LOVE HER STILL. Love her still !

She hath fallen very low,

Little, little canst thou see

Thou, who knew'st her long ago,

Of her girlhood's purity ; But, though sin had left its trace

On her once sweet happy face,

And that innocent maiden brow

gh life's glory all had fied,

Love her '- Let no harsh cold world, Man, from lipe of thine be heard ; Woman, with no lifted eye.

Love her !- let her feel your love-

Fainting bloseoms, leave with them-

Bloom, the bitter storm had ta'en

By the world's poor faded flowers /

Gather round her, weep and pray-

Clasp her, lead her from the way

To the better paths where peace

Waiteth her, with sweet release

In hier breast the hope of yore May be lit-that blessod hope, That with earthly less doth cope, Earthly sin, and earthly shame, Till all earth is but " name, And the rescued soul is given-With its treasure unto heavon. Oh ? bethink ye of the bliss

That will fill your hearts for this,

Loving friends, what time ye see

Soaring in a thought sublime, Ye shall know the while we pray,

Shadow after shadow flee From her pale, sad face-what time,

From life's heart-ache ;- so once more

She doth journey-tenderly,

From the wrong and misery,

Freshen'd leaf, and straighten'd stem :

Summer showers that fail above.

Suashine oft doth give again

And this human love of ours,

May be found as dear a boon

As God's blessed rain and sun, To restore their native hue,

And their native fragrance too,

Love her still

Love her still !

Love her still !

And life's shame is her's instead,

Droopeth in dark shadow now-

Mock thou her deep misery-Weep ye-tears, give tears slobe,

To our world-forsaken one,

On Dress, most people lay out all they can, Some folks e'en say, # the tailor makes the man.'

NEATNESS of person, I observed, was as necessary as cleanliness; of course, some attention must be paid to your Dress. It must be confessed, that a few things make a man appear more despicable, or pre judice others against him more strongly. than an awkward or pluiful dress. Had Tully himself pronounced one of his orations, with a blanket about him, perhaps more people would have laughed at his dress, than have a very few moments of time. For one, I can truly say. I never met with any loss so great truly say, I never met with any loss so great as that of loosing the care and instructions of my mother during my childhood, in con-sequence of her having lost her reason.—But I can recollect that, when a very little child, I was standing at the open window, at the close of a lovely summer's day. The large, red sun was just sinking away behind the western hills; the sky was gold and purple comming-led; the winds were sleeping, and a soft, solemn stillness scemed to hang over the earth. I was watching the sun as he sent his yellow rays through the trees, and felt a kind of awe though I knew not wherefore. Just then my nother came to me. She was raving with frenzy for reason had long since left its throne and her a victim of madness. She came up to me, wild with insanity. I pointed to the glorions sun in the west, and in a moment she was calm ? She took my little hand within hers, and told me that "the great God made the sun, the stars, the world, every thing; that he it was who made her little bey, and gave him an immortal spirit; that yonder sun, and green fields, and the world itself will one day be buried up; but then the spirit of the child will then be alive, for he must live when heaven and earth pre gone, that he must pray-to the great God, and love and serve him !"
