leaves the spot where the fugitives have been found.

If the Briton expects Larry Kennedy to tamely submit to such a cruel fate, he certainly counts without his host. The little New Yorker cares to continue his existence about as well as the next one, and will make a determined 2g2t against Wise Larry—that head of yours contains the elements that go to make up a statesman. At the mention of Jack's name Avis seems to receive new life, just as he knew she would.

An extraordinarily good swimmer, Avis would have made for the shore like a fish only that her dress hinders her progress. She can, with the aid of the oar keep afloat, but that is almost the extent of it.

upon those on the vessel to lower boats and come to the rescue.

Of course, with the first outcry the yacht has become alive with sailors, and already a couple of boats have been dropped and are being speedily manned.

Larry hopes much from the friendly darkness. One thing gives him much worry—the tide is strong at this point, and threatens to carry them past the rocks and out to sea—into the surf that pounds upon the beach beyond. He can feel that its force is hard to resist, and knows it will be a toss-up as to whether they result the order of the couple of knows it will be a toss-up as to whether they reach the point, or are swept past. Now the rescuers have arrived upon the scene, and the splashing men are lifted out of the water. The boat did not sink when relieved of the weight that was in it, but as a waterlogged craft, floated, allowing the whole of them a chance to hold on and remain above the surface. Hence none were drowned.

The boat shoots forward, impelled by the swift strokes of the rowers, and in the bow crouches the dripping figure of milord, holding a lantern in one hand and shielding his eyes from its direct rays with the other, as he soans the surface of the water for signs of the fugitives.

He is a shrewd fellow, this Lord Rackett, and does not search at random, but notices the play of the tide, and gives a close calculation as to where Larry and his charge must have drifted while endeavoring to make the shore.

Once they pass the swimmers, just out of range, and fail to discover them, for which Larry is thankful. Ho still has hopes of making the tongue of land, and even if this fails it might be better to be swept out to death than fall into the hands of their enemy. If the worst came, Larry would call out, believing half a loaf is better than no bread, and that there must always be a chance of Jack's arrival.

The boat has turned again. Once more CRACKED FEED,

The boat has turned again. Once more it heads in their direction, with that gigantic figure looming up in the bow, waving the lantern and shouting direcline which Larry is endeavoring to make for the point. It is just as well, for Avis cannot hold out much longer, and already the dude realizes that only a strong swimmer could battle successfuly against that current which insidiously but surely drags them toward the surf at first no notice is taken of his effort.

It is far from Larry's intention to disclose his presence, unless it is absolutely necessary. He would much rather accomplish his work through strategy than force, but as a last resort is ready to appeal to arms.

Whenever the British subject is about to turn his way he ducks his head out Whenever the British subject is about to turn his way, he ducks his head out of sight. The vast dimensions of the chair allow him a good chance for hiding.

Lord Rackett marches up and down as though endeavoring to frame a plan of action; he has numerous things to worry over. It is not often his lordship's head is troubled, and the unusual exertion exhausts the poor man.

So he throws his ponderous weight into an easy chair. By some freak of fate it chances to be the one behind which poor Larry has taken up bemporary quarters. By another miserable streak of ill-luck the thing is on rollers. Ordinarily, this fact would have little or no significance, but a combination of circumstances makes it assume a peculiar promstances makes it assume a peculiar prom-

As milord thus roughly drops into the chair his weight causes it to roll backward, and Larry's unfortunate head is squeezed between the chair and the cabin wall.

With a certain amount of calmness, then, he awaits the discovery. One might look for something on the same complacency in a stoical red man of the forest going to his fate, and in his little birch-bark cance nearing the awful brink of Niagara.

It comes at last, for the sharp eyes of the man who crouches in the bow of the boat discover him. There is a cry of triumph, and Lord Rackett calls upon his men to pull $\mathbb{I}$ together with a will, just as though he fears that the fugitives will again elude his vision.

So the boat comes alongside and Larry reaches Avis toward them, signifying that he would have her taken in before they pay any attention to him. Phillida on Her Wheel. When I was but a lad,

When I was out a lad,
Long ago,
This simple lore I had,
Don't you know,
That every maiden fair
Was an angel unaware,
And I wondered when and where
The wings would grow.

But wiser now am I,
A good deal,
Though I've sometimes seen them fly,
Yet I feel
They are something just between
Man and angel in the mien
Since my Phillida I've seen
On her wheel

She does not show a sign
Of a wing,
But her figure is divine,
And the fling
Of her abbreviated gown,
As she flickers through the town,
Might buy the throne and crown
Of a king!

No halo of a saint Does she wear,
Such as Lippo loved to paint,
But her hair
As when all heaven streams
Through the landscape of my dreams—
In such glory floats and gleams
On the air!

But not all for heaven she-Not too good!

Yet she's good enough for me
In any mood.

And if her dashing wheel
Took her even to the de'il
Thither, too, I'd gently steal—
Yes, I would!

with a stupendous idea. He drags it into the state-room, and them hars the door.

Although not a soldier or gunner by profession, Larry has some knack with various utensils of war, and readily comprehends how the yacht cannon should be loaded. He finds the shells blank eartridges for firing salutes, but it will be easy to all p some rusty nails or other missiles into the grim throat of the little brass monster, and thuts make it a terrible weapon.

By this time the assault on the door of the cabin was begun again, and it speedily gives way with a creak.

Men rush through, and in a short time a hand viciently shakes the door of the state-room, behind which stands Larry, coolly arranging his yacht cannon for business, while at his side is Dootor Jack's wife, her flashing blue eyes speaking defiance to the mob that hammers madly for admittance.

He gives a positive howl of anguish as the fearful odor strikes him, and curls up on the floor like a wounded bear.

Only for the bravery of Doctor Jack's what is to be done. Without twenty is happy.

"Exactly. I have it in here trained on the door, and loaded to the muzile with nalls, revolver cartridges, and trash. When I fire it will tear the whole side of your boat out. Now, order your men to break in the door."

There is a tone of triumph visible in the dude's address. Though still in a bad position, he at least holds the power in his hand, and is far from whipped.

"Rats. Do you think it can be that?" and the woman who can face the gravest danger in the world without filinching shudders and turns pale as the sounds Larry heard come distinctly to her come members of Parliament, who have the same that?"

It is not alone the people of our own the advantages of coming for their purchases to a store where no fuss was made, and they could procure just what they wanted for their respective members of Parliament, who have the same that?" shudders and turns pase as the sounds.

Larry heard come distinctly to her ears.
Then she suddenly smiles.

"Cousin Larry, rate do not work so methodically. Listen, and you can count the number of taps. It is as if some one hammered gently on the partitions. Perhaps our friends, the enemy, have another plan on the tapis."

members of Parliament, who, having used Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder, pronounce it the most effective remedy they have ever known, but people everywhere are expressing their gratification at the effectiveness of this medicine. C. G. Archer of Siewer, plan on the tapis." haps our friends, the enemy, have another plan on the tapis."

"Jovel d'ye know what it makes me think of?" bursts out Larry—"a telegraph sounder at—"

He says no more, for Avis has given a sudden startled cry—a new expression flashes over her face—she bends her head to listen. Now the gentle taps, short and long, come from a point close to her ear, as though they are being delicately hammered on the vessel's side, Suddenly Doctor Jaok's wife looks up, smiling:—

"This is what it says, Cousin Larry:
'Avis, I am here. Jack.' "

this mediciue. C. G. Archer of Grewer, Maine, says: "I have had catarrh for several years. Water would run from my eyes and nose days at a time. About four months ago I was induced to try Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder, and since using the wonderful remedy I have not had an attack. I would not be without it." It relieves in ten minutes.
