible to develop. With the opening up of mining in the north country it looks to me, as I said before, like a good investment.

Along with that, at a time when there is a bit of unemployment—I will minimize it—this will help to create demand for a variety of things which are used in the construction of the railway and of new running gear. All along the line it will be necessary to have maintenance men with homes and families, and consequently businesses will grow up, and villages, towns and probably cities in the not too distant future.

I welcome the legislation, and I hope we go forward with it with all speed. I am convinced that the government is spending many millions of dollars from which they cannot hope to get the return that they will from this investment. I just wish to say that I appreciated the frank and forthright statement made by the minister in his opening remarks when he placed this legislation before us.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before the minister closes the debate I should like to say a few words on this bill. Several hon. members who spoke in this debate referred to it as a good investment. It would be a very optimistic person indeed who could today with any certainty refer to a railway development, probably in this or in any other country, as a good investment. I agree that this is an essential work for the development of sections of the country that cannot be developed in any other way, and it is interesting to note that it is the Canadian government railway that is building these extensions. I doubt very much whether one could get a private railway company today to invest large sums of money in railway building.

[Mr. White (Middlesex East).]

The reason for that is obvious. Today there are other methods of transportation competing, and in my opinion at times unfairly competing, with the railways. Those other methods of transportation are passenger buses, freight-truck lines and air lines, both passenger and freight, and they are taking, as it were, the cream off the transportation business and leaving the unprofitable business to our railways. I have not very much doubt that if something is not done to co-ordinate transportation activity in this country, for years to come, and that not very many years in the future, this government will be paying the deficits on this section of the road, because it requires many different kinds of transportation to make a railway system pay.

To make a railway system pay there has to be considerable express business, as well as considerable passenger traffic, and it is well known that the heavy freight traffic which will inevitably constitute the greatest part of the business of this line will not, at least in my opinion and according to my limited knowledge of transportation, prove a very lucrative business for the railway. However, I agree that this road is necessary for opening up this very difficult section of the country.

In his speech this afternoon the minister mentioned the guarantees on freight obtained by the Canadian National Railways before the project was approved and these guarantees will be all to the good, but they do not cover very many years and it should be kept in mind that when we build a railway it remains in use for a long time in the future. I just wanted to say these things, not because I have any objection to the bill, but because we should go into these matters with our eyes open.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with some of the points brought out during the course of this debate, and more particularly with those which have to do with the reason for beginning the construction of the line in the manner in which the Canadian National Railways has determined.

First of all, however, I should offer an explanation for the question raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) and point out that the resolution which was before the house a short time ago referred to the amount of $38,750,000 whereas the bill in one of its sections, I believe section 4, covers an amount of $44,562,500. There is no inconsistency in what is in the resolution, in what is to be found in the schedule to this bill, and in section 4 of the bill, and I must apologize to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) if I did not follow him carefully, but I think he found the answer.

The answer is to be found in the fact that the amount of $38,750,000 is covered by a 15 per cent estimate, whereby the railways are not authorized to go beyond that amount. In other words, if my hon. friend looks at section 3 of the bill he will find that the company shall not in performing the work of construction and completion exceed such estimates by more than 15 per cent, and the estimates as given in the schedule are for $38,750,000 to which, if 15 per cent is added, one gets the amount of $44,562,500. It is to cover and protect that position that section 4 has been incorporated in the bill.

Now I come to another point, namely that which the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra raised when he said the minister was very uncertain about the construction of this line. He said that he did not know whether the line would begin at the east end or whether it would be continued at the west end, and in fact that there was a great deal of uncertainty. He went on to say the best way to develop industry is to build up the line.

That is the very point that we in this country have been discussing for many years. In years gone by the discussion was as to whether a railway line should be built in order to bring people into the country, or whether the population should first reside in an area before a railway line was built. Evidently it was necessary in earlier years to build the line before the people moved into the area and before industry reached that area if the country was to be developed at all. But we know what the consequences of that policy have been, and during the last few years it has been the policy of this government not to build railway lines, at least through its agency the Canadian National Railways, unless and until there were guarantees which proved that the line could be made profitable.

That was the case in the Kiask-Barraute line; that was the case in the Lynn Lake-Sherridon line, with perhaps a qualification because of the urgent necessity of certain minerals; it was the case in the Kitimat-Terrace line, and it is the case in this line subject to what I will have to say a little later on. Therefore, there is nothing new in the policy which we have been following here, although as I said earlier on the resolution, and as I said on the bill, it may be necessary to give consideration to the payment of a subsidy on this line, dependent upon whether the traffic will or will not develop.

Somewhat to my surprise I found the hon. member raising a question and attempting to prove a point which to my mind is entirely fallacious, namely that the construction of this line will have the effect of diverting Quebec traffic to Toronto. I hope the hon. member will bear with me because from now on I would like to deal with this matter in the French language because the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Gagnon), I think the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Girard), and to some extent the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), although he did it in a different manner, repeated this argument.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this stage to refute the fallacious argument that has been put forward to the effect that the construction of this railway line means that Quebec traffic will go to the city of Toronto. But before I answer that argument which, I think, is unworthy not only of those who put it forward but also of those who suggest that the government would build a railway line or would ask its agency, the Canadian National, to build a railway line that would be injurious to a section of the province of Quebec, when the intention of the government is to develop the whole of Canada and not only one part of the province of Quebec—

Mr. Gagnon: That may be the intention, but the cold facts are there.

Mr. Chevrier: I would like to refer to an editorial in Le Soleil of May 17, 1954. There is no doubt that the hon. members got some of their arguments from this source, because I find them in this article, which reads as follows:

> As the federal government recognizes that it is a matter of national interest to connect the Chibougamau mining area with the Canadian railways right away, it would seem more practical to build first of all the shortest section of the two projects announced by the Minister of Transport.
> From St. Felicien to Chibougamau, the straight-line distance is hardly more than 100 miles—

Now this distance is 139 miles and not 100 miles. I continue:

> —and there is already a good road that might be used for a railway line. On the other hand, the distance from Chibougamau to the Ontario boundary of the Abitibi is twice as long, and there is yet no passable road for trucks or automobiles.

I need only draw the attention of hon. members to the appendix to the present bill, which shows the distance from Chibougamau to Beattyville. It is not twice that distance, but only 10 miles longer, or 149 miles. And the editorial adds:

> It means that Chibougamau would have to wait longer for its railway line if the construction work were started at Beattyville, a small town which is closer to Toronto than it is to Montreal or Quebec.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that statement is also wrong since the distance by railway, from Beattyville to Toronto, is 686·80 miles while the distance from Beattyville to Montreal is 494 miles, that is almost 200 miles less from Beattyville to Montreal than from Beattyville to Toronto.

Mr. Gagnon: It is easier to go to Toronto than it is to go to Montreal.

Mr. Chevrier: The same applies to the distance by road which is 538 miles from Barraute to Toronto as against only 358 miles from Barraute to Montreal. That is another error in this same article which is aimed at giving the impression that the Canadian National or the federal government would like to direct the traffic movement toward the Abitibi district or rather toward Toronto. The article goes on, in the last paragraph:

> These arguments which the premier of the province and the members representing the Lake St. John region put forward are so reasonable that the Canadian government should change its plans in the interests of the Chibougamau district itself and in order to save time and money. The question is of such importance that the interests of Toronto must give precedence to the interests of the entire country.

That argument has been quoted and developed by the hon. member for Chicoutimi. However such an argument proves so very false when analysed that one may wonder why it was even mentioned by him.

Here is why I make such a statement: people who know what all this is about know very well that the copper concentrates from the Chibougamau mines will be sent to Noranda, in the province of Quebec, a fact which was so well stated by the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas) when he asked a question. Moreover, after treatment at Noranda, the copper product will be shipped to a Montreal East refinery, to be further treated in the province of Quebec. From the refinery the material will be shipped for processing in industrial plants again at Montreal, so that every ounce of ore mined in the Chibougamau district will be industrially processed entirely in the province of Quebec and not at Toronto, as the hon. member has wrongly suggested.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Gagnon: May I ask a question of the minister?

Mr. Chevrier: Certainly.

Mr. Gagnon: Can the minister assert that sulphurous gas and native sulphur will not be refined at Hamilton or Welland?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am now speaking of guarantees given to the Canadian National and on which I shall come back a little later, but not of what the hon. member has just mentioned.

I am speaking of mineral products to be taken out of that district and about which the Canadian National has obtained certain guarantees. It is of those products and of those products alone that I am speaking at present.

Now, I would like to add that, notwithstanding what the hon. members have said, the Canadian National Railways did everything possible to obtain the necessary guarantees from the mining industries and other producers in the eastern part of this district, and, up to now, they have not succeeded in obtaining the necessary guarantees from the financial standpoint.

The question of the transportation of pulpwood on both sections was raised, and it was stated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), and the hon. member for Chicoutimi, that those products would be shipped to Toronto. Such an argument is absolutely pointless when we know that in both the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario there are laws providing that pulpwood from either of these two provinces must be processed in the province of origin. It is evident then, in my opinion, that those arguments were brought forth for only one purpose, namely, a political purpose. Some even went further. Some have said: Why is the government's attitude with regard to this line different from the one they adopted with regard to the P.G.E. in British Columbia or the Ontario Northland in Ontario where subsidies were paid? Why should there not be subsidies in a case like this?

Well, here is the answer. It is clear. The government's policy is to encourage lines which can operate at a profit. These two lines were provincial. The first of these two railways belongs to the British Columbia government, and this government wished to extend its trackage. To this end they requested a subsidy, which was granted them. The other line belonged to the province of Ontario. They asked us to subsidize this line years and years ago. If the Quebec government wished to build this railway and asked for subsidies, we would consider this request in the same way in which we considered the requests of these other provinces.

Mr. Gagnon: Roads, not railways, are built by the government of Quebec.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You are disappointed that they should be built by the federal government?

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend says that roads, and not railways, are built up by the government in the province of Quebec. That is true, but there is a certain individual in the province of Quebec who continuously talks about sovereignty and who, while anxious to talk about sovereignty, does not stop telling us how we should settle our federal matters. That is what he did about that railway, not long ago, and my hon. friend made himself his interpreter, when he said a while ago that the province of Quebec never had the proportion of railways it is entitled to. Another fallacy put forward without any foundation, in an attempt to throw confusion into the minds and to show to certain groups in the province of Quebec that the federal government is not sincere when it tries to build railways to help towards the development of Canada, as is the case at the present time.

I want to develop this argument in order to show that I am right when I say that the province of Quebec has received from the Canadian National, on the basis of its population, as much as the other provinces of our confederation, if not more than any of them.

Mr. Gagnon: Certainly not the Chicoutimi area.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You are disappointed.

Mr. Chevrier: If my hon. friend will be patient, I think that I can answer the arguments he put forward a while ago. I held my peace when, a moment ago, he made a speech which I did not like; let him listen now to the answers I have for him, because he needs to be answered, for he and others who put forward such arguments are people who want to create disunity in this country, who do not want a Canadian confederation, but who claim for Quebec a situation apart, different from that of the other provinces.

Here is the situation, Mr. Speaker. In the province of Saskatchewan, for instance, there are 8,739 miles of single-track railroad lines and that is the province with the longest system even if its population cannot be compared to that of the province of Quebec. In fact, in the case of Saskatchewan, there are 10·5 miles of railroad per thousand people. Because in a province the ratio of population per mile of railroad is higher, because that province is at the same time the second in area—let us say per mile of railroad track—it must not be inferred that that province is deficient in railroad facilities. In the province of Quebec there is a concentration of population around Montreal but there are very few inhabitants in Ungava, in Abitibi, in various parts of Labrador and of Baffin Land. These boundless regions are practically uninhabited. One must not conclude that the railroad facilities are lacking in that province. It does not mean that railroad facilities are inferior in comparison to its population, for they are equal if not superior to the facilities in some provinces.

In fact, the economic vitality of Montreal does not depend as much on the province as on the whole of Canada. When that factor is taken into account, we find that the number of inhabitants per mile of railroad is in agreement with the average for Canada. Industry in the province has not been handicapped in the least and the necessary facilities have been provided without delay and as soon as they were requested.

Has the province of Quebec been neglected? I hear people say, even in this house, that the province of Quebec has been neglected by the Canadian National. Let us examine what has been done by the Canadian National by way of expenditures in the province of Quebec, under the present government. During the past five years the Canadian National Railways have spent large sums to improve and expand facilities in the province of Quebec. For instance, they spent $25,740,000 in 1949; $23,906,000 in 1950; $24,412,000 in 1951; $26,805,000 in 1952, or a total of $100,863,000 in less than four years, and I do not take into account 1953 and the first part of 1954. If all those figures were added, the total would be in the neighbourhood of $150,000,000.

Besides, the Canadian National Railways from 1948 to 1952 paid out $319 million in salaries in the province of Quebec alone. Moreover, a substantial portion of the money spent by the Canadian National Railways for the extension of the operation department—diesel engines—and rolling stock went to the province of Quebec. These expenses, for the years 1948-52, are as follows: 1948, $14,962,000; 1949, $5,265,000; 1950, $22,600,000; 1951, $24,431,000; 1952, $36,892,000; that is $103,650,000 in all.

My hon. friend interrupted me a while ago to tell me that the Chicoutimi district had not been developed. But such was not his argument when he made his plea. His argument was that the province of Quebec had been neglected and now he is suggesting we have neglected the Chicoutimi district. The Chicoutimi district is not neglected since we are asking the house for permission to begin a railway in those parts; yet you complain claiming we are not starting construction at the right end. I will tell you why we are not starting at your end. If you find I am speaking too sharply, you have no one to blame but yourselves.

We are starting with the Beattyville-Chibougamau stretch because we have traffic guarantees which show that the Canadian National Railways will be assured of a profit of $23,000 a year. But do you know what the financial position of the railway would be if we were to begin at the other end? It would mean a deficit of at least one million dollars a year. There is the answer. That is why the Canadian National Railways has recommended to the government that construction be started from the west rather than from the east. But the government wanted parliament to authorize the building of that line, of the whole line in the interest of the Saguenay district and also in the interest of the Chicoutimi area. In other words, we are asking for a charter, so that the line may be completely built, and we hope that, during the period of construction, a zinc refinery may be established at Chicoutimi, and that other industrial developments may take place, which will make the extension of this line possible. However, the reason for which we are beginning with the western section is found in the financial aspect; that is the only reason, for let us remember that there are other parts of Canada where railways should be built; there are other parts of Canada that have been asking for many years that such railroads be built, and we also often have had the Canadian National make a survey of such proposed roads. The Canadian National found that they should not be built, because its financial position would not be improved by their construction. Why should another policy be followed with regard to the Chibougamau line? One part would be profitable, while the other would not.

We are starting with the profitable end and will continue with the other as soon as we can get guarantees.

My hon. friend is very much interested in the development of his own district; may I tell him this: it will cost $17 million to build the eastern section, that is the section from St. Felicien to Chibougamau.

Now, if the government of the province of Quebec wants to pay half these building costs, namely 8 million and a half, I undertake to ask the Canadian National to spend the other half, namely 8 million and a half. Then we shall see who is sincere.

For the government, Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of politics; it is an economic matter and nothing else.

I should rather address my remarks to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), who has unfortunately made a purely political speech this afternoon.

I have respect for the hon. member, but not for the speech he made this afternoon. At least it can be said that the members who are seated at the end of this house have studied the matter and know what they are talking about. The member for Three Rivers however spoke as if he had not studied the matter at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Chevrier: It seemed to me he has made a purely political speech.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He is the chief organizer.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member—

(Text):

Mr. Macdonnell: There is no politics in yours.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sure my hon. friend would see to it that there would be politics in his if he had made a contribution to the debate.

(Translation):

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Incidentally!

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Gauthier) has asked me the following question: If the new district of Lake St. John guarantees the authorities of the Canadian National Railways a yearly traffic of 175 million tons, will the minister give the assurance that the Canadian National will start the construction of the east end of the line, that is a stretch equal to the east end, from St. Felicien to Chibougamau?

The hon. member assumes too much as to the authority of the minister to give instructions to the Canadian National Railways. However, I say this, that if the Lake St. John district gives the Canadian National authorities the same guarantees or guarantees similar to those given by the manufacturers, the industries or the producers established near the western end of the line, I am confident that the officers of the Canadian National would be ready to build immediately the eastern end.

Moreover, as I have often said, this is the only reason why the Canadian National is not starting the construction at both ends at the same time.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING CO-ORDINATION ACT

AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES, CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. 326, to amend the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Minister may undertake projects.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is not my wish to delay this committee in any way at all, but while we were in the standing committee on this bill the minister illustrated to the committee what could be done by the use of the facilities of the department to train those who were currently unemployed. He cited in particular the case of Marysville, where such a program had been undertaken. I believe the house would be interested in the results of that experiment, and whether the department intends to conduct a similar experiment in the other parts of the country or even go beyond the experimental stage and institute a regular program of training.

We do know that there is not any shortage of work for tradesmen in this country. As a matter of fact while some of our own men who are untrained in any of the crafts are idle, those who come into the country with specific skills have little or no difficulty in obtaining employment. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to hold up this measure. We were all in agreement on it so far as it went, but this is an extremely interesting point. If the minister would prefer to leave such an explanation until such time as the estimates of his department are being considered, which will not be too long, that would satisfy my curiosity. It does occur to me that this offers an opportunity for him to make that explanation and give the story to this house, if he has the information available.

Mr. Gregg: I would be only too happy to comply with my hon. friend's suggestion, except that I do feel it would be more appropriate, and I could do it more completely, when my estimates are before the committee, particularly since we will have supplementary estimates at that time that may be related to this very thing.

All that I would say to her at this time is that we can only enter into work such as this if the province concerned is wholeheartedly in accord with it and is willing to initiate the training for which we can bear 50 per cent of the cost. In other words, the schools themselves, if new training facilities have to be created to take care of the training of unemployed persons, have to be brought into being by the provinces and we help them in the cost to the extent of 50 per cent.

Mrs. Fairclough: The minister is referring now to the implementation of schedule M?

Mr. Gregg: I am referring to schedule M which is for the training of unemployed persons.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT ACT

PROVISION FOR CONTROL OF GOODS IN BULK

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 443, to amend the Department of Transport Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, P.C. 4535 authorized the governor in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport and pursuant to the Emergency Powers Act, to make certain regulations with reference to transport control. Those were made to ensure that the movement by rail and water of certain bulk commodities would be made in an efficient and orderly manner. These regulations defined bulk commodities, defined the powers of the transport controller and defined the facilities over which he would have jurisdiction.

This bill seeks the continuation of this arrangement, but more particularly it authorizes the making of regulations for the use and operation or supply of transport and storage facilities, such as railway facilities, ships and the like. It authorizes the making of regulations with reference to the quantities of any goods in bulk to be transported. The object of this bill is to ensure that ore, grain, coal and other commodities move in adequate volume at the time required to meet export commitments and domestic needs. Since the establishment of transport control there has been no shortage of box cars, and there has been a fairly efficient movement of commodities. Vessel transportation has been ample to meet all shipping requirements for bulk commodities.

I am sure it will be the view of the house that it is important to continue this transport control by way of legislation.

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong proceedings with regard to this bill which, I believe, is not a highly controversial one. I am wondering however if we might not consider it a little more fully. The minister has outlined the purpose of the bill, and has indicated that it is a continuation or a regularization of a power passed some time ago. He indicated at the resolution stage that the arrangements have been very satisfactory with the transport controller, and that there has been great co-operation between the railways, the shipping firms, the elevator operators and the like, which has achieved success in maintaining a sufficient number of box cars for all purposes.

I think the origin of the request for a transport controller came about at a period of time when a shortage of box cars had developed out west, and when shipments of grain appeared to be limited because of that shortage. But I note that in 1951, when the order in council was passed, the government considered that other factors were involved. If I might be permitted to read three short paragraphs from that order I believe they would indicate what was in the mind of the government at the time. Order in council P.C. 4535 of August 29, 1951 commences with these words:

> Whereas the demands of the grain trade and of the defence effort are placing an added strain upon certain of the transportation facilities of Canada;
> And whereas to ensure that the movement by rail and by water of grain and of those bulk commodities that are essential to defence may be made in a prompt, efficient and orderly manner, it is desirable to provide for a limited control of railway and water transportation;

And a subsequent paragraph says:

> And whereas by reason of the existing international emergency it is necessary or advisable for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada, to establish the regulations annexed hereto.

As the minister says, this came under the Emergency Powers Act, and the questions of emergency and of defence seemed to be uppermost in the minds of those who drafted the order in council. But is that the situation today? Is it necessary that all these stringent regulations be incorporated in this bill, when I am not at all sure that in that interval of almost three years there has been any need to call upon these powers in order to obtain the results desired?

We have been assured by the minister, and we accept that assurance, that the box car situation for the transportation of wheat has not since provided any problem, and that the transport controller has found it quite possible, in co-operation with those concerned, to keep a sufficient number of box cars readily available. If the power of the transport controller has not been extended beyond these matters affecting the grain trade, what is the purpose of continuing these other powers? There does not appear to be any emergency in connection with matters of defence. Is it necessary to have all these powers in his hands? Are they simply being held in abeyance in case something turns up?

If some emergency does develop there are ways and means of dealing with it. I was unable to discover any act on the part of the transport controller, except an order issued by him on October 25, 1951 which limited the transportation of iron ore on the great lakes in favour of the shipment of grain. Perhaps the minister will inform us if any other exercise of the authority of the transport controller has been necessary.

The regulations to which reference has been made give a great deal of power to the controller, and I question whether under the circumstances those powers are needed. As has been pointed out, the regulations deal not only with the question of grain but also with matters affecting ores and minerals, ferrous minerals, iron and steel scrap, sand, stone and gravel, pulpwood, wood pulp, sulphur and phosphates.

At any time has the transport controller had to regulate any of these other items in order to make provision for defence purposes or for purposes of export, or have his duties simply been those connected with arrangements for box cars, and shipping arrangements connected with the grain trade? About three years have elapsed and the experience is available. Could not this same work be carried on in a simpler fashion, and without holding all these powers in abeyance? Then, again, I note that there is no permanency attached to this particular amendment. The final section in the bill says:

This section shall expire on the 31st day of May, 1956.

Would it not have been advisable to limit it to the term of one year, if there is still some doubt as to the necessity for maintaining control over all these commodities? If it is just a matter of controlling shipments of grain, could it not be done without this elaborate set-up and arrangement to control so many other materials? Might it not just be continued from year to year and, if necessary, dropped if some other method is found available?

No suggestion has been made to us at any time that any difficulty has been experienced in effecting control of the box car situation which, I think, was the origin of the order in council. I hope the minister will be able to comment as to whether, for defence purposes, these other powers are required. Why should it be necessary to give such extensive powers to the transport controller, if we are not faced with an emergency and when, in the interval, he has not found it necessary to exercise his authority, except with regard to the grain trade?

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, from my reading of the bill, and from listening to the explanation given by the minister, this group has no objection to passing it. I think the principle of putting in statute form what the government can do, rather than to have it done by order in council as was done under the Emergency Powers Act, is something for which we have been asking on this side of the house for some time. The legislation may not have been used, and we have no reason to suppose that it will be used in the future any more than it has been in the past unless an emergency does arise.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) mentioned the one case where the controller did use these powers to give priority of grain over iron ore where it was necessary to move grain quickly. Somebody should have that power so that the country may receive transportation, not according to the wishes of a few individuals but according to the wishes of those who are administering in the interests of the economy as a whole. I do not see that we have any objection at all to the passage of this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Control of transport of goods in bulk.

Mr. Macdonnell: My understanding is that the controller has operated successfully and satisfactorily to those concerned. Like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I am puzzled as to the need for this wide extension. Perhaps the minister can tell us a little as to the way it has been operated. For example, I should like to know the staff the controller has. What has been the scope and what has he controlled so far? Then I should like some further explanation as to the extremely wide range that is now proposed. Let me reiterate, my understanding is that it has worked well to date.

Mr. Chevrier: It has worked very well to date. In so far as the difference in the powers is concerned, there is some difference, as pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre himself. He read the preamble to the order in council, which refers to the international emergency, security, defence, peace, order and good government and the like. These powers are not referred to in the bill. The only reference in the bill is that it is necessary to take these powers in order to meet export commitments and domestic needs. But the position has been such that the transport controller and the method under which he has operated have been so successful that these powers should be continued. They should be continued, too, because the fact that he has operated in the past in the manner in which he has indicates that there has been no tie-up in the movement of those grains and other commodities. He has attempted not to use the powers arbitrarily. I do not think it can be said that he has, and I doubt whether he has issued many orders. Certainly, he has not issued many, but what he has been able to do on a number of occasions is to indicate to shipping companies and the like the fact that he had the powers, and to suggest to them that they should move the commodities in a certain fashion. That has been extremely successful and might be required at any moment. So far as the staff is concerned, it is very small. There are only six.

Mr. Macdonnell: That is the reason I am asking the question. I wanted that brought out. Apparently up to date he has operated with a small staff. Therefore I take it he has not found it necessary to interfere very much with operations.

Mr. Chevrier: That is right.

Mr. Michener: I can appreciate that this government has got itself so involved in the grain business that it is necessary to control the shipment and storage of grain. But is there any such shortage of shipping or transportation that we need a controller to handle products like ferrous metals, iron and steel scrap, pulpwood, sand, stone and gravel, and so on? Has any control of that kind been exercised? If not, what is the apprehension at this time which makes it necessary to have a controller of such a wide range of commodities which have been moving freely?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I say a word on that subject? All those commodities are of the kind that move in bulk, and they use the same type of equipment, whether rail equipment or boat equipment. Frequently a suggestion has gone out that certain boats be diverted from ore to wheat. The reason for that is that there is an urgent demand for certain grades of wheat, and the demand for ore is not urgent. I may say that the transport controller is one of the busiest officials of the government. He works closely with my department through the interest of trade and commerce in the movement of wheat. The fact that he does not issue written orders under a statute is solely for the reason that all forms of transportation recognize the benefit to them of having someone direct their operations in a way that will cause them the minimum of delay and will give them loads. When they arrive at a port there will be a load waiting for them. He generally looks at the over-all transportation system to use the available equipment to the best advantage. It is one of the most successful operations. We are fortunate in having a very able controller, a man who thoroughly understands his business and the problems involved. If you were to ask any of the transportation companies whether they would desire to have a controller with the powers indicated in this bill you would have the unanimous opinion that that was their desire.

Mr. Macdonnell: One further question: what has the control covered to date? We have this long list. Am I right in thinking that it has been almost wholly confined to wheat?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Oh, no. Two years ago there was an acute shortage of lake shipping. It is true that additional lake carriers have been built since then, but it was a very close decision as to which was more urgent, the movement of wheat, the movement of iron ore or the movement of pulpwood from down river in the St. Lawrence. That was under constant study by the transport controller, and boats were used in a way that every necessary movement was taken care of. In that year we were not able to move all the wheat we would have liked to move. We were not able to move all the iron ore we would have liked to move, but the essentials of all trade were moved due to the very careful study and arrangements by the transport controller.

Mr. Macdonnell: The minister agrees that this is still an emergency measure?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Perhaps not an emergency, but we have a very serious congestion already. I just left a committee that was studying the problem of a car cycle of moving wheat from country elevators in a way that would be fair to the various interests involved, and that would get a fair distribution of transportation as far as the distributors are concerned. I am sure that the transport controller will be able to solve that problem. He is a very essential official, in my opinion, as far as the movement of wheat is concerned, and no one can concentrate on wheat without having regard to other bulk commodities which must move at the same time.

Mr. Campbell: I can agree with the minister up to a certain point that the controller has made a success of the handling of box cars, but I wish the minister would point out this fact to the controller and see that we get a more even distribution as between the branch lines and the main lines of the railway. I read the report of the agricultural committee that went into this matter quite extensively. Mr. Milner stated that he did not try to allocate box cars, he left that to the railway. The fact is that in my constituency, and this is something about which I am well informed, the branch lines have been left to the last and they have had a very thin supply of box cars, whereas the main lines were practically cleaned out. It was not until after the main line had been cleaned out that the branch lines started to get cars and in my own constituency there still remains a big proportion of the 1952 crop on the farms. I think that if the controller had paid more attention, or given the railways better direction to balance out the distribution of the box cars, then the people on the branch lines would have had more consideration. I hope the minister will draw that to the attention of the controller and see if such an arrangement cannot be made during the coming year.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there are other questions I would like to put on this bill.

Mr. Chevrier: Can we not get it through now?

The Chairman: Do I understand clause 1 is carried?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I would like to to ask some questions.

Mr. Chevrier: Ask them now.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the other day I asked the minister about the control of ships and in particular whether there was any control over Japanese ships, and he said I should wait until the bill was introduced because the word "ship" would be defined in the bill. But I cannot find any definition in the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: What I had in mind was that it was defined in the regulations, wherein a ship was defined as a ship of 1,000 gross registered tons or over, or designated as being capable of being so used, and I have presumed that when we pass an order in council under this legislation we will use the same definition.

Mr. Green: Is it the intention that the bill apply only to great lakes ships, or will it apply to deep-sea vessels on the coastal trade?

Mr. Chevrier: It is the intention to apply it to all ships of 1,000 gross registered tons operating in Canadian waters.

Mr. Green: Why is it necessary to apply this to coastal ships? As I understand it the whole problem surely revolves around the wheat trade and the only place in which ships have to be controlled is in the great lakes. Now why not restrict the control accordingly, rather than have this over-all control?

Mr. Chevrier: That is a matter I think which should be discussed with the transport controller.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Two or three years ago we had a very serious problem in moving coal from Sydney into the St. Lawrence ports and the transport controller had to allocate ships to undertake that movement. Any bulk movement taking place in Canadian waters should I think be properly subjected to the jurisdiction of the transport controller. If you do not want him to exercise control on the Pacific coast then I have no objection to striking it out. It is of no interest to me, but I think the shipping companies would be happier if they were able to call upon the transport controller when necessary.

Mr. Green: There is one feature in this bill which I think requires further consideration. The Minister of Transport has rather intimated that this is an emergency measure, and now the Minister of Trade and Commerce has intimated that he thinks it might be a good thing to carry this right through, and the bill itself is only for a period of two years.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We think it will be a good thing for that period.

Mr. Green: Is it the government's intention that this will be a permanent form of control, or is it to be merely temporary?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is a matter which will be decided two years hence.

Mr. Green: The bill covers storage, but I do not see how the dominion government obtained the power to control storage under the British North America Act. I can understand them having the power under the Emergency Powers Act, and I can see where they might control transportation by ordinary legislation, but how does the government get control over storage?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): On grain.

Mr. Green: That cannot be the basis for legislation. Surely the control of storage comes under the provincial government.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Not in the grain trade.

Mr. Green: But this bill applies not only to grain but to many other commodities such as sand, stone, gravel, logs, coal and coke. Could the Minister of Transport tell us how the dominion government obtained jurisdiction to legislate on the storage of commodities of that kind?

Mr. Chevrier: It certainly has jurisdiction over storage facilities which belong to the federal government such as elevators, wharves, piers on which are built transit sheds. The ships that operate from such points and which have not been covered thus far are ships which carry commodities from these points. My hon. friend may have raised a legal point of some significance but all I can say is that this bill was subjected to very careful study by the committee presided over by the Minister of Justice, and I am sure the bill was examined from that angle. But all I can say on the point raised is that the facilities now used are facilities over which we have jurisdiction.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, let me point out that the minister has not given a categorical answer to this question. We have had 25 minutes, if my reckoning is correct, to consider this important measure, and it seems to me that the matter is not quite so vital that we should rush it through now and find out afterwards that something was overlooked. It is conceivable that the justice department overlooked that point.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): On that question of storage, if the suggestion is that storage was used which was not under government control then the transport controller could not attempt to exercise control and his jurisdiction could be challenged. Practically all bulk commodities use government facilities for storage, though grain is stored under public authority. The use of storage is a matter which the transport controller has to decide. He might perhaps allow American grain to be shipped through a Canadian elevator under the jurisdiction of the board of grain commissioners. But that question is for him to decide and he must decide whether the storage space is more urgently needed for Canadian grain.

Mr. Green: Would it be possible to cut down some of these articles listed under section 2?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If it is possible why is it necessary?

Mr. Green: Simply for the reason that I do not think the dominion government has very much business attempting to take over the control of the storage of such things as coal, logs, sand, stone and gravel. I think this is a case of taking over wider powers than are required. The main objective, of course, is to control the grain and to that there is no objection, but I suggest that consideration be given to narrowing down the list of goods which come under control. I think control is largely a matter of suggestion. I know the transport controller simply suggests that such and such a thing be done, but in so far as government facilities are concerned, or government wheat, any government official designated could control them. Such an official would not necessarily have to have transport control. However, is it not possible to cut down the number of commodities which are to be made subject to control?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is possible to do without the bill altogether, and it is possible to put in wheat and nothing else.

If my hon. friend wants to make a motion that anything be struck out, and if that motion carries the approval of the committee, I will not object as long as he leaves wheat and iron ore in it.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether it would be possible to have control of one commodity. Is it not a fact that if the controller is going to issue an order for the transportation of wheat or of grain, then the other commodities that are being transported at that time have to give way to the transport of wheat? It seems to me that it is quite impossible to have it apply to grain only, although the minister said he was quite willing that it should. I do not think his judgment in this case is as good as it usually is. I think it would be quite impossible to have it refer to only one item such as grain. If there are plenty of ships to take care of all the grain, then no order need be issued. But if ships are being used for the other commodities mentioned in this bill and if those ships are wanted for grain, I think those other commodities will have to give way and give priority to grain. That is the whole purpose of the bill, so far as I can see.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, if I may, I should just like to clear up that point. I say that the bill, as it is, is a desirable bill. My sole interest in the transport controller happens to be in connection with the movement of wheat. I therefore say that I would not object if the committee wants to cut out other items. However, I am sure other people would object.

Mr. Knowles: The minister's interests are not so narrow.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As I say, I do not know of any other government officer whose work has been as well received by everyone as has the work of the transport controller. He knows his job. He has taken care of every commodity that needed to be moved. If someone wants to move rock salt—and there is quite a bit of that commodity moved —he provides boats for the movement of it. If someone needs to move coal from Cape Breton island up the St. Lawrence, he finds boats for that movement. He uses his best judgment to divide the boats between the movement of wheat and the movement of iron ore and to see that they are moved at the proper season. There has been some question about it but in the end everybody has been satisfied. I think it is a perfect bill as it stands. It simply provides for carrying out the duties that have been imposed upon him for several years. I think the bill should pass.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I was going to express some of the ideas the minister has advanced. Hon. members on this side of the house are glad to find reasons to criticize the government, but I do not think any member of any party has been critical of the outstanding job the controller has done. When the problem at Rama was brought to the controller's attention, namely that Rama farmers had not been able to deliver the five-bushel quota, action was taken immediately and additional cars were sent there. If this grain is going to be moved to the overseas market when ships are available he has to have authority to hold up the movement of pulp or gravel or some of the other things if the wheat is to move. I think the fact that opposition members have not had many critical remarks to make with regard to the work of the transport controller would indicate that it would be an extremely unpopular move if this legislation should be killed.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Now, and I so move.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that, by leave, this bill be now read the third time?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow and Friday we shall take the estimates of the departments of defence, justice, secretary of state and mines and technical surveys.

Mr. Knowles: All of them?

It being fifteen minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

QUESTIONS

TOURIST EXPENDITURES

Mr. Nicholson:

What have been the expenditures per capita by tourists for each of the last five years by (a) Canadians in the United States; (b) United States citizens in Canada?

Mr. Lesage:

(a) Average expenditure per visit by Canadian (long term—i.e. more than 48 hours) travellers in the United States.

1949, $65.94; 1950, $74.91; 1951, $85.08; 1952, $88.47; 1953, $85.87.

(b) Average expenditure per visit by United States (long term—i.e. more than 48 hours) travellers in Canada.

1949, $56.89; 1950, $57.77; 1951, $53.12; 1952, $50.76; 1953, $52.06.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GENEVA CONFERENCE—SOUTHEAST ASIA PACT—POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Could he say whether there have been any communications between the United States government and the Canadian government with respect to President Eisenhower's reference to a southeast Asia pact, without the participation of Great Britain? Can he tell the house what the attitude of the Canadian government would be toward such a proposal?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, there have been no communications with Ottawa about that. I would not like to say there have not been any discussions between our delegation at Geneva and other delegations there. But there have been no communications sent us here in Ottawa; and unless and until there are communications the government is not going to make any decision.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): In view of the great importance of the statement of the President of the United States regarding the discussion of the formation of a southeast Asia bloc, irrespective of the attitude of Great Britain, I believe it is opportune for the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member be good enough to put his question?

Mr. Ferguson: Will the Prime Minister let the house know whether any word has come from the European conference in which Canada is participating of any discussion of this matter?

Mr. St. Laurent: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would indicate what matter he is referring to.

Mr. Ferguson: I am sorry if the Prime Minister did not hear me. But I emphasized the importance of the matter mentioned by the President of the United States in his statement on the formulating of a bloc for southeast Asia which would not include Great Britain. The statement was recently mentioned in the press that General Eisenhower, the President of the United States, had referred to that important matter. I was wondering whether the cabinet is aware of every step and every discussion regarding this important matter. If so, will the Prime Minister let the house know and see that we are constantly kept in touch with those discussions, even if they are being held in Geneva?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. St. Laurent: The Canadian government receives a lot of information, but I have not been in Geneva and I would not be prepared to say that we are informed about everything that is going on there. There is more going on in private discussions and private conferences than is going on in the public meetings, and there is perhaps more reported in the press than actually takes place. I do not think it would be at all helpful for me to try to express to the house my own personal views. This matter has not been considered by the government with a view to reaching decisions because we are not yet in a position where we are called upon to make decisions. If or when decisions have to be made, as I have already stated more than once in the house, if they involve further commitments recommendations will be brought to the house and the house will have an opportunity of discussing them before the government undertakes to commit the country further than it is committed at the present time.

Mr. Ferguson: May I ask a supplementary question? Will it be in the hands of one minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), to decide that in his opinion matters are important enough to inform the government and possibly the people of Canada of what is actually being discussed? Will it be left to his discretion alone? Things seem to be important enough to inform us of what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. St. Laurent: I do not think there is anything I can add to that. The government has confidence in the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is informing the cabinet of everything upon which he feels the cabinet should have information.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I wonder whether the Prime Minister will tell the house what attitude Canada has taken with reference to Mr. Eden's five-point policy in Geneva in connection with Far Eastern questions? Certainly the Prime Minister can give information like that to the house.

Mr. St. Laurent: I am not in a position to give any information to the hon. gentleman. As I told him yesterday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be back here at the beginning of the week, and I think he is apt to suggest that he meet with the members of the committee on external affairs to inform them in confidence as fully as can be done of everything that has been taking place there. I think the hon. gentleman will probably feel, as I do, that there are at Geneva situations of very great delicacy, and I am not at all sure that all the publicity that there has been in the newspapers and magazines and in the comments on the radio has been helpful in that connection. I think it would probably be agreeable to the hon. gentleman to meet with the Secretary of State for External Affairs in an informal in camera discussion so that he might be fully informed without there being the occasion for these further comments. I do not think I should here add anything more.

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the Prime Minister's statement a few moments ago to the effect that the publicity on the Geneva conference has not been helpful could he explain to the house why he feels the public should not be kept informed of important happenings of this nature?

Mr. St. Laurent: I think, Mr. Speaker, the answer is obvious. They are all working at Geneva toward the same objective but unfortunately over quite a long period of time they have not been able to come to an agreement as to what would be the best method to reach that objective, and I do not think it is helpful to exaggerate the differences of opinion which may exist between them as to what would be the best method of reaching the goal each one of them is very anxious to attain.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: We have already had six or seven questions on the same subject and it seems to me that that is tantamount to debating the question. I would imagine that we could perhaps carry on with a different subject. I do not wish to curtail hon. members in asking questions but we have already had questions on this subject from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); two by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker); two by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson); and one by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Hamilton). The Prime Minister has indicated that the matter will be dealt with on a future occasion, and I do not see what we can gain by asking further questions on the same subject at this time.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. Referring to the statement issued yesterday by his department and the dominion bureau of statistics, in which it was stated (1) that the number of those seeking employment had increased by 47 per cent during the past 12 months—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hees: —(2) that the number of those out of a job had increased by 80 per cent during the past 12 months—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hees: —and (3) that of those who are working, 40 per cent are on part-time, working less than 35 hours per week compared to only 6 per cent on part-time a year ago—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member did not hear me calling him to order. I realize of course that there was some noise in the house. I was trying to make my voice heard to point out to the hon. member that perhaps he has forgotten that he should have addressed himself to the chair. Had he done so he would have seen me on my feet and would not have continued to read his long question, in which he was trying to give information rather than ask for it.

Now, I do not know that hon. members heard the question. Perhaps if we could have silence we would ask the hon. member to repeat it. He will have to rise again to do so; and I hope this time he will look at me.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the second part of the question was—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have not heard the first part up to this time. And I do not know that the minister, who may be called upon to answer it, has heard it either. I suggest the hon. member should repeat his question.

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. Hees: My question is this: referring to the report yesterday given by the minister's department and the dominion bureau of statistics referring to the unemployment situation in Canada, does the minister not consider this trend toward increasing unemployment to be serious; and what are the government's long-term plans to counteract this serious situation.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the first part of the question need not be answered at this time. And, as to the second part: I shall discuss that matter on my estimates.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour a supplementary question concerning the same report. Does the government consider it to be the responsibility of the municipalities or the provincial governments to provide maintenance for a large number of those unemployed who are able and willing to work at this time but who cannot find employment, and whose unemployment insurance benefits have run out?

Mr. Gregg: I will have to take that as notice. Perhaps I might add to that, however, that if my hon. friend will give me places and numbers it will help in answering the question.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SYSTEM-WIDE LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? In view of continuing lay-offs by the Canadian National Railways is there any statement the minister can make to assure railway workers that further lay-offs are not in prospect?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the last time I was asked to make a statement here I believe I said something to the effect that some 1,500 men had been laid off. Since then I know that an additional number has been laid off because of a decrease in the traffic on the Canadian National Railways. The reason is the same as that which I indicated before, namely, decline of traffic, that is, the interconnections which the Canadian National Railways make with United States railways in so far as traffic is concerned have diminished; but the position of the Canadian National is in no wise different from that of the United States railways. In fact, the employment position is far superior in the Canadian National to that of the United States railways. I have been so informed by our officers, and I think it compares favourably with if not better than that of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Just as soon as traffic conditions permit, the men who have been laid off will be taken on again.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question? Is the minister in a position to give the present figure that compares with the figure of 1,500, which he gave on February 11?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, to that I think should be added another 600 men who have been laid off across Canada at the various regions in which the railway operates.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister feel that we are at the end of these lay-offs?

Mr. Chevrier: I hope we are.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

DOMINION STEEL AND COAL—FEDERAL PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): May I draw the attention of the Secretary of State to sessional paper No. 191-A of May 18 which I consider to be incomplete? I asked a series of questions. I am not going to take the time to read them. Three of the questions that I asked are not answered except for the very brief observation: "Department have no information." I have had returns previously year by year on the same subject, and if the Secretary of State will look into the matter he will find that this return is anything but complete.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I will be glad to do so, sir.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

INQUIRY AS TO EMPLOYMENT OF ENGINEERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in regard to a radio broadcast this morning which said that some 50 or 60 engineers were required for the St. Lawrence ship canal project. Will the minister say where the head office and employment office of that project will be?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I am not aware of the report to which my hon. friend refers. Dealing with the last part of his question, the entity which has to be appointed by Canada has not yet been established, but the public projects branch of the Department of Transport having to do with the St. Lawrence seaway was moved many months ago to the city of Montreal, and an office has been set up there. I know that a number of engineers are required for assistance in connection with the Lachine, the Beauharnois and the international rapids section of the project, but as to the number I am unable to say at this time.

PARLIAMENT HILL

DIPLOMATIC CORPS CARS PARKING IN RESERVED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Public Works? I do not know who he is, but has it been brought to his attention that for some time a number of cars bearing diplomatic corps licences have been occupying parking space in the parliament grounds here, reserved for tourists and others.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it has not been brought to my attention but it might have been to the attention of the minister. I shall look into it.

MEAT

ALLEGED INFRACTIONS OF PACKING REGULATIONS BY THREE TORONTO FIRMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) or in his absence to his parliamentary assistant. Has he or his department received a report from the mounted police on infractions of the meat packing regulations by three Toronto firms?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Acting Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not, but I shall look into the matter.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence services—

239. To provide for the Canadian forces, the defence research board and other expenditures relating to defence, including contributions toward the military costs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; to authorize expenditures in the current year out of the amount hereby provided, not exceeding $300,000,000, under the provisions of section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, and to provide that, notwithstanding subsection 3 of the section, where equipment or supplies acquired by the Canadian forces after March 31, 1950, are transferred, the estimated present value thereof shall, if the governor in council so directs, be credited to this vote instead of being paid into the special account mentioned in the said subsection 3, and when so credited may be expended for the purposes of the Canadian forces; and notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act to authorize total commitments for the foregoing purposes of $4,577,641,724 regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $2,711,822,159 will come due for payment in future years), $1,865,819,565.

The Chairman: Hon. members will find the vote on page 36 of the blue book, and the details commencing on page 287. Vote 239. Shall the resolution carry?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Chairman, in opening the general discussion on this item I express the hope that hon. members will agree that following the conclusion of the general discussion we should proceed to the discussion of the details in the same way as has been done in previous years. Hon. members have already had placed before them a white paper called "Canada's Defence Program 1954-55" and it is not my intention to go into any of the details covered in that white paper which, I believe, gives more complete and detailed information about our national defence than we have ever had submitted before, and also I believe as complete information as has been made available in any country.

What I should like to do, Mr. Chairman, is to bring up to date the examination of the international position from the defence point of view which I undertook to set out, in my speech here on November 26 of last year. I should particularly like to consider, and endeavour to arrive at a clear meaning of some of the expressions which have been bandied about in recent months. I refer particularly to expressions such as "massive retaliation", "the new look" and the "long pull". It is very important, I believe, that as we consider these expressions in the light of recent events, particularly those relating to Indo-China, we should carry out these considerations against the background of the events of recent years.

We should remember that it is only six years ago that Czechoslovakia, that gallant country, was brought behind the iron curtain, and it was only five years ago that the free nations decided that rather than fall separately they would stand together and they entered into the North Atlantic treaty. During that period they have built up their strength and the progress made is indeed remarkable, whether it be viewed from the point of view of political organization, military planning, military command, or actual physical forces in the field.

The history of the world shows nothing to match it. Today we have in NATO a team of fourteen nations with effective forces trained and working together to improve their quality as well as their quantity. That this effort has succeeded is indicated by the fact that during that period we have had no general war, and one of the major contributing factors to that result has unquestionably been the steady progressive build-up of strength, actual and potential, by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. This policy of playing it from strength, which was agreed to five years ago on April 4, 1949, has paid dividends in terms of peace and security. The cost has been heavy but not heavy compared with even a fraction of the cost of a general war.

Now, sir, while this policy has worked, it cannot be said with any confidence that there has been any change in the fundamental objectives of the Soviet union and those allied with her, the satellite powers. There has been a change in attitude, in behaviour and perhaps in manners. People are now invited out to dinner, and Mr. Vishinsky may cross the floor of the United Nations and exchange a joke with our Secretary of State for External Affairs. It may not be a very good joke; however, the fact that he does it indicates a change of manner and method, but no change in fundamental objective is apparent anywhere, and the North Atlantic treaty nations at their meeting in Paris affirmed their decision to continue to build up their strength on the assumption that there was no change in the fundamental Soviet objectives of imperialism and aggrandizement.

Against that background the secretary of state of the United States, the Hon. Mr. Dulles, made a very important speech at New York on January 12, this year. In that speech he said:

> Local defence will always be important. But there is no local defence which alone will contain the mighty land power of the communist world. Local defences must be re-enforced by the further deterrent of massive retaliatory power.

That expression "massive retaliatory power" or "massive retaliation" has been discussed and debated here as elsewhere ever since. I do not propose to follow the course of the debate we had on external affairs which was so largely related to consideration of this topic, but I should like in the first instance to refer to this from the military point of view.

Since that speech the world has become conscious of the fact that we now have a new and far more deadly and dreadful instrument of mass destruction, namely the H-bomb. This bomb has an explosive power which, it is estimated, may amount to five hundred times, or even more, that of the first A-bomb dropped at Hiroshima in 1945. Furthermore, this bomb is expensive but it is relatively easy to make. There is no reason why any powers having modern industrial know-how and engineering and scientific skills could not make the bomb.

We know that the Russians had an explosion of a thermonuclear character of a very advanced kind. In addition to the power of the bomb we know today that the United States has a stockpile of A-bombs which is equal in explosive force to the power of all the bombs and all the shells from aircraft or guns used in every theatre of war in the second world war. We also know that the United States has aircraft—B-36 heavy bombers and B-47 jet bombers—with the ability to deliver these bombs in quantity. Likewise we know that the Russians have A-bombs. We know that they have had a thermonuclear explosion and that presumably they will go on—if they have not done so already—to have H-bombs. We know that they have medium bombers with the capacity to reach any part of North America, and we now know that they have jet bombers of medium and heavy types. Whether or not they have them in quantity remains to be seen.

We are therefore confronted with a relatively new situation in military affairs. The H-bomb is so much more powerful than was the A-bomb that it constitutes a weapon of a different character. Whatever one may think about its existence, we must recognize it. One may deplore the existence of the H-bomb. I deplore it. But the fact is that it does exist. One may deplore the fact that such a dreadful instrument of destruction has been brought into the world. But still, since the only potential enemy has within his control that destructive power and also has the ability to employ that destructive power, we can be grateful that our great, gallant and friendly ally, the United States, has it too—has it in larger quantities—and probably had it first.

I think there can be no doubt that the possession of this power of mass destruction is a powerful deterrent to war. There can be no doubt of that fact. Whether that will be the result remains to be seen. The consequences of the employment of an H-bomb or a number of A-bombs, with their destruction of the means of fighting, of cities and communications and the possibility that this rain of destruction may be launched on one's country, would certainly lead one to think a good many times before starting out on the course which would lead to that employment. I therefore believe—and I think this is generally recognized—that the possession by the United States of both the new weapons and the power to deliver them is a powerful deterrent to aggression. That having been said, it becomes evident at once that the ability to deliver the bombs is something which is fundamental and essential to their deterrent character. Unless the United States can deliver the bombs they might just as well not exist. Hence the ability of the United States to deliver the bombs becomes a matter of the most urgent and primary importance in the preservation of peace. That ability must be protected. This consideration brings into focus and gives new emphasis to the whole question of continental defence.

Before I go on to deal with continental defence I should like to make one or two further observations about the employment of the new weapons as a deterrent to aggression. It may well be that their destructive power is so immense that they would be of little or no use in a limited war, even as a deterrent; because once one side uses a new bomb—an A-bomb or an H-bomb—the other side will almost certainly be triggered to an all-out effort, not knowing what is involved. Hence it may well be that the existence of these weapons is not going to prevent limited or small wars or put an end to them. It is within the recollection of all of us that the possession of the A-bomb did not deter the North Korean invasion. It did not prevent the entry of Chinese volunteers into North Korea. It did not deter the conquest of China. It did not prevent the Berlin blockade. It has not stopped the war in Indo-China. Consequently, it may well be that the very existence of these weapons, and the fact that they can be used only if you think an all-out war is about to begin, is begining, or has begun, may increase the area in which we may have relatively small wars, pressure areas and the like—such as we have seen in Korea and Indo-China.

As I shall point out later, far from putting an end to the need for weapons of a conventional nature, I believe that the A-bomb and the H-bomb have if anything probably emphasized that need. We have just had a meeting of the chiefs of staff of all the North Atlantic treaty nations at Paris. Their purpose there was to consider the effect of the new weapons on all-over strategy and tactics. I know that I am breaking no confidence when I say that it was not suggested there that the existence of these new weapons would lead to any sudden reduction in quantity, quality or cost of conventional weapons. The fact is that we hardly have today in NATO the minimum quantity of weapons, planes, equipment, trained officers and men and communications to do the job of even enabling the employment of the new weapons through bold planning, and causing concentrations so that the new weapons would have a useful target, also of preventing the only potential enemy from overrunning Europe irrespective of where bombs were dropped.

I think I am right in saying that no nation, no national leader, no minister of defence, no chief of staff has so far suggested that the existence of and the ability to employ the new weapons should decrease what we have of conventional weapons because what we have is the minimum required to enable us to do the job. That job is to permit the employment of the new weapons strategically and tactically and also to protect the ability to use them.

As part of that protection we have built up in North America a very important system of defences against air attack. This now goes under the name of continental defence, and you can see that with the Americans having bases in North America as well as elsewhere throughout the world they—or any other country that has atomic weapons and the capacity to deliver them—must be protected from air attack. This is becoming an increasingly important part of the joint activities of Canada and the United States in planning and carrying out our air defences. I dealt with this at some length on November 26 and I do not want to go over the same ground again, but I would remind hon. members that the components of any system of air defence consist, from the air force point of view, of radar to pick up and lead to the identification and interception of enemy raiders, a system of communications which instantly gives the intelligence received from the radarscope to fighter command, to enable the quick scrambling of the squadrons, and finally squadrons of fighter aircraft able instantly to get into the air and carry out an interception.

A good many hon. members visited St. Hubert R.C.A.F. station this session and saw there the air defence command headquarters for Canada. That command is operational today 24 hours a day. It receives intelligence of every aircraft coming under surveillance at any one of the radar stations. That aircraft is identified either as a friendly aircraft because it has filed a flight plan, because of its characteristics, or because we see it, or is not identified—in which event the fighters are scrambled and carry out an interception. Just last week at a radar station not far from here I saw interceptions carried out from the control room of the radar station to which had been hooked up the telephones of the pilots, of fighter command, of the radar operators, and of the plotters. These were hooked up to loudspeakers so that from the station we could hear the whole battle being carried out, and within a very few minutes the interceptions were successfully completed.

This system, as planned between the United States and Canada, is now more than 90 per cent complete and operational. These interceptions are carried out daily, night and day, in operations against B-36's and B-47 jets which have come over on simulated raids without the knowledge of the stations. The percentage of kills as they were counted in these exercises was extraordinarily high compared with any experience in the second world war. It was not 100 per cent but it was above 90 per cent indicating a very successful operational state.

This is, I say, in operation today and the whole system as planned between the United States and Canada will be in complete operation by late summer or early autumn. The communications are hooked up so that within seconds or a minute or so of an aircraft being found on the radarscope at one of the radar stations the intelligence of that is received at air defence command and at Colorado Springs where the United States strategical air force is located. Communications are in effect on a 24-hour basis.

It is very risky for people charged with defence to make a prophecy. All we can do is to give opinions and not give assurances, but this system of defence against air attack has reached the stage today where if I were in charge of the Russian air force and were aiming to reach important targets in the United States I would not go across the lines of these radar defences. I would go some other way, and there are other ways.

I have mentioned 90 per cent. That is a figure which I have cited for purposes of illustration, but that is not enough when you are dealing with A and H-bombs. We cannot get 100 per cent—I am sure of that—because of the size of the country, the difficulty of carrying out construction and the tremendous cost in terms of men, equipment and money. However, we do need more early warning. We need it not only in order to carry out interception but also in order to economize on manpower. The first step towards having additional early warning has been announced in the construction of a new chain across Canada, north of the existing one, to use equipment which has generally been known as the "McGill fence" equipment. The purpose of this is to give additional early warning.

We have also had under consideration by scientists and military experts in the United States and Canada additional means of having early warning, and no doubt additional steps will be taken from time to time. This is an exceedingly costly operation. When we were up in the Arctic four weeks ago I was astonished to find that to keep a weather station employing nine men going took 340 tons of supplies a year, and that involved 30 round trips of a North Star aircraft from Resolute Bay to wherever the station was. It also involved getting the supplies to Resolute by aircraft or ship. When we have to use 30 round trips of a heavy transport over these immense distances to supply a station employing nine men you can see how tremendous will be the task of increasing our defences in the far north. However, I am sure that more will have to be done and that it will be done.

I should add that to supplement the work of the air force against air attack we now have organizations of ground observers across Canada. There are now 65,000 volunteer members of this corps.

In addition to what is generally called active defence, that is defence by the armed forces against air attack, we have to consider also our position with regard to civil defence. The immediate responsibility for civil defence rests, of course, with the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the provincial and municipal authorities. There has been some tendency by some people here and elsewhere to take the view that the destructive power of the H-bomb makes civil defence measures futile. Nothing could be further from the truth. For one thing the number of targets sufficiently important to justify the use of the H-bomb is limited. Moreover, the new weapons put even greater emphasis on planned measures for dispersal and evacuation. Our plans must continue to receive the closest examination in the light of all the circumstances, but the planning and organization of civil defence measures must be pressed forward.

To meet the situation that would be created by an H-bomb falling on a big city, there is no doubt that all the available civil defence resources must be developed and mobilized to the fullest possible extent. These local measures will have to be supplemented in turn by all the civilian resources and facilities of the surrounding area, and where those prove insufficient, by all the resources of our military personnel and equipment: navy, army and air force, active and reserve. So far as our military forces are concerned, if civil defence should need their help, the only higher priority demands on their services would be actual defence of the continent against landings by enemy forces, which are not now expected on any considerable scale. Training for action overseas would be of little use until the situation had been stabilized at home.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have dealt with the question of massive retaliation, what is involved in it, what we are doing by way of continental defence, as well as what more is planned. May I now have a look at another of the phrases, "the new look". What is meant here, of course, is that over the last year in all of the NATO countries there has been a re-examining of the defence programs in the light of our experience over the last three years, and also in the light of what is involved by the new weapons. I should like to go back and remind you that the first time that the North Atlantic treaty defence ministers arrived at a plan was in October 1950 when we met at Washington. We worked out an estimate of the potentialities of Russia, an estimate of the requirements to deter Russia from attacking, an estimate of the time that would be taken to build up those forces. We then agreed upon the allocation of those forces amongst the nations and we made military plans to carry through the whole operation.

Later, at other meetings of the North Atlantic council and of the NATO defence ministers and chiefs of staff, those plans were looked at and revised in the light of our experience. It is no secret that at one stage reference was made publicly to a force of something like 98 divisions and 10,000 aircraft. Gradually it was found that to have a force of anything like that character would be beyond the peacetime capacity of the allied nations, unless they were prepared to run grave risks of seriously injuring their economies and making their economic strength weaker than was necessary to support the military effort. At Paris, in 1953, this situation was examined in detail and the council members further adapted their thinking and their plans from the sort of "crash" thinking with which we had begun, to what would be involved in "the long pull".

In Canada, as in other countries, we have been carrying on this operation of review ever since the beginning. While the program I announced in this house on February 5, 1951 was a three-year program, and while that was the period adopted by all the NATO countries for planning purposes, that did not mean that our plans stopped as at March 31, 1954. We have planned right through for years ahead, and I shall make this evident in just a moment. We have had our plans under constant review ever since the second world war ended, and even before. Now that the three-year period ending March 31, 1954, has been completed, it becomes of interest to hon. members to look back over the three years and see what has been accomplished.

Let me indicate something of what is involved in military planning today. Last year, as in every year, we examined our aircraft requirements—but we have carried this through now until 1960, seven years ahead. The reason for doing this for so long a period ahead is that it may take about seven or eight years to develop a new, supersonic aircraft of the type that will be needed to meet the threat of the attack that may be made in 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960 or 1961. We arrived at a list of the aircraft needed, at their specifications, their requirements in terms of altitude, speed of climb, radius, fire power, and then put a price on each aircraft needed.

In the year 1953-54, the financial year just concluded, we spent on aircraft for the R.C.A.F. alone a total of about $410 million. For the year 1954-55, the fiscal year in which we are now, the amount we will require to spend to meet our requirements on aircraft which we have ordered, and which are now well advanced in construction, will be over $425 million. The figure will increase, not decrease, year by year until it reaches a total of between $455 million and $460 million, then it will level off at about $450 million. Those figures are not to provide us with a complete new suit of aircraft; they are not to provide us with any additional aircraft of new types and for purposes not at present envisaged in our commitments; but those expenditures or expenditures of about that magnitude are necessary if we are to keep our air force at about its present strength in terms of quantity and quality, as judged by what is required from year to year. In other words, this is to cover the cost of an air force having 41 squadrons, the necessary maintenance and operational capacity, with its aircrew and groundcrew training capacities, to carry on operations of about the present scale, with squadrons of first-class aircraft built up to war strength with modest reserves. It involves of course replacement at the appropriate time of the F-86E Sabre fighter with a supersonic fighter, and it involves replacing the CF-100 at a suitable time with a supersonic long-range all-weather fighter, an aircraft that does not exist today.
