SUMMARY REPORT FROM THE ROUNDTABLE:
THE IMPACT OF SEPTEMBER 11 ON INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS AND CANADA'S FOREIGN POLICY<sup>1</sup>

November 27, 2001

Ottawa, Ontario

At the request of the Assistant Deputy Minister for Communications, Culture and Policy Planning, John Higginbotham, the Canadian Centre for Foreign Policy Development (CCFPD) organised and hosted a group of 13 Canadians, senior policy makers and Ministers' staff to reflect on Canadian foreign policy and on international relations post September 11. Participants included John Polanyi (University of Toronto), Janice Stein (Munk Centre for International Studies), Lieutenant General Romeo Dallaire, Bob Rae (Goodman Philips & Vineberg) Joe Schlesinger (CBC) and John English (University of Waterloo). Steven Lee (Executive Director, CCFPD) chaired the meeting.

1. Introduction

The Chair welcomed all to the roundtable. He reminded the participants that the mandate of the Canadian Centre for Foreign Policy Development is to help Canadians contribute to foreign policy making. He noted that this was an unusual meeting because participants were being asked to address international relations writ large and the whole of Canadian foreign policy, rather than a specific policy development issue. He posed some framework questions, including: Do Canadians have interests in the world? What are they? Are they changing? Do we have permanent friends and allies or do we live in the world of flexible coalitions and partnerships of convenience? How do we assess old relationships and New Diplomacy? Are the three pillars of foreign policy still intact and still a useful way to see our interests? Participants were asked to think about threats (both military and other), influence (and for what purposes) and "making a difference." They were also encouraged to think about big trends at play: migration, modernisation, urbanisation, values shifts, distribution of wealth and power, evolving global norms and institutions, economic growth, recession, trade and investment.

The importance of both long term thinking and public contribution to policy making was emphasised by government officials. While policy makers are facing a world changed by the September 11 events, they continue to pursue Canadian long-standing commitments (i.e., negotiations on climate change and trade) and to maintain bilateral relations with other countries. September 11 has altered the framework of the Canada - U.S. relationship (including border management and cooperation at the multilateral level) and affected the agenda for the upcoming <sup>1</sup>Chatham Rules were applied throughout the discussion, the results of which will be circulated and used for further consultations inside and outside the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade.

G-8 Summit meeting in July. While the priorities identified by the Prime Minister prior to September 11 will remain, other pressing issues will be added and may dominate the agenda at Kananaskis, including:

- counter-terrorism,
- peace and stability in Central Asia, and
- management of the global economy.

Officials welcomed reflections on long term objectives for Canada's foreign policy and on lessons learned from the post September 11 crisis. How much has the world changed? How to turn the negative aspects of the attacks into positive outcomes?

2. Historical Perspective

Attention was drawn to how wrong political scientists and experts have been for the past 10 years about current analysis at any moment and even more about predicting trends. For example, neo-Wilsonianism of the early 1990's has given way to "realism" of the early 21st century. Optimism accompanying the end of the Cold War largely dissipated as conflicts erupted and the global economy slowed down. The hopes for a united Europe from West to East were dashed with the beginning of wars in the former Yugoslavia. The rising Asian tigers were hit by a far-reaching economic crisis. The health of the U.S. economy seemed threatened by a large debt and increasing competitiveness from Japan.

The history of Canada-U.S. relations was also briefly addressed. The tension between the American tendency to "go it alone" and Canada's concern about being excluded from American decisions and actions continues to play out today as much as in the past (i.e., during the Second World War, the Korean War, and the Vietnam War).

Long term, big picture understanding of the September 11 events was encouraged. A point was made that while long-standing historical grievances do not justify the terrorist acts, they must be carefully considered. In order to reduce such threats in a systemic manner, deep ideological, material, religious and other divisions between the "West" and the rest of the world must be addressed.

3. Security Implications and Immediate Policy Challenges for Canada

One participant suggested it is necessary to deconstruct post September 11 policy interests and the current policy environment. September 11th is about security concerns. The appropriate response for Canada is to better integrate our own security information (CSIS, RCMP, Citizenship and Immigration, Refugee process) and then integrate that information with U.S. agencies (the FBI, CIA, Naturalization and Citizenship) to provide greater security for ourselves, for the Americans and for others and a high level of confidence that the right information exists and that it is being shared. This does not mean harmonisation. We need to keep our immigration, refugee and other policies able to respond to our needs and interests while securing more perfect information sharing. This is the Canadian value added to the "war on terrorism." Frigates to the Indian Ocean may not be the best Canadian value added, nor the best use of our limited resources.

We need to be aware, as well, of policy opportunists in the U.S. and in Canada who are taking advantage of the September 11th events and policy climate. These include proponents of vast public spending on improbable security threats (i.e., a Ballistic Missile attack from North Korea) and proponents of other policy initiatives (i.e., Dollarisation and further North American economic integration) that have nothing to do with September 11th needs and might well be deeply harmful to Canada's interests.

Strategically, it is time for a new Canada-U.S. "Grand Bargain" for information sharing and to define our own national areas of public policy outside pressures for harmonisation.

An important question regarding the war in Afghanistan is yet to be assessed by Canadians: Is the threat of recurrent terrorism sufficient to warrant a large-scale military action? Moreover, are the military tactics used in Afghanistan justified and exportable to other countries that shield terrorists? One participant pointed out that the military action was necessary to remove the shield from behind which a terrorist network recruits, trains and operates. The attack on the Taliban regime might have been key in achieving this objective. Others said that short term fixes (i.e., destroying the Taliban regime, killing Osama bin Laden) are unlikely to reduce the terrorist threat, may cause a backlash in the Middle East against the "West," and may lull Americans into a false sense of security. Long term efforts, beyond a military intervention, aimed at redressing historical grievances and improving the living conditions of the most marginalised people in the world are much more likely to enhance global security and peace.

The dilemma of using military force against a sovereign state to fight the "war on terrorism" extends beyond the war in Afghanistan. Are Canada and other Coalition members ready to fight in Iraq? When pondering this scenario, one should keep in mind the devastating effects of sanctions on the Iraqi population. A U.S.-led intervention would not likely receive much military and political local support and could backfire. There is also a question of lasting public support for Canada's military involvement, especially for missions beyond Afghanistan.

Some pointed out that the key to peace and security in the Middle East lies in resolving the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Others said that the conflict is being used by Islamic fundamentalists to justify their actions and if peace were to break out they would simply find another "just cause." While helping to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is a worthy goal in and of itself, peace will likely not prevent terrorism. One participant suggested that Canada needs to re-examine its role in the Middle East nonetheless. For example, how Canada handles pressure from the U.S. and from some domestic constituencies to support Israel's Prime Minister Ariel Sharon (who is by no means a moderate) will test Canada's credibility in the region.

Besides security and foreign policy, other spheres have been affected by September 11, including: immigration, culture, and the environment:

- Most participants agreed that tackling migration-related problems will pose serious challenges to policy makers around the world. The growth of migration and refugee movements, mostly from the poor “South” to the rich “North,” is being matched by calls in the “North” to clamp down on illegal refugees and to reduce legal immigration. The problem of internally displaced people was also identified as one of the biggest security challenges today. A point was made that rather than enhancing security, making immigrants unwelcomed, and treating refugees as criminals, Canada and other “Western” industrialised countries should address the “migration threat” by promoting human rights, democratic development and sustainable economic growth in the countries from which immigrants and refugees originate.
- A point was made that the “war against terrorism” threatens Canada’s cultural values. The “war” has opened a space for intolerance and prejudice, starting with an assumption that “terrorism can not be fought in a colour blind fashion.”
- Another consequence of September 11 was that the global environmental agenda has been put on the back-burner once again. Canada should lead efforts to put environment back on the agenda – not everything has changed since September 11.

4. Longer Term Policy Challenges for Canada

One participant suggested that there is no strategic design for Canada’s international activities. He said that the Canadian Government is pursuing tactical goals, sometimes in a counter-productive fashion, in the absence of a foreign policy and international strategy. Such a strategy should set out Canada’s objectives in the world. The objectives must encompass more than the pursuit of “growth and prosperity” and should include:

- humanitarian and human rights dimensions (including a coherent aid strategy),
- advancing moderation and eliminating extremism,
- breaking cycles of conflict, and
- promoting abroad what we do best at home – being a leader in community and society building.

The absence of a future-oriented strategic design is having profound implications for defence policy, military preparedness and practice, especially. As the nature of war changes (i.e., from inter-state to intra-state) traditional war fighting preparations are no longer enough for defence planners. The government needs to better articulate its policy goals and expectations for the military to more exactly spell out the military’s conflict prevention/resolution tasks and objectives. Training and new skills development are needed to enable this “transformation of war.”

Canada has its own “Manifest Destiny” based on our history, international engagement and special characteristics (well recognized by others). The post September 11 crisis opens the door for Canada to reassert its internationalist and humanitarian role in the world amidst mounting pressures to accelerate militarisation and policy conformism. Canada needs to better define and promote our own interests in foreign policy. These interests include:

- strengthening international/multilateral efforts and institutions on environment,
- promoting human rights,
- norm building and institution building (including the reform of the UN, supporting regional organisations/mechanisms),
- sustained aid to the poor with a Canadian value added (such as good, democratic governance, education, federalism).

The Third Pillar in foreign policy – promoting our culture and values - is key to all of this. Attention to the promotion of our culture and values can help provide the strategic design to our international policies, tactical advances, leadership opportunities and can profoundly reinforce our security and prosperity interests. Many participants stressed the need to recognise that there are risks and costs that go along with pursuing a “Manifest Destiny.”

In a similar vein, several other participants pointed out that Canada’s role in the “war against terrorism” is reactive and ill-defined. Since September 11, the Canadian government has been considering and reacting to the decisions of the U.S. and other leading Coalition members without formulating its own strategies. How much of a priority is September 11 to Canadians? Has it changed us in any significant way? What are we willing to do on our own terms? The need for Canadian initiatives was emphasised by participants for different reasons. Some argued that Canada must urgently demonstrate its willingness to share the burden of creating a world safe from terrorism by developing more aggressive, and perhaps costly, initiatives (i.e., improving our intelligence capacity). Others said that Canada should not be too hasty in entangling itself in short term, terrorism-focussed, U.S.-led initiatives. Instead, a long term, strategic approach such as outlined above should be taken.

Opinion varied about the degree to which Canadian foreign policy can be pursued independently. How much room do we have to manoeuvre with respect to our Coalition partners and especially the U.S.? While some suggested Canada can and should pursue its long-standing internationalist approach regardless of external constraints, others were sceptical about the ability of policy makers to chart our own course. Nonetheless, a point was made not to underestimate Canada’s ability to accomplish objectives as a member of multilateral organisations, including the G-8.

Canadians need to understand better their inextricable connection to the world and the responsibilities that go along with that. Leadership is required to make Canadians more globally aware and engaged, not only in economic terms (i.e., trade, technology) but also politically and philosophically. In the aftermath of September 11, Canadians should be seized by questions about the nature of their country, the value of their sovereignty, and the complexity of their relationship with the U.S. How do we deal with terrorism without sacrificing our “character”? Given Canada’s military engagement (readiness) in the “war against terrorism,” the Prime Minister, Minister Manley, and other Cabinet members should promote public interest in foreign affairs and challenge “latent Canadian isolationism.”

The need to strengthen the role of civil society in formulating and articulating policies was stressed by some participants. Canada should lead as an example in engaging women, Arab Canadians, Afghan Canadians and others in policy making and encourage other governments to do the same.

5. Implications for the “International Community”

Foreign policy of the most powerful nations, including the U.S., France, and the U.K., in the 1990's continued to be driven by self-interest. The governments of these countries show no inclination to elevate their foreign policy rationale beyond a narrow national interest, to include global/human interests. “Where there is no national interest to defend, the human factor does not even hit the radar screen – leading one to the conclusion that some human lives are more valuable than others.” When thousands of Africans died in Rwanda, nobody in the West cared, when hundreds of Americans died on September 11, the “international community” mobilised itself for a war. On a related note, the need to oppose oppressive regimes on a consistent basis was also raised. Do we respond only if we are threatened or also when a regime does not live up to global norms? The Taliban regime mattered because the terrorists it was protecting could attack other “Western” populations/targets, not because of its horrendous human rights record at home. Indeed, the oppressive regime of Saudi Arabia, for instance, does not seem to concern us.

A point was made that terrorism must be fought on an international level, which requires the strengthening of the international justice system and policing, disarmament, and other efforts. Canada should marshal international support for this approach, broadening the concept of the national interest. Otherwise, the “war on terrorism” will actually strengthen the terrorists. To this end, Canada should support and promote:

- the International Criminal Court (and international law in general),
- the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, Anti-Ballistic Missiles Treaty and other disarmament efforts/regimes,
- the reform of the UN.

The nature of the new U.S. multilateralism was also addressed. U.S. efforts to build a multilateral Coalition to fight terrorism and the sudden repayment of UN dues may lead one to conclude that the U.S. government has embarked on the path of multilateralism. Several participants suggested that this is unlikely. They pointed out that both the Coalition and potential UN engagement in Afghanistan are serving U.S. interests and have little in common with multilateralism. Still others said that the U.S. can not fight terrorism unilaterally and that there is some hope for a more cooperative U.S. policy.

Some participants emphasised the importance of bringing Russia into the “Western” sphere. Cooperation with the Russian government is key in addressing security threats such as deposits of nuclear materials, a large number of unemployed (or underpaid) nuclear scientists as well as instability in Central and South Asia.

In conclusion, the Chair and the officials thanked the participants for their insights. The challenge ahead for the Government of Canada is to design a long term international relations strategy. This will require some changes in conceptual thinking and public support. The narrow concept of national interest, the traditional view of war and peace, the complexity of Canada-U.S. relations – all need to be re-examined. Leadership will be required to raise awareness among the Canadian public about Canada's place in the world and the responsibilities that go with such leadership.

Biographies of Participants

Yasmeen Abu-Laban is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Alberta. Her research interests centre on the Canadian and comparative dimensions of gender and ethnic politics, nationalism and globalization, immigration policies and politics, and citizenship theory. Her publications include articles in International Politics, The Canadian Journal of Political Science, Canadian Public Policy, and Canadian Ethnic Studies. A co-authored book with Christina Gabriel entitled Selling Diversity: Immigration, Multiculturalism, Employment Equity and Globalization is forthcoming in 2002.

Lieutenant-General Romeo A. Dallaire, CMM, MSC, CD

Born in Denekamp, Holland, on 25 June 1946, he enrolled in the Canadian Army in 1964 after four years in the Cadets and the Reserves. He attended Collège militaire royal de Saint-Jean and graduated with a Bachelor of Sciences in 1969 from Royal Military College in Kingston. He also attended the Canadian Land Forces Command and Staff College and the United States Marine Corps Command and Staff College in Virginia. Promoted to the rank of brigadier-general on 3 July 1989, he assumed command of the Collège militaire royal de Saint-Jean. After studying at the British Higher Command and Staff Course, Camberly, United Kingdom in the spring of 1991, he was appointed Commander 5e Groupe-brigade mécanisé du Canada at Valcartier on 5 July 1991. He left Valcartier on 1 July 1993 to take command of the United Nations Observer Mission - Uganda and Rwanda (UNOMUR) and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR). It is for this mission that he was awarded the Meritorious Service Cross. He was promoted to major-general on 1 January 1994. From September 1994 to October 1995, he assumed simultaneously the positions of Deputy Commander of Land Force Command in St. Hubert and Commander of the 1st Canadian Division. On 2 June 1995, he was presented with "The Vimy Award" by the Conference of Defence Associations. On 20 October 1995, he assumed command of Land Force Quebec Area. In 1995, he was named Fellow of Ryerson Polytechnic University of Toronto and receives a Honoria causa doctorate from Sherbrooke University. On 9 January 1996, he was awarded the Legion of Merit medal by the United States. On 2 July 1996, he assumed the position of Chief of Staff of Assistant Deputy Minister (Personnel) Group. Promoted to Lieutenant-General, he was appointed to the position of Assistant Deputy Minister (Personnel) on 1 April 1998.

Joan Debardeleben is Professor and Director of the Institute of European and Russian Studies at Carleton University. She teaches courses on politics and society in Russia and the Soviet successor states. She has published widely on federalism, public opinion, electoral behavior, and environmental politics in the Russian Federation. She currently heads projects dealing with labour relations in Russian enterprises and fiscal federalism and elections in Russia. She is also Director of Carleton's Centre for European Studies which is currently involved in expanding attention to issues of European integration and EU enlargement in Carleton teaching and research programs.

John English (Ph.D. Harvard) is the Chair of the Canadian Museum of Civilisation and Professor of History at the University of Waterloo, Department Chair in 1989-91. He is the author of more than a dozen books including a several volume biography of Lester B. Pearson, and other works on Canadian history and politics and on Canadian foreign policy. He was National President of the Canadian Institute for International Affairs 1990-92. Elected to the House of Commons for Kitchener (Liberal) in 1993, he served as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, and Chair of the Foreign Affairs Sub-committee on Human Rights. He is a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, holds several prizes for non-fiction writers and was appointed to the Order of Canada in 2000.

The Honourable Ross Goodwin

Born in Quebec on July 2, 1938. Studied at the Collège des Jésuites. In 1958, he received a Bachelor of Arts and, in 1961, a Bachelor of Laws from the Université Laval in Québec. Called to the bar of Quebec the following year, he started his own firm. When he was appointed to the bench, his firm was called Goodwin, De Blois, Parent & Associés. Appointed to the Quebec Superior Court on March 24, 1983. Appointed to the Yukon Supreme Court on December 13, 1995. Appointed to the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada on June 23, 1999.

Bill Graham was first elected to Parliament in October 1993. He was elected chairman of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Foreign Affairs and International Trade in January 1995 and has been re-elected every year since then. Mr. Graham serves as Chair of the Liaison Committee of the House of Commons, which is the committee made up of all Standing Committee Chairs. In July 1997, he was elected Vice President of the 55 nation Parliamentary Association of Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE PA) and in 1999 was elected its Treasurer. In March of 2001 he was elected to a 2 year term as the president of the newly formed Inter-Parliamentary Forum of the Americas (FIPA). Mr. Graham also served as Treasurer of Liberal International, an organization of Liberal parties around the world, from 1996 to 2000. Prior to being elected to Parliament, he was a Professor at the Faculty of Law, University of Toronto, where he taught International Trade Law, Public International Law and the Law of the European Community. He holds a B.A. (Honours) and L.L.B. degrees from the University of Toronto and a Doctorate (Sciences juridiques) from the Université de Paris. He is the author and co-author of several books and articles in his field of expertise. Mr. Graham is a member of the Bar for the provinces of Ontario and Saskatchewan. From 1979 to 1987 he was President of the Alliance Française de Toronto. In April of 1985 he was made a Chevalier de Légion d'Honneur de la France, and in 1999 Chevalier de l'Ordre de la Pléiade as well as receiving the Ordre du Mérit de l'Association des Juristes de l'Ontario, all in recognition for his contribution to the French language in Ontario. In 1998 he was made an honorary life member of the Canadian Council of International Law in recognition for his work in the field of International Law. He is also an Honourary Member of the Order of the Knights of Rizal.

Wenran Jiang (Ph.D. Carleton University, M.A. International University of Japan, B.A. Peking University) is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Alberta. His teaching and research focus on development studies, human rights, East Asian political economy/diplomacy and global security issues. He has worked and taught in both China and Japan in the 1980s. Dr. Jiang is twice a Japan Foundation Fellow (1989-90, 1999-2000), visiting scholar at Hitotsubashi University and Tokyo University in Tokyo. He conducts field research in East Asia regularly. Dr. Jiang was a Canadian academic participant in the first CIDA-sponsored human rights project with China and contributed two book chapters published in both English and Chinese. He also participated in a number of Roundtables organized by DFAIT/CCFPD, and consultation sessions by DFAIT's China and Japan Divisions in the past few years. Dr. Jiang has just completed a book manuscript, Japan's China Policy 1978-2000. His recent publications include "The Japanese Assessment of the 'China Threat'," book chapter in Herbert Yee and Ian James Story, eds., The China Threat: Perceptions, Myths and Reality, London: Curzon Press, forthcoming; and "Should Japan Discontinue Joint Research on the Ballistic Missile Defense (BMD) System with the USA?" Co-authored with Kori Urayama, book chapter in Katsuhiko Mori, ed., Debato de manabu kokusai kankei (Studying International Relations Through Debate), Tamagawa University Press, 2001.

Ann Medina grew up in New York City. She has a BA from Wellesley College and an MA in philosophy from the University of Chicago. In the U.S., she was a Network Producer for NBC News and a Network Correspondent and Documentary Producer for ABC News. In 1975, Ms. Medina moved to Canada to marry a Canadian. She worked for CBC's Newsmagazine where she later became its Executive Producer. She then joined CBC's The Journal to become its Senior Foreign Correspondent, and Beirut Bureau Chief for CBC's The National and The Journal. Her documentaries aired regularly on BBC's Newsnight and PBS' MacNeil-Lehrer Report, and won numerous awards in Canada and in the United States, including an Emmy Award. She continues to contribute in the field of journalism moderating the Federal Election Debates and hosting History Television's History on Film. Recently, Ms. Medina has also moved into the broader area of communications and technology. Ms. Medina served on the Advisory Board to Foreign Minister Lloyd Axworthy and is Past Chair of the Academy of Canadian Cinema and Television, Past Chair of the Cultural Industries Council of Ontario, and served on the Board of TVOntario. She has received honorary degrees from the University of Toronto, the University of King's College in Halifax, the University of New Brunswick and Brock University.

John Meisel is the former Chair of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission. He is Professor Emeritus at Queen's University in the Department of Political Studies, and researches and teaches cultural policy. He holds a BA and MA from the University of Toronto, a Ph.D.(Econ) from the LSE, and Honorary Degrees from Brock, Calgary, Carleton, Guelph, Queen's, Regina, Toronto, Ottawa, Waterloo, and Laval. He has taught at Queen's since 1949, been a Visiting Professor at Yale (1985-86), and a Distinguished Commonwealth Visiting Professor, United Kingdom, 1979. From 1980-83 he was Chairman of the CRTC. Research areas include: Cultural and science policies, Canadian politics, particularly questions of community cohesion and national unity; Quebec politics; voting behaviour and parties. He conducted the first two national election studies in Canada. Professor Meisel was the founding editor of the Canadian Journal of Political Science and of the International Political Science Review.

Frank O'Dea has triumphed over adversity to become one of Canada's most successful and celebrated entrepreneurs, founding numerous businesses, including The Second Cup. In addition to his string of business successes, Frank's achievements in the not-for-profit sector, both in Canada and worldwide, are extraordinary. His ideas on leadership, entrepreneurship and visionary thinking make him a compelling and sought after speaker. Mr. O'Dea's breadth of experience provides him with the opportunity to speak on a number of topics such as "The Spirit of the Entrepreneur" and "Beyond the Strategic Plan". He is an inspiring, candid and compelling speaker who has been invited to share his expertise to many organizations including: The United Nations, Royal and Sun Alliance, Ford Motor Co., Produce Marketing Board of Canada, Remax Group of Owner's/Brokers, Brantford Home Builders Association, Family Services Association of Toronto, International Facility of Management Association, Canadian Club of Canada, Acadia University School of business, Canadian Society of Association Executive, Small Business Club of Niagara to name a few.

Stefan Opalski is a professional engineer with almost 20 years' experience working in Ottawa's high-tech industry for local telecommunication and silicon chip design organizations. In 1996 Mr. Opalski co-founded Skystone Systems. The Company was acquired by Cisco Systems and Mr. Opalski headed the Cisco Ottawa development group until late 1998 when he joined Skypoint. Prior to co-founding Skystone, Mr. Opalski worked at Nortel (formerly Bell-Northern Research) for 15 years. Mr. Opalski received his Bachelor of Electrical Engineering and Master of Electronics Engineering degrees from the Technical University of Warsaw in Poland.

John Charles Polanyi

Educated at Manchester University, England, he was a postdoctoral fellow at Princeton University, U.S.A. and the National Research Council, Canada. He is presently a faculty member in the Department of Chemistry at the University of Toronto. His research is on the molecular motions in chemical reactions in gases and at surfaces. Joe Schlesinger

Born in Vienna in 1928, his parents were killed in The Holocaust. In 1948, he got his first journalistic job as a translator at the Prague bureau of the Associated Press. When the communists took over in Czechoslovakia and started arresting AP staffers, he fled across the Iron Curtain to Austria and in 1950 came to Canada. He started in Canada by working on construction jobs in Vancouver and on B.C. coastal ships. In 1951, he enrolled at the University of British Columbia, wandered into the Ubysey, the UBC's student newspaper, and eventually became its editor-in-chief. He then worked as a reporter for the Vancouver Province and the Toronto Star, as an editor at the UPI bureau in London, England, and at the European Herald Tribune in Paris. In 1964, he was named assistant managing editor of the Paris Trib. In 1966, he returned to Canada and joined the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. in Toronto. Except for a brief stint as foreign editor of the Toronto Star, he has been with the CBC ever since. He served both as executive producer of The National and head of CBC TV News. In early 1990s became the CBC's Chief Political Correspondent in Ottawa. In 1994, Joe retired from the CBC news service. He has, however, continued to contribute to CBC Television programs, first as the host for five years of his own foreign affairs show on Newsworld, and now is co-host and contributor to Newsworld's "Foreign Assignment" program. Joe has been honoured a number of times for his journalism. He won three Gemini awards and the John Drainie award for distinguished contribution to broadcasting. He was awarded honorary doctorates by UBC, The Royal Military College and Dalhousie University. In 1994, he was named a member of the Order of Canada.

Janice Gross Stein was the 2001 CBC Massey Lecturer ("The Cult of Efficiency").
