the doctor. "Evidently, he is little Edna's father. His condition shows that he was forced to find shelter, to seek rest and nursing, or die."

"Is he very ill?"

"Give me tirge to ascertain."

For over an hour, Dr. Richard Milton worked over the invalid. Finally he returned to the larger room, where little Edna sat, a prey to vivid emotions that showed plainly on her impressionable face. Light as was his footstep, she enught its sound and glided to his side. "Is he very iil, doctor?" the queried, solicitously. Give me time to ascertain.

"Yes."
"Will he—will he—die?"
"I think not. We shall do all we can for him, at least." The doctor beckoned to Le Britta, and both went outside the hut.
"Well?" queried the latter, eagerly.

Le Britta looked anxious.

"And the money—the fortune—the hundred thousand dollars?" he began.

Several days passed by with only a formal report as to the condition of the tramp. Toward the latter part of the week, however, Doctor Milton received a letter, the contents of which excited

Le Britta started incredulously as he read the words that followed.

For they constituted a name belonging to one of the greatest social lights, one of the wealthiest merchants of the city where the conclave had just been held—

"Mr. Le Britta!"

The name was spoken amid a glare of splendor and light. It announced a guest in the drawing-room of one of the statellest mansions in the city.

For a week the photographer had because for the mount, which was to For a week the photographer had planned for this moment, which was to mark the initial step in a new venture that had for its motive the final securing of the Vernon treasure.

Upon the receipt of that letter from the medical student in charge of the tramp, the doctor and Le Britta had hele a long, serious conversation.

Then a hurried visit to the city had ensued, a secret investigation into the character of Darius Meredith, and then the two friends had arrived at a definite be two friends had arrived at a definite conclusion.

From what they could learn of the tramp's past, and his association with this man, Meredith, one fact seemed certain—they had once been business partners. To the world Meredith was an honored, successful business man, in reality he was a thoroughly bad-hearted man. It made the open-minded Le Britta sick at soul, to contemplate so much hyporrisy velied by the mask of social eminence.

What does it matter who is right?

The latest fashionable sport in Newport is for a man to play fish with a line at-

Of a surety, from what they learned, the tramp, after securing the treasure, weak, sick, fearful of pursuit, had gone to the partner of his better days, and had intrusted to his charge the custody of the precious packet that contained the Vernon treasure.

precious packet that contained the Vernon treasure.

Later, demanding its return, he had been repulsed, rejected from the sumptuous home of Meredith, and even threatened with arrest.

Meredith certainly had the money. How to establish that fact beyond a legal doubt, and recover it, was now the mission of Le Britta, and it would prove a delicate and a difficult task, he felt sure.

Finally, his plan was developed, however. Through a letter from Doctor Milton he secured an invitation to the home of a lady who was a belle in city society, and where he knew Meredith was an honorable guest.

The next evening they met again. Two home.

It was the culmination of his hopes.
He was working slowly, deftly, for a result.

As he rang at the portals of the stately home of Darius Meredith that evening, the photographer's eyes flashed confidently as he murnured:

"The oppostunity has arrived! It will be a battle to the finish, instead of an evening call, Mr. Darius Meredith, and I shall win!"

I shall win!"

As he spoke he fondled in his contpocket a tin phial that Dr. Richard Milton had given him.

"That little cordial is my resource!" he soliloquized. "Now to test the doctor's scheme—to learn what has become of the Vernon fortune. An hour's interview with Meredith, that little phial produced, and then—hypnotism!" was Le Britta's remarkable conclusion, as he entered the stately home of the man he had come to unmask.

CHAPTER XXXIV .- THE EXPERI MENT. Jera Le Britta braced himself for

He hastened to Le Britta's studio, and was soon cleasted with the photographer.

"News?" queried the inter, eagerly.

"Yes, important news. Read, that."

Meredith received him cordially. He was a shrowd man. While Le Britta was cultivating his friendship diligently so as to win his confidence, the scheming wolf in sheep's clothing fancied he was getting in his clutches a new victim to pluck. Le Britta seemed to have plenty of money, he had acted the innocent, inexperienced and moffensive society idler to perfection. Meredith had invited him to his house to treat him well, to profess great friendship for him, and later, to lead him into gambling, when he would fleece him of all his available cash. Le Britta found preparation for a pleasant evening in the coay library. The shutder were drawn, the gas brilliantly lighted, and wine, cigars and cards were near at hand. He never smoked, drank nor gambled, but, even at the risk of slight neuses, he took a few puffs at a havana, his mental excuse being the axigencies of the occasion, and was soon engaged in a brick conversation with his look.

engaged in a brick conversation with his host.

The latter discussed business, society and politics. Then he began descanting on the rare good fortune attending some of his recent speculations. Then he drifted to cards.

"A quiet game, once in a while, is a relaxation," remarked Meredith, "A small state makes it still more interesting. I had quite a run of luck with the governor's adjutant a few evenings since. Won enough to invest in a new diamond pin. Am having it reset now. By the way, Le Britta, suppose we have a round at poker, just to while the time away."

Le Britta, ascertained that the conversation had reached a critical point. He never played cards, in fact, he was ignorant of the details of any game of chance. If he confessed this Meredith would probably shorten the interview peremptorily and defeat his intentions. On the other hand, if he feigned to play, Meredith would win his money, and Le Britta could seasely afford to lose anything, even in pursuit of a cherished purpose.

"I'll two my arrestment." he mur-subject into hypnotic sleep.

Le Britta brought all the energy of his will to subjugate Meredith. He was disappointed at the result, however, for Meredith puffed coolly at his cigar, and there was not a particle of evidence in the hard, evil face that he was affected by sither the drug or the mesmeric efforts of his guest.

Suddenly, about to turn his eyes away from the diamond with some indifferent remark as to its beauty, Meredith started.

Caused by some sudden dizzying effect of the medicine, an observation of Le Britta's steady glance or a latent taste of the drugged liquor in his mouth, Meredith shot a penetrating look at his companion.

Le Britts, engressed in hypnotizing him, did not observe the suspicious movement. Meredith velled his glance with a grim expression. Then, noticing the spot on the table, where half the contents of the phial had been spilled, his lips became compressed.

hecame compressed.

He fixed his eyes again on the diamond ring extended by Le Britta, the cigar dropped to the table, he drew back, and then—his eyes began to close.

A quick flush of delight sprung to Le Britta's check. Net for a moment did he doubt but that the combined mesuneric influence and the drug had conduced to bring his companion under his influence completely.

CHAPTER XXXV .- DUPED!

"And now for his secret!"

Le Britta arose cautiously and approached Meredith, who had sank back in his chair until his body had assumed a half-recumbent position. He imitated professional hypnotists, by making several passes before the subject; then he stroked his eyes; they opened.

The unsuspicious photographer was satisfied that his experiment had sacceeded in every particular. Meredith was certainly in a meameric trance. His appearance indicated the fact plainly. Le Britta kept his eye fixed upon him in silence for a moment or two. Then he directed, in a low, steady tone of voice:—

"Turn that wine glass upside down." Maredith put forth his hand and obeyed. "Arise to your feet."

Moredith swuggled to an erect position, steadying himself on the back of the chair. And now for his secret!"

"Will you answer me some questions?"
was the next query. "You know a man named Dave Whar-

Meredith swayed slightly, and he hesitated a moment or two before replying. His yes were rather clear and intelligent for a person under mesmeric spell, but he finally said:—

Meredith uttered the ejaculation with nergy; his syes dilated "That psckage you must give to me and understand?" That package you must give to me Do you understand?"
It seemed as if Meredith was about to spring upon Le Britta. His eyes glared, his fingers worked nervously. Then, of a sudden, his face resumed its vacant expression, and he murmured.
"You want is?"
"I must have th!" rejoined Le Britte.

Is Britta gazed curiously about the apartment. It seemed to be a sort of study or business room, for it had a desk, and, sank in the wall of one side, desk, and, sunk in the wall of one side, a huge iron door resembling that of a benk vault. This door had the conventional combination lock and knob.

Meredith swayed dreamily. He really appeared like a man under the combined influence of narcotics and meameric force. "Is it here that I shall find the package belonging to the tramp?" queried Le Britta, sharply

The other nodded affirmatively "Where?"

Meredith pointed to the vault door

"It is in there?"

"Yes."

"Yes."

Le Britta sprang to the door, but found it secured.

"Can you open it?" he queried, eagerly.
"I can."
"Do so."

Meredith approached the door, set the hall against the indented disc figures, whele it once for twice, and the door swang head. swung back. Sheares and cases showed within, crammed full of papers,
"Go and get t. e package," ordered Le

Meredith took a step forward. Then he receled, recoiled, and sank to a chair. His head fell upon his breast Le Britta, alarmed at a fear of failure in his mission when so vitaily near to apparent success, seized his arm roughly "Arouse yourself, I order you," he spoke, hurriedly and with force Meredith only mumbled a few incoherent words
"Get the package!"
"No!"

"You must!"
"I cannot. You get it."
"The drug has delied the mesmeric intelligence, murnaured Le Britta, apprehensively. "Come Meerdith! You tell me to get the package?"

"Yes."
"Where is it?"
"In the vault."
"Where?"

"Left hand cabinet. Lower drawer."
With an exultant cry, Le Britta sprang With an exultant cry, Le Britta sprang into the vault.

The light from the outer room illumined its dark corners sufficiently to show the cabinet described.

Toward this the photographer advanced, his heart beating high with hope. Sudden darkness supervened. Suddenly, too, horror sent his blood curdling in every vain.

The approach of a pedestrian sent him speeding on, however. For miles he traveled a cheerless highway.

Finally he made out a diamantled structure standing back from the road. It was a place familiar to him, a residence some years since devastated by fire.

"Just the place!" he ejaculated. "No one goes there. I'll hide the body in the cellur. It will never be discovered."

He entered the house staggering under his burden He reappeared bearing the blanket, glancing apprehensively back ever and anon, and hurrying on the jaded steed once again in the vehicle

Utterly heartless Darius Meredith grew almost cheerful as he neared home again. A dangerous enemy had been removed from his path. The low-souled scoundret actually congratulated himself on his dark night's work. He ehtered the house and hastened to the apartment where Jera Le Britta had hattled fate and had hear defeated.

Back to life in a flash, back to reality, to the earth-earthy, but with an experience that would impress his mind till his dying day, the startled Jera Le Britta was roughly summoned.

With clearer senses on the alert, he could readily discern now that he was not in the vault at Meredith's house.

No, there was a damp cellar-way, and some one was approaching, the whistle announced it, the reflection of the rays of a lantern in some compartment near announced it, the reflection of the rays of a lantern in some compartment near by plainly indicated it.

To a man who had given up his life as lost, and had bidden farewell to the world, the revulsion of an unexpected recall to earthly existence acted as a decided shook.

Meredith! What a villain — what depths of syll in his cruel nature! The stolen treasure! Why, as never before, the issues of fate trembled in a perilous, uncertain balance.

"This is some cellar, the cellar of the "This is some cellar, the cellar of the house where Meredith lives," cogitated Le Britta. "Scarcely, for it looks disused and dismantled. Where then?"

That mysterious whistle was repeated, and around a corner of a stone partition the rays of the lantern again glinted across the slimy, damp foundations.

There was something sinister in that whistle, and a thought of Meredith caused Le Britta to hesitate as the impulse came to cry out.

pulse came to cry out.

He was glad that he checked it, for just then, as if in response to the first whistle, a second one schoed, and then a gruff voice exclaimed:— "Ah! you've come at last, have you?"
"Yes, on time, ain't I?"
There was the click of a watch-case and the reply:—

The trio came out into the garden, Durand in the lead; they traversed its length, and disappeared in a stable.

Le Britta got around to the building,

The photographer acted quickly. He sprang into the yawl and crowded through the little door leading into the dark and low-ceilinged cuddy.

"I must. While he is living and a prisoner, he is a menace to the girl. By threatening him, I keep her in my power. All this however may lead to troublehome complications further on, so I have resolved on one grand final move."
"What is it, governor?"

I have resolved on one grand final move."

"What is it, governor?"

"Monty was my primal object in fighting for my position as guardian to Gladys Vernon. To my disappointment when I became legally appointed executor of the Vernon estates I found them heavily mortgaged and the proceeds had vanished. I imagine, I suspect that the girl or some of her friends know where this mortgage money is and are keeping it in hiding until she becomes of age. However even abandoning the hope of ever handling that ready cash I find I can realize as much more by a bold move." an realize as much more by a hold move

"How's that?

"Can you do it?"
"With the girl's consent." "Not without it?"

"Scarcely. So I have resolved to marry her, and end the complication ummarily."

To marry Gladys Vernon! The lister To marry Gladys Vernon! The listening photographer thrilled at the revelation, more than that, he shuddered at the thought of that pure beautiful gi.l wedded to a coarse, brutal villain, who, by thus wrecking her fair, young life would silence her lips against him, would enforce the sacrifice under threat of doon and death for her lover, Sydney Vance "The day that occurs," went on the bold plotter, "I pay you each five huna red dollars."
