Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we have just witnessed an interesting thing, indeed, I would say, an amazing thing. We heard the Conservative hon. member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) say that he would vote against this bill and we have just heard the Conservative hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble) telling us that he will vote for the bill. This is one of the most important bills that this Parliament, or any Parliament in recent years, has had to vote on because we are debating what is supposedly the establishment of an incomes policy. Surely the people of Canada have a right to expect hon. members in the official opposition to have some principle, some consistent ideas, to be either for this or against this. There are only two possibilities, to explain the differences between the two members. Either they do not have a policy or they do not understand the purpose of this bill. I do not know whether or not they will support it. The alternative is to vote on both sides. In this way they can satisfy all the people of this country, those for it and those against it.

The members of our party have no doubts about this bill. We would support an incomes policy that is fair to all the people of Canada. We cannot support an incomes policy which restricts only wages and salaries and does nothing about those who receive their incomes from investments, shares, property or any other way. We are going to vote against this bill.

I want to spend a few moments on some of the comments by the hon. member for Western Arctic. He said that the NDP always supports controls. That is not true. As I already indicated, our position is now as it was in 1975, that we could not support any program which did not deal fairly and equitably with all Canadians. That is why we opposed the Anti-Inflation Board. We said it would control and restrict wage and salary increases but not the incomes of the self-employed or those who derived their income from investment. It did not control prices. I will deal with that later.

The hon. member for Western Arctic was not here in 1975. He has a conveniently short memory. In the 1974 election it was the Conservative Party led by Mr. Stanfield which proposed that, if elected, it would institute a system of wage and price controls. Our party opposed it and pointed out that it would not work. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) won that election by opposing wage and price controls.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to stop the flow of rhetoric, but I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) would not want to mislead the Canadian public about their memories. The fact is that we did not have an election in 1974. We had it in 1975.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the election was in 1974. As I was saying, the Prime Minister won that election by saying he would not implement wage and price controls. In 1975 he did exactly what he promised he would not do.

The hon. member for Western Arctic said that we need to give successful businesses the opportunity to do better. The fact is that the profits of Canadian corporations are down over 40 per cent this year over last year. The major corporations which were always the most successful have borrowed billions of dollars from the Canadian banks for the purpose of take-overs. They promised to pay the interest on those short-term loans. Many are now unable and are not paying that interest. Many of the largest mining corporations are now paying from 75 to 150 per cent of their total cash flow in interest payments on loans. They are hanging on by the skin of their teeth.

The hon. member for Western Arctic was critical about the $20 billion deficit. We all are. However, he did not ask the reason for the deficit. He did not ask why it had almost doubled in the last six months. If he were really interested and had looked into the matter, he would realize that the deepening recession has meant that unemployment has risen by almost 50 per cent.

There are now 1,300,000 unemployed who are no longer paying income tax. They cannot buy the goods they used to so they are not paying the sales tax. Because business is down, the corporations are not paying as much in taxes. Workers who used to pay taxes are now collecting unemployment insurance benefits or are on welfare. That is why we have a deficit.

Both the hon. member for Western Arctic and the hon. member for York North criticized the deficit, saying that it had to be cut. However, they did not say how it should be decreased. We can see how the President of the United States could have got that country's deficit down if he were not increasing so substantially their military expenditures. He was getting down their deficit by cutting back on medicare, medicaid and hospital insurance, none of which are as good as the programs we have in Canada today. He also wants to cut back on social security. I wonder if the hon. member for Western Arctic wants us to cut back on old age pensions. The President is cutting back on assistance to universities. Those kinds of cuts would get our deficit down. If that is what the Conservatives want, they ought to say so.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Western Arctic compare, I thought favourably, the thirties with today. In the thirties there was no unemployment insurance, pensions, real welfare system, medical insurance or hospital insurance. The people suffered. Many starved. Now we have in place—not as much as we should have in my opinion—what President Reagan calls a safety net, the kinds of programs I have talked about. If I understood the hon. member for Western Arctic, and this is not a criticism but a statement of fact, he has a very high percentage of people in his constituency who are unemployed, who need assistance from the government such as unemployment insurance and welfare. I say that the hon. member for Western Arctic was not speaking in their interest when he made the kind of remarks he made this evening.

Let met turn now to the bill we are considering. What is the purpose of this bill? I read very carefully the speech last Friday by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston). If I understood correctly, he was arguing that inflation is caused by high wages and high wage increases which workers have been able to negotiate, and that it is these high wages and high wage increases which have led to the present inflation crisis that we suffer.

Wage increases in the past few years have been less than the increase in the cost of living. How can we blame Canadian workers for inflation when their standard of living, their take-home pay has been reduced in the last five years rather than increased?

We are told that in order to get inflation down, we have to limit wage increases. The government proposes that we start with federal public servants and that we restrict their wages increases for the next two years to 6 per cent the first year and 5 per cent the following year. The President of the Treasury Board compared unfavourably the wage increases which Canadian workers have been getting with wage increases in the United States. He pointed out that their rate of inflation is 6½ per cent and wage increases there are about 7 per cent. With 6½ per cent inflation and 7 per cent wage increases, workers in the United States, at least those who are working, are able to maintain their present standard of living. What the government is proposing for our public servants is that, at a time when the rate of inflation is running at 11.6 per cent, their wages and salaries should be restricted to 6 per cent this year. That means a reduction in their real standard of living of over 5 per cent.

Let us keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that bad as that is, despite the fact that the rate of inflation in the United States is down now substantially, a week ago interest rates in the United States were running at 17 per cent. We have been told that if we get the inflation down, interest rates will come down. That has not happened in the United States and it would not necessarily happen here.

Unemployment in the United States is running at about 10 per cent. Many of their basic industries—steel, auto, construction, housing—are dead or dying. We are told that if we bring wage increases down to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent the next year, inflation will come down. In answer to a question last week the President of the Treasury Board suggested that if we did this, by this time next year inflation would be down to a 6 per cent rate. Mr. Speaker, that is not the experience we have had. I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is here. If I give the facts which I am going to give about the AIB period incorrectly, I am sure the minister will take the opportunity to correct them.

At least in the 1975-1978 period, when we had the anti-inflation experiment of that time with the AIB, we were supposedly to get wage and price control. Wage increases were to be restricted, but the rate of inflation was to come down from 10.5 per cent, which it was in 1975, to 8 per cent the next year, to 6 per cent the following year, and to 4 per cent the year after. Mr. Speaker, that did not happen, of course. Sure, wages were restricted, salaries were restricted, there were limits, but there were also exceptions. The minister knows about them. There were no real attempts to put a cap on self-employed people. Doctors, lawyers, architects and engineers did very well, but wages and salaries were controlled. What happened to the cost of living? There was a decrease, a fairly marked decrease in the first year or year and a half. But by 1978, when the rate of inflation was supposed to come down to 6 per cent or 4 per cent, the rate of inflation was running at 9.5 per cent.

This time, Mr. Speaker, in this proposal, we are not even pretending that we are going to do anything about prices. This time we are going to depend on goodwill, on good-heartedness. The Minister of Transport shakes his head, indicating that I am not correct. I would love to see him get up after I have finished speaking, to show me where I am wrong.

There is no evidence that the private sector will voluntarily restrain itself on prices. Of course, at the moment prices are coming down because the sales are not there. We cannot give away some of our products. Copper prices, nickel prices, zinc prices, are right down to the lowest point to which they have been, some of them, in this century. We cannot sell these products, not because the wages are too high or because prices were too high a year ago or two years ago. We cannot sell, Mr. Speaker, because the traditional purchasers in the United States find that their economy is even worse than ours and they cannot buy the things we used to sell them. They are not producing, they are not selling cars, they are not building homes. Homes are not selling, so the lumber and the nickel and the iron ore and all the other products which we used to sell to the United States are not being sold.

We are told that the government has directed the regulatory agencies to keep their price increases down to 6 per cent. What kind of cynical nonsense is that? The Government of Canada made an agreement with the Government of Alberta and the then Government of Saskatchewan, so that the price of oil went up $2.25 a barrel last July 1. It will go up $4 a barrel on January 1, 1983, and will go up another $4 a barrel on July 1, 1983. That is an increase of over $10 a barrel. Every one-dollar increase in the price of a barrel of oil adds 0.5 per cent to the cost of living. So we are looking at an increase of 5 per cent in the costs of living by next summer, just because of the increase in the price of energy.

When the Prime Minister was asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party to try to get the producing provinces to forgo all or part of the agreed-on price of a barrel of oil, he said, "We cannot do that, we have an agreement with the producing provinces." It is interesting that we cannot change an agreement with the producing provinces on the price of oil, but we can bring in special legislation, which we are discussing now, which will wipe out agreements signed in good faith, after a good deal of bargaining, and made under the laws of this country, between the public servants and the Government of Canada.

What does this increase in the price of energy mean? I ask the Minister of Trransport, if the price of diesel fuel goes up 30 per cent by next July, how in the world can the people of Canada believe that freight rates will not go up by more than 6 per cent? The railways will not be able to absorb that kind of increase in oil prices without increasing the prices they charge for moving freight. How will the airlines not pass on that increase of 30 per cent in fuel which they use on the aircraft to the airline passengers? It will be more than a 6 per cent increase in the cost of travel to people travelling by air, by bus, by rail or by automobile. It has to be, if the price of gasoline goes up by 30 per cent. Telephone rates are going up. Bell Canada has asked for a 20 per cent or 30 per cent increase, as has B.C. Tel. Hydro rates are going up in every province because hydro rates relate to the cost of oil.

What about some of the products the prices of which are set by regulatory boards? We control the price of eggs, we control the price of chickens, we control the price of turkeys, we control the price of butter. In the production of those things, the same increases must occur as also for almost everything else which the farmers produce. Energy makes up a very large percentage of the cost of produciton. If the price of energy goes up by 30 per cent, as it will under the agreement between the federal government and the producing provinces, the price of the food which is produced by Canadian farmers will have to go up; and it will go up by substantially more than 6 per cent.

• (2130)

As other speakers have already said, over 1.3 million people are unemployed. As I pointed out a few moments ago, that is an increase of 50 per cent over the number of unemployed this time last year. Some of our major industries, the backbone of Ontario—manufacturing, our auto industry, our steel industry, the mines and the forest industries—have suffered major lay-offs. Why? Is it because wages have been too high? That is nonsense. The lay-offs have taken place because the economies of the industrialized world and the economy of Canada are in a recession, and so we cannot sell our nickel, our copper, our zinc or our lumber. This is not because the wages of workers are too high. We cannot sell them because there is no market, and there is no market because of the recession created, to a large extent, by the high interest rate policy of the U.S. government, a policy which is followed by the Canadian government on the advice of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, who could have been fired. In fact, he did not have to be fired. I think his term of office was up when the Conservatives were in government. If the Conservative government had had the sense to follow a suggestion the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has recently made—that is, that there should be a major turnover of senior public servants when a new government takes over—perhaps we would have had a different Governor of the Bank of Canada who would have recommended different policies. I am not sure, because I note with interest that the man appointed deputy minister of finance by the Conservative government, who was fired as soon as the Liberals came back to power—

Mr. Clarke: With your help.

Mr. Orlikow: —is now a member of the blue ribbon committee which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) announced the other day would be giving him advice. There does not seem to be much difference between these two breeds of cats.

As I have already indicated, because of the recession and because of the mistaken high interest rate policies of this government, some of the major corporations in this country are almost bankrupt. According to a recent issue of the Financial Post, some of them—about 15 companies were listed—are paying between 75 per cent and 100 per cent of their total cash flow in interest payments. There certainly is an understanding between the Government of Canada and the banks that these big corporations cannot be allowed to die. They cannot be allowed to go bankrupt like 10,000 small businesses will go bankrupt this year. These corporations will not be permitted to default on their obligations as thousands of Canadians will. Those Canadians must give up their homes because they cannot meet their mortgage payments.

Mr. Deans: The more you owe, the safer you are.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), points out that the more you owe, the safer you are, which reminds me of the observation made many years ago by Lord Keynes that if one borrowed 100 pounds from a bank in Britain and could not pay it, that person was in trouble, but if a corporation borrowed one million pounds and could not pay it, the bank was in trouble. The bank could not let that corporation go down the drain. That is exactly what is happening in Canada.

If we want to get our rate of inflation down, as the government says we have to do, then the government has to do something about interest rates. However, there is nothing in this bill and there was nothing in the budget in June which gave any indication that we are likely to get our interest rates down.

Interest rates are likely to stay high or go even higher because when the U.S. government has to go to the market to borrow the $140 billion or $150 billion for the deficit it projected this year, it will drive interest rates up because there will not be enough investment money around to meet the requirements of both the American government and the private sector in the United States. When that happens, our interest rates will go up again.

What high interest rates have done and what they are still doing is to destroy any hope of industrial expansion. They have destroyed the construction industry. The housing industry in this country is dying. The purchase of farm machinery, automobiles and house appliances has dropped to a level we have not seen since the 1930s. Business bankruptcies are up by almost 40 per cent over last year. We are likely to see 10,000 business bankruptcies this year. Farm bankruptcies are up 60 per cent. What is alarming is not just that the number of bankruptcies of businesses and farms is up; what we are seeing is farms, which have been owned by the same families for the last 100 years, going bankrupt or selling out because they cannot meet the financial demands. What we are seeing is business, which grew and survived the great depression of the 1930s, going bankrupt in the recession of the 1980s. Our plants are working at less than 70 per cent capacity. It is pretty obvious to anybody who has any common sense and looks at things realistically that if we want to get our plants working to greater capacity and if we want to get more people back working in our plants, we should be increasing the purchasing power of the Canadian people so that they can buy the products which Canadian plants can produce.

Instead of doing that, what are we doing? The government proposes to reduce the purchasing power of Canadians by $2.6 billion. That is twenty-six hundred million dollars. How is the government going to do it? It is going to do it by capping the indexing of old age pensioners—those who already have so little—by deindexing income taxes and by capping and limiting the wage and salary increases of federal public servants to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent in the following year. That will not bring down the rate of inflation. It will simply increase the number of unemployed in this country. Capping and limiting the wage increases of the 6 per cent of the labour force in Canada which is employed by the federal government, by Crown corporations and by the armed services will not deal a body blow to inflation, so obviously the government is sending a signal to other jurisdictions. Obviously the government wants the private sector to follow suit. Obviously the government wants other public sectors to follow suit. In the private sector, where there are unions and where there is real collective bargaining, unions do not need to be told that they cannot demand from their companies more than their companies can afford to pay.

I wish the hon. member for York North would talk about labour negotiations with some knowledge and some understanding rather than with the prejudices he always brings to this kind of discussion. He implied that if workers are militant in their demands, if they go on strike occasionally and do not want to settle for less than the increase in the cost of living, this is the fault of their leaders. When he makes that kind of statement he shows how little he knows about the real world of workers and their unions. In recent years there has been case after case where union leaders have negotiated agreements, recommended them to their union, and the members have told them the agreements are not good enough. That happened twice in Sudbury. I am not saying that the workers were right or wrong; I am simply saying that they exercised their democratic rights. They were not led on or misinformed by their leaders. The hon. member for York North should find out more about the subject before he makes such statements.

Just as workers in the private sector will not voluntarily agree to a restriction on wage increases of less than they think industry can afford, neither will workers in the public sector employed in the provincial and municipal governments or the universities, schools and hospitals. The federal government would only see that restriction on wages and salaries if the provincial governments would pass legislation not only for their own employees but for those in the municipal and other publicly operated sectors of the community. Not many provinces will do that.

In my view this bill is a public relations operation, and a cynical one at that. The government knows that the public blames it for the economic disasters of high unemployment and high inflation. But the government has no programs to deal with inflation and unemployment. It knows it has to look as if it were doing something, however, so it proposed controls for the public sector.

Some people feel that public employees are all guaranteed lifetime employment, which is not true, and that they are all highly paid. They hear about deputy ministers who make $80,000 or $90,000 or $100,000 per year and about the Governor of the Bank of Canada who received an increase in salary to bring it up to $110,000 per year. They do not know about the tens of thousands of people who receive the same or less wages than they do, say $10,000 or $12,000 per year. The hon. member for York North assured us that if public servants were told why they had to make a sacrifice, they would be willing to do it. He certainly did not talk to any of the people like I did in the last week.

I am not concerned about whether the senior civil servants get a salary reduction or a freeze. Members of Parliament and senior civil servants are doing quite well. An increase of 6 per cent for senior public servants means that those making $80,000 to $90,000 or $100,000 per year will receive an increase of $5,000 or $6,000. In the budget of last November the Minister of Finance reduced the marginal tax rate for all big earners from over 60 per cent to 50 per cent, so they are already saving $5,000 or $6,000 as a result of that change.

At the time the senior civil servants had their income tax reduced, tens of thousands of public servants who earn from $11,000 to $20,000 per year will be restricted to a 6 per cent increase in the coming year. The President of the Treasury Board has predicted that the cost of living will increase by 6 per cent but it will probably go up by 9 or 10 per cent. Yet these people will be restricted to an increase of $500 or $600 in the year.

Last Saturday I took the time to meet some of the people who work for the federal government, Mr. Speaker. I will not suggest that I met a scientifically assorted sample that would give me a picture of everyone in the civil service. I was interested in the problems of the people who work for the federal government in the lower paid jobs, and I met half a dozen of them. Let me tell hon. members who have not met such people what it means to them.

I met a woman who works as a cook in Winnipeg for the Department of National Defence. She is paid $10.43 per hour, $417 per week or $20,016 per year. She is married but her husband is unemployed. He had been taking a course which he has not finished yet. There are three children aged three, two and six months, and her husband looks after them while she works. She pays $450 per month for rent, so they cannot afford to go on holidays or go out for dinner. She told me they have not been out for dinner in the last four years.

Another woman is a cleaner also working for the Department of National Defence. She earns $8.06 per hour, $1,288 a month or $15,456 per year. Her husband works part-time for the City of Winnipeg in the works and operations department, but he has been able to get full-time work and is only employed for about five months of the year. They pay $172 per month for rent, $72 per month for heat, and $20 per month hydro. All these charges will increase in the next year. There are two children aged seven and four. They eat chicken and hamburger and cannot remember when they had steak or a roast. Of course they cannot afford to go on holidays, and with their income they do not qualify for day-care. They do not go out to eat and only occasionally go to the movies. Fortunately some of their relatives are better off than they and the children get hand-me-down clothes.

Another woman who is a single parent with one son works as a bilingual secretary. Her take home pay is $1,100 per month. She pays $365 per month rent, has no car and takes a bus to work. She has cut back on the kind of food they eat. For them, eating out means going to McDonald's. Her son has finished high school and would like to go to university but will not be able to unless they get assistance.

These are people who are just getting by, not living high off the hog. This bill means a reduction of 4 to 5 per cent in their real standard of living. I have other examples but I do not want to take the time of the House with them now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-124, concerning compensation in the Canadian public sector, because with the member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), I believe this is probably the most important bill the House will be considering this session. Mr. Speaker, for forty years we have been working on income redistribution. This has been our principal concern. Our Department of National Health and Welfare, Employment and Immigration, Small Businesses, International Trade, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Public Works, Agriculture, Energy, Mines and Resources and so on, Mr. Speaker, have been true to this specific concept. Mackenzie King started redistribution for the benefit of senior citizens and children, namely, the old age security pension and family allowances. St. Laurent redistributed income to students through subsidies to the universities. Pearson did the same for sick people when medicare or health insurance was introduced to pay for both medical and hospital expenses. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is concerned with redistributing our national wealth in the energy field by trying to Canadianize the industry gradually.

We have done an excellent job of redistribution. In fact, today, we are redistributing $2 billion per month through all these programs. To illustrate what $1 billion represents: If a man gives his wife $1 million and asks her to spend $1,000 a day and to come back when she has spent all the money, she would not come back until three years later. If the husband gives his wife $1 billion and asks her to do the same, she would not be heard from for three hundred years. However, Mr. Speaker, with all our concern for redistributing our national wealth, we have tended to neglect the production sector. People forget that in order to spend money, someone has to make it. So, today we have a situation where 1,300,000 Canadians are looking for a job. We have an inflation rate of 12 per cent and our interest rates are absolutely horrendous.

[English]

We have to realize, Mr. Speaker, that inflation is at the root of our problems. Inflation is draining the savings of all Canadians, and if we let it go on as it is going today, our so-called middle class will be no more. It is making destitute those Canadians who are on fixed incomes. It is chasing away investors from this country. It is producing high interest rates and pricing Canadian manufacturers and their products out of both local and export markets.

We must defeat inflation, we have no other choice. How do we do this? Our economists have as many solutions as there are economists, but they do have a number of solutions for us. The government has to start somewhere. We know that there are 1.3 million unemployed today, but we sometimes forget there are also nine million Canadians who are employed and worried about their jobs. What we are doing in this bill is asking those nine million Canadians first to help themselves by protecting their own jobs, and second, to help their fellow Canadians who are seeking to regain their jobs. This is what Bill C-124 does. It sets an example, it leads the way.

One of the things mentioned today by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) was that there would be no possibility to rectify alleged discriminatory employment practices given the way in which the provisions of Bill C-124 have been formulated. I would like to remind the hon. member that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) has already stated in the House that it is not his intention to have the bill override the equal pay for work of equal value provisions of the Human Rights Act. The enactment of Bill C-124 will not prevent federal public service employees, or any other employee falling under the jurisdiction of the Human Rights Act, from filing "equal pay for work of equal value" complaints with the Canadian Human Rights Commission. It is quite obviously the intention of the government that alleged pay complaints under that act will be handled in the same way they have been since the act was proclaimed in 1978. Any inequities found to exist will be rectified.

To say that Bill C-124 consists of an attack on labour is a very shortsighted view. One cannot deny that a large wage increase would have been better received by our federal employees, but the federal government has not adopted this approach because it fully realizes, as I believe the majority of Canadians in their hearts realize, that, as Carl Beigie of the C.D. Howe Institute, put it: "short-term sacrifices are the only way to beat inflation." There will be a pay-off, he says, if Canadians accept 6 per cent wage increases. He says that "it will provide the necessary adjustments so that inflation will come down, interest rates will fall, and the Canadian dollar will strengthen."

Everyone has to co-operate, Mr. Speaker, and I am confident that everyone will. There is no other choice. Clearly this is not a public relations ploy, as is suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). In response to CLC

President Dennis McDermott, who said that he cannot understand how wage cuts are going to help get our economy moving again, I would like to quote portions of a recent article in the Financial Post entitled "Wage Restraint does Matter."

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

FISHERIES—BAY OF FUNDY HERRING FISHERY

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I posed my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) last Thursday, at which time I asked that an independent person be appointed by the minister to look at all aspects of the herring fishery in the Bay of Fundy. It is kind of odd that at this late date, when the fishery should be well under way, both fishermen and processors have not reached a negotiated price. I say this knowing full well that the parties have been negotiating. I also know that the size of the fish and the red feed in the fish have meant that perhaps it has not been worth while for the plants to be processing them.

We have a quota and we have fishermen to catch it. We have capacity within the plants to process all the quota, yet at this late date we do not have a price for which fishermen feel they can go out and fish. I say this because I know that this same group of fishermen went to the Fisheries Prices Support Board last year in order to obtain assistance for last year's herring fishery. They were told to wait and see until the end of this season and until the Kirby commission made its report. We are entering a second year, and at the price of $143 per metric ton, the price to which fishermen have come down from $165, they do not feel they can meet their expenses. The processors are at $120 per metric ton. Plant workers are not working. Fishermen, the captains and their crews, are not working. The owners of the plants say that they have markets which they can fill.

What is the solution? I indicated to the minister that I feel very strongly that somewhere in the system all parties in the fishing industry should know what the prices are on world markets. There should be a system whereby we know what our fish will bring as a return. I have pressed this, and I feel very strongly that the marketing system within the Department of Fisheries and at the provincial level—and I speak mainly as far as Nova Scotia goes—are not being realistic and are not taking an active part.

We had a good example of a plant which opened last year to process herring sardines. It was an A-1 product; there were no complaints about it, but market conditions forced the plant to close a year later, after having spent $6 million to open and to acquire a good work force. Here we are without that plant working. No one would have expected that product to have found a place on the market shelf within one season of operation, yet when it came time for finding the money to operate the plant and to keep the 100 or more people employed in the area, there was no assistance for the plant and it had to go into bankruptcy. There does not appear to be anyone in the system who wants to open it and operate it at the height of the herring season which is upon us.

This just strengthens my position here tonight. We have both fishermen and processors in the Bay of Fundy who are not able to sit down and say that so many tonnes of herring will bring a return on the market and therefore fishermen should get "X" amount. The plants are saying one thing, the fishermen are saying another, but there is no system whereby one can verify against the other. It necessitates an over-the-side sales to help alleviate the problem.

There are many criticisms about over-the-side sales. This year in particular big companies in Nova Scotia are using them to send groundfish into the Portuguese market. We had these in herring in the Bay of Fundy last year. We have them in mackerel in some areas and we have them in Newfoundland with the oversupply of fish being caught there.

We are not directing ourselves to the importance of establishing a market for that 200-mile limit.

I have repeated the fact for many years that we must direct our marketing system to the capacity that exists, the capacity of the fishermen to catch all that is in the 200-mile limit, and the capacity of our plants to process it. We need an effective marketing strategy which requires the processors and the fishermen to know where that market is and what the returns will be in order to make an operation viable. Without that knowledge, we have the situation which presently exists, where fishermen cannot operate without incurring a direct loss at $120 a metric ton, or about $30,000 per boat for this year. It does not pay them to go out and fish. This relates to individual boats and there are many captains who are in that position. There are plant workers as well who would normally be working but are not.

What is the solution? Can we get an extra quota? The biologists say there is no surplus, and they have promised the fishermen that they would go down to verify if that is not the case. Everyone in the area knows that there is a mixed class of fish, of herring, which shows the strength of those stocks, but there are no biologists on those boats. We are entering the height of the season.

Perhaps the solution is to give them an extra quota. Perhaps another solution could be found through the Fisheries Prices Support Board. If this is the solution I believe the companies must open their books to show what they receive on the market for their fish.

I realize that my time is up. I appreciate being allowed to speak as this is a very critical situation which repeats itself every year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry but the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I first want to say to the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) that I appreciate her concern in this matter, because I also represent a fishing constituency. I share some of the trauma of seeing plants not working that otherwise would be working at this time of year.

I want to point out that as of today the two parties involved are still engaged in negotiations. In fact, it is my understanding that there is a meeting scheduled for the next day or two to attempt to come to an agreement. It should be pointed out that the processors' and fishermen's representatives in this particular set of negotiations are about one cent per pound apart in the price being offered and the price that the fishermen are demanding at this point in time. Therefore, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) is obviously hesitant at this stage of negotiations to intervene by appointing a third party.

I want to tell the hon. member for South West Nova that I appreciate, and I know that the minister appreciates, her comments on the marketing system presently being employed in the east coast fishery. There is no question that a more consistent and co-ordinated approach to the market place, so far as quality and price is concerned, is a matter that is receiving very serious attention by the department, in the fisheries committee where the hon. member does a very admirable job as chairman of that committee and, of course, I would assume and hope, in the Kirby task force as well. I simply want to say that while the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans sympathizes with both parties involved, it is the minister's hope that in fact an agreement can be reached in time for the total quota involved to be caught before the first week, approximately, of September.

PUBLIC SERVICE—AUTHORITY FOR CAPPING INDEXATION OF PENSIONS. (B) FUNDING OF INDEXING

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the national energy policy of this government started the economy of Canada on a tailspin. The November 12, 1981, budget accentuated the downward whirl. The June 28, 1982, budget braked the fall a little. But the $20 billion deficit and other items aimed this ailing Canada right at the rocks of disaster.

One of the other items that accentuated the spin was the announcement that the government intended to cap the indexation of the pensions of retired civil servants, retired army personnel and retired RCMP. It is to this doublecross policy which I address my remarks tonight.

During service to the public, these men and women were required to contribute 6.5 per cent of their salaries and wages to the basic pension fund, plus 1 per cent for the purpose of indexing their pensions in periods of inflation.

The minister, in a weak attempt to justify this confiscation of part of the whole pension, said, "the pension of most retired persons from the private sector are not indexed at all". The minister should know that in the private sector, where there is no indexing, the employees were not required to pay into an indexation fund to provide for indexing. If they did pay into a fund for indexing, the company would not dare to cap the indexation after the employee retired, but such honour is foreign to the government. When asked what authority the government had to cap the indexing of these pensions, the minister said, "Authority will be sought from Parliament by way of legislation." Authority will be sought, indeed, when he knows that the trained seals of Mr. Trudeau, the Liberal backbenchers, will vote as they are told.

When I mentioned cutting off part of the pension of the retired, the minister misled the people by saying, "There is no intention to affect the pension rights of the retired." Who does the minister think he is kidding with such misleading predacity? It is certainly not the retired RCMP who have risked their lives many times during their years of service to earn their pension. It is certainly not the handicapped who need every cent of indexing to exist, let alone live, and not the Armed Forces personnel who left part of their lives in the battlefields. The minister well knows that the retired depend on the basic pension plus the indexation which is, in fact, part and parcel of the pension when inflation exists.

When the Progressive Conservative member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke) spoke feelingly on behalf of needy working mothers, the Hon. Mr. MacEachen inferred that incomes of less than $30,000 were "fully protected". Is that not interesting? Let us look at the incomes of these retired army personnel, RCMP and civil servants. Are they in the $30,000 bracket or higher? The average pension of the 119,670 superannuated civil servants, the 30,000 retired soldiers, sailors and air personnel, and the 5,000 RCMP, is $7,915, and their spouses average only $2,100 per year, averages which indicate that many average incomes are under $7,900. The poverty line is generally below $8,000 per year. Here the government is capping indexations on persons living under the poverty line.

Another point is that the moneys contributed to the retirement funds do not belong to the government. They belong to the contributors. All these items did not deter the federal government from capping the indexing of pensions of this group. In effect, the government said, "They are retired; they have no unions; their working days are over. We do not need them any more. To hell with them!" So, in spite of their contributions, in spite of the work they have done, the retirement index of their pension is capped.

"I weep for Canada", one of the superannuates cried. "Do not weep for Canada", I said, "weep for Mr. Trudeau, Mr. Lalonde, Mr. MacEachen and the Liberal government"—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that he should refer to hon. members of this House by their constituencies.

Mr. Taylor: Weep for the Right Hon. Mr. Trudeau, the Hon. Mr. Lalonde, the Hon. Mr. MacEachen"—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member persists. He knows that the reference should be to the functions or to the constituencies.

Mr. Taylor: "Do not weep for Canada", I said, "weep for the Prime Minister, (Mr. Trudeau), for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), for the government, the government of the three destroyers, the government that, in spite of its promises, is capping the indexing of superannuates today." What will the government do next? Will it remove all indexing and confiscate some of the basic pension, as well?

The Liberal government wants every cent it can get, irrespective of who it hurts. But Canada will survive. The policy and the principles of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier have been betrayed by the government, but Canada will survive. Once the people vote out the government so overwhelmingly that no government of the future will ever again do such a dastardly thing as cutting the income of the aged, of the retired, including the handicapped and the crippled, it will be evident to all. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Finance and the government are with us for just a little while. Then, if there is any Canada left, the tailspin will be arrested and slowly but surely we will stabilize the economy and start building confidence, trust and honour into the federal administration once again.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure for me to have stayed tonight until this late hour to listen to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who is one of my favourite Members of Parliament. I find on many occasions that even if his facts are thin, his rhetoric is great and fascinating. Tonight is one of those nights.

I find, for example, he is playing the old divide and conquer game again. He tells people that the government's attack against inflation is not going to work and, therefore, they will suffer. That is what he has done tonight, he thinks, on behalf of retired public servants. Fortunately, those people do not accept the line of thought which the hon. member has put forward. For evidence, I refer him to the Ottawa Citizen of June 3, page 71, where that newspaper diligently sought out the opinions of quite a few senior public servants, retired people here in Ottawa. They told that reporter they did not agree with the line of thought being put forward by the hon. member.

I ask the hon. member to remember a simple set of facts, namely that indexed pensions for public servants have only been in effect since 1970 at a rate of one half per cent of salary and since 1977 at the rate of 1 per cent of salary. Therefore, we are not talking here about contributions that have been made throughout some 40 or 50 years of service, as the hon. member implies.

Finally, I ask him to remember the basic principle that if everyone shoots for 6 per cent, there will be no sacrifice for anyone. However, if everyone shoots for 12 per cent, the hon. member will be right and there will be some people who will suffer. That is why the government is suggesting that 6 per cent is a reasonable target and that the leadership being shown by the government and its employees and retired employees is vital for the whole economy so that we can all prosper. At 6 per cent we prosper; at 12 per cent we weaken. Therefore, we cannot follow the line of thought implied by my dear friend from Bow River who has been charming but, I hate to say, wrong tonight.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—CANADIAN CONTENT IN IMPORTED VEHICLES. (B) CONSEQUENCES OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my comments tonight arise out of questions I posed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) on June 22 last. At that time I was asking for information dealing with the progress that this government was making with respect to the Canadian value added in the automobile industry and with respect to quotas that might be affixed to imported automobiles coming into this country, which now hold 25 per cent of the market. The minister's reply was the standard, usual, eloquent one; please be patient and, if you are patient, good deeds will follow. That answer is no longer adequate or acceptable. Not only have we been patient, but we have watched the automobile industry go into a serious decline to the point where it is now just about beyond recovery.

It might interest hon. members that over two years ago, on April 17, 1980, as recorded at page 94 of Hansard, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said, "our priority is to preserve Canadian jobs and to create more Canadian jobs". The minister went on to say that he was going to have formal consultations with the United States of America dealing with the relevant clauses in the Canada-U.S. trade pact. Those consultations were to include as well the matter of imported automobiles. What a track record that minister has. What a priority he set for himself.

Since then he has presided over the highest period of unemployment in the history of the automobile industry. The minister responds, better than two years after claiming auto industry jobs to be a priority, by telling the House, "I look forward to progress and hope to have announcements in the coming months". In other words, Mr. Speaker, he is giving us exactly the same kind of answer he gave us two years ago. In other words, no progress has been made with respect to changes in that trade pact, or quotas for imports, and we have no comments with respect to Canadian value added.

I would like to spell out one or two of the problems that exist. The first is the long-standing problem with respect to the Canada-U.S. trade pact. The auto pact, now in existence for 17 years, has been a disaster for the Canadian auto parts industry. For the last three years there has been an auto parts deficit with the United States in excess of $4 billion each year.

For example, just today I received a letter from the president of an auto parts manufacturer in St. Catharines. He pointed out that one of the big three auto manufacturers has served notice on that company that it was going to shift its parts sourcing of a major item from St. Catharines to Detroit. The St. Catharines business offered a 30 per cent price discount. That same manufacturer in St. Catharines had a merit award, called a preferred supplier award. That award was given because of the quality control in that company. Clearly then, the issue of price, the issue of quality, the issue of historical relationship, meant nothing. That car assembler in Detroit was determined to shift the contract to Detroit. The St. Catharines supplier now stands to lose $12 million in lost sales and this country will lose another 80 to 100 jobs. The president of the St. Catharines industry said clearly and flatly that without Canadian control legislation, without Canadian value added, the automobile industry in this country will go down the drain just as badly and just as quickly as the economics of this country is now going down the drain.

That brings me, then, Mr. Speaker, to the question of Canadian value added. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has said that the Volkswagen agreement was the "harbinger of things to come." He also indicated that public pressure would bring about swift action in this matter. Since that time, there has been much evidence of public pressure on Canadians, who now appreciate that at least one in six jobs in Canada is automobile related.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has taken the position that it is vital to Canada's economic well being that we have an automobile industry. I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that this is an industry that can take a leading part in getting us out of the doldrums we are in now; getting us out of the recession or the depression we are in. If the minister and this government allow the automobile industry to die on a sea of platitudes, promises and empty rhetoric, then we are in a period of sad decline and depression.

It is time for action in the Canada-U.S. auto parts pact amendments and the Canadian context of Canadian value added to every automobile sold within this country. That time for government action, is now. I leave it to the minister or to his parliamentary secretary to give us a more positive response than that which we have had.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must say that when I made my comments earlier about the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) being one of my favourite people in the Conservative Party, I had forgotten about the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). It is a real pleasure to hear a Conservative talk about building up Canadian industry instead of trying to tear apart some of the nationalization programs, or some of the Canadianization programs, or the support programs that we normally are developing for industries across the country.

The hon. member referred to the arrangement with Volkswagen. It is a very good model for Canadians and for other countries wishing to sell cars in Canada. Undoubtedly, as foreign vehicle producers reach decisions about their investment in Canada, they will be consulting with us on the terms available to them to achieve relief from duty in the same way as Volkswagen has. There currently are cases of this type under discussion, and we hope they can be brought to a successful completion in the months ahead.

Volkswagen operated for some years under a duty remission scheme whereby the duty paid on its imported vehicles was reduced in relation to the value of automotive parts purchased by Volkswagen in Canada for use in its assembly facilities in other countries. Once Volkswagen established an assembly plant in the United States, the company substantially increased its purchases of parts from Canadian independent parts producers, but under the formula of the duty remission program Volkswagen was still paying duty on vehicles it was importing into Canada.

The new arrangement involved the establishment of a parts production facility in Canada to employ almost 500 Canadians and to create increased parts purchases in Canada. These extra purchases will in turn create a further 1,000 new jobs. This will permit Volkswagen to import its vehicles duty free provided it obtains the established levels of Canadian content.

The duty remission program which, it seems, was particularly attractive to Volkswagen, is being used by other offshore vehicle producers. In the highly competitive automotive market in Canada today any savings on costs to an automotive producer must be attractive. The duty remission program reduces the level of duty the importer must pay. In the process it creates activity in the automotive manufacturing sector in Canada. It is not, however, possible to have 100 per cent of the duty payable remitted under this program. If a company, for competitive reasons, wants to reduce the amount of duty to zero, then the Volkswagen model should show it how some arrangement can be worked out to give it a similar opportunity. As I mentioned at the beginning, we hope other companies can be encouraged to bring such deals to successful completion within a few months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 10.26 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

LAW OF THE SEA

REFUSAL OF UNITED STATES TO SIGN UNITED NATIONS TREATY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the importance of the United Nations Law of the Sea Treaty for North-South relations and the securing of the world's oceans as the common heritage of mankind, in light of the fact that the treaty has been signed by 130 countries after a decade of careful negotiations and preparation, and in light of the refusal of the United States to sign the treaty, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House express its grave disappointment and great concern that the President of the United States has refused to sign the United Nations Law of the Sea Treaty.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATUS OF WOMEN

RECOGNITION OF APPOINTEES TO COMMITTEE CONSIDERING BUDGET PROPOSALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the Liberal government totally ignored 52 per cent of the population of Canada when it failed to appoint any women to the committee of prominent Canadians considering the budget. The embarrassed minister responsible for the status of women refused to make a formal announcement that the Liberal government has finally appointed two women to the committee, possibly because the committee held its first all-male meeting last week. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House urge the Liberal government and the minister responsible for the status of women to accord the women finally appointed to this committee equal treatment by formally announcing their appointment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, the views of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on socialism are well documented. He wrote, in one of his articles under a chapter entitled "The Practice and Theory of Federalism",

Federalism must be welcomed as a valuable tool which permits dynamic parties to plant socialist governments in certain provinces, from which the seed of radicalism can slowly spread.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: The Toronto Sun columnist, Lubor Zink, understood this all too well, as shown by his recent columns. Therefore, as an ameliorating effect, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Prime Minister hire Mr. Lubor Zink as an executive assistant and guiding light to show the Prime Minister that left is not right, and ne'er the twain shall meet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot.

FINANCE

CALL FOR ELIMINATION OF FARM FUEL TAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, one of the major objectives of the government's economic policy is to decrease the inflation rate in Canada. Since all parties in the House of Commons hold the view that it is desirable that we manage our nation's economy with a lower rate of inflation, although there is disagreement on method, and since the cost of food is a major factor in determining our nation's inflation rate and it has been noted that food prices in Canada have already increased 8 per cent this year over last, and are projected to increase another 2 per cent, or 10 per cent over the full year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this Parliament encourage the Minister of Finance to commence a set of actions so as to cause the decrease or elimination of the federal farm fuel tax which presently constitutes 60 cents of the price of every gallon of farm fuel, or 40 per cent of the fuel costs, and therefore its existence has a retrograde effect on inflation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE NECESSARY FUNDS TO DAVIE SHIPBUILDING OF LAUZON FOR CONSTRUCTION OF FERRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas the fate of 1,500 employees at Davie Shipbuilding in Lauzon depends on the federal government allocating $40 million for the construction of a ferry for CN Marine, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House demand that the Minister of Transport immediately release the necessary funds for this project instead of leaving this responsibility up to other ministers.

THE MINISTRY

THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, over the weekend the minister responsible for housing was quoted as saying that there is no question but that the government's proposed mortgage reduction plan will be implemented and that the government's commitment to this plan is total. Yesterday, however, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said here in the House that he could not give any guarantees about this necessary and desirable program which, indeed, would have already been in place for over two years under the former Conservative government. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook):

That, as the minister responsible for housing seems determined to plunge every budget brought in by this government into ever-increasing chaos, this House inform the home owners of Canada that in the case of the minister responsible for housing, the lights may be on but no one is home.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, December last the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) burned his Ottawa office. As an encore, he is responsible for a conflagration raging throughout the Northwest Territories. A fire which was deliberately set by his officials was an experimental burn before getting completely out of control. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That this House warns its pyromaniac Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development not to play with matches.

LAW OF THE SEA

SUGGESTION MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON MOTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, in view of recent developments in the area of the Law of the Sea, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs, at the earliest possible opportunity, make a statement on motions outlining the repercussions as far as Canada is concerned of the recently announced decision by the United States to withdraw permanently from the Law of the Sea talks, and in that statement that the minister lay a special emphasis not only on the effects of that action on Canada's fishing and mining industries, but also on our coastal protection as far as pollution, immigration and smuggling are concerned.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF MICROTECHNOLOGY ON WOMEN OFFICE WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity regarding the future for female clerical workers in Canada. The recent conference, "Women and the Impact of Microtechnology", which drew together 500 participants representing community groups, concerned women, trade unions and employers from across Canada, pointed out that technological advances in the office workplace will have dramatic and adverse effects on the clerical service sector. The overwhelming majority of these workers are women, and over 40 per cent are in danger of losing their jobs to rapid microtechnological advances in the office environment. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That the members of this House urge that measures be taken by employers and the government to ensure that the problem is properly defined and that appropriate training and retraining be done on a large scale to prevent massive unemployment and to ensure that these positive advancements in the office workplace do not result in adverse effects on the majority of women who work there.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MEDICAL CARE

SUGGESTED MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL HEALTH MINISTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I too have a motion under Standing Order 43. Since April of this year in British Columbia, over 2,300 hospital workers have been laid off and 10 per cent of the acute-care beds have been closed. Last Sunday these cutbacks led to the death of a patient who had been waiting two months for heart surgery. Considering that it is the responsibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to maintain adequate standards of health care, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare immediately convene a meeting of provincial health ministers with a view to re-establishing adequate standards of health care in Canada and that she go to the meeting prepared to offer the funds necessary to meet the federal government's responsibility for these standards so that more lives will not be in jeopardy.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RENOVATION OF MAIN PLANT IN VANCOUVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the need to eliminate wasteful government spending, and whereas the Canada Post Corporation is now contemplating a further increase in the cost of a 30-cent postage stamp, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That the President of the Canada Post Corporation be instructed to cancel immediately the very expensive renovation and redecoration which is presently under way at the Vancouver main postal plant at a cost of more than $200,000, which will replace the customer services' department with a lavish new employment centre, complete with very expensive draperies and carpets which are totally unnecessary, and that the proposed postal increase be cancelled accordingly.

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE TO AUTOMOTIVE DEALER-LEASING BUSINESSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) recently announced changes to the capital cost allowance provision contained in his November 12 budget. This altered the one half capital cost allowance in the year of purchase for the daily car rental businesses, but left out the dealer-leasing businesses. The dealer-leasing businesses should be included, as both groups operate on the same principle, one on the day basis and the other for longer periods. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

• (1415)

That this House recognizes that to leave out the dealer-leasing businesses would be discriminatory and that without this change scores of these businesses will go under; and recommends that the dealer-leasing businesses be included in the said change in capital cost allowances.

ENERGY

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE ASSISTANCE FOR DOME PETROLEUM

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who only last Thursday indicated to the House that the government had been approached for a financial assistance package to be developed with respect to the Dome Petroleum Group. In view of the Southam News story today that a combined $1 billion package to ensure Dome's survival is now being actively considered by government, would the minister indicate whether he will be seeking parliamentary approval before he makes any commitment with respect to a Dome Petroleum financing bail-out; and would he indicate the size of the figures that we are being requested to cover on behalf of this group?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there have been no further developments since the last question put by the hon. member in this House. The situation is exactly the same, and there are no proposals I can submit to my colleagues at this time.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

STATEMENT BY UNITED STATES OFFICIAL ON BOMBARDIER CONTRACT WITH NEW YORK CITY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, could the minister indicate who, on behalf of the people of Canada is specifically negotiating this Dome Petroleum Group bail-out? I ask this in view of the fact that we are dealing with huge figures. As of June 30, Dome's total indebtedness, including payables, is $8.4 billion. The amount due by the end of September will be $1.4 billion, and of that amoung $1.3 billion is in United States dollars. Who is acting on behalf of the people of Canada as negotiators?

We must bear in mind that only this morning in Washington we were laughed at, at a press conference, where Robert Cornell, Deputy Assistant Treasurer, Secretary for Trade and Investments, suggested that Canada, with respect to the Bombardier deal, had been duped by clever New York negotiators, in that they could have got the contract at 11.25 per cent interest as opposed to the concession financing given by the Canadian public.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member is referring to comments made by certain American officials upon seeing a Canadian company obtain a $1 billion contract in the city of New York, a contract whose impact will be to provide tens of thousands of person-years' worth of jobs in Canada, and especially in Quebec. As a result, Bombardier, a Canadian company, will have truly established a bridgehead in the urban transportation field in the United States, making it one of the most advanced companies in the world in the urban transportation sector, which is very important for Canadian jobs and Canadian exports.

EXTENT OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH DOME PETROLEUM

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that Dome is faced with a debt that will be due for renewal or replacement, of $1.4 billion by September of this year, what is the nature of the negotiations being undertaken on behalf of the people of Canada with respect to that type of monumental indebtedness run up by the Dome Group?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, once again, representatives of the banks concerned approached the government some time ago, and government officials are having discussions with the banks and with representatives of Dome Petroleum. No clear offer has been made for submission to the government at this time. Discussions are under way, and I have no new developments to report in this respect.

QUERY RESPECTING SOURCE OF FUNDING

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister, who has indicated that discussions are under way between the government and Dome Petroleum. It has also been reported that the government will be using the Canadian ownership charge to make Canadian consumers pay for the bail-out of Dome Petroleum similar to the way Canadian consumers had to pay for the purchase of Petrofina through higher prices at gas pumps and for home heating fuels. Is it the intention of the government to make Canadian consumers pay for the bail-out of Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): First of all, Madam Speaker, the government has not indicated it would participate in any bail-out. I do not know what "bail-out" means exactly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: If it means what I suspect the hon. member thinks it means, that is not the type of thing in which we are interested. I indicated several times in answers to previous questions that there is no proposal ready to be made and put forward to the government, and I have no report to make on this.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I noticed that the minister very carefully evaded the question with regard to Canadian consumers. A great many people across the country are concerned.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT ON SOURCE OF POSSIBLE FUNDING

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources give us what I might describe as a firm commitment—I know that is not an ironclad guarantee—that the Canadian ownership charge, which would directly increase the cost of oil and gas products to consumers, will not be used by the government or, indeed, that he will not introduce any special excise tax on these products to bail out or reimburse Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I know of no plans to increase the Canadian ownership tax or to levy an excise tax.

Mr. Epp: That is not the question.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE REDUCTION SCHEME—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for housing. For months now Canadians have been understandably concerned about the extraordinarily high cost of mortgage money. In Toronto at the weekend the minister offered unequivocal guarantees that the government would be producing a scheme which would bring down mortgage interest rates by 3 per cent to 6 per cent. As reported in The Toronto Star, he said:

> There is no question . . . The plan will be implemented. The government is committed to doing it.

Yesterday in the House of Commons the Prime Minister said something quite different. He said the government could not guarantee such a scheme would be forthcoming.

My question is straightforward. Will the minister clarify the government's confusing policy and tell Canadians what the reality is when it comes to a 3 per cent to 6 per cent reduction in mortgage interest rates?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on budget night, while the Leader of the New Democratic Party was out talking to the public and the press and describing the budget as a no-hope budget, the Minister of Finance announced in his budget a $400 million infusion of support for the housing industry. In that, first of all, is the immediate stimulus of a $3,000 grant which is available to people buying new homes and available to first-time buyers of resale homes.

In addition to that, and for longer-term security, the program of assistance for people renewing their mortgages was enlarged so that any Canadian family paying more than 30 per cent of their income for housing will now qualify for up to $3,000 of assistance at the time of mortgage renewal.

However, more than that, the Minister of Finance indicated a plan of indexed security instruments, a new financial plan on which he will ask the business community, the public at large, and this House, to comment. He described that plan and, if the hon. member will take the time to go back to the speech made by the minister, he will see that in talking about the proposal the minister said this:

> These proposals would introduce major innovations in our tax system as well as in financial markets.

Mr. Clark: Order.

Mr. Cosgrove: I underline the following sentence:

> The government intends to implement them quickly once their feasibility has been confirmed.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, Canadians have come to tolerate a lot from this shifty government, but they will not put up with that kind of answer from the minister.

CONSEQUENCES OF MINISTER'S REPORTED STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that yesterday the Prime Minister unequivocally said that no guarantee could be offered until the House dealt with legislation—"until it was dealt with by the House" are the words of the Prime Minister—does the minister not see that what he did in Toronto on the weekend involved potential serious damage to thousands of Canadian families who may go out and buy a home on his advice and then, if the blue ribbon committee that looks into the proposal finds that it is not feasible, will be confronted with the fact that there is no legislation before the House of Commons, and therefore no law? They will be stuck with a house that they cannot afford.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on the contrary, the damage that is being done to Canadians concerned about security for their homes and home purchases is being done by the Leader of the New Democratic Party who obviously has not read the budget papers or documents that the minister tabled in the House. For example, in the preface to the document that will be the new financial instrument the minister said, "In order that this does not cause them to delay these purchases," referring to Canadians in the market, "any legislative provision limiting qualifying property by an effective date will include purchases made after the date of the issuance of this paper."

I wish the hon. member would read the budger papers. I wish he would not be so negative. I wish he had not voted against the $350 million intended to produce jobs and rental accommodation in this country. I wish he would be more positive. I wish he would come along with the rest of Canadians who have been ringing the phones off the walls at CMHC looking for help.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister cannot be here to defend his own words today, not mine, that completely contradict what the minister has said.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER GIVE COMMITMENT TO HOME PURCHASERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): As a preface to my next question I would point out that in his budget address, to which the minister has just alluded, the Minister of Finance said, "if implemented", such and such would follow. He was clearly taking the approach that the Prime Minister took in the House yesterday when the Prime Minister said that he would not support his minister responsible for housing; when he said that the minister was incorrect in contending that there would be a guarantee, if that is what he said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That is what he said. Therefore I want to ask the minister if he is prepared to give unequivocal guarantees this afternoon to a family which acts on his advice and makes the most important purchase of its life and buys a home, that they will get the 3 per cent to 6 per cent reduction in their mortgage retroactively. In Toronto at the weekend that is what he said would be the case. Would he answer yes or no to that?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have carefully reviewed the questions put by the Leader of the New Democratic Party to the Prime Minister yesterday. I have gone over them carefully. I noticed that the Leader of the New Democratic Party indicated that I used the word "guarantee". At no time did I do that, Madam Speaker. There are only three things that are guaranteed: death, taxes and the negative attitude of the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

INQUIRY RESPECTING DECISION ON MORTGAGE REDUCTION SCHEME

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could put a question to the minister responsible for housing, who once again has demonstrated his ability to raise expectations in this country that he cannot seem to fulfil. Has a decision been taken to implement that provision of the budget which calls for a 3 per cent to 6 per cent reduction in mortgage interest rates? Have consultations taken place with the so-called blue ribbon committee? I want to know if that decision has been taken, because the people of Canada want to know.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, once again I would refer the hon. member, who is the official opposition critic for housing, to undertakings given by the Minister of Finance in the budget speech itself and in the preface to the document introducing the financial instrument. I would indicate to him further that the chairman of the blue ribbon committee, so described, is meeting with a number of business sector representatives. For example, he met last evening with HUDAC in metropolitan Toronto. He has indicated that the response of the industry is positive; they are confident that the undertaking of the government, in the budget and in the document, will be fulfilled. They are confident that this new mortgage instrument is indeed the answer to long-term security for home purchasers.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the question is: has a decision been taken? The minister said on "The Nation's Business" last Sunday night over national television, "there is no question of chance; the plan will be implemented". He then went on to say that "the government will implement a system of providing loans at 3 per cent to 6 per cent below the market rate." When the Minister of Finance introduced the budget he talked about "if implemented", and he referred to this plan as being referred to the so-called blue ribbon committee. We want to know whether a decision has been taken.

Perhaps while the minister is on his feet, Madam Speaker, he might also tell the House if the government, when it met with the labour leaders last Friday, gave an undertaking that in return for labour supporting the 6-5 wage restraint legislation now before the House, it would in fact implement this 3 per cent to 6 per cent universal reduction in mortgages?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in my comments on Sunday evening, yes indeed I said the government "will"; I used the word. That decision has not been taken as yet or else I would have said that. As to the intention of the government, the member knows full well, if he takes the time to read the budget document, that the Minister of Finance wants that committee to report to him by September 30.

Mr. Clark: Which of your statements can we believe?

Mr. Cosgrove: I hope, Madam Speaker, that I find a note of optimism in the member's question and that he will support this provision. I hope the support comes faster than the support for rental construction which was delayed for three months, because we need the support of the opposition and of all Canadians to get jobs going in that industry today.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER REPRESENTATIONS HAVE BEEN MADE TO DAVIE SHIPBUILDING LTD. OF LAUZON TO MAINTAIN 1,500 WORKERS IN EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. A few months ago, CN called for tenders for the construction of a ferry, and the contract was awarded to Davie Shipbuilding Limited in Lauzon. Today, a Montreal newspaper is quoting the minister as saying that the fate of 1,500 employees of Davie Shipbuilding Limited in Lauzon is now in the hands of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could the Minister of Transport responsible for that department inform the House whether the ferry is still needed and, if so, has the minister taken any action to give the company that won the contract the assurance that it can keep its 1,500 employees?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, first of all, no contract was awarded, and the question was improperly phrased from that point of view. That is the situation.

Mr. Clark: There's the professor.

Mr. Pepin: Better a professor than a student forever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, the situation is as follows. CN Marine wanted to have a ship, the Gulf Span, built for use in its ferry service between North Sydney and Port-aux-Basques. It called for tenders, and Davie Shipbuilding Limited answered the call with a contract worth $143 million. This was brought down to $130 million. CN Marine had $70 million in the bank to spend on that contract and could borrow $30 million more, which means that we had to find another $30 million. I put the case to my colleagues and, at the time, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was discussing in Quebec City the construction of other facilities and equipment for the construction of offshore drilling platforms. So, at that time the ferry boat project was set aside. However, now that the drilling platform construction project has been not cancelled but postponed, building a ship again becomes a possibility. The matter is being discussed again, and that is where I stand with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economical Expansion.

INQUIRY WHETHER CONTRACT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF FERRY IN LAUZON REGION HAS BEEN ISSUED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I have a supplementary. It is very important for Canadians to know what the minister wants. In his statement, the minister said that because of a drop in traffic, the need for such construction has faded. The public would like to know whether the government needs a ship, and Davie Shipbuilding Limited would like to know whether the ship is going to be built. Could the minister himself inform us, instead of referring the matter to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, whether CN needs the ship and, if so, whether the contract which seemed likely to be awarded to Davie Shipbuilding will stand? And I would ask the minister please not to shift the responsibility to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has enough problems as it is.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I shall make myself very clear. The need for a ship is no longer as urgent as it was, partly because of a drop in traffic in that particular area. But if it would suit the plans of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion—

Mr. La Salle: Do we need the ship?

Mr. Pepin: —and the interests of our shipyards, I am quite willing to reopen the discussion on this possibility.

FISHERIES

THREATENED LOSS OF EMPLOYMENT TO NOVA SCOTIA WORKERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. With Canadian fishermen being permitted to sell some 30,000 tonnes of herring over the side to foreign vessels, only 26,000 tonnes have been left for the seafood producers of Nova Scotia. The artificial price of $305 a tonne paid by communist countries, which pay no taxes to Canada, has placed Canadian processors at an unfair disadvantage in trying to meet the competition. Since the pricing impasse will throw 2,500 people out of work in Nova Scotia, on top of the 1.3 million already unemployed in Canada, with an estimated loss of some $8 million in wages, what steps is the minister planning to take to provide suitable employment for these workers in the Canadian fishing industry?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, that question might more appropriately have been addressed to my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, but it is my understanding that in this case both the fishermen and the processors are negotiating that particular matter today. In addition to that, of course, we have in place a number of employment programs, and we will be making announcements in a very few days concerning the direct employment programs and how they will be utilized in provinces like Nova Scotia to provide alternative employment for those presently impacted by the downturn in the international market.

INQUIRY RESPECTING SALE OF HERRING TO JAPAN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of State for International Trade. I realize negotiations are going on today in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, but they have been going on since June 1 and the impasse has not been resolved. Since this has affected Nova Scotia's commitments for the sale of herring to Japan, whose representatives have indicated they may have to go elsewhere to secure their herring supplies, has the minister held any discussions with the Japanese in an effort to secure a negotiated sale price for herring which would secure these markets for our Canadian producers?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I find it very interesting that the hon. member is trying to put on the record a scenario which, unhappily, does not totally correspond to reality. What he forgets to point out to members of this House who might be interested is that for many months—sometime before Christmas—I asked the local processors what their intentions were as to the volume of herring they intended to buy, and whether they were negotiating with the fishermen. This was because the herring fishermen, through their own organization, had requested permission to sell directly over the side. In the absence of an answer, at a certain point a few months ago, I had to give the Canadian fishermen the answer to which they were entitled, as to how they would sell the fish in which obviously the processors were not interested.

I find it very strange that the hon. member should now be telling us that Canadian processors are today desperately looking for the herring which they refused to negotiate for a few months ago.

HOUSING

RENTS CHARGED BY CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. No doubt he will be aware that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have indicated that each minister is required to contact government agencies in his or her jurisdiction in an effort to achieve the 6 per cent world. Has the Minister of Finance instructed Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to limit all rental increases in all units under its jurisdiction to 6 per cent or less in the coming year, and to 5 per cent or less in the following year?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I was asked a similar question with respect to an agency under my responsibility as Minister of Public Works, namely, a land company at Mirabel. In response to that question I indicated that the statement made by the Minister of Finance in the budget speech—and I presume in any communications we will be sending to ministers—referred to regulatory agencies. I am of the view that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation probably does not fall within the definition of regulatory agencies as described by the minister, as the intention of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: Nonetheless, just as I did with the company at Mirabel, I have asked officials in Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in the Department of Public Works and in the National Capital Commission to review the minister's statement, and to advise me about the implications of applying the guidelines voluntarily, that is, without being subject strictly to such a rule, to see what the cost implications are so that we can put ourselves in a position that would be in compliance with the spirit of the policy, if not the law, announced by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, without my reading it into the record, I urge the minister responsible for housing to read the Prime Minister's answer to a question I asked yesterday. It concerned the requirement of ministers to instruct those persons within the various agencies that regulate in any way matters affecting the Canadian public, to keep increases to 6 per cent and 5 per cent in the years ahead.

RENT INCREASE IN TORONTO PROJECT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that the minister has seen fit to support the imposition of 6 per cent and 5 per cent guidelines, and in light of the fact that the minister has seen fit to impose restrictions on pensions for the elderly, will he review the condition which my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Beaches, raised with me, that at 1338 Queen Street East, Toronto, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has asked tenants at that address for a 25 per cent increase this year, and will he hold that increase back?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes reference to increases in rents by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in some projects in metropolitan Toronto. Indeed, I have responded to the hon. member indicating that increase, which was some months ago—I think it was five or six months ago—was not apparent in his question. But the corporation has reviewed that increase. The objective of the corporation was to bring rents up to market rates.

An hon. Member: That is wrong.

Mr. Cosgrove: But if in so doing we found any renters who were paying a disproportionate amount of their income toward rent payments—for example, above 30 per cent—there is a provision for them to be assisted on a "rent geared to income basis."

With regard to the particular question raised by the hon. member, it is an old question that has been dealt with.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: My answer to the first question applies generally to any increase that would occur in the future.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POSSIBILITY OF POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Post. Possibly in his absence another minister could answer the question for him. The minister will know that the president of Canada Post is reported to have stated recently that he will find it almost impossible to meet the deficit guideline laid down by the government. He will also know that different vice-presidents have said that, in their estimation, another postal rate increase will be necessary.

Will the minister tell this House whether Canadians can expect another postal rate increase either this year or early in 1983? At the same time, will the minister confirm for the House that any such rate increase this year or next year will follow the guideline laid down in the budget, that is, no more than 6 per cent?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have no information for the hon. member in response to the specifics of his question. However, I will refer the matter to Canada Post and I will get back to him at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Bradley: I am used to those types of answers. They come from the minister as well, Madam Speaker.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE APPLICATION

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my next question is for the Minister of Communications. The minister is reported as saying yesterday that he would not intervene to restrain rate increases for Bell Canada which could increase the costs to Canadians of making telephone calls by as much as 35 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Bradley: This would be much in excess of the 6 per cent guideline laid down in the budget. The minister said there may be exceptional circumstances in Bell Canada's case. Could the minister tell the House just what those exceptional circumstances might be?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I quite properly said that I would not intervene now because I have no authority to intervene now. The process for Bell to obtain increases in rates is for Bell Canada to file a request for an increase in rates with the CRTC. It is then up to the CRTC to hold a hearing to determine what is a justifiable rate. The rest of my answer yesterday is the same as I gave in the House last week, that the message in the budget is crystal clear. Agencies administering price increases for federal agencies will be expected to follow that type of increase unless, as is indicated in the budget, there are exceptional circumstances.

In the case of Bell Canada, if there were an increase above the 5 per cent or 6 per cent level, there would be an appeal to the governor in council—to the federal cabinet—and under the appropriate legislation the governor in council has the authority to change a decision of the CRTC in the field of telecommunications and to set the rate itself if it feels that a rate increase is unjustified.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF SHOAL LAKE DEVELOPMENT ON WINNIPEG WATER SUPPLY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It relates to the Shoal Lake development. The citizens of Winnipeg have received their drinking water for many years from this lake. A cottage plan is now being developed for the Indian people. This is economic development which they would like to pursue. Has the minister given his personal guarantee that that development will not in any way affect the quality of drinking water for the residents of Winnipeg?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member means by personal guarantee. To be specific, I do not know of any minister of any government who goes around giving personal guarantees.

Mr. Nielsen: Except for "Old Ironclad."

Mr. Nowlan: He is cast in iron.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I do not know whether the hon. member, while he was Minister of Indian Affairs, was in the habit of giving personal guarantees, but I would rather assume he did not.

I can tell him that as minister I have funded the chief and the Indian band with moneys to hire the very best consultants to determine, if they went ahead with the development, whether it would in any way prejudice the water supply for the city of Winnipeg which, of course, is an event we could not countenance. Those consultants have reported and have indicated that if certain safeguards are adhered to, the development would not seriously impact on the water supply. I am studying the reports of the consultants even further to be absolutely certain that this is the case, before taking any further action.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, what I meant by personal guarantee was that the minister had, in fact, approved the project and had also approved a sewage project.

LIABILITY OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. If, in fact, there is a diminution in water quality for the residents of Winnipeg, does the Government of Canada hold itself liable for any filtration or additional costs which the residents of Winnipeg might have in view of that development and the loss in water quality?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I think the situation is quite simple. You cannot argue on the one hand that we should put needless impediments in the way of the Indian people and, on the other hand, argue that we should be doing everything for the Indian people in the way of economic development. It is a very inconsistent posture for the hon. member to be taking. What the situation is here, as he knows from being a former minister of Indian affairs, is that these Indian people were denied employment because they were prohibited from fishing in the area. They then turned to another possible venture for economic development, which was the development of their land for cottage lots as, indeed, other people have done in this area.

Now, all of a sudden there is this very real concern that, because of what they wish to do as opposed to other cottagers on this lake, the water supply in the city of Winnipeg will suddenly be deleteriously affected.

We are doing everything we can, prior to giving any approvals, to ensure that there be absolutely no adverse impact on the water supply. If there is, I think the Indian people would be the first to agree, as indeed would the city of Winnipeg, that it should not be done. In that case I think it is reasonable to expect, after all the expense to which the Indian people have been put to ensure that there is no adverse impact, expenses that others on this body of water have not been put to, that the city of Winnipeg consider buying the property in question. The mayor and the city council there have indicated that is an alternative, depending on how the consultants' reports turn out.

HOUSING

MINISTER'S TELEVISED STATEMENT ON MORTGAGE REDUCTION SCHEME

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a very brief and simple question for the minister responsible for housing, and an equally brief and simple supplementary, which both require very brief and simple yes or no answers. I read from the transcript of "The Nation's Business" last Saturday, July 10, where the minister of housing is quoted as having said this:

> The Canadian government will implement a system for providing loans at 3 per cent to 6 per cent below the market rate to ensure your long-term security.

Was that statement the truth?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have answered that question twice in question period. I refer the hon. member, for the sake of brevity, to those answers.

Mr. Nielsen: It would appear to me that the minister is reluctant to admit to the truth of that statement.

MINISTER'S REPORTED STATEMENT IN "TORONTO STAR"

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question also involves a direct quote from The Toronto Star of July 10, 1982, where the minister was reported as saying, "There is no question of chance. The plan will be implemented", referring to the 3 per cent to 6 per cent plan. Was that statement the truth?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, once again I refer the hon. member to the sections of the budget upon which I relied in support of that statement earlier in question period today. I would similarly draw his attention to the context of that statement and to the concluding paragraphs wherein I said that we are confident the three quarters of a billion dollars commited by this government within the last two budgets, within the last seven months, will bring short-term and long-term security to home owners and therefore will put the housing business back on its feet.

ROLE OF CITY OF WINNIPEG IN DETERMINING QUALITY OF WATER

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it is supplementary to the sequence of questions asked by the hon. member for Provencher. It concerns the role of the city of Winnipeg via-à-vis the Shoal Lake Indian band. Can the minister give assurances to the House that the city of Winnipeg is now prepared to cooperate with the consultants by providing them with the necessary water quality data which it had originally refused to make available to the consultants, so that we can find out exactly what was the status of the quality of water that was moving from Shoal Lake to the aqueduct at Winnipeg?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the question from the hon. member. According to the Indians and the consultants, there was some difficulty in getting that needed data. I met with the mayor and the city council and the Winnipeg city manager, I believe his title is, to see if we could facilitate the gathering of that data so that an accurate study could be made by the consultants for the Indian people. As I understand it, most of the data they wanted was made available, finally.

INDUSTRY

ALLEGED REFUSAL TO DESIGNATE CITY OF THETFORD MINES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and concerns the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program. The minister must know the member for Frontenac says that the government is refusing to designate the town of Thetford Mines because one of the principal employers is the Société nationale de l'amiante which is controlled by the Government of Quebec. My first question: was the hon. member correct in making this accusation? My second question: are there any other reasons for the government's refusal?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the member for Frontenac has gone to a great deal of trouble for his riding, and his constituents should, and I think they do, appreciate that. Decisions on community designations are cabinet decisions, and the situation in his riding is still under consideration. I think one part has already been designated, and he was very anxious for us to review the situation in order to have decisions on the rest of the area he represents.

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT'S REFUSAL OF REQUEST BY MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we have had a sign of weakness from the member for Frontenac. Now I have a question about the region of Sorel-Tracy. Why did the government turn down an application by Marine Industries Limited in Sorel?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition is referring to an application for a contribution to support a study by Marine Industries Limited. One of the rules of the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program is that it must have proof that a company is unable to proceed with a project without financial support. The Enterprise Development Board looked into the case, and decided that Marine Industries Limited was able to proceed without this contribution, but I am sure the Board would be willing to examine the company's other applications.

WINDSOR COMPANY PRESIDENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce personally acquainted with Mr. W. A. Doherty who is the president of the private company involved in building the Hilton Hotel in Windsor?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, I am, Madam Speaker, and so are tens of thousands of other people in the Windsor area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONDITIONS GOVERNING ASSISTANCE TO WINDSOR HOTEL CONSTRUCTION PROJECT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister will know that the Government of Canada, through its insurance programs of CMHC, has already been involved in the failure of two hotels, Quai D'Orsay in Ottawa, and the Howard Johnson in Montreal. Has the minister set safeguards in place to ensure that there will not be a similar failure in the Hilton venture in Windsor, and can he give us an assurance that all of the private funding necessary for that project is now secure?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Enterprise Development Board that made the decision on the application for loan assistance to the project has set forth various terms and conditions designed to provide security for the contribution that would be made, and there is no question that any of the loan funding would be advanced unless and until all the conditions are met, including the putting in place of the financing by the private sector entrepreneur.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

TICKETS ISSUED TO EMPLOYEES FOR TRAVEL ABROAD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. I am sure that he recalls a letter which he sent to me last week. Could he provide a little information to the House? As he knows, between May 3 and June 10 of this year 1,569 tickets were issued for trips for public servants going outside Canada. That specifically excludes External Affairs and the Department of National Defence, so there is no question of security if the minister is to provide the names and the purposes of the trips that were taken by public servants from Ottawa to outside Canada. If he cannot do that, I note that he has already taken two tickets from those 1,569, one for an employee of Energy, Mines and Resources and one for an employee of Communications to travel to Argentina. If he cannot give us the names and the purposes, could he give us xerox copies of those tickets?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): First, Madam Speaker, I would like to indicate to the hon. gentleman that from his Standing Order 43 yesterday he seemed to have misunderstood some of the information that I provided to him in that letter. He will recall that the letter was in answer to a question that he put on the Order Paper. I recommend that he do the same with reference to his particular question now.

In the information that I provided to him, I did identify the 1,500 tickets of which he speaks, but I would like to point out to him that those tickets referred to travel from any place in Canada toward foreign countries, not only from the national capital region. In terms of the balance of the information, I would ask him to solicit it in the normal course.

• (1500)

Mr. Fulton: I have the minister's letter here in my hand and, number one, I did not put it on the Order Paper. It was a letter. Second, quoting directly from his own letter, he said it is based on "statistical data which was recently gathered on international travel out of the National Capital Region". So, he is wrong on two counts.

REQUEST THAT NON-ESSENTIAL TRAVEL BE TERMINATED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who, I am glad to see, is reading, in both French and English, the Bell document that I gave him yesterday. Since his cherished Bill C-124 will create chaos in the lives of thousands of underpaid public servants who earn incomes in the neighbourhood of $12,000 a year, and since damned few of them are flying internationally on these flights, I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board would give a commitment to this House that he will try to get the names of those people from his colleagues and that he will issue a directive to all the cabinet that non-essential international travel be immediately terminated.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I actually appreciate very much the document on long distance telephone services which the hon. member for Skeena sent me yesterday and which I have read in both French and English, at least in a cursory manner. The issue of non-essential travel is one that I would like to address because all travel is authorized travel and, under the guidelines, it is essential travel. The numbers do seem high. I was very pleased to note a decrease between 1979 and 1980 of 6 per cent in travel. But the numbers which the hon. member has brought to our attention for a period of one month in 1982 suggest that there may have been an increase. I will indeed look into the matter.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Monday, July 12, 1982, and that he finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBY—REMARKS OF MR. CHRÉTIEN RESPECTING DONALD MARSHALL CASE—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: Since the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) is in the House today, I would like to rule on the question of privilege which he raised on June 17 and which arose out of his dissatisfaction with answers given to him by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). The Minister of Justice is not in the House today, but I feel I should rule anyway because I would not want to delay the ruling any further; it has been standing for quite some time.

I submit to the hon. member for Halifax West that, in accordance with the custom of the House, we do accept hon. members' explanations of what transpired. In the case that he raised, those explanations were obviously given in good faith as far as the House is concerned. An hon. member's word is usually taken for the statements he makes in the House.

I would like to emphasize, however, that even had the minister declined to give any explanation about the particular case of interest to the hon. member, that would not constitute the basis for a question of privilege either.

Therefore, I must rule that I do not find a prima facie case of privilege in this particular instance, since there was nothing in the exchange which could convey the impression that the minister was in any way misleading this House, and delaying an announcement does not constitute contempt of the House.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 3,289—Mr. Dantzer:

1. At what point in the future if there is no change in premiums will (a) Canada Pension Plan contributions no longer cover payments to beneficiaries (b) Canada Pension Plan contributions plus interest no longer cover payments to beneficiaries (c) the Canada Pension Plan Fund cease to exist?

2. What are the assumptions that will have a bearing on the answer to part I, including the assumed rates of interest earned by the fund and the changes in current mortality rates?

3. (a) What changes in premiums would be necessary by (i) 1986 (ii) 1991 (iii) 2001 (iv) 2011 (v) 2021 (vi) 2031 in order to maintain the current real dollar value of the fund (b) what changes in premiums would be necessary to maintain the current real dollar value of the fund by (i) 1986 (ii) 1991 (iii) 2001 (iv) 2011 (v) 2021 if benefits from the plan were doubled?

4. What is the (a) interest rate earned by the Plan (b) lowest Bank of Canada rate (c) average Bank of Canada rate (d) amount of monies borrowed from the fund by each province for the (i) third quarter of 1979 (ii) fourth quarter of 1979 (iii) first quarter of 1980 (iv) second quarter of 1980 (v) third quarter of 1980 (vi) fourth quarter of 1980 (vii) first quarter of 1981 (viii) second quarter of 1981?

5. Is the fund invested solely in 20-year Government of Canada bonds?

6. To the knowledge of the government, are public or private pension plans invested solely in one instrument and, if not, with specific reference to the government regulations that apply to both public and private sector plans, what are the reasons?

7. If the CPP were to accept no new entrants as of September 30, 1981, but all current entrants were to continue to contribute at the current rate, what would be the deficit in the fund when it was wound up, in current as well as 1981 dollars?

8. What would be the value of the fund as of September 30, 1981, if from the beginning of the fund monies had been invested in the following alternative instrument (a) 91-day Government of Canada treasury bonds (b) 180-day Government of Canada treasury bonds (c) 1-year Government of Canada bonds (d) 10-year provincial bonds, assuming each province borrowing funds borrowed at their provincial rate (e) 10-year corporate bonds, using composite provided by the Bank of Canada's Statistical Review?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): I am informed by the Departments of Insurance and Finance as follows:

1. In the last complete statutory actuarial report on the Canada Pension Plan, (Statutory Actuarial Report No. 6 tabled in the House of Commons on December 18, 1978) it was estimated, assuming no change in the 3.6 per cent contribution rate, that (a) expenditures would exceed contributions in 1985, (b) expenditures would exceed contributions plus interest in 1993, and (c) the fund would cease to exist in 2003.

2. The answers in Part 1 are affected by many assumptions, a partial list of which is as follows:

1. rates of increase in average earnings
2. rates of increase in the Consumer Price Index
3. rates of interest on new investments
4. mortality rates
5. migration rates
6. participation rates in the plan
7. earnings distributions
8. retirement ages
9. rates of incidence and termination of disability
10. rates of emergence of spouses' pensions
11. proportions married, age distributions, and relative earnings distributions of husbands and wives
12. remarriage rates of widows and widowers.

These, as well as other assumptions, are described in considerable detail in Statutory Actuarial Report No. 6.

The combined effect of all assumptions on expenditures and contributions for the three calendar years 1978 to 1980 has been that actual expenditures have averaged about 92 per cent of estimated while actual contributions have averaged about 97 per cent of estimated. The net result shows that actual experience has been somewhat more favourable than estimated, and if this trend should persist, the actual dates of occurrence of one or more of the three contingencies considered in Part 1, assuming no change in the contribution rate, may be slightly later than those estimated.

As to some specific assumptions, the annual rate of increase in average earnings, the annual rate of increase in the Consumer Price Index, and the annual rate of interest on new investments were projected to decrease from experience levels in 1978 to ultimate levels of 5.5 per cent, 3.5 per cent and 6.5 per cent respectively for 1983 and later. While these ultimate rates appear to be definitely on the low side, at least for the short-term future, it should be emphasized that the estimates in Statutory Acturial Report No. 6 are affected much more by the assumed differentials between these rates than by their absolute levels. For example, again assuming no change in the 3.6 per cent contribution rate, if ultimate assumptions of 11.5 per cent, 9.5 per cent and 12.5 per cent had been used instead (i.e., assumptions involving the same differentials but 6 percentage points higher), (a) the year when estimated expenditures would exceed contributions would still have been 1985, (b) the year when estimated expenditures would exceed contributions plus interest would have been 1995 instead of 1993, while (c) the year when the fund would cease to exist would have been 2002 instead of 2003. Evidently, these changes would have been relatively minor.

3. (a) If the 3.6 per cent contribution rate is retained as long as the real dollar value of the fund in terms of the Consumer Price Index increases, and if it is thereafter annually increased as required to maintain the real dollar value of the fund, it is estimated that the contribution rates required would be (i) 3.6 per cent in 1986, (ii) 3.90 per cent in 1991, (iii) 5.12 per cent in 2001, (iv) 6.02 per cent in 2011, (v) 7.77 per cent in 2021, (vi) 8.90 per cent in 2031 and (vii) 8.54 per cent in 2041, based on Statutory Actuarial Report No. 6 assumptions, except that the starting fund was taken as the actual fund at December 31, 1980 instead of the actual fund at December 31, 1977, and actual experience through 1980 was substituted for estimated experience.

(b) If benefits from the plan were doubled, effective 1983, the contribution rates required to achieve the same objective, and based upon the same assumptions as for (a), would be (i) 6.68 per cent in 1986, (ii) 8.62 per cent in 1991, (iii) 10.67 per cent in 2001, (iv) 12.33 per cent in 2011, (v) 15.73 per cent in 2021, (vi) 17.93 per cent in 2031 and (vii) 17.16 per cent in 2041.

4. The information sought by the honourable member is equally accessible to him, being reported annually in the public accounts of Canada, monthly in the Bank of Canada Review, and quarterly in the Canada Pension Plan Statistical Bulletin.

5. No.

6. Public or private pension plans, to the extent that they operate invested funds, invest either directly or indirectly in a variety of instruments. Subject to statutory or regulatory restrictions, the investment policy normally aims at maximizing yields within acceptable limits of risk. Relatively smaller plans tend to be insured or to participate in investment pools. It is possible that some plans invest exclusively in government bonds or exclusively in mortgages, etc.; however, it is normal to see diversified investment. Presumably, this may be attributed to active or passive acceptance of the principle that diversification enhances the security of the investments and tends to allow acceptance of a higher level of individual risk leading to a higher expected rate of return.

7. Based on Statutory Actuarial Report No. 6 assumptions, it is estimated that assuming the fund would be wound up about the year 2088, the deficit in the fund would then be approximately $211 trillion. This would be equivalent to a deficit of about $246 billion at September 30, 1981, accumulated with interest to the year 2088.

8. The calculation of fund values as requested by the honourable member would require an inordinate amount of calculations to be conducted by the limited resources of this government; therefore, no answer is provided. The investment alternatives suggested in parts (c) and (d) do not exist for all the time periods in question and therefore any result calculated would be hypothetical. Information necessary to calculate the requested result in parts (a), (b) and (e) is equally accessible to the honourable member from the sources outlined in the response to part 4.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. CORBETT—DISPOSITION OF BILL C-201

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order in connection with the response given by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) yesterday in reference to the question of the passage of Bill C-201 last week.

Concerning how the matter proceeded, the President of the Privy Council stated, in part, as reported at page 19215 of Hansard:

—that Thursday, the day before, notice had been given to the representatives of his party, the whip and the deputy leader, in the House—

In perusing the record of proceedings of Thursday, the particular day in question, I find no reference by the President of the Privy Council that he did, indeed, give notice that Bill C-201 was coming up. I just wanted to draw to his attention and to the attention of the people of this country that that matter was not drawn to the attention of the House during the period of time allotted to him to make it known to the people of the nation, and particularly to hon. members of this side of the House. It was just another way of duping and defrauding the people of the nation.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I just want to repeat that proper notice was given to the Conservative Party and to the NDP of the intention of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) to proceed with Bill C-201 on Friday. Proper notice was given on Thursday evening.

Mr. Corbett: Not in the House.

Mr. Pinard: That is what I was told and that is what is usually done with all private members' bills. The hon. member should check with people in his party and find out about the notice.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I am glad to hear the government House leader say what he did, on his own behalf. Obviously, he has been supplied information by someone else in his party. My deputy House leader did not receive any such notice. I received no such notice. Our whip received no such notice. I might also inform the government House leader that the provisions of Standing Order 75 with respect to notice were not complied with.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the notice was given in writing and sent by hand to the appropriate offices. If the hon. members responsible have not seen it, it is not my responsibility.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not true.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, with reference to this point of order, I do not have the mailing list in front of me, but I do know that Mr. Beatty, who works in the office of the opposition House leader, was on that list, as was the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

In response to the question raised by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett), it is not the practice of the government House leader to raise on Thursday afternoon, when he answers his weekly question, what is to be dealt with in private members' hour. He discusses what will be dealt with under government orders, but not under private members' hour. This is the fundamental distinction which I would suggest has been totally forgotten by the hon. member, or perhaps he is unaware of it.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, the fact is that the President of the Privy Council stood up in this House and stated that our whip and our deputy House leader were advised that that bill was coming before the House. That is not correct. The other fact is that the Standing Orders of the House say that unless there is an emergency, notwithstanding the fact that the House is master of its own fate, a bill will be given successive readings on different days. That could certainly not be construed as an emergency debate.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I can only reiterate what I have already said. I am told that proper notice in writing was given by hand to representatives of both opposition parties. With regard to the emergency about which the hon. member speaks, I agree with him that it is the principle. I was not here but I have been told that there were representatives of all parties in the House. Unanimous consent was granted by the representative of the hon. member's own party, a representative of the New Democratic Party and, of course, representatives of the Liberal Party. Therefore, there was unanimous consent. Anything can be done in this House by unanimous consent. The representatives of all parties agreed to the process.

MR. TAYLOR—APPLICATION OF S.O. 15

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to clear up something that I think should be done. Under Standing Order 15 we are advised whether it is an A day or B day. Consequently, we can turn to our list to see whether it is an A day or a B day. However, it does not go any further than that.

There are 200 or 300 bills on the Order Paper. It has not been the practice to go through the list consecutively. If we want hon. members to know, they should be given the chance to look in the Orders of the Day, particularly on the day it is coming up, or by that time, so that they know which bill will be coming up.

Second, it has been the habit to post this information on the bulletin board in the lobby. Why is it not posted each time? It is not fair to a member to have this brought on after that member has made proper arrangements to leave for constituency business, and he then finds on his return that a bill in which he has a vital interest has been passed in ten minutes by 12 members.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid there is not much I can add to this exchange except to say that the House went through certain procedures. We cannot go back on those procedures.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I made an error with respect to Standing Order 75. It was not the Standing Order that I wanted to quote, so I rise simply to correct that. The Standing Order I am thinking of is the one requiring posting of a notice on the members' bulletin board. That notice applies to private members' bills.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DEANS—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT BY MR. COSGROVE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given official notice. I would now like to follow up on it, if I may. You will be aware that at page 18880 of Hansard for June 28, 1982, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) made the following statement:

> Tonight, I am tabling a consultative document containing proposals which, if implemented, would have the following major key effects:
> —Buyers of new homes would be able to secure mortgages at significantly reduced interest rates—3 to 6 percentage points lower than prevailing rates.

I draw that to Your Honour's attention because I claim that, inadvertently or otherwise, the minister responsible for housing has misled the public of Canada and the House of Commons. I recognize that it is a very serious matter. I want to indicate for your consideration, hopefully overnight, the reasons why I believe that happened.

Taking into account that the Minister of Finance clearly stated that the measure to which he was referring was not yet government policy and that he made it quite clear he was talking about the possibility of action being taken by the government, subject to the approval of both the cabinet and Parliament, the minister responsible for housing subsequently, I hope in error, when appearing on a television program which was copyrighted but which I would claim to be published material, said the following:

> The Canadian government will implement a system for providing loans at 3 to 6 per cent below the market rate to ensure long-term security.

He then went on to say:

> I stress again people who purchase new housing will do so with the confidence that they can renew their mortgages at lower than market interest rates.

Yesterday in the House of Commons the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was asked whether the Government of Canada had in fact come to a definitive conclusion with regard to the implementation of that policy, whether that policy was in effect and the Prime Minister could give assurance to those people who were advised by the minister of housing to proceed on the basis of that proposal contained in the budget to purchase a home, and whether the government through the Prime Minister was able to assure those people that that reduction in interest rates would be forthcoming.

The Prime Minister, again referring to Hansard, said quite clearly he could give no such assurance at the moment. The minister responsible for housing was subsequently asked whether he was stating government policy, whether he had been misquoted or was in error.

Mr. Nielsen: Whether he was telling the truth.

Mr. Deans: He was even asked whether he was stating the truth. The truth is something that is always difficult to determine. It is very much in the mind of the individual making the statement. The more relevant question was whether the minister responsible for housing was stating government policy.

My question of privilege is simply this. The House of Commons has the right to expect that it will be told the truth. The House of Commons has the right to expect that statements made by ministers of the Crown, affirmative, assertive statements, will in fact be a reflection of the government's policy.

As a result of the statement by the minister responsible for housing, I was asked by a number of people from across this country whether in fact it was now government policy and could they proceed. I could not give that answer. As a Member of Parliament, I could not either affirm or deny what the government policy was, given that the minister responsible for housing was making a statement that was quite contrary both to the budget statement and the statement by the Prime Minister. I therefore ask—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member. He has just stated what his question of privilege is. I realize that he is dealing with two matters. The first is a statement made outside the House which in the circumstances, and taking into account the substance of the statement, cannot constitute a question of privilege. He is also speaking about the statement made in the House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the statement made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove). He finds that those statements are contradictory.

The hon. members recognizes the difficulty the Chair would be in if it had to determine which of those contradictory statements was correct. I suggest to the hon. member that this is obviously a matter of debate. It was debated in the course of the question period. I am afraid the hon. member is now debating it again.

The hon. member has the right to debate this matter, but certainly not under the aegis of a question of privilege. Therefore, I must interrupt the hon. member and tell him that he does not have the basis for a question of privilege. He has a matter that he would like to debate, but he must do that at another time.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask whether you could at some point deliberate and report to the House on how we in the opposition can get the truth out of this government.

Madam Speaker: I can answer that now. Question period is a time when members can question ministers of the Crown on their policies and programs. That is done daily. There are other occasions when questions may be asked of ministers. That is obviously the avenue. If the answer a member receives from a minister is not satisfactory in his view, there is nothing the Chair can do about that. The Chair can ensure only that the hon. member will have a chance on another occasion to elucidate the question that he is concerned with.

Mr. Paproski: Make them tell the truth.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, may I comment on this matter?

Madam Speaker: No, I have ruled on it, I am sorry. There is no basis for a question of privilege; therefore, I cannot hear a second member.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I do not want to transgress the rules but it seems to me that it is incumbent on the minister to rise in his place and state that he was in error or that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in error. For the minister to sit there and say nothing certainly is contrary to the practices of the House. I am not questioning your Honour's ruling but surely the House is entitled to an explanation from the minister responsible for housing.

Madam Speaker: If the hon. minister had risen before I ruled, I could have heard him; but since I have ruled that this is not a question of privilege and cannot be debated at this particular time, hon. members will have to take another opportunity to elucidate the matter.

Mr. Nielsen: Tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC SECTOR COMPENSATION RESTRAINT ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING COMPENSATION IN THE PUBLIC SECTOR OF CANADA

The House resumed, from Monday, July 12, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Johnston that Bill C-124, respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Dollard): Madam Speaker, yesterday, in the first part of my speech, I mentioned that inflation is at the root of our problems. I also mentioned a number of disastrous effects inflation was having on our society, and I said that it was because of this high inflation rate that our economy was in its present state, and that 1,300,000 Canadians were out of work. I also said that we were asking the nine million Canadians who were employed to help us protect their jobs and to find work for those Canadians who are unemployed today. I also mentioned that the government was spending $2 billion per month on its income redistribution programs. I also tried to illustrate what $1 billion represents. I could explain it another way, namely, that one billion seconds ago, the Second World War ended. One billion minutes ago, Jesus Christ was on earth and one billion hours ago, man was living in caves.

[English]

I was responding, Mr. Speaker, to the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, who says he could not understand how wage cuts could help get our economy moving. In this sense, I would like to quote a portion of a Financial Post article entitled "Wage restraint does matter". I might add that this also answers the challenge that was put to us yesterday by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). The article states as follows:

In general, evidence of the need to moderate wage demands is all around us. Look, for example, at the U.S., our biggest customer. In the first quarter of 1982, U.S. wage settlements in the industrial sector average increases of only 2.2 per cent in the first year of contract. Excluding the teamsters and the auto workers, who accepted a wage freeze, the average increase was still an extraordinarily modest 6.8 per cent. For 1981, U.S. settlements in all sectors were about four percentage points below Canadian settlements. The U.S. federal civil service has been limited to a 4.8 per cent increase. In the face of these trends—and the wage restraint in other countries with which we must trade and compete—the reaction of Canadian labour leaders to Ottawa's proposals has been disappointing. In particular, the response so far of Canadian Labour Congress President Dennis McDermott, with personally offensive references to the Finance minister, and hints of a general strike, is a perfect example of just what we don't need.

I say to Mr. McDermott: "Do you think that by pricing ourselves out of the market through wage increases about double what they are in the United States, we are going to help our economy recover?" I might add that I was encouraged by the reaction of Mr. McDermott after his meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and I can only hope that this will carry through to a positive reaction on his part.

The federal government in its budget is facing reality. What the federal government has done is to show strong leadership, the kind of leadership our country needs and the kind of leadership that I am convinced Canadians will respond to in a very positive way. I would like to suggest to the members opposite, and particularly to those in the New Democratic Party, that they forget about criticizing our approach in order to try to win votes. I would say to them: "If you really want to help your constituents, you will encourage them to join the fight against inflation and to restrict their wage demands to 6 per cent."

There are countless suggestions, Mr. Speaker, as to how to solve our economic problems. The first difficult task, of course, was to select and put forth a plan of action. Strong leadership requires this and our government is providing it. It is time now for all Canadians collectively to adopt this policy and to win this battle.

It was suggested yesterday by the member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) that this bill is unfair. I would like to remind him that it is going to be unfair only if the nine million Canadians who are working today refuse to co-operate, refuse to help us find jobs for those Canadians who are out of work. The hon. member is assuming that Canadians who are working will refuse us that help. He has adopted a negative attitude.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that when I was head of Canada Steamship Lines and I had to hire people, I looked for four things: first, their knowledge; second, their skill; third, their habits; and fourth, their attitude. No matter how good their knowledge was, how perfect their skill, how good their habits, if their attitude was negative they were absolutely worthless. I might say to the member for Kootenay West that under that program I could not have hired him.

As I said at the outset of my speech last night, I think this is probably the most important piece of legislation on which this House will have to pass.

Mr. Fulton: Is that why there are four Liberals here?

Mr. Desmarais: Inflation has to be brought under control for the simple reason that the alternatives of more unemployment, higher interest rates and greater deficits are absolutely unthinkable.

Let me review some editorials which I think will help us make a few points. Under the headline "The Wrong Whipping boy" the Montreal Gazette of July 8 wrote the following:

There is nothing necessarily wrong with paying people a lot of money. What is wrong is to pay high wages and salaries that are not earned through increasingly efficient production. Canadian efficiency—our productivity—has been lagging dangerously behind that of competing nations.

Those hon. members who speak about our purchasing power have a tendency to forget about this principle.

On July 6 under the headline "Unemployment data should be a warning", The Globe and Mail stated:

The OECD, in a report on the Canadian economy last week, warned that Canada has poor prospects for restoring sustained and balanced economic growth as long as present trends continue—even if it turns out there is a recovery in export markets.

With a faster rate of inflation in Canada than in the United States and, contributing to the inflation problem, a markedly higher rate of increase in wage rates under collective agreements, this country is in a poor position to take advantage of any opportunities that may develop in export markets.

In the longer run, if pay increases under collective agreements do not soon move down to 6 or 7 per cent from a recent rate of about 12 per cent, Canada's job prospects must remain bleak. It would seem obvious that, if Western Europe lacks confidence in its ability to compete against Japan and the United States in high technology products and against Japan and the newly industrialized nations in labour intensive goods, then Canada has even more reason to worry.

Mr. Leo De Bever, who is a director for Chase Econometrics, was interviewed on the CBC as follows:

Is the 6 per cent solution in fact a solution to this sort of thing?

Mr. De Bever answered:

Well, I think so. Obviously, the key element in this budget that would make a lot of difference . . . would be if the private sector were to agree with what the finance minister is asking for. The likelihood of that happening is obviously very small. I think there are a lot of people in this economy who would be willing to do what the finance minister says if they were assured that, say, 75 or 80 per cent of the population were in the same boat.

The second question by the CBC was the following:

You mean workers would be willing to accept that sort of thing?

The following is the answer:

I think so. I don't think anybody advocating large wage gains at this point is a friend of labour because ultimately those gains are going to be eroded. It would be much better if we all throttled back, if we all decided look, enough is enough. Let's just forget about making short-term gains. Let's just take that 5 per cent cut in standard of living that we would be accepting if we were going to go to 6 per cent. And let's get it over with. Let's get back on the track that is sustainable.

An article in the Montreal Gazette of June 29 by Hugh Anderson entitled "After three tries. MacEachen finally rates a pass" states:

The government plans to control what it has direct power over (its own employees' pay cheques), to influence pay and prices where it can do so indirectly (telephone bills and farm-product prices, for instance) and persuade or shame the rest of us into line.

There is even the promise that the pay of cabinet ministers, members of parliament and senators will actually be cut. That might make the whole thing popular enough to succeed.

I certainly hope so. Under the headline "Six per cent or bust", The Vancouver Sun of June 30 stated:

The proposed 6 per cent limit on public-service pay increases (to drop to 5 per cent next year) was essential. The provinces have to go along with it as well as with similar limits on cost increases for public services. Those in greatest need will get inflation-indexed assistance but everyone else will be fairly limited to 6 per cent increases in benefits.

But Mr. MacEachen has appealed only for voluntary controls in the private sector. Will Canadians respond? They should, but the battles this summer between labour and employers will probably be fierce and costly.

If the incomes policy works it will bring down inflation. Mr. MacEachen said the government will not budge from its tight monetary policy, which will also help in reducing inflation.

The final editorial is from the Regina Leader-Post and is entitled "New budget offers us chance to bind rather than bicker". It states:

The pay measure is a restriction of 6 per cent on federal salaries this year and 5 per cent next year. The opposition's quick support for this move was encouraging, for it suggests that the Conservatives intend to help, rather than impede, solution of the national crisis before it can become an economic disaster. That does not mean that there is not room for the opposition parties to make suggestions to fine-tune MacEachen's budget proposals. But with Canada facing the need to mobilize economically, this is the time for what the Americans call a bipartisan approach—make that tripartisan, if the NDP agrees—to provide expeditious passage of effective economic remedies.

I think we are entering a period of our history in which we have to fight for our lives. We have to fight to save this country, which will go down the drain economically unless we do something, I think we have to forget our bipartisanship. We have to get together. We cannot afford to lose this battle. I implore all Canadians wherever they may be to do their bit to help cure our economic ailments so that Canada can remain the best country in the world, which it is today.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a good deal of pleasure, albeit very anxious pleasure, to speak in this debate on Bill C-124 entitled the "Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act", a bill which provides legislative authority for public sector compensation restraint, the so-called six and five rule announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his budget speech on June 28. The bill would also restrict—in fact cut—the salaries of Members of Parliament and senators for the balance of the present fiscal year. Surprisingly, the bill also includes within its framework a provision which effectively eliminates the right of public servants in Canada to strike upon the expiry of their present collective agreements.

I noted with interest the remarks of the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Desmarais) who was partially correct in identifying the problem as inflation. He suggested that we must all form part of a positive initiative to reduce the toll that inflation is taking of society as a result of the devastating effects of unemployment, increasing business bankruptcies and related factors. Although the hon. member said the problem is caused by inflation, he did not point out where inflation originates. I should like to point out to him that it is not wage earners or workers or taxpayers who cause inflation; it is governments that create inflation and it is governments that have the power to reduce or eliminate it.

Mr. Kelly: Garbage!

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who interrupts knows very well that it is governments that overprint the money supply in advance of election campaigns in order to be able to give away various goodies and gimmicks in an effort to coerce and mislead the voter. It is governments that subsequently raise taxes in a malicious and devious way, in total violation of their election promises.

I might single out this government in particular. It said it was going to hold the increase in the excise tax on gasoline to less than 14 cents per gallon. It is governments that allow the continuation of high interest rates, that borrow heavily and incur massive deficits to the extent that the financial requirements of the private sector cannot be raised. It is governments that create more and more Crown corporations and more and more means of intervention to frustrate, restrain and ultimately eliminate the private, competitive economy.

I am sorry that the hon. member for Dollard has left the chamber, Mr. Speaker. I think he should realize that if we in opposition sometimes appear negative—after all, it is our role to provide constructive criticism—it is because we do not always agree with the initiatives the government is taking. We most particularly do not agree with the suggestion that there is only one way to solve the problems confronting our economy and that that is the way of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance. Apparently it is to be six and five or we all go down together, and then we will be faced with controls, as the Prime Minister has threatened.

The suggestion of the hon. member for Dollard that anyone who speaks against the government's legislative program is taking a negative and pessimistic view is repulsive to members of the opposition. Some of us may feel that certain initiatives in Bill C-124 and in the budget are positive and good for the country. Yet, we are entitled to stand in this House and speak negatively or creatively to use a better word, about measures proposed by the government or about the lack of measures that we believe should be taken to deal with the current economic plight of the country. We agree that inflation is a serious problem for Canadians and that negative attitudes are bad. Incompetent leadership is worse, however, and that is what has brought this country to its economic knees.

The measures contained in Bill C-124 which would ensure that salary demands within the public service are limited to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year are, I believe, a small step in the right direction. They are certainly not fair and equitable in that they show no selectivity in terms of eliminating the wasteful practices of the government; nonetheless, they are a small step in the right direction. However, they assume that every clerk, every employee, every deputy minister who receives this 6 per cent restriction is equally important to the goals of our nation and that, rather than eliminate the waste and inefficiency that exist in government, we should all equally pay the price. Although this is a small step in the right direction, it avoids the crucial and central reasons for our economic dilemma.

It is all well and good to bring in the 6 per cent and 5 per cent limits which in the projections for the fiscal year 1982-83 will save the government some $500 million, or an average of $1,000 for every public servant. Yet, in itself, $500 million is a very small amount when compared to the gross national product of the country which, even in a state of decline, is $300 billion. Because of the policies of the government and its inability to manage the economy, a 2 per cent decline in the gross national product is predicted for the coming fiscal year. That means a $6 billion decline in our net economic output. Will that be overcome by restraining increases in public service salaries by $500 million? The serious structural problems in our economy will cost the country over $6 billion in lost potential, just to maintain the same gross national product as last year. That is 12 times the savings in salaries expected as a result of this bill.

This bill and its parent, the budget of June 28, does not come to grips with the problem of a $6 billion decline in the gross national product. Even if the bill might be seen as a small step in the right direction, the savings will amount to but a pittance. It will not help us or the health of our ailing economy, nor create the jobs that are so desperately needed. Furthermore, it will not ensure that there will be equity for public service employees. Some people may be entitled to an increase higher than 6 per cent, but there are others whose salaries could justifiably be cut, including cabinet ministers whose salaries, I submit, should be cut to $1.

The budget of June 28 is based on economic intervention and redistribution of income by actions of the federal government. Instead of creating new wealth for all and placing emphasis on productive economics and finding ways to unburden the private sector, it is based upon redistribution, upon pessimism and upon a lowering of our expectations. This is the most bountiful nation in the world but we are not realizing our potential.

Many commentators on the budget, including the well-known columnist Mr. Don McGillivray, have said that we will not solve the problems of the economy by raising taxes once again. In spite of the $20 billion deficit and the dangerous implications of this for the country, we cannot continue to expect to raise taxes as a means of pulling Canada out of this difficult dilemma. Taxes are only a measure of the production of the country. If productivity is not increased, if the gross national product is not increased, if the return on an hour's labour is not increased, then we have no hope of solving our economic problems.

If we cannot encourage people to work harder and engage in more entrepreneurial enterprises, the gross national product and the tax flow to government will not be increased. The budget of November 12 increased taxes massively by $10 billion to $12 billion through several concealed devices. Through its deindexing provisions, the budget of June 28 raised the taxes paid by an average couple with two children and an income of roughly $25,000 per year by $1,000 over and above any inflationary increment.

Once again the government, which should have realized the errors of its ways from the damage caused by the budget of November 12, has brought in another budget which raises taxes. In raising taxes by more than the inflationary increment, it has the gall to tell Canadians, particularly public servants, that their incomes have to be restrained to something less than the inflationary increment. There is something seriously wrong, Mr. Speaker, in a government which approaches the problems of this nation in that way. This program, and the budget which encompasses it, creates more work for bureaucrats, creates more programs, and expands the centre of gravity here in Ottawa. To you, Mr. Speaker, that may be a welcome initiative, but to many of us representing other parts of Canada it is at the heart of our national dilemma.

The budget shows no understanding of the remedies needed for the fundamental structural problems plaguing our industrial and primary resource sectors. The government is preoccupied with cutting 5 per cent or 6 per cent from government payrolls and creating a bunch of new programs which will keep a lot more bureaucrats running around like squirrels, receiving applications, judging them, weighing them and comparing them with income tax records and StatsCan statistics. Then, after a panel sits in judgment on every application, perhaps there will be a decision made. All that does is delay things, Mr. Speaker, and add to the inefficiency of this government.

There is no mention, Mr. Speaker, in these current economic initiatives of the collapse of Alsands and what might have caused it. They do not mention that we would have had 30,000 more jobs in this country today had the Minister of Finance opposite and his NDP colleagues not brought down the Clark government in December, 1979. There is no mention of the cancellation of the Cold Lake project and the Alaska gas pipeline, or the decline of our manufacturing industries and productivity as measured by every index, as has been cited over and over again in this House.

We in this party, Mr. Speaker, want to see a positive attitude restored to Canadians. We want to see confidence restored in the decisions which affect the development of our economy. But we cannot see that happening as long as the government persists in wrong-headed initiatives. These show how incompetent the government is. It is unable to understand that our economy was built and is based on, and has thrived for more than a century because of, the business and private sectors.

I for one, Mr. Speaker, would be happy to stand up in this House and commend the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, or anyone else who would get up and say yes, maybe we made a few mistakes. Maybe some opposition members have been saying the right things for the last two years. Maybe they are not all just a bunch of screaming radicals from Newfoundland, western Canada or the western Arctic. Maybe they do know something about the way the people out there feel about the values, initiatives and talents which can be brought to bear in resolving our national economic dilemma. But, Mr. Speaker, we do not hear that from members opposite. We certainly do not hear it from the Prime Minister, who admonishes us for not getting on to the six and five bandwagon. Well, I for one will be part of that bandwagon inasmuch as most Members of Parliament feel they are worth every dollar they earn around this place. But I would be much happier about it if this government had the competence and the courtesy to recognize that other people know something about economics and the dilemma that faces our nation.

We should be taking positive export-oriented initiatives, Mr. Speaker, instead of finding more gimmicky programs to redistribute the existing and ever-diminishing pool of wealth. The population is not diminishing, so why are we taking a protectionist position in terms of world economics and trade? Why are we cutting ourselves off from world markets while at the same time borrowing ourselves ever further into debt and obligations to lenders in the U.S. and elsewhere? If we are to believe, as the Prime Minister tells us, that all industrialized nations are in trouble, who are these lenders who are doing so well? Who is profiting because of our ignorance, Mr. Speaker? I think many of us in this House know.

A country, just like an individual, must produce more than it consumes if it is ever to support growth, prosperity and an optimistic outlook on the future. The country must produce more than it consumes and earn more than it spends, and that means we just cannot isolate ourselves from the world, as this government will eventually lead us to do when it brings in foreign exchange controls with the support of the NDP. We cannot afford to take that kind of small-minded outlook when we have more resources per capital than any other nation in the world. We have more natural and human talents than any other country in the world, but we are frittering them away because of an incompetent understanding of the way the country works.

The deficit is of severe concern to every Canadian, Mr. Speaker. When I was home shortly after the finance minister brought in his budgetary statement and announced that next year the deficit would be up from $10 billion to $20 billion, every person who approached me said: "$20 billion! They must be out of their minds. Our kids are going to have to pay for that. If we are spending that money to stimulate growth for a successful economy, why is it not developing that way? There must be something wrong in Ottawa."

The second thing they told me, Mr. Speaker, was to go back to Ottawa and find a way, one way or another, to get rid of the government. Members opposite know that because once in a while they do go home to their ridings. They know that every one of their seats is in a very precarious position at this point, along with their indexed pensions and everything else. They know that as soon as the people get the chance they are going to throw them out. If they cannot do it by parliamentary means, Mr. Speaker—and this frightens me—they may resort to other tactics. It frightens me because of the implications for my family, my friends and my community. I see signs of violence in the initiatives reflected in Bill C-124 which, in order to avert a labour shutdown in the public service, brings in a measure which abolishes the right to strike. That is the measure of the government's lack of confidence in its ability to convince Canadians of the rightness of its policies.

If the government is so right, why can it not convince the people of Canada? The best way to do that would be to call a general election and let the people decide. Oh, hon. members laugh! They know what the consequences would be. They know that three-quarters of them would lose their seats. If the people were allowed to be the judge, they would throw them all out.

An hon. Member: So simple.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been listening he would realize the problem is not so simple.

An hon. Member: You are so simple.

Mr. Siddon: It is not as simple as six and five. It has a lot to do with the fundamental mismanagement of our economy and a misunderstanding of the structural problems which are at the heart of our national economic dilemma.

There has been no clear-cut evidence, Mr. Speaker, in this budget, the previous budget, or in anything else this Prime Minister has done, that he cares about improving the efficiency of government or exercising restraint. It is absolutely unfair for the Government of Canada to ask people, starting with the public service, to restrain their salary expectations and then bring down a budget which has increased government spending 22 per cent over the last budget; to increase taxes far in excess of the rate of inflation, thereby contributing to inflation; or to allow interest rates to run out of control without any positive initiatives except a gimmicky program to hand back $3,000. There are no positive initiatives to eliminate waste in government or make senior public servants accountable. There is no attempt to eliminate the God-awful, foolish and extravagant throw-away programs that this government is so guilty of. I do not need to enumerate the whole list but I do want to give a few examples of why it is that in the future of this country Grit times will be known as hard times.

• (1600)

First is the metric promotion. Already over $60 million has been spent unnecessarily. If we had a healthy, buoyant, expanding economy, maybe we could afford that. But in addition to the $60 million spent on promotion, advertisement, brainwashing and brain-twisting people to accept the government's unwise initiatives, the businesses of Canada have had to incur major expenses to buy new scales and to convert their units of measurement. These businesses have had to go outside of Canada to obtain them because we do not supply the means to do that. It might be great for trade with France, Holland and West Germany, but it does not do Canada one bit of good.

That is the kind of foolish, extravagant and incompetent decision that is at the heart of our national dilemma.

Over $100 million has been spent in government advertising. Almost $1 million a day has been spent plastering our countryside with slogans like "A new Constitution for Canada"; "Working together", and so on. All of that garbage does not turn people on when they see interest rates out of sight and unemployment such that every person knows two or three friends or neighbours who are faced with that spectre.

Next is funding, and guarantees which must be purchased to buy insurance for loans to communist countries. Why are we doing that through the Export Development Corporation and other initiatives? I for one believe we should be encouraging far more trade. But if, for example, we extend an EDC guaranteed loan to build a new copper mine in Bolivia, I want to know what the benefits are to our Canadian engineering consulting community and how many dump trucks will be ordered from the United States and elsewhere to their specification in relation to the salaries generated in Canada. I want to know the impact of that on the world competitive situation. I want to know to what extent we are hamstringing our mining industry by encouraging our consultants with low-interest government guaranteed loans to go and do business and build new mining ventures in other parts of the world.

We are arguing vigorously at the United Nations through the Law of the Sea that we want to ensure adequate controls so that Canada's nickel mining industry is not adversely impacted by the drive to get on with seabed mining. We want to protect our Canadian mining industry, but while doing that, we are going about assisting and encouraging Canadian companies who want to open new mines in Bolivia, South America, Central Africa or wherever. I am in favour of that if someone would put the sums down on a piece of paper and come clean with the people of Canada, telling them how many jobs will be lost in return for the few hundreds of thousands of dollars in revenue earned by consulting firms.

There is something that has bothered me for a long time, and I am glad to see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is in the House because the matter concerns her jurisdiction. I have a large family. I do not need to mention how many children I have, but my wife and I need the income we enjoy and we have always benefited by the family allowance. But I cannot understand why the government has not had the political courage to streamline the program of child tax benefits and spousal taxation on income received from family allowances. My wife receives family allowance cheques every month because we have children. I pay income tax on those moneys and then I have to declare child exemptions on my income tax. My wife has to file an application for child tax credits, which means filling out an income tax return.

That involves several different offices, several different bureaucrats, several different addresses and several pieces of paper. This costs the people of Canada an unnecessarily large amount of money. It is absolutely ridiculous that this government has not had the political courage to sort that situation out. It could be done by one annual tax credit payable to one or other spouse. This would not proliferate and multiply the number of income tax returns for wives or husbands who do not work. But why did we encourage the virtual doubling—at least a 30 per cent increase—in the filling of income tax returns in the way the child tax credit was implemented?

It would have been far better if this government had had the smarts, the intelligence and the political will to rearrange the whole system so that one taxpayer could file for a tax credit for his or her children. You could get rid of the family allowance system, if necessary, which could be replaced with the equivalent or increased benefits to the parents of families. This could well be afforded because a huge amount of waste could be eliminated. We have taxpayers' money not going to the good of those who need it; it is going to support government bureaucrats who have a summer cottage in the Gatineau and a winter home in Florida. These people have indexed pensions and are anxious as heck to pass the age of 55 so they can retire early and go down to Florida in the winter and live in their cottage in the summer. That is where that money is going, instead of going to the parents, the children, the handicapped, the old age pensioners, the widows and the war veterans who are the ones who should be getting it.

This government lacks the political courage to restructure our whole social welfare system. This government should get rid of waste and inefficiency. This government does not have the courage to do that. I know members on all sides who are a little skeptical about family allowance. I do not say abolish it; I say supplement it. But let us extend it in a way that eliminates all the unnecessary waste and overlap in the present system. This government does not have the resolve to do that.

I am talking about real measures of restraint which would have a substantial impact on the budgetary deficit of this country, not about $500 million cut by restraining public servants universally to a 6 per cent salary increase. They will still be able to look forward to having homes in Florida, their winter and summer trips. But that does not solve the problem of the guys in my riding whose businesses are collapsing. Nor does it solve the problems of those people in Port Alberni who do not have jobs in the pulp mill, or those unemployed in the mining industry in Labrador, Sudbury and Trail. Their jobs are gone for the summer and probably until next winter. This does not solve their problems one iota. Where are the guts, the political courage, that could bring about a real solution to this disastrous situation in Canada?

Canada is going to build a new embassy in Washington. That might be great. It is like the desire to have a new airport terminal that many people would like to see here in Ottawa. That may be desirable, but why do we not solve our economic problems first? Why is that embassy not put on hold? Why do we not send Arthur Erickson back to Vancouver? Pay him off if we have to, but stop the embassy, Mr. Speaker.

I know what I am going to speak about next is a little sensitive here in Ottawa, but I understand the Prime Minister has promised $500 million to $800 million to build a new art gallery and a new national museum here. I like to entertain people in Ottawa. It is the greatest city in the world other than Vancouver, and Richmond, from where I come. There are a lot of museums to see in Ottawa. People who come here have an awfully good time. Maybe they need something to look forward to in ten years' time when they come back. But right now this country cannot afford a national art gallery and a new museum when people out in my part of the country are hungry and are losing their homes.

Where is the courage to eliminate or delay those decisions? The government knows that it cannot delay these things because its members know they will not be in office for a long time after the next election. This government is playing for votes with the arts and the cultural community in this country, and that is wrong.

Next let me mention travel allowances for government employees and members. We all enjoy 52 trips a year. I think it is important that members be allowed to go home to their ridings. If you wanted to cut out some of the wasteful government spending, Mr. Speaker, maybe you could save a lot more than is being saved by restraining salaries by reducing the frequency of members' trips to their ridings. I think the Canadian people would understand that, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian people expect us to be here in Ottawa sorting out this horrendous problem. It is not just the $20 billion debt this year which means that every Canadian citizen has another $1,000 debt in their pocket. It is another $4,000 per capita because the gross public debt of the Government of Canada is $100 billion.

Why does this government not continue to sit in Ottawa? We do not have to go home quite as often. We still have our telephone privileges. We still have radio, television and newspapers. Why do we not take some of those kinds of initiatives I have mentioned? Where is the positive enthusiasm on the other side for them? I think some Liberal members would be happier staying in Ottawa these days than going home.

What about travel allowances for deputy ministers and senior bureaucrats who flit around the world? These have been mentioned by some of my colleagues. These people stay only at the best places and eat the best meals, and they travel first class if they are above a certain rank. Where are the guts to resolve that kind of waste?

I have another small example. The post office in Vancouver has had a customer service office for many years where people went in to get help with their mail. Gosh knows, they needed a lot of help! Now they have some ambitious young person with a cushy government position; she is friendly with the—well, I will not say more. But for some reason the customer service area in the Vancouver post office is undergoing a major transformation. Over $150,000 will be spent on new draperies and carpets to change that area into an employment centre.

People need to be employed in the country but not by the post office. We are told that the volume of mail has diminished considerably since the 30-cent stamp was introduced. We are now hearing, as we did in the House today, that the stamp price might be increased to 33 cents or 35 cents, but probably in excess of 6 per cent. This is so that they can have new draperies, and carpets to boot, in the new employment centre in the Vancouver post office. Whoever made that foolish decision ought to be fired. Canadians cannot afford such extravagance at a time when there are hungry, hurting and unemployed people across the country.

Now let me turn to the area of government printing. I am fully sympathetic to the objectives and the implementation of the Official Languages Act. I think we could print every government document in both official languages and serve the needs of all Canadians in all parts of the country by having those documents available in either English or French. For the life of me, I cannot understand why we publish everything in both official languages in one volume, as in the case of documents which members receive in their offices. Usually they are back to front and we have to flip them upside down or turn them around.

I would be happier to pick the English or French version off the rack. This wastes high quality, polished Canadian bond paper which is an export product. We are burning it. Half the pages in everything we receive are read, and I doubt whether members even read 10 per cent of what they receive. Half of those pages are wasted; they are absolutely unnecessary. I have many constituents who have now adopted the practice of sending those documents back to me to send on to the minister. These are elected officials in my own riding. They cannot stand the sight of that absolutely unnecessary waste.

When we have the printing press and the typeset to print in either English or French, we could make documents half as thick. We could print many less copies because we would need approximately half as many copies to serve the same number of people. This is just another example of the foolish extravagance which the government does not have the courage or intelligence to confront.

Turning to the area of new cars for cabinet ministers, let me indicate that they ride around pretty comfortably. I do not envy them; I know they have many pressures on them and their lives, but why do they need new cars every year? Why are we not exporting cars? If we were building cars for export, we would not become involved in the type of mess in which we became involved with Iraq. We should really build cars for export the way the Japanese do; but no, we build cars for cabinet ministers because taxpayers like to see them ride around in comfort and style! Why does the government not cut the budget for the motor car allowances of ministers? I did not see such a provision in either of the last two budgets.

When I drive around Ottawa at night I see those glorious buildings across the river in Hull all lit up. All the lights are on, and there are probably a few on Parliament Hill as well. Why? Some people will say that hydro power is cheap and that Quebec provides it, but the Government of Canada and ultimately the people pay the bill for all those lights. We have a crisis in the country but the burning of lights and the setting off of fireworks does not give a stranger visiting the country any notion that we have a serious financial problem. However, we know we have a problem and the government ought to have the courage to rectify that situation by turning out the lights every night. Some people say that those lights are on time clocks. Well, where the heck are the people who used to pull the switches? That is the problem; everything is on a time clock and no one really puts oneself out to help the country out of its national dilemma. Ultimately and finally that charge has to be registered with hon. members opposite, because they have the power of the vote in the House and the authority to make such changes, but they do not have the political will to do so.

Why are we purchasing new Challenger jets for cabinet ministers to flit around the country with their friends? I rode in one of those a time or two and I noticed there were often quite a few ministerial aides and others riding along. They were treated pretty well. Now we will have more ministerial aides, more deputy ministers, more senators and others flying around in nice new Challenger jets. They were supposed to have been a product to make money for Canada. Let us export them, if they are any good at all, and make money for Canadians.

I was offended about a week or so after the new Constitution was proclaimed to see a man come down the hall outside my office and unload huge packages of junk; a nice fancy display kit which someone, who obtained the government contract, prepared to display all the fancy paraphernalia and printed material to proclaim the grandeur of the great constitutional coup of the Prime Minister. Why are Canadians being asked to pay for that and all other paraphernalia which we can ill afford at this particular time in our history?

Also there are flags and the pins. I like to give people little lapel pins, as we all do, at parades and on sports days, but right now we cannot afford them. It does not make a cent for Canadians. I am concerned about national pride, but I think Canadians would be more proud of their country if it were economically healthy and people were working. I do not think we need those fancy little desk flags with screw-in bases which are all packaged up in nice red and white boxes, most of which contain hot air. They are shipped out in rail cars to western Canada, for example to my constituency office. They are shipped in huge boxes which take up three-quarters of my office space. Why were those flags not neatly rolled up around little round sticks, with the bases in plastic bags, and shipped out that way? The reason is that the incompetent government has no understanding of value and value for money; it decreed that they should go out in those nice little red and white cardboard boxes. By the way, we do not need the boxes. They are manufactured from a lot of nice Canadian newsprint, pulp and paper from my province, which is being thrown away foolishly.

There are countless examples of waste in which the government could save money. We do not need bilingual games and records to encourage physical fitness, nor do we need maps issued by the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) at a time when we are faced with a serious economic dilemma. Of course, all these things are given away free.

I know I have to support this bill because we all have to show the resolve to bring about restraint, but I have only indicated one aspect of a much more severe problem. It might save the government $500 million. It does not make a dent in the $20 billion deficit, and it does not do anything about the $6 billion decline in our gross national product year over year from last year. Fundamentally I am irritated the most when government members stand and claim with such hypocrisy in the House that anyone who does not go along with them is negative, paranoid and pessimistic. I would be prepared to accept those allegations being part of the problem if hon. members opposite would also stand up and admit that they are part of the problem.

We have had the November budget of the Minister of Finance, the National Energy Program and 500 Crown corporations. These things are all part of the national problem. Also there is the foolish, extravagant waste on many unnecessary frills at this very grave time in our national history. These are really at the heart of our national dilemma.

I expect the government to take the lead. I hear it will raise the parking fees at Vancouver International Airport by 50 per cent this year. I think that would be foolish. I expect the price at Petro-Canada pumps will rise far in excess of the rate of inflation; I think that is wrong. Government must show its commitment to restraint.

I will resume my seat momentarily, but is it fair to ask public service employees and the workers of Canada to exercise restraint while the government allows continual increases in personal income taxes which destabilize and contribute negatively to our economic growth? It allows increases in income tax, in energy taxes, in interest rates and in user charges for government services. This cannot go on.

In conclusion, I must say that if the government does not wake up and listen to the message from Canadians, if the government does not stop painting everyone else as villains but looks at itself in the mirror, the people of Canada will rise up and throw the Liberal Party out of office for so long that we will not know what was the Liberal Party.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-124 is the most immoral and divisive bill which I have witnessed since being elected to the House in 1979. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) presented what he called a solidarity budget. Bill C-124 is the reverse of solidarity. This bill will victimize one group of workers in Canada, those in the public service, by imposing wage controls, by prohibiting collective bargaining, by denying the right to strike as last resort, and by denying constitutional rights to women workers.

The misnamed solidarity budget cut back cost of living increases for pensioners, and for families receiving family allowances. Under Bill C-124, the government will bring in wage controls and cut back wage increases to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year for public service employees. Of course, as we know, the budget did nothing to control profits or to control prices. It offered no economic policies to deal with the causes of inflation or to increase consumerism, productivity and permanent jobs, not just temporary, make-work kinds of projects.

Bill C-124 mocks the very principle of solidarity as people know it in the honoured labour movement. The only solidarity that exists, as far as I can see, is the solidarity between the Tories and the Liberals, all of whom are in favour of wage controls. We will fight this bill just as long as possible. We will continue to oppose it in co-operation with the labour movement in Canada.

My colleagues have covered many of the general criticisms we have concerning Bill C-124. In the time allotted to me, I would like to summarize some of these points and then concentrate primarily on Bill C-124 as it affects women workers in the public sector and, of course, as it affects women workers across Canada.

There are a number of myths which the government and its allies in the private sector have promoted concerning workers' wages and public servants. First of all, Bill C-124 is based on the false premise that controlling wages will reduce inflation. This point was proven to be fallacious in the past. Wage controls under the Anti-Inflation Board did not reduce inflation. During the four years of wage controls, wages were reduced from 20 per cent to 7 per cent while inflation went down only about 1 per cent during that four-year period. This proves that controlling wages will not have a significant impact on inflation, yet the government for some strange reason is determined to play games on the backs of public service employees.

Second, the government introduced no policies to counteract the causes of inflation, no industrial strategy, no price controls, no controls on profits and no reduction of interest rates. This is the main inflationary policy which makes it so difficult for workers to survive. Instead, the government has once again used workers as scapegoats. As a build-up to this situation, both the Liberals and the Tories, as well as the capitalists in our society, have been promoting political propaganda. There has been a deliberate campaign to mislead the public, to encourage people to think that wage controls are a solution and that it is the civil servants who cause inflation.

The worst aspect of Bill C-124 is that it takes away collective bargaining rights, bargaining rights which we were assured by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), I might say, would be retained and guaranteed under the Constitution. Since he is here today, I would like to refer him back to the proceedings of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, issue 43, page 69, wherein the Solicitor General stated:

> Our position on the suggestion that there be a specific reference to freedom to organize and bargain collectively is that it is already covered in the freedom of association that is provided already in the declaration or in the charter.

The Solicitor General was apparently on weak ground since his own government is now ignoring the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the freedom of association provision. In effect, it is taking away all collective bargaining rights from public servants for a period of at least two years.

Another myth which has been promoted is that public service wage increases are higher than those in the private sector. Here again, the facts show that public service wages have consistently been lower than those in the private sector. In 1978, private sector wages increased by 7.7 per cent while public service wages increased by only 6.7 per cent. During the first quarter of this year, private sector wages increased by 12.3 per cent and public service wages increased by 11.5 per cent. Public service wages, then, have lagged behind those in the private sector, yet this is the sector which the government has chosen for wage controls. Of course, these wage controls in the public sector are just the first target, which the government hopes will be expanded to include all Canadian workers.

The fifth myth is that wage increases have been higher than inflation. Here again, if we look at the facts we learn that not once has the percentage of wage increases in the public service been equal to the consumer price index. It is, then, apparent that wage increases, which have been won only after very hard bargaining on the part of public service unions, have been a response to inflation. They have not been the cause of it. They have been a method by which public service workers and workers throughout the country have tried to survive so that they could raise their families, pay for their groceries and live in times when the cost of living is so high. As I said earlier, the government must get at the causes rather than penalizing the victims of inflation. But of course, we know from history that it will not do it.

Finally, Bill C-124 is a bullying bill, brought in by a bullying government. The government has picked on pensioners and families in its budget, and now it is picking on workers under Bill C-124. This comes at the very time, of course, when negotiations in the public service sector are crucial, because the next two years will be the years when high technological change will be greatly increased and the impact on public employees will be very great, particularly on women employees. Instead of analysing the causes and developing positive solutions, the government again projects the blame on a scapegoat. I want to point out that psychiatrists describe this kind of sickness as a "projection mechanism", putting the blame on someone else instead of facing and trying to solve one's own problems. Therefore, it is typical of the government, a sick government, to use a sick syndrome, typical of a very sick situation which it has created itself and with which it cannot cope.

I now want to focus on Bill C-124 as it affects women workers in the public service in particular. We believe that the hardest impact will be felt by women because they are the lowest wage earners in the public service. On July 6 I questioned the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) in the House, stating that the lowest wage earners are women and that they will therefore be the hardest hit by the government's wage controls. Many single parents need increases in order to put food on the table. As hon. members will recall, the minister responded by saying: "Our intention is to bring inflation down to 6 per cent"—he was quoting the Prime Minister—"in which case no one will suffer."

Well, is that not a nice platitude? We all know that he is dreaming because past experience shows that wage controls will not have any appreciable impact on inflation. Therefore, workers, particularly women workers with very low rates of pay, will receive an increase of 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. Women workers in the public service who are ghettoized in the lowest paid secretarial and service-type jobs will have their wage increases slashed by about 50 per cent over the next year. A Public Service Commission report entitled "Women in the Canadian Public Service, 1980", states that, compared to the total population in the public service, women are unrepresented in all occupational categories except the administrative support group, a category in which the lowest paid occupations are found. This means that 70 per cent of public service jobs paying $10,000 and under are held by women. Some of these female public servants earn under $5 an hour. Many of them are trying to raise a family on their own. Either there is no other wage earner in the household, or perhaps the other partner is unemployed. Therefore, they are living at the poverty level. These are employees of the people of Canada. These are the workers whom the government, through this bill, will cut back even further with wage increases of 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent the year after.

Let us look at some of the figures. Of approximately 268,000 public servants, 35.6 per cent are women. Sixty per cent of those women workers are in teaching, nursing, clerical and secretarial occupations, hardly the kind of occupation that pays a luxury salary. Women represent 54 per cent of employees earning under $18,000. Only 12.4 per cent of all employees earn over $22,000. Most women workers earn far below the average income in the public service.

I now want to talk about the clerks. There are 50,000 clerks in the public service. Most are women employees. Many face job loss as a result of technological change. The average wage for a typist last year was $11,000. Many of these are single parents trying to raise a family on their own. They face increasingly high costs.

The situation is similar in the provincial public sector. I recently read an article about a male clerk in the province of Quebec who, after calculating his income and family costs, said that he would have more take-home pay if he were on welfare compared to his wages in the provincial public service. Last night the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) gave a number of examples of women he had talked to in skilled, service-oriented jobs who are in desperate financial straits. Let us not kid ourselves: we are not talking about high-priced executives, Members of Parliament and judges when we talk of the impact of this bill. We are talking about 50,000 female clerks who simply cannot stretch their pay cheques. It is a myth that the majority of public servants are overpaid.

I now want to deal with what has happened to clerks in recent years. In 1980 the CRs in the public service, mostly female clerks, organized and negotiated. After not having been able to negotiate wage increases that they desperately needed and deserved, for the first time in their history they went on strike for better wages. It was a first. It took a hell of a lot of guts for women workers who had no experience with that kind of activity. They picketed for several weeks, negotiated and eventually won.

That was not easy. It is not easy for workers at the low end of the pay scale, who are insecure about their jobs and have families to support, to go out on strike. That was the last thing they wanted to do. Finally, they realized it was the only way they were going to be recognized in order to negotiate for salaries that would begin to bring them up to the levels they deserved. I congratulate those public service workers and their brothers and sisters in the labour movement who supported them.

As a result of that strike action, public service clerical workers won a 16 per cent settlement, bringing some of their salaries to $10,000 or $11,000. However, that settlement was for last year. This year they are due for a 12.5 per cent settlement. It was promised to them by Treasury Board, with the President of the Treasury Board kicking and screaming all the way to the bank. The same man who is bringing in this bill has consistently opposed progressive policies that would benefit female employees.

What will happen now? Their employer, the head of the Treasury Board, has betrayed them. They bargained in good faith and won. Under Bill C-124, these rights and promises will be taken away from them. Instead of the 12.5 per cent raise which was negotiated and which they were promised for next fall, they will get only 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent the year after. They are going backward instead of forward in that category of jobs where workers are grossly underpaid.

Bill C-124 is an outright attack by the Liberal government on labour, especially low-paid women workers. It is a deliberate attack on these 50,000 clerks who fought so hard to get a decent wage. It is a union-breaking tactic that this government is bringing in designed to undermine organized labour, collective bargaining and the right to strike, which is so essential as a last resort, as I illustrated, for workers such as these female clerks. Those rights are gone for two years.

Coming back to the cost of living, we hear the argument that costs will be down to 6 per cent and everything will be rosy. Workers will get a 6 per cent increase next fall. They will be able to cover everything as though there was no change or reduction in their pay increase. I wonder how many Liberals have gone shopping lately. I wonder how many are paying off mortgages. Today we heard the minister responsible for Canada Housing and Mortgage Corporation again trying to present his wishful thinking as government policy. We know that mortgage renewals are costing many workers 65 per cent of their wages, especially those with a one-year renewal contract. The last policy brought in gives no benefit to these workers.

Rents are going up. I will be very surprised if anything is done to reduce them by next fall. When a woman goes to the grocery store, she finds that food prices are up 9 per cent. General Foods will not bring down the price of groceries by next fall. Even though the government is trying to penalize farmers and fishermen by controlling their income, transportation costs and home heating costs are going up. They have been going up continuously. Energy costs will rise by 24 per cent as a result of deliberate government policy.

There is little money left in the family cheque for child care. Of course, working parents cannot deduct the cost of child care for income tax purposes. Obviously there is little money left for clothing. There is no money left for holidays for the woman worker struggling to raise her family. Bill C-124 will reduce wages by 6 per cent, bringing the wages of women even lower. They are already the lowest paid employees in the public service, and most will remain in those ghettos.

The next concern about this bill as it affects women workers in the public service—and this is an example of workers in all sectors of the economy—is the whole question of affirmative action rights, the right to equal job oportunities in the public service for men and women. Affirmative action will not be negotiated under Bill C-124. This is a very serious aspect of this bill. At first, people may not think so. However, I hope that members will think about it very seriously. It will restrict the chance for women to have equal jobs in the public service and equal rates of pay at the very time when an increasing number of women are being, or are about to be, laid off because of technological change.

Let us not kid ourselves: there are changes in every public department in practically every office which has anything to do with government services. In those offices, of course, are the women workers who will be laid off or through attrition are not being replaced. So it is most important that there be very firm affirmative action policies in place so that the jobs that are here are equally shared and together men and women can work for protection for workers in a positive way to counteract the negative effects of technological change.

In my question to the minister on July 6, I accused the President of the Treasury Board of denying women workers the right to bargain for affirmative action. I do not think he really heard or chose to hear the question; certainly he avoided answering it. Undoubtedly he is embarrassed by the very disgraceful record of this government on affirmative action.

It was the Treasury Board and, of course, the President of the Treasury Board who were supposed to be providing the leadership to establish a whole new progressive policy of affirmative action. You will recall that they started in three public departments, one of them being Treasury Board. They started a study and were going to implement changes that would be a model for all of Canada. Mr. Speaker, nothing whatsoever has happened. We have studies. We have had studies before. We know what few jobs in the higher paid category there are for women, but nothing is being done about it. Under Bill C-124 there will be no collective bargaining, so workers and unions will have no chance. They will be prohibited from negotiating strongly for this very essential policy that we must have in the public service.

Let us look at all the facts concerning women in public service fields of employment. An excellent article appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on July 9. I recommend it to all hon. members. The article quoted the Public Service Commission Annual Report. It stated that only 4.3 per cent of public service executives, the top-ranking employees, are women. Only 4.3 per cent after all these years. Also, there are very few women in middle-management positions. Only 3.1 per cent of those earning over $50,000 are women. This represents an actual decrease over the past year, not an increase under affirmative action but a decrease. There has been almost no change in the position of women in the higher paid jobs in the public service from the 1970s, despite the many competent and experienced women who are in the public service and who should have opportunities for advancement.

According to Bonnie Carroll, who is from the Public Service Alliance, the equal opportunities program has not gone far enough. As a matter of fact, she says, it has not even gone anywhere. There is no teeth in it. There has been a rather polite program. She stated that in effect there has been no improvement in equal opportunities for women in the public service field.

This is really a very sad commentary, Mr. Speaker, on a government which has heard from so many women's groups, and from men as well, across the country who fought for equal rights in the Constitution. There were women who came back a second time to have Section 28 reinstated so that the provinces and the federal government could not override Section 15. It is a very sad commentary for ministers and leading departments who gave lip service to affirmative action and said that it must be compulsory.

Time and time again on this side of the House—at least, in this party, not in the party to our right—we have questioned those same ministers about affirmative action and asked what they were going to do to make it compulsory. The only way to ensure equal rights for women in the workplace is really to have mandatory affirmative action. At first there were three members who stood up, including the minister responsible for the status of women, and said: "We are all for mandatory affirmative action; we need it in the public service departments themselves and in government departments and we also need it in private sectors."

We pushed them on this and asked: "Every time you give out a government contract, why cannot you require affirmative action as part of the deal you have with the private sector, who are getting these jobs and getting paid by government?" However, how long did they stand up and really try to fight for mandatory affirmative action? No time at all. Very quickly after cabinet ministers had laid down the law—and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) undoubtedly—the minister responsible for the status of women was saying: "We really cannot do this right now; we cannot be too tough on the private employees, we have to wait for this two or three-year study in the public departments, so we really cannot get on with affirmative action."

Therefore, it is not really surprising that this government, supported by the official opposition to my right, has brought in Bill C-124. It will protect the regressive status quo for women workers. It will prevent unions from bargaining aggressively for affirmative action to give women an equal place in the federal work force.

What about equal pay for work of equal value? I mentioned this in the House the other day, and the government side responded, obviously concerned about this, the day after. This is a major right which is threatened by Bill C-124. I have already documented the low wages which are paid to most women workers in the public service who work in job ghettos. However, not only do women not have an opportunity for advancement, but they are often paid lower wages than those of men working in similar types of jobs.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that last year a very significant battle was won when 3,000 general service workers, most of them female workers, won equal pay for work of equal value under the provisions of the Canada Human Rights Act. This was a very historic decision. The President of the Treasury Board, the instigator of this bill we are debating today, after first refusing to comply with the decision of the Human Rights Commission, was eventually forced to pay out $17 million in back pay to these service workers. Many of them were workers in cafeterias and in maintenance jobs. They had been paid some $2,000 to $3,000 less than male workers in similar categories. Female librarians also last year fought and won their case for pay equal to male librarians.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, there is a very important case before the Human Rights Commission, which we hope will rule in favour of hospital workers. Many hospital workers are female workers, of course, and are on very low rates of pay. There is very serious concern that under Bill C-124, Clause 8, this whole case before the Human Rights Commission, which is an equal pay for work of equal value case, will be endangered. Clauses 6 and 8 of this bill state that all other government acts can be overruled, so presumably Section 11(1) of the Canadian Human Rights Act itself will be overruled. The government may even override the Constitution, the Charter of Rights, which supposedly protects women against discrimination based on sex.

On July 7 the minister, attempting to clarify my question of the previous day, said that he would move on to enforce this section. Wookie-doo! In view of his past record of broken promises where women's rights are involved, we are very seriously concerned that his word is not good enough. I am sure the women of Canada are concerned, and the National Action Committee on the Status of Women I know are equally concerned.

The minister must withdraw the bill, since it is so harmful to public service workers in many respects. Legal advisers of NAC are also concerned that this bill contravenes the Human Rights Act. Even if the minister amends the bill, the question of the rights of employees in Crown corporations still remains. Crown corporations might very well appeal this measure and have the Human Rights Act provision overruled.

If the minister is serious in his proclamations, he will not just amend this bill but withdraw it in favour of women workers and public service workers generally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: Women are becoming increasingly disenchanted with the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), who happens also to have a secondary portfolio tacked on—her responsibility for the status of women. She is the minister of mines who undermines women. This minister is an all-talk-no-action minister. It is time she realized that charm and PR are simply not enough to advance women's rights in Canada.

I want to put on the record today at least five different incidents. This minister was appointed to work aggressively for the improvement of the status of women in Canada. She has made promises which she has either broken or on which she has refused to act in any meaningful way.

First, there was the whole Constitution debate. The minister reponsible for the status of women said to women who came to her that they should not worry. She did not say "dear," but it almost sounded like that. She told them the government would look after them and that Section 15 is all right. She told them she did not think they needed to worry that the provinces would override equal rights for women. Fortunately, the ad hoc women, who organized and were very expert on this question, realized the minister was wrong and they fought hard to get Section 28 in the Constitution.

Second is the question of pensions. This is the minister who took a very tough stand and promised action on women's pensions within one year. As we all know, this is a very urgently needed reform because pensioners are suffering. Women pensioners in particular are suffering, especially those living alone who in most cases are living below the poverty line. However, it is this particular minister who has supported this budget and this bill which would cut back cost of living indexing for pensioners. This, of course, will hit women pensioners the hardest because they are the poorest group.

Third, the minister promised to rescind Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act, which discriminates against Indian women. Nothing has happened in that regard and, if the minister does not start soon, nothing ever will.

Fourth, the minister came out strongly in favour of mandatory affirmative action and then backed down and said: "We can't do it."

Finally, the minister has said she supports Bill C-124. In fact, in the past she has said that women in the public sector are "doing nicely" compared with women in the private sector. However, figures tell us that women in the public sector are doing exactly the same as, or perhaps even worse than, those in the private sector because they are still in occupationally segregated job ghettos. This is reflected in their pay scales, just as it is in the private sector. This minister has a lot of accounting to do to the women of Canada.

In the time I have left I want to refer to other changes in this bill which will be particularly hard on women workers. Many, many collective bargaining rights will be denied by Bill C-124. Women will be denied the right to negotiate health and safety matters and particularly the whole impact of VDTs and similar kinds of electronic equipment which pose very serious health risks, particularly for women workers. Women workers are faced with spending long hours working at this equipment and in environmental conditions which are quite dangerous and a risk to their health. It is essential, then, that unions on behalf of all workers, and particularly women workers, bargain collectively for safe and healthy working conditions and job security, which is threatened by technological change. This will not be allowed under Bill C-124.

Recently I attended a conference on technological change. The conference was about women and the impact of microtechnology. It was held here in Ottawa on June 25. Women came from all across Canada representing many organizations. At the end of the conference they endorsed a charter of rights to protect workers from the impacts of technological changes. I want to refer to the seven points they endorsed. I feel very strongly about them, and I know my party will feel they should be part of collective agreements with the federal government right now.

The first point is that all technological changes must be negotiated between unions and management. Bill C-124 will not allow that.

Second, employers are responsible to inform workers about all proposed technological changes. Workers and unions must have access to all information about types of change, types of equipment proposed and the likely health effects.

Third, there should be no reduction in the work force because of technological change, and the federal government has a responsibility to protect the jobs of women in particular.

Fourth, employers should be compelled to invest in retraining. The federal government must be planning and retraining workers who will be phased out of their present jobs for new skills and for non-traditional areas of work so that they will have jobs in the future.

Fifth, there must be limits on deskilling. Jobs must be broken down into smaller components.

Sixth, there must be strong health and safety protections.

Seventh—and this is very important for all federal departments—technological changes must be introduced step by step and phased in rather than being instituted all at once, allowing no chance for negotiations and planning on matters which involve workers and their unions.

I urge the federal government to adopt this charter. That is unlikely to happen because we do not believe the minister when he says his voluntary association for employees and members will work out these problems. That is ridiculous. We know the government is the employer and has control. Any employer which would introduce this kind of bill certainly does not have the interests of workers at heart.

Another thing which will not be negotiable is parental leave. Over the past couple of years two public unions have won paid maternity leave for women workers after very tough fights. We know this would not have happened if these women had not had their unions and if they had not been militant about it. Under Bill C-124 parents who want and need time off for the birth of a child and for early parenting will have no union rights to negotiate for this. It is the dark ages again under Trudeau, MacEachen and Johnston. There will be loss of benefits in all areas and there will be no chance for workers to negotiate for these.

Mr. Kelly: There will be no loss of benefits.

Mrs. Mitchell: The crucial time to ensure sound planning for technological changes is right now. We are too late even now, but over the next two years it is crucial. Civil liberties are being endangered as well. People are becoming appendages to machines. The federal government should be leading and demonstrating good work conditions and also showing other communities what kinds of things are needed to humanize our communities and to have progressive planning rather than retrogressive controls.

In conclusion, I just want to say again that Bill C-124 is a retrogressive, tyrannical piece of legislation which cuts workers' pay. Of course, there are no cuts or controls on prices and real inflation. The bill denies workers their rights to collective bargaining. It contravenes the Canadian Human Rights Act. It will further restrict women workers to low-paying job ghettos and, in fact, probably will boot many of them out into the field of unemployment. The bill would prevent positive negotiations and planning for the devastating impact which may come as a result of technological change. The bill is a typical attempt by this government to victimize workers and make them scapegoats in an economic situation the government created but for which it has no solutions. Wage controls and denial of collective bargaining rights will not reduce inflation, we know that. Only a positive economic policy for economic recovery will do this. We will never support Bill C-124. It should not be amended; it should be withdrawn.

MEASURE RESPECTING COMPENSATION IN THE PUBLIC SECTOR OF CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Johnston that Bill C-124, respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, if there is time remaining in the hon. lady's speech, may I ask her if she may have unintentionally misled the House. She stated that as a result of Bill C-124, workers would lose their benefits and many female workers would lose their jobs. May I ask if I heard her make those statements and, if she did make them, if she meant them?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The time of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) expired at 4:59 p.m. It would require the unanimous consent of the House to allow her to answer. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Mitchell: If the hon. member was listening, I think that throughout my remarks I illustrated that women are facing a terrible situation in the public service. They are facing unemployment and will be laid off as a result of technological change. This bill prevents them from bargaining collectively.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks on Bill C-124, which enacts the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act, with a consideration of the basic elements of the legislation. The purpose and effect of Bill C-124 is unfortunately all too clear; it revokes the existing bargaining rights of federal public servants and of employees of federal Crown corporations and agencies. In the case of federal management employees, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Canadian Armed Forces, it repeals the rules that have governed the establishment of pay packages in the recent past. In specific terms, the bill limits pay increases to 6 per cent in the year commencing July 1, 1982, or the first year of an employment contract, and to 5 per cent in the subsequent year.

There are special provisions for Members of Parliament, senators and judges. The only real exception is contained in Clause 13(a), which permits the ordering of a higher wage increase where labour shortages exist. There are transitional provisions which permit special increases of 9 per cent in the case of negotiated contracts. Nonetheless, the substance of Bill C-124 may be easily summarized as a freeze on public employment contracts and a 6 per cent limit on wage increases.

A study of the ongoing effect and ramifications of these legislative provisions would occupy volumes. The real concern of Members of Parliament and the Canadian public ought to be whether this drastic legislative measure can be justified by the economic crisis that confronts Canadians today. That is the question I want to explore and consider in my remarks.

Let me begin by examining the budgetary considerations that prompted this legislation. The claim of the budget introduced on June 28, 1982, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was that it embraced restraints; its message was that we must restrain spending and fight inflation. It was claimed that is the only way to lower interest rates and generate employment. I believe, as do most Canadians, that interest rates and unemployment are the major problems in the country today. The Minister of Finance listed the assistance programs that he had introduced, which consisted of direct aid and income tax benefits, and valued them at $2.3 billion. He immediately announced, however, that this would not affect the over-all restraint policy because he had constructed savings of $3 billion in the budgetary measures.

Those measures were to raise revenue to offset the expenditures the minister proposed. He was going to save $800 million by virtue of the restraint on public service wage increases and $360 million by limiting indexing on expenditure programs. I remind the House that those programs included such things as social services that a great many Canadians find necessary. He was going to save a further $580 million on expenditure reductions and deferrals. The most important thing was that he was going to save $1.3 billion by limiting indexing of personal income taxes. I do not have to repeat that the indexing provision affects every working Canadian. It can be said properly that the minister was going to load these incentive programs and assistance on to the backs of working Canadians to the extent of $3 billion.

Many Canadians were adversely affected by the budget, but today I want to talk about the effect of the budget on public servants. They were asked by the minister to contribute $800 million to his expenditure program so they have a right to ask whether that sacrifice is legitimate in the circumstances. Every public servant has a right to ask this Parliament and this government whether they should be asked to make this sacrifice while other Canadians are not.

This brings me to the real thrust of what the Minister of Finance said was included in his budget. He said there must be solidarity and sharing among Canadians. That was his justification for this assault on the public service—that Canadians must draw together and share the burden produced by the economic plight of the nation. He offered Canadians involved in this sharing program the hope that inflation would be brought down. He invited them to come into the world of 6 per cent.

He made the obligation of the federal public service very clear, but he did not make the other side of the coin so clear. He did not specify what benefit would flow to all Canadians, particularly public servants, from that sacrifice. There is no guarantee that the government is serious about this program of restraint. The minister made it clear that he was going to raise $3 billion. That seems like a great deal of money, Mr. Speaker, but an examination of the last decade shows that it is not so impressive. I could raise that $3 billion very quickly, Mr. Speaker. I could talk about the $600 million debt written off on the St. Lawrence Seaway; I could talk about the $500 million debt written off for the National Harbours Board; I could talk about the $500 million that Canadian National Railways and VIA Rail are losing this year; I could talk about the $500 million lost by Canada Post and Mirabel; I could talk about the $200 million lost on the Consolidated Computer deal; I could talk about the $26 million spent on the purchase of Challenger jets.

I could go on and on because there are so many examples of government extravagance that it would be easy to find enough of them to add up to $3 billion. We could throw in the $5 million that was spent on firecrackers to celebrate July 1 across the nation. As if that is what Canada needs, Mr. Speaker. July 1 has just been renamed by the Liberal government as Canada Day. We need firecrackers to celebrate that like we need holes in the head. But that is another $5 million down the drain.

All this shows that the government is not serious in its talk about restraint. To that we could add the fact that the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) supported the 6 per cent limit on increases in pay for public servants in this House. Then he got on a government jet and went to Halifax at taxpayers' expense, blowing $4,000 in the process on that one trip. By that one act he threw away the sacrifice made by three Members of Parliament who took a pay reduction of approximately $1,700. Do you know why he went back to Halifax? To sit with ten other Liberal Party members and cut a cake. He then flew right back to Ottawa to support restrictive measures on public service wage increases for the next two years. He flew all over this country on July 1 to celebrate what he calls Canada Day, and for every hour in the air the pay cut of another two members went down the drain. All of this sacrifice we are being asked to make in the name of restraint is just blown away.

That is only one example, but I think I have demonstrated very graphically that it is very easy to come up with $3 billion that the government has thrown away. So when federal civil servants come before parliamentary committees and say: "Why us? Why should we carry the burden of government overexpenditure?", they have a very legitimate question which all of us have a tremendous obligation to answer.

I do not have to remind anyone in this House, Mr. Speaker, that we face drastic unemployment in Canada. There are 1.3 million Canadians out of work and actively looking for jobs. Of course, they have the sympathy of Members of Parliament, in fact of all their fellow Canadians, but that is not the end of the line. There are also one million Canadians working part-time, 250,000 who have given up looking for work, and another 250,000 working at jobs well below their qualifications. So we are not talking just about 1.3 million Canadians; we are talking about another 1.5 million Canadians who have employment problems.

With a situation like that, with an inflation rate of 11.8 per cent and a 77-cent dollar, drastic action is required. What should the nature of that drastic action be? I want to consider that question now, particularly in light of the history of the public service.

There are a lot of strange comments in the press and other places about the public service and the attitude they have expressed in the past. I want to read very briefly from a column authored by one Ron Collister which appeared in the Edmonton Journal on July 7. Mr. Collister said that the civil service was imposing a kind of destructive anarchy, and he attributed that to "ego tripping public servants". He said:

> It would, indeed, be nice if Canada had such harmony, and a more visible commitment to the national interest in labour disputes.
> Instead, we have endless strikes which tend to bring the nation to its knees—

A columnist in a newspaper of national status says that the nation has been brought to its knees by strikes, and he attributes that to egotripping public servants. That is an expression of opinion in the extreme. I do not like to see strikes. In fact, I hope that one day we can provide a method whereby labour disputes can be resolved without recourse to the right to strike. But until we reach that point we cannot deny to the labour movement the right to strike in certain circumstances. Mr. Collister is exaggerating in a way that is unfair to organized labour when he says this nation is brought to its knees by the exercise of the right to strike. I want to condemn that kind of comment because it contributes nothing to the national welfare. There have been strikes in the postal service which ought not to have occurred, and those strikes caused misery and hardships for many Canadians; but you cannot say that the nation was brought to its knees by strikes emanating from the public service. I am sure that with the right kind of commitment and right kind of spirit many of these situations can be resolved, but not by outlandish statements like that.

I have another example of a columnist's opinion at the other extreme. Lubor J. Zink, who is not known for his small "1" liberal views, said in The Toronto Sun on July 7, 1982:

> The MacEachen budget, while aggravating the agony of the economy by postponing for a few months the controls PET is going to clamp on, offers an opportunity for shifting the blame and public anger on the unions.

That is what is happening here. The Government of Canada, particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), is trying to shift the blame for some of our economic problems from his own government, ministers and policies to the public service unions. He does not say it directly; he just implies that those people are causing the problems to a great extent and we have to move in and control them.

It is easy to adopt the Prime Minister's attitude. It is very easy to take advantage of the backlash against the public service of Canada because in some cases wage increases have been out of line. In many cases people in the public service are receiving salaries greater than they would in the private sector. But that is not to say that the public service is the author of the economic misfortune we have in Canada. We have to be very careful when we look at legislative measures such as Bill C-124 to try to remedy this situation. We want to be very careful that the prescription is directed at the right patient. We do not want simply to assume that the public service is contributing to inflation and by crushing down on the public service we are going to limit or in any way control inflation. I do not believe that, and I do not think too many members of this House really believe that if we do that, there will be any great changes taking place in Canada.

I can say without any fear of contradiction that what we really have to establish in Canada is a spirit of voluntary restraint. We have to convince Canadians that spending by government has gone too far and has to be limited or our inflation will continue.

However, Mr. Speaker, we do have to convince Canadians first of the correctness of a course of action. We have to ask Canadians to participate voluntarily in applying a remedy, which of course involves limited wage increases. But using legislation to ram it down the throats of Canadians has very small chance of working. In fact, it will work only if Canadians in the public service and the private sector willingly co-operate in what the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) described as a crusade. It is unfortunate that he used the terminology "a crusade". I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, from my reading of history, that no one was conscripted into a crusade. They were asked to volunteer because a crusade, by definition, appealed to those who believed in its purpose. that is what a crusade is, and I cannot point out the error of the government's ways any better than that. The government uses the word "crusade" to apply to a mandatory program of wage controls when the whole purpose of a crusade is to understand it, believe in it, endorse it, and participate voluntarily.

The government has sunk so low that it cannot make that kind of appeal any more. It cannot call in the leaders of the public service and say: "Will you co-operate with us in a crusade for the betterment of Canada and Canadians?" This government has sunk so low and the regard in which the government is held by the public service is at such a level that that kind of rapport cannot take place. That is a shame and that is the shame of this legislation, because Canadians, the Government of Canada and its employees cannot get together to resolve an evident problem. Instead, the problem has to be resolved by force of legislation.

I want to look very briefly at the background of the public service. I have said that there was an idea abroad in Canada that the public service, over a long period of time, has forced its salaries and benefits upward beyond those provided in the private sector. I do not know what the exact scientific comparisons are today, but I can tell you this, that the federal public service won the right to bargain collectively only in 1967. The process has been going on for only 15 years.

The Public Service Staff Relations Act was passed on February 14, 1967. The history of this process is quite recent. Not only that, the Liberal Government of Canada in 1977 through the medium of Bill C-28 and again in 1978 through the medium of Bill C-22 tried to break that collective bargaining process. In 1977 and 1978 we went through a process which was known among those concerned with the process as federal public service bashing.

The provisions of Bill C-28 in 1977 and Bill C-22 in 1978 were designed to provide another method of determining the salaries of federal public servants beyond the collective bargaining process. The device to be used was a pay research board which would determine each public servant's salary and what each class of public servant's salary ought to be. I well remember the outcry and uproar that came from the public servants and their representatives against these two bills. Many of us sat down and talked to them about these provisions and it transpired that there was a tremendous need for consultation in these areas, because the only way to resolve labour difficulties is through a consultative process.

I would have thought that the Liberal Government of Canada, through its experiences in 1977 and 1978 with its amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act, would have learned a lesson. I would have thought that the Liberal government would have learned that the way to get along with the Public Service of Canada is to consult with its representatives, not to present legislative measures and then try to ram them down their throats. That only invites confrontation and opposition. Apparently the Liberal government has not learned that lesson. Apparently the Liberal Government of Canada has not learned anything from its sad performance in past years and from its deteriorating relationships with the Public Service of Canada, because here we are faced with Bill C-124 at a time when all Canadians are agreeable to restraint measures.

Canadians have finally realized, and it took a $20 billion deficit to make them realize, that the federal government is spending too much money, and this is causing problems for all Canadians. It causes problems when Canadians go to the bank to borrow for a new car. It causes problems when home owners' mortgages expire and renewals must be negotiated. This situation is causing problems right across the economy for small-business men, farmers and fishermen. The Government of Canada is in the market borrowing too much money and this is driving interest rates upward. The provincial governments are right there beside the federal government at the same trough. In that situation, what chance has the consumer, the home owner, the small-business man, the farmer or the fisherman to pay the kind of interest rates which this demand on the market creates?

As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians are beginning to get some grasp of these problems and are realizing that there is a solution to them. It may well be that, properly approached, not only public servants but all those in the private sector could be convinced that the way out and the solution is certainly, in part, restraint on wage increases.

I have no difficulty explaining to Canadians to whom I speak that it is much better to receive a 6 per cent increase and have an inflation rate of 6 per cent than to receive a 10 per cent increase with an inflation rate of 11 per cent. I do not think you have to take too much time to explain that because with the experience Canadians have had over the last decade, the deteriorating value of the dollar, the dramatic increases in food and services, the dramatic increases in the cost of housing and other essential things, they now realize a dollar is no longer worth a dollar. It is not even worth 40 cents any more.

I think the time has now come in Canada when you can reach out and tell Canadians what is happening and deal with them in a realistic way. The real point is, do you do that by beating their heads with a hammer, or by convincing them that the right course of action is to exercise constraint on a volunteer basis? But that kind of opportunity unfortunately was thrown away by the introduction of budgetary measures of the Minister of Finance on June 28 and by the legislation that he will introduce to implement them. Bill C-124 is only the first step.

I have to remind my colleagues to the left in the New Democratic Party that they did the Public Service of Canada and all organized labour in Canada a disservice when they objected to the inclusion in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms of a provision that would guarantee property and related rights to all Canadians. Because if the Public Service Alliance and other public service unions had a guarantee of property rights and related rights through a constitutional provision, the Government of Canada would not now be able to reverse those contracts as it intends to do.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the hon. member would like to know that it was the premiers who opposed property rights being included in the charter.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, you learn something every day. I guess that means the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), was aspiring to be a premier in Canada. He was the one who spoke in my hearing against the inclusion of property rights in the Constitution.

Mr. Riis: But he voted in favour of it.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, whether we blame members of the New Democratic Party or whether we blame the premiers of Canada—of course, the hon. member was probably talking about the NDP Premier of Saskatchewan, as he then was—the fact of the matter is that failure to include property and related rights in the Constitution is creating a difficulty for organized labour in Canada today.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Property rights have been in the British North America Act since 1867. They are still there. They will continue to be there and they will probably always be there. They fall into the purview of the provinces. There has been no change as a result of the constitutional amendment made last year. The people of Canada should keep that clear in their minds as well.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, you learn something every day. I leave grain growing and transportation matters to people of the west. Maybe the people of the west should leave constitutional expertise to some other people because that, simply stated, is not true. However, those people have to bear the burden, not us.

I am one of those who was in favour of the inclusion of property and related rights in the Constitution of Canada. If those rights had been included in the Constitution and if I were representing a public service union today, I could say today to the Prime Minister of Canada: "You are not imposing wage restraints on me because I have a guarantee of my rights through a contract. That guarantee, through that contract, is protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; this House of Commons cannot take that right away because it does not have that right."

• (1730)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor, but I was wondering whether he would entertain a question.

Mr. Crosby: At the end of my speech, Mr. Speaker. Before I was interrupted by a series of comments by hon. members of the New Democratic Party, I had begun to talk about the Canadian Constitution and its effect on property and related rights, which include the collective bargaining process.

Mr. Fulton: You voted for it; tell the truth.

Mr. Crosby: I voted for freedom of information too.

Mr. Riis: You voted for the Constitution.

Mr. Crosby: Let me go on record as saying that I am in favour of legislation which is generally beneficial although it may have some flaws. I work to improve legislation like the freedom of information legislation and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I want them to be enacted, I want Canadians to have the benefit of those provisions which are beneficial. I am not like the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who held up, in the House of Commons and in the committee of the House of Commons, the freedom of information legislation to the point where it was not going to be passed. Canadians have suffered for the last year and a half because the hon. member for Burnaby, a member of the New Democratic Party, stood in committee and refused to allow passage of that bill which would have given all kinds of Canadians access to all kinds of information. This is what we call cutting off your nose to spite your face: to refuse to deal with a minor provision of a large piece of legislation. I want to make it very clear to members of the New Democratic Party that I do not believe in that approach. I believe that if it is basically good I am prepared to support it.

As the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker said, "You don't follow rabbit tracks when you are after big game", so I will get back to Bill C-124 and deal with each provision which may be found to be onerous by a great many public servants. This bill not only affects 500,000 public servants, including those in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Canadian Armed Forces and others employed by Crown corporations and agencies, but it affects public servants in provincial spheres and eventually it will affect public servants in municipal spheres. I believe that it will have an effect upon all institutional employees across Canada, whose institutions are supported by government funds. That includes hospitals, universities and a wide variety of similar institutions. When we talk about the Canadians affected by this bill, we are not talking about the 500,000 federal public servants, including members of the RCMP and the Canadian Armed Forces, we are talking about another 500,000 Canadians, 300,000 of whom are in provincial public services and 200,000 of whom are in municipal services. In addition, we are talking about probably another 500,000 persons who are employed in institutions like hospitals and post-secondary educational institutions as well as public schools.

There is a broad interest and concern with this bill. It is for that reason that it demands serious consideration by all members of the House. Also it demands us to inquire whether the provisions of the bill are fair and proper in the circumstances. This is the question which I now want to address—is this bill and its provisions fair and proper in the circumstances?

Of course, and unfortunately for the Government of Canada, for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and for the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) who flies back and forth wasting money all the time, the bill is not fair. It is patently unfair because it takes a 6 per cent criterion and applies it to a deputy minister receiving $100,000 per year. It takes the same 6 per cent criterion and applies it to a clerk making $13,000, $14,000 or $15,000 per year, if there are any of those people in the Public Service of Canada any more. How can we support a provision which says that the government will limit Michael Pitfield to a $6,000 increase and at the same time limits a $15,000 per year clerk to the same 6 per cent increase? It is patently unfair.

I do not think anyone on the government side of the House would dare stand up and say that that kind of legislative provision is fair. How could they possibly say that it is fair? They know that lower level employees, those receiving less funds from the federal public service, the Canadian Armed Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and all federal corporations, are battling against an inflation rate which is over 12 per cent. They are battling in some places to renew their mortgages at 19 per cent, 20 per cent and 21 per cent. They are battling with increases in true prices. They are battling to pay increased transportation costs, increased costs of transportation fuels. They know the problem exists, so how can they go to these people and say that they will be giving them the same wage increase limit as they are giving Mr. Michael Pitfield who was already paid $110,000 when he left his job, whom they already sent all over the world and flew down to Boston to visit his family, and who was given all those benefits, which he has probably blown away, amounting to $100,000 or $200,000? How can they apply the same rule to these two persons?

When the Government of Canada tries to do something like that, no wonder public service unions and labour representatives of the public service rise up and complain. No wonder they send around material to Members of Parliament and form an Inter-Union Committee Against Wage Controls. No wonder they complain that Bill C-124 violates International Labour Organization conventions. No wonder they are upset. No wonder they are contemplating actions which would probably be detrimental not only to the public service itself but to all Canadians. They recognize that that kind of unfairness is patent and cannot be tolerated. If they take that kind of action and do not react to it, they know that they will be emasculating their organizations for all times.

What about the other side of the coin? Are public servants to rise up and revolt through their union representatives? Are they to join with the Canadian Labour Congress and Mr. Dennis McDermott and knock down the walls of Parliament in order to get the government to change its view? We certainly do not want that, and we certainly do not encourage any such confrontations. But they should not back someone into the corner. They should allow them some room within which to manoeuvre. That room could have been given to the public service in the form of allowing for some kind of graduated scale of increases which would take into account the large amounts received by those at the top. Also it could have taken into account the small amounts received by those at the bottom. But to force upon the public service an across-the-board 6 per cent limit is to challenge them and to say, "We will make you the scapegoats of our restraint program; we will organize public opinion against you, the public servant." It will not help them, it will not help Canadians. It will not help the private sector or even those executive officers of private corporations who think that there may be some benefit to setting an example and that they will be able to use the same guidelines. It will not work that way because, if we do not know anything else about constitutional law, we know that you can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink.

That is what will happen in the public service if these restrictions and restraints are forced upon its employees. They will simply cut back and will not produce. They will find methods not to comply with the commands of their superiors and at the same time to avoid loss of employment. It will set a pattern in the public service which will bring the country, if not to a standstill then something very close to it.

The government has taken a very dangerous course of action. Given the course of action which the government has taken, one which is obviously wrong in the sense that it wipes away 15 years of effective collective bargaining and wipes away any sense of comparability or fairness in wage packages, I say to members of the public service inside or outside the House that they must realize the level to which the Government of Canada has sunk. I say to them, "Do not blame Parliament or Canadians for what is happening to the Public Service of Canada. It is the fault of the Government of Canada." As I said, it simply indicates the level to which the government, that group of persons, has sunk that it would try this kind of action.

What is the hope for the future? The hope for the future is that in two years' time—and hopefully earlier—there will be a general election and the people of Canada will no longer have to put up with the government and its errant ways. Then the public service will be able to look forward to a situation in the future in which it will be treated in a decent and fair manner by the government of the day, which will not be the Liberal government. Also I suggest to the public service and its leaders that they should not react violently without regard for the welfare of other Canadians faced with the piece of legislation contained in Bill C-124. But consider beyond the narrow and short-term future to a future in which they will perhaps see a different kind of government, a different kind of attitude on the part of government, a different respect for employees of the Government of Canada, a government that will recognize the value of consultation and recognize that the way for an employer to deal with an employee is to sit down and work out the problems which may exist between them for the benefit of all Canadians, not only for that of the employer and employee.

I would like to close with just one example of a relationship between an employer and his employees that came to the point of total collapse. It concerned the Canadian postal service. What did this Parliament do? We terminated the Canadian postal service and created a new corporation called Canada Post. I want to look around this House and the nation and ask everyone whether they can see any difference in the service provided by Canada Post since its creation. I see no difference in the service, and I do not mean to criticize its management, nor do I want to criticize my postman, your postman and the postal employees upon whom I must depend a great deal of the time. The fact is, there is no difference in the service.

The point I want to make is that these kinds of changes are superficial and meaningless. When one is dealing with people, it must be on a proper basis. One must respect the people with whom one is dealing. One must listen to their opinions and respect their judgments. One must deal with them on a humane basis. One cannot merely bring into the House of Commons a piece of paper saying that one will do this and that, because people will not pay any attention to pieces of paper. What people pay attention to are sensible rules and regulations. What employees pay attention to is an employer who provides sensible rules and regulations governing the terms and conditions of their employment and their remuneration. Unless the Government of Canada learns that lesson, unless it sits down with the public service and enacts sensible rules and regulations governing their employment and remuneration, there will be no peace in the Public Service of Canada. The message I want to bring to Members of Parliament is that the way to a solution is through consultation, not through arbitrary, statutory action.

Mr. Riis: Does time permit me to ask a short question of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Sure!

Mr. Riis: My question is twofold, really just for clarification, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask whether or not the hon. member indicated in his remarks that during the discussions on the Constitution the provincial premiers, acting together, were one of the moving forces behind the exclusion of property rights from the Constitution? My second question is whether he did or did not vote in favour of the Constitution motion when it came before this House.

Mr. Crosby: The hon. member ought to know, in the first place, that it is a matter of record as to how one person votes in the House; but if he is too lazy to check the record, I can tell him. I voted in favour of the constitutional provisions. I am proud of that. However, if I were to explain that, I would say that I think in terms of the greater good. I do not take the position of members of the New Democratic Party, like that of the hon. member for Burnaby. I have no desire to hold up progress for days, weeks or months, or even a year and a half, and deprive Canadians who think of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as being a benefit to them of that benefit. But with respect to the premiers, I suppose there is a difficult situation experienced by some premiers in that. Property and civil rights have traditionally been within provincial jurisdiction. The provinces of Canada regulate property and civil rights. The inclusion in the Charter of a provision guaranteeing property and related rights might have been seen by someone, probably the Premier of Saskatchewan at the time, who embraced the New Democratic Party philosophy—

An hon. Member: Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Crosby: —as an intrusion on the civil rights jurisdiction of that province.

An hon. Member: Nova Scotia.

Mr. Crosby: For that reason, its inclusion was opposed. I respect the view expressed by some provincial representatives at the time. I can understand how a province might consider the inclusion of a property and related rights provision in a constitutional document as being an intrusion on their rights. But in that respect, I would personally support a greater authority which gives to all Canadians, in one document, the right to hold property and to retain whatever rights flow to them from a negotiated contract or similar document.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I know we will find great interest in seeing how Howard votes on this bill.

It is clear I am rising to speak against Bill C-124. I do not hide in a lot of rhetoric how I plan to vote on this piece of legislation. I make it clear from the very start because it seems to be a weapon for use against inflation, but it is certainly far from that. It is certainly no more than a vicious attack on the clerical staff, teachers, policemen, military personnel and others who provide much needed public services across Canada. They as a group are already paid below what their contemporaries receive in the private sector. There is no doubt that wage demands are a factor in the process of inflation. However, the 11 per cent inflation we find today is, at root, a social phenomenon. It results from a wide array of social problems in our economy and in society generally. It is a reflection of the competition and the process of distribution of the total goods and services produced in Canada.

Any effective solution for dealing with inflation must attack the problem at its roots in the underlying structure of our economy. The open adoption of the monetarist and neo-Keynesian solution by the Liberals and Conservatives at this time clearly defines for Canadians the fundamental difference in approach taken by the NDP on economic matters. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) says, "Successive reductions in money income demands will be required year by year if declining inflation is to be achieved", many Canadians are right in rejecting such rubbish. It is clear beyond any doubt that the road to economic security is predicated upon a much greater degree of democratic control over basic investment decisions which determine the timing and direction of our economic growth.

I am pleased to have an opportunity to place on the record some facts about Bill C-124, contrary to what hon. members involved in the Liberal-Tory coalition have been doing here today. It has been clear from the very start in the comments of the leaders of the Liberal and Tory parties that those parties support the smashing of collective rights. Joe says that it is a step in the right direction and Pierre says that it is necessary to show that he is serious. Well, if isolating less than 5 per cent of the work force for economic punishment is fairness and leadership, then those two parties have more serious problems of political dishonesty and senility than most Canadians have suspected to date. Why not isolate men between the ages of 40 and 45, 5'10" tall, weighing 165 pounds, with brown hair and blue eyes, to be the victims? It is in that very metaphor that the truth lies. It is in polls, used extensively by the right wing parties in this country, to support their ill-founded theories. Many Canadians believe that public servants are lazy, stupid, overpaid, overpensioned, in positions where they cannot be fired, with unlimited job security.

Mr. Crosby: It is the New Democratic Party which thinks that.

Mr. Fulton: My friend, the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), says that it is Tory policy. That is very interesting. But today I have had an opportunity to meet with the representatives of the trade unions of CN, and I found that the problem which has been created by Bill C-124 in relation to the collective agreement jointly shared with CP will create an incredible amount of chaos on the railroads and in the transportation sector of this country. It will do untold harm, not only to grain shipments out of Canada but also to interpersonal relationships between railroaders. It has long been held that they all bargain in terms of a private sector agreement, and some very unfortunate incidents will occur in relation to railroads as a result of Bill C-124.

Before I was interrupted by the hon. member, I was pointing out that many Canadians believe that public servants do not do a great deal of work, that they cannot be fired and have unlimited job security. Many of these same Canadians who believe that sleep a little better if they know the public servants are having to accept lower pay and suffer, even if unfairly, at the hands of government. However, let us look behind the myths. I noticed here today quite a few smirking faces among the Liberals and the Conservatives. They know how right I am that the honesty of Bill C-124 is not the issue. The politics of supporting it and collecting the public credit is all that the Liberal-Tory coalition is about.

Let us look for a moment at a public servant earning $12,000 a year. That is not at all uncommon either here in Ottawa or across the country. Next year, rather than getting an increase tied to inflation, he or she will get 6 per cent. If that person has a loan on a car at 20 per cent or 21 per cent, it will still be at 20 per cent or 21 per cent next year. A mortgage will likely run in the low 20 per cent range. Inflation has been introduced structurally into the Canadian economy, and that fact was accepted in all the figures put before this house by the Minister of Finance. It is for that reason we have to look very carefully at Bill C-124 and the philosophy that is behind it.

Forcing that individual to take a real loss in income for a sixth and seventh year in a row is both savage and unnecessary. The business community has somewhat reluctantly come forward again to praise Bill C-124 as a good start, much as the Conservatives have. Sure profits are generally down, and when they are down, business is very co-operative with government, looking for any handouts, loans, legislation or whatever they can get their hands on. It is a different story when the economy is flush. Business is quick to move capital out of the reach of workers and government alike.

The public and workers must help bail out Massey-Ferguson, Dome, Imperial, Consolidated Computer—a loss which alone would be able to provide the financial and wage requirements for the existing public service contracts. The list is endless. When has a corporation in this country ever given the public purse a comparable return to what they take when times are hard? It is not likely and it is not ever likely as long as the Liberal-Tory coalition is in power in this country.

How long will it be before Joe and Pierre come out of the closet, or should I say Allan and John, the friendly financiers? How long before we see the coalition of various and sundry right-wingers as we have in British Columbia? After all, Socreds are nothing more than an unhealthy alliance of Liberals and Conservatives.

How many of those same Canadians who dislike public servants are aware of the fact that in this session alone the Tories have voted 33 times to keep the Liberals in power? The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) I am sure feels very guilty, being the only Tory here to carry the blame for his party for having continually supported the government, keeping it in power day after day after day. I wonder if your constituents know, Frank, how dearly you love to keep Pierre Trudeau in office.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair let it go by the first time, but this is the third time the hon. member has used individual names. We sometimes hear them referred to as Mr., but certainly not by their first names. I therefore ask the hon. member to refer to other hon. members by their constituencies.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I simply want to remind the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who likes to throw around names, what happened on that crucial evening in December 1979. It was his party which helped to put this government back in power. It, in turn, is dispensing all the misery we are now suffering. It was his party which made that crucial decision.

Mr. Kaplan: Good old Bob Rae!

Mr. Fulton: I am always pleased to have an opportunity to respond to the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River. He knows it was the people of Canada who threw them out. The problem was that his House leader did not know how to count. He could not go one, two, three, four, five, and so on. The Tories do a lot of crying about why they were thrown out of power, but they do not acknowledge that it was democracy that threw them out of power. This is democracy. Many people in this country will be glad to be rid of them, and will soon be glad to get rid of that other group so that we can get the New Democrats over there.

How many of those same Canadians who dislike public servants are aware of the fact that in this session the Tories have voted 43 times to keep the government in power? I have corrected the record, Mr. Speaker. How many Canadians are aware that there is an informal agreement between the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) representing the Conservatives and the Liberals in this House in business and on legislation? Bill C-124 is just another example.

The Tories are playing both sides of the street. They say that to isolate the public servants is unfair, as we just heard from the hon. member for Halifax West, but that it is a step in the right direction. It is unfair and a step in the right direction. How far would they go? That is something we all need to ask ourselves. The Liberals are so deep in the swamp of intellectual and political dishonesty that to describe their integrity as a roorback is a compliment.

Let us look for a moment at the bill and see what is in it. In the application section we see under subclause (1) that it is going to apply to employees in all departments or ministries of state of the Government of Canada, boards, commissions or corporations, the Canadian Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Senate and the House of Commons. Subclause 2 applies to staffs of ministers of the Crown and of members of the House of Commons and the Senate. The third subclause applies to persons appointed by the governor in council. Clause 4, the extension section, reads:

> Every compensation plan that is in effect on June 28, 1982 for employees to whom this part applies, including every compensation plan extended under Section 5, shall be extended for the period of twenty-four months.

Then we get to a couple of interesting sections. Clause 6(2) is called an exception. It reads:

> The Treasury Board may, where it deems it appropriate, authorize any change to any terms and conditions, other than wage rates, of a compensation plan that would, but for Section 5, have expired before June 28, 1982.

Perhaps, for the learning experience of the Liberals and Tories still in the chamber, they should read that clause and get some understanding of it. It means that Treasury Board can change the actual working components of a collective agreement, not just wages alone. It is called contract busting.

Then there is Clause 13 which is when, as a result of the six and five policies, in some areas of the public service sector, we get to the point where there is no one left in some areas of the departments, special powers are given to Treasury Board. It states as follows:

> The governor in council may, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, by order,
> (a) substitute, in respect of a compensation plan or a class of compensation plans, a percentage different from that set out in paragraph 9(1)(b), where he considers it in the public interest to do so on grounds of labour shortages;

Employees can be hired above the six and five, but only after those departments have been completely bilked by a rate of attrition. It is interesting, in looking back on the public record, as I have been doing in the last few days, to see what was said by all parties in this House about collective bargaining and the right to strike during the rise in popularity of Solidarity in Poland. The Liberals and Conservatives all touted themselves as the true supporters of trade unions, touted their policy that trade unions were the fundamental basis or cornerstone of freedom, particularly in the Eastern Bloc.

They have now received word that the Gallup poll reveals otherwise in Canada, and there goes their support. Their bottom line is that collective bargaining and the right to strike is good for the Soviet Union but not so good for Canada. When Commie-bashing is in, the Tories are all up on their feet and so are the Liberals. At that point human rights and collective rights are the order of the day. When profits are down and the Gallup shifts in Canada, so too goes the right-wing Liberal-Tory coalition.

Opinion polls do in fact show that two out of three Canadians believe that unions are too powerful, this opinion being a result of continued misinformation provided to the public by the media, the government and big business. When was the last time a group of loggers, or fishermen owned The Globe and Mail? Liberal and Tory governments particularly like to bargain in bad faith and to introduce bills such as Bill C-124. They love to dare public service unions to strike or fight back. They know that only the public will be hurt, and the public has historically always blamed the unions, not the government. That seems to be a quick way of trying to get back into office.

Thus we start to see the reason behind Bill C-124. It is not to try to bring down inflation, not to bring down interest rates, not to show the way for the settlement of private contracts for the next two years. The reasoning is tragically dishonest. Union-busting is popular with the public, and the Liberals are clutching at anything because they have allowed our national economy to reach the stage where in fact for many it has already collapsed. I will call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) had the floor.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to continue speaking against Bill C-124, and I hope that in the days and weeks coming we will have an opportunity to hear from the Liberals and the Conservatives as to why they support this legislation. With 1.3 million unemployed officially and perhaps another 1 million out of work, there are four or five times the number out of work as there are affected by Bill C-124. Rather than argue the merits of a major plan for job creation or economic stimulation, we are here in this House debating the values of punishing public servants for the mistakes of an incompetent government.

What kind of politicians, Mr. Speaker, single out the victims to blame? This kind of action, taking purchasing power away from workers and consumers, is not even a stopgap measure. It is precisely the same kind of chiselling as in the budget, taking $1.3 billion away from low and middle-income earners by hiking the income tax. Bill C-124 is, in my view, a floater, to assess public reaction to full-blown wage controls. This is a plan that no doubt the Liberals are hurriedly preparing for the October Speech from the Throne.

The slide and the depression over the summer will simply add fuel to the false premises of the Liberals and Conservatives that the root of the problem we have in Canada is wages. It is clear beyond any doubt that the high interest rates and the fundamental structure of Canada's externally manipulated economy are the cause of our problems. Cynically to manipulate public opinion into believing that wage controls will refloat Canada's economy is reprehensible.

The Department of Finance has been actively preparing the ground to save the face of the Minister of Finance from further sand and gravel burns with such documents as "Setting the Climate for Wage Controls". That document said, in part: "A strategy of controls could only be contemplated if the country was widely recognized as facing a major emergency."

Let us head on into the seedier side of this issue. Who stands to profit from continued high interest rates, the demolition of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, and wage controls? First, let us look at who encourages support for the high interest rates. It is none other than the Minister of Finance, with his 19.5 per cent Canada Savings Bonds. What better way for a street dealer in economic misery to find the equivalent of a downtown Vancouver junkie? It is a quick "fix" for a collapsing government and a psychological introduction of acceptance and desire for higher rates to tens of thousands of Canadians. Who really benefits from the higher rate? Only about 5 per cent of Canadians who have surplus thousands or millions of dollars to put in the bank. Who pays so that they can profit? The public servants, the workers, small business, the home owners, all pay roughly 20 per cent on borrowed money. This trend, Mr. Speaker, leads to a major realignment in the economy, with a small group gaining enormous economic advantage during times of inflation, high unemployment and general recession.

Wage controls simply shift part of the burden of a floundering, poorly-planned economy onto the backs of working and unemployed Canadians. It is high time that those corporations that have been shovelling billions of dollars in profits and dividends out of Canada, brought some back and helped to revitalize the economy that they have played a major role in upsetting. In one recent five-year period, Mr. Speaker, some of the large corporations took $32 billion worth of capital gain in Canada out of the country. Surely no thinking Canadian blames the problems of Massey-Ferguson on the meagre pay packet of the worker who instals tractor engines or sets the hydraulics on farm machinery? Surely it is time management took their share of the rap, and sat down with labour leaders, workers and small business and mapped out a means of bringing this economy into the twentieth century.

Why are interest rates three times those of Japan and West Germany? They are three times the interest rates and now almost three times the percentage of unemployed. Why is nothing done when the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs finds that the oil companies have ripped us off for $12 billion at the gas pump in recent years? Therein lies the answer, or at least part of it.

Let us look for a moment at restraint measures in the boardroom. I am sure many members to my right and across the floor have had a look at these, but I think it is worth putting them on the record, Mr. Speaker. For example, the President of Alcan, David Culver, received $392,000 in 1980, and his vision of restraint took him to $532,000 in wages last year, a jump of $140,000 in one year.

Bell Canada, who want a 25 per cent increase, certainly found that in the boardroom. Mr. Grandpré went from $514,000 to $626,00 in one year. Canadian Pacific, Mr. Burbidge, went from $318,000 to $457,000 in the last two years. Falconbridge Nickel, Mr. Cooper, did not get quite as much, but he went from $132,000 to $252,000 in one year, a jump of almost 100 per cent in pay. Husky Oil, Mr. L. M. Rasmussen, went from $296,000 to $378,000. There is a real kind of restraint. Ranger Oil, Mr. Pierce, went from $233,000 to $398,000. Westcoast Transmission, a good British Columbia company, Mr. E. Phillips, went from $257,000 to $444,000.

If that is restraint in the boardroom I would like to meet with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and say: "Wage controls on those Canadians earning $12,000 or less is really the way to go, to get in there and take that out of the hides of the poorly paid clerks and public service staff."

Economists have noted that, "This recession has been unique in serveral respects. An examination of the cause of the downturn rather than its effect show it to be a recession deliberately brought about and fostered by government to a degree that has not occurred before." That is a quotation from Peter Cook of The Globe and Mail of April 17, 1982.

The Liberals and the Conservatives both operate now, Mr. Speaker, on opinion polls—no matter if the polls reflect the basic misunderstanding of facts. The 1982 Goldfarb report said the following, and I am sure that this is the foundation stone of Bill C-124: "There is a desire to see some measure of punishment of the civil service . . . a feeling that it is some sort of elite group . . . that has insulated itself from the hard economic realities of the day."

Some examples are deserving of scrutiny so that all members of this House, when they vote for or against this bill, will know why. Here are some examples from salaries in 1981: typists in the public sector, $11,658, and in the private sector on average, $12,226; labourers in the public sector, $15,611, and in the private sector, $17,197; financial administrators, public sector, $40,458, and in the private sector, $52,002. Pay scales, Mr. Speaker, in the public sector are consistently lower than in the private sector.

The Prime Minister demonstrated his government's total insincerity in Banff on June 20 of this year by saying that he would "scare the hell out of people by creating more unemployment," if they failed to respond to his dictates. In the past week the Prime Minister has threatened mandatory controls, denied the threat, apologized for the threat, and then restated the threat. We are dealing with the same Liberal-Conservative strategy as in 1974-75, a campaign promise not to bring in controls and then swiftly bring in wage controls.

This government, hand in hand with the Tories in this House and with all the provinces except Manitoba, is deliberately bringing in policies which put people out of work. We have a staggering 1.3 million out of work officially and another 1 million unofficially out of work because they are no longer collecting unemployment insurance or are on the "active list".

Bill C-124 breaks existing contracts; let us not forget that, especially when the impact will be to push some federal employees, such as clerks, below the poverty line. I am sure hon. members of this House have seen recent articles respecting members of the public service who have gone to welfare offices across the country and, in fact, get more take-home pay by being on welfare than working for the public service. This happens in the military as well.

By contrast, let any Liberal or Tory rise and inform this House of a 6 per cent or 5 per cent rollback of loans, mortgages, oil prices, electricity, water, rent or anything else. And let us not forget that there are eight Tory premiers who support this kind of thinking wholeheartedly. There is silence, and perhaps for good reason. There are some interesting parallels between the Liberals and the Conservatives on economic direction and high interest rates. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the previous minister of finance in the Tory government, said the following in a CTV interview on June 7, 1981:

> Yes I would continue to back Mr. Bouey. I agree that our interest rates have to track those in the United States.

The previous prime minister, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), was reported by The Toronto Star on May 5 of this year as saying:

> We have looked for a solution other than the government's, but we couldn't come up with an alternative . . . At this moment I don't have a better solution.

No doubt the Leader of the Opposition is having trouble with his leadership.

On honesty in federal politics, on "The Watson Report" on February 4, 1979, the hon. member for St. John's West said:

> —our leaders have got to be a little less honest . . . we're not being devious and tricky enough . . . I am criticizing us for that.

What kind of political animal would say those things? The same previous minister of finance said, as recorded in Maclean's magazine of July 12, 1982, that the government:

> —is adrift; it has no answers. If I told you what I would do, we'd never get elected.

That is good Tory policy for you.

On controls on wages, the previous prime minister said the following on July 5 of this year:

> What is in the budget? There is one important initiative—the introduction of restraint on public sector salaries.

Day after day we have seen Tories trying to dance around the issue. They have tried to speak in their ridings on behalf of the public service, yet knowing full well that the whips will be on and they will all have to vote for this Neanderthal legislation.

The Leader of the Opposition went on to say:

> That is a field in which the government has lagged behind several Canadian provinces. We are relieved that it is beginning to accept that government spending is a major cause of current economic problems . . . it is a step in the right direction.

That is Tory policy on Bill C-124. The Tories cannot dance around that any longer.

This kind of one-sided back-alley bludgeoning of collective agreements will, in my view, introduce a new and potentially explosive ingredient in employee-employer relations in this land. In my previous employment in the courts of B.C. and as a shop steward with a public service union I came to understand and appreciate the logo I think many of us know that justice must be done and be seen to be done. Bill C-124 is a completely unfounded Neanderthal approach to economics. Slamming the hands of the public service in the doorjamb may bring cries of support from some sectors of Canadian society; however, being seen to be just is a far cry from being just.

A 6 per cent rollback of the salary of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), whom I am glad to see here tonight, is more money than many Canadians make in a year. Let me give an example of the impact of the June 28 budget and Bill C-124 on a relatively well-paid federal employee. A clerk with two dependants earning $20,000 by 1984 will see the controls of 6 per cent and 5 per cent cost her $2,204 in salary. A 52 per cent increase in UIC premiums will cost another $300. Loss of full indexing of family allowance will cost another $104. Increasing taxes as a result of partial deindexing will cost another $450. A slight gain is the $100 child tax credit increase. All of this means a total cut over the next two years of $2,958, or 15 per cent of the original $20,000 salary. I just wonder how many Liberals and Tories will go back to their constituencies and say that is not a scandalous chopping of the public service they say they support.

The shoe, however, is on the other foot when it comes to higher income earners. The Liberal proposal is to offer investors taxation only on that return on investment which exceeds inflation. Thus, an investment of $20,000 at 12.2 per cent when inflation is running at 11 per cent would mean $2,200 of investment income would be protected from tax. At a marginal tax rate of 50 per cent this would mean a reduction in taxes of about $1,100.

It is clear that the advice given to the Liberals and accepted by them and the Tories is to control wages in the public sector first and then across the board this fall, thus increasing available capital to government and big business. Small business, workers, the elderly and the unemployed are expected to live on what they can find. High interest rates and low levels of taxation will allow an accelerated accumulation of capital, real estate and whatever by a small economic elite. It is no small coincidence that this group is similar to the list of campaign contributors to the Liberals and Conservatives.

In conclusion, let me touch on the highlights of the Reagan-Thatcher-Trudeau-Clark proposals.

Fact: Over 11 per cent of the work force is unemployed and, despite the expenditure of more federal funds in my riding, for example, in the past year and in the coming year than in any other federal riding in Canada, we now have 25 per cent unemployment due to accompanying federal policies. Nationally, industrial production is down 10 per cent. Real income is down 10 per cent since 1976 and plant utilization is down 30 per cent, in some regions 50 per cent and in some industries, such as mining and forestry now, down 100 per cent.

The intent of the budget and Bill C-124 is to cause this income decline to accelerate, and that is based on quotes I have taken directly from the Minister of Finance.

The source of the current recession is an economic philosophy and practice, not Washington alone and not the cracked crystal ball of the Minister of Finance alone. When Canadians come to realize—and I truly hope it will not be from a dusty history book ten years from now—that this phony legislation of the Liberal-Tory coalition is designed to protect the wealthy few and some chosen business sectors, then the will and the sentiment of the country to be sovereign, secure and peaceful and to have a cornerstone of free collective bargaining will be unleashed, and most members of the Liberal-Tory coalition here today will be voted out of office.

Bill C-124 is a slice out of federal workers. Big business will demand extension of it by the Liberal-Tory coalition to all workers so that they can finance their corporate debt and liquidity problems. The question is whether workers, small business, the unemployed and the elderly will stand idly by while they lose their homes, their jobs and their dreams.

Also within Bill C-124 is the disposal of the right to strike. I think what the impact of removing this right from the public service means is important and worthy of very serious consideration. There is no doubt that the strike is the most misunderstood of social activities in Canada. Surveys historically have consistently concluded that Canadians view strikes as an abuse of union power and a restriction on their access to goods and services. There is however, no ready replacement for this tool. There is no less combative way of settling labour-management disputes. Many Canadians support removal of the right to strike from public service unions. In fact, some Canadians—as a matter of fact, some members to my right—support legislating unions out of existence completely.

Mr. Murphy: Make a distinction.

Mr. Fulton: The far right, the Tories.

The myths which have allowed such opinions to develop require close scrutiny. It is a fact of history that unions have reduced the numbers of strikes globally. Deprived of unions, what useful vehicle would there be for the peaceful settlement of disputes over health and safety, technological change or many of the issues affecting workers every day when they are at work? Strikes would proliferate at a rate previously unknown in this country. Production and co-operation in the public sector may be lost already to absenteeism, staff turnover, slow-downs, shoddy work and so forth. If we take an hour's pay away from a worker without making consistent changes to the cost of living, we must expect—in fact we are encouraging—chaos. Something Liberal members should take into consideration when blindly supporting this legislation is that it will cause a chaos we probably have not seen in the public sector in the history of this country.

Strikes have been going on on this planet for the past 8,000 years, ever since the workers constructing the pyramids in Egypt walked off the job. Those countries governed by dictatorships which tightly control unions suffer from serious production losses due to unresolved employer-employee conflicts. Removal of the right to strike from public service unions is totally unacceptable. It is an invitation to civil disobedience.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I think members of the House might be interested in a couple of quotations that I should like to put on the record. The first is the words of Pope John Paul II who said:

> The justice of any socioeconomic system deserves in the final analysis to be evaluated by the way in which work is properly compensated ... The organization of workers into unions is necessary to protect the rights of workers, especially the right to a just wage ... In this connection, workers should be assured the right to strike, without being subjected to personal penal sanctions for taking part in a strike.

Another interesting quotation comes from a well known labour mediator, Dr. Noel Hall, who said:

> There's no sense in talking about banning strikes in the public sector. That will not make labour unrest disappear. All we would be doing is passing a law that otherwise good, law-abiding citizens would ignore ... Nor is the answer to impose compulsory arbitration. The real problem with both methods is that they come dangerously close to a system of compulsory employment. We would be telling people: "You must set your alarm clock. You must get up. And you must go to work." Are we really willing to issue this kind of order?

When the Liberal and Conservative members rise to vote for this legislation, as they seem intent on doing, I hope that they will keep in mind that they are encouraging many of the 500,000 people in the public service unions of this country to become involved in civil disobedience. These people are normally law-abiding Canadians. It is a shameful thing to force any Canadian into that kind of trap.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have mixed feelings about speaking in this debate on second reading of Bill C-124, an act respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada. Before we can go into a study of this bill in depth we should look at some of the background to it.

I should like to address a few comments to the budget presented in this House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on June 28. It was apparent from the minister's speech that evening that the budget had two objectives. The first was to bring down inflation and the second was to shore up investment and confidence in the economy.

With regard to the first objective, the government told us that it is going to point the way to recovery but that it cannot get going on its own. It told us that we must tackle this task together. I find it strange that members of the government would say that we have to work together to "beat inflation to the ground", at the same time that they are asking everyone else in the country to accept a 6 per cent wage increase in the 1982-83 fiscal year and a 5 per cent increase in the 1983-84 fiscal year. In that same period the government will increase its budget by 20 per cent. It seems to me that it is only paying lip service to these objectives in order to try to impress upon the people the dire economic crisis that the country faces. It is true that the country faces a dire economic crisis but the government only pays lip service to it. If it were serioius it would not ask the Canadian people to accept a 6 per cent increase while it increases its own budget by 20 per cent.

We also have a serious problem when the government says that we must beat inflation to the ground at the same time as it introduces a budget with a deficit for this year of $19.6 billion. That in itself is not nearly as great a problem as the deficit accumulated in the years this government has been in power, which to date is estimated at $135 billion. We cannot tell how accurate that figure is because there is no place in government where it can be checked.

If the government is serious about beating inflation to the ground why, then, do we have an accumulated deficit of $135 billion? When it was in the area of $80 billion it took $1 in every $5 of government revenue to service the interest; now, with the amount at $135 billion it takes close to $2 in every $5 that the government raises to service the debt. I do not know when we will ever recover from this debt.

The former auditor general, Mr. J. J. Macdonell, and the incumbent auditor general, Mr. Ken Dye, have both said that we are on the verge of economic collapse in this country. That is not surprising when you consider the record of the government.

What happens when a federal government accumulates such a large deficit, Mr. Speaker? It can either turn up the printing presses and issue more money, but, if there is not adequate production in the country to back that up, it is inflationary, or it can take huge sums of money out of the marketplace. The effect of that is that the government is competing for the available money against small businesses, resource companies, manufacturing companies and most of the people who are sitting in our galleries tonight who may want to borrow money to buy a home or a car or even to consolidate their debts. If the federal government competes against the people of Canada for money, that forces interest rates up and in turn inflation is also forced up. It makes one wonder what the federal government is really trying to do.

I should like to address now some of the concerns that I have about some provisions in Bill C-124 which will take the public sector employees away from the negotiating table and away from collective bargaining rights. They will have no right to bargain and will not be able to exercise the right to strike. That might prove popular with some people in the country but not with New Democrats. If we examine it more closely, I think it would be unpopular with many people in Canada.

Employees will have no right to bargain or to exercise their right to strike. That is what is happening and what has happened in Poland, Mr. Speaker. We know how people in this country feel about what is happening to the common, every day, working individual in Poland today. They do not have the right to free collective bargaining or freedom of assembly. They are dominated by a dictatorship, a military junta which is not much different from what this federal government is trying to do today, Mr. Speaker. And I maintain that it would not be any different under a Conservative government. We know that the Hon. Robert Stanfield, former leader of the Conservative Party, campaigned on a promise to bring in wage and price controls. However, they were more equitable than what we see the Liberal Party bringing in today. Like tweedledee and tweedledum, Mr. Speaker, there is not a whole lot of difference between the old line parties.

If we look very closely at this bill, Mr. Speaker, and members on all sides of the House come to their sanity and not pass the bill just because it is a popular thing to do among some members of our society, then I think this bill will be withdrawn from the floor of the House and not pass into law, especially the way we see it now. It contains many dangers, and I think we can find those dangers when it gets into committee. We will have to look at this bill very seriously at that stage.

I know we in the New Democratic Party will be proposing changes to make it much more equitable than it is now. For example, what happens to the equal pay for work of equal value provisions of the Human Rights Act? We think those provisions must continue to apply, but that is certainly not in the bill as such. We also wonder about the equity of the bill when you find that it paints all public sector employees in this country with the same brush. By limiting civil service employees to a 6 per cent increase in the 1982-83 fiscal year, and 5 per cent in the 1983-84 fiscal year, you are being much more generous to those who earn $100,000 a year or more, which some in the public employ do. Those at the upper end of the scale are getting increases of around $6,000, and others are getting $600. That seems to be grossly unfair, Mr. Speaker. Would it not be better to have those people at the upper end contributing more through the tax system, which is the best method we know for redistributing income?

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, there is the inequity of lumping elected representatives in this bill. I suppose they are not all elected because senators are included as well. We all know that those in the pork barrel of the Senate do not have to answer to anyone. However, could this bill not be split so that, yes, Members of Parliament have to take a pay decrease, but they can do that by voting for it and show leadership to the rest of the country? The other part could deal with public employees, and then maybe even have a third part which abolishes the Senate. I think that would do a lot to curb inflation in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: But public employees should not have to bear the brunt of this anti-inflationary practice as devised by the government. I find it very strange that wages in the public and private sector, averaged out over the last five years, have not kept up with the rate of inflation. Yet there are increasing demands on wage earners who are being fingered as the people who cause inflation. We in the New Democratic Party maintain that wages are not a significant factor in causing inflation. That is just not so. What are some of the things which cause inflation in this country? The government deficit is very inflationary. As I mentioned, a total of $135 billion accumulated over the years. Interest rates are very inflationary as well. I maintain that the government would have been much better off in its budget to address the very serious problem of high and fluctuating interest rates than it has been to carry out this public relations exercise in an attempt to place the blame for our very bad economy on the backs of wage earners in this country. It is not their fault; the government knows that, and I think all members of the opposition know that. However, if it is politically expedient to blame one sector of society, then the government will do just that because it does not want to address the very serious problems we have in this country.

When people wake up some morning and find their life savings have been cut in half by a stroke of the pen of this government, then they will finally realize that this government has lost control, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I referred to Mr. Macdonell, the former auditor general. He told the Canadian people years ago in his reports that Parliament had lost control over the purse strings. This bill is more proof of that. It is not the institution itself; it is the inept government we have which has been unable to control the public purse. Some of the things we think we could do to improve our economic outlook have to do with interest rates. Our leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), has consistently asked this government and the government before it to initiate a low interest rate policy. What would that policy do, Mr. Speaker? The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) says it would help the farmers in his riding. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) says it would help the fishermen in his riding. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) says it would help the small-business men in his riding. It would help every sector of society if we could bring down those interest rates. We can do that. But it is politically distasteful for the old line parties to do so. It might affect their friends, the bankers, and some of the large holders of capital in this society who find it distasteful to have lower interest rates. With lower interest rates, if they are to become effective, you have to have the imposition of some monetary controls in this country.

Mr. Fulton: Nixon and Kennedy did it.

Mr. Anguish: The Leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Oshawa has asked that we lower interest rates to one per cent above inflation. In years gone by—and I hope they have not gone by forever—it was traditional that the interest rate was 2 percentage points above the rate of inflation. That is no longer so. There seems to be no connection any longer between the rate of inflation and the interest rate in Canada.

We want the interest rate lowered and pegged for a period of time. Even worse than high interest rates, if they are not bad enough, are the weekly fluctuations of the rates. Small business people and people who are planning personal budgets cannot project a year at a time. The interest rate might be 15 per cent one day, but it could just as well be 25 per cent on another day. Who can plan in a wild economy like that?

In the New Democratic Party we have also said that we want to increase manufacturing in this country. It is much more advantageous to our economy to bolster the manufacturing industry than it is to bolster the resource sector, even though the resource sector in some areas needs help right now, helped by some firm plan, some guiding light by this government. Rules of the game should not be changed once you are involved in a game. At half time you cannot have the rules changed. The bolstering of the manufacturing industry would be most advantageous to this country. I think we should start looking at areas in Canada which can become self-sufficient so that we can make this country into what it deserves and has the potential to be.

Canadians have a high level of education. We have a well trained group of public employees who do serve us well and do not deserve to bear the brunt of inflation. Likely we have more resources than any other country in the world. Why can we not have some kind of an industrial strategy? Why can we not have some kind of manufacturing strategy? Why can we not have some kind of resource strategy? All of them could make this country self-sufficient. We have the tools to do it. But under the Conservatives and the Liberals we have never had the leadership to attain that here in Canada. Why does Canada have to have a branch plant economy for other countries of the world? We maintain that we do not have to have that.

Once we have looked at the areas where we can gain self-sufficiency in this country, we should look at the areas where we can seriously compete internationally. We should pick out the products that we can produce and manufacture so we can have a hand in the international market.

Mr. Kelly: Give us an example.

Mr. Anguish: Those are some of the things that will help us gain better control.

The government has really lost control. That fact has been pointed out by the Auditor General and by the opposition parties. In fact, in some of the secret memos in the minority reports from within the Liberal ranks of backbenchers it has been admitted that the government has lost control in Canada. Maybe the magnitude of it is too large for them to comprehend what has happened. Maybe the 24 million people that we have in this country are spread over too large an area and, because of the centralist type of government we have, its members do not know how to react or be sensitive to the needs of the country's citizens.

I think we could decentralize much of what we have here in Ottawa so that other people throughout the country can appreciate some of the luxuries that people have had in central Canada for many, many years. Out west the people refer to this place, the triangle from Toronto, to Ottawa, to Montreal, as eastern Canada. It is not really eastern Canada that we talk about in the west. If you look closely, you find that it is the golden triangle. The people in that golden triangle, even in the 1930s, never suffered from the Great Depression that we had.

Mr. Kaplan: Where were you?

Mr. Anguish: People in Newfoundland actually sent salt codfish to people in Saskatchewan to help them. There was some feeling in this country among the different regions. But this golden triangle area has, I think, lost some sensitivity because of the heavy concentration of people here, the strength of the Liberal Party and the strength which sometimes the Conservative Party has drawn from this area of Canada. However, we are going to find that this situation will change. Some indication of it is the result of the recent byelection held in Hamilton West which was won by the NDP. That seat was formerly held by the Liberal leader in Ontario, and before him the seat was held for many years by the Conservative Party.

We all agree that this inflationary cycle and mentality must be broken. It cannot be disproportionately placed on any one group in our society. But this is what Bill C-124 will do.

I think about distribution of income. If any government has a mandate, besides running the affairs of this country, it has to be to see that the income of the country is spread proportionately over the population as much as possible. There has been virtually no change in the distribution of income for the last 30 years.

In 1951, the bottom 20 per cent of families received 5.9 per cent of the income. In 1951 the top 20 per cent got about 40 per cent of the income. That situation is exactly the same in 1981 and 1982. There has been no effective redistribution of income in Canada. I blame that situation on successive Liberal and Conservative governments.

Mr. Fulton: Right on. They do not know what they are doing.

Mr. Anguish: I think we have pointed out very adequately that wages do not create inflation. High interest rates and lack of direction from government are the cause. Maybe people should not rely on governments as much as they do. But over the years politicians have built up that tendency and those expectations. Now they must honour them. As a result of their findings, their incompetent solutions and band-aid measures, they have run into very deep and serious economic problems which they are no longer able to address. I think the country is heading into bankruptcy. The country can no longer afford to keep up the expectations which they have created.

• (2050)

We cannot expect to earn more money each and every year forever. It cannot go on and on year after year, but some groups cannot afford to lose step. I am thinking about the people at the lower end of the scale who are affected by Bill C-124. They could be federal government employees living below the poverty level in the country. I think that is shameful. I am thinking about pensioners and those on fixed incomes. In fact, in most areas of Canada today there are families earning under $25,000 per year who cannot afford to purchase their own homes. We in Canada have grown to expect to own our own homes, perhaps not when we are just starting out as young persons or young married couples, but certainly at some point in our lives. Because of the richness of the country we expect to be able to own our own homes. I do not think this is unreasonable.

What has inflation done to take-home incomes? With the rises in inflation, it now takes an income 2.7 times greater than that of 1970 to maintain our purchasing power in 1982. Some people at the upper end of the scale do not need that, but surely some of those at the lower end do. It saddens my heart that because of the inflation strategy of the government more than half the number of single people in Canada over the age of 70 live in poverty. Two thirds of the elderly women in Canada live in poverty, mostly because of the strategy of the federal government and its attitudes toward what causes inflation and what we need to do with inflation to beat it to the ground.

Bill C-124 is being touted as the primary measure to move the economy back onstream. I hope I have pointed out that this is not so and that subsequent examinations of the bill will further prove my statements this evening, that is, in committee examination and during third reading of the bill. The bill is an ill-conceived attempt to shift the blame, to take the heat off government and to make Canadians forget that the Liberal Party has no economic plans, no national strategy, and no sense of Canada's future.

The government denies the right of workers to negotiate. Is there private sector acceptance of the 6 per cent and 5 per cent mentality? No employee or group of employees will voluntarily accept wage increases of 6 per cent when inflation and the cost of living are running at 12 per cent. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) met with private sector representatives and obtained acceptance of the program. It was not total acceptance, but the government and the Prime Minister received some acceptance. But from whom? It was from presidents and chairmen of various corporations who have, some of them, earnings in excess of $500,000 per year. Someone earning $500,000 a year could quite easily accept a 6 per cent increase because it means another $30,000, which is three times what some people in the federal public service make. We think that is unfair.

This scheme only increases the problem as it applies to hospital workers who might be earning $11,055 per year. It could extend to teacher's aides working at $9,631 per year. It could extend to typists earning $11,353 per year, or to general office workers who earn approximately $11,379 per year. These are average figures across Canada from the melding of the public and private sectors. The last anti-inflation program redistributed income, but it was all done upward. This time it will be even worse.

The government admits that this is a public relations exercise. I am sure Martin Goldfarb, the renowned pollster of the Liberal Party, pointed out that it was a popular move to impose wage controls in the public sector, but I am also sure that Canadians will look deeper and will not accept the premise under which the federal government is working.

Let me look at some of the increases in wages in other countries since 1975. These countries are not placing the burden upon the backs of workers. For example, since 1975 wage increases in West Germany have risen by 91 per cent and in the United States by 56 per cent.

Mr. Riis: They are our trading partners.

Mr. Anguish: I hear the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). His comments bring to mind another point, that our federal deficit per capita is twice that in the United States of America. Disgraceful! In Japan, since 1975, wages have increased by 95 per cent. In Great Britain, since that year, wages have increased by 116 per cent.

An hon. Member: And look at the situation in Great Britain!

Mr. Anguish: But since that time wages in Canada have only risen by 48 per cent. This is much lower than the increases in the other countries to which I have referred, but Liberals opposite heckle about what I have to say this evening. It is an indication of where we are going in the country. They are not willing to listen to the constructive criticism of opposition parties. It will bear testimony in the next federal election when Canadians will not be able to find many Liberals elected to Parliament.

Bill C-124 is a bad law. It is unfair, unwise and counterproductive. It places the burden of our society's ills on the shoulders of people who are least able to afford it. It is blatantly inequitable, as I have already pointed out this evening.

Today we have unemployment insurance and welfare to soften the blow of what is happening in the country. When the effects of this recession—and some people even argue that we are going into a depression—really hit us, the government might not be able to afford these programs any longer. I do not think the government has managed our resources and our people very well in this country. We will see all hell break loose when millions of people are unemployed and there is nothing for them to do, no programs to help them feed their families or even to maintain a bare existence. It will make the 1930s look like a tea party. That is exactly where we are headed in this country.

Mr. Kelly: Fantasy.

Mr. Anguish: In 1975 the Anti-inflation Board review tried to achieve the same thing as this government is now trying to achieve by wage controls. The Anti-inflation Board was a failure in 1975 and it tried to control prices and wages. Now that we have forgotten about prices, we will let Adam Smith's free hand in the marketplace control that. We will let the invisible hand of Parliament control people's wages in this country so that they cannot cope with it. If the government does that and things get worse economically, which I predict they will, then we had better beware of the very dire consequences. Under that Anti-inflation Board in 1975, the target was to bring inflation down to 8 per cent. It did not work. It was supposed to be 6 per cent in 1977. It did not work. It was supposed to be 4 per cent in 1978. It did not work. If that target had been reached, we would have had a zero rate of inflation today. But now we have a 12 per cent inflation rate instead. The government is trying the same sick remedies that have never worked for us before.

Mr. Deans: It is the same sick government. That is why.

Mr. Anguish: It is because it is the same sick government, the same government which cannot change its direction. I do not know what the problem is. The federal government has been told by provincial governments, by the business community and by opposition parties that the direction in which it is going is wrong, but it will not change it. It seems destined to follow one course. Of course, it either cannot, because of outside pressures, or will not change. By the effects of this, when that demand is depressed and productivity is cut, unemployment is increased. This government cannot really understand that. One looks at the budget and at the couple of objectives that I outlined earlier—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, may I make a comment on this point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? Does the parliamentary secretary rise on a point of order?

Mr. Kelly: If one gives unanimous consent, does that mean that the hon. member has unlimited time? Could we give consent for him to speak until, say, 9.20 p.m.?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent or is there not unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Anguish: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Anguish: What do you mean, there is not unanimous consent?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's allotted time has expired. I will now recognize the hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt).

Mr. Anguish: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent, for the extension—

Mr. Anguish: Are you saying that this House will not extend the courtesy of allowing me to finish my speech? I have only a few more brief lines.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's allotted time has expired and there is not unanimous consent to the extension of his time.

Mr. Anguish: That is very typical of this government, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Throughout this debate we have given hon. members one or two minutes in which to finish their remarks. I think it only fair to let the hon. member finish the statement he was just making. I would suggest that we ought to do that, out of courtesy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to extend his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. This matter is presently under discussion in the committee considering the regulations of the House. Unfortunately, as Your Honour is aware, when unanimous consent has been given, the hon. member can continue to speak indefinitely, the rest of today, tomorrow, or for as long as he wishes. Under these circumstances, if the hon. member had said, "I need two or three minutes to finish my remarks"—

Mr. Deans: That is not true. Sit down.

Mr. Herbert: —it would be very easy for us to give the required consent.

Some hon. Members: He did say it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) is perfectly well taken. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to extend his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is unanimous consent.

Mr. Anguish: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your indulgence and that of the House in allowing me to have a few moments more in which to wrap up my remarks on Bill C-124.

As I mentioned at the beginning of my speech, the two objectives that I saw in the budget were to bring inflation down and to shore up investment and confidence in our Canadian economy. In conclusion I would like to say that the indicator as to whether or not we will bring inflation down will come over the ensuing months and years. We will then see whether or not the actual rate of inflation does decrease. I maintain that it will not. I do not think that we are looking at a 6 per cent world of recovery, as the government has said, because there are too many factors over which this government has lost control. It will certainly not bring inflation under control by imposing the very harsh demands of Bill C-124 as they apply to public employees in Canada. I would ask this government to please consider withdrawing this bill.

Mr. Kelly: Never.

Mr. Anguish: Before I conclude my remarks, I would like to refer once again to the matter of shoring up investment confidence in the Canadian economy. I think it is very obvious that what this government has done has not raised confidence in the Canadian economy because the indicator that one views must be the value of the Canadian dollar on the international market. The day after the budget was introduced, on June 29, the Canadian dollar saw its worst record in history on a post budget day. It dropped one cent during the day and recovered a bit by the end of the day, but we still have a dollar which is well under 80 cents compared with the American dollar.

Mr. Kelly: Has it gone up since the budget?

Mr. Anguish: I think that all indicators show that the budget has failed. It will be an even more dismal failure if the government insists on instituting the provisions of Bill C-124. I ask the government to withdraw this bill. If it does not, I urge all hon. members of the House of Commons to vote against Bill C-124.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill C-124 respecting compensation to the public sector of Canada. But before getting into the meat of my remarks, which I want to put on the record tonight, I would like to say that I cannot help but take exception to some of the remarks just enunciated by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) in the House, especially when he referred to the fact that eastern Canada and, more specifically, the golden triangle of eastern Ontario, did not feel the effects of the Great Depression. Talk about uttering words of disunity in this country! I have never heard the like. On a previous occasion in the House I stated that I personally felt the effects of the Great Depression in the early thirties. I remember, when I was a boy, my father pulling me on a sleigh in the wintertime, to the relief store, which is the equivalent of a welfare office today, to get a box of groceries, some shoes or overshoes, and that type of thing.

An hon. Member: You had a sleigh!

Mr. Burghardt: But this young hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake said that eastern Canada, specifically the golden triangle of Ontario, did not feel the effects of the Great Depression. He referred to the lack of manufacturing in the country today. That is the heart of manufacturing in Canada. The hon. member would not remember, as he was not born at that time, that during the Great Depression that was the very heart of the country that really felt it, along with the prairies, with western Canada, of course, and with all of this great country of ours. Therefore let us not hear any words of disunity such as those we have just heard tonight from the hon. member in the NDP.

I would also like to take exception to his voice of doom and gloom. We are all in this together.

Mr. Deans: Some are more in than others.

Mr. Burghardt: Exactly. Some are in more than others. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has said it and I fully agree with him. However, if a member of the House says there is no hope and predicts even greater failure, what hope do we have? What hope is there if members of Parliament cannot rally to the cause of inflation and the economic ills of the day? That is what we can expect from members of the NDP. Talk about promoting disunity.

• (2110)

As we know, the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) two weeks ago had as its main theme the fight against inflation—to bring inflation down to 6 per cent. This is the target for which we must strive. Federal public servants, Crown corporations, regulatory agencies as well as members of Parliament and senators are being asked to participate in this program. It is hoped that with this approach, the provinces, municipalities and the private sector as a whole will follow suit and join in this concerted effort to wrestle down inflation.

The intent of this bill, as we all know, is to limit wage increases to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. It means that some 500,000 people in government and in Crown corporations will get no more than 6 per cent.

A very significant point, something we have to underline, is that this will free some $250 million this year and $550 million next year. That money can be spent on programs to stimulate the economy and create much needed jobs.

Members of the opposition, especially the NDP, fail to bring out the point that because of this particular program, nearly $800 million will be directed into much needed job-creation programs. This is without further adding to the current deficit which is of concern to all of us. There is no doubt about it, we have to wrestle down the deficit. However, we cannot get the deficit down until we get inflation and interest rates down. Therefore, we must all work together.

Let us hope that provincial and municipal governments look hard and long at the decision of the federal government in this matter. Let us hope that the big corporations, the utilities and the labour movement will consider this idea very carefully. If all sectors of society could agree voluntarily to the 6 per cent limit, we would bring inflation down and provide far more jobs that will be needed in the future.

Would it not be an outstanding achievement if, as Richard Gwyn said in his column today, we could see the emergence of a national will to defeat inflation? That is the intent of this government, to create the atmosphere for that national will to take place so that we can defeat inflation, getting it down to a more reasonable rate of 6 per cent and, hopefully, then to 5 per cent.

The rate of recovery must begin with a realistic assessment of what this country is all about, what this country can control and what we cannot control. Our country cannot deal with its economic problems in isolation. We can ease if not eliminate the impact of some problems, but the solutions to other difficulties depend on events beyond our borders.

We must know what we can realistically change and what is beyond our power to change by ourselves. While recognizing the force of world conditions, we must acknowledge that many of our problems originate here at home. No doubt about it, we are responsible for many of the economic problems we face today. We cannot put all the blame on outside forces or world powers. An inflation rate of 11.8 per cent is far too high. Our cost structure is becoming prohibitive. To be honest, we are pricing ourselves out of world markets. We are losing our competitive edge. All this we have done to ourselves.

Rather than accept what the previous speaker said, voicing doom and gloom, I have confidence in the Canadian people. I have confidence that what we have done we can also turn around. We can reverse this trend. If we all work together, we can bring inflation down. The government is taking the lead by asking all those associated with the federal service to join in this battle against inflation and to take the lead themselves by limiting their wage expectations.

In many ways, expectations are at the heart of our inflation problems. In recent years it seemed natural for all of us to believe that our prosperity would continue to spiral upward. We never gave much thought to or questioned the roots of our prosperity. Many believe we have grown up in a very selfish society—me first, never mind the other person. We did not look at the world situation, consequently our impending vulnerability. This is where we are affected by outside forces. Canada is a trading nation and is affected by the ups and downs of the world economy.

For some time a few Canadians, the poor, the aged, the helpless, the weak, paid the price of these inflationary demands. Today only a few groups can pursue their expectations, the powerful, the protected, the privileged. It is the many who pay the cost in unemployment, in bankruptcy, in loss of opportunity. Certainly the expectations of the over one million unemployed have been shattered. These are the people who are hurt and whom we must help. This is where people in the federal service can share what they have. They can share their job security with those who are less fortunate. While there has been some criticism from some members of the federal public service arguing against being singled out, I suggest that those employed in the federal public service can be the heroes of the day by accepting the idea of reduced compensation to help in this fight against inflation. This does not mean that all the other benefits enjoyed by members of the public federal service will be done away with.

This afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) suggested that federal public servants would see a reduction in their benefits. That is absolutely incorrect. It is wrong. No federal public servant will lose his job because of this program, no one will see a reduction in benefits.

The hon. member for Vancouver East was quite critical of the minister responsible for the status of women. She said the minister was all talk and no action, and she expressed concern about what this bill was doing to female workers across the country. She was right about the talk as far as that minister is concerned. No other member of this House does as much as that minister in promoting the cause of trying to help women in the work force across this country. Women's rights across this country are upheld by the minister responsible for that department.

The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) expressed concern about the future of equal employment opportunity programs and affirmative action programs in the federal public service. It is the intention of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) to continue with the development of affirmative action programs in three government departments and to pursue their introduction in other departments. The introduction of affirmative action programs is not related to collective agreements or compensation plans and consequently will not be affected by Bill C-124. We must make sure that is on the public record.

We know too that many times the federal civil service is criticized for what some term a lack of compassion and caring for those with whom they deal in the private sector. But by taking the lead in lowering expectations as to wage increases, the federal civil service will indeed be showing that they do have the good of their fellow citizens and the country as a whole at heart.

Some people and some members of the House have irresponsibly suggested that some members of the public service and the government took advantage to the situation by settling wage negotiations in the public sector prior to the June 28 budget. For example, the hon. member of the New Democratic Party for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) indicated the other day that it was reprehensible that the government should have approved a 10 per cent wage increase for lawyers in the Department of Justice just hours before the June 28 budget. I would like to advise hon. members that the Department of Justice lawyers are excluded from the collective bargaining process. Earlier this year, the lawyers employed in other government departments and agencies negotiated an 11 per cent wage increase for 1982 with the government through the collective bargaining process. The government approved the wage increases for the Justice lawyers in order to treat them in the same way as the bargaining unit lawyers. Both groups of lawyers will receive and will be limited to an increase of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent increase in 1984.

As I earlier mentioned, Mr. Speaker, members of the federal civil service can be the heroes of the day in this program. This is a fight against inflation and members of the federal civil service are the front-runners in this battle. But having said this, we know too, that the federal civil service cannot win this fight alone. We all have to become involved. We all have a stake in the outcome. We all must share in the effort, each according to his own ability. I believe that Canadians are willing to make sacrifices so that others can be helped. It was refreshing to read in a letter to the editor of the Ottawa Citizen on July 8, a letter from a federal public servant and a member of the Public Service Alliance of Canada who said:

> As a federal public servant and a member of the Public Service Alliance of Canada I wish to dissociate myself from the almost hysterical response of Alliance leaders, other public service unions and superannuates groups of public service salaries and pensions. I thank God for both the job security I enjoy and the fact I am not suffering a reduction in my salary, (many Canadians would be so lucky). My family and I will adjust to a salary increase marginally lower than the expected cost-of-living increase when the time comes.

In another letter which appeared in the same July 8 edition of the Ottawa Citizen there is this:

> May I also reluctantly endorse the reduction in government spending, including my own wages. The measures being taken by the all-too-many private firms with money problems are certainly by necessity more severe.

These are letters to the editor which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen from two federal public servants.

Let me read from another news item in the July 3 edition of the Ottawa Citizen comments from retired public servants who are ready to sacrifice to help the economy, comments such as, "Annual increases unless they will buy more are useless. I agree with MacEachen and his 6 per cent and am happy to bear my share." That is from a retired federal civil servant.

Another believes cutbacks:

> —might set an example for private industry. But, by the same token, anyone who is suffering should get special consideration.

Another retiree said:

> If it will help, then I'll reduce my living standard.

And so it goes, Mr. Speaker. I do believe that Canadians will accept these sacrifices so that others can be helped.

What about the private sector, the provinces, the municipalities? Before the budget of June 28 there were many groups demanding action by the federal government to cure our economic ills. Many of those same groups obviously do not like the action taken by the Minister of Finance. The trouble is that those sectors of our society have conflicting interests. For example, some union leaders want interest rates and inflation to come down but they will not agree to limit their inflation-building wage demands. Businesses want wage controls but not price controls. Provinces still demand more money from the federal government. Individuals want tax cuts but still demand more services. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the country can evade the truth for only a short time. There must be a willingness on all our parts to share and share alike. There must be willingness on the part of the provinces and municipal governments, private business and the rank and file of the labour movement to lower financial expectations.

Here I might mention that members of the council of the city of London, the area which I represent, last week voted to reduce their salaries to increases of 6 and 5 per cent. I believe also that members of the council of the city of Kitchener have done likewise. I am sure there will be other municipalities across this great country of ours following the same suit. Some have said that the dollar figures involved do not really amount to much. That is it not that important. On the other hand I think it is the action taken by members of the London city council that is important. I congratulate them for following the federal government's stand in this matter of a 6 per cent and 5 per cent wage increase.

On the other hand, I was rather dismayed to learn through an editorial which appeared in the London Free Press, the newspaper in that city, that secondary school teachers in London, or at least their leadership, are demanding far more than the federal anti-inflation wage guideline in their current bargaining with the London Board of Education. The editorial says that elementary school teachers as opposed to the secondary school teachers in London recently settled for a 12.5 per cent increase, which is still more than double the 6 per cent and 5 per cent suggestion. The editorial asks the question: "Where is restraint in teacher bargaining?" It suggests that negotiators for the secondary school teachers take a second look at what they are demanding in this matter of salary increases.

So we can see, of course, that there is much to be done in this country of ours, in our own local areas, of course, in trying to influence members of various sections of society who have a specific interest at heart, whether in contract negotiations or just wishing to try to contribute to this over-all fight to wrestle inflation down so that we can help those who are sorely in need not only today but, more important, those in need in the future.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I emphasize that we must all be in this battle against inflation, for we all have contributed to the economic problem of the day. Some people continue to say that rising wages and salaries have nothing to do with inflation, that it is a matter of prices which have fuelled inflation. I believe that an hon. member of the New Democratic Party, the previous speaker, referred to this. But when the cost of producing goods and services, of which wages and salaries are a major factor, rise faster than our production, they do contribute to rising prices. In the July 10 Toronto Star David Crane wrote:

> In spite of sizeable pay increases over the past three or four years, few Canadians feel that they are much better off. That's not surprising. By and large, pay increases have simply led to more price increases and a more inflationary environment that has wiped out the pay gains.
> The missing ingredient today is productivity, our best measure of economic progress.

He went on to say:

> Education, job training, innovation, good management, research and development, sizeable investment in new machinery and equipment, government policies that encourage efficiency and the shift of resources from dying industries to growth industries all contribute to good productivity growth. And it is in these areas that Canada is lagging behind its industrial world partners.
> Yet here is the important point: Pay increases can only have real value when they are matched by productivity increases. If an employer grants a wage increase and has productivity growth, then he does not have to increase the price of his product to pay for the wage increase. But if he grants a wage increase and has no productivity growth, then he must either increase his prices or accept lower or zero profits, which means the eventual collapse of his business.

But again, we cannot put all the blame for rising prices and thus increasing inflation on wage and salary increases. Governments at all levels, business and labour, individuals and almost all of us have contributed in some degree to the economic problems of the day. And it has usually been out of self-interest. Because of Bill C-124, limiting wage increases to 6 per cent and 5 per cent in the federal public service sector, there are some hopeful signs that other sectors are listening as well. The meetings which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have had with provincial leaders and with business and labour leaders, at least at first glance, give some hope for the future. For example, an article in The Globe and Mail of July 9 says:

The federal government received pledges of support yesterday from 39 senior Canadian business leaders for its goal that private-sector wage increases be voluntarily limited to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984.

I will get to the reaction of labour leaders in just a few minutes.

Mr. Deans: I am not going to say a word.

Mr. Burghardt: The article continued:

What the business leaders appeared to promise the Government was that they would give voluntarism their best shot. Ian Sinclair, chairman of Canadian Pacific Enterprises, said there was "great support for the position adopted by the Minister of Finance."

And William Mulholland, chairman of the Bank of Montreal, said the private sector "would do its best" to emulate what the federal government was doing.

William Hamilton, president of the Employers Council of British Columbia—"the situation is far too serious for politics and I think that whatever Government is in power it is going to face some difficult times. I don't think that any government can produce a total solution at this time."

According to the Montreal Gazette:

In a startling reversal, Dennis McDermott, one of Canada's foremost labour leaders, said he was "encouraged" by his meeting yesterday with Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

The Canadian Labour Congress president went into the meeting loudly condemning Trudeau's economic policies and saying the Prime Minister never listens to labour. But, he came out saying: "The door appears open . . . (there are) avenues for an exchange of ideas, of persuasive arguments."

I suggest that other sectors of Canadian society are in fact listening to what the federal government is suggesting in this matter of trying to control wage increases and trying to bring about an attitude of restraint. We are trying to restrain not just wage increases but all areas of government spending. We are trying to do this not only at the federal government level; we are trying to encourage provincial governments, municipal governments and individuals as well to get into the act and join the force in the battle to try to wrestle inflation down to a reasonable level, perhaps 6 per cent, in the years ahead. There is some indication and some hope that other sectors are listening.

I am sure my friends in the New Democratic Party will not agree with the following quotations, but I must use them because they represent the view of business organizations across the country. If we did not have business organizations, we would have no labour force, and that is a fact we cannot overlook. Sam Hughes, the president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, has indicated that he intends to use his influence to urge his provincial counterparts, the chambers across the country, to get into this 6 per cent solution so that we can all be in this battle together. Mr. Hughes intends to urge provincial chambers and local boards of trade to join in this call for a 6 per cent wage ceiling, in line with the one being suggested by the federal government.

I think we can see some signs of hope. There is no question that we face extreme and enormous problems, but if we listen to some hon. members opposite, those voices of gloom and doom which have nothing positive to say but are strictly voices of negativism day in and day out, we will never get out of the economic mess in which we find ourselves. If we listened to them, the deficit would be even higher. We would be far deeper into the hole than we are now because all we hear from them is spend, spend, spend and do this and do that—

Mr. Deans: You know better than that, Jack.

Mr. Burghardt: —with financial incentives. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain says I know better than that. I know what is fact. That is why I say that all we get from hon. members opposite are cries of spend, spend, spend. If they are at all concerned about the federal deficit, they should certainly reconsider the vocabulary they have been using throughout this debate. Individuals with whom I have spoken, as recently as this past weekend in my constituency of London West, share the belief that this bill is a step in the right direction. Indeed, federal public servants can be the heroes. I emphasize that because I feel that in the end we will see that they will be the heroes of the day for having gone along with this program and helping in the long run to reduce our inflation rate and thus ensuring that no one will continue to suffer economically, as many are doing today.

We certainly cannot go on as we have in the past. We cannot throw up our hands and say all is lost, and sit helplessly by while inflation rages and unemployment grows. If we can work together, we can do more than simply preserve our economy. We can turn it toward growth. People have been touched by economic adversity and, if we do not act together, more will be hurt. That is the seriousness of the matter. The challenge before us is to share in the sacrifices and to join in a collective effort which will turn our goals into realities. That is the message and the challenge I bring into this debate. If we all play our parts, I am confident we can overcome our difficulties and return to better times.

Let us not forget that despite the enormous economic problems we face today, Canada remains a land more blessed than most. I just wish many hon. members of this House, especially hon. members opposite, would mention that in this debate on Bill C-124. I cannot stress enough that we in this country still have a far better standard of living than those in many, many other countries in the world. Canada remains a land more blessed than most.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member would be prepared to entertain a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) entertain a question?

Mr. Burghardt: Sure.

Mr. Deans: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member in advance. I will keep my question very brief. In his speech the hon. member made reference to the intention of the government not only to limit the wages of civil servants but also to take action in those areas over which it has jurisdiction, including Crown corporations and agencies of the government.

Thinking back through the proceedings this afternoon, I wonder if the hon. member would admit that it seems a trifle unfair to limit wages of someone to 6 per cent but then not to take similar action with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and to require of the corporation that it keep rent increases within the same range. Does he think it reasonable that people whose wage increases would be limited, would be asked by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to pay a 25 per cent increase for rental accommodation beginning in September?

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, I believe that matter is being investigated at the moment.

Mr. Deans: I am just asking if the hon. member thinks it is fair.

Mr. Burghardt: No, I think it is not fair. As the minister indicated in his answer this afternoon, that increase was announced in April or May. I agree that it is not fair.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I would call to the attention of the House that there is only a limited amount of time for questions.

Mr. Riis: I wonder if I too could direct a quick question to the hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt)?

Mr. Burghardt: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: I thank him in advance for the opportunity. He spoke about the need for co-operation and for public servants to provide the leadership and the model for other Canadians, but I do not think he referred to the fairness of the decision. Does he feel that the proposal for a 6 per cent increase for the federal public service should be applied equally to people who are earning $12,000 and those earning $102,000 per year?

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, I think that we have to look at that wide range of salaries paid to federal civil servants. If you were to ask some members of Canadian society about this, they would feel that certain elements of the public service are being paid too much.

Mr. Deans: Like cabinet ministers!

Mr. Burghardt: No, some employees. We should take a moment to look at the position of some members of the Canada Post Corporation, for instance. Just a year ago much of Canadian society was upset by a postal strike and could not believe the exorbitant demands that were made and that the government gave in to those demands and awarded a very high salary increase to many of those workers. Many Canadians feel that that was not warranted. There is quite a gap there. I think we have to look at all sections individually and try to close that gap. The person making $12,000 or $14,000 per year does not have the same standard of living as a person making $50,000 or $60,000 per year who wants to maintain his standard of living. Everything is relative, and I think the hon. member should keep that in mind.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, before we see the clock tonight and when we resume tomorrow there are a few things that I should like to put on the record with regard to Bill C-124. This wage control package is a key element in the government's anti-inflation strategy, even though everyone knows that wages have been falling behind inflation for the last five or six years, and so tonight I should like to examine the subject in the total economic context.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made it clear on a number of occasions that the public sector is to be made an example and an instrument by which wages in the private sector will be brought into this 6 and 5 per cent world which the government intends for the Canadian people.

In my riding, workers at the CN shops in Transcona will be affected by the bill, as will workers in Montreal, in Point St. Charles, in Moncton and throughout the system all across the country. It is particularly irritating to me, and it is an example of the continuing injustice done to railway workers in this country, that the people in Transcona have been told that they will be laid off for eight to ten weeks more than the normal summer lay-off—and even that was extended for a few more weeks—and then on top of that they are now told that their collective bargaining achievements for 1983 will not be respected, but instead broken through the legislative instrument of Bill C-124. The increase of 9 per cent which was scheduled for 1983 will be reduced to 5 per cent.

Apart from the obvious injustice of workers in CP shops making more than workers in CN shops by January 1983, CP Rail will be required to pay out more in wages than will the CNR. Thus, if the government does not withdraw this bill, there will be a test of its theory of economic competitiveness. If this theory is correct, the profitability of CN will soar in comparison with that of CP because CN will not have to pay its workers as high wages. According to the government, that is what affects the profitability of Canadian corporations. So we will wait with bated breath to see if that will be the case.

On a national level we are dealing with an accumulation of years and years of Liberal policies. The chickens are coming home to roost now that the United States' domination of the world economy is not what it used to be. Canada has been tied to that economy for decades. The Liberals, with Conservative approval, openly sought the integration of the Canadian economy with the United States economy. Now we are shamefully dependent on the United States economy and on investment decisions made in that country and also in the head offices of non-American multinational corporations. Many years ago when the CCF and subsequently the NDP complained that this was not a good thing, they were regarded as the party poopers in Canada. People claimed that foreign investment was creating jobs, that there was growth, and an increase in consumer goods and services. And all that was true as long as the economy we were tied to was the dominant world economy. In a way, we regret that we were right and that the things we said about the price we might some day have to pay for this dependence on the American economy have come to pass.

I should like to share some of my views with the House on why we are in this position now. What has been going on in this country, is a strike by capital. Some would credit that to the abhorrence the private sector had for the National Energy Program. God only knows why because it was the most milquetoast Canadianization program you could imagine. But that is the extent of the pettiness and dominance of the international investment community that such a paltry move on the part of the Liberal government could cause them to take such a bruising in terms of international confidence.

There has been a capital strike going on in this country, not just since the NEP but accumulating over the years. What we have now is a Liberal government which has capitulated to the strikers. It is always amusing to me to see the criticism workers receive from the community at large when they say that unless they get a certain return on their labour, they are going to hold out until they do. Yet when the investment community in this country does that, it is called good business, initiative. It is called looking for more incentives. But when the working people of Canada do exactly the same thing, to all intents and purposes they are reviled and called upon to sacrifice and co-operate.

There are a number of things going on, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, for some time now the Americans have been suffering from a reduction in the predominance of American-controlled corporations in the global economy. Americans themselves have been the object of investment decisions by multinational corporations based in other countries. What is happening, it seems to me, is that President Reagan is saying, through his high interest rate policy, support of the American dollar and various other hidden protectionist measures, that they are going to re-establish the American economy as the predominant force in the western world. If that means putting the economy of all their allies and other industrialized countries on the block, so be it. Indeed, even if it means the sacrifice of farmers, small-business men or even larger corporations within the American context, then that is the price they are prepared to pay in order to re-establish that dominance.

However, another thing that is going on, Mr. Speaker, is that in the final analysis the Americans will not be able to re-establish their predominance over the global economy in the way they hope to because there is a restructuring of that economy going on which very few of us, including myself, can comprehend at this moment. What the American policy adds up to can be summed up in this way: "If there is a global restructuring going on", says President Reagan, "we are going to be the last to go down. We are going to be the last to have to face up to those North-South realities, those global realities, or face up to the need for a new economic order. We are going to be the last to face up to the need for new international co-operation". And nothing can provide more concrete evidence of that than the recent decision by the Americans not to sign the international Law of the Sea Treaty. They are saying, "No international co-operation for us; we are going to hold out and reign supreme."

I was interested, Mr. Speaker, in the comments of the hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt). I believe he said that we are pricing ourselves out of business. That is a very interesting argument and I want to go into it. It is an incorrect argument, but it has an element of truth in it. It is not something we did ourselves, as the hon. member tried to say in his speech. The fact of the matter is that this analysis of why we are not competitive on foreign markets, if indeed that is the case—and it is the case to some extent—does not ask the question: how are we supposed to compete with slavery? How are we supposed to compete with children working 12-hour days, seven days a week in South Korea in export plants set up by multinationals? How are we supposed to compete with the decisions made by the multinationals to invest in Third World countries which do not have labour laws, child protection laws, or environmental laws? Is that what the Liberals want us to compete with? There is only one way to compete with that, Mr. Speaker, and that is to become the kind of country those countries are. And that is what we in this party are not prepared to see Canada become in order to remain competitive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: That is what you are talking about, my friend, whether you realize it or not. All this rhetoric about pricing ourselves out of business and staying competitive in international markets is nonsense. We are talking about the difficult position—I quite agree—that the western industrialized economies have been put in by the decisions of a handful of very powerful global corporations to locate the manufacturing and assembly end of their businesses elsewhere.

The hon. member asks: if we do not compete, what is our future? I take that as a sad admission that what I am talking about is on the right track. What we can do, Mr. Speaker, is try to tell our people what is really going on. It will not be easy, but we have to begin here at home to get some independence from that system. It will take a long time, but we have to work in international circles for the kind of economic order in which the people of South Korea and the people of Guatemala will not be played off against the people of Canada and West Germany. That is the long-term job, and I would not be half as angry about this particular measure if I thought you guys were working for that kind of reality. But you are not; you are just capitulating to international economic forces, just as you have done ever since the day you first took power.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: If I could see anything else but capitulation going on over there, then I am sure I, along with the Canadian people, would be willing to respond to reasonable requests for sacrifice and co-operation that we so often hear in the rhetoric of the Liberal Party. But that is not what we get. We get short-term, ad hoc and cowardly decisions which use the Canadian people as scapegoats by telling us, like the hon. member for London West did, that we really brought this on ourselves. It is as if the Liberals had not been in power for God knows how long. It seems like an eternity. That is what is being said, Mr. Speaker.

I will have more to say about this tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, but I dare not see the clock just in case you think I have given up my right to speak. So I will keep talking until you tell me to sit down. I have learned not to trust this place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House deemed to have been moved under Standing Order 40.

THE PRESS—PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNT TO ETHNIC NEWSPAPER

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, on June 8 I spoke in this House about the Liberal government's increasing attacks on fundamental freedoms. In particular, I warned that attacks on freedom of information are designed to enlarge Liberal power at the expense of our freedoms. For example, the Kent commission is a blatant attempt to control the press. Another attempt to control the press is through huge government purchases of advertising space. The Liberal propaganda machine, running flat out to brainwash Canadians with massive amounts of taxpayers' money, to be exact $500 million, will stop at nothing to influence the media. If you do not play the Liberals' dirty game you do not get the advertising.

I have in my hand a letter from Ira Kissin, editor of the Toronto Jewish Press, an independent newspaper in Toronto. Mr. Kissin complains of discrimination against his newspaper when he did not receive certain government advertising. He gives examples of dubious practices of paying commissions to Liberal "brokers". He has recoiled from the slimy touch of the Canadian Media Corporation, yet another of those shadowy bodies set up to distribute Liberal propaganda and to carry on the government campaigns of discrimination, restriction and influence peddling.

Why does this government discriminate against the ethnic communities in this country? Why does it continually brand as racism any attempt by ethnic communities to be treated fairly and equally? When the government accuses them of racism it is itself racist. I brought this kind of conduct to the attention of the House in a question to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming). I repeated it on June 8. With typical disregard for the feelings of ethnic communities the minister's parliamentary secretary brushed off the insult to ethnic communities. He thinks I put too much pepper in my pirogis. I would like to put some pepper on his tail to make him do his job.

The attitude of this minister and his parliamentary secretary are typical of the Liberals. Ethnic peoples are taken for granted. The Liberals look on them as second-class citizens. They say there are two founding peoples and the rest are nowhere. The Official Languages Act has been extended to increase discrimination. The Liberals discriminate in favour of the so-called founding peoples in arranging job quotas in the public service. They designate more and more jobs in favour of these people. They claim they are correcting what they call "imbalances" by "affirmative action".

Affirmative action is clearly a program of discrimination. The Liberals say they have to discriminate to correct injustice. What they really do is create injustice.

Canadians should ask what is the Charter of Rights when the government openly practises discrimination, blatantly twists and restricts information and flagrantly ignores Parliament, the people's instrument of democracy.

I say that we are all Canadians and we should all be equal, whether we are Polish, French, Indian, Chinese, German, English, Ukrainian, Jewish, Italian, or whatever our racial extraction; whether we eat pirogis or pasta; whether we have funny names or speak with strange accents. What sort of equality is there when the second largest racial group in Toronto is Italian but not part of the affirmative action programs?

As a Member of Parliament, I speak for all Canadians, not just for the founding peoples, and as a true Canadian I ask for equality for all, not like those people over there, superiority for those who provide my electoral base. I recognize one Canada in which all are equal, truly equal; a Canada in which we should all be free, truly free, free from creeping government run by dishonourable men.

I look at the perverted ideology of the Kent commission and I listen to the insults of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. I hear the smart aleck evasions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his corrupt cohorts; I weep for my country, brought low, robbed, defiled by men without honour, without dignity, without integrity. They call themselves Liberals but they are vampires and leeches, sucking the blood and draining the vitality of this country, clinging to power with the grace of the serpent and besmirching authority with the integrity of thieves.

Like many Canadians I feel the spreading plague ot totalitarianism in this country. I see it in the face of our Prime Minister. I see the terrible blight caused by the sheer incompetence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), a man—and I use the term loosely—who tried hard to outdo his Prime Minister in his contempt for Parliament and in his absence of integrity. The evidence of their crimes against the Canadian people is there in their own budget figures. The evidence of their character, of their utter lack of concern for Canada, is in their holding on to power when all the country wishes them to go. They are diseased parasites in the blood of Canada.

If I may paraphrase a former more eloquent politician, for God's sake, get out of this House! If at this late date you can pretend to be men, for God's sake go.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, last night I had the great pleasure to rise and discuss some serious issues with several serious members of the Conservative Party. I regret tonight that I have had to stay until this late hour to listen to the comments we have just heard. I understand that we are supposed to stay around and discuss government policy, but I do not know how we can possibly react to comments that are nothing but an emotional diatribe. The hon. member opposite is a former minister and I will give him credit for assuming that he has made a mistake.

Mr. Paproski: Is that all you can do? Shame!

LABOUR CONDITIONS—HEALTH AND SAFETY OF WORKERS UNDER FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity tonight to address a few comments in the late show debate to the question which I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on March 26, relating to the idea of the federal government moving ahead on health and safety legislation for workers under the federal jurisdiction by centralizing it in one agency in the Department of Labour and, by this action, improving the health and safety of all federal jurisdictional workers.

In responding to my question, the Prime Minister indicated that that was the preferred course of the federal government. However, he indicated that a number of discussions were taking place among various concerned departments of government, but that in the long run the government preferred to move in that direction. I was pleased with his response.

This has been a continuing problem as we become more conscious of health and safety issues, as problems relating to these issues have become more complicated over the years, and as greater regulations have resulted. The concept of the centralized agency to deal with health and safety matters has been adopted by some provinces, including the province of Ontario where it was centralized in its department of labour. During the past year the Canadian Labour Congress supported the idea of one central agency to co-ordinate all federal activities in this regard.

Last November 9 I met with representatives of the CLC, especially representatives of United Steelworkers of America from Elliot Lake who are under federal jurisdiction in the uranium mines there. We went over the CLC report which proposed the idea of a centralized agency in the federal government. For instance, they pointed out that 15 departments and agencies of the federal government are concerned with health and safety, including the Treasury Board, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Atomic Energy Control Board, Labour Canada, the Department of Transport and many others.

In the brief which was presented at that time they also urged the upgrading of Part IV of the Canada Labour Code and the establishment of basic national health protection standards. What was true in that presentation on a national basis can be seen in microcosm in health and safety legislation and in the problems of uranium miners, about which I am very familiar because of the large mines in Elliot Lake, which is in my constituency.

Originally, conventional health and safety were under provincial jurisdiction. A ruling by the Department of Justice in 1978 put the responsibility for conventional health and safety under federal jurisdiction, and gradually the federal government has been taking over full responsibility for health and safety.

The Atomic Energy Control Board sets standards for radiation. Responsibility for conventional health and safety now comes under Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, but, because of the historic situation, the Ontario occupational health and safety act has been referenced to the Canada Labour Code. Inspection is gradually being taken over by the federal government, with the federal government paying for all the costs already incurred by the province, indicating that it wants to have the federal government ultimately take it over. A study is now being carried out.

But what we are looking for is a new centralized agency within the federal government where the Canada Labour (Standards) Code will not be subject to other acts of Parliament. It should be the superior act. We should start with the health and safety of the worker, and work back from there.

There are a number of areas where there should be upgrading, for instance, concerning the right to refuse to work, unsafe conditions, and health and safety committees. Much work has already taken place with consultation between the Department of Labour and the CLC as well as groups like the United Steelworkers of America.

I know that within some federal government departments there is some resistance to this concept of one centralized agency. I hope that will be overcome soon. Hopefully, the government will be able to table a bill before this session recesses, so that over the course of the summer interested groups would be able to consider and review it. Then, as we move into the new fall session of parliament, we could move right ahead, adopt it and implement the improved standards for workers under federal jurisdiction. In this way, the federal government would have a standard, a model second to none in the country, which would guarantee the health and safety of all workers under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) for saying that since the introduction of the original statutory provisions for health and safety in the Canada Labour Code in 1965, the federal government has provided outstanding leadership in the field of health and occupational safety. We have done that as the result of the hard work, conscientious effort and the proven consciences of hon. members like the one we have just heard, the hon. member for Algoma. Thanks to the pressure that he has put upon us, we have maintained our leadership and our hard work in this very important area. The government intends to respond to his concerns. We intend to ensure that all aspects of federal occupational health and safety rules and regulations provide consistent and effective protection for all workers in this country.

The hon. member has referred to our record which has come about because of his hard efforts and those of some of our outstanding ministers. He has referred to the need for consultation. I can assure him that consultation will continue, that we will ensure that labour, management, and the private and public sectors will all have an opportunity to consult. He has also suggested the need for expanded leadership on our part in this area, and he has given us several examples of how we could follow this suggestion. I thank him for his advice and I assure him that action will be forthcoming. I hope he will continue to provide us with the insights that are so important for these advances.

SOCIAL SECURITY—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on June 23, 1982, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether or not the upcoming budget would involve an increase in guaranteed income supplements and Canada pension disability pensions. This question reflected the concern of the NDP caucus for those on fixed incomes who depend on the public pension system and who are seeing their standard of living seriously eroded by inflation. At that time I might have added veterans pensions, as they are also a matter of concern to us.

At that time, the Prime Minister did not answer my question, but chose instead to evade the question by referring to an earlier question by a colleague of mine in the same question period. I now understand why. We have seen the budget of June 28 and we now know that it involved a decrease in pensions for those who receive only the old age security portion, the universal portion, and no real increase for those receiving the guaranteed income supplement.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has been saying this will mean only a $55 sacrifice in 1983 for those receiving OAS but not GIS. Our research shows that this is a false and self-serving miscalculation. The real cost to pensioners who receive only the old age security will be closer to $300 each over the next two-year period. This will be particularly difficult for the many pensioners who, although they do not receive the income-tested GIS benefits, live at or just below the poverty line, yet they are required to make the same sacrifice as pensioners who are quite affluent.

The National Council on Welfare has estimated that over 100,000 poor and near-poor elderly Canadians will have their incomes reduced as a result of the indexation limitation of the OAS which was proposed in the budget of June 28. Furthermore, there is an additional cumulative loss which starts the year that full indexing is reinstated, if indeed it is reinstated. This loss is due to the fact that re-indexing, when it takes place, will be established on a reduced basis, thus creating a permanent shortfall in benefits into the indefinite future.

In doing what they have done to old age security pensions, the Liberals have made a significant social policy decision which should not go unnoticed. They have attacked a universal program. They have set a precedent which must not go unchallenged, a precedent which demonstrates that when the Liberals have to choose between the social programs and the interests of their big-money friends, it is the big money that wins and the pensioners who lose.

We in the New Democratic Party are not surprised. We have always maintained that the loyalty to big money is the fundamental loyalty of the Liberal Party, in spite of whatever naive delusions that certain Liberal backbenchers might maintain about that party. In spite of those fantasies, when it comes to a choice between big money and pensioners, the pensioners lose. We are not surprised, but we do regret the consequences for the elderly in Canada. They deserve better than to be used as scapegoats in a fight against inflation they have not caused for the benefit of those who have caused it.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raised a very serious topic and then treated it badly. Let me make it very clear right now that this government does not intend to abandon any of its commitments to retired Canadians—on the contrary. As public opinion grows in reaction to the June 28 budget, it is quite clear that pensioners agree with the government's actions. We have not asked Canadians to cut back at the expense of the elderly, as my hon. friend tried to claim.

My friend referred to our big-money friends, the supposed pals of the Liberal Party. No such pals exist. Those are the people who know how to take advantage of inflation. They want to promote inflation, to continue those kinds of sick economic policies that undermine the very health of our economy because they personally make a profit from it.

We in this party say that the pensioners, the low-income earners and the veterans are the victims of inflation. That is why we must stop inflation. We have said that 12 per cent weakens our economy, that 6 per cent makes it grow and prosper. That message must be communicated.

The hon. member quite rightly brings to us, and I applaud him for it, a very sharp reminder of our duties toward vulnerable people. Let me give an equally sharp reminder to him. If he constantly panders to people's fears, constantly assures them that the government will fail, and constantly says that 12 per cent plus will be the normal, that is what will happen. People like him have an obligation to bring a message to us, but they have an equal obligation to take a message home. They must also say to people that if they demand 12 per cent, if they demand more and more out of the shrinking pie then they will rob the pie until there is no more.

We are not going to abandon our commitments to older people. We have the $35 monthly increase in the guaranteed income supplement; just as we have ensured that the people getting the GIS are protected and continue to get full indexing. We have met the demands of the veterans in regard to pensions, just as we have met the demands of the lower-income families in regard to the increase in child tax credits. We are now continuing our commitment to low-income Canadians.

I would let the hon. member know that cheap rhetoric about the big gap there is, does not wash. He weakens his own argument. He must bring his argument to us and match it with a reminder to Canadians to learn how to cut down just a wee bit, in order to fight this terrible disease, inflation. It is a disease which hurts the weakest, who are the most vulnerable. If the hon. member has a message for me, he must also have one for his fellow Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.24 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AGRICULTURE

SEED POTATO INSPECTION FEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has proposed an 8 cents per hundredweight additional charge to the cost of seed potato inspection paid by farmers in P.E.I. and New Brunswick. This amounts to a 1,200 per cent increase in the cost. This increase is being imposed while the inspection service to the producers is being reduced. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the Minister of Agriculture aid his government in creating a 6 per cent country by greatly reducing his potato seed inspection fee.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION DANGER TO LAKE ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, a New York State study shows that levels of the deadly chemical dioxin in the Love Canal area during the years 1980 and 1981 were among the highest ever recorded. Just recently a United States district judge approved an environmentally unsound toxic waste agreement relating to the Hyde Park dump, one which will allow the continued seepage of deadly chemicals from the dump into the Niagara River and on into Lake Ontario. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That whereas four million Canadians use the waters of Lake Ontario for drinking and recreational purposes, the Minister of the Environment take positive action now, even to the extent of taking legal proceedings so as to protect the water quality of Lake Ontario and particularly to prevent the agreement entered into with respect to the Hyde Park dump from becoming a precedent with respect to the Love Canal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE MINISTRY

CALL FOR REDUCTION IN SALARIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Yesterday Agriculture Canada announced that it takes $450 more this year than last year to provide the average family with a basic healthy diet. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the Prime Minister and his cabinet show Canadians how their 6 per cent restraint program will work and agree to lower their salaries to that of the ordinary Canadian, and that they attempt to feed, clothe and shelter their families on $18,600 this year, finding a way to cope with price increases that are currently running at twice the level of their recommended 6 per cent solution.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

DOMESTIC CHARTER FLIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, bearing in mind the geography of our nation and our settlement patterns which, combined, tend to lead to more regionalism than would be desirable in our nation, and noting that you can fly more cheaply from Edmonton to Hawaii than from Edmonton to Quebec City, more cheaply from Vancouver to London, England, than from Vancouver to Toronto, or more cheaply from Toronto to Florida than Toronto to Calgary, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That this Parliament encourage the Minister of Transport to set in place policies that would allow for more extensive use of internal charter air flights and that these policies be set with the objective of nation building and harmonizing each region's understanding and appreciation of this great nation, Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, despite attempts by the government, through measures contained in its recent budget and other hastily conceived responses, the situation with respect to the business community remains dangerously critical. In the first six months of this year business bankruptcies climbed to 5,383, that is, 37 per cent higher than during the same period last year. That is to say that 5,383 employers lost their businesses. Experts feel the number may be as much as five times higher when those who do not bother to file for bankruptcy are included in the total. The tragedy is compounded when, using estimates of 11 employees per company as an average, the number of jobs lost, because of these businesses folding, could be well over 250,000 since the first of the year. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the government take immediate action to reduce high interest rates in Canada, rates 3 per cent higher than in the United States, and rates which are a direct, major cause of this devastation of our business community.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the Department of Agriculture reports that, due mainly to Liberal high interest rates and a devalued Canadian dollar, food prices rose 1.3 per cent in the month of June alone and so far are up 10.5 per cent on a year to year basis. At the same time the government proposes to limit wage increases to 6 per cent. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That the Minister of Agriculture explain to this House how he expects ordinary Canadians to feed their families under the regime imposed by the Liberal government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF TOXIC CHEMICALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In May the New Democratic Party Environment Task Force released a report on the problems of toxic pollution in the Great Lakes and Niagara River. Since then there have been further reports of dioxin contamination, and further cutbacks to Great Lakes research by the Reagan administration. A task force recommendation for an all-party committee to study these and related problems was presented to this House by the NDP House leader on June 30. Since we have now learned that the Minister of the Environment is opposed to this idea, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House supports the idea of an all-party committee to study the production, use and disposal of toxic chemicals in Canada; and that the Minister of the Environment show some leadership by supporting the proposal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

INCOME-AVERAGING ANNUITY CONTRACTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the farmer's retirement pension is his land, and the businessman's nest egg for retirement is his business. Farmers and merchants do not get pensions from governments or Crown corporations. The November 12 budget ruined the retirement plans of hundreds and perhaps thousands of farmers and businessmen through the elimination of income-averaging annuity contracts. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the IAACs be reinstated in order that our merchants and farmers, who have contributed to this country for up to fifty years or more, may have a reasonable chance to retire in some dignity.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

VIOLATIONS IN UKRAINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, according to the World Congress of Free Ukrainians there has been particularly severe repression taking place in the Ukraine in the last few years, and especially in the last few months. Apparently the Government of Canada has not had a single release of a Ukrainian political prisoner attributed to its efforts. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky):

That this House instruct the Canadian government to become more sensitive to this area of human rights violations and more forceful in demanding changes in the plight of specific Ukrainian political prisoners and repressed persons.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCREASE IN RATE OF GOVERNMENT REGULATED PRICES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure the minister is aware that a Statistics Canada paper has recently pointed out that while inflation increased during the period April, 1981, to April, 1982, by 11 per cent, government regulated prices, that is, prices on telephones and heating, and hidden taxes such as those on the sale of stamps and gasoline prices, have increased by 18 per cent, while market prices have increased by only 9 per cent. Since this government-controlled component of inflation has clearly played a predominant role in our inflationary problem, would the minister explain why the government has done nothing more than put a wishy-washy statement in his most recent budget to try to address this problem?

• (1415)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the statement was clear and firm, and it will be implemented.

Mr. Paproski: When? 1986?

Mr. Wilson: That is the sort of response which undermines the total efforts of the government to get a restraint program working.

DIRECTIVE TO REGULATORY AGENCIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the minister must surely be aware that regulatory bodies have to abide by legislation, by regulations, and by their past practices in carrying out the regulatory process. They are not compelled to respond to some general statement in a discredited budget.

Is the government proposing to issue a specific overriding statement to these bodies to put some teeth into the request he appears to have made and, if so, what will be the nature of such a directive?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think I indicated earlier in reply to questions that it was the specific intention of the government to direct the agencies within its jurisdiction not to exceed the 6 per cent and 5 per cent guidelines. The Prime Minister has already communicated the wishes of the government to all the ministers, who in turn will be in touch and communicate with the regulatory bodies. In adition to that, it is the intention of the government to monitor very carefully all price changes within the government structure and to limit them to 6 per cent, unless circumstances justify different treatment.

Mr. Clark: What circumstances?

Mr. MacEachen: This aspect of the 6 per cent limit will be followed very carefully by the government through the regulatory agencies and through the departments of government. If the hon. member has further suggestions as to how this particular aspect might be undertaken, I would be glad to hear from him because I expect he and his party would also be prepared to support all efforts to bring the economy from the present 12 per cent level of prices to a 6 per cent level of growth and recovery.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, let me make it quite clear that we do support a program of restraint if it means something.

Mr. Chrétien: Vote for it.

INQUIRY RESPECTING PROPOSALS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, what I am trying to find out is whether there is something in the direction the minister is taking, or the whole government is taking, with respect to regulated prices which will have some teeth, which will work, and which will bring down regulated prices from the 18 per cent level of the past year to something closer to the 6 per cent and 5 per cent in the budget. Unless there is a specific directive, a statement by the minister, a budget has no weight at all.

Let me ask a final question of the minister. Since restraint efforts can only succeed if governments can be seen to be doing everything they can to control prices under their jurisdictions, and since prices are the main problem, would the minister advise the House whether the government has put forward any specific proposals to the provincial governments to address the problem of regulated prices?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has spoken about administered prices as if they were the single component of the restraint program. They certainly are an important component, but an even more important component is the wage restraint program which is now before the House of Commons. Wages and incomes constitute the greatest source of increases throughout the entire economy. the hon. member could help us all by getting the bill that is before the House to committee at the earliest possible date.

• (1420)

The hon. member will have to wait to see the program develop, because there will be specific instances of price increases that will be proposed in excess of 6 per cent that will have to be dealt with by the government. In cases where it is possible, it is the intention of the government to review the conclusion of regulatory agencies and to insist, if any prices recommended are above 6 per cent, that they be justified in the circumstances. I assume that the hon. member would agree that in certain circumstances it would be absolutely necessary to permit prices to rise above the 6 per cent level, but they would be exceptional circumstances and would have to be justified on a case by case basis.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—PROPOSED INCREASE IN LAND RENTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of the Environment who is in charge of national parks. Given that restraint in increasing prices is essential if there is to be effective wage restraint; and given that this government is asking industry and business to keep down prices and wages; and given that in the Banff town site Parks Canada is holding wages to 6 per cent but is increasing rentals by from 15 to 40 per cent and perhaps more, is the government prepared to practise what it preaches and cut the proposed increases in land rents on August 1 to not more than 6 per cent?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is referring to a decision which was taken two years ago and which was required to be taken because at that time leases had expired. He knows, or ought to know, that there are a variety of leases, whether cottage leases or commercial leases, and whether people have a need to reside in the parks or not. Other than for commercial purposes, the increase in leases is below 6 per cent and, indeed, there is considerable criticism that the rents being charged are below what should be charged, and are below what is charged in similar circumstances in the eastern part of the country. I do not think it would be appropriate for me to follow the course of action that the hon. member has suggested.

RENTS CHARGED TO PARK EMPLOYEES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the minister is not keeping a close tab on what is going on in Banff. Workmen in his department are now getting rental increases of 15 to 30 per cent, that is $100 per month, on August 1. Will the minister tell us how an employee who receives a 6 per cent increase in wages will be able to pay a 20 or 30 per cent increase in rent? That just does not make sense.

Will the minister also tell us why we are being asked to fight inflation when the government's policies are inducing inflation? As the minister knows, the rentals in Banff have increased by 100, 1,000, and in one case by 1,045 per cent. That is inducing inflation? Would the minister comment on that?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to do so. If the hon. member is referring, as his question seems to imply, to people who need to reside in Banff in order to accomplish their work, then they pay a nominal rent which is well under $500 per year.

SMALL BUSINESS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who will know that today we found out that business bankruptcies have increased by 37 per cent in the first half of 1982 and that, if receiverships and walkaways are included, the figure would probably be 25,000 or 30,000 individual firms. Presumably the government is planning to assist Dome Petroleum during its financial difficulty. Does the minister plan to assist the probable 25,000 to 30,000 businesses that also will be in financial difficulty in the remaining six months of 1982?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker. A number of measures have been announced in the budget that will have the effect of assisting small businesses which may be in financial difficulty. It would be desirable if more could be done, but within the circumstances that presently face the government it is doing the maximum that is possible to assist small businesses get through this difficult period.

• (1425)

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, if memory serves me, it seems the budget assists small businesses expanding their operations, in that the small business bond of course is virtually no longer available to assist the survival of small businesses.

BANK OF CANADA

REQUEST THAT GOVERNOR BE DIRECTED TO LOWER INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): To go into another area, Madam Speaker, we all know that the reason businesses, large, medium or small, are having difficulty surviving is because of high interest rates. The Bank of Canada Act, in Section 14(2) says:

—the Minister may, after consultation with the Governor and with the approval of the Governor in Council, give to the Governor a written directive concerning monetary policy, in specific terms and applicable for a specified period, and the Bank shall comply with such directive.

Is the Minister of Finance prepared to provide the survival mechanism for all business in Canada and all Canadians by directing the Governor of the Bank to lower interest rates?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the simplicity with which the hon. member asks the question might lead some people to believe that it is a solution to the current problems. There is no way in which an effective reduction of interest rates can take place without first a reduction in the level of interest rates in the U.S. and a reduction in the level of inflation in Canada. A directive to the Governor of the Bank seeking an arbitrary reduction in interest rates, unrelated to the economic facts which exist in the country, would have very damaging effects on the future of the economy. What might appear as a temporary lowering of interest rates would undoubtedly lead to a considerable number of adverse consequences, including subsequently higher interest rates in the country. That is why I have not thought it wise to ask the Governor in a directive to do the impossible.

BANKRUPTCIES

INCREASE IN NUMBER AND IN LIABILITIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, we know that business bankruptcies have increased by 37 per cent in the first six months of this year. Over 5,300 businesses have gone bankrupt, with liabilities almost double last year's $1 billion. The reason they are in trouble is because of high interest rates.

Given the fact that up until now the majority of bankrupt companies have been small and medium size, but today's Financial Times suggests that by winter many large companies will be going bankrupt, and given the fact that the minister's budget proposals for helping business have all been referred to that blue ribbon committee of experts who will not report until September, so that it will likely be next January before the minister has any proposals to help, can we assume that he has no further ways to help business reduce interest rates, and therefore by the end of the year we will see that 11,000 or 12,000 businesses have gone bankrupt?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member states that the cause of the bankruptcies is high interest rates. Has he stopped to ask himself what is the cause of high interest rates?

Mr. Crosbie: This government is.

Some hon. Members: You.

Mr. MacEachen: My answer to that question is high prices. Until we get our rate of inflation down, do not ask for relief on the interest rate front. If the hon. member were serious in his question and in his interest, he would co-operate with the President of the Treasury Board and get the wage restraint bill through to committee, instead of taking up endless time obstructing it in the House of Commons.

HOUSING

RENT INCREASES CHARGED BY CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance and refers to some of the comments he made earlier today when he appealed for help from the opposition in respect of instances where there can be a rollback. May I point out to him something that is well known to the minister responsible for housing, because I have had correspondence with him, as have other members, about rental increases in many of the over 9,000 rental housing units across the country owned by CMHC. When the minister talks about help with agencies within federal government jurisdiction—I have two instances here, one in my riding where rents went up on July 1 by 20 per cent, and another one in Pierrefonds, Quebec, in the riding of Vaudreuil where rents have gone up 42 per cent since the budget, did the Minister of Finance intend this rollback to 6 per cent to apply to CMHC, a federal government agency?

• (1430)

Mr. Crosbie: The minister of housing does now know.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I answered a similar question yesterday afternoon put by an hon. member of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Do it again.

Mr. Cosgrove: I indicated that the advice from my officials, and preliminary advice in looking at the definition of a regulatory body as used in the statement of the minister on the night of the budget, at first review did not include Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation under its mandate, under the National Housing Act. More than that, I further indicated that in an attempt to meet the spirit of the government's move in its determination to get inflation down to 6 per cent, officials are looking at what the impact would be on the taxpayer of our attempt to control the deficit and also to control the inflationary pressures, both in wages and in prices, that appears in the rental figures which the hon. member has used.

APPLICATION OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM TO CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance who must be aware, as are most members of the House, that the public is fed to death with this minister of housing fiddling around with reviews and waiting to see what the impact is going to be.

Mr. Crosbie: They are fed up with the Minister of Finance and with the Prime Minister.

Mr. Lawrence: My question is a blunt one, either to the Prime Minister who has sent a letter to all of his cabinet, or to the Minister of Finance. These properties are owned by CMHC and rented by CMHC, on which there have been huge rental increases since the budget; in most cases as of July 1.

Mr. Crosbie: Dominion Day.

Mr. Lawrence: Does that 6 per cent restraint program indicated in the Minister of Finance's budget—I will not repeat his words but they certainly cover vital commodities—cover CMHC, or does it not? One way or the other, please.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have made it clear, I think many times in the House, that the restraint program will apply to all agencies and all departments of the government.

Mr. Crosbie: When?

Mr. Clark: Parks Canada?

Mr. MacEachen: It applies to increases that come into effect over the next 12-month period.

Mr. Crosbie: What about Sussex Drive? Does it apply there?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member will realize that with respect to roollbacks, as he used that term, the only one that has occurred is with respect to the salaries of ministers and Members of Parliament, salaries which were reduced from 11 per cent to 6 per cent—or will be reduced as of July 1. I attempted to reason earlier with the hon. member's colleague that in certain cases price increases for institutions and for public utilities might be justified. The premiers, I understand, suggested at the First Ministers' conference that in certain cases their public utilities would not be able to follow the 6 per cent guideline because they would be losing money or they would be unable to cover their cost increases. That seems to me to be a reasonable point to make.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What a dodge.

Mr. MacEachen: But, Madam Speaker, I want to ask the hon. member would he support keeping the justified cost increases or rental increases to 6 per cent in CMHC, and increase the deficit by a similar amount—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —which is a decision the government would have to take.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Zap, you're frozen.

BANKRUPTCIES

IMPACT OF BUDGETS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister clearly has one standard for people working for the government and another standard for government charges.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is absolutely right.

Mr. Blenkarn: The government can charge whatever it feels like but, as far as what the government pays out, it is going to limit its expenses. That is another way of increasing taxes on Canadians.

Mr. Crosbie: That is right.

Mr. Blenkarn: Since June 30, 1980, bankruptcies in terms of liabilities have increased 260 per cent, and the minister has been Minister of Finance all during this period. I would ask him to tell us right now where, in his three budgets, did he do anything to reduce interest rates and to improve the inherent business conditions in the country? Or is that 260 per cent increase in business bankruptcy losses the direct evidence of the kind of management he has given the country?

Mr. Malone: Wreckonomics.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question is purely rhetorical and purely political.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacEachen: Maybe the member would like to reflect upon a period, say, in 1978, when I was not Minister of Finance, when bankruptcies were running at 42 per cent in the first six months of the year. How would he put that in his pipe and digest it?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You can do better than that.

Mr. Crosbie: It is Chrétien's fault.

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister knows that every person commenting on the matter has talked about the fact that interest rates are the principal cause of business defalcations and the problems we have. We have had a high interest rate program in the country for nearly all of the time the minister has been Minister of Finance. What programs has the minister initiated over three budgets to reduce interest rates? While he is figuring out another fast, smooth, and cute answer for that one, will he tell the House why Canadian business today pays at least 3 per cent more for borrowed money than business in the United States pays for borrowed money?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, maybe for starters the hon. member might understand that the rate of inflation in the United States is about 7 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: Why is that?

Mr. MacEachen: It is close to 12 per cent in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: That might help the hon. member in a study of the elementary facts facing our economy.

PUBLIC WORKS

FUTURE OF DALY BUILDING IN OTTAWA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works. It deals with the fate of the Daly Building, a federal building in my riding which has been vacant for at least three years. The press has reported today that the building in question will be demolished. I would like to know from the minister whether that decision is final, when the building will be demolished, and does the minister have any comments to make on the decision?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the issue of the Daly Building, I am sure, is of interest not only to members on this side of the House but to those on the other side of the House as well. It is an issue that is a difficult one for many people inasmuch as it attracts very heated opinion one way or the other, on both sides. It is because of that, and in light of press information on the decision of Treasury Board, that I have indicated it is my wish to appeal that decision and to put the issue in the context of a study that is under preparation, of the total accommodation within the Ottawa capital region.

Mr. Clark: Another study?

HOUSING

PROPOSED MORTGAGE REDUCTION SCHEME

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question that I believe only the Prime Minister can answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Only your best friend will tell you.

Mr. Deans: I hope the Prime Minister can answer it. He will recall that two days ago he was asked whether or not the cabinet had finally decided on the implementation of the mortgage interest relief program which had been indicated was to be under consideration, according to the budgetary statement of the Minister of Finance.

• (1440)

I am sure the Prime Minister will recall that he said that the cabinet had not made a final decision and therefore it would not be possible for him to commit the government to a 3 to 6 per cent decrease in mortgage interest rates for people purchasing homes. He surely must know that not only did the minister of housing indicate that the program was in place but he has subsequently indicated in a press interview, carried in today's Globe and Mail, that only the detail remains to be worked out, and that the program is forthcoming. Who is right?

Is there such a program and will it materialize? Is it forthcoming? Can people go out and buy houses secure in the knowledge that that program will in fact yield the benefit of the 3 per cent to 6 per cent decrease in mortgage rates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, since the program was put forward in the budget, and more particularly in the form of a white paper, it does indicate the government's commitment to carry out that program. That is what a white paper is. It is not a green paper only involving consultations on possibilities. It is a program of the government. That is stated in the white paper. It has been stated in the budget of the Minister of Finance, and the minister of CMHC responsible for housing is quite correct in indicating that it is a government policy.

Mr. Clark: It is on again.

Mr. Trudeau: But the implementation of that program will be in the nature of all policies which flow from white papers.

Mr. Crosbie: Maybe, maybe not.

Mr. Trudeau: They are put in the form of white papers—this is well known to all parliamentarians—precisely because they are made to be the objects of consultation—

Mr. Crosbie: And ridicule.

Mr. Trudeau: The ridicule that the Tory members are mentioning now generally comes from the Tory party and it is because they look at their own navels too much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Not a very attractive prospect either.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: They do not want to have to look at yours, too.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I at least address my answer to the members of the NDP who are interested in this mortgage instrument and interested in seeing interest rates come down.

Mr. Stevens: One socialist to another.

Mr. Trudeau: That is the situation. I made it quite clear in the House that we had a white paper because we wanted consultation with the various institutions and people who are involved in the implementation, in the application of such a policy. Naturally, we have to wait for the results of that consultation before we can say that we are going ahead with the implementation of it. That is exactly the situation. The government has that policy. We want to see it applied, but we do want the feedback from that committee which we set up, before proceeding with the legislation.

Mr. Deans: I appreciate that answer, I must say.

IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, referring to the budget statement, the Minister of Finance said, as reported at page 18880 of Hansard of June 28, 1982:

> Tonight, I am tabling a consultative document containing proposals, which, if implemented, would have the following major effects: . . . Buyers of new homes would be able to secure mortgages at significantly reduced interest rates—3 to 6 percentage points lower than prevailing rates.

I ask the Prime Minister if I can then assure Canadians who come to me that they can renew mortgages today, that they can buy homes today, and that they will be able to take advantage of the 3 per cent to 6 per cent reduction that the Prime Minister has indicated is government policy and will be forthcoming, and on what date can they expect to see that policy brought to the House of Commons for deliberation and disposal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, my answer would be just as conditional as the question is. If the blue ribbon committee, the consultative committee, is prepared to support this policy of the government in general terms and in detail, and then if the House of Commons will give expeditious approval—

Mr. Taylor: If, if, if.

Mr. Trudeau: —then he can give this assurance to his constituents. I keep getting interruptions from the Tories again about the hypothetical nature of it. As parliamentarians they should know what a white paper is. It is the intention of the government to apply and implement the policy. It is done in the form of a white paper rather than the introduction of a bill for first reading, because we want to go into consultation. It is possible, perhaps even likely, that the people whom we are consulting will suggest some form of modification which will be an improvement.

Mr. Deans: But it will happen?

Mr. Trudeau: In that case we would be happy to accept it. It is our intention to pass this legislation, to bring it into policy. But it is not our intention to pre-empt the conclusions of that committee. They agreed to sit on a committee for the purpose of improving the policy enunciated in the white paper. If their intention was to condemn it, presumably they would not be on the committee. Therefore I think that the hon. member can give that assurance as to the policy. I do not think he should give assurance as to the particular details.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING PROVISION OF GUARANTEE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister giving us a guarantee that the Canadian government will implement a system for providing loans at 3 per cent to 6 per cent below the market rate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would refer the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to my previous answer.

Mr. Clark: No, you are not going to get away quite that easily, Prime Minister.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the new definition of a white paper is a snow job in the hands of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Let me put the question very directly to the Prime Minister of Canada. Is he giving the House of Commons a guarantee that the Canadian government will implement a system for providing loans at 3 per cent to 6 per cent below the market rate? Is he giving us that guarantee?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the right hon. member refers to the question asked by his colleague in the New Democratic Party, he will see that it is, in essence, the question I was attempting to answer. I am sure that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would have been able to understand my answer if he had not been drowned out by the guffaws of people sitting behind him and next to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister may know that in a broadcast on July 11, a texted broadcast, his minister responsible for housing said, "The Canadian government will implement a system for providing loans at 3 per cent to 6 per cent below the market rate." Was the minister telling the truth?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the right hon. member refers to my answer he will see the answer to that question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INDIAN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The poorest people in Canada, the Indian people, are having difficulty pinning down the Indian Economic Development Fund. This fund is essential to provide employment for those people. Can the minister say whether the $345 million set aside for the next four years will be spent, and is the deferral just for two years? The native people want to know this.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, essentially that is correct. It is a deferral. It is not a cutback in the over-all amount. The shortfall for this year and next year will be added to the back end of the over-all commitment, which remains.

NATURE OF DEFERRAL

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, the native people and I are having difficulty finding this money in the estimates. We would also like to know just what the relationship is between the Indian Economic Development Fund and the Western Economic Development Fund and if this deferral is, in fact, moneys coming out of that fund, a fund in which we have not seen any money to date?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the plans for this fund and the terms of its over-all amount, the $345 million and the number of years that it is spread over, are referred to in the Minister of Finance's budget speech or, more particularly, the papers that backed up that budget speech. If the hon. member wishes to check it, he will find all the relevant material there. If he is not able to see it, I will be more than pleased to point it out to him.

LAW OF THE SEA

UNITED STATES REJECTION OF TREATY—EFFECT ON MINING EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to the Law of the Sea Treaty and the development in that particular area which was brought to the world's attention last week. By now I am sure that the minister will have had an opportunity to examine closely the statement of the U.S. administration, and to have spoken with his colleagues, particularly the Minister of State for Mines and other ministers. Recognizing that Canada is an important producer of nickel and copper, I am wondering whether he is in a position to say what effect the U.S. decision will have on Canada's employment opportunities down the road, recognizing that this matter would not apply next year but that it is coming?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada is very disappointed with the announcement of President Reagan that the United States will not participate in the Law of the Sea Treaty. We are presenting a note to the United Sates, I believe today, to that effect. Nevertheless, we will continue with our intention of making that treaty as universal as possible.

With respect to the kind of question that the hon. member asks, it is really far too soon to estimate the possible effects on employment. For example, the continued presence of the United States might have led to further modifications in the Law of the Sea Treaty with respect to deep seabed mining which might have been less favourable to Canada. I think it is therefore impossible for us to answer, in a precise and short fashion, the kind of question which he asks. But, generally speaking, the decision by the United States not to sign the treaty and not to continue in negotiations is a retrogressive step.

IMPACT ON OFFSHORE ECONOMIC ZONE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, bringing the matter closer inshore, and closer to us in the matter of time, is the minister prepared to make any comments on the implications of U.S. withdrawal from the convention on Canada's exclusive economic zone, as far as fishing, exploration for petroleum resources, mining, and pollution are concerned?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think that there will be no adverse effect to our claims under the treaty, assuming that the treaty goes into effect, and that we are signatories of it, which I fully expect we will be. The question is whether the United States would be able to make similar plans, whether it could be successfully argued that the provisions of the treaty were limited in their advantages to those who are actually participants in the treaty and are not matters of general international law, or customary international law, as a result of the treaty. I think that this is a legal argument and an international political argument concerning which there will be much controversy in the years to come.

MEDICAL CARE

PROVISION OF SERVICES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is one that I might normally address to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but seeing it is becoming increasingly apparent that it is the Minister of Finance who is in charge of medicare, I will direct my question to him. The Minister of Finance will know that in Nova Scotia, his home province, the provincial minister of health recently announced lay-offs in the health care sector and that user charges are about to be introduced in that province. The reason given for this is the deficit of that province and the related reduction in federal transfer payments. This is exactly what I warned would happen when the federal government cut back the money attributable to compensation for the termination of the revenue guarantee. Irresponsible Tory governments have been given an excuse for attacking medicare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Will the government now admit that it was wrong and that it recklessly played with the future of medicare in this country, and will it now do something about that mistake that it made earlier this year?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, it will be difficult for a province, be it Nova Scotia or any other province, to impose user fees in the health system on the grounds that moneys were reduced for health payments to the provinces, because they were not. The provinces are receiving, on the average, for every one of the coming five years, an increase of approximately 13 per cent in health payments, so I do not understand how user fees could be charged to people in Nova Scotia—

Miss MacDonald: It is 4.6 per cent.

Miss Bégin: —on the ground of a supposed reduction which never took place.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows that she, along with the Minister of Finance, created the political context for the things that are happening in medicare in the provinces. The parliamentary task force said that the federal funding of health care was adequate, but its analysis included the revenue guarantee money. Since then, federal funding has been reduced and costs have increased.

Will the government reconsider its ill-advised funding reduction and resume a posture which would make it possible for the government to bargain with integrity for clarified, toughened and enforceable national health care standards?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, last summer the provincial premiers among whom was the Premier of Nova Scotia, said themselves that they never spent the revenue guarantee on health services, so there is no way they can now pretend that their cut backs had anything to do with the federal government.

Mr. Blaikie: You always did. You changed your mind.

INDUSTRIAL AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF GUELPH AREA IN ONTARIO

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Over one month ago officials from the Guelph area met with the minister to request that their area be designated under the ILAP program. Since then figures have been released showing that lay-offs in the Guelph area in June of this year were higher than in June of last year by some 452 per cent. Now that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has looked after his own area through a $6 million interest-free loan, when will the people of the Guelph area be hearing from the minister?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the Cabinet Committee responsible for the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program will be sitting between now and the end of July to consider applications under this program.

[English]

CRITERIA FOR DESIGNATION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in the month of June the community of about 75,000 had lay-offs totalling 1,077, and the city's welfare budget was overspent by some 30 per cent at this point. What evidence is needed by the government before it is prepared to take action to mitigate the disastrous effects in this area caused by the government's general economic policies?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, although the hon. member sounds very convincing, I did not attend the meeting with the city officials of Guelph, so it would be very difficult for me to give a satisfactory answer to his question at this time.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

DECENTRALIZATION OF PORTIONS OF DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Earlier in the question period the minister said that his restraint program would apply to all departments of government. I am concerned that his program is being undercut by some of his ministers. Is the minister aware of the fact that there was announcement yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare of a massive and expensive decentralization and relocation program, involving movements of part of that department from Toronto to Peterborough, Chatham and Timmins, and from the national capital area to Peterborough, Chatham and Timmins, a very expensive program in a period of restraint? If he was aware of that, can he tell us how that will help to reduce the deficit? If he was not aware of it, would he undertake to look into it from the point of view of the reduction of the deficit?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I was aware of that announcement. Indeed, I participated in the announcement effecting the relocation from Halifax to Sydney, Nova Scotia, of a branch of the minister's department. The hon. member has not related the implementation of our decentralization policy to the price guidelines of 6 per cent and 5 per cent. I do not see the relationship between the decentralization program and these price guidelines. I was pleased that we were able to restore these projects which had been so unjustifiably cancelled by the former government during its short period in office.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If the Minister of Finance does not see it, most other Canadians do. Public servants and others are being asked by the government to accept a cap of 6 per cent and 5 per cent with respect to their own personal programs, but it does not apply to the government, and that is the message in this restraint program.

TIMING OF TRANSFERS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the President of the Treasury Board this question. Is it true that he sent the Minister of Public Works to Peterborough to make his announcement about a change that is going to take place in 1986? Is there some motive in the fact that these agencies are moving into the Liberal ridings of Timmins, Sydney, and Chatham in 1984 and 1985, but moving into Peterborough just in time so that they can arrive after the next election and can therefore be promised by the candidate in Peterborough at the time of the next federal election?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, yesterday morning I did attend in the Conservative riding in which the city of Peterborough is located. I attended a press conference under the chairmanship of the mayor of Peterborough, who welcomed the news of some job generation activity by the federal government in that Conservative riding. I might say that I did that in co-operation with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Clark: What are your plans for 2003?

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—ABSENCE OF MR. ETHIER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have noted over the course of the last few days that the Deputy Chairman, the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier), has not been in the chair. I want to bring to your attention, his attention and the attention of the House that he has been missed, that he enjoys the confidence of the House and we look forward to his return.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: No, he does not enjoy the confidence of the House.

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT OF MR. COSGROVE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to a statement made by the minister responsible for housing. I know that he has either unconsciously or unintentionally misled the House.

Mr. Crosbie: He is unconscious all the time.

Mr. Domm: The minister responsible for housing said he is making this move to Peterborough with the concurrence of the mayor of the city of Peterborough, and that is not correct.

Point of Order—Mr. Nielsen

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is debating a question. He is not raising a point of order.

MR. FULTON—REPLY OF MR. BLAIS RESPECTING TICKETS ISSUED TO PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES FOR TRAVEL ABROAD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of yesterday's question period. I have had an opportunity to speak to the minister. He said in his answer to me, I recall, that the letter he sent me was in answer to a question that I put on the order paper. That is not correct. I think the minister would like to clarify that. It was in relation to the 1,500 tickets for international travel during a one-month period. The minister said it was for tickets that referred to travel from any place in Canada to foreign countries. I think the minister is now aware that that statement was also incorrect and that the 1,500 were in fact from Ottawa.

Madam Speaker: Order. It is up to the minister or any member to correct a wrong statement. Members may not correct statements of other members.

Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, whether it is a point of order or a question of privilege, I will leave for the Chair to decide.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Chair cannot determine under what circumstances a member is rising. The member has to indicate to the Chair why he is rising, whether it is to raise a point of order or a question of privilege. The hon. member rose on a point of order that clearly was not a point of order. He was obviously debating a question. That is his privilege, but not under a point of order. It cannot be done. I may take this occasion to tell the hon. member that the same question cannot then be brought under a question of privilege.

MR. NIELSEN—RESIGNATION OF MR. ETHIER—POSITION OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on the matter raised by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). In Hansard for July 8, as reported at page 19165, the hon. member for Glengary-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) informed the House he was submitting his resignation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the members of his caucus. Further on the same page the implication was left that he was tendering that resignation to you. Perhaps a little prematurely, Madam Speaker left the impression that she has authority to accept that resignation. I would submit, of course, that you do not, and that the Prime Minister, the government, and only they, have the authority to appoint officers other than yourself to sit where you are as a result of all-party agreement.

I want, on behalf of the members of this party, to dissociate this party totally from the remarks and the endorsement of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I do so because of the rather intemperate words used by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell at the time he was addressing the question of his resignation to the Chair. He said:

> Madam Speaker, as an official of the chair I might be breaking with long-standing tradition when I ask to be recognized, but I have to dissociate myself from what is happening now. We have long-standing practices here and rules of procedure that we all obey. This is a 15 minute bell, and I cannot continue in my responsibilities if members are not going to obey the rules and procedures.

There is a clear inference there, an accusation by an officer of the House.

Mr. de Corneille: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps the reverend member might want to applaud when I have completed the quote.

The member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell then went on, still serving as an officer of the House, to say:

> Therefore, I am telling my Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the members of my caucus that I cannot serve as an officer of the chair because those members not present—

Clearly referring to us.

Mr. Deans: How can you say that?

Mr. Nielsen: Because we were the only members not here. He went on to say, clearly referring to us:

> —those members not present do not comport themselves according to the rules and procedures.

That was bad enough, but he went further and made this clear accusation:

> They are not acting as true representatives of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I see hon. members in the Liberal Party supporting the government, applauding that kind of language coming from an officer of the chair. They do not know much about this institution if they can support that kind of intemperate language. Therefore, the member in question, having made his own bed, will now have to lie in it. He certainly cannot be accepted by us after making those accusations against members of the House. Otherwise, how in the world can we have any confidence in him, knowing the feelings he has expressed in the written record of Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, regarding this point of order, I would like to explain our point of view, since my fellow House leaders for the two opposition parties have already had a chance to do so. I shall try to be brief and get to the point right away. The basis for the comments made by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) is an incident that, as the House is aware, occurred last week and involved the application of two of our Standing Orders. The first one is Standing Order 60(8) which determines the procedure to be followed for putting the question on the budget motion, and it stipulates very clearly that the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings on the sixth day and forthwith put the question on the main motion. That is as clear as can be! This Standing Order should be read in conjunction with Standing Order 9(2) which deals with the time during which the bells may be sounded, and I quote:

When, under the provisions of any Standing Order or other order of this House, Mr. Speaker has interrupted any proceeding—

That was the case, since the proceedings had to be interrupted because of Standing Order 60(8).

—for the purpose of putting forthwith the question on any business then before the House, the bells to call in the Members shall be sounded for not more than fifteen minutes.

So this is very obvious, and the Standing Order is very clear in this respect. So much so, in fact, that, as I was told some time ago, the House Leader for the Progressive Conservative Party, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) had taken steps to ensure that this Standing Order would be duly applied and that the bells would not be sounded for more than fifteen minutes. In fact, on that occasion his whip entered the House alone, and ours had to follow subsequently to allow the division to take place. These rules are not new, the procedure is known to everyone and the Standing Order is extremely straightforward.

Therefore, what is the member for Yukon's case against the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, who from his own seat, and in his own terms, was simply referring to established practice and to a Standing Order which is extremely clear in its wording? He was merely saying what the law prescribes and acting in accordance with parliamentary procedure and the Standing Orders. What is so reprehensible about all that? What is reprehensible, Madam Speaker, is the fact that on that evening, the Progressive Conservative members ignored parliamentary practice—as they ignored their own request on an earlier and similar occasion—and ignored the Standing Orders of the House. Today, in a very underhanded manner, and this is an understatement, Madam Speaker, they are trying to discredit an hon. member who was only seeking respect for this institution.

I want to congratulate the New Democratic Party House leader for his excellent judgment in the circumstances and for his courtesy in asking that the resignation, which in any case was not tendered according to form—it was not a real resignation—by the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell be reconsidered. He did not resign. I am happy to see that he acknowledges that this member is extremely valuable and that he has performed his duties well, both as the Chair's representative and from his seat in the House. However, I must deplore the less than direct and less than honest attitude shown by the Progressive Conservatives, who today are refusing to gave their consent, which is not absolutely essential, but they are refusing to acknowledge, out of courtesy, that the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell was only performing his role of experienced and responsible parliamentarian with a concern for the respect due Canada's Parliament. I deplore this attitude on their part, and as far as we are concerned, the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is experienced and responsible enough to make his own decisions. We welcome the support of the New Democratic Party, and once again, we deeply regret the lack of maturity, irresponsibility and childish attitude shown by the Progressive Conservatives and their leader.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I was involved in that the other night, as members know. After the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) had said what he had said, using the words applying to the members of my party that they are not acting as true representatives of this country, you recognized me, after you had asked the member to reconsider his decision. I said this:

Madam Speaker, if I may, I would like to speak to the matter raised by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. I hope that, before he gives any finality to what he has indicated to the House today—

In just that previous statement—

—he would consult very carefully with his seatmate—

And who happens to be the Deputy Speaker—

—with the officers of the Table, with Madam Speaker and with one member in particular from my party, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). By doing that he will understand exactly what occurred tonight. I do not want to make any point. Others will argue about it perhaps. But I wanted to say that to my hon. friend who, in the sense of my riding, is almost a neighbour. I hope the hon. member will reconsider the matter.

The matter being the charge that he made. That was the invitation put to the hon. member, in good faith. Then the hon. member said, in part:

I appreciate the kind words of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton—I meant what I said before; I do not speak with a forked tongue, and I stand by what I said—if members do not live by the rules and procedures that were given to them by the Chair. Therefore, I stand by what I said a while ago. Please accept my resignation, Madam Speaker.

Now, Madam Speaker, I think that casts not only a burden on the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell but it casts a great burden on you because you have to decide whether or not that resignation, having been tendered and not withdrawn, ought to be accepted in these circumstances.

I regret to have to say this, because of what I said the other evening. I would think it would not serve the best interests of the House if the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, not having accepted the invitation, which was put forward in good faith, to withdraw, at least to reconsider, at least to check, did not do so.

I say that with some considerable regret because I was one of those who at that time wanted that kind of withdrawal and went the second mile to try to achieve it.

If we are talking about peace in the House of Commons, it would be best if the member did not occupy the chair. I say that with great regret but I believe that as a member of the House of Commons I had best say it firmly, because I was involved the other evening.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, when I rose I did not intend to create such a furore.

Some hon. Members: Ha, ha!

Mr. Deans: I hear a few little "ha, ha's" from the Tory caucus. Let me put my reasons four square. First of all, I can well appreciate the frustration and anger that was in the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell on that evening. I can well understand it, given that the reason for it was the fact that the members of the Conservative Party refused to come in for a vote and that there was no justification for their actions. Every other member in the House of Commons was being required to sit here and wait while they decided when and if the vote was going to be taken.

I put it quite bluntly that I resented it that evening, and I resent the unctuousness of the House leader of the official opposition when he rises and talks about people's responsibilities. It is about time he understood his responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Over the course of the last year we have had nothing but bullying bar-room tactics from the Tories. I am personally sick and tired of them.

On one evening they all rise en masse and walk out. And if I had not risen to oppose a request from the government for a House order they would have missed an opportunity to speak on a bill. On another day, they walk out of the House and refuse to come in and vote. On another day, they storm the Speaker's chair screaming and shouting like raving maniacs.

I say to you, Madam Speaker, that I seriously regret that the Conservative Party shows no generosity of spirit in this regard. I suggest to them that they should understand the duress under which the member was put and they should appreciate that he has, under normal conditions, acted fairly and impartially and that they should not take out their childish ignorance on that member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I will not comment at length on the most recent effort of the New Democratic Party to support the Liberal Party.

An hon. Member: Tell the truth. Tell it like it is.

Mr. Clark: I am asked by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader to tell it like it is. The Chair will know that the situation on that Thursday evening was as follows. Information was given by the Table and by the then occupant of the chair, the Deputy Speaker, that caused members of this party to believe, on the basis of that instruction, that the 15-minute rule would not or might not be enforced rigidly. Madam Speaker knows that to be the case.

Madam Speaker: May I interrupt the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) before he goes any further in this kind of exposition of the facts.

It is true that some information was asked for as to whether this was a 15- minute bell or not. Two persons were asked. Both answered, "Yes, it is a 15-minute bell". The second question was, "Could it go beyond 15 minutes?" The answer—more or less, but meaning the same thing—given by the two people in question was, "We have seen it go beyond," and that is an absolute fact; it often goes beyond 15 minutes. It does not go much beyond 15 minutes, but it does go beyond 15 minutes. That is the answer which was given, and it could only mean that it was a 15-minute bell but that it could possibly go beyond that time.

When I was told that there would be a delay in the vote, I said to a member of the Conservative caucus: "That is fine; I might wait for a while, but not indefinitely." I sent a message by one of the officers of the House to the Conservative caucus advising them that I would be taking the vote momentarily.

Those are the facts. I did have to rise, and I apologize if I had to interrupt the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, a thing I do not like to do. However, as the Speaker I feel a very grave responsibility to defend the officers of the Table, who give advice privately to hon. members and to those who serve with me to the best of their knowledge.

Mr. Pinard: Half your caucus walked away anyway.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You have set the record straight, exactly in the terms I would have used and, by doing so, you have also corrected the impression left by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Blaikie: She did a better job than you.

Mr. Rossi: The point is 50 per cent of your caucus was gone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Tell the truth.

Mr. Clark: We have heard from an hon. member from Montreal who, if he had any courage, would encourage his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to call a federal election today. If he did, he would no longer be a Member of Parliament for Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: As Your Honour has just indicated, the point has to do with the capacity of this House to accept the neutrality of the Chair. Our capacity to respect the neutrality of the Chair in the case of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) has been very seriously undermined by, first, the statements of that hon. member in the House, which have recently been read into the record of the House by the House leader of the official opposition. The hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell said of Members of Parliament, whose servant he is and regarding whom he is supposed to act absolutely free of partisanship:

They are not acting as true representatives of this country.

Those were his words. He was subsequently immediately given an opportunity by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to study the facts, of which Your Honour has now apprised the House and the country. He was given that opportunity and asked to reconsider. He has not taken that opportunity. He has not reconsidered. He has not withdrawn his attack upon members of the House of Commons with regard to whom he is supposed to be neutral. He cannot command our respect as someone who would carry out his responsibilities in a neutral way. That is the sum of the situation. He has had several days to repair his reputation. He has chosen not to exercise that option. We in this party can have no confidence in his neutral exercise of the functions of the Chair of the House of Commons.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I must say that I am somewhat disturbed by the lack of generosity of spirit of the official opposition. I think it can be said of the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole that he has performed his duties in an admirable way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: He has shown no partisanship whatever, despite the guffaws from the opposition. On not one occasion did hon. members opposite have to raise that issue with this individual sitting in the chair. If hon. members opposite are somewhat disturbed and require an apology, knowing the hon. gentleman as I do I am satisfied he would do that, but I hope hon. members opposite will show some generosity of spirit for a gentleman who felt as he did.

I commend the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who tried to bring the facts to the attention of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier), but in this case there should be some generosity of spirit on the part of the official opposition.

Mr. Clark: He has had three days.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, I will only take a moment. As one who sat and listened the other evening—and listened with concern because I am, I suppose, considered by some to be a devotee of the House of Commons and the traditions and procedures which make this place function—I find it unfortunate that we have strayed from the issue to a degree. The issue is not what happened the other night and not whether 15-minute bells became 20-minute bells, 25-minute bells or 30-minute bells. I was here and had full confidence in Your Honour's judgment and assessment that evening.

The issue now is the integrity of the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole. I am appalled that the opposition is questioning, even for a moment, the integrity, sincerity and non-partisanship of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier).

Mr. Nielsen: Of the Chair.

Point of Order—Mr. Nielsen

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) reminds us all the time about not speaking from our seats. I ask the House leader of the official opposition to do the same.

The rules are simple. If members of the official opposition feel they have no confidence in the integrity of the Assistant Deputy Speaker, they know what to do, and that is to propose a motion accordingly.

Mr. Clark: He has already resigned.

Mr. Mackasey: The Assistant Deputy Speaker of this House is not appointed by the Speaker. His name is put before all parties of the House of Commons at the appropriate moment, and their confidence is expressed in a vote, if they so desire.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not right.

Mr. Mackasey: When the Assistant Deputy Speaker of this House was appointed to his role, all members of the House of Commons had an opportunity at that moment to determine whether they felt he would be competent. That is traditional. He was selected by the government. If the opposition feels the hon. gentleman is not competent, they are free to move a motion accordingly.

Mr. Domm: He resigned.

Mr. Mackasey: However, I want to say that the Assistant Deputy Speaker can submit his resignation to only one person, and that is to the person who appointed him, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Clark: He has done that.

Mr. Mackasey: The second point which leaves me just a little concerned is the interpretation of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, for whom I have great respect and to whom I listened the other evening. I got the mistaken impression from listening quite attentively to the hon. member, and because of the way he phrased his remarks, that he was saying to his neighbour, the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, "Please reconsider your resignation". If the hon. gentleman feels differently now, I have to accept his word but I felt very proud of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton the other evening when he expressed his friendship for the Assistant Deputy Speaker. He spoke of him in glowing terms as his neighbour, and from what I could gather from that intervention the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton suggested to the Assistant Deputy Speaker that he relax, review the situation and change his mind about resigning. There was nothing said the other night which left me with a different impression. In fact, if I am not mistaken, Your Honour expressed the same view.

I hope, before we make this a full-blown debate on the events of the other evening, that we merely remind ourselves—

Mr. Clark: That he has resigned.

Mr. Mackasey: —that the Assistant Deputy Speaker is an honourable man. He will, no doubt, make his views known to the Prime Minister as to whether he wants to remain in that capacity. The Prime Minister may want to suggest to him that he clarify the expression "They are not acting as true representatives of this country," just as the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton clarified for me what he meant. Unfortunately he clarified it from a gesture of friendship to a review of the facts. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton is looking at me now. I say to him directly that the impression I got, not only from what he said but also from his tone—and my knowledge of his friendship with the Assistant Deputy Speaker and his concern for the House—was that what he was really saying to the Assistant Deputy Speaker the other evening was: "You have offered your resignation in haste. Please reconsider that resignation and withdraw it."

Mr. Clark: "You made accusations which you have to withdraw."

Madam Speaker: I suppose a few words on my part in answer to the presentation made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) are in order at this point. If the hon. member reads carefully the words I spoke that evening, he will find I did not in any way accept the resignation of the Deputy Chairman of Committee of the Whole because, of course, the matter of resigning from the position he occupies is entirely between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and himself.

I am perfectly aware that the hon. member was probably not well acquainted with exactly what was going on, and seeing that he was obviously quite disturbed by the fact that we might not be following the rules of the House as he understands them, he wanted to make a few remarks precisely about that matter. Knowing that he was not acquainted with the facts, hon. members will see, if they read Hansard, that I told him at that point that when he became acquainted with the facts, which I would be only too happy to explain to him later, he would probably want to reconsider what he was saying at that particular time.

As far as I am concerned, the hon. member is still serving the House in the capacity in which he has always enjoyed the confidence of the House until now. Unless there is a formal motion to the contrary, I cannot allow the conduct of an hon. member to be discussed further. The only way to discuss the conduct of an hon. member, of course, is by a formal motion to that effect. As far as I am concerned, the hon. member still has the confidence of the House.

I leave it entirely to him to decide whether he wants to clarify some of the statements he made on that particular evening. He may do that. The hon. member has taken a few days of rest. I think he was particularly disturbed at the events that evening, so he has taken a few days of rest—

Mr. Clark: He was here today.

Madam Speaker: But not sitting in the chair.

Mr. Clark: He was on the premises.

Mr. Cousineau: Why don't you listen? Be polite for once!

Madam Speaker: He has taken a few days of rest on my advice. I think we will leave the matter where it is, in the hands of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I agree that you have no onus here with respect to the matter. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) was correct as far as he went, when he said that the only person who has the power to consider the resignation is the person who appointed the hon. member. That is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He may or may not want to take action on the strength of the words that the hon. member used that evening.

I would point out that neither is the onus on this party to take any steps. There was a clear, repeated statement by the hon. member that evening that he was resigning. On the first occasion the statement was directed to the Prime Minister and members of his caucus. He made the second statement, in the event that it was not quite clear to whom the resignation should be submitted, to you while you were in the chair. On two occasions he stated quite clearly that he was resigning. I therefore agree that there is no onus on the Chair for the reasons stated and there is certainly no onus here. We are acting, in future, on the strength of that resignation.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BLAIS—REMARKS OF MR. FULTON RESPECTING TICKETS ISSUED TO PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES FOR TRAVEL ABROAD

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order brought to the attention of the Chair by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Yesterday in the House I provided him with information that added to information I had previously provided to him in a letter. I want to confirm that the information relating to the 36,000 trips was accurate in the sense that it dealt with bookings that originated throughout the country. However, in view of his reaction I have had my officials check the second piece of information provided, relating to the 1,569 trips. I wish to confirm—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There is a difficulty here. The hon. member can be allowed to correct his statement but he was certainly responding to a point of order which I did not accept. It is a bit difficult to rule on that. On the one hand, the hon. minister might have been allowed to correct a statement but I do not think he did it in the proper way. However, the point is made.

PETITIONS

MR. DOMM—IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM—MEMBERS' DUTY TO PRESENT PETITIONS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, it is my understanding that every Member of Parliament has a responsibility and a duty to present petitions to the House on behalf of his or her constituents. It has again been brought to my attention that a government MP has denied this ancient and undoubted right to all of his constituents to present a petition to this House. Therefore, on behalf of the constituents of Niagara Falls and supported by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley), I present the following petition which says:

We believe the pace, degree, and nature of change to Systems International metric should and must be determined voluntarily in the various sectors of trade and industry by the individual firms or industries directly concerned and with minimal government interference;

MR. SHIELDS—AIRCRAFT PARKING FEES AT FORT McMURRAY AIRPORT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the responsibility and the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Athabasca. The purpose of the petition, signed by 46 residents of Fort McMurray, who are private pilots and aircraft owners, is to register their protest against the decision taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to charge aircraft parking fees at the airport in Fort McMurray.

The nature of this petition is to request that the government immediately withdraw this parking fee until such time as the parking lot at the Fort McMurray airport is upgraded to a level deserving of a parking charge. The parking area is nothing more than a gravel pit which cost nothing to build and costs nothing to maintain. The petitioners request that Transport Canada improve the quality and safety of the parking lot at the Fort McMurray airport before the charging of parking fees is considered.

The petitioners hope, in Madam Speaker's examination of this petition, that you will find the petition is in order, sense the urgency of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral of this petition to the Standing Committee on Transport at the earliest possible moment.

MR. BRADLEY—RECONSIDERATION OF BILL C-10

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 18 church members from the town of Dunnville in the constituency of Haldimand-Norfolk. The purpose of this petition is to protest the government's proposed changes in Bill C-10, which will allow a court of law to interfere in the affairs of the church body. The nature of the petition is to urge the government to drop the provisions in Bill C-10 which would infringe on the rights and privileges of the church to take a moral stand on matters concerning membership of that church body.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find the petition in order, and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of Speaker of the House to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible time, in order that the sanctity of the church in Canadian society can be preserved.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR SECOND READING OF BILL C-124

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among representatives of the parties and that it has not been possible to reach agreement under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B in respect of the proceedings at the second reading stage of Bill C-124, an act respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada.

I wish to give notice that, at the next sitting of the House, I shall propose a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, to allocate one sitting day to the said stage of the said bill.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,061, 4,247, 4,253, 4,256, 4,264 and 4,334.

[Text]

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

Question No. 4,061—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were purchases by the National Arts Centre of Almaden Wines from California made directly with the Liquor Control Board of Ontario?

2. Were salesmen, representatives or representations received directly or indirectly by the Centre from Almaden Wines and, if so, what are all the details, including the names and job designations of those concerned at the Centre and those making such representations?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications):

I am informed by the National Arts Centre Corporation as follows:

1. All wine is purchased by the Centre from the Liquor Control Board of Ontario.

2. Mr. Alex Doczi, salesman representing Melchers Inc. in Ontario, called upon Mr. Donald Marriott, Director of Restaurants, and the Almaden wine was sampled by Mr. Marriott, Mr. Ashok Dhawan, Restaurants Controller, and other restaurant staff at which time price was also discussed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,247—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Communications have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the department and, if so, are they embodied in a code of conduct or other specific document and is the code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the Department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. The Department of Communications has written guidelines governing the conduct and standards of behaviour for employees of the department. These are contained in the following documents:

(a) "Standards of Conduct for Public Service Employees" guidelines are distributed to every employee on appointment and these guidelines deal with conflicts of interest.

(b) The Treasury Board Personnel Management Manual and the Departmental Personnel Manual in the chapters dealing with: attendance, leave and hours of work; discharge and dismissal; discipline; union activities; political activities; discrimination.

These manuals are not distributed to employees but are available to employees on request. Such policies are not generally available for public use, since they apply specifically to public service employees.

2. Since most collective agreements in the public service require that any document relating to disciplinary action must be destroyed after two years, the list below indicates the disciplinary actions taken in the Department of Communications since April 1980. Current provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act prevent the release of names of employees who have been subject to disciplinary action.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,253—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Finance have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the department and, if so, are they embodied in a code of conduct or other specific document and is the code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)):

1. The Department of Finance Canada has written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the department. Standards of behavior for employees of the Department of Finance are outlined in the Conflict of Interest Guidelines and the Personnel Management Manual which are available to the public and in any other directive or policy issued by Treasury Board as the employer.

The Conflict of Interest Guidelines deal with the disclosure of matters such as business or other interests which might be in conflict with official business, and also deal with other related subjects. Directives or policies issued by Treasury Board as the employer pertain to subjects such as political partisanship, discrimination, sexual harassment, public money and property, disclosure of official information, etc.

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982 no employees of the department were disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for departmental employees.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,256—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the department and, if so, are they embodied in a code of conduct or other specific document and is the code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

1. Yes, DIAND has written rules governing the conduct or standards of behaviour—DPC 10 Departmental Disciplinary Guidelines; Annex A to DPC 10—Departmental Code of Ethics; Annex B to DPC 10—Disciplinary Guidelines for Employees Engaged in Fire Prevention and Suppression Operations. The DPC 10 is available to the public.

2. Based on the nature of the discipline and the procedures for the transfer, storage, and destruction of personnel records, departmental records for the five years preceding April 1, 1982, are either incomplete or unavailable. More precisely, certain disciplinary actions are withdrawn and destroyed in accordance with collective agreements and/or grievance decisions. In addition, the department is not in a position to release names as it would be in contravention to the Canadian Human Rights Act. The following therefore, is a compilation of available statistics:

Year	Written Reprimand	Suspension	Discharge
1979	28	22	0
1981	58	17	7
1982	11	3	0
Undated	2	1	0

N.B. There is no record for oral reprimands as these are not recorded.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,264—Mr. Crosby:

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works):

1. Public Works Canada has a Standard of Conduct Policy published 8 July 1974. From this policy the Conflict of Interest Guidelines issued 6 September 1974 and the Discipline Guidelines and Procedures issued 1 March 1976 and revised 29 July 1979 have been developed. These publications are available to all departmental employees and to the public.

2. In accordance with collective agreements, any documents or written statements related to disciplinary action which may have been placed on the personnel file of an employee shall be destroyed after two years have elapsed since disciplinary action was taken provided that no further disciplinary action has been recorded during this period. For this reason, information prior to May 1980 is no longer available unless there has been further disciplinary action. We have, however, provided discharge information for the past five years. Names of the individuals involved have not been included as this would be contrary to the Canadian Human Rights Act.

GOVERNMENT POLICY FOR AWARDING OF CONSULTING AND PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 4,334—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is there a standard procedure for awarding consulting work for departments and agencies and (a) if so, what is the procedure (b) if not, what guidelines are laid down for the awarding of professional consulting work?

2. Does the government have a policy in this regard and, if so, what is it?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board):

1. The government's policy with respect to the awarding of 'consulting and professional services' is set out in the Treasury Board's Administrative Manual, Chapter 315, which provides departments with the procedures appropriate for specific circumstances.

(a) These procedures are:

(i) "selection without competition"—only one firm is considered; for use in specified exceptional circumstances;

(ii) "selection by qualifications"—contract is negotiated with firm or individual considered best qualified; used when proposals are not warranted;

(iii) "design competition"—prizes are awarded for firm or firms submitting best designs, and contract is negotiated for design and related work; used for major works of national significance, for design and build projects, or as the first phase of a product development competition;

(iv) "selection based on proposals excluding price data"—proposals are invited from a limited number of consultants on a short list; used where the work can be only broadly defined, the detailed work requirements are to be identified by the selected consultant, and the cost cannot be reliably estimated;

(v) "selection based on proposals including cost data"—similar to (iv) except for the provision of cost data as basis for price negotiations; used where costs can be estimated reliably;

(vi) "selection based on proposals including price"—similar to (iv) and (v) except that a price is offered; used when an accurate estimate of the costs is possible;

(vii) "selection based on price offered"—selection of qualified consultant based on best price and fully compliant offer; used when the work can be specified precisely, the cost can be estimated reliably, more than one firm is capable and interested, and work acceptance criteria can be clearly specified.

2. Yes, see answer above.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the other notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the motions stand?

MEASURE RESPECTING COMPENSATION IN THE PUBLIC SECTOR OF CANADA

The House resumed from Tuesday, July 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Johnston that Bill C-124, respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, in my comments on Bill C-124 last night I had begun to show how certain of the assumptions the Liberals have made in their economic strategy are seriously flawed. I would like to continue that critique by examining the Liberal theory of inflation and the way this bill shows that they either do not understand inflation or they refuse to acknowledge the real causes because doing so would involve much more courageous decisions than simply blaming the average Canadian.

Liberal views of inflation do not seem to take into account the tremendous increases in energy costs which have taken place since 1973, and particularly the last few years. Those increases have cut into the viability of the economy as it had been previously organized. The needed transition from a cheap energy economy to an expensive one will require more than simply asking average Canadians to take less so that the wealthy and powerful can maintain the standard of living to which they have become accustomed. The reality of a shrinking economic pie means that those who have much will have to take less in order that those who do not have so much will be able to maintain what they have. Anything other than this approach means a departure from what Canadians have come to believe about the Canadian commitment to greater equality of the human condition. Yet it is precisely the opposite approach that the Liberals have taken by giving in to the demand of the powerful that their standard of living be protected at all costs, even if it means cutting back on things like pensions.

However, Mr. Speaker, related to the problem of increased energy costs is the whole issue of diminishing returns on capital investment. Capital invested in energy extraction is increasingly unproductive and burdensome. For example, witness the situation of Dome Petroleum which is in trouble in spite of the fact that for years it has received over a dollar from the Canadian public for every dollar it spent on exploration. Witness the malaise of the debt-ridden nuclear industry in this and other countries. Those are two good examples of the increasing unviability of traditional energy extraction projects, but it is not only in that area that the traditional notions of capital investment are breaking down. It is happening in many other sectors as well. Productivity needs to be seen not just as labour productivity. There is also the question of the declining productivity of capital investments. The productivity of traditional investment models has been overrated for years. In fact, it has been assumed that the only productivity that ever needed to be improved was labour productivity. In reality, the success of capital investment strategies in the past has relied on the ability of the private sector to externalize the social and environmental costs of their decisions, to pass on those costs to consumers, taxpayers and governments. Governments then ring up large deficits in coping with these externalized costs, and they are then reviled by the same private sector for overspending.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that these externalized bills of the economic system under which we have lived for far too long are coming due. Rather than face up to this, the Liberals are trying to put off the evil day. They cannot show leadership on this issue. Their ties to the people whose self-interest and ideological assumptions need to be challenged are too close. Indeed, they are often the same people. We all know of the great incestuous relationship which exists between the boardrooms of the nation and the Liberal caucus and former cabinet ministers. Meanwhile, of course, the Conservatives are still fantasizing about a return to the heyday of the kind of economy which brought us to where we are now. In this respect they are philosophically useless and, practically speaking, very dangerous in the kind of ideas they are trying to promote. Mr. Speaker, there will be no turning back of the clock. President Reagan and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) are wrong.

An hon. Member: Everyone is wrong except you.

Mr. Blaikie: I for one would not like to see the clock turned back even if it could be, if by that we mean a return to the heyday of capitalism and the further destruction of the community, the environment and the future that that would involve.

Mr. Gustafson: It built everything this country has.

Mr. Blaikie: The only way out of our present situation is to go ahead. This will require a critical approach to all of our assumptions—I mean by everyone—about how the modern economy works. In my view there appear to be at least two very different problems we have to face. The first is to a degree contained within the system as it now operates, that is, the increasing extent to which the western economies are now being victimized by the global mobility of the very corporations that use them to develop into the very powerful institutions that they now are. I touched a bit on this in my speech last night. Domestic and international justice is what is at stake in this question. This raises the age-old question of removing macroeconomic decision-making from the confines of private self-interested boardrooms, and bringing our economy under public control so that the common good will be the criterion for investment decisions and for technological decisions, not the profit margins of the global corporations.

The second problem, Mr. Speaker, is that of the economic model within which all of us too often work, whether of the left or the right. That is the model which assumes infinite growth in a finite world. It sees increasing economic growth in the traditional sense as the solution to all our problems. As we face the deindustrialization of Canada as a result of multinational decisions, and as we face the increasing counterproductivity of traditional energy strategies and other capital-intensive strategies, we must look to how we might reindustrialize our economy, you might say, to fit the new global realities. Hopefully we will be able to do this in a global context free from the distorting and destructive decisions of the global corporations. That would make the transition much easier because they will resist us, they will try to accommodate the world economy to these new realities in a way which serves their interest and which will make what is needed much more difficult.

Some speak of what is coming as the post-industrial age. Others might prefer to call it reindustrialization. But whatever we call it, it will have to be done deliberately and intelligently. The invisible hand of Adam Smith, in which my colleagues on the right still fervently believe, will not lead us out of the mess we are in. Indeed, it has led us to the mess we are in. The invisible hand of Adam Smith is more like an invisible foot which tramples clumsily and insensitively on social, human and environmental needs rather than responds to these needs, as my friends to the right would dearly love to believe.

Neither, of course, will publicly planned economies dependent upon the wrong assumption and on the wrong goals lead us out of the mess we are in. We all need to move out of the era of large, top-heavy bureaucratic organizations, public or private, which maximize material production and wasteful consumption based on non-renewable resources and into the era of economies based on regenerative resources and energy, managed for sustained yield productivity, that is, the sustainable society. That is the era in which we should move now if we are to show any leadership at all here in this House.

We can have an exciting future if we would just let go of some of our traditional assumptions about the economy, about what constitutes economic growth and about what constitutes a standard of living. If we let go of those assumptions and acted with an imagination tempered by justice and the vision of a renewed human community in which people are no longer commodities but real people whose dignity and whose potential are irreplaceable, our future would be bright.

I believe that the philosophical and the political tradition which the New Democratic Party represents has the conceptual resources to deal with these problems. If I did not think that, I would not be standing here today. We cannot change in this country or in any other country what we do not control, what we cannot have any say in. And it is only the New Democratic Party in this country which is committed to bringing important economic decisions before the bar of the common good, however we may come to define that in the years ahead.

There is another cause of inflation, very seldom mentioned in this House, which needs to be mentioned. It is the point I have been trying to make all along. It is far too simplistic and it is like hiding your head in the sand to imagine that wages are the cause of inflation in the western economies. Another cause of inflation is the arms race. That is only too seldom mentioned. The hundreds of billions of dollars which are spent on the arms race create deficits, distort spending priorities of governments all around the world and perpetuate underdevelopment in Third World countries.

Here is another area where the Liberals have talked a big show about disarmament, but wimped out when it came down to the wire. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went to the Special Session on Disarmament at the United Nations, he did not say anything significant at all. Anybody could have said what the Prime Minister said. He showed no leadership. He showed no independence from American foreign policy. What he said was just the same old following along. Now that it is not what Alexander Haig says, I guess it will be what Mr. Shultz says. Whatever he says will guide what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) has to say.

The Conservatives, of course, have not bothered to pretend that they are for arms reduction. All they do is to try to exploit the peace movement for political purposes by branding disarmament people as Soviet sympathizers, and thus doing what harm they can to an important cause, just like when they side with murderous regimes in central and South America.

The world is in the grip of powerful, irresponsible forces that must be challenged. Here in Canada, under the leadership of the Liberal Party, we can either become the banana republic that we have in a way always been, or we can begin to build anew our own house. We can get our own house in order, and from there be able to contribute to a more just and sustainable global society. The Liberals and Conservatives will not acknowledge this reality. We do acknowledge it. We invite all Canadians who love life, who love freedom and the notion of a renewed human community to join with us. We do not have all the answers, but we have the political freedom which the two other parties have demonstrated time and time again they do not have. We have the political freedom to begin the work that needs to be done.

I want to say something about the Progressive Conservative response to Bill C-124. It is hard to know just what the Progressive Conservative response to Bill C-124 is. When the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) rose, he sort of weaseled and waffled his way and was not sure just what the position of his party was with regard to this bill. Do you know what the problem is, Mr. Speaker? Right now, the Conservatives would vote against anything that was proposed by the Liberals and for anything that is in opposition to the Liberals. I need only refer to recent motions where the Conservatives voted for the strengthening of FIRA, and then, on the next day, someone in the Progressive Conservative Party moved a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 calling for the weakening of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. They did not even have the decency to wait 48 hours. The Progressive Conservatives voted for a tax on excess bank profits. I am sure that if we moved a motion calling for the nationalization of the banking community in this country, the Tories would vote for it because they are so desperate to create the impression that they are different from the guys over there. They are not any different from the guys over there. But that is what is going on. The Tories will vote for anything. Now they do not know what to do on this bill. They have a real dilemma on their hands. The Progressive Conservatives approve of this program. They approve of Bill C-124. This program does not go as far as the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) would have liked to have led his party when it was in power, but it is getting there. It is called, "Blame the public sector. Blame the civil servant. Blame government spending." It is the sort of simplistic economic analysis that we always hear the members of the Conservative Party mouthing incessantly until we are almost sick to our stomachs from having to listen to it.

The Conservatives really want to vote for this bill, but they have to create the impression that they are different from the Liberals. It will be interesting to see what they will do. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) has now given notice of closure. The day of decision for the Progressive Conservative caucus is nigh. We wait with some anticipation just to see how far the Conservative Party has strayed into that area of politics where they vote for things purely on strategic considerations that have nothing to do with politics or have nothing to do with what they actually believe is the case. The irony of it is that every day the Conservatives become more and more like the Liberal Party.

Of course, they started out like two peas in a pod. But, in a more generous moment, we used to be able to say that the Progressive Conservatives had a few principles. They were dumb principles, but they had a few principles on which they liked to stand in relation to the Liberals. But that is not the case any more. Now the Conservatives will vote for anything. That is what happens when it comes to Bill C-124 and other matters.

Mr. Gustafson: It is the NDP-Liberal coalition that is causing the problems in this country.

Mr. Blaikie: The Conservatives will not tell us what their policies are. They are just against the Liberals. In fact, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is quoted In Maclean's magazine as saying that if he really told the people what he would do as finance minister they would never get elected. What a wonderful quote. Isn't that delightful? It remainds me of the time when the hon. member for St. John's West came to Manitoba prior to the 1979 election. At that time he said to the people in Thompson, Manitoba that Joe Clark will make Sterling Lyon look like a pussycat. We made great use of that statement and we made great use of that indication of the kind of government we would get from a federal Progressive Conservative government. We saw many Progressive Conservative candidates who were incumbents go down to defeat in the 1979 election. I must say I am grateful to the hon. member for St. John's West for this new revelation of just what kind of policies we would see from a Conservative government. They are so had that he does not dare tell us what they are.

I do not want to go on at great length about the Progressive Conservatives. They are their own worst enemies. I am sure that they have a great deal of time left before the next election to do even more harm to themselves than they have already done.

Let one thing be clear, that from the analysis of the situation which I have attempted to lay out this afternoon and last night, the Liberals and the Conservatives are of a piece. There are problems which all of our ideological assumptions must take into account. To that extent I have tried to say that we all have a very difficult time ahead of us in figuring out the global economy. But I firmly believe that neither one of these two parties which I see before me here now has the conceptual or philosophical resources with which to deal with these problems.

When it comes down to the Liberals making a choice between protecting the people of this country and protecting their sources of campaign funds and sources of power, or when it comes down to choosing between the people of this country and the big money, the big money wins. But, as I have pointed out, the situation we have is more complicated than that, and I hope hon. members will take the time to consider what I have said today.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a few remarks this afternoon. I had not intended to speak since I have so much other work to do, but I always feel very inspired when I hear a young socialist stand up to speak. I am always impressed by the sincerity of the philosophies which they shower us with, and one is always tempted to get up and set the record straight.

It was Winston Churchill who once said that the inherent vice of capitalism is the unequal distribution of blessings and the inherent virtue of socialism is the equal distribution of misery. A socialist of the type we just heard from is usually the guy who has nothing and wants to share it with everyone else.

If they believe that their socialist philosophies and ideologies work so well, why do these young fellows not take a trip around the world to visit the places where I grew up and places behind the Iron Curtain to see how socialism really works? They pretend to be social democrats, but they openly admit that they are socialists, and they do not even understand that difference. What they do not realize is that those things which they want to divide, which are so unevenly divided right now, came as a result of the free enterprise system in the first place. Now we have to turn it over to all these yong upstarts, give it away and waste it all.

There is no question that there are inequities in this bill. We do not like the fact that everyone should be held to the 6 per cent rule as provided for in this particular bill. We do not want Michael Pitfield to get another 6 per cent to his approximate salary of $140,000 that he is now receiving. That is not fair compared to the people earning $12,000 or $15,000 a year who will also have a 6 per cent increase. I presume Michael Pitfield buys his groceries and gases up his automobile at the same places that the lower paid civil servants do. If the time to start restraint is not now, I ask when is it? I ask my hon. friend from the socialist party when the time to start restraint is if it is not now, and if it is not in this place, where should we begin our restraint program? Who should begin first, if it is not us?

I suggest that members of the NDP are filibustering this bill because they do not like the 6 per cent reduction of their own pay increases. They could not be stopped from rushing to the trough when they were discussing pay increases for Members of Parliament and the indexed pensions that we were allowing ourselves at 38 per cent. They could not be stopped from rushing to the trough, and that is what is bothering them. That is the crux of the whole issue. That limit of 6 per cent to the public service this year and 5 per cent next year also applies to Members of Parliament. We will be held to 6 per cent.

Mr. Benjamin: Are you going to send yours back?

Mr. Oberle: That is what is bothering these young upstarts from the socialist paty. A socialist always knowns how to look after himself. This could be shown again if these young fellows were to visit some socialist countries to see the big limousines with the curtains on the windows because their owners do not like to be seen by their constituents. They know how to look after themselves. They have their summer palaces everywhere.

I want to tell my socialist friends that unless someone makes a start, this country will be in serious trouble. Right now we have a $20 billion deficit, and when the unemployment insurance statistics are in this fall that deficit will have grown to $22 billion. The tragedy of this is that over half of that money is borrowed abroad and has to be paid back in hard currency, regardless of how low our dollar will fall. In addition, Canadian taxpayers will be paying between $4 billion and $5 billion to foreign banks.

Incidentally, that deficit, on a per capita basis is half of what the Americans are planning their deficit to be. The difference is that the Americans are borrowing from their own banks, their own insurance companies and their own people. The money turns around in their own country. Our interest is paid to the United States in New York or to the Arabs, the Belgians and the Swiss.

Mr. Benjamin: You said you liked foreign investment.

Mr. Oberle: Listen to the whisky-jacks over there! They know what we are talking about. Someone has to make a start and someone has to restrain this drunken sailor across the aisle. Someone has to make a beginning. It must start here because this is where the buck stops.

Since I have a little bit of income from the outside I will probably not miss too much, and this 6 per cent might even help to get me into a lower income tax bracket.

Mr. Benjamin: Send it back then. Put your action where your mouth is.

Mr. Oberle: I suggest that unless we convey to the rest of the country that we are serious about what we are doing, these goals will not be reached. It does not help to convey this message when we see the evidence which has been exposed in question period today that the government is already breaking its own rules. The increases in rents that CMHC will be charging on the approximately 90,000 low-income homes it owns in Canada will not be subject to the rule because the input costs are too great. The provinces are telling us that we cannot apply the same rule to some of the utilities because they would be losing money. If we are already starting to make these excuses before the bill is even passed, it will not work.

Mr. Blaikie: Are you going to vote for it?

Mr. Oberle: It will cut work just like price controls did not work in 1974, and you know why. The government applied wage controls on the civil servants and then promoted them up one grade to the next category, which in effect gave them a 15 per cent increase.

Mr. Blaikie: How are you going to vote?

Mr. Oberle: My friend from the socialist party asks how we will stop that. We will keep a keen eye on what the government is doing.

Mr. Blaikie: How are you going to vote? Will you vote with the Liberals?

Mr. Oberle: Yes, I am going to vote with the Liberals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: That is what I wanted to hear from you.

• (1610)

Mr. Oberle: I am prepared, my friend, to accept my responsibility. The problem with members in the NDP is that they never have to accept any responsibility. The NDP will never be a national party because there are only so many provinces that socialists can leach from.

Mr. Kristiansen: You are going to pass the buck to the workers.

Mr. Oberle: The socialists are not interested in the provinces that do not have anything to share. They are big in B.C. and in Ontario. They are big in the "have" provinces. So there is never any fear that the socialists will become a national party. Members in the NDP can tell us anything they want. The point is that we on this side of the House will be the next government. Every Canadian knows that today.

An hon. Member: Tell us what you will do.

Mr. Oberle: If one wants to examine the voting record of the Conservatives compared to that of the NDP in terms of moving with the government, there is only one vote that one must consider. That was the one in 1979 when the NDP defeated the government, which had a program to take us out of the recession. It opted for the drunken sailors that destroyed us, those who are rendering our country into a position from which it will take two generations to dig us out. We are now borrowing money that our grandchildren will have to repay. I ask hon. members how we will ever retire a $22 billion debt, the situation in which we are now. Our dollar is in serious decline and interest rates are out of proportion. How will we ever repay this debt? It will not be this generation which will do it. What an incredible indictment it is to a country as rich, as diverse, as great in energy and human resources, that it has been rendered into such an incredible situation!

My young socialist friend says that it is a banana republic. We must restore the confidence of many people, not just our own, people who had faith in our country at one time, such as foreign investors who came here to help build our country. They are looking at us today as though we were a banana republic. Every day, as we hear, agencies in New York reduce our credit ratings, just like they do to Third World countries and banana republics, because they do not think we have a stable government. The National Energy Program has confiscated private assets. There is no confidence because no one is willing to accept any responsibility in this institution.

I would like to give one small example. When the Falkland crisis was occurring, the foreign minister in Great Britain took the wrong advice about the capability of the Argentinians. He took the wrong advice and made the wrong judgment. What did he do? He walked into the House of Commons and resigned because our tradition, the British tradition and the Canadian parliamentary tradition, requires that people who have the responsibility accept it and live by it.

I would like to draw this picture. Two years ago, against the advice of everyone, including the advice of his own cabinet colleagues, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) brought his National Energy Program to the House. For a year and a half he was told of the disaster he was creating, but he listened to the people appointed for him by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), those who went through the London School of Economics and believed in the juvenile socialist ideology that there should be a state-owned oil company and that once that was in place, everyone would be happy. So what did he do? He brought in the National Energy Program. Then, 18 months later, after everything that we predicted would happen did happen, he came to the House and said that he had made a mistake. We had told him that the industry would be totally destroyed, that foreign companies would move out and that this would have the result of bankrupting all the small Canadian companies that were active in the oil field. Incidentally, we had 50 per cent Canadian ownership, if we count small Canadian service industries active in the oil industry. Eighteen months later he said, "Mea culpa! We have made a few mistakes, we must make a few corrections and we will turn the clock back and start afresh." Did he come in to say, "I resign, I goofed, I took the wrong advice"? Of course he did not. He just came in and said, "We have to start afresh. We have made a few mistakes."

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought in his budget in November of last year. Of course, he would not tell anyone of his plans before. He only took advice from one person, Neil Brooks, a professor at one of the institutions in Toronto. He is another one of these intellectual, Fabian socialists who believe that the people who have a little extra money should not give it to charity but instead should give it to the government, and who believes that one should pay imputed rent on one's own private home. That is the only outside advice the minister took. But when he dumped it on us that night, we were shocked and dismayed. The country was in shock and in terror. We told him, "For God's sake, withdraw this budget before you totally destroy the economy of the country". Seven months later he came back and said," I now realize that the changes we have made to the budget were not enough, and I must now bring in a new budget." I ask Your Honour, did he come in, as is the tradition in the parliamentary system from which we emerge, to offer his resignation? Of course not. He just came in and said, "I goofed, so the hell with it. We have chased people out of their homes and farmers have walked away from farms they inherited from their parents, but we have now come to see the error of our ways and we will try something fresh." That was not conducive to restoring what is most vital right now because not only do we have an economic crisis, we also have a very, very serious crisis of confidence.

There are only two ways the government can go. It can accept some responsibility and live up to its actions, or else this system, this institution, will have to be reformed. Again, we would have to look at the examples in other countries. We have to restore the power to the people themselves. People can no longer trust the ones they elect to Parliament. If they can no longer trust their government to be accountable, to be honest, to be sincere, to be less devious than this government, then we must change the system and restore to the people the powers that there are in other systems. I make the comparison to the system in the United States. The ordinary American can impeach his president. He can, in fact, recall his congressman or senator. Can one imagine how many Canadians would like to recall their Minister of Finance and replace him with someone else? Americans can elect their judges. They can present petitions to deny spending power to their governments. Proposition 13 was an example. We cannot have it both ways. We can either live by the time-honoured system which has brought this country to greatness and which has worked everywhere, or else we must fire these people and replace them with honourable people and change the system itself.

If one looks to the socialists for any solutions, one finds that the solutions are not there.

Mr. Kristiansen: You are going to vote for them.

Mr. Oberle: They are simply not there. It is just a little more than naive to come out and say that government is unable to run the country, business is unable to dig us out of this economic crisis, and then to simply believe and say that Dennis McDermott and the unions are able to give us all of the answers. Frankly, I have no respect or confidence in anything that those fellows over there are doing. I would almost prefer to have any one of them lead me to economic disaster than to base my confidence in Dennis McDermott. These fellows, great defenders of the great union power, rose in the last couple of days and condemned the government for what it will do by taking away this inalienable right of the average worker to collective bargaining. They are saying it is the first serious injury to the new Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Incidentally, fellows, I did not vote for the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, so I have the freedom to speak along these lines. I stood up in accordance with my principles and voted against it. There are certainly very good reasons our party, collectively, voted for it. These great defenders stand up to speak for the rights which are now entrenched in the charter. These rights include the right to collectively bargain. I have yet to see one of our socialist friends to my left tell us the definition of the collective system in the union arrangement. We now have in our entrenched Charter of Rights one of the cardinal principles of democracy, freedom of association.

I could believe in the collective rights of members of unions who have the right to bargain and exercise all the power they now have if the ordinary citizen were not compelled to become a member of that collective system, if he had the freedom of association.

When Dennis McDermott stood in front of this building, turned around and pointed at the institution and said, "The next time we meet here we will go inside and toss these turkeys out", a lot of people wrote to me questioning why they were a member of that union. It is a good question. That person has to be a member of that union to have a job. He has to be a member of the union to work for the federal government. He has to be a member of a union to work with the provincial government. He is compelled to be a member of the union to have a job in one of the major industries.

Only one-third of the people who work in this country have the opportunity of joining unions. Those who do are compelled to join. That is really the problem. That is something else for which we have to accept responsibility one of these days. The buck again stops here.

When is someone going to test that question in the Supreme Court, freedom of association? What kind of democracy is that? That is Iron Curtain democracy. That is the choice people are given behind the Iron Curtain where the average citizen is compelled. The socialists to my left do not believe in freedom of association. They should not compare themselves with Sweden, West Germany, France and other socialist governments. It is unheard of that a person should be compelled to belong to a political party, a union that is politically active, a church or anything else. What kind of freedom of association is that? When that question is decided before the Supreme Court, they will have egg all over their faces. The union boys will come to them and say, "Hey, you guys, you voted for this monstrosity and now we no longer have the power we once had."

That is the kind of power we have to curb in this country. We have to restore the power to where it should be, to the elected representatives. Once we have done that, we must always have the elected representatives accountable, as they once were. Only then can we expect people in this country and those abroad to have confidence in our system, this institution and the people who serve and sit in these institutions. Until this confidence is restored, this country will be in very serious economic straits. There will be very serious problems. Thousands of small businesses will go under. The banks will be protecting the large companies because they are into them so deep.

If Dome Petroleum goes under and $6 billion or $8 billion in loans is called, that is 60 per cent of the assets of our chartered banks. Imagine that.

Guess who will have to bail out the banks? It will be the taxpayer, the person who cannot meet his mortgage payments now, the senior citizen who has to eat dog food because the increase in his old age pension will again be curbed. They are the ones who will bail out Dome and the banks.

Do we ever see these fellows speaking for them? No, because there are big unions involved. You cannot speak about letting Chrysler go bankrupt. There are big companies that have a stake in this. When a small operator or small business with five or six employees goes bankrupt, those who are unemployed are just as unemployed as those who work for Dome or Chrysler.

We are so wrapped up in government bail-outs and intervention that there is no longer any other way out. Someone in this place, this green room, this most important room in this country, must accept some responsibility and live by some principles in order to restore this country to the greatness that our forefathers envisaged and built. Only then can we get out of our economic dilemma.

These fellows do not have the answers. Do not be confused by what Winston Churchill called the gospel of envy. This bunch does not have a thing, and they want to share it with everyone else! You cannot give anything away you have not first created.

We have to again create wealth in this country. That must be done by people who know how it is done, people willing to take risks, people willing to work more than six, seven hours a day, people willing to spend some sleepless nights and willing to forgo a paycheque once in a while in order to build up a small business, hire people and create wealth. Only then can this country be restored to the greatness it is capable of achieving.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to listen to the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). I was going to comment extensively on his remarks, but that would only legitimize what he said, and I would not want to do that. After he spoke for 20 minutes in a very negative way about the government and in particular about Bill C-124 that we are dealing with today, he stood up and said he would support the bill when it came to a vote. That kind of confusion perplexes me.

It is no wonder that Canadians who watch the proceedings of this House are often confused by the rhetoric of debate. They find it somewhat childish and elementary in terms of the accusations hurled back and forth in speech after speech. I will not do that today. I will just present facts. I will present a thorough examination of Bill C-124 in principle.

This is the second reading of Bill C-124. It is an opportunity to examine the various principles involved in the legislation before the House. I was disappointed when the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) stood in the House earlier today and said that not only was the government going to remove the right to bargain collectively on the part of employees in the public service, but that he was going to eliminate one of the most fundamental and democratic rights this House has come to enjoy, freedom of debate, particularly on a very critical issue.

Bill C-124 is one of the most critical bills to come before this House in months. The fact that the government is going to introduce closure so that members will not have an opportunity to thoroughly debate the implications of this legislation is very disappointing.

This bill to restrict the wages and salaries of federal employees to 6 per cent in the first year and 5 per cent in the second year is a response of the government to the economic crisis facing Canada today. It was detailed precisely and extensively by past and present auditors general when they said that this country was on the edge of economic and financial collapse. I am sure every member of this House, both on the government side and the opposition side, will agree with that evaluation of our present economic situation. Indeed we are on the edge of financial and economic collapse.

It is also a response, Mr. Speaker, of the government to the wrestling match of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with inflation. He is spending a lot of time on the battlefield wrestling inflation to the ground. He is not a successful fighter in that respect. It is proposed that Bill C-124 will assist us in our efforts to reduce the rate of inflation.

I do not have to remind members that we are in a situation where practically two million Canadians are forced into a state of idleness. We are becoming more familiar every day with what that state of idleness does to people. We know the depression, the distress, the anxiety, the lowering of morale that will have profound consequences for decades to come.

I say that, Mr. Speaker, because when you have so many people unemployed in a country, it has a ripple effect that can be measured in a variety of social terms. By social terms I refer to family breakups, family violence, drug abuse, alcohol abuse, increased juvenile delinquency. Youngsters are having trouble at school as a result of the financial problems their parents have to face. Again, the cost of these social problems will be with us, not for years but for decades and perhaps for even a generation or two.

We find out today that bankruptcies in the first half of 1982 have increased 37 per cent over last year, which we all know were at excessively high levels. If we add in the bankruptcies with the receiverships and with those folks who simply close up the doors of their small and medium-sized businesses, this year alone we will likely look at something in the neighbourhood of 60,000 businesses that no longer exist at the end of the year that were in effect at the beginning of 1982.

We hear that plants across the country are operating at less than 70 per cent capacity. This 70 per cent capacity results directly in increased shutdowns, increased cutbacks, employee hiring freezes, lay-offs and the threat of future lay-offs. Growing numbers of Canadians are finding themselves dependent now on UIC benefits or welfare benefits. I am sad to have to say, Mr. Speaker, that in my constituency—which is one of the richest parts of the province of British Columbia, which is one of the richest parts of Canada, which is one of the richest countries in the world—the greatest contributor to the local economy is the UIC office today. When a Member of Parliament has been forced, because of people who fall between the cracks of UIC benefits and welfare benefits, to open a food bank to assist families who are unable to put food on the table for their families, it is a very sad comment on the state of our economic affairs.

As these plants close down, cut back, or lay off their employees, and as those people who are unemployed are unable to purchase goods and services, those who are fortunate to be working today are hesitant to purchase goods and services, because they are uncertain about their future. Six months from now, where is Canada going to be? It is certainly anything but clear, Mr. Speaker. As a result, the purchasing power of Canadians has been throttled.

Then the government comes along in its budget of June 28 with an idea. They say: "Because our plants are operating at undercapacity, because people are not able to purchase the durable goods that they desire and need, or the services they desire and need, we have a solution; we are going to cut back even further, we are going to reduce wages, we will increase taxation, we will relatively cut the pensions of the people who built this country." The logic of that argument escapes me. At a time when the economy is downturning because firms cannot sell their commodities or their services, the solution is to cut back on those sales even further. That logic, as I say, escapes me.

During these times of economic crisis and economic calamity, where businesses, small, medium or large, are struggling to survive, the government has looked about for a scapegoat, for a whipping boy, for a bogyman. "We have to blame someone; we cannot blame ourselves, we have to blame someone else." So they did some polling. We are used in this country to government policy by polling, so presumably using the services of Goldfarb or Gallup, they found that the public perception of a villain focused on federal employees, considered to be lazy, overpaid. Therefore, the government decided to introduce legislation to assist the Prime Minister in his battle of wrestling inflation to the ground by limiting the wage and salary increases of federal employees to 6 per cent and 5 per cent.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stand up in this House daily and say: "This will wrestle inflation to the ground; this will reduce inflation." The Minister of Finance reminds me of Peter Pan. Peter Pan said that if you really believe you can fly, you will fly. The minister says that if you really believe this will reduce inflation, it will reduce inflation.

We on this side do not believe in Peter Pan. We do not believe this is the appropriate policy to reduce inflation or to resolve the economic challenges that face Canada today. How can we have confidence in the minister's inflation-fighting device when we find that energy increases for next year will exist at the 31 per cent level? By government policy, the energy prices in Canada will increase 31 per cent next year. As a result of the ripple effect of that, there will be an increase in transportation costs, in heating costs, in cooling costs. These are going to result, of course, in fuelling the rate of inflation.

What about the $135 billion accumulated deficit that by definition will drive the interest rates even higher than they are today? Mark my words. How can you keep inflation down when you have interest rates in the 21, 22, 23 percentile range? Again, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that by definition it is impossible. Yet somehow, mysteriously, by restricting the wages of 5 per cent of working Canadians, we will have this magical impact of reducing the rate of inflation down to the 6 per cent and 5 per cent world. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance exists in a fairyland, that this world of 6 per cent and 5 per cent cannot exist under present government policies.

Why should we ask Canadians to follow along these guidelines voluntarily, in the absence of any over-all strategy or comprehensive program to fight inflation? As a result, we have many individuals, many groups of people, who are scrambling today in fear of their jobs or their futures. They are grabbing whatever they can in this desperate world that the government has created. You cannot blame people often for what we would tend to call being greedy, for asking for too much when the future is so uncertain for the workers of this country. Unlike the workers of Japan, which often the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance hold up as an example, where there is job security in those small, medium and large firms, where people do not have to scramble for their lives in this sort of free enterprise world in which we live.

I listened with interest to the member for Prince George-Peace River comment on free enterprise. I recall the very first business in this country. The first commercial venture was the fur trade. It was not many years before the Hudson's Bay Company, operating under a monopoly or an agreement with the government, had the entire fur trade for northern North America sewed up tight. I do not think that has changed much to this present day, when the reference earlier was to Dome Petroleum. We know full well that the taxpayers of Canada, when the crunch comes, will be called in to bail out that "free enterprise" firm because of imprudent decision-making on its own part, when it spent so much of its energy and its financial backing on unproductive mergers and takeovers. However, that is a topic for another debate.

How can we ask Canadians to rally around a restraint program which has no over-all context and when minister after minister stands and says, "Yes, we probably will support a 25 per cent increase in the cost of rental accommodation provided by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and we will likely support a 25 per cent increase in telephone rates."

Mr. Tousignant: You are misleading the House. Be serious.

Mr. Riis: The Minister of Finance rose today and said there will be exceptions. When government regulatory agencies which, presumably, are to fall under the 6 per cent and 5 per cent guidelines will not be held to that, I think the confidence of the Canadian public in the ability of this government to lead wanes considerably.

High interest rates will drive inflation up on a continuing basis. This will result in a continuing economic downturn. Why would any investor, large or small, invest in expanding a business in this country today? By definition the economic environment in Canada is risky. Why should they invest otherwise when they could have purchased Canada Savings Bonds at 19.5 per cent and when they can invest their money in secure accounts and receive up to 17.5 per cent? Why would anyone invest his money in expanding a business, a ranch, a farm or an enterprise of any kind? As long as interest rates remain as high as they are, inflation will continue at a skyhigh level and the economic downturn in this country will continue unabated.

This is an unfair bill. It is in tune with the budget because the budget was, by all accounts, a very unfair budget in terms of what it did to Canadians. To set the context for my remarks about unfairness, I want to refer to the aspect of the budget which resulted in income tax increases for all Canadians. The rhetoric of the Minister of Finance sounds good when he says everyone's taxes will be increased, but that is not quite true. For example, single taxpayers who have no dependants and earn less than $7,500 a year—which includes many seniors, the pioneers of our country—will pay additional taxes in excess of 50 per cent. However, a single taxpayer with no dependants earning $100,000 a year will not pay increased taxes of 50 per cent; those taxes will go up by 2.5 per cent. The taxes of a person earning $200,000 a year will decrease this coming year.

Mr. Orlikow: That is the Liberal idea of equity.

Mr. Benjamin: That is free enterprise.

Mr. Riis: That is the kind of equity and fairness the Minister of Finance had the gall to propose in his budget speech in this House. I do not, of course, have to refer to the fact that in this budget we have put the burden of fighting inflation on the backs of senior citizens, whose benefits next year again will decrease.

Let me refer to Bill C-124 as it deals specifically with federal employees and 6 per cent and 5 per cent restraints on their wages. This wage restraint is across the board, which means that increases in the wages and salaries of all federal employees and federal Crown corporation employees will be limited to 6 per cent in the year ahead. A cabinet minister whose income is now $102,000 will receive an increase of just over $6,000 next year. A senior official in the federal government whose income is $80,000 will receive an increase of nearly $5,000 in the coming year. Most public servants make about $12,000 a year, and they will receive increases next year of $720. Many government employees earn less than $12,000 a year. I think there is a public perception that anyone who works for the federal government is automatically in the $40,000 to $50,000 range. A federal office equipment worker in Vancouver has an annual income of $11,379. A typist working for the federal government in the city of Winnipeg earns $11,353. Teacher aides in the Atlantic provinces earn $9,631. This is blatantly unfair. People in one category of the federal public service will get $6,000 increases and the majority of those in another bracket will receive increases in the $700 range. Anyone who calls that fair is a dreamer and believes in unicorns.

Mr. Orlikow: It should be reversed.

Mr. Riis: Of course it should be reversed, and if we are to have cutbacks, they should be undertaken in a progressive way. This bill will simply emphasize the poor distribution of income and wealth in Canada.

One group of Canadians will be particularly hurt by this provision, and that group is the women of Canada who work for the federal government in one capacity or another. Statistics tell us that of those employees who make less than $10,000, nearly 70 per cent are women; of those employees who make less than $15,000, 64 per cent are women; and of those making less than $25,000, nearly 60 per cent are women. Surprisingly, of those making $50,000 and more, only 3 per cent are women. I think it is important to recognize that this is not a fair bill, and that is why we in the New Democratic Party oppose it so strongly. We oppose it because it is unfair by any description or definition.

To add insult to injury, a few days ago we heard that all the assistants of ministers of the government received increases of 11 per cent just before this bill was introduced. They got in just under the wire.

Mr. King: The Liberal way.

Mr. Riis: Ministers took care of their own. A group of lawyers working in the Department of Justice received 10 per cent increases, surprinsingly, just a day or two before this provision was introduced.

Mr. King: That is the Liberal way.

Mr. Riis: It is a sad day for Canada when we are debating—now under the cloud of closure—a bill which treats the employees of any institution so unfairly and then ask Canadians to rally around this "wonderful" program. That really is asking too much.

Many comments have been made over the last number of days that this bill is necessary in order to improve the competitiveness of Canada in international markets. Editorialists are prone to say that the wages of Canadians are so high that we are now unable to compete in the international marketplace. I want to consider that for a moment or two. The Majority of our exports are not labour-intensive at all. I refer, of course, to our huge wheat sales, huge energy sales and coal sales. These are major export commodities which are not labour-intensive. The wages of employees in these sectors play a relatively small part in the over-all expense, particularly during these times of high interest rates.

Let us look at the manufacturing sector. We hear cries that we cannot manufacture in this country because our wages are too high. Let us examine the facts and then decide. I will refer to manufacturing wage rates in a variety of countries which trade with one another. These wage rates were applicable in the year 1980. I choose that year not because of any selectiveness but because that is the year for which we have the most accurate data. The average manufacturing wage rate in Belgium, a major trading partner of Canada, was $13.18 per hour; in Sweden it was $12.60 per hour; in The Netherlands, $12.18 per hour; in West Germany, $11.94 per hour; in the United States of America, $9.92 per hour; in France, $9.46 per hour; and in Canada, $9.06 per hour. We ranked seventh among those countries, which are some of our major trading partners.

• (1650)

Over the last few years in West Germany, for example, which is one of our major trading partners, since 1975 manufacturing wages have increased by 91 per cent; in the United States by 56 per cent and in Canada by 48 per cent.

Mr. Oberle: Why do you not talk about productivity at the same time?

Mr. Riis: I could discuss productivity at some length, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: Why don't you?

Mr. Riis: I feel it is appropriate to be relevant in our speeches, unlike some other hon. members whose comments were totally irrelevant.

When we consider productivity, do we consider the individual worker or the fact that in Canada we have branch plants which were never intended to be competitive on the international market in most cases? I do not think that matter is appropriate to a debate on wage and salary limitations for federal employees. I believe in the rule of relevancy, Mr. Speaker.

I have tried to indicate that wages in the manufacturing sector of this country relate relatively well to those of other trading nations. When we speak of competition, does that mean that we want to compete with the multinational companies that choose their plant locations in order to take advantage of the cheapest labour possible—virtually slave labour? I have visited many plants in Third World countries where conditions could only be described as virtual slavery, where wages are 25 cents per hour. Do we want to participate in that kind of blind reaction that causes the difficulty in which we find ourselves today.

To what extent are federal employees the major cause of inflation? An interesting picture emerges from an examination of the increases in their wages over the past few years. In 1978 wage increases for federal employees averaged 6.6 per cent while for the same year inflation was 8.8 per cent; in 1980 wage increases for federal employees averaged 6.6 per cent and inflation was 9.4 per cent; in 1981 wage increases for federal employees averaged 8.8 per cent in the first quarter and the inflation rate was 12.2 per cent. These wage settlements were two to four points under the rate of inflation.

Are the real causes of inflation in this country employee wages in the private or public sector, or are they the result of government pricing through regulatory agencies as announced earlier today, when we found out that in past years the prices that the government could control increased by an average of 18 per cent? This covers energy prices and high interest rates. Surely those are the critical causes of inflation, not wage settlements of federal employees that range from two to four points below the average rate of inflation.

Who has most strongly advocated wage controls, Mr. Speaker? Who appeared not long ago in Ottawa saying that the answer to our problems was to control incomes? Let me read from a list of a few of the people who were advocating that reduction of wages was the obvious step to take. These people would obviously have a real sensitivity to the strains and stresses felt by the breadwinners in the country today, those people who are trying to make their mortgage payments and put food on the table. There was Mr. Ed Phillips, Chairman of Westcoast Transmission, whose income in 1980-81 increased from $257,656 to 444,836; David Culver, president of Alcan, whose income increased in 1981 from $392,601 to $447,702; the chairman of Bell Canada had a tough time in 1981 when his income increased from $514,000 to $626,000. Then there was the chairman of Seagram's Mr. Bronfman, whose income increased in 1981 from $887,646 to over $1 million. If his increase had been limited to 6 per cent he would have received only a $63,000 increase in that year. These are the people who are advocating wage controls as the answer to the country's problems. The government's credibility evaporates when one sees the people who are advising it—other than the polls—regarding this program.

In spite of the advice given by leaders of industry and business regarding wage controls—and that is not a surprise—I suggest that if the truth were known the wisest business leaders in the country would not advocate wage controls because they recognize the long-term results that flow from them. We remember what happened a few years ago when the Anti-Inflation Board attempted to wrestle inflation to the ground. Most members will recall the period from 1975 to 1978. We were not dealing then with 5 per cent of the work force but with wage guidelines for all Canadians. I remember that a number of my acquaintances were scoffing and laughing because while everyone else's wages were restricted, they were finding new positions and their wages were going up; they were manipulating new jobs that were created for them and they were being hired back and forth by various firms. In other words, there was always a way around the regulations.

In 1975 the rate of inflation was 10.6 per cent. The target for the anti-inflation program was to reduce it to 8 per cent in 1976, 6 per cent in 1977 and 4 per cent in 1978. But when the program terminated in 1978 the rate of inflation was 9 per cent. And at what a price! The business and industrial leaders of the country know the reality of the situation. They know that the price was the thousands and thousands of Canadians who lost their jobs and as a result could not contribute in any way to the economy. That was the price of a one percentage point reduction in the rate of inflation, as well as the incredible bureaucracy that was built up and which laid a dark shroud over the country for three years.

There is one insidious aspect of this legislation that I do not like to talk about because I really cannot believe it is happening in Canada. This is a country that prides itself on being free, on providing opportunities for people, on freedom of speech, freedom of assembly and freedom of religion. We have just spent two years discussing the Charter of Rights. In the next breath, however, the government introduces a bill to remove free collective bargaining from public employees. The member opposite says "Oh, come on". That is what this bill does, if she reads it. It eliminates free collective bargaining. Set aside for the moment the question of the right to strike, which some members might want to argue about at some other point. We are talking about free collective bargaining. We are talking about a House which stood up day after day in support of the Solidarity movement in Poland, saying that this was a basic human right which any person should have. This government has removed that freedom from its own employees for the next two years, of course thereby breaking its contracts.

Free collective bargaining is an integral part of any free and democratic society. This bill denies federal employees the right to negotiate any items, including monetary items. The monetary items are set by guidelines, and the ability to negotiate such areas as flexible working hours, work sharing and technological change provisions, occupational health and safety provisions, security against unfair disciplinary action, maternity or parental leave, affirmative action, equal pay for equal work—

Mr. Kelly: No, you are wrong.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, this bill denies the right of nearly 500,000 employees to negotiate in those very critical areas during these presumably enlightened 1980s. To make Canada work, the government has decided to remove the basic democratic rights that the people have come to enjoy after a long and difficult struggle.

Let us be honest about the basis of many of our problems. I know we on this side are prone to hurl barbs across the way at the incompetence demonstrated by the federal government. That is our job, to criticize the federal government and the legislation it introduces. But there is another problem in our country and it has to do with the business of strikes. We have seen a very special strike occur in the last number of months in our land. It is not the kind of strike that normally riles some Canadians; it is a strike of capital. It really began with the first discussions about the National Energy Program. It was a decision by capital, domestic and foreign, to bring the economy to its knees. The Americans made no bones about it. They said they wanted to bring their cash home, and they did not hesitate despite knowing that it would destroy the economies of a variety of countries.

Capital went on strike in Canada as well. It is a sad day, Mr. Speaker, when on a daily basis we hear many business leaders standing up and criticizing this government for its inaction when in fact the strike of capital, in a not so subtle way, has equally resulted in the downturn of our economy over the last number of months. As a result of our economic structure, Canada has, because of a national policy, found itself to be a branch plant economy of countries like the United States.

My friends to the right, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives, talk on and on about the free enterprise world in which we live. It was Sir John A. Macdonald who introduced the protective policies which enabled the manufacturing industries of Central Canada to be protected to a certain extent and use domestic resources to fuel their plants. That is not free enterprise in any way, shape or form. Today we have the same situation where the decisions about our future, whether to invest or grow in this or that particular area, whether to support and develop this or that kind of agriculture or other resources, are being made in boardrooms in the United States, Japan, Germany, the United Kingdom and other countries.

Therefore, it amazes me when the Progressive Conservatives stand up daily and say the answer to our problem is to remove FIRA and encourage more foreign decision-making regarding our future, and more foreign investment. They are saying the problem is also the solution, and I must say the logic escapes me.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we are facing very difficult economic times. Many would say we are on the verge of a full-scale depression. I want to make it clear that we in the New Democratic Party feel that the way to stop this recessionary trend and initiate economic recovery is not by restricting the wages and salaries of federal employees.

Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to speak against Bill C-124 because I think it is quite possibly a watershed in legislation. I think this is a special occasion and it makes some of us, at least, think back about 37 years. This legislation may very well mark the end of an era. Those of us who remember World War II and being demobilized in 1945 can remember the sense of hope we had. We can remember the great excitement about the sort of new world we were facing. There was a great vision of what we were going to do after the war. We had defeated fascism, so we thought. There was a great deal of enthusiasm all over the world for reconstruction of those countries which had been damaged in the war, and those countries constricted by war production had great opportunities for expansion into new kinds of peacetime construction and development. There was a hunger for reconstruction and growth. It was that new vision, enthusiasm and hopeful expectation which was the basis for the kind of social peace and co-operation which has lasted for perhaps three decades.

The watchword, as I and others will recall, when we came out of the forces in 1945 was: full employment. We all remember that the unemployment of the thirties was only six years previous. The one thing that everyone, parties of the left, right and centre, political and labour movements of all kinds, agreed on was full employment. There was no need to force people to be idle while production goes down and people are in want. That was the basis of a kind of social contract 37 years ago. But this legislation now before us signals that the government has cancelled that understanding with the Canadian people. This legislation breaks that social contract.

It is not the first sign of the breaking. There have been many other things which I will not detail now, but this is an open wound. It is even more severe than the action of 1975. At the beginning it affects only half a million or perhaps a million workers, depending upon how many in the private sector may be on contract with the government. But we have the warning of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that there may very well be more to follow.

What has been done by the Prime Minister and by the Liberal caucus with the full approval of the leader and members of the Tory caucus is to break that social contract made at the end of the war in 1945 and to introduce a kind of naked class legislation, harsher than I think we have seen in the last 37 years. We would probably have to go back to iron heel Bennett or to Borden's class legislation of 60 or more years ago to find the like of it.

This is class legislation against employees. Employees are specifically singled out for discriminatory treatment. Discrimination will be applied against them because they are employees. Employees are now second-class citizens in Canada. We had a signal of this. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) signalled this in the opening remarks of his budget on November 12, 1981. He said that "excessive income demands on the part of those employed denies employment to others." There is no mention of excessive demands on the part of employers and investors, those who buy the labour of others. Only those who are forced to sell their labour are accused of being the cause of the unemployment of their fellow workers.

In this legislation we have exactly the same principle. Apparently there are some members across the way who do not believe that collective bargaining has been destroyed for at least two years. I presume they just rely on the caucus to tell them which way to vote and so have not found it necessary to read Bill C-124. When they do get around to Bill C-124, they will find Clause 7 which reads:

> Every collective agreement or arbitral award that includes a compensation plan that is extended under section 4 or 5 shall, subject to this Part, continue in force without change for the period for which the compensation plan is extended.

In other words, a whole union contract is frozen, extended for two years. Employees are not allowed to bargain even on non-monetary items. That is the clear reading of those words. That is how that clause is read by hundreds of thousands or millions of people in this land, probably everyone here except the people sitting in the backbenches across the way.

That is class legislation by people who preach unity and co-operation, the co-operation of the horse and the rider. This government has destroyed what has been won through a century or a century and a half of negotiation, namely the recognition of the right to collective bargaining. This government cannot destroy the right to collective bargaining. That is inherent to basic relationships and to basic humanity of the men and women of this country and other countries of the world. What is being destroyed is the government's recognition of that right. The Liberals are inviting the severest kind of social disorder in this country by doing that.

There is no legislation whatever touching on a limitation of profits. There is no legislation whatever touching on a limitation of prices. The class of investors and employers gets off scot-free and is the beneficiary of this wage freeze legislation.

It is ironic to listen to some of the Tories warning of the social unrest that will come from this. They have admitted that they will be voting with the Liberals for this class legislation. It is not surprising. For once the Tories have been uncharacteristically consistent. Their former leader, Mr. Stanfield, first preached the idea of this class legislation. But in case there was any doubt, their leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), said on July 5: "What is in this budget? There is one important initiative: the introduction of restraint on public sector salaries." Since then a number of his followers have joined him in supporting that statement.

The Tories like to rail against us any time we vote with the government, but on this most important piece of legislation, the most important for several years, the Tories will do all they can to support it. As one hon. member said yesterday, the Tories will get on the 6 per cent and 5 per cent bandwagon. The Tories will climb on the bandwagon that has been created by the people with whom they pretend to disagree.

This new budget is an attack on the working people of Canada. It is a worse budget than the budget of November, 1981. This budget adds to the attack made then. This budget cuts the wages of the employee. That is to say, it cuts them clearly below what the government predicts is the cost of living. This budget cuts and will cut benefits to the unemployed. Cuts have been made administratively. Already the government is reducing staff in the unemployment and pension offices. The government will simply drag out the process of applications.

Soon the government will put an extra tax on those workers still working in order to pay for the cover-up schemes which the government has, like the cover-up scheme when you take four jobs and stretch those jobs among five people, claiming you have created a job. The government will be cutting benefits to the unemployed and it will be cutting welfare payments further than has already been done. Welfare is all there is left for somebody who has been left out of unemployment insurance benefits or who has run through his unemployment insurance benefits.

In its haste to introduce naked class legislation, the government has shown complete contempt for contracts. The government has signed contracts with its employees. The government urges employees to bargain in good faith. The government sets the laws of bargaining in good faith and then the government wipes them out. It is not the first time the government has done this. The government previously granted the right to strike, but when that right was used the government cancelled it.

There are two kinds of laws in this country. When the RCMP illegally opened mail, the government passed a law to make that act legal. That is what it just did in the freedom of information legislation. When the postal workers went out on a legal strike, the government passed a law to make it illegal. Those bills were the forerunners of this bill. But this bill is much broader.

In the same budget—not in this bill but it is part of the package—the government is raising the income tax of almost every Canadian through partial deindexing. It is lowering the real pension, the actual spending power of the pensioner. According to the government's own projections of inflation, the actual spending power will be lower. There is no reason to think that the government has overestimated inflation because in the past the government has always underestimated it. There will be a real drop in the value of the pension through partial deindexation.

There is the signal to all employers in Canada that this government now despises the principle of collective bargaining. In fact, it despises the principle of a contract. It is prepared to dishonour its contracts whenever it chooses. The government has openly advocated that the private employers of Canada should follow the government's lead in this dishonourable action and follow the government's lead in treating employees as second-class citizens in Canada.

On the other hand, there are giveaways to the wealthy through new schemes for indexing investment or investment income. As has been pointed out before, the principle of this government is that if workers are to work harder it must give them less money; but for investors to work harder it must give them more money. This is how the government has corrupted the income tax system of this land in the same budget. This is in addition to all the tax gifts that were given to the same wealthy people in the November budget and by the concessions made since the November budget to the insurance companies and others in that field who appealed to the government about what I presume was their poverty and the difficulty of living on $100,000 a year. What this budget does is increase the revenue and power of that small group of people whose principal concern is to export Canada, primarily our raw materials, as fast as possible in order to get the quick bucks before the whole world economy collapses.

The budget supports the people who make their living by the revenues of the war industry, directly from the increased Canadian defence budget and indirectly by supplying materials to the much increased American war budget. It cuts the standard of living of working people directly. As well, it signals all power to the investor and employer class.

Why does the Minister of Finance do this? His stated reason is very simple, simplistic and false. For example, on July 5 in answer to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) he said, as reported on page 18983 of Hansard:

> That is the logic of the budget statement. If all income demands—and I am putting the emphasis on all—

He did not do that before but he did it here because he realized he was talking to a union supporter.

> —were reduced to 6 per cent, then price increases would drop to 6 per cent. That would be the inevitable result—

That is just pure hogwash. I do not think the Minister of Finance believes for a moment what he said. It is so nonsensical.

It is the same old hoary theory that the party opposite and the party to the right, when they have had their chance, have used since World War II. In spite of the social contract that was made at the end of the war, they have been chiselling away at it year by year with this same old hoary theory.

It used to be called the trickle down theory where you pour some in at the top and the people at the top get some, the people in the middle get some and the people at the bottom get some which makes everyone happy. The only thing that the sleight-of-hand people do not tell us about this trickle down theory is where the money comes from that is poured into the top. Of course, they got it from the taxpayers, who are primarily the low and middle-income people who cannot afford to hire accountants and lawyers to help them not pay any taxes at all. What this trickle down theory really says is that those lucky people at the botton, if they live long enough, may be able to get back some of what was taken away from them.

Of course, this is the same principle which is being followed here in Ontario by the Tory government. This is why that government has decided to bail out their friends, the private investors, by putting harsh new sales taxes on all these necessities needed by the people of Ontario. The only problem is that the trickle down theory does not work. It is catching up with them. As was pointed out last night, we now have approximately $135 billion of foreign debt which involves huge repayments that are becoming even larger each year. These repayments are laid on the working people of Canada.

Some have made rather mocking remarks about the foreign debt of Poland, suggesting that their foreign debt puts the Polish government in a crisis. Poland, with a much larger population than Canada, has a smaller foreign debt than Canada.

I think it is probably a fact that the decisions of those members in the front benches across the way are not really made in consultation with their backbenchers, let alone any serious debate with members on this side of the House. Decisions are certainly not made in any open, frank discussions with the people of Canada. The decisions made in the front benches, such as this one, I believe are made only in consultation with the international banking community, as was the case with the 1975 wage freeze.

We have a famous Canadian graduate who graduated to the United States as an economist. Mr. Galbraith recently seemed to have a sort of death bed repentance. He called this trickle down theory the horse and sparrow theory. He said that when he was a boy on a southern Ontario farm they talked about the horse and sparrow theory, which says that if you feed the horse enough oats some of them will fall on the ground for the sparrow too. When I read what Mr. Galbraith had written before, it was exactly that theory which he was preaching. He got rich by writing books which told people not to worry if the system is unjust and there is an unjust difference between the rich and the poor; we are all getting richer and we do not have to worry about the other person. He has now said that what he was talking about is nonsense. The only trouble with the horse and sparrow theory is that it does not work when you see that it is the sparrow which has to buy the oats for the horse.

Speaking of horses, in the Kensington area where I live we used to have a couple of junkmen or ragabonies, as some people called them. One old junkman in particular went through the streets with his horse, Betty, to pick up junk from people's yards to sell. He made a bare living that way. He could pay the rent, buy food for him and oats for Betty. As the prices went up he came to a crisis. He went out to the stable and said, "I am sorry, Betty, we have to tighten our belts". He gave Betty a few less oats each day until finally, on a Tuesday morning, he gave his horse no oats at all. He was a little slower on his rounds that day. The next day, Wednesday, he went to the stable and the horse lay dead on the floor. The junkman said: "Look at that ungrateful beast. Just when I taught her to live on nothing, she goes and dies on me!" I expect that that junkman voted Liberal. It is within living memory when people thought that Spadina was a safe Liberal riding. Maybe the horse voted Liberal also because we can remember when horses used to be on the payroll here, so why not on the voters' list?

From what I have seen, I do not believe that the people of Spadina or the people in the rest of Canada are as docile and willing to lie down and die as that horse. They will defend themselves. They are saying that they do not like and will not accept a system which makes them the guinea pigs for an experiment that has already been proven false.

Why will they not accept it? First, they are the ones who have to carry the misery. They can see that it is not being carried by those who impose it on them. I have an unsolicited letter from a senior citizen in the city of Winnipeg. I used to live there, but that is not how the letter happened to come to me. He wrote, referring to the budget:

> Please vote against the current "Budget" proposal which would limit to 6 per cent and 5 per cent respectively the increase in superannuation payments for the next two years.
> I ask you to vote against this because while I was employed in the Federal Public Service, I paid the premiums required for insurance against "erosion of pensions' purchasing power".

In other words, he paid into the pension plan. Some of us are aware of the point he is making and agree with his letter. Others, though, especially those across the way, would rather the letters all went into the waste basket and were forgotten because they have a bad conscience for having cheated people out of the pensions for which they paid.

There are other workers in the Kensington area. Those making a living by hard work include construction workers, cleaners working for the minimum wage in the downtown buildings and the banks, the banks that made $1.5 billion in profits last year at the expense of low-wage workers, and viciously attack them when they try to organize unions. There are clerks working in places like Simpsons, which is laying off staff because customers are not coming in to buy since they do not have any money. There are maintenance workers who have been laid off, some of whom have been hunting for work for two years. In fact, in Kensington during the last decade or so a new industry has been developed: worm picking. At night the buses bring home the families consisting of fathers, mothers and children who have been out on the golf courses, or the lawns down in metro, picking worms. These are people who want to work and expect to work to maintain themselves, but who are not allowed to work because there are 1.5 million or two million unemployed in the country. These are people trying to make ends meet, although the cost of living is being pushed up by the deliberate, planned actions of the government.

Last month the price of food went up by 2.2 per cent, which was the largest monthly increase in two years. Apart from food, there are other big costs, such as shelter charges and gasoline prices. Just two weeks ago, the Prime Minister refused even to consider applying the guidelines to oil prices. There are increased costs for home heating and Bell telephone. Mortgage interest has increased 25.5 per cent over last year. Heating gas is up by 28.7 per cent over last year. Telephone service is up by 21.2 per cent and the company wants more in the next few months. The government will give it more. The government will stall and say: "Let the commission look into it and then we will consider it". By the time the government has considered it, the company will be back for still another increase and it will also get that one from the government.

The government has created the very inflation that it said it is trying to fight. It has pushed prices up. It has not merely permitted them to rise, but has deliberately pushed them up for the last seven years through the interest policy of Governor Bouey. Therefore, the government blames the workers of Canada whose wages are 11 per cent lower than those in the United States, a land where the interest rates are also lower. The government blames workers in Canada for the government's decision to raise interest rates and all the other government administered charges.

We have seen an illustration of what was done to make the tax system more unequal; but now look at the deindexation of old age security. Under the indexed system, a person would have received $3,135.90 in 1983, but under the deindexed system it will be only $3,058.62, an absolute cut of $77.28. The next year, 1984, the cut will be $218.25, and so on, growing from year to year. Even if indexing were restored, it would be restored on that lower basis.

Women are especially restricted. At a time when there are huge changes coming in office machinery or procedures, women who follow the government's example, especially those in the government, are to be prevented from bargaining to protect either their jobs or their wages. Although only 39.6 per cent of total employees in the public sector are women, they make up 81.6 per cent of the support staff, the low-paid employees. When it comes to being laid off, these women, who equal 39.6 per cent of the employees, account for 54 per cent of those laid off.

What the working people of Canada understand is that the final pay-off of this system which makes them second-class citizens, blaming them for an inflation created by the government to the benefit of their employers, blaming them for being employees, is that the system will not even achieve the stated goal of cutting inflation. The 1975-78 wage freeze or, as the government likes to dress it up, "wage and price freeze", was a fraud and a failure for its stated goal of reducing inflation. It was a fraud because at the time it was introduced both prices and wages were already declining. In other words, prices and wages were coming down and the government decided to make it look as though it had done something by jumping on the bandwagon.

According to the budget figures put forward by the minister in November, wages in 1974 had gone up by 15.2 per cent, but in 1975 wage increases were down to 14.5 per cent. From there on, wage increases were 13.3 per cent, 8.3 per cent, 5.6 per cent and so on, on the way down, when the government put on a freeze. Likewise, prices were on the way down. They were 10.9 per cent the year before, 10.8 per cent when the government started its freeze and they dropped to 7.5 per cent. However, unlike wages, they did not keep going down. In 1977, while wages continued to go down, prices started coming up to 8 per cent. The next year, they were 8.9 per cent. In other words, while wage increases dropped from 14.5 per cent to 5.6 per cent, the price rise dropped only from 10.8 per cent to 8.9 per cent. In other words, it was very successful in cutting wages and increasing profits. As the government has admitted in the study it did a year and a half ago, it was a failure in lowering prices. It was a fraud and a failure.

It is very interesting that at that time the Governor of the Bank of Canada more or less admitted that that was what was going on. At that time, in his annual report he said:

> —through a sharp and immediate reduction of the growth rate of the money supply . . . inflation would readily come to an end.
> The trouble with this prescription is not with the medicine but with the dosage, which would be so great that the patient would suffer excessively while it was working. It would sharply curtail the growth of spending on goods and services—

He spoke as though he did not want this to occur, but in fact all his predictions occurred. He said:

> It would sharply curtail the growth of spending on goods and services . . . result in extremely weak markets, widespread bankruptcies and soaring unemployment.

Boy, do we ever have weak markets! He spoke as though he did not want to do this, but that is exactly what he did. At the time he spoke, unemployment was 6.9 per cent. Now, thanks to Bouey, it is 10.9 per cent and rising. At that time inflation was 9.5 per cent. Now it is 11.8 per cent. The bank rate was 9 per cent and it is now over 16 per cent. At that time there were 246 business bankruptcies per month. The figure is now over 900 per month. Consumer bankruptcies totalled 8,335 and have now nearly doubled to more than 14,000. In other words, the evil result that Mr. Bouey said he would like to avoid is exactly the result he has achieved with his systematic increase in interest rates.

The wage freeze of 1975-76 was a fraud and a failure. This one is a fraud and will be a failure. The people of Spadina and the rest of Canada will not accept this. They will not accept this attack on the wages, bargaining rights, pensions and income tax exemptions of the ordinary working people of Spadina and Canada. They will not accept government-made inflation of prices and the deliberately increased unemployment brought on by this government.

These people understand what the government meant a year and half ago when it said it could not bring in a wage freeze unless it could be made to be seen that there was some kind of emergency. They understand the government has created the sense or appearance of an emergency, or even a real emergency, to provide the excuse for bringing in the wage freeze.

These people understand that the government regularly defends the profits of the big corporations. I am not talking about the small businessmen, the merchants and manufacturers of Spadina. The government is wiping those out at a great rate. I am talking about the large corporations such as the oil companies and the banks.

The people of Spadina, Toronto and Canada understand that the government is the defender of those corporations. They are the first-class citizens even if they are not Canadians. Even if they do not live in Canada, they are the first-class citizens here. The Minister of Finance said that everyone who is an employee is a second-class citizen and is condemned to be blamed for the inflation and unemployment which this government has created.

Some members opposite suggest it is not good enough merely to point out that their plan is a fraud and will fail, that some alternative ought to be offered. I remind them that the leader of our party, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), has repeatedly put forward alternatives. I will touch on some of them.

The chief alternative that we ask for is a policy to replace imports so that we can restore our manufacturing industry and reduce our deficit in imported goods. We must replace imports of transportation machinery, not just automobiles but transportation, mining, forest and farm machinery, all those things we now import and which are increasing the deficit in this country. We must start to produce these items again in Canada. We should follow the lead of some other countries and impose restraints on the multinational corporations, telling them that if they want a slice of the Canadian market, they have to produce in Canada accordingly and provide jobs so that people can buy those products. They have to create jobs here of equal value to what they want to import into Canada.

We have suggested that investment be put into manufacturing rather than handouts to the poor, starving oil barons and the banks in the form of interest rates deliberately kept high. Public investment should be directed away from megaprojects and into manufacturing in order to provide employment for Canadians where they are, in the cities, with the skills they have and have shown.

There are four other points I wish to list. We must compel the banks to lower interest rates to 1 per cent above the inflation rate. We must be ready to impose foreign exchange controls to prevent investors from shipping abroad the capital produced by Canadian labour. If that has to be done by public control, or even expropriation of the banks as other countries have done, so be it.

Immediately we have to boost the affordable housing industry, not the luxury housing which the minister likes so much, with $500 million of investment to spark 50,000 new units and 100,000 new jobs. We have to boost farming with price stabilization and forestry and fisheries with programs for reforestation and regeneration of those resources.

We must give them an immediate shot in the arm once we have protected the Canadian economy from being raped by foreign investors. Then it would be appropriate to cut taxes for low and middle-income people and to cut the planned increases in oil prices in order to stimulate consumer buying. That would release about $4 billion, $2 billion from each. We should stimulate consumer buying and get our manufacturing industry going again, which now operates at about two-thirds capacity.

This is what should be done instead of this class legislation which will not work. It is being rejected by the Canadian people. It cries out for a completely new social contract. This Liberal government with Tory backing has ripped up the social contract made with the working people of Canada in 1945. A new contract is needed.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to be taking part in the debate this afternoon, and I am particularly pleased to see that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) is in the House. Unfortunately, I could not be in my riding last weekend to welcome him. I hope he had an opportunity to visit the area when he met my few Progressive Conservative friends, at Maria. I also hope he noticed that the federal government's presence is very visible in the riding of Bonaventure and in the Gaspé, and that the people in this area do not intend to change their allegiance in the House of Commons and intend to continue with the same members in the spirit of co-operation that has always existed in this part of the country which was, in fact, the first area to be discovered. They intend to make the development plan for eastern Quebec, announced on May 4 by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), a success and show that in an area where at certain times of the year the unemployment rate is as much as 60 per cent, it is possible to reduce unemployment and improve conditions so that people can go on living there, to co-operate with the federal government and to obtain funds earmarked for this purpose. It is clear, Mr. Speaker—

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, on a point of order.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, usually I manage to resist the temptation to get involved in this kind of debate with hon. members, but he mentioned my recent visit, and I simply want to say that I had an excellent reception and that I have photographs taken by some of the hon. member's fellow citizens showing the state of the wharves in certain areas of his riding; I am sure that together, we would be able to persuade the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) to repair the wharves and give the fishermen in his area a chance to earn a living.

Mr. Bujold: I wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, I may point out, however, that perhaps his advisers forgot to mention that, last year, the federal government injected $10 million into the local economy for the construction of wharves alone, and this year, in my own constituency, the federal government injected $3 million, and the fishermen from this part of Quebec and Canada are very pleased with the federal government's participation.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the bill under consideration this afternoon demands the involvement and co-operation of all Canadians. When wage increases are frozen at 6 and 5 per cent for the next two years, obviously no one is going to be too pleased. On the other hand, if we look at the economic situation throughout the country, we must set aside our personal interests and concentrate on the interests of the entire country. In his budget speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said, and I quote:

> I will ask Canadians to participate in a strategy to make Canada a tougher, more resilient society. The way out of the recession is to bring down inflation and increase productivity. We must all share the burden and responsibility.
> The government will take a leading role in this strategy.

I believe that, by this appeal, the Minister of Finance wanted to go beyond any political partisanship, any personal interest of individual Canadians. He was making a general appeal so that every one of us would put aside our personal ambitions or ideas to make a determined attack on the major problem now facing us, namely inflation. It is obvious that all of us, the government, the unions and business, must make every effort to reduce inflation throughout the country. Everyone must do his share. Obviously, the federal government had to show leadership in this area. For such a program to be successful, we must call on the generosity of everyone. The process which we began in the budget speech cannot succeed if every Canadian in every region of the country does not feel involved in the present debate.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we have already had examples throughout the country to show that there is some solidarity among Canadians and that some people are willing to share with others and be generous.

Let me just say, Mr. Speaker, that the experience of our own department of Employment and Immigration has shown for eight to ten months already that workers throughout the country can share with their fellow citizens. When we introduced the word-sharing program, we were appealing to the generosity of Canadian workers. If over 3,000 work-sharing agreements have now been signed in Canada, which agreements have preserved 115,000 jobs and allowed 52,000 workers to continue working in the same plants, it is precisely because other workers in these same plants were willing to reduce their wages and share with others who would otherwise have been laid-off. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if these workers had not agreed to the work-sharing plan, if they had not shown this generosity in key industries in certain areas, these industries would have had to shut down and we would have had unemployment and jobless rates of 50, 60, 80 and even 90 per cent. We have here a striking example, Mr. Speaker, of the fact that Canadians are capable and willing to co-operate with each other in dealing with the major problem of the day—inflation.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, following the budget speech, the opposition reacted quite ruthlessly in some areas, but that was to be expected, because, whenever the government takes action or announces measures, it has been customary for the opposition, the media and all opposition groups in the country to criticize the government in power. However, as people started to look at the budget and realized what was involved and looked at the economic situation throughout the country, opposition to the budget gradually faded. In a number of meetings held by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance with major groups in this country and in meetings held by other ministers with members on this side of the House, to explain the budget measures in greater detail, it became clear to many Canadians that the measures we were proposing were beneficial to the Canadian people. When the president of the Canadian Labour Congress came out of his meeting with the Prime Minister, some of our opposition friends did not particularly like his comments, but I think the president and some of his colleagues have understood that the serious situation we are experiencing today is the concern of all Canadians, that it is not just a problem to be solved not only by the Canadian government but also by the unions, workers, business, and all Canadians in this country.

Mr. Speaker, when we hear criticism of Bill C-124 and when people argue that we are going to gag the unions, that the right of strike will be more or less abolished throughout the public service, I would like to point out that we are now at the second reading stage. Negotiations and discussions can continue, and the Prime Minister said very clearly that all good suggestions, and I insist on the word good, will be given serious consideration by the government.

Obviously, we are not going to close the door on negotiations, and the bill now before the House is limited in time, because it will apply for a period of two years. All unions and all Canadians involved throughout the country will have an opportunity to express their views, to modify certain decisions and bring about changes in the state of the economy, during and beyond those two years.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that many Canadian industries have had to shut down because of the present economic crisis. If the measures we are proposing are successful in bringing down inflation, many industries will be able to remain active and many workers will be able to continue to work in these industries, which will prove beneficial to all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, it is important that we understand the measures this government wishes to introduce in the fight against inflation. Understandably, Canadians are not eager to see industries close down and people who have worked in these industries for twenty or thirty years lose their jobs, and often older people at that. No one likes to see these people lose their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m. tomorrow.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEMAND THAT GENERAL ELECTION BE CALLED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I am sick of a government that feeds inflation instead of "wrestling it to the ground", that increases its spending by 20 per cent but asks Canadians to cut their expectations to 6 per cent, that rewards the bureaucracy with 10 per cent to 12 per cent pay increases just before the budget, but that slaps our Armed Forces in the face with a $100 million reduction. I am sick of a government that has killed Canadians' initiative and their incentive to invest in Canada. I am sick of Liberal members who think it is clever, smart, and cute to change Dominion Day to Canada Day. My constituents tell me they are fed up and ask what we can do. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That (a), the disenchanted Liberal members cross the floor; or (b), the Prime Minister give the country some hope by immediately calling an election.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

NEEDS OF OLD AGE PENSIONERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The National Council of Welfare, a federally appointed body, set up to advise the Minister of National Health and Welfare about the problems of poor people, has stated that the budget's "social policy aspects will adversely affect thousands of low-income Canadians." The Council estimates that among those who will be hard hurt by the budget proposals are 100,000 pensioners living at or just above the poverty line. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Crosbie):

That the House of Commons condemns the government and, in particular, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, for their callous disregard of the needs of 100,000 senior citizens at or just above the poverty line, whose real income, meagre though it is, will be reduced as a result of the June 28 budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

SUGGESTED CREDIT CARD APPELLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, whereas the taxpayers of Canada have invested over $2 billion in Petro-Canada; whereas that was not enough and the government confiscated 25 per cent of other oil interests from other legitimate companies; whereas that was not enough and the government has now imposed a 4-cent per gallon tax on Canadians, which will total some $1.4 billion, to finance Petro-Canada; and whereas even with that the company is failing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That Petro-Canada properly name its credit card "Pierre Elliott Trudeau Rips Off Canada."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYMENT OF NATIVE PEOPLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the policy announced by the government in 1978 to increase the participation of Indian, non-status Indian, Métis and Inuit in the federal public service has produced some 500 jobs, compared to a target of 12,000 jobs; and in view of the fact that this dismal failure resulted from the government's lack of commitment to the joint council that was established to implement existing native employment programs and is made up of native representatives and government officials, I move, seconded by the hon. member from Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House decries the government's shabby approach to its own stated policy and instructs the President of the Treasury Board to give assurances immediately to the members of the joint council that the necessary financial and human resources required to implement this policy will be provided forthwith.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

COSTS OF PRODUCING GASOLINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the purpose in creating Petro-Canada was that this company would supply "a window on the oil industry" to Canada. But the window has become frosted as Petro-Canada refuses to supply Members of Parliament any detail of the costs of producing gasoline, both leaded and unleaded, or a justification for the difference in price of these products per litre. Since Petro-Canada is "ours", I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That Petro-Canada be directed by this House to supply to this House, and to the public generally, a complete breakdown as to its cost of producing gasoline, both leaded and unleaded, and a proper justification for the difference, sometimes as much as 5 cents a litre at the pump, in the price of these gasoline products.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR INSTITUTION OF NATIONAL LABOUR FORCE TRAINING PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Unless an agreement is reached between the federal government and the Government of Quebec between now and September 1, Quebec may lose $108 million it would otherwise receive under the national program for occupational training. Since the program is aimed at improving access to the labour market for thousands of unemployed Quebec workers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House ask the governments concerned to end their futile arguments and to establish this program, for which there is such a pressing need in Quebec, as soon as possible.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

HEALTH COVERAGE FOR WIDOWS AGED 60 TO 65 YEARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the provisions of the present spouse's allowance which provides for assistance to spouses between the ages of 60 and 65 if they are married to old age security pensioners are extremely unfair to widowed Canadians between the ages of 60 and 65. There is a large number of widowed Canadians between the ages of 60 and 65 who cannot work and are not eligible for income assistance or paid medicare coverage. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That this House directs the Minister of National Health and Welfare to amend those sections of the Old Age Security Act dealing with spouses' allowances to allow for special health coverage for widows of pensioners between the ages of 60 and 65 years.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REVIEW OF BRITISH COLUMBIA REGIONAL OFFICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development in a July 7 letter to the minister restated its urgent recommendation, made in its fifth report filed in this House on June 1, calling for an independent inquiry into certain aspects of the activities of the British Columbia regional office. Despite these repeated positions taken by a standing committee on this House, the minister yesterday announced a restricted internal review, which cannot begin to address the issues raised. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That this House instructs the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to honour the considered recommendation of a House standing committee by immediately appointing qualified persons to undertake an independent inquiry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MINES AND MINING

SUGGESTED STOCKPILING OF BASE METALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, the base metal mining industry in Canada faces a bleak winter. In particular, towns based on such mining activity may be decimated due to mass lay-offs because of temporary mine closures resulting from high inventory and low demand.

I believe the federal government should establish a selective strategic base metals stockpile equivalent to a three-month production supply from mines which are facing shutdown during the coming winter, and that such government-owned stockpile inventory be financed by federal government taxation revenues from either the approval of additional gas exports to the United States, from savings resulting from a cutback in oil imports, or borrowings against the base metals stockpiled inventory. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) and the hon. member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner):

That the government immediately undertake to study and implement a government-owned base metals stockpile to alleviate unemployment in the base metal mining industry this coming winter.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL PARKS

APPLICATION OF CONTROL GUIDELINES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the people of Canada expect the Treasury Board and Parks Canada to live with the 6 per cent ceiling on land rentals under their control. A constituent of mine was informed by Parks Canada that a 50 per cent increase in the rent due from federal land is, to use the words of the Parks Canada, "in line with a Treasury Board directive". In addition, similar increases were projected by Parks Canada up until 1984, namely, 50 per cent per year for land rentals under the control of Parks Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

• (1415)

That this House urge the government to set clear and unequivocal guidelines for all federal departments to follow the 6 per cent ceiling contained in the budget for prices of government delivered services. In this way the people of Canada may derive some of the benefits of wage and price guidelines and not simply shoulder all of the costs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS IN CAMBRIDGE, ONT.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, of the minister responsible for employment and of the Minister of Finance, may I put my question to the Acting Prime Minister. As he probably knows, Cambridge is a community of 75,000 people in the heartland of southwestern Ontario. Until this year it had virtually no real unemployment. This morning the mayor of Cambridge telephoned me and advised me that in the first six months of this year 3,629 residents of Cambridge have been placed on indefinite lay-off; in the last year 1,090 people have become unemployed as a result of plant closures, and there are 1,683 temporary lay-offs.

Will the Acting Prime Minister please advise me what to tell my constituents whose hopes and dreams have been dashed, and whose pride has been stifled as a result of unprecedented rates of unemployment in the heartland of industrial Ontario? What will they do?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member should tell his constituents that the policies of the government are to make sure that Canada will come back as a very competitive society, and that if we achieve the goals established in the budget by the Minister of Finance, and if we manage to bring down inflation, Canada will regain its competitive position in the world market and so the good workers of Cambridge will be able to produce goods that will find markets.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, I am surprised by the lack of sensitivity in the answer given by the Acting Prime Minister.

Oral Questions

NON-APPLICATION TO CAMBRIDGE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, this morning I was advised by Ingersoll-Rand that they are closing their plant in Cambridge, which means that 200 more people will lose their jobs. ILAP applies to Kitchener but it does not apply to Cambridge, which is in the same regional municipality. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell us why that program does not apply to Cambridge which has massive unemployment, but applies to Kitchener, which does not have such bad unemployment?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the designation of various areas in Canada is based on the levels of unemployment and the nature of industrial problems in those areas. Designations have been made from time to time, and if the hon. member wishes to make representations regarding the city of Cambridge, he can do his duty as a Member of Parliament and get in touch with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSED CLOSING OF RCA CANADA

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for International Trade. RCA Canada announced today that it would be closing indefinitely at the end of the year. That means that 1,200 people in my riding will lose their jobs at one plant alone. The company cites the loss of the European market and severe foreign price competition as the reasons. It is the last producer of colour picture tubes in Canada. What action is the government going to take to enforce the use of Canadian production in these products which come into our country, and in that way guarantee some jobs for Canadians?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I have not been approached by RCA to my knowledge in the past two and a half years since I have been minister, with respect to their particular problem to which the hon. member refers. I will look into the situation and act accordingly.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DOFASCO LAY-OFFS IN HAMILTON, ONT.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, in the absence of all the key economic cabinet ministers, and despite the favourable economic predictions of the Liberal government, I should like to bring to the attention of the House the announcement just made by Dofasco of Hamilton, one of our blue chip industries and the second largest steel manufacturer in Canada, of its intention to lay off 2,100 employees indefinitely. This is the first major lay-off in the history of the company.

I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister or to the Acting Minister of Finance. When are they going to recognize that the government's interest rate policies and massive deficit have wrestled our economy to the ground, and what action do they intend to take to deal with the 2,100 newly unemployed in one community alone?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is very unfair because the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce are meeting at this time with some labour leaders in this building in order to try to get the consensus we need to bring Canada back into a competitive position in world markets. They are working on the problem at this very moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, if they succeed in getting a consensus that it is in the best interests of all workers in Canada to do what is needed to make sure we bring Canada's workers and products back to a competitive position, that will serve the purpose that the hon. member is seeking. It will make sure that a company which produces goods in his riding, or elsewhere, will be able to sell its goods abroad at a competitive price.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, that answer will not help the 2,100 newly unemployed. Nor will the last three federal budgets help those unemployed.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the cabinet ministers in the economic field, on behalf of my constituents and the 1.3 million unemployed Canadians I ask the remaining cabinet ministers and the Liberal backbenchers when are they going to stand up on behalf of Canadians against the bankrupt economic policies of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, and demand a change. Could the Acting Prime Minister stand up on behalf of Canadians and answer that?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance produced a very good budget which is receiving—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —at this time more and more support in the nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: He has tried to tackle the problems at the most crucial point. That means that Canada, the greatest trader per capita in the world, has to maintain its competitive position. If we succeed in the national campaign, on which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are working at this moment with some union leaders, and if we can have the support of the opposition in that national drive, we will regain the position we want to have in world markets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I am sure the workers at Dofasco do not think it was a very good budget.

HOUSING

RENT INCREASES—REQUEST THAT INSTRUCTIONS BE ISSUED TO CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. In March of this year the then president of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. Hession, said that rents in Ontario needed to increase significantly in order to stimulate new development. At the same time the minister was indicating he thought that rent controls were an impediment to the growth of the rental accommodation industry and the provision of rental accommodation.

Given that the Minister of Finance has said we need to bring inflation down to 6 per cent, and given that every single renter, regardless of where he turns, is being faced with increases well in excess of 6 per cent, will the minister do two things: one, will he instruct CMHC not to charge more than 6 per cent for all accommodation within their jurisdiction; two, will he meet with the various provincial ministers responsible for housing and require that they put in place rent control mechanisms to guarantee that rents will not rise above the 6 per cent level?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, one of the reasons why rents are so high and there is pressure for increases in the cost of rental accommodation, and one of the reasons for the lack of an adequate supply of rental accommodation in Canada from coast to coast, is just that: people are not building.

• (1425)

Mr. Cosgrove: In recognition of that fact, Madam Speaker, the government in its November budget introduced a $350 million program to support the early construction of 30,000 new units of rental accommodation to increase the supply, to take the pressure off price and, therefore off rents, to people looking for accommodation. More than that, one third of those units are designated to be on a rent geared to income basis. I sought the co-operation and the support of the hon. member who seems to be concerned about Canadians looking for that type of accommodation, worried about supply and affordability, but unfortunately, how can the member rise in his place, pretend to be concerned about those items, and at the same time turn down that program, vote against 60,000 jobs and 30,000 units?

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, the minister is long on rhetoric and short on facts. Surely he knows that new rental accommodation does not come under rent control programs, at least in the province of Ontario, and so his argument is absolute nonsense.

RENT INCREASE IN TORONTO PROJECT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the minister responsible for housing. Given that CMHC has complete jurisdiction over the premises at 1338 Queen Street East, Toronto; given the fact that the vast majority of people living in that building are either veterans or pensioners, and given that they are going to have a 25 per cent rental increase on September 1, will the minister move to protect those people from the gouging of CMHC, and will he move to protect them in a way that is consistent with the suggestion of the Minister of Finance that inflation should be at 6 per cent and that therefore rents should go no higher than 6 per cent in government-owned and operated buildings?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, with all respect, the hon. member does not know what he is talking about. If indeed he is concerned about the welfare of people in those projects who cannot afford to pay increases in rent, he would have paid attention to the fact that CMHC has indicated that in those cases where people have to pay a proportion of their income that everyone agrees is beyond reason they are supported on a rent geared to income basis. Indeed, some of them would not have to pay even a 6 per cent increase, which the hon. member is wishing that we put on top of them. I wish he would get his facts straight.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I do not understand how the minister can stand in the House and say such things.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT EXERCISE RESTRAINT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the people at 1338 Queen Street East, Toronto, are affected by a 25 per cent increase, notice of which they have already received, to commence September 1. They are veterans and they are widows. Does the minister not feel any sense of responsibility to those people whose incomes will be restrained by the government program but whose costs will be left to skyrocket far beyond what they can afford? Surely to God it is not too much to ask that in those cases where incomes are being restrained by the government that costs should also be restrained by the government?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I think that my answer did not register with the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: It is for the very reasons the hon. member expresses that I would not wish to visit increases over and above those which people are being asked to pay for now, because he asked that we raise them 6 per cent. Some of them will not have to pay that 6 per cent. Notwithstanding the inability of the hon. member to grasp that, in conscience I would say that we would not accede to his request and raise those rents.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

APPLICATION OF PROPOSED MORTGAGE REDUCTION SCHEME

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for housing. The Minister of Finance said yesterday:

—the restraint program will apply to all agencies and all departments of the Government of Canada.

My question has to do with the mortgage reduction scheme about which there is some uncertainty. Assuming that the scheme is feasible and is recommended by the blue ribbon committee, and is put in place, it will only apply to those who buy new houses. Given the inequity in that situation, will the scheme be broadened to include all those who buy houses, including those who buy resale homes?

• (1430)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member will look at the announcement and the words of the Minister of Finance when he introduced that subject in the budget speech on budget night, he will see that the plan is designed to be available not only to purchasers of new housing, but is designed to be available to small-business men, fishermen and farmers. That is a wider area than the question indicated. The difficulty is that without having the terms of the plan fleshed out by this blue ribbon committee, it is not possible to include the whole universe. Otherwise, we would have a scheme which is the total answer. We know that will not work. We know that the preliminary study of that plan indicates that it is of a limited effect, and that is why the minister has limited it to those four categories for the purpose of studying its feasibility.

Mr. McGrath: I am glad that the minister is at least clear on that point. Now we know that this mortgage reduction program will not apply to resale homes.

POSITION OF HOME OWNERS RENEWING MORTGAGES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, what mortgage relief can we expect for the half million Canadians who are facing mortgage renewals between now and October, most of whom are facing mortgage rates of 20 per cent? It is not enough for the minister to say that the $3,000 forgivable loan will apply here, because if we apply that $3,000 forgivable loan to reduce a conventional mortgage on an average-priced home, it will mean a reduction of one per cent. In other words, those people will get mortgages for 19 per cent, whereas those who are in the privileged category of buying new homes can expect a mortgage reduction of up to 6 per cent. What is fair or just about that?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I take it from the hon. member's question that his reference to $3,000 is the grant provision funded by $300 million in the announcement of the Minister of Finance on budget night. This goes to provide grants to purchasers of new homes or to first-time buyers of existing homes.

I direct the hon. member's attention to a further provision in the budget, that is, the allocation of an additional $50 million designed to fund the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan, which is addressed specifically to the question raised by the hon. member. That plan provides that, in the face of the renewals which the hon. member has mentioned, those people who have to pay more than 30 per cent of their income toward renewal carrying charges will receive a grant of up to $3,000. There is no interest deferral; it is an outright grant which will be of considerable assistance to the Canadians about whom he has talked.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION POLICY ON RENT INCREASES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for CMHC. It concerns rental rates on the 20,000-odd units which CMHC is renting out, many of which it acquired by reason of foreclosure. I listened carefully to what the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain had to say and the reply, but I am afraid that the reply was somewhat unintelligible. That might have been because the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain did not ask nicely, so I will ask my question nicely and courteously. Is it the policy to escalate rental rates rapidly to bring them into line with so-called market conditions to enhance saleability, or will the 6 per cent guideline apply? Which is it?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the thrust of the questions from the official opposition regarding the portfolio of CMHC under the mortgage insurance fund, for some reason has been the opposite tack to the questions raised today. Many questions by members of the opposition have been directed to me asking why, for example, CMHC is renting properties at what was referred to by hon. members opposite as lower than market rates. For example, they wanted to know why we were offering buydowns in order to dispose of these properties. Now I take it that the hon. gentlemen on the other side have come to the conclusion that in fact the rents are too high. I wish they would be consistent.

The difficulty is that under that fund, and under the National Housing Act, the corporation is required by law to return those funds which were borrowed at the request of the former government under the leadership of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Funds were borrowed to take the corporation through a difficult time with increased foreclosures, and we have that obligation under law.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, I wonder whether that answer was intelligible to you.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, it seems that the policy of the government with respect to wages and salaries is to freeze them by fiat at 6 per cent, whereas when it comes to rents for CMHC, the policy of government is to get them up as quickly as possible. Is that fair?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I take it that this question had something to do with the first question, so in light of that, and with that interpretation, I refer the hon. member to that section in the speech of the Minister of Finance on budget evening where he made reference to the 6 per cent rule and indicated that that would apply generally but that there were some exceptions which could be made. I have indicated that I will report to the Minister of Finance and to the House on the position of CMHC after we have had the opportunity to study that.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INCOME LEVEL APPLICABLE TO WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I notified him that I would be asking this question. The minister is aware that for some time the maximum annual allowable income for veterans receiving the war veterans allowance has been fixed at $3,100 per year. Recently he admitted that this level was too low and promised that he would take steps to correct the problem. What will the new limit be, and when will the minister be presenting his proposal to Treasury Board for approval?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. We are currently studying the possibility of raising the casual earnings exemption for recipients of war veterans allowance, presently set at $3,100 for married couples and $2,100 for singles. In addition to that, we are also looking at the question of closing the gap on war veterans allowance benefits to those under 65 as compared with those over 65, as well as the question of raising the level of interest deductions allowable under the war veterans allowance. I can tell the hon. member that I raised these three items when I appeared before the standing committee and indicated that I was anxious to proceed with all three. I will certainly be pleased to indicate that to the hon. member and to all members of the House at a time when we are prepared to go ahead.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Could he tell the House whether the legislation will be introduced this fall, this calendar year, and whether it will apply to the 1982 calendar year, so that those veterans who have worked and earned up to $3,100 can continue to work with the assurance that they will be allowed to earn higher incomes, perhaps even up to $5,000, without affecting their allowances for 1982?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member the assurance that it will be proceeded with in the fall, but certainly I am hopeful that I will be in a position to see a number of these issues resolved during the fall session. I remind the hon. member that in the interim the war veterans allowance continues to be indexed on a quarterly basis and, to that extent, the impact of the cost of living on veterans will be diminished as a result of this particular provision.

ENERGY

EXPORT OF NATIONAL GAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I have a particularly serious question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. When the minister was opposition critic for energy in 1979, he had this to say about a proposed Conservative export of 3.7 trillion cubic feet of natural gas to the U.S. I quote from Hansard of December, 1979:

> The worst thing that we could do is to export gas for a fast buck or in order to support a faltering dollar, because then it will mean that down the line we will have to supply our Canadian needs with more expensive and more polluting resources.

Now, under a Liberal government, the National Energy Board is considering an application to export almost ten times that much, and the minister has been south of the border recently flogging natural gas exports. Does the minister intend to assure the people of Canada that he has not changed his mind about the sellout of resources, and what does he intend to do to prevent that?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the statement that the hon. member read is a great statement. I am glad that he supports it. I support it also.

Mr. Rose: I am mystified, but I really should not be because what the Liberals say and what they do is often contradictory.

APPLICATION OF CONTROL GUIDELINES TO ENERGY PRICES

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, oil costs are about to jump 10 per cent on September 1 and natural gas is going up at the same time. The cost will jump another 10 per cent next spring thanks to a federal-provincial agreement. Last year the cost of home heating oil went up $400, and the cost of operating an automobile went from $730 to $945. What does the minister and the government intend to do to see that energy prices conform to the wonderful world of 6 per cent?

An hon. Member: Nothing.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we have a commitment with three producing provinces. One of those agreements was signed with an NDP government in Saskatchewan which my hon. member will remember. We have a commitment, under those agreements, that the price of conventional oil discovered before 1981 in Canada would never go above 75 per cent of international prices, and under those agreements we have an arrangement whereby we are guaranteed that the price of oil in Canada will remain very substantially below international prices between now and 1986. I think we should be very proud of these achievements and the co-operation which we got from the producing provinces in this regard. We should be ready to live with and honour our commitments.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPLICATION OF SATELLITE TECHNOLOGY TO TELEVISION BROADCASTING

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Would the minister be in a position today to announce a policy which would replace the policies that have so far been followed in terms of the implementation of satellite technology for the delivery of television signals? As he knows, the Cancom Company have now scrambled their signals in large areas of rural Canada, particularly the area in northeastern British Columbia that I represent. That area does not have access to television at all. Has the minister arrived at a decision, has that decision been communicated to the CRTC, and what answers does he have for this large segment of our society that does not have any access to television?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member realizes, I think that the Cancom experience has been a very successful one in allowing most of the outlying regions of the country to obtain decent television coverage from three or four television stations and a number of radio channels. The licensing process has been ongoing. I believe there are over 300 licensees at the moment. I think that the hon. member is concerned about the type of organization that can be licensed by the CRTC. I would undertake to communicate his concerns to the CRTC to determine whether it would indeed be possible to allow the municipalities to become licence holders. That is a matter which I would discuss with the CRTC at this time.

Mr. Oberle: I appreciate the minister's answer. He understands the peculiar problems in my area which are similar to those in most rural areas in Canada.

LACK OF TELEVISION RECEPTION IN RURAL AREAS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, the situation is that the CRTC has given licences to operators who are not concerned about coverage to the rural areas and that there will be a need to offer duplicate licences to other operators who are willing to broadcast a signal to outlying areas. This is crucially important for farm communities where people often do not have any access to television and, in terms of official public policy, are denied the benefits of our new technological breakthroughs.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the hon. member raises a very real problem because there are indeed a number of areas in the country where simply cabling a village does not meet any of the requirements of people who live outside the boundaries of the population agglomeration.

I should point out, however, that there is a second problem involved in the rebroadcast type of equipment, in the sense that there is a limited amount of spectrum that is available, and you probably could not license a new operator to rebroadcast four or five channels. Once again, this is a matter that I am most sympathetic to, and one of which both my department and the CRTC are aware. I will pursue the matter with them.

SELLING PRICE OF HEATING OIL

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I recently talked to a small fuel-oil supplier in my riding who lost a contract for supplying a local municipality with heating oil. Petro-Canada sold them oil at a cost below that at which this supplier could buy it. I now understand that Petro-Canada is sending every household a brochure advertising cheap home fuel. Is it the intention of the minister to force all small fuel companies out of business by letting Petro-Canada sell heating oil at prices so low that they must be subsidized by their own tax dollars?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there is no subsidization of Petro-Canada to provide cheap prices. As a matter of fact I receive complaints from some members every once in a while that Petro-Canada is charging more than others. Petro-Canada is in a very competitive business and if, in some cases, Petro-Canada ends up causing the consumers to pay less for their fuel than they would otherwise have to pay, I am afraid that I cannot complain about such a situation. The consumers of Canada will benefit from a very active competition in the oil and gas business. Petro-Canada should continue to do its job in that regard. Its instructions are to be an aggressive competitor in the industry and to make sure that the consumers of this country get the best possible deal.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I would like to remind the minister that I recognize, every time I pull into a gas station, that I pay so much to subsidize his Petro-Canada.

EFFECT ON INDEPENDENT FUEL OIL COMPANIES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, has the minister considered designating funds to retrain the soon to be unemployed independent gasoline and fuel oil company employers forced out of business by the minister's aggressive marketing of Petro-Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am advised that a large number of distributors of Petro-Canada products are independent distributors who are operating franchises and who are just doing their business as normal, average Canadians earning their living.

HOUSING

POSITION OF HOME OWNERS AND PURCHASERS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of housing. In spite of all of the language and verbiage that have been thrown around, I would like to ask the minister, for clarification, if he would encourage anyone who desires to purchase a new home to buy one now on the basis that there is some assistance forthcoming in the form of between 3 per cent and 6 per cent interest rate reductions and for those present home owners who are in a situation where their interest rates are such that by renewal they feel they may lose their homes, that they should undertake personal economic planning to hold on to their homes because aid is coming?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question I would encourage him and any Canadian with that kind of concern to look at the provisions in the budget dealing with housing.

For example, I tried to point out to an earlier questioner today the fact that the Canada mortgage renewal plan had been amended so as to provide security, in order that anybody paying over 30 per cent on renewal would be assisted by up to a $3,000 grant on that renewal. I encourage people to look at the provisions of the $3,000 grant for purchasers of new homes, first-time buyers of existing homes, in fact at all the provisions in the budget. I draw to the hon. member's attention, and every one considering a major purchase, that the purchase is their responsibility and they should have professional help. Also, they should look to Members of Parliament such as the hon. member to find out what provisions are available, not only from the federal government but from the various provinces through some of their plans.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, the reason I asked the question of the minister was because Canadians do not have copies of the budget and they would like to hear what he has to say in that regard.

USE OF DEMAND NOTE FINANCING IN PURCHASING HOUSES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, might I ask about a very important dimension that has not yet been touched upon by the minister? Because of the unusually high interest rates throughout the past 15 months or so, many people who have been buying homes have been doing so under demand notes or other forms of financing in the hope that some day interest rates would come down and then they would lock into a mortgage. Will people in that situation be able to shift from a demand note to a mortgage when the minister's program goes into effect without any prejudice to them for so doing?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the government's allocation of some three quarters of a billion dollars in the last two budgets is designed to assist Canadians with short-term plans to have long-term security in the purchase of homes. The plan which the hon. member refers to, what is probably called the mortgage index plan, is being studied by a blue ribbon committee. I expect that the question which the hon. member asked me today is one among many which that committee will try to come to grips with before making its report to the Minister of Finance.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TAX STATUS OF BAND BONUSES FROM OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Some Indians bands, in particular the Thunderchild Indian Band, have signed exploration agreements with oil companies for which they receive a signing bonus beyond the lease agreement money. Department officials have been asked to rule if this bonus money is capital or revenue, which affects how the band can have access to the money, something which is very important to them. What is the status of this ruling, and when can we expect an answer?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I will look into the matter and hope to have an answer next week.

Mr. Anguish: I find that inexcusable. The minister had notice of the question. It is deplorable that when you give notice of a question to be asked in this House you cannot get an answer on the floor of the House.

ACCESS TO REVENUE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I was going to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I had also given him notice. However, he is not here today. Perhaps his staff was not aware of that. Does the Minister of Justice as a former minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development agree that this bonus money should be considered revenue to the Indian bands? What is the government going to do about it so that Indian bands can have easy access to money that they generate, so that they will not be forever dependent upon this government?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is exaggerating a bit. He sent me a note about an hour before the House opened and now he wants to have a legal opinion. I said I would talk to my officials and give him an opinion next week. There are some things I cannot do. There is a law and we have to respect that law. The legal opinion will be given and the money will go into one of the two funds. It is their money. However, we have to apply the law as it is. I will give the hon. member an answer next week. He should be more than satisfied with that.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

ATTENDANCE BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS AT AUSTRALIAN COMMONWEALTH GAMES

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State who is responsible for fitness and amateur sport. Can the minister clarify a report in the news media with regard to an allegation by the hon. member for Skeena that some 50 government officials will be representing Canada in Australia during the upcoming Commonwealth games?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question.

Mr. Clark: You should.

Mr. Nielsen: A complete surprise.

Mr. Regan: The position of the hon. member for Skeena was not exactly that which was represented. The member for Skeena said that the Commonwealth Games had been held last September and that 50 members of my department were there. They are going to be held this September. Last September there was a pre-Commonwealth Games tournament in Australia at which there were a number of Canadian athletes. Only two members of my department where there. While this fall there will be many Canadian athletes participating in the Commonwealth Games, the delegation or the authorities from my department will be very, very few in number.

This is an example of how misinformation can come forward. For example, for many days members on the other side have been talking about the Canadian government supposedly sending a gift that was made in the United States to the members of the Royal family. It was not the federal government at all, but rather the Government of Manitoba.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NUMBER OF PROVINCES SERVED

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the minister responsible for Canada Post. I am sure the minister can answer this question rather quickly. He must be aware of how many provinces there are in Canada. Could he just answer how many provinces he and Canada Post believe there are in this country?

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster on a supplementary.

Mr. McKnight: I am absolutely amazed that the minister is not aware of how many provinces there are in Canada. I can tell the minister the reason for the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PROVISION OF ONE-DAY SERVICE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Canada Post just announced a new one-day service for all of Canada, their priority post. It has only been announced for Halifax, Quebec City, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, London, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver, nothing for Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or Saskatchewan. Will the minister explain why four out of ten provinces are exempted from priority post?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member really wanted to ask a serious question, he could have done so right away, instead of trying to express his views in an entirely devious manner. We are not depriving some provinces of postal services. This is a special service offered in a number of Canadian cities, and I feel it is absolutely outrageous that the hon. member should be playing up provincial considerations when this is a service provided to cities.

Right Hon. The citizens of the constituency of Timiskaming have been without a Member of Parliament for nearly six months. When will the government call those by elections? Why is it not calling them?

EMERGENCY MEASURES

QUERY RESPECTING CROWN PREROGATIVE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Solicitor General, who is largely responsible for the provisions of the emergency planning order. Some time ago I asked the Prime Minister what the limits were to the powers of the Crown prerogative in the emergency planning order. He replied he guessed it was the statute. The Solicitor General will know there is no statute to which the emergency planning orders are attached. Would he agree that, in the case of these orders, the powers of the Crown prerogative, and in this case of the Prime Minister, are unlimited?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I believe that question should be directed to the President of the Privy Council.

POWERS OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, since the Solicitor General is either too scared or too incompetent to answer the question, I will direct it to the President of the Privy Council. And since he was occupied with something else, I will repeat the question. Some time ago I asked the Prime Minister what the limits were to the Crown prerogative in relation to emergency planning orders. He replied that he guessed it was in the statute. Since there is no statute to which the emergency planning orders are attached, would he not agree that the powers of the Prime Minister in this case are unlimited?

SPORTS

SOFTBALL—SUGGESTED PRACTISE FOR MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order which could even be a question of privilege because it reflects upon this House of Commons. Last night the sloppy, amateur, dissipated Press Gallery slaughtered the Members of Parliament 21-3.

Some hon. Members: It was 20-3.

Mr. Benjamin: It was 20-3. I am wondering, Madam Speaker, if you could arrange through your office to require members of Parliament to start practising under the supervision of the hon. members for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) and Oxford (Mr. Halliday), so that we can make a better showing next year!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I think that is an awful shame and that the Members of Parliament should practise all summer!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: However, I think in good spirits we should congratulate the Press.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have a very brief point of order. I had thought that perhaps the opposition House leader might have asked the government House leader about the business. I want to ask the government House leader whether he has given any thought to a request I made last week to have Bill C-96 called, either in whole or in part, in order to have passage at least of sections 11 and 71, in order that the credit unions will not be faced in the fall with the possibility of the same kinds of losses of revenue that they suffered last year with the introduction of the Canada Savings Bonds. I would like to ask the government House leader if he would be prepared, between now and whenever it is that we recess, to call Bill C-96. I can assure him that we in this party will be prepared to give swift passage to that piece of legislation.

Mr. Pinard: I will be happy, Madam Speaker, to discuss this matter with House leaders at the next meeting, whenever it suits my hon. colleague. I understand he does not want me to discuss that on the floor of the House; therefore, I will wait for that meeting. In the meantime I will speak to the minister responsible for the bill and hope that we will have some constructive discussions on this subject.

While I am on my feet, Madam Speaker, I just want to confirm that later on today the President of the Treasury Board will move the appropriate motion under Standing Order 75C, and that the debate will be held later today. Also, the day that we want to be allotted will be tomorrow for the purpose of concluding debate on second reading of Bill C-124.

On Monday next we will be dealing with the second reading stage, at the beginning of the week, of the borrowing authority bill. I understand that unless we make an agreement to change the order of business for next week, we will stay on that bill for the first two days of next week.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, unless the government House leader has forgotten, I did raise the matter of Bill C-96 at a House leader's meeting. The reason I raised it today on the floor of the House is that we have not had a meeting since then.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the reason I did not ask the usual Thursday question was because we knew full well what the business was for the remainder of this week and all of next week.

I can say now that if the acting House leader for the New Democratic Party discloses again in public, as he just did, the discussions that were held in House leaders' meetings, the whole confidentiality of these meetings will break down. If it is done again, there will certainly be no confidence in his maintaining confidentiality and the place will become somewhat of a shambles.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: There are more than he who can play that game of grandstanding for political purposes and attempting to negotiate on the floor of the House of Commons what is properly discussed in the privacy and the confidentiality of House leaders' meetings.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I want to assure the opposition House leader that I will do exactly what I did today any time I feel like it.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, may I ask about House business in my capacity as joint chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. It may be, Madam Speaker, that the President of the Privy Council may not be able to give the answer today, but perhaps I can bring it to his attention now.

Under the date May 26, I have a notice of motion down for concurrence in the twelfth report of the standing joint committee. That report requests that there be a minor change in the orders of reference of the committee as they relate to enabling us to scrutinize instruments and their relationship to the Canadian Charter of Rights as well as the Bill of Rights.

On July 7 the Senate concurred in that. We now have a situation where the terms of reference for the report of the Senate are somewhat different from the terms of reference for the report to the House of Commons. I wonder if it would be agreeable to the government House leader that speedy concurrence be given to the twelfth report, perhaps without debate.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will look seriously into this matter and report to my hon. colleague, or his House leader, in the very near future.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FRIESEN—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO TABLE DOCUMENTS RESPECTING EMERGENCY PLANNING ORDERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I want to speak to a question of privilege of which I gave notice. Members of the House will remember that three and a half months ago the House voted to table documents related to emergency planning orders. To this date—and I just checked with the Table officers half an hour ago—those papers have not been tabled. It is my contention, Madam Speaker, that my work as a Member of Parliament and my interest in this area is being frustrated because the government is not obeying its own vote. The government voted with us on this particular matter. All but five of the government members agreed that the government was accountable and had to table those papers.

I would like to support my question of privilege with three points. First of all, it seems to me that the government is holding the House in contempt when it refuses to obey its own vote and does not produce these papers. Members will remember that the request was that the government table all documents, memos, telegrams and correspondence in relation to the emergency planning orders and the relationship and meetings they had had with the provincial governments. The government voted to supply those. The Parliament of Canada urged the government to supply those. For three and a half months the government has been sitting on that House order and has refused to obey its own order.

Madam Speaker, it seems to me that we have been very reasonable with the government. I have never called this to the attention of the House before. For three and a half months we have waited but the government has not obeyed its own order. I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the government is holding the House in contempt by refusing to obey its own order.

Secondly, the government said at the time—and I understand through informal discussions in the meantime—that its reason for not obeying its own order is that it is translating those documents. Now, Madam Speaker, that brings two very important questions to mind. One is, what is the state of the art in the bilingual policy that this government is endorsing and wants all Canadians to respect? Indeed, Parliament endorses that. All Canada is supposed to respect the bilingual policy of the Government of Canada, of the Parliament of Canada, except this government.

I have sat in committee when a colleague of mine would present an amendment to a bill identical to a government amendment—already translated, with the exception of one word—and presented in only one of the official languages, and I have watched and listened to the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) pout and rant because one word had not been translated. He has held up the work of a committee for 10 or 15 minutes because that one word had not been translated.

Mr. Corbin: That is absolutely false.

Mr. Friesen: However, he sits here in total silence while the government, for three and a half months, does not obey its own bilingual policy.

Mr. Corbin: That is false.

Mr. Friesen: I call upon the government to obey its own policy. If it was taking its bilingual policy seriously, it would have been translating those documents as they were being produced and not waiting three, four or five months for them.

I have a third and final point to make. I have received some documentation which leads me to believe that the message the government has been presenting to some of its provincial counterparts is not necessarily in line with what ministers have been saying here in the House and in some publications. I therefore wonder if the government has not been misleading this House by telling us it has been notifying its provincial counterparts about these matters.

I will refer to a letter I have received. I asked one of the provincial ministers about the nature of the discussions regarding the federal power to build and administer civilian internment camps. The provincial minister said to me in a letter:

> For your added information, no discussions have taken place to date that have touched in any detail on the question of "extra legally" actions that might be taken by the Federal Government in an emergency and I would not care to speculate on what is intended by this expression.

That is a reference to the expression used by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). It is in print. It is in a quarterly published by the news. In print the minister tells us one thing, and yet his provincial counterparts tell me there has been no discussion regarding that dimension of power the government is ascribing to itself. This leads me to believe that the government does not want us to see those memoranda, transcripts of those telephone conversations and that correspondence because the government fears that when we see that evidence, it will not line up with what the government has been telling us all along.

I feel I have a valid question of privilege in relation to this matter, and if Your Honour so rules, I would be ready to move the requisite motion.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, having listened to the remarks made by the hon. member, I think you might come to the conclusion that the government is making an effort to avoid producing these papers. Nothing could be further from the truth. The simple fact of the matter is that this House order only became a House order because hon. members on this side of the House agreed to it. We do have an Official Languages Act in this country which requires that documents which are to be tabled must be tabled in both official languages. These documents are very voluminous. They are very lengthy. Translation has been going on ever since the House order was issued.

Mr. Lambert: No.

Mr. Smith: I am advised, because I have made inquiries into this matter, that in fact the translations have been completed in draft form and that these papers will be tabled, certainly before the House adjourns for the summer recess.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, on a point of order or a question of privilege, my name was used a few moments ago by the previous speaker who was describing events that occurred a few months ago. I cannot recall exactly the incident in question, but, Madam Speaker, I reserve the right to raise a question of privilege to check the accuracy of the facts as set forth in the House by the hon. member.

Madam Speaker: If I may start with the remarks of the last speaker, there are often discussions in the House about the lack of concurrence in the facts, and some hon. members have one interpretation of the facts and others have another interpretation, but basically, this does not constitute a question of privilege. In any case, the hon. member has reserved the right to refer to this matter again; he has that right and I shall recognize him in due course.

[English]

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) is right that an order of the House must be obeyed. Of course, he is absolutely right in this respect. However, in the case of orders to produce papers there is no time limit on the production of such papers. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), has just given what has to be considered an explanation for the delay in producing those papers and has given his assurance that they will be tabled very shortly. I assume that satisfies the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

I must remind the hon. member that the Chair has no power to determine when documents should be tabled, even if there is an order of the House.

PETITIONS

MR. TAYLOR—REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR DELIBERATELY PLANNED MURDER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I take great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of some 278 Canadians, most of whom reside in the Bow River riding of the province of Alberta. This petition requests that capital punishment be reinstated for deliberately planned murder which is proved beyond the shadow of a doubt. Our society is built on the principle of crime being punished. When the ultimate crime—namely murder—occurs, then the ultimate punishment—namely death—should be imposed. A person who deliberately plans and executes the murder of another human being has no right to live.

My petitioners pray that the government will reflect the thinking of the majority of the people of Canada and reinstate the death sentence for anyone confessing to, or found guilty of, deliberately taking the life of another human being.

MR. MURPHY—RETENTION OF RIGHT TO COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by members of the public and supported by the elected leaders of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada. In their petition they ask that the fundamental right to bargain collectively for terms and conditions of employment be retained, that existing collective agreements be honoured and that Bill C-124 be withdrawn. This bill goes far beyond wage controls and removes basic rights and freedoms from Canadians. The right to unionize and the right to bargain have been the object of continuing struggles by the labour movement in this country and throughout the world and must be preserved as basic rights for all Canadians.

This petition is very important, in light of the motion the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) will introduce in a few minutes, which restricts debate on this very important issue.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-124

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-124, respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

He said: Madam Speaker, I have followed the proceedings of the second reading stage of Bill C-124 attentively and with great interest. It would seem, on examining the record of these proceedings to date, that the major points hon. members wish to express with respect to this bill have been made. One only has to glance at Hansard to realize that repetition has become the order of the day. It is important that this bill be moved to the next stage, and since no agreement has been reached among representatives of the parties to facilitate that, this motion is necessary.

I might say that members have already made many interventions in the debate. Our friends in the New Democratic Party who have raised a number of objections to it, have been particularly active in intervening. I note, for example, that we have heard from the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), we have heard from the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), we have heard from the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), we have heard from the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), we have heard from the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, but did you listen?

Mr. Johnston: We listened very carefully. I have heard from the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), I have heard from the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), I have heard from the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), and I have heard from the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). We have listened to the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), we have listened to the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), and undoubtedly before the final vote is taken and the bill goes to committee we will hear from other members of the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: To this point the New Democratic Party has put forward 11 speakers on this bill. I suggest that their views have been made known to the House in detail and I doubt if they have much left to add.

I would like to commend members on all sides of the House for their participation in these proceedings on second reading. I can assure members that the points raised have been and will be examined very carefully. I am sure the views expressed will be useful as we proceed through the committee stage of Bill C-124.

There is no need for me to recite the circumstances which led to the necessity for the measures contained in Bill C-124. Members on all sides of the House have recognized the serious economic circumstances of the day. As well, recognition has come from several quarters of the need for the government to provide leadership and an example for other sectors of the economy.

The need for the government to provide a clear, strong signal to serve as an example to other sectors of the economy was never more evident. Bill C-124 should be viewed in that light, not as an attack on the public service of Canada, as has been suggested by some hon. members. There is already mounting evidence that the measures contained in Bill C-124 will provide the kind of example to which other sectors of the economy will respond—will respond in a fashion tailored to their individual circumstances but nonetheless with the same objectives of reducing inflation and protecting our competitive trade position.

I would like to take this opportunity to address several particular points which have been raised during these proceedings. Many speakers have raised the question of the effect of Bill C-124 on the equal pay for work of equal value provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act. I remind members that in response to a specific question in that regard, I have indicated that it was not the intention that this bill would interfere with those provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act. I said at the time and I repeat, that to remove any uncertainty in that regard I would be prepared to introduce an appropriate amendment to the bill.

The suspension of collective bargaining rights and the right to strike has also been referred to on a number of occasions. We must keep in mind that this is a limited, short-term program designed to deal with a particular aspect of a difficult economic situation. Other countries, and I note particularly the United Kingdom and France, have taken what I would regard as even more stringent measures.

I would also note that the bill does not abrogate all employer/employee relationships. For example, in the federal public service it is my view that most of the consultation which takes place at the national joint council can continue during the term that this bill would have application. As I have said before in the House, it is my hope and the hope of the government that that will be the case. The measures contained in Bill C-124 are designed to ensure the continuance of existing bargaining structures and that at the end of the program the normal process of collective bargaining can and will be resumed.

Much has also been made in this House of the provision of the same percentage wage rate increase for all levels of the public service. Controls programs in the past have had the effect of severely disrupting existing, worthwhile management compensation practices. The program envisaged by Bill C-124 is designed not to do that.

It is also clear that the bill contains special provisions for executive levels of the federal public service. Members will recall that the tenth report of the advisory group on executive compensation in the public service recommended a wage rate increase for these levels of 9.5 per cent effective April 1, 1982. The provisions of Bill C-124 postpone the normal review date until July 1 and apply the 6 per cent increase as of that date. No other group is treated in this manner. It is also important to note that the compensation for executive levels of the federal public service trails that of their comparable counterparts in the private sector.

It has also been noted in this House that compensation for the lower levels of the public service tends to be more comparable with the private sector; thus the provision is in fact designed to be an equitable provision of wage restraint for a limited period of time. I emphasize "limited", Mr. Speaker.

In closing, I would again like to thank members of the House for their contribution to the proceedings thus far and I look forward to moving to the next stage, as I hope they do.

Bill C-124 is a necessary provision in these times, undertaken with great reluctance but nevertheless undertaken with the firm resolve that it provides the leadership and example needed to help set us on the road to lower inflation and protection of our competitive trade position.

I was interested in a Gallup poll released today which suggests that 80 per cent of Canadians would accept a 10 per cent pay cut in order to save their jobs; surely asking public servants to accept a 6 per cent pay raise to help save the country is not asking too much by comparison.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I regret having to rise to speak to this motion because of what the government is trying to do.

An hon. Member: But you are going to vote for it.

Mr. Lewis: We are not going to vote for it. The government has again moved to take away the democratic rights of Members of Parliament to debate legislation by invoking closure. After months and months of delay and indecision while the Canadian economy went into a tailspin, the government brought in legislation to control public service wages and salaries.

How long has this legislation been before the House, Mr. Speaker? What opportunities have Members of Parliament had to sample public opinion in their ridings? How long have economists had to consider the long-term effects of this bill? What chance have union and labour leaders had to consider its ramifications? The government's intention is to trample on public opinion as expressed through Members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, we have had this bill for 11 days. The bill was introduced on June 30, but with typical Liberal government trickery it was not distributed until July 5. The Liberals want to shut off the public debate in that short time. It is indecent haste and it is an arrogant abuse of our rights as Members of Parliament. It is not fair to shove this bill through second reading without giving ample time for the public to consider its ramifications.

This government, Mr. Speaker, is cowering in fear of public opinion. After months of delay and indecision while it pushed through the Constitution and raped the energy industry, it now wants to speed up passage of this particular bill. We believe in the restraint which the bill incorporates. We support the concept of restraint on the salaries of Members of Parliament, but we stand for fairness and equity in discussion. The same government which rushes through this bill also rushed through the 11 per cent increase for political assistants to ministers.

Since the last budget was brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) with the concept of wage restraints, we have pointed out the fallacy of the government's position. On the one hand it restrains; on the other hand it increases. Where are the controls on regulatory agencies? Bell Canada applies for a 25 per cent rate increase the day after the finance minister announces restraint. CMHC, a government-owned agency, could hardly wait to raise rents 20 per cent to 42 per cent. Statistics Canada reports to the public that regulated prices—telephones, heating fuel, gasoline, stamps—went up 18 per cent last year. Where is the legislation to control the prices this government has responsibility for? We have developed that theme in question period and pointed out time and time again that the Liberal government is talking out of both sides of its mouth.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, closure is not justified to shut off public debate. What would have happened if the debate on the November 12 budget had been shut off in 11 days? In that case, the Minister of Finance would not have had the opportunity to make 32 changes on eight different occasions. Where did the information for those changes come from? From the public, who understood the ramifications of the budget but did not understand it in 11 days.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) reminds us of the little Dutch boy trying to plug one of the holes in the dike. What about all the other places where this government is hemorrhaging? When is this government going to act as quickly in all those other areas?

Members of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, have a right to discuss legislation with their constituents. My constituents in Simcoe North are entitled to that opportunity when they see me on the weekend in Orillia, Midland, Penetanguishene, or on a concession road. The Liberals have muzzled discussion, they are afraid of debate and do not want public opinion to interfere with their divine right of arrogance.

I want to read to the House the remarks of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) on December 7, 1981 when he spoke on a previous closure motion of this government. That champion of free speech said, as reported on page 13776 of Hansard:

> —I have never objected to having any bills, and especially Bill C-48, being given detailed and attentive consideration by the members of this House.

That was the reason given for supporting closure. Where is that champion of freedom of speech now? His parliamentary secretary, who is in the House now, said as reported at page 13778 of Hansard:

> During that period, the draft legislation has been subjected to most careful and detailed scrutiny which has surpassed that given to most legislation before this House.

Having made that statement, will that member stand in his place and speak against this motion? I wonder if today he will have the courage of his convictions which he had on that day and speak against this motion. We heard the President of the Treasury Board in what we might call his "we have heard" speech in which he spent a lot of time detailing the members who have spoken. Well, anyone can read that in Hansard. But no matter which opposition party debated the issue, no matter what the point of view of my colleagues to my left is, they have a right to bring forward their constituents' views. This government wants them to take two days, Saturday and Sunday, and come back here and try to express those views, and then it is going to shut them off.

We are concerned, Mr. Speaker, that the bill affects public servants unevenly. We are concerned about infringement on the collective bargaining process. We want to speak our minds and the minds of our constituents on this bill. But the Liberal government wants to cut off public debate, and that is wrong, wrong, wrong. We suggest that the House vote against this motion and that the debate be allowed to continue, so that every member of every party has the opportunity to put forward the viewpoint of his or her constituents.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us which we have the opportunity of discussing will not control one price, create one new job, and certainly will not hold back one further increase in interest rates by the Bank of Canada. At the same time this iniquitous legislation will control public servants' salaries and, by implication from the arguments made by the ministers, make scapegoats of all working men and women in Canada, whether or not they are in the public sector. This bill will effectively hold women, already in a disadvantageous position because they occupy the lowest paying jobs in the public sector, in this position of inequality. Finally, when it comes to certain fundamental rights associated with freedom in the workplace, this bill will deny that freedom. It will say to working men and women in the public sector: not only are we going to control your wages, but we are going to stop you from negotiating clauses in contracts which affect the introduction of technological change. We are going to stop you from negotiating health and occupational safety conditions. We are going to stop you from negotiating reasonable or fair disciplinary procedures. In short, Mr. Speaker, there is a whole range of non-monetary matters which are going to be precluded by this bill, a whole range of rights which in a free society we associate in a basic way as the right of every worker.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, both in terms of what this bill does not do for the economy and what it does do to the fundamental rights of working people, the New Democratic Party—both on the issue of closure and on the substance of the bill itself—is in complete opposition to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: My colleagues in this debate have elaborated at great and convincing length on the weaknesses of this bill. Therefore, I want to ask the question: Why did the government bring it in? Why did it bring such legislation before the people of Canada at this time? Well, Mr. Speaker, when I spoke in the budget debate I believed the government was doing this simply because public servants are a useful scapegoat in that they are a tenable and safe target politically.

• (1540)

Today on the front page of the newspaper we learn that the Liberals had access to a comprehensive survey that showed that public servants—and I regret this—are not held in equal esteem to working men and women in the private sector. To me, a man or woman who works in a federal hospital contributes just as much to the wellbeing of Canada as a man or woman who works on an automotive line in Oshawa. All of us in this Parliament should stand up for all workers equally. That is basic.

The cynicism of this government is such that it was able to take a comprehensive survey that said two things, and then write the bill from it. It said more than two, but two are relevant to this bill. One is that public servants are a safe political target. The second one is that the people of Canada understandably want some leadership. They have been without it for so long that we can understand that. Therefore, the Liberal government moved, quite cynically and quite hypocritically, knowing that controlling public servants' wages would not affect inflation one iota—maybe a slight iota but not very much at all—but simply to save their political hides in the short run. I want members of the Liberal Party to know that it is too late to do that. Their hides are gone. They will be gone in the next election from being the Government of Canada.

If that explains the cynicism and motives of the Liberals, I want to turn now, because my thoughts are of cynicism, to the activity of the Conservative Party. If anything, the cynicism portrayed by the government on this issue has been exceeded by that of the official opposition. The official opposition has walked on both sides of the street in the debate on wage control legislation. The official opposition has done this right from day one. Just consider the record, Mr. Speaker.

On budget night, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said that he praised the controls, that that was the one good aspect of the budget. The next morning the finance critic, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), said they were unfair. The next step in the budget debate is that we find the Leader of the Opposition had once more said that the bill represented trickery on the part of the government and the government was to be condemned for that.

Some Conservative members raised questions. A few of them actually spoke in debate. The hon. members for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), Joliette (Mr. La Salle), Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) and yes, the Leader of the Opposition himself, all said that there was no price control in this legislation and that inherently made it unfair. How could one support a bill which would be controlling workers' wages but did nothing about prices, said these members at that time.

Then the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) said, very correctly, logically, consistently and factually sound, that with this bill the government was throwing out the very principle of collective bargaining itself.

Then there is the master of two-sidedness, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who said, referring to controls, that they "break unfairly and they affect people unevenly".

The hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) was flat out in his opposition to any form of wage and price controls.

The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) said that the bill was unfair.

The hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) said that the government, according to him, was shifting the blame for its own failures on to the working people of Canada, specifically on to civil servants.

How can a party that has made all of these criticisms, each of which is correct, each of which has been made by my colleagues in this debate, support such a measure? I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the only party that can make those criticisms and vote for a bill that is unfair, that does nothing about prices, that discriminates against public servants and denies collective bargaining, is the Conservative Party of Canada.

Mr. Blackburn: That is Tory logic.

Mr. Broadbent: As my colleague says, it is Tory logic.

The cynicism has been compounded this afternoon by the first Tory speaker, the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). He got to his feet and objected to closure. Isn't that sweet, Mr. Speaker? I think there has been a sweetheart deal between the Conservatives and the Liberals on this matter. The hon. member for Simcoe North got to his feet and said that we need more time to speak. That is another classical, hypocritical act. The Liberals are going to shut us up. But where have the Tories been for five days? In the past five days they have had the right to put up three times the number of speakers the New Democratic Party had. We had 12 members speak. The Progressive Conservative Party had only six. Where have they been? I will tell you where they have been, Mr. Speaker. They have been hiding. Out of one side of their mouths comes criticisms of the bill, trying to appeal to one part of the electorate, and out of the other side of their mouths comes support. I think the people of Canada before long will not only get on to the cynicism of the Liberal Party of Canada, the Liberal government, but also the people will be on to the outright cynicism of the opposition as well.

There is a fundamental issue at stake here. It is the faulty analysis of the Canadian economy which has led to the Government of Canada taking away the basic right of collective bargaining from the working people in this country. In that context, I think it is relevant in principle that in Poland it was recognized, and is recognized today, that there is an intrinsic connection between the notion itself and the right of people in their places of work, where they spend most of their lives, to have something called collective bargaining. It led to the most significant workers' movement since World War II. This took place in Europe, in Poland, whose people were committed to the notion of freedom.

I want to say that the parties in this House, the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party, paid wonderful lip service—I think it is more than lip service—to the right of people to have trade unions and to act freely as members of trade unions in Europe, and that if they are to have any integrity, they have to apply the same principle and the same sense of justice here in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That absence of justice and that absence of fairness permeates this legislation, and we in this party will have nothing to do with it. Of course, because we have used our right to speak out against this bill and want to continue to do so, we in the New Democratic Party will oppose the closure motion.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in the budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has offered a very manageable target to help all Canadians beat inflation.

Mr. Blackburn: Do we have to listen to this again?

Mr. Fisher: The Minister of Finance has said very clearly that 6 per cent should be a target for wages and prices, and that is a target well within everyone's grasp.

Mr. Kristiansen: Tell us why you have to have closure, then.

Mr. Fisher: The minister has made it very clear that he wants to build a world of 6 per cent which will create strength and genuine activity, that he wants to get rid of the world of 12 per cent that generates weakness, loss of jobs, loss of international trade and a continuing decline in our economy.

Mr. Kristiansen: Why have closure, then?

Mr. Fisher: We have set out a 6 per cent target in the budget because 6 per cent is a target that all of us can accomplish. It is most important we understand that simple idea. Six per cent is a world that we can all accomplish by working together. Six per cent is manageable, 6 per cent is strength and 6 per cent comes when Canadians co-operate together.

Today marks one of the key steps in the initial legislation to bring about a 6 per cent world. Today we are discussing a bill to restrain wage increases in the public service to a 6 per cent ceiling and then to a 5 per cent ceiling. We believe that that represents good leadership, good management and good savings for taxpayers.

First of all, it is good leadership because everyone in the public service is brought under this great umbrella; 500,000 of us are included in the 6 per cent-5 per cent world. It includes Members of Parliament, cabinet ministers, senators, senior executives, postal workers, people working for Air Canada and people working for every Crown corporation, every department and every branch of government. These 500,000 Canadians are included in this first effort toward a 6 per cent world. We have done that because these 500,000 people will provide leadership to the millions of other Canadians who daily make decisions which affect the economy. Through our action we are saying to people that we are prepared to limit our increases to an amount which will create health rather than weakness, a vital first step in the restoration of strength in our economy.

Second, the bill represents good management because $250 million will be saved this year alone and $550 million will be saved next year. Finally, it is a good use of these savings; it is a good reallocation of the $800 million which is being saved here. We are turning that back into our economy. We are turning it into jobs and into housing. We are turning it over to farmers and fishermen. We are turning it into grants for small businesses. We are asking people to create health by limiting their increases, and then we are using that money to generate health in vital sectors of our economy. This is the reason we introduced the bill. We want it for its leadership, for its good management, for the savings and stimulus it generates and, above all, as a symbol of co-operation and advancement in our economy.

Why are we worried about this? Why are we saying that 6 per cent is a manageable, desirable target? Why does the government constantly say that inflation must come down? We say it because inflation is the root disease in our economy. We do it because on the inside of our economy inflation is keeping our interest rates high, inflation is leading to greater unemployment and greater numbers of bankruptcies. Inflation has reached the point where it is creating weakness, and in turn that weakness is creating further damage and further suffering. High interest rates are caused by inflation; high interest rates in turn create bankruptcies, and bankruptcies create unemployment. On the inside of our economy we must stop the disease which is weakening us before the weakness becomes permanent.

On the outside inflation is hurting us equally. On the outside inflation is pushing our prices too high. When the world economy recovers, we want to be there and to join in that recovery. We want the prices for the goods and the commodities we export to be competitive with those in other countries. For example, when the United States has a 6 per cent inflation rate, Canada cannot afford a 12 per cent one, or we will never again sell to the United States in the large quantities of the past.

The government has acted, and this bill is one of those actions. As I mentioned earlier, this bill is a threefold effort. It provides leadership, good management and vital stimulus. It underlines our main message that we must get inflation down and create a 6 per cent growth level. We cannot afford to do that by picking out single people or single groups in society and making them scapegoats. We have heard from our close friends in the New Democratic Party the vital message that we must be careful, that we cannot pick out single groups. They are right about that, but they are wrong to assume that the 6 per cent battle will stop with public servants. The 6 per cent battle must go all through the economy. It must include executives, private businessmen and wage earners in the private sector.

Many of these people are already making sacrifices. I know, because I own my own business and I know the types of problems which inflation and tough times are creating for my business, that businessmen today are making sacrifices. We are asking our associates in the private sector to join with us in making equal sacrifices. We are not seeking our scapegoats. If we all ask for inflation minus a little bit, then for a short time we may all have to sacrifice, but in the long run we will certainly all gain from a stronger economy and from a greater, more vigorous ability to export abroad.

Those are the points behind this legislation—the point that we are in this together, the point that we are prepared to make small sacrifices, and the point that a 6 per cent world is a much stronger, much healthier and much more vigorous place than a 12 per cent world of inflation and weakness. We are aiming for 6 per cent, and we are aiming for that strength.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I regret that we have to speak again to a closure motion. I understand that the government introduced this motion because it felt the New Democratic Party was filibustering the debate and carrying it on for too long.

I do not think it would surprise any member of the House if I say that I am not very often in agreement with members of the NDP. Perhaps their diagnosis is all right, but their cure is worse than the disease. But I defend the right of the New Democratic Party, its leader, Dennis McDermott, and its deputy leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), to present their views. It is their democratic right to speak, just as that is the right of any member of the House. I may not agree with what they have to say, especially when it comes to the solutions which they offer the country.

Their idea of a solution is that if a patient has cancer, kill the patient rather than perform surgery. Nevertheless, I agree that they should be able to speak. I think it helps us all when they speak as much as they can, because every time they speak they help us. This is particularly the case when the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) speaks and The Vancouver Sun publishes his speeches. It ensures that the former hon. member for Kootenay West will return to the House. I encourage liberal and free debate in the House and giving members of the NDP a free rein to speak as long as they wish. Thus, I oppose the closure motion.

I say sincerely that the government wants closure because the legislation before us is very pockmarked. It has many flaws in it. There are many reasons people think it deserves real examination. There are unfair elements in it which ought to be exposed. I think the government is afraid that extensive debate will expose the weaknesses in the legislation. In fact, there is so much hypocrisy in the government's proposal to restrain wages that it does not want to have extensive debate on the matter.

This reminds me of the scenario four years ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) travelled to Europe and met with the Chancellor of West Germany. He returned with a marvellous restraint program at the beginning of August. He obtained free television time to announce a new program of restraint. We had finished one just two years previous to that. That was the time when just before the government announced the restraint program he carpeted the dining room upstairs and provided new silverware. In August, 1978 the Prime Minister announced another restraint program. Since then the debt of this country has been escalating.

The hypocrisy of this program is that while it may save the government approximately $200 million this year, as the parliamentary secretary just said, it will have absolutely no bearing on the spending program of the government. Restraint is being carried on the backs of the workers. As we heard in question period today and yesterday, the government is asking public servants to carry a 6 per cent load, but it can increase the prices of its services anywhere from 20 per cent to 50 per cent. It seems to me that if we are to look at all at the principle of fairness, the government ought to impose a 6 per cent increase on the prices that it charges the public if it is asking the public service to carry a 6 per cent load.

I find this worrisome. I am concerned about the fact that there is this sudden and almost cataclysmic turn of events in Canada. I, and I am sure all members, recall last year when the country was subjected to a six-week postal strike. I remember talking to my constituents who were small-business men and paying $3,000 a month to have their accounts receivable statements delivered. This was on the verge of putting some of those small businesses under. After six weeks the government settled for almost the same amount that was on the bargaining table when the strike began. The settlement was at a percentage far in excess of the 6 per cent level which we are looking at now. I am saying to the government that if they are such good managers, where were they a year ago when it was looking at percentage increases?

The government is also talking about productivity. A year ago, along with that postal price increase, it was negotiating for a 17-week period of maternity leave at which time there is no productivity on the job. Where was the government a year ago? Did it not have enough foresight to plan for the crunch that was coming a year later or to see that it would be in a deficit position? Instead of a $10.5 billion deficit, could it not see that we would have a $20.5 billion debt? A year ago the government settled far in excess of the 6 per cent limit which it is now imposing. Where are these great government planners, which they tend to think they are?

The parliamentary secretary said that the cost of government and the cost of production has escalated because of inflation and we therefore must bring inflation down. I do not argue with that. I now notice that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is deflecting that particular argument. I noted with particular interest yesterday that the Minister of Finance, when answering a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), said as reported at page 19315 of Hansard of July 14, 1982:

> Has he stopped to ask himself what is the cause of high interest rates? . . . My answer to that question is high prices. Until we get our rate of inflation down, do not ask for relief on the interest rate front.

Now we suddenly get this new economic theory which says that the cost of inflation comes from high prices. It is a truism of this government that it will blame everyone else but itself. Now it is blaming the merchandisers and the consumers. It is blaming the business community for the high prices and the high cost of living. Never mind that approximately $40 billion of government debts will come due next year. Never mind that in order to renew those debts the inflationary costs of the government will spiral.

Third, we have to examine this legislation because of the inherent unfairness within it in two areas. It is unfair in the first instance because it is based on a percentage increase. I remember when I was a member of the IWA working at Fraser Mills years ago. I wondered then about the legitimacy of asking for wage increases based on percentages. In those days I was working for 95 cents or $1 an hour. I was to receive a 5 per cent or 6 per cent increase while the foremen, on a percentage increase basis, were going to get considerably more. I admit that the foremen have a responsibility that deserves more pay, but if we consider the rollbacks under this legislation it will mean that the deputy ministers will have a substantial amount of money left over for their disposable incomes but those who are janitors in local government buildings will have precious little left over in their disposable income.

Mr. Murphy: Vote against the bill then.

Mr. Friesen: What is also eminently unfair in this legislation is that it does not provide for any discussion or negotiations of any union contract concerning matters of other than a fiscal nature. It seems to me that in order to preserve the right of collective bargaining, this bill should make negotiations of that type possible so as to ensure that the right to collective bargaining remains in every union agreement.

If the government wants to put a ceiling on wages, that is its business. However, in order to preserve fairness in the labour market and a favourable working climate where there is an atmosphere of conciliation and understanding, the government must make provision in this bill to allow for negotiation of non-fiscal matters such as health in the workplace, safety in the workplace and all those other areas which do not concern financial matters.

Another shortcoming of this bill is that it does not cover non-unionized workers. It is fine for the NDP to speak on behalf of the UAW and all those strong unions, but who will speak for the workers who are non-unionized? Who speaks on behalf of the weak? Six per cent of nothing is nothing.

Mr. Murphy: Certainly not the Tories.

Mr. Friesen: This bill will do nothing for the 1.3 million unemployed. Therefore, I oppose the government's move to impose closure on us. We need the freedom to speak even though we, within the confines of this chamber, may not always agree.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief, since I think this debate has gone on long enough. I was pleased when the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) proposed a motion to limit the debate.

As hon. members are aware, we have been discussing this bill for four days, and the debate has given rise to all kinds of comments, especially by members of the New Democratic Party. Mr. Speaker, it is just unbelievable, all the contradictions, all the nonsense we have had to listen to here in this House. It goes to show, Mr. Speaker, that it is about time the House adjourned for the summer recess. My colleague from Kitchener (Mr. Lang) commented earlier that there was nothing worse for a person's health than listening to the members opposite. I must say I am so astonished at the kind of nonsense I hear at times that I have to pinch myself to make sure I am in the real world. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure I am in the real world because, outside Parliament, I was used to people who managed to earn a living without wasting other people's time. The comments we have had to listen to! These members are up in arms about high interest rates, they are up in arms about the excessively high cost of housing, food and clothing, and the high rate of inflation, and so forth, and on the other hand, they are squarely opposed to the measure that will help bring down inflation.

As I implied at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I am shocked. I think it is outrageous the way these people are carrying on. They remind me of hunting dogs who start barking when they manage to corner a deer and start moving in for the kill.

In any event, one does not need a degree in economics to analyse the present situation. The problem facing us all in Canada right now is, of course, inflation. There are people who prefer to ignore this fact and let others worry about it, but inflation, Mr. Speaker, is something that makes us think about our own habits and those of all Canadians. We have had fat years, and we took advantage of them, and in doing so, we may have gone somewhat overboard. Not just the workers. Often people tend to blame labour and the unions, but it is not just the workers, everyone is involved, including employers, business people and industrialists who started living the good life and spending a bit more on luxuries. For instance, a travelling salesman instead of trying to bargain a little and get a room for $35 or $40—those prices still exist—will take the most expensive room, at $75 or $80. He spends the whole evening at the bar and all this goes on his company's expense account. The company makes everyone pay, including the consumer. That is life, but again, that is inflation. It is as simple as that.

Einstein said that great minds have always been violently opposed by mediocre intellects. So we might as well ignore people who are trying to intervene in this debate. Mr. Speaker, we, on the government side, wanted to take action in areas that are our concern. People are fond of saying that the Canadian government is always interfering in matters that are none of its business. For once it is our business, namely, the public service. This is no punitive measure, and we have nothing against these people. In fact, they are our allies, these are people we work with regularly, people we see every day, people who help us.

So, what is actually going on right now? I think we can agree that inflation exists, and when people complain that the cost of housing and food and other commodities is too high, this is often due to excessive wage demands on the part of various groups, demands made by business, and so forth, as I mentioned earlier. So if we agree that inflation exists and is going to be with us for some time, what do we do to fight inflation? There is a price, if we want to bring inflation down to more reasonable levels. Right now, who is paying the price for bringing inflation within more normal proportions? That price is being paid by the last workers to be hired on the assembly line, who are also the first to be fired and to join the ranks of the unemployed. These are the people who are paying that price today.

The members opposite who are criticizing belong to the unemployment party, because they are promoting this kind of unemployment. They do not want to give others a chance to make a life for themselves. So who is paying the price? First of all, the unemployed, who are being laid off because of the general economic slowdown. Businessmen and merchants, who any day may lose everything they own because of high interest rates, are also among those who are paying the price of bringing inflation down to normal levels. However, we also have a group of people whose jobs are safe, and we are telling them: Well, you have a safe job and on top of that, we are going to give you an extra bonus so that you can walk all over the people who are making sacrifices today, namely the unemployed and the businessman who is in danger of losing his business. That is what we are doing, and it does not make sense.

A few moments ago I heard someone say: It is unfair, it is unfair! Yes it is unfair, I agree. Mr. Speaker, if I were a civil servant and I were earning $15,000 a year, I would prefer to go without a raise rather than losing my job or living on welfare. The choice is obvious. What we want to do now with the 6 per cent rule, starting with our own group, is to set an example, and if the Canadian public approves, and this is not even . . . Yes, I realize my time is running out, Mr. Speaker, I am going to finish. If Canadians would agree to lower their expectations somewhat, we would be able to ride out this recession, which would be only temporary, but on the other hand, if Canadians refuse, it is going to get worse. Often, people like to compare Canada with the United States, and they wonder why, if we are both applying the same monetary policy, the inflation rate in the United States is going down. We must understand that the United States is a free enterprise country and is not as compartmentalized and regulated, planned and controlled as ours. One example that illustrates this is that workers in the automotive industry agreed to a wage reduction. Here, we have no room for manoeuvre and that is why everything is stratified and compartmentalized. That is why our inflation rate is not going down at the same rate. However, if interest rates were to go down, obviously, inflation would be less severe. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, since my time has almost expired, I would like to inform the House that I am very pleased that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has asked to end this debate, and I hope that all our hon. colleagues will support the measure we have just imposed.

[English]

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, we are now dealing with another example of this government's ability not only to muzzle the opposition but the Canadian public. Our desire was to bring this bill to committee where it would receive total exposure, be reviewed and assessed and we could get the view of the public.

Mr. Kelly: That is committee, not second reading.

Mr. Fennell: Will it ever get to committee?

Mr. Kelly: We are wondering that too.

Mr. Fennell: Instead of backbenchers continuing to defend the position of the government, I wish one day they would stand up and answer to the public who are concerned about losing their jobs, not worrying about civil servants getting a 6 per cent raise in pay. This bill would not have been necessary if this government had not destroyed the economy over the past 14 years.

• (1620)

I would like to quote from the original architect that the Liberal government used. John Kenneth Galbraith has finally admitted it all: "Economists make predictions, not because they know, but because they are asked." Is that not great? There we have the answer about the Liberal policy that put this country on its knees, as it is today. Those are the kind of people the Liberals have attracted to draw up their policy, to bring three budgets forward that have all been destructive to this country. He was the man who started in 1968 giving them their answers. They asked the questions: he gave the answers. He is admitting now that they were not very good answers.

It is the socialist rhetoric of John Kenneth Galbraith and his type that has destroyed the middle class Canadian, those who were born with the thought that at some time they could own a home at a reasonable price. They are now paying exhorbitant interest rates, through exorbitant inflation, meaning an exorbitant cost for the house.

Let us look at this bill. The government referred to this as restraint. If this were restraint in the pure sense—that is, real restraint—yes, I could solidly support it. But how can I support this bill as restraint?

Mr. Deans: You are going to support it.

Mr. Fennell: It does nothing more than guarantee that every member in this House, every civil servant in Ottawa, and every federal civil servant around the country will get a 6 per cent increase in pay. We have very close to a million and a half people unemployed and they are not impressed with the fact that we have protected ourselves by this 6 per cent increase in pay. What should have been brought in as restraint is a 10 per cent cut on every budget across the board. We should have taken a 10 per cent cut in our pay—or at least work towards that over the next three years. This is too little, too late.

We requested that a parliamentary committee be set up to review all the estimates, to look at the loopholes, to find out where we could cut back on some of the programs not needed right now.

Mr. Deans: You had an opportunity.

Mr. Fennell: We have not had an opportunity because we have been refused by the government that has put us in the place we are today. All the government comes up with is patchwork solutions, and patchwork solutions do not solve a major structural problem. It is like taking a car which has been in an accident, trying to bend the frame into the right position, and then telling the owner that that car is in good order. Everyone in this House knows that once the frame of a car is bent it is destroyed, it is of no value. That is the problem with our economy.

Yesterday, I spent a very interesting afternoon. The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and myself were in the region of Durham before the regional councillors. Many of those people who run a very important region of this country asked us to come because they are concerned. The first point they brought out was their concern over the current monetary policy which has produced and maintained high interest rates, causing enormous economic hardships to consumers and corporations alike. Those people who are responsible for the municipality, representing all the mayors of that area, wanted to hear from us as to what was really happening in Ottawa. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, I wish the Liberals had been there. I wish that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), who happens to be my buddy in that area, had been there to represent the government.

There are many points that the leader of the New Democratic Party and myself agreed on. We agreed on lower interest rates but we did not agree on the method of getting there. We agreed to support the samll-business man and get the economy going. What we were saying yesterday was that the government is bringing in Bill C-124, it provides a 6 per cent increase in pay, but they have not talked about any reduction in their expenditure. Those councillors are concerned. They are concerned about our unrestricted imports. We have done absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker, to encourage the private sector to produce, in order to replace such imports. Our dollar is low enough now. If there were a tax incentive there, we could be starting new industries and creating jobs, and that is the name of the game.

We are guaranteeing the civil service that they will have their jobs, plus a 6 per cent increase in pay, but we are doing nothing for the rest of Canada.

This government has destroyed all the incentives of the private sector. They have removed all incentive to foreign investment. This is a very large country. It requires large sums of money. Admittedly, today Canadians are saving large sums of money, but Canadians historically have kept their money in their socks. The foreign investors have put money into industry. I maintain that foreign investment review itself is not working and has helped destroy our credibility in international markets.

We should be going out to encourage European investors and Japanese investors to come into our country. We should be encouraging the Japanese to produce cars here. But they do not know what the position will be like here in six or seven months; they think that we may say: "We do not want you any more, so get your plants out of Canada". Incentives are required, Mr. Speaker, not grants. We need incentives to get Canadian dollars out of the banks and into industry.

The National Energy Program was a total destruction of the Canadian oil industry. Today there are 50 per cent less drilling rigs operating than there were last year at the same time.

We have been criticized many times for our mortgage interest deductibility proposal. Would that not have assisted the Canadian public, would it not have assisted the banks? They would have repossessed half the houses, because people would have been able to keep up mortgage payments. That plan would have assisted our general construction economy. We have done nothing but talk about a 6 per cent increase in pay for the civil service next year. That is why we want this bill put into committee over an extended period of time so that we can hear witnesses from across the country.

This budget is like every other budget that the government has brought forward. There is absolutely no foresight and they are too frightened to take hindsight because they look at the morass that they have left behind. This government, in my opinion, is carrying out a financial scam on the Canadian public and it should be stopped. It is time the public had the choice to decide whether they want this government to stay any longer or not.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, we have had some discussion today about the time allocation which is being proposed for this bill. I want to touch on that matter for a moment before turning to the substance of the question before us in Bill C-124.

Quite obviously there is a need to limit debate on matters before the House. We cannot continue to consider issues indefinitely here, especially when opportunities await members to consider the same matters in committee. When we hear allegations of muzzling Parliament or muzzling the opposition, I wonder whether members opposite have considered the British practices which do in fact place real limitations on the time taken for debates in the British House of Commons. I wonder whether hon. members opposite would not find those precedents instructive for our own practices here in Ottawa.

I hope usefully that the committee currently studying the proposed modifications to our procedures will look at that particular precedent so that all hon. members might be assured that our business can deal with more effectively. Through more self-discipline, we could limit the time that we spend on debates here in the House to the benefit of all.

In the specific case of Bill C-124 now before us, we have had extensive debate involving a substantial number of members. The subject matter will, of course, go to committee where there will be further consideration, and there will be another opportunity to speak about the bill when it returns from the committee to the House.

With respect to the substance of the bill, we have heard allegations, particularly today by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), that somehow the wage restraint program being introduced for the public service for the next two years will neither create jobs nor reduce inflation. It is remarkable that an hon. member would make such a statement, when he and others must know perfectly well that until such time as we succeed in limiting inflation we shall not be able to create more jobs nor reduce interest rates. Why do I say that? It is evident that wage increases in Canada in recent years have consistently run at levels higher than those in most of our major trade competitors. Canada is heavily dependent on world trade for its prosperity. Foreign trade amounts to 30 per cent of our gross national product, and of that 30 per cent, some 70 per cent is trade with the United States.

What has been the wage situation in the United States, our major trading partner? During 1981 wage settlements in the United States were, on average, some four percentage points lower than in Canada. That means significant competitive advantage for United States industries over comparable Canadian industries which have had wage increases at a level of about 12 per cent, on average, during the last year.

Not only were average wage settlements in the United States lower than in Canada during 1981, but in the first quarter of this year United States increases in industrial wages for the first year of labour contracts averaged only 2.2 per cent. The Teamsters and the UAW, two major unions in the United States, accepted a complete freeze on wages, so that even if one extracted those two elements, the average in the United States was still only 6.8 per cent during the first quarter of this year, whereas increases in Canada have been running typically at about 12 per cent. I might also note that in the United States public service increases of only 4.8 per cent have been provided for in 1982, in contrast with the 6 per cent level that is envisaged in the legislation now before us.

I do not think it takes any great expertise in economics to understand that with such a wage situation in a highly competitive trade world, Canada is placing itself at a disadvantage.

It is not just that wage restraint in Canada is an essential part of any anti-inflationary policy; it is also evident that over the longer term Canadian industry will be unable to compete in world markets if our wage levels consistently exceed those of our main competitors and, indeed, if those wage settlements consistently exceed productivity increases here in Canada.

Unfortunately, we have had a situation in recent years in which our increases in productivity have been significantly lower than those of our major trade competitors. It is an oversimplification, of course, to argue that the main reason for a drop in productivity in Canada or for slower productivity increases is entirely ascribable to high wage settlements. There are other major factors which also cause productivity changes in any industrial economy. However, it remains true, nevertheless, that when wage level increases in Canada consistently outstrip increases in productivity, it must be that more inflation will result, and it must be that Canada will become increasingly less competitive in world markets.

Against that background, if we really want to help Canadians by setting a standard for the whole of the Canadian economy, it is essential that this legislation pass quickly. If pay increases are not restrained, we shall not be competitive. We shall not address a major factor in our inflation equation. We shall find ourselves faced with continuing high interest rates and high unemployment.

I do not know that hon. members opposite, particularly members of the New Democratic Party, have accepted the fact that there is a pressing need for the federal government to set a standard, to set an example for the rest of the major players in the Canadian economy. Prior to the budget of a fortnight ago, we saw that the business community—there were some exceptions but broadly speaking—called for voluntary wage controls rather than mandatory controls. The business community resisted suggestions from various quarters for a sweeping program of mandatory wage and price controls—although some businessmen advocated such a policy—and called instead, for example, through the Business Council on National Issues, for a voluntary program. That voluntary program is now available for them to take up. The opportunity is there. They have said that they want it. The time has now come for them to respond.

The government is providing leadership. The government has said, in the case of its own more than half a million employees, that it will show restraint. The government has said that it will ensure that public service wages will not contribute, as they have in the past, to mounting rates of inflation in our country. It is now for the business community—which wanted voluntary controls—to take this opportunity.

The government is providing leadership; now let the business community respond. Equally, the provinces and municipalities must respond. They must bring forward their own programs of restraint in order to ensure that inflation is not again fueled by excessive wage settlements in either our public sector or our private sector. The situation in Canada has been well stated by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) who, toward the end of last month, stated the following in a speech:

> Businessmen, although preaching restraint, often found it simpler to give in to excessive wage demands. In the inflationary environment which developed, it was possible for them, until recently, to recoup higher wage costs by raising the prices of their products. Productivity, once of highest priority, slipped well down the list of goals.

That situation in Canada must now change. The government has provided a new sense of direction and a new leadership. For my part, I do not doubt that the private sector will respond, that the provinces will respond, that the municipalities will respond and, indeed, that we shall see a world where 6 per cent wage settlements for the next 12 months and 5 per cent for the following 12 months will help to provide the necessary conditions for our economic recovery.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues I am somewhat distressed to have to rise once again to oppose a Liberal government motion enforcing closure. In this case it cuts off debate on Bill C-124 respecting compensation in the public service. What is printed in this bill is important, so is what is left out of it and what is left unexplained.

Firstly, I wish to speak of the plight of the old age pensioners; then I wish to say a few words about the Armed Forces pensioners. In the Minister of Finance's budget speech he mentioned the pay limits encompassed in this bill and also the capping of the indexing of pensions for old age pensioners and public servants. He did so in these words:

> Effective January 1, 1983, indexation of the pensions paid to former Members of Parliament and public servants will be limited to 6 per cent. The indexing factor will be lowered to 5 per cent as of January 1, 1984.
> Effective the same dates, the indexing factor applicable to family allowances and old age security will also be limited to 6 per cent and 5 per cent.

This capping of indexation, Mr. Speaker, is particularly devastating to those old age pensioners who have made some provision by themselves to look after themselves in their old age. The budget singles out for the harshest treatment those pensioners who saved and paid into various private pensions. The payment of the usual indexation on old age security only to those who are also drawing the guaranteed income supplement is a direct disincentive for anyone to try and make plans for enjoying their old age in part on their own resources. Anyone now working and saving for a private pension, annuity or RRSP will now realize that they will be discriminated against by this government and only the portion of their private plan which exceeds the value of the guaranteed income supplement will be of any value to them. Anyone with a private pension, annuity or insurance benefit which gives them something under $240 a month has simply reduced his or her guaranteed income supplement by that amount. The government should not be surprised to find that the steady growth over the years in the percentage of old age pensioners who have qualified for the GIS will now accelerate. The government has provided an additional incentive for senior citizens to arrange their affairs so that they get on GIS. It is the only way their basic pension will keep up with inflation rates.

I have an example which might cause the government to think about this if it were not in such a hurry to force legislation through this House by closure. In Victoria there are two large apartment buildings known as the Lord and Lady Simcoe on Simcoe Street. They house about 270 tenants, almost all of whom are retired and over half of which are widows. It is estimated that only some ten or 20 people in these buildings are still in the work force. The rest are retired and they are truly the fixed income people that one hears about here. On June 9 those tenants received notice of a rent increase. I know rent controls are in the purview of provincial governments but these cases might help illustrate to this unheeding and unfeeling government just what the people out there in the real world face, and the importance of a fair deal on indexation of their pensions.

As you may or may not be aware, Mr. Speaker, there are three categories of rent control in B.C. You can be exempt from rent control on certain types of accommodation—generally public or high priced accommodation—or you can have rent review, which is not nearly as favourable a position to be in if you are renting. The third category is units under rent control where the landlord has to have permission before he can raise your rent. All 270 of the units in this complex I am speaking of are in the second category.

I have in my hand a notice given to a couple in a two-bedroom suite. They tell me that when they rented their suite seven years ago it was $220 a month. It was raised by the allowable limit each year for several years, and last year the landlord managed to increase rents by 15 per cent which put it over the $350 a month limit, thereby taking it out of the rent control area into the rent review area. The current rent for this particular couple is $424 a month, with an increase coming of $98 a month. Therefore, they will soon start paying $522 a month, an increase of 23 per cent. This is what happens to people out in the real world.

I heard the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) say that people are being asked to go without a few little luxuries. That is not what is happening; these people are being asked to pay an additional 23 per cent rent on their suites. A great number of them are going to have leave their suites, which they have lived in for years, and move into rooms in houses. This is not a little luxury for those people, believe me.

I wish to turn now, Mr. Speaker, to another aspect of this capping of indexation which is not mentioned in the bill but should be because of doubt out there about what is going to happen to the people involved. It has to do with the application of the 85 rule. That rule means a retired serviceman will not start to get his pension indexed until his age plus years of service totals 85. It also applies to civil servants but because of different retirement ages it is difficult to talk about the two groups at the same time. Some people have to wait for years to reach that point.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, as a non-lawyer I would inquire about the legality of what the government is planning to do to long service annuitants. The Armed Forces, when serving, pay an additional 1.5 per cent of their pay into the pension fund to cover the cost of indexing. This has always been considered part of their contract. Now, apparently, it is not to be honoured after next January.

As a background to this action the government should bear in mind that the Canadian forces' superannuation account, plus their actuarial liability account, as of March 31, 1981 was over $9 billion. This information comes from the answer to a question I put on the Order Paper. The government has this $9 billion, an increase of $1.2 billion over the preceding two years, and it borrows this money—a paper transaction—at a rate of 2.15 per cent per quarter, which is 8.6 per cent per annum. A very cheap source of money for the government. Yet the government is now prepared to break its contract to index the pension of retired servicemen.

The reason I bring it up at this time is that it is not in the bill and servicemen are wondering what is going to happen. Some of them retired ten years ago and have not yet reached the 85 rule point. When they reach that status they would receive the cost of living increases from the preceding years; not in a lump sum, but they would have gone to the level of purchasing power they had when they retired. They are now wondering what is going to happen. If it is going to be 11 per cent this year, will they get that 11 per cent? Will it be 6 per cent? What will it be next year? No one knows, and the government should not leave these people in such doubt.

Those are the unanswered questions about this bill, Mr. Speaker, and they should be answered before the government gags Parliament on such an important piece of legislation. I realize it is going to committee and that will be a great place to talk about it. But I am worried that so many of the government's bills are rushed into committee nowadays. I suspect the reason is that there is a greater audience for the debates in this chamber, thanks to the electronic age, than there is for what goes on in committee. We all know that.

• (1650)

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank my colleague opposite. I only hope that I can count on his co-operation as we debate this particular motion and, indeed, the entire bill, C-124. Six per cent co-operation would be very helpful. That is all we are asking for in Bill C-124.

I had the opportunity to speak on second reading of this bill the other night so I am not going to go into all the details again.

I should like to comment on some of the things that have been mentioned this afternoon regarding the motion to limit debate. The word "closure" and other terms have been used. Mr. Speaker, there comes a time when all that needs to be said has been said. If we were hearing anything new, it would be different. The government has a responsibility to provide legislation and to run the business affairs of Parliament and of the country. We should get on with curing the economic ills of the country. Bill C-124 is the instrument to bring down inflation which, of course, will result in interest rates coming down and in a reduction in the federal deficit. The entire economic future of the nation is based on Bill C-124.

If hon. members opposite are serious when they speak about the economic ills of the day and about offering cures for them, then I am surprised at their attitude and especially at the official opposition, which announced earlier today that it will vote against the motion. If something new were being said on Bill C-124 or suggestions were being put forward to cure the economic ills of the day, that would be a different matter. There comes a time when we have to get on with running the affairs of the country whether hon. members like it or not, and that is the responsibility of the party in power which sits on this side of the House.

The hon. member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) spoke about parliamentary reform. I hope that the special committee set up to look into that matter during the summer will examine the delaying tactics that occur day in and day out in this House which prevent legislation from going through. Often members on both sides of the House agree on the basic intent of many bills, but whether to score political points in their constituencies or for whatever reason, hon. members opposite delay, delay, delay. Many more members of the opposition have spoken on Bill C-124 than members on this side of the House. Of course, their main purpose was to criticize. There has been plenty of opportunity to debate the bill. Our main purpose in this House should be to bring inflation down.

Just the other night I said that federal civil servants could be the heroes of the day through their involvement in this wage restraint program. I have heard from a number of them who say that they feel they will be, and indeed are, the front runners in this matter of wage restraint and the battle against inflation. I have heard from constituents who said the same thing. We know that business leaders and many labour leaders agree that something has to be done and that this bill is a step in the right direction.

We should get on with the business of passing the bill, Mr. Speaker. We know very well that it will be debated fully in committee where there will be plenty of time for argument and suggestions and perhaps for amendments as well. I am sure that witnesses will be heard in committee and that there will be plenty of time to bring out the full facts. The bill will come back to the House then for further debate. I do not know why hon. members opposite are so upset because we are trying to cure the economic ills of the day by getting the bill through.

There are other pieces of legislation which should be passed before this session ends, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we have been trying to get the bill through to aid home owners who have problems with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. The bill would provide compensation for them and I would not like to see Parliament adjourn for the summer without seeing that bill passed; but if we are going to have these delaying tactics day in and day out, then we are not going to get to that very important bill. I think that is a duty and responsibility that all members of the House should keep in mind.

The basic premise of Bill C-124 is to bring inflation down to 6 per cent and 5 per cent over the next two years. All that is being asked is that the federal civil servants and employees of Crown corporations, federally regulated agencies and the like be limited to 6 and 5 per cent wage increases—not decreases. The money saved by this measure will be devoted to much needed job-creation programs. Hon. members opposite fail to bring that point out; nearly $1 billion will be available for job-creation programs which are badly needed.

This afternoon the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) mentioned that a recent Gallup poll shows that 80 per cent of Canadians would sooner take a 10 per cent cut in pay than be unemployed, so the Canadian public in general is behind this bill. We should get on with it so that we can create those jobs and make money available to help the housing industry, for instance. Many questions are raised about the lack of housing, yet through this bill we are trying to get the money to provide houses so that young people will be in a position to own their own homes.

Basically, I see nothing wrong with limiting debate on this bill. Everything that needs to be said has been said. The bill will be debated further in committee and then brought back to the House and then, we hope, will be passed so that we can go on to cure the economic ills of the day. All that we are asking is 6 per cent and 5 per cent. As hon. members know, members of the House are also going to be involved.

All across the country people are crying for leadership and action. This is one area in which Parliament can provide action and leadership, but it must come from both sides of the House. We have an opportunity to show that leadership by passing Bill C-124. There is no reason why debate should not be limited and I shall certainly vote in favour of the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is now five o'clock and the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) is standing to be recognized. I should like to indicate to him, so that he can plan, that the Chair will recognize him at eight o'clock tonight if he is present.

Before I go to private members' hour I will deal with the adjournment motion.

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Public Works—Future of Daly building in Ottawa; the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes)—Social Security—Funding for services. (b) Canadian Mental Health Association meeting; the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Medical Care—Extra billing by physicians—Minister's position. (b) Federal funding.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall all items proceeding No. 76 stand with unanimous consent? Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I inderstand that dicussions have taken place with representatives of the various parties and that there is a disposition to deal very briefly with two private members' bills. I am advised that in order to do that, and I was informed of this just a moment ago, we will have to revert to motions in order that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders may present the reports from his committee. Therefore, I would request the consent of the House to revert to motions so the hon. member can do that.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, is it the purpose to introduce the Senate bill having to do with the change in the charter of BPO Elks? I see the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) is nodding in the affirmative.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I cannot hear the hon. member for Yukon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The microphone for the hon. member for Yukon was not switched on. Perhaps he would like to repeat his last few remarks.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I said that we agree provided that the business, which is the subject matter of the report, is the Senate bill dealing with an alteration to the charter of BPO Elks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will attempt to assist the House. The hon. member for the Yukon mentioned something which to my ears sounded like BP Oil.

Mr. Nielsen: It was BPO Elks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): BPO Elks, my apologies. In that event, I can tell the hon. member that there are two bills which have been provided to the Chair. The first is an act to revive E.G. Klein Limited, and the second deals with the act of incorporation of The Grand Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: All that is going to happen then is the tabling of that committee report. Is that correct, Mr. Speaker? In addition, we will deal with the measure concerning the Elks.

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I understand from conversations that we will, in fact, deal with both bills at all stages with very, very limited debate. That was my understanding, and I assume that is what we are going to do.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is not my understanding. The hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke had the courtesy and the honesty with respect to private members' business today to consult with me in connection with the legislation dealing with the alteration in the charter of the Elks. We agreed in that respect to a brief introductory statement by the hon. member and a response thereto by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott). I presume someone will be responding for the New Democratic Party. We will do that through all stages immediately, but that is all we are prepared to deal with today. With respect to the legislation concerning Klein, this is something which we are not prepared to deal with today.

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, I heard the opposition House leader's comment and I am sorry that I did not get a chance to talk to him directly, but I did speak to the hon. member for Peace River, the hon. member for Mississauga South and the hon. member for Simcoe North on the purpose of Bill S-26. It was my understanding that we had arrived at a unanimous agreement. I extended the same courtesy to the whip and the House leader of the New Democratic Party. If I could get the consent of the opposition House leader to proceed with Bill S-26, I would be most grateful.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, while the House leader for the official opposition is conferring, I can verify that conversations did in fact take place exactly along the lines that have just been put before you. Having reviewed the piece of legislation being requested, Bill S-26, together with Bill S-27, I had come to the conclusion that both could be dealt with expeditiously without any major debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have now had an opportunity to discuss the matter. We will deal with both pieces of legislation in the manner in which I have outlined. Once again I want to thank the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke for his courtesy in consulting with me before this matter arose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As a result of the discussions the Chair has just heard, I suggest that what the House intends to do is to revert to committee reports, in which case the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier.

Mr. Deans: The House will revert to motions, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My apologies; the House will revert to motions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE GRAND LODGE OF THE BENEVOLENT AND PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke) moved that Bill S-27, to amend the act of incorporation of The Grand Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Dominion of Canada, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there were no comments made on Bill S-27 at first reading. There has been an agreement among the parties that we will each make a brief statement and then we will deal with the other stages of the bill without debate.

I am pleased to sponsor Bill S-27 on behalf of The Grand Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Dominion of Canada. At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my own appreciation to the House leaders and members on both sides of the House for their co-operation in allowing this bill to be debated today at second reading, in Committee of the Whole and third reading in one sitting. It is not controversial and it is a very worthy bill. It is one that means a great deal to many people across the country, namely, members of the Elks themselves and many thousands of people across Canada whom they help.

The purpose of the legislation in question and now before Parliament is to remove the restriction limiting at $100,000 the value of real property which might be acquired by the society or any of its branches. This restriction was incorporated into the act in 1913. In view of the increase in prices generally and of land in particular since that date, it is no longer realistic. Indeed, the origins of the restriction are not entirely clear, although it seems to have been the practice to place such restrictions on branch holdings of other societies incorporated by Parliament at that particular time.

The second purpose of the bill is to enable the society to change its head office from place to place, if necessary.

The third purpose is to substitute a French name for the English name of the society which appeared in the long title of the French version of the original act of incorporation. In this connection there is a further consequential amendment.

Finally, I am advised that the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Dominion of Canada now has 360 lodges established in every province of Canada. They have 61,000 members, plus an additional 17,000 members of its ladies' auxiliary.

I am sure that all hon. members of the Parliament of Canada join in wishing the Elks every success in all their very fine work wherever they may live in Canada.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to second this motion. I attended the committee meetings and I understand fully the application of the bill. I congratulate the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) for his work in committee and for arranging easy passage of Bill S-27 through the House of Commons at this time. I think he had the correct approach in speaking to the different House leaders, which approach has been exemplified by the Conservative Party and our House leader.

On behalf of the official opposition let me say that we heartily endorse this bill. Also we take into consideration the good work the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Dominion of Canada do throughout this country of ours. We are very happy to be party to giving the bill speedy passage through the House. We certainly wish them all the luck in the world.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to give our consent, as requested, to having the bill dealt with in all stages today. It goes without saying that the Order has provided much in the way of good works for people in Canada. It is a pleasure to be able to do this for them at a time when we have all seen volunteerism build much of what we enjoy. To see an organization such as this flourishing is important for members of my party. We are pleased to have this bill go through all three stages.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My understanding is that it is the intent of the House to revert now to private members' hour.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I certainly do not want to object, but I would like to make two comments. First, I want to congratulate the Elks for keeping the name "Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Dominion of Canada".

Second, I wish we had seen the same co-operation last Friday as we experienced today.

My third observation is that I think we should have some notice of changes being made. I do not think these today will have any ramification, but this week I received two notices on Wednesday telling me what was on for Thursday and for Friday. I appreciate whoever is responsible for that, but there was no indication that these changes were to be made. I can understand this at times, but I think hon. members should be properly notified when changes are to be made on private members' days. I certainly have no objections to the ones made today, I think they are worthwhile, but again I think we should have been advised that they were to be made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): We will now revert, by unanimous consent, to private members' hour.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the latest signed agreement between the government and the province of Quebec under the Canada Assistance Plan.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think my first remark should be to clear what may be a point of misunderstanding since just recently reference was made to what happened last Friday. I should like to put on the record that the only conversation I had prior to four o'clock on Friday afternoon was with a representative of the New Democratic Party. It was not in order to seek any agreement whatsoever; it was purely clarification of the subject matter which was to be discussed. That was the total extent of the conversation. In other words, there were no discussions of which I was aware between any members on this side and any members on the other side as to the subsequent procedures which were adopted by unanimous consent of the members present.

I think it is important to make that point because there was the inference of some sort of collusion or something of the sort. I certainly was not aware of that. In fact, I publicly express my surprise, but my pleasure nevertheless, at the turn of events on Friday.

The subject this afternoon is the Canada Assistance Plan, a subject which I hold dear to my heart. I have used the request for documents passing between the government and the province of Quebec under the Canada Assistance Plan as the vehicle for this discussion.

I requested these documents, as I have requested the documents applicable to the other provinces, as a result of discussions which took place in the hearings held last spring by the special committee which was formed to look at fiscal transfer payments. We criss-crossed the country and heard a plea from many social service groups that these documents should be available to them.

It may be somewhat ironic that we discussed the freedom of information act at great length and yet documents which are vital to the interest of people on social welfare and receiving social services are not available to the groups who are responsible for the provision of these services. It may be of interest to some members if I refer to an answer I received over a year ago as to the reasons why such documents were not being made available to the public in general. An official from the Department of National Health and Welfare said that in his opinion the province of Ontario, in this case, could and probably would object because that would facilitate their municipalities making interprovincial comparisons. He said that this was, of course, assuming that the schedules for the other provinces were also released. He indicated that such a comparison would lead to whipsawing from one province to another. He also made an interesting comment at that time, which is quite applicable now, that under the proposed freedom of information act items which would be detrimental to federal-provincial relations can be exempted from release.

Personally, I do not see any reason why the groups that are responsible for social services in the different provinces should not be able to make comparisons from province to province and should not, as a result, be able to pressure their respective provincial governments into giving them the same services which they see being made available to persons in need in the other provinces.

I have several objections to the way that the Canada Assistance Plan presently operates. At the outset, let me say that this has nothing to do with the total funding. I have said before in the House and I will repeat that I firmly believe in the maximum possible funding at the federal level. I say that because under those circumstances the distribution of those funds from the federal treasury should go to the provinces on an equitable basis, and the raising of those funds at the federal level means that the moneys are raised from those provinces which are the best able to pay.

However, it does not work out this way in the case of the Canada Assistance Plan. I have some figures to illustrate this. For example, let us take my own province of Quebec which is the one referred to in the motion. According to the latest year for which figures are available, the province of Quebec received 39 per cent of the funding under the Canada Assistance Plan, and as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, it has 26 per cent of the population of this country.

There is probably good reason why Quebec, with its greater number of persons in need, should receive a larger share. However, let us look at another province which is also in need, Nova Scotia. Incidentally, the Premier of that province, as late as a few days ago, was bitterly complaining that the federal government was decreasing its transfers to the provinces and making life difficult for the province of Nova Scotia. I read that particular lie in today's Globe and Mail, that the federal government was cutting its funding for post-secondary education and health services. I say "lie" because anyone who looks at the figures is aware that the federal funding for both post-secondary education and health services is increased this year and increased substantially. However, one also understands that in difficult times the provision of social services becomes an increasingly hard load for provinces like Nova Scotia which have an increasing number of unemployed and persons in difficult circumstances.

In the case of Nova Scotia, it receives 2.7 per cent of the total moneys that are distributed under the Canada Assistance Plan and it has a population of 3.5 per cent. Nova Scotia is one of the have-not provinces. Obviously it is unfair that that province should be receiving less than even its per capita share, if Canada Assistance Plan funds were distributed on that basis.

Let us look at British Columbia at the other end of the scale. British Columbia, with 11 per cent of this country's population, receives 14 per cent of the funding from the Canada Assistance Plan.

I will continue with these figures to show the inequity which exists in the distribution but will do so in a somewhat different fashion. I have proposed before and I am proposing again now that the various programs which are handled under the Canada Assistance Plan be divided into their two parts, social service programs and income support programs. I am not suggesting any decrease in funding. In fact, I will be suggesting later that my method of handling these programs would result in some increase in funding at the federal level, but that the distribution of those funds would be more equitable.

Once again in the case of my own province of Quebec, the social service payments are the highest of any province. One would think that in a have-not province the income maintenance programs would be the highest in the province of Quebec, but that is not so. We find other provinces that have a higher income maintenance receipt from the Canada Assistance Plan than the province of Quebec. Quebec's social service receipts are approximately 50 per cent of the amount Quebec receives for the income maintenance programs, whereas New Brunswick, which is one of the have-not provinces, receives for its social service programs only about 15 per cent of the amount it receives in the income maintenance programs. Newfoundland receives about one-quarter and it is about one-third in Nova Scotia. It is interesting that the province of Quebec receives about three times the amount in the social service field that is paid in the province of Ontario.

One notes from a chart provided by the Department of National Health and Welfare, for which the latest figures available are also over a year old, that the province of Nova Scotia, one of the have-not provinces, receives $67 on a per capita basis. The province of Quebec at the other end of the scale receives $137. Dividing the program into its two parts, one can look at social assistance where Manitoba is at $36 at the low end of the scale and Quebec is at $93 at the other end on a per capita basis. With respect to social and welfare services we find New Brunswick sitting on the bottom end of the scale at $14 per capita and Quebec near the top at $44 per capita. It should be abundantly clear that the distribution of funds under these programs is, in my opinion, an unequitable method of distribution.

For clarification I should say that as a result of changes made in legislation some six or seven years ago, many of the extended health care services which originally were covered under this program have now been excluded. I think it is worth putting on the record that the Canada Assistance Plan no longer covers such items as nursing home intermediate care, adult residential care, converted mental hospitals, home care and ambulatory health care. I mention that because one should consider whether in this day and age those particular services, which are often optional in the provinces, should be funded by the federal government to at least encourage the provincial governments, which are responsible for these services, to provide a relatively equal level of services from coast to coast. I wish to quote the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) as follows:

> The federal government shares in the cost of provincial and municipal social assistance payments as well as certain social service programs referred to in the act as "welfare services". Social assistance programs must utilize needs testing, must have an appeals system, and not impose residence requirements.
> Welfare services include preventive and protective services such as day care, home support, and counselling, as well as services to support independent living such as homemakers, and meals-on-wheels, rehabilitation services, and community development services.
> The level of financial assistance provided to individuals and families and the range of welfare services available to Canadians vary considerably from one part of Canada to another, since both are established by the provinces. Payments and services are not uniform.
> The federal government has little influence on the design and delivery of those programs, provinces can choose to provide any form of social service which they, the provinces, deem necessary.

I do not believe we would intend, and certainly I am not suggesting, that we take away from the provinces their right to make their own decisions in those areas. However, there has been a significant influence on the need for social welfare services attributed to action on federal programs that are a federal jurisdictional responsibility. These include, for example, changes to the GIS, unemployment insurance and the child tax credit. One can also list family allowances, OAS, spouse's allowances, veterans' pensions, the Canada Pension Plan and the rent subsidy program, all of which are direct federal payments to individuals.

Despite these many programs of direct assistance to individuals, it was made clear that the poorer provinces are finding it increasingly difficult to fund their 50 per cent of expenditures needed to support welfare and social service programs.

I am trying to make clear that in the field of income maintenance, the federal government has a tremendous influence on the costs that the provinces will have to bear. Again I quote the Minister of National Health and Welfare as follows:

> The provinces sought a maximum of autonomy and flexibility to develop services in response to their perception of needs and priorities. The responsibility of provincial departments of social services to report to their legislatures will ensure that Canadians are well informed on the levels of expenditures for social services.

If I may, because it is extremely relevant here, I will quote from a submission of the ministers of public welfare of the Atlantic provinces. It reads:

> The Atlantic provinces are an economically depressed area. A smaller proportion of the population is in the working age groups. This smaller group must support services for the old and young, which tend to be the groups that require high-cost services. The Atlantic provinces experience long periods of high unemployment rates. Persons that are unemployed for long periods tend to be unskilled or uneducated and eventually drop out of the labour force. This results in a smaller employment base and consequently a lower level of income per person in the Atlantic area than elsewhere in Canada. During periods of very high seasonal unemployment large numbers of short-term assistance recipients are added to what is already a high, hard core case load of assistance recipients. The Atlantic provinces have a poor economic base upon which to rely for the financing of heavy welfare burdens.

In conclusion, the federal contribution to the Canada Assistance Plan does not serve a national goal, is inequitable, does not provide for differing provincial priorities, and does not take into account inequality of need or inequality of capacity to provide the revenues to support the provincial share of the program.

I know that this session is now coming to an end and that nothing will happen for some time. I therefore suggest that we take a serious look at the Canada Assistance Plan, as the government has tried on previous occasions, and come up with a different formula for the distribution of the funds. I suggest as a start that we might, on the income maintenance side, increase the federal contribution from 50 per cent to 75 per cent. I say that because, as I already pointed out, the federal government has a tremendous influence on the income maintenance programs via the many federal programs which provide direct funding to individuals. Because the federal government has so little influence at all on the social services that are provided, which I referred to above, which are a smaller part of the total program, the percentage offered by the federal government should gradually be diminished on that side. I would look eventually for a phasing out of the payments that are made for those services and the transfer of those funds to the income maintenance side. The effective result will be an increase in payments to the provinces in need. If the federal government accepts its responsibilities, in the final analysis this will be a much more equitable transfer of funds under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the motion presented by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) gives us the opportunity to deal with two very important subjects which are part and parcel of the motion. First and foremost is the access to information that is afforded to Members of Parliament and to all Canadian citizens with respect to government policies and programs. Second is the effect of the Canada Assistance Plan, which is the focal point of the social welfare system in Canada. I want to speak very briefly about the first of those two points, namely, access to information.

When you look at motions such as the one proposed by the hon. member for Vaudreuil, the other motions on the Order Paper as well as the questions listed on the Order Paper, and they number in the thousands, you recognize immediately that the Government of Canada is not willing to provide the kind of information that Members of Parliament seek and other Canadians must have in order properly to assess government policies and programs. The motion today is another example of the need to make information available for the purpose of assessing government policies and programs.

We thought in this House of Commons that we had provided part of a solution to that problem when we passed Bill C-43, the Access to Information and Privacy Act, but days and weeks go by and nothing happens. All I can do is again to repeat the request I made on numerous occasions in the past to have this vital legislation passed by the Parliament of Canada, proclaimed by the governor in council and implemented by the ministry of government responsible for this important measure.

If we had available to us the processes and procedures provided by the Access to Information and Privacy Act, we would not in many cases have to make motions seeking information and place questions on the Order Paper and then wait weeks, months and sometimes years for any sort of answer.

Once again I recognize that the broad solution to the problem of information and the availability of information is general legislation. We now have that kind of legislation. I hope the government will recognize its obligation and immediately act to proclaim and implement this particular legislation.

The second matter raised by the motion is the Canada Assistance Plan and its role in social welfare services. It might be worthwhile to record that the plan is simply a statute of the Parliament of Canada enacted in 1966. It outlines in some detail the nature and extent of the services which can be made available through the provinces and municipalities. The services are much broader than people realize.

Basically, the purpose of all the services, those listed in the Canada Assistance Plan, is to provide necessary assistance to those in need. It does not take much imagination to realize what constitutes a person in need. The services that are provided under the plan consist of basic requirements for food, clothing, shelter, fuel, utilities, household supplies and personal requirements. In addition, services may include the special needs of people, like house alterations and rehabilitation of dwellings. The plan can provide services in health care, specifically those services not covered by the universal health care system.

The importance of these services that can be provided for the aged and the handicapped is underlined by our current economic crisis. I would like to make some remarks about the Canada Assistance Plan and our social services system in Canada in the light of the economic crisis and the measures taken in the budget of June 28. It is evident from that budget that Canada is in deep economic trouble, with a $20 billion deficit facing us and an indication that the deficit may be even higher. This focuses attention on the need for restraint in government spending. The people of Canada, and especially

Members of Parliament, must recognize the need for a restraint policy. We must be careful that in the course of restraint in government expenditure and services we do not deny the basic needs of the citizens. We must carry out our obligations to them, especially to those who are in dire need of these services.

We must exercise common sense and good judgment. We must realize that there are fates worse than financial difficulty. We must recognize that some elements of service are absolutely basic; they were provided for Canadians in the past and people will continue to depend on them in the future. I want to refer particularly to the requirements of women and of senior citizens. They are most affected by the current economic crisis and the high rate of inflation and the lower value of the Canadian dollar. But before that, we must think of the major problems faced by our almost 2 million unemployed. We know there are 1.3 unemployed and looking for work, and probably another 500,000 who have given up seeking work or are employed at jobs lower than those they are qualified for. We must also think of those employed on a part-time basis. In Canada we have an unemployment insurance system which provides, for a limited period of time, assistance for persons who have been working but have lost their employment. In many cases, unemployed Canadians have gone beyond that point, their unemployment insurance benefit has been exhausted and they are simply without any opportunities to earn the money they need for their subsistence. Consequently, many of those people are thrown on the welfare system. Their only recourse is to apply at the appropriate level of government for welfare assistance.

This unemployment problem has an immediate effect on our social welfare system. It has that effect because of the specific method of dealing with the needs of the unemployed in the unemployment insurance program, the funds of which have been exhausted for many of them.

We know that the additional demand on the unemployment insurance funds has caused an increase in expenditure of some $2 billion, but we do not seem to realize that we can expect a similar increase in expenditures in respect of social assistance. It is difficult to project exactly how many million dollars this will cost government at various levels, but we know the sum will be substantial.

This is an open-ended liability for the provincial and federal governments provided for under the Canada Assistance Plan. The services are based on a right which was granted through legislation to those persons who need these services. There is a mandatory aspect to the provisions. Consequently, once these services are put in place and the eligibility method is determined, the individuals who seek these services have a right to them. As the member for Vaudreuil said, there is a means test employed in order to determine eligibility. Appeals can be made by those persons who believe they have been unfairly denied services. We must realize that, in spite of the economic crisis, the government is under an obligation to provide these services.

At a time when there may be pressure on government to change not only the services available but the restrictions and the criteria for establishing eligibility, in order to limit the financial drain that arises from the increased demand for these services, there arises a problem which must be solved and that must be faced by the government and by all Canadians. We are in a time of restraint and economic difficulty, even a crisis, but we must recognize the obligations that have been developed in the past and must be continued in the future.

It may seem more sensible to restrict or even withdraw some of the services provided through the Canada Assistance Plan in the past because of our economic difficulties, but if we restrict those services or deny them to those in need, we will create greater problems. If we deny basic food, clothing, shelter and health services to those in need, we will create greater problems. It could lead to the splitting up of families, or to children left unattended or uncared for, and that would have a snowball effect, and that social difficulty would lead to even greater problems. Then we would have to look forward to having to support the kind of persons from whom we withdraw services, in institutions, in hospitals, in prisons, in custodial care institutions. We will not escape the problem by withdrawing services or increasing the requirements for access to those services.

I would like to take the time remaining to underline very briefly the importance of some of the services included in the Canada Assistance Plan and in our social services system. I want to direct my remarks particularly to the situation in which many Canadian women find themselves, particularly Canadian women in their senior years. We have come to realize that our pension system in Canada does not properly provide protection for women when they reach their senior years. In our concern for restraining expenditures I hope we will not fail to recognize the special plight of senior women in Canada. For younger women, particularly women in the work force who may have to work at relatively menial and low-paying jobs, we must recognize the importance of daycare and assistance for daycare. If we do not provide services like daycare services for the children of working parents, and particularly of single women, then we will simply create a social problem we will have to deal with down the road. There again we cannot neglect our obligations with respect to services like daycare as they apply particularly to working mothers because that will simply produce greater problems in the future.

I want to deal very briefly with the plight of senior citizens across Canada. Many of our senior citizens find it necessary to utilize the facilities provided in homes for the aged and, in some cases, special care homes like nursing homes. Again, much of the financing for that kind of care has been provided through the Canada Assistance Plan and the provincial legislation which implements the Canada Assistance Plan in the various provinces of Canada. We have to realize and recognize that those kinds of services are absolutely essential, even if we continue in a period of restraint.

I know that on previous occasions the hon. member for Vaudreuil has raised in this House the matter of the need to review the whole basis for our social services and, indeed, the whole basis for other services in the health care field, and part of that review should be reconsideration of the test of universality in the provision of these services.

I want to record my appreciation of the concern of the hon. member for Vaudreuil about the situation in Atlantic Canada. Part of the consideration and review of our social services system should be the implementation of the constitutional provisions with respect to regional disparity. We in this House of Commons have passed legislation respecting the Constitution, which contains a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That legislative package was approved by the Parliament of the United Kingdom and endorsed very recently in Ottawa by Her Majesty the Queen. The principle of regional disparity is dealt with in those constitutional provisions; no area or region of Canada should suffer a lower standard of living or a lower standard of government services than any other region of Canada. As the hon. member for Vaudreuil graphically pointed out, if we permit the Government of Canada to finance services in one rich part of Canada on the same basis as those services are financed in a poor part of Canada, we will not be implementing the principle of equalization of government and public services across Canada. What I am saying—perhaps too complicatedly—is that what we have to do is re-examine the financing and the method by which the Government of Canada supports social services across the country.

I think it is very important for Canadians to realize that in poorer provinces like Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick government spends a greater amount of its revenue on the provision of necessary social services and health care services than in richer provinces. The governments of those poorer provinces tend to spend a great deal more per capita to provide services because the people in those areas, because of economic difficulties, require more services from government. These are two important factors which ought to be taken into account in a review of our social welfare system in Canada, and I think that review is long overdue and must be undertaken very shortly, if we are to implement, in a real way, the principle of equal services for Canadians right across the country, which we in this House have endorsed.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that because of the way things have worked out I will not have more time to go into a more extended commentary on some of the things which have been said about the Canada Assistance Plan this afternoon, particularly since the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and I served on the same task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. If there had been more time, perhaps we could have renewed some of the debates we had about the Canada Assistance Plan at that time.

Basically, I agree with the motion. One of the problems brought to the attention of our task force as we went across Canada was that there are people involved in social service work who cannot seem to find out from their respective provincial governments just what is cost-shared under the Canada Assistance Plan and what is not cost-shared. They get the runaround from their various provincial governments. Any suggestion which would increase the availability of information to people involved in these important services would be a good beginning. Indeed, that is what the task force recommended. It recommended that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) have a Canada Assistance Plan manual compiled to include all guidelines, notes and administrative directives and that this manual be made public, with appropriate provision to respond to questions by the public on its application. It also recommended that the Canada Assistance Plan requirements for statistical and financial information be strengthened to improve understanding of the programs cost-shared under the plan. This need for more information was something recognized by the task force, and I hope it is something the government will look at when it gets around to reviewing the Canada Assistance Plan.

I think there are a great many improvements to the Canada Assistance Plan which need to be made, but one of the anxieties I noted among witnesses at the hearings of the task force was that they had the feeling that whenever the government moves to review something these days, it moves to find out how to save more money and how to spend less money in a particular area rather than how to improve service or how to spend more money. I think there are many people in this country who would just like the government to leave the Canada Assistance Plan alone, with all its warts and all its faults, because we saw what happened when we moved to block funding of health care. We have seen what has happened recently with respect to fiscal arrangements. As much as many people in the country would like the government to review the Canada Assistance Plan in such a way as to help needier provinces and expand the interpretation of what can be cost-shared under the Canada Assistance Plan so that more innovation can take place and new areas of social service can come under the mandate of the Canada Assistance Plan, and as much as those kinds of things are desired by those who are knowledgeable in this field, they are very nervous and worried that the minute the government begins to review the Canada Assistance Plan the first criterion of that review will be how to push more of the fiscal responsibility for these programs onto the provinces and how to get the federal government into such a position that it is paying out less than it now pays under the Canada Assistance Plan.

For all its need for improvement, the Canada Assistance Plan is still one of the few programs left under which there is federal-provincial cost sharing, and in so far as the task force is concerned and many other people involved in this area would like to see a return to some kind of cost sharing in other areas where cost sharing has been abandoned, we find that the Canada Assistance Plan remains an example of how things used to be before we entered into this period of restraint in which, rather than maintaining its commitment to these programs, the federal government is now trying to find its way out of programs under which there has been so much federal-provincial co-operation over the last few decades.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please, it being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8.00 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-124

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Johnston:

That, in relation to Bill C-124, respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) had just been given the floor.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the bill of which debate will be closed on second reading if this closure motion passes, is the primary instrument in the government's fight against inflation. Its provisions are the foundation of the 6 per cent dream world of the last budget. The government is not only restricting debate on the 6 per cent and 5 per cent provisions that affect the wages of federal employees, it is also laying the foundaton of its whole program for the 6 per cent and 5 per cent world.

This evening I believe I am speaking on behalf of all Canadians, whether pensioners, retired federal employees who will be restricted to a 6 per cent increase, or active federal employees who are losing all their rights under this legislation. This bill is flying under false colours, Mr. Speaker. It is supposed to be a bill to control wages of federal employees but it does more than that.

What the government is doing in its attempt to choke off debate on this very important issue, is preventing the public from knowing what the bill actually says. There have been only four days of debate on the bill and of those, last Friday and Wednesday were short days.

Most individuals and groups affected by the bill do not know its provisions. They do not know, if they are active federal employees, that they will be restricted to wage increases of 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. They do not know that women employees, who already receive very low wages, will have a larger wage differential as a result of this program. They do not know that those people who earn $9,000—and we gave some examples in this debate already—or $10,000 or $11,000 or $12,000 per year, will be making the real sacrifice for those who earn $90,000, $100,000, $110,000 or $120,000 a year.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, there are the Jack Horners of this world who will benefit from this bill and there are the cleaning ladies, the nurses' aides, the teachers' aides and the instrument workers who earn $10,000 per year and may be restricted to 6 per cent increases, which will not come close to meeting the increase in the cost of living. These people have not had an opportunity to find out what is in the bill.

By voting tonight we deny the public the opportunity to participate in the debate. We deny the public, whether they be federal employees, pensioners or others concerned with the bill, the opportunity to find out what is in it and to tell their MPs what they think.

The Liberal government agreed to collective agreements with its employees, but now it will not honour them. Ten months ago the government and its ministers who sit opposite, signed agreements with federal employees for 10, 11 and 12 per cent increases—increases less than the cost of living, despite what our Tory friends think. Now the government is saying that despite signed collective agreements those employees will only receive 6 and 5 per cent increases over a two-year period.

That is a direct contradiction of the answer given today by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) when he was asked if the government will also control energy costs which are scheduled to increase by 31 per cent next year. Would the government admit that energy prices should only increase by 6 per cent? No, Mr. Speaker. The minister had the audacity to say in this House that we must honour our agreements. That is the reply from the same government that will not honour the collective agreements which it has signed with its employees. If this debate were allowed to continue, the public would hear about that.

Many of the people who will be affected by this bill do not know about the worst provision it contains. They do not know that it will take away the right of federal employees to negotiate collective agreements with the government. It does not matter whether those agreements include monetary or non-monetary items. As a result of Bill C-124, employees will not be allowed to negotiate at all. That is the message that is not getting out to the public because there has only been four days' debate on the bill, because the debate is taking place in July and because the media has not covered it very extensively. It means that the people affected by the legislation have not had a chance to make their voices heard.

An hon. Member: Say something about it then!

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, you can see the rabble that 20 years ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) called the trained seals, rattling away again. They do not care about the public, they do not care about the employees and they do not care about pensioners.

I have only a few moments more to speak because of the nature of this closure motion, Mr. Speaker. Last night for the first time possible, the public service unions got copies of the bill out to various parts of the country for informational meetings. Last night, after the closure motion had been put to the House, people in Victoria, in Winnipeg, in Ottawa and in all parts of the country, heard what it contained, for the first time. To close off debate tomorrow, before those people could even get return mail to their Members of Parliament, is bloody hypocritical and bloody ridiculous. Today, Mr. Speaker, the CLC had its first executive board meeting, and only then did it find out that this bill is going to be closed off today. How can they possibly come back to the government with any proposals? But the most important concern is that we have closure on this bill, and today's Globe and Mail quotes some government spokesman as saying that the same thing is going to happen in committee next week. I am not sure in which seat that spokesman sits, but it means that this farce—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to close this debate on behalf of the rabble over here this evening. Mr. Speaker, second reading serves two purposes, and I am delighted to have this opportunity to inform the members of the NDP about those two purposes. The first purpose is to debate the underlying principle of a bill. In the debate we have had on those principles the opponents of this bill have argued that it addresses the wrong issue, that it makes perhaps the most vulnerable part of our society into a scapegoat, and that it has the potential of substantially lowering our standard of living. Those who support the bill argue that there must be restraint at this time for, if there is not, the drop in our standard of living will ultimately be more precipitous and damaging than if no action had been taken. They argue that members of the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the government and the members of the civil service must lead by example and by serving as models of restraint. Those are the basic positions generated in this House. I outline these not because I feel compelled to place these positions of principle before the House, but to tell you that every one of these arguments came out on the very first day of debate.

Mr. Deans: And they are equally true today.

Mr. Kelly: There has been nothing added to those six basic positions in the four days of debate. So I would argue that the first purpose of second reading has already been accomplished.

The second purpose, Mr. Speaker, is to uncover those issues which are inherent in the bill or to project issues into the bill. From what I have heard in this House and read in Hansard, these are the issues which have been uncovered or projected in this debate. They are: the apparent failure of wage control in the mid 1970s; the deleterious impact on the economy of withdrawing funds which otherwise would have been spent on consumer purchases; the apparent suspension of collective bargaining, with its particularly harsh impact on females; the arbitrary separation of the siamese twins, CN and CP; the uncomfortable position of those bargaining units in the twilight zone; that is, units which, not having signed a contract before budget date, and apparently not being included in the transitional bargaining units, have signed in fact on the very day the budget was brought down; the application of the wage restraints to Crown corporations; the flat, iniquitous approach of the 6-5 solution; and the importance of finding sources of money to spend on job-creation programs without increasing the deficit.

Those are all important issues, Mr. Speaker, and the most important thing about them is that they were all put forward in the first two days of debate. So I would argue that, although there have been subsequent speeches, many of them forceful and some eloquent, but most of them florid, there has not been a single issue uncovered or projected in this debate in the last three days.

Mr. Deans: Not true.

Mr. Kelly: Everyone in this House knows that the real work in Parliament is done in committees. That is where you have the opportunity to bring the general public into the debate, as some hon. members opposite have argued. If the principles have already been delineated in this debate, if the issues have all been raised, if we all know that the only chance the public will have to get involved in this debate is in committee, and we all know that the opportunity for real work on Bill C-124 lies in committee, then why are we abusing the patience and courtesy of this House by prolonging this debate on second reading? Let us go to committee; let us get down to work.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I am upset to have to rise in this debate because it is another confrontational debate created by the government party which refuses to pay attention to Parliament, to listen to Members of Parliament or do anything to pay attention to the debate. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), when he introduced this motion, spoke about the concerns of other members and what they had to say, but he never heard them or paid any attention to them because he has not been here for this debate. If this government paid attention to Parliament we would not need this closure motion at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: If this government was prepared to listen to Parliament it would understand that we as Members of Parliament are prepared to have our salaries reduced and to take the lead in developing a better economy for Canada. We are prepared to reduce the cost of government, but this government refuses to listen to the suggestions that we, the people who are paying the premium of reducing our own salaries, are prepared to offer. I say to you, sir—

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the member but I would like to ask him why he is against closure—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has the floor.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, would you listen to the crap you get from members of the NDP who are not even prepared to cut their own salaries? They are more worried about their pay than they are about the condition of this country. They do not care. They are not prepared to lead, but neither is this government prepared to lead. This government is not prepared to listen to where we can cut the cost of government, where we can cut the cost of borrowing, where we can cut the overhead of Canada, where we can give Canada back to the people of Canada.

● (2020)

The depression, the recession, or whatever they want to call it, that we are in, is not the result of labour getting paid too much, it is the result of government spending too much. It is the result of government wasting too much. Most of the waste has been caused by the attitude expressed by the New Democratic Party. As my friend, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) said, "They led them into the whorehouse" and now they stand up and ask, "My goodness, why are you there?"

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! It being 8.21 p.m., the two hours provided for consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 75C are now expired. I must therefore interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of this motion.

[English]

All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Johnston) which was agreed to on the following division:

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,268 and 4,372.

[Text]

DOT—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,268—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Transport have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the department and, if so, are they embodied in a code of conduct or other specific document and is the code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. Some of these rules and regulations are contained in acts and regulations while others are contained in directives issued by Treasury Board and by the various levels of management of the department. Although there is no policy specifically entitled code of conduct, there is a departmental discipline policy which applies to all Department of Transport employees and this policy is available to the public.

2. In accordance with departmental discipline procedures and the provisions of most collective agreements, records of disciplinary actions are destroyed two years after the disciplinary action, provided that no further disciplinary action was recorded during this period. In the two years preceding April 1, 1982, there were 1,573 instances where Department of Transport employees were disciplined by way of written reprimand, suspension and discharge. They are grouped as follows:

discharges	12

The majority of these reprimands result from illegal strike activity during this period. Because of the provisions of Part

IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act, the department is unable to provide the names of employees who were subject to disciplinary action.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE RESERVES

Question No. 4,372—Mr. Mazankowski:

As of (a) January 1 and June 1 for each year since 1970 (b) the first of every month in 1981 and 1982 to date (i) what were the official gold holdings in ounces (ii) what were the total foreign exchange reserves (iii) what were the foreign exchange reserves held in U.S. dollars (iv) what percentage of monthly import payments did the foreign exchange reserves represent?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): The table below presents Canada's official gold holdings, total international reserves, U.S. dollar assets, and the ratio of total reserves to merchandise imports (in percentage terms). To calculate the latter ratio, the published level of official reserves (which is in U.S. dollar terms) has been converted to its Canadian dollar equivalent at the closing exchange rate.

Mr. Smith: I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), since he gets so much delight in looking up these questions, why No. 2,329 which has been on the Order Paper since April 2, 1981, has not been answered yet, and has he now determined when I might receive an answer?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I was very pleased to make some inquiries on behalf of the hon. member. I do not have an answer for him yet but I will keep working on it. I am sure we will have one before too long.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. These lists for the festivities accorded President Reagan were all made up before President Reagan came here. Why is it taking so long to bring them into the House?

• (2050)

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, these inquiries are under way. I am delighted to do this on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, perhaps the parliamentary secretary would address himself to questions Nos. 3,051 and 3,052 which were placed on the Order Paper on December 1. It is a request for information with regard to the government's advertising budget. When will we be able to get information with regard to the advertising budget for 1979-80, 1980-81 and the projected budget for 1981-82? Also, when he will be able to give us information about the Canadian Media Corporation? What is the reason he has not yet come back with this information?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not have a status report off-hand. I would point out to the hon. member that at this point in this session we have answered 3,473 questions. I can assure the hon. member I will be very happy to look into these matters on his behalf.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, while the parliamentary secretary is doing that, would he also look at question No. 3,506, which was placed on the Order Paper on December 2, requesting information about public opinion surveys commissioned by the government? Why has the parliamentary secretary been incapable of getting an answer to that question?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I have always made inquiries any time the hon. member has asked me to do so. I would be pleased to do so again in this instance. I cannot give him an answer tonight, but I will be happy to look into the matter for him.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I would like to inquire about question No. 4,229 which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) requested that I place on the Order Paper in early April. I raised this matter with the parliamentary secretary, asking him if he would look into the information kiosks established by the Metric Commission across the country and the people who were to be employed in them. He said he would look into the question, but I still do not have an answer. If the minister cannot answer the question now, I would respectfully request that the parliamentary secretary get me an answer before this Parliament adjourns for the summer recess.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that these matters are in hand. I think we will have an answer before too long.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask about question No. 4,053, which I placed on the Order Paper on February 23 of this year. It is a very detailed question dealing with the shipments of uranium hexafluoride from Canadian ports, through the Soviet Union, for processing for other countries. As the residues and one of the uranium isotopes can be converted to plutonium and weapons grade uranium, the answers to these questions are very urgent. I would ask the parliamentary secretary what progress he has made in the last two weeks to obtain the answers to these questions which I asked him about two weeks ago.

Mr. Smith: I have made inquiries. The hon. member is correct, it is a lengthy question. It goes on for two pages. I hope to have a progress report for him on the status of that question very soon.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SECTOR COMPENSATION RESTRAINT ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING COMPENSATION IN THE PUBLIC SECTOR OF CANADA

The House resumed from Wednesday, July 14, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Johnston that Bill C-124, respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, when the House rose yesterday afternoon, we were discussing the problems facing thousands of Canadian businesses which forced them to close down because of the present economic situation and lay off thousands of workers. It is clear that the bill now before the House concerning a wage freeze in the public service is meeting with some resistance on the part of employees, but I think that all employees affected by this bill will agree that in the industries I was referring to earlier, we have people who have no job security at all. In situations like the one we are in now, workers are faced with mass lay-offs. In the public service, however, including Crown corporations and all the agencies listed under Schedule II of the bill, employees will agreee that they do have some degree of job security, and what is more, that their particular group does not have to cope with the pressure experienced by employees faced with lay-offs and by their families who have to cope with all kinds of family problems as a result. As I have just said, Mr. Speaker, the employees in the public service and Crown corporations who are affected by Bill C-124 and the wage freeze do not have to face that kind of problem. I think the federal public services, the provincial public services and most of the municipal services are very fortunate in having job security to the extent that they do.

In fact, what we are asking the people affected by this bill is to share with their fellow Canadians some of the benefits they have been able to obtain and acquire during the years they have been employed in the public service. We are also asking them to share these benefits with other fellow citizens who are faced with the extremely difficult situations we are seeing today. We are not asking them to make such sacrifices gladly. We are simply asking them to share with other Canadians what they have been able to obtain, so that at the end of the two-year period imposed by this bill, there will be new confidence in Canada. We want all Canadians to continue to believe in the vast potential of this country and we want people who have their own business to help as many Canadians as possible obtain jobs and earn a decent wage so that they can make a living and raise their families. Mr. Speaker, it seems that the opposition parties agree to some extent with the wage freeze and the temporary wage reduction in the public service. Each and everyone of our friends opposite may have devised various solutions or commented on some provisions of this bill, Mr. Speaker, but all have agreed that the government had to take concrete steps to solve the economic problems facing Canada. Of course, we would have liked to obtain useful ideas and suggestions from our hon. friends opposite during this debate but, as usual, they merely criticized the bill without giving us the co-operation we are seeking from all Canadians at this time. Again today, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and other cabinet ministers responsible for economic matters have met with groups and unions in an attempt to obtain from them the co-operation I referred to earlier. It is clear that if we fail to obtain their co-operation, it will be difficult for us to overcome this economic crisis.

If the Prime Minister of Canada, the Minister of Finance, all the Ministers and all members on the government side can meet with people who do not always share their views, why can our friends opposite not do likewise? Why can the Leader of the Opposition not try to convince his friends across the country that we must address the current problems and seek solutions all together? Why can the Leader of the New Democratic Party not try to sit with his trade unionist friends to consider with them the kind of solutions likely to deal with inflation in Canada? That should be the thrust of our action, Mr. Speaker. It is with this purpose in mind that all members of the House, all groups and individuals concerned with the economic situation in Canada, and eager to find solutions to our economic problems, may help the government perform the task it has taken on.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the private sector will also have a major part to play in this endeavour. If the Prime Minister, the cabinet ministers and all the people concerned about the economic situation meet with representatives of all sectors of private enterprise, it is precisely to try to convince them that they should contribute to the solution of the problem. It is important that the private sector should stand by the government to solve this problem. According to recent press reports, especially following the budget and the meetings the government had with business circles, their representatives are willing to co-operate with the government in seeking solutions. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read into the record part of an article published in La Presse which shows the willingness of businessmen to cooperate with the Minister of Finance's efforts to grapple with the economic situation. I quote:

> The meeting which Prime Minister Trudeau and several of his ministers had with about 40 businessmen representing major Canadian businesses ended on an optimistic note. The Canadian business community is willing to co-operate with the government to bring the inflation rate down to 6 per cent and accordingly companies will attempt to limit their price increases to this level.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the board of Power Corporation, Mr. Paul Desmarais, gave the gist of the meeting in these words for the reporters: "There has been a consensus; the businessmen who were there have given massive support to the government. It was unanimous! We have to fight inflation together, the federal government, the provinces, business and labour! We have to bring the deficit and interest rates down to the lowest possible level!" Mr. Speaker, I believe that such a statement following a meeting with 40 businessmen is self-explanatory. If we now have in Canada—and I shall give other examples later on, Mr. Speaker—businessmen willing to co-operate with the Canadian government to reduce inflation, everyone will have to do his share.

Mr. Speaker, this article in La Presse speaks of a consensus, but first we must obtain a consensus in this House and this is what I am asking of my friends opposite. Why would they not give this government the consensus which business, unions, workers and organized labour throughout the country are willing to give? Why is it that our friends opposite are not able to do their part, disregard political partisanship and the few votes they could gain in some constituency somewhere in Canada and give us this consensus so that we may use the next two years to get out of the current economic mess? Mr. Speaker, they readily admit that we must fight inflation and attempt everything to solve our present economic problems, but I wonder why they do not want to give this consensus to the government. Businessmen and unions are willing to do their share. I am certain that our friends on the extreme left are not very happy to hear that the President of the Canadian Labour Congress came out of a meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) saying he was confident we would find solutions.

Obviously our friends do not really like the president—I was going to say the president of their party—making such statements. However, in view of the present situation, this man was able to sit down and tell the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance: "It is true that we have problems, but I shall put aside some of my opinions, which may be political or labour oriented, to see whether we can resolve these economic problems together." We have been asking for co-operation since the budget speech. We now ask our friends opposite to co-operate and do not understand their reluctance. While many of their constituents have given this kind of co-operation to the government, why will they not for once, Mr. Speaker, forget their political partisanship? Then this House of Commons and the other place can say that henceforth we shall try to work ourselves out of this economic situation within the next two years so that each Canadian, in each constituency, in each region, in each province, can enjoy his share of the wealth of this country.

Comments throughout the world make it abundantly clear that Canada is a country of plenty that inspires envy. We should all think about this and consider that, for once, we are given the opportunity to unite and co-operate so that Canada may continue to be one of those countries which every head of state wants to take as a model and say: "This is a country whose people, heedless of their own personal and political interests, try to find together a way out of an extremely difficult economic situation which affects the entire world." This is the only thing, Mr. Speaker, we are asking of our friends opposite and the Canadian people. Of course we realize we may be blamed for selecting a group of individuals who are readily identifiable and, as I pointed out earlier, who enjoy some privileges over other Canadians. Employees of the Civil Service and Crown corporations indisputably enjoy advantages and privileges other Canadian workers do not have.

Mr. Speaker, you surely have had the experience in your own constituency office, along with the majority of members, of a 45 or 50 year-old man calling on you because his company has recently closed down. He has come to ask you for a job in a related field of employment and tells you that he had been working with the same employer for 25 or 30 years and never expected his company would close down. He tells you that he has two or three school-age children and can't get a job. Each and all of us have dealt with such cases, but this government has taken steps to put an end to such a situation throughout the country.

We have taken measures to help those people. I may have the opportunity to describe a few programs later on. What I wish to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, since your constituency is made up of public servants, is that I would be quite surprised if you told me that you had received the visits of public servants complaining they had lost their jobs because their company had closed down. I do not think there is any prospect of the federal, provincial or municipal governments doing that. Job security is a great advantage government workers have over the others. This is why, Mr. Speaker, we are seeking their co-operation, so that other Canadians who do not enjoy such job security may get secure employment also. We have taken steps, developed programs and implemented plans in Canada to meet those expectations. Allow me to point out that we have just passed new legislation on occupational training at a cost of $1 billion this year to cope with layoffs throughout the country affecting workers of all ages as a result of technological changes in some industries.

These training programs will enable thousands of workers to acquire new skills in certain fields to meet the challenge of today's technology and to work for other companies in different sectors. Perhaps some of my friends opposite think that we are dreaming, but they ought to face reality and see that courses are now being given throughout the country to retrain workers and enable them to gain experience in new technology so they will get jobs in new fields and in industries which have changed considerably in recent years. Mr. Speaker, those are the various areas where our government has invested considerable amounts of money to retrain the labour force.

Naturally, we do not believe that our new budget and the new programs which have been announced will produce instantaneous results and that they will have concrete repercussions throughout the country tomorrow, the day after or perhaps even next week or in the next few months. Our aim is to take steps right away so that in the coming months and especially in the coming year all Canadians everywhere in Canada will respond and co-operate as we expect them to do, because our objective is to develop the whole Canadian economy so that within a few years it will reach what we believe to be its full productive capacity.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, some of our friends say that we always blame other countries, but we do have to keep in mind the international economic situation. My friends opposite and all Canadians who believe that the new budget or the new programs to be launched will enable Canada to solve the economic problems of the world have another think coming. We live in a very prosperous country where natural resources are plentiful, but there is no way that 24 or 25 million Canadians can possibly come up with a solution to the economic problems of the United States, Japan, Italy and West Germany. One of my friends said a moment ago that we are dreaming in colour. Mr. Speaker, they are the ones who are dreaming in colour when they ask the government to find a solution to all the problems of the world.

Naturally, a good many people think that we are taking drastic measures, but we have to, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we must show the Canadian people that they have a responsible government that is prepared to do its utmost over the next two years to restore confidence and the economic climate we had before from coast to coast. It would be utopian to think that within our own country we can take measures that will solve the problems of all other countries. Those who think that, be they in the opposition or ordinary Canadians, are dreaming in colour. We will start off by doing whatever is required within Canada to restore that climate of confidence and help the Canadian people.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to touch on another aspect of Bill C-124 which in the next two years will enable the government to recoup some funds by limiting salary increases to 6 and 5 per cent, and then reinvest that money in the regions of the country that need it most. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to speak of my own region, eastern Quebec, the Gaspé Peninsula, and in particular of the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. It may be that our honourable friends opposite and a few other members of this House are not aware of the fact that in the Gaspé Peninsula and the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, the rate of unemployment now ranges from 50 to 60 per cent. The people in those areas are Canadians like all the others, Mr. Speaker, they are entitled to the same rights, privileges and opportunities as all other Canadians. There lies the responsibility of the government, Mr. Speaker: it must see to it that funds are garnered in other sectors of activity and reallocated with a view to helping the people in underdeveloped areas who also want to share in the wealth of this country. Indeed, with the funds that are reallocated and reinvested in direct job creation, we can, through community development projects, give jobs to those people who, in many cases, some time this summer or in early fall, will have exhausted their entitlement to unemployment benefits without having had over that period, because of the current economic situation, the opportunity of going back to the seasonal jobs they had in previous years. Those are the people we will help, Mr. Speaker, by allowing them to work for periods of 20 to 40 weeks and so to provide for their wives and children as other Canadians do across the country.

Those then are the decisions this government had to take, Mr. Speaker. And we took them because our party has always strived to ensure that all Canadians, throughout the land, wherever they live and whatever they do, have the same opportunities, the same advantages. Mr. Speaker, obviously, through Bill C-124 and the measures proposed by the budget, we are asking the majority of Canadians, some sectors of the Canadian population, to make sacrifices. But we must, through this bill and the other measures, convince ourselves that we can, if we are to come out of these difficult times, first of all, as the government—and this, I think we have proved—be assured that we can do so. Above all, Mr. Speaker, I feel that every hon. member, every Canadian, must first convince himself that we are able, that we have the necessary means, that we have the ability, that we have the natural resources and wealth throughout the country to come out of this economic crisis.

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for an individual to try to convince his fellow citizens or friends if he is not convinced himself that we have the means to do so. That is the attitude, the way of thinking that each and every Canadian must cultivate within himself. With all we have in this country, with our tremendous wealth in natural resources, we can pull out of this economic impasse. That is the only way, Mr. Speaker, for every Canadian, every group, every association, every labour union, every businessman, to convince those around them that we can, that we will achieve that economic renewal we are all seeking and will achieve by the end of those two years, provided every individual does his part. That is what we are asking: first, that everyone do his part in overcoming the current economic situation, and second, that everyone convince himself that we can do so, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Setting aside the merits of what my friend has just said, I want him to know it is a lot more fun listening to, and certainly watching, his cousin.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie).

Mr. Benjamin: Where were the Tories yesterday, and the day before?

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): The important one is here now, Mr. Speaker.

Canada is in trouble, big trouble. We have a desperate need for a solution to aid those suffering from unemployment and all Canadians who are subject to all-time high inflation rates. We need action and we need it fast. The social conscience of our nation demands it.

Our unemployment rate is comparable to the rates during the Great Depression when unemployment ranged from 11 per cent to 20 per cent. The unemployment rate of our public sector now effectively stands at 15 per cent. These figures are terrifying and unacceptable to every thinking Canadian. Coupled with unemployment is inflation which is running at an annual rate in excess of 11 per cent. We have record bankruptcies and small business failures, and a lack of confidence in our dollar which really reflects the lack of confidence in Canada as a nation. That hurts, Mr. Speaker, because we know what wonderful, abundant resources this country has; resources in the land as well as its people.

Why, you may ask, why has this happened? How can a country like ours end up in such a mess? I will tell you why. As the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) put it, there has been an alarming drop in commercial investment and profits. The demand for goods has diminished both here in Canada and in our foreign markets. One quarter of our production capacity remains idle. Over the past few years, our industrial productivity has been rising at the second slowest rate of any major industrialized nation. Borrowing costs in Canada are higher than those in most other industrialized nations. What a sorry state for such a rich country!

To come to Canada's rescue, the jaded knights in shining armour, although sadly tarnished at this point, have devised a plan for the economic recovery of the nation. First there was a budget—the third one—born of desperation rather than inspiration. Shameful is the only word to describe the unjust treatment of the old age pensioners who subsist near the poverty line. They are restricted to the same 6 per cent cost of living increase as the presidents of our renowned Crown corporations. These people are the Canadians who created a better way of life for us than they enjoyed, and in more difficult times than these. This is the way the Liberal government thanks them.

I think all Canadians would prefer that we treat our fathers and mothers and the fathers and the mothers of all members of our generation with compassion and respect and eliminate this disgraceful provision. Then there is Bill C-124, the public sector compensation restraint act, as it is called, created to curb the wage increases of public servants in an attempt to quell inflation.

Mr. Speaker, restraint is an admirable goal when practised in the right direction. But are we really talking about the same thing? It seems to me that the government has a slightly different interpretation of the term "restraint". Its record makes its dedication subject to proof. The government, in its November budget, aimed to curb its spending at 22 per cent. However, only seven months later, its spending did not reduce but, instead, increased by 20 per cent. Is that the example the Canadian people are expected to follow?

The government should show leadership, but it certainly has not to date. Bill C-124 shows inequitable treatment of those categorized as public servants. Lower ranks in the military, for example, paid at very low levels, are asked to risk their lives in crisis times, to move their families and themselves on short notice, to pay increasing accommodation and utility costs and to use outdated equipment and bear the burden of understaffed personnel. They are being restricted to the same 6 per cent income increase as top military brass, cabinet ministers and generals and admirals. We should not penalize the lower ranks further.

The potential for creating union problems is manifest in the provisions regarding transportation unions which have traditionally bargained in the same sector. Provisions which make restraint measures applicable against the CNR are not similarly applicable against the CPR. Measures which cap the wages of Air Canada employees do not similarly cap the wages of employees of Canadian Pacific Air, Eastern Provincial Airways, or other regional carriers. It is to be hoped that these measures would in effect apply with equal fairness to all persons within the transportation sector.

Such equity is not envisioned by these measures. While I can support the principle of restraint, I look forward to correcting these inequities in committee so that I, and indeed all Canadians, can support the substance of the bill when it is before us.

I would prefer that the government place before Parliament a comprehensive program to reduce expenditures by supplying government services to all Canadians at the lowest possible cost. It should invest in committees the right to make accountable all those who in the past and in the future by their decisions have or can cost Canadians millions of dollars in waste, extravagance and mismanagement. Cuts or delays in discretionary spending in most departments are imperative. To lead the economic recovery of our nation I recommend the elimination of the capital gains tax and major changes in FIRA in order to attract badly needed capital investment. I feel the use of our resources and the advantages to Canadians can be controlled without discouraging investment in the manner now being done. I suggest the revenue from the capital gains tax is small compared with the benefits which will accrue through taxation of income generated by investment. I recommend that major tax incentives be provided for industrial research and development which can give Canadian industry a badly needed edge in competition for world markets essential to the economic recovery and development of our nation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, more flexible caps on indexing, ranging from full indexation for low-income people to none for fat cats earning $50,000 and over, including the top brass such as ministers, deputy ministers and Members of Parliament is, in my view, a more equitable and fair method of leading the war on inflation.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I just forget who said it, but there is a saying that those who do not learn from history are condemned to repeat it. That is what is happening today, and that is what happened in 1975. There is another quotation I would like to give you, and I hope some hon. gentlemen from the government side or the official opposition can identify the person who said it. It was to the effect that labour is prior to and superior to capital, and without labour, capital cannot function. I am not sure that any of my colleagues in the other two parties can identify who said that, so for their edification let me tell them that it was said by Abraham Lincoln in 1856. If you have $1 million of capital and no one will work for you, your capital is worth nothing.

The principle of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is wrong. The bill itself is wrong. If you limit through legislation the pay and allowances of one group, if you limit their rights, if you can do it to that one group, then of course the door is wide open to do it to any other group. One would think in these times that the government and this Parliament would bring in legislation which challenges the entire nation, which makes us all equal in this battle, this national economic emergency, and which will bring us out of an economic depression. It is a depression, so let us not delude ourselves with a milder word like "recession". I said that those who do not learn from history are condemned to repeat it, and one only has to look at Hansard between 1928 and 1938 to see the truth of that. Let me give some quotes, such as the following:

> During the summer, coming events began to cast their shadow over international finance . . . The proposals of President Hoover for a one-year moratorium were heralded as a signal for returning world confidence, but the optimism was unfortunately short lived . . . Well may Canadians look back with satisfaction over what has been accomplished.

That was a fellow by the name of E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance, April 6, 1932, as reported at pages 1749 and 1750 of Hansard. He was a Conservative. Let us go to another one. This one was a tirade, and it reads as follows:

> There were increases in the public debt, bringing the public debt to a point higher than it has reached at any previous time in Canada . . . Where we might have hoped for some evidence of decreases in the general cost of government, there has been but little.
> Hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavoured to make it appear that this condition has been due to world conditions.

That was the right hon. leader of the Liberal official opposition, one William Lyon Mackenzie King, April 26, 1932, as reported at pages 2363 and 2364 of Hansard.

Let us go to another one, which reads:

> The evidence of business recovery is written incontrovertibly in the recorded facts of our industry and trade.

That is again the Minister of Finance, Mr. Rhodes, as reported on April 18, 1934, at page 2267 of Hansard.

Let us move now to another regime because I am endeavouring to show they are, both of them, still the same old bunch. Here is another quote:

> With respect to the income tax, charged as we were with increasing it, the minister was frank the other evening in saying that he had increased it slightly. And so all along the line we have the same position.

That is one R. B. Bennett, March 2, 1937, as reported at page 1391 of Hansard. Mr. Speaker, the then leader of the opposition, following his government from 1930 to 1935, moved an amendment to the Liberal budget which said:

> This House regrets that the government has failed to take effective measures to deal with the problem of unemployment.

What we are getting today? The Herbert Hoover's, the R. B. Bennett's and the Mackenzie King's are now telling us again—they have not learned from history—to tighten our belts, show restraint and pick out some people who are easy victims, easy to pick on. The fellows who said in the dirty thirties that prosperity is just around the corner are telling us the same thing again. All you have to do is to slap on a 6 per cent limit for public servants and Crown corporation employees, and then somehow or other that will automatically result in everyone else in the economy rushing to volunteer to restrict increases in their incomes to not more than 6 per cent.

I have not heard any mad stampede or scramble outside the doors of this chamber, or anywhere else in this country, to volunteer, but the ones who do not learn from history and are now repeating it say things like:

> Yes, I would continue to back Mr. Bouey. I agree that our interest rates have to track those in the United states.

That was said by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). Imagine that.

• (2140)

Here is another quote which reads:

> We have looked for a solution other than the government's, but we couldn't come up with an alternative . . . At this moment, I don't have a better solution.

I presume he meant, other than horizontal with the Liberals. That was the right hon. gentleman from Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) as reported in the Toronto Star on May 5.

By the way, the quotation I read from the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is from a CTV interview on June 7, 1981. The Liberals had not even been in office all that long, and he was already telling us how great Governor Bouey and the Liberals were doing.

We must consider the whole matter of honesty and integrity in federal politics. I have another quote which reads:

> —our leaders have got to be a little less honest . . . we're not being devious and tricky enough . . . I'm criticizing us for that.

That was the hon. gentleman from St. John's West from the "Watson Report" of February 4, 1979.

The same gentleman is reported in Maclean's magazine for July 12, 1981 as saying the government:

> —is adrift; it has no answers. If I told you what I would do, we'd never get elected.

The hon. member for St. John's West said that, I did not.

With respect to controls and wages, here is another quote:

> What is in the budget? There is one important initiative . . . the introduction of restraint on public sector salaries. That is a field in which the government has lagged behind several Canadian provinces. All of which, by the way, during times when we had Tory governments.

This quote continues:

> We are relieved that it is beginning to accept that government spending is a major cause of current economic problems . . . it is a step in the right direction.

Those words are from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition pertaining to the restraint measures on the public servants and the Crown corporation employees in Canada.

Neither one of the parties have learned anything. Neither one of them have the courage to adopt something different from and more than what they tried before.

I am just an innocent prairie boy and I always understood that if you charged people more, it will cost you more. I did not think there was anything complicated about that. If you have higher interest rates, that means the cost of everything goes up. I thought, even when I was in public school, that was automatic. You pay higher prices for everything you buy. You pay higher mortgages. You have higher unemployment. You pay higher costs of production if you are a producer, and generally you have higher costs of living if you raise and keep raising or keep interest rates high. The evidence is in. The jury does not even have to meet. The high interest rate policy has meant higher unemployment, a higher cost of living, bankruptcies and the whole litany.

Why does the Liberal government and the Conservative opposition still clutch on to something that went out of date in the dirty thirties? It did not work then. It is not working now, and it will not work now.

A number of my colleagues have talked about the freedoms that are denied in this bill. I was in this chamber when we voted on the War Measures Act. Those of us who said it should not happen, and those of us who were ruled out by closure were subsequently vindicated by the right hon. gentleman, the former member for Halifax and the former leader of the Progressive Conservative Party—and if the Tories had had any brains they would have kept him and he would be prime minister right now—who said a few years later that he wished he had done what Tommy Douglas did; he wished that he had voted against the implementation of the War Measures Act. It may be in the makeup of the person who is the leader of the official opposition to say down the road a few months or a few years that he wished he had voted against this bill because it denies the integrity of a bargaining unit.

This bill does away with protection from sexual harassment. It does away with negotiating for parental leave, it does away with pensions for part-time workers, vacation leave, paid holidays, pre-retirement leave, job classifications, job security, technological changes, contracting out, dental and health plans, improved bereavement leave and grievance procedures. All of those things are done away with. This is a new War Measures Act. This is not the kind of length a Parliament or any political party has to go to in order to bring about an alleviation of what we all know to be an economic national emergency, an economic depression. It is plain for everyone to know, to experience and to see.

We suggest there is a different way. I cannot say we are 100 per cent certain that it will work 100 per cent. But I can say that it is something different, something more than and different from what has been the conventional wisdom. I want to suggest that in order to deal with this matter, in order to get the co-operation, in fact, the enthusiastic support of our fellow citizens, we have to bring in measures that are not only fair but are seen to be fair. The perception out there in our riding is that all of us in this war should stop the depression and start an expansion of our economy and that everyone should be treated fairly and equitably. I do not believe and I do not think anyone else does that this legislation is going to result automatically in fellow Canadians saying, "Well, they have limited the public servants and the Crown corporation employees to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent the year after." And as a result of that, they are all going to volunteer and take the pledge to limit their increases.

I have talked to my lawyer, my doctor, my chartered accountant and my real estate buddies, and none of them have volunteered to follow suit. In fact, they are laughing. I have not heard of Mr. Bronfman volunteering to fall in line with what is happening to public servants. He only received $1,064,288 last year. I have not heard him volunteering to take only a 6 per cent increase next year and 5 per cent the year after. I do not know why he would not, because 6 per cent would mean another $63,800; then he would be living up to the spirit of this legislation. Then there is J. A. de Grandpré from the mother Bell outfit. Last year the poor fellow only made $626,000. Not even he has rushed forward to volunteer to follow the example which was arbitrarily laid upon public servants and employees of Crown corporations by limiting his increase to 6 per cent, which would amount to a paltry $37,500. I do not see him rushing forward.

Let me turn to the area of Crown corporations. Well, by law CNR employees will receive 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent the year after. Dr. LeClair, the new president of the Crown corporation, only received something in the order of $240,000 last year.

An hon. Member: It was $200,000.

Mr. Benjamin: Perhaps it was only $200,000. Eventually we will find out from the interstate commerce commission of the United States, but let us assume that it was only $200,000. The poor fellow will have to volunteer to take an increase of only $12,000 next year, which is what janitors and other low-paid workers in the public service receive in the way of entire incomes. I fully expect a grand announcement in another week or two that Dr. LeClair has agreed to a freeze in his salary. He was only obtaining $200,000, but who would not agree to a freeze on $200,000 which will amount to another $12,000.

This is not the way to attack inflation or to solve a national economic emergency. We should not do what was done in the dirty thirties nor what was tried in 1975; it did not work. I listened to a previous speaker talking about putting people to work. This was done by R. B. Bennett and Mackenzie King. I saw the relief camps of the dirty thirties—two bits a day and your grub. Their solution is to attack the victims, not the perpetrators. The first people they pick on are the first victims of inflation and the first victims of economic depression—wage earners, pensioners and low-income people. The Liberals, supported by the Tories, as was the case in the dirty thirties, attack these people.

If they want to set an example for all Canadians to follow, they should start at the top and work down. They should say to the corporate elite, to financial institutions and to high income people, including Members of Parliament, that they will lead the way. To leave out those who in fact are the causes of economic depression is the worst kind of injustice.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the former minister of finance both think that Gerald Bouey is the best thing since sliced bread. Both of them have said that his policy on interest rates is also their policy. They are fundamentally wrong. In order to get out of this economic depression, this national emergency, square one is interest rates. We say that the government must instruct the Bank of Canada to reduce interest rates tomorrow to the level of inflation or not more than one per cent above it. If that means selective foreign exchange controls or total foreign exchange controls, so be it, for the length of the national economic emergency.

Whether someone wants to send $300,000 or $3 million out of the country, we would not allow it. But the ones who want to send hundreds of millions of dollars out of the country to invest in what can be nothing more than greed, selfishness, and traitorous behaviour, in order to make fast bucks out of shopping centres, luxury apartments or real estate in the United States, should be told that they cannot do so. If this country is big enough to make a profit out of, it is good enough to invest in. For a change, the people with investment capital, whether it is a lowly widow, a millionaire, a bank or a trust company, should be called upon to invest in the nation. If they do not, they should be made to do so. They should be given two choices—it is either compulsory or they have to.

This is the case in western European countries and Japan. They not only have planned economies, but in effect they have controlled economies; they always have had. Countries with inflation rates of 7 per cent or 9 per cent or interest rates of 7 per cent or 9 per cent have controlled economies. They have investment policies which collect public and private investment capital to be directed into what are the priorities of the nations.

Surely the priorities are here into which we could direct investment, and investors could obtain a reasonable return on their investment. Let us start with housing. We should not horse around with $500,000. Let us make it $1 billion per year for the next ten years. Then let us turn to transportation and invest in it $1 billion per year for the next 15 years. In fact, $1 billion per year for all modes of transportation would not be enough, but it would be the minimum and it could be public and private investment capital.

Mr. Kelly: From where will you get the money?

Mr. Benjamin: The money is there. We do not need any more sinkholes like Candu. We could take 20 of the fancy fighter planes of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), which are no good to us and we can never use anyway, and put that money into housing. The capital is there. It is owned by Canadians. That is the tactic, that is the ethic, that is the plan we should be using, not what is in this bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House deemed to have been moved under Standing Order 40.

PUBLIC WORKS—FUTURE OF DALY BUILDING IN OTTAWA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, following a report in the media, I put a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) concerning the demolition of a building in my riding, the Daly Building. Yesterday morning a newspaper in the national capital reported that Treasury Board would have approved the demolition of that building. That report caused quite a stir in my riding, and in Ottawa as well, because some time ago the City of Ottawa has designated that structure as a Heritage building.

The Daly Building, Mr. Speaker, is a federal property that comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works and not under the jurisdiction of the President of the Treasury Board. This is why I directed my question to the Minister of Public Works, because we know he is responsible for the management of federal buildings. This point has to be clarified, because if the minister applied to Treasury Board, it was probably for some supplementary estimates not earmarked in the budget of his department for that building.

In reply to my question, the minister indicated that he would appeal the decision of Treasury Board and that he intended to put the issue in the context of a study now under preparation of the total accommodation within the Ottawa capital region. Since this is a very controversial issue, I would like to provide a brief history of that matter which has been under consideration for at least seven or eight years. The Daly Building is strategically situated in the centre of the national capital within walking distance of Parliament Hill. This prestigious location offers exceptional view and access. The building is located on the corner of Rideau Street and Sussex Drive, next to the Rideau Centre project, now under construction, as everyone knows, and which brings about $200 million in economic activity to the National Capital. The seven storey Daly Building, which was built at the turn of the century, has a total area of 18,600 square meters; it stands on a lot measuring 4,332 square meters. Designed and built in 1905 as a large department store, the Daly Building was converted in 1919 into federal government offices and was to be demolished in 1979 with several obsolescent government buildings, namely the so-called temporary buildings on Sussex Street which were indeed demolished at the time. The building was purchased in 1921 by the federal government and in turn accommodated various departments. However, since the early seventies, the building has become increasingly outdated which has meant that major repairs have had to be made. In 1974, a first study was made to assess the situation and determine whether there would be any point in renovating the building or whether it would be more appropriate to tear it down. In the meantime, consultations were undertaken with various groups in the private and public sectors, which could have been interested in acquiring the building. It was thus offered to various government levels, provincial and municipal, and private interests, including a co-operative, a group of private interests, Crown corporations and many others, but always without success. In fact—and this is quite amusing, Mr. Speaker—in 1978, the Ottawa municipal council even decided that the building should be demolished.

We know the building has been vacant ever since. For the last three years at least, no one has occupied the building except the rats. However, this does not mean that it is not costing anything since it must still be heated and maintained to prevent complete deterioration in case a decision should be made to preserve it. In my opinion, our decision must be based strictly on economic considerations. If renovation is economically justified, the building should be renovated. However, if renovation costs exceed the cost of a new building, it should obviously be demolished. With this in mind, in 1978 I got in touch with the then Minister of Public Works, Mr. Buchanan, to get an idea of the costs. The minister then indicated in a letter that the study on the feasibility of renovation made in 1974 showed that it would cost over $10 million, $10.3 million to be exact for the building to comply with safety standards. At the time, it was estimated that it would cost approximately $250,000 to tear it down. In view of these facts, the decision to demolish the building was made in April 1979 for several reasons which would be too long to explain now. This was not done and we are now facing the same situation as in 1979, namely a controversy. I do not have the exact figures here, Mr. Speaker, but we can assume that since it would have cost over $10 million to renovate the building in 1978, it would certainly cost between $18 million and $20 million in 1982. As for the cost of demolition, it can be estimated at nearly $400,000. Moreover, according to the 1974 study to which I referred earlier and which had to do with the amortization of renovation costs over a 25-year period, it would have been necessary to raise the rent by as much as 50 per cent over that of a new building. One can reasonably assume that the situation has not changed in 1982 and that the same figures apply, although they may have to be readjusted because of inflation.

Yesterday, the minister told me that he would reconsider the situation. I think, therefore, that we would be well advised to wait for these new findings, in order to understand better the costs involved. That is the reason why I support the Minister in his appeal of the decision of Treasury Board and I will wait for the results of the study of the total accommodation of the federal government within the National Capital Region, study which should be completed by this Fall.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as parliamentary secretary, I am very pleased to be able to answer my hon. colleague and to confirm what he just said, namely that, yesterday, the minister did indeed say that he would appeal a decision made recently by Treasury Board concerning the demolition of the Daly Building, and that he also was considering the feasibility of using the building for the benefit of the National Capital Region. The federal government has been using the Daly Building since 1918, and I would like to take this opportunity to confirm that, since then, the building was occupied without interruption by various federal departments until 1980 when the last federal tenants left the premises.

In 1977, the building was declared surplus to federal needs, because it no longer met present office standards. Since then, Mr. Speaker, the issue has been a very controversial one and has given rise to some very heated debate. In March 1981, Public Works Canada called for proposals from renovators with a view to using the Daly Building again. After due consideration, the Treasury Board ministers reached a decision regarding the future use of the building. As I said before, the Minister of Public Works is prepared to ask his colleagues to review their decision as you requested, in the light of an overall plan for accommodation in the National Capital Region. Furthermore, he intends to make a thorough study of the cost involved in using the building to accommodate federal offices. In this analysis, full consideration will be given to trends in the office building situation in Ottawa and to effective utilization of government resources.

In concluding, I wish to thank the member for Ottawa-Vanier who raised this question in the House. His abiding interest and continued efforts to improve the downtown area of the National Capital are well known. The Daly Building, and especially the building's prestigious location near the Parliament buildings, demands a serious planning approach. For many years, the member for Ottawa-Vanier has put forward excellent arguments in support of sound urban planning in the National Capital downtown area.

SOCIAL SECURITY—FUNDING FOR SERVICES. (B) CANADIAN MENTAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION MEETING

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to again bring to the attention of the government the fact that bad economic policy produces unemployment and bad economic policy produces stress for human beings. I would remind members of this Chamber that in December 1979 this House rejected a budget that would have created jobs, that would have reduced inflation, that would have produced more help for the poorest segment of our society. Instead, we have bad economic policy, increased unemployment and a financial crisis in many homes.

It is well known that social science literature is full of facts which indicate that when you create unemployment in society you create stress for people. That stress shows up in increased debt, in increased mental health breakdowns, in increased heart attacks, in increased alcoholism, in increased wife beating, and in increased child beating.

If we project on the basis of some of the best scientific literature, when we consider the 3 per cent increase in unemployment which has occurred in the last year, do you know what we are looking at in the year ahead? We are looking at something in the order of a 12 per cent increase in suicides, a 15 per cent increase in homicides, a 12 per cent increase in prison admissions and a 10 per cent increase in hospital admissions. Those people will be the social victims of our bad economic policy.

I have tried to bring those statistics to the attention of this government on more than one occasion, Mr. Speaker. The last time I had an opportunity, on June 14, I brought them to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during question period. Prior to that, statistics of this same kind were rejected by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) and by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), who comes from Windsor, Ontario, where there is evidence of those statistics right on the street. If he got out and visited the people in the riding he represents and talked to them, he would find those kinds of social consequences. That is all he would have to do.

The Minister of Labour yelled out that this was not true. I would like to bring to the attention of the House just three studies; the first being a Statistics Canada paper called "Health and Economic Activity" written by O. B. Adams. That kind of information is contained in that study.

Another study was conducted for the Minister of Labour. It is referred to in popular literature as the Carruthers Report. That kind of statistic is given there. Another one was conducted by the Canadian Council on Social Development. Its report was sent to every Member of Parliament in November 1980.

It is incredible to have to stand here, for the fourth of fifth time, to try to bring to the attention of this government the fact that there are social consequences. There is increased debt, increased homicide, increased suicide, increased alcoholism, increased wife and child beating, which is predictable from bad economic policy. People who are losing their jobs, who are losing their homes, are put under stress. Sometimes that stress is unbearable and these consequences flow from it.

I tried to bring these statistics to the attention of the Prime Minister on June 14. I said: "Mr. Prime Minister, when I see this new, marvellous budget, will there be increased funding for the social service sector, for hospitals, for prisons and for treatment facilities?" The Prime Minister said: "Watch, wait and see. Be patient."

• (2215)

We now have the budget, and the tragedy is that there is no increased funding for hospitals; there is no increased funding for prisons; there is no increased funding for social services. The government is creating victims but is not meeting its obligation to go even a little way toward helping those victims. That is a tragedy for the country and for the victims.

The only significant cut this government has made in its exorbitant spending up to this point is a cut out in transfer payments to the provinces. The provinces deliver these social services, yet each day we are seeing in our newspapers increased evidence that the money is not adequate to help the victims of the policy of this government.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will stand up tonight and make a commitment to increased funding for these groups.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, federal contributions to the provinces for health care are made under the established programs financing arrangements. Under these arrangements the federal government will contribute some $8.5 billion in 1982-83 in respect of three health-related programs: hospital insurance, medicare and extended health care. The formula on which these contributions is based contains an escalator which is derived from a three-year moving average of nominal gross national product. This escalator was chosen to ensure year-to-year stability of the growth of federal contributions.

As far as social services are concerned, the federal government is continuing to pick up 50 per cent of the provinces' cost under the Canada Assistance Plan. The program is open-ended and supports services to persons in need or likely to become in need. Because federal contributions &d4069;-1 are tied to provincial expenditures on the basis of a cost-sharing formula, federal payments rise automatically in line with provincial spending.

In terms of the hon. member's second question concerning the Canadian Mental Health Association meeting, it should be noted that although the Department of National Health and Welfare undertakes a number of joint activities with the CMHA, Department of National Health and Welfare officials were given no notice of the meeting to which the hon. member refers. The mental health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare contacted the CMHA and was informed that this meeting is a private meeting of an internal committee of the CMHA and is viewed by CMHA as a preliminary step toward defining the problem areas and identifying possible or desirable action.

It is perhaps worth noting that the Department of National Health and Welfare, primarily through its mental health division, has had a long-standing relationship with CMHA. In addition to the department's sustaining grant of $39,000 for head office administration, several joint projects have been undertaken between CMHA and the mental health division. These were supported by departmental funding. Examples of these are the production of parent education pamphlets, each advising parents on one particular behavioural problem in childhood and a national symposium on perspectives on the care of the longer-term mentally ill held in February, 1982. The proceedings of this latter symposium are expected to form the basis of a more detailed report on the care of the chronically psychiatrically ill in Canada. Finally, a CMHA proposal to promote and maintain mental health in the workplace is currently under review within the health promotion directorate of this branch.

• (2220)

In summary, excellent working relationships exist between Health and Welfare Canada and the Canadian Mental Health Association. Officers of the mental health division serve on a number of CMHA committees, though not on the committee to which the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has apparently referred.

Regarding the specific meeting in question, the department would be glad to receive any suggestions for possible action on preventive strategies to reduce mental health service demands, consequent to employment loss.

MEDICAL CARE—EXTRA BILLING BY PHYSICIANS—MINISTER'S POSITION. (B) FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on June 11 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) a question about extra billing by doctors. At that time I was after the minister for agreeing with provincial health ministers to control extra billing rather than eliminating it, a position which in my view meant she was backing down from her previous views on extra billing.

On July 14 I asked the minister what she intended to do about lay-offs in health care services in Nova Scotia and the introduction of user fees in the hospitals of that province.

On both those occasions I tried to make the point that the Minister of National Health and Welfare seriously damaged her bargaining power with the provinces when she allowed the reduction in treasury transfer payments to the provinces proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and which took effect when the established programs financing arrangements were pushed through in the spring of this year. I said then, as I say now, that it will be difficult to bargain on the one hand for clarified, tougher and enforceable national standards for medicare when, on the other hand, payments to provincial governments are being reduced.

Nevertheless, in spite of the regrettable mistake of this spring, I wish the minister well in her efforts to bring in, with provincial approval, a new Canada health care act by next year. This would consolidate all existing legislation and incorporate new ways to maintain and strengthen the principles and quality of medicare. It will not be easy to do this when there are so many Conservative governments that are, at heart, actually hostile to medicare for long-standing ideological reasons.

If I have time, I should like to address another related matter. Recently, the Canadian Medical Association commenced a study on the rationalization of health care, claiming that under-funding is causing doctors to have to make life and death decisions, and that some way will have to be found to decide who will receive treatment and who will not. This is a vicious tactic by the doctors and shows how low their leaders are prepared to stoop. It is embarrassing I am sure, to the many fine, dedicated physicians who still live and work in Canada.

The question of rationalization will not go away. It must be dealt with. Before medicare, the marketplace, tempered by the discretion of altruistic doctors, rationalized health care in this country. Medicare was intended to overcome this problem and it did. As long as there was economic growth and abundant funding, there were no great structural problems. Now that we are in the era of the shrinking economic pie, however, the principles of medicare are being tested.

The response of some, like the Canadian Medical Association, has been to argue for the reintroduction of private, user-based funding which will mean a return to rationalization by the marketplace. Those of us who favour single-source public sector funding will have to do more than just dig in against private funding mechanisms. We will have to find a way to make sure that health care is not rationalized by politics, per se, by federal provincial disputes over funding and by economic policy in general. Perhaps we will have to find a way to separate health funding from the raising of general revenue by governments, so that people can support increased health funding without giving up their opposition to government spending policies in general. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, the pressure to reintroduce private money into our underfunded system will become unbearable, and people will finally rebel against the rationalization of health care, and thus their very lives, by the ministers of finance of the country.

This problem must be faced and solved. It must be faced and solved by pro-medicare people, or the anti-medicare people, of whom there are more than meets the eye, will eventually win the day. I invite the minister to respond to these observations.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member rushing his question. He knows I only have a few minutes and that I read slowly, so that helps me. I also appreciate your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

In reply to the hon. member's question, the position of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) with respect to extra billing is well known. It has been the goal and belief of the minister, reinforced and supported by the views expressed by Mr. Justice Hall and the majority of the members of the parliamentary task force on federal fiscal arrangements, that extra billing should be eliminated. The way to achieve this goal is through the co-operation of the provincial governments. As you know, the division of responsibilities under the Constitution does not permit the federal government to unilaterally legislate on the delivery of personal health care. Any actions taken by the federal government must not be regulatory in matters falling within provincial jurisdictions. We were able to implement national health insurance programs through provincial co-operation. Therefore, in order to maintain these programs, it is essential that the conditions for the federal contributions be as fully acceptable as possible to provincial governments. The federal government wishes to strengthen national Medicare, not take any action which will weaken or destroy it.

• (2225)

At the May 26, 1982, federal-provincial conference, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) expressed her goal in her opening statement as follows: "I would hope that all of us can agree that we must take steps to eliminate extra billing." It was the minister's hope that all provincial ministers of health would be prepared to work towards the elimination of this practice. As it happened, this was not the case. They did agree, however, that control of extra billing must be addressed in order to protect accessibility.

In this regard, the Minister of National Health and Welfare was certainly successful in moving the provinces closer to the federal government's view, in that for the first time all provincial ministers are in agreement that extra billing is a problem which could be a threat to medicare, and its control is essential. The question of extra billing is now one that will be addressed. Controlling it will be part of program conditions aimed at ensuring that medicare is accessible. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is pleased with, and enthusiastic about, the demonstrated determination of the provincial ministers of health to approach upcoming discussions with a spirit of openness and co-operation. Proposals made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare are to be discussed at the ministerial and official level prior to the next conference of federal and provincial ministers, presently envisaged for this fall. These discussions are already under way. A significant step forward has been taken toward strengthening medicare for all Canadians. I hope this answer will satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

ALBERTA INVESTMENT IN CONSTRUCTION OF PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN TERMINAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, whereas Premier Lougheed of Alberta has come forward with extra loans to the consortium building the Prince Rupert grain terminal, ensuring that the project will go ahead as planned, whereas the proposed terminal would have been scrapped without this increased funding, and whereas the terminal will become an integral part of the grain handling system of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House commends Mr. Lougheed's action, which shows the type of political and economic leadership at the provincial level that is sorely lacking at the federal level.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TOURISM

NEED FOR MORE PROMOTION IN UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. At a value of less than 80 per cent of the American dollar, the low Canadian dollar should be drawing record numbers of American tourists to our beautiful country but, instead, travel to Canada by Americans this summer has dropped badly, up to 30 per cent in some areas. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this House demands that the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism do everything in his power to let Americans know what a bargain it is to holiday in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONDURAS—INVOLVEMENT WITH NEIGHBOURING COUNTRIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on the urgent matter of deterioration of peace and international order. Present deliberations by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean are testimony to the fact that this House, and Canadians, are critically concerned about events in that part of the world. Honduran armed forces and mercenary involvement in two neighbouring countries, El Salvador and Nicaragua, has now been made clear. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That this House and the Canadian government protest growing military assistance by Honduras to El Salvador, continuing Honduran armed forces harassment of border area refugees, and Honduran based mercenary attacks on Nicaragua; and that Canada review the status of Honduras as our targeted country in Central America for foreign aid.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

DUPLICATION OF SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, bearing in mind the desire of most Canadians to have the federal government reduce its deficit, now accumulated to a total of $135 billion, a deficit which is known to create an unacceptably high level of taxation, both direct and indirect, as demonstrated by the fact that when Canadians purchase $15 worth of gasoline they pay only $5 for gas and a whopping $10 in taxes, and in light of the study commissioned by the western provincial governments which identified 100 areas where duplication exists in federal and provincial services, and the western premiers' task force on constitutional trends third report, which identifies nine areas of duplication which should receive immediate action for efficiency, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House recommends that an all-party parliamentary committee be struck to consider the suggestions of the western premiers with respect to duplication of services by government and that that committee report to Parliament in the fall of 1982 with the objective of pointing out where the Government of Canada, via co-operation, can save taxpayers' dollars.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CALL FOR CONTROL OF GOVERNMENT SPENDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, in view of the nearly 10,000 additional industrial lay-offs reported today by the Canadian Press, together with the announced 60 per cent increase in farm bankruptcies, and in view of the forecast of failure by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) of the government's restraint program because, as he put it, "Canadians are rather spoiled," I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House demands that the call by the Canadian Federation of Labour and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for the federal government to control its spending be heeded by this spoiler of people's dreams, the Liberal Government of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

FUTURE USE OF MIRABEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the review carried out by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and his officials respecting the plight of Mirabel Airport has apparently concluded that forced transfers of passenger flights to Mirabel would be ludicrous and damaging to the air transport industry. There is now a report that cargo operations will be diverted to Mirabel. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

• (1110)

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to recognize the errors of his Liberal predecessors and find some use for Mirabel that will not continue to inflict damage on the Canadian air transport industry and its users.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENSIONS

CALL FOR INCREASE IN PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives joined the growing number of organizations and individual Canadians who are calling for much needed reform of our public pension system as being the best way to help our elderly, many of whom are living in dire poverty. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House calls on the government to increase immediately benefits provided under the Old Age Security Act to bring all seniors above the poverty level, and raise benefits under the Canada Pension Plan to 50 per cent of the average industrial wage, and further, that the government be directed to stop attempting to destroy the universality aspect of the old age security system as witnessed by the recent decision to cap cost of living indexation of this plan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

STUDY OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Department of Justice has recently done a study on the aboriginal rights provisions in the new Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which apparently suggests that any special treatment according to native peoples would discriminate against non-natives, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this study be made available to Members of Parliament and native people in order that they can better prepare for the coming constitutional conference.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

LAKE ERIE ICE BOOM PLACEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, as a result of a resolution passed by the town of Fort Erie, and in light of the fact that the ice boom placed in Lake Erie at the mouth of the Niagara River for several years has resulted in lower temperatures in Fort Erie, Fort Colborne, and Wainfleet, a later planting and growing season, additional heating bills, and a hampering of the shipping industry in the area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That the Canadian government, through its spokesmen on the International Joint Commission, reject the future placing of the ice boom in Lake Erie at the mouth of the Niagara River.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG SOUTHEAST ASIAN REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, unemployment amongst the Indo-Chinese boat people has reached 25 per cent across Canada, while in Toronto estimates are that only 25 per cent have been able to find full-time employment. These southeast Asian refugees have a difficult time in the job market because of an inability to speak English, and because they cannot afford to take training to improve their skills or gain trades certification. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration to take immediate action to provide jobs, language and trade training so these refugees are no longer forced to lose face and can be the contributors to society that they strongly desire to be.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF SCHOOL SUPPLIES FOR STUDENTS LIVING OFF RESERVE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has arbitrarily and unilaterally cut off financial assistance for instructional supplies for elementary and secondary school children of treaty Indians who live off reserve in Alberta. This attack on the treaty rights of indigenous peoples is in direct opposition to the Government of Canada's legal obligation to uphold its treaty commitments. Approximately 20 per cent of Alberta treaty Indians are forced to live off reserve because of the lack of viable economic development activity within the reserves. Whereas the fully sanctioned rights of treaty Indians are not to be denied because of place of residence, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this directive be immediately withdrawn and that the treaty Indian students of Alberta be assured that the right to education will be respected, and further, that this government recommit itself to meaningful dialogue with the native peoples of Canada, reject unilateral action, and uphold the recently endorsed Charter of Rights.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the first six months of this year compared to last year farm bankruptcies in Quebec are up 243 per cent, 533 per cent in Manitoba, and over 60 per cent in Canada as a whole. Since farmers are facing a 17 per cent decrease in their net income this year over last—we do not even have the figures for forced farm liquidations—can the minister state that his present economic policies, which may help only 600 of the over 300,000 farmers in Canada, are adequate to meet our food production requirements?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe the hon. member will have to make up his own mind on that subject. In my view the policies put in place in the budget are essential to bring about recovery in the Canadian economy. The way to succeed, the way to improve the situation, is to make the difficult changeover from the 12 per cent society we are presently in to a 6 per cent society. That is the basic approach of the government, and I believe it will lead to success. I hope the hon. member will find that approach satisfying and will join the growing number of Canadians who now see the justification for the approach taken by the government.

Mr. Schellenberger: That is little comfort to the hundreds and hundreds of farmers being forced off their farms by high interest rates, taxes, and product prices far below the cost of production.

REQUEST FOR INTEREST RATE RELIEF

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, bearing in mind that the average age of Canadian farmers is in excess of 50 years, and noting that the majority of bankruptcies are the young farmers of this nation who are attempting to put into practice the most advanced technical methods in the field of agriculture, what real assurances can the Minister of Finance give this country that there will be people to take over from the older farmers who are retiring? Why will he not act quickly to bring about some real interest rate relief for this sector, and move in the farm fuel tax area? Can he not give these young farmers some hope?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will recall that in the budget there is additional support for farmers facing financial difficulty, and a program will be administered through the Farm Credit Corporation which will substantially reduce the interest costs of farmers. That is a very important step taken in the budget.

The hon. member is quite right in underlining the importance of bringing down interest rates, and I am encouraged by the report yesterday that the bank rate and the prime rate have both decreased, in combination with a strengthening of the Canadian dollar. Both those trends justify the policy course established by the government in the recent budget.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—FUTURE COSTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given that the current price of wheat, barley and oilseeds in Canada is far below the cost of production and that there are real doubts that the world will have the ability to pay much more in the near future, can the minister assure us that he has the funds available from the Minister of Finance for his Crow rate package in the fall, or are we to believe the memo which has recently been released? Madam Speaker, is this whole process doomed to place farmers in an even more tenuous financial position in the future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is aware, he is saying it now, that the world price of grain has gone down. But my hon. friend is also aware that the quantity of Canadian exports has been going up tremendously. As he knows, this year Canada is going to hit all-time export records in almost all types of grain. So there is somewhat of a compensation there of quantity for price.

• (1120)

On the subject of the availability of funds for the western transportation exercise that we are now in, the Minister of Finance has assigned $1.35 billion on top of an existing $1.8 billion in the next four years. That is money available now. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. McKnight: Is this the western development fund?

Mr. Pepin: Consequently, planning for western rail transportation is going full steam ahead.

AGRICULTURE

TAX ON FUEL USED IN FOOD PRODUCTION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. On January 31, 1980, during the last election campaign, the Minister of Agriculture, in a speech in Alvinston, Ontario, stated the following:

> Fuels used in farm production will be exempt from any excise tax and a special price structure established.

What happened to that price structure? Why has the minister not been able to convince his cabinet colleagues to relieve the farmers of Canada from the federal rip-off of 60 cents a gallon on the price of farm fuel, constituting some 40 per cent of the price? If the minister is not able to convince his cabinet colleagues to fulfil his election promise, why does he not do the honourable thing and resign?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member and some of his colleagues make great sport out of what the price of fuel is for farmers producing food products in Canada.

Miss MacDonald: It isn't funny.

Mr. Whelan: When we are making this accusation we are insinuating that farmers we compete with are paying less for fuel. Let us put some of the facts on record. Apparently farmers in P.E.I. pay 34.5 cents per litre and in Maine they pay 32.6 cents per litre. We can go on down the list. You will find in comparing most of the states in the U.S.A., the western states and the eastern states, with the provinces, that there is not much difference in what the farmers are actually paying for fuel. We would all like to see the amount we are paying for fuel less than it is. We all know that the whole energy program is a Canadian program, and I am all for it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DOFASCO ANNOUNCEMENT OF FALL LAY-OFFS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. We were all shocked at the announcement by Dofasco that 2,100 employees will receive indefinite lay-off notices to be effective in October and November, and that, if there is not a turnaround in the economy, a second wave of lay-offs may be necessary.

Dofasco is one of the most stable employers on this continent, with good productivity levels and high morale. In fact its advertisements state "its strength is people". Inasmuch as the thrust of the budget is restraint, which will have little immediate effect on the market supplied by Dofasco, can the minister advise whether he can see any options open to the government that will hold off the second wave of lay-offs suggested by Dofasco?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is aware of the budget provisions. What I know about the situation is that these lay-offs are not to take place for some time, that Dofasco has all the good assets which the hon. member has mentioned, and because of that it has been operating close to capacity. It is projecting these lay-offs because of a decline in economic activity and because of the recession. I assure the hon. member that the quickest way to assist Dofasco and other firms is to succeed in reducing inflation in this country and to put ourselves on the road to recovery by reducing the rate of inflation from close to 12 per cent to 6 per cent. I enlist the hon. member's support in that campaign in the months ahead.

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. The minister knows that Dofasco feeds the automotive industry, the heavy transportation industry, and the appliance and housing industries. We cannot seem to get straight back-to-back answers from the minister responsible for housing and the Prime Minister on the white paper on mortgage policy. The appliance industry is tied directly to housing starts. The automobile industry is not operating at anywhere near capacity, and the downturn in heavy transportation can be linked directly to the national energy policy.

• (1125)

Will the minister assure the House that he will again, on an urgent basis, examine the capital cost allowance provisions in the budget to see whether they can be returned to the pre-November 12, 1981, status, and to see whether a new form of financial instrument can be put in place to encourage investment in industry so that some hope for an upturn can be seen?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member raised two points. One has to do with the capital cost allowance. It is true that in the budget of last November the capital cost allowance was changed, not to increase the total liabilities of any firm under the tax law but to advance those payments. The change was made basically to assist in the reduction of the deficit. Hon. members have asked in the intervening time to go back, as the hon. member repeated today, to the pre-existing situation. If I had accepted that advice I would have added another $1 billion and I thought that would not be acceptable to members of the Conservative Party who are deploring the already large deficit which we have at the present time.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ACTION ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I also want to ask the Minister of Finance a question related in many ways to the questions just asked. He will be aware that in the announcement by Dofasco it indicated that it was not its overseas or out-of-the-country sales that were the problem primarily, that it was its domestic sales which had dropped off so dramatically that the company was now faced with, or at least was announcing the lay-off of almost 20 per cent of its work force.

In view of these facts, along with the fact that the Steel Company of Canada has 2,600 people unemployed who would normally be working, and Algoma has announced that 2,600 people will be laid off within the next few weeks who should be working—all of which are related directly to the fact that consumers in Canada cannot afford to buy the products of Canadian manufacturers—will the Minister of Finance move to bring down interest rates to a level which will allow consumers to purchase? Will he place quotas on the importation of automobiles from offshore in order that Canadian automobile manufacturers can get back on track and get their share of the market re-established? Will he make a decision in favour of Canadians, for once in his life, and forget about the problems of other countries?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asked that we take action to reduce interest rates. We have taken action; we have taken direct action to reduce the rate of inflation. If we can get the rate of inflation down to 6 per cent, as we propose to do with the assistance of the main economic factors in the economy, then I assure the hon. member that interest rates will come down. They will not come down in the way we want until we get the rate of inflation down. There is no magic wand which can be waved to bring down interest rates. The only group in the country which has that naive idea is the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Deans: The Minister of Finance talks a lot of rubbish. He knows full well that interest rates in the United States are running in the mid-teens, while inflation is reported to be down around 5 per cent, 6 per cent or 7 per cent. I say to the Minister of Finance that that kind of argument just will not wash, that interest rates sit by themselves in isolation and they do not necessarily bring about any assistance to the inflationary spiral.

• (1130)

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO RESTORE DOMESTIC MARKETS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, we have unemployment on the east coast. We have major unemployment in Quebec. We have unemployment in the Province of Ontario the likes of which we have not seen since the Depression. We have 5,500 out of 6,000 woodworkers in Port Alberni laid off and not likely to return to work. How long must the people of Canada wait for this government to take action to re-establish a consumer marketplace and therefore re-establish the manufacturing sector?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know of anyone in the country any more who is not convinced that there is a direct relationship between interest rates and inflation. The hon. member has not made that connection. I met with the representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress some time ago who tabled some suggestions in which they said that interest rates should not be more than 2 per cent above the rate of inflation, thereby acknowledging that there is a direct link between the rate of inflation and interest rates.

Mr. Blackburn: How about the U.S.?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member shouts about the U.S. Let me ask him to look at West Germany, Japan, and Switzerland. All of these countries have much lower rates of interest than Canada because they have much lower rates of inflation. That is the fact.

SHIPBUILDING

PLACEMENT OF ORDERS IN JAPAN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I ask him to look at Canada. Is the minister aware that yesterday the Government of British Columbia gave approval to an LNG project, a $3 billion liquid natural gas plant on the west coast to be built by Dome Petroleum, and that five ships will be used? They will be built in Japan. Is the minister aware of this quote from Mr. van der Linden who is the project manager for Dome, who said:

> Initially, we were looking at construction in a Canadian shipyard. That is not entirely out of the question, but there seems to be very little interest by the Canadian and B.C. governments.

We are not looking for a magic wand, but would the minister explain to the House why, in this concrete example of where we could use Canadian steel to build Canadian ships, are he and the government not interested? What has happened to the government's industrial strategy and job-creation strategy of creating jobs from spin-offs of megaprojects? This is a concrete example. No magic wand is needed for the minister to answer that.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, to begin, I am somewhat surprised at the hon. member criticizing a very important announcement that would provide major economic development in British Columbia. He is obviously not interested in supporting those kinds of initiatives that will bring a major degree of economic activity to his own province. I do not know what the purpose of this question is.

Mr. Waddell: What about the ships and the steel?

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that we have negotiated a significant hiring program for Canadians in the shipbuilding and marine industry, under the Canadian oil and gas administration and under our manpower planning agreements.

An hon. Member: What about the ships?

Mr. Axworthy: We have been able to negotiate those agreements in the past year to provide additional job opportunities for Canadians in those industries under the administration of this government, which clearly demonstrates our interest in employing Canadians.

MEDICAL CARE

USE OF HEROIN IN TREATMENT OF TERMINALLY ILL PATIENTS

Mr. Al MacBain (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am advised that the minister met this morning with Dr. Kenneth Walker of Niagara Falls to discuss the question of the possible use of heroin by the medical profession in the treatment of terminally ill patients. I would be pleased if the minister would inform the House of the outcome of that meeting.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, in most countries of the world heroin, for the time being, is not permitted for medical use further to a resolution, which is about 30 years old, of the World Health Organization. Therefore, in the name of Canada, we will refer that matter and the excellent report of the Cancer Society on the use of heroin for medical treatment to the World Health Organization, and we will refer other work, such as a monograph, to Canadian doctors to make sure they are aware of the equivalent existing drugs to alleviate pain.

THE ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT ON RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Transport is quoted as saying that he does not think that the government's restraint program to reduce inflation to 6 per cent can work. Does the Minister of Finance share the views of the Minister of Transport?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, I share the views of the Minister of Transport, but they are not the views that have been quoted by the hon. member as the views of the Minister of Transport.

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT RATES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, if the restraint program is to work one thing that has to apply is credibility. That seems to be the factor which is lacking with this government, that Canadians just do not believe what the government is saying. The answer which the Minister of Finance just gave does not assure Canadians that that difficulty between the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport has been resolved. With respect to credibility, if the 6 per cent restraint program is to work then business leaders, labour leaders and Canadians generally are saying that the government as well—

Mr. Chénier: You do not want it to work, eh?

Mr. Epp: If you want to speak, maybe you will get a chance later.

They are saying that the government as well should hold the user fees which it charges for services to 6 per cent. Could the government indicate why it is raising rents, for example, in Pinawa at Whiteshell Atomic Research Housing by 15 per cent, by letter, a day after the budget?

I made it very clear in the budget speech, but hon. members have tended to overlook that sentence which stated that the government will monitor the price decisions of the regulatory agencies within its jurisdiction and take appropriate action where exceptional increases cannot be justified. Now, the hon. member has referred to the alleged rental increases by Canada Mortgage and Housing. That was dealt with yesterday by the minister responsible for housing. I believe the hon. member ought to continue his interrogation of that minister because I found his answers very effective as I read them this morning in Hansard. I would hesitate to reach his level of competence in answering questions. But I would say to the hon. member—I think it is important to say so—that it was stated in the budget that there were exceptional cases where increases might be justified. Among these exceptional cases that I would include would be the need to control the deficit and the necessity of controlling government expenditures. I do not think that he would espouse the idea that we should remove a justified increase in certain cases—I emphasize the word "justified"—from the person who is using that service and transfer the burden to the general taxpayer through an increase in taxes. That is one of the principles which will be used in defining these exemptions to which I have referred in the statement.

MEDICAL CARE

USE OF HEROIN AS PAIN KILLER—SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and it is supplementary to that put to her by the hon. member for Niagara Falls. As the minister knows, there is a division of opinion in the medical profession on the use of heroin and its effectiveness as a pain killer for patients who are terminally ill, the victims of cancer or other dreadful diseases. There is also a division in the House, I am sure, but from information which I am prepared to give to the minister there seems to be considerable support among the general public for the proposition that it be used as a pain killer, especially in the treatment of these patients.

• (1140)

Given this division of opinion, even in the medical profession, would the minister consider permitting the appropriate standing committee of this House, as one possible instrument, to look at the proposition so that the debate on the matter could be opened to the public and so that those organizations and groups, including the medical profession, which have some views on the matter, could deal with the question? I ask the question of the minister because I would like the debate to be a public and an open one, and it seems that such a committee might be a vehicle. Would she at least consider that?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, I will, Madam Speaker, although I must underline the deep emotions surrounding the issue of the use or rejection of heroin. I think we may first want to address the question within the scientific community on the premise that suffering Canadians should have access to the complete spectrum of choices involving relief from pain. I would be pleased to hear the views of hon. members as to the premise that I am offering. At this stage I do not think we want to enter into public debate because we may settle the issue within the medical community, but I will consider the option and discuss it with hon. members.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—CONDUCT OF GILSON NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given the fact that a leaked cabinet memorandum dated last January, dealing with western rail transportation, bears a strong resemblance to the recommendations made in the report on western grain transportation conducted by Dr. J. C. Gilson, could the minister assure the House that the consulting process conducted by Dr. Gilson and now in the hands of his ministry is a legitimate "hands off" one and is not being stage managed by the same Ministry of Transport officials who wrote the cabinet document in the first place? In light of that document, how can the minister assure us that the Gilson process was not merely a matter of Dr. Gilson playing Charlie McCarthy to the ministry's Edgar Bergen?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have just returned from a tour of the west. If my hon. friend wants to consult with those who are taking part in the decision-making process on how to implement the Western Development Fund with respect to western rail transportation, he will not find many people who will not say that there have been great changes since we started this exercise. As a matter of fact, there have been tremendous changes. If my hon. friend wants to compare the leaked document to which he is referring with the decision of cabinet as announced in Winnipeg on February 8, with the recommendation of Gilson on a number of subjects, he will come to the conclusion that there have been many changes as we have gone through the process. However, the subject is the same, so there are bound to be some resemblances.

REQUEST FOR FARMERS' REFERENDUM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Can the minister go a step further and unequivocally state that this government has not arrived at a plan or decision with regard to the Crow rate and the action that will be taken? Will he again reiterate the statements made by the Prime Minister several months ago that no final decision will be taken without reference to all the farmers of western Canada and the people who will be directly affected by any proposed change? Will there be a referendum, or some reference to the producers involved?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am very sadly surprised that my hon. friend, who is an expert in this area, does not yet understand what is going on. In February, in Winnipeg, I announced on behalf of the government that there were a number of "principles" which the government held dear, one of them was that the Crow rate should be replaced by a statutory framework, et cetera, et cetera—as the Minister of Agriculture would say. At that time we also said there were a number of "issues"; for example, we asked, "to whom should the payments be made"; are variable rates acceptable or not"; what should be the statutory framework"; all issues on which the government sought the views of the interested parties. The views of the interested parties have been formulated through the Gilson recommendations. There are still ongoing discussions on this subject, and the government will act on the final results of these discussions. That is the process, which is highly democratic. My hon. friend should hold it in great admiration.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS TO MAKE MIRABEL PROFITABLE

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister inform the House whether, as usually well informed sources have it, his officials have recommended that one of the runways should be closed to make Mirabel a going concern. If so, which one is to be closed, the landing or take off runway? And if this is not the case, how does the Minister intend to make Mirabel a profitable enterprise?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the runway issue is only one of the subjects now being discussed in the cabinet committee on the future of Mirabel. Today, I am unable to confirm or deny rumours in this respect, but I believe cabinet is going to make a decision on this question very shortly and that the usual announcement will be made.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON TAXIS AND TELEGRAMS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week the Prime Minister refused a request by my leader that a parliamentary committee be struck to investigate ways of cutting fat from government spending. In view of the fact that since that time figures have been released showing that between March of 1980, and June of 1981, the government spent some $7,000 a day on taxis and over $275,000 a day on telegrams and other message services, will the Prime Minister reconsider his decision so that Parliament can act by showing restraint instead of simply preaching it to other Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I understand that the President of the Treasury

Board has undertaken to look into any such alleged abuses which are brought forward. I am confident that if any money can be saved in any of those areas, he will see that it is done.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is presiding over a government which, this year, is spending the taxpayers' money at the rate of $170,000 a minute, yet he feels that Parliament has no role to play in cutting the fat out of government spending.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT EXPENDITURES ON TAXIS AND TELEGRAMS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport—if I could have his attention. In view of the fact that in the same period, between March, 1980 and June, 1981, his department was the big spender for both taxis and telegrams, and other message services, spending fully some $422,219 on taxis and some $7,119,711 on telegrams and message services, how could he justify this sort of expenditure at a time when he was planning to cut back public transportation services on the grounds that he did not have enough funds?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not familiar, of course, with the details.

Mr. Nielsen: Why not?

Mr. Pepin: I will look into the matter immediately. However, the Department of Transport is a big one. There are 23,000 employees from coast to coast.

Miss MacDonald: Do they all take taxis?

Mr. Pepin: There are many people wanting immediate information and decisions on rates, tariffs, accidents and so forth. Therefore, it is justified that the Department of Transport, which is in the transportation business, should have a high communications account.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA REGIONAL OFFICE—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In a press story in the Kelowna Courier, the office of the minister announced a restricted, internal, peek-a-boo look at only one aspect of the very serious issues which prompted the call by the House standing committee for a full and independent inquiry into affairs of the British Columbia regional office and of the Westbank Indian Band. Madam Speaker, I ask the minister how is it possible to put such a low valuation on the work and the integrity of a committee of this House. How can it possibly be suggested that this cop-out of an in-house review is a reasonable undertaking of the minister's responsibility to those who have addressed serious allegations to him directly?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, ever since the standing committee made that recommendation I have received representations from the hon. member, and I have received representations from many of his colleagues in the House of Commons with respect to this issue. I have made available senior officials of my department, both to the hon. member and to other hon. members of the official opposition. Not once has the hon. member or anyone else turned over any names of those to whom they are directing their allegations. They have not given me one document in writing, of any kind, substantiating any type of misconduct on the part of officials. After months of nothing but innuendoes of the most disgraceful kind, they have failed to supply me with one iota of evidence.

Madam Speaker, may I say that the proper course for the hon. member and his colleagues to take, if they have some evidence, is to turn it over to the RCMP, if they feel that they have got some evidence of misconduct. That is what the RCMP is for, and that is what the responsibility of the hon. member is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Once and for all, if he is not prepared to take that type of action, would he cease and desist from these allegations for which he is not prepared to offer any substance whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I suggest to the hon. minister that that is a dramatic cop-out. It is a falsehood. I have provided many—

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Nielsen: Get on with it.

Mr. King: All right, I will get on with it.

Madam Speaker: That is right. Now get on with the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. King: Madam Speaker, I would ask the minister this; in view of the names and information that I have provided to him, and that others have provided to him, when will he be willing to take straightforward steps to address the issues which many persons have brought to him directly, and which prompted the standing committee to urge the minister to set up an independent inquiry? When is he going to be willing to do something that will remove the stigma of cover-up from his department?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, it is precisely because I would be irresponsible if I did anything other than what I am doing. If the hon. member is not prepared to back up in any substantive way his allegations, and if he continues to resort to innuendoes, I would be irresponsible if I were to appoint some type of independent inquiry which would be nothing but a witchhunt, to which the hon. member would continue to make innuendoes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —but he would not be prepared to offer any assistance. I again challenge him to take his allegations of misconduct to the RCMP, if he has them.

Mr. Siddon: You take them to the RCMP.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Or, if he will give them to me, I will turn them over to the RCMP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, despite the yellings from some of those McCarthyites over there, I just want to—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, order. I will have to whistle to stop everybody from yelling. Order.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, I have appointed my Assistant Deputy Minister, Mr. Goodwin, together with senior officials of my department—

Mr. Nielsen: That will be independent!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —to look into the two letters that I have received alleging misconduct against the chief and band council involved, as well as any other matters brought to the attention of my Assistant Deputy Minister that any member here wishes to bring to his attention. The hon. members already met with my deputy yesterday. If they will now turn over to this special task force under Mr. Goodwin any information they have, he will have a complete investigation made and report to me within a month.

An hon. Member: It will be thorough?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, it will be a thorough review, done by senior officials of my department, whose integrity—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A witchhunt?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No, it is quite different. That is precisely the point, Madam Speaker. To have senior officials of my department conduct a review of allegations that members of the opposition make is one thing; that is not a witchhunt. To do it in the irresponsible way the opposition is suggesting, is. That is the difference. It is too bad they cannot appreciate the distinction.

LEGAL ACTION INVOLVING TEMAGAMI BAND—RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He knows that the Temagani Band is the only group of Ontario Indians not covered by treaty. Their aboriginal rights are still intact. At present they have a federal land claim and are also involved in a court action with the Ontario government. Why has the federal government not recognized that the Temagami have a comprehensive rather than a specific land claim?

Also, why has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development released confidential documents of the Temagami Band to the Ontario government, instead of honouring its trust obligation to keep these documents confidential unless there is a court order to release them?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, inasmuch as this matter, as the hon. member himself has just indicated, is before the courts, it would be inappropriate for me to comment further. I agree with the hon. member that it is a very significant question of law. Whatever documents we have turned over or made available through the court process, have been turned over as a result of legal advice I received from independent law officers of the Crown.

MINES AND MINING

LAY-OFFS IN NORTHERN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday Sherritt Gordon, which has already laid off one third of its work force permanently at Lynn Lake and Leaf Rapids, announced that it would be extending its summer lay-offs by another eight weeks in those two communities. Since Sherritt Gordon is joined by all the other mining companies in northern Manitoba in having lay-offs occurring, I am wondering what one step the Minister of Finance is going to take to get those miners back to work?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking me for a step to bring the miners back to work. I hope he understands that the situation is a little more complicated than one that can be solved by taking a single step. The mineral industry is in trouble, because of a recession that is world-wide and a recession that is being experienced very deeply in this country. It is obvious to me that it is impossible for the Government of Canada to ensure that the production of each and every plant in the country is maintained when markets throughout the world are either weak or have disappeared. The Government of Canada does not have the resources to stockpile every product at a time of deep recession. Surely the hon. member understands that, and knows that the surest way to assist every worker and every industry in the country is to take the very big step of providing a way to ensure economic recovery in the country as a whole.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF EAST COAST OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question concerning exploration and development of east coast energy resources which I would like to address to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I hope the Prime Minister will take a personal interest in the plight of Nova Scotians who face drastic unemployment and whose hope for the future is the development of offshore resources.

Recently the executive vice-president of Petro-Canada, Mr. Joel Bell, accused Mobil Oil, the major operator on the east coast, of corporate foot-dragging and not getting along with the work of developing those resources. Will the Prime Minister indicate whether he is satisfied with the pace of development and, if he is not satisfied, will he take steps through his cabinet sources to see that development is accelerated so that there will be jobs created for Nova Scotians and others on the east coast?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I take this question as a representation into which I will, of course, look in consultation with the minister. I have utmost confidence in Petro-Canada and in Mr. Joel Bell. I know that is not universally the case on the other side of this House, but I can assure the hon. member that, as far as Petro-Canada is concerned, it can be relied upon to do what is best for the country and for Nova Scotia.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Thursday, July 15, 1982, and that he finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Order as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PAPROSKI—ALLEGED TERM USED BY MR. TRUDEAU

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would like to know what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) called me, whether it was a frog or a fraud. Whatever it was, I would like him to withdraw it.

Madam Speaker: Hon. members are not required to withdraw language in the House unless it is considered to be unparliamentary. If the hon. member does not know which of those two words have been addressed to him, he can hardly have a question of privilege. Perhaps he would like to look at Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Paproski: I think they are both unparliamentary. Shame on the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) is offended by the term used by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in referring to him, perhaps he will recall that Tuesday evening, he himself said—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Edmonton North was not accepted by the Chair, so it is obvious that there is no point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CROSBY—PETRO-CANADA HIRINGS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who is in the House, has expressed great faith in Petro-Canada. I want him to know that Petro-Canada recently hired 16 Norwegian and French workers contrary to the laws of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order.

PETITION

MR. TAYLOR—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Progressive Conservative members for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) and Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) join with me in presenting a petition on behalf of some 436 Canadians from the province of British Columbia, including the areas of Ashcroft, Cache Creek, Williams Lake, Clinton, Kelowna, Kamloops and others, and some from the province of Alberta. This list includes areas represented by NDP members, and their constituents have sent me the petitions because the NDP supports gun control.

The petitioners oppose the passing of Bill C-451 for many reasons, including the following: the bill does not stop a criminal from obtaining a gun; the administration of this bill, if it passes, would create another bureaucracy; and it would make all citizens who legitimately own and use guns second-class and third-class citizens.

It is the inherited right of Canadians to possess guns, as long as the firearms are used in a proper and responsible way. No Canadian government has the right to confiscate all guns, as this is the action of a police state.

We urge hon. members to refuse to pass this bill.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask that this petition be checked very carefully for accuracy. It is my understanding that there is a statement contained in that petition referring to the NDP that is blatantly inaccurate.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The reference to support by the New Democratic Party of Bill C-451 is absolutely false. Could you check that again?

Madam Speaker: Order. Petitions cannot be debated before they are read.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the hon. members should tell their constituents. They are the ones who told me.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I wish to attempt to put a question of privilege before you and to ask for some clarification from you. I feel that my rights as a member of this House have been abridged and seriously harmed because of a comment made by an hon. member. Can Your Honour assure me that the petition presented by the hon. member for Bow River will not come before this House? It is wrong in its content. I think the hon. member presented that petition in a way which should not be permitted. We are clearly on the record as being on the other side of that. Would Your Honour give me the assurance that that petition will not come forward in its present form?

Madam Speaker: The petition has been presented to the House. What will happen now is that the Clerk of Petitions will look at it and examine it as to form. The Clerk of Petitions will give an opinion as to the form of the petition only. Debate on the petition is another matter. That can occur much later, if it is read.

Hon. Steven E. His wife Stella is with him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am sure this person is very welcome in the House of Commons, but only the Speaker may recognize visitors in the gallery.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,686, 3,286, 3,370, 4,112 and 4,212.

[Text]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON LIQUOR

Question No. 2,686—Mr. Beatty:

From March 1, 1980 to May 31, 1981, what amount was spent by the government to purchase liquor?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Records kept in accordance with Treasury Board Directive do not separate the cost of liquor and food. In all occasions where hospitality was extended and liquor was served, cost was combined with the cost of food.

See reply to question No. 2,674 tabled this day.

CABINET MEETING AT INGONISH, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 3,286—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a cabinet meeting held at Ingonish, Nova Scotia in the fall of 1981 and, if so, what was the total cost, including transportation to and from, accommodation, food, beverages and the cost for the staff of cabinet ministers and of the Prime Minister and any others in attendance?

2. For what reason was the meeting not held in Ottawa and would it not have been at a considerably less cost to the taxpayer?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes. Total invoiced cost; $19,069.09.

2. The cabinet committee on priorities and planning met at Ingonish, Nova Scotia, in September, 1981, in keeping with the practice established as customary in 1979, when the inner cabinet of the previous government met at Jasper, Alberta, and in 1980, when the cabinet committee on priorities and planning met at Lake Louise, Alberta. The reason for conducting such meetings away from Ottawa is to enable many ministers to (1) become acquainted with local problems, issues and concerns in areas of the country where direct access to ministers is normally limited and (2) consider the government's over-all priorities and expenditure plan.

POSTAL SERVICE TO AND FROM CALGARY

Question No. 3,370—Mr. Malone:

1. What is the average length of time for a first class letter leaving (a) Toronto (b) Vancouver (c) Edmonton to arrive in Calgary?

2. Does it take longer for mail to travel from Edmonton to Calgary than from Vancouver to Calgary or from Toronto to Calgary and, if so, for what reason?

3. Are there any specific initiatives planned to give better postal service out of the Calgary post office and, if so, what are they?

4. Can those persons who are serviced from the Calgary Central post office expect improved services and, if so, within what time frame?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Canada Post Corporation has informed me as follows:

1-4 A number of variables such as fluctuating volumes, availability of transport, manpower levels, weather conditions, shift schedules, etc. determine the delivery times to and between the cities cited in the question. Recent improvements in productivity resulting from a change in allocation of physical and human ressources have rendered previous delivery standards obsolete. We can say, however, that delivery times have and are reduced. Revised standards and statistics will be available in the not too distant future.

In particular, mail delivery service in the Calgary area has been improved as the result of the expansion of door-to-door and group box service in the metropolitan area combined with the introduction of new programs directed at upgrading sortations, improving mail make-up, by reducing staff turnover and systems to simplify sortation. It is Canada Post's number one priority to improve service and this is already happening in the Calgary area.

CONSUMPTION OF DIESEL FUEL AND GASOLINE ON CANADIAN FARMS

Question No. 4,112—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the average annual consumption of (a) diesel fuel (b) gasoline on farms in Canada per farm acre or on the basis of any other measurement kept by the government and, of that amount, what is the average for that portion of the country (i) east (ii) west of the Manitoba-Ontario border?

2. Did the government make an estimate of the effect on farmers of the steadily increasing price of diesel fuel and gasoline and, if so, what are all the details?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Agriculture and Statistics Canada as follows:

1. Statistics Canada reports as follows: At present there is no consistent source of information on farm consumption of gasoline or diesel fuel by province or region in Canada. In provinces that have farm gasoline tax rebate programs or marked gasoline or diesel fuel (marked for off-road use such as farming, mining, logging, fishing, emergency generators) some rough estimates have been made of farm consumption. These estimates however, are only available for a few provinces and the information available is not consistent among provinces.

The most reliable indicator of fuel use on farms is the fuel, oil and lubricant expenditure estimate made by the Agriculture Statistics Division of Statistics Canada which in 1981 was estimated at $287.7 million east of the Ontario/Manitoba border and $691.2 million west of the border. Unfortunately, there is no distinction between gasoline and diesel fuel. Though there is a lack of data at the moment, a Statistics Canada Farm Energy Use Survey to be conducted in July, 1982, will provide farm diesel and gasoline consumption data by early 1983.

2. Agriculture Canada: Yes. Some of the estimated impacts of a $1-a-barrel increase in crude oil price and equivalent natural gas price increase on selected farm inputs are in table 1 below and on production costs for selected commodities in table 2. It is virtually impossible to "make an estimate of the effect on farmers of the steadily increasing price of diesel fuel and gasoline—" because the Canadian economy is far too complex and farmers buy goods and services produced in many sectors.

A $1-a-barrel crude oil price increase and natural gas price increase would reduce net farm income per acre in western Canada by 2.8 per cent of the 1980 level; in central Canada by 1.6 per cent of the 1980 level and Atlantic Canada 1.5 per cent. Food prices are expected to increase by .2 to .5 per cent of their 1980 level depending upon the item and the food component of the consumer price index would increase by .35 per cent.

All these impacts are short term with no consideration given to higher fossil fuel transportation costs, input substitutions that may occur over longer-term changes in farm product prices or other adjustments in production levels and methods farmers may make.

Table 1: Estimated price increases of a $1 a barrel crude oil price increase

Item	Amount of Increase Per unit

RCMP—PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Question No. 4,212—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

With reference to the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General at p. 27.13, volume II of the 1980-81 Public Accounts of Canada (a) how does the Solicitor General explain the increase in revenue for the RCMP from "Proceeds in Sales" from zero in the fiscal year 1979-80 to $3,494,568 in 1980-81 (b) what is the explanation for the increase from zero to $13,532 under the heading "Proceeds from the sale of ammunition to members"?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. (a) Up to and including 1979-80, the RCMP was authorized to use working capital advances for clothing and kit procurement/distribution (sale of uniform cloth to manufacturers, purchase back of finished garments from manufacturers, sale of kit to members and to provincial auxiliary units) and mess operations (purchase of raw food, cash sales and payroll deductions on meals provided to personnel). The revenues shown after the first five items under the "Proceeds from Sales" heading in 1980-81 public accounts were credited against expenditures within the above working capital advances in 1979-80 and, therefore, would not be considered as non-tax revenue for reporting purposes.

The above working capital advances were ordered cancelled by the Treasury Board effective 1980-81. Expenditures previously charged to these advances became chargeable to the RCMP Vote 15 and revenues previously credited there were deposited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This explains the appearance of the first five items under the "Proceeds from Sales" for the first time in 1980-81 public accounts.

The remaining two minor items under the heading "Proceeds from Sales" in the 1980-81 Public Accounts were "vote netted" up to and including 1979-80 and therefore not shown as non-tax revenue. In order to more accurately reflect RCMP operations and improve visibility within financial statements, these items were recorded as revenue credited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund commencing 1980-81.

(b) Comparable sales of ammunition to members of the force, for purposes of weaponry proficiency, were made in 1979-80 but "vote netted" as opposed to being credited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. These sales were credited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund in 1980-81. See also the answer to part (a) above.

COST OF GOVERNMENT HOSPITALITY

Question No. 2,674—Mr. Beatty:

What was the total amount paid by the government for hospitality in (a) 1977 (b) 1978 (c) 1979 (d) 1980 (e) the first six months of 1981?

Return tabled.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Hargrave: Madam Speaker, would the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader please look again at question No. 4,328 which deals with stabilization in the beef cattle industry of costs and prices? I am sure that if he would talk privately to the Minister of Agriculture he would find that the minister has the answer in his hip pocket. Would he look into this for me, please?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to do that for the hon. member.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, on July 8 I asked the parliamentary secretary about question No. 4,041 which deals with the various reports of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, the regulations with reference to the Economic Council of Canada, the report of the task force on regulatory reform and the government's reaction to them. At that time I specifically asked the parliamentary secretary what action he took to investigate why there were unnecessary delays and I asked him to make inquiries. Perhaps he could give an answer today, eight days later.

At the same time could he explain why question No. 1,439 which asks for routine information about the government's advertising program, should have taken more than two years to be answered?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, with regard to the first matter, I did make an inquiry and I have not received a reply. I will look into the matter again.

With regard to the second question, it is a complicated matter but the answer is in progress.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SECTOR COMPENSATION RESTRAINT ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING COMPENSATION IN THE PUBLIC SECTOR OF CANADA

The House resumed from Thursday, July 15, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Johnston that Bill C-124, respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, when the House adjourned last night I had listed three alternatives, or three policy decisions that the government could make. I am struck by what I can only call the sleazy discussion of the Conservative Party, a recent example of which is the remarks made by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) which were typical of their McCarthyite paranoia.

Bill C-124 has been called unfair by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), it has been called unfair by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) and it has been called unfair by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). All three hon. members say they will vote for unfairness, Mr. Speaker. They are all in favour of unfairness.

This coalition of Conservatives and Liberals, this coalition of the right, of the reactionaries who have not learned anything since the dirty thirties, means that the first victims of inflation are being attacked—the low-income earners and old age pensioners. These great official opposition Conservatives support the Liberal government in chiselling old people out of a few dollars a year. It is plain chiselling and I have to use the word sleazy.

As an innocent prairie boy I still want to learn something and I need some more instruction and explanation from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on how higher interest rates mean lower inflation. I still cannot figure that out. In this country higher interest rates have meant higher inflation. That has resulted in people losing their homes, people losing jobs, people losing farms and people losing businesses. But somehow or other, as R. B. Bennett and Mackenzie King proclaimed in '32, '34 and '37, keeping interest rates high was supposed to solve our problems.

Last night I suggested that the Government of Canada should declare a state of national economic emergency and do what was done when there was a declaration of war, only this time it should be a declaration of peace with all that that implies. It should be a declaration of peace that puts people in Canada to work, because there is so much to do.

The Conservatives want to vote for Liberals unfairness, Mr. Speaker, but may I suggest an alternative. For those who earn more than $75,000 or $100,000 per year—pick your own figure—we should amend the Income Tax Act and tax the amount of increases back 100 per cent. Anyone earning less than $20,000 or $25,000 per year—pick your figure, maybe $30,000—should be left alone. They are not the cause of inflation, they are the victims—the first victims of it. Surely if the government were to blow the dust off the report of the Carter Royal Commission of 1966 and bring in revised income tax provisions and tax people on the ability to pay, then, if you were fighting inflation, you would first of all tax those who cause inflation. They are the profit takers and money takers—not the profit makers but profit takers. An income tax act should allow a reasonable return of profit, a reasonable return on investment. Anything beyond that should be regarded as pure selfishness and greed. The money changers have snuck in the back door of the temple again and the Grits and Tories keep them there.

As I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the first target is interest rates. Until they are brought down nothing else will decrease. The costs of that policy are greater than the costs of inflation. The cost of high interest rates has caused the lay-offs in our steel industry at Ipsco, Dofasco and others and also in the forest industry. The evidence is in, Mr. Speaker; high interest rates mean higher and continued high inflation.

In 117 years we have had Conservative governments, Liberal governments, Conservative governments, Liberal governments, Liberal governments, Conservative governments and Liberal governments. For all the barbs that are thrown around, Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any social democrats or democratic socialists who have brought these policies about. Why blame me? I am NDP.

It was not the wild-eyed radicals, the wild-eyed socialists, who put 1,300,000 people out of work in this country. It was not wild-eyed socialists who caused the bankruptcies of hundreds of farmers and thousands of small-business men. It was the free enterprise Grits and Tories and their alliance that preserved a system that has outlived its usefulness. They do not have the courage and imagination to make fundamental changes in the direction, the nature and the purpose of our system. The appeal to greed and selfishness, to make all you can and to hell with everybody else, perpetuated by Liberals and Tories for 117 years in this country still continues. That alliance is unethical, unchristian, unseemly and obscene.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this Parliament should stay here and make a fundamental change in what the government is proposing. It should do that as we did in wartime. We declare a national economic emergency and do as we did then. We challenge Canadians because we have energetic and hardworking people, we have the money and the resources. We should invest—not spend—in the creation of employment and the satisfying of the genuine needs of the Canadian population. That means $1 billion a year for the next five years in housing, the ramifications of which are obvious. It means $1 billion a year for the next 15 years invested in transportation, and the ramifications of that are obvious. It means further large investment in the production of food. We can do it, Mr. Speaker, so for a change let us do what this country is capable of doing. Let us make a declaration of peace, as we did when we made a declaration of war. We have had enough of these frightened and small-minded men who cannot change their minds. We have had enough of the old parties and the old policies.

I have quoted ministers of finance and leaders of the opposition, both Grit and Tory, from 1932 to 1938. We get the same kind of speeches and the same kind of budgets out of the same kind of Liberals and the same kind of Tories now as we did in the dirty thirties. Mr. Speaker, this Parliament should sit and make a declaration of a national economic emergency and turn this country back to work; we are capable of doing it and have the resources to do it with.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired. He would need the unanimous consent of the House for a question at this point.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I am just curious whether the hon. member has read the bill. He said that the Conservatives, if they voted for this bill, would be voting against senior citizens and old age pensioners. There is no mention whatsoever of old age pensions in this bill. It deals with judges, ministers of the Crown, members of the Senate and the House, and wage rates for civil servants. There is nothing at all in here about pensions, so I am curious whether the hon. member has read the bill completely.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my remarks may have got a little convoluted, but I was referring to the fact that three Conservatives are already on record as saying this bill is unfair and they are going to vote for it. That means they are going to vote for unfairness, and I mentioned old age pensions in the context of the budget and chiselling old people—

Mr. Epp: It is not in the bill.

Mr. Benjamin: This bill chisels low-income earners in the public service. If the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. At this stage the rule of relevancy has to be brought to the attention of the hon. member.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-124 respecting compensation in the public sector, and to explain why I strongly support the leadership the government is giving with this bill to resurrect our economy with a new 6 per cent society. I do want to say, though, to my respected friend, the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), concerning his comments about the free enterprise system, that it was this system, the working relationship between the public and private sectors and the ingenuity of Canadians, which built this country into the great society we have today. I do not think it was some of the policies he has been advocating in his speech, as much as I respect him as a friend, which built Canada into one of the greatest nations in the world.

There have been many speeches in this House, Mr. Speaker, in the past week, on this bill, with I think some very constructive suggestions which my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), has indicated will be listened to in committee by the government before the bill comes back to the House for report stage and third reading. In the debate the details of the cause of inflation, our present economic situation and the OECD report have been outlined by several speakers.

In particular, I would commend hon. members to read the speech of our colleague, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), who I thought gave a very competent speech with respect to the situation and how we can resurrect our domestic situation. I would like to divide my speech into two parts, one with respect to my specific responsibilities concerning trade—because there have been many comments made by hon. members on both sides during the past week about the importance to Canada of exports and how they can lead us out of the present economic situation we are experiencing. Second, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of comments as an individual Canadian and Member of Parliament.

First of all, in reading some of the speeches I see that there has been a substantial lack of understanding of what the export market means to Canada, its makeup and mix, and how it affects the various regions of this country. Much of the viability of the Canadian economy as a major trading entity depends upon its ability to compete in export markets. This in essence is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is doing in trying to get Canada back to a 6 per cent society and make us more competitive. Almost one third of Canada's GNP is generated by trade in goods and services.

Approximately one-third of all goods manufactured in this country are destined for export markets. It is estimated that almost two million jobs in the manufacturing sector alone are directly the result of the production of goods and services for export. It represents roughly 20 per cent of the total labour market and work force in this country. I think it is imperative that we all understand the significance and magnitude of these facts. Our trade performance has allowed Canadian industry to specialize and become more efficient. It has encouraged investment, both domestic and foreign. Above all, it has brought real income gains and higher living standards to Canadian workers.

Equally imperative is the need for Canada to maintain and improve its international competitiveness. Failure to do so will harm Canadian industry, discourage investment, and erode the living standards of all Canadians. Today inflation is eating away at our competitiveness. It is no accident—and I think this was alluded to by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, in response to a question this morning—that Japan and the Federal Republic of Germany, the two industrialized countries which have been most successful recently in penetrating foreign markets recently, have also enjoyed the lowest rates of inflation within the OECD countries.

Canadian wage and price performance has recently moved seriously out of line with that of our major trading partners. For a country like Canada, with such an open economy, so dependent on trade for its economic wellbeing, it is important that our wage and price structure, as well as other cost components, not move out of phase with those prevailing in our major markets. We simply cannot afford a loss of international competitiveness. Devaluation offers no long-term, viable solution. We must bring inflation under control. We are asking all Canadians to take up this challenge and join with us in our fight against inflation.

I want to spend a few moments talking about Canada's recent trade performance, Mr. Speaker,—the changing composition of Canadian trade, and the reasons why it is so crucial for our future trade success to get better control of our wage-price performance. Recent Canadian trade performance remains a bright spot and source of strength for the Canadian economy. We have had a trade surplus for over 24 consecutive months, a record matched by very few countries in the world. Our over-all surplus in the trade of goods during the last 12 calendar months is approximately $10.4 billion.

During the first five months of this year our merchandise trade balance was running at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of nearly $15 billion. We registered a current account surplus in the first quarter of this year. While the services deficit is increasing, we anticipate the current account will be in near balance for all of 1982. Contrast this with the massive merchandising trade deficit which the United States has incurred during the last couple of years and also the European community. You will see that this indeed is a bright spot in the Canadian economy.

In the 1981 calendar year, Canada achieved its second highest ever merchandise trade surplus of $7.4 billion. This came about as the value of exports increased 10 per cent. The volume of exports in real terms increased by over 3 per cent. These gains occurred in a year when world trade actually fell.

A very significant point which should be understood by all our colleagues here in the House is that while international trade fell, Canada had record trade surpluses during this two-year period. This was achieved in a time of little or no world growth and it enabled Canada to increase its share of world markets to 3.6 per cent from 3.2 percent in the preceding year. More important is that Canada's share of manufactured exports to developed country markets increased to 4.2 per cent from 3.7 per cent. The fact that we are increasing our share of markets when the world market was down augurs well for the future of all Canadians when the world economy turns around.

This marks another important feature that I want to highlight for you, Mr. Speaker. It is the labour-intensive side of our trade, the manufacturing side, not just end products but also semi-processed goods. The most important gains which Canada achieved in the value of exports in 1981 came from three of the four top segments in the manufacturing sector. This reflects the dramatic increases over the last 20 years of the share of manufactured products in Canada's export trade.

In 1961, finished manufactured goods represented 8.8 per cent of Canadian exports. In 1981, this share stood at 31.2 per cent. In the first five months of this year, this share is showing increased strength. Unfortunately, this is a fact little known and little appreciated by Canadians.

Many Canadians have been concerned about our perceived role as "hewers of wood and drawers of water". Of course, Canada has been blessed with a large resource endowment in agriculture, minerals, forestry and energy. Canadians have built on this strength and we should make no apologies about this fact. It means that Canada does not need to import these products and that Canada has a much wider range of products available for export. But this does not mean that Canada is not a major exporter of manufactured products as well.

There is a mistaken tendency to consider that only end products, as defined by Statistics Canada in its commodity trade classification, can be classified as manufactured goods. According to this definition, only about 30 per cent of Canada's total exports in value terms would have qualified as manufactured exports in 1980. However, if one broadens the definition to Statistics Canada's industrial classification, fabricated materials, primary manufactured, and end products, finished manufactured, as well as certain processed food products, we would find that over 70 per cent of Canada's total exports on a value basis would have qualified as "manufactured goods" exports.

For the purpose of making some international comparisons let us use the official United Nations definition for manufactured goods. On the basis of this definition, 55.4 per cent of Canada's total value of exports was classified as manufactured goods exports in 1979. This is in the same range as that of Denmark, The Netherlands and Norway and considerably ahead of Australia's 23.4 per cent. The U.S., which is considered to be the industrial giant of the world, has a comparatively moderate 67.4 per cent proportion of its total exports in the manufactured category.

Looking at volume, Canada's manufactured goods exports increased by 52 per cent in the period 1975 to 1981, a faster rate of growth than that achieved by any other industrialized country except Japan. It was considerably faster than the 26 per cent increase for the United States and compares favourably with the 37 per cent increase for the total European Community.

Another major element in our strong trade performance has been our success in winning major capital projects with the support of the Export Development Corporation. Capital projects have been a major priority for this government during the last couple of years for three simple reasons. First, success in projects means sales of capital goods, which is the labour-intensive side of trade. Capital goods sales will accrue to all regions in the country if we are successful in capital projects. Second is our image abroad as suppliers of high technology goods and services, which is increasing dramatically. Third are the success stories which are being passed from one Canadian company to another, thus encouraging more effort in this area.

Never has there been another time in our history when Canadian businessmen and women have been competing for major capital projects around the world in the megaproject range, which we classify as over $100 million. Not only have we been bidding on them but we have been winning these contracts. The best example, I think, is the contract which Bombardier Corporation achieved in New York the other day. It is our largest contract in history, a $1 billion manufacturing contract which really says something for the future of this country.

I think the record speaks for itself. Canada has made significant strides in diversifying its export base and increasing the range of manufactured goods which it exports in addition to its primary goods exports.

A major impetus in our desire to be competitive and in our preparedness to be competitive to this development was the depreciation of the Canadian dollar during the latter half of the 1970s and the fact that wage and price developments were in line or below those of our major trading competitors. This allowed Canadian businessmen to strengthen their role in the world markets and penetrate new ones. However, we cannot always rely on the exchange rate to improve our competitive position. Instead we must achieve this through improving productivity and keeping costs under control.

For example, Canada at mid-1981 ranked sixth among the ten major industrial countries in terms of hourly wage compensation levels in manufacturing. This relative ranking, which has remained reasonably unchanged since the mid-1970s, played a major role in improving Canadian competitiveness. However, the gap in the absolute wage differentials has narrowed considerably since earlier in the 1970s, leaving Sweden as the only country where wage compensation levels were still as much as one fifth higher than in Canada. While we still hold a competitive edge in wage compensation levels in manufacturing, this edge has narrowed considerably since 1980. Small shifts can have a significant impact on our competitiveness.

We have seen the results of what can happen before. In the early 1970s Canadian wage compensation levels were second only to those in the United States. Canadian competitiveness suffered primarily from a decline in productivity and an increase in unit relative to our major trading partners. This led to a swing from a fairly strong surplus to a deficit in merchandise trade and an even greater deficit in the current account. Investment faltered, imports increased and the Canadian manufacturing base suffered.

As I indicated, exchange rate changes and better price-wage performance changed this picture dramatically in the latter part of the 1970s. However, the current level of inflation and increases in unit costs once again threaten our competitive position internationally. In the last quarter of 1981 wage settlements were in the range of 12.7 per cent on average. This compares with a figure of 5.6 per cent in the United States.

The U.S. is our largest trading partner representing approximately 65 per cent of our imports and exports. The consequences of such a divergence in our wage, and hence cost, performance, it seems to me, are clear.

Canadian future economic prosperity will be largely influenced by our success in the international marketplace. Yet as we all know, more and more countries are becoming keen exporters as rates of domestic growth slow. As well, recent years have witnessed the emergence of the so-called newly industrializing countries as strong competitors for a broad range of goods. The competition is becoming fierce.

To be successful, Canadian goods will need to be competitive in price, quality and delivery. But there is also another element to success in the international marketplace and that is the role of export financing. Competition in this area, particularly with government supported credits, has become particularly severe. While we have sought to make competitive financing available to Canadian exporters, it is clear that over the longer term Canada cannot hope to win a subsidy battle of national treasuries. The only way to win over the longer term is to lower inflation so as to bring interest rates down and thereby be more competitive in the financing we can offer.

What are the consequences if we fail to act? The most immediate consequence is likely to be a lower merchandise trade surplus. Canada requires a large merchandise trade surplus to balance its current services deficit. In these circumstances a declining surplus can lead only to a higher current account deficit. This, in turn, will impact on the exchange rate. The end result will most likely be even greater inflation and we will be trapped in a vicious circle from which it becomes increasingly difficult to extract ourselves.

Now I should like to turn to the area of domestic effects on trade. I have talked about the role exports play in strengthening Canadian economic performance. But trade plays another role as well in helping to keep inflationary costs down in Canada, and that is through imports. We must not forget that trade is a two-way street. A country can pay for its imports over the longer term only if it earns sufficient foreign exchange through its own exports. Canadian imports help in providing foreigners the means by which to buy our goods. As well, imports provide a source of competition, competition which helps to ensure that we keep our wage and price structure competitive, competition which allows Canadian industry to specialize in the areas where they are most efficient.

In the face of the current recession, we increasingly hear loud voices both in Canada and abroad calling for increased protection against import competition. However, we must avoid resorting to protectionism because of the cyclical downturn. This would not solve the problem of Canadian industry. Protectionism here will only be met by protectionism abroad, and our exports would suffer. Protectionism in Canada would also remove an important stimulant to Canadian industry to adjust and to become more internationally competitive.

There have been exceptional circumstances where the government, as well as our trading partners, have acted to restrict import competition faced by certain industries because of exceptional and special social and economic circumstances. However, I want to reiterate that these are exceptional cases.

These measures are not permanent solutions, and Canadian industry should not consider them as such. The only long-term answer is adjustment and improved competitiveness. Canadian industry must make use of the temporary respite provided to ensure that they are in a position to compete both in Canada and abroad when these special measures are lifted.

[Translation]

As far as our trade interests are concerned, my message to you is very straightforward. The viability of the Canadian economy as a large trading unit depends mostly on Canada's ability to compete on our export markets. This country has made significant strides in diversifying its export base and increasing the range of manufactured goods which it exports abroad. However, prices and wages in Canada are rising dramatically above those of our principal trading partners, especially the United States. The result will be, if we do not act, a decline in our competitiveness internationally and also a decline in our foreign trade balance. This, in turn, would only feed inflation and further complicate an already difficult situation. The only viable solution in the long term is to control inflation and thus improve our cost price.

That is my message. It is a challenge addressed to all Canadians, asking them to help us overcome this crisis.

[English]

In my 11 years of public life, Mr. Speaker, this will be the third time that I have participated in a reduction in salary. I think it is important not to use the scapegoat theory. For many of us who come from various professions, we took a substantial cut in compensation to become Members of Parliament, mayors, councillors or provincial legislators. We did not choose this profession because of any monetary gains. For most of us this reduction is what occurred when we first entered public life.

At one time I was the mayor of a community which had the highest unemployment rate in Canada. That was the reason I entered public life. To set an example, I cut my public pay cheque by approximately 10 per cent. I can recall the first negotiation meeting I had when the person opposite me at the table said, "Just because you are foolish does not mean that we have to be." I do not happen to believe in the scapegoat theory, but I believe that these are extraordinary times and, therefore, we must take extraordinary measures.

As I travel across Canada, as I am sure my colleagues on both sides of the House have done, I know the feeling out there is that we in Ottawa are insulated and insensitive to the specific problems faced by Canadians in all walks of life. I am sure my colleagues would agree that in politics perception very quickly becomes reality. It is important that we as parliamentarians, with the control which we have over a substantial portion of the Canadian economy including that with respect to public servants, should show the leadership necessary to get us out of these economic doldrums.

I happen to be very fortunate to have many dedicated public servants living in my riding. I am not one who thinks that public servants are overpaid and underworked. Collectively, I do not think they are any more overpaid or underworked than people in the private sector. Having come from the private sector and having been relatively successful in it, I think there are as many mistakes made in the private sector as there are in the public sector. They just do not happen to have all the cameras and media people from across the country watching them as we do in the public sector.

In general, I have found that the public servants with whom I have worked in five different departments since coming to Ottawa are as dedicated as any of the employees I met during my days in the private sector. I think, from talking to rank and file public servants in my constituency and here in Ottawa, they are prepared to accept that leadership role.

I should like to talk about a matter which has affected me personally in the last couple of days. Many hon. members throughout the debate on inflation and unemployment during the past couple of months have talked about the tragedies of individuals who have come to their offices. Two days ago my next door neighbour, my best friend and the father of four children of whom I am the godfather, was killed in a tragic accident. It made the front page of the local newspaper because he was a very dedicated community leader. I want to recite, for the benefit of my colleagues in the House, what happened to this particular gentleman and a partial cause of this sad occasion. I am not attributing any particular blame.

He came to this country over 20 years ago and started at the bottom echelon with a small company employing about 25 people. He worked his way to the top of the company, and at one point where several years ago the company employed 500 people. Then a series of disruptions in the postal service over a period of time totally destroyed his mail order business, so much so that in the last four or five months his company was employing only 25 to 30 people as it had over 20 years ago. For months this gentleman had been fighting to try to save the company, not only for him but for the very dedicated people who worked for him during this 20-year period. He ran back and forth between Cornwall and Montreal, and Ottawa and Toronto trying to find some solution to salvage the company. In this process he wore himself down to the point where he fell asleep driving his car, with the resulting tragic consequences.

There is much human suffering with which we as Members of Parliament are very familiar. When we go to our riding offices on the weekends these people come in to see us. This is why I feel so strongly about this particular bill. No one likes to have something which has been, or is expected to be held back. Those of us who are parents and husbands know that when we have to reduce spending in our own families difficulties occur. Some of us know this as managers in our private lives before becoming parliamentarians.

If we listen to our constituents, as I do, we find that Canadians are thinking more about the future for their children than ever before. One of their great concerns is the legacy which we as a society will leave our children. Will we leave as a society the legacy which our ancestors left us? As parliamentarians and as legislators, I think we grossly underestimate the intelligence of Canadians, their understanding of the problems and their resolve to solve them. Also we underestimate the willingness of Canadians to share the bad times as we shared the good times.

I think the budget of the Minister of Finance helps us to share with those in the system who unfortunately have lost their jobs. If we, not just as the government and public servants, but at every level of government and in every business, commit ourselves to following the leadership set down in this bill, then after a short period of time we would be back on the road to recovery which each and every one of us desires.

Inflation affects everyone. Our legacy is very important. It is not only an individual responsibility, but also it is a collective one. We are asking all Canadians to join us in this challenge. The people of Canada expect leadership to start in Parliament. I sincerely hope that every member in this chamber, regardless of his or her party affiliation, will support this piece of legislation.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a few comments on the record regarding Bill C-124 as they relate to the Canadian economy as I see it at this time. The first point that I want to make is that I believe restraint in the public sector and the federal government is necessary. It is necessary for a number of reasons. It is necessary when one takes a look at the ever-increasing expenditures that federal governments have been facing and making over the last years. For example, if one looks at the 1968 figures for Canada, one finds that Canada's accumulated deficit was approximately $17 billion. Today, some 14 years later, it stands at about $130 billion.

When one takes a further look at the figures, one finds that for every dollar of taxation collected by the federal government—we must keep in mind that these are dollars earned by ordinary Canadians which they have paid in federal taxes—everyone of those after tax dollars uses 23 cents to service the national debt. That money does not go to pay the national debt, just to service it.

I agree with those who say that cutting back is always difficult, but I believe it has to be done and examples have to be set. While there are flaws in Bill C-124, which I will point out later, it is for that reason that on principle only I believe the federal government must show example.

While members opposite may say it is the reaction of an opposition member, I am sure if the government has sufficient credibility in the country to make this bill work. Inflation may come down but I think as Canadians look at it objectively they may seriously question whether the government has that credibility. This is a serious point I am making because the program can and only will work to reduce the ravages of inflation on ordinary Canadians if they sincerely believe that government has both the credibility and the willingness to cut back on its own pet projects in order to bring down inflation.

Before I expand on these points, I must say that I find the position of the NDP very interesting. I listened to the speech by the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) in which he said, for example, that anyone who votes for Bill C-124 is voting for unfairness.

Mr. Benjamin: Your own members said that.

Mr. Epp: If you will let me finish I will try to make a point. As I have stated, there is no question that Bill C-124 is rough justice and that it is unfair but the hon. member has also been around here long enough to know that some amendments could be considered and made in committee. I do not think that he should use his position as a Member of Parliament to infer that a bill does something which it does not do. As I read Bill C-124, I do not see any provisions on the old age pension included in it. Yet he made this distinct point that anyone who supports Bill C-124 supports a reduction of old age pensions. That is just not the case.

Mr. Benjamin: It is the same principle.

Mr. Epp: We are not talking about that issue. It is not in this bill. I think the member should at least have the insight to recognize that the bill does not deal with that section. There are many old age pensioners who are concerned about the ravages of inflation on their income today. One thing we should not do in the House is to project something to them which is not the case in this bill. I would ask the hon. member for Regina West to bear that in mind.

He also said that the mess we are in today is because of former Liberal and Conservatives governments. I want to expand on that as well. We in Manitoba are the only province which has an NDP government.

Mr. Nystrom: You are lucky.

Mr. Epp: Let us look at the facts and see if we are lucky.

Mr. Waddell: Are you running for leadership?

Mr. Epp: Any time I can defeat you, I will run. That government made two promises during the election campaign. They were: first, if elected no Manitoban would lose his job; second, no Manitoban would lose his business. What are the details? It was interesting to notice today that the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who supports the NDP got up to speak. I imagine even he reads the report on business in The Globe and Mail because there is an article today entitled "Sherritt Gordon extends shutdown of Manitoba mines". There was a seven-week shutdown which was extended to eight weeks. The same thing applies to Inco. No matter how the NDP cut it, one point they have to recognize is the promise they made that no Manitoban will lose his or her job.

Mr. Benjamin: On account of the NDP.

Mr. Epp: You are putting words in that were not there. I am simply saying to you, "Physician, heal thyself"!

They also said that no Manitoban would lose his or her business. One of the first businesses that went down the flue was one known as Schreyer Equipment. Since then, on main-street Manitoba, others have gone broke.

When I speak to businessmen and women they state that one of the reasons for their difficulty is a 1.5 per cent payroll tax. There is a payroll tax at a time when jobs are less numerous and businesses are struggling. What does the NDP government do? They add 1.5 per cent on to the gross payroll of every business. It is a tax to work. Here, they pontificate by saying that they would not do it this way. They do it quite another way; they tax for the right to work in Manitoba. They do this after the promises they made. When the NDP explain to me how they can achieve nirvana, I do not accept it.

Another point I wish to make to them bluntly is that when they say they will vote against the bill, it also means that they will vote against the salary cut of Members of Parliament. When you look at the bill you will see this is one section of the bill they will not support. Surely there is no question that Members of Parliament, senators and senior civil servants have a responsibility at this period of time to constrict their salary demands as well.

Mr. Benjamin: Leave that clause in and delete all the others.

Mr. Epp: When I began my remarks I asked if the program can work. Can we get to the 6 per cent world of which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is so fond of speaking? I said it would depend on credibility. Personally, I seriously question that credibility because of statements that have been made before by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) especially.

To illustrate this question of credibility, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley), for example, whom I believe to be a sincere person trying to do a good job for Canadians, said that we cannot follow the same course as Sweden, for instance. I agree. It is a country, however, that has remained and frequently been cited by the Prime Minister as a model that he would like Canada to follow.

There is also the question of credibility when the Prime Minister, during a year-end interview, questioned whether the marketplace either works or can work. That had a serious effect on the market economy and business generally.

I notice that it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. May I adjourn and continue at two o'clock?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At one o'clock the hon. member for Provencher had the floor.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, prior to the adjournment for lunch I had pointed out that I believe restraint is necessary, but that restraint can only work if the government has a certain amount of credibility, and I raised doubts as to that credibility. Specifically in relation to Bill C-124, there have been criticisms that it is not fair. I am one who shares that view even though I have said that I support a restraint program.

When the bill goes to committee after the vote at four o'clock this afternoon, there are two specific areas that members of that committee should consider; that is, whether Bill C-124 needs to go so far or whether we need to go so far in relation to the terms of collective bargaining. As one reads the bill, one finds that it would put a cap of 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent the year thereafter on federal public service salaries. What it also does for that period of time, at least in the practical sense, is that it virtually eliminates collective bargaining.

There are areas in collective bargaining that could be and should be maintained even during that period. I will get to those areas, but before doing so I would like to give the reasons why I believe that to be the case. I believe that collective bargaining has worked in the public service. If one takes a look at the number of contracts that have been negotiated between the government and the public service, one finds that the number of times where breakdowns occurred is very limited. Granted, some of those were high profile ones. I would like to see some change there concerning essential services, but I am not speaking of essential services at this stage. Members could very quickly say that that refers to the post office, and I agree with them. I think Canadians should be and are entitled to the maintenance of certain services, and Canada Post is an essential service. But by and large, the record of negotiation and agreement around the table between the public service and the federal government has been good.

Should we, through Bill C-124, suspend that process for two years, I question what would be the climate when those two years end in terms of the collective bargaining process between the public service and the federal government. I said I would raise two points which I would think could still remain open for bargaining during that period of time. Other members will, I am sure, have other instances to mention. One is the matter of health and safety in the workplace. I have no doubt that the issue of health and safety in the workplace remains a legitimate and valid area of negotiation, even during this two-and-a-half-year period that is to start now. I have federal civil servants in my riding who work, for example, as inspectors in abattoirs. There is often a question of health and safety there that it is necessary to examine and this has to be negotiated.

There is also the question of Revenue Canada employees at the international border. I have a number of ports along the Canadian-United States international border. In fact, a study was done some time ago looking at the danger these men and women are often faced with in their work. For instance, there is the new sophistication of smuggling in the area of drugs. For some period of time they have been working with the department and with the public service trying to develop a plan whereby they could address these new, modern problems that these employees face at the border. I see no reason why in this two-year period that kind of negotiation should not go on. In fact, it should be encouraged to go on.

I also see no difficulty, Mr. Speaker, in continuing the concept of equal pay for work of equal value. Those areas should be continued in negotiation form during the next two years. I do not see how that would affect the restraint program in any way. There might be the argument that there would be some reclassification and therefore there might be some additional cost to the treasury, but I think on balance, for the net return and for the climate we can create, those are two areas to be discussed. I suggest to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) that he look at that point seriously in terms of amendments, either from our side or from the government side. We could bring in amendments which would allow those processes to continue, and I think the collective bargaining process would be enhanced during that period of time should we do that.

I mentioned also, Mr. Speaker, the question of credibility. I have no doubt that we have to bring in restraint in terms of the cause of inflation. I have a press release here from UPI in Paris which says that according to OECD, Canada led the western world in inflation in May with a 1.4 per cent rise for that month. The average for the western industrialized nations during the same month was .8 of 1 per cent. In other words our inflation rate was virtually double. So had the annualized inflation rate for the other countries of the OECD, with the exception of Spain and Luxembourg, which had the same rate for the month of May as we did. The average annualized rate was 8.4 per cent and we are in double-digit inflation. Therefore, the case being made that we have to reduce inflation and bring in restraint is backed by very clear evidence.

One area of credibility where the government is seriously lacking—and questions have been addressed to this in the House over the last couple of days—is the fact that the government is saying, "We will cap 6 per cent and 5 per cent, but we will not necessarily reduce the fees that we charge for users of federal government services." I have in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a letter from a federal public servant who lives in my riding. He works in Pinawa, Manitoba. Pinawa is the site of the atomic energy research station that is called the Whiteshell atomic energy research station. It is a federal civil service community. These people are good citizens. They have worked hard in their contribution to Canada. Here is the first paragraph of that letter from a person who works there:

> Enclosed herein is a copy of a rental increase notice that we received July 3, 1982. It is interesting in the fact that this is the same government that is busy selling the 6 per cent solution to the country which I believe is long overdue. However, it seems inconsistent with what they are saying and expecting others to do.

Here is a public servant saying that the 6 per cent world, or the capping of his income or salary at 6 per cent, is long overdue. When people are looking at the television screen, they should be careful to differentiate between some of the labour leaders and the rank and file who live in our ridings. Here is one person who as a Canadian, is saying, "That is fine". But he is also saying more, in the attached letter. It is surprising that this letter is dated one day after the budget came down. The budget came down on June 28 and the letter is dated June 29. In the letter he says that the housing that he is renting from the federal government is being increased in rent by 15 per cent.

This is what I mean by credibility. The government will have to examine its expenditures and also its fees to see whether or not it can rationalize them and reduce costs in order that the fees that it charges will be more in keeping with the 6 per cent world it is talking about.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I have a letter here from the Winnipeg chamber of commerce. They have written to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) pointing out to him the increases in the air transport tax maximum. For example, they point out that the average tax increase per ticket for Winnipeg travellers—or for Manitoba travellers, as I would put it—will go up $4.69 per ticket. To put it another way, it will be 68 per cent higher than the simple average in other Canadian airports. Now, you cannot have a 6 per cent world with 68 per cent increases. It is not possible. This is the dilemma the country and the government face. On the one hand, we have to rationalize those services; on the other hand, we ask Canadians to restrict themselves to 6 per cent.

I want to be positive and point out some other ways which I think would help in terms of bringing inflation down. Regarding the fairness of this measure, I would have preferred to see a bill whereby there would have been graduated percentages. By graduated percentages of increase, I mean that a person working in the federal public service below a certain salary would have received a cost of living adjustment, a COLA, and that it would have been graduated up to a certain salary level where there would be zero increase. That would have been more fair. I admit I have not got the figures with me and possibly when I make that suggestion I should have them before me, before I make the suggestion, when I am asked what saving there would be to the federal treasury. But in terms of visible fairness, I think that would be a better approach.

There are ways other than this by which we can reduce inflation. I have already mentioned the deficit. There is no way the federal government can achieve the restraint it seeks by increasing the national deficit, as it has been doing. The government loses credibility when in its November budget it says the deficit will probably be $10 billion or $11 billion, and then it comes back seven months later, in June, and indicates it will be $19.6 billion or $20 billion. Anyone in this House who has looked at the figures knows that $20 billion will not be sufficient. It is more likely that $22 billion to $25 billion will be needed. That hurts credibility, and that hurts any restraint program.

The government must come to grips with the deficit. The argument put forward by the government for a "six and five world" is the only one we support. Why does the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance turn down the suggestion that we form an all-party committee and examine proposed expenditures before they are made? The examination should not take place after the expenditure is made, as we do in the Public Accounts Committee. In that committee we look at expenditures after the fact. Why do we as Members of Parliament not sit down and go through expenditures with a fine-tooth-comb and see where, in some cases, we might eliminate expenditures and, in others, where we might be able to suspend or postpone expenditures? In other cases we might be able to reduce expenditures at least marginally. Surely that is a valid exercise and a traditional role of Parliament. If the government really wants to bring about the restraint it seeks, I seriously question why it does not take that route. We have mentioned this before and I am mentioning it again. That is the way it has to be done.

Canada is a federal state. Without question, a federal state can be costly. We all know there is duplication in the roles of the federal and provincial governments. With respect to division of powers, the Fathers of Confederation felt it necessary that some services be jointly administered by the federal and provincial governments, with primacy being held by the federal government. I know a study of duplication of federal and provincial services has been undertaken. Why can we not undertake that kind of study? If there is duplication of services, let us see how that can be eliminated. That surely would be a valid exercise for Members of Parliament. Surely that would be a valid attempt to reduce the deficit and the current account deficit.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What about that silly decentralization program?

Mr. Epp: And there are other programs. I am talking about duplication, but when we are looking at restraint I think it is important that we do not fix ourselves narrowly on one program and think that somehow we can reverse what I believe has become a colossal problem for Canadians. We have to look at every opportunity and every angle, and that is why I am putting forward these suggestions today.

There are other matters to which I want to refer. My colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), came in a moment ago and said, "What about the decentralization program?" Even though decentralization is a valid and worthwhile objective in a federal state, can we afford it at this time? Should we be increasing the deficit at this time? These are hard decisions. I know there are Members of Parliament who would say, "My community will get a certain service, so therefore I am for it". I can understand the politics of that and I can understand the interest, but right now I am more interested in turning the economic ship of state around than simply looking at what might be advantageous at this moment to any one specific area.

Another matter of concern in terms of reducing inflation is the matter of federal-provincial conflict. Recently the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has been having discussions with non-Canadian businessmen who want to invest in Canada. Non-Canadian businesses have not been willing to invest in Canada and feel that the reason Canada's inflation rate is higher than in the average OECD country is federal-provincial conflict. I think it is time for the Prime Minister to stop making statements like "Co-operative federalism is dead". The constant struggle and the constant bickering with the provinces should stop. We should study how we can reduce the level of conflict between the federal and provincial governments. I know that in a federal state there is a natural tension between provincial and federal governments. It has always been so, but at this stage I think it is important that we realize that federal-provincial conflicts have cost us a lot of money—one example is the energy conflict—and we must put some of that behind us.

There are other matters one could, and should, mention. Because of its actions this government has a reputation for being anti-business. Business people point out very quickly that there does not seem to be an understanding either at the ministerial level or on the part of the public service of what business is going through. Over the years it has been easy to tax business. It has been easy to increase tax rates and somehow to feel that business would always survive and continue and that jobs would always be available. However, things suddenly have changed. It is striking that individual Canadians have been saying that the business climate must be improved. These Canadians include business people and workers. Workers are saying that the business climate must be improved because, if it is not improved, workers' jobs will be lost.

The question of restraint is not necessarily the dominant one in the minds of many workers and other Canadians today. The dominant question is how Canadians can retain their jobs. With all the kindness I can muster, I suggest, especially to my government friends but also to my friends in the New Democratic Party, that they reconsider the anti-business words I hear so often. I hear the word "multinationals". I hear the word "transnationals". I hear anti-business words, and I think we should re-examine whether that is in the best interests of Canada. I believe it is not. This country was built by entrepreneurship and risk takers, and Canadian workers as a group have benefited because businesses have prospered.

I want to leave the House with one last thought; Your Honour might ask whether it is relevant to Bill C-124. When I look at the restraint program and Canadian society, I wonder how a government which establishes national goals—and I do not refer just to this federal government—can transmit those goals to the average citizen and make the point that they have validity. We have been able to do that in times of war. We were able to do it during the great depression. There have been other periods of time during which we have been able to do that. However, as I see the ever-increasing growth of the social welfare state and its concomitant larger bureaucracy—I am not trying to paint with a wide brush—and as I see the infrastructure that kind of state needs to support itself, I believe it becomes more difficult to establish national goals, and citizens too often look at what could be a valid national goal not in the national context but, rather, in the personal context or in the context of a special interest group.

Let me give an example. I think most Members of Parliament here would agree that energy self-sufficiency in all forms is a valid national goal. I think we can agree on that quickly. However, when we look at methods we might use to achieve that goal, that is when we seem to fall apart. We are obviously facing restrictions in terms of the ability of government to deliver services, and we must ask ourselves how Canadians react to the restriction of those services. Because there is a larger national goal, and that is to restore the economy and restore potential future prosperity.

I think the question with which this House has to wrestle is whether we want to maintain the social welfare structure. I think every member would agree that we do, but how are we to achieve it if the economy is not able to support that structure? All one has to do is consider the last census which shows an aging population and a very narrow demographic base to support it. What will happen 20 years from now when there may be a struggle because of age between those who are paying and those who feel the system should be paying them a pension?

Another matter that has bothered me in the years I have been here is that this Parliament is not able to establish valid national goals. This is the time when national goals should be established, and only time will tell whether the government will be successful in doing this. The chances of success will be much greater if we do not restrict ourselves to the program before us today but consider reducing expenditures in some of the pet projects of the government. We must seek more co-operation with the provinces and with business. We must also be willing to admit our mistakes and reject those things which have led us to the economic malaise we are now experiencing.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to comment on this bill. In essence I support it, yet it is difficult to say that it is good legislation because of such and such a thing. The easy thing would be to stand in my place and vote at the appropriate time, claiming that I had to vote for it because it is a government bill and, in that way, I could hide behind the collective will of the government. I am not voting for it for that reason, however.

I support the bill in principle because I think it can be immensely significant if we allow it to be. By itself, it will not bring about any miracles. We are asking civil servants and employees of Crown corporations to accept restraint. Considering the size of the public service and of Crown corporations, a large number of people will be affected. We will even vote to curtail our own remuneration and I know that many people in the country would say hurrah to that. Through this legislation we are trying to show that we believe it is necessary to set an example.

The intent of the legislation will fail, however, if it is an isolated measure. We are asking people who serve this country very well to accept restraint, but I am not sure that all Canadians recognize that they have the same responsibility.

One of the things about the legislation that bothers me is that it may lead some members of the public to fall into the pastime of bashing the civil service. As the hon. member who spoke before me said, Canadians are well served by their civil service, particularly by the federal civil service. I do not subscribe to the idea that it is overstaffed with inefficient people. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, you could walk into a manufacturing plant and see people whom you would think were not really gainfully employed or you could walk into a commercial establishment and find that ten clerks give good service but two do not. There is a people problem in everything.

In my experience with civil servants, I find they serve us very well and often under difficult circumstances. But it is popular to try to lay the blame for our economic ills on the doorstep of politicians and civil servants. Many people believe they should accept restraint because they are overpaid and underworked. I reject that idea. It is grossly unfair.

We have to start somewhere with this program and because of the difficulty that we all know of introducing total controls, which I think are unpalatable unless used as a last resort, we have somehow to get the message across to the people of Canada that we have serious economic problems. We must find ways of setting examples. If we give leadership, then I believe other people will fall into line with it.

No one wants a restraint program, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member who just spoke mentioned the private sector and the necessity of protecting it. I subscribe to that idea. As a former president of a chamber of commerce, I still have an interest in their activities so I subscribe to the free enterprise system. I recognize that it built the country and, in the long run, will continue to contribute to its development.

There is a role for all of us, however. We have to start somewhere, and if we accept the idea that it is acceptable to have total controls but that we must show leadership and hope that the rest of the country will follow voluntarily, I think they will work. If we can involve enough people in restraint, then perhaps the private sector will go along. If we ask our federal civil servants to accept restraint, then our provincial counterparts must ask the same thing of the people who serve them. Then the municipalities, the school boards and other organizations must follow, and in the end a very large number of people will accept restraint.

If that should happen, then in the normal course of events I would think most businessmen would negotiate with their employees, saying, in effect, "I respect what you do and I think you do your job well, but guidelines have been put forward that we think are reasonable and we should fall into line with them." By themselves they will not work, and so there is a domino effect the other way. We get into trouble because of dominoes falling the wrong way, and sometimes get out of trouble if we can have them falling in the proper direction. So perhaps the private sector will also begin to accept that, well, if I just have a modicum of faith, maybe we can live in a 6 per cent environment. If I participate, maybe it will work. I know many people listening this afternoon may say, well, this man is living in a dream world. Maybe I am being a bit of an idealist, but already we see signs that labour is saying that yes, given the difficult times and the example which is about to be set, maybe we can find ways to accommodate the direction the country ought to be going in.

I guess I have taken the long way around, Mr. Speaker, in simply saying to our civil servants and ourselves, the parliamentarians, please accept this restraint. I make the point in a mild manner that we in this House are accepting a reduction, but we are really asking public servants to accept a lowering of expectations in a very real way. However, if we just leave it with them, it is not going to accomplish anything. We have simply made them sacrificial lambs. However, if—and that is a big "if"—all of us say, no matter on what side of the House we sit or what enterprise we are in, that we really need to do something, if we believe the argument, a most valid one, that the biggest enemy is inflation and we will accept restraint, then just maybe other people will accept the same thing.

It has been said with regard to the civil servants, Mr. Speaker, that we are asking them—sure, we are imposing it on them through legislation, but we are really asking them—

An hon. Member: That is called "telling", not asking.

Mr. Masters: All right, we are telling them, but at the same time I am asking them and hon. members opposite to accept the idea that we have to start somewhere. If we continually throw up our hands and say it is always going to be 10 per cent so I want 12 per cent, where do we end up? We just continue the everlasting spiral. The logic is irrefutable. But everyone says yes, I will follow that but I will wait for the next guy to do something. We are trying to set an example for others to follow. And it can happen, Mr. Speaker. Everyone looks to the federal government to be the leader in economic matters. No matter what the spending at the provincial or municipal levels, we take the rap for it. Well, if we are going to take the rap for it, let us do something about it.

I am glad to say that I did not hear any groaning in this House about not accepting a cutback in our wages because we believe we deserve the remuneration offered. I believe as a member of this House—and I think I speak for all members—I have to do something, and I am going to put my money where my mouth is. We have said we do not really want to go or should have to go to a whole pile of extraordinary measures to bring inflation, and thus the economy, under control. If we can get some support, some recognition, we can do it. You know, Mr. Speaker, I feel like Peter Pan, saying: "Do you believe? Everyone clap if you believe." However, sometimes you have to have that kind of vision and attitude.

An hon. Member: You are closer to Tinkerbell.

Mr. Masters: Yes, maybe Tinkerbell will come and help because we believe.

An hon. Member: You have Tinkerbell policies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Masters: Going back to the matter at hand, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that I am most impressed with the messages I have received from the many people who serve this country well in our civil service. That includes a son-in-law, so this process comes pretty close to home. It affects my daughter, it affects my grandchildren and, as I say, it is not an abstract "do it to somebody else" kind of problem.

Mr. Waddell: Wait until the economy of Ottawa collapses.

Mr. Masters: I feel they are behaving responsibly. They are saying no, they do not like it, and nobody is going to jump up and down with joy. But they have said okay, we think we can live with it.

There are problems with certain aspects of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I am glad that when it leaves the House today at roughly four o'clock—I hope it will be at four o'clock—it will go into committee where there will be an opportunity for many witnesses from many areas of the economy to come forward and be heard.

While we are discussing the restraint on wages side of the economy, I have another plea to make. From the businessman's point of view restraint of wages is a great idea, but I hope the business community knows that they have to be very responsible and honest. I think our business community is honest, but they have to be very careful that whatever price increases they may have in mind are reasonable. Too often in this country we have seen price increases which, at least in my view, are really not that explainable. They have to look at how competitive they really are. If we see wage restraint, beginning with the example set by civil servants, and then we see a spiral of increasing prices, then we know we have a very tough road ahead of us and we will never really get out of the vicious circle in which we find ourselves.

We have a real need for everyone involved to recognize that, if they are not going to play the game fairly, then it is all for nothing. We have then done a great disservice to the public servants of this country by asking them to accept the imposition of restraint measures, and they are going to have to do this in isolation. I keep coming around and around to that point. I do not mean to be naive. I am just saying that if we accept the fact that we have great difficulty in this country and in the world because of inflation, we have to ask ourselves what we can do about it. Obviously, one of the things is to bring down as quickly as we can our cost factors, which include wages, productivity, and all the rest.

There is a saying "Let George do it". It simply means a job has to be done and by golly, it will get done. It will get done as long as "he" does it. Somewhere along the line we had better all start calling ourselves George, because we are all in this together. We all have the power within ourselves to make things work or not to make things work.

Briefly I would like to address myself to the official opposition and to the New Democratic Party on this point. There is a great onus on members of the opposition parties in these difficult times.

Mr. Deans: What about you? You are the government.

Mr. Masters: As there is also on us, yes. There comes a time when we should get away from the partisan line and concentrate on what really has to be done. Everyone here says that something has to be done. We hear different suggestions over open line programs ranging from asking us to spend more to asking us to spend less, or something in between, whatever it might be. But right now we know that one of the prime needs in this country is to find a device to give us a renewed feeling of confidence about the country and to find ways of restraining ourselves so that we can continue to enjoy the extremely high standard of living that we have enjoyed.

We have within this group, in this chamber that we all respect so much, the opportunity to say: "Okay, let us at least give this particular bill a chance to work." Let us see if it will do something. If it does not work because we blindly hope that the rest of the country will take heart by the move and will fall in line, then it is the opposition's turn to come back and say "See, I told you so".

In many areas of this country and in many sectors of our economy there is an opportunity for all of us to come four square behind the principle of letting something work.

Mr. Heap: You should have done it six years ago.

Mr. Masters: I was not here six years ago.

Mr. Heap: You sure didn't learn much, did you? It didn't work then.

Mr. Masters: But it is also the time not to dwell so much on what happened yesterday. It is time to ask right now, today, what can we do that makes us enjoy today just a little bit more and that gives us a tomorrow that is even better than today? Today is bad for some people. I think sometimes we lose our perspective of things. But for many of us we have pretty good times. I have heard some speeches in the House on this piece of legislation which have referred back to the 1930s and so on. Yes, I do believe that we learn from history, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Heap: You don't.

Mr. Masters: We take it as something we have studied and we hope we do not repeat the mistakes of the past. But we only use that information as a building block. We have to bring it into the context of changing worldwide conditions, changing public attitudes and so on.

We are asking today for passage of Bill C-124 at this stage so that it can go to the committee. I want the public servants of Canada and the many other people affected to know that when this bill goes into committee there will be an opportunity for them to have direct input into the final form of this bill. In my view, the government has the opportunity to provide a very tangible example to the country, recognizing full well—and I do not think anybody is trying to kid anyone else; things are far too serious to play funny little political games or to take a cavalier attitude toward the individuals involved—that those who, by this piece of legislation, are put in the position of accepting less of an increase than they normally might have expected, are getting one nonetheless.

We are saying that this is something we can do immediately. If we do not know that now is the time to act, we have wasted a lot of valuable time in this House talking about many things that do not mean anything. We have an opportunity in concert with one segment of the economy over which we have some direct control to do something. In most segments of the economy—and this is often forgotten—our controls are all very indirect. But now we have an opportunity in a very direct way to work with people under our jurisdiction. We can say to them: "Will you accept restraint and, while we are making this restraint law, we hope you will accept it in the spirit that we respect you and that we need you to help us set this example to the country."

We are asking people to do this. We are praying fervently as hard as we can that the rest of the country, including hon. members opposite, will recognize that we are in serious times but they can be corrected by a collective will. This goes beyond just the political process. We should not be worrying so much about what our general political philosophies might be. It comes to the point where we have difficulties that are insoluble in isolation but are certainly possible to solve if they are taken collectively. I am coming back to a phrase that has been used about the civil service in this country. We are really asking them to be heroic. That sounds corny but it is not.

Mr. Waddell: You are corny.

Mr. Masters: I hear the hon. member opposite but, by golly, I have had many contacts with public servants during the past week. They have indicated that they accept the fact that they must be example-setters in the area of employment. They accept it, but they hope that the rest of the country realizes that they are not overjoyed. By and large they have agreed to accept it as graciously and as sincerely as they can, as long as we play fair with them. I hope they will see a sign of that fairness.

Mr. Waddell: Why did you take away their collective bargaining rights?

Mr. Masters: That item will be well discussed in committee next week. I think the hon. member has to be careful when he says that we are taking away collective bargaining rights. He should not confuse that with suspending certain portions of them. He should keep in mind that the bargaining process will continue throughout the restraint period.

Mr. Waddell: Why don't you just get out of office? That is what the Canadian public wants.

Mr. Masters: I heard the hon. member opposite. I am afraid that hon. members opposite do not recognize—

Mr. Forrestall: I am sitting opposite and I should like to be associated with that comment.

Mrs. Erola: Then you will be labelled a socialist.

Mr. Masters: The popular thing to do on this particular issue is to use it as a lever for votes.

Mr. Waddell: That is what you are doing.

Mr. Deans: It is the worst move I have seen in 20 years of politics.

Mr. Masters: As an individual Member of Parliament I am prepared to support this legislation.

Mr. Waddell: Because Trudeau told you to.

Mr. Masters: I support it because it is the responsible thing to do at this particular time.

Mr. Forrestall: You were ahead of the game a few moments ago.

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, it is very easy for hon. members opposite to deflect this debate into political arguments of partisanship and so on, but I believe there is a chance for the country to do what it has done so many times in the past. We must come together as one people with a common cause. At the present time the common cause is the fact that there is a totally unacceptable inflation rate in the country and there is a need to examine our ability as a nation to be more productive.

While this particular piece of legislation is asking a great deal of a few, I believe it will work if all Canadian workers rally behind it. They should rally behind the example set and exhibit the belief that Canada can be an even better place in which to live.

Let me say in conclusion that, as I said earlier, it will not work if we leave it to George, unless we all call ourselves "George" and get behind it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, it is 3.05 o'clock and in 55 minutes hon. members will have to make a fairly fundamental decision. The decision has nothing to do with restraint. Good God, Bob Stanfield talked about restraint in the House 12 years ago. In fact, he talked about it in the 1972 and 1974 election campaigns. Not once during the course of this debate have I heard a member of government rise and say, "Canada, I am sorry I have blown it. I have goofed; I have not run our country well." I have not heard one of them indicate that he or she was prepared to apologize and to take some steps now to try to change the direction. We are hell-bent for hell. Our country is down the drain. In its haste to change the direction—unlike Casey who let her go—the government produced a restraint package.

I am prepared to give the government the benefit of the doubt. In the hasty in-cabinet drafting of this measure, I think government members were not fully aware of the consequences of the suspension of collective bargaining rights for which the nation strived so hard. It was not only public servants who strived for it, but all workers throughout the country. They were not aware of the implications of the wording of their hasty drafting. I doubt very much whether the drafters of the legislation bothered to refer to Dr. Finkelman's report, to the Heeney report, or to the extraordinarily good work of the joint parliamentary committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which dealt with employer-employee relations in the public service of Canada. Indeed, I have searched throughout the bill for some trace of recognition of the development of the collective bargaining process in the history of Canada. There is no trace whatsoever.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I notice that there are several hon. members of the New Democratic Party who have taken up positions directly behind the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). In view of the television camera, it may be that the said hon. member might not take kindly to that. He might not want to be associated with people of that particular stripe. I wonder whether it is within the rules of the House for the hon. member to request that they take their proper seats.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is entirely open to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) to request those sitting near him to move, but I must indicate to the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) that any member may sit in any seat in the House at any time.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, give me ten minutes over there in the seat of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and I will straighten out the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: The late hon. member for Prince Albert would say of this rump sitting behind me, "Begone; I am on the track of lions, not of rabbits." Look at them, look at them.

Mr. Rose: We share a concern.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, I know that.

Mr. Deans: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: We share a deep concern about the violation of some very fundamental principles. I have said publicly that I cannot support this bill unless there is a clear indication by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) that he is prepared to bring forward or to consider seriously amendments to the legislation at committee stage or at report stage. I hope he will consider amendments which we will put forward to remove the stench and odour permeating what is otherwise an absolutely necessary step for the country to take, that step being restraint.

• (1510)

As for my friends behind me—the four horsemen of the Apocalypse—where would this country be had we given them power? I do not really want to expand on that except to say to them that they had a former distinguished leader, David Lewis, who attempted to move their party from an ideological base to a power base. Their distinguished leader now, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), did not have the knowledge and the courage—he had the power and the authority as leader—but he did not know how to move his party from the ideological base to a power base. So they will stay there.

Mr. Deans: Will you vote with us?

Mr. Forrestall: Will I vote with you? You will learn that as I proceed. I do share the concerns of the NDP, but they are not only their concerns. They do not have a—

Mr. Waddell: Monopoly.

Mr. Forrestall: I was paying union dues when that hon. member was still in diapers.

However, Mr. Speaker, this subject is too serious to joke about. I cannot accept the concept of suspending the collective bargaining process. I do not measure it against restraint whatsoever. Restraint is necessary and it must be practised by all Canadians. The leaders of our unions must accept that, and I believe that they do. I was pleased with their reaction and what appears to be a growing consensus that some action must be taken. But this does not mitigate in any way the suspension of collective bargaining principles.

There is still an opportunity for the government side to have a member rise in his place to tell the House what it intends to do about this travesty, this miscarriage of justice to a fundamental and basic human right, before the vote at four o'clock. I understand and suspect it will not do that. Their failure to do so on the grounds that they are afraid of what Jean-Claude

Parrot might have CUPW and the postal workers do, afraid he might take any backtracking by the government as grounds to withdraw services on the principle that there is a mitigation of the suspension of rights and therefore allowing Jean-Claude Parrot to authorize a slowdown or withdrawal of services under a guise within the collective agreement process, is completely unacceptable. If that is the point around which the President of the Treasury Board refuses to indicate to the House and to the people of Canada why he will not entertain or introduce amendments to correct this travesty, then he and the government have taken absolute leave of their senses.

Is he not aware that members of the postal service of this country are not, for the most part, law breakers who willingly and willfully disobey because it is fun or something to do? They are not. God knows it is difficult enough to find a job today. If postal workers were to walk out now, the government knows it could pull a Reagan and fire them. What kind of leadership could we expect Parrot to demonstrate against that kind of pressure?

What I will now say will cause the NDP rump behind me to leave. Half of them have already left. My leader and this party are squarely behind any serious attempt by the government to restrain and control excessive expenditures. We are all aware that the rate of inflation is running at 12 per cent. What I think is damaging beyond comprehension is the fact that we also heard this week that while the public sector is at least sensible enough to restrain themselves to 11 per cent, the government still rambles on at 18 per cent or 19 per cent. If my colleague, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) were here he would confirm that defence expenditures ramble on at 18 per cent or 20 per cent. Individual departments can be seen to ramble on similarly, while the general public is restraining itself to 12 per cent. It is absolute nonsense.

We have had so much thrown at us in the last four or five days—I suggest in the last 14 years. When I came to this chamber the annual inflation rate was between 2 per cent and 3 per cent. Mortgages were reasonable, the cost of money was reasonable and jobs were available. The country was on the verge of prosperity. Had the government shown any concern or leadership we would not have the problems which exist today. The country was in good shape and ready to capitalize on our wealth and the capacity of our people. That did not happen, and we are now in a mess. Mortgage rates are outrageous, the balance of trade is too great and everything imaginable is in a mess.

The government recently decided to deindex pensions. They decided upon this course of action without any consultation with the people. What does this do to the people? There is no guarantee from the government that this program will work. I hope it will work, and I will contribute to it toward its success, but there is no guarantee that it will be successful. Yet the government arbitrarily demands the deindexation of people's pensions—not necessarily those of public servants only—which was one of the few protections Canadians had against the grasping greed of the government for taxes. If the government wants to suggest a 6 per cent or 5 per cent rollback in my salary and allowances, it can take my whole salary if it will help. I survived before I came into public life 27 years ago and I will survive tomorrow one way or another. I can afford it, but do not take it out on the backs of people who have not been consulted or have no way of contributing to the debate.

I say to the government not to suggest to organized labour in this country that what it has done within the public service it is not going to do in the private sector. But of course they will. That is what I cannot accept.

• (1520)

Now I am asked how I will vote. The House leader for the New Democratic Party asks how I will vote? There is no question in my mind that I cannot support this bill. I cannot support the privation it will cause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: I cannot support the suspension of collective bargaining rights. The reasons for that have been mentioned here by others, involving questions of safety in the work place, questions of equality, and questions of special circumstances that arise. I have pleaded publicly and privately with the President of the Treasury Board to give me some indication that the government is concerned about these privations.

Under certain circumstances, people will be deprived of the right to collectively negotiate their services for almost four years. The world in which we lived in 1978, the world in which we live in 1982 and the world in which we will be living in 1986 are entirely different. Our world changes, but not decade by decade as formerly; it changes virtually day by day. To suspend the right of millions of Canadians to collectively bargain would be immoral, if it were accidental, as a result of hasty drafting. If it were deliberate, to try and thwart Jean-Claude Parrot, then it would be immoral. Therefore, I cannot support the bill. My dilemma at home, of course, is that some good Liberal or socialist will stand up and say I am opposing the bill because I want my pay. Well, I have dealt with that.

Mr. Deans: No, no.

Mr. Forrestall: I am not concerned about that. Again, I am concerned because the Inter-Union Committee Against Wage Controls states:

> Bill C-124 effectively denies 500,000 working Canadians—

It is not that I am only concerned about the 500,000 working Canadians in the public service, but I am concerned about the moral authority that the bill will give to the government to extend that denial to the private sector. My fear, beyond the principles involved, is that if the government dares to pick a war with the McDermotts of Canada, it will be in trouble; our country will be in trouble and the government will lose the attainment of its objectives, which everyone in Canada supports at this point in time, I believe.

The Inter-Union Committee Against Wage Controls describes it in the following terms:

This basic freedom, which has been the object of continuing struggle for the labour movement in this country and, indeed, throughout the industrialized world, will be removed for federal public servants and their colleagues in the para-public service. The proposed legislation goes far beyond crude and severe wage controls for federal public service workers. Bill C-124 suspends the Public Service Staff Relations Act—

That is not acceptable to me, it never has been and it cannot be in the future. There are other ways to achieve restraint.

The first part of the measure dealing with suspension is totally unacceptable. This legislation was introduced by former Prime Minister Pearson, legislation for which I have fought for 30 years. They are principles which I believe to be in the best interests of Canada in general, such as the right of employees to come together and say to the employer, "These are minimal rights that we believe are necessary in the work ethic and in the work place. We believe these to be the basic necessities to sustain our families, to clothe, house and shelter them, to ensure that they have access to higher education. We believe these are the minimum necessities if we are to have equality, equal pay for equal work, equality between the sexes in terms of access to opportuntiy through negotiation". And it goes on and on. I do not understand how the government can conceivably suspend all rights to the public servants after 15 years of responsible negotiation. This is not done in the name of restraint, because the suspension of rights is not necessary to the achievement of restraint.

The President of the Treasury Board has left the chamber. He was here earlier. I hope that he has gone out to prepare some notes because I still must decide how I will vote, whether I will abstain or whether I will support restraint, having said what I have said, and give a lie to 30 years of my life, which would be a terrible thing to do. If the government is serious, someone will stand up and say in this chamber, "Look, we are aware of the difficulties in this area. We will move to consider opposition amendments. We will introduce amendments of our own to remove this travesty, or at least seriously to qualify it." I would regret the absence of such an indication from the government, because I would perhaps have to take a position different from that of my party, which I do not want to do. I do not want to be accused, as I was in the French-Canadian press the day before yesterday, of being part of the reason for the flying apart in the Conservative Party. There is absolutely no disagreement between myself and my leader with respect to restraint, nor is there disagreement, I am sure, on the part of the vast majority of people in the country and the majority of hon. members, including those in the New Democratic Party sitting to my left, rather than behind me, where they belong. Oh, that might imply leadership. I am not sure I am acceptable as their leader.

Mr. Deans: Careful, careful!

Mr. Forrestall: I am sure that the government will have the simple, common decency to do two simple things: first, stand up and apologize to Canada for the mess the government has got them into and say, "I am sorry, but this is what we must do. We must get on with restraint." Then, above all, the government should indicate to the House whether or not it will introduce amendments in committee and whether it will seriously consider amendments brought forth by the opposition, amendments which will satisfy my deep concern about the suspension of hard-fought-for fundamental rights, responsibly used. The government should, finally, tell all those people on or very near pension why it was that it imposed deindexing upon them without consultation or public debate. It will hurt them immeasurably.

I have many reasons for opposing the bill and not voting for it. There are a lot of reasons also why I should. Overriding them all—and I speak very privately now—is simply the absolute rejection, my total, complete, utter rejection, of any suggestion that this House or that the government has any right to suspend, to defer, to cancel, to impair the rights of people to negotiate collectively on agreements for their services.

I look forward during the next half hour to hearing from the other side of the chamber some speaker on this matter. I suspect, by looking over there, that there is no one over there prepared to address those two or three questions. That will be a matter of regret for myself. It is a matter of regret, I am sure, for the people, who deserve better. Restraint can be achieved, but it will not be achieved through confrontation. It is wrong for government to impose arbitrarily such an absolutely repugnant condition and to attach such conditions to restraint as to make restraint unpalatable. There is a will to do everything that is necessary, to reduce standards, to take lower incomes—all these things are in place. I say to the government: do not blow it by confrontation.

I implore the government to consider seriously, before four o'clock, the difficulty people are placed in when fundamental human rights are suspended, rights that were long and hard fought for. I thank my colleagues, and you, Mr. Speaker, for the time that I have been given.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: He spoke before.

Mr. Kelly: No, Mr. Speaker, I spoke on Standing Order 75C, not on Bill C-124.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelly: Let me reply to that comment made by the House leader of the New Democratic Party, whose opinions I always look forward to in the House and always respect—and which may not have been caught by Hansard—he stated that, by standing, I was denying, I suppose, a member of his party, the opportunity to participate in this debate. I suppose that this is typical of the attitude of that party during this debate.

I want to put it on the record, Mr. Speaker, that in this debate today, the New Democratic Party, which comprises about 11 per cent of the membership of this House, has taken more than 50 per cent of the speaking time on Bill C-124.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I think that is an unusual and generous courtesy extended by the government to that party in this particular debate. I think it gives the lie to the sentiments expressed earlier by the hon. House leader.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I rose to speak only briefly in response to the hon. gentleman who preceded me—and who, I regret, is now leaving the Chamber.

The first point he made was to ask whether we have listened to the points that have been raised in this debate. My answer to him is that of course we have. As parliamentary secretary I have been in the House during the entire debate. Two or three Treasury Board officials have been present in the gallery each day to take note of the representations that have been made. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) and myself have read Hansard every day to confirm the statements which we heard orally earlier in the preceding day. If you take all of the things that we have done collectively, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you can reach any conclusion other than that we have listened very carefully to all the arguments that have been made by all members of this House, not only by the opposition but by the members of our own party.

As further proof of that statement, Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat some of the remarks made yesterday by the President of the Treasury Board in his intervention on the motion to introduce time allocation on Bill C-124. I will quote what he said, and I am speaking through you to the hon. gentleman who preceded me. He said:

> Many speakers have raised the question of the effect of Bill C-124 on the equal pay for work of equal value provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act. I remind members that in response to a specific question in that regard, I have indicated that it was not the intention that this bill would interfere with those provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act. I said at the time and I repeat, that to remove any uncertainty in that regard I would be prepared to introduce an appropriate amendment to the bill.

Through that statement the minister gave visible, dramatic and concrete proof that he has been following the debate and is prepared to introduce amendments in committee. It is unfair and ungenerous of members opposite to suggest, as they have, that we have not been paying attention to the statements made in the House in the last four or five days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelly: The preceding speaker has called on the government, or a spokesman for the government, to apologize for the present state of the economy. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to apologize to that gentleman or to anyone else for the state of the economy. I firmly believe that the state of the economy would be as dismal as it is now no matter what party was in power.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Kelly: The sentiments of the preceding speaker mirrored the feelings of a lot of Canadians. There is a feeling among Canadians that Canada is a paradise and because it is a paradise we should not be experiencing the same sort of economic problems that are threatening the rest of the world. But, because we are, there has to be a serpent in that paradise, there has to be a source of evil, and the source of evil is the Liberal Party or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelly: As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, that is a very prevalent feeling in Canada. There is no question in my mind that it is an inappropriate and inaccurate assessment of the basic character of the Canadian economy. Although we are blessed with riches and although we have a very highly educated and highly trained work force, Canada is a very vulnerable paradise. We do not have in Canada a closed economy that is impervious to the winds of change that are blowing through the international economic world today. Far from having a closed economy, we have the most open economy in the industrialized world; our economy is the most vulnerable to economic change. If we have a paradise, it is seriously flawed.

• (1540)

Mr. Deans: That's right, and you people have been managing it for years.

Mr. Kelly: It is a paradise that is unusually sensitive and that magnifies all the forces which are at play in the international world. If those forces are positive, then we boom; if they are negative, then we dive. There is no way we can escape the realities of the Canadian economy. That is the way we have been developed. That is the way we are, and we cannot escape that. It would not matter if we had a Conservative government in power today or—heaven forbid—a New Democratic Party government in power today; we would still be experiencing the same problems because of the nature of our economic system.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is not so, and you know it.

Mr. Fisher: That is true.

Mr. King: How about President Reagan? You have not mentioned him yet.

Mr. Kelly: It is an unwillingness to recognize that very basic fact about the Canadian economy which allows hon. gentlemen opposite to continue their unproductive posturing. The longer Canadians posture and the longer hon. members opposite continue to give rhetorical responses to the very real difficulties we face, the longer it will take us to reach the very real and productive solutions we must reach if we are to solve the problems we have.

Mr. Deans: How can we solve them if we benefit when things are good and suffer when they are bad? What are you talking about?

Mr. Kelly: The best thing we can do at the present time when things are bad is to minimize the impact of the four influences to which I have referred. And, we must prepare our economy, our industry and our people for a change in the wind, for a rebirth, or renaissance, of the economic boom I think all of us believe will characterize the international economy in the mid and late eighties.

The last point raised by the hon. gentleman who preceded me was that, in its response to our present situation, the government is trying to take the heat off itself by focusing attention on other groups in society, which the government hopes it can successfully make scapegoats. We are not attempting to do anything of the sort. We are not singling out any group in society. There is not one group in society to which we are pointing and saying, "You are to blame, and therefore you have to bear the brunt of the program of restraint." There is not one, and I resent the implications of some and the direct accusations of others that there is.

What we are trying to do is to break the "What's in it for me" syndrome which seems to have captured the spirit of the Canadian public. Every time there is a budget, the first thing people say is, "What's in it for me?" It does not matter what their position in society is; they all say, "What's in it for me?" What we are trying to do is to ask Canadians to understand that they must stop saying, "What's in it for me?" and understand that they must begin saying, "What's in it for the country?" That is the key. What is in it for Canada? What is in it for our children? What is in it for our neighbours? What is in it for our communities? What is in it for our posterity? That is the key. If we can understand that we are trying to change that "What's in it for me?" attitude to an attitude of "What's in it for Canada?", we will have taken the first step on the road to recovery. If a person can understand that it is important for him to make a concession in order that someone in his family gets a job, someone on his street gets a job or someone in his neighbourhood gets a job, then the chance of his holding on to his job and his prosperity is greatly enhanced. It certainly is greater than if we were to ignore the interests and concerns of our fellow Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being 3.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, July 15, 1982, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill now before the House.

The question is on the motion of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Johnston), which was agreed to on the following division:

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES BY VOLUNTEER FIREMEN

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to allow volunteer firemen who receive no allowance from a government, municipality or other public authority, to deduct from their income expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties as volunteer firemen.

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise on this motion today and to express the concern of all the firemen probably in every rural community—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I think the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) is somewhat at a disadvantage. Those members who are choosing to leave the chamber could perhaps do so in the next moment or two and the Chair will then be able to recognize the hon. member for South West Nova.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my motion is to amend the Income Tax Act so as to allow a volunteer fireman who is faced with an expense to receive an allowance. The section in Question is Section 6(1)(b)(viii). It allows such power of the aggregate of allowances received by a volunteer fireman from a government, a municipality or a public authority for expenses incurred by him in respect of, in the course of, by virtue of the discharge of his duties as a volunteer fireman, and does not exceed $500.

My motion today is in respect of the many volunteer firemen who do not receive an allowance from a municipal body or from a government. Volunteer firemen have expenses. They have the same type of expenses in rural as in urban areas of Canada. As everyone in this area knows, a constituency such as South West Nova is similar to many other constituencies across Canada which depend on these voluntary services of those who serve fire departments.

I am sure everyone in this chamber will recognize without a doubt that the contribution and expertise of volunteer firemen to communities ensures the safety of people's homes and places of business, and that in general communities are protected against fire and other hazards.

When a call comes, these firemen drop whatever they are doing and answer the call. They could be at work, at a social event, or anywhere else, but they respond immediately. They do not think about what they are wearing or about what is happening except that they must go to fight a fire. They often do so at great expense to their own family's income.

What I am asking is that the extension of the Income Tax Act also apply to those volunteers who do not receive an expense allowance.

Volunteer firemen not only save the people in their communities from expense but they save municipal governments, provincial governments and the federal government. This amounts to many millions of dollars each year.

I am asking that the income tax branch of the department give a special status to volunteer firemen whose expenses are not covered. I am also asking for special status to be given to this volunteer group, in acknowledgement of the fact that there are many volunteer groups across Canada who work very hard on a day to day basis and are not recognized in the income tax system.

I would like the House to recognize the special status which volunteer firemen have. Their jobs go on for 24 hours a day. They cannot anticipate what damage will occur to their own personal clothing, shoes, or whatever. These expenses are often incurred as a result of fighting fires. There should be a tax break accorded to them.

Someone might argue that whatever they are wearing is old clothing. But one has to take into consideration that firemen do not know when a call to fight a fire is made.

In my own riding some firemen have to buy their own dress uniforms even though they may be volunteers in a fire department. Sometimes these people like to have a dress uniform, but there is not enough money in that rural community of a few hundred people to support these purchases. Perhaps through fund raising a local fire department is able to acquire dress uniforms, but the ability to replace them is not there.

Firemen lose a lot of clothing in fires. Some have huge cleaning bills. They have to purchase new shoes in some cases and there is the expense of dress uniforms. All of these things are important enough to warrant special status in the Income Tax Act.

How can this be implemented? I have spoken to some fire chiefs in my riding. They suggest a point system. In working with the Department of Finance, one of the items which that department says will be prohibitive is the deductions of expenses for volunteer firemen, who are not paid any allowances. This would not only significantly increase the cost of this concession, the cost to the Canadian people—and I will deal with that shortly—but it would also increase the administrative cost of ensuring that the expenses are reasonable.

The fire chiefs with whom I have spoken agree with the point system. We could take the activities of volunteer firemen and percentage them. For example, if we took into consideration 100 per cent of the activity of an individual fireman, he would be entitled to 100 per cent of a set deduction; but if another fireman gave 50 per cent of his personal time, he would be entitled to 50 per cent of the same set deduction. The deduction which I am suggesting would be the same as the one for people who receive an allowance, at a maximum amount of $500. I know this point was discussed when there were changes to that budget in 1981. At that time there was a discussion concerning raising the amount from $300 to $500. I think it could be worked on a point system.

Who would administer it? Why not the fire chiefs of each area? They know what is the participation of the volunteers in their own areas. If such a system were adopted, and if fire chiefs were keeping track of the percentages of participation in a given year, it would work. Also it would have the effect of perhaps increasing the awareness of volunteer firemen. It might encourage people within the community to volunteer for work within the fire department. Sometimes it is very difficult to obtain volunteers.

One deterrent to volunteering is the personal expense. It is a personal commitment of time, but it is also a personal expense from their private incomes because they must supply or replace clothing which is lost or damaged during a fire.

Surely it is a terrible feeling if a person is called from work at three o'clock in the afternoon to respond to a fire—if it happens to be a set type of work where the person wears a uniform or special clothes for his work, and he is called away to attend a fire, and, as a result of that call for help in his community, his work clothes are destroyed, he must go out and purchase another outfit in order to return to work the next day. The Income Tax Act does not take this situation into consideration. I would suggest that it should be included in the act.

In fact, I think the Income Tax Act now discriminates. When the deduction was increased from $300 to $500 under Section 6(1)(b)(viii) of the act, one argument was that it would discriminate against full-time firemen versus volunteer firemen. The act discriminates against firemen who give of their time, without receiving any deduction from their personal income taxes or without receiving an allowance from a given municipal body because that body or people in that rural area do not have funds.

Representatives of the department have indicated that perhaps Canadians will not like an additional tax benefit for these people because it would be given to one group of people at the expense of Canadian taxpayers. There are many Canadian taxpayers living in rural communities who appreciate the concerns and problems within municipal and village fire departments. I do not think they are asking for a large deduction. I hope I have the support of the House for this motion which is asking that all volunteers receive the deduction and that there be a point system set up for the active participation of volunteer firemen. I do not think Canadians would begrudge the additional burden which would be created by amending Section 6(1)(b)(viii) to include volunteer firemen who do not receive any financial assistance from a municipal body.

In closing, I should like to say that this subject is of grave concern to local fire departments. I have been pressed by many people within my constituency in this regard. I am sure there are many hon. members in the House who can identify with the problem. Granted, some of them come from cities with paid fire departments and some come from areas with municipal governments which can provide assistance because they are wealthier than other areas of Canada, but I think volunteer firemen across Canada who do not receive expense allowances should be included in the Income Tax Act. I know this may create an additional burden upon some Canadian taxpayers, but we must look at the work done and the many millions of dollars saved by fire departments each year for Canadians and for all levels of government. I think the House should support my motion today.

Finally, I realize there are many volunteers across Canada in different organizations who feel that they should like to have a tax advantage for participating as volunteers. I am not making my request on behalf of that group because I know there is an ongoing study which is looking at volunteers and their roles, but I am asking for a special status for volunteer firemen who cannot pick and choose their hours of work; they are available and on duty 24 hours a day. Their expenses, because of responding to their duties on behalf of communities, are sometimes not recouped anywhere in the system, except out of their personal incomes. We are talking about ordinary Canadians who are giving ordinary people across Canada the benefit of their services. I think volunteer firemen should be recognized. They should be given a tax deduction similar to what is in the act. By allowing the fire chiefs to operate it on a point system, it would work. This motion should be looked at seriously and passed today by the House.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief and to the point in presenting my party's point of view on this matter. I congratulate the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell). I hope she does not have to run away after presenting this motion to the House; hopefully, she will remain to vote on the matter before we finish today.

The hon. member paid a great tribute to many Canadians who volunteer their services to fight fires whenever they occur. I see the resident firebug is now leaving the House, the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). He has done more to burn down the forests of Canada than any other person.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is not nice, David.

Mr. Nickerson: The hon. member paid tribute to many Canadians who volunteer their services and undertake risky work for which they should receive the thanks of all citizens.

We on this side of the House have supported this idea for some time. It is not a new idea. It has been with us for many years. There were provisions in the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) of a few years ago to address this problem. It is strange that at that particular time that budget, which included this important measure, was not voted in the affirmative by members of either the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party. It was one of the good provisions of that budget which might well have been brought forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his budgets.

• (1630)

The whole question which is raised today demonstrates the inflexibility of the Income Tax Act and the income tax system. After all, what has been asked for are fairly minor technical changes which do not carry any real financial consequences for the Government of Canada. Billions of dollars are not involved. It is something that, with a little bit of thought, we should be able to clear up in a timely manner.

However, this does not seem to be the case. There seem to be many other instances of inequities in the taxation system, similar to the one we are faced with here, which are never dealt with. I do not know the reason. Maybe the people in the Department of Finance do not have the time to address these small details which cause so much consternation on the part of many Canadians.

I would like to congratulate the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) on the thought she has given to the details of how this might be put into law. She described a point system which might be one method of dealing with it, but there might be other ways as well. However, we are not talking about amendments to the act or regulations which might be made at this point, just the general concept of recognizing in the income tax system the expenses which volunteer firemen incur in the course of their services.

I hope that this motion, which has been presented by the hon. member for South West Nova, will not be talked out. I hope that the House will be as willing on this Friday to deal with this matter as it was last Friday to deal with the question of the Holidays Act in the quick way in which it got around the problem of changing the name of Canada's national holiday. At that time, when it appeared to be in the government's interest, it just slipped through quickly.

Some hon. Members: All parties agreed.

Mr. Nickerson: I hope that, in the interest of volunteer firemen right across this great Dominion of Canada, we can expect similar treatment this afternoon.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues in the NDP I am happy to rise to support the motion of the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell). Certainly, of all the many voluntary or part time voluntary groups who contribute to our society throughout Canada, none perhaps is more deserving than the voluntary firefighters thoughout Canada in terms of the time and effort they expend in volunteer services and the sacrifices which they are prepared to make and which some have made.

I think the record should not necessarily correct, but clarify, a remark made by my friend, the hon. member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) a few moments ago. Along with the defeat of the budget in 1979 was the defeat of a measure it contained which would have increased the exemption from $300 to $500. But that is one of the items that was included in the first budget, following their nine-month period in office, of the current Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), following representations from a number of members from this party and, I am certain, from others as well. It is not enough that the exemption should have been raised from $300 to $500. The request has certainly been made by associations of volunteer firefighters and fire chiefs across the country that expenses of $1,000 would be more appropriate. Perhaps this sum would even more appropriately represent the energies, the time and the potential sacrifices made by these people across the country, most of them men, but an increasing number of women, who contribute to the welfare of their communities in these ways.

A letter which appeared in the February, 1980 edition of the Canadian Firefighter written by a volunteer firefighter, I believe is very appropriate. I will quote one paragraph from that letter which reads as follows:

> If you take everything into consideration, the hours we spend, the cost of our vehicles, maintenance, fuel, etc., let alone our clothes, loss of sleep, the freezings we take at 40 degrees or 50 degrees below, we might come close to breaking even, but paying income tax on the little we get for trying to help our community sure as hell looked after that; now I feel we are out of pocket.

The one problem that I see with the motion before us is that it appears to be unduly restrictive and insists that this provision would only be applicable to those volunteer firemen who receive no remuneration whatsoever. Certainly for those who receive some remuneration, the amount is usually so small as to make us feel that they should not be prohibited from receiving some additional assistance where their actual expenses warrant. This would come closer to the reality of facing their costs and situation.

I certainly think that members, especially members from rural ridings across the country, are very aware of the contributions that thousands of these volunteer firefighters make in many of our smaller communities. Not only are they not paid, many of them who are called out to a fire sacrifice significant amounts of pay from their regular jobs in addition to sacrificing their time and putting themselves at risk in the service of their communities. It is quite an onus on those individuals, who give up wages at $12 to $14 an hour, who are already sacrificing their time to begin with.

I hope that members on the government side as well as those of us in the opposition will see our way clear not to talk this bill out but to act upon it and ensure that these thousands of hardworking and self-sacrificing Canadians finally receive some of the remuneration which we feel is appropriate for their services. I know that in my constituency alone and in the neighbouring area, both in West Kootenay and East Kootenay, there are literally dozens of communities in which these volunteer firefighters not only sacrifice their own time but contribute considerable amounts of money as citizens to pay for equipment. As my hon. friend for the Western Arctic, said respecting areas in the north, there are many smaller villages in our areas where there is no significant tax base to allow for even very basic equipment. In my area people will go out to hold bake sales or raffles in order to acquire money to buy an old truck to fix or to get some equipment which very often is not much better than a garden hose. They will sacrifice their time and efforts and money in order to get better equipment. They sacrifice their time in lost wages as well in order to assist their communities. In the communities of Fernie and Sparwood in East Kootenay, in the community of Creston at the south end of Kootenay Lake and throughout the very small areas which are spread out in my riding of Kootenay, which has long valleys and rivers and mountain passes, there is no way that organized communities would be able to get vehicles and the manpower out there to assist in outbreaks of fire in those smaller areas, even if they were able to. They are almost impossible to reach, particularly in winter weather. Sizeable communities, such as Slocan, Siverton, New Denver, Nakusp, or Castlegar may have a full time chief, but it is the volunteer firemen who play a very valuable role.

Many people who already contribute much of their time and their money work as volunteer firefighters. Many people within industries, whether sawmills, pulp mills or other industrial establishments, contribute their time and effort in training. In some cases, they receive some slight remuneration, but in others they work on a strictly voluntary basis. Of course, it is in their interest to save their work places as well as their communities from fire. Because these people have the training, it is natural that they are often selected or volunteer to assist the community at large.

In addressing ourselves to the House, my colleagues and I certainly hope that this recommendation is supported so that thousands upon thousands of self-sacrificing Canadians will finally be given the kind of treatment under our taxation system that they deserve. I would like to make one final comment. At a time when the government and many Canadians are talking about restraint, what greater contribution could any group of people make than by saving literally hundreds of thousands of dollars in direct ways, from one end of the country to the other, through their volunteer work? Certainly, if we are not willing to accord some measure of proper recognition to those who make all of these sacrifices at their own expense, then our appeals for other forms of restraint will begin to sound rather hollow. The little bit it will cost us to see that these people receive their deserved compensation will be next to nothing compared to the vast amount of money we are saving by their contribution and their sacrifices.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I want to take the opportunity to inform my colleagues in the House that I have no intention of talking this bill out. I assume that the clock runs out at five o'clock, and I will stop speaking considerably before 5 p.m. I also want to take the opportunity to say how much I regret that the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), who supports the bill, felt it necessary to take the opportunity of speaking on this bill to attack the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) in a rather needless, immature way and also again to attack the decision of this House a week ago today with regard to the Canada Day bill. He knows very well that that bill was passed by the House with hon. members representing all three parties in the House, and the House supported it. I do not think it behooves any of us to make derogatory comments about the decisions of the House.

In any case, I am happy to be able to lend my support to the motion today. I believe it is a motion whose time is past due. Voluntarism in the country is a very important social force in the fabric of various communities of this nation. There are many hundreds of volunteers who do many kinds of community work, but there are none whose voluntarism is more necessary to literally thousands of communities across this country than that of the voluntary firemen. They not only provide an essential service at no manpower cost to the various communities, but they also put their physical wellbeing and even their lives on the line to protect the lives and property of the communities in which they work. It would seem to me that we must take into consideration the amount of property damage that may be prevented by their voluntarism, which I am sure would run, in any year, into millions of dollars, if not even into billions. We must take into account the amount of injury that is prevented because they are there and willing to go into burning structures to save lives and to save people from injury. We can never calculate the debt the nation owes to these people for the lives they have saved, because how does one put a value on life? They save the country a good deal of money as well by preventing the injuries of which I have spoken. We must bear in mind that when someone is injured in a fire, very often the treatment for such injury is very long and costly. Therefore, every time a fireman helps to prevent an injury, he saves the community money in hospitalization, medication, rehabilitation and other medical fees. Every time a volunteer fireman saves a life, he saves the country the payment of support to the widow and family of the person whose life may be taken by a fire.

I think, generally speaking, the communities in which those people serve show their appreciation in many ways for the efforts of voluntary firemen. I would think that it would be a credit to this Parliament and to the nation if we passed this motion today as a symbol of the appreciation of this nation for voluntarism and particularly for voluntary firemen. It will not cost the nation very much, and I find it a little difficult to accept that it is so hard to devise a regime by which this motion could be implemented. Surely if paid firemen can deduct expenses from income tax, people who volunteer, receiving no pay, should be able to deduct expenses incurred in their voluntary work of saving property and lives. They, too, should be able to deduct the expenses they incur.

I do not think that when we make that request here in the House, we are asking for too much. Through Your Honour, and speaking directly to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher), I ask him to lend his support to the motion so that the House can pass it today and give an instruction to the Department of National Revenue to devise a regime whereby voluntary firemen in this country will be able to deduct up to $500 from their income tax for the expenses they incur in the exercise of their voluntarism in the service to their communities and to their fellow men and women.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I really appreciate the opportunity of entering this debate. I have appreciated some of the comments made to the House this afternoon, particularly those of my good colleague and friend, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) and, of course, those of the mover of the motion, the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell), both of whom have brought to us a sense of the contribution that ordinary people make to strengthen the firefighting work in our country.

In my remarks this afternoon, I will be very careful to indicate that I do not in any way wish to downplay the importance of the contributions by firemen or other volunteers across our country. We live in a time when people tend to think that the government should be doing a lot of things to strengthen our country, and we forget that most of the strengthening and most of the hard work done to improve the quality of life is done by volunteers.

• (1650)

In my own community of Mississauga, for example, we have a special dinner every year, to which are invited just the heads of volunteer organizations from our city. It is always a sell-out. There is always at least 350 to 400 people there. Each of them represent scores and hundreds more in their own organizations. Those people are contributing enormously to the depth of activity and the quality of life in Mississauga. When we approach a topic like this and we talk about it here, we should always remember to be careful to recognize the contributions that such people make. Not everything is done by the government, and not everything that the government does has the same quality or the same importance as that which volunteers do.

Mr. Deans: Look at the budget.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, it has been some 26 months since this motion was placed on the Order Paper. In the interval there have been some developments that are very relevant to this specific question. I would like to pass along some of the technical facts, just to get everything into perspective.

For one thing, in Bill C-54, which was passed last year, the Income Tax Act was amended to increase from $300 to $500 the amount of expense allowance which a volunteer fireman could receive from local government authorities on a tax exempt basis. I suggest that this amendment demonstrated that Parliament does recognize the important role played by volunteer firemen in many of our communities, and that Parliament is prepared to provide some financial support in this way.

Of course, the tax system is often used to further our social goals. We find that to be the case when the tax system gets involved with child tax credits, with job stimulants, with pensions, with the health care system, or with transfer payments to the provinces.

Even though the responsibility for providing municipal services, including fire protection, rests on local and provincial governments, the tax exemption that was added through Bill C-54 helps in an indirect way to shift some of the cost of volunteer firefighting services to the federal government. Undoubtedly the cost to municipalities of using volunteer firefighters would be higher if the expense allowances paid to the volunteers were subject to income tax. So the increase in the tax exemption allowances is one development that has occurred since this motion was introduced 26 months ago.

A far more important development, however, has been the material change in our economy during that time and a change in the government's ability to take on very large programs for new expenditures. For example, the budget introduced in June provided for substantial amounts of money to go to job-creation programs, to housing stimulants, to help for small business, to support for families, to extra help for farmers and fishermen. It is also noteworthy that this help for these specific sectors, for these specific programs, came as a result of savings that were generated inside the government's existing revenues. We did not find new revenues and we did not embark on new spending programs. We re-allocated the money so that the new stimulants we provided, or the new programs we undertook were paid for from existing planned revenues.

In the face of the very serious problems that are facing our economy, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has called on all of us to exercise a considerable degree of discipline and restraint. That, to a very mild degree, runs in the face of the motion that we have in front of us here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance would accept a question?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to answer any question that would be helpful to my colleague.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the parliamentary secretary, too. I wonder if the parliamentary can inform us if, to his knowledge, the officials in the Department of Finance have done any cost analysis relative to the implementation of this motion; and, if so, what the figures are? Could he also tell us at the same time whether, when they were doing that cost analysis, if indeed they did it, they made any effort to do a cost analysis of what it would cost the various municipalities across this country, and even some of the unincorporated areas, if there were no volunteer firemen; and how the two figures might compare?

Mr. Fisher: Those are two good questions. I can assure the hon. member that it would be possible to get that information because, as I mentioned a couple of moments ago, we changed the exemptions. We had existing exemptions and we know what those are costing us, so it would not be a very difficult matter at all to judge how much the increase would add to the burden on the federal treasury. The information is there. I do not have it right now but I would be more than happy to collect that information for the hon. member.

The hon. member has asked me a second question. He wants me to compare that information with the cost of the damage by fires, or the cost of professional firefighting services to the local municipalities. I regret I do not have that information available to me at all. I would be guessing if I were to try to answer that question for him. However, we do have the information on the existing exemptions. I will dig that out, and I am sure we can judge how the impact of a higher exemption would affect income.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Thank you.

Mr. Fisher: I was mentioning a couple of minutes ago, Mr. Speaker, that the mood of the recent budget is that we must take great care to find funds before we begin any new programs or expand any existing programs. I note that probably matches the public mood. The public probably is prepared to support a considerable effort toward voluntarism where it exists now or in new areas in the future. I do not think the public will endorse a whole new set of government expenditures in areas where volunteers are already in action.

I mentioned the general financial facts in order to emphasize the seriousness of the economic situation that we are facing at this point. The proposal submitted by the hon. member for South West Nova would not, of course, involve very large amounts or very large costs to the federal treasury; and we will get the specific number. But at a time when we are asking public servants and other people across the country to tighten their belts and to accept a degree of restraint in the fight against inflation, it seems consistent to ask people not to extend their exemptions under the Income Tax Act, whether it be one particular group or volunteers. It seems to me that when we are asking our people here in Ottawa, our employees, to take a lower rate of pay, at the same time we cannot embark on brand new programs that will cost the federal treasury a lot of new money.

It is always an attractive idea for Members of Parliament to support some ideas, some kinds of tax concessions for various taxpayers, but these special tax arrangements involve a cost that must be covered by increasing taxes from other taxpayers or, as was done in the budget, by re-allocating existing tax money. So, if we say yes to one special group, can we really say no to another group that has an equally appealing case?

In my own area, for example, there is a little search and rescue group that is involved in emergency work. They have their own vehicles, they have cars, they have radios in those cars, they have special clothing, and so on. That is a very similar sort of experience as a volunteer fireman.

In addition to that, we have some volunteer rescue people who go out on Lake Ontario when pleasure boats get into trouble. They, too, incur expenses in the same way as volunteer firefighters. I wonder if we should be considering them under this kind of proposal.

The tax exemptions for allowances paid to volunteer firemen is an old long-standing provision that was introduced at a time when their volunteer services, were often the only way that many communities could get fire protection. We must realize that there comes a time, and I think this is one of them, when we must draw a line and resist requests for additional concessions under the tax system. I think that at this point in time the public mood is in that vein as well.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I call it five o'clock, I understand that the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) may wish to transmit the good wishes of all those present in the chamber to all those here, whether in the chamber or in the visitors' galleries, for a good weekend. I am also informed that the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) has indicated his desire to express his best wishes that the Chair have a good weekend.

Pursuant to these unsolicited good wishes and pursuant to Standing Order 2(1) I do now adjourn the House until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REVIEW OF BRITISH COLUMBIA REGIONAL OFFICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, in view of the disparity between the limited, in-house review by assistant deputy minister Goodwin announced by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the comprehensive independent inquiry recommended by all members of the House standing committee, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House urge the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to arrange that Mr. Goodwin appear before the members of the standing committee in order that he may be fully informed of those anxieties which resulted in the recommendation from that committee for a full and independent inquiry into affairs and activities of the British Columbia regional office and the Westbank Indian band.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CALL FOR RETURN TO PRIVATE OWNERSHIP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, whereas Petro-Canada and over 400 other Crown corporations are in a special income tax position, namely, they pay much less, and in many cases pay no income taxes or direct taxes, and whereas this erodes the tax base resulting in higher income taxes for the rest of us, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the government immediately return Crown corporations to private share ownership so that those companies can pay their fair share of taxes and citizens can receive tax relief.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SECTION OF INDIAN ACT AFFECTING WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It has been seven months since the Charter of Rights was given Royal Assent in Canada. The primary objective of the entrenched charter is to remove all forms of discrimination in Canada. The most blatant contravention of the Charter of Rights is that of the discrimination against Indian women in Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That the government immediately introduce legislation to remove Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act and thereby accord the same status to Indian women as to Indian men.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CALL FOR INVESTIGATION OF LIVING COSTS IN NORTH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. A recent survey conducted in three northern communities reveals that the price of essential foods such as milk, hamburger, eggs and bread are, on average, 80 per cent higher than in Ottawa. There is a pressing need to alleviate this disparity between northern and southern prices. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House call upon the government to initiate a task force on the cost of living in northern Canada, in order to investigate the causes and identify solutions to the high cost of living in the north.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

DISCRIMINATION BETWEEN RURAL AND URBAN AREAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that Canada Post is embarking upon a policy to assure, at higher postage rates, one-day service within a limited number of specified Canadian cities but allows the continuation of unsatisfactory services in many other cities and throughout all of rural Canada, and since persons living in larger urban centres have free door-to-door delivery of mail, whereas rural people of necessity must rent a post office box at rates of $12 to $20 per year, and since urban persons throughout Canada enjoy the privilege of a private telephone while rural business persons may undertake hundred thousand dollar business deals while several neighbours listen to the conversation on a party line, and the same policy applies to cable TV which serves villages but not farm persons, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House deplores the discrimination in public service between rural and urban Canada and will no longer tolerate any further examples of such bias on a rural-urban basis with public funds.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SMALL BUSINESS

NEGOTIATION OF DEBT PAYMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Every day small businesses are being forced into bankruptcy and receivership as a direct result of high interest rates. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the government immediately table a bill similar to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act which would allow our small business people to negotiate a repayment schedule with their creditors, and save negotiations at gun point such as happened here in Ottawa last week.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

CALL FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE EXAMINATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of this House to protest the continued lavish waste of the government. In view of the fact that four Liberal cabinet ministers, led by screech Rompkey, flew on Friday to St. John's, Newfoundland, to hold a farce described by one of the few businessmen in attendance as nothing but a free booze-up, and in view of the fact that the Minister of Energy last month flew to Europe on the Air France Concorde while forcing his staff to fly on Air Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House immediately strike a committee composed only of opposition members to look into the drinking and flying habits of the geese and beavers across the way and, in particular, to investigate the $127,000 expenditure of the Solicitor General to design and test Liberal riot control helmets as these may soon be required for Liberal ministers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, across Canada directors of social service agencies and crisis centres, policemen and clergymen, are stating that one of the major impacts of the current economic recession is a noticeable increase in family violence, including wife battering, incest, and child abuse. As one measure which can be taken to alleviate these distressing and brutal symptoms of the economic turndown, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the government move immediately to implement the recommendations of the all-party committee on family violence in Canada, to ensure that the serious problem of wife battering which now exists in Canada is dealt with on a priority basis.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AID

REDUCTION IN DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The June 28 budget calls for a reduction in development assistance for other countries by $75 million this year and $100 million next year. The government rationalizes this cut in badly needed aid by claiming that we will continue to allocate the same percentage of our gross national product since our GNP has also declined. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That the government recognize that development assistance must have priority, that it restore the $175 million it slashed, and that it take immediate economic action to stimulate growth in our own economy instead of using a falling GNP as an excuse for cutting aid.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELIVERY OF REGISTERED LETTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, Canadians are suffering generally from a crisis of confidence and nowhere is this more evident than in the loss of confidence and absolute frustration with our postal service. This is one of a litany of horror stories. A constituent of mine, Mr. Colwell of Barrie, mailed a most important registered letter at a cost of $2.15 on Saturday morning, July 3, 1982, to Toronto, the supreme distance of 50 miles. Post Office officials guaranteed Monday morning delivery. The letter was finally delivered at 11.30 a.m. on Wednesday, July 7, 1982, only after a pressing phone call. Therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the cost of each registered letter not delivered within 48 hours be deducted from the salary of the president of Canada Post and perhaps he will recognize the plight of Canadians with regard to their postal service.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the government's desperate preoccupation with seeking out scapegoats on which to place the blame for the mismanagement of our economy, the most recent being public servants, low income families and recipients of old age security benefits, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

• (1415)

That this House expresses its amazement over the recent assertion of the Prime Minister that the Canadian public are to blame for the government introducing a measure to limit indexation of old age security payments, and that the Prime Minister's name be put forward as the person most likely to be the winner of this century's "making Machiavelli look like a pussycat" award.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENSIONS

PRODUCTION OF GREEN PAPER ON PENSION REFORM

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I direct my question to the minister responsible for the status of women. Less than 30 per cent of working women in Canada are now covered by private pension plans, whereas almost twice as many men, over 50 per cent, have such plans available to them. Every month that pension reform is delayed means that twice as many women are denied the opportunity to take care of their retirement in old age. When will the government, which gave a commitment to come forward with a green paper on pension reform last fall, last winter, last spring, and again this month—and now that has been postponed—come forward with a green paper on pension reform so that it will begin to deal with the pension inequities which exist for women?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, very soon; but I would like to add that no one is more aware than I of the inequities which exist in the pension scheme in Canada as it applies to women. We have been made even more aware of that by a number of seminars which have been conducted across the country, paid for by and large by grants from the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Much of the green paper deals with statistics which have been made available to us through these pension seminars. I assure the hon. member that that green paper will be out very soon.

Miss MacDonald: Very soon is no response to the great number of women across the country who are awaiting and have been awaiting pension reform for years.

STATUS OF WOMEN

IMPACT OF MICROTECHNOLOGY ON WOMEN WORKERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the minister another question. It deals with the impact of the microtechnology revolution on the jobs of a million women, women who work in banks, in stores, as clerks and as stenographers, women who stand to lose their jobs in the next few years. Therefore retraining of these women must be on a priority basis. Since the new National Training Act has been in effect for some weeks, what new programs are ready to be introduced by September, by the beginning of the school year, in vocational and technical schools and in plants throughout the country, so that these women who stand to lose their jobs will obtain retraining on an urgent basis?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that by September vocational and secondary schools, which are under the jurisdiction of the provinces, will have to see that proper courses are in place. One major obstacle to retraining programs—I have talked with a number of educators, and this fact is coming forward more and more through the task force which is going across the country headed by Dr. Margaret Fulton from Mount Saint Vincent University—is that those women who have not received proper training in high schools and universities are not in positions to take advantage of the training programs, and that training must begin at the elementary and secondary school levels.

Miss MacDonald: I am not sure whether the minister is aware of the act which the Minister of Employment and Immigration brought forward. It is called the National Training Act and is sponsored by the federal government.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INFORMATION PROGRAM

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I should like the minister to tell me whether or not, as part of the program which the federal government could introduce, there is anything in the way of a public information program to begin to inform women of the dangers that lie ahead of them in the employment field because of the microtechnology revolution. At the present time the Governments of France and Japan have major public information programs designed to alert women to the impact which microtechnology will have on their jobs. Will anything of this nature be introduced by the federal government so that women will be aware of the need for retraining and begin to look to nontraditional roles and into training in the new technology?

• (1420)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands has been. That is exactly what this government has been doing for the past two years. We have a task force headed by Dr. Margaret Fulton, running across this country ascertaining the problems that exist. The hon. member knows that the federal government sponsored a seminar here just three weeks ago that was paid for by this government to examine the problems of microtechnology and how they impact upon women. She should be better informed.

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—BOARD OF REVIEW REPORT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the report by the Hazardous Products Board of Review on UFFI been submitted in writing to the minister?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Madam Speaker.

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE TABLED BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, the minister told the National Advisory Council on UFFI on June 19—that is one month ago today—that he would have that report within two weeks. Will the minister table the report of the Board of Review before this House adjourns for the summer recess?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is true that I indicated to the National Advisory Council that I was hoping to get this report within two weeks. This was the indication that I had received, that the report was almost completed. Unfortunately one of the three members of the committee is seriously ill. In fact I told the members of the committee at that time that indeed the member was in hospital. Unfortunately, I understand that he has returned to hospital and has not been able to complete his part of the report. Therefore, we are all waiting for this report. We hope that the gentleman will recover quickly and be able to finish his report in the coming days.

FINANCE

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT PRICE CONTROL GUIDELINES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. On "Question Period" the President of the Treasury Board said, "We must limit price increases." Does that apply to all government agencies and, in particular, does he believe it should apply to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain has his view on price increases which he has expressed a number of times. It seems to be in firm agreement with my remark. He will have to await the specific details of what the federal policy will be.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—INCREASES IN RENTS AND PRICES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, while I am waiting for the firm details of the government policy, perhaps the minister would be kind enough to tell us whether or not there will in fact be a government policy with regard to price increases, and whether he thinks that it is reasonable that accommodation, which accounts for about 30 per cent of the expenditures of the incomes of the majority of families, should be left free, as is the case of CMHC, to the point where increases in excess of 20 per cent on rents are now being approved, and where increases at the level of $2,000, $3,000 and $4,000 on top of the prices being charged prior to the budget are now being levied on homes being made available for sale by CMHC?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member is making the House aware of some news that has already been expressed. With respect to the policy, though, the issue of administered prices was specifically addressed in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Deans: Since the minister seems reluctant to explain to the House what he feels he should have explained to the public, it was the minister, not me, who said the price increases should be limited.

VANCOUVER MARKET RENT INCREASES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Does the minister think it is appropriate to increase the rental costs to the merchants at Granville Island market in Vancouver by 200 per cent to 300 per cent during this period when the government, as it says, is working hard to try to bring the levels of wage increases down to the level of 6 per cent and 5 per cent?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, in his premise to this particular question the hon. member is saying that I would make something available to the public that I have not made available to the House. My recollection of the exchange in "Question Period" is that there were no specifics advanced with respect to any particular area, certainly not the issue of housing—

• (1425)

Mr. Deans: Why are you saying that?

Mr. Johnston: —which he raises, and concerning which he now asks me for a personal view. The fact is that the issue of administered prices was addressed in the budget by the Minister of Finance as a general principle.

TRANSPORT

MIRABEL—MAISLIN TRUCKING COMPANY—VIA RAIL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I have a cluster type question to ask the Minister of Transport. When will the minister make up his mind, or at least announce his position with respect to Mirabel, the position with the Maislin Trucking Company, and when will we receive the working paper or the draft bill for VIA Rail?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the question concerning Mirabel is before cabinet, as everyone knows. I believe that in a few days the announcements could be made. On Maislin, which is not my main responsibility, similarly; and on the VIA bill, I have already indicated that I was hoping to give it to the House of Commons Committee on Transport in the fall.

PRESENTATION OF PAPER ON VIA RAIL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): In terms of VIA, when estimates were being considered by the transport committee the minister said that he hoped the working paper would be before the transport committee in May or June and that Mr. Giroux had it ready, or words to that effect. Will the fact that Mr. Giroux has now been appointed deputy minister of national revenue affect the presentation of the working paper for consideration and meditation over the summer, even before we see the draft bill?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker, the discussion paper is quite advanced, but I did not think it would be necessary to push officials to finalize it because the committee will not be studying it during the summer anyway. I thought we could take the extra time to complete it, polish it, and present it in a style which is worthy of the quality of the members of that committee.

CONSIDERATION OF MAISLIN CASE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport and it is with regard to the Maislin case. There is much concern in the Canadian Trucking Association involving a loan guarantee or a grant, whatever the form the government might see fit to decide in the Maislin situation, feeling that a precedent would be created in the trucking industry. With the $20 billion plus deficit the government is carrying this year, does the minister feel that the Canadian taxpayer can afford these bailouts?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Whatever feelings I have on that subject at this time are reserved for expression in the committee of cabinet which looks at this particular issue, but I want to reassure the hon. member that we are quite aware of the possibility that this could be presented as creating a precedent.

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister one short, supplementary question. To the present time loan guarantees or so-called bailouts have generally been related either to the energy sector or the manufacturing sector. Should this step be taken with Maislin, the government, I would think, would then be strongly moved into the service sector as well. If the government bails out one section of the service sector, such as Maislin, will it use the same criteria for others who will come to the government with the same requests?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am quite aware that up until now the regulations have applied only to manufacturing, and not to services. What I will say is only theoretical as we are discussing ideas now, not decisions; but should this be extended to the services it would be on the basis that services are quite as useful in society as manufacturing, and also provide much employment. Consequently, there might not be justification for treating services separately from manufacturing or resource development.

EXTERNAL AID

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, I would like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. Every Canadian knows that the problems and the economic woes of Canada are caused by government mismanagement, excessive spending, and so on. At no time was this more evident than a week ago Sunday when viewers of W-5 were informed of the profligate spending of CIDA involving a mismanaged project in Haiti. The minister will know that there were no specific acts of Parliament establishing CIDA and that no authority has really been given to it. Its operations are legal only through the provisions of the Appropriations Act. Would the minister use his good offices to persuade the Prime Minister that, unlike VIA Rail, and unlike metric, this matter will be debated in the House and a proper act will be forthcoming?

• (1430)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am not sure what specifically the hon. member wants to debate in this House. We have heard his views, which by and large have been very negative in terms of foreign aid programs, and which I suspect are not shared, frankly, by many other members of his party. If that is the issue he wants to debate in this House, then he might take the opportunity of putting forward a motion and have it debated. It would be interesting to see whether other members of his party share his view.

In terms of the specific CIDA projects, we in the Treasury Board have been concerned with cost overruns or management issues in CIDA projects, just as we are in all other projects. Ministers of the Board have taken an interest in a number of CIDA projects which are subject to particular forces and particular difficulties, for a whole variety of reasons which I would not want to take up the time of the House at this point to explain. In any event, I would like to assure the hon. member that the management questions in CIDA are looked at on an ongoing basis by the Treasury Board.

ACCOUNTABILITY TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, we are all interested in the humanitarian aspects of CIDA, but now that we have a Freedom of Information Act I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board if he will stop the practice of $1 votes which has led to such slipshod mismanagement and the support of such dubious projects with immunity from parliamentary scrutiny, and will he move quickly to bring CIDA's financial operations in line with the accepted norms of estimates, with accountability to Parliament and the people of Canada?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, nothing is of greater concern to members on this side of the House than improved accountability and improved management of all aspects of the Public Service, including CIDA. It seems to me we have taken very important initiatives in that regard including, for example, the new form of estimates which perhaps the hon. member has had the occasion to examine. I do not recall receiving any comments from him, but I would be happy to receive representations if he feels that they are in any way inadequate or not satisfactory in terms of the information he requires with respect to CIDA programs or other programs.

On the subject of $1 votes, Madam Speaker, we have been scrupulous in observing the ruling which you yourself handed down last year in the preparation of the main estimates and in the preparation of supplementary estimates since that time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

AMOUNT OF FUND DEFICIT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for Finance in the absence of the Minister of Finance. In the budget papers which were released on June 28, the Minister of Finance estimated a deficit in the unemployment insurance account of $2.2 billion. In the "Budget in Brief", distributed on Friday, there are figures which indicate that the deficit will actually be $3.1 billion. Which figure is correct?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I will check both documents. I have not seen the document "Budget in Brief" referred to by the hon. member. I will check both documents and also the figures, and I will let the hon. member know which amount is correct. If I am not mistaken, the official figure in the budget documents was $2.2 billion.

[English]

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE INCREASE IN INSURANCE PREMIUMS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the figures I referred to in the "Budget in Brief" are on page 10. As I read it, those are the only figures which are different from the original budget figures. In view of this serious shortfall of revenue, is the government considering an increase in unemployment insurance premiums on January 1 and, if so, how much?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member may recall that the Unemployment Insurance Act provides for a mechanism whereby premiums are automatically adjusted annually, in relation to the amounts drawn on the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and every year, cabinet must review the level at which premiums are to be set. This exercice will take place this year as well, but right now I am not in a position to inform the hon. member what the amount of the premium will be.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

INVESTIGATION OF MARKETING PRACTICES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, on Friday the Minister of Agriculture responded to the very serious problems revealed by the Auditor General's comprehensive audit of the Canadian Dairy Commission by stating that he had asked the RCMP to investigate the Commission's marketing practices. I would like to know why the minister has delayed taking action for such a long time, and why he has not removed the persons responsible for these unacceptable practices from the Commission? Or is criminal investigation, followed by trial and sentencing, the only way these people can lose their jobs? Specifically, will the minister ask for the resignation of the Chief Commissioner, as our party suggested he do last January 7?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows full well, if he has read the Auditor General's report, that what he says is not right. The Auditor General really makes no accusations in the report. He suggests some things, and it is my duty to make sure those things are proven one way or another. Until someone is proven guilty, they should not be condemned or fired as the hon. member is suggesting. That is the procedure I am following, on legal advice. The inquiry will go on, and if there is any wrongdoing then those who are guilty should be penalized.

Mr. Hovdebo: Meanwhile, Madam Speaker, many millions of taxpayers' dollars go by the board.

REQUEST FOR FULL-SCALE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I would like to follow along on that answer and look into the minister's own handling of this situation. The Auditor General completed his report in March, or shortly afterwards. The Commission was permitted to respond in April. The RCMP investigation was announced two and a half months later. Why did it take two and a half months for the minister to change his mind when the Auditor General's report put forward the reasons for criminal charges much earlier, and will the minister guarantee to this House right now that any RCMP investigation will include all activities of the CDC, not just marketing practices?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes great sweeping statements about the Dairy Commission. I would challenge him to point out where the wrongdoings are suggested in that report on the Commission. I would ask him to make it clear where those charges are made by the Auditor General. I asked the Auditor General to do an intensive report on the Dairy Commission, and I received it in late May. If you will notice, there is no suggestion in that report about an RCMP investigation or anything. I asked for that myself quite some weeks ago. I do not know how far the investigation has progressed, but it has been under way for some time, not just since the report was tabled in the House.

I say the Dairy Commission is very well run when we compare it to nearly any other organization, and I will stand behind the Commission until I am proven wrong. We have depended on the Auditor General's report in the past, and the Commission is challenging some of the statements in the report and are asking for an independent auditor to come in and make a survey of his report and the Dairy Commission's operations because they are sure they are not operating as badly as the hon. member for Prince Albert has said they are operating. I am not, nor do I think anyone wants me to be, the kind of person to condemn someone on the kind of suggestion that the hon. member is making, saying that there is a waste of millions of dollars. That has not been proven, and the Auditor General's report does not say that either.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REVIEW OF BRITISH COLUMBIA REGIONAL OFFICE

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has read the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, together with the minutes of the committee which led up to the recommendation for an independent inquiry into certain aspects of the B.C. regional office activities. Is the Minister of Justice concerned with the type of limited internal review which was announced on Friday, when it is considered that both the standing committee and officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development consider that a full and independent inquiry is necessary?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, this is a problem that comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The minister did not ask my opinion on this matter, and I did not examine the report. I know that legal advisers from my department work at the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but no report on the matter has reached my office.

• (1440)

PRE-REVIEW RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, can the Minister of Justice inform me whether he has made recommendations to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to institute the very limited internal review which was announced on Friday, and which many may consider to be a cover-up? I ask that question in light of a recommendation which came from an official of the department suggesting that perhaps the RCMP should be involved.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, a decision was made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to have an internal inquiry. If something is found, we will act accordingly. However, there is no need at this moment to have an inquiry other than the one decided by the minister.

ROLE OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, was the Minister of Justice consulted by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development before the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development took the decision to reject the unanimous report of the standing committee and opt for an internal inquiry? Was the minister's department consulted?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I cannot say whether my department was directly consulted. I know that some Department of Justice lawyers do work for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I cannot say whether they were consulted. I will inform myself and advise the House.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we have an undertaking from the Minister of Justice to report to the House as to whether there had been a legal opinion given by government lawyers before the decision taken by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will the Acting Prime Minister personally, or request that the Prime Minister personally interest himself in this question which is of extraordinary importance, because the government has acted against the considered recommendation of a unanimous committee of this House of Commons regarding the need for a public inquiry?

Instead of following Parliament's advice for a public inquiry, the ministry has chosen a private inquiry. Will the Acting Prime Minister give an undertaking that there will be a report to this House by the Prime Minister as to whether the Prime Minister is personally satisfied that it was appropriate for this matter to be handled by a private rather than a public inquiry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I just heard with my own ears the Minister of Justice saying that he was going to do this himself. He is fully grown, intelligent, able, and has a good relationship with the Prime Minister. I am quite sure he can do it on his own. The House and the public are witness to the commitment which he made to the Leader of the Opposition a moment ago.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE IN INQUIRY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister has spent a good part of his life evading questions. He knows that the only undertaking given by the Minister of Justice was the undertaking to report as to whether legal officers had been consulted. I am asking whether the highest level of government, the Prime Minister, approved a private, secret inquiry, against the recommendation of the standing committee for a public inquiry. I would like a report on that at a later time. The minister can take it as notice. Will the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice tell me whether the RCMP was involved in any aspect of the case under consideration by the private inquiry within Indian Affairs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have nothing further to add to the answer I just gave. In any case, the RCMP is not the responsibility of the Minister of Justice but that of the Solicitor General.

[English]

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE ROLE OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me ask the Solicitor General whether the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are involved in any way whatsoever in any aspect of the matters under investigation by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the matters referred to by the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and by my colleague from Okanagan-Similkameen.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I cannot answer that question. The RCMP does not consult the government about investigations and does not take direction from the government about investigations. It does not require terms of reference for investigations. Its terms of reference are the Criminal Code and other federal statutes. It operates under a tradition of independence which I consider it my mandate to preserve.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPLICATION OF LIMITATION ON PENSION INDEXATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The June budget mentioned that indexation of the pensions paid to public servants will be limited to 6 per cent. Can the minister tell us if the 6 per cent maximum will apply in a retroactive fashion to retired servicemen who have not yet qualified for indexation under the 85 rule but who will, of course, qualify at some later date?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the question asked by the hon. member for Victoria is a complex one. I carefully read his speech in the House last Thursday on the same subject. He has made a point which has to be evaluated. I would point out, however, that the funds in the pension fund are not only from the employees. For example, in the pension fund of the defence department, the defence department supplied over $247 million in contributions to the fund this year. However, if we want to reduce the pension indexation factor to 6 per cent at a certain point, in order for this government to bring inflation down to 6 per cent, I think it will be successful. In a couple of years I do not think any employee of the department will lose anything if we have 6 per cent inflation, and their pensions are indexed at 6 per cent.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, sometimes in the past the minister has missed my question by quite a bit, but that exceeded the limit.

QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, obviously the statement in the budget about capping indexation is going to require that a bill be introduced in the House. Perhaps the minister or the House leader can tell me when it is their intention to bring such a bill into the House. If it is not for quite some time, will the government tell us its interpretation of the indexation catch-up which is part of the 85 rule?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, sometimes the hon. member for Victoria could be more clear in his questions or give me notice when a question is too complex to answer in the House. Otherwise, I suggest he place his questions on the Order Paper and we can answer them. This matter can be discussed with the House leader as far as the bill is concerned, or with the President of the Treasury Board with regard to the time mechanism, whatever is decided.

AGRICULTURE

MINISTER'S ELECTION PROMISE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. During the last election campaign the minister promised he would keep farm production prices down and that he would establish a special fuel price structure which would be exempt from federal taxes. Since the minister has resumed his duties as Minister of Agriculture, he has presided during a period of time in which interest rates have almost doubled, fuel prices have doubled, and fertilizer and pesticide prices have increased by 30 per cent. He is now a member of a government that is proposing a 45 per cent increase in the freight rate on grain—

An hon. Member: Ask the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will ask the question. I simply ask the minister whether he is satisfied that he has honestly fulfilled his election promise. If not, what action is he taking or contemplating to ensure that that pledge will be fulfilled for the farmers of Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I do not know what research the hon. member is using for all those statements that I made, because if he is reading speeches I gave during the election campaign, those were not prepared.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: They were made in the heat of debate, you could almost say off the cuff, but there isn't any cuff there!

Miss MacDonald: What is on your shoes?

Mr. Whelan: The record clearly shows that my record is as good as the hon. member's in fulfilling promises made during the heat of an election campaign.

• (1450)

I would compare the production costs my farmers in Canada pay with those paid by any farmers in any part of the world with whom Canadian farmers compete. I ask the hon. member to be fair and recognize that the cost of production of food in Canada is, if not as reasonable, more reasonable than the cost in any other part of the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CAPITAL GAINS TAXES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the minister would permit me to remind him of another election promise he made in the same speech in Alvinston, Ontario, on January 31, 1980. He said:

Inequities in income tax legislation regarding farmer capital gains taxes will be removed—

He went on to say he would provide the option to farmers of a valuation day of either December 31, 1971, or December 31, 1974, whichever was the greater. He also said his party:

—would also give farmers a once-in-a-lifetime capital gains exemption.

How is the Minister of Agriculture coming along with the fulfilment of those promises?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, as humbly as I can say it, slowly. If we check the budget of November 12 and the budget of June 28, we will see that we have made some terrific gains.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: We are not giving up yet, in any sense. The committee which has been appointed by the Minister of Finance will be looking at this very matter. I would hope such a learned person as the hon. member who asked the question would make a presentation to that committee on just what he thinks should be done. We hear all kinds of opinions on what should be done and what should not be done. Let the hon. member or any of his learned colleagues make a presentation. There are some very brilliant people on the other side of the House. Perhaps they should make suggestions. It would be the first time they made suggestions to overcome some of the difficulties they are talking about. I have been listening and waiting for them to make suggestions, but they have been very slow to make any.

SHIPBUILDING

POSSIBLE CREATION OF MINISTRY FOR MARINE TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the issue I would like to raise with the Minister of Transport probably does not require the responses of a stand-up comic.

My question deals basically with the announcement the other day that Dome Petroleum has received approval from the B.C. government on the Rim gas project. In the past it was intended that four LNG carriers would be built, two in Canada and two in Japan. Now the announcement is that there will be no shipyard on the west coast of Canada and that five LNG carriers will in all probability be built in Japan.

Federal Commerce and Navigation has built four bulk coal carriers offshore for the northeast Coal project. Two drydocks, one for Dome and one for Burrard, have been built in Japan. A stacker-reclaimer for the coal port was built in Japan. CP Ships has reregistered 23 vessels, half in Hong Kong and half in Britain, instead of in Canada. The government has consistently failed to tie our trade relationship to the UNCTAD convention which would provide that 40 per cent of our exported and imported goods would move in Canadian hulls. Several months ago the Prime Minister gave a commitment—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member really have a question, or is he simply making a speech?

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I will move quickly to it. In aid of explaining where the hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs have gone, would the Minister of Transport explain whether the government has made any progress in considering the creation of a ministry of state for marine transportation which would implement a marine industrial strategy which would gain for Canadians some of the hundreds of thousands of jobs we are currently giving away?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there were at least seven questions in the hon. member's introduction. On the question of creating a marine section in Transport Canada with, presumably, a politician responsible for it in the House, I presume this is one of the questions the Prime Minister always has in mind. If he decides to do this, we will be informed of it. The previous government had such a minister in charge of the marine aspect of the Department of Transport. It is a precedent which exists, and might be repeated, but this is a matter for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I must apologize for the preamble being so lengthy. There was only one question. Thirteen major vessels and hundreds of thousands of jobs have been given away. That is where the minister was confused.

SPIN-OFF BENEFITS FOR CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a second question. The fire sale of Canadian resources in the petroleum, base metals, forest products and coal sectors has resulted in a problem. Dome Petroleum, which turned off those drydocks, those vessels, those LNG carriers and probably the four carriers to be developed for the Arctic pilot project, is deeply indebted to the Japanese. Because of that indebtedness with respect to financing, would the Minister of Transport agree that it would be very difficult for Canadians to trust this company any further to capture for Canadians the industrial spin-offs which would come from the shipbuilding and allied trades, and would it not make sense for the government to intervene in these contracts to ensure that the spin-offs do accrue to Canadians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, that is why last year, in spite of NDP opposition, we passed the Canada Oil and Gas Act, which includes a very strong clause to ensure Canadian benefits in terms of goods and services. We had to fight for this clause against the opposition of members of the New Democratic Party. We finally got it in, and now we are establishing agreements with the various companies operating in the oil and gas field in order to ensure the maximum Canadian benefits in terms of goods and services. This is producing results at the present time.

The point raised by the hon. member is exactly the point in question. The proposal Dome has put forward and which has been recommended by the Government of British Columbia still has to be approved by the Government of Canada. I have discussed this issue with Dome representatives—and with Japanese representatives when they came here recently—and stressed the importance we attach to Canadian benefits resulting from those sales. That is what this government is doing consistently, thanks to the legislation we presented to Parliament and passed, despite the opposition of the NDP.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN NATIONAL LIVESTOCK RECORDS COMMITTEE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As the minister is probably aware, the Canadian National Livestock Records Committee is hoping to computerize its operation, which would give it a complete linkage with the record of performance programs, agricultural fairs and exhibitions. This would have the effect of making all information more readily and more accurately available to the whole livestock industry. I would like to ask the minister if he supports such a worthwhile program and, if so, would he consider giving some assistance, technical or otherwise, to get this program off the ground?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am very much aware of the program. I met with the manager, or director, of livestock records for Canada and went over the program very quickly with him last week. If we can assist with funding, we will.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EFFECT ON INVESTMENT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is now recognized that the national energy policy has caused an outflow of investment capital at an unprecedented rate. This has caused a massive drain on the Canadian dollar, resulting in astronomically high interest rates, business recession across the country, and unemployment at an all-time high. Canada is now not considered by the investment community of the world as a safe place to invest.

Mr. Peterson: Nonsense.

Mr. Shields: When will the minister do something to reverse this situation and make Canada a safe place to invest?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am afraid there is little I can do about the hon. member's personal nightmares.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I would not expect much more from the minister.

DEVELOPMENT OF OIL SANDS IN NORTHEASTERN ALBERTA

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, it is generally accepted that the reserves in the oil sands in northeastern Alberta exceed the known reserves in the Middle East. Is the minister or anyone in his department working toward developing the oil sands in northeastern Alberta?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Madam Speaker.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,162, 4,306, 4,327 and 4,360.

RCMP SECURITY INTELLIGENCE MANDATE

Question No. 4,162—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

1. What are the sources of authority for the RCMP's security intelligence mandate?

2. Did the government ever issue guidelines to the RCMP as to how the cabinet directive of March 27, 1975 should be interpreted?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. Section 44(e) of RCMP regulations and orders, made pursuant to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, specifies that in addition to the duties prescribed in the act, "it is the duty of the Force to maintain and operate such security and intelligence services as may be required by the Minister". The government has provided explicit direction with respect to the investigative services to be provided by the RCMP in support of the personnel security clearance programs of departments and agencies as required under the terms of Cabinet Directive 35. The RCMP may also engage in broader security intelligence investigative activity on the basis of direction provided by the cabinet on March 27, 1975.

2. No.

McDONALD COMMISSION REPORT

Question No. 4,306—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

1. Did page 1,012 of the second report, volume 2 of the McDonald Commission state that the English and French versions of Section 5 of the RCMP Act differ, causing an ambiguity in the meaning of this section?

2. Did the Solicitor General instruct his department to consider those remarks as it draws up a legislative response to the recommendations of the commission?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. At page 1012 of the second report of the McDonald Commission, it is stated that "—section 5 of the RCMP Act is open to two interpretations". It is suggested that the English version is ambiguous while the French version is not. At page 1013 the following appears: "We think that the statute should be amended to effectuate the recommendations which we will be proposing, and such amendments would, we believe, eliminate any existing ambiguity."

2. The remarks on pages 1012 and 1013 of the second report of the McDonald Commission relating to ambiguities in respect of the French and English language versions of section 5 of the RCMP Act are being considered by officials of the Ministry of the Solicitor General within the framework of a general review of the recommendations of the McDonald Commission.

DEVELOPMENT OF MINI-CARS

Question No. 4,327—Mr. Gurbin:

Is there any encouragement for individual Canadians or Canadian companies to develop mini-cars similar to the mini-cars now being produced by the Japanese and which will be available on the Canadian market in the near future?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: Canadians and Canadian companies have come forward with ideas for small mini-cars similar to those being produced by the Japanese.

These ideas have been encouraged and the federal government, both in Industry, Trade and Commerce and Transport Canada, have worked with people involved to foster the ideas and endeavoured to obtain support from the private sector in order that a viable opportunity can be presented and be eligible for financial support from the government. No viable proposition has yet been received but continued encouragement will be given to any Canadian with a good feasible idea.

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEMS

Question No. 4,360—Mr. Herbert:

With reference to the answer to question No. 4,240, what were the reasons given by the health ministries of British Columbia and Quebec for non-participation with the government in the funding of the development of managment information systems for health institutions?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The British Columbia Ministry of Health already had a similar study underway in co-operation with the British Columbia Hospital Association, but will be providing its findings, reports and manuals as its contribution to the national project.

The Quebec Department of Social Affairs has already developed an adequate information system suitable to its purposes, such that a new management information system was not an urgent priority in a period of severe financial restraint.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

[English]

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, from time to time Members of Parliament rise in their places to ask why a certain question has not been answered. I have had a question answered after nearly two years on the Order Paper. I find out, however, that the question is really still not answered. Like Eliza Doolittle in "My Fair Lady", all I have is words, words, words. The answer has no bearing on question No. 3,370. I should like an explanation why, after waiting two years for an answer, the response makes virtually no sense at all.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not recall the specific question that my hon. friend refers to. I suggest that he should place another question on the Order Paper seeking clarification of the points he felt were not dealt with. I will do my best to get him an answer as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-125, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before outlining the main aspects of Bill C-125 which requires additional borrowing authority for the current year, I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to elaborate on the government's financial requirements as they appear in the context of the last budget.

Many people were surprised at the size of the deficit we forecast in the last budget. At this time I should like to dispel a number of concerns that have been made known to us in this regard. I am also anxious to correct a misinterpretation that has been spread about following the announcement of these forecasts, that the government extended its programs in a period when austerity is essential.

I believe it is important that Canadians get a true picture of the facts in this matter and that they realize that the government has allotted itself just one additional discretionary expenditure since the November budget. This was the sum of $400 million allotted to direct job creation and the extension of variable entrance requirements for unemployment insurance benefits.

In view of the present circumstances, I believe that Members of Parliament will agree with me that this is not an extravagant expenditure. The government chose to maintain a reasonable attitude by calling for solidarity and sharing by all Canadians in order to be able to provide some assistance to the unemployed, home owners and businesses in difficulty. The government is calling for moderation and discipline to steer the economy back to recovery so that soon everyone can benefit from the growth in permanent jobs and the improvement in real incomes.

• (1510)

[Translation]

Then why has the government's deficit grown to such alarming proportions? The answer is relatively simple. The deficit of some $10 billion forecast in the November budget was based on the expectation that the economy would slow down somewhat. Growth expressed in real terms was expected to drop from 3.6 per cent for 1981 to only 2.2 per cent for 1982. However, the slowing in economic activity was far more serious than expected and, in this respect, the government's forecasts were no different from those made by private organizations or other public institutions. We are now expecting a definite decline in economic activity or, in other words, a negative growth rate of 2 per cent. In plain language, everyone guessed wrong, including the government. The extent of the recession has considerably aggravated the financial situation facing the government. The decline in production, employment and income, all of which is due to the recession, has resulted in a loss of revenue for the government of about $4.5 billion. A drop in international oil prices and the reduction in certain energy-related taxes announced recently in the National Energy Program Update have cut an additional $1.6 billion from the budgetary revenues forecast.

Finally, adjustments to the November budget measures also reduced estimated revenues by about $300 million. Thus, because of a weakening in the economy, we have a $6.4 billion decline in revenue.

The recession has also had a major impact on government expenditures. High interest rates have increased public debt charges by $1.1 billion. Energy-related expenditures, which were carried forward from last year, added another $1.1 billion to expenditures for the present fiscal year. Furthermore, the total outlays target was increased by about $300 million to accommodate a number of employment-related initiatives and by another $160 million to allow for the impact on fiscal transfers to the provinces. These and some other minor upward adjustments to the outlays target were partially offset by reductions of $280 million in planned spending within the Energy envelope following the National Energy Program Update. The net effect of all these factors is to increase total outlays by $2.6 billion over the November budgetary forecasts.

Mr. Speaker, the $2.6 billion increase in projected expenditures plus the $6.4 billion decline in government revenues add up to a total of $9 billion, and that is why the $10.5 billion deficit forecast in November has had to be revised upward to $19.5 billion. This, in turn, means a substantial increase in the government's financial requirements, which have risen from $6.6 billion to $17.1 billion. One of the main components of the increase in financial requirements is the roughly $2 billion increase in unemployment insurance payments. Mr. Speaker, I believe that, in the light of this information, Canadians will understand that the increase in the government's deficit or its expenditures is in no way due to a voluntary act or lack of control by the government. In fact, I indicated that the $2.6 billion increase in expenditures was to cover areas that are of vital importance in view of the present recession. The projected increase in the government's deficit and financial requirements in relation to previous forecasts reflects, as I explained before, the automatic response of revenues, the unemployment insurance program and public debt charges to the acute recession we are experiencing today. Considering the size of our economy, this deficit does not constitute a precedent, compared with the deficits our own country and even foreign countries have known in the past ten years during periods of cyclical weakness.

More specifically, if we compare the Canadian deficit with that in the United States, Germany and Japan for this year and last year, we see that the Canadian situation is not much different from the situation in those countries. In fact, expressed in percentages of the GNP, we find that for Canada it was 1.2 per cent in 1981 and will be 4.4 per cent in 1982. In the United States, it was 0.9 per cent in 1981 and will be 3.5 per cent this year; in Germany, it was 4.5 per cent and will be 3.8 per cent this year. In Japan, it was 4 per cent in 1981 and will be 3.4 per cent this year. If we compare the government's present financial situation to the situation during the far less severe recession in 1978-79, we find that the government's financial requirements for both years are exactly the same, namely 4.8 per cent, expressed in percentage of the GNP. As for the budgetary deficit, it was 5.3 per cent of the GNP in 1978-79 and is now expected to be 5.4 per cent. If we compare our financial requirements for the current year with those in the United States, we see that their requirements are not much lower than ours, namely a little less than 4 per cent of the GNP, compared with 4.8 per cent in our own country. Finally, if we make comparisons on the basis of national accounts, we find that the Canadian deficit is only slightly higher than in the U.S., namely, 5.2 per cent of the GNP, compared with 4.8 per cent. Incidentally, when comparing deficits, we must also take into account the relative capacity of each government for financing its deficit. In Canada, for instance, the personal savings rate is generally higher than in the United States.

In 1981, for instance, the savings rate was as high as 12.4 per cent of disposable income in our country, while it was only 5.3 per cent in the United States. This means that the Canadian government's ability to finance the deficit is greater, percentagewise, than it is in the United States. In fact, in financing a deficit which proportionally—and I stress the word proportionally, so as to spare the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) further astonishment—would be the same as in the United States, Canada would have more savings available for private investment because of the very substantial difference in savings rates between the two countries. During the first quarter of this year, the personal savings rate in Canada rose to its highest level ever, namely 13.3 per cent. Although our deficit is substantial, there is a considerable body of savings in Canada today, waiting to be invested in our economy.

Mr. Speaker, the government is still convinced that a substantial reduction in the deficit would merely aggravate our economy's present cyclical weakness. In its last budget brought down on June 28, the government was determined not to add to the deficit and it has achieved this goal. The government was also determined to find ways of creating jobs and sustaining economic activity, without adding further to the projected deficit. That goal has also been achieved. By reallocating expenditures and through tax changes, we have been able to provide $2.3 billion for reducing unemployment and helping sectors that have been severely affected by the recession and by high interest rates. We have been able to achieve these seemingly contradictory goals by applying the principles of solidarity and willingness to share and we have appealed to Canadians to reciprocate in kind. We have asked them to give up certain benefits to help the unemployed and to help troubled sectors of our economy.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the House that the government remains committed to its policy of reducing the deficit in the medium and long term. Financial requirements have gone from 4 per cent of the GNP in 1979-80 to 2.5 per cent of the GNP in 1981-82. Mr. Speaker, I want Canadians to realize that the same forces that are instrumental in bringing about a cyclical increase in the deficit are also instrumental in reducing the deficit when the economy starts its recovery. As soon as the government's appeal for moderation and discipline with respect to wage demands and other inflationary expectations has been heard, prices as well as interest rates will finally go down. Economic growth will start up again, businesses will be able to make reasonable profits, investor confidence will return and production will increase. Workers who are now laid off will be hired again, and new jobs will be available to young Canadians graduating from our colleges and universities. Government expenditures to support the sectors most severely affected at the present time will no longer be necessary, and as the employment rate goes up, unemployment insurance payments will go down. More jobs will mean more people who are able to pay taxes, and businesses that are thriving again will also increase the government's tax revenues. The present increase in the deficit as a result of the recession will also be automatically absorbed as the economy recovers.

Automatic stabilizers are necessary to sustain income and employment in a recession. They must be allowed to operate to avoid making the recession worse. Mr. Speaker, I am sure Canadians can clearly imagine what the consequences would be if a government refused to take its responsibilities in this extremely difficult period and decided to cut unemployment insurance benefits or slash expenditures that provide income for Canadians until the economic situation improved. As I said before, the government's requirements for the current fiscal year will be much higher than expected. As indicated in the June 28 budget, we shall have to borrow $17.1 billion during the current year. Since April 1, the government has already borrowed $3.5 billion, which it was able to do pursuant to borrowing authority granted in the course of previous fiscal years and still unused. However, the balance of the unused borrowing authority will automatically expire as soon as the bill is passed. We have already obtained borrowing authority for $6.6 billion under Bill C-111 which received royal assent on June 17, 1982. The loan of $3.5 billion plus the $6.6 billion already approved by Parliament add up to a possible total borrowing authority of $10.1 billion, while the government's financial requirements, as I said before, are $17.1 billion. Therefore, a new borrowing authority for $7 billion will be necessary to meet the government's new financial needs. Bill C-125 now before the House is proposing to add an additional borrowing authority of $4 billion to the supplementary $7 billion, in order to provide sufficient room for manoeuvre in coping with contingencies. Mr. Speaker, I therefore move that Parliament adopt a new borrowing authority for $11 billion.

Generally speaking, the government requires some room to manoeuvre, over and above the projected financial requirements, in order to deal with any unexpected cash requirements. These may arise as a result of government exchange transactions. In past years, additional borrowing authority of this kind has remained at about $3 billion. Under Bill C-125, the government is seeking borrowing authority for up to $11 billion, $4 billion of which, as I said before, will be a contingency fund, which, if it has not been used by the end of the fiscal year, will be carried over to the following year. Again, all unused borrowing authority carried over from previous years will expire as soon as Parliament has passed the present bill. The bill contains a provision dealing with the government's authority to contract and reimburse loans in foreign currency, a purely technical provision which, Mr. Speaker, has been included in previous borrowing authority bills during the last three or four years. Over the years, Canada has contracted loans and made settlements in many different currencies. Recently, however, this provision was added to confirm the right and authority of the Government of Canada to contract loans in foreign currency. Hon. members will recall that there is before the House a bill aimed at amending certain parts of the Financial Administration Act. The bill in question contains a provision in Clause 39.1 as a result of which, in the future, it will no longer be necessary to repeat this provision in borrowing authority bills.

As of April 1 of this year, we had borrowing authority for $3.6 billion under authority granted in the course of previous fiscal years, and as yet unused. When Bill C-111 was passed on June 17 of this year, that gave us an additional borrowing authority for $6.6 billion, bringing our total borrowing authority up to $10.2 billion. Between April 1 and June 30, we used $4.6 billion of that amount, leaving us with borrowing authority for $5.6 billion. I shall indicate briefly how the borrowing authority for the $4.6 billion was used. We first financed about $600 million on domestic markets. The remaining $4 billion was financed on foreign markets, that is, $3 billion was obtained by using standby credit while another $1 billion was raised through a European bond issue last June.

In the course of the year, government transactions on the exchange market brought about a substantial increase in the government's cash balance which is about $3 billion at the present time. However, the government needs these funds in order to cope with the present instability and uncertainty on the exchange markets, and therefore cannot use them to finance the country's cash requirements at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now explain why the government wishes to obtain supplementary borrowing authority at this particular time of the year. First of all, we want to give hon. members an opportunity to consider a request for additional borrowing authority in the light of financial projections which were updated and submitted in the November budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). We also want to have the greatest possible flexibility in planning the debt program, so as to take advantage of market opportunities as they occur and thus maximize utilization of the various sources of financing available to the government, obtaining them at the best possible rate for the benefit of Canadians. The government finances its requirements through three main sources: marketable bonds, Treasury bills and Canada Savings Bonds. For proper planning of its borrowing authority and debt program, the government must have the flexibility to use the tools at its disposal to achieve the best possible balance of financing instruments. For instance, I must point out that the annual savings bonds campaign requires lengthy preparations and accounts for a significant share of the borrowing authority. Hon. members know that the interest rates of those bonds are set for the first year and so those issues are considered as a source of short-term capital. When the interest rates are high, the yield of those bonds is an enticement for the public, but the government can benefit from the expected lower interest rates in the following years when the new rates are announced. If the government did not have the appropriate borrowing authority long enough before the bonds are issued, it would be unable to make the necessary publicity campaign, with the result that undue pressure would be brought to bear on other financing methods such as negotiable bonds and treasury bonds, which in turn might increase even more the cost of servicing the public debt. Mr. Speaker, hon. members realize that the government's borrowing program will be rather heavy in the coming months. I might point out that it will be the responsibility of all members to act in such a way that the government will be in a position to plan those borrowings as efficiently as possible. For that purpose, the government must be have the necessary authority to plan its own financing.

Most of the program must be financed during the nine remaining months of the fiscal year and it will be practically impossible to stagger new borrowings because of a temporary lack of borrowing authority without having to pay higher interest costs for financing our debt. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that Canadians understand that the higher deficit is due to the automatic response of the stabilizing agents in our economy and that in the extremely hard times we are going through, it could be even more difficult for Canadians to accept drastic cuts in government expenditures to reduce the size of the deficit which is justified if we are to live through the extremely acute recession we are in now.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would accept a question at this time.

Mr. Bussières: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wilson: I was trying to follow the figures which the minister put forward during the course of his speech regarding the use of the borrowing authority. I wanted to make sure that I was correct. I would appreciate it if he would clarify the figures. Will the borrowing authority take him to the end of this fiscal year, or will part of these funds be used in the course of the following fiscal year?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, there is a clause in the bill to provide for an additional margin of operation of $4 billion which might be carried over until the following fiscal year.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am a baseball fan, and I remember when the changes were brought in to the American League; assuming that a batter was not quite up to being able to knock the ball out of the infield, they brought in a designated hitter. It is pretty clear that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) felt he was not able to come in and defend the atrocious $20 billion deficit and the demand for money which the government does not need and cannot justify, given its absolutely incapable handling of public expenses in the past. We do not have a designated hitter here. We have a designated apologist sent in by the Government of Canada.

An hon. Member: He is a very weak batter.

Mr. Clark: He is a very weak batter.

The minister has had three strikes, three budgets, and he has fluffed all of them. If he were a man with any honour at all, he would not simply be absent from his place today; he would be absent from his place forever. He would resign from the House of Commons; he would resign as Minister of Finance.

I really do not know who the minister thinks he is trying to fool with the figures and the excuses he brought in today. First of all he said——and I think I understood correctly. I clearly heard what he said, and he said that as far as jobs in Canada were concerned he had been successful. And what a success! What about the workers at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft of Canada Ltd. who are no longer employed today and who had jobs before the government launched its economic policies? He managed to create unemployment among people who, before his government was elected, were working for Dofasco, a company that for the first time in Canada's history has now been forced to lay off people who have been working there for many years.

[Translation]

[English]

The list goes on through RCA, through the people with Ingersoll-Rand, through the thousands of people in the textile industry and through the women who were mentioned by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) today, women suffering from unemployment more seriously than anyone else in the country. The minister of state for the status of women said, "Oh, they are all right; we are sending around a commission of inquiry to find out what is going on". They are not all right at all. It is absolutely unforgivable behaviour for the minister to come into the House and pretend that the government have succeeded with their employment policies. If success is to throw hundreds of thousands of Canadians out of work, then they have succeeded. But if they have any sense of responsibility at all, they must realize that their anti-investment policies and their tax policies which discourage Canadians from putting money into the country are the reasons so many Canadians are out of work today. It is inexcusable for this minister to come in here and pretend that there has been a success when there has been such abject failure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Then there is this nonsense about comparing us with other countries and saying that our deficit is no more serious than the deficit in the United States. The minister knows that on a per capita basis the deficit borne by individual Canadians in the country is almost twice as great as the deficit borne by citizens of the United States of America. We are doing almost twice as badly as the government of the United States which the Minister of Finance, when he finds the courage to come to the House of Commons, has the effrontery to castigate. We are doing almost twice as badly as the Americans, and that is nothing to crow about. The minister should come in here, clothed in sackcloth and ashes, and ask the forgiveness of the House of Commons and the people of Canada.

Then the minister talked about the government's anti-deficit policies having worked. Those anti-deficit policies worked, in their being 100 per cent wrong. When before, in the history of any government, have we had a situation where the minister brings down a budget in November, says the deficit will be $10 billion to $11 billion, and is proven to be 100 per cent wrong only seven months later? He will blame the world for that. This minister, this designated apologist for the Minister of Finance, is the kind of fellow who would solve the Rubik's cube by painting each one of the little cubes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Also he said that they have not started any major new expenditure programs. Well, they have kept going an awful lot of little expenditure programs which add up. Let me quote from The Toronto Star:

> On Monday night, Charles Lapointe, minister of small businesses and tourism, joined with Gerald Regan, minister of fitness and amateur sport, to throw an opulent bash for the players' team representatives and other visitors at the Place des Arts.
> Liquor was free, French wine flowed endlessly and buffet tables were heaped with poached Gaspé salmon, lobster, filets of roast beef, Digby scallops and wild rice from Manitoba.

The article indicated that an orchestra played for dancing and, as hundreds of sparklers were lit, a giant cake was trundled in to the tune of "Canada". Also it indicated that smiling spokesmen for the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that champion of restraint, were unable to supply cost figures for the event.

The minister says that there have been no new major expenditure programs. He knows also that there has been no attempt at all by the government to eliminate all those little envelopes of waste which add up to thousands, hundreds of thousands, millions, and perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars of the people's money being wasted by this extravagant, careless government which now has the effrontery to come back and ask for $11 billion more.

He also said that the deficit, on which they were only 100 per cent wrong, was all due to world events. They will probably try to do better next time; Lord knows what the next budget will bring. He knows that is not true. If he does not, then he should find some employment other than as the designated apologist for the Minister of Finance. He knows that one of the reasons the tax revenues were down, if I can quote him, was that his government followed an energy policy designed deliberately to drive out of the country people who would invest money in the country and create jobs in the country. That is why tax receipts are down; people would have been working.

Today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) refused to answer a legitimate question put by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), a member who has to go home every weekend and speak to the people who are out of work at Alsands, who are working below capacity in Syncrude and in other projects. He would not give him the courtesy of a straight response. Yet the Minister of Finance is the one man who is responsible for the failure of the Alsands project. He and his colleagues in the government are the one cause that is responsible for the vast amount of money that would have been creating jobs in this country leaving Canada. If the designated apologist for the Minister of Finance does not understand that, he had better get out because he will not understand anything. His policies have caused the decrease in tax revenues. His policies have caused the increased demand on unemployment insurance. His policies have caused the increased demand on social services. His policies are causing the increased family tensions, family break-ups, suicides and other violence in Canada. They are his responsibility. He cannot get away with blaming it on others.

I am amazed that the minister would have tried that kind of performance at the beginning of his remarks today and used it as justification. It only shows how desperate the government is and how incapable it is of justifying, on the evidence, its attempt today to ask the House of Commons to authorize giving this gang another $11 billion of the people's money to fritter down the drain. He knows he cannot justify that so he comes in and makes claims that he knows are not correct.

In the long debate on this bill we will be talking about billions of dollars. We will be talking about controls on public spending. We will be talking about hidden spending. Most of all, we will be talking about honesty and the standards this government applies when it spends the people's money and asks the people to join in restraint.

Last week the government asked for the authority to limit the wage increases of secretaries. That was the 6 per cent society. Today it is asking for the authority to increase its net debt by over 12 per cent. That is the double standard society; 6 per cent for the secretaries, 12 per cent for the new increase in net debt sought today by this government in comparing consecutive pieces of legislation.

But that is only the beginning of the economic deception that is being practised by this government. It is an economic deception which this bill dramatizes. Consider these five other factors. First, the government itself—these are its figures—estimates its financial requirements at $17.1 billion. It already has borrowing authority of $3.6 billion left over from previous years. It has $6.6 billion in borrowing authority from a bill that was given royal assent almost a month ago today. It now wants $11 billion more. It wants $4 billion more than it says it needs; it might be for contingencies. Contingencies may arise.

There may or may not be someone else the government has to bail out.

The minister gave the indication that part of the money he is asking for today will be spent in the next fiscal year. That was the clear implication of his response to my colleague for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). The government is asking for another $11 billion, $4 billion more than it needs. What is that $4 billion for? Is it a cushion? Is it really a cushion, is it a fund for a new Petrofina, a fund for a new fleet of Jetstars, or is it a fund for some new patronage the government will introduce? Is it a fund for some new propaganda campaign that it will mount? This government does not need a cushion, it needs a bottom line. That is one factor.

Second, the June 28 budget contained no economic projections beyond the end of the current fiscal year. The government is asking Parliament to grant borrowing authority including borrowing authority which will carry into the next fiscal year, regarding which they have given no financial projections. It is asking Parliament to grant borrowing authority without giving any indication at all of its finances into the future. That is an affront to this Parliament. No banker outside of these walls who deals with a businessman or businesswoman, large or small, would grant a line of credit to a financially crippled business that refuses to provide projections of its cash flows. No banker would do this, yet that is what this government is asking the House of Commons to do.

The government says that its situation is too uncertain for it to predict. In that case, then, it is too uncertain for us to grant billions of dollars to a government that was 100 per cent wrong in its deficit estimates last November.

I will give the government an opportunity later to reconsider this bill. When the government gets its act together, I say let them come back to Parliament then. We are here to protect the Canadian public. We are here to protect the people of this country, not to feed the habit of a government that cannot even say where it is going.

Third, this government has deliberately set up new and secret ways of spending the people's money without any ability of Parliament to control it or even to count what has been spent and what has been wasted. Crown corporations have become the new way to hide waste or to authorize borrowing against the name of Canada, and to do it without the knowledge of Parliament. We know the government's belief in the breeding rights of Crown corporations. It thinks that every Crown corporation should have the natural right to reproduce indiscriminately. That is known as the rabbit theory of government. As soon as those Crown agencies are born they can go out and borrow and borrow again against the name of Canada. Today there is no limit to the total amount Canadian Crown corporations can borrow but there is a very tight limit on the ability of Members of Parliament to look into the operations of those agencies.

For example, does anyone here know the advertising budget of Petro-Canada? Does anyone here know how many people who work for cabinet ministers are having their mortgages subsidized by Petro-Canada or any other Crown agency? Of course not. We do not know those things. All we do is give them money at the demand of this government. We have no means of ensuring that this money is being spent in the public interest. It breeds the bunnies and we have to pay for the bunnies. This House of Commons should be out of the business of paying for bunnies that we do not want to have running around destroying the Canadian economy.

In Bill C-96, the government proposes to impose even further limitations on Parliament's control. Among other things, that bill would let the government write off debts of any amount through a simple vote in an appropriation act. It gives the government absolute freedom to spend any receipts and any revenues that are credited to a vote in an appropriation act. It lets the government use an appropriation act to guarantee loans. I mention that bill, which is not before the House at the moment, because it reduces Parliament's ability to control spending at the very time that this government seeks to increase its authority to borrow by $11 billion this year and into the next fiscal year.

Fourth, the government claims that it has embarked upon a crusade to fight inflation and to save the economy. That is some crusade. Its ministers sit back in their air conditioned offices asking for billions of the people's dollars and then sends secretaries, messengers and trainmen who work for the CNR out into the battle.

If this government were honestly serious about an economic crusade, it would engage in the whole war, not just one limited battle. It would recognize, as the world does, that the National Energy Program is doing more to destroy jobs and confidence in Canada than the salary levels of secretaries in the public service. The government would end that threat to jobs and growth in Canada right away. If it were honest, it would restore tax incentives to let individual Canadians create jobs and confidence. If it were honest, it would cut its spending, not ask for $4 billion more than it says it needs. Last week, the government called it a crusade. This bill proves that it is a pretence designed to have everyone suffer but the Liberal government, which preaches restraint for everyone else and then seeks to borrow billions of dollars, some of it for unspecified purposes.

Finally, I would like to address the question of restraint. This $20 billion deficit government is so proud of restraint. We know of the waste that bobs to the surface, the $110,000 spent to teach Bruno Gerussi and Madame Benoit to cook in metric. We know about the $500,000 spent to provide free brief cases for public servants. While Canadians are out of work around the country, the government, which has done so well against unemployment, is running around buying brief cases at a cost of half a million dollars to provide free to Canadian public servants.

We know about the $3.5 million spent by the government on taxi fares. We know about the $10.4 million spent by the government on what is loosely called "hospitality". These are only the big ticket numbers. The questions could not get down to some of the smaller expenditures. However, $10.5 million was spent on food, liquor and entertainment. We know about the $12,000 spent to send an assistant secretary to the cabinet to the Riviera to learn French while she collects her $60,000 to $70,000 annual salary.

[Translation]

It is not as expensive in Saint-Jean or Jonquière, and people can learn French right here or, if they want to go to France, they should pay their own way.

[English]

How much more of this is hidden away? How much more of these little pieces that bob to the surface are hidden away? How many Crown agencies are in existence today on which the sun would have set if we had a sunset law, as the government of this party proposed when we were in office? How much money is wasted because there is no parliamentary control over Crown corporations? Hundreds of dollars, thousands of dollars, hundreds of thousands of dollars, millions or hundreds of millions of dollars? We do not know, and the government is doing everything it can to ensure that people do not know how much is being wasted, because it rejects every opportunity to give Parliament, the representatives and the people, the right to see, to identify and to eliminate the waste which has become a stock in trade of the government.

We proposed a special all-party examination of spending estimates to eliminate waste or to eliminate frills. The government rejected that proposal. We drafted legislation to introduce sunset laws so that, instead of going on spending forever, agencies which no longer needed to be in existence could be wound down. The government killed the idea of the sunset law. We drafted legislation to deal with Crown corporations. The government killed it. It rejects every attempt at restraint, yet it comes in here and demands billions and billions of dollars to spend.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there is something else hidden in this Liberal plan. It is going to raise interest rates. It is going to put one more burden on Canadians who are struggling to pay their mortgages and on people who have to borrow so their farms or businesses can continue to operate. Interest rates are already too high as a result of policies that were adopted deliberately by the Liberal government in Ottawa. Its energy policy has caused millions of dollars, worth of investments to leave Canada. Tax changes have added to the investment drain, and it seems the government is trying to bring about a regular exodus. It was going to take steps to bring investments back to this country. The Liberals are using high interest rates to bring back investments that fled because of their policies. Businessmen are paying higher interest rates because of the Liberals' energy and tax policies. The same policies are making farmers and mortgage holders pay high interst rates. And what do the Liberals want to do now? They want to do something that will make interest rates go up even more. They want authority to borrow another $11 billion. Where is the money going to come from? It is going to come from the people who are lending to businessmen, to Canadian farmers and to Canadians who want to build homes? And there is only so much money to go around.

The government will therefore be forced to compete with Canadians to secure those funds and as a result interest rates will climb higher still. During the calendar year 1981, borrowings by Ottawa accounted for 44 per cent of the total amount of new issues in Canada. Any money borrowed by the government in Ottawa is money that Canadian citizens would use instead to create jobs, set up businesses, keep their farms or build houses. One of the effects of the government proposal is that it will be more difficult for people to get affordable interest rates, and that is only part of the cost Canadians will have to pay for this Liberal government's incredible indebtedness. In just 14 years, the Liberal government boosted its expenditures by 630 per cent. Is there a single individual in Canada who has managed to do as much? Each Canadian shoulders part of the public debt which now amounts to $14,300 for each taxpayer. That is on top of his personal debts. That is the additional price each taxpayer must pay for the profligacy of the Liberals. This year, the cost of servicing the public debt will be $700 for every child, woman and man in Canada. So what do the Liberals do when confronted with such an unacceptable situation? They want to borrow even more!

[English]

There is much more at stake here than the borrowing bill. Two deeper questions are at stake. One is whether the government will respect the money that individual Canadians work hard to earn. The second is whether this government, which has recently announced that it is on a crusade—

Mr. Blenkarn: What crusade?

Mr. Clark: —will have the honesty to recognize that its own bad habits have created much of our economic chaos and whether it will have the courage to change its own habits. Too often in the past, when faced with grave national problems, the government has ignored the cause of the problems and has gone out to find a scapegoat and then to attack that scapegoat. That was the approach with the Constitution. That was the approach with the energy program. That was the approach taken with medicare. Now I gravely suspect the government will ignore the real problems of the Canadian economy and go around looking for someone to blame.

The new budget was not written by the Minister of Finance. It was written by Martin Goldfarb, the Liberal Party pollster who told the government that public servants were unpopular so it was safe to restrain their wages. An honest government would go beyond its pollster and do what is right for the country. It would recognize that the major domestic problem we face today involves the question of confidence. No one, absolutely no one, trusts the government. It is an open question whether the government can ever regain trust. The only way it can do that is to recognize that economic recovery requires more than wage restraint. It requires the government to lay aside the ideology of intervention inherent in the energy program, to lay aside the assumption in its tax policy, that the state is always more important than the citizen, and to begin a serious war on waste in government.

This bill explains the distrust in Canada. It is a symbol of the double standard. Secretaries's salaries are to be held at 6 per cent but the government's net debt is going to be increased by over 12 per cent. If you take account of all the borrowing this year, Mr. Speaker, the total borrowing authority this year will increase by over 18 per cent while secretaries are held to 6 per cent.

• (1600)

We cannot approve this double standard. We cannot approve this demand for even more borrowing. For that reason I will be moving an amendment now and making reference to what amendments we intend to move later. I now wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That all of the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than that amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-125, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority."

I move that amendment based upon the minister's own admission in this House that portions of the borrowing authority he is using here today will be applied in the next fiscal year. It is on that basis and because we believe that there is no justification on the part of this government to have that kind of borrowing authority that I introduce that amendment.

We will be proposing two other major amendments later and several other important changes when the bill comes back. What I trust this government will do, what I implore it to do, is to take this amendment as cause to go back and recognize that until it has demonstrated a determination to practise restraint at home, until it is prepared to practise as it preaches, it has no moral right to come here and ask for billions of dollars more of the people's money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Until the government brings in another bill that conforms with the rules of this House and takes account of that recognition, we cannot vote the government money while it goes on spending money like a drunken sailor. When the bill comes back, there will be some other major amendments we will want to introduce, unless there has been a dramatic change in the proposals of the government. One will be to cut to $5 billion the amount that this government is authorized to borrow. We will reduce the borrowing from $11 billion to $5 billion. This government has admitted that it cannot predict or foresee its financial requirements for the future. It has introduced legislation to limit even further Parliament's ability to control spending. It has refused inquiries into ways to reduce waste. It has no right to be trusted with expenditure of the people's money.

Of course, government services have to go on. Our action will not jeopardize that. All it will do is keep this government on a shorter rein. This government will have to come back to Parliament if it wants to borrow more money. Then it will have to give us good reasons why that money is necessary. We are not going to pour billions of dollars of the people's money down the hole that this government has dug.

The second major amendment we propose to introduce, unless the government introduces a successor bill to the one before us, will provide a limitation on the aggregate amount that Crown corporations may borrow. It will also limit the guarantees given by government for borrowing by agencies like Canadair—I do not use that exclusively but as an example—for borrowing under agencies like the Enterprise Development Board and for financial rescue operations like Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler and others that might negotiate with this government. While the government is opening new ways to spend money without control, we must seek new ways to control spending of the people's money by the government and by the agencies of the government.

The basis of Parliament is the right to control spending. That is why we are here. That is why we were created. That also means the right to control borrowing. It is more than a right, it is an obligation of this House of Commons.

If the government were serious about restraint, it could have moved on a Crown corporations bill. There was one ready. It could have moved on a sunset law. There was one ready. It could have continued the privatization program. It was already in effect. It could have moved to establish a special committee to investigate and eliminate waste in spending. It could have moved to eliminate the waste that it knows about. It has done none of those things. Instead, it simply comes back again begging for more money. We on this side of the House are responsible. We will not give the government more money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has proposed an amendment at second reading. The Chair will take it under advisement; it will not express an opinion on the amendment at this stage.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this bill. It is abundantly clear that Bill C-125 should not be before this House now. As the previous speaker pointed out, the $11 billion is not required now. Even the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) indicated that some $4 billion of that amount could well be carried over until May, June or July of next year.

I am pleased to speak against the spending practices of this government and, therefore, its borrowing practices. Bill C-125 calls for Parliament to support supplementary borrowing in 1982-83, and perhaps further on, of $11 billion. The government has created for Parliament and this nation a terrible debt. Already the debt is expected to be more than $19.6 billion for this year. Public accounts published just last year estimated an astonishing national debt of $136.5 billion. This means that for every $10 raised, in excess of $2 must be used simply to service the debt.

There are two very different philosophies at work in this House of Commons. I say two because the Liberals and Conservatives share identical approaches to economics. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said that waste should be cut from government. There is no question that there is waste that should clearly be cut back. But there is also a responsibility on the opposition to point out where the major cuts are going to take place. To talk about 6 per cent for secretaries and a 12 per cent increase in government spending places a very important requirement on the Leader of the Opposition to say where those major cuts are going to be. He talked about cutting billions. I would be interested in knowing where the Tories plan to cut. I certainly intend to outline today where the NDP would make some cuts.

I listened with care to the Leader of the Opposition. I could not help but recall his profound statement to The Toronto Star on May 5 of this year when he said: "We have looked for a solution other than the government's, but we could not come up with an alternative. At this moment I don't have a better solution." Having listened to him for the last 40 minutes, it is clear that he still does not have a better solution.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I am going to be misquoted, as I have been, I would prefer to be misquoted with the attribution to the correct newspaper. The hon. member was misquoting me from La Presse. He claimed he was misquoting me from The Toronto Star.

Mr. Fulton: That was a very intelligent and useful piece of information. I quoted him from The Toronto Star. It comes as no surprise to me as a Canadian from British Columbia. We saw the Socreds adopt Liberal after Conservative into its ranks. That is not to say that the Tories are not more reactionary but that in general those two parties represent the same big business interests. The NDP is, as many Canadians are coming to appreciate, quite different in its approach to economic, social and development matters. I will come to that in a moment.

However, the style of the Tory approach to why there is debt is worthy of scrutiny. The Leader of the Opposition is awfully quick on the draw to attack Madame Benoit and Bruno Gerussi, as he did again today, for the $110,000 metric cooking lessons. No one, of course, supports such extravagance. To be using it every day in the House of Commons, however, makes most members of the general public quite weary of where the Tories are really heading.

It is good that this kind of unnecessary and inappropriate expenditure be stopped; however, it is wrong and politically reprehensible for the Tories forever to be calling for restraint but never offering to produce a balance sheet showing where and what they would cut. Since they say this debate will be a long one, as the first speaker for my party I will give them an opportunity to respond as to just exactly what envelopes they plan to cut; otherwise, they should sit down and keep their mouths shut.

The 1982-83 budget for economic development is listed at $7.5 billion. I would like to know where they plan to cut that. The envelope for energy is $3.3 billion; social affairs, $30.15 billion; justice and legal affairs, $1.5 billion; services to government, $3.4 billion; Parliament, $156 million; defence, $7 billion; external affairs, $2.16 billion—

An hon. Member: There it is.

Mr. Fulton: —fiscal arrangements, $4.9 billion. The Tories say they would get rid of external affairs. We will be interested to see how deep and in what areas they plan to cut. The envelope for the central reserve is $800 million. The public debt will be $59.5 billion. Public debt charges are estimated for 1982-83 to run $16.7 billion. The total outlay is $76.3 billion. I place those figures on the record so that in the coming days journalists and members of the Tory party can refer to them and tell us just exactly where they plan to cut.

The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) perhaps encapsulated the Tory reality when he was interviewed by Maclean's magazine on July 12 of this year. He described the Liberal government accurately as: "adrift; it has no answers". However, he went on to say: "If I told you what I'd do, we'd never get elected." I think it is about time the people of Canada were told just exactly where the Tories plan to cut. We know the government is completely out of control and is wildly excessive in its expenditures, and we will outline where they can be cut back; but we would like to hear from the Tories hiding behind the curtains as to exactly where they would be cutting.

An hon. Member: Who put the government there?

Mr. Fulton: The Tories want to know who put the government where it is. The people of Canada put hon. members opposite where they are because they saw what the Tories were all about.

The statement of the hon. member for St. John's West to which I referred a moment ago is at the root of the terror facing most of Canada's electorate. One voter in four now supports the policies of the NDP federally, and three out of four are subject to shift between the identical, but equally dishonest, policies of the Liberal-Tory coalition.

The hon. member for St. John's West also had this to say when he appeared on "The Watson Report": "Our leaders have got to be a little less honest. We are not being devious and tricky enough. I am criticizing us for that." The hon. member for St. John's West is a leading Tory spokesman. The Tories can speak for their own deviousness and tricks. I find it sad that the media across the nation are so tied to the observance and analysis of which Neanderthal in that relationship is on top. They fail miserably to provide the Canadian voter with a clear view of the real alternative policies and economics presented by my party in this House.

Let me deal first with the essential structural problems of Canada's economy and analyse briefly the Liberal-Tory approach to economics as against how a New Democratic Party government would proceed. The Liberal-Tory team has, since 1867, allowed foreign interests a free hand in developing resource extraction projects and branch plants in this country. This influx of foreign capital has done much to develop our nation, but in recent years it has returned to its country of origin or, at least, has left Canada. Literally tens of billions of dollars created by Canadian labour and resources—and in many cases Canadian capital—have flowed across the borders. The United States, of course, has benefited enormously from the use of Canada as a branch plant and a resource provider.

The Liberal government, clearly supported by the Tory chameleons, says Canada's economy cannot be stimulated, that jobs cannot be created and that the number of homes we require cannot be built. The steady state economics of producing the goods and services we require is pooh-poohed by the Liberal-Tory team because they say it is not good for big business. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will not change his high interest rate policy and, as a result, the overwhelming majority of Canadians face the prospect of declining incomes and a series of recessions, with the economy recovering for only a few months at a time.

The recent budget predicts higher rates of unemployment later this year and higher still next year. So for what purposes does the government require $11 billion, particularly when the Minister of State for Finance has already stated the government has no requirement for that money now and perhaps will not until November when Canada Savings Bonds start being cashed?

Clearly, with the deficit doubling from November to July—a staggering jump of some $10 billion—we have part of a ready answer. The economy, which is constructed much like a suitcase with a false bottom, has funnelled billions in recent months to the home offices of the multinationals which face debt and liquidity problems around the world. As Canada's raw resource sectors of mining and forestry wind down, hundreds of thousands of workers are directly and indirectly thrown out of work. Rather than buckle down and use deficit financing to design strong, appropriate underpinnings for a steady state economy which can put Canadians to work for the long haul, these two parties, the Liberals and the Conservatives, will opt to use hundreds of millions to buoy up sectors of the economy which, in my view, have already been relegated to the pages of history.

How many members of this House are aware of the fact that the hydro corporations of this nation are now the largest borrowers in the world bond market? How many of those same members are aware of the enormous advances which have taken place in the field of alternate energy? As recently as this week there has been the patenting of the vertical access water turbine, which extracts energy from river and tidal currents with small head drops. This technology eliminates the need for dams, has only minor environmental effects, allows the free passage and return of migrating fish stocks and does not flood or change natural water tables and important sectors of marine habitat.

Some hon. members, particularly Tories, may wonder why I am responding to the borrowing bill. I raise the issue of energy and give such an example for one simple reason: it is these kinds of technologies which this nation must foster and fund, not only to get away from the disastrous economics and environmental impacts of Arctic and offshore drilling, but also to avoid the impending shortfall of liquid hydrocarbons and high costs of using coal and tar sands in the future.

Can we easily forget that it is only ten years since the Liberal minister of energy told this House and all of Canada that we had hundreds of years of oil reserves? This coalition of phonies has us importing oil now at a cost of billions of dollars a year. Joe Greene seriously misled Canada in order to continue selling our oil offshore to keep a few big businesses happy, and he was supported in that endeavour by the Tories in this House. Now this same coalition intends to sell off, with 20-year contracts, our natural gas. They propose contract exports this year of 31 trillion cubic feet, 20 times what Canada will consume this year, and we will be forced to use more expensive alternatives in the future. The coalition intends to sell gas, first, through a pipeline which goes from central Alberta to U.S. markets. That, of course, was supported by the Tories. They said the Alaska pipeline would be built all the way up and that Canada would have many wonderful benefits. The people of Canada will have to judge fairly soon what kinds of deals the Liberals and Conservatives can cook up to support their oil company friends.

Second, our natural gas is to be exported by tanker from the Arctic through the Arctic pilot project route and other routes to Europe, and now it is proposed that gas be exported from Prince Rupert to the Orient. Instead of borrowing to sell our heritage we would be far better served by a borrowing policy which would pursue national objectives by developing environmentally and economically—and employment-oriented—sound projects.

Finally, what Canadians want is an honest government which will show some leadership and not sell Canadians out for a quick buck through oil, gas or other deals. Such deals are a sure sign of small-minded politicians who always go for the quick buck to try to buoy up the economy. Through sheer hucksterism, the Liberal-Tory coalition has managed to lower Canadian expectations to the point where convicted sex killers are the only group less popular than politicians. Sure, the Tories will rant and rave about government waste, and there is government waste. I spent the better part of last week battling with the Liberals to try to get them to release records about international flights of senior public servants from the Ottawa area. Fifty-eight are now known to fly every day internationally, excluding officials of the Department of External Affairs, the Department of National Defence and international trade officials. Some is certainly waste.

Some real waste was outlined by the Leader of the Opposition. However, when trips are chosen by bureaucrats for holidays and when spouses' travel is paid, combined with the fact that not one bit of information has been released by the ministers responsible with respect to those tickets and other waste, it is truly shameful.

However, should this debate on the borrowing of $11 billion be solely on waste? Surely not, because those same members of the Tory caucus who howl about waste never lifted a finger in government only two years ago to set up procedures to stop it. They did absolutely nothing.

What about the Liberals? Mr. Speaker, would you hire an arsonist to study a self-set fire? I proposed today in a motion under Standing Order 43 that members of the opposition be allowed to scrutinize certain government expenditures and, as always, the Liberals turned it down.

• (1620)

We are running out of oil. This is the twentieth consecutive year of production declines in Alberta. This country is even running out of wood. In British Columbia, forestry officials from the public and private sectors admit that we face a serious wood shortage or fall-down effect within the next 30 years. It would take 160 years to replant the naked backlog in areas requiring seedlings at our present rate of reforestation in British Columbia.

As far as the coal deal in British Columbia is concerned, even though we can construct the stacker-reclaimer in Canada, it is to be built in Japan. The boats to haul the coal could be built at Burrard but instead they will be built in Korea and Belgium. The boats for the gas deal will be built in Japan and Korea.

Is it any wonder that we have no secondary industry when hundreds of thousands of jobs are exported with our underpriced petroleum? The government is intent—wittingly or not—on bankrupting this and future generations by continuing with a policy of supporting long-term energy, mineral and forestry exports and, as often as possible, in the raw form, without instituting policies to employ and benefit all Canadians.

Surely the time has come for an industrial strategy which funnels Canadian capital and aspirations into high technology, manufacturing and an employment base that is secure. No nation, no region and no family can survive the kind of economic storm that such a high debt and insecure industrial base provides.

We have a $21 billion trade deficit in manufactured products. That amounts to over $1,000 for every man, woman and child in excess goods purchased outside Canada. It spells the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs.

Why does business not invest and construct the widgets and gadgets in this country? In part the answer is in the way in which the $11 billion to be borrowed in this bill are to be spent. After all, only a month ago the government came before the House to borrow $6.6 billion through Bill C-111. To my knowledge that money has not yet been spent.

In the seven months since the ill-fated November budget, the deficit has climbed from $10.5 billion to $19.6 billion. The same seven-month period has witnessed revenues falling more than $6.4 billion, from $69.9 billion to $58.5 billion. Simultaneously expenditures have increased by $2.7 billion, from $75.4 billion to $78.1 billion.

Simply put, with so many Canadians out of work and so many small and big businesses failing, tax revenue is not as high as was expected. There will be about $600 million less in personal income tax paid this year than was projected in November. This figure may vary widely as more Canadians move to a system of barter and trading of services in order to stay afloat economically. All of this will occur more dramatically due to the fact that personal taxes, for those still working, will be increased by $160 million in 1982-83 by deindexing.

During this same seven-month period, projections for income from corporate tax have fallen by $2.75 billion. Revenue from federal sales tax has fallen by $820 million because the economy has slowed to such an extent. Surely even untrained observers of the economy must note the intention of the Liberals and, to an even greater extent, the Tories.

An article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on April 17 this year written by Peter Cook said that this recession has been unique in several respects and that an examination of the cause of the downturn, rather than its effect, shows it to be a recession deliberately brought about and fostered by government to a degree that has not occurred before.

Individual Canadians are carrying an increasing proportion of the federal tax load. In 1952, individuals carried 23 per cent of the federal tax burden; 30 years later that has risen to 47 per cent. Corporate taxes made up 21 per cent in 1952 and had fallen to 13.7 per cent by this year. That is almost the reverse of what happened to the individual worker.

If this trend is to continue, the Liberals and Conservatives will make individual Canadians carry the full load of taxes by the turn of the century while the corporate sector will pay nothing. If this philosophy continues—despite the glaring evidence of the corporate sector pouring profits and dividends out of Canada—it will lead to a tax revolt across the nation.

Should the workers in the forest industry, for example, pay 30 per cent or more in income tax when they see MacMillan Bloedel, Crown Zellerbach or other corporations diverting profits made from harvesting and selling Canadian trees with Canadian labour to building pulp mills or saw mills in Brazil or Indonesia and not paying part of those profits as tax? It is both wrong and insulting to lay off tens of thousands of those workers and, after years of overharvesting, simply to move that forest-based capital to other nations and industries.

The Liberal government, supported by the Tories in this drive toward extending the recession, has created a need for an additional $1.1 billion to service the debt as a result of high interest rates. The Minister of Finance personally drove home his desire for higher rates by issuing Canada Savings Bonds at 19.5 per cent. A responsible government should have led the way to restraint by issuing low-interest shares in a scheme to rebuild the country. Most Canadians are eager and willing to put their shoulder in the traces and to hunker down for the long haul. There must first be a replacement of the Liberal-Tory recession, however, with the NDP-led policies for a long-term industrial strategy.

Mr. Blenkarn: Tell us about that. Borrow more?

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) always has lots to rant and rave about, but I do not see him stand in his place very often to tell the House or the people of Canada exactly what he would do.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are not here very often.

Mr. Fulton: He is long on rhetoric and short on fact.

The reason that the accumulated national debt for every man, woman and child has reached $6,000, or over $14,000 for every worker, is that borrowed money has been used to bail out losers, to subsidize the oil and gas companies and other sectors. These so-called investments have not been giving Canadians a return on their money and now they are not even providing employment.

Government waste must be stopped. Government handouts to continual losers, such as the nuclear industry, must be re-evaluated. Crown corporation borrowings and many questionable developments, such as most dams, must be stopped. Our borrowed funds must be used wherever possible for long-term job creation and community stability.

Thirty years ago it took 9.7 per cent of our revenue to service the national debt; now it takes over 25 per cent. All members of the opposition want to question this $11 billion borrowing because we know the public objects to further squandering and debt, particularly now that we know that the money may not even be required before next year. If the money is required later this year, Parliament should be recalled if it is not sitting. It is ridiculous to be putting this bill through now simply because the government thinks that the opposition will go and hide while it tries to squeeze out another $11 billion that it does not require.

Never before have so many Canadians been out of work or seen their farms or businesses so close to liquidation. The Tories hope to touch those chords of discontent but they do not have the moral capacity to lay out what pensions they would cut, what UIC payments they would cut, what medicare programs they would cut or what small-business programs they would cut.

The NDP view is different from the squandering blindness of the Liberals and the chilling dishonesty of the Tories. Let me quote again what the Leader of the Official Opposition said.

Mr. Blenkarn: Tell us about some of your own policies.

Mr. Fulton: This is what the leader of the hon. member's party had to say, Mr. Speaker: "We have looked for a solution other than the government's, but we couldn't come up with an alternative. At this moment I don't have a better solution." That was said on May 5.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Fulton: An hon. member says "Right on." The Tories have voted to keep the Liberals' economic policies in operation 34 times this session alone. They do not like to talk about it but they are only marginally different from the Liberals.

The NDP has a workable Canadian option. We will cut interest rates. High rates are the driving force of this recession. They are of immense value to the wealthy in this country who are picking up farms, small businesses, homes and real estate at bargain basement prices. They will benefit immensely when they integrate into monopolies or sell these assets back at a future date to the same workers and individuals who originally owned them.

By stimulating the economy and providing full employment, the NDP would generate $3.6 billion in additional tax revenue. A $2.2 billion tax cut to low and middle-income earners through a refundable tax credit would create 50,000 jobs. By negotiating a postponement of the September 1 energy price hike, we would put $450 million back into the hands of consumers to spend in the marketplace.

We would put $2 billion into seed money for a corporation called Enterprise Canada to help Canadian industry modernize and move into the technologies of the 1980s. We have one of the most capable and educated work forces in the world. Private capital has remained in the resource extraction sector due almost solely to government subsidies, policies and profits.

We believe that the hundreds of billions of dollars in savings and assets of Canadians will be self-motivated to join in the task of creating a new and dynamic Canada once we have an honest government. The National Energy Program was a failure because the Liberals changed the rules retroactively. Canadians do want to hold a majority interest in Canadian developments will do so when led by an honest government.

We in the NDP will reshape the banking, savings and taxation systems to put small state of the art technology into communities from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Queen Charlotte city. Canadians want their small communities to survive; they want good, secure and interesting jobs for their sons and daughters in Montreal, Vancouver, Gimli, Terrace and Whitehorse. All that is lacking is the distribution of factual political material in a language that can be understood.

I come from a little community of only 100 people, Mr. Speaker, but they and the majority of the people in northwestern British Columbia do not vote Liberal or Conservative any more. They know that the big business coalition has let this country down. Through sleight of hand and well-practised deception—to the point, I might add, where many of the Liberals and Tories in this House believe that what they are saying is in the best interests of the country—Adam Smith's invisible hand is strangling small business, forcing our elderly to eat dog food, forcing our working class to bear debt, while the big-business elite reap profits.

We would put $500 million into the construction of social and adequate housing, creating 110,000 jobs. We would put $260 million into programs of reforestation and fisheries development which have been overlooked by consecutive Liberal and Conservative and Liberal-Conservative governments, which in British Columbia are called Socreds. We would spend $5.4 billion to create 300,000 new jobs. We would spend and we would borrow, but we would do it in such a way that the money was wisely invested so that there would be a return. We would not force people out of work or onto lower wages, as the Liberals and Tories voted for on Friday with Bill C-124. Every Canadian out of work should know that this government's intention is to prolong the recession and force workers to take lower wages, a bottom line Conservative policy.

Two years ago the Department of Finance did a comprehensive evaluation of tax expenditures. Certain kinds of income are given preferential tax treatment. We all know that there were many who earned over $200,000 last year and who paid no income tax at all. These and other loopholes cost Canada $39 billion in 1980 alone. By the end of this tax year the loopholes will have reached $45 billion. Some few of the deductions are fair, such as spousal deductions and deductions for dependent children. Many are not. We in this party believe that the system should be revamped to put cash back into the hands of those who do the work in this country.

Here are just a few of the provisions which should be cut back or eliminated. The fast write-off in resource development; the most recent figures are from 1980, and they cost $1.25 billion. Excess depreciation in the resource sector, $370 million. Fast write-offs in manufacturing, $600 million. Non-taxation of half of capital gains, $800 million in 1980. The $1,000 investment income deduction cost the government $655 million in 1980. The list goes on for pages.

Before the Alsands cancellation the federal government gave the companies $8 million to ensure the project stayed open during negotiations. It was never returned. The government was prepared to give billions of dollars in concession to Alsands to get it under way and guarantee a 20 per cent rate of return.

The alternative energy sector in this country, Mr. Speaker, would replace many of these megaprojects overnight if given the kind of incentives and grants poured into the megas. Surely it is time we broke the stranglehold of the Crown and private hydro and fossil fuel giants. Combinations of tidal, wind, geothermal, solar and biomass can meet in an environmentally and economically sound manner the needs of most of Canada and the world. The global politics of oil and hydro are the chief opposition. The capital strike we witnessed earlier this year in the megaoil projects resulted from a lack of understanding of the energy monopoly by the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). This same minister announced a gift of $2.2 billion to the oil and gas sector to pay them off for this blunder. Those funds are part of this $11 billion borrowing, no doubt.

The minister gave $40 million to Imperial Oil to keep Cold Lake going. Once it died the minister wrote that sum off and with it the taxes hard earned by thousands of Canadians. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) has given over $6 million to Hilton hotels in his own riding, contrary to the guidelines of the program. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is responsible for the loss of $125 million to Consolidated Computers, which was recently sold for a paltry $100,000.

In the last four years over $1.5 billion has been shovelled into the nuclear program despite the closure of nuclear facilities in the United States because they are a bad risk and a bad investment. We are producing, at a cost of $100 million a year, heavy water for nuclear reactors when there is no need for it at the heavy water sites in Canada, and no prospects of overseas sales. Perhaps when Argentina drops a nuclear bomb, heaven forbid, on the Falkland Islands, the Liberals will wake up to their folly and their national and international mistakes. These same donkeys will bail out Dome this summer, Mr. Speaker, rather than fund alternatives for a secure Canadian energy future.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that no Canadian can accept the borrowing and spending practices of this group across the floor who are wildly out of control. Despite spending over $1 million every working day to advertise their political philosophy at taxpayers' expense, they have come back to this House in less than a month to borrow another $11 billion. In one month that totals $17.6 billion in borrowing authorized by this Parliament and it should be stopped. That is almost $2,000 for every taxpayer in Canada. How many taxpayers have borrowed $2,000 this month, last month or next month at a 20 per cent interest rate? No, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are on the wrong track and should not be supported by this House or the Canadian electorate.

As for the Tories and their intention to filibuster this bill, let them remember the words of their leader: "We have looked for a solution other than the government's, but we could not come up with an alternative. At this moment I do not have a better solution."

Well, Mr. Speaker, the NDP does have a better solution and we do have a better way. Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I will let one of the Neanderthals tell us where they are going to cut.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), has moved that Bill C-125 be amended as follows:

That all of the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than that amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-125, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority."

The Chair has had an opportunity to consider the amendment and finds it acceptable from the point of view of procedure.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, before I proceed to talk about the amendment and this bill, may I say to my friend, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), that I was impressed with his effort to increase the deficit. He talked about a new $2 billion tax cut, $450 million for energy projects, another $2 billion for another government entity called Enterprise Canada, and then somewhere along the line he added another $5.4 billion. He came up to another $10 billion. He said he was going to oppose this bill and suggested, I presume, that the government borrow another $10 billion. Presumably the policy of the NDP would be to increase the borrowing in this bill from $11 billion to $21 billion.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I just hope the hon. member learns how to add. I was proposing what the NDP would do with the $11 billion that the Liberals are proposing to borrow and where we would cut. I hope we can hear from him precisely the same thing.

Mr. Blenkarn: I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is having a difficult time understanding why he is opposing a borrowing bill at the same time as he proposes further massive government expenditures and interference in the economy. It is difficult to be a socialist these days, sir, but he, of course, comes from British Columbia and opposes a government in British Columbia which has at least one decent philosophy which is to not run the province into debt. That province has done exceptionally well in the management of its affairs by keeping down deficits and deliberately controlling its expenditure pattern. This is a pattern that should be followed by this government. If it had done so, the deficit of the federal government this year would be less than $3 billion.

This is the fourth time I have risen in this session of Parliament to speak with respect to borrowing authority legislation. The first bill we received at the opening of this session of Parliament was a bill for $12 billion. That was followed up within not many months with a request for a further $14 billion. The minister said this afternoon that the bill for $6.6 billion, the third borrowing authority bill, received Royal Assent on June 17. We now have before us in the month of July, just four weeks after the last bill received Royal Assent, another bill for an additional $11 billion.

This House has been asked to approve borrowing by this federal government of some $43.6 billion in this one session of Parliament. That is the wealth of 43,600 millionaires expropriated to pay the deficits of this government since it was elected to govern on February 18, 1980. It is unbelievable that Members of Parliament should be asked to allow a government to borrow that kind of money.

It would perhaps be understandable if the minister had shown to us this afternoon when he spoke—and he is not here at the moment; in fact, there is no member of the treasury benches here—where the government could have put that $43.6 billion to use. It could have used it to build Canada, to put people to work, to stimulate the economy of Canada or to make Canada grow. But you and I know, Mr. Speaker, that our country is not growing. Our country is stagnating. Every week thousands more people are laid off from jobs in plants, in the mines, or in the forest industry, with no real hope of being called back.

That is the financial attitude of this government that as of this week has run the net debt of the country to $94 billion and that will, before March 31, 1983, that is before the end of the fiscal year, run that debt up to $107 billion. That is an attitude which cannot be allowed to continue, Mr. Speaker.

The late John George Diefenbaker used to say "Where are we going?" Sir, where are we going as we borrow, borrow and borrow more and more of the wealth and the savings of Canadians and let this crowd handle our money in the ineffectual, improper and impossibly wasteful method that it does?

Canada's debt has become so enormous that it takes one in every three revenue dollars to pay the interest. The interest on the debt is projected this year at $17.7 billion. Let me repeat that fact. One in every three revenue dollars is required to pay the interest.

Mr. King: The NDP would like to make that higher.

Mr. Blenkarn: The interest alone represents $723 per person per annum. That includes every man, woman, child and babe in arms. Or, expressed in another way, it is $1,864 per taxpayer, for interest alone. The interest represents 4.9 per cent of the gross national product in the country.

This afternoon the hon. member for Skeena talked about further deficits and how spending is stimulative. For a few minutes this afternoon I want to talk about the stimulative effect of debts. I want to say that there is no evidence whatever that government spending, particularly government deficit spending, is in any way stimulative. It may be said that when you spend money at least you put people to work, that people are doing something. But when you spend borrowed money that costs a minimum of 17 per cent for interest—a good part of it now at 19.5 per cent as a result of goofs in the Canada Savings Bond issue last year—you wind up with a situation whereby the dollar borrowed at 17 per cent doubles itself in three and a half years or so, depending upon the compounding. It may take four years to double or it may take less than three and a half years.

We have the situation that if $1 of government money is borrowed and spent allegedly to stimulate the economy, in order just to break even the Government of Canada has to give back $1.50 from taxes in a year and a half. That is not possible. There is not a single government program that can be justified on the basis of the stimulative effect of a deficit, because a deficit is not stimulative. A deficit is, if anything, repressive.

It is the repressive effect of the debt with which the government has saddled Canada that is indeed largely responsible for the economic morass in which we find ourselves. It is no secret that businesses in our country are starved for capital. They are under a liquidity crunch. Businesses cannot support the interest on the debt which they are carrying. When that situation happens, people are not able to replace machinery, people are not able to build, people are not able to create new jobs, because they cannot afford to.

I am involved in some businesses. On a number of occasions I have been at board meetings during which we have talked about whether we should make improvements to a business, whether we should buy machinery, certain tooling or perhaps tool up for a new product. When interest rates were down in the 9 per cent and 10 per cent range, we could look with all practicality, to a four-year or five-year payback on investment. Today with interest rates running at a cost to business of somewhere in the range of 20 per cent, you cannot look at a four-year or five-year payback. You have to have the payback within two years because you cannot afford to borrow at that rate unless there is a two-year payback.

This is where we are at because of the massive borrowing that has crowded out the marketplace and has driven up interest rates. We now have a situation where the businesses in our country are suffering from a total lack of liquidity, where investments in new machinery and equipment, unless they can be justified in a two-year payback or less, cannot be made. Research and development cannot be financed unless that research and development can show a payback within two years, because it is not practical to do so.

Yet we have a government which two years back-to-back increased spending by 20 per cent each year. We have a government that is $20 billion in the red. It comes to Parliament for the second time in this fiscal year and says that it wants to borrow money. This time it wants to borrow $11 billion. It just finished borrowing $6.6 billion. We have a government that has no sense of reality as to the cost of money or as to the cost of doing things. It enters into program after program suggesting that the program will stimulate business.

There was a provision in the budget for $3,000 grants to first-time purchasers of houses. It could be used houses. The other day in Scarborough the minister for housing set up an orchestrated presentation of a $3,000 cheque. The man had already purchased a used house, but the minister wanted to give him a $3,000 cheque. When the reporter asked the man whether he needed the $3,000 grant in order to close the deal, he said: "No, I would have bought the house anyway, but it is nice to have the cheque." What did the minister say? He said; "Perhaps he did not need the cheque to buy the house, but he can do some landscaping, purchase some appliances, this, that or the other thing." I point out that that $3,000 grant, for a man who was going to purchase the house anyway, goes into his pocket. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it does not come out of either of our pockets today; it comes out of the pockets of our kids at 19.5 per cent compound interest. What is it for? He might use the money to do some landscaping, to purchase some appliances or perhaps put it in his bank account.

Where was the stimulative effect of that $3,000 of borrowing by the Government of Canada? No new purchase was made, no new commitment was made, no new building was erected. Indeed, it was money paid straight out of the borrowing account to make the minister look good on television. I want to say that the minister looked like he usually looks—someone who is not competent to be in any government, let alone this government. Even in this government he is incompetent, which is saying something.

Where are we going? My friends in the New Democratic Party talk about the horrible rip-offs of big business. They do not realize the statistics. Corporate profits in Canada are down from $24 billion to a projected $14 billion, to a projected amount lower than that. Where are we going as company after company is incapable of carrying on and is forced to close its doors, as there are bankruptcies on top of bankruptcies and receiverships on top of receiverships? We have reached the point today where a person has to shop the entire city of Toronto to find anyone who can conceivably act as a receiver because they are all busy. Perhaps a receiver can see him in two, three or four weeks, but he has to get on the waiting list. The only growth industry in the country is the receivership industry. We have a government which comes to Parliament with one program after another, spending money without any thought of constraint, borrowing money and squeezing out the marketplace.

Before referring to the crowding out of the marketplace, I remind the House that in early June government representatives attended a conference in Versailles. When they returned from the conference they blamed the United States. They said that the huge American deficit would drive up interest rates and that the government had spent its efforts at Versailles trying to persuade those dastardly Americans that they should not borrow what they were borrowing. I do not think anyone will say that the American debt is not high, but let me point out that the American deficit on a per capita basis is half the amount of our deficit. They tell the Americans that they are wrong, but they do not pay any attention to Canada.

We heard the minister suggest earlier this afternoon that Canadian savings were high and that there was lots of room for savings in Canada, so I thought I would put on the record of the House a table which was prepared by the Royal Trust company in its booklet entitled "Through A Glass, Darkly: A Medium-Term Canadian Perspective, 1981-86". Actually this table was repeated in a book by Arthur W. Donner entitled "Financing the Future—Canada's Capital Markets in the Eighties". Unfortunately it was written considerably before the present deficit and Mr. Donner was considerably more optimistic when he completed his work in February, 1982, than he would be today. Mr. Donner pointed out in his book that personal savings, as a percentage of the gross national product, of Canadians in 1980 were $14.9 billion. In 1981 he forecast a decrease to $13.148 billion and that since 1982 was to be a recovery year—and we know what kind of a recovery we are having—savings might go up as high as $18 billion.

The government says that it must borrow $17.1 billion in 1982, which is very close to the personal savings of all Canadians in 1982. The government is going to go to the markets of the country to borrow all the new savings of Canadians. We also know that the provinces are in the act. There is not a province during this downturn of our economy which does not have a deficit. Even some western provinces are now having to borrow; even Alberta is borrowing. From where is the money to come?

Until this year the provinces, including the benefits available to them from the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan, had surpluses of borrowing capacity. They could borrow from their pension plans, they had funds available. But in total the provinces will probably be in deficit positions this year and they will have to borrow.

What about business? What about where we build this recovery about which the minister talks? Where will we put the people back to work who the minister says are now being laid off? How do we get the country stimulated and going again? Where are the fresh funds to break the back of this recession-cum-depression? There is not any, not while we have a government which is prepared to soak up, to suck up and to dry up by its grasping hands every bit of savings in the country in order to finance its waste and its spending. This bill must be turned back even when considered on that basis alone. No matter how much we would like the government to spend money, our country cannot afford to go to our markets in the country to borrow money, especially in the amount being demanded by the government.

What have the effects of this borrowing been? We have seen the effects. Since there are not enough savings in this country to satisfy business and government needs here, we have to be a net importer of capital into Canada. Due to the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act and the attitudes taken in the November 12 budget and the National Energy Program, long-term capital has been driven out of the country. We have had to increase interest rates here so that they are now at least 3 per cent higher than in the United States. I suggest that because of this borrowing requirement there is no hope in the world that interest rates in Canada can drop below that 3 per cent diffrence between here and the United States. Indeed, I suggest that it may well be the fact that as more people in Canada lose confidence in the capacity of this country to grow, develop and become a creative environment, more Canadians and foreigners will remove their money and thereby make the interest differential increasingly higher. This is where this borrowing leads us and this is where the government's spending habits have led us.

Unless an immediate effort is made by Parliament to deal with the crippling deficits which have been imposed by this government and its predecessors, we will not be able to turn our economy around and come out of this recession-cum-depression. We will sink ever lower in the abyss. The future of our children is at stake.

I would like to analyse for a moment what this borrowing authority bill is all about. As you may be aware, Mr. Speaker, if, when borrowing authority is granted to a government, it does not use the borrowing authority, the normal course is that the borrowing authority lapses at the end of the fiscal year. If the borrowing authority is used, permanent debt is then created. If that debt is paid off in some manner, the government immediately has the right to roll that borrowing authority over again and continue with the same amount of debt.

When we vote for borrowing authority for $11 billion, we are effectively saying to the government that it can on a permanent basis increase the debt of Canada by $11 billion. If bonds are raised under this borrowing authority and those bonds are repaid at some point, the government can then roll the bonds over or issue new bonds to new investors and still stay within the ambit of its total borrowing capacity.

Speaking of borrowing capacity, on July 6 the government had $5.8 billion of unused borrowing authority as a result of its actions this year. It now comes to the House looking for $11 billion. This makes a total borrowing authority of $16.8 billion, nearly $17 billion. So far this year it has used up some $4.5 billion by using hangover borrowing authority from last year, plus a portion of new borrowing authority which was finally granted to it on June 17.

The government has not introduced an acceptable budget. There is every indication that the government will be producing a new budget some time in November of this year. Therefore, why does the government want all this borrowing authority right now? The June 28 budget, which really was not a budget since it did not give proper projections, was indeed a specious piece of paper which indicated that the deficit figures were based on a gross national product dropping only 2 per cent this year. But we all know the projections now are that the gross national product of the country may drop over 8 per cent this year.

The budget was a specious document and will clearly have to be replaced before November 30. On that basis, why do we need more borrowing authority? The fact is that we do not need it. The government already has $5.8 billion in borrowing authority. The fact is that the government has $4.7 billion in the banks. The government has lots of money right now. It has $4.7 billion on deposit in the banks and $5.8 billion in borrowing authority. It has enough right now to pay its bills through to the end of November, and then some. Even with its crazy spending habits and the fact that it is spending $1.4 billion a month more than it receives in taxes, it has enough to carry it through to November. Therefore, why do we need this bill? There is really no need for it at this stage.

What we do need, however, is an inquiry into how government spending takes place. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, and the House about statements by the former auditor general, Mr. Macdonell, who said last week that what the government must do is analyse its spending program and its priorities. Its spending should be divided into what is absolutely essential, what is desirable and what is non-essential.

Where are we going? There is no effort by this government to priorize its expenditures. Does the government accept the suggestion of our party that there should be a task force of parliamentarians to inquire in detail into the expenditures of the government and the budgetary expenditures of each department in order to determine on a priority basis whether an expenditure is essential, non-essential or just desirable? It does not want that to happen. This should be done.

We must review the grant programs of the government and its activities and question whether these programs, while they may be very desirable, are essential. It may be desirable to have expansion in the Canadian broadcasting system, but is it essential? The National Arts Centre is obviously desirable but is it essential? The CHIP program is obviously desirable since it will save home owners money and enable them to get a four or five-year payback, but as I said earlier, businesses cannot invest in a four or five-year payback today because money costs too much. Is it essential or just desirable?

• (1710)

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) went over a number of programs which are clearly frills. I write to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) almost weekly. When we formed the government, I wrote almost weekly to my hon. friend, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), who was the President of the Treasury Board. When I received a book from a minister's department, a beautiful brochure or a map, I asked "Is it essential? Is it a non-essential frill expense?" My hon. friend, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), smiles. I think something colourful and beautiful came from her department. There is not a single Member of Parliament who does not get material across his or her desk, is invited to something run by the government, or has been involved in some program, activity or trip. We must ask, are these really essential? Much of it is non-essential puffery. We could reduce expenditures in every department by 5 per cent, certainly administration costs and many others as well, if we considered and determined what is essential and what is non-essential. Sure, some of these expenditures amount only to $60,000, $100,000 or half a million, but they add up enormously.

When one is paying 19.5 per cent to borrow money and when the cost of that borrowed money triples in three and a half years, then the question matters as to whether it is essential, simply desirable, or really non-essential, or is the expense indefensible. Yet the government refuses to appoint a parliamentary committee to inquire into expense based on that logic. Why? It is because it likes it the way it is. It is so accustomed to going around and around the boat, spending and spending, without any real thought as to whose money it is.

The government has the free lunch theory, the theory that if there is a problem, the government should do something. People come into my constituency office and ask, "Is there not a grant or a program for this problem? Can you not help me with it? Can you not get assistance under some government program?" A small telephone booklet came to my office the other day with the names of government programs and grants in it. I am sure Your Honour received one. The government subscribes to the free lunch theory that, somewhere along the line the money comes down from the trees, you take it and spend it, you do not have to borrow it and do not have to worry about where it is earned. Well, I never got to this place because someone gave me a free lunch, and I am sure Your Honour did not become a Member of Parliament on the free lunch theory. Your Honour worked, created and produced. You did not look for a grant. But the money you took out of your pocket with which to pay taxes is being used by this government to further the free lunch theory. But it is not only the money expropriated from people who rake asphalt, drive trucks or work in offices all day, which is being used to pay the government's profligacies. We must also remember that the money the government borrows, and the money which is borrowed and reborrowed, on which we pay 17 per cent to 19.5 per cent interest, multiplies and multiplies. That is a tax which is not on me, because I will never pay it off, and it is not a tax on you, Sir, because you will never pay it off. Is the tax not on our grandchildren? And for what?

Mr. King: They will never pay it off, either.

Mr. Blenkarn: My hon. friend says "They will never pay it off, either". Perhaps that is part of the problem of the free lunch theory. Somewhere along the line it must be carried on the backs of people who work and sweat, because some cocktail party, or cooking lesson, or free brief case is important; and the government is not prepared to inquire into whether it is important, essential or non-essential.

The government recently presented a bill to the House arising from the new budget called "the effort to go to a 6 per cent society." I only wish we could go to a 6 per cent society in terms of interest rates. That bill represents the first effort by this government somehow to curtail costs. At least, it is painted that way. But is it really? If one considers the bill, one finds that there will be no cutback in the salary of any public servant this year. Next year public servants will not receive a full index. That is all that will happen. The only people cut back in the government's latest budget were Members of Parliament. You and I, Sir, took a 5 per cent cut in pay. We are the only people who took a cut. Indeed, the government has no intention of cutting anything else. It has provided no new budgetary or departmental figures, projections, no new proposals to save money to reduce expenditures. The only expenditure cut in the whole budget was your salary and mine, by 5 per cent. I suppose we are prepared to be leaders; that is why we were elected as Members of Parliament. But I think, as leaders, and having contributed to some savings, we have the right to demand savings. I say to you, Sir, that we have a right to demand that the government trim back its expenses by 5 per cent, and it is on that basis that I say that this bill must be withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-125, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-125, an act to Provide supplementary borrowing authority. The bill is very short, covering only a page and a quarter, but it will be very long in its effects on each and every Canadian. It seeks to obtain authorization for the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to borrow, with the approval of the governor in council, sums of money not exceeding $11 billion, as may be required for public works and general purposes.

The government has projected financial requirements of $17.1 billion this year and some of that requirement will be met through the rundown of Canada's foreign reserves. As I understand it, the government already has something like $10.2 billion in borrowing authority for this year, consisting of $3.6 billion in unused authority from previous years and $6.6 billion from Bill C-111. Therefore, the government has a total borrowing authority of something like $21.2 billion for this year, a figure which is considerably higher than the projected financial requirements of $17.1 billion as outlined in the previous budget.

I think it is also worth noting that in subclause (2) of Clause 2 there is special provision for unused authority of up to $4 billion to be carried over into 1983-84. This leads me to ask where all this money is going, where it is all coming from, and what is happening to Canada and to the Canadian economy.

Over the past 14 years government spending has risen at an unprecedented rate. Using Canada's public accounts as a basis, spending has increased from $12.3 billion in 1968-69, the year the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, to $78 billion this year, an increase of 534 per cent, yet the population of this nation during this period of time increased from approximately 20 million to 24 million people. A significant portion of this increase occurred since the re-election of the present government in 1980.

The projected spending of $78 billion this year and a projected deficit of $19.6 billion, which is almost double the projected deficit of last November's budget, has already sent our markets and our dollar into a tailspin, and for good reason. Our gross national debt in March was approximately $135 billion. Interest alone on this debt will cost Canadian taxpayers this year an estimated $17.75 billion.

These numbers are large. They are actually too large for Canadians to grasp in a meaningful way. However, if they are broken down their magnitude becomes more understandable. For example, government spending this year alone at the federal level will be equal to $8,250 per taxpayer. This compares to $1,700 per taxpayer in 1967, the year this Prime Minister took office. To put it another way, federal government spending is now more than six times greater than it was when Mr. Trudeau first came to power and 15 times greater than the amount spent in any of the war years. That is a frightening thought, a frightening amount.

For most of us, a budget is supposed to be a plan which limits expenditures so that they match up with revenue, and expenses should not exceed income. However, that ancient, solidly based philosophy no longer seems acceptable to Ottawa's bureaucrats or politicians.

As I listened to the budget speech of the Minister of Finance and to the apologist today for the finance minister, the hon. member for Charlesbourg (Mr. Bussières), I could not help but be reminded of the story entitled "Alice in Wonderland". Just imagine the scene in the House of Commons being played by people with different names. First there was Alice. Alice must be the Canadian people who have fallen through the rabbit hole and are watching a band of strange people do very strange things. There was the rabbit that led us down the hole. He is dressed in a very natty suit, wearing a rose in his lapel. He must be the leader. Then there was the finance minister. He must be the white knight who told us in November that four times five was ten and one-half. He has now corrected this to mean $19.6 billion for his budgetary deficit. The present Auditor General, Kenneth Dye, suggests it will really be closer to $22 billion. The Queen of Hearts who stole the tarts must be the energy minister who has stolen the natural resources from the people who developed them. Tweedledum and Tweedledee must be the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), who supported the Foreign Investment Review Agency and drove out many potential foreign investors that may have established industries in Canada and provided employment for our people.

The cast of the characters is vast. There was the mouse and the duck and the crab and the caterpillar and kings and queens and knaves. I could go on and on, but I know you will remember Mr. Speaker, some of the happenings, such as the Mad Hatter's tea party. You will recall that in the end Alice wakes up and finds that she has been dreaming. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, when this is all over and the Mad Hatter's party is finished, which is when this government falls, that the Canadian people will wake up and realize that it was not a dream, that it was all too true?

In truth, the budget and this borrowing bill have left Canadians feeling somewhat like a burst balloon. Their hopes for the future have evaporated into thin air. Certainly any hope for interest rate relief evaporated when the government announced its deficit projections were wrong by $10 billion.

By the end of this summer, competition for money in Canada's capital markets will most likely drive the prime rate up to 20 per cent or more. In fact, with the federal government going to the money markets for at least $1.5 billion every month for the next 12 months, I predict that interest rates are likely to go through the roof.

Canadians have always believed, at least up until recent months, that this country had a great future. I still believe that Canada and Canadians have a great future. I also know that that future can be realized only if we place a new federal government in Ottawa that adopts new directions and restores confidence to Canadians in their government and in their country.

The secret to our present disastrous and, to use the Prime Minister's own words, crisis economic situation is the complete lack of confidence and trust that Canadians now have in their government. From Atlantic Canada to the tip of British Columbia and then on up to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, the Canadian economy is laid waste. On July 9 it was quite a shock to me to sit in my seat in this House and listen to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) point out that 100 per cent of the population in two towns in his constituency, namely Elsa and Faro, were laid off. Over 600 families in the Yukon are affected. The employment minister's only answer to the hon. member's request was that he was aware of the problem.

Business bankruptcies in Nova Scotia, according to The Chronicle-Herald of Wednesday, July 7, are up by 20 per cent this year over the same period in 1981. What do we find on the national average? In the July 14 Montreal Gazette we read:

> Canadian companies forced into bankruptcy in the first half of this year went down owing more than $1 billion—more than double the amount in the corresponding period last year, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said yesterday.

Those are not Tory figures. Those are Liberal government figures, figures provided by the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

> In the first six months, 5,383 Canadian companies went bankrupt, 1,451 more than a year earlier.

Surely we must ask why this is happening. It is because Canadians have been betrayed by the Trudeau administration, betrayed with respect to economic policy, betrayed with respect to energy policies, betrayed with respect to constitutional policy, betrayed with respect to federal-provincial policies and betrayed in our dealings with the outside world. That is why we are in this mess. On January 12, 1980, the Right Hon. Mr. Trudeau, then leader of the opposition—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. With all due respect, the formal reference to a member of this House is either by function or constituency. This is the third time the hon. member has referred to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by name.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to him at that time because he was then the leader of the opposition. At that time he outlined his economic program to the electorate in Toronto, stating "We have an economic program for the eighties which will enhance dignity, create opportunities and provide security."

Thirty months later the Canadian people are quite rightly asking, where is that program? The tragedy of the years under the right hon. member for Mount Royal is how we have wasted and are still wasting our potential. I am convinced that Canadians want to see things get better than they are at present and that they could bring this about if they only had a government which would help and not hinder them. The present economic crisis, the chaos, the lack of confidence of Canadians, the frustration, the anger and the despair are not caused by the Canadian people and not by any lack of resources in the second largest land mass in the world, nor by any lack of opportunities but, rather, by a lack of government leadership, by wrongheaded policies, by arrogance, by a lack of knowledge at the top and by the smugness of the people who have been too many years in office.

I have watched this power beget power over the years, but the present situation does not have to be. The answer lies not in our stars, not in Germany or Japan or the United States—the favourite whipping boy of the Prime Minister—but, rather, in this government, a government which has failed Canada miserably.

Our economic problems are not caused by U.S. interest rates. They are not caused by outside forces we cannot overcome. They are caused, if I may say so, by a weak Canadian economy which now provides us with a weak Canadian dollar, all as the result of 14 years of wrong, self-indulgent and politically inspired economic policies. It is people like the Prime Minister, the Turners, the Macdonalds, the Bensons, the Chrétiens and the MacEachens who have given us our high interest rates at the 18 per cent to 20 per cent level, our unemployment rate at the 11 per cent level—some 1.3 million people together with another 410,000 additional persons calculated by Statistics Canada to be the number of the hidden unemployed—and our inflation rate year after year, which is now over 11.5 per cent. These men gave us our depression. Our productivity has decreased for four years in a row, and our real wages have been down for four years in a row.

What does the July 12, 1982, editorial in Maclean's have to say under the title "Party or country—which will MacEachen bankrupt first?" It reads:

The business community's reaction to Allan MacEachen's budget was swift and vicious: share prices on the Toronto Stock Exchange plummeted 40 points on the morning after, wiping out $2.9 billion in paper profits during the first 60 minutes of trading. Within the same hour ... the Canadian dollar dropped nearly a full cent ... These stock market losses came on top of the slide that has cut $66.25 billion out of stock prices in the past year.

Over the years I can well remember the Liberals saying at election time: "Tory times are hard times; vote Liberal." In retrospect, as I look back over ten federal elections and some 25 years I must agree that when my party was in power Tory times were difficult times. They were difficult because we had to deal with the economic wreckage the Grits left behind them. However, in their lust for power, the Liberals, along with their New Democratic pallies, defeated the minority Conservative government and found themselves back in power after making misleading promises about lowering gasoline costs. This time the Liberals have to try to clean up their own mess. Grit times today are grim times for everyone to see and all to experience, and it is a situation which will not be forgotten too soon by all Canadians.

In considering the issues, we all know that Canada's economy is influenced greatly by the outside world and that much of the outside world is also facing economic difficulties. But clearly our lack of leadership, direction and policy on the part of the party in power has seriously worsened our economic situation.

What about our inflation? In my opinion our inflation has been caused in large measure by a complete lack of government restraint in spending and in revenue-collecting since 1972-73, resulting in government debts, which total in excess of $77 billion over the ten years ending in 1981-82. The deficit for this year is predicted at close to $20 billion, while Maclean's, as I said a moment ago, says it will reach at least $22 billion in the fiscal year beginning April 1. All through these years the fiscal policy of the government has ignored the monetary policy of the government and the Bank of Canada, so that the tight monetary policy has not succeeded in containing inflation. Every year there has been ever-increasing borrowing by the government, competing for funds with the private sector, and in 1982-83 government spending on a national accounts basis will increase by an estimated 22 per cent over last year. The second largest spending envelope of the federal government is now in the payment of interest on our debt charges, which the government says will cost some $17.7 billion this financial year. One tax dollar out of every four is now used to service the government's debt, compared with one tax dollar out of every nine only eight years ago.

The government cannot say that it was not warned about this economic catastrophe. When I served as chairman of the Public Accounts Committee the new auditor general at that time, Mr. James Macdonell, stated in his 1974-75 report that the government was losing, or was close to losing, control over the public purse. That is strong language from any auditor general, but coming from its own auditor general, the government should have altered the course of its ship of state before it landed on the rocks of fear, despondency and economic collapse. However, unfortunately no one on the opposite side was listening. No one wanted to listen, and now that the ship is foundering, all the government can do is to look for scapegoats and try to lay the blame everywhere but the one place where it rightfully belongs. I say to hon. members opposite that if the government is serious about battling inflation, the government must give the public an example and must restrain and discipline itself if it wishes the people to restrain and discipline themselves. But this government to date has only carried out what I call cosmetic changes, and it is not fooling anyone.

How can hon. members opposite say that they are practising restraint when the "one billion" white elephant, Mirabel, continues to lose money at the rate of approximately $1 million a week? How can hon. members opposite justify their claims to restraint when they are purchasing new Challenger jet aircraft at a cost of $27 million? They cannot even find the funds to rebuild the fishermen's wharf at Riverport, Nova Scotia destroyed some two years ago and help re-establish a viable fishing industry at that port. How can hon. members opposite say they are practising restraint when they spend yearly some $225 million on their own public information and advertising budget, not to tell the people what they are doing but to try to hide from the public what is happening in Canada? Hon. members opposite spent $300,000 for a lively bash on the day the Post Office became a Crown corporation and spend $500,000 each year to give new briefcases to the public servants of Canada. They then have the gall to tell this House they are practising restraint! I say to all hon. members opposite that they do not even know the meaning of the word.

In the patronage area of spending, on government services alone spending increased from $4 billion in 1980-81 to $4.7 billion in 1981-82, an increase of 17 per cent in government patronage for lawyers and other fees. Where were the 6 per cent guidelines then? Where were the 6 per cent guidelines hon. members opposite now impose on some 1.2 million senior citizens who are singled out to pay for the mistakes of the government?

To complete the destruction of the Canadian economy, this administration, without any authorization from the Canadian electorate, instituted a constitutional war with the provinces which occupied most of 1980 and 1981. Hon. members opposite destroyed confidence. They failed to reach oil and gas agreements quickly with the producing provinces. They caused delays so that we have lost the Alsands tar sands plant and the Cold Lake project. They caused delays in the development of the Hibernia oil field off the coast of Atlantic Canada because of their determination to control and manage these resources. Then the Right Hon. Prime Minister ended all that with a declaration of war on the provinces by saying that co-operative federalism no longer exists. On January 12, 1982, the Right Hon. Prime Minister confirmed this declaration of war on the provinces by ending any attempt whatsoever at co-operation through the former DREE department. We now have DRIE instead of DREE with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) at its head. There is a megaprojects co-ordinator for each province, although there are no signs—certainly not in my province—of any megaprojects to co-ordinate.

The damage of all this to our economy is obvious. There can be no confidence or trust upon which an expanding economy can be based when the federal government is entangled and engaged in such destructive, vicious, uncaring, unheeding and arrogant policies.

• (1740)

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought in the budget on November 12, 1981 he said that it had three themes: restraint, equity and economic renewal. On each of these grounds his budget was a complete failure. On September 9, 1980, speaking in Halifax, the capital of my province, he said it was in order to create jobs, improve living standards and promote greater equity that he took on the position of minister of finance. In light of what has happened since that time, I ask in all fairness how he can continue to hold on to that position!

We are sometimes asked about alternative policies. Every once in a while we read in the media that the Conservative Party has no alternative policies. Certainly we have no alternative policies like those proposed by the leader of the NDP who suggests that a magic wand be waved so that interest rates in Canada be reduced by 5 to 10 per cent. We know that such a step would mean wage and price controls, exchange controls and total state control of every aspect of our lives. The answer, of course, is not that simple. What is needed is more long-term changes. I can assure the House that within six months of taking office, my party would start the Canadian economy well back on the road to growth and prosperity. We did it in 1957 and in 1958, and we can do it again.

Mr. Sargeant: What was the state of the economy in 1962?

Mr. Crouse: I hear a squawk from the NDP, Mr. Speaker. I never interrupt any of their speakers, ever, and I do not intend to be interrupted by them. They should sit quietly and make their own speeches in their own time.

Mr. Sargeant: Don't tell lies in the House.

Mr. Crouse: I am not telling any lies. I consider that an unjust attack on me personally.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has the floor, and I am sure other hon. members will pay him the respect that is due.

Mr. Crouse: We got the economy rolling in 1957 and 1958, and we can do it again. Our alternative policies and thrusts can be seen in the budget of December 11, 1979. These thrusts are still basically right for Canada. I believe that we could, upon taking office—with a majority from the Canadian people—restore confidence to ordinary Canadians in the private sector by throwing out this rehashed budget introduced by the Liberals.

We would end tax harassment and government legislative discouragement to risk takers, the people who are so badly needed in our economy at the present time. A new budget would be brought in within a reasonable period of time to settle the ground rules and outline and establish the framework for a two or three-year period, providing the stability that the business world needs for expansion and restoring the Canadian economy.

We would bring about changes in the present National Energy Program, and reduce the present discrimination against the foreign and the Canadian entrepreneur. A reduction in the tax burden on industry is also required to encourage Canadian exploration and development.

As a Nova Scotian, I personally believe that in Canada we have to utilize our maritime position, our Arctic resources and our tremendous coasts, lakes and rich continental shelf. We have to develop our own shipping fleet and focus attention upon our fishing industry. Our main objective should be the utilization and development of our resources on, in and under the waters that surround our vast shores. For all too long this government has engaged in navel gazing. Perhaps that is why the country is presently going belly up.

In my opinion, this government, as is usual with Liberal governments, confines its gaze to the bulging population residing in central Canada while the extremities of the country, especially the coastal regions, are neglected. I believe that the coastal shipbuilding industry, especially the east coast industry, with the discovery of massive offshore oil reserves, has fantastic potential. Billions of dollars will have to be spent on new vessels in order to develop the offshore resources in the next ten years. However, shipbuilding is a most unnatural industry, one that requires the most support of the central government if it is to be effective and successful. In most shipbuilding nations government provides shipbuilders with generous subsidies, tax breaks and investment allowances, but Canada does not provide any of these. In order to develop the industry in this international, cutthroat market, nations must have well developed shipbuilding policies and dependable financial arrangements for the benefit of workers and owners as well as builders. Canada has no such policy. Shipbuilding in Canada is an industry which has important local as well as regional implications, but unfortunately the government has failed to catch the vision of the opportunities the industry could offer the nation. With federal policymakers preoccupied with troubles at the nation's centre, it appears that we will be passing up another fantastic opportunity on our east coast. That lost opportunity could take with it the dream of the Canadian merchant marine. Three times in our history the Canadian nation has developed a sizeable merchant marine, and each time federal indifference has wrecked that fleet.

It is this indifference to Atlantic Canada's needs that is the real core of some of our problems. We need policies that would strengthen the various local industries. Just sending money into an area for what I call cosmetic, make work projects, is not the answer. For example, the federal and provincial governments have spent millions of dollars to keep the Cape Breton steel industry alive. A long-term, positive shipbuilding program could be the catalyst that would set the industry on the road to recovery.

It is estimated that three million tonnes of steel will be needed to manufacture ships for Canadian needs within the next decade. All that is needed to bring this type of development about is a national policy and a national will to carry it out. Without a national long-term policy and direction, companies will not make the investment that is required for development.

It would take investments of $20 million to $100 million per year to keep present Canadian yards competitive with new technologically advanced yards in other nations. Our competition is receiving tremendous help from subsidies. British ship builders, for example, receive 30 per cent, the French receive about 25 per cent, while we in Canada receive about 9 per cent. As a matter of fact, foreign buyers are given a better break when buying Canadian made ships than Canadians are. The government will provide financing at 8.75 per cent for a foreign buyer, but a Canadian buyer who wants to build a ship must go to a bank and pay interest rates as high as 20 per cent or more.

Canada is the only nation in the world with a shipbuilding potential of any consequence which does not have a program to assist its nationals to finance the acquisition of ships locally.

As Conservatives, when we form the next government—and that will be as soon as the next election is called—we intend to change this policy and stimulate our shipbuilding industry for the benefit of offshore use as well as for the benefit of the fishing industry. As Conservatives, we will once again welcome foreign investment.

I cannot help but wonder about this government's concern about foreign investment, Mr. Speaker. I would invite any member of the government to come to Nova Scotia, to Bridgewater, which is just 12 miles from my home town of Lunenburg. They should visit the Michelin plant there, which is the result of French investment. Anyone who remembers the town before Michelin and sees it as it is today will realize the tremendous benefit of foreign investment in the Canadian economy. In my opinion, our need for capital will be immense for the rest of the twentieth century. That need simply cannot be met without foreign investment and foreign loans.

We would make our preference for private-sector ownership and management of the economic system very clear, with policies devised to give room to take risks, to innovate and to grow. The operations of Crown corporations would be reviewed and reduced so long as the private sector could fill any gap that might occur. I believe it is well past the time for a thorough and proper review of our economic future and our relations with our best friend and customer, the United States. The problems that relate, for example, to the boundary issues alone between our two countries, as well as fishing agreements—have been allowed to drift, Sir, for far too long. What may very well have been resolved at the political level now seems destined to end up in continued disputes and bitter controversy between our two countries, which can only be harmful to our own development. I am convinced that within a very short period of time we could turn around the Canadian economy dramatically and restore it by restoring confidence and trust in ourselves, our government and our nation. It can, Sir, and must be done.

• (1750)

Obviously there are just two clear choices for Canada. The Conservative Party believes in a federal Canada, a federal state with 11 strong governments. It believes in the private sector. We believe in private initiative and private ownership of the economy. We believe in a mixed-market economy, and in the fact that none of us will retain any human or personal rights unless we have a largely privately-owned economic sector. We believe in co-operative federalism and the partnership of our five great regions.

The alternative is the Liberal-NDP alliance, which obviously does not believe in a federation for Canada, an alliance which is anti-province and which is for a centralized, unitarian government for Canada. It is an alliance which ignores our vast land, our varying regions, and the need for unity and diversity. The alliance is anti-private sector and anti-private ownership and initiative, and against the right to ownership of private property.

Both of these parties, for example, voted against our proposal that the right to ownership of property be included in the Charter of Human Rights, just as it was in the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights, and as it is in other countries. Life, liberty and the right to property was our proposal, but the Liberal-NDP alliance voted together to remove the guaranteed right to ownership of property in this land. Let us never forget what that alliance brought out in the Charter of Rights.

The Liberal-NDP alliance is calling for the centralization of all political and economic power here in Ottawa. It is pro government ownership and control. It is pro granting of enormous supervisory and regulatory power to the bureaucrat, who becomes not dependent on the people of Canada but, rather, on our master, who takes the fruit of the worker's labour while fashioning more burdens for the workers to carry. I cannot support that type of government, and I hope the Canadian electorate will recognize what they are voting for when they next go to the polls.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that we must build a Canada where people respect the land, a Canada where people respect the sea and the environment, where we do not squander and abuse our good fortune; a Canada where we respect the law and the rights of others; a Canada where people respect and reward initiative, where excellence is encouraged, and where the work of every individual is recognized. That is the type of Canada that I wish to see, and that is why I support the amendment moved today by the Right Hon. Leader of the Conservative Party (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak on this bill today. It gives me an opportunity to talk about some of the myths created as a result of the most recent budget, and some of the ideas circulating about spending gone wild, ideas which are encouraged by the opposition. However, there is very little in the nature of solid suggestion as to where we must go, other than that we should get rid of the NEP or abandoning FIRA, which a very large number of Canadians want to retain and rightly so. One of these myths is that the cost of operating government is the major factor in all of our problems. If government costs were down, then things would change. Of course, when we talk about government costs, we talk about the operation of the government, and that is the myth which has been created. Another myth has to do with the fact that Canada alone is suffering in the world. No other nation is facing the same kinds of problems. Of course, it follows naturally that Canada is becoming a socialist country, if you listen to the speakers from the other side. We are becoming great socialists and therefore we are doomed.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, the hon. members opposite, even though they call us socialist, would not accept the fact that President Reagan is a socialist, but before I have finished speaking I hope to convince the House that President Reagan's government in the U.S. is in just as bad or worse shape than ours. So this is a world problem. It is not a simple problem, or one that is going to go away simply because of what we do in Canada. But at least I think it will help solve the problem if we start understanding it a little.

Let us talk in positive terms and try to dispel some of these myths. The kind of vituperation and venom constantly coming from the other side, especially from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), who is constantly picking at these petty points, does not solve the problem, so let us have a look at this question in more detail.

The most immediate question in terms of the budget is, why did the deficit, which was shown at about $10.6 billion in the November budget, rise by $9.1 billion? Of course, the opposition stands up and says, "Government spending gone wild." That is their answer. Of course, the media picks it up and the whole country thinks that is the answer. But is it? Let us look at that $9.1 billion. It can be divided into two parts: additional spending, and reduction in revenue due to a world recession. How does that divide up? Well, one dollar in every five is additional spending. The $4 is a decline in revenue. It is not spending gone wild, it is the fact we are in a world recession and there is a major decline in revenue. If hon. members cannot believe that from the so-called socialist government, let us have a look at the American government. Revenues for April and May in the United States indicate that this year's budget, the one which finishes in the fall of 1982, will be in deficit by $124 billion. Why? Because the revenues have fallen off significantly in the months of April and May due to the world recession. That recession was not caused by this government, it was a worldwide recession principally caused by the Reagan economic policy in the United States.

May we call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) had the floor.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that I want to deal with several myths that have grown up around the budget which are creating a great deal of mayhem and concern among Canadians, and I do not think that should necessarily be so.

The first myth has to do with the notion that the $9.1 billion additional deficit as between the November budget and the June budget is a sign that government spending has gone wild. Of course, this particular myth has been fostered by the Tories particularly. Every day you find horror stories of government spending. Most of them are half told. The other half you do not quite get. The myth is still there and most Canadians believe that the government has suddenly spent $9.1 billion more than it estimated it was going to spend not more than eight months ago. Of course, this is not true. If we look at the $9.1 billion, we find that something in the order of—

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order. Looking from your vantage point, Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether you thought we had a quorum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I had some difficulty hearing the hon. member's words. I realize he asked a question about the quorum. I also have the impression that he was not calling a quorum. Perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) could indicate to the Chair again what he was commenting on.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wondered if perhaps from your vantage point you thought we had a quorum. I fail to see one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain should realize that the issue of whether or not there is a quorum present is a matter for individual members to call. It is not the responsibility of the Chair to persist in a count from moment to moment. If the hon. member wants to call a quorum, I will use the procedures that are relevant to that. If he simply wants to make an observation with respect to whether or not there is a quorum, then I could not make any comment in that regard.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, further to my point, I would ask that you take a count to see whether we have a quorum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will take that reference by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain to be a call for quorum. Is that what the hon. member wants me to do?

Mr. Deans: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain has now called a quorum. I want to be clear about that. Is that correct?

Mr. Deans: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain has indicated he has called a quorum. I will explain to hon. members who are present in the House at this point that there is no mechanism by which the Chair will recognize points of order or questions of privilege. There is some debate as to whether or not that is the most appropriate way to proceed. But as far as I am concerned, that is the way in which I will proceed. I will not recognize points of order or questions of privilege.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I have just finished saying that I will not recognize a point of order or a question of privilege. There will be no intervening procedure whatsoever while I count quorum. I will ask the deputy clerk of the House to assist me in determining the number of members present. Those hon. members who are here should understand that there is no difficulty whatever in hon. members entering or leaving the chamber. Further, we will count those hon. members present by row. The deputy clerk of the House and myself will take note of those members who are present row by row. Any member may enter the chamber and any member may exit at any time according to his wish.

I will now ask the deputy clerk of the House to count the hon. members present.

• (2010)

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Clerk of the House indicates to the Chair that there are 24 members of the House who are present, including the occupant of the chair. Therefore there is a quorum and the chair will now recognize the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae).

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I think we lost about five minutes in that exercise. I hope that will not be part of my time. Could I have a ruling on that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is not disposed to make rulings at the request of hon. members; in so far as the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan is concerned with respect to the time available to him. It is not a question of whether or not that additional time is available. It is more a question of whether or not he has the usual 40 minutes, and he does.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, the point I was trying to make is that the increased government deficit is not, in a major way, caused by increases in spending. The actual facts are that 79 per cent of all increase in the deficit is caused by decreases in revenue brought about by world recession. Other governments, such as the American government, are finding exactly the same thing happening. Between the two budgets only one dollar in five of the increase in the deficit was caused by an increase in government spending. Half of that was caused by spending which did not happen in the last year, and the other half was mostly caused by additional spending because of the recession.

The Canadian public is not aware of the essential point. It has not been made aware of it by the media; confusion has been sown by the opposition. The essential point is simply that four dollars out of every five of the increased deficit was caused by a decrease in revenue, a decrease in revenue caused by a world recession. That is a fundamental point for Canadians to understand what has happened. Government spending has not gone wild. It is the simple fact that we are in a world recession and revenues have fallen. I will demonstrate later how that has happened in the United States as well as in Canada.

The second myth is the notion that all government spending is in the same order. Let me look at that. There are two basic kinds of spending. The first one is what we call transfers, that is, transfers from the federal government to other governments in terms of health, welfare and so on. I am referring to these kinds of transfers to provinces and to municipalities. There are transfers to people in terms of old age pensions, various forms of pensions, children's allowance or family allowances. There are transfers to corporations in the form of subsidies. There are transfers to funds like the Western Development Fund. There is a whole series of transfers. Also there are transfers to people who own Canada savings bonds, from whom the government borrows money. These are transfers from one Canadian to another. Only about 1 per cent is actually transferred out of the country.

These transfers represent 78 per cent of all federal government spending. Another 2 per cent is in capital spending; in other words, when one acquires capital and builds buildings. Only 20 per cent is in operating the government, such as running the Post Office, the Department of National Defence and all other areas of government. The costs of transferring that money are all in that 20 per cent. When we talk about governments taking from the people, we are talking about the area of goods and services or 20 per cent of the spending which runs all government departments such as the Department of National Defence. That 20 per cent buys our planes and does many things.

If we are really looking at things in a thoughtful way and trying to find what are the answers, rather than making noises, making fun of the government, destroying the government or defeating the government, then we must look at these transfers in an intelligent way. How large is the $20 billion in terms of the gross national product? If I say that I spend $20,000 a year, it does not indicate anything about what that does to me. For example, if I make $40,000 per year and I spend $20,000, I am doing very well. If I make $10,000 per year and I spend $20,000, than I am doing very badly. It is the same with a country. The gross national product of this country for next year will be around $359 billion. That is the gross national product. The value of all goods and services, everything done in the country, will be $359 billion.

The Government of Canada, in terms of goods and services, is taking $20 billion out of that $359 billion. The other $70 billion which the government will spend in 1982-83, the year about which we are talking, the year which the borrowing is for, is transferred from one Canadian to another. It is not taken out of the economy.

How does this compare in terms of the amount spent on goods and services as a percentage of the gross national product? It is about 5.2 per cent of the gross national product. Until approximately 1953 that was about 10 per cent of the gross national product. The amount the government spent on goods and services was about 10 per cent of the gross national product. Then it started to decline, and it declined until about 1965 when it became 6 per cent of the gross national product. Since 1965 it has stayed around that level. It is 5.2 per cent, which is not a very large portion of the gross national product.

I remind hon. members that the other $70 billion that the government will spend in 1982-83 will be transferred from one Canadian to another. It may be suggested that we are transferring money from the wrong Canadian to the wrong Canadian. I believe that the question of who gets the transfers is what we should be considering, and not ascribing this entire amount to government spending. If one were to listen to the opposition, one would think that the Government of Canada is taking 25 per cent of everything away from Canadians. That is not the case. The government is taking 5.2 per cent of the gross national product from Canadians. While it takes a lot more than the 5.2 per cent, it is transferred back. All but 5.2 per cent is transferred back, and I think it is very important for Canadians to understand this.

Another myth is that we are in debt such as we have never been before. This myth arises from a terrible distortion, that is, that this borrowing bill, is creating a debt situation which has never been seen before by Canadians. The net national debt, which will be approximately $200 billion or $300 billion by next year, is approximately 30 per cent or less of the gross national product. While this sounds like a large amount of money it should be compared to that in previous years. In 1926-27 the national debt was 45 per cent. In the middle of the depression it went up to 66 per cent. At the end of the war it was 109 per cent of the gross national product. In the 1950s it was in the range of 30 per cent to 35 per cent. Now, in 1982-83, it is at 30 per cent.

Is that something that Canadians cannot live with? Canadians are being told by the opposition, principally the Tories, as well as the media, that we are in a doomsday situation and that we cannot handle this kind of debt. However, 80 per cent of all that money which the government spends is simply being transferred from one Canadian to another.

As I said previously, we should be discussing in the House how and where that money is transferred. I would like to hear this point raised in other speeches. This is the key factor, not the amount itself. It is not an amount which Canadians cannot live with.

I receive many letters these days from what I suspect is a group which travels around the country writing up these letters because they all seem to be the same. I know that other members on this side of the House are receiving the same letter which urges me, as an MP, as well as my colleagues, to cross the floor. Each of these letters tells us that we are a socialist government which is destroying this country and which is the cause of our problems. These letter writers write as though no other country is having problems and Canada's problems are our fault because we are socialists. I do not know where these people get that idea but that is what they are saying in those letters.

Therefore, I would ask hon. members to examine another country, the United States. I do not think that any of these letter writers would call President Reagan a socialist. Some of them might, but I fail to see the probability of that particular appellation.

Let us review the situation in the United States to see if there are any comparisons between the problems we are facing and the problems facing the American government under so-called Reaganomics. These figures are difficult to compare because our fiscal year begins on April 1 and ends on March 31, whereas the American government's fiscal year begins on October 1 and ends on September 30. However, it appears that our deficit in 1982-83 will be approximately $19.6 billion; the United States deficit will be somewhere between $150 billion and $160 billion. These figures have been steadily increasing lately, and an interesting reason has been cited in The New York Times on July 11 where they said that the $9.7 billion surplus reported in April is so far below normal that it would be translated into $106 billion deficit at the annual rate, and May's 18.9 deficit would actually be more than $152 billion. The revenues are falling and falling in the United States. According to this article, their deficits for this year ending in September will be somewhere between $125 billion and $150 billion. Next year's deficit will certainly be in the order of $150 or $170 billion.

Let us use $150 billion as a conservative figure. In Canada, the gross national product will be $358.9 billion. The gross national product in the United States will be $3.1197 trillion. Our deficit as a percentage of gross national product, which is how we must look at it, is running at approximately 5.46 per cent. If we take the lowest figure, the American deficit would be 4.81 per cent. If we consider the figure of $170 billion, which many believe it will be, it will be approximately 5.4 per cent, roughly the same as ours. However, that is not what is so important. What is important besides the comparison in itself is the ability of these two countries to accumulate capital. And they have indices that are called gross fixed investment. We can estimate that in the fiscal year 1982-83 Canada's growth in gross fixed investment will be $91.7 billion. In the United States it will be $551.8 billion.

Let us relate that deficit against the amount of capital that accumulates in the country in a year and we will see then which is more serious. The deficit as a percentage of gross fixed investment in this country in 1982-83 will be 21.3 per cent. It will be 27.2 per cent in the United States. It is a far larger deficit there in terms of the amount of capital that is accumulated. Of course, this is what makes for real difficulty with the American interest rates. Of course, I am talking about the United States which is a country operating under what is known as Reaganomics.

A number of members opposite, including the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), has said that if Reaganomics fail, we fail. This is a strongly held opinion on the other side. I hear many members talking about Reaganomics being the answer. Let us consider this further. Let us again study government spending on current goods and services. I had indicated that it was about 5.2 per cent of the gross national product of this country. That is the amount that the government actually spends on the post office and defence and other areas. In the United States that accounts for 8 per cent of the gross national product. The government of the United States takes that out of the economy, as opposed to transfers from one citizen to another. This factor is much more serious. The total government expenditures in 1982-83 as a percentage of the gross national product, which is what we really must consider, will come close to 25.2 per cent in Canada. This includes transfers. In the United States it would be 24.5 per cent, which is roughly the same. However, the major factor we must remember is that the expenditures on goods and services by the government is what is critical. We must continue to remember that the expenditures on goods and services in the operating of the government are critical. These expenditures represent 8.4 per cent of the gross national product in United States and only 5.2 per cent in Canada. These are just a few of the myths we hear from the opposition. I will read one newspaper excerpt which states:

After two years of high interest rates, the economy is virtually stagnant. Caught in a squeeze between high rates, falling inflation and weak sales, business is taking a beating. Bankruptcy figures are approaching the record highs of the Depression, investment plans are being shelved, millions of workers have been laid off with scant prospect of a quick return to the payroll. And despite all the battles ... to hold down Federal spending, enormous deficits still lie ahead, triggering worries in the financial markets about future inflation and generating continued upward pressure on long-term interest rates.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, was that statement concerning Canada from the Edmonton Journal, or The Globe and Mail or the Montreal Gazette? No, it was an article entitled "The Troubled Fed Seeks a New Way" found in the front page of the business section of The New York Times of July 4, 1982. I left out the words "in Congress", just so that I could disguise its origin. So those in the opposition are saying that because the government is socialist, it is the one which is destroying the country, yet if we sit down and read what is happening in the United States as reported in The New York Times, in The Globe and Mail and all the other Conservative newspapers in the country, we find that they all say the same thing. Since part of the deficit is caused by our energy costs and borrowing for energy transfers, let me just read a couple of statements: "It is predicted that by this time next year, 500 to 600 independent operators will conceivably have been forced out of business." Another one states: "Drilling rigs are stacked, or out of service, all over the oil patch. The average utilization rate stands at around 65 per cent compared with almost 100 per cent last year". It goes on to say: "Other service companies are awash in excess capacity or have seen their order books stripped bare."

These are just some of the statements. Do they come from a Canadian newspaper or magazine? No, they do not. They come from Fortune magazine, the January 14 issue. They are saying the exact same things. Do not forget that it was not the National Energy Program which created this article. The program has nothing to do with the American oil industry. We find that Standard Oil of California prospects tumbled 65 per cent in the first quarter, Mobil was off 49 per cent, Texaco was off 44 per cent, Phillips Petroleum dropped 44 per cent, and so on. Canadians are being fed this nonsense by the opposition, that the country is in a mess because we are socialists and have turned everything over to government. When hon. members in the opposition say this, and when they feed this to Canadians, and when Canadians believe it—

Mr. Nystrom: You are not socialists. I do not believe it.

Mr. McRae: —they are completely ignoring what is happening in the United States. No one will tell me that Reaganomics is a socialist form of government, but they are having the same problems.

Mr. Nystrom: You are a running dog capitalist.

Mr. McRae: I have a great deal of difficulty with that kind of thinking. The government should refute that kind of nonsense.

I would like to take those points in order again so that we can make sure we understand them. The first point is that 80 cents on every dollar, $4 in every $5, or 80 per cent of the increase of that deficit is caused by decreases in revenue, caused by a world recession.

Mr. Deans: It is caused by unemployment.

Mr. McRae: That is irrefutable. No one will say that that is not the reason.

Mr. Deans: I will say it is not the reason. I say right now that that is not the only reason!

Mr. McRae: In 1982, 78 per cent of all money that the government spends, nearly $4 out of $5, is transferred in one form or another. Less than 2 per cent is in capital spending and the balance of 20 per cent, just a shade over 20 per cent,

$1 on every $5, goes to goods and services or to government itself. That is what the government takes out in national defence and so on.

In 1982, as a percentage of gross national product, the national debt will stand somewhere in the order of 30 per cent, a much lower figure than we have experienced in the years from the early 1920s to today. All these figures compare very well. The United States spends 8 per cent of its gross national product on goods and services, while we spend only 5.2 per cent. I tell the Canadian people this fact to show that this is not a record of wild spending, a ridiculous free-for-all in terms of spending, with the combination of horror stories and so on. This is a sensible and sane set of numbers in a world recession. Those are the numbers that we will find in countries like West Germany, France, Italy and Britain. They vary from place to place because some areas are better than others, but we are all in this type of recession. If we do not get some action—

Mr. Deans: From whom?

Mr. McRae: —particularly from the Reagan government, it will be very difficult for us to move ourselves. There are some things we can do, but we will be doing them—

Mr. Deans: What do you recommend?

Mr. McRae: —if the Reagan administration does not improve its pattern.

I would like to close by suggesting that our eyes should be much more glued to what is happening in the United States, to an increase in defence spending over the next three years on a scale of about $130 million a year so that, by 1985, its defence spending will be $130 million more than this year. That will mean a tremendous increase of approximately 4 per cent in the gross national product of that country, not much more than that spent by our government in total for goods and services. The United States will also have to replace something like $200 billion in taxes that it cut, a good portion going to fairly wealthy Americans, and that would be scaled over three years. The United States government will have to find $330 billion per year by 1985 in order to keep its deficit down.

Mr. Huntington: What do we have to find?

Mr. McRae: We, as Canadians, are in a very difficult position because we live next to the United States and about 25 per cent of our gross national product is directed to trade with the United States. The government decided to bring in the National Energy Program so that we could become more independent of the American economy. The one thing we hear from the opposition is that if they were in power, they would get rid of the National Energy Program and, although they would not disband FIRA, they would make it more innocuous. Those are their major points.

• (2040)

One of our biggest problems is that the colossus of the United States is running up a deficit that could reach $250 billion. We are trying to be free of that. Those across the floor ask us to disband our one chance of independence. How ridiculous can one get.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is obvious the member opposite is spewing garbage. Maybe he could clarify his statement and tell us who specifically asked him to cross the floor, because I am sure no sane person on this side would want him.

Mr. McRae: I do not know who the people were. I must admit it would be insane for us to cross the floor. The hon. member and I are in agreement there. I cannot imagine joining a party which, if it formed the government, would disband the National Energy Program and get rid or at least make FIRA totally innocuous.

We on this side take a middle road. We are trying to work this out. The very things that will give us that kind of freedom to move in the future are the things that we on this side are doing. I am much more afraid of what is happening in the United States under the Reagan administration, which the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre and others have said is the model they would follow. I will be very much afraid if that government stays in power much longer.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to enter this debate, particularly to follow the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) and to explain why we call him a socialist and why it is a horror story. First, this bill should be called the "It's Ours" bill, the "It's Ours" borrowing bill. The $11 billion deficit is ours. It is like Petro-Canada, it's ours. It costs billions, but it sure is ours.

My leader spoke a few hours ago very eloquently on this bill and proposed an amendment which I fully support. That amendment simply says no to those opposite and no to profligate spending.

What we need in this country is a very simple solution. We need increased productivity. It can only come about by increased consumer spending and by increased exports. The budget has not addressed this and neither does this borrowing bill.

Just a few short months ago in July, 1980, this government was given $12 billion borrowing authority in Bill C-30. Bill C-59 of June 29, 1980, gave them an additional $14 billion. Bill C-111 in 1982 gave them $6.6 billion. Now Bill C-125 is going to give them another $11 billion because we do not have the horses over here to stop them. That is an unprecedented $43.6 billion borrowing authority by a government in one session. It is more than in any other session in history. As a deficit, as a proportion of national debt, it is a straggering legacy to leave to our children.

The interest burden is $723 for every man, woman and child in this great Canada of ours, or $1,864 per taxpayer on the figures that the member who just finished speaking says are very little. This is $17.7 billion on interest alone.

The November budget deficit was estimated to be $10.5 billion. Now, a mere eight months later, it is some $20 billion. What is it in reality? Is it $25 billion? How long is it before this minister is back at the trough? Is anyone really surprised by 100 per cent? I do not think most Canadians are, not on the strength of the budget.

This government talks about restraint, but it talks out of both sides of its mouth. This is 6 per cent hogwash, balderdash. The poor secretary, the poor person at the low end of the scale will be limited to 6 per cent, but this borrowing bill represents a 12 per cent increase. Restraint must be examined, but not by profligate spendthrifts. This government has projected, and I say projected, financial requirements of $17.1 billion this year, but it already has $10.2 billion in borrowing authority, $3.6 billion unused from previous years and $6.6 billion from Bill C-111, as previously mentioned. Now, they ask for another $11 billion.

Another of those profligate Liberals by the name of C. D. Howe a few years ago used to say, "What's in a million?" These misappropriators are now bandying about "What's in a billion?" So the government now has $21.1 billion in borrowing authority, some $4 billion more than is necessary. We say that one half of that amount in their hands is too much, and our amendments will say so loud and clear. I would as soon trust these mishandlers with an extra $4 billion of hard-earned taxpayers' money as I would Jesse James with a bank deposit or Clifford Olson as my daughter's babysitter.

Mr. Deans: That's crude.

Mr. Stewart: Over the past 14 years government spending has gone completely out of control, as pointed out by the reports of the auditors general. Spending climbed from $12.4 billion in 1968 at the inception of this government to $90.6 billion this year, an increase of 630 per cent. The member opposite says he does not find any difficulty with this. Since the Liberal re-election in 1980, it has risen by a paltry amount, just a teensy little bit, just an amazing 55 per cent, and those on that side just do not care. This bill is more than just another borrowing bill.

I would like to look at the real underlying cause or our problem in this country. It was not caused merely by financial mismanagement. It was not caused just by high interest rates or by a falling dollar. It was caused by a philosophy that dates back some 14 years. This philosophy began by infiltration, indoctrination, mismanagement, lack of accountability and lack of innovation. The Canadian people finally, as revealed by the Gallup poll, caught on to what is going on and they lack confidence. They are angered and they are in despair. This is philosophically so because the leader of this nation is a left-leaning socialist ideologue who has no use for free enterprise, and that is something the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan had better take a close look at, and I shall tell him why he has led us down that slippery socialist slope to the unenviable financial crisis in which we now find ourselves. I am not standing here ad hominem and attacking a man. That is the first lesson we get when we study logic or morals, that you do not attack the man. However, I attack the philosophy of that man as a Canadian. I will tell the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan why we know they are socialists over there. I quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as follows:

> —it seems to me that the régime of free enterprise has shown itself incapable of adequately resolving problems of contemporary society. That's why I am personally convinced that with the upheavals inherent in automation, cybernetics, a nuclear energy, liberal democracy will not long be able to satisfy our growing demands for justice and liberty . . . I believe in the necessity of state control—

Is that socialist?

> —to maximize the liberty and welfare of all.
> The erroneous, liberal idea of property helped to emancipate the bourgeoisie but is now hampering the march toward economic democracy.

I consider that socialism. He also said:

• (2050)

> We haven't been able to make it work, the free-markets system. We've ended up with very high unemployment and very high inflation. We can't go back to what was before . . . That means the government is going to take a larger role in running institutions.

I call that socialism.

A further quotation reads:

> I should like to see socialists feeling free to espouse whatever political trends or to use whatever constitutional tools happen to fit each particular problem at each particular time.

As far back as 1956 he wrote that the best way to achieve change is by entering one of the old parties—hon. members opposite know what "old party" he was talking about—and changing them from the inside. He said that socialist policies can then be imposed on unsuspecting voters under the reassuring label of the old party. That is why we call hon. members opposite socialists. The Prime Minister also said:

> Federalism must be welcomed as a valuable tool which permits dynamic parties to plant socialist governments in certain provinces, from which the seed of radicalism can slowly spread.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is a custom in the House that if an hon. member wants to quote from a document, he should table it before the House. I ask that the hon. member table the document from which he is reading.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, only ministers can table. These quotations just happen to be quotations from Cité Libre, Rassemblement and "Federalism and the French Canadians". I would be happy to provide the hon. member with all the books. I have read them all.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. member to table the newspapers from which he is reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): Will the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) table the quotations from which he is reading?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I am sure Lubor Zink would be very happy if I were to table this newspaper.

Mr. Allmand: Oh, Lubor.

Mr. Stewart: I have a further quotation for the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, who wanted to know why we call

hon. members opposite socialists. I am explaining it to him. Here is another quotation:

> So long as socialism is to seek fulfilment through parliamentary democracy with its paraphernalia—

"Paraphernalia" yet.

> —of parties and elections, there will be a constant need for the tactician, as well as the theorist. And both will have to be reconciled by the strategist.

The strategist sits across the aisle. The last quotation I have is the following:

> And in terms of political tactics, the only real question democratic socialists must answer is: "Just how much reform can the majority of the people be brought to desire at the present time."

I think the Canadian people are at the breaking point at the present time, yet this government foists its so-called Canadianism and policies of so-called restraint when really it is socialism. This is a time when this country needs revitalization and a real shot in the arm so that we can again be proud Canadians. Canadians must reaffirm their faith and their belief in independent business. They must shout out against excessive borrowing such as we have today, excessive spending and excessive government control, which destroys all we should hold near and dear. The inalienable right to life, liberty and the ownership of property, as stated by Locke, have been passed down to us as God-given rights by our Creator, and nobody should have the right to destroy them. Why has the ownership of property been omitted from our Constitution? I ask hon. members opposite to think very hard about that and in the light of the statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) I have quoted.

Mr. Sargeant: The Conservative premiers didn't want it in there.

Mr. Stewart: The Prime Minister does not want the ownership of property in the Constitution, and there is a bill in committee right now which gives the government the right to own property. The direction in which the philosophies of the Prime Minister lead is obvious. There are only two viable political systems left in this world, socialism—and eventually communism—and capitalism. Thank God we have lived successfully in a capitalist society, until just recently when the Liberal Party changed. The government is taking away our rights systematically—let us make no mistake about that; and hon. members opposite know this—while it spends, spends, and spends and borrows and borrows and borrows. And now it has the audacity to come in here and ask us for another $11 billion.

Let us remember that under communism the state owns and controls the means of productivity: factories, tools and farm products. It sets prices and wages and supplies the products which come out, whatever the price may be. That is what has been happening in Canada under the guise of Canadianization. That is what those quotations about socialism are all about. Has it made life for us one bit better? I would like to ask the people in the gallery if they have felt more content in the last two years. Now the government wants $4 billion more of our hard-earned taxpayers' dollars to waste.

Certainly over the lifespan of North America our free-enterprise system has provided more material goods and services than any other system in the whole world, but it is being eroded by this government which wants to spend and spend and borrow and borrow so that there is no wealth left, after a time, to provide the things to which we are accustomed, unless they are given to us by government. If this government goes much longer on its borrowing-spending spree and nationalization—

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the hon. member if he could tell us the difference between his definition of communism controlling wages and the recent piece of legislation which his party supported which controls wages in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): That is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Stewart: Once a socialist, always a socialist, Mr. Speaker.

What I was saying is that if we continue on this spree, we will all be equals like the commies; we will be equally poor.

Mr. Nystrom: You can be a commie; I am not.

Mr. Stewart: When the state controls the means of production, it controls economic freedom. If it controls economic freedom, it controls individual freedom. We then become what is termed serfs, vassals or slaves, and hon. members can ask any Russian in the U.S.S.R. all about that. That is the way we are heading, and I would like us to make no mistake about that. "Make government strong." "Make the people demand more of government." "Make them be subservient and beholden and demand more of government and less and less of themselves."

Let me quote the Prime Minister once again on this particular point, as follows:

> Since the sum total of governments is the sum total of powers, the first task of a socialist is to educate all of the people to demand maximum service from all of their governments.

I do not want more government, and I came here, hopefully, to get rid of that fellow over there who wanted more government and more interference in Canadians' lives. I want less government, and that is what we on this side of the House stand for. I do not want to be a socialist or depend on government, and I do not believe most Canadians do either.

Why have we found ourselves in this dilemma? Again, there is infiltration. After the Prime Minister had been to China twice, Russia once and tried to row a boat to Cuba, he was invited, with Jean Marchand and Gérard Pelletier—the so-called three wise men—to join the Liberal Party. The three men spurned the offer. They were supporting the NDP and, in the pages of Cité Libre, poured terrible scorn on the then Prime Minister, Lester Pearson, for accepting nuclear weapons for Canada. However, in 1965 the three men changed their tune very drastically. Nationalism was sweeping Quebec, and there was no one in the federal Liberal Party strong enough to turn the tide. The Prime Minister said, again in Cité Libre, while espousing his NDP philosophy—this was before his ascension; he is only the second person ever to do that:

I would have to point out in the strongest terms the autocracy of the Liberal structure and the cowardice of its members.

Those members are hon. members opposite.

I have never seen in all my examinations of politics so degrading a spectable as that of all these Liberals turning their coats in unison with their chief, when they saw a chance to take power . . . . The head of the troupe having shown the way, the rest followed with the elegance of animals heading for the trough.

He was talking about hon. members opposite. At another time he merely called Liberals idiots.

The hon. member talked about crossing the floor. He is one of 15 we would not want, but there are about 15 hon. members opposite of whom I can think that we would accept with alacrity. If they would cross the floor, we would then be rid of the horror show which was once the Liberal Party, until it was infiltrated by the present Prime Minister.

So much for historical fact and the true philosophy the Leader of the Government of Canada espouses. His sheep bleat docilely behind.

Let us get back to the excessive government spending and mismanagement of this great country of ours. The first thing was the National Energy Program. It too was alluded to by the previous speaker. He did not talk about the state control of the oil industry. He did not talk about the confiscation of land. He did not talk about lack of confidence in the world which destroyed our dollar after this happened. He did not talk about buying Petrofina at twice the price at which it was on the stock market, which gave the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) the title of patron saint of Belgium. I wonder if the government ever reads press clippings, particularly those from the United States financial news and not the garbage the hon. member opposite was quoting. Recently The New York Times called Canada's National Energy Program Canada's "self destruct" energy policy. This one, single program has done more than any other vehicle to weaken our economic infrastructure and make me have to stand here and say "no" to another $11 billion. It has resulted in lost jobs. Every Canadian knows that. You are from the west, Mr. Speaker, so you know about lost technology and lost investor confidence. With the stroke of a pen the government has Castroized the energy sector. It has changed the rules in mid-game. Canadians did not know that this was going to happen when they voted against an 18-cent excise tax only to get a 67 per cent tax on oil. What that accomplished was the Americanization of our oil industry. That is where our jobs went, where the drilling rigs went, where the technology and investment went. We are no closer to energy self-sufficiency now than we have been in the past ten years.

• (2100)

The regressive policies of this government have resulted in the cancellation of megaprojects which would have provided hundreds of thousands of jobs in the oil patch and manufacturing plants of this province and the Province of Quebec.

Had this party still been in government, Mr. Speaker, these projects would have been just about on stream now to help us with energy self-sufficiency regardless of cost. We would not be dependent on the unstable supply of foreign oil.

In October, 1980, the national energy policy was introduced. Within one year the number of new oil wells had dropped by about 30 per cent. The number of oil rigs in use dropped by 25 per cent, production in the petroleum industry dropped from 1.76 million barrels per day to 1.61 million barrels per day, and prices soared and skyrocketed.

The article in The New York Times continues as follows:

What has happened since the National Energy Program in Canada and Reagan decontrol in the United States? For the first time in a decade, production of crude oil within the continental United States rose. Drilling of new wells increased 40 per cent. And the number of operating rigs hit a record high. Matching this increase, continued decreases in per capita consumption caused crude imports to decline by as much as half a million barrels a day.

In Canada, on the other hand, 1981 production of crude oil and natural gas fell 10 per cent and 4 per cent, respectively. Exploratory activities declined by 20 per cent in western Canada, as companies either moved to the far north to obtain production incentives payments or left the country entirely.

While $4 billion to $5 billion was spent on drilling, $7 billion left Canada as Canadian companies bought out foreign interests.

The outlook is for another 25 per cent reduction in well completions this year—

If the northern projects fail, as the $13 billion Alsands heavy-oil project did, then Canada will be importing half of its crude by the end of the decade. Since the United States should be importing only 20 per cent of its crude by that time, the Canadians will likely come to us for help in the next embargo. Let us not be of assistance, given that they have wrecked their markets and expelled efficient United States companies. Let them freeze in the dark.

The Wall Street Journal carried an article under the heading "Poor Canada". Mr. Speaker, do you ever bite your closest friend? They do, and that is what is happening as a result of the National Energy Program. The article had this to say:

Mr. MacEachen and Mr. Trudeau are fond of blaming Canada's troubles on their big neighbour to the south. It seems that American credit markets cannot yield all the capital Canadians and everyone else in the world would like to borrow, so we all suffer from high interest rates. The budget deficit projected in the revised Canadian budget is a real shocker, equivalent to a $155 billion deficit in the American economy.

The U.S. is experiencing low inflation and high (by recent standards) unemployment. Canada is suffering both high inflation and high unemployment.

The reason is not so hard to find. The United States departed last year from the kinds of policies that generate stagflation, principally a continuing build-up of the tax burden after it is evident the economy is labouring under the existing burden. The U.S. installed policies to sharply reduce the tax rise. Canada's Liberals have been blithely piling on heavier burdens and, as the latest news shows, intend to keep right on doing it. Their expectations that some day their heavier taxes are going to reduce the budget deficit look steadily more hopeless as the deficit soars along with the taxes.

Obviously the people across the aisle have never read "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" to see what happened back in those times. I wonder who The Wall Street Journal meant when it referred to Canada's "socialists"? Was it the wolves in wolves' clothing across the aisle or, was it—as in Churchill's reference to Attlee—the sheep in sheep's clothing to my left?

During the period when the Reagan government and Congress in the United States cut taxes and cut government spending, this mob across the aisle keeps raising taxes and adding to a staggering national debt through deficit spending policies. Now it wants to borrow $11 billion more.

The Fraser Institute in Vancouver has published some very interesting Canadian statistics, Mr. Speaker. The institute's tax index shows that the tax bill of the average family has increased by 515 per cent since 1961. Bonds which the federal government issued to cover deficits are essentially deferred taxation—we all know that—since tax revenue must ultimately be raised to pay the carrying charges and redeem the principal. If you build in this deferred taxation, the Fraser Institute estimates that between 1961 and 1980 taxes increased by 619 per cent.

In 1980 the average Canadian family had an income tax bill of about $4,345 while other taxes—fuel oil, motor vehicle, sales taxes, property and, would you believe, amusement taxes, totalled almost $7,000 or 70 per cent of the entire tax bill per family. Most Canadians are not even aware of these hidden taxes which erode their disposable income and destroy the prosperity of Canada. Until they wise up to the facts of what this socialist government with its buddies to my left are doing and that people can spend their money better than governments can, we will be in the same quandary.

The government has concentrated so much time and attention on putting expensive and non-productive social programs in place that is has neglected the bread and butter economic policies which must generate the revenue it will later collect in taxes.

Let us look at some of those figures issued by the Fraser Institute again, Mr. Speaker. Where does the money go? The government has no idea how much it has squandered on things such as bilingualism training. An article in The Toronto Sun on July 18, 1982 by Douglas Fisher deals with the CBC and bilingualism. He writes:

> There are 24.5 million of us, of whom 20 million are able to speak English, 7.4 million are able to speak French.
> Last year English language network radio and TV cost $186 million.
> Last year French language network radio and TV cost $145 million.
> That is, it costs just 25 per cent more for the network to reach anglophones than francophones. If the service were alloted costs on a straight per capita basis, the spending on French services would be 250 per cent more than for English services.
> There is another disproportionate tilt toward the French language service in money terms. Of its $792 million budget, CBC raised $131 million from advertising. Over 80 per cent of this was raised by English language TV.
> Again, the moral: Bilingualism and keeping Quebec in Canada costs a lot of money.

He also points out that CBC TV is sending a crew of 90 to cover the Commonwealth Games in Australia while CBC Radio is sending ten people. We just need to check those figures against those for the Versailles Conference to see the profligate spending of this government.

Let us get to the crux of the matter, Mr. Speaker. In 1981-82 the government's bilingualism program cost $448,184,000 for a measly 6,075 person years. Where is the productivity in $400 million being spent on a program of languages? If we could suspend that for two or three years until we put our house in order that might be different.

The government is living beyond its means, Mr. Speaker. I could go on and on with a litany of government spending on social programs that do not make sense. Take universality, for instance. I suppose the Harold Ballards of this world who are drawing the old age pension deserve the same amount of money as the poor beggar in the street. I do not begrudge income security payments, nor does my party; we are proud of them, Mr. Speaker, but we question the manner in which they are distributed. I think they could be better and more economically distributed through a system of tax credits rather than universality.

What other government in the world spends more money on advertising than any private corporation? Is it $225 million or $250 million? How do we know? We now have a minister of propaganda, for the first time since Nazi Germany, who sits on the other side and spends this money calling it the Canada Unity Office, or some such name.

My colleague, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), just elicited some interesting reports from questions he placed on the Order Paper. Between March, 1980 and March, 1981, the government paid out $3.5 million in taxi fares. Is that not just beautiful? Your government pays people's taxi fares, even though they have large expense accounts. Between 1980 and 1981 the government spent $16.7 million on telegrams, cables and other wireless communication. We have a 30-cent stamp, but that is another beautiful thing. You cannot post a letter from Barrie, in my riding, even guaranteed by the postmaster, after paying $2.15 to have it registered, and have it in Toronto in 48 hours; it takes four days.

This is a very hospitable government. A total of $10.4 million was spent on hospitality; food, booze and entertainment. That is the equivalent of 700,000 bottles of liquor. And those members are sitting over there talking about restraint, about 6 per cent. They are operating on 6 per cent brains. Prior to the 1981 Grey Cup they spent how much? They spent $8,950 for the first party, $17,250 for the next one and $72,650 for half-time. Beautiful stuff. Janet Smith, an assistant secretary to the cabinet, was sent to Nice in southern France for four months to learn French. The cost to the taxpayer of this Riviera education was $12,000 plus her salary, which is in the range of $60,000 to $70,000 a year. That is the government's idea of restraint.

I would like to speak for a moment, Mr. Speaker, about another favourite subject of mine and one of my colleagues', that is, Crown corporations. Canadair, we have that beautiful jet and this government used to talk to us about the Avro Arrow. Canadair, a Crown corporation, who is it responsible to? How much does it owe? It owes $1.15 billion, and it has to have 400 Challengers in the air to be able to do anything about that debt. My colleague, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), is a big man and every time he stands in this House he becomes, in my view, a bigger man in stature because he calls a spade a spade, and he is telling those socialists over there what it is all about. This is what he said, as reported in Hansard of June 30, at page 18968:

> I have watched this alliance between the New Democratic Party and the Liberal government, this Liberal-NDP socialist alliance, move in with structure and intervention and control over the marketplace. They move in with an avalanche of Crown corporations. We have just given the minister responsible for the national energy policy powers to put in place, at his will and whim, subject to cabinet approval, Crown corporations with agency of Her Majesty status, which puts them in a place all by themselves. The laws of the provinces, the laws of this federal government, cannot touch these people. These people can commit themselves to debt and to risk, and they create contingent liabilities on top of the burden on this country. The last time I checked, our burden was something like $137 billion of direct debt. We now have another $20 billion to add to that. On top of that debt, our Crown corporations' subgovernment has created another known $58 billion of contingent liabilities on this government. It is no wonder that some of us at large in this country, including the chief executive officers of banks, are now outwardly and outspokenly concerned about the condition of this country. Countries do go bankrupt, just the same as we are watching small business, medium business and now large business face bankruptcies and receiverships.

I agree with him wholeheartedly. Even Lord Keynes himself would do a 180 degree revolution in his grave over what these fellows across the way are perpetrating in the name of Canadianization. This government is unable to speak with even the slightest degree of credibility when it addresses itself to the Canadian people on the question of restraint. The record of this government has been an unbroken string of fiscal excess. We live in a period of little or no economic growth; 1.3 million Canadians are out of work and another 600,000 have stopped looking for work. There is double-digit inflation, crippling deficits, and the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) stands up and smiles and says we are in great shape.

I disagree with the Minister of Finance on many things, but most of all on his assessment of the number one enemy in Canada. Inflation is not our number one enemy; high interest rates are. Licking inflation will not necessarily result in lowering interest rates; all you have to do is to look at the U.S. to see that. What I am trying to say is that high interest rates encourage Canadians to sock away their disposable income in banks and things like Canada Savings Bonds at 19.75 per cent interest. How can we get anyone to make a capital investment when they can go out and sock the money into something as safe as CSBs at 19.75 per cent? The government is telling the nation that interest rates are not going to come down if it is willing to pay 19.75 per cent. The results are readily seen in the marketplace.

I would like to summarize, Mr. Speaker, what we have had in Canada in the past 14 years. It is infiltration by a Prime Minister into a political party, with which he did not agree, to take it over; the indoctrination of people in this country in the theory that there is free lunch when there is not; mismanagement, lack of accountability, deception, and a philosophical and economical drift to socialism by an undedicated and manipulated herd of trained seals over there. We need vocal, democratic, and proud free-enterprise Canadians cheering this House of Commons once more.

Traditionally, Mr. Speaker, I have been a pluralist, someone who has been positive. I hate being negative, but after two years of watching the mismanagement of my country by those people opposite it is hard to get up for the game any more. We have two years to wait before we get our chance at the ball again; I just hope it comes a little sooner.

However, it is never too late for this great country of ours and for complete recovery if those opposite would only realize that we have been led into a socialist economy by the man who infiltrated that political party. Private initiative is being destroyed in Canada, and I hate to see it for my children's sake. Eighty per cent of the world lives under some form of totalitarian regime. That is what we are headed into. So far we have been able to avoid it, but you guys over there are watching it, and so are we. Canada can and must prosper. Inflation can be stopped, but not the way this government is doing it. The dollar can be stabilized. The government can live within the budget. But it can only do that by real government spending cuts, such as my party and my leader have been talking about on this side of the House. We should have sunset laws, we should phase out Crown corporations which are losing money, and have a new budget which rewards productivity. That disastrous National Energy Program should be cancelled, and we should encourage foreign investment, on which this country, as well as the United States, was built. We should promote research and development, and thus productivity, because every 0.25 per cent put into productivity instead of silly make-work projects adds 400,000 jobs to this country. That is what we need, jobs. We should make profit the most popular six letter word in Canada. It can be done, Mr. Speaker. If we were in power right now it would be done, there is no doubt in my mind. I only pray to God for a change of philosophy from those donkeys over there before it is too late.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will use names. The hon. member referred to donkeys; there is also another word for donkeys which might describe the hon. member who just sat down. If I had not been here myself I would not believe what I have just heard. It has been absolute Alice in Wonderland, and it takes me back to my good friend, Robert Stanfield, in a speech he made in Toronto to the Tory convention about two months ago when he was lecturing the Conservative Party about this neo-Conservatism and neo-Republicanism that he saw in his party. It is a very dangerous drift and very dangerous trend, and I wonder if the hon. member across the way knows what his party at one time stood for. It was a party which believed in intervention in the economy. It was a party which brought in the Canadian Wheat Board, the CBC and other Crown corporations. I wonder if he understands what political party he really joined. I wonder if he has ever been to university and studied political science, because any first year student can tell you that he has no idea of the definition of a Conservative Party, let alone a socialist party in this country.

That party across the way is not a socialist party; they are very close to Reaganomics, Mr. Speaker. A socialist party believes in redistributing wealth and power in this country so that the ordinary people have a better share of that wealth and power. Bill C-124, for example, takes us in the opposite direction. A socialist party believes in sharing, in co-operation and freedom, and there are many things in the current Parliament which do not move us in that direction. In every one of those cases it is the Conservative Party of Canada which supports the Liberal Party of Canada in terms of more handouts to the big companies, the multinationals and Reaganism in this country.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, we could make a good investment by mailing out the speech of the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) to every voter in this country—

An hon. Member: Do that.

Mr. Nystrom: —and make it required reading. There are so many falsehoods in what he is saying. He is talking about debts and government spending. He does not realize that the party that goes heaviest into debt in this country tends to be the Conservative Party. All you have to do is look at Bank of Montreal statistics for either 1978 or 1970 and you will find that Saskatchewan, which has had a democratic socialist government for 27 of the last 31 years, has had balanced budgets throughout those years, and it has the second lowest per capita debt in the country at $1,709. But a wealthy province, such as Alberta, has a per capita debt as of 1978 of $2,022. You can look at Ontario, whose premier is Bill Davis, which has a per capita debt of $2,544. When members get up to speak in the House the least they can be is honest, and I wish they would put the facts before the House.

• (2120)

What about the bureaucracy? We have heard mention of these huge bureaucracies. Once again, it is very interesting to note that for 1979, Statistics Canada states that one of the smaller bureaucracies was in the province that has had a democratic socialist government for the longest time. I am speaking of the province of Saskatchewan where 1.9 per cent of the people are civil servants. In Conservative Alberta there is a much fatter government where 2.6 per cent of the people are civil servants. What about the long-time Conservative government in New Brunswick with Mr. Hatfield as premier? Guess what its percentage of civil servants is? It is 3.7 per cent. If there is any party in this country that does not know how to spend, invest and manage its money, it is the Conservative Party of Canada and the provinces that it governs.

In my province we have had an example of that in the last two weeks. We have a new government in Saskatchewan that is now talking about a deficit of $200 million or $300 million. That is the first deficit in over a dozen years. Why does the province of Saskatchewan have a deficit? Is it because the government is investing in Saskatchewan industries? Is it because the government is helping the small businessman, the farmer, the worker, the women or the native people in my province? No, it is not. One of the first things the Conservative Party did when it took power about two months ago was to raise the salary of executive assistants from a maximum of either $35,000 or $36,000 to over $50,000 a year. It is a political party that took office with a promise of eliminating gas tax, not just for ordinry citizens but for CP trucking, Reimer trucking and all of the big transportation firms so that the ordinary citizen will not have to subsidize this by having its government borrow money at 15 per cent or 20 per cent in order to support the services we have in my province. It is a political party that has a mortgage program of 13.75 per cent that is not for all the citizens of its province, not for the poor Indian, the native person, the worker or the renter who cannot afford a house. The program offers no help for the senior citizens or for those who have already bought their houses. The program is for a small minority of Saskatchewan people who make over $40,000 a year. The premier himself has admitted that he will be one of the first people to take advantage of this mortgage subsidy. That is why the Conservative government is borrowing $200 million and will deficit finance at a high interest rate, throwing the burden on the backs of the ordinary working person of the province of Saskatchewan.

The hon. member for Simcoe South should take a look at deficit financing. He should look at big, fat, lazy governments. All he has to do is take a look at Alberta or Saskatchewan, Bill Davis' government here in Ontario and Richard Hatfield's government in New Brunswick.

Mr. Regan: What about Nova Scotia?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, hon. members could try Nova Scotia. The situation there is very interesting. But Nova Scotia's per capita debt is much higher than the province of Saskatchewan's. I also note that 2.3 per cent of the population of Nova Scotia are civil servants. So I can say to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) that the situation is just as bad now as it was when he was there. And it just goes to show that Liberals and Conservatives are the same. We have two political parties in this country and it is about time that we cut some of this rhetoric and called a spade a spade.

If we look at the bill before us today we will find that we are borrowing an extra $11 billion because of sentimental Conservative Reaganomics. That is the policy the government across the way is following, and it is following it with the support and the advice of the Progressive Conservative Party that sits to my right here in the chamber.

We have no imagination in this country, Mr. Speaker. We do not have any vision, leadership or national investment strategy whatsoever in this great country of ours. I suggest tonight that we will have to develop those qualities if the government wants to see this bill go through because right now we are floundering in the dark.

I do not mind doing what a company does. I do not mind borrowing money to invest, to expand our economy and our industries. What does General Motors do, what does International Minerals do? What does Gulf Oil do? What does any other company do? Companies go into the money market and borrow money to expand business and enterprise. As far as I am concerned, that is fine.

I support Petro-Canada. An overwhelming number of Canadians support Petro-Canada. That is why the Progressive Conservative Party under its leader changed its policy on Petro-canada about a year ago. The PC government wanted to dismantle it, but the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party said his party would probably keep it. That kind of following and that kind of deficit financing I do not mind if we, as Canadians, in the end are going to own the enterprise and the industry—

Mr. Stewart: Show me your stock certificate.

Mr. Nystrom: —if we as Canadians are going to build a more competitive and productive economy. But Conservatives do not know about this as they drive our country into the rocks with their shortsighted policies. If we are going to borrow money to make Canada more productive, more competitive and to expand the wealth of Canada so that we can improve services to our people, then that kind of borrowing is fine. It is like the farmer in my riding who borrows some money to expand his farm or who borrows to buy machinery, or a small business man who borrows money to expand his business or to buy a new business or perhaps the person who can afford to borrow money to buy a house or expand his existing home. That is the kind of borrowing that is investment. That is productive and it is worth while. It is worth while for Canada. I do not agree that we should borrow money to provide services or to cover administrative costs for the government. When we do that it is non-productive borrowing and it runs Canada more and more into debt. That is the type of thing we have not had with New Democratic Party governments in the provinces, whether you look at the province of Manitoba or the province of Saskatchewan. That is something the federal government across the way will have to get away from. When the federal government borrows money it should borrow money for investment purposes to strengthen the economy and to expand the national pie so that we can have a much stronger Canada in the years that lie ahead.

Mr. Shields: Where do you get it?

Mr. Nystrom: What kind of leadership do we have in this country? What kind of an economic mess are we in? I think we all know the story and we all know the sad tale.

Mr. Shields: Yes, it is socialist.

Mr. Nystrom: We all know that the situation in our country is worse now than in any country in the industrialized world.

[Translation]

We rank lowest in the industrialized world. I have here the figures on the industrial production rate and I just found out that last year Canada declined 10.5 per cent. That is the worst performance in the industrialized world. Next after us is the United States where the economy went down 8 per cent. Australia is third, down 5 per cent. The other countries have a better record than Canada and the United States. It is the same story on the stock market. If you follow the price of shares here in Canada, you will note a similar trend. The price of shares in Canada dropped by some 41 per cent between 1981 and 1982, against only 16 per cent in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, it is patently clear that the economy in Canada is in a worse shape than in other countries and the Canadian problem now needs a Canadian solution. We cannot blame the world situation for our economic woes, because the federal and provincial governments must share the blame as well.

[English]

I think we are going to have to wake up in this country and start developing and planning a national investment policy. As I said, we do not have it. The goal should be to increase our wealth as a nation, to increase our ability to provide services to the people, and to increase our net worth as a nation. I think we can do that. We have the people and the resources. If we do not have some imagination, leadership and planning—and perhaps those are democratic socialist ideas but we certainly do not have them today—our nation will not thrive in the years that lie ahead.

I should like to point to three countries which have done well after virtually being destroyed during the Second World War. I am referring to Japan, France and Germany. I point to those three economies to remind the House how well they have done and how well they are doing. Also I remind the House where they were some 30 or 35 years ago. I notice that one of the first things they did after the Second World War was to decide to rebuild their economies, economies they would own as Frenchmen, Germans or Japanese. It was not a question in any of those countries of whether or not they would build a German, French or Japanese car. They would not even ask that question. They built those cars, but we in Canada do not have a Canadian car. It is not a question in those countries now of whether or not they are getting into high technology or advanced technology. They are just doing it in those countries. For example, in Japan they have five times the population, but they have 40 times the young people in electrical engineering schools that we have in Canada.

Last year as a nation, in terms of research and development, we invested one hundred and some odd million dollars, whereas the Japanese put in over $2 billion. They go out and do those things. In some countries they have democratic socialist governments. In other countries like Japan they do not have a democratic socialist government, but they have planning and they have a policy to own and control their own economies so that they, as Japanese, as French or as Germans, can make their own decisions.

I maintain that our failure to do that as a country is the biggest reason we are in such serious trouble now. We have the consequences of that coming home each and every single day as we see lay-offs in the manufacturing industry and lay-offs in the resource industry from one part of Canada to the other.

Back in 1608 it was Cartier who was really one of the founders of Canada. At that time the country was being built on the premise of exporting beaver pelts and the pelts of other animals to Europe and of importing finished or manufactured goods. I suppose we still have that old philosophy in Canada where we try constantly to export raw materials, whether they are natural gas, oil or forest products, and import finished goods.

Let me take a look at the consequences of that policy. In 1970 we had a trade deficit in manufacturing of $2.5 billion. In 1981 our trade deficit was up to $21 billion or $22 billion in manufactured goods. In 1969 we had 6 per cent of world trade. In 1979 we were down to 4 per cent of world trade. I expect now that it is approximately 3 per cent. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) rises every month and talks about how happy he is to have a trade balance in the country. We have a trade balance in the country, but I think we are one of the only countries, if not the only country in the world, which has a trade balance and a deficit in our balance of payments. Our deficit in the balance of payments last year was some $9.1 billion. The reason for that deficit is that we have interest flowing out to outside or foreign investors. We have dividends which are flowing out, and we have the consequences of a branch plant economy. We have the wealth and resources with which we could be producing in Canada. These products could be owned by Canadians and purchased by the United States. Just because we have a lower dollar does not always mean that the branch plant of a foreign-based multinational will produce in Canada. What they will often do is produce in the United States or Japan and import that good or product into Canada.

I believe very strongly that we will have to restructure the economy so that we as Canadians own it. When we go on the money markets to borrow money, we should borrow it as loan capital, not equity capital, so that when we pay off the loan we own the house, the mine, the store or whatever we borrowed the money for as Canadians.

Mr. Blenkarn: How do you pay it off at 20 per cent interest?

Mr. Nystrom: I hear the question of the hon. member. That is not our policy. That is the policy of the extreme right, the policy of the Conservative Party of the world, the policy of Reaganomics. That is their problem and they will have to find a solution for us. In the province of Saskatchewan when they used public money to find solutions, they poured it into the wealthiest segment, and that is not the way that we want to go.

In conclusion I want to suggest positively three or four areas in which we should be spending the money that we have in the country, provincially and federally, and where we should be putting some of our savings.

The first area I want to mention is the entire area of advanced technology and high technology. Just recently the Science Council of Canada issued a report entitled, "Planning Now for an Information Society". In the report we were warned that we are now in a new era and that if we do not move very quickly, we will lose an awful lot of what we have and end up importing more and more of the advanced technological devices and parts in the world of tomorrow. It indicated among other things that advanced technology is moving so fast that we are being left behind. For example, it indicated that the power of computers has increased 10,000 times in the past 15 years, while the price of each unit of performance has decreased by 100,000 times in the last 15 years. Also it indicated that in 1990 we will be producing pocket calculators with more power than today's most powerful computers. This is how fast we are moving in the area of advanced technology. My suggestion is that we should be doing like the Japanese, the French, the British or the Americans. We should be putting some more money and funding into advanced technology. We should be producing these goods, services and products right here in Canada.

We can do this in many ways. The Conservative Party does not believe in putting any money into this because they want the multinationals to make all the decisions; they will put their money into the United States, Japan or elsewhere. It is about time that we took the lead as a nation and started investing some of our funds in this sector. Of all industrial states we have less public involvement in the new technology. I suggest that we will have to move in this area.

There are four areas in which I think we should specialize. We should be applying advanced technology to produce the machinery necessary for specialization and to enable us to become very good in four areas. I think two of them are naturals because of our geography. One is communications and the other is transportation. In communications we are already fairly good. We have developed things like Telidon. We are very good at satellite communications. We are very good in my province at fibre-optics. We have a little plant in Saskatoon called Sed Systems, Inc. which was part of the Canadarm. We have Spar Aerospace in Toronto and Montreal. We have many companies, some publicly owned and some privately owned, which are very good in communications. Because of our geography, we must continue to specialize and to provide goods in our markets so that we can export aggressively in the world in the area of communications.

The second area which is a natural is transportation. Again it is because of our geography. I do not understand why we as Canadians are not as good at putting trains on the tracks as are the Japanese, the French or the British. We still have transcontinental trains which run along, like the good old days, at about 18 or 19 miles per hour. One can almost pass them on horseback. That is not good enough. I think as Canadians we will have to specialize in transportation.

Another area is food and agriculture. We are a great producer of food in this country. We have a tremendously productive agricultural sector. I think we will have to start putting more funding into that area to help feed some of the poor people of the world. We should export our farm machinery technology to the developing world to ensure that Asians, Africans, South Americans and others can produce their own food and eventually become self-sufficient. We should continue doing research into the field of food production, agriculture and forestry. We should take the lead in these areas. We should be involved in biotechnology, for example; not the Japanese, not the French, not the British or the Germans. That is the third area.

• (2140)

The last area I would mention is resources. Our country has tremendous resources. One of our problems is that we have tended to export those resources in their raw and unrefined state throughout the world. These resources are finite and they will eventually run out. We are now running out of much of our conventional oil. It is time that we began to process more of those resources at home. Since we have resources such as hydroelectricity, it is time that we started to manufacture machinery to mine and process those resources in Canada. When I look at other countries of the world I find that we are producing very little machinery in this country. There are very few companies which manufacture these machines. In 1980 our deficit in machinery trade was $5.7 billion. I suspect that that figure is significantly higher in 1982. We are producing less machinery all the time.

I recently spoke to an industry spokesman who told me that in the area of computers alone our deficit by 1990 will be approximately $10 billion.

I suggest that when Canada borrows money for investment we should specialize in four or five areas. These areas include transportation and communication, agriculture and resources and the new high and advanced technologies. If we were to do this through a national plan along with co-operative federalism with the provinces and the federal government working together, instead of the jigsaw network of programs which exist today—a LEAP program here, a LIP program there—we could become very successful. Instead of the government squandering hundreds of millions of dollars, which perhaps only temporarily raises the hopes of some people that it will give them temporary jobs, part of that money should be put into four or five areas where the government could specialize and supply our own domestic market. This would put people to work, and develop industries on a large and competitive scale to enable us to export to the international market.

We have the resources and the education. The Japanese are capable of doing this on a small island with no resources at all. If they can do it, we can do it as well, if not even better. For example, the Japanese recently decided to specialize in pollution control equipment and export that technology to other parts of the world. I am sure they will be very successful. We just do not have the leadership which can make decisions like that in this country.

I reiterate that we need a fundamental change and the restructuring of the economy in this country so that we will have Canadian ownership, Canadian industry and Canadian investment. In this way we will be able to own our own homes and businesses.

My concluding point is that if the government wants to put people to work it should be putting our money into the housing industry, rather than helping multinational oil companies as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) did. As the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) says so often, the housing industry is an all Canadian industry. We build houses for Canadians, we use Canadian parts and components and we put forestry workers back to work. Many of the furnishings, such as iron and steel used in constructing houses, are also produced in Canada. This is one short-term policy which could be developed by the government. As well, the government can continue its aid to farmers who are competitive, productive and support a large segment of our nation. With that, I urge the House to think positive and bring forth new and fresh ideas and to stop some of the b.s. type of rhetoric which we heard from the hon. member for Simcoe South which is a disgrace not just to members but to any intelligent Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, would my hon. colleague accept a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): So that the House understands, the Chair is verifying the number of minutes left to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). The reason for doing so is to inquire as to whether or not there ought to be unanimous consent for a question. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has not used all the time accorded to him. Accordingly, it is possible for another member to put a question to him. However, considering the fact that the question is from the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who is a member of the same party, I think there ought to be unanimous consent to do so. It is the wish of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain to put a question to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that very much. In fact, having looked at the precedents, I might say that I was not aware that unanimous consent was required. I read of a similar situation occurring some years ago.

However, let me proceed quickly to my question lest I should upset the mood of the House. I listened with great interest to my hon. colleague who laid out the financial difficulties which certain governments seemed to manage to get themselves into. Did I understand him correctly when he said that governments in Canada, particularly at the provincial level, who had carried the largest per capita debt historically were Conservative governments and that the governments which historically had the largest per capita civil service were Conservative governments? Was that the gist of my hon. colleague's suggestion? Would he verify if that is indeed accurate and therefore can be quoted by all members as they travel the country speaking about the balance of politics?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, it is a very difficult question. My source is the Bank of Montreal. If one can believe the Bank of Montreal in 1978, we find that the per capita debt in the province of Ontario in dollars for every man, woman and child in that province was $2,497. In Alberta, it was $2,222. In Saskatchewan it was $1,709. That must come as a shock to certain Conservatives. In the large and so-called wealthy, fiscally responsible Ontario, the figure is $2,544. In New Brunswick it is $2,924 and in Newfoundland it is $3,702.

I also mentioned the size of the bureaucracy in each of those provinces. In Alberta 2.6 per cent of the population was in the provincial civil service. In my province, after 27 years of a democratic socialist government, it was 1.9 per cent of the population. It comprised 3.7 per cent in New Brunswick. In Nova Scotia it was 2.3 per cent, 3.5 per cent in Newfoundland, and Prince Edward Island had 3.4 per cent of its population in the civil service.

Mr. Blenkarn: What about Ontario?

Mr. Nystrom: I do not have the figures for Ontario.

Mr. Blenkarn: I will give them to you.

Mr. Nystrom: But we do have a very good indication from the statistics what the ideology in the country is. I think you have to judge a political party by its record. If one were to judge a political party by its rhetoric I am sure that Bob Stanfield would have several heart attacks tonight after hearing the hon. member for Simcoe South. That hon. member was light years away from the former highly respected leader of his party and, in fact, light years away from any leader of his party. Perhaps this is the new direction of the neo-conservatism in this country and perhaps that is where the challenge to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) will come from at the January convention. Perhaps their new leader will come from that wing of the party.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, would the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville accept another question? He will appreciate that Mr. Devine, the new premier of his province, has said that he will reduce the civil service to the size of Ontario so that he can reduce it by 50 per cent. He said the civil service of Ontario is much smaller. That is why I asked the question while I heckled him. He will appreciate that answer. He had the answer. I am sure he did not want to give it. But I want to ask the hon. member a question in reference to what was said by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who was the lead speaker for his party. He suggested that fast write-offs for manufacturers was a tax expenditure that the New Democratic Party would not countenance, in other words, that manufacturers of goods in Canada should not be entitled to lay off 50 per cent of the capital cost in the first year. The hon. member for Skeena indicated to the House that that was an improper tax expenditure. Would the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) expand on his party's attitude toward manufacturers?

• (2150)

Mr. Nystrom: I would not mind doing that at all, Mr. Speaker. I think, once again, that one should look at governments in action and see what governments do. One finds that in our province, over the years, whether there were good times or bad times, we had a real mix of public, co-operative and private enterprise. We borrowed a lot of money in my province for public reasons, to ensure that we owned the telephone company, the power company and the auto insurance company.

Mr. Blenkarn: Answer the question!

Mr. Nystrom: Forty per cent of the potash industry is now publicly owned by the people of Saskatchewan. By the way, it is now the largest potash company in the world outside of Soviet Russia. I suppose, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) being closer to that ideology in the Kremlin, which is so centralist and so bureaucratic, so big and so fat, might be very interested in that, I am sure.

Mr. Blenkarn: Answer the question about manufacturers.

Mr. Nystrom: That is the kind of policy we have. We are the first province in this country, and maybe the only province, which has a department of co-operatives and co-operation—

Mr. Blenkarn: Manufacturers' capital cost allowance!

Mr. Nystrom: —where we assist and we aid the co-operatives and the farmers, the manufacturers with their goods and products in this country. I mentioned an industry in Saskatoon called Sed Systems, Inc., where we have done some experimenting in economic democracy, where they manufactured part of the Canadarm for the American spaceship.

Mr. Blenkarn: Where do you stand?

Mr. Nystrom: I am telling the hon. member where I stand.

Mr. Blenkarn: Well, state it! Quit giving me the guff and tell me where you stand!

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Nystrom: It is a joint venture, where part of the industry is owned by the workers, part is owned by the university and part is owned by a Crown corporation.

Mr. Blenkarn: Just tell me where you extended those capital cost allowances.

Mr. Nystrom: So, we have that kind of co-operation in our province. The same is true in Manitoba, where we provide aid to small business, co-operatives and the like. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: —the Conservative Party has put all its eggs in one big multinational basket.

Mr. Blenkarn: Answer the question! Where do you stand on capital cost allowances?

Mr. Nystrom: I have answered the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blenkarn: You have not!

Mr. Nystrom: Instead of giving all this money to the big multinational corporations, we would spend this money in assisting small businesses, farms, co-operatives and on expanding public ownership in the areas we did in the provinces that we have governed. Some of those things are done by terrible socialists such as one named Bill Davis, and another named Peter Lougheed. In my mind they are very Conservative—

Mr. Blenkarn: Where do you stand, boy?

Mr. Nystrom: —and are going the wrong way.

Mr. Blenkarn: Stand up, boy, and quit guffing around!

Mr. Nystrom: But even those guys realize that there is a law in our economy providing for some public intervention.

Mr. Blenkarn: Say where you stand!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, if I have not said where I stand—

Mr. Blenkarn: I know where you stand. You stand with one foot on the left!

Mr. Nystrom:—then I think my friend, the hon. member for Mississauga South should go to visit his physician because he is going deaf. He is certainly deaf in his left ear and he is probably deaf in his right ear, by now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Is there anything else you would like to know?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the Chair should give some indication to hon. members that if an hon. member has not used up the entire time available to him in which to speak, the Chair will try to facilitate matters, and that has been the habit of the House. The Chair will try to accommodate hon. members by allowing other hon. members to use that additional time to ask questions. But I am obviously concerned that questions might be asked by one member to another member of the same party. At the same time, I want to make it clear that if one hon. member chooses to rise on a point of order and ask a question or enter into debate, then there can be no excuse or anger later on that the Chair has recognized both the hon. member who rises on a point of order and the hon. member who has the time available.

Mr. Regan: Was it not a great answer, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has no comment to make as to the quality of the answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, it being 9.55 p.m., the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, tonight the debates have been very illuminating indeed.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock!

Mr. Shields: First, we heard from the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). Now we have heard the flim-flam of the Liberal Party tell us how the Liberal Party is spending money, but it is really not spending money because it is transferring or moving it around the country. I never heard such rot in all my life. But the single most illuminating speech tonight was made by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Deans: A marvellous speech.

Mr. Shields: That hon. member from the NDP—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: —clearly knows what the country is saying about the New Democratic Party, the "Liberal Party West" and the hon. members of the NDP are running scared because they know that the people of Canada have said that they have had enough of those socialists, of those Liberals, whether they call themselves Liberal or "Liberal Party West".

Mr. Deans: Who votes with the Tories?

Mr. Shields: That is why they are running scared. So, what does the hon. member do? He stands up but does not attack the Liberal Party and the idiotic energy policy, the borrowing of tons of money on one little scrap of paper. No, he does not attack that. He attacks the Conservative Party of Canada because he is running scared and he knows that he will not be sitting in this House of Commons after the next election because the people of Saskatchewan and the people of British Columbia have had absolutely enough of the Liberal Party West. They are down to two, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sargeant: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair will not call it ten o'clock because it is not yet ten o'clock. The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member is aware that during this session his party has voted with the Liberal government twice as often as the NDP.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Deans: That is a legitimate point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That is not a legitimate point of order.

Mr. Deans: It sounded like one to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Well, it may have sounded like one, but it is not. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, all that the "Liberal Party West", the New Democratic Party, the little red rump, has been able to say since the introduction of the National Energy Program is, "Me too, me too, but make it more. Why do we only go after Petrofina? We should go after Exxon, Imperial and those big guys. Do not just take us down the hill to recession, let us get right into a depression." The people in western Canada know what the "Liberal Party West" stands for. They know that today they have kept this government in power. They have put the government in power. They held it there in 1974, and now the people are all saying that they will have no damned truck with the New Democratic Party come the next election.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Some hon. Members: More, more!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair cannot call it ten o'clock unless there is agreement to do so.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There remains approximately one minute, and I call on the hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Shields: I will make it clear in 35 minutes right after the question period tomorrow. I would like to point out something I heard just prior to coming into the House today. I think it sets the tone for what is happening across Canada, and I hope the hon. members will listen. Two of our pages working in this House, whom we know very well, were sitting by the desk in the opposition lobby. Do hon. members know what they were discussing? They were saying that the job to get today is in bankruptcies. Two young people circulating in the House of Commons daily know what is going on in this House and know what are the government's policies. Those two fine young people who will be going into the world of work after they leave this place are talking, saying the thing to be in today is bankruptcies because that is the only future we see in Canada. That is what young people are saying today and that is the feeling across this country. Laugh as you may, but that is the feeling across the country. It is now ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

• (2200)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair agrees with the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr Shields), it is now ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—USE OF SUBLIMINAL MESSAGES ON ROCK MUSIC RECORDINGS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Mr. Speaker, on June 9 of this year I, along with my colleague, the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang), asked questions of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) dealing with product labelling as it applies to the recording industry and some of the rock music which that industry produces and distributes. The matter pertained to what we could call subliminal, hidden lyrics or messages on certain rock music recordings.

Following that question and answer from the minister, I received a further answer from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs informing me that this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Communications, hence the matter being raised tonight.

While the technique of recording hidden messages or lyrics on some rock music has been going on for some time—I believe it was in the sixties that it first came to light involving the much popular recording artists The Beatles—it has again surfaced, causing a great deal of concern among many of our citizens, both young and old alike.

The most recent issue of this concern came to my attention from a number of my constituents following a public affairs program on a local London station on this subject. During that program it was shown how the use of subliminal influence techniques are used by some popular rock music groups. Following this radio broadcast, the issue received considerable attention—I believe the radio station received something like 400 calls immediately following that program—and much attention was focused on this subject in high school, church groups and other community groups interested in this subject. It seems to be a fundamental concern on the part of many that the public should be made aware of the existence of these largely unnoticeable, perception-effecting techniques.

In the Oxford dictionary, subliminal is defined as "below the threshold of sensation or consciousness . . . so as to influence opinion or behaviour without being consciously perceived." A subliminal message is a message that is below a discernible level. For example, your conscious mind hears one thing, but your subconscious mind can pick up the other. Some people feel that subliminal persuasion is as close to mind control as you can get.

I am sure hon. members remember just a few years ago when a great deal of concern centred on subliminal advertising suspected of being used on television and in movie theatres. To my understanding, because of public concern expressed at that time, that type of advertising is no longer used.

Since this matter was raised, I have been overwhelmed by the interest shown in it, and the support I have received from across the country, even from the United States. As a matter of fact, this same issue was raised on the floor of the United States Congress just two weeks ago. The concern being expressed is not a concern in favour of censorship or the imposition of morality. We cannot do that. We can, however, restrict immorality. This is the issue, especially when some of these suspected subliminal messages contain messages which society today, for the most part, would term to be immoral. There is a feeling on the part of many people who have communicated with me that the public should not be subjected to hidden messages of any kind, immoral or moral, for it can be argued that the subliminal technique could be used to promote what many would term to be good influencing messages as well as messages which might be harmful.

• (2205)

An issue such as this generates an emotional response. As well as receiving an enormous amount of support, I have been criticized for raising this issue, especially when we have so many other problems with which to deal today. I want to say for the record that I have not spent all my time on this subject, as anyone who reads Hansard will attest. But as responsible Members of Parliament I feel we must concern ourselves with many different issues raised and brought to our attention by our constituents.

I suppose the bottom line in this matter is to ask the recording industry at least to investigate and co-operate, and either to label such suspected recordings or, better still, to refrain from producing and distributing such material.

According to my investigation, at least, much of this recorded material has been produced outside this country in the United States and in Europe, mainly in England, so perhaps we have to look at the distribution methods on the part of the recording industry in this area.

When we think of the many problems facing us today, we must remember that a nation is only as good as its people. I would sooner be on the side of those who influence for good than on the side suspected of having a harmful influence on our society. I would welcome a further response to this matter from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) and the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) have indeed touched upon what I too feel is an important point.

I would just like to explain again that since the arts and cultural branch of the Department of the Secretary of State was transferred in 1980, cultural policy concerns pertaining to Canadian cultural industries, including the sound recording industry, have been the responsibility of the Department of Communications. At present the Canadian sound recording industry is undergoing an extensive examination to determine what support, if any, is required to help it meet its needs and opportunities. As hon. members are no doubt aware, this industry represents one of the most important cultural activities in Canada, since it provides society with most of the access to the music we enjoy and use in our daily lives.

As the hon. member pointed out, many years ago, during the 1960s, a limited number of foreign producers used the process of backward masking as a new gimmick to attract media attention to records in the marketplace. A few prominent recording artists such as Led Zeppelin and the Beatles did experiment with this technique whereby a record, if played in reverse, would play back different music or lyrics. The fad quickly died down then but, admittedly, has resurfaced lately.

It is supposed by some that the original motivation was strictly to attract attention to the album and not to influence the listeners subliminally. Experts from both the scientific community and the record industry, including the late Marshall McLuhan, have studied this subject and have stated that since the messages are directly audible, well publicized and not imprintable in the mind unless the listener does reverse the record, it is not a form of subliminal persuasion. However, I will say that the concerns of the hon. members are valid in principle should this practice be used by the industry to the extent where record production would subliminally influence the listener's mind.

In this regard, the Department of Communications has passed on these concerns to the Canadian record industry associations and will maintain an interest in following this subject should anything new arise.

I would like to add, finally, that the occurrences of this practice are extremely negligible, considering the tens of thousands of records that are produced each year. Also, it is unfortunate that the recording industry tends to suffer mostly from negative publicity such as this when it contributes so much to our fabric of life. I was heartened to see in a recent issue of Maclean's magazine an article which reported on the great success our young Canadian recording talent is having in the global marketplace. In fact, this year, the best year in our history, Canadian artists have outperformed every other country in the world in an otherwise down-sided global economy, and these ambassadors of Canadian culture deserve our utmost support.

AGRICULTURE—TAX ON FUEL USED IN FOOD PRODUCTION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, it has been said many times in this House and in the country that the country is suffering a crisis in confidence. I believe the crisis stems in large part from a lack of confidence in the government. Canadians realize every passing day that the government has failed to fulfil many of the promises and commitments it made during the course of the election campaign in the deep winter of 1980.

I raised one of these questions in question period last Friday when I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to explain to the House what happened to the special price structure he had advocated in the community of Alvinston, Ontario, on January 31, 1980, when he said that fuels used in the course of farm production would be exempt from federal tax. We know that commitment was not fulfilled. What is more shocking is that the minister stated that the energy program is supported by all members of the Liberal Party, including himself.

The minister is clearly on record as supporting the price structure for farm fuels in Canada. That means he supports the fact that 60 cents out of the price of every gallon of fuel the farmer burns goes to the federal government coffers in the form of tax. I think it is worth putting on the record what comprises that 60 cents. There is a corporate tax of 10 per cent or six cents per gallon; the petroleum compensation charge of 18 cents per gallon; the Canadian ownership charge of four cents per gallon; the petroleum gas revenue tax of seven cents per gallon; the incremental oil revenue tax of five cents per gallon; a 9 per cent federal sales tax or 13 cents per gallon, an excise tax of 7 cents per gallon for a total of 60 cents per gallon. That is what the farmers of Canada pay to the federal coffers in order to produce food for Canada and a hungry world.

On January 31, 1980 the minister stated very clearly:

> Fuels used in farm production will be exempt from any excise tax and a special price structure established.

You and I know that has not happened, Mr. Speaker. This is one of those clear incidents that create a degree of cynicism regarding the Government of Canada and a lack of confidence in the country because the government cannot be trusted. It says one thing and does another. That is a promise it knows very well it could not fulfil.

I followed that question up in the House today by putting to the minister the promise made in the speech of January 31, 1980, as reported in the London Free Press when speaking to a crowd of 300 in the community of Alvinston, Ontario. At that time he said that the farmers' cost of production would be held in check. As a matter of fact, he pledged to keep farm production costs down. Today I asked him whether he felt he had fulfilled that election campaign commitment.

• (2215)

During the period of time the Minister has presided as the recycled Minister of Agriculture, interest rates have doubled, fuel prices have doubled, pesticide prices have increased by 30 per cent; he is now a member of a government which is proposing an increase in grain freight rates of 45 per cent in three years, to double in five years and triple in ten years while the price of farm commodities goes down. Does he really feel in all honesty and sincerity that he has fulfilled that promise? Well, this was his answer, Mr. Speaker:

> —I do not know what research the hon. member is using for all those statements that I made because if he is reading speeches I gave during the election campaign, those were not prepared.

What are we supposed to draw from that? Does it mean that when the Minister of Agriculture speaks from a prepared text he is to be believed, but when he speaks "off the cuff" as he said, in the heat of debate, one should not believe him?

I raise this question at this particular time because I think it deserves an explanation, and I intend to pursue further the commitments and election promises and pledges the minister advanced during the course of the campaign. In all fairness, being a fair person, I think it is only fair and reasonable that I ask the minister or his spokesman to respond to the government's failure and his failure to produce results. The fact of the matter is that if he cannot produce and fulfil the election promises and commitments he made, he should do one very honourable thing; resign.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is playing a cute game; unfortunately playing it badly. I have a great deal of respect for the hon. member. I have served with him on the Transport Committee, and I know he has a little more integrity than he has just revealed by some of his comments. May I give an example? He is standing up now and playing this cute little game on behalf, he thinks, of one particular group in society. In this instance he is trying to argue, or pretending to argue on behalf of farmers, but he knows full well that other spokesman from his party are rising constantly to know why oil prices in Canada have not gone higher.

Mr. Mazankowski: They cannot go any higher.

Mr. Fisher: People talk about the National Energy Program and its failure to deliver money to the oil companies and its failure to deliver incentives for the industry. When they do that, they are in a disguised way arguing for higher and ever-higher prices. We must bear in mind, of course, that it is official Conservative policy that Canadian oil prices for conventional crude should be 85 per cent of world price, and the Liberal policy is that the same oil will be capped at 75 per cent of world prices.

While we are examining this game being played here tonight, we should also look at where the money will be going, because high Tory prices would simply mean this extra money being poured back into foreign coffers and into the hands of the companies, when in fact the Liberal policy, the NEP, has managed to fairly distribute the money between the producing provinces, the companies and the common Canadian good.

I think those are facts which my constituents support with their wallets and with their feet. My constituents are shopping at Petro-Can, they are converting their furnaces, pursuing the CHIP program for insulation, and wherever possible my constituents are voting with their feet to support the NEP.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM—EFFECT ON INVESTMENT. (B) DEVELOPMENT OF OIL SANDS IN NORTHEASTERN ALBERTA

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, today during question period I directed a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). I stated that the world investment community does not now consider Canada a safe place to invest. This is due mainly to the national energy policy of the minister. I said that the policy itself is causing an outflow of investment capital at an unprecedented rate, causing a massive run on our dollar which is translating into astronomically high interest rates, which again translates into business recession and massive unemployment. What is the minister going to do to get the confidence of the investment community back? The minister replied verbatim: "I can't be held responsible for that member's nightmares." The nightmare is a Canadian nightmare.

• (2220)

The number of Canadians unemployed has reached 1.5 million. Right across this country Canadians are losing their jobs. Canadians are losing their farms because they trust this government. Canadians are losing their businesses and their life savings. All of these tragedies translate into child abuse, family breakup, child beating and wife beating, all because of the nightmares people have.

The world investment community does not consider Canada as a safe place to invest, and we can trace that fact back to the National Energy Program.

When the National Energy Program was introduced with Canadian investment dollars, Canadians saw a government with a policy that actually stole from the companies. With its back-in provision it actually moved in on companies and said to them, "We really own 25 per cent." People saw this massive grab by the government with more government involvement. As a result, they moved investment capital out of the country. This investment capital kept the country moving.

That move forced the government to borrow or to attract money from offshore. To do that, the government had to raise interest rates. Immediately interest rates were raised, what happened? The small-business men, the farmer, the man buying a home with his life savings or the man rolling his mortgage into a new mortgage found he had to pay 20 per cent on his money, and all because the government introduced the national energy policy. This was an interventionist policy, to the greatest degree, into an area of the economy which was the one healthy area of Canada. Virtually every economist in Canada stated emphatically the oil industry was the one bright hope on Canada's horizon which could lead us out of this economic stalemate and depression. But the government's policy translated into high interest rates.

If investment money was now flowing into Canada, as it would be under a Conservative government, for development purposes, interest rates would go down. We would not have to raise our interest rates artificially in order to attract funds into Canada to do those things that must be done. We would have business expansion which would cause unemployment to go down. People would be working right across the country. Our megaprojects would be proceeding and we would have the industrial heartland of Canada, Ontario and Quebec, humming. There would be no unemployment and there would be no nightmare. We would not have the nightmare the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources created.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise to respond to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). I had an opportunity to visit with the hon. member in his constituency some time ago, and I must say that, regardless of the subject matter, at least he attempted to be fair. However, tonight we have been given an example of how he has not only been unfair, but has been extremely inaccurate.

• (2225)

The National Energy Program has three main objectives. We are pursuing those objectives very vigorously. I believe that Canadians have judged this program to be very successful. When the National Energy Program was legislated in 1980, it set out three main goals. The ways in which we have attempted to achieve those goals have come under great scrutiny, with the result that some changes have been made to the National Energy Program; changes which I think Canadians want to see, changes which I think are in the best interests of attaining those particular objectives. I refer the hon. member to the National Energy Program update wherein the Government of Canada revealed its entire energy program and made concessions to a value in excess of $2 billion. If we listened to the hon. member, obviously he would say that is not enough. When is enough enough?

Mr. Mazankowski: You have killed the industry.

Mr. Dingwall: Of course that will never be enough for the hon. member. The successes of the National Energy Program in terms of conservation have been truly remarkable. The Canadianization plan has been very, very good as well.

The hon. member made reference to the fact that the oil and gas industry in Canada is sustaining great difficulty at the present time. This is true, but that is because of a world economic recession. I refer the hon. member to his great idol, his great mentor, the Premier of the province of Alberta. I will not quote the premier but, to paraphrase him, he said that it was not really fair to compare the statistics of today with those of 1980. As we on both sides of the House know, there are ups and downs, valleys and peaks, in the oil and gas industries. But the hon. member and his party refuse to accept and acknowledge the success the National Energy Program has brought to Canada, or that it will serve Canadians not only for the remainder of this decade but for many decades to come.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would indicate to the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) that no points of order are permitted during the adjournment debate, but I will hear the hon. member in case there is something which may require attention.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, it is actually a courtesy on my part. I believe during my statement I said something about integrity; in fact I was thinking of the high integrity of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I meant to question his tactics in this specific instance, not his general character, for which I have the highest regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is pleased to recognize that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), of whom mention has just been made, has indicated that in the evening it is a compliment to the House of Commons of Canada that so many people are visiting our galleries at this hour, the time being 10.30 p.m. I understand the hon. member for Vegreville wishes to express his best wishes to the people who are now in our galleries. If that is the case, the Chair passes on his best wishes to those people.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PETRO-CANADA

CALL FOR ISSUANCE OF SHARES TO ALL CITIZENS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, "it is ours", price-cutting PetroCan, although it has not pumped a barrel of oil and the Canadian taxpayer has paid double its worth, and the so-called Canadianization program saw government sponsored Dome Petroleum become insolvent and now may have to sell shares to a Japanese company. This is the government's Canadianization in action. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That because of the failure of the megaprojects in the tar sands and Dome Petroleum, the government re-work the National Energy Program's policy and, because "it is ours", issue shares in Petro-Can to all Canadians immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

CAPITAL GAINS TAX APPLICATION TO FARMERS, FISHERMEN, AND SMALL BUSINESS PERSONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, noting that on page 6 of the June 28 budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stated:

Canadians investing funds in new plans for purchase of common shares of Canadian corporations would not be taxed on that part of the capital gain on such shares that only reflects inflation.

And since every member of this Parliament, who has either or both farmers or small business persons as constituents, would realize much of the capital gain those persons pay is not in fact gain but rather a reflection of inflation, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That the government in keeping consistent with its capital gains policy ensure that the same treatment is offered to farmers, fishermen, and small business persons as was committed in the budget for those purchasing common shares.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

PAN-AMERICAN WHEELCHAIR GAMES—PROVISION OF AIR TRAVEL FOR PARTICIPANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of both urgent and pressing necessity, which is non-partisan in nature. The Pan-American Wheelchair Games scheduled for Halifax next month, involving some 500 wheelchair athletes from 17 countries, are threatened with cancellation due to rules limiting the number of wheelchair passengers who may be carried on commercial aircraft in Canada. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Mrs. Killens), and the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the government, while recognizing that it must ensure safety in the event of evacuation, take whatever steps possible to assist in providing appropriate transportation to fly the 500 wheelchair athletes to the Pan-American Wheelchair Games in Halifax.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REQUEST FOR ADEQUATE SERVICE FOR FARNHAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, whereas the passenger train service between Montreal and Farnham has been abolished by the federal government and whereas the new provincial program for transportation financing will not apply to this route, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That the federal government, in co-operation with the provincial authorities, take action as necessary to provide the people of Farnham with an efficient and reasonably priced transportation service.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, a motion of this kind requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SHIPBUILDING

CHRISTENING OF CANADIAN YACHT ENTERING "AMERICA CUP" COMPETITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As members of this House will undoubtedly agree, many good things come from the Parry Sound area. Recently yet another feather was added to the cap of the region. Canada 1, a yacht now being constructed by McConnell Marine Ltd., in Parry Sound, and this nation's first entry in more than 130 years in yacht racing's prestigious "America Cup", was formally christened on Monday. Canada 1 will be launched later this summer and then sent to Newport, Rhode Island, site of the famous race, to compete in the September, 1983, event. I move, seconded by the hon. member Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House wish the crew of Canada 1 every success in a race which has been dominated by the United States for more than 130 years.

Perhaps now Canada will have a ship of state which bests the Americans.

Madam Speaker: Perhaps the House will want to applaud this motion.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPLICATION OF WAGE GUIDELINES TO SENIOR OFFICIALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It would now appear that perhaps 10,000 senior public servants in the upper income brackets will be able to escape the 6 per cent restraint limitation on increases to their salaries because of being awarded performance pay, or bonuses, which could allow them up to a total 15 per cent increase in year over year salary. In other words, clerks and stenos in the public service are limited to a 6 per cent increase, while senior mandarins get an escape hatch that allows them a 15 per cent increase. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That performance pay, merit pay, or bonuses paid to senior civil servants be included in the over-all salary increase of 6 per cent proposed in Bill C-124.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ISSUANCE OF CONTRACTS BY DOME PETROLEUM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas Canadian taxpayers recently helped bail out Dome Petroleum to the tune of $110 million, and undoubtedly the government will be bailing it out for more; whereas Dome indicated that it was considering construction of a west coast shipyard and building two of the four LNG carriers in Canada required for the Rim gas project; whereas it was announced last week that all five LNG carriers for the Pacific Rim gas project will likely be constructed in Japan, and whereas there are tens of thousands of unemployed British Columbians who could use these jobs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House condemn the government for allowing Dome to proceed with the shipbuilding contracts, and ask the government to consult immediately with Dome to assure Canadians that the shipbuilding contracts will be placed in Canada and that Canadians will have a fair opportunity to capture the spin-off benefits.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

HUMAN RIGHTS

CONDEMNATION OF PROVISIONAL I.R.A. BOMBING IN LONDON, ENGLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas this House has condemned any and all forms of terrorism, and whereas the so-called Provisional IRA has boasted responsibility for the cruel and despicable slaughter of innocent people in London, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren):

That this House condemns the terrorists of the so-called Provisional IRA which has boasted responsibility for the cruel and despicable slaughter of innocent people in London and sends its condolences to the people of Great Britain and especially to the relatives of those killed and wounded.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Corneille: Madam Speaker, I am very grateful for the support of the House at this time on this resolution. I believe the House has gone on record repeatedly against any and all acts of terrorism throughout the world. In this particular case, as members of the House are probably aware, bombs went off beside the Horse Guards of Her Majesty and killed many innocent bystanders. I believe it would be helpful if in some way you, Madam Speaker, could convey our condolences to members of the Royal family and to the relatives of those injured and killed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPLICATION OF WAGE GUIDELINES TO SENIOR OFFICIALS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed either to the Prime Minister or the President of the Treasury Board. Last night the President of the Treasury Board revealed that the government's wage restraint program falls far more heavily on low-income public servants than it does on high-income public servants, particularly senior managers and those who enjoy executive salaries. Why do they think that is fair? Why the double standard? How is it that the government can discriminate against low-income workers in the public service?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I would like to advise the House that, with respect to the management category to which the hon. member made reference, it has never been contemplated that they would receive increases of the magnitude suggested last night by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. In fact cabinet has decided that there will be no increase beyond 6 per cent for senior managers in the system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Not only will there be no merit pay for two years, but senior managers in the management category will not even enjoy any more than the 6 per cent wage increase. In other words, there will be no incremental wage increases toward job rates. If I may continue in that vein, when the hon. member for Rosedale speaks of the people in the lower echelons, referred to by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands as the clerical group, that group will also clearly receive the 6 per cent wage increase and, in addition, the incremental increases provided for in their collective agreements, in effect giving the clerical group or those who are at less than the job rate somewhere between approximately 8.7 per cent and 9 per cent. The objection that people at the lower end are being discriminated against is quite the reverse. It is people at the high end of the scale who will definitely not receive more than 6 per cent.

QUERY RESPECTING BONUS PAY SYSTEM

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, last night the minister, and certainly the minister's chief official, indicated that the traditional performance bonus for senior managers would remain in place. That would take them up to 15 per cent, beyond the 6 per cent and the 5 per cent guidelines. Indeed, that is what the minister, and certainly his chief official, said. Is the minister now saying the opposite from last night, that mandarins in the public service will be able to share the load with low-income workers in the public service? Is that what he is now saying?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, what I am saying—and I thought I said it just a moment ago—is that it has never been contemplated by the government that there would be large increases at the upper end of the management scale. The issue was raised last night. I took it up with my colleagues this morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: It was decided that yes, indeed, the management group was to receive no more than the 6 per cent wage increase, not only those at the job rate who would normally be entitled to a merit bonus under the previous compensation system which has been in effect, and which I am advising the House is being suspended for two years, but also for those who are at less than the job rate. This is something which does not apply to the other categories in the public service at lower levels.

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, it goes without saying that it would have been very helpful if the minister had had that information before the committee last night. In fact, last night the policy of the government was an entirely different story. It is very nice to know that somehow the committee system does work sometimes, because the government simply reversed itself in 18 hours.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether or not that was a question. The government certainly has not reversed itself in 18 hours. The matter was discussed last night. I challenge the hon. member for Rosedale to point to any statement on the record which indicated that any senior manager in the public service would receive a 15 per cent merit increase. That statement was never made.

• (1420)

What was discussed was the merit increase plan which was introduced by the government upon the creation of the senior management category in accordance with the recommendation of the Lambert Commission, in accordance with the recommendation of the former auditor general, and in accordance with the recommendation of the advisory committee to the Prime Minister on executive compensation. What I am saying today is that those merit increases will be suspended for the two years of this program.

TIMING OF CABINET DECISION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we had one policy last night and a different policy today. The President of the Treasury Board has said that cabinet has decided. Will he tell the House when cabinet decided?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that I am taking up the time of the House by repeating myself, but I also mentioned in my reply to the hon. member for Rosedale that that issue had been raised last night and I discussed it with my cabinet colleagues this morning. The decision which I have announced is a firm decision of the government with respect to that senior management category.

Mr. Clark: The translation for that is that the decision was made this morning. The position was reversed this morning. The committee system forced the government to stop its cushy deal for senior public servants, by its questions last night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BONUS PAY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, it still is not clear what is exactly the position. The President of the Treasury Board was careful to deny that there was going to be any 15 per cent increase. He focused on that figure. Will he tell us that there will be no bonus of any kind in excess of the 6 per cent available to any federal public servant?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I believe that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition probably does not understand the wage structure of the public service. The statement I made with respect to the senior management group is that those who are at the job rate are entitled to 6 per cent because the wage movement is 6 per cent. There will be no bonus whatsoever paid to the senior management category.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE LOOPHOLES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the government says that it has embarked on a crusade. It is a new kind of holy war. It is a war that has holes in it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The government is not sure whether or not the 6 per cent will apply to Crown agencies like CMHC. Last night it did not apply to bonuses, this morning it does apply to some bonuses.

Will the President of the Treasury Board tell us what other loopholes exist in this highly flexible 6 per cent rule that is being imposed upon some public servants?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this is very difficult because the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition clearly does not understand how the wage structure functions. Bill C-124, if I may take the time of the House, provides for a 6 per cent limitation on wage rate increases. I want to make sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition understands that. That is the first year, and it is 5 per cent in the second year. This means that anyone who has obtained the job rate under a compensation plan in effect with the federal public service—the same kind of plan which exists with major employers in this country—would be limited to that 6 per cent, and 5 per cent in the second year.

Last night in committee the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands raised the question with respect to merit pay increases which were introduced with the creation of the senior management category, a distinct management category. These increases were designed to provide an incentive for a certain small percentage of superior performers in the public service. She made the point that, if that plan were to be applied, if some management were to take advantage of that plan, then senior managers could indeed receive in excess of the 6 per cent. Last night I agreed with her that that had been the plan that was introduced, but I never made the statement, nor did any of my officials, to my knowledge, that senior managers would receive 15 per cent, or anything like it.

• (1425)

This morning the issue was raised in cabinet with my colleagues because it is clearly not the intention of the government, and never has been, that senior managers should receive more than 6 per cent. It was decided that not only would the job rate of senior managers be limited to 6 per cent, but also that those who have not yet attained a job rate would receive only the wage rate increase. I think the Leader of the Opposition understands that point at this stage.

Mr. Ouellet: Don't count on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: When the Leader of the Opposition says to me that the committee system works, I would like to say that there is no stronger supporter of the committee system in this House than myself and other hon. members on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: The point raised by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands last night with respect to abuse that might take place is precisely the point I raised with my cabinet colleagues and the Prime Minister this morning. It was decided to make it absolutely clear, as a statement of government policy, that the management category would not receive in excess of 6 per cent. I also pointed out in my earlier answer to the hon. member for—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Cousineau: They don't want to hear that.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

CABINET DISCUSSION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct a short question to the President of the Treasury Board with regard to this little group of 10,000 public servants for whom a special, cushy deal had been arranged, until the committee system in the House of Commons stopped it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Will the President of the Treasury Board give the House of Commons his word that the question of this loophole was never discussed by cabinet before this morning?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not regard this matter as being a loophole. This was a compensation plan. I was under the impression that all hon. members, certainly those in the Conservative Party, had approved of merit pay increases for superior performers in the management category.

Miss MacDonald: Not when you are in a restraint program.

Mr. Johnston: When the hon. member asks me whether this has ever been discussed as a loophole, I say to him that it was certainly not my intention, nor do I believe was it the intention of any of my cabinet colleagues, that senior managers would receive these merit pay increases of 15 per cent on top of the wage increase of 6 per cent which was provided for in Bill C-124.

Mr. Clark: Up to 15 per cent.

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR STEPS TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES AND PRICE OF ENERGY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, this morning we were all pleased to find that the year to year inflation rate had ebbed downward ever so slightly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: But we were disappointed to find that, while inflation was attempting to fall, the two areas buoying it up were directly related to the government's policy, namely, the fact that the year to year rise in interest rates for mortgages had increased by 25.1 per cent, and the price of energy had increased by 18.1 per cent over the same period. If the government is serious about its 6 per cent world, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it is not appropriate that the government take steps to reduce interest rates and the price of energy so that, by its policy, the government, too, can participate in the 6 per cent world.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has acknowledged that there has been an improvement in the inflation rate. A year ago the inflation rate in Canada was at 13 per cent. It is now 11.2 per cent. Some progress has been made, but not enough. We must have much more significant drops in the next year if we are to move into a better situation in the country.

The hon. member has made reference to the admitted 18 per cent increase in the price of energy that occurred in the past year. He will realize that the Government of Canada negotiated with the producing provinces for a long time in order to get the best possible deal for the consumers. We finally did succeed in reaching agreements with the producing provinces which are binding on us, and which provide energy prices or prices for oil and gas which are still significantly below international prices. This was one of the objectives of the Government of Canada.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR RE-OPENING OF ENERGY PRICE AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I want to emphasize the point that, in spite of the marginal decrease, it was the areas of government policy where regulatory powers exist where the increases took place that were the greatest. My question to the Minister of Finance is along the lines of the energy increase.

We know that the pricing of energy will result in increases of over 30 per cent for the next year. The government has indicated its willingness to break collective agreements or contracts with individuals unilaterally. Will the minister give the people of Canada some hope by saying, yes, the federal government will take the initiative to reopen negotiations with the producing provinces to see whether some cap can be placed on energy price increases which will see us into the 31 per cent world next year, at least in the cost of energy, recognizing especially the ripple or domino effect that energy price increases would have in the economy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member misunderstands the wage restraint program. The Government of Canada is not making a unilateral move to change the terms and conditions of collective bargaining in the public service. It has made a proposal to the Parliament of Canada. That proposal is before the standing committee. If it comes out of the committee and receives third reading, it will be an act of Parliament passed by Members of Parliament that will determine the regime in the country.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPLICATION OF RESTRAINT GUIDELINES TO CONSULTANTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance should recognize that the wage bill does outlaw collective bargaining.

My supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Last night he made admissions about two loopholes, one with regard to the performance increases for top senior public servants. In that particular area he appears to have reversed himself this morning. Second, he indicated that consultants, who often do work normally done by the civil service, will not be limited to a 6 per cent increase. If consultants, who are, to quote a Liberal MP on the committee, "members of the old boys' network", are not legislatively tied to a 6 per cent increase, how can the Liberal government justify a 6 per cent limit for workers earning between $9,000 and $15,000?

Mrs. Mitchell: What about the old girls?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, my recollection of the exchange last night, subject to my verification of the transcript, was simply to the effect that this wage restraint bill does not extend to service contracts. I take exception to the assumption upon which the question is based, because Treasury Board ministers have taken some pains to establish guidelines for the awarding of consultant contracts to ensure that the kind of abuse to which the hon. member alludes does not in fact take place.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM FRANCE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour of drawing the attention of the House to the distinguished presence of a delegation of French parliamentarians, headed by Mrs. Véronique Neiertz, a member of the French National Assembly, and attending the Fifteenth Annual Meeting of the Canada-France Interparliamentary Association.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAY SCALE INCREASE STIPULATED IN ADVERTISEMENT

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board in light of the answers given to the hon. member for Rosedale and the Leader of the Opposition. Can he explain why the Public Service of Canada, Language Training, National Capital Region, is advertising to fill a position at a salary range of $41,500 to $45,500 which will be revised and increased in September, 1982, with a some 14 per cent increase? This is in an ad in The Globe and Mail of Thursday, July 15. Can he explain the variations between the statements he has made in the House today and what the government is advertising, in light of the restraint in the June budget?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the advertisement in question. I will certainly have my officials look it up, unless the hon. member cares to send it over to me. It is not clear to me how the 14 per cent to which he refers comes about in the part of the ad he read. I will certainly look into that matter and accept the representation made by the hon. member.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

FILING OF RATE INCREASES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In an attempt to develop some credibility for the six and five program, has the minister responsible made an assessment of how many Crown agencies, boards or corporations require the governor in council to approve their filing for rate increases, toll increases or fare increases? Of those that require governor in council approval, how many have been or will be approved?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the government today will be releasing a statement on the issue of administered prices, which I believe is the point to which the hon. member makes reference. I can assure him that it is the government's intention to take a hard line on the 6-5 policy to which the hon. member refers in terms of dealing with all prices that are under federal jurisdiction.

GRAINS

CANADIAN GRAINS COMMISSION—PROPOSED INCREASE IN STORAGE RATES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. We are tyring to find out if the government has as much interest in prices as it does in six-fiving wages. Is the minister aware that the Canadian Grains Commission has filed notice of intent to increase the rates for storage of grain by 33⅓ per cent effective August 1? If so, what does he intend to do about it?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we are very much aware of it. We gave notice of this three months ago. I believe discussions took place that long ago. This is nothing new to the grain trade. If there are any changes, they will be notified. Earlier in the year we had discussions about cost recovery with all of these people . If they are now saying they are surprised, they are not expressing the facts.

TOURISM

INQUIRY WHETHER PROMOTIONAL MEASURES WILL BE UNDERTAKEN CONCERNING GASPÉ REGION

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Tourism. On July 8, I said in the House that this year the number of tourists in Eastern Quebec, and especially in the Gaspé, had dropped 25 per cent. My information is that the Canadian Government Office for Tourism, in its twenty offices throughout the world, has no advertising material on the Gaspé and Eastern Quebec. My question is as follows: Could the minister tell the House whether he intends to take steps to correct this situation and obtain the material required to promote tourism in the Gaspé, particularly in view of the 1984 festivities in honour of the 450th anniversary of the discovery of Canada by Jacques Cartier, who came here from St. Malo in France?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I realize that the hon. member is very keen to promote tourism in his area, which is one of the major tourist attractions in Canada. Regarding the absence of material on the Gaspé in our tourism offices throughout the world, the hon. member is, unfortunately, entirely correct. The fact is that after getting in touch with the Quebec government last April, asking them to send us some 50,000 tourism brochures on the Gaspé for distribution throughout the world, we have as yet received only 350 of the 50,000 brochures requested. When I read the statistics on tourism in the Gaspé this week, I immediately ordered the Canadian Government Office for Tourism to reiterate its request to the Quebec government for as much material as possible to promote the Gaspé in our offices abroad.

CRIMINAL CODE

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN—INQUIRY RESPECTING FORMATION OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, if I can catch his ear. The minister knows that over the last several years there has been a frightening increase in the incidence of violent crimes against women. In the last several weeks in Toronto four women have been murdered in the course of sexual attacks. In addition to that, the Rape Crisis Centre in Toronto has reported that there is a 15 per cent increase in the incidence of rape already this year compared with last year.

There is a number of ways this can be dealt with. One of the ways has been suggested by women's groups themselves; they have volunteered to form a task force to look into this whole matter to try to find solutions to this very serious problem which is of crisis proportions. Could the minister tell the House whether he would be in agreement with that suggestion, and would he provide funding to such a group to look into this extremely important matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the House could do much to improve the situation if it were to proceed quickly with consideration of the amendments to Bill C-53 that contains provisions regarding acts of violence against women and especially rape. The bill has been before the House for several months and is now in committee, and we hope that the committee will soon be able to report back to the House. I am convinced that if the clauses respecting rape were amended to make it easier to convict the accused and to make the process less traumatic for the victim, this would be a major step towards reducing the number of violent crimes, and that is why I hope the committee will finally adopt our proposals concerning Bill C-53.

[English]

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. The threat of violence to women in Toronto has become very real as a result of increasing incidents of violent crime against them. Women are becoming very nervous and are also getting damned mad. I think they are totally fed up with the platitudes and pats on the head the Minister of Justice just gave the women of this country. Will the minister at least agree to give a positive response and establish such a committee, which these women feel could provide a solution to this problem?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think we have done more in the last two years to enhance the rights of women in Canada than ever before. If the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby, would co-operate a little more in the committee, we could make more progress on Bill C-53. The hon. member should do that because his colleague has been talking for months. If he could shut his colleague up for a few days, we could pass some legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION—APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES TO RATE INCREASES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Are the future rate increases of the Northern Canada Power Commission to be held to an amount not exceeding 6 per cent, or will the Commission be allowed to apply for rate increases, as it did at the last consideration, of some 30 per cent?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I answer to Parliament for the Northern Canada Power Commission.

Mr. Nielsen: That is why I asked you the question.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I understand Mr. Smith, the chairman of the Northern Canada Power Commission, has the confidence and support of the hon. member for Yukon. The chairman is aware of the policy of the government with respect to increases in the budget.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Surely the hon. member would be the last one to suggest that a man of Mr. Smith's calibre—a man who has the backing of the hon. member for Yukon—would ignore this very worthy fight against inflation and the fact that a price increase of 6 per cent is a reasonable limit.

REQUEST FOR ROLL BACK IF RATES INCREASED MORE THAN SIX PER CENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): If the Northern Canada Power Commission attempts to increase its rates more than 6 per cent, will the government roll them back to 6 per cent?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I have tried to indicate to the hon. member that 6 per cent is the rule for everybody, and I would expect the Northern Canada Power Commission to abide by it.

Mr. Nielsen: Good. Thank you.

MANPOWER

VOCATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Considering the new national program for occupational training and the fact that the minister informed us at the committee stage that he intended to continue discussions with the Government of Quebec—it seems the program will be starting on September 1—could the minister inform the House today whether he has had discussions with the Government of Quebec since the bill was passed, and whether he is at all optimistic about Quebec benefiting from the new program?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the development and passage of the National Training Act was done in a genuine spirit of co-operation not only with hon. members opposite but also with the provincial governments. Since the passage of the bill two weeks ago we have had very close negotiations and discussions with the province of Quebec in looking toward the signing of an agreement by September 1 so that we can allocate the money there. However, it is really a matter of the provincial government's deciding whether it wants to sign the agreement. If it is prepared to look at the conditions we have put forward, I have certainly instructed my officials to approach the matter in a very open and co-operative manner. I am very optimistic that we will be able to develop an agreement so that we can get a new training program started in that province as well as across the country.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR TAX INCENTIVES TO STIMULATE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Canadian productivity in all commercial industries, measured in production per man-hour, increased, on average, between the years 1967 and 1971 by 4.2 per cent a year; by 2.6 per cent a year between 1972 and 1976; by 0.9 per cent a year between 1977 and 1981; and by 0.2 per cent last year, a very, very serious drop in productivity. Would the Prime Minister reconsider the negative answer he gave to me a couple of weeks ago in this House on this very important matter and, instead, give serious consideration to providing generous tax incentives, to be paid in direct proportion to increases in productivity, so that Canadian producers can find it practical and worth their while to buy the new machinery, plant and production systems necessary to increase productivity, and thereby lower costs and selling prices, and in this way, increase sales, production and jobs?

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is at it again with his remarks that productivity in Canada has dropped. The fact is, and I have told him this before, that productivity has dropped in most industrialized countries, and economists are trying to analyse the many reasons for this slowdown. Most people agree that it is at least partly due to a restructuring of our economies as a result of the OPEC or energy crisis. Indeed, the statistics quoted by the hon. member appear to indicate that the slowdown has been particularly visible since the OPEC crisis in 1973.

Regarding the hon. member's suggestion that further tax incentives be introduced, I would remind him that these measures have been adequate in the past, before we got into a recessionary period. Of course, all countries are now suffering from the recession we are experiencing today, and there is reason to believe that when we get out of this recession, the Canadian tax system, which is basically more generous to business than the American system, will again have a positive effect and that productivity will increase.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONSIDER PROVISION OF INCENTIVES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, if the Right Hon. Prime Minister would sit down and talk to any businessman, he would learn that the only way, and the best way, to get productivity up in this country is to offer a direct incentive, payable in exact proportion to the effort made. There is no other way it will be done, if we are going to work with businessmen. If the Prime Minister is more interested in doing something for his country in this regard than making excuse after excuse for doing nothing, would he take into consideration the suggestion I have made, which has been used with success in the past, and which has increased productivity, and in this way try to slow down the very fast slide this country is taking every day, not into recession, but right into depression?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member recognizes that productivity is very directly linked to investment. He knows that there is a very generous tax credit in Canada, particularly in the manufacturing industry. The hon. member shakes his head, no. He has obviously not informed himself recently.

Mr. Hees: Your incentive is not working.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member usually asks questions and listens to the answers. Today, for some reason—he must have friends in the gallery—

Mr. Hees: No friends in the gallery. No cheap cracks!

Mr. Trudeau: No friends in the gallery, and probably less and less in the country, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CITIZENSHIP COURTS

MOVEMENT OF JUDGE TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and also relates to the matter of the senior echelons of the civil service. He will know that a citizenship judge, Jack Ferguson, was moved at departmental expense earlier this year from Thunder Bay to Vancouver. Will the minister confirm that the judge has been paid at an annual rate of $40,000 since the end of March without being appointed to the position for which he was intended? Why is the judge not working in an area where there is an obvious need for an additional judge?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. He seems to be confused. He probably needs a more reliable source of information than he presently has. Judge Ferguson has been in the British Columbia area, if I recall correctly, for a period of two years. He was not moved there earlier this year. He served out the normal period of time and has been reappointed, if I am recalling correctly, and has been made the regional co-ordinator of citizenship judges in that part of Canada. He is an outstanding judge, doing an excellent job.

The other part of the question was about the financial details of his move more than two years ago. That may well have been before this government came to office so I am not sure of that. I will inquire, and give the hon. member the information.

CRITERIA FOR APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, a few moments ago we heard about the matter of performance bonuses. The performance seems to have been services rendered to the party. I should like to ask the minister if he will confirm that there is a need for a judge, that he is a judge, that there is a conflict, and that at this moment he has not been placed in that position. In clarifying the confusion which there obviously is across the country, would the minister indicate the criteria for the appointment of citizenship judges? Many people who are at the moment unemployed on the west coast wonder why a judge who is not in place is being paid.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I can only conclude that while I was giving the first answer the hon. member was thinking about what he was going to say next, instead of listening to what I said. The hon. member should know that Judge Ferguson has been in place in Vancouver for over two years.

Mr. Clark: As a judge?

Mr. Regan: As a judge. He is continuing in that work in British Columbia now. The hon. member has bad information. Indeed, he has recently been appointed as regional co-ordinator.

On the question of the qualifications necessary to be appointed a citizenship judge, he was appointed long before I was in the department, but the basic qualifications are those that have always applied, that is, that a person be an outstanding Canadian, have a knowledge of citizenship requirements, be interested in the field, and that they be prepared to serve the country.

Mr. McDermid: You left one out.

Mr. Regan: What is that?

Mr. McDermid: That they be a Grit.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LEVEL OF FUNDING FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since last fall we have been waiting for some word on the $345 million promised for Indian economic development. We received that word. In the June budget it was announced that the funds are to be cut by over 50 per cent—cut or deferred this year and next. Will the minister explain to the House why economic development funds have been cut for a group that suffers from an unemployment rate of up to 90 per cent on reserves? Indian people need jobs this year and cannot wait another five or ten years. Why are Indian people being asked to live in a world of minus 50 per cent?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I do not agree with the premise of the hon. member's question. Despite the fact that there are many elements of the budget that preach restraint, it shows the concern of the government for the native people that there was no cut-back with respect to economic development moneys for native people. Rather, if there was a deferral, there was a shortfall this year over what had previously been committed and that was tacked on to the back end of the commitment. The same amount—in other words, $345 million—is committed, only the period over which it is to be spent is extended by two years.

TIMING OF APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the fact remains that there is going to be $30 million available this year instead of $75 million for economic development for the Indian people. That means that those jobs will not be available. The native people have been waiting for a long time to know what the government's plans are.

I should like to ask the minister if he would indicate to the House when these projects will be approved and what mechanism will be put in place to ensure maximum Indian participation in allocating these funds.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I expect that we will be able to deal with the time frames when the mechanism is in place to consider applications.

Mr. Manly: When?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Very soon, Madam Speaker. May I also indicate to the hon. member that when he talks about only $30 million, and so that no misunderstandings permeate the House, he should remember that this money of course is in addition to the economic development moneys available in my department through the estimates. The hon. member is aware of this because he has been at the standing committee.

He should also be aware that regional development moneys have been available and are being taken advantage of by native people in the provinces—what we used to call DREE moneys are available. My colleague, the minister responsible for employment, also has moneys which he zealously tries to make available to the native people. So it is far more than the limited amount the hon. member indicated in the House a few moments ago.

HUMAN RIGHTS

TREATMENT OF FORMER OPPOSITION LEADER IN KOREA

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it concerns Mr. Kim of South Korea. A year and a half ago, after world-wide expressions of concern, including the unanimous vote of this House, the death sentence on the former opposition leader, Kim Dae-Jung, was commuted to life imprisonment.

The North American Coalition for Human Rights in Korea reports that Mr. Kim is being kept in deplorable conditions. Not only has he been in solitary confinement since his arrest in 1980 but the cells around him are empty and the guards are forbidden to speak a word to him. He is allowed no newspaper, radio, or visits from clergy or others, and only two 20-minute visits from his wife each month. He has been denied badly needed medical attention for a leg problem.

Will the Prime Minister take the opportunity when President Chun is here in August to make a special appeal on behalf of Mr. Kim for some relief, or even amnesty?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must confess that I have not been briefed on the state of Mr. Kim in recent times. I will look into the suggestion of the hon. member and discuss the matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns homes insulated with UFFI. Could the minister inform us whether he has received Mr. Lamoureux's report on this product and whether he could give the House any details?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, this morning I received a letter from the chairman of the UFFI Review Board. Although I was going to do so at the time of tabling documents, I shall now, with leave of the House, table the document I was sent this morning. Very briefly, in one paragraph the letter confirms that one of the Board's members, Dr. Sutherland, has had a major operation and is now convalescing, and that unfortunately, the Board will be unable to finish its report within the agreed time-frame. However, because of the importance of the subject, the Board has decided to make public immediately its decision concerning the ban on the use of UFFI. The reasons for its decision will be announced in the weeks to come, as soon as the three members of the Board are able to finish the report. In any case, I can inform the House that as a result of the Board's decision, this product remains banned.

PUBLICATION OF REPORT'S FINDINGS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the minister telling us that he is going to publish the results of the report but he will not publish the report because they have not finished preparing it?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition did not entirely grasp my meaning. I was saying that I received a document signed by the three Board members, Messrs. Lamoureux, Lu and Sutherland, and that the Board's decision has now been made public. When the Chair calls for the tabling of documents later on, I shall be tabling this correspondence, in both official languages.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL TABLE DECISIONS WITHOUT AUTHORITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker.

If I understand correctly, the minister is informing the House that he wishes to table, first of all, a letter and second, the text of a decision, without the reasons for that decision, since for the time being, the Board has not finished its work. Is that correct? If so, why is the minister now tabling the text of a decision without giving his reasons for doing so?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the official opposition's critic asked me in the House to make public immediately any communications I received from the Board, and that is what I am doing.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PINARD—QUESTIONS DIRECTED TO MINISTERS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I refrained from raising a point of order during question period out of respect for our practice that members do not interrupt the question period to raise a point of order. At this point, however, I may, very briefly, draw your attention to two provisions contained in Beauchesne, fifth edition, regarding the nature of questions that may be put to a minister in the House.

You probably noticed that at the beginning of question period, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) was asked questions referring to a statement he made outside the House and to the proceedings of a standing committee of this House. In Beauchesne, on page 135, Citation 359(10), it says, and I quote:

A question ought not to refer to a statement made outside the House by a Minister.

And I will also quote Citation 360(3):

Some further limitations seem to be generally understood. A question may not:

(3) seek information about proceedings in a committee which has not yet made its report to the House.

There is also Erskine May, nineteenth edition, on page 146, which formulates the same principle and the same limitations.

In the circumstances, Madam Speaker, since Bill C-124 is now before a standing committee of the House, and in view of the provisions I just quoted which are, in fact, an integral part of our parliamentary practice, I would like to draw the attention of the Chair to these points and ask that the rules of the House be strictly applied during the next few days, since as long as the bill has not been reported back to the House, questions about the bill and about statements by the minister before the committee are out of order.

Madam Speaker: I am quite aware of the citations quoted by the hon. minister, but during question period, that particular question seemed entirely legitimate. It is true that there is a reference to things that were said at a meeting of a parliamentary committee, but it seems to me that the question stood on its merits. I am sure that during the debate on the Constitution, a number of issues were raised that were similar to those being discussed in committee. Finally, I have the impression that hon. members abided by the rules of the House. The hon. minister may have a different opinion, but now that the moment has passed, I can assure him that I shall be more vigilant. However, it did not seem obvious at the time that there had been a breach of the rules of the House.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,249, 4,259, 4,270.

[Text]

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,249—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Employment and Immigration have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the department and, if so, are they embodied in a code of conduct or other specific document and is the code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes. Standards of conduct expected by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission/Department of its staff are set out in the "Code of Conduct for Commission/Departmental Staff". This document is applicable only to Canada Employment and Immigration Commission/Department employees and, as such, it is an internal Commission/Department publication which is not normally requested by members of the public. It is available to the public on request.

2. On the basis of the available data, the reply is as follows: Yes, April 1, 1977, to March 31, 1980, information not available. In accordance with the provisions of collective agreements dealing with employee files, all documents related to disciplinary actions are destroyed once two years have elapsed from the time that the disciplinary action was taken, provided that no further disciplinary action has been recorded in the meantime.

April 1, 1980, to March 31, 1981: Employees suspended, 38; employees discharged, three.

April 1, 1981, to March 31, 1982: Employees suspended, 47; employees discharged, five.

To be consistent with the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act we are not providing names.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,259—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Labour have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the department and, if so, are they embodied in a code of conduct or other specific document and is the code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): 1. Yes, Labour Canada does have several departmental directives which relate to the above mentioned question. These directives are widely issued and held in the department and are available to all employees, and thus by extension to the public. The pertinent directives are: Conflict of Interest: Policies and Guidelines; Application of Discipline; Telephone Service to the Public; Hours of Work; Employee Assistance Program; Employee Performance Review and Appraisal.

In addition to the above, the collective agreements and compensation plans, applicable to all public servants, provide a good deal of guidance with regard to accepted standards of behaviour. Also the Personnel Management Manual, which is readily available to employees, provides a wealth of information on standards of conduct, conflict of interest, hours of work and discipline, etc. Information on standards of conduct is also provided in the Staffing Manual, the Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual for subjects such as contracting for services, travel and removal regulations etc., and in various other publications and directives available to employees.

2. According to our records, 11 employees were disciplined during the past five years for a total of 22 incidents. This figure does not include oral reprimands. We do not maintain cumulative records on discipline, as it has not been a large problem in this Department.

To be consistent with the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act we are not providing names.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,270—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Veterans Affairs have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the department and, if so, are they embodied in a code of conduct or other specific document and is the Code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Veterans Affairs has a document entitled "Standard of General Conduct". This document outlines the basic rules of behaviour for Veterans Affairs employees. The document is part of Veterans Affairs policy on discipline and is included in the Personnel Management Manual (PMM), Chapter 060-1. It is available to the public.

2. Most collective agreements contain provisions stipulating that documentation of disciplinary measures must be destroyed after two years where there is no recurrence of the same misconduct. Accordingly, active disciplinary files are not normally kept for more than two years. In the past two years, only two employees were dismissed as a result of their misconduct; based on partial returns for fiscal year 1981-82, it is estimated 100 employees were suspended for the same two year period.

To be consistent with the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act we are not providing names.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, July 19, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-125, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment of Mr. Clark (p. 19456).

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the government is asking under the present borrowing authority for what amounts to a $4 billion slush fund. This is over and above the amount of money required to run the government this year as has been projected. The government projected financial requirements in the amount of $17.1 billion for this year. It has already had $10.2 billion in borrowing authority this year and it also has $3.6 billion in unused authority from previous years. Bill C-125 proposes to give the government an additional $11 billion.

As a businessman I recognize the need for borrowing and the need to pay bills and accounts. But I also know that if I walked into my bank and asked for a borrowing requirement of $17,000 and I told the bank: "Just for the fun of it I want a little bit of a slush fund, so lend me $21,000", the bank would tear up my loan application.

An hon. Member: They would give it to you.

Mr. Shields: An hon. member on the other side says the bank would give me the money. Hon. members over there are not bankers; you can certainly tell that, Mr. Speaker.

If a small-business man went into a bank for a loan, he would show the bank his requirements. Take, for example, a small-business man who asked his bank for a loan of $1.7 million but said to his banker: "Mr. Banker, that is the requirement but I want $2.1 million because I need a $400,000 slush fund in case something goes wrong." The banker would certainly throw him out of the door. The banker would tell him that he did not know what he was doing and that he did not know how to run his business.

If I were responsible for a public company and as president went to the board of directors asking for the same kind of borrowing with a slush fund attached to it, the chairman and some member of that board would move a motion of non-confidence and say to me: "Mr. President, get out; you do not know what you are doing."

The people of Canada are saying, and they are saying the same thing to their representatives in this House, that this government does not know what it is doing when it asks this House to approve a $4 billion slush fund. This is a way for the government to avoid its responsibilities and its accountability to the people of Canada through this very important green room.

During the past two years that I have been here, we have continually seen a hiding from the public of what the plans of the government are and what the government is going to do. We have seen a blue ribbon committee appointed. This committee has been appointed to discuss a budget that was brought into this House and introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). The budget may be changed as a result of the findings of this committee. The government is treating the budget as a white paper. The government is treating the budget as a document that has not been tabled in this House of Commons as a budget or a plan of operation for the country. The government has done it to the exclusion of every member in this House, including its own backbenchers. In fact, the government's backbenchers are being treated shoddily. They are treated worse than the government treats the opposition benches.

Every time I pick up a newspaper or a magazine I see the following kinds of headlines: "Canada's economy in decline; Canada's economy is now in crisis; Crisis situation faces Canada; Canada in severe recession; Worst unemployment facing Canadians since the dirty thirties". These are the headlines that we read every day. What about these: "Is it a depression? Canada faces sick economy; bankruptcies at an all-time high; investment at an all-time low"?

Then we read what the very cavalier Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the very arrogant Prime Minister of this country, says: "We have had the hell scared out of us." The Prime Minister should not be saying that. He should be saying: "The Liberals under me have scared the hell out of Canadians right across the country." The Liberals have created a Canadian nightmare.

Yesterday in this House, I asked a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). I pointed out to him what the national energy policy had done to the country. And what was his reply? The minister said: "I am not responsible for that member's nightmares." I was only telling the minister what is happening. To get a reply like that to a very legitimate question to him shows the arrogance of this government, a government that can come into this chamber and arrogantly place before this House of Commons an order—an act—requesting or saying—because the government knows it will be able to pass the bill—that it wants a $4 billion slush fund. The situation is absolutely ludicrous.

I ask all hon. members to reflect for a moment on why in this country, with our vast, abundant resources, with our natural God-given resources, with our wealth, our highly educated work force, a very highly productive work force, a highly skilled work force, with people who desire to get out and build our country, we are in the economic mess that we face today. We have everything going for us, Mr. Speaker. Why has the economy gone the way it has? Why is unemployment at an all-time high? Why are bankruptcies at an all-time high? Why do companies have liquidity problems? Why are workers being laid off every day? Why do we have people frightened that they will lose their homes? Why are people feeling threatened with the loss of their life savings? Why are all these things happening?

What do we hear in our debates? We hear from government members that it is because of world conditions. We hear the Prime Minister say it is all a result of world conditions. We hear the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources say the same thing. We hear the Minister of Finance say it is because of world conditions or it is because of the situation in the United States. We also hear that it is because of Reaganomics. That is what we hear from the red rump, the New Democratic Party, the "Liberal Party west". We hear about Reaganomics and that it is Reagan in the United States who is causing all of this mess. We hear that our problems are caused by the United States high interest rate policy, and because the U.S. economy is not moving, ours cannot move.

Then we hear other members say that our problems are caused by a lazy work force and that Canadians are not productive. The Prime Minister has the audacity to stand up and say that Canadians' expectations are too high, that Canadians have to bring the level of their expectations down. We have heard him say that Canadians have been living off the fat of the land for too long and Canadians now will have to tighten their belts.

Those are the kinds of things we hear. We hear that Canada's problems are the fault of unions, that union demands have been too high. Then we hear the problems being blamed on civil servants and that their wage increase will be held to 6 per cent this year. But most of all we hear the problems being blamed on the general public, because it wants too much and wants too much for nothing.

I agree there is a general downturn in world economy which is bound to affect to a degree what is happening here in Canada. I agree that our economy is tied closely to that of the United States and that as a result we in Canada are going to feel the effects of an economic downturn in the United States. Certainly that happens, but of all the countries in the western world, Canada is the best equipped to face an economic downturn. Why are we not facing it? Why are we not surviving the economic downturn? Why are we not a model for the rest of the world? It is because of lack of trust and confidence.

For 30 unprecedented years Canada was looked upon worldwide as the place in which to invest. Canada was looked upon as having a stable government; it was the land of opportunity. When people in European money markets talked about investing in the new world, Canada was the place to go because it had a stable political climate. It was the land of the future.

Do my hon. friends remember ten years ago when the Prime Minister said that the eighties belonged to Canada, that the next two decades were ours, that we would become a world leader? Well, we have become a world leader! We have become a showplace for the rest of the world to look at as an example of how not to run a country, of how not to rob from every individual in the country to run a bureaucracy like we have in Canada.

My hon. friends should read the publications of respected economists in Great Britain. They should read what they have to say about the Canadian economy. It will make them ashamed. They should read what has been written in German and French publications. I am talking about publications in France. They should read what they say in the European Economic Community. Canada has now been relegated to the position of a Third World country for investment opportunities, with an unstable government, a government which cannot keep its promises, a government which will say one thing one year and change its mind the next.

Let us look at the confidence which the government inspired with the national energy policy. It was outright theft of investment. We in Canada have always had a policy of inviting foreign investment into the country and of saying to investors: "Please come in and help us develop our resources. Please come in, these are the kinds of things we will give you: we will allow you to write off some of your investment against income". Various incentives were put in place.

The very first budget introduced in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance was in the disguise of a national energy policy. It was disguised document. It was a document which actually stole; it was out and out theft of interest and investments of foreign companies. The government might just as well have come forward and confiscated entire companies. Every large investor, every foreign investor in Canada, saw what the national energy policy was doing. It was clearly the most shameful document to come before the House of Commons in the two years I have been here.

What was the result? Well, investment flow stopped. There was no more investment by foreigners in Canada. They said that they could not trust Canadians. They do not look solely at the Prime Minister, the National Energy Program, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley). They also look at Canada and say that Canadians can no longer be trusted because they have elected an unstable government which does not keep its word.

I have roamed the world. I represented Canada in the armed forces overseas. I was proud to walk down the streets with the inscription "Canada" on my shoulders. I was proud, but I do not have that pride today when I visit the United States or Europe. Do hon. members remember when we all used to wear little lapel pins depicting the Canadian flag so that everyone would know that we were Canadian? Many Canadians are not wearing them now because they know that the government stole investment from people who took us at our word when they were promised a stable climate for investment.

What has been the result? There has been a vast outflow of investment capital from Canada which is needed to develop our resources. It has gone to other countries. It has created a drain on our Canadian dollar. Immediately when that happens, our Canadian dollar gets weak. Then to keep the dollar from getting weaker and weaker, which contributes to inflation, the government in its wisdom must raise interest rates for short-term borrowing to attract money back. The interest rate which we pay on investment coming to Canada is a reflection of how the investment community views the country.

We all know what first and second mortgages are. Do hon. members remember the days when we could obtain first mortgages for 12 per cent and second mortgages, because they were a little more risky, were available at 15 per cent or 20 per cent? We all knew if we went to finance companies to finance a car that they would look at our credit rating. We all knew that they would look at us as individuals and say: "Yes, he gets a preferred rate." It might have been 2 per cent or 3 per cent cheaper than the next man walking in the door who wanted to buy a car, because he was not as trustworthy and, therefore, had to pay more for his loan to finance his purchase. As a result of the national energy policy we are paying more to finance our country because the investment community no longer trusts Canadians, the Canadian government or the Canadian investment climate.

One country which has always been very similar to ours is Australia. It is much like Canada, a vast country, nearly as large as Canada, except for the Northwest Territories. It has a population of somewhere between 12 million and 13 million people. It is extremely nationalistic. Australia is as nationalistic as Canada, but it recognizes something which our government has failed to recognize, that the domestic supply of investment capital is not adequate. We do not have enough domestic supply of investment capital to develop resources in Canada to create a strong country. The Australians are very pragmatic. They have rolled out the welcome mat for foreign investment.

Let me turn to a list of names to see whether hon. members recognize them. They are: Carling O'Keefe Ltd., Canada Northwest Land Ltd., Coho Resources Ltd., Consolidated Five Star Resources Ltd., Hiram Walker Resources Ltd., Hudson's Bay Oil & Gas Co. Ltd., Medcon Resources Ltd., Norcen Energy Resources Ltd., Nu-West Group Ltd., Oakwood Petroleum Ltd., Ocelot Industries Ltd., PanCanadian Petroleum Ltd., Ranger Oil (Canada) Ltd., Sulpetro Ltd., United Canso Oil & Gas Ltd., Westburne International Industries Ltd., and Silverton Resources Ltd. Every one of those companies are Canadian companies which moved down to Australia during the past two years because of the economic climate, investment climate and political climate there. All told, there is approximately 30 Canadian companies operating in Australia at the present time with in excess of 1,000 Canadian geologists and approximately 2,000 well-trained rig operators, derrick men and floor men searching for oil and natural gas. And we wonder where the boys went? They did not all go to the United States; many of them went to Australia.

These 30 companies were lost to Canada because we have a national energy policy in the guise of a budget, which virtually destroyed an industry. Australia has laid out the welcome mat. Mr. William Nixon, a Canadian, president of Medcon Resources has said that it is one of the last places where you have political stability and vast areas of relatively unexplored and interesting rock to play with. In other words, he is an entrepreneur who wants to discover and actively produce those resources. That man was driven from Canada.

I will quote another example. I have a report which says that the Australian government——staunchly supports both free enterprise and energy development. And, while the Fraser government as a whole is nationalist-minded, it's also pragmatic.

It recognizes that the domestic capital is just not there. Therefore, it has put out the welcome mat.

Another example concerns exploration permits in Australia which would make you think you were reading about Canada 10 or 15 years ago when articles of this type were written about Canada. They are now being written about Australia with Canadian players. The article states:

Exploration permits in Australia are like the old-style permits in the Arctic, says Medcon's Nixon. 'You get a large area and commit yourself to a certain work program. The production lease, what you eventually have to pay, is then defined around what you discover.'

The Australians have learned from Canada. God help them if they ever elect people there who think the way the people in the front benches of this Liberal government think.

I would like to continue with another quote about Australia. This also sounds curiously familiar:

As well, the Australians Foreign Investment Review Board (FIRB)—

We have FIRA, the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

—draws just about as much praise from oilmen as Canada's Foreign Investment Review Agency (FIRA) draws criticism.

'The Australian system is a much more workable one from everyone's point of view', says Deacon. 'They don't say everything has to be 50 per cent Australian-owned. They just want 50 per cent ownership once there's production. And once you have reserves, it's easy to get local partners.'

It is easy to get local investors to invest. Of course, that is what we had been doing in Canada for many years. The aim of the National Energy Program to make the oil industry Canadian was already, in fact, happening. It was happening because the Canadian players were becoming involved and were beginning to take over and expand.

People do not realize that we had some of the best technology for oil rig construction situated in western Canada. It was the best of anywhere in the world and we were shipping what was being produced in Canada to fields all over the world. Many people do not know that we developed a new pump in Canada for bringing out of the ground oil which is shipped all over the world. This technology was enabling us to expand the industry.

Canada now has the reputation of being unsafe as a place to invest funds. The world no longer trusts Canada. This has been happening over the last two or three years. The government has reneged on agreements with NATO. We have not lived up to our commitments to NATO. More important is the fact that we allowed a government to develop a policy and ram it through Parliament, since we were powerless to stop it, which actually committed outright theft of foreign investment in this country. That policy was the National Energy Program. Once you have had dealings with someone who has not kept his word, you are an absolute fool to return to that person and enter into another agreement. Any lawyer or judge will tell you that. For 30 years Canada was the place to invest. That is no longer the case because confidence and trust have been destroyed. Not only has that trust and confidence been destroyed in our foreign markets, it has been lost in Canada itself.

I had occasion to walk into the lobby last night where two pages were sitting at a table discussing what would be the best occupation for a young person to take up. All members know these pages.

Mr. Kristiansen: You said that last night.

Mr. Shields: I know I said that last night, but it is worth repeating. We know these young pages. They are first year university students who are hopefully looking to what their future in Canada will be. These two pages came to the conclusion that they should enter into business dealings with bankruptcies, because that seems to be where the action presently is. That is a comment on our country. All across the country there are farmers, tradesmen and Canadian developers who have lost confidence in Canada. Canadian businessmen and those hardworking risk takers have lost confidence in Canada as a place to invest.

How do we restore confidence in our country? First, we must withdraw the National Energy Program. We must return to the pre-national energy policy days and restore a positive climate. We must phase out FIRA so that it works along the lines of Australia's review board of being flexible instead of saying to the world: "Foreigners stay out, Yankees stay out, because we do not want your investment." We must remove the taxes that were imposed in the second budget of the Minister of Finance. Those taxes hit every workingman and taxed everything he worked toward.

We must return to the concept that the government does not own everything. Everything should not be taxed. The government must move away from its concept that people cannot donate to charities because the money really belongs to it. Nothing is the government's unless the people want to give. Canadians have not lost confidence in Canada as a country. Canadians have not lost confidence in themselves as individuals. Canadians have not lost confidence in their own individual abilities. Canadians have not lost confidence in their skills, whether they be entrepreneurial skills or working men's skills. Canadians have not lost confidence in themselves to compete on an even footing with any other citizen of the world.

• (1540)

Canadians know that the land is strong. Do hon. members remember that slogan, "The Land is Strong"? Well, Canadians know the land is strong. Canadians know that we will survive in this country, no matter what the present Liberal government does to the economy. But, hon. friends, Canadians have lost faith in the Prime Minister. Canadians have lost faith in the arrogant Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Canadians have lost faith in the Minister of Finance, who tries to tell us that things are one way when, in fact, they are not, when he dipsy-doos and plays a shell game every time he introduces a budget. Canadians have lost faith in the Minister of State for International Trade who, with his sleazy tactics, does not have the guts to stand up and work out an agreement with the Japanese on car imports but, rather, plays games at the border.

Canadians have lost faith in a government which continually works on brainwashing advertising across the country. Canadians instinctively know that with the God-given resources and talents in this country and our level of education, everything is going for us. But Canadians know that this government is probably the weakest government in the history of Canada and they pray for that group to be gone from this place. I say to all hon. members opposite, on behalf of Canadians across the country who have faith in their country and faith in their land but who have lost all faith in the present government, for God's sake, please do the honourable thing. Resign and go!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating the borrowing authority bill which is asking the House of Commons to give authority to the Government of Canada to raise another $11 billion. This is the second time the government has been to the trough and it is doing so because it must make good on the incredible error that it made in the budget of last November. Last November the government said the deficit would be some $10.5 billion. Just two weeks ago, seven months later, we heard that the size of the deficit is some $20 billion.

Let us analyze exactly what the government is requesting. Coming into this fiscal year, there was a carryover of $3.6 billion from the last year. Then, on June 15, the government asked for $6.6 billion worth of borrowing authority. When that is added to the $11 billion that it is requesting now, it amounts to a request for a total of $21.2 billion of borrowing authority, contrasted to the $17.1 billion worth of cash requirement of the government as stated in the budget. That is $4.1 billion more than is needed, a $4.1 billion cushion, or "slush fund", as my friend, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), said. That is a 24 per cent cushion or margin for error that the government says it needs in this borrowing authority. That may seem reasonable in light of the 100 per cent error it made at the time of the last budget, but it is not good enough for the taxpayers of Canada. It is not good enough when we consider the impact of that $20 billion deficit and it is not good enough when we see the impact which loose financial management over the last ten years has had on people in the country today.

The figure of $17 billion or $20 billion is huge. It is very hard for anyone to understand the impact or the size of such figures. They are massive and must be put into some form of perspective so that people can get an understanding of exactly what we are discussing here. My colleague, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis), developed some very useful statistics which he put forward in the House a couple of weeks ago. They related to his riding, particularly the City of Belleville, but I have arrived at statistics for my own riding of Etobicoke Centre and the similarity of these statistics is surprising. They give us some idea of just how big $20 billion is.

We all pay municipal taxes in one way or another, whether through rent or as homeowners. Those who are homeowners must write cheques four, five or six times a year for the exact amount of their municipal taxes. Let us look at the $20 billion deficit in relation to municipal taxes. I am just referring to the deficit, not over-all federal government spending, which would be about four and a half times larger. The deficit is equivalent to about $840 per capita, per individual, per man, woman and child in the country today. For the residents of Etobicoke Centre, that works out to about $86.9 million. The total municipal bill in Etobicoke Centre for police and fire protection, for roads, garbage collection, snow removal, public transit and education, amounts to $67.5 million. In other words, our taxes could increase by nearly 30 per cent before the municipal taxes would be equivalent to our share of the federal government deficit. That is the magnitude of the problem which we are letting this government pass on to future generations. The government is spending money so fast now that it is spending the total share of the municipal budget of Etobicoke Centre in seven and a half hours.

Let me give hon. members one more figure. We have seen the government blow about $700 million on Mirabel Airport. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is making a valiant effort to work out that problem right now and he is facing much conflict within his own caucus. That $700 million would pay for Etobicoke Centre's share of all municipal services for over ten years. We would not have to pay another nickel in taxes if that $700 million had been devoted just to Etobicoke Centre. It is easier for all of us to understand the magnitude of the problem when we consider it in terms of our own neighbourhoods. As I say, the Belleville figures are not far off from those of Etobicoke Centre, so I would imagine that there are many communities in Ontario as well as in other parts of Canada which could put the budget deficit in the same perspective and get a better understanding. It is more than equivalent to the municipal taxes all of us are paying across the country.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is asking each Canadian taxpayer to sign a cheque for $2,000 to pay for his mistakes. All Members of Parliament should ask themselves how many of their constituents would be willing today to sign a cheque for $2,000 and send it to the Minister of Finance saying: "Here, Mr. MacEachen, this is to pay for your mistakes and for your shortfall." I do not think many Canadians today would be prepared to do that. That is a question all Members of Parliament should be asking themselves on behalf of their taxpayers.

It does not stop there. This huge $20 billion deficit has to be financed through borrowing. These deficits are accumulating and have been accumulating year after year since confederation, but not at the alarming rate we have seen in the last few years.

In the early part of the seventies, the budget was just about in balance. There were some deficits, some surpluses. In the last four years, the deficit has averaged $9.5 billion per year. In the current year it will jump to $20 billion. According to an article in Maclean's Magazine, the deficit next year will increase to $22 billion. We have not yet been told those figures. We tried to find that out from the Minister of Finance but he would not tell us what will happen next year. He does not trust us. He does not want us to know the depth of the problem in this country.

Right now the total debt of the country works out to about $5,500 for every man, woman and child, or $14,500 for every taxpayer. As I said earlier, it will jump by another $2,000 after this year to $16,500. The critical element is that we are financing these deficits on an ongoing basis at interest rates between 15 and 20 per cent per annum. That debt accumulates in an alarming way. It doubles every four or five years.

Let us look at last year's deficit of $11.5 billion and this year's deficit of $20 billion and see what will happen to them by 1990 if interest rates stay at the same level they are at today. Those two years alone, nothing else, will build to $116 billion by 1990, almost the size of the total federal government gross debt today.

That is the magnitude of the problem we are dealing with here. That is why we have to do something to get this huge problem down to a size where we can deal with it. We are leaving this problem to our children and grandchildren. We are asking them to pay for the government waste and expenses that Canadians do not want to pay for today. We are mortgaging their future in a major way when the debt is accumulating at rates of interest between 15 and 20 per cent.

Eight years ago $1.00 out of every $9.00 of federal government spending was devoted to payment of interest alone, not repayment of debt but interest alone. Next year one dollar in four of government spending will be devoted to payment of interest on the public debt—no repayment of debt. The government has been asking Canadians to support its irresponsible fiscal policy for ten years.

Economic conditions are getting worse and there is still no effort to turn the matter around. The government is, in effect, asking us to steal from our kids. Each of our children who this year enters the work force will be asked to take on a debt of $14,500 to finance the fiscal mismanagement of the past ten years. That is what we are being asked to do today. That is what we have to change.

One of the major goals of this budget is to send a signal to the capital markets today to tell the markets how much of the country's financial resources are to be taken by the federal government. How strongly is the federal government going to compete with other more productive users of capital? That is the $20 billion shock of the budget of June 28.

Government spending this year as a percentage of the overall national income is at 25.3 per cent, a post-war high. This year the government will be taking the largest share of the total economic activity of the country it has taken since the war. That means more taxes for the future. It also means more borrowing in the future.

Let us look at it from the standpoint of the impact of borrowing. In 1980 the net new issues of all securities—federal, municipal, provincial governments, as well as corporations—was $31 billion. In that year the Government of Canada took 36.7 per cent. In 1981 the amount had decreased to $26.8 billion and the government took about 46.5 per cent of that amount. We do not know what the total new issues will be this year, but probably they will be a little lower because of the poor markets we have had. The markets have been devastated by the impact of government policies over the past few years.

However, the Government of Canada will be taking $17 billion of that and it will amount to 60 per cent of the total issues. That is what we mean by crowding out. Borrowers have been crowded out. They have been forced into the banking system as the only source of capital for them.

In 1980-81 the provinces and municipalities were not borrowing a considerable amount of money. In some cases the provincial governments in aggregate were in net surplus. They were not putting much pressure on the markets. This year the problem of crowding out will become compounded because of the increase in borrowing requirements. Therefore the small-business men, home owners, those who want to buy a car, farmers, fishermen and others who need money will have to compete against this massive government borrowing.

When the minister came back from Versailles, he had the audacity to tell us that the big problem in this country today was the huge size of the federal government deficit in the United States. He said if we could only get the United States to deal with its huge deficit problem, we would be better able to solve our problems here. Let us look at the size of the deficit in the United States. On a per capita basis it is about $475. In Canada, as I said a moment ago, it is $780. It is 65 per cent higher in this country than in the United States. That is why we have a problem with interest rates in this country.

Let us look at this in the context of one of the most serious problems we have today, the problem of the severe corporate liquidity squeeze in the country. The Bank of Montreal did a study which it issued last month. It is a very illuminating study because of the generally deteriorating picture across Canada and across industries in the area of corporate liquidity. I want to quote a few statistics. The ratio of interest to pre-tax income in the years 1977 to 1980 has been running at between 20 and 25 per cent a year. In 1981 that figure had increased to 66 per cent. It is bound to go up further this year because of the continuation of high interest rates and the clearly depressed corporate profit position.

It was announced earlier this year that corporate profits were down between 40 and 50 per cent. Let us put it another way. The coverage of interest by earnings in those earlier years was about five to six times. In 1981 it dropped suddenly to two and one-half times. Various other ratios are quoted which give the same picture.

There is one important figure, critically important today in light of the bankruptcies that have been occurring across the country—the net working capital, the ready cash that keeps a company in business. When there is no working capital, once it has run out, the game is over and the company goes bankrupt. Net working capital in the first half of 1981 actually dropped by $1.7 billion, and that is widely spread across many industries. This report says that some industries are quite vulnerable. It also says: "Should present trends continue, the results will most certainly be disastrous." That is not political rhetoric. That is raw economic analysis based on the facts in the real world today.

• (1600)

For the future the report concludes that the deterioration is accelerating. It does not imply that any real pick-up in activity will be sustained, because of this problem. The response of industry is seen regularly. The clear objective of many companies today is survival. That means cost cutting. That means lay-offs. The struggle for liquidity is really being made on a panic basis. The necessity to preserve cash is essential to the maintenance of business, but the response of the government in the face of this problem is business as usual. "We increased our spending last year by 20 per cent; let's increase our spending this year by another 20 per cent." For two years running spending will increase by 20 per cent.

As I said before, Maclean's had told us that the budget deficit is forecast by some people in the Department of Finance to be another $3 billion. That means we will have continuing pressure on interest rates. It means that people who need to raise money for new cars, homes, rolling over mortgages or for the maintenance of small businesses will be under severe pressure when they have to raise money.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party have been very conscious of this sharp deterioration in the economy. We warned of it last September, and we are very conscious of the impact of the huge $20 billion deficit on the very weak position of Canadian industry today. We have continuously been proposing clear alternatives to the measures proposed by the Liberals and New Democrats in order to ease this situation. First, we have said there must be restraint in government spending. We must have a board program to cut discretionary spending by up to 10 per cent. The prime focus of this type of spending cut would be in areas such as government advertising, which clearly is not essential; in rental costs and professional and consulting fees; and in general materials rented by government departments across the board. This has to be done in an equitable way. Let us not be fooled by the questions hon. members opposite put to us. They say, "Where would you cut?" Cuts cannot be made in one particular area or another; there has to be a broad attack on discretionary spending across the board. Back in 1979 we showed that it can be done. We have shown that the Conservative Party, with a commitment, an understanding of the problem and the necessary management skills, can do it. At that time we kept government spending 2.5 percentage points below the rate of growth in the national income.

The second point is that we could reduce the pressure on the Canadian dollar by changing the policies which have caused that pressure. My colleague, the hon. member for Athabasca, referred to the National Energy Program and clearly set out in his speech that that program is one of those policies which has caused that pressure on the Canadian dollar. The Foreign Investment Review Agency has policies which are scaring money away from the country. My colleague discussed that as well. It is clear to all Canadians that downward pressure on the Canadian dollar is leading to upward pressure on interest rates. High interest rates only aggravate the tremendous corporate liquidity problem we have today. That is causing the lay-offs which are swelling the unemployment ranks in the country today.

The third objective should be to create a more favourable investment climate by reversing those parts of the November budget which have undermined the investment climate in the country and have dulled the investment intentions of Canadian business.

All these policy initiatives would lead to a reduction in the deficit, a reduction in interest rates and an easing of our economic problems. The over-all result would be a reduction in the federal government deficit. Let me make it quite clear that the federal government deficit will not be cut just by cutting spending alone. It will be reduced only if we get economic activity going and if we bring about a reduction in interest rates.

The three-point program I have just outlined would go far in achieving the objectives of growth and lower interest rates, but cost cutting is also a very important element in sending a signal to the private sector that Canadians can understand. Canadians should expect that the government means business about controlling its spending and reducing the deficit. That signal has never come. The minister says that the Government of Canada will limit the growth in its spending below the growth in the economy. That is a cruel joke because government spending, two years running now, has been increasing 20 per cent per annum. But then the minister goes on and bleats about all the expenditures which are totally outside his control. He says he can do nothing about them because they are statutory or they are contractual. The minister has a point there, but those of us who have families and have to control our family expenses and those of us who have small businesses or large businesses and have to control our business expenses all have contractual expenses such as rent and interest. We also have to eat, but if our over-all spending increases faster than we can afford, we cut back.

Let us look at the basis on which the government would judge itself. Let us look just at discretionary programs, the programs I said we would have to cut, in terms of spending, by 10 per cent. What has happened? The amounts spent on those programs have increased at a rate 2.5 percentage points faster than the rate of growth in the economy this year. So much for what the government says is its prime yardstick for judging whether it is restraining itself. That restraint is just not there.

Hon. members may wonder why I have been so concerned about government spending. Let me put it in the most simple terms I can. Government spending leads to higher taxes, higher taxes lead to more spending, and so on. It is a vicious circle. Just to illustrate my point, let us look back at the 1980, 1981 and 1982 budgets. They are perfect textbook illustrations. The 1980 budget imposed higher taxes through energy taxes. We found out that tax revenues were expected to increase 31 per cent one year and 50 per cent over a two-year period. However, that higher tax revenue led to slackness in control of government spending. As I said a minute ago, we have seen that government spending increased 20 per cent one year and then 20 per cent the next year.

What happened in last November's budget? One does not need to be a genius to figure it out. The government came to the trough and said: "We have to increases taxes $1.4 billion," and it did so under the guise of tax reform. What do we have as a result of the increased spending in the June budget? We have a $1.3 billion increase in spending under the guise of deindexation.

The tragic part of this $2.7 billion increase in taxes is that we are in a serious recession. This is the first time we have had taxes increased by this magnitude in a recession since the 1930s. There is no economic theory which calls for increasing taxes in the middle of a serious recession. I do not believe the goals of Canadians to generate economic growth, to reduce unemployment and to preserve our economic freedoms are met by increasing taxes in a recession. We have to make a fresh start by reducing government spending if we are to get off this vicious circle and meet the objectives I am sure all Canadians have.

Let me make one other thing clear. I say in all seriousness that the job of the Minister of Finance is to protect the fiscal integrity of the Government of Canada and to manage the nation's finances in a prudent and proper way. The Minister of Finance has failed in relation to those objectives. He has failed in his responsibilities. Inflation is running at 11 per cent to 12 per cent per annum. The value of the Canadian dollar dropped from 87 cents at the time the minister took over his job to 77 cents and then around 76 cents a few weeks ago. It is now bubbling along at about 79 cents. The human toll of this 10.9 per cent unemployment rate, representing 1.3 million unemployed, says it all. It shows where the minister has failed. All of these figures represent a devastating condemnation of the minister's performance on the job.

Let us consider what might happen next year, Mr. Speaker. We have no projections. The Minister of Finance has said that he cannot give us projections because he does not know what is going to happen and he does not trust his figures. At the same time he has enough contempt for this Parliament to come here and ask us to authorize $11 billion more borrowing to carry over to the next fiscal year when he has not even given us projections for that fiscal year.

Some of us have done the calculations, Mr. Speaker. Some of us have some understanding of what the figures for next year might be. We believe that the Maclean's magazine figure of $22 billion is correct and it is for that reason that we are resisting the government's request for another $11 billion borrowing authority.

This uncertainty in the future is the cause for real concern in business in Canada. Business fears that the $22 billion deficit figure for next year will be low and that the pressures on the market, on interest rates, for financing businesses and households, rollovers on mortgages, new cars and other goods that need a bank loan, will be even greater. Confidence is bound to remain low if people do not trust the government's ability to see ahead into next year.

Canadians want to hear the truth today. They want to know how serious the outlook is in the minister's view. He must tell Canadians what that truth is. It may be his last chance to tell the truth, Mr. Speaker.

Most of all, Canadians want the government to live within its means and not to ask the rest of the country to make sacrifices. From the June 28 budget we see that the country is in a real bind. The government wants all Canadians to move to the 6 per cent world of recovery, but at the same time it wants to stay in its dream world of 20 per cent spending increases. While the rest of the country has to suffer with a 6 per cent increase, the government is going to increase its net debt by a full 18 per cent.

The Minister of Transport and others in the government have expressed some doubts about whether Canadians will move to the 6 per cent world. This is why Canadians are reluctant, Mr. Speaker, because they do not feel they are being treated fairly. They do not believe the government is committed to deal with the problems of the country. It is either that or the government does not have the intelligence or the confidence in Canadians to understand that they are not treating them equitably, with a fair hand. That is the problem we are facing today.

I want to comment briefly on the amendment moved by my leader yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre would accept a question before he goes on to his next point, or at the end of his speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Patterson): Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to defer the question until I finish my remarks. After that I would be prepared to accept a question.

The first amendment we offered was to decline second reading of this bill. There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year. It is quite clear from the figures in the bill and from the statement by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) in response to my question yesterday that the government has every intention of this borrowing authority spilling over into 1983-84.

This is all the more reprehensible because the government has not given us any projections about what will happen in 1983-84. If things are too uncertain for it to predict what is going to happen in 1983-84, then it is too uncertain for us to give it the carte blanche freedom to go on spending money like a drunken sailor. It is for that reason that we feel the government should withdraw this bill and offer something that will allow it to live within its means. This bill is clearly objectionable. I believe that amendment must be and will be supported by other members of the House.

The second part of the amendment put forward by my leader yesterday was to the effect that after this bill before us is withdrawn and replaced, we expect the government to reduce its borrowing requirement in view of what we have said about the level of increase in government spending. It is clear that the impact of this borrowing will lead to an increase in interest rates. Canadians do not need an increase in interest rates, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely essential that the government embark on a program to cut its spending to reduce its safety cushion, the margin for error, the slush fund of that $4 billion requested in this bill. It is for that reason that we believe that, together with a reduction of some $2 billion in cash balances, the borrowing authority can be cut back to $5 billion through these three steps.

It is also very clear that the budget was a short-term response to our immediate economic and political problems. It is not a long-term solution. It is not part of any long-term plan. I believe a long-term plan will have to be presented to the House some time in the fall. Perhaps the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) will give us an indication of that when he speaks.

At that time the government will give its projections for the next fiscal year and we hope it will get back to giving projections on a five-year plan as in previous budgets. At that time we should be asked to give the full borrowing authority that will carry the government through, based on those projections. In the meantime, the House should be asked only to provide borrowing authority until the end of November or possibly the end of December. The figure of $5 billion should be more than sufficient to meet those requirements.

The second amendment regarding future borrowing authority would provide greater protection for taxpayers. Currently there is no over-all limit on borrowings by Crown corporations and no limitation on the total amount of guarantees that the government can give out in loans under the enterprise development program, for Canadair or for financial rescue operations such as Chrysler and Massey-Ferguson. For most Crown corporations the only authority necessary is the approval of the Minister of Finance.

Let us consider the loophole in the borrowing authority, Mr. Speaker. Many of the large Crown corporations, such as the EDC, Petro-Canada, Eldorado or the Federal Business Development Bank, can borrow directly from the government or go to the public market. If the government falls short in its estimate of what the deficit will be, then the minister will be under pressure not to come back to the House but to push some of the Crown corporations into the open market and free borrowing room for the Government of Canada directly. Whatever happens, the net result is that the exposure of the taxpayer will be increased and Parliament will have lost control of the over-all borrowing by the government or of borrowing indirectly through Crown corporations.

Let us consider another possibility. Many companies are under severe financial pressure today. I discussed that matter earlier in my speech. Some of these will come to the government directly for help and some have done so already. We must have more control over this area, Mr. Speaker. The amendment asks for three things on this score: We want an over-all limitation on the amount of borrowing by Crown corporations—so-called off balance sheet borrowing; we want an over-all limitation on the total amount of government guarantees of loans; we want an annual report setting out in one place all the information on this type of financing which is supported by the government; or, to be more precise, which represents an indirect call on the resources of the taxpayer.

We do not know today what the total amount of Crown corporation borrowing is and we do not know what the over-all amount of government guarantees is. We feel that it is essential that taxpayers and voters have this information. We do not know either, in these hard times, how many government guarantees will be called on. We have had two examples in the last six or seven months, Massey-Ferguson and Consolidated Computer Corporation, involving an aggregate amount of around $350 million.

We are making these I believe very responsible requests because we believe this type of disclosure and control is necessary. I do not believe there is one taxpayer in the country who would not give us support. I call on members opposite to discuss these proposals with the Minister of Finance and encourage and pressure him to allow an amendment or, if not an amendment, a form of legislation which will provide this protection to the taxpayer.

I serve notice on members opposite and the three ministers present that this is not a frivolous request designed to waste the time of the House. It is a very serious and I believe very reasonable request for a much tighter degree of control over government financing. I also say to the ministers opposite that with that type of control they will be in a much stronger position to resist the pressures which are bound to be applied to them in the months and years ahead.

The evidence is very clear, Mr. Speaker; this government must reduce the borrowing requirement. It does not need all the money it has requested. The government has hidden from Members of Parliament the complete picture of its over-all requirements and it has made no attempt to control spending. The already severe liquidity crisis which all corporations are experiencing is being added to enormously by pressures from the increased government borrowing, and it is also increasing the unemployment problem in the country today. The crowding out of private sector borrowers and the increase in interest rates due to competition from the government is intense. Finally, the forecast increase in spending is bound to lead to higher taxes as we get more and more engrossed in that vicious circle I referred to earlier.

The government must give serious consideration to the alternative policies we have put forward to ease this liquidity crisis and the pressure on interest rates. The government must amend the bill to remove those loopholes which allow unlimited borrowing by Crown corporations and unlimited guarantees by the government. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I feel this bill must be opposed.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. member earlier if I could ask him a question. I am a little puzzled about one statement he made, that the Canadian deficit is about 65 per cent higher than the U.S. deficit on a per capita basis. I hope he is comparing the same years because, do not forget, the American fiscal year is October to September and ours is April to March.

What figures is the hon. member using? OECD uses a figure of about $150 billion; some of the figures coming out now in the U.S. show the deficit this year could be $125 billion, and up to $170 billion or $180 billion next year. The figures I get seem to indicate that the deficits of each country are very close to each other on a per capita basis.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the figures I am using were arrived at by a bi-partisan compromise in the United States Congress, which has been put to the President as the basis for a budget for the next fiscal year starting in October. That budget will develop a deficit of some $110 billion. If the hon. member wants me to use another figure, I could use the $22 billion deficit projected for next year by people within the Department of Finance, as was indicated to Maclean's magazine, and that would probably move it up to about 175 per cent.

Mr. McRae: You are using two different fiscal years there.

Mr. Wilson: The fiscal years cross. The fiscal year I am using started in March, 1982. If the hon. member wants me to use the one starting March, 1983, I am happy to do it, because then the figure is 175 per cent, not 165 per cent.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in view of some of the speeches we heard yesterday and today in this debate, I think it is important to remember that we are dealing with a borrowing bill, not with a budget and specifically not with the deficit. It is money that government needs to meet its commitments for pensions, family allowances and other programs which hon. members feel are important to the country. In due course I will be talking about why such a deficit exists at the present time, but the distinction must clearly be made between the excellent budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has presented and the question of the deficit, which results not only from what has happened to our economy but also what has happened to the economies of the United States and other countries of the free world.

Without question we are confronted today with a serious recession both here and in the U.S. Even in West Germany, a country which ever since its recovery after World War II has seemed to be immune to unemployment, the recession has brought a higher level of unemployment than has been experienced in North America.

Having said that we are dealing with a borrowing bill, I want to start by saying a word about the speech made in this debate by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) yesterday. He is a man for whom I have considerable respect, as I have said on a number of occasions, but he does have a habit or custom of falling into error and mishaps rather frequently and easily. If one were to read yesterday's Hansard and conclude that he is as accurate in everything he said as he was in the very first paragraph, then I think we will have to write off his remarks in relation to this bill rather quickly. If you do not mind, Mr. Speaker, I am going to go off on a sharp tangent and just read the opening paragraph of his speech yesterday. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I am a baseball fan—

So he qualifies himself as an expert right off the bat on that subject!

> —and I remember when the changes were brought into the American League; assuming that a Editor's note: The word "batter" appeared incorrectly in daily Hansard. See page 19452. batter was not quite up to being able to knock the ball out of the infield, they brought in a designated hitter. It is pretty clear that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) felt he was not able to come in and defend the atrocious $20 billion deficit and the demand for money which the government does not need and cannot justify . . . We do not have a designated hitter here. We have a designated apologist—

I imagine, Mr. Speaker, most members of the House, unlike the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, know exactly what a designated hitter is. What the Leader of the Opposition was talking about was a pinch hitter, a person sent in to replace a batter who is thought unable to hit the ball particularly well. The designated hitter rule is one which provides that the pitcher never comes to bat in the American league regardless of whether he is a particularly good or particularly bad hitter.

• (1630)

Perhaps the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition could be forgiven that he did not designate himself at the beginning as being a baseball fan and therefore somewhat knowledgeable. The hon. member from Quebec who is standing at the back would know the difference very clearly. But when I read what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said on the subject yesterday, I have to conclude that his understanding of the economy is the same as his understanding of baseball. The baseball judgment that would be made of him would be "Fair field; no hit." In other words, when he is in opposition, he is able to talk against things; but we have already seen when he has been in government that he had some problems coming through and doing the things that are so easily said can be done when in opposition.

Mr. Wilson: But we did it.

Mr. Regan: You sure did it.

Mr. Wilson: We cut spending right away.

Mr. Regan: The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) who has just spoken said they did it when they were in office. They did it in such style that after only eight months the electorate threw them back into opposition where they so justly deserve to be. Not only did the Tories achieve that, but they set a record of some sort. I do not know of any new government coming into office on such an auspicious occasion, when other people had been in for 16 years, that was disposed of in such short order.

How about contrasting that occasion with the last time the Conservatives were in power? When the Conservatives came to power in 1957 with a minority government, after being around for about eight months Mr. Diefenbaker called an election. The public said: "We may not agree with everything these people have done, but they deserve a chance to show what they can do as an alternative." The Conservatives were given an overwhelming majority. Does it not gnaw a little bit at the innards of the hon. member opposite? What a contrast that was to when the Tories came in under the leadership of the present Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. This time, after eight months in office, when the public was faced with the opportunity to give the Tories a full term and a full chance at a majority government, the reaction was very different from what it was in Mr. Diefenbaker's day. The public said "that is enough". They said "no more".

Mr. Wilson: What about a small wager? Your seat against mine in the next election?

Mr. Regan: The hon. member wants to wager my seat against his. He can make up his mind whether he would like to run against me in my riding or whether he wants me to run against him in his riding. I would win in either case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Hope springs eternal, 18-cent-a-gallon lover.

Mr. Regan: In his remarks today, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre seems to have ignored what has happened in relation to the budget of Canada, the United States and other countries since last fall. He would leave the impression that the size of this deficit flows from a tremendous increase in government spending. He would have us believe that the government spent a great deal more money than it had projected, and that is why the deficit is such a size. While he is saying that, he is not being totally honest with the people. It is a case of not having full disclosure. He knows as well as I do that the problem has been not just in Canada but in the United States and other areas which were hit by a recession last fall and which has unfortunately deepened since then. Governments have not been spending more money. The question has been a tremendous fall off in revenues. Fewer people and companies have been making profits and less money has been coming in through taxes. That is quite an unusual difference.

In saying that these are unusual times, I will say something further later on about the question of comparing what happened in Canada with what happened in the United States. But it is interesting to note immediately that in this question of decreased revenues, and therefore larger deficits, the same thing that happened in Canada under this government happened in the United States under a Conservative government; has happened in France under a socialist government; has happened in England under an arch right-wing government; and has happened in Germany under a social democratic government. Those are the facts that need to be remembered in these circumstances. In such times as a temporary decrease in revenues, whatever government is in office must either borrow more or simply fail to pay its bills, simply fail to pay the money transferred to the provinces for provincial programs or fail to pay the money transferred to people for people programs.

If the government does not receive this money—if this bill does not pass—and if the government does not borrow the money, does not borrow the necessary funds in such unusual times, it will mean provinces will not receive their transfer payments, pensioners will not receive their pensions and other worthy government programs will not be carried out.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, after being caught off first base on baseball yesterday, after being picked off there, went on to say that he would cut this borrowing bill by $5 billion. He did not say which programs of the government he would cut off.

Mr. Fulton: External affairs.

Mr. Regan: The Tories would cut external affairs.

Mr. La Salle: We would have $4 billion more.

Mr. Regan: The isolationist attitude would return. We would be putting our heads deep in the sand and we would have no relations with other countries. Therefore, as a trading nation we would not be able to carry out our trade to advantage and the standard of living in Canada would collapse.

So much for that idea of the Leader of the Opposition. He has not said what other programs he would cut. But do you know, Mr. Speaker, what I suspect he would do? I suspect that what the leader would do would be to cut the programs that would help the ordinary working people of this country, pensions and things like that. That is the way he allowed the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to talk before the public took away the chance and took the rug right out from under him, preventing him from doing what he would do in that regard. That is the way the Tories were talking. They were talking just like Reagan was talking in the United States, which was to cut back on the support for the disabled and the people who simply have a disadvantage in our society.

Mr. Althouse: But Reagan is your brother.

Mr. Regan: No, his name is Reagan. Mine is spelled differently, thank heaven! I must not be drawn aside by these comments from the other side, Mr. Speaker.

I want to say that the situation that we are in today with reference to borrowing more money in such times is something that people in business often experience. People in business often find themselves in similar circumstances. I am not talking about the salaried people, people who receive a pay cheque each week as employees. They always face a threat in hard times. They may lose their jobs or find themselves working only part-time, and that is a terrible threat. I am referring to people who are themselves in business. Those who operate any sort of business know that, if their income depends on sales, there are years and trends in business when they do not take in as much money as they need in order to pay themselves a salary and operate their business. In those circumstances, they have to borrow. As long as they have the credit and the resources behind them to justify the credit, businessmen weather economic downturns and their business continues and goes on to better days making good profits. That is a parallel to be drawn.

Hon. members opposite who have participated in this debate would have us believe that this is not an unusual year, that there is nothing extraordinary about the circumstances. They would not look across the fence at the United States or at the rest of the world to see that the problems we have are in common with other areas.

What about our situation? Is this government doing the right thing to allow such a deficit to exist when revenues have fallen off to this extent? Or is there some other reasonable alternative? I believe that the government is doing the right thing. It is not following the course of the arch-conservative government of the United States, but is following the course of maintaining important government programs of support to people rather than cutting them. I think most responsible groups in office would do the same. We will not interrupt worthy programs of support to people, but we must practise restraint. This is why the Minister of Finance came forth with a program which can lead us to a 6 per cent society and recognizes that in these times we must all sacrifice if we are to prosper thereafter. Also the program recognized that we must work together as a nation to ensure that the restraint does not rest heavily on the shoulders of any one group but, rather, that all share in the sacrifice.

I believe there are many expenditures which can and should be cut. This is the case not only in relation to this government but in relation to every government, whatever its political philosophy, of every large territory, province or country anywhere in the world. Also we will find that this is the case in normal times in very large companies. We find that the same duplications will sometimes occur in any large organization. As a minister of government I want to say I recognize in these times that it is the responsibility of all of us who have such assignments to be particularly vigilant in watching our departments and in finding where cuts can be made and money can be saved.

I do not have the exact figure, but we must remember that only about 20 per cent of total government expenditures relates to the operation of government, the employment of all people who work for government and all associated activities. The vast majority of the money handled by government, which makes up the budget and contributes to the deficit, is expenditures in transfers to people and in transfers to other levels of government. We are reluctant to cut these for the reasons I have indicated. We are in the position of having to borrow substantially more money than was anticipated last fall on the eve of this very serious recession.

We are not the only government in that position. We have a deficit which is favourably comparable on any basis to those of the United States, of Japan and of Germany, and indeed on the basis of our resources and our population, to many of our provinces. I have said elsewhere—and I ask hon. members to think about this fact—that when we examine how a government is doing, when we try to decide whether people who have responsibilities of management and administration are out of line in their practices and their policies or are doing reasonable jobs, it is a good test to look and see how our neighbours are doing. If I found that we were running up a much higher deficit than had been expected and that the United States, Japan and the European countries were reducing their deficits, then I would say that there was something wrong, that this government was doing something wrong. But that is not the circumstance in which we find ourselves today. Hon. members opposite conveniently ignore that fact when participating in this debate.

The deficits in Japan, the United States and Germany have greatly increased over what they anticipated. I think that is the first area of comfort, because while the deficit is much larger than I would like to see it, this can be attributed a great deal to international circumstances and therefore requires international remedies. The problem exists in other countries, regardless whether they have Conservative, socialist or Liberal-type governments. Whether a person, a company or a government borrows for capital purposes, the amount which can be advantageously or safely borrowed depends upon what is available by way of assets to the lender. If persons go to banks or credit unions, they want to look at their level of income, their assets, and their potential for using their assets to achieve a cash flow for the future.

I wish I had not said that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was kicked off first, because if he was it is hard for him to be also caught stealing second. What the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday on this subject was a case of his being caught stealing or trying to steal second base; heaven only knows how he got to first.

An hon. Member: He did not even get to first.

Mr. Regan: He stood and participated in this debate. He compared the Canadian and American government deficits on a per capita basis without knowing what the deficit would be. He made his comparison strictly on a per capita basis. He did not apply any other test in determining what is an appropriate comparison of the level of deficits between that of our country and that of the United States.

Mr. Gustafson: It is much higher here; it is ten times higher.

Mr. Regan: The hon. member opposite says that it is much higher here on a per capita basis. I should like to put a proposition to him. If he says, as did the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition with his rather shallow understanding of the economy, that it is safe to carry a deficit in unusual times based upon the population of the country divided into the deficit, there is no question that the two countries in the world which should be able to carry the biggest deficit would be Bangladesh and India. I do not believe the hon. member would have the temerity to suggest that India and Bangladesh, with their lack of resources, with largely uneducated and untrained work forces, with their other problems and very low levels of savings, could carry much larger deficits because they have larger populations than other countries. The per capita comparison of the Leader of the Opposition, the idea that the size of deficit a country can safely carry relates to the size of its population, is unmitigated nonsense.

Let me tell the House what matters. It is the same as a person going to a bank to obtain a loan. The bank wants to know the assets, the future potential and the level of security one can provide. The first thing in making a comparison between the situations in the United States and in Canada is that statistically the level of savings, as a percentage of the nominal gross national product in Canada, is today, and always has been, much higher than in the United States. Total savings in Canada today run far above those in the United States. For 1983 it is projected at 20.1 per cent in Canada and at 12.5 per cent in the United States.

Next it is a question of assets. Thank God we are fortunate enough to live in a country with incredible natural resources. Our natural resources are the assets which we have at the bank. We have natural resources which are the envy of the world. We are not a Bangladesh. We are not a poor country without resources. We are a country that is rich in natural resources. We are a country that is rich in human resources because we have a well educated and trained work force. Thanks to medicare, we have a fine health system in our country which is the best in the world. When Canada goes to the bank to borrow money it does so on the basis of being able to provide a good credit rating. That credit rating is not based just on the per capita comparison which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition made. I think he knows better than that, but sometimes when we are in opposition we attempt to put the best face we can on the case we have to make.

● (1650)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You will soon experience that.

Mr. Regan: Occasionally, even those in governments may do that. However, I firmly believe that we have a very sound case on these matters which we are comparing today.

I think it is unfortunate not to be frank about that case. If being fair is a problem in a recession, if establishing confidence is part of the future prosperity in our country, a future which I know hon. members opposite want our citizens to have as much as we do, let us then put the real facts forward to show that the size of this deficit is not something for Canadians to worry about when one considers the depth of the recession, and that it is not a case of increased government spending but almost entirely a case of reduce revenue of a temporary nature, when considering what is happening in relation to deficits of other countries and considering as well the level of savings.

In our present situation it is not necessary to make the kind of cuts that the Leader of the Opposition would have us make. Yes, we do need to find areas of restraint and areas where we can become more efficient. We must strive for this goal harder than we have in the past. We do not need to ride out the recession on the backs of the poor.

I compared our situation to that in other countries. We should also make a comparison with the provinces of Canada. Is it only at the federal level that the amount of money governments spend is increasing year by year? Unfortunately, both within Canada and internationally it has been a situation where the cost of governments meeting their statutory responsibility to provide public services has been increasing. Over the past 20 years—beyond the Diefenbaker days—every group that has been in opposition has pointed to the vast changes which have occurred in the level of a budget in the previous three or four years. Not only have budgets constantly gone up—largely due to inflation—for federal governments but they have for governments in all parts of the country, whatever their political complexion, as well as internationally. The Financial Times of July 5 indicates that provincial expenditures for 1982-83 will be up at least 14.1 per cent across the country and for some it will be a great deal more than that. I suggest that at the end of the year, judging from the deficits the provinces are running, it will be more than that. Many of these provinces are running substantial deficits and simply saying that Ottawa should give them more money.

I think that one of the most serious problems and one of the greatest areas of malaise in our country is the ability of the provincial governments to blame Ottawa for their own shortcomings. I am not just talking about blaming this government, which happens to be a Liberal government. The provinces did it in the days of Mr. Diefenbaker, they did it in Mr. Pearson's day and the provinces are blaming Ottawa today. This shifting of blame to the federal government for things that are provincial problems would continue even if the Conservatives came to government or the NDP came to government. After the honeymoon period they would blame Ottawa because it is a safe distance away.

I want to say that I think the provinces must practise restraint in the same manner as the federal government must practise restraint during these times. In order to make my point about growing budgets, I would like to use my own province of Nova Scotia as an example. When I ceased to be Premier of Nova Scotia in 1978, our total budget was $1,650 million. I remember that in the years preceding that the then leader of the opposition and present Premier of that province, Mr. Buchanan, continually railed about the growth of expenditures, as every opposition does. Yet today, three and one-half years later, their budget is now $2,709 million as compared to the $1,650 million. That is an increase in compounded annual growth rate of 13.2 per cent. In that little province their deficit is $387 million. This year they will receive $590 million in equalization from the Government of Canada, which is $85 million more than last year. But they scream that their problems are caused by Ottawa. They get away with this because most of the people accept it.

This applies to other provinces as well because of Ottawa's distance. I said that Nova Scotia had a $387 million deficit. I want to tell hon. members of the House speaking on this subject today that when I defend the necessity and safeness of a deficit at the federal level in the present situation, I do not do so from the background of having supported deficit financing. It is a matter of record that the government I led in Nova Scotia from 1970 to 1978 had a balanced budget on current account and funded sinking fund arrangements for capital borrowings in each and every one of those eight years. Since 1978, however, there has not been one balanced budget in Nova Scotia and as a result Nova Scotia had its credit rating cut back last week due to the Tory government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You should be Minister of Finance.

Mr. Regan: I believe that provinces, not having the monetary and fiscal tools available to a national government, should strive to balance their budgets except in extraordinary circumstances. I might point out that it is always easy to take that path of deficit financing. Indeed, I would like to think that if I had done that in Nova Scotia, against my best judgment, instead of being faced with the huge power rate increases in one year, I might still be in government there. But I am sure that the hon. member oppoisite would have missed me in that circumstance.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Dreadfully.

Mr. Regan: At the national level we should move toward balance, but not in a recession and not at the expense of vital programs. We must practise restraint and not make inflationary demands. Of course, that is what the restraint program is all about. The civil servants of this country, along with Members of Parliament and cabinet ministers, have been asked to lead the way in restraint for this country by restricting their increases to 6 per cent and 5 per cent over a two-year period. I believe that the contribution being asked of public servants should be recognized because they are being asked to make a very important contribution. I believe that is part of the responsibility of working with the government. There are certain securities and advantages that go with working with government, but I also believe by the same token that there are certain responsibilities.

If we can make this restraint program work, then everyone will benefit from it. It will work if all Canadians recognize the importance of restraint and try to ensure that no one group fails to sacrifice or attempts to take special advantage. If we could establish the attitude in Canada that it is unpatriotic for an individual or a group to take more than their share. I think we would be doing Canada a great service.

I sometimes think we are too partisan in Canada. In constantly knocking one another we end up knocking and hurting the greatest country on earth. It would be better if we could reserve our divisiveness for election time and let the voice of faction be more hushed when, as at present, it is important to the country that we all pull together to fight inflation. I know that all hon. members of the House, regardless of their party, are here with the intention of helping the country.

This debate has demonstrated different points of view. Last night there was a very good speech by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I thought it unfortunate that the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), in expressing his philosophy, had to add the old poison pen trash which has been circulated by the ultra right-wing for 15 years. Nevertheless, their speeches were interesting. They were a contrast, yet one could see a belief and certain virtues in both their positions. The hon. member for Simcoe South strongly said: "I do not want more government." We can have the feeling that government is sometimes too interventionist and that we wished things could be more simple. But having felt something in both of their positions, is perhaps why we Liberals are considered to be in the middle, in between, or having the virtues of both without the evils of either, if that is possible.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are in the middle of the road.

Mr. Regan: People are very easily marked down as being either right-wing or left-wing. However, I have found that most politicians have right-wing views on certain subjects and left-wing views on others. It reminds me of the time my young son heard a political discussion at home and came to me and asked; "Dad, how can anyone be very right-wing?" He was thinking in hockey terms. He asked; "Are you not either right-wing, centre or defence?"

Mr. Wilson: Gerry is a rover.

Mr. Regan: But I suppose we so quickly say that one is very right-wing or very left-wing without recognizing that one may have very different views on different subjects. I believe, as do most Liberals, that a pragmatic approach best serves the interests of our country. I find that economic circumstances force socialist France to follow similar policies to right-wing England in many ways, and that that comparison could also be made with many provinces across this country. By the same token, every government, Liberal, Tory, NDP and Social Credit, has experienced the same growth in the costs of meeting their responsibilities of public office. They all yell when in opposition and they are unable realistically to prevent an increase, year by year, in the level of budgets when they are in office. That, of course, is something that the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre should keep in mind.

We all need to work together to find ways to police waste. I think the opposition has an important role to play. I appreciate it every time an example of waste that occurs somewhere in the government is brought to the attention of ministers, because that not only helps to spot where improvements can be made, but also helps to keep the ministers on their toes. The consultation process that is going on with labour and business in this country under the auspices of the Minister of Finance is very important. I hope that it becomes a very permanent part of our system. There are many other things we can do to improve the government and I hope that all efforts will be made in that direction.

While we deal with this bill and other important legislation, such as the restraint legislation which has gone to committee, the official opposition appears to be carrying on on the basis of a platooned vacation. There are too many cases of opposition members coming here, making one speech and then disappearing for two weeks.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Name them.

Mr. Regan: I could. I will tell the hon. member opposite that he is certainly not one of them.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh, thank you!

Mr. Regan: Mind you, he is not far from his constituency, either. There were only 55 hon. members of the official opposition here for the budget vote.

Some hon. Members: Name them!

Mr. Regan: That was not a good show. Today there were 57 here during the height of the question period, which is not too good.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They were in committee.

Mr. Regan: When they are here they have the same highly paid assistants and air conditioned offices as those government members, to which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was referring yesterday. It must be remembered by hon. members opposite, when considering ways to cut, that tremendous facilities are also provided to the opposition, and that should also be carefully taken into account when considering the question as to how restraint can be applied.

I have used a considerable amount of the time of the House. I want to say that I believe I have used it to greater advantage than the hon. member who just preceded me. I want to stress that what we have in the size of this deficit and in the need for borrowing authority is the automatic stabilizer system that the Minister of Finance spoke about in his budget. It is working as it should. When there is a recession, more spending should take place to alleviate hardship. Increased amounts reflect the downturn in the economy, not a relative increase in government expenditures.

The hard question for those who oppose the bill concerns what services should be abandoned. That question has not been answered.

Mr. Wilson: That is not the point.

Mr. Regan: They have not said where the cuts of the magnitude about which the Leader of the Opposition spoke can be achieved. The position of the government is that we ought to maintain services to people who need those services and carry on a restraint program aimed at lowering inflation and thus helping all Canadians. I hope that all hon. members will support the bill.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to follow the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) in this debate. As I listened to him extol the virtues of his administration in Nova Scotia, virtues which eventually drove him into federal politics, I was wondering whether or not he was preaching a call to become the minister of finance of the country when he told us that he was remembering the financial position of the government of Nova Scotia when he was Premier. That concerns me because from time to time I hear that they are about to shuffle the deckchairs on the deck of the Titanic. There will be a cabinet shuffle at some period and adding to the speculation, perhaps we will see the name of the Secretary of State on the list.

If in his speech the minister was arguing—and he was coming awfully close to it—that it is impossible to find areas in which legitimate cuts could be made, or an overview of spending could be undertaken, then I would beg to differ with him because there are decisions which have to be made by governments from time to time, some of them wise and some of them unwise; but they are there. That is one side of the equation.

I go back to the argument that he raised with respect to the necessity for revenue, which is a justification for this bill, the need for money. I put it to him and to the House, through Your Honour, that one of the problems which has caused us to suffer is that for over two years we have faced general government economic policies, augmented certainly by conditions elsewhere, but policies of the government which have succeeded immeasurably, beyond the wildest dreams of even enemies of the country, in driving investment out of Canada, in discouraging investment, in encouraging people not to invest or to build or to grow.

It is no accident that the unfortunate statistics in the rise of unemployment insurance payments go on and on and add to the fiscal burden. Government policies have caused that. Of course, there are areas in which a prudent government would not venture to begin with, let alone maintain itself in that position. Those decisions are pretty difficult ones but some of them could be made. I will give the minister an example of one which could be taken right now. It will save millions and millions of dollars of public money that would unnecessarily be committed to a program that, in terms of the efficiency of the delivery of services of the particular department, could mean great savings, if one could measure efficiency in the public sector. I have in mind the announcement made July 13, 1982, of the decentralization of the incomes security program by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin).

• (1710)

It is very interesting to note that in the decentralization program is the move of the existing large incomes security Ontario regional office located in Toronto to four places, Peterborough, Chatham and Timmins, with one part remaining in Toronto. Also the Canada Pension Plan operation for the processing of Ontario benefits will be dispersed from the national capital area to those same four regional offices, including Toronto. Also, the incomes security regional office for Nova Scotia, which is in Halifax, is going to be relocated to Sydney, Nova Scotia.

It is interesting that when that announcement is made there is no corresponding statement about what it is going to cost. I wager I am low when I suggest that that move involving moving expenses of families, the acquisition of land, the development of buildings and equipment, the purchase of equipment, etc, etc, ad nauseam, will cost $75 million. If it does not, I will apologize to this House. There is one suggestion.

When we were in office, we looked at the decentralization program. The hon. member says I am interested in it. Of course I am. I have always said that if it is rational to have bits and pieces of departments and agencies in the regions, that is an excuse for a regional development program. When I was minister of national revenue, in only one case did I not recommend against the decentralization program of a department, because it made sense to bring the components of that department out into the country. However, there were 19 others we looked at which we stopped. It would have involved millions and millions in government expenditures. Some finality had to be given. There was a demand upon the public purse which was not as great as it is today.

That the government should continue that program in the face of a $20 billion deficit borders on the immoral. If the minister wants to know where to begin a tremendous savings programs, that is the place. He asked for a beginning. There is one. It could save the country a great deal of money, not just in raw dollars but in terms of loss of efficiency.

Members of Parliament should ask their colleagues in cabinet to show them the cabinet documents that exist with respect to the advice from the public service as to the inefficacy in terms of administration and delivery of services as well by the decentralization program. If my friends opposite, on seeing those documents, believe that is the way to spend our money, I would suggest that their judgment is pretty far gone. My suggestion to the government is to stop that silliness. There are other priorities in the country that are much more important and there could be savings of a tremendous amount of public money.

There is a second area I want the government to look at. It is important that we look at some of the decisions made by certain agencies. I hope that members opposite understand the tremendous losses of CMHC and thereby the public of Canada with respect to some projects. I invite my friends opposite to look at this one. CMHC lost over $100 million on the 1981 property sales it made. It had a sizeable inventory of housing units acquired as a result of defaults and abandonments. It sold off a significant amount of property at far below the market value. As I said, the losses for 1980 are estimated at $100 million. The principal beneficiaries of those sales have not been the taxpayers of Canada. They have been the developers and housing speculators. I will give two examples.

In September, 1980, 1,130 CMHC housing units in the Outaouais area of west Quebec, valued at $45,000 per unit, were sold to a group of businessmen for $7,079 per unit. Consider whether it might have been more prudent to have kept those on inventory.

In early 1981, Steveston Enterprises of Vancouver paid $18,500 per unit for 42 London, Ontario townhouses with market values of $23,300 to $59,000. They paid $14,700 per unit for 50 Oshawa, Ontario, townhouses valued at $30,000 to $33,000 per unit. The average loss on the sale in London, Ontario, was $20,000 per unit. The average loss on the sale in Oshawa was $25,000 per unit. Think of it. CMHC did not have to sell those properties. However, as a result of making that so-called business decision there was that loss not only of the units into the hands of speculators but loss to the taxpayers of Canada. Somewhere in the $20 billion deficit must be shown those figures. I could go on. Some of the things that have happened are almost unbelievable.

Can you imagine the Canadian National Railways spending $64,244 to purchase advertising space to wish its competitor, CPR, a happy birthday? Can you imagine that kind of expenditure by a Crown corporation, a public agency? Can you imagine paying two chefs $110,000 in 1981 for cooking lessons? Bruno Gerussi and Madame Benoit were given six-week television contracts worth $110,000 to promote metric cooking.

I want members to imagine the thinking which goes into that kind of a decision. Just imagine it. Then we in this House are asked to approve of a bill authorizing the borrowing of an amount which the minister admits is far more than he needs. It is no wonder that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) moved the following amendment in the House yesterday:

—this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than that amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-125, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

What is implicit in that amendment by the Leader of the Opposition is whether this government, which has demonstrated year after year its failure internally to put some harness on expenses and on the letting of public contracts and to provide some judgment with respect to that matter, which is apparent to the Canadian public, ought to be trusted with more money than it absolutely needs.

The Secretary of State discussed what a banker would ask a person wishing to borrow money from his bank. A banker asks what assets a person has. Certainly the firm called Canada is rich in assets; no one will argue about that. That is in every high school essay that was ever written. It is also in every ministerial speech ever given. The banker would ask about the future potential prospects of the business enterprise called Canada. I would like to believe what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said. I have not seen much of it in the latter part of the twentieth century, but he said that the twentieth century belongs to Canada.

Most Canadians are beginning to think that the twentieth century belongs to our creditors, and that is one of the problems, but I would like to believe that in the long term there is a future because the people of Canada always have the ability to change the government. Then the banker would ask about security. No one would argue that Canada cannot provide security, but there is not a member of the House of Commons who does not know of a business which has had great assets, great potential and a great level of security but which, as a result of poor management, poor policies and bad investments, has gone down the drain.

The minister did not mention one other question that banker would ask the person coming in and looking for a line of credit: What about one's attitude? What is the attitude of the business enterprise called Canada and its board of directors toward proper management? I have some documents about bad management, and I have seen others, which would make the hair of the hon. member from Middlesex turn greyer than it is. I have mentioned some examples of bad management.

We are in a period of restraint which is so bad that the government is attacking the pensions of ordinary senior citizens and reducing indexation by 6 per cent. It is so bad that the government is going to breach the contract it made with federal public servants with respect to recognizing increases in the cost of living. In this situation can hon. members imagine that an agency of the government, the National Capital Commission, in November of 1981 decided to change the colour of its trucks from green, black and white to brown and beige—a matter of tremendous public importance!—at a cost of $1.4 million?

I am hearing from the senior citizens who were attacked by the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). They now feel a sense of insecurity because increases in their incomes are being limited to 6 per cent. They are asking who is trying to kid whom. What those people are paying for—and they know it—is year upon year of inefficiency and year upon year of wrongheadedness. They are now paying the piper for the tune called a long time ago, which was wrong. These people will remember. They remembered the "six-buck boys" when Walter Harris was minister of finance. That is all he could give for old age security. Pensioners today will remember the "six per cent boys and girls" when the next election is called, because this government has removed from the senior citizens of this country that sense of security which was very important to them and which, by the way, was one of the bottom lines of the great humanists in the Liberal Party of Canada.

There are other victims of the foolishness of the government, which asks other people to pay the price of its stupidity. The government asks this of people who are not protected and who no longer are in the work force. I want to put their case here today in the context of a bill in which this government asks for more money than it needs to finance the foolishness of the past. That is exactly what this bill requires. I think it is absolutely wrong, in the context of the waste and extravagance which has gone on, for the Minister of Finance to announce on budget night that the government will finally breach an agreement made many years ago with the federal public service of Canada. That agreement was with respect to the pensions of public servants. By agreement over a long period of time, those pensions were to reflect the cost of living. Public servants made contributions in relation to that agreement. The federal government also made contributions over the years pursuant to that contract.

I think what is happening now is wrong, and I want members of this House of Commons to consider what is happening. I refer particularly to members who represent public servants, including the Secretary of State. I refer also to members from the National Capital Commission area on both sides of the Ottawa River who represent public servants. I hope they are successful in ensuring that the bill—it has to be a bill—never sees the light of day, because it is wrong.

I want to put some things on the record because I want members of this House to understand how wrong it is. Not only are retired public servants to be subject to the reduced indexing of their old age security payments and of their income tax exemptions; they are, if the budget proposal is not withdrawn, to have payments out of the several superannuation accounts to which they and the government as their employer have contributed treated as though they were subject to appropriation at the whim of the government rather than administered in accordance with the terms established by Parliament and communicated to public servants before they retired. All of the government's indexing proposals, with the sole exception of the indexing of public service pensions, relate to the government's budgetary revenue and expenditure accounts. The limitation on the indexing of public servants' pensions, however, is the only proposal which will affect a trust or pension account held by the government for the benefit of a specified group of citizens. That was money committed by public servants through deductions for that indexing provision and money committed by the government, impressed with a trust. That is the way that should be regarded.

The understanding which retired public servants have of their pension entitlements in so far as indexing is concerned is summed up in a booklet from the Treasury Board entitled "Your Superannuation Plan, 1974 Edition," and I will quote from that as follows:

> There is no means test and all in receipt of pensions, whether former employees or their widows and dependants, benefit from the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act's provisions. In any year where there is an increase in the cost of living, pensions will be increased in an amount directly related to the increase in the Consumer Price Index, without limit. The percentage increase payable each January represents the increase of the average of the Consumer Price Index for the twelve-month period ending on the preceding September over that for the twelve-month period of the previous year.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) put it even more simply about a year ago when he said that the federal government remained dedicated to the principle that public service pensions are to be protected from inflation. But there goes the commitment of the government, blasted away by the budget of June 28.

On the basis of guarantees made over the years, pensioners planned their retirement and entered into all the commitments associated therewith. We believe that they had every reason to count that their expectations would be met. Even in the depression the government of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, while reducing salaries of public servants by 10 per cent and withholding all annual increases, held the existing pension arrangements in respect of retired employees inviolate.

Those who would cheer this proposal of the government ought to remember that it has been recognized for years that pension rights accumulated during the period of employment form part of the total compensation package earned by the employee. Time and time again the President of the Treasury Board has said that this is deferred wages, that it is earned income. Now, because it is short of funds, the government decides to breach an agreement.

I have talked to people who were involved in the early days of the negotiations and asked them what the attitude was at that time. Mr. Leslie Barnes, during the time he was President of PIPS and afterwards when he was executive director, was present during the negotiations when Arnold Heeney was involved in the public service. At that time the Public Service Employment Act was being amended. The staff associations wanted pensions to be a bargainable issue but Mr. Heeney, quite properly, pointed out that was a difficult thing to do because it was difficult to bargain certain things that were fixed by statute. A consensus was arrived at.

A gentleman's agreement was reached to the effect that, while pensions as such would not be bargainable, the right to them would be enshrined. That meant that any amendment to a pension scheme would be done by mutual consent, not unilaterally. This recent action was a unilateral move on the part of the government. Some people think that this is not such a terrible thing, that the public service will go to a 6 per cent pay increase and, as pensions reflect income, they will be increased as well. Any one who has thought about the matter knows that any amount lost to a public servant as a result of a change in indexing is lost forever. It will never be recovered. The contribution is really the premium for an insurance scheme. If inflation came down to zero and there was no indexing of pensions, the 1 per cent contribution of the public servant would continue to be paid and the 1 per cent contributed by the government would continue to be paid. The public servant would receive no benefit, yet his contribution would continue.

The government must think about what it intended. Unlike members of the active work force, pensioners have no way of recovering this loss in the future. They cannot bargain, so they must look to Parliament. They can look to the government, with despair, but they must look to Parliament to be fair and reasonable and keep agreements that have been made.

The typical public servant who retired on pension in the last financial year, after about 25 years' service, received a pension of about $8,000 per annum. If the government's proposals are implemented, that will reduce the real value of such a pension to about $7,200 for the rest of the pensioner's life. One third of all those who retired during the same period on pensions of $5,500 or less will suffer a permanent 10 per cent cut while the surviving spouse's meagre pension of about $2,000 will shrink in real terms to $1,800.

More than money is involved, Mr. Speaker; there is a question of morality. I suppose the government has a legal right to act fraudulently. Some people say that Parliament can turn a woman into a man and a man into a woman if it is necessary; if it cannot do that, it can come close to it. Parliament can do all kinds of things, some that are legal but also some that are immoral.

I believe this will be an immoral act, Mr. Speaker. I believe also that this particular aspect should be fought for what it is—a fraud on the thousands and thousands of people in the Public Service of Canada who made a contribution for that extra benefit, in good faith.

The President of the Treasury Board told me in the House and at the miscellaneous estimates committee that the government was going to deal with this question in the total consideration of pensions and that it did not intend to deal with it in isolation. Now it has dealt with it in isolation, Mr. Speaker. There is no way that any right thinking member of this House can support this kind of double dealing, shot in the dark, stab in the back approach to the employees of the government.

The people who are now asking serving public servants to accept a decrease in their income of 6 and 5 per cent know that they are to be involved in a two-year program. The government said so, if it can be believed. People are suspicious about other things but they know that. They also know that they belong to bargaining units which can bargain at the appropriate time. I believe that it is important that the government and its supporters consider the difference between its serving public servants and those who are retired.

The calls that I have received were not with respect to the 6 and 5 per cent, Mr. Speaker. People are not happy with that any more than I am happy with Bill C-124, but there is a latent anger in the public service about the pension system to which they have contributed and about which a solemn undertaking was given by the government of the day and repeated by successive governments. Public servants and their families know that throughout the years an abatement was reflected in salary negotiations because of a contribution made to the total compensation package paid to public servants, including the pension.

I ask the government to reconsider its position because I think this is important. If it needs any help I can supply it. I have here a letter from the wife of a retired public servant who lives on Evergreen Drive in the city of Nepean. This is what she writes to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen):

> I was shocked to hear in your Budget speech on Monday evening that you are putting a ceiling on indexing the public servants' superannuation for two years.
> I feel that this action would be a serious breach of contract with public service pensioners. Indexing pensions to inflation has already been paid for jointly by the employee and employer, by mutual agreement. To use these funds for other purposes would be dishonest in the extreme.
>
> I trust that you will reconsider this proposal.

● (1740)

Another retired public servant from Richmond, Ontario wrote to the Minister of Finance, and this is what he said:

> The general reason is that this government for the past several years has ignored economic issues, with the sole exception of the NEP, and is now up to its eyes in debt. Instead it has sloganeered on national unity, Constitution, bills of rights, Quebec separation etc. It hoped that the U.S. would recover from its recession and bring Canada up with it. Tough luck for us that it has not.
> The specific reason pensioners are to be penalized is because they are as a group weak, inarticulate and not politically active. They tend to be loyal and maybe a little old fashioned, and are now being punished for being so. Their votes can be bought just before the next election by raising the index a little. And they will be grateful.

The letter concludes this way:

> Further, pensioners do not have a Chamber of Commerce, a John Bulloch or a professional association to speak for them. It is significant that the only pensioners who have not been caused to take a pension loss are the veterans, who have the Canadian Legion to defend their interest.

Referring to the Minister of Finance it says:

> You know as well as I that inflation will be closer to 20 per cent than 6 per cent in the next year. Meanwhile, pensioners will still have to pay proportionately more of their income to dentists ($68 for a ½ hour) and extra billing surgeons ($220 for a ¾ hour) than the general population, in addition to basic necessities. And that on a lower income and higher taxes.

In conclusion, referring to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), he says:

> Mr. Taylor was correct when he said the government's actions were "legally right but not morally right".

I ask every member of the House to consider that particular position. Mr. Speaker, members ask where we can save money. Everyone knows where we can save money. The work of the committee dealing with parliamentary reform is to provide within this Parliament ways in which members can appropriately scrutinize government programs. It is not there to tear out the guts of programs necessary for the people of Canada, but surely there is no one in the House, given the litany I just began to recite, because it goes on for page after page of examples of foolishness, stupidity and extravagance, who could ever trust this government with the extra money over and above what the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) says is needed. Therefore, I support the motion of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I do not believe any right thinking member of this House could do anything but say to this government: get your own act together, look after your own people properly, and do not blame your foolishness on others. Do not ask of Canadians that which you do not need, and do not do to Canadians what you promised you would not do.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-125, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise today to participate in the debate on Bill C-125, the supplementary borrowing authority, 1982-83, with which once again the government has to come before Parliament—this time rather unexpectedly—to ask for authority to borrow such a vast amount of money to see us through the remainder of this particular fiscal year and well into the next. I have had the opportunity to participate in a number of these debates in this, the Thirty-second Parliament, and I remember that in its first borrowing authority bill the government asked permission to borrow $12 billion. A number of months later a second request to borrow $14 billion came along, and then just a few weeks ago the government again came to Parliament feeling that it needed $6.6 billion. That request received Royal Assent on June 17, 1982, and four weeks later the government is back asking permission to borrow $11 billion to see us through the remainder of the year. In one session, so far, the government has asked to borrow $43.6 billion. What has been the result? Presumably that money has resulted in a variety of government programs serving the people of Canada well, providing opportunities for Canadians to be productive, and meet their obligations to their friends, families and the economy generally. However, when we review the facts, we find that quite a different picture emerges.

I do not have to remind members of the House that today we are experiencing in Canada an unemployment situation which has not been duplicated since the hungry thirties. Nearly two million Canadians find themselves in a state of forced idleness. People who normally have led productive lives and contributed to the development of the Canadian economy all their lives, now find themselves for the first time in a situation where they are no longer able to provide as they would like for themselves, their families and their country. We are experiencing a situation in which the Auditor General himself, Kenneth Dye, is quoted as saying, "The country is close to being on its economic knees." That is the Auditor General of Canada, a man responsible for overseeing the fiscal affairs of government and a man who presumably has to inform Canadians as to how well the government is doing. This man, who is in a very serious position and knows full well that his words are going to be considered very seriously by every Canadian, says that the country is close to being on its economic knees. The former auditor general, Mr. James Macdonell, made a similar comment recently when he said, "We are going down the bloody drain if we don't do something about it." He actually said that, the former auditor general of this country, that we are going down the bloody drain. I suppose that means one thing to one person and something quite different to another. Being "on its economic knees" might be interpreted in different ways by different people, but one thing that everyone agrees on is that our economy is in an economic crisis. It would not be difficult to add that it is in a social crisis as well.

Earlier today one of my colleagues raised in the House the matter of a social phenomenon which is taking on unprecedented dimensions, that of violence to women in our society.

While one might have difficulty in making the direct connection between that and our economic crisis, one would have no difficulty in recognizing some relationship between those two phenomena. Of course, we could add to that the rising incidence of child abuse, wife battering, drug and alcohol abuse, and a long litany of other social problems which indeed have a very direct relationship to our economic recession, or depression as more and more people are calling it.

• (1750)

The $43.6 billion which the government has asked this Parliament to provide for its economic mismanagement has resulted not only in two million people being unemployed or in a state of forced idleness but also in the economy being generally on the ropes. It has resulted also in such things as a 60 per cent increase in farm bankruptcies in the first six months of this year compared to the first six months of last year, and last year was bad enough.

Mr. Miller: Last year was terrible.

Mr. Riis: Last year was terrible, as my colleague has just indicated. Last year was a very bad year for those in the food producing industries. Business bankruptcies generally are up 37 per cent in the first six months of 1982 compared with the same period in 1981. That is only the tip of the iceberg, Mr. Speaker. When we speak of business bankruptcies, we do not mention the receivership proceedings that are in place. It is estimated that between three and five times the number of bankruptcies occur in the receivership form. Of course, that does not touch those thousands of small businesses and medium-sized businesses that are simply closing their doors nor their owners who are walking away from their hopes and their dreams. By the end of this year, I suspect that if the figures could be obtained, we would find that in excess of 20,000 businesses have folded as a result of the economic crisis which this government has perpetuated. Indeed, I think we have to recognize that there is an unholy alliance between the Progressive Conservative and the Liberal parties of Canada. When one considers that we are dealing with the federal government, one must note that we are also dealing with the mismanagement that has happened in a variety of provincial jurisdictions. It is not surprising that those provincial jurisdictions are almost exclusively Tory in terms of their leadership.

The situation with respect to the economic capacity of this country at the moment is very serious. We have a 69 per cent operating capacity in our manufacturing productive sector, which is resulting in shutdowns, cutbacks, freezes, lay-offs, threats of lay-off and threats of closure. When you walk through the shops of Canada, you find they are largely empty. People do not have the purchasing power that they had. Those who are fortunate to have jobs today or those who have a few dollars in their savings account are not going to risk spending that money with the uncertainty that prevails across this fine land today. With no one buying goods or services, the government came in with a new budget in June saying, "We have an answer. The reason our factories are not at full capacity and our shops are not producing as they should is that people are not buying the goods and services as they did in the past." The government told us it had the answer. The government said, "We are going to raise taxes across the board." But that measure will take more of the purchasing power out of the hands of Canadians. The government said, "Listen, we want to focus in on certain groups. The senior citizens are a good group. Let us reduce the benefits going to senior citizens. That will help the economy surely." Then the government looked at increasing energy costs. The government's increasing the costs of energy will improve the situation. The government said, "We will jack up the energy costs this year by 20 per cent and by 31 per cent next year." The government said that it will keep interest rates high so that no one will be encouraged to expand his plant, factory, shop or build a home.

Mr. Fulton: Eighteen cents a gallon turned out to be a buck.

Mr. Riis: Those are the kinds of solutions, if you can believe it, Mr. Speaker, that this government has brought to Canadians, saying, "Here is the way to get out of our economic recession or the beginning of a serious depression." What a way, raising taxes, hitting senior citizens, jacking up interest rates and energy costs. That logic escapes me.

Mr. Deans: That logic is illogical.

Mr. Riis: As my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain suggests, rather than logic there is a certain amount of illogic involved in the suggestion that this is the way to get us out of our economic malaise.

It is the human suffering, the human tragedy, the pessimism, the gloom and doom, and the down and out syndrome that prevails now in all parts of Canada as a result of improper policies having been introduced by this government in difficult times. That is the real price this country is paying today. People have lost faith and they have lost trust in this government.

Let us look at a few facts, Mr. Speaker. Often when government members stand up in their places and present us with the picture as they see it, it is easy to manufacture facts. It is easy to manufacture statistics or slant statistics in a certain way or to create a certain impression by leaving out certain numbers in a statistical review. Let us be very straightforward and let us keep the numbers to a minimum.

Let us review what has happened in the last little while. Canada's accumulated debt is now over $108 billion. That, in more personal terms, is $4,400 for every man, woman and child in the country, or over $10,000 for every person who is lucky enough to be employed in this country today. That debt will cost Canadians $17.7 billion to service this year. That is over 25 per cent of the projected revenues for this year, from 22 per cent last year and from 19 per cent the year before. Thirty years ago it was only 9.7 per cent. This government is putting us further and further into an economic mess.

The government's expenses rose by $400 million due to increases in the cost of UIC alone. However, the burden on taxpayers is much greater. Premiums on employees and employers account for 80 per cent of UIC financing. With high unemployment UIC will accumulate a deficit of at least $2.2 billion this year. This means premiums for UIC will have to be raised this fall between 50 per cent and 100 per cent. That is the kind of program which this government appears to be interested in perpetuating, that of a deficit and, of all things, in the unemployment insurance fund.

One could go on and on. Projects for income from corporate taxes have fallen from $2.75 billion in the November to June period. The revenue expected from federal sales taxes has fallen $820 million in the last seven months because the economy has slowed down to such an extent. What makes matters worse is that the imaginative program of the 6 per cent world, to which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) refers repeatedly and the fact that he feels the solution to our problems is to restrict wages and salaries to federal employees, will take $500 million per year out of the economy of the national capital alone. What does that say to the small business people in the national capital of Canada, that $900 million will be taken out annually from their pockets as a result of this decision of the government?

Quite simply, with so many people out of work and so many businesses failing, tax revenue obviously will not be as high as was expected even six months ago. There will be $595 million less in personal income taxes coming in for 1982-1983 than was projected back in November. This will be in spite of the fact that personal taxes will be increased by $160 million in 1982 because of the deindexation provision introduced in the last budget.

In seven months the projected revenues for 1982-1983 fell $6.4 billion while expenditures increased $2.6 billion. That is the kind of tragic situation in which Canadians find themselves today.

May I call it six o'clock and return after the dinner hour, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) had the floor.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, earlier today a number of members referred to the Minister of Finance as a baseball player, to their experiences in baseball, to the fact that he had been up once and struck out, up twice and struck out, up three times and should be out of the ball game, and so on. Upon reflection, although I played ball in my youth, I think a more appropriate game would be hockey. I remember watching a hockey game last winter. I will not mention the teams because what I am about to describe is something of which I am not particularly proud. Half way through the hockey game, one player who was particularly rambunctious found himself encouraged to jump up into the stands and start beating someone over the head with his hockey stick. It was a fan who had aggravated him. Eventually the player was thrown out of the game. I suspect that that probably describes the Minister of Finance more aptly than a baseball player. He is up today with his hockey stick bashing Canadians over the head and is about to be pulled out of the game, if Canadians had an opportunity to make that decision today via a federal election.

Today we are debating Bill C-125, a bill to give the government the authority to borrow $11 billion. It must be seen in a certain context. When the Thirty-second Parliament first began, the government eventually came to Parliament asking for permission to borrow $12 billion. At that time many difficult questions were asked about how the money would be spent and so on, and hesitantly approval was eventually received. A few months later the government said that it needed another $14 billion to continue on because it was a little short; its revenues were not as much as its spending. The government needed authority to borrow another $14 billion. Then a little later it came before us again and asked permission to borrow $6.6 billion. That $6.6 billion request just received royal assent on June 17. Today, virtually four weeks later, the government has the audacity to come before Parliament and say, "Listen, we have erred in our judgment. Things have not gone quite as we expected. We are not asking for $6.6 billion this time. We are asking for $11 billion". It is asking for $11 billion only four weeks after the last request. If that does not describe a government which is out of control, if that does not support the Auditor General's claim that the economy is on its knees or the previous auditor general's comments that we are going down the tubes, I do not know what does. The government has had to come to Parliament to seek authority to borrow $43.6 billion because of its misjudgment and mismanagement of the economy. It is a sad state of affairs in the wealthiest country in the world.

If positive things had occurred as a result of this borrowing, that would have been one thing. I do not think that we can consider a 60 per cent increase in farm bankruptcies in the first six months of this year as any kind of positive program. I do not think we can consider the 37 per cent increase in business bankruptcies as any kind of positive program. I think we should be ashamed when we learn that plant capacity in the country is operating at 69 per cent of its capacity. That means there is a 30 per cent idleness in the factories of Canada.

Mr. Fulton: It is the same level of idleness as in cabinet.

Mr. Riis: I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is wrong. I think it is a lot higher than that.

In the last number of days we have been presented with a debt which requires servicing of $17.7 billion. That accounts for 25 per cent of all projected revenues of the government. It is a clear indication of the sickly financial position of the Government of Canada. Our net debt is up 18 per cent. We must remember that this is a 6 per cent world. Hon. members on the government benches, hour after hour, are saying, "6 per cent, 6 per cent". We notice that the net debt is up 18 per cent and that debt servicing is up to 22 per cent of total federal expenditures. Where is this 6 per cent world? Only when it serves their purposes do we have a 6 per cent world. But that is not the worst of it. We are being asked tonight to authorize the borrowing of $11 billion. We ask hon. members opposite whether they require $11 billion. The chorus ought to be, "No, we do not; $4 billion of that we do not need right now but we would like to have it just in case".

Mr. Fulton: The minister admitted it.

Mr. Riis: That is right. The minister stood in the House a few hours ago and said that they do not really need $4 billion of the $11 billion at this point but that they would like to have a slush fund or a contingency fund. Can one imagine borrowing $4 billion one does not have to borrow at the interest rates of today? Mr. Speaker, can you imagine what would happen if a small business person, farmer or consumer walked into a bank, credit union, caisse populaire or trust company and said, "I want to borrow some money but I want to add an extra 35 per cent in case I need it some time in the future"? Can you imagine what the financier would say to such a person?

Mr. Fulton: He would probably be a Liberal.

Mr. Fisher: He would ask whether you could pay for it.

Mr. Riis: That is right. Hon. members opposite say that they can pay for this. They believe in fairies. They believe in unicorns as well if they think they can repay this. They are here today on bended knee asking to borrow an extra $11 billion, four weeks after their last request received royal assent. It is unbelievable. Also we hear them refer to the world economy and that we must compete. They indicate that we exist in the world and that Canada is like every other country.

I should like to refer to a few figures. Of course, inflation is a critical factor in understanding the economy of Canada and its health. Let us compare our inflation rate with the inflation rates of some of our major trading partners. I do not want to bore hon. members opposite, but I would like to share with them some facts about our inflation rate and their inflation rates. In the United States of America the inflation rate today is 6.7 per cent; in the United Kingdom it is 9.5 per cent; in West Germany, 5.3 per cent; in Japan, 2.3 per cent; in Switzerland, 5.9 per cent; and in the Netherlands, 6.4 per cent. Do you know what ours is Mr. Speaker? Members opposite were ecstatic today about the fact that our level of inflation moved down to 11.2 per cent on a seasonally adjusted year to year basis. We do not compare ourselves at all with any of our major trading partners. If we wanted, we could now relate that figure to the interest rates in those countries. It is not surprising to find that the lowest interest rates occur in those countries with the lowest rates of inflation. Is that not a coincidence?

• (2010)

Mr. Fulton: Except for the United States.

Mr. Riis: As my colleague says, except for the United States which has a monetary policy designed to strangle the life out of the economy and to stop growth. That is the purpose of MacEachenomics as well. He wants to strangle the life and growth out of our economy. He has done this magnificently because there is no life left in the Canadian economy.

The government also says that we cannot have high wages in this country because we must compete with other countries, especially our trading partners. Presumably the assumption is that our wages are much higher. They must be much higher if the government is concerned about reducing them in order to be competitive.

Let us look at the facts. Let us discuss manufacturing wage rates. The manufacturing sector is a critical part of our economy in which labour intensive productivity must be built. How do these figures compare with the countries I have mentioned? For example, the hourly wage rate in Belgian, which is a major trading partner of Canada, is $13.18. In Sweden, the average manufacturing rate per hour is $12.60. It is $12.18 in the Netherlands, and in West Germany it is $11.94. The rate in the United States is $9.92. In France it is $9.46. In Canada it is $9.06. We have a lower hourly manufacturing wage rate than France, the United States, West Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and all the other countries I mentioned.

Let us examine the increases in those wages. Since 1975 the manufacturing wages in West Germany have increased by 91 per cent. Since 1975 in the United States, the manufacturing wages there have increased by 56 per cent. For the same period in Canada they did not increase 91 per cent or 56 per cent as did the manufacturing wages of our two major trading partners; they increased by 46 per cent. These are the facts which speak for themselves.

Mr. Crosby: Whose facts are they?

Mr. Riis: They were put out by Statistics Canada.

When hon. members opposite say that they want wages decreased in order to compete internationally, who is it they want to compete with? Do they want to compete with Taiwan, the Philippines, Brazil or Equador? If that is what they want, then our effective wage rates must be $1 an hour in order to be competitive with those countries. Surely the government does not advocate lowering our wage rates so we can compete on an equitable basis with Bangladesh and India. Those facts speak for themselves.

While I do not want to bore the House with too many figures, I would like to set forth another set of statistics. These figures concern the value of the Canadian dollar between June of 1970 and June of 1982. I would compare our dollar with the currencies in a number of other countries. This is a comparison of our dollar over the 12-year period with the currencies of other countries with which we are closely involved. These figures are based on an indice of 100. In 1975, the United States dollar has increased very slightly. The Japanese yen is up significantly. The German Deutsche mark has risen significantly. The Swiss franc is up significantly. The Dutch guilder is up significantly and the Belgian franc is also up significantly. However, the Canadian dollar has dropped from $1.06 on an index of 100 to 85 cents on that same ratio. There has been a drop in the value of the Canadian dollar relative to these other countries. That is an indication of the health of our economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: There is a lot of yelling from across the way. If I were part of that disastrous group I would be yelling at the statistics also. But they speak for themselves.

I recall that the day after the budget, when presumably the confidence of this country was lifted and the situation improved, was the day the dollar dropped to 76.8 cents U.S. That was the day after the budget. I also remember that the stockmarket plummeted as well. It is a sad day for Canada.

Those members opposite are not the only ones to blame. We must be fair.

Mr. Fulton: Blame the Tories as well.

An hon. Member: Who put the Liberals in there?

Mr. Riis: The hon. member in the Progressive Conservative Party beside me asks who put them in there? I must say that we provided the opportunity for the people of Canada to speak. It is a free and democratic country where Canadians have the opportunity to decide whom they want to govern. If we had the opportunity, we would do it tonight as well. The people of Canada decided that they did not want the Conservatives to lead the country, and they thought that the Liberals had the answers. Let us hope there is an opportunity for Canadians to decide once again.

Mr. Gustafson: Are you going to support the Liberals this time?

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend in the Progressive Conservatives asks if we would support the Liberals. I would remind him of the voting record of the House. It is the voting record which counts, not the rhetoric that we hear down there on a continuous basis. How many times have the Progressive Conservatives supported and voted with the government?

Mr. Fulton: Thirty-four times.

Mr. Riis: They have voted with them 34 times. Let us put that into context. How many times have the New Democrats votes to support this government? Nineteen times, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives has supported this government 34 times.

Just the other night I recall the debate as to whether we should restrict the wages of public employees and use them as the scapegoat or someone to blame. Who supported the government? The Progressive Conservatives stood up hour after hour to criticize the bill but they voted for it anyway.

It is a sad day, Mr. Speaker, and the people of Canada are sick and tired of the rhetoric they are hearing from the Progressive Conservatives because they know who Tweedledee and Tweedledum really are.

As I said, I do not want to blame the Liberals for all the difficulties facing Canada today. The provinces have to carry some of these responsibilities as well. This is evident when one looks at the budgets of the various provincial governments for which an interesting set of figures emerge. Every provincial government has had a deficit except one. Let us review these figures. The budget deficit for Alberta this past year was $2.5 billion. The deficit in British Columbia was $359 million. In Manitoba it was $334 million. In New Brunswick it was $422 million. In Newfoundland it was $168 million. For Nova Scotia, it was $375 million and in Ontario the deficit was $2.23 billion. In Prince Edward Island the deficit was $33 million. What is interesting about these statistics is that I have virtually described the financial affairs of all the Tory premiers in this country. While every Tory government has had a major deficit, the one province that has not had a deficit for many years—a fact which my Progressive Conservative friends from the prairies will know—is the socialist province of Saskatchewan which has had balanced books year after year. Is it not interesting how that one province alone seems to have the desire to balance its books and the capability of achieving it?

Mr. Fulton: Devine will wreck that.

Mr. Riis: My colleague says that Premier Devine will wreck that. I was interested to read Mr. Devine's recent statement that, "It looks as though we could be looking at a deficit of $200 to $300 million this year." That is the first year of Progressive Conservative operation in the province of Saskatchewan, and for the first time in many, many years, there will be a deficit. Surely that tells us something. Oh, but then they say that there must be many civil servants in Saskatchewan, that if it is a socialist government, the civil service must be very large.

• (2020)

It is interesting to look at the percentage of public employees in the work force. In Nova Scotia, it is 2.3 per cent under a Tory government. In New Brunswick, it is 3.7 per cent under a Tory government. In Alberta, 2.6 per cent of the work force is comprised of public employees under a Tory government. But in Saskatchewan, which has been under a socialist government for decades and decades, it is only 1.9 per cent. On a per capita basis, it is the lowest percentage in Canada.

There has been much rhetoric shared around these areas during the last little while. I listened carefully to the Tories telling us what they would do under these circumstances. Their previous finance critic, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), made it very clear when he said, "Listen, if I were to tell you what we would do if we were in government, we would never be elected." He is a very honest man. He said that the Progressive Conservatives would never be elected if the people of this country knew what to do. I do not blame him, then, for keeping quiet about it. I suppose that if that is the kind of policy that we can expect, again we do not want to hold our breath waiting for the Progressive Conservatives to act.

Mr. Gustafson: Elect an NDP government and see the dollar fall.

Mr. Riis: It is a surprising day for me as a new Member of Parliament, just a small boy from western Canada—

Mr. Young: Oh, you are doing well, though.

Mr. Riis: —listening to hon. member after hon. member speaking for the Conservative Party, saying they are against the 6 per cent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: When the hon. member said he was a new boy from western Canada, that was the first point with which I agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is not making a point of order.

Mr. Riis: It is that kind of brilliance, Mr. Speaker, that—anyway, I will not pursue it.

Mr. Young: For a Tory, he made a good speech.

Some hon. Members: A typical Tory.

Mr. Riis: I want to make one further comment about my friends to the right. I do not like to pick on them, because it is so easy. But the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) in his speech, which was a good speech, went on at some length about the problems of Crown corporations and how the government had moved too much into this one area. It was interesting, because while I was listening to his speech, I happened to be reading the Alberta Report of July 5, 1982.

Mr. Fulton: A Socialist publication.

Mr. Riis: The Alberta Report went on to explain what is happening in that Tory bastion of Canada, namely, the government of Peter Lougheed. It stated:

—the oil industry was ... surprised last month by the news that the ... provincially owned Alberta Energy Company Ltd. (AEC) was seeking a majority interest in Edmonton-based Chieftain Development Co. Ltd.

So I read further and I was interested to find out that this Crown corporation in the Province of Alberta, which is held up by all MLAs in that province, stated that this is the Alberta Energy Corporation's empire, which includes only certain things, such as 28 per cent of British Columbia forest products, 100 per cent of Blue Ridge complex, 100 per cent of Suffield oil and gas and 100 per cent of Primrose oil and gas. It also includes a 10 per cent investment in Syncrude, a 30 per cent investment in Western Basin oil and gas, 67 per cent of AEC Power Ltd., 50 per cent of Steel Alberta, 25 per cent of the Coal Valley project, 100 per cent of the Alberta Oil Sands Pipeline, 100 per cent of the Ethane Gathering System, 100 per cent of the Cold Lake Bitumen Pipeline, 50 per cent of Pan Alberta Gas Ltd, 50 per cent of Zimpro-AEC Ltd, which is involved in heavy oil extraction, and 100 per cent of Petalta, which is involved in the petro-chemical industry. But I guess that was not enough, because the corporation felt that it must expand and it went on and bought Chieftain Development Co., 100 per cent ownership of Tri-City Drilling, 100 per cent of Chieftain International, 100 per cent of Armstrong Drilling, 100 per cent of Hartfield Chieftain Leasing Ltd, 100 per cent of Chieftain Explorations, and 100 per cent of Chieftain Minerals, plus a little bit of the action in Texas, North Dakota, the North Sea, the Arabian Gulf and western Australia.

Mr. Fulton: What kind of government is that?

Mr. Riis: That is the Progressive Conservative government in Alberta. So I hope that when my colleagues to the right rail and rant about the role of Crown corporations in the country, they will remind themselves of the fact that their colleagues in Ontario and especially their colleagues in Alberta are into this business very deeply indeed. That is just a calm reminder.

I want to end by saying that there are two ways to eliminate a deficit. One is by abolishing the Defence Department, by stopping family allowances, by cancelling all spending on the environment, industry, trade, commerce, labour, agriculture and DREE, and also by removing all the support for the CBC, the National Research Council, the RCMP and prisons. Of course, that would still leave it a little bit short, so the government would have to cut out the old age pensions by about 30 per cent. That is one way of reducing the deficit. Another way, just as a round-up, is by raising taxes. We could, for example, eliminate the deficit by nearly doubling everyone's personal income tax. But we in this party feel that there is another way to reduce the deficit. That way is to stimulate the economy to get growth going again in the country, so that revenues start to flow into the government and so we can start taking care of the debt. That is our proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this House for a little over eight years, and I am used to the show of rhetoric displayed by members of the New Democratic Party. Our friends on the left of the Canadian political spectrum are usually very fond of demanding more elaborate social programs, and they obviously tend to favour a more expansionary budget policy. To them, budgetary deficits are not a problem but a routine instrument of the government's economic policies. That is why I was quite astonished when I saw the position being taken by that party on Bill C-125, legislation that will provide the government with borrowing authority for $11 billion. I am particularly surprised, Mr. Speaker, since, as the House is well aware, the New Democratic Party has already shown its true colours with respect to Bill C-124, pursuant to which wage increases in the federal public sector will be limited to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. The effect of this policy will be to allow the government to save some $800 million over the next two years. That is why I have some doubts as to the logic of the position taken by the New Democratic Party on Bill C-125 since, if, as they claim, a budget deficit of nearly $20 billion is too high, I am surprised they should take a position that would have the effect of adding another $800 million to the deficit.

As for the official opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party, as usual, it is convinced that by repeating over and over again that the budget deficit is too high and is causing inflation, it will be making a useful contribution to the debate in the House and towards solving our country's economic problems. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether our friends in the New Democratic Party or in the official opposition have any constructive ideas and any sound and well thought out alternatives.

Only yesterday, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) wanted to set a ceiling of $5 billion on the government's borrowing authority under Bill C-125. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection at all, but I would have appreciated it if the Leader of the Official Opposition had used his speaking time in the House to explain which budget items he would cut to manage a reduction of $6 billion in the government's total budget. He should have told the House which taxes would have to be raised and which expenditures would have to be cut. With the exception of some vague references to the National Energy Program and hospitality-related expenditures by senior officials, he mentioned the purchase of briefcases for public servants and finally said that if these budget items were eliminated completely, it would be possible to save about $25 million. Well, that is not going to do much for a $78 billion budget. Predictably, he quickly got on to his favorite subject, namely, the privatization of Crown corporations, and I hope the Leader of the Opposition will recall the reaction he got from Canadians on February 18, 1980, after he started toying with the idea of eliminating a number of Crown corporations which had served our country well for some twenty or thirty years.

Mr. Speaker, there are only so many ways to reduce a budget deficit. In fact there are three ways: increase taxes or reduce expenditures or a combination of the two. So the first question is: Is the Official Opposition in favour of higher taxes? No, of course not. In fact, they are just slavish imitators of the Reaganomists in the U.S., and like them, they tend to favour tax cuts. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that, since the budget was brought down on June 28, they condemned the 6 per cent ceiling on the indexation of personal tax exemption, which, if inflation remains higher than 6 per cent, would, of course, constitute a form of tax increase. So a tax increase is out of the question. We may now ask whether they favour a reduction in expenditures, since they do not want to raise taxes. One would think that our friends in the Official Opposition would be in favour of a reduction in expenditures. Not so, Mr. Speaker, and except for a few vague references I mentioned earlier and which were made yesterday evening by the Leader of the Opposition, the latter has no definite or detailed proposals regarding government programs that could be cut—and justifiably so in some cases—in order to reduce the government's expenditures. Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought down his budget on June 28, he proposed a ceiling on the indexation of various social programs, more specifically family allowances and old age security. For the government, this would mean a $360 million reduction in expenses. How did they react? The next day during question period, the New Democratic Party members and members of the Official Opposition accused the government of fighting inflation by exploiting low-income groups in our society.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I want to set the record straight, because the members of the opposition have been mouthing worse than half-truths, they have been practically telling falsehoods about this question. As far as old age security is concerned, is a government that, starting in 1983, will put a ceiling of 6 per cent on increases in old age security benefits, is such a government using these people as hostages in its fight against inflation? The facts are simple enough. Among the elderly, 47 per cent receive only old age security benefits, that is, they receive no guaranteed income supplement, and in their case it is true that if inflation were to remain at 11 per cent—which is far from certain, since I think the measures taken by the government should, in the months to come, bring about a substantial drop in inflation levels—but assuming that inflation remains at 11 per cent, Mr. Speaker, for the 47 per cent of Canadians who are not eligible for GIS because they have other sources of income, that would represent a loss of $55 per year or a little over $1 per week, which would enable the government to create jobs for their children and grandchildren and thus put our economy on the road to recovery. As for the 53 per cent who, in addition to the base pension, also receive GIS, they will continue to have their benefits and pensions completely indexed, so that in their case, the 6 per cent and 5 per cent policy will not apply.

Now a few words about family allowances. There are basic allowances which all families receive, and there is also the child tax credit that is received by 70 per cent of the 3,600,000 familes with children in this country. Obviously, in the case of the 30 per cent who do not receive the child tax credit, namely, families with above average incomes, they will have to do without a certain amount, which may vary according to the number of children, but average out to $16 per year. I repeat, these are families that belong to the 30 per cent that are financially well-off. In the case of the 70 per cent group, there will, of course, be an average loss of $16 per child annually but, to compensate, the government has announced in the budget a $50 increase in the child tax credit. I think it is clear the government, in this recession, wanted to continue in its role of providing for social justice in this country. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Official Opposition two things. First of all, I would ask it to act responsibly and tell us once and for all how it would bring down the budget deficit: by increasing taxes or reducing expenditures. I want to know, once and for all, and I am sure many Canadians feel the same way. I also would like to know, Mr. Speaker, what the opposition would feel is an acceptable deficit.

In these circumstances, what would be an acceptable deficit? One of these days members opposite will have to lay their cards on the table and for once come up with constructive suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, what I deplore about this debate on the budget deficit is the fact that they lead people to believe that in itself a budget deficit is unacceptable and is bad for the country's economy, whereas I think one has to be more openminded and discriminating. Mr. Speaker, a budget deficit is not necessarily bad in itself, for it can even be used as an instrument of economic policy. One does not have to be a leading economist to be able to understand a few notions of the Keynesian economic theory. According to that theory, governments can be expected to record budget surpluses when the economy is growing and the unemployment rate relatively low; conversely, during an economic recession such as we are now experiencing and when unemployment is high, too high it is true, governments have to resort to deficit financing.

Why should governments resort to deficit financing in circumstances such as those now prevailing? Simply because the government must take over from the private sector which, given the idle productive capacity and overblown inventories, does not make enough investments to keep the economy on an even keel. In fact, Mr. Speaker, what is a deficit? In our case, it means that the government borrows from Canadians through Canada Savings Bonds, other securities and treasury bonds rather than raise taxes. We ought to keep in mind the fact that the major part of the debt of the Canadian government is money borrowed from Canadians. To put it another way, Mr. Speaker, Canadians owe money to themselves. I suggest there is nothing catastrophic about that. Of course, I will be reminded that, although what I am saying is true, the fact remains that government deficits—and they say this without a shred of supporting evidence—fuel inflation and therefore push up interest rates. Well now, Mr. Speaker, let us see if that is true. Is there any way to show that there is indeed a link between the level of government budgetary deficits on one hand, and the rates of interest and inflation on the other?

Let us compare Japan and Canada. As everybody knows, Japan's current inflation rate is a shade over 3 per cent and its rate of unemployment is roughly the same. And yet, Mr. Speaker, during the six-year period between 1975 and 1981, year in and year out the budgetary deficit of the Japanese public sector has always accounted for a larger share of their gross national product than was the case in Canada. In 1975, Mr. Speaker, it was 2.8 per cent in Japan and 2.5 per cent in Canada. In 1976, 3.8 per cent against 1.7 per cent in Canada. In 1977, 3.7 per cent against 2.4 per cent in Canada. In 1978, 5.5 per cent against 3.2 per cent. In 1979, Japan's public sector deficit was 4.8 per cent of the gross national product compared with 1.9 per cent in Canada. In 1980, 4.2 per cent against 2.1 per cent and, in 1981, 4 per cent against 1.2 per cent. I might also mention the borrowing requirements of the governments, the percentage of the gross national product, and make a comparison between Canada and Japan. In 1980, Japan's public sector borrowing requirements amounted to 10.8 per cent of the gross national product.

In Canada, the figure was 4.5 per cent. We can do the same for 1979: 10.6 per cent for Japan compared with 4.4 per cent for Canada. Mr. Speaker, since we know the rate of inflation in Canada and in Japan, I think we also know that it is difficult to find a relationship between budgetary deficits on the one hand and the rate of inflation and the level of interest on the other.

Let us make another comparison, Mr. Speaker. It has become popular in the last little while to compare Canada with the United States, our powerful neighbour to the south. In 1981, the government deficit represented 2.4 per cent of our GNP. In the United States, the budgetary deficit of the federal administration amounted to 2.1 per cent of the GNP. For all practical purposes, the difference was therefore minimal, Mr. Speaker. Yet the rate of inflation in Canada is still something over 11 per cent compared with 6.5 per cent in the United States. What we may conclude from this, Mr. Speaker, is at the very least that no one can establish a relationship between government budgetary deficits and levels of inflation and interest rates. The situation in Japan proves this very clearly and very definitely, as does the comparison between Canada and the United States for the year 1981.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that because of the very high level of savings in Canada—as we all know, nearly 14 per cent of the available personal income is now invested in savings in Canada—the deficit of just under $20 billion can be financed without putting any upward pressure on interest rates. Nevertheless, we must remember one thing, namely that businesses and the government compete to a certain extent on the money markets, and I believe that we should look very closely at the possibility of using the tax system to make businesses much less dependent on the money markets so that they can generate their own investment sources through their own profits. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the present situation, it is time to review very closely the possibility of abolishing the taxes on corporate profits and of taxing these profits when they are transferred to shareholders as dividends. Of course, some will say that this would encourage businesses not to pay out dividends and to reinvest instead, but in my opinion, it would be a marvellous invitation to reinvest and it would make businesses much less dependent on the money markets. This would mean less upward pressure on interest rates, but I think it would also have the very beneficial result of increasing significantly the value of corporate shares and the loss of earnings by shareholders because fewer dividends would necessarily be paid out. This would be more than compensated by the significant increase in the value of shares. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, this would tremendously encourage reinvestments, especially in the case of small and medium-size businesses which would have the choice of distributing dividends that would be taxable or of simply reinvesting their profits, thus creating employment and contributing to the economic recovery, a great advantage to the Canadian population as a whole. Of course, Mr. Speaker, we would have to consider other factors as well. I am thinking in particular of all our business grant programs, many of which I think simply promote inefficiency.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that, with the exception of regional development grants, if Canadian businesses really want to play the game of free enterprise and of the capitalist system, the government should stop paying grants to businesses, so as to cut its spending, of course, although lower corporate profits would certainly affect federal tax revenues. Of course, the implications of such a reform under the capital gains tax system would have to be considered.

Mr. Speaker, while there is no evidence of a cause and effect relationship between government deficits and inflation and interest rates, I believe that it is nevertheless vital for the future of our economy to reduce inflation. Otherwise, we run the risk of finding ourselves with higher inflation and more unemployment than at the present time. It is often said, especially by labour leaders, that the government has overemphasized the fight against inflation and neglected the fight against unemployment, and that by simply inverting these priorities, the government could promote an economic recovery tomorrow, even though this might create a bit more inflation. Mr. Speaker, I find such talk irresponsible because the economy is not so compartmentalized. It is a bit like communicating vessels, and even more so in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Since Canada exports 30 per cent of the goods and services it produces and since two thirds of our exports go to the United States, 20 per cent of all jobs in Canada are directly dependent on our capacity as a country to compete on the American market.

If, because we stopped fighting inflation, we found ourselves with an inflation rate of 15 or 20 per cent, which is not impossible—some Latin America countries have inflation rates of 50 and 100 per cent, and it could easily happen here—it is obvious that labour unions would then call for wage increases of 15, 20 or 25 per cent, which would obviously affect our production costs. As we know that in the United States, with an inflation rate of about 6½ per cent, collective agreements are now being signed at 5, 6 or 7 per cent or even less, it is obvious that we would very quickly find ourselves in a non-competitive position on the American market, and that we would have not only a much higher inflation rate, but also an even greater unemployment problem than at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I was reading today the comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark), and I was struck by his repeated attempts to undermine the anti-inflation policy of the government. Several times in his speech, he mentioned the fact that the government had decided under Bill C-124 to restrict wage increases for public servants to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent in 1984. He made a subtle attempt to undermine that policy. Mr. Speaker, I would like the Leader of the Official Opposition and the members of his party to make up their minds and to have the courage to practise what they preach when Bill C-124 is put to a vote. However, we know that the Leader of the Official Opposition is aware that all the poles show that 50 per cent of all Canadians support our budgetary and anti-inflation policies. Of course, he reads the poles. And we all know that the depth of his beliefs is equalled only by the depth of his political philosophy, which is saying a lot.

In concluding, I would like to say a few words about the need for a new philosophy in the public service if we truly want to reduce the growth rate of government spending. To anyone who is more or less familiar with the public service, how careers are developed and powerful mandarins are made, the system encourages behaviour that is not helpful at all in slowing down federal spending. A young and ambitious bureaucrat, who wants to have a brilliant career and be promoted in a matter of years, must have an increasing number of staff under his direction, and responsibility for increasingly larger budgets. This is one of the criteria used to evaluate our federal public servants and managers, and to determine whether a young or middle-aged public servant should or should not be promoted. Mr. Speaker, I think that in the months and years to come some serious changes will have to be made in this respect. I think that a feeling for sound economic management and financial restraint will have to become a way of life in the federal public service because, otherwise, I feel that we are only fooling ourselves, no matter which party is in power, if we believe that we can actually control the growth of government spending.

[English]

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, before I make my general remarks on the matter before the House I should like to refer to the figures quoted by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) who was speaking when I came in. Last evening the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) used the same figures regarding the Province of Saskatchewan. One could forgive the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap for not being too aware of the figures that apply in Saskatchewan, but we should not have to make excuses for the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

He stated, as I believe did the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap, that in Saskatchewan 1.9 per cent of the people are civil servants. Mr. Speaker, the correct figure is 2.9 per cent, that is, approximately 29,000 people in Saskatchewan are on the public payroll. I think that is something which should be brought to light.

The other subject I found interesting was that of the per capita debt of the province of Saskatchewan. It amounts to $2,831, the third highest in Canada. It was mentioned last night, Mr. Speaker, that after the Conservatives came to power in Saskatchewan they increased the salaries of executive assistants from about $36,000 to about $40,000 or $50,000.

Let us talk about what has actually happened. Mr. Sinclair, deputy minister to Mr. Blakeney, had a salary of $69,936. I can understand why those hon. members are not aware of these figures because it was not until the new government came into power in Saskatchewan that they were made public. I forgive them for not knowing them. Freedom of information may not work in this House, but I think it will work in Saskatchewan. Mr. Blakeney's cabinet secretary received a salary of $62,376. Under the Progressive Conservative government—I will give you the numbers because there is nothing to hide—the deputy minister to Premier Devine receives a salary of over $80,000, but he replaces the cabinet secretary at $62,000 and the deputy minister at $69,000. I do not think you could call that exorbitant.

When we talk about government restraint, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about the debt we are facing and the borrowing we will have to do as we are discussing it tonight under Bill C-125, being a farm boy from Saskatchewan it seems strange to me to have a piece of paper 8 inches by 10 inches in my hands which represents $11 billion. I cannot really visualize or understand $11 billion. The budget of June 28 was the aftermath of the November budget from last year, which in turn was the aftermath of a previous budget. Putting all those budgets together, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) had to attempt to draw his party and his career back from the brink of oblivion. Both the November budget of last year and the June budget of this year were full of mistakes. I am sure they were not deliberate mistakes, but they were mistakes in philosophy concerning what the Canadian people really want, what they would accept, what they would like to build and how they would like to have this country grow. Some of the mistakes were very obvious. The November budget forecast an unemployment rate of 7.8 per cent in 1982. The most recent figures available from StatsCan are that in fact 10.2 per cent of the country's labour force is out of work. That is 1.25 million Canadians, Mr. Speaker. According to the Minister of Finance in his November budget the deficit was to be held to 10.5 billion. We find out from the June budget that the deficit is going to be $19.6 billion; almost 100 per cent wrong in eight months.

We now have the minister coming to the people of Canada through this House asking to borrow $11 billion. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you what my bank manager or any other bank manager would say to a businessman who went in and said "I am sorry, Sir, I was 100 per cent wrong." My bank manager would tell me that I am not capable of managing my business. That is what any bank manager would say, and that is what the people of Canada are telling the Minister of Finance. He is not capable of managing the business of Canada or of Canadians.

We are talking about billions of dollars. Not C. D. Howe's word "millions", but billions. That is many more zeros, Mr. Speaker. That is the way it works, one thousand million. This means that there will be one borrowed dollar for every $3 of revenue this government is going to bring in, one borrowed dollar for every $4 spent. To put it in perspective, Mr. Speaker, this deficit is twice the size, on a per capita basis, of the deficit being discussed by the Reagan administration in the U.S. The U.S. economy is about ten times as large as ours, but the $20 billion deficit of this Minister of Finance is the equivalent of over $200 billion in the U.S., twice as large as the deficit which has preoccupied Washington in the past few months.

There is no sign of economic recovery in Canada, but there is in the U.S. Their inflation rate is half of ours. Why the difference? In the last two or three years the Americans became deadly serious about doing what was necessary to bring down the rate of inflation. Most segments of American society showed more willingness to trim unrealistic expectations, and those unwilling to do so were pushed into it. I think we all recall the air traffic controllers strike in the U.S. They made unrealistic demands and the people, through their government, denied them those demands.

Our Minister of Finance tends to blame everything on everyone else in the world. He blames our problems on the Americans, on the global recession, or on the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). I can understand the necessity for that, but the one thing he did not do last November or this June was to accept the responsibility for the mistakes. He is the Minister of Finance in Canada, no one else, and he bears the responsibility for the shape we are in. There has not been the slightest admission of guilt.

According to Charles Lynch, Mr. Speaker, members on the government side applauded the Minister of Finance 34 times during his budget speech. I cannot find anything to applaud in the speech. Well, perhaps I could applaud two or three times, but certainly not 34 times. It just shows that as long as the minister is delivering a budget, members on the government side are bound to find something to applaud. As a matter of fact, some of them even went around saying, "Hey, we helped draw this budget up". I would not say that, guys and gals. I would not go home and tell that to my constituents if I were you. My goodness, you have to be more careful about your health. You should not be telling your constituents that you helped draw up this budget. That is very dangerous, I think, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, the Speaker did not participate in the drawing up of the budget.

Mr. McKnight: I accept that, Mr. Speaker. Let us go on and look at where inflation in Canada stems from. I believe it is government induced and government sponsored. StatsCan, the federal government's own department, has revealed figures which I hope some of the members on the government side and the Minister of Finance will soon have an opportunity to read. StatsCan reports that while all consumer prices rose between May, 1981, and May, 1982, many prices which are controlled or heavily influenced by government rose far faster than those in the private sector. For example, energy costs are up 23.8 per cent and transportation costs are up 16.1 per cent. By the way, transportation costs will rise even further when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) implements his Crow proposal. For the producers of grain in Western Canada these costs will increase about 45 per cent over the next three years and they will double in the next five years. Tobacco and alcohol costs, also controlled by governments, are up 15.6 per cent. But the other components of our economy, those not controlled or influenced by government rose far less. For instance, clothing rose by 6.3 per cent. According to a recent Statistics Canada study, private sector inflation was 9 per cent while the rate for government and government regulated industries was 18 per cent, twice as high as private sector inflation.

What about the postal rate? There was a postal rate increase of 72 per cent. It is not bad to have an increase of 72 per cent if you can have mail delivered to your door and if you can use the new Priority Post. But in my riding of Kindersley-Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, 95 per cent of the people drive to pick up their own mail. They drive 10, 15 or 20 miles one way. They suffered a 72 per cent increase just to get their letters out, but if they happen to go on a Saturday morning, the post office is closed. I cannot see why, when the government is trying to assess the blame for inflation, it does not look within itself and at some of the policies it has brought forward.

We have listened to the Minister of Transport speak. He stated that Canadians were spoiled and that we had to be pushed into line. We have heard the same thing from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and from the Minister of Finance. To back up my statement, the hon. member across the way, the hon. member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos), said that Canadians are saving. That means individual Canadians are living well within their means. If you can save from your after-tax income, you are not overspending. In 1979, individual Canadians saved 11 per cent of their after-tax income. In 1980 they saved 11.2 per cent; in 1981 they saved 12.4 per cent and in the first three months of this year Canadians saved 13.3 per cent of their after-tax income despite rising unemployment and inflation. That is living well within your means.

I cannot say the same thing for the government. Where is the fairness of imposing dictatorial government policies upon individuals who are saving their own money to protect themselves against the government that runs their country? Canadians are saving because they are scared stiff of what is ahead for them under this government. They want to try to save everything they can so they can be protected from what they see this government doing and what they have seen it do in the past.

Mr. MacKay: They should try buying pawn shop stocks.

Mr. McKnight: What is the government going to do with this additional $11 billion in borrowing authority? It has not even told us what it is going to do with the money. I have not heard one proposal from the government about what it is going to do with the extra money. I have not heard what the government is going to do with the $21.2 billion spending authority it will have. The $21.2 billion is considerably higher than the $17.1 billion, which the Minister of Finance told us he needed in his budget in June. Where is the extra money to go?

Liberals tell Canadians to come into the 6 per cent world. Do hon. members remember the statement, "Welcome to the 1980s"? I am sure some hon. members opposite were at the Chateau Laurier in February, 1980 when the Prime Minister said "Welcome to the 1980s". I do not see anyone over there very happy about what they have found in the 1980s.

Mr. MacKay: They were out about 50 years.

Mr. McKnight: Now we hear the words, "Welcome to the 6 per cent society". We have heard the minister say, "Tighten your belts". How do you tighten the belt on a skeleton when you have nothing left to tighten and when people in Canada are losing their homes, their farms and their businesses? How do you tighten your belt then? That is not something the people of Canada are not prepared to do. They are well prepared, but they have to have some leadership, not forced direction.

Let us take a look at uncontrolled growth in government. The government started out in the early 1970s. At that time it wanted to have a window on the oil industry.

Mr. MacKay: The government has broken the window.

Mr. McKnight: The Liberals called this policy Canadianization. But actually it is nationalization. Petro-Canada advertising states "Buy Petro-Canada, it's ours". But it is not really ours. It is more the property of the banks and the other lending institutions that lent the money to the Crown corporation to acquire Petro-Canada. It has not yet been paid for by the people of Canada.

The original proposal to establish Petro-Canada was sound. It was to be a window on the industry. I would like to quote what Mr. Donald MacDonald said in May, 1974. He said that Petro-Canada would likely be nothing more than a small player in the domestic oil patch so the federal government could learn how the energy sector works. Although it might be empowered to refine and retail petroleum products, Mr. MacDonald deemed that role unnecessary and rather inappropriate.

Let us take a look at some of the history and just where some of this money has gone which the government has spent. Petro-Canada came into existence in January, 1976. Its federal shareholder, the federal government, did not know what to do with it. But Mr. Strong did, and his successor, Mr. Hopper, did. They started with not a bad chunk of capital of $383 million, which is a nice little start for a company. At the end of 1976 PetroCan had 400 employees and the rights to 88 million acres of land.

In 1977, Ottawa infused additional cash of $155 million. It also passed on to the corporation 25 per cent of all, promising federal prime lands in the Arctic not hitherto leased, allowing PetroCan up to seven years to select what it wanted. As well, PetroCan was allowed to appropriate-appropriate is a nice word—up to 25 per cent in Canada land holdings of foreign-owned companies. At the end of that year PetroCan had 649 employees.

The pace picked up in 1978. The corporation bought Pacific Petroleums Ltd. for $1.5 billion, partly out of production earnings and partly out of a further federal contribution of $240 million. It finished that year with a B.C. oil refinery, interest in coal, uranium and various other minerals, minority shares in two pipelines, 426 gas stations and 2,038 employees.

Then there was a brief lull. But with the return of the Liberals in 1980 Petro-Canada speeded up again. It began undertaking state to state oil purchases with Mexico and Saudi Arabia. Petro-Canada had a hand, and in fact it had an employee who was an executive assistant to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), helping to draft the national energy policy. When the Liberals drafted that energy policy it worked out that instead of losing 25 per cent of its cash flow, as did any other oil company outside of Canada, Petro-Canada its cash flow by 23 per cent. Then what happened? The federal government in that year contributed $80 million. In 1981 the company bought Petrofina for $1.5 billion. This was financed in part by a 4 cent per gallon surcharge on all Canadian sales on gasoline and home heating fuel. At year's end, this corporation that would not interfere extensively in the private sector, this corporation that was going to be a window on the world, this corporation that was going to have the ability to refine and retail—but Mr. MacDonald in 1974 said that he did not really think that it was really necessary—had $6.6 billion in assets, 169 million acres of land, 5,800 employees and 1,500 gas stations. This is where some of the money which we are discussing this evening has gone.

The hon. member for Montmorency-Orléans asked where we on this side would start. We cannot start in June 1982 or in November 1981. We would have to go back and start 14 years ago. These things which we see inflicted upon our economy and upon Canadians today did not just happen in six months or twelve months. They have built up over 14 years.

Mr. MacKay: It is difficult to unscramble an egg.

Mr. McKnight: The hon. member for Central Nova is absolutely correct. I think we could attempt it and be successful because it is very evident that the people of Canada have lost their trust in the party opposite. They really do not trust the government. It is not individual people, it is not individual members; it is the trust which a society should have in its government. The government has broken faith far too many times with the electorate of Canada. That is why there is no trust or faith at this time.

There is one area where we could save a little bit of money. Right now we are paying more for imported oil than we are for Canadian oil. Is it not funny that a country with vast oil reserves is paying more money to someone in Mexico than it is paying to someone in Saskatchewan or Alberta? It does not make a lot of economic sense. It certainly does not make political sense.

There are several examples of what happens when a party has been in government for so long that it forgets the money it is spending is not its money, that it is money held in trust for the people of Canada to be spent wisely. The Liberal government is spending $111,851 to study the spreadability of butter. I think the hon. member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield) who is sitting opposite, could study the spreadability of butter tomorrow morning when he spreads it on his toast. That would cost a lot less than $111,851.

In February, Canadian National Railways spent $64,244 to purchase advertising space wishing CPR, its chief competitor, a happy birthday. It is nice to be friendly with one's competitor, but I do not think it is worth over $64,000 to the taxpayers of Canada to wish a happy birthday to the CPR.

Canadian taxpayers will shell out $4,000 per month over the next five years for rent on the Vancouver apartment of a senior government bureaucrat. The apartment has been rented by the Department of Public Works for Pat Reid, the Commissioner General of Transpo 1986, a world fair on transportation and communications. The justification for the expense is that the apartment is being used for entertaining. An aid to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) has called the amount "chicken feed". It is not chicken feed to someone who is having a great deal of difficulty paying $700, $800 or $900 per month in mortgage payments. Four thousand dollars per month for an apartment in Vancouver for an employee of the people of Canada, an employee of the taxpayers of Canada, is really not chicken feed.

Between April 1, 1980, and June 30, 1981, the government spent $674,972 to supply public servants with briefcases. After

I was elected to this place and before I even had an office, I was given a briefcase. Apparently not only Members of Parliament receive briefcases from the taxpayers of Canada; so do public servants. In any job in which I have been involved I have been able to supply my own briefcase; so can all hon. members. I see them shaking their heads indicating that they would. They do not want them, but they got them.

It will cost $400,000 to provide business cards to 25,000 public servants.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. McKnight: Yes, it will cost $400,000 because now we have two Canadian flags on the business cards of public servants. The "word mark" is what it is called, and there is not room to put the telephone number and address on one side; now we must print two sides. We know that that costs money.

Of course we know about the flying in formation to Winnipeg by three ministers. They flew into Winnipeg in three separate Jetstars which cost approximately $27,000. First-class return air fare would have been $1,777.

I saw the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) here a while ago. In the spring of 1982, with a record 1.2 million Canadians out of work and the economy in a recession, the minister and his department spent $5 million to tell Canada that the economy was working. God help us if it really had been working; would they ever have been able to spend money!

Then we come to Miss Janet Smith, an assistant secretary to the Liberal cabinet, who was sent to Nice, France for four months to learn French at a cost to taxpayers of $12,000.

An hon. Member: Yes, yes.

Mr. McKnight: I hear an hon. member saying, "yes, yes". It is not Janet Smith's problem. It is a real lack of caring or lack of understanding when people are having difficulty financing their homes, finding jobs, looking after their families and putting their children through college—everything we all want to do. Someone does not understand that there is a real world out there and sends a member of the public service to France to study French. That I do not understand.

We all live in Ottawa and know that it is difficult to get around. Between March 1, 1980, and May 31, 1981, the government paid out $3.5 million in taxi fares. We have participaction on the one hand, but we have $3.5 million in taxi fares on the other. At the current Ottawa taxi rates, it is enough to go around the world 120 times.

Where is the restraint? I do not see any restraint in what I have outlined. We have heard of restraint. We have talked about lack of growth. We have heard restraint discussed on the other side, but we have not seen it. Every time someone mentions the public service, government members ask, "Why are you picking on the public service?" We are not. I am certainly not picking on the public service this evening. I do not blame anyone for wanting to work for the government. There are many dedicated, intelligent, hard-working public servants, but it does not mean that it has to expand and grow.

At the end of September 1976, the Treasury Board reported that it had 311,284 continuing employees. One year later it had 316,547, and in September 1978 it had 317,210. The latest estimate in September 1981 was 322,414. There is a lack of understanding. The government must understand that people in Canada are hurting. People are having a great deal of difficulty with more than 1,250,000 Canadians out of work, or over 10 per cent of the work force. That figure does not include the people who are tired of walking the streets, walking into factories, knocking on doors and asking for jobs. If we took into account the people who have absolutely given up, who are hopeless and in despair, and if we took away the public service, we would find that probably 15 per cent of our work force is unemployed. That is, 15 per cent in total unemployment, and unemployment in the public sector is about 6.4 per cent.

Our debt this year will be $122.7 billion. The cost of servicing that debt will take up 22 per cent of all government spending. That is almost one quarter of government spending which is to be used for servicing the debt. I hear members opposite saying that we should not worry about the deficit because it is money we owe to ourselves. It is not money that we owe ourselves, it is one quarter of the government spending which goes to service the debt. If it is our money, why do we service it? Why do we not just keep that 22 per cent? Everyone realizes that money is not free.

An hon. Member: It belongs to our grandchildren.

Mr. McKnight: As my colleague says, it is our grandchildren's money. It is our children's, our grandchildren's and their children's.

I fail to understand how some people think that we are doing very well. In 1982 the net farm income is expected to decline by 17 per cent. Farm cash receipts will increase marginally by 2 per cent. The net farm income in 1982 in Saskatchewan is expected to decline by 35.6 per cent. Farm bankruptcies are up 60 per cent this year.

Since I have had the privilege of being a Member of Parliament, I have had phone calls for the first time in the last seven months from young farmers in my riding who say that they are up against the wall. They cannot finance and pay for their spring operations, they are in arrears on their land payments, and they cannot meet their machinery payments. This is the first time since I have been a Member of Parliament that calls like that have come to my office. I know it is happening to every member in the House as well.

What will the government do about this? I have not seen it do anything tangible nor do I believe that Canadians have seen any concrete action taken by the government. The budget proposes to provide $750 million for job creation. Economists tell us that $1 billion is required to lower the unemployment rate by one per cent through job creation. When I look at the budget, the clear implication is that the $750 million in new spending is not there. At best, there is $267 million of new spending, and at worst there is $117 million allocated for new homes this year in job creation.

There is nothing mentioned in the budget about the tax increases in UIC which will be imposed upon Canadian employers and employees. The implications of that tax could mean that each employee in Canada could pay up to $142.50 more per year for UIC payments. As a group, employers could pay $1.2 billion more this year.

While the government talks about borrowing money, it introduced a budget which increased taxation. Once again this shows the inequity. For example, the 1984 federal and provincial tax increases which will come about as a result of capping indexing at 6 per cent will mean, for a single taxpayer with no dependants who makes $10,000 earned income, a tax increase of 14.7 per cent. However, the single taxpayer who makes $100,000 a year will have an increase of 2.5 per cent. If we take the example of a married taxpayer with two dependants under the age of 18 who has $20,000 earned income, we find that his increase in taxes will be 21.7 per cent. However, a similar taxpayer who earns $100,000 a year will have an increase, under the deindexing that has taken place under this government, of only 3.2 per cent. Is that a just society? It is not just nor is it fair, and the members opposite know that.

During the last election campaign, members of the Liberal Party promised to keep the rate of government spending below the growth in the GNP. The government is spending twice as fast as it promised during the election campaign. Yesterday in the House we heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) give his government's policy on upholding election promises. My colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) asked the Minister of Agriculture what happened to his election commitment for a special structure on farm fuels which would be exempted from federal taxes. At the present time the government takes 60 cents, or 40 per cent, for every gallon of gasoline used in the production of food in the agricultural industry in this country. However, what did the minister say on behalf of his government? He said that the speeches used during an election campaign were not prepared speeches; they were made in the heat of an election campaign. We now hear directly from the minister what many people in Canada are beginning to believe, that the Liberal Party and the government will say anything during an election to get elected. They do not feel any commitment to fulfill those promises.

The hon. member for Montmorency-Orleans spoke about capital gains during this debate. I agreed with some of the points he made about that subject. But the Minister of Agriculture during the 1980 election campaign promised all farmers a once-in-a-lifetime capital gains exemption. It is not there. It is not there for small business and it is not there for farmers. He also promised to provide an option to change the valuation day. We have seen nothing about that. When the hon. member for Vegreville asked the minister how he was proceeding with these promises, the minister answered that he was coming along slowly.

We have an appointed member in the Senate, from the Province of Saskatchewan, Senator Argue. He is a cabinet member who is responsible for the Wheat Board and he is assistant to the Minister of Transport. After the budget which made this $11 billion borrowing authority bill necessary, he said that Canadians face a confident future. He said that the government has given leadership with this budget, providing a sense of direction and a target for Canadians to aim at. If anyone knows the Senator from Saskatchewan, he is some target.

What was the reaction to the budget? The best indication is investor interest. Share prices plummeted 13.14 per cent on the Toronto Stock Exchange under hectic trading the day after the budget. The day after the other budget in October of 1980 the market dropped 0.89 per cent. After the November budget the market went down 1.99 per cent.

If hon. members want to talk about confidence we should make comparisons with the budget of the former minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), in the winter of 1979. That budget, which was later defeated by the NDP and the Liberals, caused the market to rise by 1.9 per cent, a rally on the market.

I heard the members from the Liberal Party west, the NDP, talk about how to expand the economy. I would like to draw to their attention some remarks made by the predecessor to their finance critic, the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) since he left the House. Mr. Rae began by saying that Ontario's unemployment rate last month was 9 per cent. He wanted the treasurer of Ontario to do what the finance minister in this House had done. He said that he should reassess his policies and bring in a new budget. He wants to double the deficit and tax the corporations. He wants to tax those who have the ability to pay. That is what the leader of the NDP in Ontario wants to do. He wants higher taxes. The reason there is so much unemployment is that we have fewer corporations which are able to employ people. That will not work.

• (2140)

As I draw my remarks to a conclusion I would like to read to hon. members opposite the words of a prominent Canadian stated in 1965. He said: "It must never be forgotten that in the democracies that we know the political party is not an end but a means, not a goal but an instrument. He who enters a political party, then, is choosing a tool. We do not repudiate any of our convictions. We have only resolved to pursue elsewhere and in other ways the intellectual and social struggle which has always claimed us."

I have just quoted the Prime Minister of Canada. I would like to quote another—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today clearly and chillingly illustrates the serious financial problem being faced by this nation. We are deeply in debt, and the interest we pay on that debt pushes us even further in the hole, a hole dug for us by the government with its abysmal fiscal and economic policies and its arrogant and wasteful spending.

Mr. Lalonde: Now, be nice.

Mr. Darling: I am being nice to the minister, or I could say a lot more than that.

Like the sink holes which swallow up everything in their path, the hole created by the government has gobbled up homes, businesses, farms and jobs of thousands of Canadians in every community across the country, in large cities and small towns, and those who have been fortunate enough to own homes are losing them because of high mortgage interest rates which have nearly doubled their monthly payments. Right across the country, businesses, large and small, have been going belly up as business bankruptcies climbed to 5,383 in the first half of this year, 37 per cent higher than the previous year. Experts say that the number of firms going out of business may actually be five times greater than the recorded rate because most of them do not even bother to file bankruptcy. So we may have upwards of 25,000 employers losing their livelihood in the first six months of this year. Given an average of 11 employees per firm, some 275,000 employees will be out of work as a result and will be forced to join the ranks of more than 1.5 million already unemployed. In one way or another, millions of Canadians have toppled into the hole created by the government and thousands more are expected to vanish into the abyss.

The hole created by the government has become a seemingly bottomless pit and, into this bottomless pit, the government would have us willingly toss another $11 billion, just like that, no questions asked, or, if questions are asked, no answers will be given. That is because the government has a history of taking, not giving. What it takes is the taxpayers' money. It then takes more money so that the hole gets bigger and bigger.

Our gross national debt was $119 billion at the end of 1980-81 fiscal year, and it is expected to reach $135 billion this year. By comparison, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office in 1968, the nation's gross national debt was $31 billion. The government has plunged the country another $104 billion into debt since that time. This gross national debt of $135 billion is equal to a debt of $5,560 for each and every Canadian, or $14,260 for each taxpayer. While the debt itself is shocking enough, the interest we pay on the debt is staggering. The cost of interest on the public debt this year will be $16.6 billion. This is the cost equivalent of $680 for every man, woman and child in the country, or $1,750 for each and every taxpayer. One tax dollar in five is now used to pay interest on the nation's debt.

Faced with these financial horrors, it would be reasonable to assume that the government would be drastically trimming its spending and working night and day to develop and implement policies for rapid and stable economic growth. Not so. The government's June budget forecast a record deficit of $19.6 billion this year, and the estimates are that it will be considerably higher than that. Deeper we go down into the bottomless pit.

The government adds to our deficit, and then finds itself only two options from which to choose to finance that deficit. First, it can print more money, and over the past ten years it has done so to cover up to $12.4 billion of its financial requirements. But putting the Mint's printing presses on overtime eventually just adds to the problem. The more dollars are printed, the less they are worth.

The other option open to the government, that is, to borrow money, is also fraught with financial penalties. In 1981, borrowing by the federal government accounted for 44 per cent of all net new security issues placed in Canada. Borrowing of this magnitude has an obvious effect on the supply and demand for money and, thus, on the interest rates that must be borne by the private sector. Simply put, this means that, with the federal government borrowing almost half the available money, what is left over is limited and costly, which is why interest rates remain so high and why Canadians are being forced out of their homes, forced to abandon their businesses and farms and forced onto welfare rolls as they lose their jos.

It is not that this government cares one whit for the plight of millions of Canadians. It wants the authority to borrow $11 billion and the devil take the hindmost. The $11 billion it seeks permission to borrow will be added to the $3.6 billion in unused authority from previous years, plus the $6.6 billion authorized last June. If the bill before us today passes, it will give the government the right to borrow a total of $21.2 billion, an amount significantly higher than the $17.1 billion financial requirement outlined in the budget.

There is no reason to assume that the bill will not pass. Despite the grief which excessive government spending and continued high interest rates have caused millions of Canadians, no one on the opposite side of the House seems to care about or understand the urgent need to place the welfare of people before political party loyalty, not even when most of them privately cringe over what occurs in their names.

Not one member on the opposite side of the House has risen in his or her seat to condemn publicly the record level of business bankruptcies in the country. Not one member on the opposite side of the House has risen in his or her seat to condemn publicly the financial hardship the June budget will impose on the elderly and low-income families because of increased taxation. Not one member on the opposite side of the House has risen in his or her seat to condemn publicly policies which have resulted in the unemployment of well over 10 per cent of the Canadian work force. Not one member on the opposite side of the House has risen his in or her seat to protest publicly either increased consumer costs or industry failures as a result of the disastrous National Energy Program. Those

hon. members opposite are not protesting the questionable and costly air trips, 36,000 in 37 days, taken by public employees out of Ottawa and Canada, or the cost to the taxpayer of ministers' use of government planes to and from their ridings. They are not demanding a halt to the millions of dollars wasted on government advertising, blowing their own horn to the tune of $73 million this year. We do not hear them speaking up on behalf of Canadians when the price of postage stamps more than doubles, with an increase of up to 72 per cent. Not a peep was heard from those on the other side when it was revealed that a staff member of the Prime Minister's office was being sent to the French Riviera at the taxpayer's expense to learn French.

• (2150)

It was not anyone on the other side of the House who bothered to unearth the fact that government spent $5 million on food, liquor and entertainment in the first six months of 1981. Nor did anyone on the other side of the House raise the question of why, during a period between March 1980 and June 1981, government employees ran up taxi bills of $7,000 a day. The total taxi bill for this 15-month period is almost $3.5 million.

Mr. Lalonde: That's not true.

Mr. Darling: What do you mean it's not true? I suggest that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) look at the Auditor General's report. Who across the floor rose to object to the fact that during the same period the government spent more than $275,000 a day for telegrams and other message services? Who bothered to wonder why officials at Canada Post, who approved the spending of more than $260,000 on telegrams and other message services, are so determined to prevent other Canadians from using alternative services?

No one on the other side of the House has ever complained about the $65 million spent to date by the metric commission to implement a program which is costing business and consumers literally millions of dollars. Not a whimper of protest was heard from the other side when it was revealed last November that the National Capital Commission had decided to spend $1.4 million to change the colour of its trucks and signs.

I am sure many members will be aware that a few years ago the Department of Public Works decided to change all its signs. Depending on where the sign was located, originally the sign had English on the top and French on the bottom in the Province of Ontario and French on the top and English on the bottom in the Province of Quebec, as it should be. Millions of dollars were spent to change that to a rectangular sign so that both languages would be at the same level. That might have some merit, but not at a time of austerity. That kind of money should not be wasted. It continues on and on.

Then there is the $2,000 it cost the taxpayers for a hearing last September by the Canadian Transport Commission on why a Yukon railway should be given more time to instal warning lights when those lights had already been up and working for a year at the time of the hearing.

It did not seem to bother anyone on the other side when last February Canadian National Railways spent more than $64,000 on advertising to wish its competitor, CPR, a happy birthday. Surely a nice letter from the president of CNR to the president of CPR would have been sufficient, and if he had wanted to send a telegram that, too, would have filled the bill quite well.

Members opposite blushed when it was revealed late last year that the Canadian Unity Information Office was spending as much as $500 to $700 a day to have same-day newspapers from other cities flown to Ottawa, even though one of the papers could have been purchased on the same day at a news stand in a local hotel within five minute's walking distance of the Unity office.

No one opposite bothered to hang his or her head in shame when it was learned that during 1980-81 the government was billed $26.3 million for telephone calls not placed on government rented lines or through government operators. The list of financial follies of this government is as bottomless as the financial holes it has dug.

Those opposite prefer to pretend publicly that none of these scandalous incidents have occurred. Canadians will not hear a word of complaint from those opposite, although in all fairness when the heat got pretty bad in their ridings, several members on the government side stood up and criticized the government and the budget, first the November budget and later the June budget.

A group from the Province of Quebec ten-strong held a meeting and then publicly stated they did not agree with the budget. More recently, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) very truthfully stated publicly that he did not agree with the budget. On his return to Ottawa, he was taken to the woodshed by the Prime Minister, and talked to in a very serious and fatherly fashion. We have not heard very much from him since. Members can smile, but that is true.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He was called unforgivably naive.

Mr. Darling: Canadians hear very few complaints from the other side of the House. This tone of silence is particularly in place when it comes to giving a voice in this House to the constituents of three ridings where byelections have yet to be called: Timiskaming, Broadview-Greenwood and Leeds-Grenville.

No one on the opposite side of the House can even bear to think of the humiliation this government would receive at the polls if the byelections were held. A week or so ago I spoke to a distinguished member of the government. We were talking about other matters. I asked him when the byelection would be called for Timiskaming, which is in my area of northern Ontario. After telling him that two candidates had already been named, I asked when they were going to have their nominating convention. He looked at me and said, "Stan, you know, we may be crazy at times, but we are not stupid. We would be tarred and feathered."

Mr. Rossi: Name him.

Mr. Darling: No, I will not name him.

Mr. Rossi: Name him.

Mr. Darling: I certainly won't name him. I will name him to you privately and you can talk to him. I certainly will not reveal any confidence, but I thought it was worthwhile mentioning it here.

Mr. Rossi: Name him, Stan.

Mr. Darling: I am touching a sore spot when I mention those three byelections. There is no doubt about that. We know very well that if those three byelections were held, the Liberal Party would not place better than third. I give the Prime Minister full marks.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: We get elected.

Mr. Darling: Don't worry, you won't get elected. I see it is ten o'clock. May I call it ten o'clock?

EMERGENCY MEASURES—QUERY RESPECTING CROWN PREROGATIVE. (B) POWERS OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is now 13 months since the emergency planning orders passed by Order in Council 1305 were gazetted and legitimized. That was the order in council which drew national attention to the fact that the government was drawing power to itself so that in wartime it would be permitted to build and administer civilian internment camps. What drew national attention to that particular power was the fact that it was being passed at almost the same time as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was being adopted by this Parliament. The government was billing and cooing to the Canadian public and indicating that never again under this new and great Charter of Rights and Freedoms would it be possible to intern people in internment camps.

When that order in council was passed, I think all Canadians would agree, it had the force of law. Yet the government House leader, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), says that that particular order in council has to be legitimized and endorsed by statute in order to give it force and meaning. As I looked at that particular order in council as gazetted, I noticed that directly under the registration number and the date was the heading, "Other than statutory authority". If the government House leader says it needs to have statutory authority to give it force, but the order in council itself says it gets its force from other than statutory authority, I think that leads us all to conclude that the only other force supporting that particular order in council is the Crown prerogative. The Crown prerogative is an almost mystical term in Canada. In many ways it has been narrowed by statute so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) cannot in all instances assume dictatorial powers.

I turn now to a letter written by the President of the Privy Council addressed to the two chairman of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments on March 25, 1982. In that letter the President of the Privy Council said:

> If Parliament were dissolved, or if the pace of the crisis at hand did not allow the time to assemble Parliament, the government would be forced to act in reliance on the Crown prerogative, to the extent that it provided a legal basis for authority to act.

That was just nine months after the minister said in a speech to his provincial counterparts that if Parliament were not in session at the time an emergency arose the government would have to act extralegally.

In the summer of 1981 the President of the Privy Council said the government would act extralegally. In March he said it would have to rely on the Crown prerogative, which naturally then leads us to ask what the powers of the Crown prerogative are. I therefore wrote to the research department of the Library of Parliament and asked that department to undertake a study on the powers of the Crown prerogative. On April 27 of this year the research department sent me the results of its study. The report is entitled "Emergency Powers: Executive Action in the Absence of Legislation". Nothing could be more to the point than a title like that. I would like to quote what the research department of the Library of Parliament said on page 15 of its report:

> Executive action without such legislation is always possible, but has very little legal basis. If a situation arose in which Parliament could not enact legislation, the government would act and the legality of the actions would be later determined by the courts under the common law, unless an indemnity Act were passed.

Those are some very operative terms.

> Executive action without such legislation is always possible—

If a situation arose in which Parliament could not enact legislation, the government would act and the legality would be tested later.

My mind flips back to the year 1970 during the so-called Quebec crisis when 450 people were arrested in the Province of Quebec without charges being laid. Those people were never seriously questioned. They never stood trial, and most of them were released later without ever having been charged. It is now 12 years after that event but how many of those people have reached the point that they could legally challenge the government? The fact is that after the event those people are in no position to question the legality of that action; they either feel too harassed or too impoverished to challenge the government. The government has the power to act extra legally under the powers of Crown prerogative and most of the people affected by that extra legal activity are in no position to check things later.

• (2205)

The government has had a full year since this was brought to light to draft legislation but that has not been done. No legislation has been tabled. We have no way of knowing what it will contain. There is no way of limiting the Crown prerogative, so one must conclude that the government does not want to, and certainly that it does not want the Canadian people to know the limitations of the Crown prerogative, if there are any.

The clue may rest in a speech made by the President of the Privy Council a year ago, Mr. Speaker. I should like to quote three paragraphs from it. He said:

> But there are factors in addition to a concern for human righs that militate in favour of an emergencies statute. When we need authority during a crisis, we cannot afford lengthy discussion about "inherent powers" that may be implicit somewhere in precedent. When we need to act decisively within the law, we cannot afford to be burdened by real uncertainty about the law . . .
> And if the emergency arises when Parliament itself is dissolved, we would at present have no option but to act extralegally.

Later in the speech he said:

> I believe that three general classes of emergency can, during peacetime—

And, Mr. Speaker, I underline, "during peacetime".

—threaten the "peace, order, and good government of Canada"—

> First, there are emergencies in which the safety and welfare of large numbers of Canadians are threatened. An unexpected, serious shortage of essential commodities such as food or fuel provides one example of such contingencies—

If we think back to the energy crisis of a year ago, we will realize that now we have virtual nationalization of our energy. If we think of the possible emergencies that could arise regarding food, we realize that now we have the Canagrex legislation to deal with that problem. These are the kinds of emergency powers that are ominous for all Canadians, and they need to be dealt with by legislation that will explain clearly what the government is up to with this emergency powers legislation.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member already knows the answer to his question, and he knew it before he asked it. The Crown prerogative to which he refers is, according to Dicey:

> —both historically and as a matter of actual fact, nothing else than the residue of discretionary authority which in any given time is legally left in the hands of the Crown.

The prerogative amounts to no more than those powers that Parliament and the courts continue to allow the Crown to exercise alone. What remains of the Crown prerogative is a residue of royal discretionary authority following centuries of evolution during which the struggle for the supremacy of parliament was conducted.

Prerogative powers are non-statutory in origin and are always liable to be superseded by legislation. Indeed, the Crown prerogative exists as a source of legal power in the hands of the executive only to the extent that it has not been abrogated by statute.

Among its other uses, the Crown prerogative in Canada has often been relied on to change or clarify internal working relationships among federal departments and agencies. It has long been established that the prime minister of the day may assign responsibilities to Her Majesty's ministers and alter these to suit changing circumstances, provided this is done in a way which accords with duties specified by legislation.

A recent example of this use of the prerogative was the passage of Emergency Planning Order P.C. 1981-1305. As the hon. member well knows, the order assigns only planning responsibilities to federal ministers in order to enhance our over-all standard of emergency preparedness, and does not purport to convey any new powers to ministers or anyone else.

However, if I understand the hon. member correctly, he is concerned about an allegedly unlimited prerogative power being used to implement the emergency plans called for in the planning order in any time of proclaimed emergency.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what the minister responsible for emergency planning has already indicated, namely, that no such unlimited prerogative power exists. Some limited authority does remain in the Crown prerogative as it might pertain to great national emergencies, but it is an enormous overstatement to characterize this residue as "unlimited".

NATIONAL PARKS—BANFF—PROPOSED INCREASE IN LAND RENTS. (B) RENTS CHARGED TO PARK EMPLOYEES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the motto of this Liberal government in Ottawa is, "Don't do as I do, do as I say". The government is capping the wages of its employees and then taking much or all of the increase back by increasing land and accommodation rentals. The government is asking industry to keep prices down, and then increasing the rentals of land and accommodation for its employees. Employees' wages at Banff National Park have been capped at 6 per cent and 5 per cent; at the same time accommodation rentals are being increased for those employees by 15 per cent to 40 per cent, and higher. The continual increasing of prices induces inflation, makes it necessary for employees to bargain for higher wages in order to make both ends meet. The government should practise what it preaches, namely keep prices down in order that wages will not have to rise. But in the case of Banff, and I understand in other national parks, the government is keeping wages down, but putting up the rentals.

In Banff, for instance, in the case of one employee the minister himself stated in a letter, "your payments now constitute 13.1 per cent of your gross income from Parks Canada". The minister also stated in the letter that they have prepared a proposal which would allow the establishment of rents in Banff at approximately 10 per cent above the average rent charged at bordering parks. Big deal! Why should the rents be 10 per cent higher for the employees in Banff who must live there than it is for those who live outside the park? Why must they be penalized because they live close to a place like Calgary where rentals have skyrocketed?

When the minister was answering my question in the House he appeared to be completely confused; he was confusing staff accommodation with commercial accommodation. Did he do that deliberately so that he would not have to answer my question? The minister goes on to say in the letter that the rents are below those charged in the eastern part of the country. I question this very much and I ask him to publish the rentals in national parks in Eastern Canada.

The rental increase of which parks employees have been notified takes effect August 1 this year. The majority of the people there received a $100 rental increase on January 1, 1982, and they are now faced with another $100 increase on August 1. In one case this constitutes a 66 per cent increase.

When an employee is asked to accept wage controls, surely he should be able to expect some rental control as well, particularly when the landlord is the Government of Canada. How can a family live with a 66 per cent increase in rent and receive only a 6 per cent increase in salary the same year? This cannot be done without the family lowering its standard of living or borrowing money. The minister should try it, then he would not be quite so arrogant with his employees.

In the case of another employee, the rent increase required all of his 11.75 per cent wage increase. With the wage restraint of 6 per cent employees will be paying back to Parks Canada—more specifically to Revenue Canada—an even larger portion of their wages. This will leave them less for essentials like food and clothing. Is this being fair to the employees who live in Banff? In other words, this government is fighting inflation on the backs of its employees. It restrains the wages but grabs every cent it can get through rentals and taxes. Surely Crown-owned accommodation should be setting an example to industry if it expects industry to keep its prices down.

The government refuses to recognize the limited land base in Banff, deliberately limited by Parks Canada; and the explosive commercial growth and recreational accommodation demands which have combined to create a situation where affordable alternatives, such as purchasing a building lot or house, or renting suitable private accommodation, is simply beyond the means of park employees.

A survey by the Alberta Government released in February, 1982 indicates a snapshot of prices to enable comparisons between 14 locations. I refer to the item "shelter". Edmonton was set at 100 per cent, and in comparison Banff was 130 per cent; Calgary was 117 per cent, even with all of its skyrocketing prices; Medicine Hat was 72 per cent; Red Deer 101 per cent; Lethbridge 80 per cent; and the Crowsnest municipality 67 per cent. I ask hon. members to note well that Banff was the highest of the 14 places, which even included Fort McMurray, at 124 per cent, and Calgary, both of which were thriving until the introduction of the National Energy Program. This clearly shows the injustice that Parks Canada has and is imposing upon its employees in Banff.

Now with restraint, wage increases are negated by rent increases. In some cases, Parks Canada will take back more than it is giving in the 6 per cent or 5 per cent increases. Employees have virtually been penalized by a government which should be setting an example. Parks Canada has been treating the employees, particularly those in low and medium-wage brackets in Banff, in a servile, arrogant way. Perhaps that is why there is such a heavy turnover of employees in the Banff National Park.

The very least the government should do is to cut the rental accommodation increases to 6 per cent. If it does not do this, it will simply prove that the government wants its pound of flesh irrespective of what it does to inflation and irrespective to what it does to lives of human beings who are working for the betterment of Canada as employees of the Banff National Park.

What I have said about the treatment of the average employee by Parks Canada is even excelled by the gigantic increases imposed by Parks Canada on the commercial and business places in Banff. The Government of Canada has been a government without a heart as far as the Banff area is concerned. Is the government proud of its motto "Don't do as I do. Do as I say"?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, may I reply to the hon. member by assuring him that there will be no general increase in the land rents for Banff for 1982 or 1983. The rents which were set in 1980, are based upon a percentage of the 1979 land value and will remain constant for ten years. The lessees will, for example, in 1989 be paying rent based on this 1979 land value.

The 1980 to 1990 rent is based on percentage of the independently appraised land value. The percentage capitalization rate used is 6 per cent and this rate has remained unchanged for the past two decades.

While the capitalization rate has remained constant, land values in most of the national parks have risen over the past decade, with the result that rents have risen proportionately. Recognizing the needs of residents who are required to live in the parks, the minister offered reduced rents to residential lessees starting in September, 1980. Lessees whose premises are occupied by persons who qualify as eligible residents pay a rent of one-half of 1 per cent of the land value, to a maximum of $250 per year. The hon. member should note that this represents a substantial rent reduction from 6 per cent of land value.

Residential lessees are not the only leaseholders who have benefited from reduced rents. In September, 1980, cottage lessees were offered a rental rate that was reduced from 6 per cent of the appraised land value to 4 per cent. The cottage lessees were offered the choice of phasing in this 4 per cent of the appraised land value over the ten-year period.

The commercial leaseholders have not received the benefits of reduced rents as it is our view and that of Treasury Board that commercial lessees who gain from the private use of public land should pay an economic rent. While the basis of the commercial rent is 6 per cent of the appraised value of the land, the lessee is given the option of phasing in this amount in equal payments over the ten-year rental period. The lessee also has the option of negotiating a rent based on a percentage of the annual gross revenue.

I would like to point out that 6 per cent of the appraised land value has been the basis of rent determination for a number of years. This represents a low return on the use of the Crown's asset and is, in fact, below the capitalization rates charged by other government departments.

The issue of land rents in Banff is quite separate from the issue of rents charged to Crown employees for Crown-owned staff accommodation, such as for a house in a national park. These rates are controlled by Treasury Board and are based upon local market conditions as calculated by CMHC.

• (2220)

Although Parks Canada can regulate the rents to a limited extent, depending upon several variables concerning the type of accommodation, it still must stay within these parameters. It can only set the rents according to a prescribed schedule given to it by Treasury Board.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—NUMBER OF PROVINCES SERVED. (B) PROVISION OF ONE-DAY SERVICE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight during the adjournment debate to continue with a question I asked on July 15, 1982 of the minister responsible for Canada Post. The reason for my question at that time was that Canada Post, with many shiny brochures and much glossy paper, announced a new postal service called "Priority Post".

Priority Post consists of two methods. There is Priority Post programmed service which means that a person can have mail picked up on a regular basis, and it can be delivered on a regular basis for those companies and corporations which have a need for that type of service. There is also Priority Post "D" service.

I found it very strange that a Canada Post letter read:

> Priority Post . . . now provides next day delivery for your time-sensitive items to major Canadian cities and many countries 'round the world—

It was not too long ago when we expected that. It was called "service"; service by the post office department. It was not too long ago that businessmen and women and operators in cities expected their mail to be delivered when they put it in mailboxes. They expected it to arrive the next day in cities in Canada. In some of those cities, thousands of miles apart, it arrived the next day. That was expected. It was not something special. That is the way they did business.

After a few years the post office came along with those nice red, white and blue mailboxes. They were special mailboxes. If a person mailed a letter by a certain time, it arrived the next day. It was called "next day delivery". That was all done for the price of a stamp. At the time it was 6 cents and then 12 cents. It was expected. Now we have Priority Post which says that it can give next day delivery up to 33 pounds; that it can get it there on time every time.

The reason for my question was that this was Canada Post, which means all of Canada. It means every part of Canada should have access to this type of service. We all pay the same postal rates and the same taxes. The letter continued:

> Just bring your important material to a post office counter . . . fill in the distinctive Priority Post label provided, for next day "right to the door" delivery in Halifax, Quebec City, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, London, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver.

But Canadians cannot use the service in Fredericton, St. John's, Charlottetown, Moncton, Regina, Saskatoon, Prince Albert, Whitehorse or Yellowknife. This is why we have a problem in the country understanding the directions of the government when it comes to serving all Canadians equally or serving them as they should be served. This is why I asked my question.

I find a great deal of difficulty accepting the same 72 per cent increase in the price of postage stamps in my part of Canada but not receiving the same service. I also find it strange that after I asked my question on July 15 I received a communication from Priority Post dated July 20, 1982, which in part read:

> "D" service is currently being announced by direct mail to designated centres.
> Additional expansion of "D" in Fall 1982.

Why was that information not made available before I asked my question? Why was I not told that Canada Post was considering providing the service to the cities of Regina, Saskatoon, Prince Albert, North Battleford, St. John's, Moncton and Charlottetown? Why was it not explained. I believe there was no intention on the part of Canada Post to serve those other cities in four provinces and two territories. That is what bothers Canadians about Canada Post. Right now in some parts of Canada we understand what other Canadians are going through with the withdrawal of Saturday delivery and Saturday morning closings.

• (2225)

In 1978 a Liberal member, Mr. McIsaac, who represented Battleford-Kindersley, which is now in my riding, complained to the government about the closing of a post office on Saturday in Rosetown, Saskatchewan. The closure of post offices on Saturday is not a new phenomenon. That is why it is repugnant to people in my part of Canada, as well as to other Canadians, to be treated unequally and not have the same access to Canada Post and to Priority Post and Priority Class D service. I am sure that the parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Schroder) is quite familiar with Canada Post. I await his answer.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question suggests that the availability of Priority Post in only six provinces automatically excludes the remaining four from the universal postal service. Such a conclusion is based on fala-cious reasoning and shows no understanding of corporate business marketing methods.

Let me explain the expansion of the service to which the hon. member refers. On July 5 of this year, Canada Post launched the first phase of an important expansion of its courier service called Priority Post. Until that date, this special service was available between the cities of Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton and Winnipeg, or between London, Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. The new expansion now makes it possible to send material under 15 kilograms to any of the above cities by Priority Post, as well as to Halifax and Quebec. In addition, several new Priority Post counters were opened in each location.

The hon. member will be pleased that Canada Post has plans, beginning this fall, to provide for another substantial expansion. The next phase of the expansion will see Priority Post being available to all 10 provinces.

Instead of reproaching Canada Post for ignoring some provinces and favouring others, I think the hon. member should compliment Canada Post for its determination to directly challenge some of its more formidable competitors, the private couriers. The expansion of Priority Post demonstrates that Canada Post can operate boldly, with flair and in a determined manner calculated to maximize its revenues while providing needed and superb premium service to Canadian business.

Canada Post expansion across Canada of this invaluable new service represents a phasing in by stages, a phasing in of a new service based on calculated, sound business practices. Soon Priority Post will be available in all Canadian provinces, but not before Canada Post is ready.

May I remind the hon. member that he has accused the Post Office of ignoring four of the ten provinces. I have already explained this falacious notion. The hon. member, however, did not address himself to Canada's two territories; the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. At present, let me remind the House that Canada Post has no plans to expand to the two territories, but when demand in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories reaches a point which makes Priority Post a viable business enterprise there, Canada Post certainly will consider introducing it there. Canada Post is cognizant of the postal needs of all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 10.29 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY FUNDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The "B" stream engineering students at the University of Waterloo last week voted to establish a quality of education maintenance fund. Eighty one per cent of these students, all faced with increased tuition and living costs, voted to contribute $50 each to address the problems caused by inadequate funding of university education. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That this House applaud the constructive initiative taken by these students, who are faced with higher fees and underfunded staff and facilities resulting from government cuts in post-secondary education support; and, urge the government to indicate its commitment to maintain the quality of post-secondary education in Canada, protecting our most important national resource.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous support for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

APPLICATION OF WAGE CONTROL PLAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the government's wage control plan has already disrupted negotiations on a new contract for river pilots on the Seaway and will unravel industry-wide bargaining on the rail system which took 94 years to develop, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House agrees with the Minister of Transport's statement that the wage control plan will not work and calls on the government to withdraw its plan before it disrupts transportation all over Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

COMMUNICATIONS

NORTHWESTEL PROPOSAL FOR THIRTY PER CENT RATE INCREASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. NorthwesTel, the federal Crown corporation which has a monopoly on telephone services in the western Northwest Territories, Yukon, and northern British Columbia, has recently proposed rate increases of 30 per cent. In that this proposal is repugnant to the 6 per cent guidelines laid down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) which will be imposed on the salaries of many of NorthwesTel's subscribers, including its own employees, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That NorthwesTel's rate increases be restricted to a maximum of 6 per cent.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRADE

AUTOMOBILE EXPORT SALES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, at a time when the viability of the Canadian motor vehicle industry is threatened, attention should be drawn to the efforts of Wood Motors of Halifax and its president, John Gwynne-Timothy, who personally arranged a sale of 95 Ford Broncos, vans and trucks, direct with a customer in Europe for export to Sweden, notwithstanding the alleged superiority and fuel economy of European-made vehicles. Accordingly, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Minister for Trade be instructed to provide whatever assistance and co-operation is required to encourage and expedite sales of Canadian-made motor vehicles by local and regional dealers to foreign buyers, and to investigate the potential market for further export sales for the benefit of the Canadian motor vehicle industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE MINISTRY

THE MINISTER OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The commercial and angling salmon season is open in New Brunswick and once again the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) is forcing New Brunswickers to bear the brunt of his incapability in that portfolio by unfairly and unjustifiably imposing sanctions and restrictions on them that he does not have the intestinal fortitude to place more realistically on others in the region. As time and time again the House has witnessed the floundering of this minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That this House give the minister the hook and he be unceremoniously filleted.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF INVESTIGATIVE TASK FORCE

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. One is truly amazed and astounded at the deadly silence in the House in regard to the Lebanon crisis. The opposition questioning upon this issue has been virtually non-existent, and opposition leaders have posed no questions at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Yurko: I have the entire record here.

Surely there should be no reluctance for this House to stake out a humanitarian position in response to dealing with the devastation of communities and homes, leaving harmless children destitute and sobbing in the streets amid rubble, filth and squalor. We must find the compassion and the will to do something. Therefore I move:

That this House immediately establish a three-person all-party task force to travel to Lebanon, to examine first-hand the situation, and then promptly to report to this House so that appropriate humanitarian action can be initiated.

Hopefully someone in the House would be prepared to second this motion.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion, which is seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SHIPBUILDING

IMPLEMENTATION OF MARINE INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas Canadians will lose 17,000 jobs because Dome Petroleum will likely build five LNG carriers in Japan, and because Federal Commerce and Navigation has already contracted to build two coal carriers in Korea and another two in Belgium; whereas Canadians will lose 1,500 jobs as long as CP Ships of Bermuda continues to staff its entire fleet of 40 ships with British officers and foreign crews and fails to repatriate those ships to Canada; and whereas tens of thousands of jobs and millions of dollars in contracts will continue to go offshore unless we immediately implement a marine industrial strategy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House recognizes the fact that the Liberal government is no longer losing shipbuilding contracts by studied neglect but is deliberately sandbagging attempts to create a Canadian marine industrial strategy. Therefore, attempts will be made to recruit local governments and private industry officials to co-operate with organized labour in an attempt to establish a common front to lobby federal and provincial government to implement the long overdue marine industrial strategy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DEMAND FOR HOLDING OF GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, thousands of constituents in three federal ridings are not served by a Member of Parliament, and these vacancies have existed for months. With the present Liberal economic chaos in the country, all constituents should have access to a Member of Parliament to assist them with unemployment insurance claims, pensions, and the host of other services a member's office renders. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That the Prime Minister set aside his reluctance to call these three by-elections, take action immediately, and give Canadians some long-needed hope by calling these elections in the three vacant seats along with the other 279, by calling a general election.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR ASSESSMENT OF SOCIAL CHANGES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The 1981 census figures recently revealed dramatic social changes in Canada which will have powerful repercussions on Canada's economy and social fabric. For example, children under 15 years have decreased by 7 per cent, while persons over 65 years have increased by 17.9 per cent. Divorced persons have increased by 65 per cent, affecting half a million children. This means a tremendous increase in single parent families, a much larger pensioner group to be supported by fewer workers, and a huge increase in unemployed workers because of technological change. Inasmuch as the government develops long-range plans for energy resource development and for defence, but does no planning for human needs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That the government establish a parliamentary task force to assess the impact of these social changes and recommend long-range social policy directives to meet the future needs of Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

PROPOSED CHANGE OF SALES TAX TO WHOLESALE LEVEL

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. After analysing the draft legislation on the proposed shift of the federal sales tax to the wholesale level, the Retail Council of Canada has calculated that prices on commodities that are affected will increase from 2 per cent to 6 per cent in addition to the normal inflationary increase. This is just simply as a result of the shift of the tax.

In face of the widespread concern about inflation as expressed in the record low level of consumer confidence that was announced this morning, why is the minister persisting in his pursuit of this shift in federal sales tax to the wholesale level?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that the subject matter has been put forward for discussion. All the details of the proposal have been made public, and the intention is to receive the comments of interested bodies so that we can benefit from their views on this change.

Mr. Wilson: These comments are coming in now.

USE OF MANAGEMENT RESOURCES TO EFFECT CHANGE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, if I might quote one other comment, the Retail Council predicts, "a great wave of inflation will spread through the economy at this most damaging time imaginable." The Canadian Manufacturers' Association holds similar views. Its members are also very disturbed that officials of the minister's department are telling them to gear up for this change in legislation even before the legislation and its regulations are known in the final form.

Again, would the minister explain why he and his officials are trying to accelerate this process, because the diversion of management time and the diversion of the resources of companies will compound not just the inflation problem but the unemployment problem? There will be more lay-offs as a result of this.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has engaged in the same old game of raising fears and raising possibilities that are not in the offing whatsoever. The hon. member has stated that we have accelerated this process, that we are attempting to accelerate it. The fact of the matter is that, in response to the representations that we received from the business community, we have delayed the implementation date so that it would be possible to have the fullest possible input from the business community. We are listening very carefully to their views. The subject matter has been studied for a great many years. As the hon. member knows, one of the basic and important purposes of this change is to put Canadian manufacturers in a position as equally favourable as those imported goods with which they must compete.

Mr. Wilson: I am not raising the fears. I am repeating what the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Retail Council of Canada have said, two national organizations with a very strong interest on two sides of this particular subject.

REQUEST THAT CHANGE BE POSTPONED

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, most organizations which have made representations to the minister are very concerned about the shift causing severe inflationary pressures. I repeat again the 2 per cent to 6 per cent increase that the Retail Council has mentioned. Since this shift is directly caused by government action, and because the government is so concerned about the impact of government actions on the inflationary process, would the minister agree at this time to defer the implementation of the shift in the sales tax indefinitely? Would he authorize hearings in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to hear these organizations which are so concerned about the inflationary impact, so that we can get to the bottom of the problem?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think Parliament got to the bottom of this problem years ago. I do not know of any subject that has been more thoroughly examined than this particular one. It is on the basis of very extensive and deep consideration that the government has proposed this change.

• (1420)

The hon. member talks about a shift. It is a proposed shift. There is a discussion paper upon which we are now receiving views, and then we will introduce legislation into the House of Commons.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

VANCOUVER WATER LOT LEASE INCREASES

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The minister will know, as a result of a letter I sent to him on June 9, that some of the 1982 National Harbours Board water lot leases in the port of Vancouver have increased by close to 100 per cent. Many of the commercial and recreational leaseholders are facing increases this year of a substantial amount. This substantial increase, plus the increase of municipal property assessments in Vancouver's lower mainland, is threatening the financial viability of independent businessmen in the port of Vancouver. Some may be forced out of business.

In view of the disastrous effects these increases will have on the financial solvency of leaseholders, and the government's June 28 objective of a 6 per cent world, can the minister give this House the assurance that these 1982 increases will now be reviewed and that any increases after June 28 will be a maximum of 6 per cent?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the policy is indeed that, as Minister of Transport, in three capacities, in the department, in the regulatory agencies, and in the Crown companies for which I am responsible, my duty is to implement the six and five rule. So, I will look into that particular situation with that in mind.

Mr. Trudeau: That's right.

LEASES RENEWED FOLLOWING JUNE BUDGET

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Will he please assure the House that, when reviewing the rates, he will consider the fact that those leases increased by more than 100 per cent which were implemented in the last three months would hardly be fair, when leases renewed after June 28 may be increased by only 6 per cent? Can he reassure me once more that any lease renewed after June 28 will be increased by no more than 6 per cent?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I can only say "bis" to what I said in my first answer.

BANKS AND BANKING

SPREAD BETWEEN INTEREST PAID AND INTEREST CHARGED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Banks are paying 13.75 per cent interest to people who have savings accounts with them. At the same time they are charging 22.5 per cent to customers who want loans. That is a spread of 8.75 per cent, an all-time high spread. Would the minister discuss with the banks the very serious effects on individuals, on farmers and on small-business men, which these exorbitant interest rates are causing, and urge the banks to reduce these high interest rates on loans, which will make the minister's objective of a 6 per cent inflation rate in the next year impossible?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question really surprises me. It surprises me because the House of Commons provided an opportunity to the standing committee of the House of Commons to examine the whole question of bank profits, which would obviously lead directly, inevitably, into the very question which the hon. member raises today. His question surprises me because, rather than staying on the committee and examining the problem, he withdrew from the committee and made no contribution to its conclusions.

Mr. Orlikow: It is precisely because the committee did not deal with these questions that I am asking them here.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TALK TO BANKS' REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, at the same time as the small-business men are being pressed with regard to their loans, when their collateral needs are being very substantially increased, when they are being forced into bankruptcies, the banks have loaned billions of dollars for take-overs to a few large corporations which are not even paying the interest charges. I would ask the minister to talk to the banks so that the banks will deal with these small-business men, farmers and individuals in the same equitable way as they have dealt with the companies which are not even paying their interest on take-overs.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will consider the hon. member's representations. He has asked me to consider talking to the banks. May I ask the hon. member to return to the committee and do the job which Parliament asked him to do as a member of that committee?

EFFECT OF PROPOSED PRICE INCREASES ON INFLATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Treasury Board secretary or chairman announced that the government intends to hang tough on rate increases for government-regulated industries but will not attempt to alter any oil pricing agreements to bring them in line with this wonderful and mythical world of 6 per cent. Statistics Canada today released its latest consumer price figures which show that commodities with high energy components, such as food products, continue to lead the way up the inflationary spiral. I wonder if I can have the attention of the Minister of Finance. He probably missed my preamble. I will do it again.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Madam Speaker: Only the question matters.

Mr. Rose: How does the Minister of Finance think that the wonderful world of 6 per cent can be achieved if such an important cost component as energy, petroleum if you like, in food, transportation and home heating, will jump 10 per cent in September and 30 per cent next year? Will he explain to the House how he will achieve 6 per cent through an inflationary levelling off while he allows these massive energy increases to continue?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should reflect a little bit on his question and understand that there are countries in the world which have totally absorbed the international price of energy and are running inflation rates presently much lower than in Canada. Therefore, to single out that component as a determinant of the inflation rate is going much too far. I can give the example of West Germany which, according to the OECD, will have an inflation rate next year of 3 per cent. They have already absorbed the total international energy price. We have not yet absorbed that. We still have, and will continue to have, prices lower than the international price. Surely with that rate of entry for energy price increases into the economy, it should be possible for us to achieve a 6 per cent world next year that will provide the basis for recovery in the country.

AIR TRANSPORT

PARTICIPATION IN EUROPEAN AIRBUS PROJECT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Three or four hours ago the minister announced the intention of the federal government to buy a position in the European aircraft manufacturing Airbus industry, particularly the A320 program. What does the minister expect to obtain by way of percentage for the $500 million he is talking about in this program? What will be the total cost of the program, including the new buildings that will have to be built in Quebec? Is there to be another Crown corporation to manage this? What portion of the whole company will he get? Will it be a significant portion for that kind of money? Finally, why would he do it at all, given the economy of Canada today?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am happy to confirm to the House that I announced today that the federal government has decided to begin formal negotiations to see if there is a basis for participation by the Canadian aerospace manufacturing sector in the Airbus industry A320 aircraft program. We have not entered into any final decisions beyond the decision which could well be in Canada's interest to see if a good deal for Canada could be developed through negotiations in participating in this new project of the very successful Airbus industry.

• (1430)

I do not think it is correct to assume any financial commitment will be as high as $500 million. This certainly depends on the results of the negotiations. We are not talking about buying positions. We are talking about seeing if we can work out a good deal which can mean thousands of jobs for Canadian workers all across Canada and a very successful strengthening of our already successful aerospace industry.

My hon. friend asks what we expect to get out of this for Canada. We expect thousands of high technology jobs and a further strengthening of the Canadian aircraft sector. I am sorry my hon. friend is not ready to see this and support it.

Mr. Ellis: Madam Speaker, I hope we have an opportunity to get into debate on this, because I am not sure when this minister has done something for Canada in the past.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EFFECT ON AIR CANADA

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. In light of this announcement, will the minister guarantee that there will be no interference in the long-range purchase programs of Air Canada, given the fact that we understand that Air Canada, its management, its pilots and, indeed, some officials of the minister's own department, are opposed to this project and that the GATT agreement prohibits governments from interfering in the purchases of their Crown aircraft?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the persons who will negotiate this potential agreement with Airbus are quite aware of the realities my hon. friend raises, particularly the GATT one, so they will negotiate with that in mind and try for the best possible agreement.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

FREEDOM OF ASSEMBLY

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and it has to do with the news conference the Prime Minister held in Belgrade. I regret I have not asked him this question previously, but the Prime Minister spoke in French, and we have just had his remarks translated into English.

The Prime Minister stated that he discourages, as a matter of policy, all Canadian citizens from holding meetings which are unfriendly to other countries. Is it the policy of the national government to discourage Canadians from availing themselves of their freedom to express concerns on such matters as man's inhumanity to man, terror, and violations of human rights perpetrated by other countries?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, phrased in that way, the answer is no.

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, is it the policy of the Prime Minister or of the government to say that Canadians should be discouraged from availing themselves of such fundamental political rights as freedom of association and freedom of expression, now guaranteed by the Charter of Rights which, of course, the Prime Minister himself championed—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: —and does this constitute bringing old country rivalries to Canada, as the Prime Minister suggests?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question is somewhat confused. I will tell the hon. member that there is no intention and, indeed, no power on the part of the government to abridge any of these fundamental freedoms which are in the Bill of Rights which my party brought before Parliament and which was belatedly supported by the hon. member's party. There is no intention to do that.

Mr. Dick: The Bill of Rights was brought in by Diefenbaker.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am just repeating what the hon. member for Edinborough—

Mr. Epp: Edinborough?

Mr. Nowlan: That place in the west.

Mr. Trudeau: It was the hon. member for Edmonton North who gave my party and me credit for the Bill of Rights. He did not choose to give it to Diefenbaker. However, that is a matter hon. members opposite can quarrel about between themselves.

Mr. Wilson: Why did you say it?

Mr. Hees: You are stumbling, Pierre.

Mr. Paproski: Ten o'clock, Madam Speaker.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

CONSULTANTS' FEES—APPLICATION OF RESTRAINT CONTROLS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In a letter to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates of this House last year on the topic of government contracts with individual consultants, the minister admitted that the average daily head count for the time indicated was 4,017 persons, for an average annual cost per consultant of $33,600. This costs the people of Canada $130 million per year. Since these figures do not include the amounts paid to firms for professional and consulting services, how can the minister exclude these large numbers of people from the 6 per cent and 5 per cent ceilings imposed by Bill C-124?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will certainly take the hon. member's question as a representation to the effect that we should look very carefully at the increase in fees in consultant contracts and, of course, negotiate the best deal possible in every instance for the benefit of the Canadian taxpayer. I take that representation. I appreciate the representation, as do my colleagues. I might add, however, that this is not something to which we have been at all oblivious. We have taken steps to ensure that there are no abuses in this area and, if any come to the attention of the hon. member, I would very much appreciate his bringing them to my personal attention.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I wish the government would also negotiate with government workers for their compensation.

COST OF PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, since professional and special services account for over $2 billion in this year's estimates, and since a large proportion of that money is going to individual consultants and to consulting firms, how can the minister claim that his legislation is fair and equitable to all those who earn their living or part of their living working for the federal government? I remind the minister that many of the firms which are doing consulting work are set up for the sole purpose of doing work for the government. They are mostly Liberals, by the way.

Mr. Smith: Rubbish.

Mr. Lalonde: You don't deserve an answer.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not accept that representation from the hon. member for Churchill.

In so far as the issue of fair compensation is concerned, I remind the hon. member that Bill C-124, which is presently in committee, provides for increases of 6 per cent and 5 per cent in the wage rates payable to public servants. I think the hon. member will know from representations made to him by constituents and others—they are certainly made to me and, I am sure, to hon. members on all sides of the House—that there are many people in this country who are getting no increases and accepting rollbacks. According to last week's Gallup poll, 80 per cent of the people of Canada are prepared to take a 10 per cent decrease in order to retain their jobs. I really do not agree with the hon. member when he says that the provision in our bill for 6 per cent and 5 per cent increases is in any way unfair or inequitable.

MANPOWER

VOCATIONAL TRAINING FOR NON-TRADITIONAL TRADES—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the minister's parliamentary secretary.

Madam Speaker, as one of the members from Montreal Centre-East, I have had occasion to meet with members of the "Action Travail des femmes" movement, who came to see me with a complaint that the Canada Employment Commission was discriminating against women where training in non-traditional jobs is concerned. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether any corrective action is being contemplated or what the situation is with respect to these women who are claiming they have been discriminated against with respect to their choice of training.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for her question and I can only applaud her involvement in women's rights. I must say that I fail to understand the charge of discrimination against women in non-traditional trades. As far as specific courses are concerned, I can inform the House that out of six women who applied for a course in April, five were admitted to the interview, and two agreed to take the course. Furthermore, Madam Speaker, the Department of Employment and Immigration reserves three places for 62 training subjects in non-traditional courses. Finally, to answer the member's question, there is the training-in-industry program under which we pay 75 per cent of the trainee's salary to companies willing to provide training for women.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EASING OF CUSTOMS EXAMINATION OF IMPORTED JAPANESE VEHICLES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade regarding his announcement this morning about easing restrictions on Japanese cars held up by customs in Vancouver. Notwithstanding the pros and cons of this little game, which in itself is quite questionable, the fact is that the minister has caved in to Japanese demands once again. I just want to ask him very simply what he got in return.

• (1440)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, on the basis of this and previous questions asked by the hon. member, I know that he is looking forward to the failure of the Government of Canada's negotiations to help the Canadian automobile industry. We had positive discussions during this last weekend with the Japanese and we felt that in order to show good faith and our sincere desire to resolve this problem, we would start to expedite the inspection and entry of the cars in the port of Vancouver to the car dealers across the country.

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF CANADIAN CONTENT REGULATIONS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, the minister did not, of course, answer my question about what he received in return. This is the same rhetoric that we have been hearing from this minister for two years. His inability to come to any concrete agreements with the Japanese has not only had disastrous effects in the auto industry but has had side effects, such as lay-offs at Algoma Steel and other companies.

Will the minister at long last stop fiddling around—he has been negotiating for over two years without success, as there have been no agreements—and will he at last impose Canadian content regulations forthwith in order that jobs may be created in Canada? This fiddling around in Vancouver, and the other restrictions, will not create any jobs. Canadian content regulations are the only answer. When is the minister going to take specific action? We have had enough of this fiddling around.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, negotiations only started four months ago. I am very confident, as I have said on several occasions in this House, that negotiations will result in a very positive solution for Japan and Canada. The hon. member will just have to wait and see if he has to wipe the egg off his face.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO GILSON REPORT

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. A short time ago the minister indicated that the official response of the government to the Gilson report would be handed down some time later this month. Can he advise when he intends to make the official government response? Will it be done in this House, or will it be done by way of a news conference?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, cabinet is looking at that matter now. I hope to be able to fulfil the suggestion I had made, which is that cabinet would react to the report before the end of the month.

PORT OF CHURCHILL—FUTURE UTILIZATION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. If the compensatory rate is ultimately paid to the railways, the port of Churchill, because of its proximity to the grains producing areas, will become quite attractive. Has the minister discussed the possibility of greater utilization of the port of Churchill with the railways and with the Wheat Board? Is he considering having a study made in order to determine what the savings would be if Churchill were utilized much more than is the case now?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have not considered this in the particular context of the Gilson report. The Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board has stated on many, many occasions what his position and the position of the government is with respect to the use of the port of Churchill. In a nutshell, he has said that the Canadian Wheat Board and western farmers in general are willing to spend money in order to use the port of Churchill, but that there are limitations to what we can do.

INDUSTRY

LOSS OF EMPLOYMENT IN ST. CATHARINES-NIAGARA AREA

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister knows that there is an exodus from the work force of the St. Catharines-Niagara area, with some 2,000 persons having left that area in the last month alone and over 29,000 persons having left that same area to look for work elsewhere in the last year. In turn, that leaves 15,000 people still on the unemployment rolls looking for work, with little hope.

How many people will have to pack up and leave the St. Catharines-Niagara area, or how long will they have to wait for the Canadian content value added program which was outlined by the Minister of State (International Trade) and to which he has just referred? Also, what will he do for the shipbuilding industry, and how will our area qualify for the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program which Windsor now has?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, decisions on designation under the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program are made by the cabinet. The situation is being very actively reviewed, including the situation in St. Catharines. We hope to be in a position before too long to announce the conclusions of our review of shipbuilding policy. Our discussions with the Japanese in the whole area of our relations with them are proceeding, as the Minister of State for International Trade pointed out, on a basis which will demonstrate how much egg there is already on the faces of the opposition in light of some of their previous comments.

Generally speaking, we are certainly working through the measures and general approach of the budget of June 28 to provide a basis for the return to work of the workers in this area. I hope that the hon. member will give us his active support for that approach which will speed up the return to work of the people to whom he refers.

ALLOCATION OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. He well knows that his department has requested that the regional municipality of Niagara submit an application. This has been done. I would suggest that when the minister introduced the program the city of Windsor did not make an application because, at the same time as the program was announced, a grant was announced for that city.

Since last November the words "equity and fairness" have been used rather loosely but rather frequently. What is fair and what is equitable when the automobile community of Windsor gets $17 million and the community of St. Catharines-Niagara gets nothing?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion):

Madam Speaker, the criteria for designation by cabinet are public. The criteria involve a review of the rate of unemployment in an area connected with a downturn in a substantial industry. After the initial creation of the program and when communities have expressed interest in it, I have invited them to submit their concerns to the government so that their situation can be actively monitored by the inter-ministerial committee and so that, in timely fashion and on the basis of the application of the criteria, decisions can be taken by cabinet. I am very glad that the city of St. Catharines has taken that step.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the breakdown of the $9.1 billion increase in the deficit which shows that $4 out of every $5 of that increased deficit comes from a decline in revenue and not government spending, as the opposition would state, and that we find the same thing in the United States, with a real decline in April and May, according to The New York Times, how will the 6 and 5 program stimulate the economy in such a way that some of that revenue may be returned and the deficit lowered?

Mr. Nielsen: Figure that one out.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, since budget night I have been making the point that the substantial increase in the deficit is accounted for by the recession or, as the hon. member put it, a decline in revenues. Obviously, when the economy begins to recover, revenues will grow and the deficit will automatically decline.

The hon. member has asked how I propose to bring about recovery. The strategy of the budget is to bring about a 6 per cent economy as soon as possible, and to reduce the rate of inflation. I am satisfied that, as we reduce our rate of inflation, our rates of interest will decline and recovery will recommence.

TEACHING ENGLISH TO CHILEANS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Public Service Commission. At a time when the Commissioner of Official Languages continues to find that the bilingual situation in the Public Service of Canada is far from ideal, can he explain why the Public Service Commission recently sent the director general of its language training branch to Chile, on full salary, to facilitate the teaching of English to the professional and military elites of the dictatorial Pinochet regime, and is planning to send further branch employees to Chile for the same purpose, and again at the taxpayer's expense?

• (1450)

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will be aware that, while the Public Service Commission reports through me to the House, it is not a department of government but has that independence necessary to the proper operation of the public service. I will take notice of the hon. member's question and make inquiries through the Commission.

MEDICAL CARE

CONTENT OF INFORMATIONAL PAMPHLET

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who sent out this month, along with the family allowance cheques, a pamphlet concerning hospital insurance and medicare programs in Canada. In it she makes the claim "every province must provide coverage for all medically required services of medical doctors". If the minister was really interested in informing Canadians, why did she not take the opportunity to provide Canadians with a concise and honest synopsis of the problem of extra billing and the important debate surrounding it, instead of confining herself to raising false expectations among Canadians who live in provinces or communities where extra billing is a problem?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am afraid I disagree with the interpretation of the hon. member, and it is not the first time. The inserts are meant to tell people of their rights. If the people are not the guardians of medicare in this country, I do not know who will be. I do not think I should throw at citizens the problems we are paid to solve. We are in the process of negotiations, and I hope to have good results without having to throw problems instead of solutions at people.

TRADE

TRANSPORTATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES TO JAPAN

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade, and arises out of the difficulties we currently seem to be having in developing the right—no other word is immediately at hand—to build those ships which will transport our natural resources. Just last Friday the Minister of Energy, in response to a question, indicated that this matter had been raised with Japanese officials. Can the minister enlighten us on the Japanese response to the request, presumably, to transport not only natural gas but coal and other minerals to that country?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I was not a party to those discussions so I am afraid I cannot answer the hon. member.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, it surprises me that the minister was not a party to those discussions. I can only presume he has never bothered to raise the question.

REPRESENTATIONS TO JAPANESE OFFICIALS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who indicated to this House the other day that he in fact had raised with Janapese officials the question of the transportation of liquefied natural gas from Canada. Can the Minister be a bit more precise in his answer and indicate to this House the response of Japanese trade officials to any request for that right which he might have put forward?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the representation I made was on the occasion of a visit to my office by a group of Japanese private businessmen who were interested in that particular project. At that time we had no indication from the Government of British Columbia of which project they were sponsoring or favouring. I indicated at that time that our view, as the Government of Canada, is that all those projects should have a significant Canadian content and a significant degree of benefit for the Canadian people. I indicated they should bear that in mind in their plans for whatever they wanted to do.

As I indicated to the House before, this proposal is going to be put before the National Energy Board, there will be the normal hearing, and the government will consider the recommendations of the NEB when it makes its report. In the meantime, the views of the Government of Canada are well known; I have indicated them privately to those private parties interested, but they are also part of the National Energy Program and they have been indicated quite clearly in the past.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

QUERY RESPECTING APPLICATION OF SIX PER CENT RULE TO TWO-PRICE SYSTEM

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, in his responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board. On July 8 I asked the minister if he had given consideration to any increase or change in the two-price system for wheat which expires July 31, ten days from now. Can he inform the House and the producers whether the 6 per cent rule will apply to the two-price system as it applies to domestic grain?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I cannot do that at this time.

ANNOUNCEMENT IN SENATE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I find it strange that the minister cannot give me an answer today since his assistant in the Senate gave an answer to Senator Roblin on July 7, when he stated that the 6 per cent rule would apply because the mechanism was already in place. Was the assistant to the minister wrong, or has there been a change in the decision since July 7?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the rule is that the 6 per cent applies in all circumstances, except when ministers can demonstrate to the cabinet group that it should not because of special circumstances.

COMMUNICATIONS

NORTHWESTEL—APPLICATION FOR THIRTY PER CENT RATE INCREASE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. NorthwesTel, a Crown agency under his jurisdiction, has an application before the CRTC for an increase of over 30 per cent in telephone rates. Is it going to be instructed by the minister to amend that application to limit the requested increase to 6 per cent?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if it is still only an application maybe they will not get more than 6 per cent in the first place. In the second place, if they get more than 6 per cent the regulatory agency will have to explain why to the government. If it can be justified, presumably the government will accept that. If not, the government can use the power it has to change the decision of the regulatory agency.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA REGIONAL OFFICE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister and follows up on a series of questions earlier this week regarding the rather casual approach of the Minister of Indian Affairs to the discharge of his special trust responsibilities to Indian people and the discharge of his statutory obligations to the House. Having been informed by the Deputy Prime Minister, who had similar questions posed to him earlier this week, has the Prime Minister read the testimony before the committee which led the committee to table a report, and later on a petition signed by all members of the committee, insisting that the minister implement an independent inquiry into the affairs of the Department of Indian Affairs in British Columbia? Also, does he know that the minister's own officials have insisted that an independent inquiry would be necessary? If he has read the testimony, has he advised the minister to review his decision to implement only a cover-up inquiry which is now under way?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to the question is no, Madam Speaker.

DISCHARGE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I will ask the Prime Minister this specific question. Why is it that the Minister of Indian Affairs can get away with totally ignoring his statutory obligations to this House and the orders it has made? One example is the requirement to report annually on the implementation of the James Bay Agreement. When is this minister going to live up to his responsibilities to this House and his special responsibilities on behalf of the native people of this country? How long can he get away with that? Madam Speaker, you will recall that—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I heard the minister answer similar questions in the House earlier this week. The minister is a frequent attendant at question period, and he will be happy to deal with those questions again.

ENERGY

PRODUCTION OF WESTERN SHUT-IN OIL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Very strong representations have been made by the oil industry of Canada concerning shut-in oil in the western sedementary basin and the adverse effect this has had on their cash flow. In light of that, can the minister say what progress is being made on this problem and whether he plans any further actions?

• (1500)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we have announced a number of steps in the past couple of months in this regard. Those steps have already produced very, very significant results. Thanks to our efforts we have been able to increase our sales of heavy crude to the United States and also the sale of light sour crude oil from Saskatchewan.

As far as conventional light crude oil is concerned, we have been able to increase significantly the take up of that oil in eastern Canada, particularly in the maritimes, thanks to the subsidy we are providing for the transportation of that oil in order to encourage the consumption of Canadian oil rather than imported oil. As the National Energy Board announced yesterday, the demand in August for western crude oil appears to exceed the available and transportable supply. I think this is a clear demonstration that we have taken our responsibilities and done everything that could be done to reduce, if not eliminate, the situation with regard to shut-in oil.

There may be some difficulties at various times of the year, some fluctuations, but following our discussions with the Government of Alberta, in particular, and the Government of Saskatchewan, I think we are going to be able to have a much more orderly situation than we have had in the past, and I thank the hon. member for his interest in this matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RESIGNATION OF MR. ETHIER, DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE HOUSE

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that Mr. Denis Ethier, member for the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, has resigned as Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole, effective July 8, 1982.

I shall not elaborate on the reasons for the hon. member's decision, but I am certain that all members of this House are deeply grateful to him for the services he has rendered. Personally, I am sorry to see him go, and I wish to thank him publicly for his eminently responsible attitude and for the manner in which he collaborated with the members representing the Chair in the House of Commons.

PETITION

REQUEST THAT MR. OUELLET MEET WITH HOME OWNERS ADVISORY COUNCIL ON UFFI

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians appealing to the government to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to have a meeting this weekend with the home owners advisory council on urea formaldehyde foam insulation. It is apparent from the petition that the co-ordinator of the UFFI program has chosen this time to go on holidays as has the chairman of the advisory committee, and the minister has refused to meet with them to discuss vital and important orders. It is also clearly apparent that the Conservative Party is blowing hot and cold on this issue and refuses to take a petition.

Some hon. Members: Rubbish.

Mr. Skelly: Therefore, I have the honour to present a petition signed by Members of Parliament asking for that meeting to take place.

Hon. I wish to give notice that, at a future sitting of the House, I shall propose a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, to allocate two additional sitting days to the said stage of Bill C-125.

SEARCH AND RESCUE EQUIPMENT ON WEST COAST

Question No. 4,234—Mr. Cook:

1. What is the inventory of Department of Transport helicopters and personnel on British Columbia's west coast?

2. At what locations in British Columbia are the crafts and crew based?

3. On how many occasions in the last year were the helicopters involved in air search and rescue expeditions and mercy flights on the west coast?

4. What was the approximate location of the calls responded to by the helicopters?

5. What air search and rescue equipment do the crafts carry?

6. What search and rescue training programs were administered to the crews of the helicopters?

7. Which of the helicopters were involved in each individual search and rescue mission?

8. In which cases were the helicopters the (a) primary (b) secondary crafts involved in the air search and rescue missions?

9. What was the approximate response time for the crafts in the cases where they were involved in air search and rescue and mercy flights?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. One Sikorsky S61, one Bell 212, three Alouette III, one Bell 206B (temporary assignment). Twelve pilots, eleven helicopter engineers, one helicopter electrician.

2. Prince Rupert:	Victoria:
CG 22—Sikorsky S61	CG 23—Bell 212
	CG 24—Alouette 111
Five pilots	CG 25—Alouette 111
Four engineers	CG 26—Alouette 111
One electrician	CG 79—Bell 206B
	Seven pilots
	Seven engineers

3. According to official records kept at RCC Victoria, CG helicopters were involved in 12 search and rescue missions in 1981.

5. Coast Guard helicopters are mainly used in support to its aids to navigation program and for ice reconnaissance duties when stationed on board icebreakers during winter months or while engaged in Arctic resupply missions. These aircraft are occasionally tasked in a secondary role to search and rescue but their participation is limited to coastal searches and mercy flights. Coast Guard helicopters are generally not large enough to provide a primary search and rescue capability and consequently, specialized equipment such as rescue hoists, survival packages, life rafts and extensive radio communication equipment cannot be carried on board for that purpose.

6. The Department of National Defence is charged with the responsibility for providing primary air resources in support of marine search and rescue. On the west coast this responsibility is discharged by 442 Squadron based at Comox on the east coast of Vancouver Island, whose resources consist of three Buffalo fixed-wing search aircraft and four Labrador/Voyageur rescue helicopters. The helicopters carry five crew members, two of which are qualified search and rescue specialists.

Because the Department of Transport's responsibility is to provide marine resources for search and rescue, as opposed to air resources, and because Coast Guard helicopters are not capable of carrying out primary search and rescue operations, helicopter crews do not receive any formal training in search and rescue.

4, 7, 8 and 9. The table below shows CG helicopters involvement in SAR missions during 1981.

1. What was the total cost to the Canadian National Railways to erect the CN Tower in Toronto?

2. How much land, expressed in square feet, is used by the CN Tower?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. $59.0 million, 2. 417,958 square feet.

ATC IN TRAINING POSITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES REPORTED TO STATSCAN

Question No. 4,376—Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton):

1. Who is responsible for deciding how unemployment figures are reported by Statistics Canada?

2. Is the lowest reported category the metropolitan area and, if so, for what reason?

3. Who provides local municipalities and towns with statistics for their municipalities?

4. Can Statistics Canada provide these statistics on a regular basis?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. Under the Statistics Act, Statistics Canada must collect, compile, analyse, abstract, and publish statistical information, pertaining to, inter alia, labour and employment. Matters relating to content, format, timing and other considerations relating to the reporting of unemployment data by Statistics Canada are determined by the staff assigned to the labour force survey, which is the vehicle used to measure unemployment in Canada on a monthly basis.

2. The lowest geographic categories for which monthly labour force survey data are reported are for 23 metropolitan areas and 52 sub-provincial economic regions (or groups of regions). Labour force survey data are derived from a sample survey of households throughout Canada, and, with very few exceptions, the survey sample size is not large enough to produce meaningful estimates for areas smaller than these metropolitan areas or economic regions.

3. Unemployment estimates for local municipalities and towns comparable to the monthly labour force survey data are not available.

4. Statistics Canada provides labour force data for local municipalities and towns on a regular basis from the census of population, but cannot presently provide such data more frequently from existing surveys or other sources.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, once again I ask the parliamentary secretary why he has affronted the House by not answering question No. 2,042 which was put on the Order Paper on January 29, 1981. The question is, simply, what was the total cost of the Prime Minister's world tour in December, 1980, January, 1981. Is there any possible excuse for affronting Parliament in this way?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am shocked the hear the suggestion that Parliament has been affronted by this government, which has answered 3,492 questions on the Order Paper as of today. That is an excellent record and a good batting average. I have made inquiries as to that particular matter and I am advised that the answer to the hon. member's question is in preparation. SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83

The House resumed from Tuesday, July 20, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-125, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment of Mr. Clark (p. 19456).

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, last evening I was discussing the fact that those on the opposite side of the House are noticeably quiet when it comes to condemning publicly the financial policies of the government. At that time I provided a long and detailed list of the many instances when shocking and wasteful spending on the part of this government and its agencies has resulted in taxpayers' dollars literally being thrown away. I mentioned how rare it was for anyone on the other side to object to the burden this was placing on all Canadians. The silence from the other side of the House has been deafening.

I mentioned, in particular, the Liberals' closed-mouth approach in their delay to call three byelections in Timiskaming, Broadview-Greenwood and Leeds-Grenville so that Canadians in those three ridings could have a voice in the House. I suggested that everyone, including those on the opposite side, knew that members of the government could not even bear to think of the humiliation they would receive at the polls if those byelections were called. Better to let thousands and thousands of Canadians remain unrepresented than to embarrass the 145 opposite. If the thought of defeat in only three ridings is enough to cause those opposite to shudder, small wonder the government is absolutely refusing even to consider calling a general election. They certainly do not want to let voters in every riding have the opportunity to defeat the entire bunch, which is what would happen if Canadians were given the chance.

• (1510)

People across the nation know that the only 6 per cent solution to save this country is the one which results in the government being reduced to 6 per cent or less representation in Parliament. The government is asking Canadians to help it solve our problems. I can assure the House that they are trying to. Many Members of Parliament on all sides of the House, but especially those of us on this side of the House, are receiving letters, telephone calls and representations as to how we on this side, or Canadians in general, can get rid of the government. There is talk of petitions being presented across the country, in Liberal ridings as well. There are letters to the editors as to how the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can be impeached. These letters come from people who consider that there is legislation in Canada similar to that in the United States where a president under certain circumstances can be impeached. Canadians would love to do something to change the government. They know that the government is the problem and only an election will provide us with a solution. Yet the government, clinging to power for the sake of power, has other ideas. It denies any and all responsibility. According to the government, the guilty culprits are Canadians.

The government says that Canadians expect too much. I suggest to those on the opposite side of the House that since Canadians are footing the bill and paying the shot, they have a right to their expectations. Canadians have a right to expect that the billions of dollars they pay in taxes each year will be spent wisely in their behalf.

Recently the Fraser Institute reported that the tax bill of the average Canadian family has increased by 619 per cent between 1961 and 1980. We can imagine how much it has increased and will increase by the end of 1982. The government simply legislates increases to its coffers, adding greed to arrogance and the quest to remain in power. Canadians have the right to expect that this extra money taken from them is being spent wisely in their behalf.

How wisely was it spent and in whose behalf when Petro-Canada gave $480,000 to 16 Norwegian and French oil drillers not to work? Each of these drillers was given $30,000 and sent home because officials at Petro-Canada neglected to read the relevant immigration regulation, or were totally unaware of its existence, the regulation which bars foreign workers from the jobs involved.

How wise was it when the CBC flew 74 people to Versailles to cover the summit conference when the Global and CTV networks sent over four people each? If the two privately-owned networks could provide excellent coverage of the event with four people each, why in heaven's name were 70 extra people needed by the CBC? The trip to Versailles contained other vivid illustrations of the problems the government is causing.

Prior to Versailles the Prime Minister promised that he would return home with solutions to the economic morass his government had created in the country. He did not admit that his government had created the problems, just the opposite. He said that Canada's economic woes were the direct result of the policies of other nations, most notably the United States, so he would go to Versailles and tell the leaders of the other nations just how things should be done. As we all know, things did not quite work out that way. The leaders of the other nations were far too busy working out their own plans for economic growth to be bothered listening to the whines and complaints of a finger-pointer, so the Prime Minister returned home petulant and emptyhanded. Rather than making the trip to Versailles, the Prime Minister would have been well advised to travel along the road to Damascus.

A conversion is clearly in order. The Prime Minister must be converted from his thinking that the problems he has created are the fault of others. He must be converted from thinking that only he knows best what shape and form the nation should assume, and that the opposite opinions of others are to be dismissed out of hand. He must be converted from thinking that the power of his office is absolute and that he is not accountable to the people. He must be converted from thinking that the plight of the people is their own fault, and he must realize that it is the fault of his government. If the Prime Minister does not walk along the road to Damascus, the nation will continue on the road to ruin.

There is little hope the government will abandon its irresponsible spending. Right now it is before the House asking for authority to borrow $11 billion more. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the government should give this matter second thoughts. They know that when it is totalled it is more than they require. If they reduced this amount to $7 billion, it would probably be more in line with their actual needs. There is little hope the government will try to do much along this line or try to reduce the massive debt.

I feel very strongly that we in the House should not and must not approve this supplementary borrowing authority in its full amount. I would never approve throwing good money after bad, especially good money in the direction of a bad government. The hole in which the government has put the country is too massive and too costly to be overlooked. We may not be able to stop passage of the bill, but come the next election, Canadians will dig another hole and bury the government in it.

Columnists across the country have been writing scathing articles on the performance of the government. One appeared in the Tuesday, July 20 edition of The Toronto Sun entitled, "6 Per Cent Snake Oil". It contains many truths. In part it reads:

> That beehive of mediocrity, the CBC, cost us $792.2 million this past year, a 10 per cent increase over the previous year.

Also it talked about Petro-Canada and what has gone on in that corporation. I should like to refer to another quotation of this very astute columnist, Laura Sabia, which reads:

Multiculturalism, bilingualism and metrication cost us billions of dollars we couldn't afford, taxpayers money poured into a bottomless pit.

The Fraser Institute recently published a report on taxes by all three levels of government.

As I mentioned before, this report showed astronomical increases in the tax bill placed upon the shoulders of average Canadian families which can ill afford them. It continued:

While jobs are lost everywhere, the economy is in shambles, the government increases its bureaucracy by 8,000—

I could go on and on with horror stories. I hope hon. members on all sides of the House will see that the $11 billion is asking for far too much and that it should be reduced. If not, of course we will be voting against Bill C-125 which will almost give the government a blank cheque to spend and spend and spend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1520)

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to rise and comment on this legislation today. I might add that I am looking forward to hearing the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) later this afternoon who will be reflecting upon this bill in more detail than I am about to do.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are filibustering the bill.

Mr. Fisher: At this point I intend simply to pass along a few reactions I have had from listening to some of my colleagues and friends from all sides during the course of this debate when they talked about the economy and the government's management of it. I would also like to discuss how members opposite would offer alternatives to the Canadian people.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why do we not vote on it then?

Mr. Fisher: On Monday, I listened with great interest to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) who, I believe, made some unwarranted personal attacks which were basically attempts to demean the performance of the government rather than present alternatives. We have listened to this hollow discussion of government policies for some time during this debate. We have not heard from the other side the alternatives to current policies.

I believe all Canadians would welcome—I certainly would—the very refreshing insights into wasteful expenditures or expenditures which have not been agreed to. I believe that all Canadians would agree with any member who would rise in his place to suggest that an expenditure on one item would have been put to better use if it had been given to an ordinary person in need. I welcome those concerns.

I have listened to concerned members opposite talk about unemployment. For example, I believe that the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has given us a lucid and sincere description of unemployment in his riding. He has often brought home to us the meaning of the slowdown in his riding owing to the energy policy. At the time it is not enough to raise small issues such as that of the brief cases and claim that unemployment in Athabasca will be solved by that issue. Instead, we on this side of the House are attempting to emphasize exactly what the hon. member for Athabasca has reminded us of, that government spending must go to people. I urge hon. members opposite to focus on government spending on services when they begin to present their alternatives.

I recall the debate on federal-provincial spending which took place in the House a few months ago. At that time we were discussing some $105 billion that the government is giving to the provinces in the form of transfer payments over the next five years. That money, which is gathered from Canadians all across the country, is being used to redistribute our resources to those people in need. Those expenditures are being used for universities, health care, and medicare. I felt that we had an excellent debate in the House because it focused on the qualities of those services and on the need for additional spending in those areas.

My hon. friend, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), whom I see across the way, while very often chastising us for our spending, shone in that debate because he was constantly urging that we spend more money for services rather than blindly cut back. It was that reasoned compassion that made his speeches so enlightening at that time. That same compassion expressed by the hon. member for Athabasca has often made his speeches compelling to those of us listening to them. That compassion and dedication which was so prevalent during that debate has made the Conservative speeches during this debate so hollow in its absence.

In this debate I would like to focus on some of the issues that are involved in our spending. With respect to unemployment, there are many members here who represent constituencies where unemployment is tragically high. Fortunately, unemployment levels are quite low in my riding and I, as well as the people in my riding, welcome the opportunity to share our strength and wealth with Canadians who are in greater need. This morning, I spoke on a radio talk show in Regina where numerous callers made the same point. The point they made was that the people in Regina, where unemployment is severe but not as great as in other parts of Canada, were prepared to share their wealth with those places which are in greater need. That is the purpose of our spending in Ottawa. Our role is to help Canadians overcome tragic economic periods like this and to benefit from our common prosperity. That sense of sharing is the motivation behind the spending which we have undertaken in so many of our programs.

I would refer hon. members to the speech of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). He had very little time for that type of concern in his speech. Instead, he spent most of his time delivering attacks, hollow rhetoric and vague discussions of government waste while throwing in one or two examples about taxis and briefcases, issues which he thought significant. He did not tell us in any way how he would use this great nation's wealth to help those most in need.

He would not come to a riding such as mine where there is relative comfort and prosperity to tell my constituents how their great wealth could be used in less fortunate areas. It is hollow arguments such as these which I believe have cost the party opposite dearly.

I listened with equal interest to some of the speeches made by members of the New Democratic Party. I was disappointed, however, by those speeches because I often look to them to give us some motivation beyond the rhetoric which we hear in the House. I believe that those members usually remind us of the lives of ordinary Canadians. But we did not hear that during this debate. I challenge some of them to rise to the occasion and give us a decent speech dealing with how the government should use its resources in the future.

The speech of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) was a grand old piece of rhetoric about the sins of capitalism, and the two old line parties which he called Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee. We heard this rhetoric years ago and it has been worn out and tired for decades.

An hon. Member: It is still true.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member says that it is still true. It is not true. It has not stood the test of history. What has stood the test of history in his party has been an open concern for the ordinary Canadian. His party has often presented that concern very well but they have failed in this debate.

Why am I constantly coming back to this question? Why am I suggesting a discussion that we have a discussion about the people instead of a debate on hollow rhetoric?

Mr. Blenkarn: To waste time.

Mr. Fisher: I am doing it because the deficit today is a result of the government's expenditures on people and its response to a severe recession. This is not a hollow issue. This deficit is not to serve new programs, new expenditures or untried ideas. It is rather, a result of an attempt to solve difficulties and suffering caused by the recession. I suggest it would be a betrayal of our fellow Canadians to ignore that suffering by resorting to hollow political rhetoric—

Mr. Taylor: Is that why you introduced closure?

Mr. Fisher: —which we heard from the Leader of the Conservative Party and the first speaker from the New Democratic Party. We have a very severe problem which is clearly typified by the size of the government's deficit and our borrowing requirements.

• (1530)

We on this side take that very, very seriously. The minister has indicated that his budget has been brought down in response to the recession. He has indicated that the new demands caused by the severity, the depth and the speed of the recession were his motivation in preparing his June budget. In that budget he has given us an answer to the human problems and the suffering reflected in the recession, answers that did not come forward from either the Official Opposition or its leader, or from the New Democratic Party. I refer specifically to the 6 per cent world that the government is proposing to all Canadians. The 6 per cent world is a manageable target which will bring all of us personal relief from the great ravages of inflation and the great demands and pressures of our recession. The 6 per cent world is our strength. The 12 per cent world is a continued world of weakness. I look forward to the time when the Conservative Party will be able to react to people instead of advancing hollow rhetoric, when it will be able to react to the specific problems of the economy rather than play phony games in this House. I think our fellow Canadians are asking us for that kind of sincerity and reflection on all sides.

When we hear about the 6 per cent world as presented in the budget, we are also hearing about the minister's great concern for the debt burden being carried by the government. We do not want to add to that at all. When we look we can see a marvellous compromise between the demands of the economy today, the great needs of ordinary people, and the need for prudent government.

Mr. Taylor: Is that why you increased the rent in Banff?

Mr. Fisher: We see aid for housing going out to the tune of $400 million, aid to small businesses amounting to another $400 million, several hundred millions of dollars for job creation and $100 million for the Farm Credit Corporation. All this money is being aimed at Canadians in great need.

Mr. Blenkarn: Raising taxes.

Mr. Fisher: It is not being aimed at wasteful ideas or new, untried schemes. It is certainly stemming from a much greater consciousness and awareness of the economy and of the people than was reflected by the Leader of the Opposition the other day. Hundreds of millions of dollars are being sent to people in great need, all coming as a result of our ability to find those savings inside our budget, to reorder our priorities and to put that money into much more needy areas, taking it from areas where there can be genuine savings without creating suffering. That is a response to the great problems that our economy faces and it has been reflected, since the budget, in much more hopeful attitudes among the Canadian people. We can look through sector after sector, area after area, towns and cities across this country, where people have said that the budget is offering them hope to get out of our current trouble.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fisher: For example, the budget has been very well received in the housing sector. The housing sector has seen the hundreds of millions of dollars that we are offering this year alone, and they also see the great hope contained in the new tax proposals currently under study. Those proposals will bring permanent relief to that industry. That industry has responded from coast to coast by telling us that we have indeed given it the help it wants in order to build the homes needed by young Canadians. That is money that we found in response to specific human problems, and money that we found without adding a new burden to the deficit. That is a reasonable response to a great problem and an alternative that we unfortunately did not hear from the hon. member speaking for the New Democratic Party when he talked about tweedledum and tweedledee or the ills of capitalism or whatever other hollow argument he put forward for 40 minutes, which had nothing to do with the way ordinary Canadians live.

Some hon. Members: Not true.

Mr. Fisher: That hollow approach was very sadly put forward by our good friends in the New Democratic Party whose ideas we usually deeply respect, and an equally hollow approach was put forward by a man held in great esteem by his fellow Canadians, the Leader of the Opposition. Those hollow arguments are great failures in the middle of a debate and an emergency like this. Let our fellow Canadians know that sly phrases about briefcases, or silly little references to funny money, or some kind of personal attack against the minister are not answers to serious economic issues. Those will stand as hollow arguments in the eyes of our fellow Canadians.

Mr. Nielsen: How about $120 million on advertising?

Mr. Fisher: Let me just close by pointing out a couple of small points that I hope we will be able to take away with us. Here we have seen attempts to divide our fellow Canadians by telling them that a 6 per cent world is not possible and will create suffering among groups and individuals across the country. Let me turn the world over on that argument. Let me point out that a 6 per cent world, as proposed in the budget, will bring us economic health and real growth. It will bring us an answer to high interest rates. It will bring businessmen hope for their future investments and will give workers some stability in their jobs.

Mr. Taylor: Talk, talk, talk.

Mr. Fisher: Just this morning I received a telephone call from a civil servant in Regina. He wanted to know why I was putting the lid on his salary. I asked him, "When you go to work tomorrow morning, will you have a job?" I asked him whether every other Canadian can give the same answer to the question, "When you go to work tomorrow morning, will you have to account for your job the way one must in the private sector?" I give the man full credit for answering, "No". I asked him, "Is it not time for us to join together to make some kind of sacrifice by contributing in some way to the health and strength of our economy?" Again, to give the man full credit, he agreed that it was time and that his job was secure and he could make a small sacrifice which would benefit someone else. He said he was ready to do it. I think most Canadians are like that today. Most Canadians are ready to join in the national effort to restore some hope and health. Those Canadians are ready to take on a great challenge to get rid of the 12 per cent weakness and restore some strength by taking slightly less. I think all Canadians instinctively know that they, too, will have an opportunity to provide some economic hope and health by taking slightly less now. That is the great message of the budget.

Mr. Deans: Are you prepared to take less than you are borrowing?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member asks me if I am prepared to take less in my borrowing, and I want to tell him that, yes, we are. Let the hon. member come to us with something more than the tweedledum and tweedledee statement of the hon. member for Skeena. Let him come with some concrete suggestions, and they will be seriously considered indeed. This minister and this government have a track record for taking those things seriously.

Mr. Deans: Is that why you are moving closure?

Mr. Fisher: We are indeed prepared to recycle our money, make better use of it, to rearrange our priorities or to cut back, and we have shown that. But what we have not shown, and this kind of argument is recognized by the other side, and what we are not prepared to do, is to present arguments which will make people poorer or allow us to make our savings on the backs of poor people.

• (1540)

That is why I say to the hon. member that if he can come up with some suggestions within that limit, we will be more than happy to listen to them. The minister and the government have shown repeatedly that they do not want to add unnecessarily to the burdens the government places on the economy. However, we will not solve that equation by adding more burdens to ordinary people.

I think I can close with that point and say that as a taxpayer, a businessman and a person coming from a well to do part of the country, I do not like the deficit. I do not think any Canadian wants to see the deficit particularly high. I do not think any Canadian wants to see a government embark on wasteful spending. I do not think any Canadian wants to believe that the government is borrowing unnecessarily. At the same time, as I said to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), no Canadian wants to see us solve that problem by crippling the poor, robbing the provinces or taking money away from a vital program which adds to our great national wealth or to the hope of our citizens.

It has been a real pleasure for me to rise so unexpectedly in this debate. I see the hon. member for Lincoln is here. I know that he is prepared to add much more eloquently to the debate than I have. I hope that members opposite are prepared to present, some day, solid arguments instead of personal attacks or hollow rhetoric that offers no answers in our situation today. Given those challenges, we look forward to what they will have to say later in the day.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Mackasey: I have not said a word yet and "The Anvil Chorus" has begun. Those hon. members should watch their blood pressure.

I listened with a great degree of satisfaction and interest to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher). I think hon. members opposite agree that he is one of the more knowledgeable members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Lewis: Compared to whom?

Mr. Mackasey: The reaction of the opposition indicates exactly that. If he is able to raise such a storm in the 15 or 20 minutes in which he contributed to the House, it is a tribute to his intelligence, eloquence and knowledge of the subject.

I want to speak to the subject of supplementary borrowing authority. This is an extremely important piece of legislation. Members opposite have fulfilled their role in bringing that fact to the attention of the public, those who watch it over television, those who read about it in the newspapers and those who grace us with their presence in the gallery.

It is unfortunate that, in the few minutes I had to review the arguments of members opposite, I did not find one who addressed himself to the issue. I was surprised that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), in discussing the deficit, would use per capita figures as a basis of comparison with the United States. Any youngster, any first-year economic student will tell you that the accepted criterion or standard of measuring deficits anywhere in the industrialized world is in relation to the GNP. That is fundamental. It is first-year economics.

Mr. Wilson: We say that too.

Mr. Mackasey: Obviously the gentleman speaking from his seat should learn his economics. When you talk about our deficit in relation to our population, of course our per capita ratio is much higher than that of the United States, 22 million people versus 220 million people. It is a bit of trivia. What is the key to our deficit, as the very eloquent—

Mr. Kempling: What business were you ever in?

Mr. Mackasey: The minister indicated in his speech the other day—and I suggest members opposite read it—that our ratio of GNP to our deficit runs about 5.4 per cent. Some economists say it is 5.2 per cent, and some say it is as low as 4.4 per cent, but on a national basis it is probably around 5.2 per cent. In the United States it is around 5.4 per cent.

Mr. Wilson: That's wrong.

Mr. Mackasey: Members opposite are in the happy situation of agreeing with what they want to agree with and disagreeing when they do not like the truth. That is why they, not us, have very little credibility in the country today.

In the forties the deficit in relation to our GNP was 23 per cent. What is significant about the deficit is its composition. What does it reflect? Does it reflect spending? Does it reflect waste? What does it reflect apart from our ability one day to finance it and one day to repay it? That is the significant difference in our deficit as opposed to that of the Americans.

The American deficit is clearly related to military spending. The concern in the business community in the United States is what will happen when their economy recovers. What proportion of their GNP will be directed to reducing their deficit, or will it continue to be the policy in the United States to carry on massive spending on the military? That is the real problem bothering the Americans. It is a legitimate concern. It is probably the greatest defender of democracy in the world, but the role they have to play today as opposed to the eastern bloc, the role Great Britain used to play, is the need to arm, to spend on the military, to be vigilant. It is not an easy role. I do not envy it. However, it reflects its spending.

What makes the business community in the United States apprehensive about their deficit is that they perpetually ask themselves, "If we borrow to spend and borrow for this reason or that reason, how do we know that our government, the American government, will work assiduously to bring down the deficit, which is costly, which theoretically competes with private enterprise for the pool of capital, which is not all that large?"

Our deficit is entirely different. It reflects the nature of Canada. It reflects our conviction that the have provinces must help the have-not provinces. It reflects our commitment in the Constitution to the concept of transfer payments. It reflects the obligation of the central government to help the less fortunate, less wealthy provinces, through the system of transfers.

Then we have the massive unemployment problem in this country. There are automatic regulators built into our economic system. That increases the outflow of transfers to the provinces, if only to look after the outflow of welfare payments in those provinces as represented by the Canada Assistance Plan.

The other addition to our deficit, which is automatic, and thank God it is, is the payment of the unemployment insurance benefits to those less fortunate than ourselves who, for no reason of their own, are out of work and very dependent on unemployment insurance benefits. It is no mystery to anyone in the House of Commons that when you have 1.5 million people out of work, the cash flow problems of unemployment insurance are real and must be met by the government. They are reflected in the deficit.

By the same token, when the economy starts to recover in Canada, unlike the United States, when unemployment is reduced, employment begins to increase again and the numbers of unemployed start to decrease, immediately and automatically the transfers of money through the Canada Assistance Plan will be substantially less. The pay-outs under unemployment insurance will be substantially less. Automatically the deficit shrinks at an amazingly rapid rate. It is significant, when you look at the figures for 1978 and 1979, that our deficit in those days was about 5.2, as opposed to 5.4 today.

• (1550)

I am not suggesting that the deficit is a good thing or that we would not be better without it, but I am suggesting that opposition members as well as hon. members on my side of the House have an obligation to assure Canadians that our deficit is something with which we can cope, something we can well finance and something which should not be the cause of panic or the gloom or doom for which members of the opposition have been famous in the last few months. I would prefer that hon. members opposite who are interested in this subject free themselves of partisanship. One of my favourites is grinning at the back; he loves to listen and learn. I refer him to an article entitled "Inflation and the Budget Balance" which I found in the library. It was produced by the Canadian Public Policy group in the summer of 1977.

Mr. Thacker: It is 1982 now, Bryce.

Mr. Mackasey: The article entitled "Deficit Financing and Inflation: A Review of the Evidence" was written not by a labour leader and not by a Liberal but by a very outstanding economist named Robert B. Crozier of the Conference Board in 1977. After reviewing all the evidence and after much debate with other economists in conferences set up by the Canadian Public Policy group, Mr. Crozier reached the conclusion that the deficit is not the cause of inflation but the result of inflation. He proved that very easily with graphs and tables showing that the deficit during the high-inflation seventies was relatively low. Our deficit is the result of unemployment. The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) pointed out that $4 of every $5 of the deficit represents payments to the provinces to finance welfare and payments to Canadians through unemployment insurance. Hon. members opposite can scream and yap from their seats if they like, but their time would be better used if they spent it in the library learning the basics of economics. I cannot cope with their arguments and catcalls; I suggest—gently and as a friend—that they spend 15 or 20 minutes of their day—as I like to do—in the Parliamentary Library, which is the finest in the world, and learn the basic facts which any university student who has been through economics understands.

Recently in my riding I spoke with a group of people in the agricultural sector who were concerned and worried about the deficit. I asked who in that group did not have a deficit and who did not owe money on his farm. I asked who had bought a farm without borrowing. Those are deficits. One gentleman said, "Of course I have a deficit, but I have no problem meeting my commitments." He told me he would have no problem repaying his deficit. He said he is a thousand times wealthier now than 20 years ago. Of course he is right, and so is this country. If we were to total up the assets of our country on a balance sheet, including our bridges, our roads, our airlines and our airports, we would see that we have an extremely wealthy country. The gloomsters and doomsters of socialism in the corner do not appreciate the wealth and the possibilities for the future this country offers young people who are prepared to understand that the free-enterprise system, which two parties in this House represent, has resulted in this country's being the most affluent, advanced, civilized, educated and healthiest in the world. Hon. members in the far corner do not understand that, and I hope they never do. If they do not, they will never get out of that corner.

Mr. Siddon: You guys are the biggest socialists of all.

Mr. Mackasey: I love the question period and never interfere or heckle because I learn every day. I was almost convinced over the last few months, strictly by the repetition of hon. members opposite. One gets a little confused, and sometimes common sense disappears. It seems to me that what we heard for weeks from the opposition side was that if the dollar dropped below 80 cents U.S., this country would be doomed and that there would be such a massive outflow of capital from Canada to the United States that we would have to impose controls. We were told that if we did not impose controls, the value of our dollar would drop to 50 cents or less. Was that not the message we heard from the opposition for months on end? Every day in question period the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was bombarded by questions about the dollar's dropping below 80 cents. Gloom and doom; people were terrified. They had a right to be terrified when they saw their elected members acting so irresponsibly. However, what has happened to the dollar? If the dollar was the barometer of people's lack of confidence in the government two weeks ago when its value was 77 cents, are hon. members opposite now prepared to say that Canadians have regained confidence because the dollar is valued at 80 cents today?

Mr. Huntington: What happened to the U.S. dollar?

Mr. Mackasey: Or will hon. members opposite find another reason for the fact that the dollar's value is now between 79 cents and 80 cents? What is the reason? If it dropped because of lack of confidence, is it unfair to suggest it is going up because of confidence?

Mr. Kempling: Talk to some Stoney Creek businessmen. They will tell you.

Mr. Mackasey: The opposition whip is a good whip, and as long as he stays within the confines of his responsibilities and does not try to be another frontbencher talking economics, I will retain my respect for him.

When the value of the dollar is 77 cents hon. members opposite say that reflects no confidence in the government, but then they deny me the right to say that an 80 cent dollar reflects confidence in the government. What has happened in the interval is that a budget was brought forward by the Minister of Finance. The budget brought forward by the minister is being very well accepted by the business community. It is being well accepted by Bay Street, James Street and the market. It is being well accepted by the oil industry and by HUDAC, the voice of the home construction industry in this country. The budget is well accepted by Canadians, or the value of the dollar would not be back to 80 cents. The budget is well accepted by foreign investors, or the value of the dollar would not be 80 cents. The only people who have no confidence in this government and the future of this country are hon. members opposite. Their gloom and doom is dangerous because it can be contagious, but it is significant that in this debate they have not zeroed in on economics. They have not zeroed in on the true measurement of the deficit. They have not tried to analyse the deficit. They have tried to distort its relationship by putting it on a per capita basis, hoping to leave the impression with Canadians that somehow all of us are poor, that Canada is on the edge of bankruptcy and that we cannot meet our deficit. Imagine what would have happened if that had been the attitude in this country in 1944 when the deficit represented 23 per cent of our gross national product instead of 5.4 per cent. The trouble with hon. members opposite is that they panic—the Liberals do not—and that is reflected in their speeches. What are they screaming about? They are screaming about valises, air travel and taxi cabs. No one is in favour of waste.

Mr. Kempling: Airline passes.

Mr. Mackasey: Waste is not an acceptable component of spending at any time, whether we have a surplus or a deficit. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) understands that and is very assiduous in his efforts to reduce waste. In addition, we have the Public Accounts Committee, the Auditor General and other watchdogs. I think most Canadians today are sophisticated enough to know that with the size of the public service some things will happen, just as they happen with a six-man operation at the corner grocery store. I do not think hon. members opposite will make many yards by preaching gloom and doom when they sense, finally, that there is leadership, the proper budget is in place, the deficit is under control, the dollar is strengthening, inflation is on its way down and, perhaps more importantly, the government's policy of restraint is being well accepted by the Canadian work force.

I took the trouble yesterday, along with hon. members from all parties, to sit in a committee. I have forgotten the name of the committee. After a while all committees look alike. It may have been the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. However, there we met with articulate, intelligent union leaders representing, for the most part, members of the civil service. Another group was representing railway unions. The press was there. Some newer members of the House were apprehensive about the approach of the union leaders. They were apprehensive that there would be harsh and heavy words, acrimony, screaming, shouting and philosophical differences. That is not what happened. What happened was that the unions representing railway workers and those speaking for public servants last night showed an appreciation that a 6 per cent-5 per cent policy would work; that if we all accept restraint, inflation will come down; and that for every 1 per cent drop in inflation there will be an equivalent 1 per cent increase in real wages. We are not running into any opposition from the labour movement, organized labour, the public service or railway workers toward those of us fortunate enough to have a full-time job and those of us who are paid wages from the taxes of the average Canadian citizen—as the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) reminded us a week or so ago. The unions are saying that they are quite prepared to accept the concept of restraint. They would like to see some restoration of free collective bargaining in non-monetary areas and they want to make certain that the bill does not go beyond what it should or what it has to in order to make the six and five a reality. Basically, Canadians from coast to coast are saying that they are prepared to show some restraint if that will bring down inflation and put an end to unemployment and let industry grow and assume its usual competitive place in the world.

• (1600)

Last night the union representatives said, in effect, that they are prepared to be part of the fight against inflation because they want to be competitive when the markets of this country's customers improve. When the United States economy improves they want to be competitive. They realize that Canada is not competitive when the rate of inflation is 12 per cent while that of other countries with raw materials is two, three or four per cent.

Canadians today are sophisticated. The average worker is a highly educated, well-read person who understands economics. He understands that inflation is devastating. He understands the impact of inflation on fixed incomes and its negative impact on jobs. He understands that somehow we have to bring it to an end, but what he wants from the government, and what he is getting, is leadership.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: The government has asked members of the House and the Senate—other than the poor little boys in the corner who have no cause but themselves to bleed over—to accept Bill C-124. The NDP will find that labour accepts Bill C-124. The only group in Canada that does not is that tired little group in the corner. They will find that labour will not support them. What the NDP does not understand is that if there is one thing that the unionized worker in this country values it is his citizenship, his independence, his integrity and the fact that every four years he can vote according to his conscience.

That is why there are three Liberal members in this House from Windsor, the heart of the United Auto Workers union and the labour movement. The union leaders have never been able to dictate to their membership how they should vote at the polls—that they should defeat the Liberal members and elect NDP. Why are they so unsuccessful in this? It is because they misunderstand and they fail to appreciate the independence, the integrity and the intelligence of the worker. They do not want to be dictated to by the union, any more than they want to be dictated to by any member of this House. Until the NDP understands that, it will always be what it is, a tired little group sitting in the corner.

The opposition should understand that it has a responsibility to do more than support Bill C-124 in the House. Indeed, they will support Bill C-124; they will support the concept of restraint because common sense dictates it and probably because political instincts would make them understand why the Gallup poll shows that 80 per cent of Canadians expect the political parties in this House to endorse the policy of restraint which the government has embarked upon.

They have an obligation to do more than just vote for Bill C-124, however; they have a moral obligation to support it. They have an obligation to laud the direction taken by the government and the leadership shown by the Minister of Finance. They should support the concept of restraint and help the government sell a policy which is non-partisan and is in the best interests of all Canadians, regardless of political background. Hon. members should understand that.

Knowing some hon. members opposite, I suspect that when the chips are down they will support Bill C-124. No matter how partisan they are in this arena they care about the country and want to see inflation brought down. They know that properly understood and properly supported, the six and five proposal will work.

Mr. Nielsen: We are dealing with Bill C-125.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What bill are you speaking on?

Mr. Mackasey: Virtually every economist will say that voluntary restraints will work.

Mr. Nielsen: We are on Bill C-125, not Bill C-124.

Mr. Mackasey: The NDP do not quite appreciate that, even though the trade unions do. That is why last night and yesterday afternoon I was particularly pleased—

Mr. Nielsen: He is speaking on the wrong bill.

Mr. Mackasey: —when union leaders said—

Mr. Nielsen: Tell him we are on Bill C-125.

Mr. Mackasey: I am talking about Bill C-125, Mr. Speaker. It is a simple bill—a borrowing bill. Maybe I am naive about it. Maybe I have been around for too many sessions—

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Mackasey: It is traditional at the end of every session to obtain the authority to borrow the money that is needed. If hon. members want to make a case that we are borrowing for a deficit of $19 billion when we predicted $10 billion, we could discuss that. But I am surprised that hon. members opposite would want to prevent the government from borrowing the money it needs to meet its deficit. That is hardly responsible opposition. I am surprised that they would try to make something of the fact that what the minister requests is a little more than he may need at the moment. He has enough intelligence to ask for a little more in case an event beyond his control, which he cannot anticipate, may mean that he needs that extra billion or two. If he needs it, the process is such that it will be spent publicly and the opposition will know how it is spent.

No matter how the opposition tries to distort the issue or to create the impression that the deficit is forcing us into bankruptcy, Canadians understand the matter. The fact is that our ability to repay is as great as that of the Americans. That is indicated by the only meaningful statistic, which is the relationship between the GNP and the deficit. As is usual, hon. members opposite have used the debate on Bill C-125 to range all over the place.

I should like to read into the record something given to me by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, one of the more intelligent members of the House. This newspaper article reads in part:

> After two years of high interest rates, the economy is virtually stagnant. Caught in a squeeze between high interest rates, falling inflation and weak sales, business is taking a beating. Bankruptcy figures are approaching the record highs of the Depression, investment plans are being shelved, millions of workers have been laid off with scant prospect of a quick return to the payroll.

Is that from the Globe and Mail, The Toronto Star or the Ottawa Citizen? No, it is from an article in The New York Times on July 4, 1982, describing the economy of the United States.

I could quote on and on. My close friend, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) might like to know that he is not alone in his concern about the drilling rigs. I would like to see that part of the country vigorous and prosperous too. An article in Newsweek of July 19 reads in part as follows:

> The most dramatic sign of the oil bust came last week with the failure of the Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma City. The institution has invested some 80 per cent of its loan portfolio in energy-related ventures.
> Similar problems are confronting Arizona and New Mexico, where sharp declines in the prices of copper and uranium have left the vital mining industries close to collapse.
>
> Last April the Texas Department of Human Resources issued a pamphlet entitled "Dead Broke in Texas?" warning newcomers not to expect much in the way of public assistance. It points out that the average welfare and food stamp recipient in the state gets only $34 a month under each program and declares that qualification requirements are much "stiffer" than in other states.

• (1610)

I get no satisfaction from knowing that the U.S. economy is as depressed as that of Canada. After all, our two economies are too closely entwined, our cultures are too similar and our fates too close. We share the same continent. But equally important, our country is prosperous when the Americans are prosperous. But if the price of copper is down to 60 cents in the U.S., they are hardly going to come up here and buy the copper we have lying in dormant mines waiting for an upsurge in the U.S. economy.

The point I am getting at is that the problems in Canada are not unique to Canada. They are common to the industrialized world, whatever country you want to name, whether it is the U.S., France, West Germany, or Italy. It is only the opposition which tries to create the false impression that somehow this government has stumbled into an economic recession unique to Canada, when in fact the evidence is to the contrary. It indicates the barrenness of their ideas, their inability to debate and their unwillingness to put the facts on the record. They turn around and try to create the impression to Canadians that this recession is unique to Canada. Canadians are sophisticated, they have access to television, radio and newspapers from the United States and can make up their own minds, and every Canadian knows that the depression and recession we are suffering from is also going on at exactly the same time in the United States of America. The only difference is the level of inflation, and we are saying to Canadians in the interim: please bring down the level of inflation so that when the economy of the U.S. starts to recover and we can take advantage of it, we will be in a position to sell our raw materials and our finished goods in competition with Australia and other countries.

It is so simple, Mr. Speaker, and that is why in the last week or two we have seen a resurgence of confidence in this country. Canadians are saying that the government is in control of events, it is practising restraint, the dollar is recovering, everything is on the way up except the doom and gloom of the opposition, which traditional drops as the fortunes of this country improve.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to my hon. colleagues on both sides of the House for their enthusiastic reception this afternoon. It must be the first time since I became a member of the House that I have had such a warm welcome from the other side, and on this side I see my colleague from Charlesbourg (Mr. Bussières), originally from Roberval or more exactly from Normandin—he also happens to have a cottage at Saint-Thomas Didyme—who is quite agreeable to my speaking this afternoon, and my colleague from Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet) who is probably delighted with the prospect that I might mention her riding as well.

This afternoon, the debate is on the bill to provide borrowing authority for the government, and I have listened to the criticism levelled by members on the other side of the House. They are saying that the government's deficit is horrendous and outrageous and that this country is going down the drain, but if we look at the budget speech by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) it says to what extent the government's revenues have been cut, and that the recession, as mentioned on page 3 of the budget speech, has caused a serious worsening of the government's fiscal position, and that the sharp fall in federal revenues is the inevitable consequence of a decline in production, employment and income. According to the minister's speech, the revenue loss attributable to the recession is estimated to be about $4.5 billion in 1982-83.

If we compare what the budget speech tells us about the government's loss of revenue with what members opposite have been demanding, namely, that the government intervene in several economic activity sectors including agriculture, small- and medium-sized businesses and housing, we get the following picture. We have a worldwide economic recession, although many Canadians may prefer to forget this and seem to be saying that it may be happening in the United States but here in Canada we are not being affected. Well, I think that since the June 28 budget was brought down, and with the figures submitted by the Minister of Finance, people can see for themselves what effect this worldwide recession is having on Canada. So, on the one, hand we have the recession and the government's loss of revenue, and on the other hand, we have popular pressure being brought to bear on the government to spend money on certain economic activity sectors, and Mr. Speaker, when it comes down to it, there is a lot of money involved, and during the debate on this bill, it is up to all members of this House, members from Quebec and Ontario and all the other provinces, it is up to all members on the government side to clarify the situation for the Canadian people.

In any case, it is agreed that there is an economic recession, and the Canadian economy is unfortunately being affected by U.S. and world events, but on the other hand, to meet the many requests for assistance from various industrial sectors, we must find the necessary financial resources and act responsibly as a government in helping those activity sectors that have been severely affected by the recession, and we must explain to the Canadian people that nevertheless, because of our wealth of resources and borrowing opportunities, we can and must borrow in order to help these activity sectors. That is why the Minister of Finance said on June 28 in his budget speech: The result is that the projected budgetary deficit is very much higher than that forecast in the November budget.

I do not think that it in any way diminishes the government to admit that the situation did not develop as it was expected to, and that unfortunately, it has deteriorated as a result of the world situation, and we therefore have to act responsibly as Canadians. So what do we do? Do we raise taxes, to have more funds in the government treasury or are we going to cut expenditures and then borrow money to show certain sectors that we are willing to help them? In this kind of situation, Mr. Speaker, the government had to make a choice and it did. During the next two years, by setting a ceiling on wage increases in the public sector and sectors directly related to it, including government agencies, the government intends to reduce wage increases in order to save so many million dollars, money which will then be available for job-creation programs, assistance to farmers and to small and medium-sized businesses. This is how the Canadian government, the Liberal Party now in power, has faced up to its responsibilities, and then we hear the members opposite saying that the deficit is outrageous and that something must be done to bring the deficit back to more reasonable levels. However, they do not tell us what they mean by a reasonable deficit. They do not tell us what are the serious alternatives. Of course, they will tell me that this is according to parliamentary practice. The government is in place and the opposition criticizes, whether solutions exist or not. So when the government suggested after the budget that wage increases be capped at 6 and 5 per cent for the next two years, it planned to use this money and the amounts saved by reducing the expenditures of various agencies to give assistance to farmers.

When we look at page 25 of the budget papers and see the special programs developed to provide financial assistance for the farmers, either directly, or else indirectly if the members opposite prefer, we must realize that if these programs are to be funded, we must have the necessary tax revenues. That is how I analyse the situation when considering those programs, the housing programs and those intended for small businesses. But how can the borrowing power bill now before the House be important indirectly when it comes to funding the farm assistance program and the financial commitments of the various departments? We need money and that is what we were asked by the farmers, those of Quebec, for instance. If I remember what happened in my own constituency, it is probably because the same thing happened in several others. I see next to me my colleague, the hon. member for Lac St-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) who also received representations as well as my colleague, the hon member for Roberval. My colleague, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) and my colleague, the hon. member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Gendron) also received representations from farmers. The Minister of State for Finance, the hon. member for Charlesbourg, does not have as many farmers in his constituency as I have in mine, in fact I do not think he has many, but in any case, we received many representations from farmers who told us: We need money because the international financial situation has brought about a recession that is affecting Canadian farmers, and they need money from the Canadian government under the loan programs of the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation. What was the answer of the Canadian government? This is what I find on page 25 of the budget papers:

> Over the next two years loans totalling $200 million will be made under the program to farmers in financial distress. The loans will be made at the regular FCC interest rate (currently 16½ per cent) but a rebate of 4 percentage points will be provided for the first two years of the loan. The government is allocating $100 million to the program ($84 million as a special contribution to the FCC for lending to farmers and $16 million to pay for the interest rebates) and the FCC will divert $116 million to the program from its regular lending fund.

What is important is that this program came into force immediately. Moreover, the usual conditions offered by the corporation will still apply. For instance, the ceilings of $300,000 for individuals and $500,000 for associations will still apply, but the loans will not be restricted to the usual customers of the Farm Credit Corporation, namely young farmers, small operators and new farmers. Many people told us about the situation of farmers. Of course, there are farmers over 45 and 50 who have been in farming for many years and are in a good financial position or at least have the financial backing to face the situation. However, the fact is that young farmers will be in difficulty if the Canadian government fails to develop programs and provide access to additional funds.

In response to those representations we have introduced a special farm financial assistance program. Another significant aspect is that the small business development program referred to on page 23 of the budget papers is available to farmers as well and there is no requirement that they be incorporated. That is indeed an important consideration for young farmers who want to invest or expand. As I said, if a young farmer is not financially as well off as his father or the people from whom he is buying the farm—or even with the case of people who have been in the business for only a few years—it can be readily understood that he is not quite prepared to come to grips with the situation created by the economic recession and high interest rates. That is why under the small business development program a farmer will also be eligible for interest rates 4 per cent below the prevailing rates. I think that is very important for our young farmers and for other young people who want to become farmers and who, in the present economic context, have certain obligations to meet. Another significant aspect is that we met with APU spokesmen who referred to the current situation and mentioned the funds earmarked for the agricultural sector in the November 1981 budget; they felt that the program was commendable but that perhaps more money ought to be made available. They were making representations, of course, and as a result we responded by introducing a special assistance program for farmers. I may be repeating myself, Mr. Speaker, but we cannot say that we are going to launch various assistance programs and then find out that the recession has been cutting into our revenues. That explains why we have to borrow, hence the bill we have before us.

I have just referred to something which farmers find very important, the question of the great number of small businesses in the riding of Lotbinière, particularly in the Bois-Francs area and in the rest of the riding. I could mention the various ridings of members who are here today, particularly those of the province of Quebec who come from such regions as Montreal or Quebec City, Beauce, Bois-Francs and Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean where there are many small- and medium-sized businesses. It has been said that Quebec is their paradise, which immediately brings to mind certain regions such as Beauce, Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean or Bois-Francs.

Mr. Tousignant: And Témiscamingue!

Mr. Dubois: Témiscamingue as well. My colleague from Témiscamingue did not want me to forget his region which is also developing rapidly. I can tell the House that since the member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) has been here in Ottawa, since his election in 1979, he has done a lot of work to promote the development of his region. Many representations were made to members on behalf of small businesses and their spokesmen mentioned the small business bond which was first called the small business development bond, and they said that this program had been extremely useful to small business until December 1981. After the November budget it was called the small business bond and at the time people were talking about businesses in financial difficulties. When they heard about those two programs, a great many people said to us: Listen, as in any other sector of economic activity, now that we have this program concerning the small business development bond and the small business bond, the banks will have to lower their rates.

In view of the fact that some banks had to limit their granting of credit unfortunately they were unable to accept the applications filed by a number of people in connection with that program. This explains why we received representations to the effect that although the program was satisfactory its mechanism was defective. Then the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) came up with some suggestions which have been passed on to him by the member for Témiscamingue the member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup, the member for Roberval, the member for Lac-Saint-Jean and other members on this side of the House. In their view the program was adequate, the people found it satisfactory, but its mechanism in dealing with our banking institutions was faulty. Without passing judgement on those institutions, we are told that such a mechanism should be improved to provide greater flexibility. Then we can see on page 23 of the budget papers tabled on the evening of June 28, that the federal government is allocating $400 million in order to reduce interest costs by up to 4 percentage points for two years on borrowing by small businesses to finance new investment and research and development. Today, this makes a difference . . . I can see that the Minister of State for Finance is leaving but he will surely be back to congratulate me at the end of my speech. Businesses now applying to financial institutions will be in a position to borrow at the rate set by the bank and afterwards, whatever their financial circumstances as far as the Department of Revenue is concerned, the Canadian government will directly reimburse 4 per cent to the bank. That makes a considerable difference which is why we needed $400 million to provide some financial assistance to farmers. It does not necessarily mean that as a result of all those programs implemented under the budget, the Canadian government needed the borrowing power requested in Bill C-125 before us but part of those funds were necessary to improve Canada's financial position and to maintain its competitiveness on foreign markets; in the case of my own province this level has decreased. Very few comments were made about the Quebec government, but while we are told that we should promote our Canadian and Quebec tourist industry, the Quebec Premier is not showing leadership in this field since he chose to go to the United States. Anyway, funds had to be allocated to that program in response to the demand expressed throughout Canadan and mainly in my province. Some financial assistance was requested for small businesses.

The reaction mentioned by my colleague Louis Duclos in his speech was this: should we at this time in answer to the expectations of our businesses increase taxes? Are the present economic conditions normal and can we increase taxes or should we instead divert funds obtained by reducing government expenditures and with our borrowing power provide financial assistance to businesses and to farmers?

As I was saying, before digressing on the province of Quebec and the leader of its government, the Premier of Quebec, those are things people have been clamouring for. To my mind, as a responsible government it was our duty to help major industries in every one of the provinces whichever they may be; some provinces do have economic activities that are more important than others. We just had to respond to the expectations of Canadians in that regard. Since the budget was brought down on June 28th, many of our constituents have told us: We heard the Minister of Finance and the comments of journalists; we have examined the main thrust of your budget; we think it's okay. How is it, then, that there has been so much carping, at least during the first few days following its tabling; how come, when it only aims at helping the industries that have asked for assistance?

Little by little, Mr. Speaker—and I see my colleague from Charlesbourg smile with delight—it is true, many people are beginning to comment favourably on the budget, on its impact, on the meetings between the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and representatives of industry, business and labour and on the rate of inflation being reduced to 6 and 5 per cent. Of course, there may be some groups who feel uneasy about the 6 per cent ceiling or reduction in private enterprise, and I mean the unions. But as the latest polls have demonstrated that 80 per cent of workers would rather accept a cut in salary than lose their jobs, I feel that the introduction of our budget and public awareness of the situation only confirm the soundness of the Minister of Finance's decision to reduce expenses through the 6 and 5 per cent caps, not to increase taxes and to borrow wherever we can so that we may respond to the expectations of Canadians.

We now hear more and more people say: Listen: let governments set the example, starting with MPs. Well, Mr. Speaker, that has now been done. From this month onwards—although we have not heard much about it in the media—all Members of Parliament, on both sides of the House, senators and ministers, will accept a cut in salary. There has been much ado about the civil servants and things like that, but we were the first ones to admit that we feel we have decent salaries and are willing to take a cut to prove to Quebecers and other Canadians that we, too, want to do our part to aid our ailing Canadian economy, that we want that money invested in various programs; and tell the civil service: look, we took a cut ourselves. This has not been made known sufficiently, I think. That is why I wanted to emphasize this point this afternoon, and remind people that we always practise what we preach.

In this instance, MPs have paved the way, extending it right across the public service. As a result, people come to us and say: We agree with the 6 per cent ceiling and objective. Several days ago, I read articles saying the strategy would not work, that is was not serious. Then, suddenly, a few days later, we see the opposite. The Canadian government wants to reduce expenditures and, through the bill which is now before the House, channel those funds toward sectors of the economy that need them most.

One industry has always been a major one throughout Canada, and especially in my own province, namely the housing industry. In Quebec, people tend to say that if the construction industry is okay, everything is okay. I could mention again a number of ridings and areas where this is especially true, but I know their members are here in the House to discuss various problems, so let us say that the expression is a popular one throughout the province. This particular sector needs financial help and there have been a number of meetings and representations and conversations with various members on the subject.

I remember a few months ago when we discussed the mortgage renewal program, people said we did not go far enough. This time, we have gone further, Mr. Speaker, but now they are complaining that the deficit is too high and we should not have gone about it in this way. Well, if that is not a double standard, what is? Either we help the sectors that are asking for help or we do not help them, and considering the drop in government revenues, what are we supposed to do? We have to borrow. So I mean, it is no use shilly-shallying. This is a time for action, and that is why I wish the members opposite would realize what they are saying. They want us to help certain industrial sectors and then, they wonder, when the recession causes a sharp drop in government revenues, why we want to introduce a borrowing authority bill. Mr. Speaker, I say they should wake up. It is as plain as the nose on anyone's face what the government's choice must be. I think the situation is such that money must be injected into the housing industry and we must help first-time home buyers.

Mr. Speaker, I have received any number of telephone calls from contractors and real estate agents asking about the program, who wanted me to send them some literature to explain how the program works, and I am doing just that, Mr. Speaker. In addition, housing co-operatives and rental housing will also benefit from the budget measures. Here we have an economic sector that is of major importance to Canada and to my province, and in the present situation, the Canadian government has decided to provide incentives for home builders to start building by a certain date and for Canadians to buy their first home, either a new home or an existing one—in the case of an existing home, the $3000 grant also applies, provided the person is a first-time home buyer. Just think how many jobs will be generated! I was told that those programs may provide homes for 100,000 prospective home owners across Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is probably true that when the construction industry is okay, everything is okay.

These incentives are still extremely beneficial to the economy of Quebec, Canada, Ontario, and all the provinces. Of course, the members opposite have not dwelt on those $3,000 and that program developed by the government. They talk about the deficit and tell us: "Of course, those things are important." Another program was also developed, and I see that my colleague for Charlesbourg, the Minister of State for Finance is smiling because he knows how hard he and his colleague, the Minister of Finance, had to work on those various programs to help Canadians face the present situation. For the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, the amount of $30 million was mentioned at one time. Everyone of us received information on that program, which is the counterpart of the rural program underwhich many residents of rural municipalities in Canada, and especially in Quebec, since I am speaking about my own province, were eligible for assistance in the form of a $3,750 grant and loans of up to $10,000. Many people in Quebec, in my constituency, were asking: "Why is it that people in rural areas can benefit from this program and we cannot if our municipality has a population of over 2,500?" Mr. Speaker, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, under which $30 million were allocated originally, was developed to meet these expectations of Quebecers and Canadians, and following certain representations, the funding was increased to $60 million. While we are providing incentives, the members opposite and many people who do not agree with our political philosophy tell us that what we need are incentives.

Money has to be allocated to various programs so that the economy may grow in spite of the economic problems, in spite of the recession. But what are we to do? Once again, are we to increase taxes or, if we have to inject some money into the economy in spite of our deficit, should we still fund such programs? I say yes, Mr. Speaker, and that is what we did on June 28. I can hear a member of the New Democratic Party say: "Sure!" He therefore agrees with me. Even though we are injecting money into the economy, we must still be able to say to the Canadian people: "We are not increasing your taxes, but due to the economic situation, we are taking action to urge the Canadian people to work, and housing is an extremely important sector."

Mr. Speaker, another program that is important for many members of Parliament and many Quebecers and Canadians is the job-creation program, particularly the Community Development Program and various other related programs. In many, if not all ridings, many people took part in what used to be called the Canada Works Program, now the Community Development Program. They have gained experience, they have done very significant things for the economy of their ridings or their regions and were able to obtain grants because of the unemployment rate in their community. I could repeat the names of all the constituencies and all the hon. members who have benefited from various programs, but I shall name only one, Roberval, with which I am somewhat familiar. In the Lac Saint-Jean region, we have the Dolbeau Western Village which many people from Quebec and the rest of Canada visit each year during the western festival.

Huge sums of money were allocated for a community development program and we were able to provide jobs for the people of Dolbeau. As my colleague said, 40 jobs were created and money was earmarked for promoting the tourist industry in that riding, more precisely in Dolbeau, and it is through Canada Works projects that construction and infrastructures were made possible in the Western Village of Dolbeau and in other cases that involved summer employment. So that was money well spent, rightfully spent and, by dint of reviewing and reshaping that type of program and the administrative regulations, a great number of people are able to get things done. Granted, one could say those jobs last a limited period of time, but our attitude is certainly different from that of our colleagues opposite who tried to govern—I say "tried"—and seeked to put an end to those programs.

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Dubois: When the Liberal government was re-elected in February 1980, that program was resumed and many citizens took advantage of it and will continue to do so; and thanks to the budget there will be money available for projects such as those in Dolbeau, Abitibi, Alma, Victoriaville, Lotbinière, for instance the construction of a marina which requires a $25,000 investment and for doing similar work costing $30,000 that put people to work, gave them experience and allowed them to create things that can be seen and which have a lasting value. I think of municipalities that were able to develop the infrastructure their tourist industry or other sectors of their economy through Canada Works programs. I am also thinking of the representations made to us at various times of the year: Will programs such as Canada Works, Young Canada Works remain in effect? If money is diverted from that department, there would not be any funds available this summer for students in the province of Quebec under Young Canada Works. The only government with the money is the Canadian government represented in Ottawa by 74 Liberal members of Parliament. It is that government, the Liberal government of Pierre Elliott Trudeau that carried on programs like Canada Works and Young Canada Works. They were the only programs in effect this summer for young people in Quebec. I see my colleague across the way gesturing to me—

An hon. Member: They do not care about young people. A real senior citizen club!

Mr. Dubois: At any rate, whether or not they care about young people, they must be very happy when they get the funds allocated to their riding because they can promote Canadian programs and teach students to work under various projects. Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to say in view of those jobs creating and economy-boosting programs, when we consider the representations that were made and the fact that people now talk openly about the budget, that the Canadian government has carried out its responsibilities without raising taxes. Funds were allocated to programs designed to assist Canadians despite a worldwide recession, and economic hardships that affect every country in the world including our own. If we are asked today to give the government the borrowing authority they request it is to allow Canadians to live in this country and support their families. It was the responsibility of the Canadian government to introduce a budget and to allocate funds to various programs and that is why we directly need this borrowing authority and that is why, Mr. Speaker, I will support the bill.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois) said that we were here to oppose. We have now heard three hon. members in a row speaking for the government. If the government wants the bill so badly, we suggest that it stop the filibuster and call the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has not made a point of order. He has made his point, however.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-29, an act to amend the Railway Act, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-125, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment of Mr. Clark (p. 19456).

Supplementary Borrowing Authority

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to stand on the government side and speak with regard to Bill C-125.

Some hon. Members: Filibuster!

Mr. Evans: It is time to discuss the issues involved in trying to clarify—if I could be heard above the din on the other side, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ottawa Centre has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: But he has cleared the gallery.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much that it will do any good to try to calm down the rabbling hordes on the other side and I appreciate your attempt to do so.

I would like to discuss this matter and try to clarify some of the issues and points which have been raised by hon. members opposite with regard to the borrowing authority bill, how it relates to the over-all economic policy of the government and what has caused the need for this increase in borrowing authority. I would like to discuss the deficit in the context of showing that, in fact, the increase in the deficit that we have seen is substantially and structurally different from the deficit being faced, for example, in the United States. I would like to discuss my belief that the Canadian financial system can indeed support the kind of deficit which was forecast in the financial statements of the government as of June 28. I would like to discuss some of the recent activities and words of the opposition with regard to their ideas as to how the deficit might be dealt with. It has been saying that it is a terrible deficit and that initial programs of restraint should be brought in immediately. The opposition has put forward ideas of how restraint could be applied to resolve our problems, such as the suggestion not to buy briefcases.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) has clearly indicated that we on this side of the House will certainly support the members of the oppostion if they can show that there is waste in any area of government. If that can be shown, we on this side of the House will certainly do everything in our power to eradicate that waste from government. It is easy to pick up areas of spending which can be blown out of proportion and put in such a context that it appears that there is waste. But when one looks down underneath the surface of the problem and considers the actual expenditure, more times than not—and the Auditor General's report will back me up time and time again—

Mr. Huntington: Spending is out of control, is what he said.

Mr. Evans: —those expenditures turn out to be for good, valid reasons.

Let us take the example cited by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) the other day. He suggested that it would resolve our deficit problem if brief cases were not purchased by the government for use by public servants. We are talking about a deficit that is substantial; there can be no doubt about that. That deficit has to be reduced in an orderly way that will not trip the heart out of the Canadian economy or the Canadian social system.

• (1700)

Let us look at the question. When I was in the public service working with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, a great many demands were placed on public servants to travel about this country and to interact with provincial counterparts and the business community. Day after day members opposite demand that we consult with the business community, other levels of government, private interest groups and individual Canadians. They demand that we get the message of what the federal government is all about to Canadians. In that process, public servants travel.

I am not going to stand here and say there are not occasions, just as there are in private business, where there may be an abuse of travel requirements. Long before this issue was raised by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), the President of the Treasury Board commissioned a report into travel. That report should be available shortly. We will then see how much substance there is with regard to the question of government travel.

If the NDP feels we should cut out travel by public servants, eliminate all of it, that would effectively shut down the federal government. We could forget about consulting business communities in various corners of the country, forget about making the federal presence felt in various corners of this country and forget about consulting with provincial governments. If there is waste, we will eradicate that, but I do not have any delusions that there will be a vast reduction in travel because of waste. There may be a reduction of travel—

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very brief point of order. The hon. member is mistaken. We were not talking about travel in the country. We were talking about travel overseas.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member is wrong. He should listen to the members of his own party. The hon. member for Skeena was talking about travel inside the country and travel outside the country. He was talking about travel by public servants both inside and outside Canada.

I am telling the hon. member that if there is an abuse of travelling being done by public servants, it will be eradicated. I predict the report will confirm that there is very little abuse with regard to travel. In the federal system such as we have with the opposition demanding day after day that we not introduce policies without consulting, the requirement of travel is very real.

There very well could be introduced a restraint program where the government will only permit one half the travelling, that it will only pay the cost of that number. However, there would be more difficulty in communicating and formulating policy at the federal level. That will be a fact of life that has to be considered. That is what the report of the President of the Treasury Board will indicate. If there is a need for restraint, we will thank hon. members for having brought it to our attention, although it had already received the attention of the President of the Treasury Board who commissioned a study into it long before it was raised by the hon. member for Skeena.

We hear condemnations of the public service. The official opposition is schizophrenic on this issue. From time to time it stands up as the defender of the Public Service of Canada, stating that the government is a harsh employer, that it is terrible and the opposition would be much better. Let us look at the facts.

We hear the Leader of the Opposition talk about the public service squandering money all over the place. Let us look back to the last election and, in fact, the 1979 election. What was the promise then by today's righteous defenders of the public service? They would eliminate one in five. Obviously they feel there is so much waste in the public service that 60,000 of them could disappear overnight with no effect on the efficiency of the delivery systems or the way government services are provided to Canadians. That is clearly the message underneath the fog cover the opposition puts forward in this House of Commons. They were wrong then and they are wrong now.

The program of restraint to try and limit government spending for these direct expenditures included, as members well know, a program of restraint of wages and salaries and a program of restraint of expenditures by the government apart from wages and salaries. As I have said, that program is fair and equitable. It puts forward a program of restraint that says we will limit our demands on the system, but we will not go after expenditures in the system with a meat axe the way the official opposition not only threatened but promised to do, and started to do once it was elected as the government in 1979.

We hear the official opposition talking about their approach to expenditure restraint. One of the approaches they would take would be to go after public servants with a meat axe. That would badly damage the ability of the Government of Canada to deliver essential services to the people of this country.

We ask the official opposition where they would cut. In what sectors of the public service would they cut? Would they cut services being delivered to the public? What services are not essential? What services should we do away with? Which Canadians should be asked to give up essential services that are being delivered?

When we ask those questions, the fog rolls in. It rolls in across the benches on the other side and they scream about the briefcases. If we are going to resolve the deficit situation we are now facing and bring in programs to deal with the problems, we will not do that by talking about briefcases. Maybe there are some briefcases being purchased that should not be. If so, by gosh, the President of the Treasury Board said he would step in and make sure it would not happen.

When I was in the public service and involved in consultations with the provincial governments, I had to transport volumes of documents in order to facilitate discussions. The normal type briefcase a person carries around simply would not hold that large amount. Therefore, the government purchased large briefcases, and Members of Parliament have seen them, to carry documents. They are document cases. When a public servant leaves the public employ, the document case remains with the government. It is passed on to the next public servant.

It is well known that things wear out and have to be replaced. We should not ask an employee to provide some of the tools of the workplace, such as document briefcases. Therefore, briefcases are purchased. If there are extra briefcases hidden away under the desks of public servants being used for footstools, which is highly unlikely, we should look into that. In the public service operation I was employed in, there were four document briefcases.

The public service is a big operation. The government has a very large operation in the public service. There are around 310,000 employees. We are talking about a large operation. I am surprised that the official opposition has not said we ought to eliminate half the desks so that public servants can share desks to save money. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will come up with that idea next. I wonder if he would be willing to share his desk with Mr. Broadbent.

• (1710)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, references should be by constituencies or functions and not by names.

Mr. Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should have said the Leader of the New Democratic Party or the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Let me talk about the nature of our deficit. With the best information available at that time, the November budget put forward forecasts of what would be our financial requirements, our deficit and the expenditure levels of the federal government. On June 28 very substantial revisions had to be made. The official opposition and the New Democratic Party have said that the government was obviously totally inept and that it should have been able to forecast the situation. I ask members of the official opposition, if they can, to produce forecasts which were put forward by any private sector or public sector group in this country or any other country, by the OECD, by the Conference Board, by the C.D. Howe Institute, by Informetrica or any group on or around November 12 last, which forecast the situation in which we now find ourselves. There was not one. The forecasts of the Department of Finance were an average of other forecasts. Some were better and some were worse, but our forecast was about the average of all the forecasts in relation to all the variables including unemployment, inflation, interest rates and all those things. The facts are documented and can be read. The fact is that the world economic situation went into a severe downturn which was beyond the prediction of any of the private or public sector groups.

What is the nature of projections of the deficit over this fiscal year? It seems that the opposition is trying to say that the government has gone on a wild spending spree since the November budget and that it is out of control. They seem to say that spending is out of control. Has there been a major increase in program spending by the federal government?

Mr. Huntington: Yes.

Mr. Wilson: Twenty per cent.

Mr. Evans: No, there has not been a major increase. The hon. member says 20 per cent, but he knows he is wrong.

Mr. Wilson: Twenty per cent.

Mr. Evans: I defy him to produce a document which shows that program spending has increased 20 per cent. If interest payments are taken out, I defy the hon. member to show me a document which says that program spending is up 20 per cent. No document will. However, I can show the hon. member more than one document which says that program expenditures will increase by 10.7 per cent this year. We are talking about the last three or four years of expenditures undertaken by departments. Program expenditures have gone up year over year in the last three to four years by less than the growth of the economy. If government spending in the sense most Canadians think of government spending—program expenditures—has not increased, what has happened? It is quite obvious, and the financial critic for the official opposition, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), understands and clearly knows what the answer is; but he has not put it forward in the House, nor has his leader or anyone else on his side. Hon. members opposite have tried to obfuscate, make innuendoes and cast aspersions that government spending is terribly out of control, but the fact is that the deficit has increased because of two factors.

Mr. Huntington: The National Energy Program is one, and the November 12 budget is the other.

Mr. Evans: The deficit has increased because the world economic situation has deteriorated dramatically.

Mr. Lewis: It is the world's fault.

Mr. Evans: As a result, export sales of our raw materials—a substantial part of our gross national product—have fallen off. As a result of that corporate profits are down, corporate tax revenues are down and personal tax revenues are down. Unemployment has risen as a result of the decline in markets. Government revenue has dropped off. Over the next year government revenues are forecast to drop by $6.5 billion more than forecast in November. That is one factor. Loss of revenue is the main reason the deficit has increased. The reason is not an increase in spending.

What about the spending side? What are the factors? There are two factors on the spending side. One is the increase in unemployment insurance payments. If they wish, members of the official opposition can put forward the proposition that perhaps the government should tell everyone who is unemployed that from this day forward they cannot have unemployment insurance benefits. Perhaps hon. members opposite will suggest we cut unemployment insurance payments to any individual by 20 per cent, 25 per cent or perhaps 30 per cent. Perhaps we should do what the official opposition wanted to do with the federal public service. Perhaps we should say that one in five who are unemployed cannot have unemployment insurance. That would cut unemployment insurance payments by 20 per cent just like that. It would also be stupid.

The factor in addition to the increase in social transfer payments was that interest rates stayed higher here and everywhere else in the world than forecast in November. As a result, interest payments on the public debt are higher. If we take those factors together, we find that there is an increase in automatic stabilizer payments. There is an increase in interest payments on the debt. There is a decline in tax revenues, and that explains the increase in the deficit. That is not to say that the deficit of $19.6 billion or that financial requirements of $17.7 billion are not very high and of great concern. However, I think it is only fair, if we are to talk about solving the problems we face, that we do that from an honest base. We should put forward the facts and debate the facts and not some myth perpetuated by members of the official opposition and members of the New Democratic Party. Over and over again we hear the cry that the government has totally lost control of the situation, but that is not true.

We cannot just talk about the need for the country to have confidence while members of the opposition put forward every ounce of effort they can to undermine the confidence of the country. That just does not make sense. If we are talking about rebuilding the confidence of the country, for goodness sake, let us as parliamentarians try to join together to help rebuild confidence.

Mr. Lewis: Forget it. We don't trust you.

Mr. Evans: Hon. members opposite say, "Forget it; we don't want to rebuild confidence." All they want to do is destroy confidence, which will mean that the opposition will have a better chance of being elected in the next election. To them partisan political gain is more important than the interests of the country. That is the message of the opposition.

Mr. Lewis: We don't trust you. Nobody does.

Mr. Evans: I believe the June 28 budget took a major step toward restoring the confidence of Canadians in the future and in the system.

Let us look at the major variables opposition members have put forward as indicators of lack of confidence. What has happened to them? The dollar was one indicator of the "terrible" decline in confidence of Canadians in their own country. What has happened since the budget? The value of the dollar has gone up.

Mr. Huntington: Why?

Mr. Evans: That must mean Canadians have increased confidence. The hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) asks why. He thinks it must have something to do with U.S. interest rates. What has happened to Canadian interest rates?

Mr. Huntington: What happened to the U.S. dollar?

Mr. Evans: Canadian interest rates have gone down. The stock market is another indicator of confidence. Equity ownership is a good indicator of people's confidence in the economy in the long run. In the last couple of weeks prices on the stock market have gone up. We are seeing positive indications that the confidence level is improving, and I suggest that is a direct result of the measures taken in the budget and the promise made with regard to the indexation of certain investment income vehicles. Those are very major steps forward.

The question of unemployment has to be dealt with in the context of borrowing authority. I have read the speech made by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) very carefully, and it is rather surprising that he has indicated he disapproves of this borrowing authority. He thinks that the government should not ask for this borrowing authority but other members of his party say that the government must stimulate the economy. How do we stimulate the economy without increasing taxes or incurring a much larger deficit?

• (1720)

Mr. Heap: Stop giving to the oil companies.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) tells us to tax the oil companies. At a time when the oil companies are on the verge of collapse, the hon. member for Spadina wants us to tax them some more. Last fall the complaints of the New Democratic Party gave rise to the study that is being conducted at the moment into the banks. The NDP have a standard answer to everything.

Mr. Benjamin: Get rid of the Liberals.

Mr. Evans: That there is a scapegoat and that somebody is ripping somebody off is their answer to everything.

In 1973 food prices were definitely an issue. Along came the white knights in the New Democratic Party claiming they had the answer, that the supermarkets were ripping Canadians off. The Food Prices Review Board was formed under Mrs. Beryl Plumptre, an outstanding Canadian who has made great contributions to this country. After a couple of years of study and the expenditure of substantial sums of money it was found that no one in the system was ripping off the Canadian consumer. That meant that it was not the farmer, the supermarket or the middle man. In response to that well-documented, objective, factual study all we heard from the NDP was "whitewash". They start out by calling "witch, witch" and when the facts do not substantiate their contention then they call "whitewash, whitewash".

Their next cry was "corporate welfare bums". There was another problem in the economy and the NDP came along on their white charger, crying "corporate welfare bums". They were supported in this by some less rational members of the Conservative Party. The result was a royal commission that looked into corporate concentration for two years. Again, the objective evaluation of the facts did not support the NDP, so they again called "whitewash". They have a standard approach to problem solving—find a scapegoat and beat him over the head. When the facts do not support their contention they yell "whitewash". That is irresponsible political behaviour and it rips apart the fabric of confidence that Canadians have in one another. It is the behaviour that is practised by the NDP year after year and day in and day out. They are always looking for a witch or lightning rod.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question relating to his remarks?

Mr. Evans: I would be happy to at the termination of my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

We are now investigating the matter of bank profits, Mr. Speaker. The New Democratic Party complained about bank profits and wanted a study, so a committee was formed several months ago. It has been gathering the facts and putting together an analysis of the situation. The New Democratic Party was supposedly participating in this study, but last week it pulled out claiming "whitewash". They have not even seen the report yet but they are already crying "whitewash". Their strategy in all areas is to divide and conquer, to pick a scapegoat. They know that strategy is basically dishonest, so they pull out before they have to face the fact that they did not know what they were talking about.

That kind of behaviour is not conducive to the rational solution of our problems nor to confidence building. It is certainly not suitable to a chamber such as the House of Commons.

We have heard from hon. members opposite about the deficit and about the effect of the present downturn on the Canadian economy. We have heard about the need for stimulus and for job creation. Like so many of my colleagues and no doubt some on the other side, I have travelled back and forth across the country in an attempt to understand the unemployment problem so that we can put forward programs and initiatives to cushion the problem or alleviate it.

When I was in Vancouver recently I talked to people in the mining industry and the forest products industry. I found that much misinformation had been placed before the people involved. We hear hon. members from British Columbia saying that it is the fault of the federal government that there is so much unemployment in that province. We hear hon. members from the west—

Mr. Huntington: That is misleading.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Capilano corrects me. Indeed, it is not so in his case and perhaps a couple of others, but I think the hon. member has heard it happen. He has been present in question period and has heard it.

Mr. Huntington: Not in the sense you are putting it.

Mr. Evans: The discussions that I have had with those people indicate precisely the cause of the unemployment problem in the mining industry, forest products industry and, I would go so far as to say, the oil industry. The hon. member for Capilano correctly points out that he said so in the House, but I cannot say the same for some of his colleagues. World markets for these products—

Mr. Siddon: Don't blame the Americans.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) has asked me not to blame the Americans. I am not blaming them. I am simply saying that if we sell a big proportion of our products in other countries and they stop buying, then we are going to have an excess supply. The logical reaction of a sound business is to try to cut costs. One way to do that is to reduce employment or to shut down plants, and that is precisely what has happened. The people of British Columbia understand that. The people in the mining industry understand it. They do not understand how someone like the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta can stand in this House and say things that are not in accord with the facts as the people of British Columbia know them.

It does not help build confidence to tell people that things are possible that are not possible. We cannot turn around the demand for lumber, forest products or plywood. We cannot turn around the demand for pulp, which is affecting my area here. Pulp and paper mills have shut down because of reduced demand for newsprint. But where is that newsprint sold, Mr. Speaker? It is sold in other parts of the world, in the U.S., Europe and Japan. But the demand is down and the pulp and paper workers in ridings surrounding mine, especially those in Hull, the Gatineau and further on down the river, have been laid off. But is that the result of what is happening in Canada, or is it the result of the fact that paper is not selling, that newsprint is not being sold in other parts of the world? That is what is happening.

We hear about the Inco shutdowns, Mr. Speaker. Why? Because the products of the mines, which have always been a major export industry, have lost markets in all parts of the world. That does not make the problem any less real, Mr. Speaker. The problem of unemployment is very real, very crucial and very pressing. But it will help in the public debate about realistic solutions if all members of this House couch their criticism, certainly their comments, within the context of basic, fundamental and factual honesty. That does not happen with the opposition very often because they would rather stand up and say the whole thing is the fault of the Government of Canada. They say that if it were doing something differently, there would not be unemployment in the lumber, paper or mining industries.

The executives and workers of those industries know exactly who they sell their products to and what has happened to the demand for those products. They know what has happened to housing starts in the U.S. and how much Canadian lumber and plywood is shipped there for the construction of houses. They know those facts, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that the people who watch what goes on in this House scratch their heads at times and say: "Gee, what those members of the opposition are saying does not jibe with the facts". We know that if the government pumped billions of dollars into programs to increase the production of forest products or other raw materials, we would not be able to sell them. What do we do with them, stockpile them at today's interest rates? That does not make a lot of sense, Mr. Speaker.

World market conditions have to change if we are going to come out of this. But in the meantime we have to try and maintain some semblance of humanity in this country, and that is where our automatic stabilizers come into play. Those stabilizers have contributed to the increase in the deficit, but I defy any member of the opposition to stand up and say that they believe what we should do to reduce or control the deficit or expenditures is to slash away at the automatic stabilizers.

Mr. Huntington: That is not true.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Capilano says it is not true. I did not say it was true; I said I defy you to stand up and say it.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked me to ask a question. Will he accept one?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member being a friend of mine, I will accept one now.

Mr. Huntington: I thank the hon. member very much for his courtesy, but I noticed in his speech that he has not addressed the very strong and powerful suggestion of the former Auditor General of Canada that if you examine the statutory transfer payments between the provinces and studied the duplication of programs among the 11 different governments, it would take 90 days to remove $5 billion from those transfer payments in the first year and another $5 billion in the second year.

I ask the hon. member if the government has taken this initiative and if it has this study under way.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that is an excellent suggestion. I am sure the President of the Treasury Board is in the process of examining it right now once the Auditor General put it forward. The former Auditor General, Mr. Macdonell, is an acquaintance of mine and my question is: If this was possible, why was it not in his report when he was Auditor General? I am not saying he is wrong, but if it was possible, why was it not in the last report? The Comptroller-General of Canada is putting forward new ideas for program evaluation, but he is not talking about cutting $10 billion out of government spending in a period of 18 months.

Mr. Huntington: It is possible.

Mr. Evans: Sure it is possible. Anything is possible. You can shut down the government and save 16 per cent of expenditures right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Evans: The heirs of Genghis Khan over there clap at that, Mr. Speaker, but of course they do not understand the impact that would have on the services that Canadians depend on, such as education, medicare and all these kinds of things. Canadians do not really need such trivial things!

Mr. Huntington: It would not affect them one bit, John.

Mr. Evans: So I think yes, there has to be an examination of expenditure restraint to bring the deficit down, but I think the main way we are going to get out of the deficit situation is to grow out of it. The way to do that is to help restore confidence and put incentives in place. There are incentives which were brought down in the June 28 budget, and I still stand here today and say that in the November budget there were incentives. Tax rates were cut and the base was broadened. Hon. members argued about that, but I tell them right now, watch for the next six months and President Reagan is going to follow an approach which makes—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent).

Some hon. Members: Filibuster, filibuster!

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect it is sometimes amusing to me when I sit in this House and hear the debate from the other side. Whatever they have to say always has a great deal of thought behind it, yet when we on this side stand up we keep hearing the word "filibuster". I cannot understand that because here we are trying to share with our colleagues on the other side some of our findings. I think it is only fair that we who were elected to the House should also have a chance to speak on this very important matter. I for one will not just be shut up by these people because they yell out "filibuster". I have a few things which I would like to add to this debate, but it is so difficult to say anything here with everyone yelling.

Mr. Lewis: You cleared out the galleries.

Mr. Parent: We had the courtesy to listen to members opposite—I believe they put up a speaker a couple of days ago—but they are not too much interested in the debate we have here right now. Right now we are talking about what I will call proposition six and five, which very simply is that we hope by restraining ourselves to a 6 per cent increase in salaries—and when I say "ourselves", I include members of this House, senators and also civil servants—that all the people of Canada will follow our lead and restrain their salary demands. It is very important that we show leadership because we have heard many times in this House people saying that we should indeed take the lead. We are happy to do that at this time.

What does this mean to federal civil servants? Like many of my colleagues, I have had letters and telegrams from people who say this is not enough; it should not be 5 per cent or 6 per cent, it should be left at zero.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might remind the hon. member that the bill relates to borrowing authority.

• (1740)

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I am setting out my case to deal with that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parent: We have a number of members here who would have us say the exact things they want to say, but when they are sitting in this House they have every opportunity to speak so that we know what they are thinking.

Now to the borrowing bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parent: I thank hon. members on the other side for their encouragement. We are looking at a deficit which is very high, but there are ways this can be explained. As my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), said before, the expenditures that we have had to incur have contributed in great part to the deficit. We have not taken in as much money as we had thought we would in taxes and we have been paying out much more on such things as unemployment insurance benefits.

We hear hon. members on the other side say that we should be cutting. Is this the time to cut the unemployment insurance benefits? Is this the time, when the workers of Canada, the great majority, who have been paying into this fund now find themselves in need of it, to cut it back? These are the people who have been carrying Canada for all these years. Now that they are in need of this particular service, all we hear from the other side is that we should cut back.

I do not agree with that, Mr. Speaker. I do not agree that we should be having these great deficits. But there are some things which are out of the control of the government. Yes, there are some things for which we do not have all the answers. Nevertheless, we do put forward suggestions to be tried. Here we believe we have something in which the people of Canada can take part, namely, restraint by all of us.

We have some difficult problems. For example, the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway historically have bargained together. We must see to it that as much as possible this historic relationship is kept intact. By the same token, it might be also that the workers in the union which would be getting 9 per cent will be willing to take 6 per cent if they could see this was in the best interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that Bill C-124, the so-called "six and five" bill, is one that has been dealt with on second reading and is being dealt with now in committee. Could the hon. member enlighten us as to how the $20 billion deficit could be reduced?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to address that question when I get to the end of my pertinent remarks.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. If the hon. member continues to occupy his full time, as he is entitled to do under the rules, it will mean that the question will not be put tonight. We have been sitting very patiently while the debate has been carried fully by the government, waiting for the question to be put. Why are the Liberals filibustering their own legislation?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), he is not making a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) just mentioned something which surprises me very much. He opened the door for me to say that he has asked us to consider reducing the amount in the bill. He knows very well that if we were to vote down the amendment that is on the floor of the House, then we would close the door to his own proposal.

What we are doing is allowing his own proposal to stay alive until tomorrow morning, when we are to have a meeting. He knows about the meeting tomorrow morning. We want to be consistent and respect—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In the opinion of the Chair, the last two interventions have hardly been points of order. The hon. member for Welland has the floor.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I have had so many interruptions that I have to reorganize my thoughts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parent: There have been two interruptions by members on the other side. I appreciate the fact that our beloved House leader has jumped into the fray to help straighten these things out. More times than not, Mr. Speaker, as you are aware having sat in the chair, we have been ready to vote on many things and other members have not showed up. As a matter of fact, they took 16 days off just a little while ago. But that is water under the bridge.

With regard to the borrowing authority, the Government of Canada, in order to carry out the various programs it has in place, needs this borrowing requirement. Members on the other side say that we should be cutting government waste. Yet when we ask where we should be making these cuts, they fly off in all different directions. There are those who say that we could cut government waste by doing away with the famous brief cases. That matter was brought up by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). We heard that this would save perhaps $400,000, that it is a lot of money for most people in Canada. I would not call the hon. leader Mr. Joe Briefcase. I reject that being said by anyone in this House. He is not Mr. Joe Briefcase. He is the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and I ask all members here to respect that fact, because it is important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. King: Be gentle.

Mr. Parent: I hear the hon. member on the other side saying be gentle. I will be gentle with hon. members. The hon. member is just back from Strasbourg. I welcome him back in the House; we missed him very much. We should be gentle with one another in this House. We should indeed be gentle with our civil servants.

Many people have said that civil servants are the ones who will be carrying all of the burden for the people of Canada by having their increases reduced to 6 per cent and 5 per cent.

Mr. Huntington: You are speaking on Bill C-124 again.

Mr. Parent: I am bringing this in along with the borrowing bill. We know that the civil servants, by and large, are very strong contributors to the strength of this country. It would be wrong for them solely to bear this burden of taking 6 per cent in one year and 5 per cent in another unless we asked this of all the people of Canada. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if all of the people of Canada do get together and restrain themselves—and I am talking here about Members of Parliament and the Government of Canada—then I am sure we can face this problem that is now weighing so heavily on all of our shoulders. I am sure we can get the solutions that we are going to need.

The hon. member for Ottawa Centre who spoke just before me talked about newsprint. Newsprint is of great importance in my riding because we have four paper mills there. I am happy to say that one of the paper mills, Ontario Paper, received a grant from the federal government of $12 million to help it renew its newsprint factory to make it more competitive.

Mr. Epp: That's more paper for the government.

Mr. Parent: In my opinion, this is the right direction because it helps to protect our jobs. It helps us in those areas which need help the most.

I would like to address myself to what the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) said today. In the Niagara peninsula, we have many automotive workers; some 8,000 of them work for General Motors and related industries. Today, the decision to let up a little on Japanese cars coming into the country was one which possibly will be well taken by people in other parts of the country. But I can tell hon. members that for us it will mean more hardship until we do have these content rules put in. I would urge hon. members in this House to stick together and see if we can get the answers to lead us out of the morass that we seem to be in. This applies not only to Canada but to many of the western industrialized countries of the world. It will not be done by heckling one another—

[Translation]

—shouting insults from one side of the House to the other that we shall find answers to our problems. It is most important that we be able to share solutions to the problems now facing us. It is most important for us as members of Parliament to listen to what each of us has to say, and as one of my colleagues noted, it must also be realized that all the problems cannot be solved by a single group of Canadians, namely public servants.

[English]

I believe it is incumbent upon all of us to carry the burden as much as we can. These were the few comments I wanted to interject into this debate. As hon. members were saying earlier, we are always amenable to discussions and to a happy resolution of the problems. We look forward to the vote whenever it comes.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau).

Some hon. Members: Filibuster!

• (1750)

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part in this debate on Bill C-125 and the amendment moved by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) to reduce the government's borrowing power. I am going to deal particularly with the amendment because it is the crux of the present debate. In my view, this is just an exercise in futility because it will get us nowhere, and is only a scheme to thwart the financial and borrowing plans of the government, and make this House of Commons lose more time in the fall. In fact, Bill C-125 does not allocate funds or decide whether or not a certain amount can be spent on such and such a program. It only empowers the government to borrow $11 billion. Government expenditure will be studied through the appropriation bill, first in Parliament and then in the Standing Committee that will report to the House for the final vote. So, if the House of Commons does not agree with government expenditures it will not appropriate them. The claim that Bill C-125 will result in huge government expenditures and the attempt to lead us into a debate on government spending, may be politically wise but I think it is important to emphasize that this bill does not appropriate funds. The appropriation of funds is a different process and this bill only gives the government the authority to borrow to cover its deficit. Now, why is the deficit higher or why do we expect it to be higher in the present fiscal year than was expected in November? The answer is simple. Early last winter, depression set in all over the world, particularly the United States and that put pressures on the federal budget in two ways. First, federal revenues decreased significantly. The June 28th budget forecast a reduction of about $6.4 billion. That is because companies and businesses will be making less profit, but also because there will be a lot more unemployed people who will earn less money and, therefore, will pay less income tax.

The second pressure brought to bear on the budget of the federal government has to do with the fact that over the years we have introduced in our system what we call stabilizers, social programs such as unemployment insurance and the Canada Assistance Plan which pays for 50 per cent of all social assistance in the country. When the economy is in recession, business slows down, unemployment goes up and there are fewer economic activities, with the result that expenditures under those programs automatically increase. That is why they are called stabilizers. So the impact of a recession is that the federal government deficit is bound to grow because revenues are down and some expenditures automatically increase.

Now then, is it sound financial, fiscal and economic management when the government opts for deficit financing during a recession? I for one think so, Mr. Speaker, quite so. First of all, it has been noted that in times of economic doldrums, the savings rate of Canadians rises dramatically. It increases sharply. This year Canadians are setting aside 14 per cent of their income precisely because the economic situation has them worried. When Canadian savings are so high during a period of economic slowdown and all that money is left on deposit with banks, credit unions and trust companies, we cannot expect the private sector to be anxious to use it to spur the economy, if only because in the private sector right now the manufacturing industry, for instance, is operating at barely 55 or 60 per cent of its capacity. Therefore, should we decide to leave these funds in Canadian banks or in the Caisses Populaires, and should the government not borrow any money, no one is assured that this money will really be used to stimulate the economy in order to meet the needs of those groups in our society or in the economy who need attention the most. I think it is wise for the government, as a matter of economic policy, to get involved in the marketplace in times such as those, to grow a deficit and to borrow, because this will stimulate the economy.

In the June 28 budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) proposed to allocate funds to specific areas: housing, through a $3,000 grant to people who will build or buy their first home, direct job-creation programs, on which more than $400 million will be spent, economic development projects for which $300 million will be earmarked; in addition, the government will consider setting up a permanent and structural change within our interest rates policies in order to ensure that small businesses, home owners with mortgage payments, farmers and fishermen will get loans at an interest rate from 3 to 6 percent lower than usual. This will enable the government to redistribute the wealth of our country. By not adopting a high deficit policy in times of recession, I think we would delay economic recovery because we must ensure that helpless people are not the only ones to bear the brunt of an economic recession. The federal and provincial governments have the responsibility to find means of stabilizing and reducing the social costs of economic slowdowns.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I think the government should not be reluctant to resort to what is called deficit financing, even in times of economic recovery, because a government debt is like an individual debt. We should consider that over the past and present years the government has built up funds that will be made available for public services for years to come. Why then should the wage-earners of 1982 be the only ones to pay for those services through their taxes? I think it is reasonable, Mr. Speaker, to expect the people who will be using those services later to pay their share and this is why I feel we are entitled to borrow.

Therefore Mr. Speaker, I think that the Leader of the Opposition's amendment to restrain the government's borrowing power is absolutely useless and would merely result in our having to introduce another bill in the fall. It is only intended to hinder the financial planning of the government, and accordingly I will vote against the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1) I do now adjourn the House until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FUTURE OF MIRABEL AND PICKERING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, in view of the total confusion in the air transport administration of the Department of Transport with regard to the future of Mirabel and the fourth runway for Toronto at Pickering, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of Transport present a clear policy statement on these two white elephants prior to the summer recess.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

SUGGESTION DRAFT POLICY BE TABLED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, on May 20 the Under Secretary of State announced that a document outlining a comprehensive voluntary action policy had been sent to cabinet for decision and action. On June 23 the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chrétien) told the House that he had personally raised the give and take tax proposals of national voluntary organizations "several times in cabinet". On June 28 another budget again ignored Canada's voluntary sector and provided no incentive or support. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

That this House urge the government, since cabinet is clearly divided, to table the draft policy document before the House recesses in order to test public reaction and to demonstrate support for the enrichment of our society resulting from the service of Canada's three million volunteers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUPPORT FOR UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ACTION ON ACID RAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the favourable vote taken today in the United States Senate Environment and Public Works Committee on a bill to force a ten million ton reduction of sulphur dioxide in the U.S. within 12 years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin), the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this House go on record as supporting the action of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee in attempting to force action on the urgent problem of acid rain, and that this House express its appreciation to Senator Stafford and his fellow Senators from both American political parties for their efforts to improve Canadian-American relations with regard to environmental questions.

I commend this motion for all-party support.

PROPOSAL THAT MEMBERS RETURN TO THEIR RIDINGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas Canadian parliamentarians must set an example in their daily life; whereas they have spouses and children in their ridings, and whereas much of the work of this House is concerned with family matters, I move, seconded by the member for Vancouver Centre:

That parliamentarians return to their respective ridings not later than July 30 of this year, in order to do their duty as responsible citizens, namely, bring up their children, consolidate their family life and be available to their constituents in these difficult times.

THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

CALL FOR REORGANIZATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE STRUCTURE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the provinces are leading the federal government in putting into effect genuine measures of restraint, and in view of the fact that a major Vancouver paper has reported that the premier of British Columbia is considering a reduction in the number of his cabinet ministers through combining two or more responsibilities into a single cabinet portfolio to reduce the expense of cabinet and the cost of bureaucracy which surrounds each cabinet minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House implore the Prime Minister of Canada to show responsible leadership similar to that of the premier of British Columbia by instituting plans to attack the growing top-heavy nature of the massive government superstructure which the Prime Minister has created and which is so much a part of the problem Canada faces.

Whereas the President of Bell Canada has announced that his company is reviewing its application for a rate increase; whereas this is a test case for many Canadians who want to be sure they will not be alone in paying the cost of supporting the economy, I move, seconded by the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISPENSING WITH CABOOSES IN MOVING CARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, it has been brought to my attention by Local 990 of the United Transportation Union that the CNR is making transfer movements of 80 cars or more from Symington yard to Fort Rouge, to W.I.T. and Transcona, without a caboose, and thus without tail end protection in the case of a derailment. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has also been alerted to this problem in which we find the CNR acting in violation of the view of the railway transport committee that the marshalling of transfers should be subject to the same requirements and rules as are mainline trains. Many of these transfers are carrying dangerous commodities. Therefore in order to avoid a Mississauga-like event in Winnipeg, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to direct the CNR to stop this irresponsible and dangerous practice which is just the latest example of how the CNR's mania for eliminating jobs also affects the safety of railroaders and surrounding communities.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister who will know that today the Conference Board has declared that confidence in Canada is at an all-time low. Does the minister recognize that the problem of youth unemployment is serious, and does he agree with what the Minister of Employment and Immigration said yesterday, that we could lose a whole generation of young workers who become frustrated at not being able to find jobs? Will the minister have something to say today which will give young people, who are now being laid off in enormous numbers, some hope that they can play a part in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, what I find to be most encouraging and what I hear about public opinion through the press media and other means is that the people of Canada are now joining in the objective indicated by the Minister of Finance in his budget. I find that wonderful.

Mr. Clark: Massive unemployment!

Mr. Pepin: I also take satisfaction in the fact that today, for example, the bank rate has come down to 15.6 per cent—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: —the exchange rate is keeping at 79.35 cents in relation to the U.S. dollar, and the index of industrial production rose by one per cent in May. These are a number of indicators, not of a very rapid change, but of a move, and the same indication comes from the United States. My conclusion, and the Leader of the Opposition will find it professorial, but I will make it nevertheless, is that there are clear indications that if we all hold hands, as one of the hon. members just said, the near future will be much better than appeared in the recent past.

LAY-OFFS AFFECTING YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, we are all wringing our hands and hoping something will happen. The minister will know that, while we are happy to see a drop in the bank rate, it is still one full per cent higher than it was in January when we saw the worst economic performance in one quarter in this country's history. It is all very well for the bank rate to drop a measly 57 basis points, but it is still high. The minister knows that there are young people being laid off and that they are the first to go in any lay-off program. Does the minister appreciate the fact that unemployment of those between the ages of 20 and 24 has risen 60 per cent in a full year? What program does the government have to ensure that it will not be the young people who will pay all the penalty of being first laid off in those parts of government service under federal jurisdiction?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the issue raised by the hon. member is, of course, of particular concern to the Department of Employment and Immigration. In fact, a meeting was held in Toronto to see how these problems could be solved. In the last budget it was announced that funds would be earmarked for the young people of this country. We have the new training legislation passed by Parliament and given royal assent in June, which will be aimed at helping the young across Canada, and we shall therefore be able to provide training for jobs in the high technology sector in this country. Both the department and the government are concerned about youth employment—that was the whole point of our meeting yesterday in Toronto—and we are going to continue our efforts to meet the needs of Canada's young people and provide jobs for them.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the parliamentary secretary knows, and the government knows, that there is not much point in training people when there are no jobs.

Mr. Chénier: There are jobs.

Mr. Blenkarn: The government knows that apprenticeship plans do not work when factories are turned off and their doors are closed. The government knows that it is the young people who are first laid off. What program does the government have through Public Works, perhaps a Roads to Resources program or something of that nature, to put these young people to work, so that they are not on the dole, so that they are not collecting unemployment insurance, and so that they are not taking part in training programs for which there are no jobs and no hope of jobs?

• (1420)

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member ought to realize that in recent years, we have had to admit 25,000 foreign workers to this country, and that the role of the new legislation will be to provide training for these jobs, especially for young people.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, when I mentioned the budget a moment ago, I was referring to the job-creation programs that are to be announced shortly by the minister. We shall certainly stress job creation for youth, and I am sure that all young people across the country will benefit from the programs during the years to come.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON ACID RAIN

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, all members of this House just supported a motion under Standing Order 43 commending very heartily the United States Senate environment committee for its decision earlier today to slash acid rain-causing emissions in that country over the next 12 years. My question to the Minister of the Environment is this. The minister said some weeks ago that Canada might have to withdraw from its negotiations with the United States toward achieving a binding bilateral accord on acid rain because of American foot-dragging on the issue. Will the minister tell the House whether the major breakthrough on acid rain in the U.S. Senate today—it is a major breakthrough—has given the minister and the Canadian government cause to reconsider their threat to withdraw from their negotiations with the Americans on acid rain?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question, partly because it gives me the opportunity to agree with him that the decision by the United States Senate earlier today is a major breakthrough. I would like to say that there are members on all sides of this House who, through their work with their Congressional counterparts in the United States, have helped to make that favourable event take place today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: The House earlier today recognized the efforts of Senator Stafford in the United States in that regard. It is important also to recognize the efforts of Senator Mitchell of Maine, and the leading democratic spokesman, Senator Jennings Randolph, and particularly the support which the Senate Leader, Howard Baker of the United States, gave to these efforts. Those decisions by these extremely able, influential and leading American Senators have been very helpful to us.

As the hon. member suggests, this extremely favourable sign should encourage us to continue our work in the United States with the administration, and equally with Congress. In his question the hon. member used the word "threat". I do not think that is a word I have ever used. It was simply a fact of life that, given the delays in the negotiations, it was necessary for us to reassess what position we should take. It is my hope that the scientific group which has been working on this problem will resume its activities in the month of August. When we see the results of those working task forces, we will be able to begin negotiations again early in the autumn. However, it will depend to some extent on whether the task force reports indicate that progress is being made.

Mr. McMillan: Madam Speaker, every member on this side of the House welcomes that positive reassurance from the minister.

ONTARIO HYDRO—INSTALLATION OF ANTI-POLLUTION DEVICES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary to the same minister. Earlier this week Ontario Hydro announced that it is going to shelve plans to instal acid rain controls on its plants in Ontario. Now that we have had a genuine act of good faith by the Americans on the acid rain question, will the minister consider using his good offices to try to convince Ontario Hydro to reverse its decision, as an act of good faith on the part of all Canadians on this important, vital and urgent problem?

• (1425)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Yes, Madam Speaker. I will do everything I can to try to bring to the attention of Ontario Hydro the importance of moving as quickly as possible to introduce and maintain anti-pollution devices which are as effective as possible. I think the important thing to note in relation to that Ontario Hydro statement was the reaction of the provincial minister, Mr. Norton, who emphasized that it was the intention of the Ontario government to work with other provincial governments and the federal government in bringing forward proposals for the achievement of emission reductions in eastern Canada of 50 per cent by the end of this decade and that that could very well lead to more restrictive limitations on the actions of Ontario Hydro than are presently envisaged.

One favourable consequence of the event the hon. gentleman has discussed has been the underlining of the statement of the provincial environment minister that he is determined to work out effective emission reductions over the next few months, and that Ontario Hydro may very well be required by the provincial government in those circumstances to have even lower emissions than Ontario Hydro now believes we will face.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

BUSINESSMAN'S ADVICE ON WAGE AND SALARY DEMANDS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday Ian Sinclair, chairman of another blue ribbon advisory committee, told Canadians they would have to restrict their wage increases to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister why the Canadian people should restrict their wage and salary demands to 6 per cent and 5 per cent on the advice of a man who earns over $550,000 a year.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am quite sure that, when he said those words, Mr. Sinclair was conscious that they also applied to himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Could I have his 6 per cent?

Mr. Beatty: Life is tough all over.

Mr. Murphy: That is a meagre $30,000 a year increase.

SALARY INCREASE FOR BELL CANADA CHAIRMAN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, Bell Canada announced yesterday that it would be turning its back on the dream world of 6 per cent and 5 per cent and that it will be going ahead with its plan to increase rates by 25 per cent. Does the minister consider it acceptable for Jean de Grandpré, chairman of Bell Canada, to take a salary increase of 22 per cent, which will bring his annual income to $645,000 a year, and also to ask Canadians to accept 25 per cent increases in their telephone rates?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, what I said about Mr. Sinclair applies to Mr. Jean de Grandpré also.

I think hon. members should be aware of the way in which the system created by the Minister of Finance and announced in his budget will be implemented. What I say for Bell Canada applies also to Air Canada, for example. Requests for increase in prices will be submitted to regulatory agencies. The regulatory agencies will pass judgments on the validity of those proposed increases. Should approved increases be more than 6 per cent, there is a committee of cabinet which will look at them to find out if they qualify under the theme of extraordinary, exceptional and uncommon circumstances. That is the way the system will be implemented.

Hon. members should not ask each minister each day what he intends to do about CN, Bell and so forth. What we would like to do is let the regulatory system, as it exists now, follow its normal course and act only after decisions have been made by regulatory agencies. It may very well be that in a number of instances the regulatory agencies will not allow more than 6 per cent.

APPLICATION OF RESTRAINT TO FAMILY EARNINGS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, Mr. Sinclair, the president of Bell, and the minister who just responded, have said that exceptional increases of more than 6 per cent will be allowed if component costs for organizations like Bell, like Air Canada, and like VIA, are more than 6 per cent. Will Canadian families be allowed to accept increases of more than 6 per cent if their component costs increase by more than 6 per cent?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would very much like to know from where my hon. friend took this element of component costs. I have not seen it as a factor in the determination.

I think I can give an illustration in my own area of transportation. It may be, for example, that an increase of only 6 per cent granted to Air Canada might damage or prejudice the economic situation of the whole of the air carrier industry. This is the sort of consideration that the committee will have in mind in assessing what are extraordinary circumstances.

HOUSING

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION RENT INCREASES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Has the cabinet taken a decision to roll back the exorbitant rent increases on some 20,000 units owned by CMHC? If not, does the government intend to take such a decision and hold CMHC to the 6-5 guideline?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the minister responsible for this area is in Vancouver today speaking to a meeting of people interested in the construction industry. I will consult with him, because I really do not know. I think the case is before cabinet but I could not swear to it.

EDUCATION

UNIVERSITY STUDENT TUITION FEES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State concerning the plight of universities and university students in Canada. The unemployment that affects young persons in Canada is a crushing burden on students who must work to earn tuition fees for next year's university session.

We know that the minister has been talking to the provincial officials responsible for secondary education in Canada and that there has been much discussion, but my question concerns the plight of the university students. Will government funding be so restricted that university students will be faced with tuition increases of 30 per cent and more in the next academic year? I would like the minister to make a commitment to university students now that they will be brought into the world of 6 per cent with respect to tuition fees for the next academic session.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I can only begin by complimenting the hon. member for his idea, although the authority to restrict the amount of tuition increase rests with the provinces rather than with the federal government. I think he has struck home at a very, very real concern. I can assure him, through you, Madam Speaker, that the Government of Canada is not going to decrease the amount of money that goes through the provinces for the universities in the coming year, but, rather, is going to increase it by a substantial amount.

This is a matter that I have already been considering, but in view of the hon. member's question I am going to contact the provincial ministers of education further to our meeting on July 9 and urge them to speak to all universities and seek their agreement to limiting any increase in tuition fees to not more than 6 per cent.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I do not want to add to federal-provincial conflict, but the Secretary of State knows very well that any failure to fund by provincial and federal governments has to be made up by students, through tuition fees. I should like to ask the minister what he meant in his recent press release when he said that the government is moving to strengthen support for students and to improve accessibility to universities. What proposal does the minister have in mind to make it easier for university students to get into university and pay the costs when they get there?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, first of all the hon. member is referring to statements that came out of the very productive and friendly meeting that I had with the ministers of education on July 9. As a consequence of that meeting, our officials are working together on developing an improved student aid assistance program. Of course it will be some months at the very minimum before an agreement can be achieved. In the meantime I am happy to report to the hon. member that most of the provinces in Canada have agreed at least to match the increase in funding for universities that the federal government is making available in the coming year. Therefore, there would appear to me to be little reason for universities to impose an increase above 6 per cent on tuition fees for the coming year. I hope that will be helpful to the students.

VIA RAIL

REPLACEMENT OF CANADIAN NATIONAL EMPLOYEES AT WOODSTOCK, ONT.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, who will probably know that it is proposed as of August 31 this year that VIA Rail employees will replace CN personnel, one agent and three operators, at the Woodstock, Ontario, railway station. The VIA Rail replacement personnel will only be selling tickets and will not be inspecting trains for hot boxes, dragging equipment, shifted loads and sticking brakes, work which is currently performed by CN personnel.

Why is the government considering this change which will cause great upheaval in the lives of capable CN employees, and which will increase the chances of a derailment occurring in the Woodstock area, a change which is in direct conflict with the current policy on rail safety?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not really think that I am expected to be aware of what goes on in every railway station in the country. Had the hon. member given me notice of the question I would have done my best to find out the particular circumstances in this particular instance. Be that as it may, I will do so now and report to him.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF CHANGE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): I appreciate that the minister may not have been aware of this, Madam Speaker, although a letter went to his office on June 30 regarding the matter. The people in that area are concerned about the hazardous situation that will exist when VIA Rail personnel are not able to detect possible problems in trains. I wonder if we could have an assurance from the minister that he will undertake an investigation before August 31, when this change is due to come into effect, so that people will not be worried about the possibility of another Mississauga incident.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already said that I would look into it.

TRANSPORT

SCHEDULED SALE OF LAKESPAN CORPORATION SHIP

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He will recall that two weeks ago I asked him about the cessation of Lakespan and he said that he would advise me immediately. Tomorrow the ship is being sold back to the Norwegians. Would the minister use the authority provided under Section 702(4) of the Canada Shipping Act and stop the ship leaving Oshawa and Canada, as there are liens pending against it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my information is that CN is actually trying to establish a lien on the boat so that it could then be sold and all those who have claimed reparation could be properly compensated. For those who are not in such a position, CN would try to accommodate them on a voluntary basis. This is the situation as it existed at two o'clock this afternoon. I will keep on with it so as to prevent the ship from returning to Sweden or wherever it came from, if that is needed. My information was that the ship was owned by Lakespan and consequently they had a right to it.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I happen to know that the ship is in Oshawa and not back in Norway. It appears that the minister has answered my question, and that he will be dealing with the small creditors about whom I am so concerned.

Oral Questions

MARINE TRANSPORT

NEED FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA PLEASURE CRAFT SEWAGE CONTROL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. At present there are no sewage discharge regulations for small craft operating through the Gulf Islands in the Strait of Georgia. At one high-density anchorage spot, oyster meat has shown seven times the accepted minimal level for fecal coliform count. Will the minister act immediately to bring in long overdue sewage control regulations for pleasure craft on the coast of British Columbia?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this could come under fisheries or environment. I will call a meeting of my two colleagues this afternoon and look into the matter to see if my department or other departments have done anything about it.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In a letter to me earlier this spring he indicated that the reason those regulations were not passed was because the matter had been handed over to the Province of British Columbia. The province indicated as far back as 1974, and has reaffirmed this month, that it sees this as coming under federal jurisdiction. When will the minister stop passing the buck between his counterparts among the provincial ministers and act to prevent the Strait of Georgia from becoming an open sewer?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I was going to say that we will call in the minister from British Columbia to join our meeting, but that would have been considered too facetious. I can only say very seriously that I will try to clarify the jurisdictional question. This has been done in a number of other instances and I will try to add this one to the list.

ENERGY

DOME PETROLEUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Are negotiations going on between Dome Petroleum and the minister with regard to the financial problems Dome finds itself with, and is it the minister's intention to use public funds to bail out Dome Petroleum, or is it his intention to use one of the Crown corporations?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I already answered this question in the House last week.

[English]

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S REASONING

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, to the same minister, whose answer was not sufficient in my thinking—does he think it is fair to ask the ordinary Canadian worker and taxpayer to bail out Dome Petroleum in view of the fact that its problems result from both the minister's misguided National Energy Policy and highly speculative investing at very high interest rates on the part of Dome?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member is misguided in many aspects of his question and his assertions. The only answer I need give him is that no bail-out is considered.

Mr. Gustafson: Time will tell.

AIR TRANSPORT

ULTRA-LIGHT AIRCRAFT ACCIDENTS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and is with regard to powered ultra-light aircraft. There have been at least four persons killed in Canada in accidents involving powered ultra-light aircraft over the past few years. These aircraft have been commercially produced for about four years, and over that time Transport Canada has been working on regulations concerning them. Will the minister advise when legislation will be introduced, and what steps will be taken in the legislation to reduce injury and death in the use of these aircraft?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this should be done before the end of the year. The operator of the craft will have to be licensed, and the craft itself will be subject to a registration process.

FISHERIES

REPLACEMENT OF WHARF AT RIVERPORT, N.S.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Riverport Seafoods Limited plant at Riverport, Nova Scotia, was completely destroyed by fire on Saturday, September 26, 1981, almost a year ago. At the same time the federal government wharf adjacent to the plant was also destroyed. Since there is no insurance on government wharves, and in view of the continued need for docking space by the large Riverport scallop fleet which is now required to tie up three and four ships abreast when unloading, when can the fishermen expect an announcement concerning the replacement of this much needed facility which, I submit, is a moral responsibility of the federal government?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I made it very clear from the very beginning that as soon as we knew if the plant was going to be rebuilt or not, then we would be able to design a wharf accordingly. One of the difficulties I have, in spite of the rumours and articles in the Halifax newspaper, is that until the last two days I had no firm commitment that the plant was going to be rebuilt. If there is not going to be a plant, then we are ready with designs and we can go ahead quite quickly.

SOCIOECONOMIC STUDY OBSERVATIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, following the loss a socioeconomic study was made by the Nova Scotia Department of Development concerning the impact of the plant and wharf destruction, and it was released in October, 1981. That report pointed out that, even if the plant cannot be rebuilt, a new wharf in an excellent harbour, with a developed industrial water supply and a willing labour force, could attract new industry to Riverport. Has the minister read the report and, if so, has he any comment to make on its observations?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I have read a précis of the report, but I repeat to the hon. gentleman that the configuration of the wharf will depend on whether it is to be used as a landing site for the scallop fleet as opposed to being just an overnight or weekend tie-up area for the fleet. On that point I have to see what the company intends to do.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF IMPORTED HIGH SULPHUR COAL BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I think we are all very much encouraged by the action of the U.S. Senate with regard to acid rain, and I would like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment.

Ontario Hydro is using vast quantities of imported high sulphur coal from Pennsylvania. It has been doing so for a large number of years, even though there have been many attempts to have low sulphur western Canadian coal used in Ontario. In light of the minister's attachment to the reduction of acid rain in Ontario and the eastern seaboard, what is he doing with respect to converting Ontario Hydro from the use of high sulphur Pennsylvania coal to very low sulphur western Canadian coal?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, perhaps it would help if I explained the context in which we have made our efforts in terms of acid rain reduction. The view we have taken is to urge the kind of emission reductions which would reach the safe fallout level that scientists have told us are required to respond to the problems of moderately sensitive geological areas. We have not attempted to dictate the method for arriving at these emission reductions. Rather, we have said that what most concerns us is the consequences. That is to say, a certain level of emission reductions will be required; the figure which comes forth from the scientific evidence is a 50 per cent reduction in eastern North America or eastern Canada by 1990. We have not tried to describe the method by which that reduction should be reached; we are more intent on having the reductions reached.

ENERGY

IMPORTATION OF OIL FROM MEXICO

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy who will know by now that many aspects of his energy program have created problems in employment, in both the oil industry and manufacturing in Ontario, indeed to the whole economy, through higher interest rates and other difficulties. There is one specific area in the program having to do with the deal Petro-Can has with Pemex, the state-owned Mexican oil company. Is the minister aware, as indicated on page 71 of the NEP "Update", that the deal Petro-Can has with Pemex results in oil being brought into Canada at $22 per cubic metre less than the price of domestic oil, and does he think it is fair that Canadian consumers should have to pay the additional $176,000 a day for domestic oil available in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the hon. member that we still need to import oil. To give him an idea, I would inform him that the conventional light crude oil shut in for August and September is predicted to be a negligible or zero volume, and that we expect there will be no heavy crude shut in over the next three months as exports have increased very substantially, thanks to the steps we have taken. Unfortunately, we are still dependent on foreign imports although our measures have succeeded in cutting by more than half the imports as forecast by the former Prime Minister, now the Leader of the Opposition, a few years ago in Tokyo. Rather than having 600,000 barrels a day of imports, we will be importing less than 250,000 barrels a day by 1995, thanks to the measures taken under the National Energy Program.

• (1450)

As far as the imports from Mexico are concerned, to which the hon. member has referred, I remind him that the imports from Mexico represent a very small portion of the total imports we have from Venezuela, and Saudi Arabia, in particular—

Mr. Clark: Name one person who believes you, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: —and the instructions to all companies, including Petro-Canada, have been to reduce to a minimum the imports that we are bringing into the country.

Finally, I would like to indicate to the hon. member that our exports to Mexico have increased tremendously since we made a deal with Mexico on oil. This has meant jobs for thousands and thousands of Canadians in the manufacturing industry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the minister that the figures right now equate to an approximate 7 per cent reduction in the use of oil because of the programs of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The remainder is because of the way this minister of energy, this Minister of Finance and this Prime Minister have screwed down the economy of this country so that we are all facing bankruptcy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT NOT BE RENEWED

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the same Mexican oil deal. In spite of the number of components to his answer, since much of this deal was predicated on completion of a Candu reactor sale to Mexico, which is now defunct, and in view of the fact that this deal with Mexico for oil is an "evergreen" kind of deal that depends on a renewed contract on the basis of PetroCan and Pemex; will the minister ensure, when this energy contract comes up, that we do not accept a renewal, and in spite of the minister's protestations, we do not have oil in Canada at $22 per cubic metre—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That question really was quite long, as was the hon. member's first one.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to a 7 per cent decline as if it were a small event. I remind the hon. member that this means over 100,000 barrels a day less that we have to import.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This means that Canadians, through the conservation and substitution measures announced by this government, have been saved the cost already of the equivalent of a full tar sands plant. The taxpayers of Canada have been saved about $10 billion to $13 billion in investment—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lalonde: —thanks to the measures we have taken.

Mr. Stevens: An economic collapse is an instrument of conservation.

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the Mexican contract itself is concerned, I find it strange that the hon. member would have us rely on Middle East oil exclusively rather than being able to rely on several sources of supply for this country, which means that we will have a better security of supply.

Mr. Clark: Does anybody believe you?

Mr. Lalonde: Moreover, we will be able to expand our export trade into the countries that sell us oil.

Mr. Clark: Name one person who believes you.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

LOAN TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I had hoped to ask my question of the Minister of Finance, but in his absence I will address it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week the International Monetary Fund granted an $85 million loan to El Salvador. Some have considered that this is one of the most controversial and political loans the International Monetary Fund has granted since the $66 million loan to President Somoza a few weeks before he fled with the national treasury. Would the minister tell us how Canada voted on that particular loan, and why?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will have to take that question in part as notice. But I would say, and I am sure the hon. member knows, that Canada has a long tradition of treating matters before bodies such as the IMF as economic matters and not as political matters. We do not apply any ideological tests to our aid or to our action before international bodies.

INTER-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK PROPOSALS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, in light of the answer of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, on the question of the $194 million loan proposals now before the Inter-American Development Bank for El Salvador, because of the state of the civil war in that country, is the minister going to advise the Minister of Finance how he should vote?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would be advising the Minister of Finance on the political aspects of the decision involved, and certainly I would not advise him on the basis of the political aspects that grants should not be made, precisely because of the fact that such a decision should be made on economic grounds. If the difficulties were such that on economic grounds a sound decision could not be made, then the decision should be made on that basis and not on a spurious political basis.

FINANCE

TAX ON FUEL USED IN FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Bearing in mind that federal tax on farm fuels is now 60 cents a gallon, representing 40 per cent of the farmers' cost for fuel, what is the minister's perspective on that in light of the fact that food costs have risen significantly in the past month and the past year? What is the effect of the federal tax in relation to food costs, and is it the minister's opinion that fuel taxes have had some effect in making the price go up?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, when the Minister of Finance established his budget a few weeks ago, obviously he must have had this and other like considerations in mind. If he discarded it, it is because he felt that he could not give dispensation from paying such taxes on energy because it was necessary for his budget.

JUSTIFICATION FOR TAX

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, when the minister said that obviously it has an effect, an upward pressure on food prices, and bearing in mind that in the calculation of inflation the cost of food is one of the most significant factors, how is it that the government can justify—in a period when it argues that its main objective is a decrease in inflation—putting in place a tax that in fact causes inflation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, all taxes contribute somewhat to inflation.

Mr. Huntington: And deficits.

Mr. Pepin: I was trying to indicate that when the Minister of Finance makes his budget he looks at all aspects. I am quite sure, being the kind of man he is, that he looked at the possibility of reducing the tax on fuel to help farmers. If he did not discard it, it was because he thought that in the exercise of balancing advantages and disadvantages he could not be generous in that particular instance. But I am aware that the Government of Saskatchewan has reduced the provincial fuel tax because it thought it could afford it.

Mr. Clark: That government thinks agriculture is important.

Mr. Pepin: That government thought it was also attractive to the population also at election time.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe

Mr. Beatty: Thank you, Madam Speaker, you have made an excellent selection.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SPENDING

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the government, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Twice in the last two weeks the Prime Minister has refused a request from this side of the House to strike a special committee of Parliament charged with the responsibility of looking for ways to cut fat in the federal budget. Since he most recently did that, the government has released figures showing that the expenses for hospitality—that is wining and dining—at the taxpayers' expense, exceed some $10 million a year. Will the Acting Prime Minister reconsider that decision, and will he agree to strike a parliamentary committee charged with the responsibility of looking for ways to cut out waste in federal spending?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister, as far as I can remember, did discard the possibility of a special committee because he thought that all committees had the task of watching over the expenditures of the government. But recently there have been instances, and I am quite sure there will be others, when cases will be brought to the attention of the government.

• (1500)

Some hon. Members: Cases of what?

Mr. Pepin: As I am sure hon. members are aware, the government intends to take very prompt action each time one of those cases comes up.

INCREASE IN HOSPITALITY EXPENSES OF TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House why it is necessary for the Department of Employment and Immigration to spend over $309,000 a year on hospitality? In view of the fact that the Prime Minister said that this was a matter which would be looked at, not by Parliament but by the President of the Treasury Board, can he tell the House how the President of the Treasury Board has any credibility in this matter when spending on hospitality under him increased by some 67 per cent in one year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is only by the knowledge of each particular case that an opinion can be made. For example, the other day the hon. member raised the case of my own department which he suggested was spending too much on communications. Each time these cases are brought up, presumably the ministers will do their very best to counter the negative impression created, by stating the facts. I would think it will be rather easy for the opposition to single out situations from here and there and to try to blow them up to make them look very bad.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-125

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. An agreement has been reached at the level of House leaders on the way to dispose of Bill C-125, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the government. With Madam Speaker's permission, I will read the motion or House order. If you seek unanimous consent, I think we will obtain it. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That, with regard to Bill C-125, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition be deemed to have been withdrawn;

That, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall be referred to a Committee of the Whole;

That, at the appropriate time in Committee of the Whole stage of the said bill, a minister of the Crown shall propose an amendment to delete in line 14 of page one of the said bill the word "eleven" and to substitute therefor the word "seven";—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: It continues:

That, no later than 9.45 p.m. this day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted and all questions necessary to dispose of all remaining stages of the said bill shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment, except as provided in this order;

That, if necessary for the execution of this order, the House may sit beyond the ordinary time of adjournment; and

That the Standing Orders be amended by adding, immediately after Standing Order 72, the following:

72A. If, at any time before March 31, 1983, a minister of the Crown introduces a bill to provide additional supplementary borrowing authority of not more than four billion dollars, the said bill shall, after receiving second reading, be considered in a Committee of the Whole and, not later than fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time appointed for the consideration of Government Business on the third day that the said bill is debated, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted and all questions necessary for the disposal of all remaining stages of the said bill shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

and;

Provided that the said Standing Order 72A shall expire when any bill mentioned therein has been finally disposed of.

That is the motion; that is the agreement among the parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rising to discuss the motion—if so, I should first like to put it to the House—or does he want to make some kind of intervention before the House gives the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) permission to move the motion?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I was taking advantage of my right to rise and indicate the consent of the official opposition to that question, which is quite normal.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, we were prepared to vote on this bill last night. We are prepared to vote against $7 billion today as we were prepared to vote against $11 billion yesterday.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. minister to move the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I was beginning to suspect that you wanted me to say "no" to the order.

Mr. Dantzer: Do not say anything.

Mr. Yurko: I want a moment to make a few comments before giving my unanimous consent to this motion.

Mr. Clark: No, no.

Mr. Yurko: I have the right to say "no", if I wish to say so.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member seems to want to debate the motion. We have asked the House for unanimous consent for the minister only to propose the motion, and we have that unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: The question has been put.

Madam Speaker: I am not asking the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) a second time to give his unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, now that we have the House order in place, I wonder whether the government House leader could indicate the business of the House for tomorrow and for next week.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, today, as has just been agreed, we will conclude debate on the borrowing authority bill authorizing the government to borrow $7 billion now and, if need be, $4 billion before the end of this fiscal year within a three-day debate. Of course, at 9.45 p.m. this day the bells will be ringing.

Tomorrow we will call Bill C-122 respecting the Small Businesses Loans Act. We hope, with the collaboration of hon. members on both sides, that we will be able to adopt that bill through all stages to allow small business some relief.

[Translation]

Next week, on Monday, we shall proceed with consideration of the report stage and, I hope, third reading of Bill C-92 concerning National Harbours. As hon. members are aware, the bill was in committee for consideration. It has now been reported, and there are several amendments on the Order Paper. We would like to be able to pass this legislation before the summer recess.

If everything else goes according to plan, and Bill C-124, which is now in committee, has not been reported back to the House, we shall proceed, after consideration of Bill C-92, with the report stage of Bill C-85, which concerns the Canagrex Corporation.

In any case, Tuesday we shall try to expedite all stages of Bill C-109 which provides for financial assistance for owners of homes insulated with UFFI. Madam Speaker, provided the opposition parties agree, we shall bring that bill before the House at three o'clock on Tuesday, in case there is a division. A proposal to that effect is now being considered by the House leaders. If an affirmative answer is received from all parties, debate on Bill C-92 or Bill C-85 will be interrupted in order to dispose of all stages of Bill C-109.

Finally, I wish to confirm that as soon as we receive the report on Bill C-124, which is now before a Standing Committee of the House, and concerns compensation in the Public Service, we shall proceed immediately with consideration of the report stage of that bill and interrupt all proceedings on the bills I mentioned earlier. Thus, we are giving first priority to final passage of Bill C-124 as soon as possible.

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have not had the opportunity of indicating to the government House leader that his having been sufficiently co-operative to agree to the changes we have suggested to the committee reference on Bill C-109, we are now prepared to agree with the revised draft House order that he supplied to us, in order that that matter could be brought on Tuesday and dealt with, as we have committed ourselves to deal with it previously on the record.

Might I ask the government House leader if he has any idea what we will be doing in August?

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, it is quite clear what we will be doing in August; we will be dealing with Bill C-124. I want to say, however, to the government House leader with regard to Bill C-109 that we have referred the representation made to us by those representing persons who have UFFI in their homes; as I hear my colleague say, "the victims". I now understand that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs may well have indicated to them that he is willing to meet with them. We would not want the bill to proceed until after that meeting takes place.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, this would not change many things since in the order that we proposed there will be a special committee created that would take into account any representations made to the minister. Therefore, I am sure that my hon. friend is in good faith and it would be very simple to accept the adoption of the bill and allow at the same time a parliamentary committee to look into the matter. In any case, we will be waiting for the NDP to support that bill by next Tuesday.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BLACKBURN—SECONDERS OF S.O. 43 MOTION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier this afternoon when you put my motion to the House, you erroneously said that it was seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). In fact, it was an all-party agreement which was seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin), the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

I will spare you all the whereases, Madam Speaker, but in concluding, your petitioners humbly request that it please Your Honourable House to demand, first, that the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission immediately pay these workers the unemployment insurance benefits to which they are entitled for the period starting on the day they were laid off, and second, that the government establish appropriate mechanisms to allow that enterprise to resume operations, irrespective of who the future owner will be, so as to enable those workers to go back to their jobs. MR. STEWART—REQUESTED DISMISSAL OF CHAIRMAN OF CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL ON MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, the petition of the undersigned residents of the province of Ontario humbly sheweth that whereas Israel Ludwig is a government appointee and is chairman of the Race-relations Committee of the Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, and that Mr. Ludwig when speaking in Vancouver advocated that Christian religious holidays be abolished, that the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunication Commission remove licences from stations which give unwarranted coverage to "racist" groups, that a similar government body be set up to censor the written media, that additional penalties be made mandatory for crimes motivated by racism and that the law be changed to widen the definition of "hate" for the purposes of prosecution, and that these proposals show a contempt for the majority in this country, ignorance of our traditions of freedom of speech and abolish hard won liberties, and wherefore Mr. Ludwig's views and conduct are in opposition to the freedom of speech guarantees of the Charter of Rights, we believe that he is unfit to advise the government and request that he be dismissed from his position as chairman of the Consultative Council on Multiculturalism; and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: 4,209.

[Text]

CHARTER OF HELICOPTER

Question No. 4,290—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Did the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development charter a Bell 205A-1 helicopter at Hay River from Quasar Helicopters Ltd. and, if so, for what purpose?

2. To what locations were trips made in the helicopter and what was the total distance travelled and the flight time of each trip?

3. What equipment was used on the trips?

4. Which personnel took part in the trips and what were the classifications and job titles of those persons employed by the department?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Supply and Services as follows:

1. DSS awarded a contract, on behalf of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, to Quasar Helicopters Ltd. for the exclusive services of one Bell 205A-1 helicopter. The aircraft will be used to transport personnel, equipment and supplies to support forest fire detection and suppression activities, and resources inspections.

2. The services will not start until June 1, 1982; therefore no flying has been done against this contract as of the date this question was asked.

3. The helicopter is equipped with extra high skid gear and belly gear.

4. Not applicable, see 2 above.

For information, in the summer of 1981 the department also chartered Bell 214 helicopters from Quasar Helicopters Ltd. and Bell 205A-1's from other companies for use during fire fighting.

ENROLMENT OF INDIAN CHILDREN IN SCHOOL

Question No. 4,353—Mr. Manly:

By province, over the past twelve years, how many Indian children were enrolled in each of grades one to twelve?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, as you would know from a point of order I raised just a couple of days ago, I would like to say at the outset that I do not raise these points of order frequently. However, I have had a question on the Order Paper for 20 months, and when I asked the parliamentary secretary what he might do about it in view of the fact that the answer I received was not an answer at all, his partial suggestion was that perhaps I could replace the question. He concluded his comments by saying, "I will do my best to get him an answer as soon as possible."

Would the parliamentary secretary clarify for me what his expectation is for question No. 3,370? Will he require that I wait another 20 months by replacing the question, or will that question be readdressed? Has he had an opportunity to look at it?

The question deals with the Calgary post office, which is one of the most inefficient in Canada. Certainly the people in that city and particularly those people in the surrounding rural area of the city of Calgary are very poorly served by that particular post office. Would the parliamentary secretary indicate whether or not he deems it necessary that I replace the question and perhaps wait another 20 months before we get an answer that means nothing because the government does not want to answer the question?

I would say finally that, as a documentary on my position, a media person approached me yesterday, not knowing that I had raised a point of order, and asked what the answer meant. He said it means nothing, that it is just a conglomeration of words. Would the parliamentary secretary give me some indication of his expectation?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am shocked that the hon. member did not find my answer succinct, brief, precise, clear and to the point. I think that the point I was making was that if he felt that the answer tabled by the government was inadequate, he could then place another question on the Order Paper seeking further clarification. If he does so I will endeavour to see that it does not take too long to answer that subsequent question.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, in a short sentence I can say that it is not a case of being inadequate, it is unintelligible. It makes no sense. One should read it. There is no meaning to it. If the parliamentary secretary can read it and understand it, would he please take me to lunch some day and let me know what that answer says?

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Smith: Yes, Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into this matter on behalf of the hon. member. It is a pleasure, as usual.

An hon. Member: How about his lunch?

Mr. McKinnon: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could give me any information about question No. 2,596, which I put down on the Order Paper on June 5, 1981. This question asks the Department of National Defence to inform me as to how many people are serving in what could be described as sharp-end units. I also understand that the minister has had an answer for some six months, but that he is refusing to bring it before the House. If it is so embarrassing for the government to tell us how many people in the Canadian Forces are in sharp-end units and how many are in static units, then I wish he would have the nerve to come into the House and say so, or maybe the parliamentary secretary would tell me.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to give the hon. member a status report on the answer to that question today, but I will be happy to look into it again on his behalf.

Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Wednesday, July 21, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-125, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, as a result of the efforts of the Progressive Conservative Party, there has been a victory for the people of this nation today, albeit a small one. It should be recognized there has been a victory because this bill, which it should not have been necessary to bring in, asking this country to cough up another $11 billion, has been reduced by $4 billion. The amount is astonishing in itself, but the fact that the government is asking the people of this nation to come up with that sort of money is absolutely and totally unacceptable.

However, it must be noted that the government recognized that it could not get away with this one in the face of the opposition which has been mounted by this party, in the face of the determination of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), of our House leader and all the critics in this party who have fought so valiantly to ensure that the protection of the people of Canada was first and foremost and was looked after in this House. That particular opposition was launched, initiated and designed by this party. There can be no question but that if we had not taken the initiative and had not shown our determination in the face of the wanton spending habits of the government, the people of Canada, the citizens of this nation, would have had to bear an additional $4 billion in debt. This bill, although I certainly cannot support it, will no doubt be passed by the government majority and the people of the nation will be faced with the burden of an additional $7 billion.

Five weeks ago I stood before the House and debated Bill C-11, which asked for supplementary borrowing authority for only $6.6 billion. Today I am debating the government's request for about that same amount again, plus an additional billion dollars. As old C. D. Howe once asked, "What's a million?" It seems the government has now translated that question into, "What's a billion?"

The government is asking for another $7 billion in borrowing authority. This request means that the government has now asked for a total of $13.6 billion in borrowing authority in the past month, a total of $17.2 billion in borrowing authority for this year, and $39 billion in the two years that it has been in government thus far. Not so long ago, only last November, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stood before the House and advised Canadians of a strategy his government had devised to combat inflation and the recession, a program of economic restraint, equity and renewal. Last month the minister again stood before the House and advised Canadians that we must now strive for economic renewal under the weight of a staggering economic burden, a deficit almost twice the amount expected, a deficit of almost $20 billion. The minister confessed action "must be taken within the very limited room for manœuvre imposed by the deficit. Recession has resulted in a serious worsening of the government's financial position. Tax revenues have fallen while expenditures have risen". In two short sentences, the minister informed Canadians that the projected budgetary deficit for the current fiscal year will be $19.6 billion instead of the $10.5 billion that he initially projected last November. Our financial requirements are now projected at $17.1 billion instead of the November forecast of $6.6 billion.

In a following paragraph, the Minister of Finance assured us not to worry, for his "last budget put in place a structure of revenues and expenditures that should, when recovery gets fully under way, gradually lower the deficit and avoid putting excessive pressures on capital markets as private borrowing picks up to finance investment". There are no assurances in this statement for a public or an investment community obliged to deal in an environment of non-confidence in the government or its policies.

In the Progressive Conservative report of the special committee on the budget and the economy, our primary recommendation for economic revitalization was to restore individual and investor confidence by establishing a climate for growth, development and expansion. A Progressive Conservative government would start from the premise that government's role is to accept and enforce an economic framework upon which private individuals and businesses can act with confidence in the future. The current low level of confidence in the future of Canada, combined with high federal spending, are major factors in our current economic situation. It seems that the government is determined to descend upon the people of this country, the taxpayers of this nation, 23 million citizens, like a bunch of screaming banshees out of the heavens, falling on a waiting prey. There seems to be no end to their insatiable desire to spend.

Oftentimes I am asked a question, and I am glad to have the opportunity to set my answer on record. I am asked, "What would you fellows do if you were the government?" For the benefit of those who have asked me that question in the past and for the benefit of those who may ask me in the future but, more particularly, for the benefit of those hon. members opposite who might be genuinely concerned about the deficit imposed by the government on the taxpayers of our country, let me just tell them what a Progressive Conservative government, when elected, will do and would do now if it were in power.

The latest budget came out on June 28. We are led to believe that there will be another budget some time in the fall. It is hard to say just what that might project. I would be very pleased but astonished if the projected deficit by that time had not increased another $4 billion or $5 billion.

• (1530)

Let me state what a Progressive Conservative government would have done had it been in power. First, it would have completely withdrawn the November budget which the Minister of Finance brought in. He seems to have some sort of magical hold on his leader. He remains in office even though he should have gone the way of the grey goose. We would have demonstrated leadership and restraint by holding government spending to the rate of growth in the economy to bring down the deficit. No business enterprise in the nation or in the free world could possibly exist with the kind of financial guidelines under which this government operates. It spends far in excess of what it brings in. It seems to rely on the fact that it still has credit, although I suspect it must be dwindling as quickly as the popularity of this government, which is now in a minus state.

We would have encouraged Canadians to invest by providing incentives. We would have reinstated the small business development bond for small business to allow it to expand. We would not have brought in a disaster plan that is available only to those on the last thread of their rope. We would have put in place a meaningful small business development bond such as we proposed when we were in power.

We would have provided a tax incentive system to give Canadians the opportunity to own their own homes. The minister brought in a program which will offer first-time buyers $3,000 assistance after the first of the year. That is fine. It may be one of the more positive aspects of that budget. However, we should be addressing ourselves to the fact that high mortgage and interest rates are prohibiting young people from purchasing homes in this country. They should be given assistance with their mortgage payments, not the initial amount. Anyone who has the money required to maintain and sustain those rates of interest probably is not as much in need of a $3,000 grant as some of those who should be in homes.

We would have made fundamental changes to the National Energy Program to make it fair to consumers, the provinces and Canadian energy companies. We would have streamlined the Foreign Investment Review Agency to make job-creating foreign investment again welcome in this country.

The deficit brought in by this government is unmanageable and will not earn the confidence of the public or the investment community. National and international investors are leery of this government. It has not only lost control of its spending but has miscalculated its debt by an astounding 100 per cent. What private business or household could survive if it miscalculated its expenditures by almost 100 per cent? It is absolutely astounding. These people are supposed to be responsible. We have seen them for what they are, incompetent rather than competent.

The public does not have confidence in this government today. It does not have confidence in the Minister of Finance or any others in this government who are in a position to make decisions. Members opposite know that. Daily I receive correspondence to this effect. I would just like to read some of these comments which I receive in my office. One states:

> I would like for the Prime Minister and his followers to sit at my table for one week, just so they could understand how us poor folks live.

I suspect one day would do. Another reads:

> Mr. MacEachen's decision to present a new budget on the p.m. of June 28 should be interesting. I don't hold much hope for any measures which will do anything significant to turn things around.

That was obviously written before the budget. How accurate that person's judgment was! There was nothing significant to turn anything around. The only significant thing was that the government had no alternative but finally to confess that we were in much worse shape than the people of this country were led to believe. Another comment reads:

> I am most concerned about the outlook the federal government has taken toward the future of our fair country.

Another one reads:

> I would encourage the federal government to withdraw altogether and all go to the Falklands.

That is probably one of the best places they could go. Finally, another constituent writes:

> Isn't it about time the people of Canada had a chance regarding their future? Please help us.

That is a sad tale. It is a plea for help. Time after time this party has attempted in this House to bring the government to its senses with respect to its spending program and the plight of Canadians. Unfortunately, it always falls on deaf ears.

In my part of the country, Atlantic Canada, all kinds of situations have developed which can be described as nothing less than abusive. This government has made the decision to close CFB Chatham-Newcastle-Miramichi region. That will put 3,500 people out of work and take out of circulation a payroll of $30 million annually. When that closure takes effect, 45 to 50 per cent of the work in that region will become unemployed.

If there was a logical reason or some justification for closing that air force base, I could understand the government trying to shore up its effectiveness, but that is not the case. That air base is strategically located in about the best spot it could be for the identification of foreign aircraft. There are foreign aircraft within this country's identification zone. Soviet Bear aircraft have been identified flying through the Canadian identification zone. Those sightings have been made by interceptor aircraft out of CFB Chatham. They are there. We should be in a position to use that base, which is strategically located, and have it continue to play its very vital role. For some reason far beyond my comprehension or the comprehension of those who will be thrown on the unemployment insurance rolls, the new F-18 aircraft is going to be located in Bagotville in the province of Quebec.

• (1540)

Every once in a while it is brought to our attention that perhaps we should not be questioning why all these things which seem to be positive are happening in the province of Quebec, but we are motivated to ask about them because it seems that time and time again the province of Quebec is the recipient of things other provinces traditionally have had. Certainly we must all work together and contribute to the betterment and the building of this nation, but should we not be equitable in our approach to the entire business of economic growth? That is something at which we as parliamentarians and as Canadians should take a serious look. We should want to strive for unity in a way that is beneficial to all of us and in a way that is fair, and surely the best way to do that is to ensure that all Canadians, including Atlantic Canadians, Quebecers, Ontarians and Canadians in the west, get a fair share of the pie.

What happens? We see the closure of CFB Chatham. That does nothing to contribute to unity or an understanding by people who live in Atlantic Canada of problems in other parts of Canada.

We heard in the news this morning that the Heath-Steele mine in northern New Brunswick is being closed down. That is not too far from CFB Chatham. Five hundred people will be thrown out of work. Five hundred people will lose their jobs because of the closure of that mine. That is a result of a poor and depressed economy. Hon. members opposite are partially responsible for that, and they have to accept their fair share of the blame.

We see that an electronic manufacturing plant in the Moncton region has been delayed by several months. One thousand people, apparently, will be employed, if that plant ever does come on stream. Eight thousand unemployed people put in applications for those potential 1,000 jobs.

We have seen the price of gasoline increase. We have seen VIA Rail services cut and slashed, particularly in New Brunswick. This has happened in Nova Scotia to a lesser degree, but the train which served the southern portion of New Brunswick and gave us our link to Montreal has been cut and hundreds of jobs have been lost. That should never have happend. That train was one of the most used trains, one of the most efficient trains and certainly one of the most popular and best trains in the nation. That train should never have been taken off, yet for some unexplained reason it was. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will not give us an explanation. The Senate committee has taken him to task and has thoroughly thumped him over this particular arbitrary decision to cut that rail service. The Progressive Conservative task force which travelled across the nation receiving briefs on the discontinuance of VIA Rail lines heard time and time again that people should have had the opportunity to be heard and that the due process should have been followed. We were told that the CTC should have had the opportunity to conduct public hearings. But no, this uncaring, thoughtless and certainly unthankful minister, with the backing of his cabinet colleagues, arbitrarily discontinued that train.

The port of Saint John is a wonderful port, thanks to contributions by the provincial government which has spent about $22 million in recent years on the modernization of that port. There is a grain elevator at that port. We have all the necessary facilities. When Montreal opens up in the summer, we naturally lose business to Montreal. It was not too long ago that I was petitioned by a group of dock workers in Saint John. The petitioners were members of the United Transportation Union in Saint John. They asked me to speak to the minister responsible for grain shipments and to ask if just two or three shipments of wheat or grain could be diverted to the port of Saint John during slow months. They were not asking for a lot but just for a very few. I said I would contact the minister and, indeed, I did. I wrote to the minister on May 25, 1982. That was a month and a half ago, and to date I have not received so much as the courtesy of a reply.

That does not necessarily astound me. Some time ago I asked the minister a question in the House concerning alternate transportation for peole who would be inconvenienced because of the VIA Rail cutbacks. He referred to something about alternate means. He said that if I would give him a list of the communities involved, he would get back to me. I wrote the names of the communities down on a piece of paper and passed them to the minister. He said, "I will get back to you". That was months ago and, of course, I have never heard another word from him. I heard the minister in the House today answer an hon. member who asked a question of importance to that hon. member. The minister said that if he had received notice, he would have been able to look into the matter and have the answer available. However, the minister said he would look into the matter. Unless the minister is motivated to do something by some sort of attack in the House, I doubt very much if the hon. member will ever hear from the minister.

Let me get back to the matter of grain shipments through the port of Saint John. I asked for only two or three shipments. In the process of all this, I contacted the manager of the Saint John port development commission in Saint John and asked him if he would support me in this effort. He wrote back to me because he was concerned, unlike—obviously—the Minister of Transport, who is responsible in this House for the Wheat Board. The manager of the Saint John port development commission was concerned and brought to my attention the fact that he had made representations, along with the port authority, time and time again for this sort of thing to happen. He informed me that when employees at the grain elevators on the St. Lawrence River were on strike back in the summer of 1980—there are four grain elevators in Montreal—he pointed out to the Wheat Board that the grain elevator at Saint John was only partly full and could handle grain quite nicely. He informed the Wheat Board that the port of Saint John would be prepared to take grain and, indeed, invited the Wheat Board to ship grain through the port of Saint John. He was advised that no ships were being nominated for the port of Saint John. The only satisfaction he received from the Wheat Board was that the Wheat Board thanked him for his telephone call. That sort of attitude is intolerable. I do not quite understand why Saint John should be singled out to have its rail services cut, why the government refuses to recognize the $22 million investment of the province of New Brunswick in that port and why the government refuses to divert wheat shipments to that port.

Oddly enough, the core of the city of Saint John is represented in this House by a Liberal member. That member supports the government on every measure. He votes with the government when it wants to cut VIA Rail. He supports the government. He supports the budget. He supports increases in the price of gasoline. He has supported every measure which has come before this House, even those which have been dastardly and have worked against the best interests of the people of Saint John. The hon. member never balks. He never says anything contrary to the government. He always moves in the direction he is told. One would think the government would give this fellow a chance to do something good for his city. One would think the government would throw him a few crumbs once in a while in the form of some assitance for the city of Saint John, but the government totally ignores the poor fellow. I think it is a crying shame that the hon. member has been forgotten and cast aside. He certainly must be making representations to the government to do something for the people of Saint John. I know that must be taking place, but I feel the government is ignoring it. That is a shame, Mr. Speaker.

When it comes to members from New Brunswick, there is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) who sits in this House on many occasions. He has dealt the commercial salmon fishermen of the Saint John region in New Brunswick one of the most severe blows possible; he has cut back their quota for the year. He imposed quotas on fishermen in the Saint John, New Brunswick area which he refused to impose on others in the Atlantic region who fish for the same species. He has imposed on New Brunswick a hardship that he has not the intestinal fortitude to impose on others.

It is difficult to say why this is so. New Brunswick was one of the prime movers in the salmon conservation effort in the early 1970s and voluntarily imposed a ban on commercial salmon fishing. Commercial fishermen had to suffer for that. Most of the slamon caught commercially in the Atlantic region is caught off the coast of Newfoundland. Approximately 65 per cent of those salmon are headed back to their native rivers in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

You do not get to the root of a problem by attempting to solve it at the end; you have to go to the beginning of the problem. It must be recognized by the minister that it is in the best interest of Newfoundlanders, New Brunswickers and Nova Scotians to have total management of the salmon stock in Atlantic Canada, but for some inexplicable reason he chose to cut down on the commercial salmon fishery and angling in New Brunswick. It is worth noting that the tourist industry, the outfitters and guides of New Brunswick, receive a substantial portion of their living and that the province benefits substantially from people who come there for sport salmon fishing.

In depression times people used to be able to go into the woods and saw logs or cut pulp, but the building supply business in New Brunswick is collapsing today. Saw mills are idle and pulp mills are purchasing limited quantities. People do not have the opportunity now to go to the woods and cut pulp in order to feed their families.

In the House today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) made a great deal of the fact that the government is going to bring Alberta oil to the Atlantic region. This will be subsidized at $2.50 per barrel. If the government had taken a responsible attitude toward the development of energy in the country, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia could be self-sufficient in energy today or could be well on the way to it.

But where is the natural gas pipeline the government promised to build? I understand that the prime contractor and others interested in that pipeline cannot find out when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources intends to bring forth that promised $40 million for the front-end engineering costs of the pipeline. The government made this commitment; there is no two ways about that. The money was promised a long time ago but it is not forthcoming. There has been tinkering and tom-foolery to the point of exasperation. If I were a betting person I would say that the pipeline would never get across the St. Lawrence River as long as the minister is in office.

The government is spending money on taxis. It spent $3.5 million on taxis last year. The Department of Transport alone spent $422,000 of that. The government spent $16.7 million on telegrams. I could go on and on about the way the government wastes the money of the Canadian taxpayer but I do not have too much time left.

Let us consider who are the big losers in this program. Sadly enough, they include the single taxpayer, all taxpayers without children and married taxpayers with children who earn more than $12,000 per year. The cruelest blow of all is to the senior citizens drawing old age security who have to rely on that and perhaps a little bit of supplemental income from investments. These people suffer the most because of the ineptitude of the government. I have no time for a government that chooses to ruin the country on the backs of the old age pensioners. The people of this country have no time for that sort of government either. It has deindexed everything. That means that inflation is in the interests of the government; it will receive more in tax revenue because inflation is on its side. That is not an incentive, it is a disincentive.

This program may in the short term bring in a few more dollars but it will backfire on the government. It is going to force so many people out of work in this country that there will be fewer and fewer people in a position to pay taxes.

The social programs that have been so generous in the past will have to bear a greater burden. We should have been putting money aside for a rainy day. No lifetime goes by without its share of rainy days, but the government did not recognize that. It chose to fool the people into thinking it had good managers and was in charge of the situation. It was in charge of opening the purse strings and losing every last nickel we had. From the way members of the government strut around you would think they were proud of that.

The government seems to have been determined to carry through with its policies, knowing full well what is bound to happen to it within the foreseeable future. It is almost as though it has adopted a scorched earth policy and is going to level everything. It is going to make sure that whoever gets into power—and there is no question about that the next time around; we will be there and we will have to clean up the mess, but we will deal with it and deal with it effectively. But the government is not going to give us much of a chance when it is forced finally to turn over the reins of government in this nation.

The Minister of Finance has stated that he now anticipates our deficit to be in the vicinity of $19.6 billion, up about $10.1 billion from what it was projected to be last November. I issue a challenge to the Minister of Finance here in the House. If by the end of the fiscal year the deficit goes over $19.6 billion by, say, just $2 billion—I could have said $1 billion or one penny—the only alternative—I will not say "the only honourable thing" because there is no honour left in that bunch over there—the only alternative left to the Minister of Finance is to resign and the entire government with him.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words this afternoon on Bill C-125, one of the bills flowing from the budget. As we begin to participate in this debate our country, along with all other western industrialized countries, faces one of the most difficult times since the 1930s. It is a time when over 30 million people in the OECD countries are unemployed, and we are especially concerned about the 1.25 million unemployed in Canada.

Although the figures in the budget documents indicate that Canada had one of the highest levels of growth in 1981, it is projected to have one of the strongest declines in 1982. The interesting aspect of that, Mr. Speaker, is that most of the growth in 1981 occurred during the first half, certainly during the first three-quarters of the year. In fact, we went into a sharp decline in the third and fourth quarter of 1981, and of course that is projected to continue this year. So the impact on unemployment in this country is much worse than it would have been otherwise.

The other interesting fact, I think an alarming one and one which concerns us a great deal, is that the decline in growth in the United States is second only to Canada, that being a 1.6 per cent decline from 1981. The United States being our largest trading partner, this is very significant for us. High interest rates in the United States, compared to their inflation rate, have driven down the value of the currencies of all western industrialized countries relative to the U.S. In 1981 the Canadian dollar rose marginally less than 1 per cent against the U.S. dollar, while all other currencies declined sharply. For example, West Germany declined by 12.4 per cent, the U.K. by 19.9 per cent, the Japanese by 7.3 per cent, and the French by 20.7 per cent. This decline has continued into 1982. The Canadian dollar, at the time of the budget, had declined by 7.8 per cent, whereas all other major western currencies had declined by larger amounts.

A few nights ago I was surprised and very concerned about a report on the CBC national news that much of the decline in the value of the Canadian dollar was due to the fact that many of the large chartered banks and financial institutions were investing large portions of their funds in U.S. securities. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very harmful thing for us, although many of us from resource areas in Canada do not really mind seeing a lower dollar because it means our exports of natural resources bring a better return in Canada. However, it does have an inflationary effect on our economy.

This is a time when the banks are pressing small-business men, farmers, fishermen and home owners almost unmercifully by calling loans and so on. At a time when they are charging very high interest rates, this seems most inappropriate. At the same time many chartered banks are closing rural branches. For example, in my constituency, in the community of Manitowaning on Manitoulin Island, there has been a branch of the Bank of Montreal for the last 75 years. The community has a stable population and the branch serves several thousand people. The next nearest branch is 25 to 30 miles away in an adjoining community. There are many senior citizens living there who do not have transportation. The second largest Indian band in the province of Ontario with over 2,000 resident band members is immediately adjacent.

The bank is working at full tilt with a staff of seven and apparently a need for more people, but they informed the reeve and the councillors a few weeks ago that they plan to shut down this branch in the next several weeks. They complain about many problems, such as too many branches, some bad debts and perhaps poor administration, yet instead of the bank absorbing the costs involved at a time of record high interest rates and record high profits during the past year, they are leaving the local residents to suffer. It seems to me that with this kind of patriotism shown by Canada's chartered banks we do not really need any traitors in this country.

It seems clear, Mr. Speaker, from examining the world economy and the loss of growth projected for the U.S. and many other countries, as outlined in the budget document, that the world demand for many commodities is going to be very poor this year. Not only that, but prices are going to be very low. In fact, during the past three or four months the price of some minerals like copper has been proportionately lower than in the 1930s in the depths of the depression. For those of us living in resource areas like northern Ontario which produce commodities like nickel, copper, uranium, pulp and paper, steel and so on, this is a bad omen for the prospect of any dramatic upturn in the economy during the coming year.

• (1610)

There is very little that Canada can do to pull the international markets of the world out of a recession. However, in my own constituency, a large number of megaprojects are still under construction. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) spoke about the need for incentives. In fact, there have been very strong incentives for many industries. For instance, the steel industry, the pulp and paper industry and others have put in place massive construction projects. In my own constituency many are still going on this year and are providing valuable employment at a time when many of the products being produced are in low demand or their prices are very marginal. In fact, in Espanola at the Eddy forest products plant a construction project is going on now. This construction program has been going on for the past year and will continue for another year. It is worth over $200 million and is to modernize and upgrade the pulp and paper mill. A few years ago a large saw mill was built. This saw mill will produce over one million board feet of lumber per year. That kind of construction and facility in a year of low demand is very beneficial in terms of jobs.

Likewise, in Elliot Lake a massive expansion of the uranium mining operations has taken place. Some of it is still continuing. The final expansion and development of those mines to meet the increasing demand is going on. This year 600 or 700 new houses will be constructed providing additional employment during a period of low demand for many of the commodities.

In Blind River a uranium refinery is under construction costing $130 million. This is creating many jobs in that community.

Similarly, a few months ago the federal, provincial and municipal governments in Sault Ste. Marie signed an agreement to spend $70 million on a major community infrastructure program. This will provide new sewer and water facilities for that community to accommodate the growth which is planned for Algoma Steel during the course of this decade. That megaproject will start construction next year and will provide employment at a time when the demand for steel products is down.

During the past couple of years the steel industry in Canada has been going through a major construction period with massive investments of several billions of dollars, some of it at Algoma Steel. The incentives which have been put in place should be continued for this vital industry.

Our steel industry in Canada has fared better than most other steel industries around the world, but ours is suffering now like many other industries because of the economic downturn. However, the steel industry is modernizing, it is competitive and the lower dollar is beneficial in that regard. Its know-how, expertise and its competitive situation are its strongest ally for the future.

If we can put in place programs to modernize and upgrade the pulp and paper industry and the steel industry through a system of incentives, we should do the same for other industries, such as the high technology industry, during the next few years in order to make them competitive and able to meet the challenge in the international community. This will also, of course, provide jobs.

There is not a great deal Canadians can do to pull the world out of recession which all western industrialized nations face right now. It is difficult for us to create more demand. I do believe our trade department and our minister should be continuing their efforts to get out and fight for the markets that are available. We should have incentives and programs to assist in that regard.

What is worrisome in the international statistics presented in the budget is the rate of inflation in Canada as compared to the United States, our principal trading partner and our strongest market. The inflation rate for May stood at 11.8 per cent in Canada, whereas it was 6.7 per cent in the United States. At the same time our wage settlements were running something like 5 per cent above those of our best customer, the United States of America. Therefore, our concern must be not only with the unemployed, but with assisting small business, home owners, fishermen and the farmers, and we must take action to increase our productivity of those commodities we produce and manufacture in this country. We must produce efficiently and our products must be at a price at which they can be sold in international markets.

International trade is very important to Canada. It is perhaps more important to us than to any other country in the world. Something like 30 per cent of our GNP comes from international trade and for many of our rural and northern areas, it is the principal source of income and employment. I believe that is why the government has proposed in the budget papers and the budget bills that we set as a target the reduction of our inflation rate to 6 per cent next year and to 5 per cent the following year. These are not targets for inflation picked out of a hat or grasped out of thin air; they are goals we must achieve if in the next two years we want to be competitive in the real world where our products are sold and if we want to be on a par with the United States in selling the products of our factories, our forests and our mines. Sure enough, the world economy and the demand for products will turn around, but the question is whether our inflation rate will drive our production costs to a height where we will no longer be able to compete or sell abroad.

I know that the opposition parties and some companies have indicated their opposition to the proposals of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Perhaps that is not surprising since they are sworn to oppose the government in every way possible. It seems to me the opposition from Bell Canada and Air Canada to a program to reduce prices to a 6 per cent ceiling is not satisfactory. This morning The Globe and Mail carried an article under the heading "Bell, Air Canada set to challenge 6 per cent prices limit". It seems to me most of the people in this country really want to reduce the inflation rate to 6 per cent and 5 per cent during the next two years. As the world comes out of the current recession, people want us to be in a position to compete and to seize markets.

The rather unfortunate part of all this is that companies such as Air Canada and Bell Canada are almost in monopoly positions. Air Canada has some competition with CP and a few other companies, but Bell Canada has practically no competition. It has a virtual monopoly. I think many people are becoming fed up with the ever-increasing demand for 25 per cent or whatever every year or so. Even a 6 per cent increase will be very high for low-income Canadians, senior citizens and those who are out of work.

I have opposed practically every rate increase Bell Canada has put forward to the CRTC during the last three or four years, but much of my opposition was due to its very poor service. My argument before the CRTC was that if Bell Canada wanted massive increases, then let it provide improved services to rural areas, extended calling areas and so on. In this case I certainly oppose its request for an increase because I think it is in the national interest for Canadians to work together toward the goal of 6 per cent and 5 per cent for the next two years. I believe Bell Canada should support such a national program. It seems to me that if the CRTC does not bring Bell Canada into line to support the program, then surely the government should do it.

A Crown corporation the size and magnitude of Air Canada, with its great impact upon Canadian transportation costs, should fall in line with and support the program. I know there is a mechanism in place for its application to go to the CTC, but it seems to me that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) should call a meeting of the shareholders of Air Canada. The Minister of Transport should lay the facts of life before Mr. Taylor, the president of Air Canada. There are many people out there hurting. There are senior citizens who cannot afford an increase in transportation costs of 6 per cent or over. There are businessmen and farmers who will also be affected because they have to make necessary business trips. There are many unemployed people in the same position. The minister should ask the president of Air Canada to co-operate and, if he says no, he should be advised that the shareholders held a meeting and he was voted out of office. If he does not want to co-operate in this program, there are many people awaiting his position.

This program is largely a voluntary one. There are regulations through the CTC, the CRTC and other federal regulatory agencies. There is control in the bill which is now before committee concerning federal public servants and employees of Crown corporations. If average Canadians see large, powerful companies such as Bell Canada and Air Canada not co-operating, the chances of obtaining co-operation and assistance from them will be very difficult.

I am impressed by the real amount of co-operation I have seen on the policy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has met with the provincial premiers. There seems to be a good rapport and there has been good response. I understand that further meetings are planned. All of these things are very encouraging. Also the response from the meeting with the CLC and other trade union groups seemed very encouraging. Further meetings will be taking place there.

Likewise there has been a very good response from business. For example, yesterday a group of senior businessmen talked about how they could work together and co-operate to reduce the inflation rate, to increase our productivity and to bring in, over the next couple of years, a policy or a program which will place Canada in a good position when there is a turnaround in the world recession and a return to a growth situation.

Within the last three or four weeks a number of companies have indicated their support for the program. They are planning to co-operate. I am referring to companies such as Alcan, Cominco, General Foods, Heritage Group, Hiram Walker, Polysar, Sherritt-Gordon and White Farm. Many more have indicated that they want to support the program. Also there has been a great deal of support from individual Canadians.

I should like to read a letter which I received from a constituent. This person wrote:

> This letter is with reference to our economic situation. First of all I am in support of the 6 per cent guidelines, essentially. However, I feel much more is needed in order to cure our economic difficulties as follows:
>
> (a) A coalition government as I believe any reasonable ideas re our situation economically should be acted upon
>
> (b) establish a "social" contract with our members of the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association or Chamber of Commerce. This "social" contract would be similar to West Germany's system which has worked considerably better than our present adversary system. I do realize part of the problem would have to be addressed provincially. However, my philosophy is one of tripartism. That is, government, business and labour must work together. Legislation would have to be changed.

The letter continued:

> (d) Let us promote a new era of research and development in Canada.
> Overall, I feel that we should adopt an attitude of open mindedness to new solutions rather than an "it will never work in Canada" attitude to economic and other solutions.

There is support from many, many Canadians. They want to see us work together. The kinds of meetings which the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister are attending with the provincial governments, business and industry are supported by many Canadians.

The kind of co-operation we saw in the House today wherein the government varied the amount of the borrowing authority is commendable. We will have two pieces of legislation, if necessary, on the borrowing authority rather than one. The government is protecting its position to raise the required funds for all its social programs during this fiscal year. At the same time it is being sensitive to and considerate of the position of the opposition in regard to giving the government a blank cheque for the fiscal year. This is the kind of commendable co-operation to which my constituent referred.

The budget documents set out a program of co-operation because of our concern for inflation. They also contain a new and innovative proposal for indexed investment certificates where people who invest their money in this new proposed financial instrument would pay income tax only on that part of the interest above the inflation rate. Indeed, this is a new, interesting and perhaps novel idea. I am sure that people begrudge paying income tax on interest which, in effect, is only inflation.

• (1630)

At the same time, this new indexed investment certificate would reduce the borrowing cost for development of small business, agriculture, fishing and housing by 3 per cent to 6 per cent. Those are the areas where we want to create investment and provide assistance. If we can accomplish this through this new instrument, I suggest it will be very beneficial.

I think it is significant that this potentially complicated instrument is being referred to a blue ribbon committee of people who are knowledgeable in that field, including representatives from the trade union movement. This will mean that there will be consultation and co-operation with the private sector that will produce a much more workable and practical system.

It has also been proposed that there be a similar instrument for investment by Canadians for equity stock position. I am especially pleased that there is provision in the budget documents for direct employment programs. Many of the rural areas in my constituency which do not have principal industries have very high seasonal unemployment. The direct employment programs work very well in these areas. Not only do they create employment for hard-pressed municipalities every year, but they provide many worthwhile programs. Among these are renovations and improvements to community facilities as well as aiding in the development of the tourist industry through the construction of parks, recreational facilities and marinas in co-operation with groups like the small craft harbours branch, which has been especially active throughout the Algoma-Manitoulin area. Their work has been appreciated very much. I believe that area has the largest number of government wharves and docks of any constituency on the Great Lakes.

There is some $200 million provided in the budget for direct employment programs, another $150 million for employment intensive programs carried out by departments and another $100 million from existing programs in the Canada employment department. This totals some $450 million. As well, there is another $300 million for permanent private incentive programs. This gives a total allocation for employment and direct employment support programs of some $750 million.

There has also been a great deal of funding provided for the housing industry which will create additional jobs for Canadians. I believe the budget projects some 300,000 jobs that will be created by the programs outlined in the budget papers. This includes the direct employment programs, such as the community development program, the labour intensive projects within government departments as well as programs like the forestry worker employment support program which was announced several months ago.

I think one of the most interesting provisions of the budget was the direct injection of additional money into the housing industry. I hope this money will be put in place as soon as possible in order to proceed with those projects, especially in northern areas where winter construction of foundations and footings is difficult. There is a total of approximately $300 million provided for first-time buyers and builders of houses in the form of $3,000 grants. Similarly, the housing repair program was oversubscribed from the day it was announced a few months ago. That program has doubled.

I am anxiously awaiting the announcement of the 2,500 additional units of co-operative housing because we have a proposal from the community of Elliot Lake in my constituency where we hope to construct 62 additional units of co-operative housing. This is an innovative program which has great potential. Construction of these units will be a first for the Algoma constituency where most of the housing is provided by the mining companies. There is very little private sector accommodation for people working in the service sector of the community. This will be a valuable addition for them.

All of these programs which were announced in the budget have been very useful. I am especially pleased that there will be approximately $200 million for the agricultural industry to provide low-interest money for farmers who are particularly hard pressed. This money will be provided at 12.5 per cent, which is 4 per cent below the Farm Credit Corporation lending rate, presently 16.5 per cent.

As well, there is the interest reduction funds of some $400 million which will be available to reduce interest rates for small-business men, farmers and fishermen by some 4 per cent for investment in new projects. Hopefully, this additional funding to assist these industries during the next few months will cover that gap until the new investment instrument which I have previously mentioned is put into place.

With the implementation of those projects I believe that much progress has taken place. I believe that the budget addresses many aspects of the problems we face today in our tough economic times. It addresses the question of inflation and introduces a plan to work toward a reduction in inflation during the next two years. It also provides incentives for investment, reduction of interest rates, job-creation programs and improvements to our housing situation. These are a number of items which I believe are important and should receive the support of the House.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to intervene in Bill C-125, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority. The bill will enable the government to borrow sums of money which it needs to keep the government operating.

I find that there have been some absurdities during the debate. The first occurred yesterday when the Liberals introduced a notice of motion to bring in closure of the debate. At that point, opposition members felt that there were perhaps enough speeches on the record to deal with the borrowing authority bill and so no more hon. members spoke on behalf of the opposition yesterday. So all day yesterday, hon. members in the Liberal Party talked out their own bill and would not allow it to come to a vote. As an individual Member of Parliament, I found that to be very strange indeed.

The next absurdity was that the government, in asking for this borrowing authority, was asking to borrow $11 billion. We found that the government really did not need $11 billion. It was just projecting that times were getting so bad that it may have lost control and that it wanted extra money to provide a cushion, so that it could just run to the lending institutions to borrow extra sums of money.

Then this afternoon we had another absurdity when we heard the government itself admitting that it did not really need to borrow $11 billion, of which the NDP and the Conservatives were aware, so the government introduced a motion to reduce the amount requested in Bill C-125. We will be voting at 9.45 this evening on Bill C-125. The Conservatives were very happy to hear the government say that it was reducing the amount of its borrowing authority bill to $7 billion. However, if the government needs more money by the end of the fiscal year, it can just borrow another $4 billion without further debate.

Mr. Epp: Not true.

Mr. Anguish: Or, at least, very limited debate.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That is not what the House order passed in the House today states. What the House order states is that there will be a three-day debate.

Mr. Anguish: I pointed out that it would be a very limited debate. It is marked down in the motion introduced by the government that it will still be able to borrow $11 billion under Bill C-125. That elated the Conservatives and it is no wonder, because they thought they had a victory, but they cannot even see through the fact that the government will still be allowed to borrow a total sum of $11 billion.

Mr. Epp: Seven billion dollars.

Mr. Anguish: This session started on April 14, 1980, after the February 18, 1980 general election. Since that time the government has asked for authority to borrow money on four different occasions. First, the government brought forward Bill C-30 and requested authority to borrow $12 billion. Then it came to us with Bill C-59 and asked for borrowing authority for an additional $14 billion. That did not seem to be enough. Bill C-111 was brought forward and the government asked for borrowing authority for an additional $6.6 billion, bringing the total to $32.6 billion up to this point. Even that is not enough. Bill C-125 is now before us and the government is asking for another $11 billion, bringing the grand total since April 14, 1980, when this session started, to some $43.6 billion.

That is only the surface of the problem with the government. By the end of this fiscal year, the accumulated debt of the federal government will be $150 billion, or possibly even more. My home province could run on that amount of money, with present day dollars, for about 75 years.

I think the former Auditor General was quite right when he stated in his annual report that the government has lost control of the public purse. This accumulated national debt puts an increased strain on the economy of the country. It has been created by successive Liberal and Conservative governments which have been unable to deal with the business of running the country. It has also been created by increasing government deficits year after year.

The budget brought down in November by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) projected that the deficit this year would be some $10 billion. Then on June 28, when we found we needed a new budget, the government admitted that it had miscalculated. Even though we all knew we were in bad economic times and that the government had a back-up support staff of some 300,000 or more people to provide information about this country, we found at that time, on June 28, that the deficit had increased by almost twice the amount we were told in November it would be. It had increased to $19.6 billion. That is a large amount of money. There are some other countries throughout the world with larger deficits, such as the United States of America, whose deficit is much larger, but on a per capita basis the deficit in Canada is twice that of the United States of America.

What does a deficit like that mean? From time to time we in the New Democratic Party have advocated deficit budgeting, but the type of deficit budgeting which is needed and can be allowed is very different from the type which is being adopted by the Liberal government and which it is locked into. It is perpetual, year after year, and it gets worse and worse. If there is to be a deficit budget, it would make sense to have deficit budgeting in areas where there can be investment in the future and revenue can be generated for the operation of the country in future years.

I would like to compare our federal deficit to some of the provincial deficits across the country. Using 1978 figures, the source being the Bank of Montreal, the debt in British Columbia under a Social Credit government was $2,497 for every man, woman and child. In great Tory Alberta it was $2,222 for every man, woman and child. In great Ontario it was $2,544. The lowest in Canada was the small province of Prince Edward Island. The next lowest in Canada in 1978 under an NDP government was the province of Saskatchewan. It was $1,709 in that province, much better than any Liberal or Tory administration anywhere in Canada.

• (1650)

There is often talk about the size of bureaucracies. My source of information is Statistics Canada, 1979. In Alberta under that great Tory government which believes in carving off the fat, 2.6 per cent of the population was employed in the public service. At that time in Saskatchewan under an NDP government, it was 1.9 per cent of the population, the lowest in Canada.

The spending of this government places a great load on the Canadian people. It spends at the rate of $214 million a day, which breaks down to $9 million an hour or $150,000 a minute.

Mr. Epp: And you want them to spend more.

Mr. Anguish: The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) says we ask them to spend more. We only ask them to spend more in those areas I pointed out. We believe in deficit financing where it is an investment in the future. If the hon. member would listen, he might understand the sound economic policies that could turn this government around. It would be no better under a Conservative government than under a Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: I am sure the people in the galleries will listen to these figures even if the members of the House will not. Per capita spending on behalf of every one of you sitting in the gallery in 1967-68 was $549 for every man, woman, child and baby in this country. For the 1982-83 fiscal year, that amount has increased to $3,175 for every single one of you in the gallery. Compare this to some of the municipal governments. Maybe some responsibility should be placed on them because they may be better able to handle it. In places like The Battlefords-Meadow Lake the per capita spending today is in the area of $570 or $580 for every man, woman and child.

When you look at the situation for taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, it is even worse. Many do not pay taxes because they are unemployed. Others do not pay taxes because they are retired and do not have a large enough income to require them to pay taxes. However, each and every taxpayer in the 1982-83 fiscal year will have to pay $8,251. With increasing unemployment and a worsening economy, this figure will ever increase. In fact, the debt in Canada will soon take in excess of 30 per cent of all the money the government raises in revenue just to service the debt. That is a shameful state of affairs.

This great amount of money has very serious effects on the interest rates that individual Canadians have to pay to financial institutions. There are a couple of things that happen. Either the government prints more money, which is inflationary, or it takes huge sums out of the money supply in this country. The more competition there is for money, the more interest rates are forced up. With this government taking some $150 billion out of the economy, it causes great upward pressure on interest rates.

It is not only government spending which does that. Throughout the world huge sums of money are spent each year on armaments. Each year $500 billion is spent on armaments throughout the world. This has a very harmful effect on the money supply and affects those who have to borrow for their mortgages or small businesses. The money is just not available. It is said that the way to get into small business in Canada today is to buy a big business, vote Liberal or Conservative, and then sit back and wait because it will soon be a small business.

The purpose of the government is to govern in areas where individuals cannot operate as effectively and efficiently with due regard for economy, in a manner that is fair and equitable to all people. The problem is that this government has lost control.

It is not just the public or private sector, but a problem of magnitude, how large and overbalanced this government has become. We must attempt to turn that around. It is also a problem of magnitude in the private sector and the public sector. I point to the problems experienced in the last few years by Massey-Ferguson, Ford, Chrysler and other huge companies not now as effective and prosperous as they once were.

What are some of the alternatives? Eventually we in this country will have to get away from the centralist attitude. I say this as an individual Member of Parliament. The small constituencies in Canada must become more self-sufficient. The local people should have more input. The members of the Conservative Party are having a great laugh during my speech in the House of Commons. I find it strange that the NDP are often blamed for some of the ills in this country, yet we have never formed a federal government since confederation in 1867. We have influenced and helped to bring in many good programs, but the blame lies nowhere else than on successive Conservative and Liberal regimes in this country.
