Boer Official Reports of Recent Engagements Show That They Suffered Heavy Loss.

London, Oct. 28.-The war situation this morning presents no new features, It is presumed in Natal that the Boers are reconstructing their plans, and that the English are resting. But Zouthpansberg Boers, numbering 700 telegrams from Ladysmith at express rates still occupy 48 hours in transmission to London, and therefore it is not impossible that something is hap-

Scott Turner, with 270 men, had an encounter with the Boers, during which a detachment of 50 men of the Lancashire Regiment distinguished itself, and the armored trains did good service. The Boers were unable to withstand the splendid charge of the Lancashires, who cleared the hill occupied by the enemy AT THE POINT OF THE BAYONET.

Results of the British camp a shell killed two soldiers. When Gen. Yule heard of the battle of Elandslaagte, he sent a squad of hussars, under Col. Knox, and a battery of artillery, to intercept the Boers at Biggarsberg. The artillery succeeded in shelling the Boers as they were retreating over the Umpati Mountain, killing and wounding many; but the artillerymen were forced to retire by the rifle fire of the enemy. It appears that the Boers shelled the camp all day long Sunday, and the British were kept busy skirmishing and removing their transport wagons out of range. During the retreat there were many anxious moments Monday night, when the British marched through Van Londer's Pass, six miles long, 'across to Biggersberg. The troops got through the dangerous defile, which 50 men could have easily held, at o'clock Tuesday morning.

ON THE RHODESIAN BORDER

Belated dispatches from Tuli fort partially elucidate the situation on the Rhodesian border. It appears Col. Plummer ascertained that all the men, mustered under Piet Joubert the Brack River, and proceeded to Limpopo River, where they arrived Oct. 16, accompanied by a number of armed Shangaan and Zouthpansberg Kaffirs, whom they had compelled to take up arms. The British thereupon captured three Kaffir chiefs, who are now held as hostages for the good behavior of their tribes. On Oct. 19, reconnoitering patrols proceeding along the north bank of the river in an easterly direction, suddenly encountered a party of Boers in some dense brush on the Rhodesian side of the Limpopo. The patrol retired, and the Boers fired, wounding a trooper. Subsequently Capt. A sharp skirmish was the result. Two of the British were killed to fetch the dead and wounded, and while placing the bodies on a cart the Boers reopened fire, killing two horses. But in spite of the sharp shooting the British succeeded in carrying away their comrades.

JUER OFFICIAL REPORT. Two telegrams dated Lorenzo Marquez, Oct. 23, have been received at Cape Town, and, in view of the fact that Pretoria news is now coming from Lorenzo Marquez, the authorities are inclined to believe they are copies of official bulletines from Pretoria. The first evidently refers to the Glencoe battle, and says: "Gen. Erasmus as expected was compelled to retire, his and horses being exhausted. men Erasmus seems decoyed into the wrong direction by the enemy, and the British succeeded in capturing the Utrecht and Vryheld forces. The number of killed is unknown, but the burgners suifered heavily." The secong telegram bears evidence of being a report of the same engagement by Commandant Triehaardt. It says: "The Ermelo burghers in charge of the artiflery, apparently fied from Dundee. They were reinforced by 60 (?) Pretoria burghers, under Gen. Erasmus. The English opened a sharp fire, and De Jaeger, with a Krupp, yielded. Our wounded were numerous, including Commandant Crobler. We also lost 243 prisoners."

AT DUNDEE. Commandant Zuderberg is in charge of the Boers at Dundee. The stores were looted by individuals wno were unarmed. The hospital has been removed from the old camp to nouses surrounding the railway station. The principal medical officer states that everything was going well, and that everyone was cheerful and confident. It is alleged that a number of sportlaagte, which has aroused indignation. THREATENING THE NATIVES. A telegram from Buluwaye, Rhodesia, dated Monday, says: "A Boer force is threatening Chiefs Khama and Linchwe, who are loyal to Great Britain. Khama and Linchwe's country lies at tne extreme northwest of the Transvaal, and includes Bechuanaland. It seems a gross mistake for the Boers to provoke war among the natives. Great indignation has been caused at Cape Town by the announcement that Hoffman, a member of the Cape House of Assembly, with a party of assistants, is going to the Transvaal to do ambulance work. It is suspected that he will give information to the > Reasons for Generosity-Canadian Prosperity-The Claims of the Fund.

Toronto, Oct. 27.-Hon. Geo. W. Ross, premier of Ontario, was one of the speakers at Cook's Church, Toronto, last night, at a largely attended meet-ing in aid of the Presbyterian century

Rev. Dr. Worden, in calling on Hon. Geo. W. Ross, said: "We Presbyterians ought to have a good deal of confidence in the government of this province, as not only does a venerable Presbyterian occupy the chair of the Lieutenant-Governor, but a Presby terian elder is now our premier. (Laughter and applause.) I have much pleasure in welcoming you, Mr. Ross, to your ain folk tonight and introducing you to the audience Mr. Ross said: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, being a parliamentarian, I suppose I might consider that we are tonight in committee of ways and means, known in parliamentary language as committee of the whole with the finance minister of the Presbyterian Church in the chair. The question before us is "Shall we raise $1,000,000 for the advancement of the Presbyterian Church in Canada?" Now, that is a very big question, but I hope we are a pretty big church and that we are big-hearted enough to respond to the call of the chair. chairman has indicated to you the motive why this vote should be passed. Of course, you all agree, I suppose, that the government will not be voted out. I think the vote should pass, and I think he has given us a splendid reanamely, that so successful has the Presbyterian Church and so thankful has it felt that we ought to be impelled by a sense of gratitude to pre-sent the offering of $1,000,000 on the altar of our church for the goodness of Almighty God to the church during the century. It would be a magnificent rounding off of this wonderful century. It would look well, would it not-one million for the Presbyterian Church as a tribute, as an expression of our gratitude for all the way the Master has led us and all he has enabled us to achieve and all the good that followed the work of our ministers and our people since this century began? sure we all feel that such a motive as that is worthy, such an object is a worthy one. Now, the chairman might have taken other ground, and said that as Presbyterians or as members of another church it would be becoming to the people of Canada as Canadians at the close of this great century to make generous acknowledgments of thanks for the wonderful prosperity of the nation. One hundred years ago, and the population of all Canada was only 230,000, fust a few more than the population of the city of Toronto, and, behold, what a mighty nation we have become! Somewhere between five and six million! I am glad the Methodists are having a century fund and the Baptists, and possibly other churches that have escaped my notice. I think if ever there was a favored people we Canadians have been favored by a kind Providence in enabling us to wrest from the forest and the red man this good land, and make what was a wilderness bloom and blossom as the rose; railways stretching over the prairies and piercing the mountains; the commerce of a great nation tra-versing our seas; cities everywhere; homes, the abode of peace and prosperity; glad hearts thronging our streets; our granaries overflowing with grain, and our people enjoying the blessings of peace and content-

Mr. Ros then reviewed the objects for which the money was asked. First came the $400,000 to pay the debts of churches. He asked why a clear deed of all the churches should not be presented to the twentieth century. debts were a burden, and if paid the churches could devote their revenue to the service of spreading Christian doctrine.

Then Dr. Worden wanted $600,000 for the other services of the church. He wanted a liberal contribution for into Woodstock on Wednesday morning in quest of his romantic daughter.

On Tuesday night she disappeared to the work of paying a high tribute to the contribution for home missions, means for the work of our own church in our own land. While paying a high tribute to the foreign missionaries, who, he said, had been a greater power in the British empire than the ironclad and the em-battled battalions, he enlarged upon the work of the missionaries in the Northwest, particularly in the mining camps, where our very best young men were going. They were cut off from home influences, and that was a rious matter in many cases, and if the church neglected these influences, to which these men were practically entitled, it would be a great offense Mr. Ross urged with special force the claims of the pant of the fund to be devoted to the maintainance of colleges, enlarging upon the importance of broad culture among clergymen.

rew Carnegie Tells How oung Men Can Get Rich.

eful Interview With the Steel ing by W. T. Stead, Jr.,-The Right Relations Between Employer and Employed-How Captains of Industry Should Conduct Thein-

Fifty years ago a young Scotch lad as working as a "bobbin boy" in cotton factory in the United tates. He was earning somewhat ss than a dollar and a quarter a veek. That boy was Andrew Caregie, who is now one of the richest men in the world. At the age of 62 he has retired from business with fortune that is estimated at $100,-000,000, or an annual income of $5,-000,000. Mr. Carnegie pondered over the problem how best to distribute this huge sum during his lifetime so as to produce the maximum amount of good and the minimum of evil. Mr. Carnegie finds that a man who attends to the distribution of his own fortune is not to be rated an idler. This, however, is a difficulty few men are called upon to face. Most of us are concerned in laboriously accumulating an infinitesimal fraction of the millions which Mr. Carnegie has won in his prosperous career. How to make millions, not how to spend them, is the pressing problem with the majority of men. The man who has made millions can best explain how millions are made. and Mr. Carnegie g,ves the readers his practical advice, the outcome of his own experience, on how to succeed in business.

"If a man has an ambition to make millions, Mr. Cranegie, what are the gifts with which a fairy godmother should endow him at birth?' "The greatest of all advantages with which he can begin life is that of being poor. The man who wishes to make millions must not be born with a silver spoon in his mouth. He must feel that it is sink or swim with him. He must start his life career with no bladders, no life-preservers, no support. If in addition to being poor himself he has witnessed his parents' struggle with adversity and resolves to drive the wolf from the door of the family he has the strongest of all incentives which lead to success. No ambitions of a merely personal nature can be compared with this. Respoa-man, that is the thing to bring out what is in him. Such is the raw material out of which great captains of industry are made.' "He has placed his foot on the first rung of the ladder of success?" "Yes, and he goes ahead, for he knows no such word as fail.' "What about his personal charac-

"I think if a young man has ambition he has the necessary qualities behind it. The desire to succeed develops them. The secret of success chiefly lies in the determination to succeed and the resolve that every impulse, every knock-down he receives in the battle will only nerve him the more."

"Are there any other essentials to success?"

"Yes, he should make his employer's interests his own. He should take personal pride in the concern with which he is connected. He should consider the property as his own already, and expend all his efforts and energy upon it. This attracts the attention of his employers, and the rest is easy.' "If he follows this advice, will he eventually come to the top?" "Well, you can find a hundred men who will make good brigadier generals, ten, perhaps, who can command a corps, and only one who can combine all the forces and wield them as one solid mass. The same analogy holds good in business. The phrenologists have discovered no bump of human nature, though they should have done so. The most delicate and the most essential piece of mechanism that a man has to deal with is the human machine. Unless a man knows how to manage those above him as well as those below him he will never achieve supreme success. Knowledge of human nature is the chief element in the composition of the successful business man. The test of any man's ability is not what he does himself, but what he can get others to do in cooperation with him.' Then you believe in a close connection between employer and em-

"No matter how close it is," said Mr. Carnogie, emphatically, "it cannot be close enough. A successful business firm should be like a band of brothers. Of course they cannot be this unless real co-operation exists. The head must share with the others and the others with him, so that all are working for the common rank to anyone." "Do you think, Mr. Carnegie, that the manager of a great concern should have a practical acquaintance with all the details of the business?' Well, I am not one who could say that, because I am nothing of a scientific or mechanical man. What is important is that the manager should know the clever men who are scientists and mechanicians. He should always keep his eyes open for a genius in any branch of the business, and when he finds him take him into the concern as a partner. The great manager is the man who knows how to surround himself with men much abler than himself. He must love his work, and this will make his associates love it. He must trust and respect his associates, too, and that will make them trust and respect will make them trust and respect him. The latent reserve power in men waiting to be called into action has never been accurately estimated. I have always found that a manager of one of our great works has been able to make excellent managers out of material which before his magic touch was quite mediocre. He inspires his subordinates to almost

"Yes, when you have all these combined you have an extraordinary character. Such a man can work miracles even if the material at his command is not much above the average. The great manager who will suceed in making millions is not a specialist, excepting so far as it is his special function to understand the human machine. You may find men who will become famous as specialists io many branches of life, especially in professions. Great talents in one line will atone for the lack of many other qualities. But in the business career there must, I think, be an ali-roundness to secure success. The decisions a business man is called upon to make every day, sometimes every hour, are momentous and involve many interests. His judgment needs to be sure upon a wide range of subjects.

"You do not share the belief that society is about to be delivered over to the tender mercies of the man who has made a special study of one subject, and is ignorant of all others?" 'No, I do not. There must be a division of laber, of course. It is said it takes nineteen men to make a pin. It is quite true that the mechanic and the workingman may only have one thing to do, but when it comes to directing the operations of 30,000 or 40,000 people, providing them with work, deciding all questions as to markets, inventions, supply and demand, I think that it is too wide a field to be controlled by the specialist. As I said before, the great manager needs an all-round knowledge of affairs, and especially

"Is the most successful business one in which one directs and many serve?

"No, I should not put it that way. I think the successful concerns are those which interest the largest number, making them all of one rank, partners. No one really serves; that is not the right way of looking at it. Everyone contributes some special quality to the general whole. They naturally serve each other. I do not believe any one man can make a great success of a business nowadays. I am sure I never could have done so without my partners, of whom I had 32, the brightest and cleverest young fellows in the world. I have often said that if I had to lose all the capital I had in the works or lose my partners I should let all my capital go and start again without a dollar, but with the organization intact. No, no; it is absurd to think that power is going into the hands of a few. The great concerns require many first-class men. All are equal to each other. The chief must only be first among equals. I know that every one of my partners would smile at the idea of me being their superior, although the principal stockholder. The way they differed from me many a time was delightful to behold. I never enjoyed anything more than to get a sound thrashing in an argument at the hands of these young geniuses. No man will make a great business who wants to do it all himself, or get all the credit of doing it. That spirit is fatal, and the sure proof of a small mind." "When the poor lad without a penny has become the great captain of industry, with millions at his command, what are his duties to the community at large?" "As long as he remains captain of industry his business must be conducted on business lines. But the wisest policy that an employer can pursue toward his men is to show by his actions that he has a heart. In cases of accident, distress, or any trouble, the firm should show that its heart has been touched and that it can be generous and benevolent. The firm that has a reputation for taking care of its men has the best chance of success, because the best men, which is the same thing as the the wisest men, who again are the ablest, will gravitate to that firm and stay with it. Nothing pays so well in business as generous treatment. Indeed, the firm which sees that its men make the highest earnings is certain to be the most suc-

Wonderful Corporation That Will Again Have Being in 1900.

How London's Ancient Rival, the City of Westminster, Is Soon To Be Carved Out of the Heart of the Metropolis Government.

In a few months-just how soon nobody knows-what was one of the most famous cities in the world is to be born again, and christened over with its ancient name, the City of Westminster.

It will get a Mayor, Board of Aldermen and Board of Councilors, and as complete an outfit of individual municipal machinery as if it were not to be cut out of the heart of Greater London.

The population of the new-old city is 100,000 at night. In the daytime it is anywhere from 500,000 to 1,-000,000, depending on the hour and the season. The city will contain more buildings of historical and political importance to England than all of the rest of the country put together, and if its newly recovered local pride were to lead it to betake itself off the map the English Government would be wiped out.

As soon as the Queen sets her seal on the measure, already passed by Parliament, the City of Westminster will be in a position to sniff disdainfully once more at its old-time rival, the city of London. They were always at swords' points. Royal Westminster was the home of kings and arrayed in purple and fine linen, while London was the abode of "shopkeepers" and not good for much of anything except to make money and to be squeezed dry from time to time for the benefit of the royal exchequer. At last the "shopkeepers" tience was exhausted, and they curbed their kings and humbled the royal city, which became thereafter nothing but an anomalous part of the vast mixed-up mess of streets and buildings outside the square mile that calls itself the city of London. How in the world that same mixed-up mess outside of London City gates ever managed to keep itself in excellent municipal order is a mystery that even Dr. Albert Shaw would be puzzled to solve. The crooked little side streets of the metropolis, twisting and turning, changing their names at every corner or two, are not more complicated

"GREATER WESTMINSTER" -- DOTTED LINES SHOW AREA OF THE REVIVED CITY. than the system of government that has prevailed over all of what is called London, except the little city in the center.

Parliament at its last session provided a way to bring order out of chaos. They carved out the ancient city of Westminster from the mass. giving it approximately its old boundaries, and promised it practically the same measure of individuality and self-government that belongs to the city of London, agreeing to restore to it the coveted name ol "City."

The rest of the metropolis outside of the tiny city of London was cut up into twenty-seven other boroughs, none of which is labelled officially a city, although each is to have a mayor and council, like Westminster. It will take a long time to get the machinery in motion, however, and the first set of councilors will not be elected until November 1, 1900. The councilors will elect aldermen, and the councilors and aldermen-not more than seventy in all-are to elect the mayors.

It was the intention of the government to make women eligible for places as councilors, but the old fogies in the House of Lords went out of their way to choke that modern idea, although the House of Commons voted for it, and Premier Salisbury made a speech for it.

The new city of Westminster will have the advantage of its old-time rival, the city of London, in almost every respect. Even its rateable value will be $2,000,000 more, and its population will be far in excess, for the old city has an actual resident | cil's territory. population of less than 30,000, mostly janitors, clerks and caretakers for the time-stained, fog-begrimed buildings that form the compact financial Westminster center of the world. will have an area of 2,545 acres, as compared with the other city's 659

As of old, Temple Bar will be the dividing line between the two rivals, but the Westminster's boundary will curve eastward from Temple Bar to take in the magnificent courts of justice, enfolding Drury Lane Theatre in the same sweep, and likewise Covent Garden and the Royal Opera House, thence from Charing Cross Road westward along Oxford street, through which the convicts used to travel from Newgate to be hanged at Tyburn, where the Marble Arch now stands.

For some mysterious reason a jog will be left out of Kensington Gardens, whence the boundary line moves erratically in and out, ruthlessly cutting the great Imperial Inthen dives south to the Thames, going back to the stairs of the Tem-the death rate in the Strand district last year was 22.9, compared with 13.2 in Hanover Square. Of course, Westminster Abbey is the germinal point of this new-old city of Westmirgter.

A church dedicated to St. Peter and built by Sebert, King of the fragile little creatures will undergo in East Saxons, was standing there in an emergency. The late prime ministhe seventh century, and in the following century a good part of the land on which the present city stands was granted to the Abbey Church.

The Danish kings afterwards built a palace nearby, and it was here that Canute commanded the tide in the Thames to stop rising, and stood on the bank till the water came up to his knees, whereupon he concluded that the Thames was even mightier than he.

The palace was burned in 1035, and at once rebuilt by Edward the Confessor, who also began work on the Westminster Abbey we know to-

The city of Westminster grew rapidly around the palace and the Abbey, and at once began to have trouble with the neighboring city of London, for Westminster was filled with the camp followers of royalty and London was filled with shop-

Henry III., from his palace in Westminster, once referred to his subjects in the other city as "those rustical Londoners, who call themselves barons on account of their wealth." Once, to give Westminster a boom, he established a fair there and made all the Londoners shut up shop, and come over to Westminster to sell their goods.

It was a wonderful government hat grew up in the city of Westminster under the abbots, and afterwards under the burgesses. In Elizabeth's time a preamble to an act for the good government of the city recites that "the people thereof are greatlie encreased, and being for the most part withowte trade or mysterie, are become poore, and many of them gyven whollie to vyce and idleness, lyvinge in contempte of all manner of officers within the said Cyttie for that their power to correcte and reforme them is not sufficient in Lawe as in that behalfe were meete and requysite." Macaulay, speaking of Westminster as it was in 1638, says it "was then by far the greatest city in the world, except only the neighboring city of London.'

Even half a century ago the place was governed by "a confused network of boards, commissioners, trustees, committees and vestries and what-not, that rendered efficient and economical administration an impossibility," to quote a local chronicler. For example, nine paving boards.

not to speak of other bodies, had separate jurisdiction over one short stretch of the Strand.

Even to-day, until the new London government act goes into operation, the world's metropolis is managed pretty much on this fashion by nearly 500 public bodies, with a membership of 10,000 men, and with only the London County Council to hold it together-and even the County Council has been in existence only ten years.

Furthermore, it is rather doubtful if any one mortal man knows just where the County Council's authority stops. It extends over the actual little city of London for some purposes, while for other purposes the authority of the City Corporation stretches out into the County Coun-

And yet, in spite of all this astonishing confusion, it is generally acknowledged that this nameless and shapeless mass is one of the bestgoverned cities in the world.

Thought It an Enchanted Stone. To the department of minerals in the Natural History Museum at South Kensington have just been added some meteoric stones picked up in British Central Africa. At one of the villages natives were found by the scientific officer sent to make an investigation squatting around the stone, discussing the "miracle," as they called it. No one would touch or approach it, and it was still lying where it fell when the official arrived. He was told that the stone was enchanted, and each of the natives who sat at a distance round it gave a version of its probable origin and meaning. The largest of the fragments sent to London weighs twenty-nine ounces, but one of the stones which was picked up near Chirona's stitute through in the middle, and village weighs three pounds five ounces.

ter's life was saved by the courage and presence of mind of his wife. Many years ago, when quite a young woman, during a rebellion, Count Ito was hiding from his enemies, who, having tracked him to his house, sent a band of "soshis" to assassinate him. On hearing his enemies approaching, and trapped like a rat in its hole, the count drew his sword, and prepared to die; but the countess whispered: "Do not die; there is hope still," and, re-moving the "hibatchl," or fire box, and lifting up the mats and the planks be-neath, she induced her husband to conceal himself in the hollow space which exists under the floor of all Japanese houses. The murderers broke into the room just as the fire box had been re-placed, and demanded of the countess their victim. In vain they threatened and cruelly ill-treated her, dragging her about the room by her long black hair. But it was of no avail; they could not shake her resolute fidelity Thanks to her courage, Count Ito escaped, and has lived to give to his country a new constitution, and be-come one of the greatest statesmen of you would do under given circumstances, until you have tried and found out. A course of action which you know to be absolutely foreign to every instinct within you-when you sit down to reason about it, after the manner of the age-may be the very one you will follow when there is no time for reason. If anyone had told Mackworth that under fire he would be a coward, Mackworth would have knocked the informant down then and there, and have reflected upon the danger of his commission afterward.

Mackworth had been graduated, too, but, being a right-minded boy, he remembered that it was to Horatius that the molten image was made, and not to the fellow who built the bridge; so he very properly chose the cavalry, and heaven rewarded him by sending him straight to the frontier. And this was in the days when there was a frontier; when men endured discomforts that they sigh to know again, as none ever sighs for the luxuries of the past; when the Apache and the Chiricahua were in the land, and still struggling to be masters of it; and when a woman was truly a blessing of the rods, and might, even under disadvantages, have her pick of the department. But as there is no woman in all this, that is irrelevant.

Except after the manner of cadetswhich is not to be taken seriously-Mackworth had not let woman enter into his scheme of existence, His ideals were of another sort, just then. He was young and full of belief and things, and he thought that the way to win approval of the war department and the gratitude of his country was to avoid wire-pulling and to kill Indians. Therefore he rejoiced greatly when, after only six weeks of his thoroughly undesirable garrison, Chatta took the Chiricahuas on the warpath, and he was ordered out in the field. He had had his kit all rolled in a rubber poncho, and his mess chest pretty well stocked for the whole of the six weeks. He believed that a soldier should be always in readiness. He believed so many things then-though before long the bottom fell out of his universe, and he was filled with an enduring skepticism. And this was how it came

The first time he was under fire was when they were caught at rather a disadvantage among the pines of the Mogollons. The fight began about dusk and lasted well into the night. It may have been the result of some bugaboo stories of his babyhood, which had fostered an unconquerable fear of the dark: it may have been some lurking instinct, or it may have been just blue funk which overcome him. Anyway, he hid behind a bowlder, crouched and cowered there, trembling so that his carbine fell from his hands.

And Morley, his captain, found him so. "What are you doing?" he demanded. He was an Irishman and a hobbled their lean little ponies, the soldier of the old school, but he did not swear. Mackworth knew, from that, how bad it was. He scrambled or playing monte with cards of rainted up and babbled. "Get out of there!" the captain said. He would have used a better tone to one of the troop curs. Mackworth felt for his carbine and got out, staggering, but no longer afraid, only ashamed—sickeningly ashamed—beyond all endurance. He tried hard to get himself killed after that. He walked up and down in front of his men; giving orders and smoking cigarettes, and doing his best to serve as a target. The captain watched him and began to understand. His frown relaxed. "You'd better get unhe suggested; "you are dless risks." Mackworth taking needless risks." Mackworth looked at him with wide, blank eyes, and did not answer. His face was not only white now: it was gray and set. like the face of a corpse.

Morley's heart softened. "It's only a baby, anyway," he said to himself,

"and it is unhappy, out of all propor-And presently he went to him "Will you get under cover, he insisted.

'No," said the lieutenant, "I won't." The captain swore now, fierce oaths, and loud. "I order you back under cover, sir!"

Mackworth retired, with a look at his superior for which he should have been court-martialed. After that the scout went the way of most scouts, the intangible up mountain ranges, when you pulled your horse after you; down them, when he atop of you; across malpais and desert, from the level of the mesquite and the grease-wood to that of the pine and the manzanita. Chatta's

It is never well to be too sure what | band was, at the north, to the south, to the east and west; but when the troops got to the spot, after forced marching, there was nothing. It went on for two months, and alf the while Mackworth's despondency grew. The weight of years was upon his yet barely-squared shoulders, the troubles of a lifetime were written upon his face. And it was a pitiably young face, despite of the growth of yellow beard. He would not be comforted. He was silent and morose. He would not lift up his beautiful barytone in song, be the camp ever so duil. Only his captain knew why, of course -and he didn't tell. Neither did he attempt consolation. He thought the remorse healthful, and he knew, besides, in such case a man has to work out his own conclusions and salva-This is the way Mackworth eventually tried to work out his.

There came one day a runner from the hostiles—a dishfaced, straight-locked creature of sinews—who spoke through the White Mountain interpreter of the troops, and said that his chief was ready to go back to the reservation, but he must go upon his own terms. And the chief stipulated, moreover, that one white man-one alone and unguarded—should go to the hostile camp and discuss those terms. If a force attempted to come he would retreat with his braves and stay out all winter.

Morley made answer that he had no fear of the chief staying out all win-ter among the mountains when the agency was so comfortable, but that if he did the white man could stand it as long as he could. Moreover, he said that none of his soldiers had any intention whatever of walking into a death trap of the sort. Then Mackworth spoke up. "I have,"

"Get out," seld the captain, incred-"I mean what I say," said Mack-worth, " and I shall consider your permission to go the greatest and only favor you can do me. Something may be effected by it."
"Your death, that's all; and a little preliminary torture." The lieutenant shrugged his shoul-"Will you let me go?" he in-

"Not by a long sight."
"I wish to go, Capt. Morley."
Morley considered, and he decided that it might not be wise to refuse. There was no knowing what the setfaced boy might do. So they parleyed together for a time, then Mackworth mounted his horse and went. He did not expect to come back, and the officers and men did not expect to see him again. They watched him go off into the distance of the plain, toward the mountains, following the hostile, who swung on at the long, untiring dog-trot. After four hours they came to the mouth of a narrow canyon. The runner had given no sign of sound, and the fixed look had not gone from Mackworth's face. Well within the canyon the hostiles were in camp. They had or playing monte with cards of painted hide around a sowksin spread under a cedar tree. Four of them rode and slouched forward. There was a prolonged scrutiny upon both sides. The chief waited for Mackworth to begin, but the white man's instincts were good. He beat the sullenly-silent redskin at his own game, and in the end the chief spoke. The runner displayed for the first time his understanding, and interpreted. Mackworth made answer with decision, offsetting his own terms. The bucks scowled, and the chief began to argue. The white man, with the unflinching eye would not compromise. "Tell him," said Mackworth, "that this is my will. If he will not do this I will go pack to my soldiers, and we follow you and kill you all, man and woman." The face of the chief grew black, a grow! rose from the crowding bucks, and the watching squaws began to chatter in

The chief stepped suddenly forward and caught the bridle above the curb shanks. Not so much as an eyelash of the stern, white young face quivered, and the heart of the redman was filled with admiration. One movement of fear would have cost Mackworth his life then, but he was not afraid, not though he knew that torture might await him. He sat looking coolly down lowering, cruel faces. chief turned and spoke to his bucks, and there was a growl of protest; the squaws joined with a shrill little chorus scream. But the chief flung away the bridle with a force which "He do same you say. He go back to reservation today. He say you uskishee quick, said the interpreter. Mackworth turned deliberately and ukisheed with no show of haste and without a backward look.

He reported his success and went to his tent. His look of stolid wretched-ness was unchanged. Morley began to be nervous. He went to the tent himself and found the lieutenant writing a letter by lantern light. If was not a normal opportunity to take for that, so the captain, being filled with misgivings, trumped up an errand and sent him off on it. Then he looked at the letter. It was to Mackworth's mother. Morley did not read it, but he guessed the whole thing in a flash. He took up Mack-worth's carbine and slid it under the tent flags into the outer darkness. Also, he broke the Colt's, which had been thrown down upon the bedding and put the cartridges in his pocket Then he placed it in the holster, and going out, picked up the carbine and hid it in the brush. After the camp was all asleep and Morley snoring loudly across the tent, Mackworth groped under his pillow and brought out the revolver. He cock ed and waited a moment; then he placed the barrel well in his mouth and pulled the trigger once-and then

The Neighborhood Dog.

Following the boys on the heights of Ashland you will always see a mongrel dog of a dirty no color, but wearing a beautiful silver collar. The boys cannot remember just when they began to notice the dog ever at their heels. He was neither big nor little, light nor dark, smooth nor curiy, but just betwixt and between in ail things but his disposition, which was

When the stranger first joined them he was driven off with many a kick, cuff and cross word; but soon made himself so useful in finding lost balls and carrying packages that the boys grew fond of him, and were ready to quarrel for the privilege of taking him home for dinner and the night. But "Tramp" was so impartial there could be no quarrels. If the boys forgot whom he stayed with last, he never aid, but went frisking home with a different boy each night.

The boys had another follower, little "Curly" wilson, aged 5, who would have been a nuisance but for Tramp, who kept as good watch over him as the stray balls and missing hats, shoes and coats.

Twice Tramp just escaped the poundman's wagon, and it was then the boys clubbed their pocket-money and bought a leather collar and a license for him, and gave him his name of Tramp. During school hours Tramp played with Curly, or snoozed by the gate of some boy, or chased cats; but moon and 4 o'clock found him waiting at the steps where the boys left the street car coming from school.

They took him to the lake for a swim on Saturdays, or when they were too busy Tramp went by himself. Now this little lake, although lovely to look at, had its dangers, like all lakes, and one that most lakes have not. It is an artificial lake, make by walking in an arm of the bay, and has its tides like half around the lake lies a smooth, broad, slippery belt of deep mud.

Tramp knew enough to keep off it, but little Curly was not so wise. So one Saturday when the boys were very busy with plans for an afternoon outing, they sent Tramp to bath alone. Unseen to them, Curly followed him. When they reached the lake the tide was just beginning to creep in, and Tramp waited for deeper water. The two friends raced about the asphalt boulevard for a while, then Curly ven-tured on the sand; and then, no boys being near, and tempted by the shining mud, he took off his shoes and stocking and stepped out on it.

Oh, how good and cool it felt to his little bare toes! Tramp tried to coax ed at its beginning." Curly went one step too far, sank to his ankles and stuck fast! Poor Tramp He couldn't get him out, and he hated to leave him. But help must be had So seizing Curly's little wet hat, he dashed off up the hill to the boys. They saw him coming far off, and wondered what treasure he was bringing them. Some guessed rat, some duck, some rabbit; but when he dropped the little hat before them, and flew madly back, the boys all cried: "Poor Curly's drowned!" and rushed after.

Now we know he wasn't drowned, the boil, take the teakettle off the nor in very much danger yet, although stove, remove the lid, stand the pot in the boys reached the lake, a very scared, uncomfortable little boy. It was no easy matter to get him out, for the boys sank so deep in the mud. They each tried, and they tried together, but all to no purpose, and the water was slowly rising; they had finally to go out in a boat from the other side, and then by hard pulling they got him out.

For days his feet and legs were so bruised and lame he could get into no mischief. Tramp was the hero of the hour, and Curly's mother gave him the fine silver collar.-Youth's Companion.

The Marriage Question.

Says Harper's Bazar: Why men do not marry has been a subject agitating many minds since the Christian world grew away from Oriental traditions and marriages ceased to be arranged by parental authority.

A statistician has told us that the geographical distance was to be held accountable. He says the trouble is widespread, and that in the United States there are 2,200,000 more unmarried men over twenty than there are unmarried women; or, in other words, that there are 5,427,670 bachelors, and only 3,224,494 spinsters who might be had for the asking. Women in Canada and England are now considering ways and means of educating women, not always as wives, but always as helpers to pioneers. Thus wives, sis-ters, and maids are all to come in for a training, so as to take their places side by side with the pioneers of a new country. But, helpful as this latter suggestion may be, it does not solve the marriage question, for the pioneer sister who stands dutifully by her brother is in as much danger of be-ing left an old maid as those who remain at home. All this, however, does not settle the question. But then why should men and women marry oftener than they do? They are trained from infancy to distrust each other. The wonder is that they marry at all, and without going to pieces in every instance. There is only one thing to be done—to bring up boys and girls to understand each other, to be mutually considerate, trustful, and loyal. Sometimes it seems as though a great war of the sexes was being waged in the world, where peace and harmony ought to prevail. To bring about that peace work must begin in our nurseries and our playgrounds, our young mothers and our fathers helping in the task. In no family, moreover, ought men and women be allowed to criticise each other as men and women.

Traveling Gowns.

So many brides are married in their traveling gowns now-or their so-called traveling gowns, for they, as a rule, find it necessary to put on a simpler gown to take a journey than the one that is worn during the ceremonythat it is necessary to give some spe-cial direction for this style of costume. Silk traveling gowns-that is, so-called traveling gowns—are very attractive made in the light shades, particularly in the silvery gray or in the white. They are made after the fashion of the reception gowns and trimmed elaborately with lace. A very graceful gown of this description, made of bluegray silk with a soft satin finish, was worn the other day by a young widow Half-way down the skirt was a deep band of guipure lace. It was put on so that it went across the front and side breadths half-way between belt and the hem of the skirt. This lace gradually shaped itself down the back of the skirt until it came nearly to the hem. The same idea was re-peated on the waist in another band of guipure, and there was a belt, with ends, made of the lace. This was very odd, because the lace fitted tightly over the ribbon around the waist, and then the ends were tied in front. With this costume was worn a white lace bonnet or toque trimmed with white ostrich tips and rhinestone ornament. On the same lines a white silk gown is being made; but the lace, instead of coming around the skirt, is put on in large pieces of applique, and is of the heavy guipure—a dead white, not a cream color—and there is a very nar-row belt, so that the gown looks almost like a princesse.

Danger in Perfunces.

Many women are a great deal too fond of strong scents for the coinfort of their friends and acquaintances, and also for their own safety. It is not half widely .weigh known that strong per tumes are injurious to the sense of amell, and that by their frequent use the secretory glands of the throat and nose are overtaxed and weakened. One day the lover of strong scents notices that the hearing is less acute than uswal, and that the sense of smell is de fective. This state of things is put down to a cold, and not much importance is attached to it. After a time the whole head is affected, and throat and lung complications follow, likely to end in chronic illness. Smelling salts are a fertile source of deafness, and they, as well as all other strong and pungent odors which act on the secretory processes, should be avoided as much as possible.

Women Forget to Idle.

'A curious fact about the nervous hurry and activity of American women is that their occupation is so constant that leisure is beginning to be a condition which they do not know how the ocean. When the tide is out, about to meet. The suggestion (which we believe is Stevenson's) that "when you have found a day to be idle, be idle for the day," is one they cannot fol-low. A couple of hours or an afternoon wholly disengaged coming suddenly to the busy woman are a positive embarassment. She does not seem know what to do with them. It is this being unable ever to "let up" that brings in the end nervous prostration. A prominent society leader of New York was asked once how she managed to get through with so many social engagements as she did. "Because," replied, "I stop when I begin to feel tired. I give up any engagement at the eleventh hour, unless it be a dinner one, if I discover that I am tir-

Facts About Palms.

A new wrinkle which a florist of this city indorses is that the leaves of palms should be washed, not with pure water, but with milk and water, which has a wonderful way of preserving them and preventing the appearance of brown spots, which are so disfiguring. Another suggestion about palms is that a little cold coffee poured over the earth at the roots occasionally will found beneficial. Coffee is a fertilizer and is used a great deal by

A DAY IN THE VATICAN GARDENS [St. ouis Globe-Democrat.]

During the stay of the Olympia in the Mediterranean a couple of St. Louis from. girls happened to be in Rome. In their party was a pretty Ohio girl, and the three young Americans were quite the rage with the Dewey men who came to the Holy City. Quite as popular with them was the kind priest of the Olympia, who, as one of the girls expressed it, was "as much up for fun" as any of the gallant and handsome officers whom they met. One day the young ladies and their escorts went to inspect the gardens of the Vatican. The holy father is very fond of pink geraniums, and there is in the garden an immense parterre of every known variety of his favorite flower. Naturally girls coveted just one tiny flower of the many thousands, out everywhere they turned stood the tall Roman guard, who would, no doubt, have taken pleasure to thrust them into the catacomos, or wherever they thrust those guilty of the crime of stealing in the Eternal

"If I could only have one of them," the Ohio girl said, but the two St. Louis girls grew cold at the suggestion and implored her to keep still. "There is your shoe untied again," exclaimed Father Raney, who was walking with the Buckeye, and then in a low aside, "Can't you take a hint?" She could not only take a hint, but

DUXHURST HOME

Lady Henry Somerset Now Overseer in Person.

The Founder of the Great Home for the Cure of Drunken Women. Which She Has Established at Duxhurst, Will Live There Herself-Has Fully Withdrawn From the Fashionable World.

Canada is always interested in everything Lady Henry Somerset does. It heard she had withdrawn from the fashionable world to found her colony for inebriate women at Duxhurst and the talk is that she still maintains her interest in the work and is devoting most of her time to it.

She has rented her sumptuous home Reigate Priory, and is living at the Industrial Farm Colony, performing the duties of general overseer in per-The farm was organized in 1895 for the purpose of arresting the alarming increase of inebriety among English women, and after careful study of the subject founded on lines believed to be sound and scientific. That these were correct the results of the experiments have so far amply demonstrated. The Farm House consists of a colony village built on the slopes of the hills of Surrey, a breezy upland farm overlooking beautiful fields that stretch away for miles on either side.

Here the little thatched cottages. bright and smiling nestle as though they had been built for many a year, forming a triangle round the green. The hospital stands on one side, opposite this the church, and in another meadow the long building called "The Children's Nest" faces the village. Far up the road in its own grounds is the Manor House, which has been opened for the reception of patients able to pay a larger fee.

The most important feature of the scheme is the recognition of the individual in the patient. Each cottage has six occupants in charge of a nurse sister. Realizing that this method of distribution was more efficacious than the housing of either greater numbers it was adopted. A greater portion of the success of the farm has been attributed to this arrangement where normal home life can be maintained and where each individual feels herself of importance in her own circle.

The cottages are simply furnished with just such utensils as every self respecting laborer ought to have at home, clean, dainty, and pretty and the women take immense pride in what they call "our little homes." In founding the institution the aim was to cure the patients of a disease, for the management considered habitual drunkenness as a disease.

Recognizing that physical health and mental sanity are necessary antecedent conditions for moral and spiritual upbuilding of those who have been thus stricken down and for this, occupation through congenial work was the only antidote. This not only physically benefits but affords food for reflection and thought, and in its process is at once encourgging and interesting. The management believed in work and hard work, but think that it should be varied and as far as possible in the open air.

Nothing better can be found than in wholesome outdoor work on the lawns among the flower beds, in the vegetable garden and in the farming houses. The manner in which women who have entered in the institution as utter wrecks are built up, and the way in which they soon regain their youth and cheerful spirits proved this theory correct. From this it will be seen that the outdoor work has many features, but this is not all that is accomplished by the inmates. The laundry work of the community and the necessary sewing are naturally done, but they are considered more as domestic duties than occupations. Consequently several industries were established as a complement to the out-door work. Four looms have been set up, and from the sale of goods manufactured considerably more than the original expense has been realized. The articles woven are fancy aprons, after Swedish patterns, linen and woolen various kinds of warm underclothing are made to order. Besides these two industries, all kinds of fine needle work, both plain and fancy, is done by those patients who are unable to undertake outdoor work. One of the drawbacks to a stated output is the continuous change of the inmates and the lack at times of skilled labor, but the progress made in these industries has dress materials. A knitting machine is also in operation, and upon this been most gratifying. There is another branch at Duxhurst which has been largely instrumental in the success of the institution, and that is the department known as "The Bird's Nest." This is where the children live; one of the rules of the institution is the admission of children under 14 months, when it is desirable to keep them with their mothers. So Duxburst means to many women not only a place where they learned to overcome their own weakness, but also a spot where they read anew or perhaps for the first time, the lesson of motherhood. An incbriate's baby is generally a weakly baby, but as the healthy life and balmy air of Duxhurst restores a mother's physical and mental balance, so her baby's health improves. The object of this is to show that a real interest is taken in mothers and children alike: the patients themselves are concerned in establishing the relations of family life in each little home, and as this spirit acts and reacts throughout the whole colony, the presence of the children is an influence good, pure and lasting. There are two sides to the "Bird's The first has been touched Nest." upon, the second is this: The "Bird's Nest is open from May until September as a holiday home for the children from the slums of London. There may not appear to be much connection between a holiday home for children and a colony of inebriate women, but the connection is a very real one.

When the colony was founded it was desired to make the village as much like an ordinary village as possible, and to fill the lives of the women with interest. The children coming and going, and playing around, helps to dissipate the idea of institutional or penal life, and the brightness brought by their presence is an added interest to the women's lives. There is another object. There is something peculiarly fitting in the fact that such a cottage should form part of an inebriate home, for children are the greatest sufferers from the curse of drink, and it seems to the management to be only fair that the children should have some share in the life that is meant to give back the health and happiness that have been destroyed by this curse.

The colony is only organized upon a small scale, consequently when forming an opinion upon the work accomplished the percentage must be entirely taken into consideration. The figures are taken from the report made by Dr. A. R. Walters, the medical officer, in November, 1898, the report for the present year not having been completed.

It is divided into three parts-First, the cases which were reported doing well a year ago; second, the new cases more recently discharged; third, the results of the two combined together. Taking the first: In the previous year's report there were sixty-four cases, of which thirty-four were successful. Of these thirty-four, twenty-five are still abstainers, six have failed, one is doubtful and two have died. In the second, since the previous report forty-eight cases were discharged. Of these thirty were successful, nine failed, five were removed by friends, two were discharged by the medical officer as unfit for treatment, one was sent to an asylum and one absconded.

Combining the two returns it will be seen that altogether there were. 112 cases, of which fifty-five were successful, twenty-five failed after the first year, twelve were removed by friends, six were removed by the medical officers as unfit for treatment, five absconded, three were sent away as incorrigible, three died, two were insane and one doubtful.

Of the patients, eighty-four were married women, twenty-eight were single, forty-three had inebriate family history, eight had insanity in the family, eleven had ancestors who died of paralysis, sixty-five were pe riodic drunkards, seven were secret drunkards, fifty drank spirits alone, twenty-one drank beer alone, twelve beer and spirits, one beer and wine, twenty drank anything alcoholic, two spirits of opium and two opium.

When stating the cause of their fall thirty-four gave depressive nervous work or trouble, twenty-two companionship, eight overwork and six cruelty. The percentage, taking every case attempted, 112 with 55 cures, shows almost 50 per cent. By taking out the cases which for some reason or other did not stay the prescribed time there are eighty-three, with fifty-five cures, making sixty-seven per cent. It is hardly necessary to comment upon these figures for they prove conclusively that inebriety in women is not a hopeless incurable evil. In reckoning this percentage, taking into consideration the insane, the dving, those unfit for treatment and those who stayed less than twelve months, the result is good, but the larger percentage only proves that the importance of the patients remaining over a year cannot be over emphasized.

This is the period the management desire the patients to remain and it is upon this that they base their claims. In many ways the Duxhurst work seems to be and is most sad: yet, in its surroundings, its possibilities and assured results it is most encouraging. The colony, which is under the direct supervision of Lady Somerset, has the following Advisory Board and officers: The Bishop of Rochester, the Bishop of Durham, the Bishop of Wakefield, the Bishop of Chichester, the Earl of Stamford. Lord Kinnard, Evan Spicer, A. F. Hills, R. Barclay and Cecil Harris. The officers are: President, Lady Somerset; treasurer, Mrs. Eva MacLaren: chapiein, Rev. L. A. Hall: Sister Lleanor, superintendent, medical officer, Dr. A. Walters, and secretary, Miss England. The patrons of the Children's Cottage are Canon Wilberforce, Rev. M. C. Pearse, the Countess of Dudley, Lady Arthur Butler. the Duchess of Bedford, the Duchess of St. Albans, Lady Katherine So-merset and Countess Somers.

The latest estimate of the population of England and Wales is 31,000,000, the women being in a majority of 960,000.

A Wonderful Empire-An Introduction to the Study of the Order Algae, With Illustrations That Will Make It Clear-What a Limited Power Microscope Will Reveal.

In this modern age of travel, when railroads girdle the globe with their iron arms and send their panting engines like flery meteors plunging and shricking to the uttermost confines of the earth, a journey is but a common excitement-an almost everyday event-and the results (so far as scenery goes) are all practically the same. How great then will be the pleasure of a journey that promises an entire and total change, vastly different in every way to anything hitherto seena trip to a world so marvelously beautiful-so diverse in its material-so intricately astounding in all its details that the mind of the beholder is charmed and hewildered, but which is generally left open only to the scientist and savant. and sealed to the common people by a ponderous wealth of scientific terms and phraseology which present an unsurmountable barrier to their entrance.

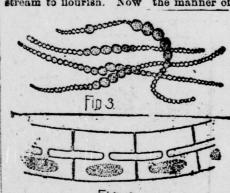

To what a very small number of the laity, says a well-known scientific correspondent, is it known that just such a world as described is ready of access to the possessor of a microscope of even limited powers, in places hitherto undreamed of-every pend or pool, every river or lake-even the hoofmarks left by cattle on marshy soil is teeming with life which to our unaided eye remains forever invisible; every blade of grass or flower, every bush or tree contains in itself a story so intensely interesting and when looked for showing structure so peautiful that no work of man can for one moment be compared without the fact being forever impressed upon the beholder of the greatness of the work 'which the Creator declared was 'good.' '

Who amongst us has not observed that as this season of the year advances almost every stream and river which we find in the country is filled up with a matted green scum extending as far as the eye can reach in either directioneven the semi-stagnant pools are themselves filled to a considerable depth, and if we were to take up some of this same clouds in the water and examine it under the microscope we should be amazed at its beauty and complexity of structure, for that same green "weed" is endowed with just as much life as you are, and just as there are amongst us the marrying and giving in marriage so with this scum which we are now about to examine in detail, and which is known to scientists as the order of Algae.

Direct your attention to the object and you will see (Fig. 1) that this same Algae which in the mass possesses rather a repulsive appearance, under magnification of the lens is endowed with a beauty undreamed of-a fine, delicate green web. This particular specimen under our observation is called Spirogyra, and is easily recognized by the beautiful spiral bands of green in the interior of each cell. It is found generally just under the surface of the water, and like all the Algae, prefers a pond or slow moving stream to flourish. Now the manner of r production is very remarkable in this species, and is as follows: Each of two filaments which happen to lie parallel to each other begin at the same time to shoot out small protuberances each toward the other, and continue until they meet, when they fuse into each other and form a tube just like the steps in a ladder, the original filaments forming the sides (Fig. 2). Then the green contents of one of the original tubes falls away from the sides and passes over through the tube into the opposite cell and mingles with it, from which a spore is formed (this is known as conjugation). When ripened the spores burst out from the cell and swim off by a very peculiar method, and bud out by self division, forming into flaments or threads like the parent.

The growth of the Algae is exceedingly rapid, and their matted condition is principally due to this cause. They have no roots-but often fasten themselves to twigs, etc., in the water.

Further over towards the side at A. Fig. 1, you can see a different species of Algae-which is known as Vanchirea-it forms a damp green mat on mud and shallows and feels a little coarser to the touch than Spiregyra-in it the flaments are very long, with few separate branches, and you will notice that the chlorophyll (which is the name given to the green cell contents) is spread all over the entire wall and flows out in irregular splotches when the filament is broken or bruised. In this species the spores are formed in a different way. A club-like prominence is formed at the free ends of the thread. then a thin partition grows across what may be called the neck of the club. When the spores are ripe, which is known by the centents assuming a dark appearance, the club bursts and the spore is released, swimming off by the aid of rapidly vibrating thread or bair-like protuberances known as cilia. Here is another species called the Ana-

cells are round and form in long chains. But we could go un indefinitely with the varying forms, all teeming with beauty and grace, each one living out its own life cycle in its own obscure and almost unknown way. Besides the Algae which we have been examining we may notice from time to time a peculiar-looking object dart into our field of view, swim around a little with an absurd spasmodic motion and then dart out again-evident ly propelling himself by means of a sort of caw-like foot from the middle of the abdomen—allow me to introduce the gentleman as Mr. Daphnia Pulex—a very common so-called water-flea and a portrait of whom appears in Fig. 4 and whose vivacious animal life soon becomes animal death when swallowed by the many people who use water as a thirst alleviator. Space does not permit of going now into further details regarding the myriad forms of animal and vegetable life by which we are surrounded-but to the observer with even the most limited of means-to the one who is equipped only with the pocket lens of moderate power. the true understanding of these lines is forced upon him:

"These are Thy glorious works, parent of good, Almighty: Thine this universal frame Thus wondrous fair."

THE NEW EDINBURGH.

Characteristics of the Modern City Whose Last Minstrel Really Passed Away in Sir Walter Scott.

Scott was in a peculiar sense the last of the minstrels, the inheritor of all the traditions of mediaeval and Jacobite Edinburgh, the champion of a state of society which was soon to pass away forever. He has ensbrined these traditions and drawn an immortal picture of this state in "Marmion," "Tales of a Grandfather" and a number of the Waverley rare—in all countries. With murder novels, among which, perhaps, the "Heart of Midlothian" is most deeply imbued with the spirit of old Edinburgh. It is only a piece of justice-though one too seldom rendered to poets-that his lofty monument should stand in the very center of his native place locking across what was the Nor' Loch to the frowning castle and the towering "lands" of the Old Town. As late as Scott's day Edinburgh remained for the most part in the state where the Stuarts had left it, confined within the narrow limits of the ancient city and the borough of Canongate, its one main thoroughfare, the High street, running down along the crest of the ridge from the castle to the low ground about Holyrood. As population increased extension was sought by elevation rather ish beggar is not impossible, perhaps; than expansion. "Houses sprang up, story after story, neighbor mounting on few men that can say they have seen neighbor's shoulder, until the population that spectacle. slept 14 or 15 deep in a vertical direc- staged tion." Within these monstrous piles, re- forms, but, so far as I know, no dracalling even to-day the architecture of matist has done him the injustice to some Doresque dream city, much of the stage him as a beggar. Whenever a best blood of Scotland found for a time a local habitation, and houses that are now packed from cellar to garret with the packed from cellar to garret with the dregs of the proletariat were the homes and amply. The Jews make no noise of wealth, wit and beauty.

all this has altered. The New Town, beginning on the ridge across the valley from the castle, has crept steadily down the windy slope to the firth, and the southern suburbs have pushed out their front ranks to the foot of Arthur's Seat and the Braid hill. And the new town is as modern as the old is antique. Wide, clean streets, open squares and comfortable, well-tuilt houses give evidence of the ease and prosperity of the city. Yet the old town is not destroyed; broad lanes have been driven through is darkest quarters, the tallest "Lands" are gone, the Tolbooth has been torn down, but the bulk of the grim old town remains, a frowning memorial of the past. No sight in Europe is more impressive to a stranger's eyes than the view from merry, busy Princess street across the the old town hang like a precipice over Hall, London, Ont. Waverly bridge. Nowhere in England at least, do past and present meet in such Dungas street, London. Ont. sharp contrast.

With all her ease and wealth to-day. Edinburgh is not a great commercial or manufacturing city. Her chief products are connected with the printing and publishing of books—a very proper industry for a town that has been called the modern Athens. The smoke that floats like a flag athwart her windy skies rises from kindly hearthstones, not from the belching factory stack. Proud of their university, their law courts, their schools of art and centers of literary activity, the inhabitants of Edinburgh look down with gentle scorn on the work-a-day folk of Glasgow or Dundee. And they have reason for their pride.

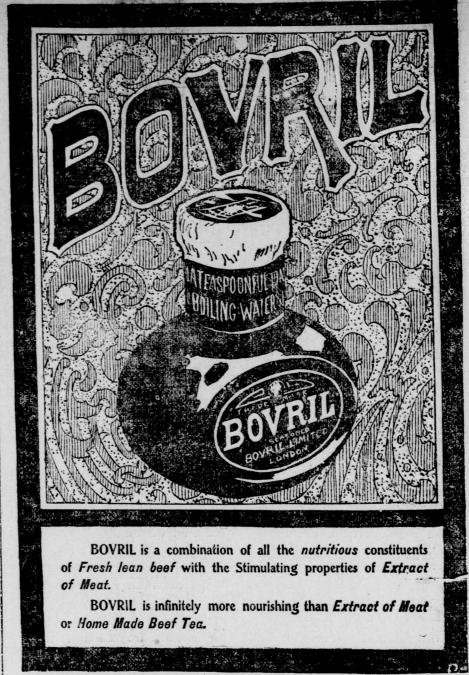

Natural situation has combined with history and tradition to make Edinburgh unique among the cities of the old world. "What the tour of Europe was necessary to see elsewhere," says one of her artist sons. "I find congregated in this one city. Here are alike the beauties of Prague and Salzburg; here are the romantic sites of Orvieto and Tivoli; here is all the magnificence of the admired Lays of Genoa and Naples. Here, indeed, to the poetic fancy may be found realized the Roman capitol and the Grecian Acropolis." Something must be allowed to the poetic fancy of an artist returned from foreign lands to his dear home, but one need not be born a Scot to feel a thrill of wonder and delight as one looks down at sunset from the crest of Arthur's Seat across the old town and the new to the Firth of Forth and the shores of Fife. Then, indeed, in the words of her latest poet:

"There falls on the gray old city An influence luminous and serene-

MARK TWAIN ON THE JEWS. The Jew is not a disturber of the peace of any country. Even his enemies will concede that. He is not a loafer; he is not a sot; he is not noisy; he is not a brawler nor a rioter; he is not quarrelsome. In the statistics of and other crimes of violence he has but little to do; he is a stranger to the hangman. In the police court's daily long roll of "assaults" and "drunk and disorderlies" his name seldom appears. That the Jewish home is home in the truest sense is a fact no one will dispute. The family is knitted together by the strongest affections; its members show each other every due respect; and reverence for the elders is an inviolate law of the house. The Jew is not a burden on the charities of the state nor of the city; these could cease from their functions without affecting him. When he is well enough he works; when he is incapacitated his own people take care of him. And not in a poor and stingy way, but with a fine and large benevolence. His race is entitled to be called the most benev The Jew in many uncomplimentary

His Digestion Recame Impaired and His Case Was Locked Upon as Hopeless-Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restored Him When Other Medicines Failed.

[From the Telegraph, Welland, Ont.] Among the residents of Port Robinson, there are few better known than Mr. Samuel Richards, who has resided in that vicinity for some twenty-seven years. Mr. Richards came to Canada from Illinois, and is one of the veterans of the American civil war, having been a member of the Seventh Illinois Regiment. Mr. Richards is also one of the vast army who bear willing and cheerful testimony to the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Lancashire, of course, is the home of the industry, and in order to meet the requirements of the government the factories there have lately been working very hard. Some fifteen employed recently in manufacturing the clothes, which are packed and transported by fatigue parties of soldiers to the various destinations. As regards clothes, the wisdom of decentrailizing stores has been abundantly proved during the progress of the present scheme of mobilization. Instead of the delay and confusion which used to ensue when the uniforms were dispatched from the London center to a number of points far and near, we now have a well-organized system under which the goods are sent to the various provincial centers, there to be redistributed. Though strong and unshrinkable, the material is much more flexible than the customary cloth, and enables the man to use his weapons to greater advantage. Some army experts are strongly in favor of a more extensive use of khaki for the purpose of campaigning, and especially of a variety called "miller-ain drill." Officers stationed in India have borne testimony to the rain-repelling properties of this fabric, which makes it particularly adapted for use as an overcoat. The same "drill" also suited for the construction of army tents, because the material does not absorb moisture, besides which. after rain, the tents are not so heavy to move about-a very important matter to troops when campaigning. Perhaps the chief difficulty about khaki is the confusion which exists as to the spelling of the word, "kharki" vored by some authorities, and "kharkee" by others. The only objection from the soldier's point of view is that the wearer is liable to be called names. We have all heard of such regimental nicknames as "Strawpoots," "Cherubims," Nanny Goats "Slashers." "Sankey's Horse." London, Oct. 28 .- Lord Rosebery, speaking at a private dinner of politicians, referred to the war and to the heavy loss of life, saying that they had to deplore the death of Gen. Referring to Majuba Hill, Lord was determined by the belief that the power of Great Britain was so great that she could afford to do things other nations could not afford to without risk. The Boers regarded Mr. Gladstone's magnanimity as a proof of weakness, upon which they could encroach. Dwelling upon the un-friendliness of the foreign press and foreign public opinion, Lord Rose-bery said: "This is no little war. NO INTERVENTION.

An authoritative statement was is-sued in Paris on Friday formally denyng the rumors of intended Franco-Russian intervention in the Transvaal war, and declaring that France has no ground and no desire for any such intervention at present, and that Russia is likely placed in the same position, adding that Germany is the only power directly concerned in the matter. The parliamentary bye-election for the Bow and Bromley division of Tower Hamlets, London, held yesterday to replace the Hon. Lionel R. Healey (Conservative), resulted in a victory for the government candidate by 4,328 votes, against 2,134 votes for the Liberal and Radical opponent. The Conservative majority was practically twice that secured at the election of Mr. Healey. The constituency, which is mainly of the working class, plumped for Mr. Chamberlain and war.

Signor Riccardo Ricci is a basso profundo, and sings with great dramatic expression. He is a consummate artist, and was received with cordial warmth by the large audience from his first appearance on the stage. Of his numbers, given below, not one was rendered inadequately. His command of two styles was shown in Abt's pensive, "Still Is the Night," and, by way of martial contrast, the superb and stirring "Armorer's Song." Mr. and Mrs. Adam Beck were in Toronto last week, and were present at the exquisite performance of "Faust" by the Grau Opera Company on Saturday afternoon.

And most truly worth hearing was the opera that afternoon. Plancon, as Mephistopheles, was wonderful. His awful laugh made one shiver, and his grand figure in its flaming garb dominated the play. Though I heard "Faust" sung in the Grand Opera House in Paris, Saturday's was a more enjoyable performance to me. The Brocken scene-which, while catering to a depraved love of the weirdly supernatural, spoils the sequence of the storywas omitted, also the ballets, which detract from the dignity. Mademoiselle Suzanne Adams, a really lovely American girl, who took the part of Marguerite, has an exquisitely fresh and clear voice of peculiar sweetness.

The same opera company gave a performance of "Carmen" in Montreal while I was there, and I can truly say that Calve in "Carmen," and Sarah Bernhardt in "La Tosca," can never, never be surpassed nor approached in this world. "I will never forget that woman," I heard a well-known man say as he came out of the theater in Montreal.

OVER THE BORDER.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s review says: Fears and not facts made a war in South Africa seem a menace to prosperity here, and a week of conflict has cleared away the fear. The money markets have grown less embarrassing; stocks have gradually advanced; industries are still supported by a volume of demand for which no precedent can be found, and payments through the principal clearing houses for the past week have been 36.6 per cent larger than last year, and 57.3 per cent larger than in 1892. The heaviest transaction in steel rails ever made so early covers 75,000 tons for next year's delivery, or two-thirds the entire annual capacity of the works. Shipments of boots and shoes in four weeks of October have been 380,938 cases—a slight decrease. Buying of wool has been heavy at Boston—10,071,200 lbs for the week, and at three chief markets 13,579,837 lbs, making 42,928,289 lbs in four weeks, against 36,394,090 lbs in 1297, when the last great speculation was on foot. The London Mail rises to remark that Kruger has been the political tarantula of South Africa. It does seem as if nothing short of a thorough Scotching will settle him.

The Canadian Gazette of London (England), after due investigation of the outlook in Canada, arrives at the conclusion that "we may confidently look forward to a continuance of the prosperity which has accompanied the Laurier regime."

President McKinley having asserted that the United States has "acquired" the Philippines, the Kansas City Times very appropriately suggests that the 70,000 soldiers and the 35 warships now on or around the islands must be merely surveying parties to locate the exact boundary lines!

Interest in the war has temperarily shifted to the western border of the Transvaal and Orange Free State. The wires are cut, and the news from that region is rather contradictory, but when communication is opened up it will probably be found that deeds of heroism have been performed at Mafeking and Kimberley rivaling the events at Dundee and Glencoe.

Young Cornelius Vanderbilt, who should have been heir to $70,000,000, was cut off with a paltry million and a half because he married against his Cather's wishes. His younger brother, Alfred gets the bulk of the estate, but has given $6,000,000 to Cornelius, so that the latter may keep the wolf from the door. Still it isn't every man who would sacrifice over sixty million dollars on the marriage altar.

The Toronto Mail says that the proposition to concede Dyea and Skaguay to the United States in return for the concession of Pyramid Harbor to Canada would be yielding too much to the Americans. The American newspapers declare that the United States Government would not listen to such a proposition, as it would mean a surrender of American territory to Canada. The Mail and most of the American newspapers display a spirit that would make settlement impossible.

Perhaps the most crestfallen man in Canada is Col. Sam Hughes. He was the bigots and fanatics to raise the cry period cock-sure of a place in the Canadian activity contingent for South Africa, and on Thursday his native town of Lindsay gave him a grand send-off. The town ers of any particular nation or race to council presented him with a purse of gold and an address, and thousands escorted him to the train. When he reached Ottawa he found that he was not ked inappointed to the contingent at all, owm proing to General Hutton's opposition. The colonel is now wondering how he can summon up enough nerve to return home.

(Cheers.) You have spoken in your address of the action of the Government in sending a contingent to South Africa. The Government has done nothing but its duty in that respect. The war now going on in South Africa is a war which, if it appeals to men, ought to In both cases, the policy of the Government was sustained.

(Cheers.) Let me say one word more. When our boys have done their duty, when the rule of the Queen has been established throughout the length and breadth of South Africa, and when the wounds caused by the war have to be healed, perhaps it may become the duty of Canada to assist in the healing process by showing the example of a population who, having had granted to them equal rights, have become a united and happy people."

What Others Say.

The Holes of Glory.

[Toronto Telegram.] There is no use worrying about Brittain's forces in Natal being in a tight hole, because just such tight holes have the doorways to the most glorous victories in British history.

Lipton's Namesakes. [Cleveland Plaindealer.]

It is claimed that some American mothers have named babies after Sir Thomas Lipton. Can it be that these little ones were born to be beaten? At least it would be well for them to lie low when a spanking breeze springs up.

Small, But .

[Winnipeg Tribune.] The British army, though small in numbers, is the most experienced army in Europe. It is continually doing all kinds of fighting all over the world. And whether it is on the open plain of the Soudan, or in the Burmese jungle, or on the rocky hills of the yeldt, they seem to do it equally well. army has the chance to pick up so many practical "wrinkles."

The Girls We Want.

[Stratford Beacon.] Cirls are needed that know how to cook a beefsteak for father as well as they know how to cook their young man's goose; that can play as good music with the broom handle as they can with the violin, and can make as good a rag mat for the kitchen as they can a smoking cap for a bazar. In short, we want girls that know as much about poultry as poetry, and are equally at home in the kitchen and the

Tommy Atkins. [Chicago Tribune.]

The regular soldier of the British army owes his rickname of "Tommy Atkir,s" to a pure accident. Years ago Sir Garnet Wolseley, now commanderin-chief of the armies of Great Britain published a little volume called "The Soldier's Pocket Book for Field Service." In illustrating the manner of properly filling out field reports he hapenned to use the name "Thomas Atkins." "The Pocket Book" is the English soldier's military bible and the name "Tommy Atkins" was at once adopted as his proper nickname. Later Thomas was abbreviated to "Tommy and the accidental name passed down into history.

Loyalty and Its Counterfeit.

[Catholic Register.] We do not like the wretched word with its strong flavor of cant and bigotry; but whatever meaning it may carry among a free people it can certainly be applied to those only who forget what we owe as a people to our free institutions. Sir Charles Tupper, as stage manager of the disloyal chorus (using the word in the sense to which we have restricted it), is doubly dis-loyal to Canada, because he must have known that he was giving the signal to French-Canadian treason, which they indeed have done with a vengeance. The South African war raises too large a question for the hatseize hold of.

THE SARDINIAN. The Allan Liner Sardinian, which is to carry the troops to South Africa, presented a busy scene today. Many changes have been made in the vessel. Amidship, on the main deck, there are now ten stalls, which will hold the horses to be used by the mounted officers of the command. A trifle astern of midships has been erected a good-sized galley and bakeshop. This is in addition to the regular galley which is now on the ship. Below the decks the bunks for the men are being fitted up amidship. They are built in tiers, one bed above the other. Forward on the first below the main deck is the mess room, this being fitted up with long tables and benches. The officers will occupy the saloon and the accompanying state rooms, which, on the Sardinian, are situated in the stern of the vessel.

Regarding the Common School Fund-The Award.

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 28.—The following official statement is given out as to the result of the arbitration regarding the common school fund. A few days ago the arbitrators-Sir Napoleon Cassault, Sir John Boyd, and Mr. Justice Burbidge-made their decision, under which Ontario is declared liable for a sum of $280,160 in respect of school lands remaining in her possession at confederation. Deductions are made for management and improvement fund, etc., which reduce the net in-debtedness of the province under the award to $188,760. This is the total to be paid by Ontario to the Dominion in trust for Ontario and Quebec, the interest as income at 5 per cent per an-Quebec, according to relative numbers of population of the said provinces respectively, as such numbers shall from time to time be ascertained by the census next before taken in each of the said provinces respectively. The Do-minion now divides the income of the common school fund (to which the above $188,760, or as finally adjusted, this will be added) between Ontario and Quebec. according to the census of 1891, as follows: Quebec, $1,488,535; Ontario, $2,114,221. The result, therefore, on the foregoing statement will be that of the above amount Ontario will receive interest by way of income approximately on $110,000, and Quebec income approximately on $78,000, such sum of $78,000 being the full extent of the award against Ontario.

NAMES OF MONTHS

All of Them Were Obtained From the Romans.

All of our months were named by the Romans a great many years ago One of the months looks back on the old year and it looks ahead to the young or the new year, so it was named for a god whom the Romans worship-ed. He was represented as having two faces looking in opposite directions. One of his faces was old and the other one was young. His name was Janus. Can you guess which month was named for him? Another month was named for the god of war. What was his name, and which month was named for him? May was named for Maia, a goddess who was the mother of the god Mercury, and June was named for Jupiter's wife, Juno. While most months alternate with 30 and 31 days, July and August come together with 31 days. That is because these months were named for the two emperors, Julius and Augustus Caesar. It would not have done to give one a longer month than the other received, so both months were given 31 days.

In early times the Romans only had ten months, with names that meant first, month, second month, and so on. Four of these names are used now, for instance: December really mean's "tenth month," although it is now the twelfth month. Can you find the other three? A man named Numa added the two months January and February, shortening the others in order to do so. It is said that February is a name taken from a Latin word that means to purify, because during that month they held what is called the feast of the purification, and that April is a word that means to open, because at that season the buds begin to open.

Local Market.

London, Saturday, Oct. 28. The rain was the article supplied in the largest quantities on the mar-ket this morning, and there was cer-tainly very little demand for it. Nothing can be more disagreeable than marketing on a wet day, where there is a preponderance of mud and Mackintoshes, and where the eye is struck oftener by umbrella points than by the number of happy faces. Those who were there to sell, and the number was small, grumbled because the rain kept purchasers away, and the few who went to buy were in an impatient hurry, and no one waited to have those pleasant little conversaant days so agreeable. However, it was not so in the long hall which has been provided for the butter and eggs, and the different articles that go to swell the housewife's pin money. Perhaps it was that the women were so glad that they got a stand in there that the brightness remained on their faces, but no matter what the cause, they were all in such pleasant good humor, in such sharp contrast to those outside, that as one entered the building the change was as though he had reached a cosy fireside after traveling in cold and dreary

Prices remained much the same as on previous market days. There was a slight advance in the price of eggs, but beyond this the prices were sta-

IN TEXAS STATE

Rev. G. E. Morrison One of the Culprits.

Gave His Delicate Wife a Poisoned Apple-Two Others Suffer the Penalty.

Dallas, Tex., Oct. 28.-Rev. G. E Morrison was hanged at 12 o'clock, noon, yesterday, at Vernon, Tex., for wife murder. He met his death resignedly. On the scaffold he said to the select party of twenty witnesses permitted at the execution that he was innocent.

This is the first time in the history of Texas that a minister of the gospel has suffered capital punishment. In 1897 Morrison renewed his acquaintance with Miss Anne Whittlesey, of Topeka, Kan., who had jilted him some ten years before. He re-presented himself as an unmarried, wealthy cattle owner, and renewed his wooing, and eventually Miss Whittie-sey consented to marry him. His little timid wife was in the way. He was determined to marry Miss Whittlesey, and the possibility of losing her led to the murder of Mrs. Morrison.

MURDER IN HIS HEART. After securing the promise of mar-riage from Miss Whittlesey, the preacher left Topeka for Panhandle

City, with murder in his heart.

Long, passionate letters were mailed by Morrison to Miss Anna Whittiesey, at Topeka, from a neighboring town.

"As soon as this distressing business complication is small distressing business." complication is smoothed out, I shail complication is smoothed out, I shail come for you, my love," these letters in the handwriting of Preacher Morrison said. A letter dated Oct. 9, 1897, was full of "business complication," "love" and "hope." The next evening he preached the most forcible sermon the Panhandle City congregation had ever heard. His text was "The Warrenteen of the Panhandle City congregation had ever heard. ever heard. His text was "The Wages of Sin is Death." The blue-eyed soprano, wife of the pastor, sang sweeter than ever before.

SANG HER OWN REQUIEM. "I shall be satisfied," she sang. "I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness."

The preacher walked home with his wife. She walked into the house, and he walked quickly to the station.

"By the way," he asked, "has the doctor gone away as he intended?"

"He left on the 7 o'clock train," said the agent. The preached went home. His wife was waiting for him.

"You don't look well." my dear." likeness." "You don't look well," my dear," said he. "Indeed, I am," she said. "Much better than usual."
"Still, I think you should take some

He kissed his win and wept a great deal. Three hours after she ate the apple she died. The burly Texan used all of his great strength to unlock the dead arms from her husband's neck.

PREPARING TO MARRY. On Oct. 12 they buried her in the graveyard of the small white church with the tall, slender spire. On Oct. 13 Morrison wrote Miss Whittlesey: "Things are now in such a shape that we can marry," he said. "In or about Oct. 24 I will be with you, ver to leave you again."

Within a few days Morrison left this city. The Texan who witnessed the death of Mrs. Morrison was not satisfied that all was well with the unfor tunate woman. In a quiet way he gathered evidence that led to the arrest of Morrison on Nov. 26 at the home of Miss Whittlesey, in Topeka. Some delay on the part of the Texan authorities resulted in his release. He possibly want? Wire us. You can authorities resulted in his release. He sought to flee the country, but was rearrested just as he boarded a steamer bound for Honolulu. His conviction followed a prompt trial, and on Friday he died on the gallows.

TWO MORE. Dallas, Tex., Oct. 28.-Walter Ford who cruelly murdered his sweetheart, Lucinda Moore, at Waco, Tex., in June, 1898, was hanged in that city yesterday. He died without faltering. Austin, Tex., Oct. 28.—Samuel J. Watrous, one of the murderers of G. W. Engberg and his wife, was hanged in the jailyard here yesterday. Before dying Watrous said he was going to

The impression is deepening around the city that the London volunteers for the Transvaal were treated pretty shabbily by the city council, in comat 421/2c parison with the generosity of every other city, town and village that sent men to the war. A little cash would have gone a longer way than a jackknife and a pipe with many of the Londoners.Is it too late to do the proper thing yet? Montreal found out its mis-take, and is today sending $1,000 to be distributed among the volunteers from that city.

AT THE POLICE COURT.

The police made a raid on a house of ill-fame, kept by Mrs. Mary Judd, on Rectory street, at about 10 o'clock last night, and brought the inmates of the house-Tilly McGraw, Mary Mack and Mrs. Judd—to the police station.

At the police court this morning the McGraw and Mack girls were charged with being inmates and Mrs. Judd with eeping the house. They pleaded guilty, and were remanded until Monday for sentence. Bail was refused. One drunk was discharged and another was remanded for a week. "CANADIAN GROCER'S SPECIAL"

It is handsomely printed and illustrated throughout with views from different sections of Canada. The front page is in colors, being an imitation of water-color sketch. LADY ABERDEEN DESERTED FOR THE BOYS.

At the recent meeting of the Women's Council at Toronto, Lady Aberdeen, who had been invited after her remarks to take the chair, in introducing Hon. Geo. W. Ross, said that the Provincial Government had been so good to the council in Ontario that had called them spoiled children. Mr. Ross, who was received with great applause, said that he greatly regretted that he was unable to accept her ladyship's invitation to attend the meeting of the National Council at Hamilton; but it was on Wednesday evening, a day long to be remembered in Toronto. "We were sending our boys to the Transvaal," he said. "I had to see the boys off-I could not beyond Modderspruit. The British help myself. JOHNSTON-MUNRO.

On Wednesday, Oct. 24, there was celebrated at Thorold, Ont., a wedding which is interesting to those wno are in any way identified with the Presbyterian Church in Canada. The principals were the Rev. George Leslie Johnston, pastor of the North Bay congregation, and Miss Jessie A, Munro, lately secretary of the Sabbath School Association of Ontario, and present editress of the primary lessons in the Sunday School Magazine. Rev. Mr. Johnston, who is an ex-Londoner, is an honor graduate of Toronto University, whence he went to Princeton Theological Seminary, where he won the traveling scholarship in Old Testament literature. He is at present the pastor of the North Bay congregation. Miss Jessie A. Munro's family is perhaps better known than any family in Welland county. The ceremony took place in the Presbyterian Church, Thorold. The Rev. Mr. Cook, of Thorold, officiated, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Johnston, of Preston, Ont., brother of the groom. The bride's party consisted of her sister, Miss Munro, Miss Joanna E. Wood (the novelist), Mrs. McCormack and Mrs. Webster. The bridegroom was supported by the Rev. Mr. Scott, a friend and classmate, at present pastor of the Presbyterian congregation at Hespeler, Ont., next week to be inducted to St. Andrew's Church, Brantford, and Mr. D. J. G. The Nelson, B. C., Daily Miner, announces the death of A. P. Fawcett, passenger conductor on the C. P. R. between Nelson and Robson, who met with an accident while switching his train at Robson. The coach and baggage car were being placed on the wharf track, and in setting the brake on the head end, the brake wheel came off, throwing him in front of the moving cars and between the rails. He fell on his head with his left arm across the rail, the wheels passing over it above the elbow. The arm had to be amputated, and the patient did not long survive. Mr. Fawcett was formerly a member of The Advertiser staff, and had a large circle of friends in this city, especially in South London, where he was a member of the Methodist Church choir. The Nelson Miner describes him as one of the most respected and best beloved young men of Nelson. He was buried at Kamloops, B. C., amid many tokens of grief and affection, the C. P. FOOTBALL.

COLLEGE BOYS ON STRIKE. Agricultural College, Michigan, Oct. 28. — The football players have had great difficulty this term to get a time for practice. From 5 to 6 o'clock was the only time from classes, and after the first few weeks of the term this hour was worthless, on account of darkness. Matters reached a crisis when the Alma team held them to a tie in last Saturday's game. The boys determined not to go on the field again until more time was given them, and to cancel all engagements if arrangements were not made within a week. Their little strike had the desired effect. By shifting classs that had been crowded into the late afternoon and by changing players into sections that meet earlier in the day, it was arranged so that all players could be free by

In the Neighborhood of Ladysmith-May Now Be in Conflict.

Occupation of Dundee by the Boers-Departure of Australian Troops for the Seat of War-Scenes of Wild Enthusiasm.

London, Oct. 28 .- The lull in the news from Ladysmith, Natal, which was beginning to be regarded as ominous, has at length been broken by a Cape date, saying: "Scouts from Modderspruit having reported the Boers in force on the Helpmaaker road, Gen. White ordered out a strong force of artillery, mounted infantry and cavalry. A small patrol of mounted infantry was shelled by the Boers nine miles adian seed houses. from Ladysmith, and the Boer posi-force is now four miles from the Boers. The dispatch does not give the date of the above occurrence, but it must have been since Thursday, when the last news arrived from Ladysmith, so the Boers' advance from Dundee southward and from Bester's Station eastward, evidently proceeded steadily in the interim, and the engagement foreshadowed by the above dispatch

BOER REPORTS.

As a pendant to the above comes a story from Cape Town to the effect that several cases of dum-dum bullets were found by the Boers at Dundee, which the British abandoned in their flight. Some of the Boers wanted to use the dunf-dum bullets in the next battle, but President Kruger vetoed this, saying: "No; it must not be so. Whatever the British are, we Boers are at least humane." The bullets were then destroyed.

Boers were visible on hills in the vicinity. Lobatsi had been looted. The train encountered the Boers three miles south of Crocodile Pools, and the British opened fire with their Maxims and drove the Boers back to the hills whence they had advanced. Besides eight men killed, the Boers lost eleven horses. DEPARTURE OF THE AUSTRALIAN CONTINGENT.

ED UP.

London, Oct. 28 .- The mystery of the Eighteenth Hussars is finally cleared in the official report from Gen. White and there is no doubt now that the hussars went too far in pursuit of the Boers after the battle of Glencoe, and were captured entire.

The captured force numbers nine of-with Col. Moller commanding, and 160 men Since the British have several hundred Boer captives, including several high officers, it is likely an exchange will be effected soon, and the hussars returned. The troop of the Eighteenth Hussars reported returned by Correspondent Steevens proves to be 30 men, under Sergt. Baldry, sent to cut off the retreating Boers after the fight of Elandslaagte. These also had a narrow escape from capture, and were chased several miles, and fired at all the way. They lost three men, whose horses were shot. These are perhaps captives, and perhaps hiding and waiting for a chance to return to camp.

More Than Skin-Deep.

The sallow, muddy complexion so painfully common and so unpleasant to look at is due in a large degree to drinking. It is not only displeasing to the eye, but it tells of a disordered digestion, vitiated blood, unstrung nerves and a morbid brain. The use of Caramel Cereal in place of tea or coffee will restore the bright hue of health to the cheek, buoyancy to the spirits, and vigor to nerve and brain. he has been in charge of the financial A Description of Their Organization Death Benefits a Feature.

> [Chicago Tribune.] The article in the current Outlook, by Charles B. Spahr, one of its editors, on "The Trade Union Movement in Cheago," is thoroughly readable. Mr. Spahr's statement of the insur-ance features of the Cigarmakers Union is highly interesting. This union has for many years been one of the strongest and best administered in the country. It publishes a journal, which all members receive, and through which, by the use of the initative and the referendum, nearly all union business Dominion Government Pays for $1,000 is done. Conventions occur only once in five years and are lkely soon to be dispensed with altogether. Mr. George W. Perkins has been for a long time president of the union. He receives a salary of $30 per week, handles finances amounting to half a million dollars a year, confines his attention exclusive ly to his official duties, and is not only a man of irreproachable character, but one of the ablest officials in the trade union world. The peculiar strength of this union has come from high dues and correspondingly ample insurance features. Annual dues and assessments together amount to $17 per member. Of this sum, approximately, $1 goes for strike funds, $4 for salaries, halls, postage, publication, and sundries, $1 for the union label agitation, and the remaining $11 for various insurance benefits. The death benefits paid amount to. about $70,000 annually, and vary in individual instances from $200 to $550, according to the length of the decedent's membership. The sick benefits reach $110,000 a year. After the first week of sickness—provided this be not due to "intemperance or immoral conduct"-$5 per week is paid for not to exceed thirteen weeks. Friendly visitation and general loyalty to the interests of the union furnish a peculiar safeguard against abuses in the case of this benefit. About $30,000 a year is loaned to members to enable them to travel in search of work, the amount being gradually repaid from their weekly wages. The out-of-work benefits have, in this decade, come to be the heaviest of all. The stipend in this case is $3 per week. It is suspendterrupted at other tmes that it cannot continue for more than eighteen weeks in a year. Since this form of insurance was started in 1890, it has greatly increased, owing to the hard The total navments amounted to $17,000 in 1892 to $174,000 in 1894, and after remaining at the latter figure during the next two years fell to $117,-000 in 1897. Notwithstanding these demands, however, the treasury of the union came through the depression with $177,000 in hand. These various benefits held the members together and so helped sustain wages during the hard times. The chief cause of apprehension now is the trust movement. The cigarette trade has already passed into the combination stage and is without union labor. Quoting a union carpenter, Mr. Spahr suggests that if a trust should obtain control of the eigarmaking business, and undertake to suppress the union, it might perhaps be checkmated by the union itself setting up in business, using for that purpose its reserve funds.

Mr. Spahr closes his interesting article by calling attention to the training in democracy which trade unionism, under proper restraints from within and without, involves.

A ONE-SIDED PLEASURE.

A lyceum bureau man says that the Bishop of London, Mandell Creighton, who succeeded Dr. Temple when he was elevated to the primacy of England, will lecture in America next season. The bishop is a charming wit as vell as a great scholar. Like James Russell Lowell, he has a horror of lending books, especially his favorites. A fellow-clergyman once visited the bishop and took a fancy to an old edition of Shakespeare. He borrowed the volume, and did not think to return it for several months. Finally the minister returned it with a letter, say-

It is interesting for its good stories of many of our present day public men who have a reputation for wit. There is a characteristic one told of M. Labouchere, M. P., which has probably never before been circulated. A gentleman had been hearing a speech by Lord Tauton, the uncle of M. Labouchere, but whom he under-stood to be M. Labouchere's father, and, expecting to interest the witty member for Northampton, he afterward went to him in the dining-room of the House of Commons and said to him: "I've just been listening to a fine speech from your father."

"Indeed! where?" In the House of Lords." "I am delighted to hear you say so," said Labby; "my father died eighteen years ago, and we have always been anxious to know where he had gone."

"And who the deuce are you?" said Mr. Bultitude, nettled at this assump-tion of authority. "How are you going to prevent me, may I ask?"

"S'sh! here's the doctor," whispered Chawner, hurriedly. "I'll tell you after tea. What am I doing out of my place, sir? Oh, I was only asking Bullitude what was a sire. itude what was the collect for today, ir. Fourth Sunday after the Epiphany? thank you, Bultitude." And he glided back to his seat, leaving Paul in a state of vague uneasiness. Why did this fellow, with the Infernal sly face and glib tongue, want to prevent him from righting himself with the world, and how could he possibly prevent him? It was absurd; he would take no notice of the young Scoundrel—he would defy him.

But he could not banish the uneasy

Reeling; the cup hand slipped so many times before at the critical moment that he could not be sure whose hand would be the next to jog his elbow. And so he went down to tea with renewed misgivings.

CHAPTER XII.

Very possibly Chawner's interference in Mr. Bultitude's private affairs has surprised others besides the victim of but the fact is that there was a most unfortunate misunderstanding between them from the very first, which prevented the one from seeing, the other from explaining, the real

Etate of the case. Chawner, of course, no more guessed Paul's true name and nature than any one else who had come in contact with him in his impenetrable disguise, and his motive for attempting to prevent an interview with the doctor can only, I fear, be explained by another

The doctor, from a deep sense of his responsibility for the morals of those under his care, was perhaps a little over-anxious to clear his meral garden of every noxious weed, and too conhis vigilant efforts to detect the growing shoot of evil from the moment it showed above the surface.

As he could not do everything, however, it is evident that many offenses, trivial or otherwise, must have remained unsuspected and unpunished, but for a theory which he had originated and took great pains to propagate among his pupile.

theory was that every rightminded boy ought to feel himself in such a fiduciary position towards his master that it became a positive duty to acquaint him with any delinquencies he might happen to observe among his fellows; and, if, at the same time he was oppressed by a secret burden on his own conscience, it was understood that he might hope that the joint revelation would go far to mitigate his own punishment.

It is doubtful whether this system, though I believe it is found successful in Jesuit colleges, can be usefully applied to English boys; whether it may not produce a habit of mutual distrust and suspicion, and a tone the reverse

For myself I am inclined to think before. that a schoolmaster will find it better in the long run, for both the character and morals of his school, if he is not too anxious to play the detective, and and I read it, and it was so nicely refrains from encouraging the more written that I thought I should like weak-minded or cowardly boys to save themselves by turning "schoolmaster's

Dr. Grimstone thought otherwise; but it must be allowed that the system, as in vogue at Crichton House, did not work well.

There were boys, of course, who took a sturdier view of their own rights and it's safe duties, and despised the tail-bearers mean to as they deserved; there were others also, too timid and too dependent on the good opinion of others to risk the loss of it by becoming informers; but there were always one or two whose consciences were unequal to the burden of their neighbor's sin, and could only be relieved by frank and full con-

Unhappily they had, as a general rule, contributed largely to the sum of guilt themselves, and did not resort to disclosure until detection seemed reasonably imminent.

Chawner was the leader of this conscientious band; he reveled in the system. It gave him the means at once of gratifying the almost universal love of power and of indulging a cat-like passion of playing with the feelings of others. which, it is to be hoped, is more uncommon. He knew he was not popular, but he could procure most of the incidents of popularity; he could have his little court of cringing toadies; he could levy his tribute of conciliatory presents, and vent many private spites and hatreds into the bargain-and he renerally did.

Having himself a tendency to acts of sly disobedience, he found it a con-genial pastime to set the fashion from time to time in some one of the pecca-dilloes to which boyhood is prone, and to which the doctor's somewhat restrictive code added a large number, and, as soon as he saw a sufficient number his companions satisfactorily inplicated, his opportunity came.

All grocers sell Tea, but all got no relief. I have used two dozen Teas are not the same. Some completely cured. I can highly recommend this medicine above all others. He would take the chief culprits aside and profess, in strict confidence, certain qualms of conscience which he feared could only be appeared by un-burdening his guilt-laden soul. To this none would have any right to object-had it not necessarily, or at least from Chawner's point of view, involved a full, true, and particular ac-count of the misdoings of each and every one; and, consequently, for some time after these professions of misgivings, Chawner would be surrounded by a little crowd of anxiously obsequious friends, all trying hard to overcome his scruples or persuade him, at least, to omit their names from his revelations. Sometimes he would affect to be convinced by their arguments and send them away reassured; at others his scruples would return in an aggravated form; and so he would keep them on tenter hooks of suspense for days and weeks, until he was tired of the amusement-for this practicing on the fears of weaker natures is a horribly keen delight to some—or until some desperate little dog, unable to bear his torture any longer, would threaten to give himself up and make an end of

Then Chawner, to do him justice, then relieved him from so disagreeable a necessity, and would go softly into the doctor's study, and, in a subdued and repentant tone, pour out his general confession for the public good

Probably the doctor did not altogether respect the instruments he saw fit to use in the way, some would have declined to hear the informer out, flogged him well, and forgotten it; but Dr. Grimstone-though he was hardly likely to be impressed by these ex-hibitions of noble candor, and did not fail to see that the prospect of ob-taining better terms for the penitent himself had something to do with them-yet he encouraged the system as a matter of policy, went thoroughly into the whole affair, and made it the cause of an explosion which he considered would clear the moral atmossphere for some time to come.

I hope that, after this explanation, Chawner's opposition to Mr. Bultitude's plan will be better understood. After tea he made Paul a little sign to follow him, and the two went out together into the little glass-house be-yound the school-room; it was dark, but there was light enough from the om inside for them to see each other's

'Now, sir," began Paul, with dignity, when he had closed the glass door behind him, "perhaps you'll be good enough to tell me how you mean to prevent me from seeing Dr. Grimstone, and telling him-telling him what I have to tell him?"

"I'll tell you, Dickie," said Chawner, with an evil smirk. "You shall know "Don't stand grinning at me like that, sir," said the angry Mr. Bultitude; "say it out at once; it will make no difference to me. I give you warn-

"What a liar you are!" said Ch ner, more in admiration than rebuke. "You told him you never gave her any encouragement, didn't you? he said if he ever found you had, nothing would save you from a licking, didn't he?" "He did," said Paul. "He was quite

"Why this," said Chawner: "Do

to keep it myself, and so I did-and here it is!' And he drew out with great caushowed it to the horrified old gentleman. "Don't statch * * 'yours, ever, Dick Bulti'ude.' No, you don't come any nearer * * there, now it's safe * * Now, what do you mean to do?"

Soon There Won't Be a Leg Left for Diabetes to Stand On.

All Over the Country Diabetes Is Being Vanquished by Dodd's Kidney Pills -Thomas Brooks, of North Bruce This Time-His Case Required Two Dozen Boxes.

North Bruce, Oct. 27.-However it is in other parts of Ontario this big toe of the province knows the value of Dodd's Kidney Pills for Diabetes. It was not so long ago since Diabetes was considered incurable throughout Bruce county. Anyone who contracted Diabetes, or its twin malady, Bright's Disease, was given up as hopeless by physicians and friends. And some of the most prosperous, popular and influential men in Bruce have been carried off by Diabetes. Seldom, indeed, nowadays, is a death from Diabetes in this district. Dodd's Kidney Pills are too well-known for that. Diabetes is cured before it advances to a dangerous degree generally, though there have been cases where prejudiced people, trying everything under the sun before resorting to Dodd's Kidney Pills, have been snatched from the edge of the grave by their

Information About the Origin of The Modern Silk Hat.

The Interesting History of the Head gear of Countries From Which It Was Evolved-The Interesting Process of Making the Silk Hat of Today Entertainingly Described.

From a long line of noble pedigree, almost lost in past centuries, rises !he modern silk hat; and now shall its past services in shielding man from sun and rain be forgotten, and it is to be seen no more except in the collection of the antiquarium? Chaucer describes the merchant on his Canterbury pilgrimage as wearing "on his head a flaunderish beaver hat." In the middle of the next century there is a list of articles belonging to Sir John Fastolfe, among which is "a hatte of beaver lyned with damaske." In Queen Elizabeth's reign Stubbs was much distressed by the vanities of the world, especially those in England. Through his indignation he has given most fascinating pictures of the foibles of his day in the "Anatomie of Abuses." He says, describing the hats: "Sometimes they used them sharp on the crowns, perking up like the shaft of a steeple, standing a quarter of a yard above their heads, some more, some less, to please the fancies of their wavering minds. Some are of silk, some are of velvet, some are of taffeta, some of sarcenet, some of wool, and which is more curious, some of a certain kind of fine hair; these they call beaver hats, of 20, 30, 40 shillings a piece fetched from beyond the sea, whence a great sort of other varieties do come. And so common a thing it is that every serving man, country man and other, even all in-

feathers are of "diverse and sundry colors, peaking on top their heads not unlike (I dare not say) cockescombs, but as sternes of pride and ensigns of vanity; and as these flut-tering sails and feathered flags of defiance to vertue (for so they are) are so advanced in anglia that every child hath them on his hat or cap. Many get good living by dyeing and lief of his eyes, and it is expected selling of them, and not a few prove that his sight will be completely rethemselves more than fooles by wearing them." He gives a long list of the colors of the hats, and says they are "now this, now that, never constant with one color or fashion two months to an end." It seems that the men of his time were more wavering in their tastes than those of to-day.

It was not until the seventeenth century that the hat supplanted the cap which was the earliest form of headgear. In the Roman days it was worn slung at the back and only used in stormy weather. During the reign of Charles I. the "sugar loaf" was the prevailing fashion, wound with a rich hat band and trimmed with a feather on one side, they were "so incommodious for us." says one of the wearers, "that every puffe of wind deprived us of them. The Puritans wore the same shape, but considered the feather too much a mark of vanity, and they also wore more modest brim. The cavaliers even had iron hats made to wear in their wars; one which belonged to Charles I may now be seen in Warwick Castle. At the time of the Restoration the tall hat passed out of fashion, for Charles II brought the French periwig home with him, and the broad brim, low-crowned hat was more in keeping with it. Finally the brim of these picturesque hats grew so extravagant that it became necessary to turn it up, which at first was done at the back and then anywhere, according to one's fancy. Out of this grew the cocked hat of William's reign. The lackeys and coachmen of the King of Italy still wear this style on dress occasions, and it is used by other of the royalty and nobility of Europe.

During Anne's reign the cocked hat marked the wearer as a gentleman or man of profession, and it was the style to carry it under the arm. The "Tattler" suggested that if men would wear their hats on their heads instead of under their arms they would probably last longer. A writer of this period says:" We can distinguish by the taste of the hat the mood of the wearer's mind-while the beaux of St. James wear their hats under their arms the beaux of Moorfields' Mall wears theirs diagonally over the left of the right eye.' John Sly, the authority on haberdashery in Queen Anne's re:ign, judged men by the hats they wore (times have not changed much after all!) "His hats for men of the faculties of law and physick do but just turn up to give a little life to their sagacity; his military hats glare full in the face; and he has prepared a familiar easy code for all good companions between the above mentioned extremes.'

Again, after the first quarter of and became "the favorite mode of quality" and "the polite distinction of fashionable undress. It was later adopted in Paris and known as the chapeau a l'Anglais. With many other victims at the time of the French Revolution, the cocked hat lost its head, and was succeeded by a crescent shape which inherited the old name. Under the empire the old shape was revived, but the stovepipe, with its remarkable hold on life, again crowned men's heads, and has remained with us ever since in varying degrees of height and breadth.

The process of making the sill of to-day is very interesting. Technically speaking the hat consists of three parts, the top, the body and the brim. There is a wooden block, exactly the shape of the "body, made in five pieces, so that the block may be taken apart for the removal of the hat when it has been shaped, for as the upper part flares it would otherwise be impossible. A strip of muslin, the exact size of the block, glued together on the edges, is slipped over the block, shellac is then ironed into the muslin and left to dry, two or three more layers of muslin are wound around the block, each being shellacked. After the first layer has been froned on the brim is added. A strip of muslin for the brim is stretched on a frame, shellacked and left to dry, and so on, with from two to four layers for an ordinary hat, though for livery hats this is some times repeated six times. This stiffened muslin, which has grown brown from the color of the shellac, looks like brown paper, is then cut into squares and a hole cut in the center to slip it on to the block. This hole is smaller than the block, so that it leaves a rim around it, which is ironed down and serves to make it strong; then the other layers are put around the "body." The crown is added by being ironed on, as the heat melts the varnish and makes it adhesive. When all the parts are put together a final coat of varnish given and it is impossible to feel a seam anywhere. Next comes the covering. First, a strip of plush is cut ironed on. Then a piece on the bias, for the body of the hat is slipped onto the form, having had the crown carefully sewn in on the wrong side. after which it is ironed. The joining of the bias seam requires expert workers, who turn it out with no more evidence of a seam than is to be seen in the skin of a plum. The next step is the shaping or "putting in the curl," as it is called, for up to this time the brim is perfectly flat. First it is pressed by a flatiron to make it pliable, and then ironed on a form the shape of the curling brim. The hat is then put onto a "brow" shaped like a man's head and the finishing touches are added. Finally it is ready for the lining, which is done by women. An English nobleman who has made war upon the soft hat has said that nothing short of a revolution could bring about its downfall. It is possible that this will be accomwithout the shedding of a drop of ate, because the Koran commands it.

A Mahometan Mission to Convert Christians.

According to Their London Missionary the Mahometans Are the Most De vout People in the World-They Now Number 400,000,000, but Only 200 Live in London the Great.

While societies of almost every religious sect in England are spending time and money in getting up tracts and sending missionaries out to convert people in other lands who don't believe as they do, some of those foreigners are not entirely without concern as to the moral state of the great nation bent on converting

So far as known, the inhabitants of Turkey, Asia and some parts of Africa have not yet begun to flood England with tracts, but they have sent a missionary to London, who not only will look after the religious welfare of Mahometans there, but also will do everything possible towards persuading Englishmen to enter what they believe to be the true

In the course of the next two months an important step in this direction will be taken, when ground will be broken for a real Oriental mosque, which is to be built in the heart of London, probably in Russel Square, and in the establishment of which $50,000 will be spent.

This sum is now being raised by subscription in Mahometan countries, and it is thought that the full amount will have been acquired before the end of the year.

Meanwhile, the missionary, Al Hadfie Mohammed Doulie, has provided a temporary mosque where the faithful may attend prayers and listen to the reading of the Koran, and where the Mahometan ritual is adhered to even in its smallest details.

Doulie lives in a little brick cottage, built back from the Euston Road, and the yard in front is filled with tall cornstalks, oats and sunflower plants.

The Hadije and his secretary, both in fezer were having coffee and in the drawing-room, in cigaret true Oriental style, when Mr. Curtis last century the tall hat reappeared Brown, the well-known London correspondent, called upon him the other

"There are over 400,000,000 Mahometans in the world," said the Hadjie, "and about 200 in London. They have come here from Turkey,

RADJIE MOHAMMED DOULIE, THE EMAN.

Arabia, Morocco, Algeria, Egypt and India, and are chiefly young men who are studying professions, people who are engaged in business, and others simply travelling for pleasure.

"The reason we are so few is that Mahometans of the better class are shy about coming here because there are such scanty arrangements for them to worship as they wish.

"We are the most devout people in the world. To provide a suitable place of worship is one of the purposes for which the mosque is intended. In three years after it is for the covering of the brim and completed the 200 Mahometans now in London will have become 2,000. My people are eager to come here. when suitable mosques have been built.

> "It will cost us over $50,000 buy a site for our mosque and to build it, and we are getting the money from the countries where Mahometanism is strong.

"We should be glad to make converts, and if we can organize and send out missionaries in England, we shall make more converts by 50 per cent. than Christianity can make.

We began 1,316 years ago, and there are now, as I have said, 400,-000,000 of us. We are many, but we are poorer than any other religious sect. We are the greatest power in the world in favor of temperance. When they point out to me what the Salvation Army is doing for temper- force of arms it will never be theirs. ance I laugh. > "The new mosque will not be a great building. It will only be about 50 feet square, but in building it we will make it higher than the mosques in our countries, so that it will was conferred afterwards upon Mecnot look insignificant beside the buildings around it.

"There we shall hold services just as we do in our country. There will be prayers five times a day, and on Friday, which corresponds to your Sunday, six times a day, with two sermons.

"We worship now in a temporary mosque which I have provided with my own means, and there is a smaller one in Liverpool, the two being the only ones in England. I am the Hadjie, and 'hadjie' means a pilgrim -one who has been to Mecca. When we gather to service many nation are represented. There are Arabs. Turks, Nubians, Greeks, Soudanese, Egyptians, natives of India, Morocco, Cape Colony and Sierra Leone, and a short time ago we had an American woman who has been converted. "We have there Mohammed Redia Effendi, the chaplain of the Turkish embassy, who was selected specially by the Turkish Government to attend these services; Dr. Jeneid Shaw, the Persian oculist, who has been consulted by the Emperor of Moroc-co and the Ameer of Afghanistan, and Seyd Hassan Ali, a professor from the college of Al Azhar at Cai-passing one?" he was asked. 'We hope," he replied, "that it is making a great mistake. But I cannot talk about that-it would be too great an error at this time. I cannot say if we expect that any one of our States will soon dominate the others, and become the greatest seat of government, and I cannot say what States we believe are friendly to us and are standing ready to aid the Mahometan race, because the time is not ripe, and if we told the world what we are planning now, those States might be alienated from

"No, I cannot speak of our commercial ambitions, either, but we hope that they will spread as our religion is spreading.

"Where is that spreading most noticeably?" "In the Cape Colony, in China, in India, ib all three places Christian-ty outdates us and we outnumber it. At the Cape Colony we began 50 years ago. Then we were in tens; now we are there in hundreds of thousands. We gain as fast again as Christianity does. "In India Christianity had the start of us, but what has the result been? We have now 60,000,000 of the faithful there; the Christian religion has about 7,000,000. In China we have no missionaries, but we are far in advance of Christianity. The Christians are working hard for converts, but we are outstripping them. We convert ten from Buddhism to their one.

ur religion is so clear," he added, "so logical, you may say, as to be acceptable to all. We know no confession, no priests. We are constantly in touch with the Supreme One. You blame us for allowing a man to have more than one wife, but if you will go to our country you will see how far ahead of you we are in that respect.

"In our country we know of no such thing as a fallen woman. If you go into the shops you will find no women assistants, for we don't allow our women to go out in the business world and mingle with the men. Their place is in the home, and we keep them there.

"We do not marry men to women as you do here, in such a fashion that if a man would rid himself of his wife, he must accuse her or kill her. We regard marriage as a civil transaction, and if a time comes when that man and woman feel it is best to part, if he can no longer support her, they will separate in a friendly way."

I asked the Hadjie if he believed that a man could care for more than one woman as his wife. "If he cannot, he will marry only one," he replied. "The Koran says: 'If any man can provide for more than one wife, he may take to himself more than one up to four, but not unless he is able to provide for them justly.' By that is not meant if he can keep them from being hungry, but if he can make them happy, if he can love each of them. And we follow out that command. fourths of all the faithful in the world have only one wife."

On being asked if a man was entitled to several wives, why women could not have several husbands, the Hadjie explained that all their great men in history had several wives, but there was nothing to show that women ever had been allowed such great scope, and that they believed in sticking to tradition. Answering a question as to what would become of a woman from whom her husband judged it expedient for him to separate, and of her children, he remarked hopefully that Allah would provide, for the arrange ment was one of his own making. I asked his opinion of the chances of success for the Zionist movement, and he said: "I do not think it will be successful. The Jews hope to get Palestine, but unless they take it by is against it.

"Palestine is sacred ground to us as well as to them, for it was the place selected by Mahomet himself to which the prayers of the faithful should be directed, and this honor ca by a revelation in the Koran."

PARTED FOR FORTY YEARS.

Forty years ago a citizen loaned a book to a New York friend. After a time he forgot the action, but not the book, for he prized the little volume highly. No amount of brain-racking could account for its disappearance. Then he gave up hope of ever seeing his old friend again. But one never can tell. This morning the owner received the little skeepskin-bound volume, looking just as it did the day it left home. The gentleman to whom the book was louned died some time ago. His executors, on going through the library discovered the waif, and considerately returned it to the owner by

The crowd was something enormous, and the enthusiasm exceeded, if possible, the crowd. Every street along the march between Wol-seley Barracks and the station was completely jammed with sightseers, whose enthusiasm gave vent to cheer ing and applause, almost unprecedent-

Matrimonial

On Oct. 11, a pleasant event ocurred at the residence of Mr. James Mac-fie, "Maple Hill," Appin, where, in the presence of some 90 invited guests, his daughter Maud was united in marriage to Mr. James Lotan, a prosperous young farmer of Ekfrid. Precisely at As the summer arrangements for the 12:30 (noon) the guests assembled on the lawn in front of the house, and white Miss Cook, of Owen Sound, played the wedding march, the groom appeared under the arch of evergreens, exquisitely arranged on a platform before the front door, which opens towards the lawn, followed by the bride, leaning on the arm of her father. The bride was beautifully attired in white organdy, with Valenciennes and satin trinnmings, and carried a bouquet of white asters and seedum. Miss Edna Jackson, who assisted the bride, was sirnilarly attired, and carried pink asters. Mr. D. Johnson was best man, now at Quebec, are Ingersoll boys, and and Rev. T. Jackson performed the on Thursday the town council decided | marriage ceremony. After the congratulations, all repaired to the dining-

GOOD WORK APPRECIATED

Teachers Present Inspector Dearness With a Gold Watch.

Mrs. Dearness Also Pleasantly Re membered by the East Middlesex Teachers Association.

Having accepted a place on the staff of the new Normal School, Mr. John Dearness, inspector of public schools for East Middlesex, will resign his position shortly. He has had the oversight of the schools for over 25 years, and it is largely through his efforts that they have reached such a high standard as places of learning. At the semi-annual meeting of the last Middlesex Teachers' Association, in session here, it was decided to give a reception to Mr. and Mrs. Dearness. it being the last time he will attend in the capacity of inspector. Last night was made the occasion of the reception, and about one hundred teachers were present. The evening was very pleasantly spent. A delightful programme of music was furnished by the Italian harpers. Prof. Bowman was also on hand with a microscopical exhibit, and Rev. George Gilmore gave some magic lantern views of places visited by him in British Columbia last summer. Instrumental selections were given by Mr. Hudson, readings by Miss Hodgins and Mr. C. J. Bradley, and solos by Miss McDougall and Capt. Thomas E. Robson. But the most interesting event came at the close of the musical and literary programme, when the chairman, Mr. J. C. Robson, called upon Mr. and Mrs. Dearness. Miss Flora McCall, secretary of the Teachers' Association, also stepped forward at the same time, and read the following address: Mr. John Dearness, P. S. I.. Dear Sir,-On the occasion of severing your connection with the East Middlesex Teachers' Association as public school inspector, we take this oppor-tunity of expressing our high estimation of your work with us and our sincere regret at your departure.

During the 25 years that you have passed in and out among us, in your arduous duties, so successfully carried on, your attainments as a scholar, your ability in teaching, your earnest thought, deep sympathy and firm in-tegrity have kept before us unceasingly the noble means, the nobler ends that inspire the ideal teacher, and thus have you won the regard and goodwill of all with whom you have come in contact.

You can reflect that, on leaving the association with which you have been so long connected, your influence has not been a matter of small moment, nor will it be but the shadow of the passing day. Your devotion to the cause of education in general, and to that cause in East Middlesex in particular, has won for you and for our public schools a more than local—a provincial reputation. It is a matter of much congratulation that the educational system of Ontario occasionally presents inducements sufficient to retain the services of men, who, like yourself, are so eminently fitted to adorn them.

As a more substantial evidence of our good will and appreciation, we ask your acceptance of this gift. May it often recall the past as a pleasant memory and foreshadow the future as a bright hope, and in conclusion, we express our earnest wishes for the future welfare of yourself, Mrs. Dearness and the members of your family, and for your continued success and happiness in your new field of labor in the London Normal School. We also take much pleasure in presenting Mrs. Dearness with this easy chair as a token of our esteem. Signed, on behalf of the teachers and members of the E. M. T. A.,

Mr. and Mrs. Dearness were taken completely by surprise. Ifr. Dearness said he felt that silence would be more adequate than words, because he had not words to express appreciation of the very generous gifts to himself and Dearness. He was aware of the cordiality which existed between him-self and the teachers for many years, but he felt that the words of the ad-dress were not merited. He was glad that the teachers appreciated the spirit in which he had done his work. very naturally felt a great deal of in-terest in the inspectorate and in the success of the teachers, having seen the majority of the latter grow up in the schools, and he would always re-tain the interest, after severing his connection with the schools. Mr. Dearness thanked the teachers very heartily for their kindness.

Principal Graham, of the Model School, spoke briefly. It was eighteen years since he had become connected with the East Middlesex schools. The relationship between inspector and teachers at that time was as cordial as at the present time. He was sorry that Mr. Dearness was to be lost by East Middlesex, as he was one of the most advanced school inspectors in Ontario. After the serving of light refreshments the company sang the National Anthem and dispersed.

FAUST" MATINEE AND NIGHT WEDNESDAY NEXT.

Of the many plays now before the public none is more pure in thought, truer in its teachings of humanity, greater in chann and more welcome with each recurring visit than Lewis Morrison's "Faust," which is now making its farewell tour through the country. Its exquisite melodies and enduring fame has made it known in every household. Every seat will be filled when it appears here Wednesday.

"THE CHRISTIAN."

Tunis F. Dean, business manager of "The Christian," arrived in the city Wednesday to perfect arrangements with Manager Root for the production here Nov. 7. Few plays produced either at home or abroad during the past twenty years have the good for-tune enjoyed by Hall Caine's adaptation of his novel, "The Christian." book had an enormous sale on both sides of the Atlantic, but the play seems destined for even greater popularity than the book. In New York the public of all classes crowded to see it for 175 nights in succession, while cultured Boston pronounced it the best play in many years, and gave it an uninterrupted run of 110 nights.

FRANK DANIELS IN HIS NEW COMIC OPERA, "THE AMEER." Frank Daniels' interpretation of the character of the title role in "The Ameer," which will appear at the Grand Opera House here on Tues-day, is described as the most artistic and at the same time, the funniest of the many he has been in. The Toronto Mail and Empire, Oct. 27, says: "Mr. Frank Daniels is a popular comedian with a special vogue of his own. Of a certainty play-goers go to see him rather than the piece he happens to perform, yet it is worthy of note that "The Ameer," his new extravaganza, is the best entertainment that has so far been provided for him. It was presented at the Grand Opera. House last night, and there was ne doubt of its success. The scene is laid in Afghanistan, of which country Mr. Daniels is Ameer. He is bankrupt, of course, and always in trouble; he is taken a prisoner by brigands, and is subjected to tortures; he changes places with his court fool, and is treatchanges ed as a menial, and so on; opportunities for Mr. Daniels' drolly melancholy personality are numerous. Most of the jo tes are good, and his support is ex-ceillent. The gem of the opera is, strangely enough, the topical song, it is entitled "In Old Ben Franklin's Diey," and is composed in the old English style. The general character of the score, however, is of a strong-ly pulsating, military character. In the book there is one clever skit on the vaudeville performances of the day for the comedians, and Mr. Daniels has one of his inevitable circus songs. On the production a great deal of money has been expended. The scenery is magnificent. The costuming is won-derfully rich. Mr. Daniels was quaint and unsmilingly merry, as of yore.

Diamond Dyes Are the True and Unfailing Agents.

In November thousands of women will be coloring dresses, skirts, jackets, coats, vests, pants, shawls, wool yarns and carpet rags. The dyeing operation is an important one and demands great care. The principal point is to secure the right dyes-colors that are pure, bright and fast to washing and sunlight.

The Diamond Dyes-the only guaranteed dyes on earth-possess all the grand qualities that make perfect and true colors. Diamond Dyes have such a universal sale that unscrupulous dealers make efforts to imitate them. If you would be successful in dyeing, avoid all crude imitations. refuse all dyes recommended by dealers to be just as good as Diamond Dyes. The Diamond Dyes are the best in the world, and all dealers are aware of the fact.
