Not So Unusual To Eat Paper Recent Feat of German Spy Has Been Out-done Many Times

It is with a mitigated commiseration that one reads the story of how von der Goltz, the German spy, finding himself recognized in Petrograd, spent some hours eating two parcels of incriminating papers which he dare not burn in the street.

As a feat of mastication von der Goltz by no means holds the record. Paper is easily reduced to pulp and swallowed (the ink acting as an appetizer), and the only difficulty in this case was the quantity. Leather is another matter, but apart from meals of hard pressed explorers there are authenticated instances of meals of the kind. One took place at a Covent Garden hotel famous in the fashionable annals of the eighteenth century. A tiffy gallant captured by the charms of a certain lady, snatched her shoe and filling it with champagne drank a bumper to her health.

"Then to carry the compliment still further," so runs the tale, "he ordered the shoe itself to be dressed and served up for supper. The cook set himself seriously to work upon it. He pulled the upper part, which was of damask into shreds, and tossed it up in a ragout, mixed the sole, cut the wooden heel into very fine slices, fried them in butter and placed them round the dish for garnish."

Still more formidable and much less romantic was the dinner of the shoe maker of Don Carlos, the son of King Philip II. of Spain. This is the incident, as Dr. Rappoport relates:

"The young nobleman, of the time wore boots with high, wide legs, so as to allow a small pistol to be concealed in them. The shoemaker having sent the prince a pair of boots with narrow legs, 200 Carlos went into a fit of fury ordered the boots to be cut up into small pieces, cooked and sent over to the shoemaker for him to eat. According to some accounts the latter was actually forced to swallow his own boots.

What may be described as a paper meal de luxe, was that of the famous Fanny Murray, mentioned by Horace Walpole. I will here mention in an instance I heard of (other paper). She was complaining of want of money. Sir Richard A. King immediately gave her a twenty pound note. She said: "D— your twenty pounds! What does it signify! clapping it between two pieces of bread and butter and ate it!"—London Observer.

WHY? Why does Lieut. Gov. Wood retain as one of his advisers a gentleman who is not a member of the legislature, and therefore not responsible to the people? Have we abandoned the principles of responsible government?

BE READY FOR IT. A dissolution of the legislature is among the possibilities of the not distant future. Many people assert that the government will hold on to office as long as possible, but the fact that there is a minister of public works who is not a member of the legislature, and that even the present audacious outfit at Fredericton cannot permit this situation to continue much longer, makes it clear that there must soon be a by-election or a dissolution of the house.

THE WAR NEWS. Russian reports say that nearly half a million Austrians and Germans have been killed, wounded or taken prisoners on the eastern front alone within a month.

CHINA AND RELIGION. We have got a long way from the view-point of the old-time preacher who pictured the people of China as living in heathen darkness and depravity, and at death to be cast into deeper darkness if we failed to send them a missionary.

LOYD-GEORGE AND GREY. The appointment of Mr. Lloyd-George as secretary for war will be hailed with satisfaction by the people generally.

There has been a revival of German submarine warfare. If it is renewed on a large scale, and as urged by one section of the German press, it will give President Wilson a new opportunity for note writing.

RULES OF HEALTH FOR DYSPEPTICS

DIETING UNNECESSARY

There are two ways by which people who suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia, sour stomach, flatulence, etc., can overcome the trouble. First, as practically all cases of the above are directly or indirectly traceable to acidity and fermentation, they can eliminate from their diet all foods which ferment and form acid, such as all starches and sugar and foods containing them, thus prohibiting bread, potatoes, fruits and most meats.

Fight Fire With Pyrene

Are you prepared for fire? Fire gives no warning; you never know when or where it will break out, and it is this unexpectedness that makes danger to life and property the more awful.

Between the discovery of fire and the arriving of firemen is the VITAL TIME in the life of the fire—the time when you alone may do more to save your property than the whole fire department could do five minutes later. Safeguard your property, then, with

PYRENE

The Only Practical Method of Fire Protection in the home. It will conquer fires on which water and ordinary chemicals are powerless, being the Only Extinguisher That Triumphs over every kind of fire in its incipient state—chimney fires, stove fires, fires set by overturned lamps, gasoline, acetylene gas or anything. PYRENE is a liquid combination which is used in a light, strong, double acting pump which can easily operate, even by a child. Pyrene will not stain the most delicate fabric, or injure anything in which it comes in contact.

BRITISH LADIES SELLING FLOWERS AT WAR FAIR

There are all sorts of ways of raising money for war charities and patriotic purposes. Picture shows the Hon. Mrs. Charles Craven, one of the leaders of English society, auctioning off a slender geranium at a "War Fair" recently held in the Caledonian Market, London, England. There were a menagerie stocked with various animals, as well as a huge flower and vegetable show in connection with the fair.

MRS. HETTY GREEN FORTUNE MAY BE 100 MILLIONS

One of Richest Women in The World

HER LIFE HISTORY

Did Not Start Poor But Had Some Millions Left to Her. Lawyers Have Been Her Great Trouble.

Edward H. Green, who was United States Consul General in Manila, where he had made a fortune in the silk trade. It is said Green, at a public dinner, heard some one speak of Hetty Robinson as "the greatest American heiress," and straightway announced his determination to marry her. Before the wedding day an agreement was signed to the effect that the wife's fortune should never be drawn on to meet the husband's debts or any of their joint expenses. He died in 1909, after having lost most of his money in Wall street.

wer was usually, "The other world." While never intensely religious, she was a frequent attendant at Quaker meetings, and only a few years ago, like her daughter, was baptized in the Episcopal church.

She emphatically denied that her disposition was miserly. During the panic of 1907-08 she made loans, which lifted her many wealthy New Yorkers. Two years before the panic, it was said, she gathered in a large portion of her money and was prepared when the storm broke to lend a helping hand, at a good rate of interest. It was sometimes intimated that upon her death the country might be surprised at the disposition she would make of her wealth.

Hetty Green in Boston. (Boston Globe).

For the Boston end of Hetty Green's career one must go to Boston lawyers, court officers, reporters, hotel employees, and to the woman who was maid at the twenty-five cents a plate banquet Mrs. Green gave in an Ashburton boarding house to seven friends fourteen years ago.

Lawyers can tell you how they served her first and sent her afterward for their fee.

Court officers in Taunton could tell of their not entirely successful attempts to keep her quiet during the argument of a counsel opposed to her suit.

One reporter could tell of escaping with his life when he asked Hetty Green, at the corner of School and Tremont streets to loan him $100,000. Every other reporter who was told to see her and succeed can tell of peremptory advice, unasked and freely given.

Hotel clerks could tell of meeting Hetty Green's accusations of exorbitant charges, and one bright bell boy might recall his remark to a Globe reporter in 1894: "The only way to interview Mrs. Green is to be a minute late in answering a call. You could get a column then!"

The maid who served the Ashburton place meal could tell you that the richest woman in the world came with seven friends and ate the regular supper at the boarding house, paid the bill after counting heads and computing the charges, left no tip and then left the house. After she was gone the maid learned whom she had served.

Whipple, Sears & Ogden was the Boston law firm which did work for Mrs. Green for some years prior to 1904, when they sued her for a little less than $10,000 for services rendered in the suit she had brought against William W. Cragg of New Bedford, concerning a $200,000 estate. It was four years before the courts decided that Hetty Green owed the lawyers $5,728. The defendant had appeared often in the case, with fire in her eye, and defended herself on her fortune as valiantly as ever.

When she came to Boston she found this to be the one city in the country where she could not carry her revolver. She never took out a permit to carry it here.

It was only nine years ago that Hetty Green came to Boston to look at four houses in Warren street, Roxbury, which formed only an infinitesimal part of her holdings. But to the care of these houses she gave every attention—if you call getting down on your knees and scrubbing the floor "every attention." The houses were being renovated, and what ever Mrs. Green said that she did not think was being done properly by the cleaners she did herself.

WHAT THE "LONG TOMS HAVE DONE IN VERDUN

BATTLE-SCARRED VERDUN TODAY

American Correspondent Visits Historic Spot

Tragedy of a City

His Impressions of Place Moved Neutral to Support the Allies in Fight Against Barbarism

On June 4, writes Whitney Warren in the New York Herald, I had a most interesting day at Verdun. For a long time I had been anxious to go there in order to see with my own eyes and ears the conditions existing, the possibilities of the resistance being successful and the cause of the persistent and continuous effort on the part of the Germans against a place the military strategic value of which all the authorities agree on as being nil. The journey from Bar-le-Duc was made in motor over the famous road on which all the communication between the two cities has been kept open during the last three months. It is inconceivable the amount of travel the road has sustained and the perfect condition in which it has been maintained by the engineers during this uninterrupted period of turmoil and agitation, and wear and tear of the most brutal sort which it has had to endure.

One Road's Work It is now relieved by a paralleling narrow-gauge railway, but for the first month of the battle everything in the way of men, materiel and ammunition, coming and going, had to be hauled over it. It was one continuous stream of trucks of the heaviest description, first hurrying forth with fresh troops and then scurrying back with those worn out or wounded, but all this has maintained tremendously, and the travel, while heavy the day I went over it, was not cumbersome, and one felt that everything was in good, wholesome condition so far as supplies and necessities were concerned. We met a certain number of troops returning for rest and we were accompanied by a corresponding relieving party, but otherwise things were normal, showing admirable organization and sufficiency of reserve of every description. Before arriving at Verdun we passed several hospitals, not forgetting one for cannon of all calibres, many of which were in a rather battered condition.

The cables have not dwelt on the damage that the German long range guns have accomplished in Verdun, but these pictures, passed by both French and British censors, give some idea of it. The upper view shows first a street in the working class quarter of Verdun (partially wrecked), and on the other side the ruins of the principal opera house of the town. The round picture, in-set, shows the ruins of the Verdun Cathedral, and the lower one shows a street on the river, with buildings intact.

No Civilians Left. We entered Verdun by the main road. The villas and farms of the suburbs have been badly punished. There is scarcely a house—I am speaking especially of the isolated ones—which has not been blown to pieces. This shows how absolutely dense and concentrated the fire has been. To be sure, what I remembered was along the road, which was the target aimed at, but even as far as I could see nothing remained untouched, and the whole land was peppered by the holes made by the mortar shells as they exploded. The town itself is a pitiable ruin, scarcely a house that has not been worse than badly handled. That charming bit along the water-front which used to be called "Le Venise de Verdun," has especially suffered, nothing whatever remaining. The town is absolutely evacuated, not a civilian remaining, and what remains there are inhuman sandbag built huts, more or less bomb-proof. These few "troops" groups of five or six, are simply left to starve and die, and in case of fire to attempt to put it out or keep it from spreading. Many of the houses and shops have their fronts blown off, and the interiors show the haste in which the occupants left—the beds in disorder, hats and clothes still hanging on the pegs, while on the mantels and tables are still standing the objects cherished by the inmates, the household gods. Why the Fight Goes On. The American people should realize that this is what is going on; that Verdun is not being settled for any strategic reason, but simply in the hope that the defeat of the Marne will be pardoned by the annihilation of Verdun, so that the Kaiser's Prince, his hands reeking with the blood of the myriads of innocent Christ-ians on the one hand and Satan-ized on the other may place upon his head as some future date the emblem of the dynasty which has loomed upon the universe, not the dogs of war of heretic time, but the ink and rapine of the barbarian. For brutes and barbarians are they led (the enemy) not that they are not up-to-date in organization and equipment—on the contrary—but none the less always barbarians. O, that our good people would but understand this and rise to their moral strength to protest the iniquity of it—and those of German descent with us, do they not realize that this is a very sort of thing that they came to us to escape?

On Sunday evening I had the honor of dining with General Petain and his staff—my old friend, Francois Flamant, the official painter attached to this army, and "Polybe," the great military chronicler, who accompanied me on my trip, made up the party. General Petain is certainly a wonderful specimen of humanity. He combines all the qualities we Americans like to attribute to the French, and especially to a French chief. Very handsome, very smart in appearance, genial, modest and generous—talent and courage go without saying—and with an absolute sangfroid. He might be our Lafayette of olden time. No detail escapes him; they call him the "terrier" or "road-builder," one of his great cares being to keep his communications absolutely open and in the best of condition. He received us most delightfully and remained, against his custom, talking to us an hour with "Polybe" and myself after the meal was over and it was time for all good soldiers to be in bed. He is a great leader of a great army, for his morale and sangfroid have penetrated to the most humble "poula."

Some Germans Revolt In the face of their testimony it is useless for Germany to deny the barbarism and cruelty of their invasion. Her own soldiers betray her. Often the soldiers narrate deeds of cruelty in the most commonplace language, occasionally one will express his horror and disgust at the sights he had witnessed, of the scenes he has been obliged to take part in. A Saxon officer for instance mentions that a certain village was given to the flames because a German cyclist in falling from his machine accidentally discharged his rifle. He was fired at by someone in the village, which consequently was burned to the ground. The male inhabitants were cast into the flames. "Such atrocities," writes the officer "are not to happen again, one hopes."

Including the Soldiers. Another writer, whose name is suppressed, for fear that his people in Germany might be punished for his humanity expresses his profound disgust at the practices of the army in France. He speaks of the wholesale pillage of a town and asks himself how complaint can be made of the Russians when the Germans behave so much worse. He feels that in the end this system of making war will not succeed and quotes the old saying to the effect that "the mills of the Gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding small." He speaks of the efforts of the officers to arouse the fury of the wounded soldier was to make an entry. Together they form the real record of the war so far as the acts of officers and men are concerned.

THEIR DIARIES BETRAY GERMANS Fully Establish All Charges Against Them Preserved By France Officers Must Keep Diaries and Men Encouraged to Do So; An Unassailable Record

Arthur Gleason, a well known American newspaperman has been permitted to inspect the most interesting collection of relics gathered since the war began—the notebooks and diaries of German soldiers found on their dead bodies or taken from prisoners by the French. These books have been preserved by the French government and later on will form the foundation for charges of cruelty and bestiality made against the German army in France and Flanders.

The evidence contained in these books will establish all charges made against the Germans; it will make ridiculous the excuses and denials of Germans when the time comes for them to disavow the acts that marked their invasion of Belgium and their occupation of a part of France. No official statements by German historians in the future will be able to refute the damaging evidence supplied by these little books in which German soldiers and officers describe what they saw and what they did.

Germany Condemns Herself. A part of the outfit of every German soldier is a notebook of the sort that women frequently use for household accounts. A rule of the German army insists that soldiers record in these little books their own experiences, for as the regulation says "by bringing together the various reports of active fighting they are the basis for the later definite histories of the campaign." They should be kept daily. It appears that among the soldiers the keeping of the books is encouraged, among the officers it is a law which may not be disregarded. The French are in possession of tens of thousands of these books, the entries of the officers being made in ink, those of the private soldiers in pencil. Each book contains the name and regiment of the author. Many of them are splashed in blood and stained by mud and water. Some show that one of the last acts of the wounded soldier was to make an entry. Together they form the real record of the war so far as the acts of officers and men are concerned.

Colored Battalion Montreal, July 6—A battalion of Canadian negroes is the latest development in the recruiting for overseas service. Lieutenant-Colonel Pages, acting O. C. of Military District No. 4, today received authority to organize No. 2 Construction Battalion, C. E. F. to be composed entirely of colored men, with the exception that its officers will be white men. Lieutenant-Colonel Daniel Sutherland, a railway contractor and a graduate of McGill University will command the colored battalion.

Grandma Never Took A Music Lesson

YET to hear her play one might think she was an experienced musician. That is because of the "life-like" touch of the Martin-Orme Player Piano.

Grandma experiences no difficulty in playing this superb instrument. Everything is so simple and so handy. And you should hear her play the old, old songs of long ago—those she loved when she was a girl. By the look on her face you realize that she feels as though she were "Sweet Sixteen" again. A would help you, too, to lose your cares in a flood of perfect music—such music as the Martin-Orme Player Piano makes possible. This instrument is the only player piano with the "Violiform" construction (a method of producing the finest tone and preserving it for the life of the piano). It is a genuine Martin-Orme piano with the addition of a perfect player mechanism. It has all the beauty, power and range of tone, all the characteristics that have made the name Martin-Orme synonymous with high quality.

Our booklet, describing the Martin-Orme Player Piano, is worth reading. We would like to send you a copy.

the Belgian and French prisoners to kill them off.

The Prussian Infantry. But these men who displayed real humanity were the exception. The average diary, the diary of an average man, probably spoke of deeds of cruelty with the greatest philosophy. It was war. If women and children were murdered, this, too, was war. If on one occasion a captain summoned his men, told them that a fortress to be attacked was held by British soldiers, and said that no prisoners were to be taken, this, too, was war; the British were their worst enemies.

In some of the diaries Mr. Gleason says in his article in the New York Tribune was to be detected the common Prussian delusion that the Germans are supermen, that they have been sent to earth for a definite purpose, namely, to exterminate less worthy people and establish themselves in their stead. They seem to regard their enemies as so many dangerous animals that must be destroyed so that civilization, German Kultur, may flourish.

He—"Often when I look up at the stars in the firmament I cannot help thinking how small, how insignificant I am after all." She—"Gracious! Doesn't that thought ever strike you except when you look at the stars in the firmament?" The lady of the house was obdurate. "No," she said firmly. "I don't want no buttons nor no shoe laces." Putting his foot in the fast-closing door the tramp held up his hand. "Here you are," said he. "Grammar for Beginners—only a dime."

Well—that was "some" shave!

I would never have believed it. I was told that it would pay me to throw away my old shaving powder and stick, and the rest of them and try this new Mennen's Shaving Cream. It seemed to me that all shaving soaps were pretty much alike, but, after this, Mennen's is my one best bet. I am converted—I am a "Mennen booster" from now on. I did everything I could to make Mennen's Shaving Cream fail—using cold water and a dull razor blade. I thought it couldn't soften the beard without rubbing in—it did. I didn't think it would make a lather that wouldn't dry. The lather stayed fresh, and my face stayed moist. It was the easiest, quickest and most satisfactory shave I ever had.

MENNEN'S SHAVING CREAM

- Mennen's Differs from Others 1—Absorbs an unusual amount of water, thus you need only 1/4 inch for every shave. 2—Lather remains moist for at least ten minutes, therefore no relathering. 3—The creamy lather will soften the beard itself. No rubbing in. 4—An indifferent razor makes good with Mennen's. 5—No "free" caustic, but ingredients soothing to the skin.

JELlicoe's Report ON JUTLAND FIGHT

London, July 6.—"Be pleased to inform the lords commissioners of the admiralty that the German high sea fleet was brought to action on the 31st of May, 1916, to the westward of Jutland bank, off the coast of Denmark."

In these words Vice-Admiral Sir John R. Jellicoe, commander-in-chief of the home fleet, opens his report to the admiralty on the battle over which there has been so much discussion.

The battle cruiser fleet, gallantly led by Vice-Admiral Beatty, and admirably supported by the ships of the fifth battle squadron, under Rear Admiral Evan-Thomas, fought the action under, at times, disadvantageous conditions, especially in regard to the light, in a manner that was in keeping with the traditions of the service," Admiral Jellicoe continues. Without maps and charts many of the details of the report cannot be made clear. It states that "the list of ships and commanding officers, which took part in the action, has been withheld from publication for the present, in accordance with the usual practice."

Admiral Jellicoe estimates the German losses at two battleships of the dreadnought type, one of the Deutschland type, which was seen to sink; the battle cruiser Lutzow, admitted by the Germans; one battle cruiser of the dreadnought type; one battle cruiser, seen to be so severely damaged that its return was extremely doubtful; five light cruisers, seen to sink—one of them possibly a battleship—six destroyers, seen to sink; three destroyers, so damaged that it was doubtful if they would be able to reach port, and a submarine sunk.

Commenting on this, Admiral Jellicoe says: "The conditions of low visibility, under which the day action took place, and the approach of darkness, enhanced the difficulty of giving an accurate report of the damage inflicted, or the names of the ships sunk by our forces. But, after a most careful examination of the evidence of all the officers who testified to seeing enemy vessels actually sink, and personal interviews with a large number of these officers, I am of the opinion that the list shown in the enclosure gives the minimum numbers, though it is possible, it is not accurate as regards the particular class of vessels, especially those which were sunk during the night attack. In addition to the vessels sunk, it is unquestionable that many other ships were very seriously damaged by gunfire and torpedo attack."

LAST NIGHT'S WAR CABLES

Paris, July 6, 12.23 p. m.—The French offensive has made steady progress in the past 24 hours. All counter-attacks have been repulsed, a large area of new territory has been occupied and extensive captures of guns and ammunition have been made.

London, July 6.—The British official statement issued tonight, reads: "As a result of violent bombing fighting we made further progress at certain points in the main battle area. Low clouds interfered with aeroplane work, but in the Bapaume area one of our machines, dropped to 300 feet, successfully bombed a train from which German reinforcements were slipping."

Petrograd, via London, July 6.—Nearly half a million Austrians and Germans have been put out of commission since General Brusiloff began his great advance a month ago today.

The grand total of prisoners to date is, in round numbers, 235,000, of whom 4,500 are officers.

The success of General Letichitzky's advance west of Kolomes, where he had cut the railroad into Hungary at Mikuliczyn, is emphasized as a new body blow to the Austrian defense of East Galicia.

Another interesting situation is developing at Baranovichi, where the advance of the Russian offensive has brought their heavy guns within reach of that important railway junction.

"Whusky again, Wully? Ma'n, I'm surprised at ye. Even a pig wouldn't drink whusky the way you do."
"No, I go too."
"Then what's your main like the pig, then? you—like—of me?"
Passing Show.

The Career of Yuan Shi Kai

Described as an Oriental Napoleon

President and Autocrat

Refused Crown Once Put Did Not Let It Pass Second Time—Had Twenty-eight Sons and Daughters

If the very definite announcement from Shanghai that Yuan Shi Kai is dead is correct, very considerable relief will be felt in China, in Tokio, and in the European capitals, except possibly Berlin. The republic will be sustained by the election of the vice-president or some other officer of the constitutional government that Yuan overrode in the furtherance of his ambitions to be an Asiatic Napoleon. It remains to be seen, of course, whether the leaders of the republic can agree among themselves to support any other president consistently enough to give a stable administration or whether China will become another Mexico, with factions constantly contending for the mastery. The flame of rebellion spread so quickly and burned so fiercely in the Southern provinces when Yuan was so misled in December as to declare himself about to be crowned Emperor, that there is not likely to be any similar attempt by other ambitious leaders. Tang Shao Yi, a former premier of the Chinese republic, predicts that the successor of Yuan will be the constitutionally-elected vice-president, whose term will be the balance left unutilized by Yuan's irregular five years. He also predicts a new constitution, less bulky and complicated than the old one, and reducing the parliamentary representation, which was found to be unwieldy. He thinks that the new constitution will be modeled on the French system, with a responsible cabinet formed by the premier, and subject to the veto power of the president. Another venture on the sea of popular government, as against an autocracy, is assured by almost unanimous will.

Refused the Crown. It was only in December last that Yuan Shi Kai, who resembled in some particulars Porfirio Diaz of Mexico, decided that the time was ripe for the country to demand that he assume a crown. Once he thrust the proffered (by himself) Emperorship upon him, declaring himself unworthy of so great an honor, and again the throne proffered itself toward him, and the second time he accepted. Perhaps he thought he dare not wait a third time, lest his delay in accepting be misconstrued as excessive modesty. But the crowning, which was set for January, never came to pass. As soon as the Chinese of the southern provinces saw that their president had broken his oath of office, and aspired to restore a monarchy, they flouted, telling the Tokio government in effect to mind its own business. By March, the revolt had spread to the important provinces of Yangtze Kiang, and the governors met, to demand Yuan's resignation. A week or two ago, seeing himself unable to breast the tide, Yuan announced his readiness to quit, and a few days later it was said that he was ill. If he is not dead, as reported, politically he might as well be. No doubt he was the victim of assassination or of the foreign colonies in China, for they never knew when the civil war might not lead either side to raid them, and it likewise kept the diplomatic officials jumping.

Japan Against the Dictator. Japan has been popularly represented in the United States as desiring to foment strife in China, in order to have a good excuse for intervention and thereby to get a good measure of control over Chinese affairs. That seems to be misrepresentation of Japan's attitude. It is true that the Tokio government has not been well disposed toward Yuan, nor could it be so after his attitude toward it. It gave considerable assistance to the Republicans who sought to overthrow the would-be Emperor, Sun Yat Sen had his headquarters in Tokio. Chinese authorities of high degree say that Japan wants a strong government in China. In the last nine months, it is said, the Japanese have changed their point of view. If they wanted to take China they could do it in thirty-six hours. Trained Japanese armies are in Korea and Manchuria. Japan has first-class transportation facilities, and armories and barracks at important Chinese points such as Hankow. The Japanese know the topography and population of China better than the Chinese themselves. Recently the Japanese government published a guide book to China that the Chinese admit is a marvel of accuracy and minuteness in maps and statistics. But notwithstanding that, as Tang Shao Yi declared, Japan can hardly think of conquering 400,000,000 people with her own 60,000,000. If hostility to Yuan Shi Kai by the Japanese arose out of a desire to have a good excuse for intervention, Japan could long ago have made the important move. Yuan has been a disturber of, not an excuse for, the Japanese.

Played for His Own Hand. As told by the Republican leaders, Yuan managed during his four years of office as president of the republic to prevent free speech or action, to dissolve parliament by force, to re-elect himself life-president, and to surround himself with men who urged him to be another Napoleon. The taxes were enormously increased, and 78 per cent of the increase went into the army—that stay and buttress of the autocrat. The reforms Yuan put into effect were paper reforms. He did nothing for education—in fact, took away existing resources to entrench his military power. Yuan trusted nobody, and his confederates had his confidence only when they were in his sight. His policy was like that of the Sick Man of Turkey—to set one party against another, to get men spying on each other, and to shut himself in behind high walls. He had not been outside his palace more than three or four times in four years. Moreover, everyone of the six original promoters of the monarchy scheme was an opium smoker. Yuan himself was the son of a concubine, he had twenty-eight sons and daughters by his different wives, and he had a number of concubines and dancing girls. The children are at war with each other. Chinese history shows that in 400 years only one Crown Prince has not died a violent and unnatural death. Polygamy is at the bottom of a good deal of Chinese internal troubles, just as it was in the case of the dead president.

HOW CORPORAL J. W. MCINTYRE GAVE UP LIFE

Details of Circumstances Received From Friend

WAS IN RESERVE TRENCH WHEN THE END CAME

Eight Died Together, Instantaneously—Buried in Little Spot to Rear of Village—"One of The Worst Nights We Have Had," Says Writer

Details of the circumstances surrounding the death of Corporal J. Walter McIntyre, Methodist theological student, who was killed while at the front with an infantry battalion, come in a letter from a close friend, a member of a New Brunswick artillery unit. Extracts from the letter are as follows:

"Friday, June 16, was one of the worst nights we have had. As I wrote you before, I could not sleep, so watched the fight from a distant hill—an awful, but grand sight. The shells fell just like heavy rain. As we got ready for bed, a little Scotch lad in my tent said: 'Boys, pray for the boys in the trenches; for tonight is going to be one hell of a time.' I at once thought of Walter, and was not surprised when I received the news, but I could hardly believe it. I had seen him going into the trenches, sometime before, shook hands, and he promised to see me next time they were out. He looked fine, far better than a couple of months ago.

"He was sitting in the reserve trenches, on one of the bags, near the village of H— Seven other fellows went with him. They never knew what hit them, so did not suffer any pain. He, with the others, was buried in a little spot to the rear of the village. I had hoped to be able to send a snap of the spot, but find it impossible. I will make it my business to try to see the spot and have it properly marked, although it will be pretty hard to do just yet.

"Canadian and German both suffered. Many were found in the death-grip, showing that they had had it out with their fat or cut each other with their bayonets. Walter was spared this. If his private papers have not been sent home, let me know and I will try to trace them from this end. I can promise little, but will do my best.

"Walter was well thought of by the boys, and many will miss him. 'Mac' was always smiling and cheering someone. I believe he was talking a chap who was in the trenches for the first time when Fritz got both.

"War is hell, and the infantrymen are the men of the hour."

All honor is due them. I tell you I feel bad, but will feel worse at the home coming. Poor Duggies. Love to all.

GETTING BACK VOICE AFTER ELEVEN WEEKS

Carleton Soldier Recovering in London Hospital

WAS IN FOUR HOSPITALS IN FRANCE; NINE DOCTORS

Pte. Roy Macaulay One of the Few Who Came Unscathed From the Crater Charge of the 26th on Oct. 13—Shell Shock Caused Loss of Speech

Pte. Roy Macaulay of the 26th Battalion, a son of G. A. Macaulay of West St. John, in a letter to his mother, dated June 21, states that he was recovering his voice, the loss of which he sustained as a result of shell shock eleven weeks before.

Writing from the King George Hospital, London, Pte. Macaulay says in part—

"I recovered my voice this afternoon as the result of electrical apparatus applied by Dr. Stewart, a civilian specialist here. Whilst a Sister regulated the batteries, the doctor applied the electrical instrument to my neck, while showing me how to hold my mouth to pronounce 'P' and 'K.' I tried for ten minutes, but could not until finally he got me coughing and at the same time trying to articulate 'K' and 'B.' Then I found I could say 'K' and 'B.' Then I found I could say myself stuttering and talking with effort.

"In the morning the doctor will give me a lesson in talking in order to make the effort easy and eliminate the stuttering. It is wonderful, considering that I was in four hospitals in France, attended by nine doctors. The last doctor put me under chloroform to bring me to a high state of excitement and yet I could not speak.

"Considering everything, I have been rather fortunate. You know I was one of the few of 'A' Company who returned unscathed after the crater charge of Oct. 13. During seven months I spent nearly every spell at the listening post, that is, with a comrade, one goes out over the parapet into No. Man's Land as far as the barbed wire. Of course this is at night time. After listening for an hour, lying on our stomachs, we return to the trench for two hours rest and go out at it again. The chief danger is in going and coming, for if they detect us by the light caused by flares, a machine gun is turned on us and possibly bombs, mortars or rifle grenades chase after us. The last time out two chaps in the next post were killed by a grenade.

DOUBLY BEREAVED

On Sunday, July 2, at Enniskillen, John A. Duplisa died, aged sixty-three years. He is survived by his wife, five sons and two daughters. The sons are William A., of Orange street, Fairville; Harold, formerly of the Princess Pats, and now at home; James, of the 20th Battalion, now serving at the front; Arthur, of Gaspereau, and Andrew, of Enniskillen. The funeral was conducted under auspices of the Orange Lodge, Star of Boyne, No. 86, and the services were in charge of Rev. Mr. Belyea, Baptist minister.

Within two days death again visited the home, with suddenness, taking away little Viola, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Duplisa. This double bereavement coming in such a short space of time called forth expressions of sympathy from the entire community as well as many friends outside. The family have done exceedingly well for king and country and best wishes of all who knew him, go out to the son now on the firing line and who as yet does not know of his father's death.
