LAST COPY - PLEASE DO NOT REPLOVE

doc CA1 EA751 98P22 ENG Canadian Centre For Foreign Policy Development

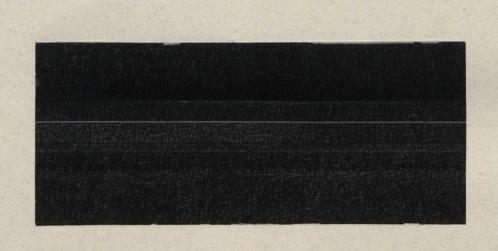

Centre canadien pour le développement de la politique étrangère

PEACEBUILDING DURING
PEACE SUPPORT OPERATIONS:
A SURVEY AND ANALYSIS OF
RECENT MISSIONS
(Second Draft)
Robin Hay
January 10, 1998

125 promenade Sussex Drive, Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0G2
Telephone/Téléphone: 613 944 8278 Fax/Télécopieur: 613 944 0687
www.cfp-pec.gc.ca

PEACEBUILDING DURING
PEACE SUPPORT OPERATIONS:
A SURVEY AND ANALYSIS OF
RECENT MISSIONS
(Second Draft)
Robin Hay
January 10, 1998

Dept. of Foreign Affairs Min. des Affaires étrangères

DEC 7 2005

Return to Departmental Library Retourner à la bibliothèque du Ministère

Dept. of Foreign Aflairs Min. des Affaires étrangères

3002 T 330

Refourser à la bibliothèque du Ministère

PEACEBUILDING DURING PEACE SUPPORT OPERATIONS A SURVEY AND ANALYSIS OF RECENT MISSIONS (SECOND DRAFT)

by

Robin Hay

Global Affairs Research Partners

for

The Peacebuilding and Human Security Division Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade A SURVEY AND ANALYSIS OF RECENT MISSIGNS

Robin Hay

Gobal Affairs Research Partners

100

The Feacebacketing and Human Security Disistent Department of Fareign Afairs and International Trade

Seel Ol viennel

INTRODUCTION

It is commonplace now to observe that in the late 20th century war is more often than not being waged against civilians. How appropriate, then, that civilians are beginning to play a predominant role in United Nations' peace support operations (PSOs) intended to bring an end to war and a beginning of peace.

Clearly, civilians have a large stake in the outcome of such undertakings. But civilian participation in peace support operations is more than a reflection of their interest. It is the result, instead, of three closely related developments: the end of the Cold War, the prominence of intrastate conflict, and the resort to peacebuilding as a method for addressing these post-cold war conflicts.

PSOs have responded to these developments by becoming a multi-disciplinary art to a far greater degree than they were in the first 45 years of United Nations (UN) peace missions. As such, they represent the international community's struggle to come to grips with conflict and its resolution on the doorstep of the new millennium. Front and centre in that struggle is the effort to promote peacebuilding. Indeed, PSOs are often the entry point for a longer term UN bid to build peace in recently war-torn societies.

In this study, I will examine how civilian peacebuilding is being integrated into UN mandated PSOs. While the focus will be on some of the more recent or ongoing missions -- MINURCA in the Central African Republic, UNOMSIL in Sierra Leone, UNTAES in Eastern Slavonia, MINURSO in Western Sahara, and UNOMIL in Liberia -- reference will also be made to some earlier missions.

The purpose of the study is to identify some of the issues that Canada and the United Nations will likely be grappling with as they engage in new and future PSOs. What types of PSOs can we expect? Does Canada have the appropriate tools to contribute to them? What progress is being made toward better coordination among UN departments and agencies and how can it be improved, if at all? What gaps in policy and doctrine exist? These are some of the

It is commonplace now to observe that in the late 20th century war is more often than not being waged against civilians. How appropriate, then, that civilians are beginning to play a predominant role in United Nations' nesse support operations (PSOs) untended to bring an end to war and a beginning of peace.

Clearly, divilians have a large trike in the outcome of such undertakings. But civilian peace support operations is more than a reflection of their interest. It is the result, strated of times closely related developments; the end of the Cold War, the prominence of intrastant condition, and the resort to peacebuilding as a nethod are addressing these post-cold war sentitions.

PSOs have responded to these developments by becoming a main-disciplinary art to a far greater degree than they were in the first 45 years of United Ivations (UN) peace missions. As such, they represent the international constrainty's struggle to come to grips with conflict and its respectition on the doorstep of the new critical and come in come in that struggle is the effort for promote peacebuilding. Indeed, PSOs are often the entry point for a longer term UN bid to brill make in recently war form societies.

In this study, I will examine how civilian peacebuilding is being integrated into UN mendated PSOs. While the focus will be on some of the more recent or engoing mustous MENTREA in the Central African Republic, UNOMSE is Sierra Loone, UNTAES in Eastern Slavenia, MINTURSO in Western Sahara, and UNOMEE in Liberia -- reference will also be made to some eagler missions.

The purpose of the study is to identify some of the issues that Canada and the United Nations will likely be grappling with as they engage in new and finure PSOs. What types of PSOs can we would be considered that have the separative tools to contribute to them? What progress is noting made toward better consideration among UN departments and agencies and how can to be improved, if at self. What gaps in policy and doctrine exist? These are some of the questions that will be implicitly asked and hopefully answered by the study.

The rest of the paper is divided into four sections. First, a short section on background and definitions will establish the parameters of discussion and provide the context for the study. Next, is a section devoted to the examination of the mandates of recent operations to determine how peacebuilding is faring in these missions and what trends can be identified for the future. The third section will build on the first two, reflecting on the progress that has been made, identifying the challenges that remain, and proposing some tentative recommendations for Canada, both in terms of what it can do at home and at the United Nations. The final section will draw some general conclusions.

An advisory about limitations. This paper is certainly not the first word on the subject of UN PSOs, nor is it intended to be the last. A far more detailed, thorough-going and intensive study would be required to do the subject complete justice. Time-limitations prevent that. Hopefully, though, this paper will give policymakers and interested observers pause to reflect about the nature of current PSOs and how Canada and the United Nations can best contribute to such complex undertakings, and perhaps move them to consider at least some of the recommendations made in the study.

questions that will be implicitly asked and hopefully answered by the study.

The rest of the paper is divided into four sections. First, a short section on packground and definitions will establish the partenesters of discussion and provide the context for the study. Next, is a section devoted to the examination of the mandates of recent operations to determine how peacebuilding as fairing in these raiserons and what mends can be identified for the future. The third section will build on the first two, reflecting on the progress that has been made, identifying the challenges that remain, and proposing some tentative recommendations for Canada, both in terms of what is can do at home and at the United Nations. The final section

An advisory about limitations. This paper is certainly not the first word on the subject of UN PSOs, nor is it intended to be she last. A far more detailed, thorough going and intensive study would be required to do the subject complete justice. Time immensions prevent that fiscounties, though, this paper will give policymakers and interested observers pause to reflect about the nature of current PSOs and how Canada and the United Mations can best contribute to the counties and extract the state of the state of the state.

I. FROM PEACEKEEPING TO PEACE SUPPORT OPERATIONS

Background

The final death rattle of the Cold War and the consequent rise of intra-state conflict spurred a resurgent interest in both the United Nations and in different forms of peacekeeping. More specifically, it created enthusiasm for different forms of UN military operations to stem the rising tide of internal armed conflict in which genocide -- or ethnic cleansing -- and the targeting of civilians is rapidly becoming a repellent norm. Traditional peacekeeping -- interpositionary military forces monitoring a cease-fire -- would not be enough it was argued.

New terms were invented and some old concepts revived: Multi-disciplinary peacekeeping, composite missions, humanitarian intervention, peace enforcement and peacebuilding. The international community became giddy with the possibilities. They were further emboldened by Security Council resolution 688 authorizing UN intervention to protect the Kurds in Northern Iraq from Iraqi military forces following the Gulf War. UNICEF Executive Director James Grant characterized the resolution as an "abrupt break with the past" and a "precedent" in the cause of humanitarian intervention when state sovereignty is invoked to violate human rights. Respected scholars, too, leapt on the bandwagon. Witness, for example, the concluding remarks of Tom Weiss and Kurt M. Campbell in their 1991 essay on military humanitarianism:

With the humanitarian intervention in Iraq, the international community may be perched on the brink of a new era in which states will codify the principles and identify the appropriate conditions when humanitarian imperatives will override domestic

John MacKinlay has been one of the most active and cogent thinkers about the different types of UN military responses that will be required of peacekeepers in the post cold war. He refers to these different operations as first, second, and third generation peacekeeping. See John MacKinlay...

Address by Mr. James P. Grant, Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund to the Humanitarian Ceasefires: Peacebuilding For Children Conference." Ottawa: Centre for Days of Peace. Humanitarian Ceasefires: Peacebuilding for Children. Report of a Conference, Ottawa, 24-27 November 1991, pp.122-123.

Santor stand

The final death ratio of the Cold War and the consequent rise of intra-state continut spurred a resurgent interest in both the United Nations and in different forms of peacekeeping. More specifically, it created enthus asta for different forms of UN military operations to stem the disting tide of internal armed conflict in which generate — or ethnic cleansing — and the digeting of civilians is rapidly becoming a repellent norm. Traditional peacekeeping — interpositionary arithmy forces monitoring a repellent norm. Traditional peacekeeping — interpositionary arithmy forces monitoring a cesse fire — would not be enough it was argued.

composite missions humanisation and some oid concepts revived; Multi-disciplinary proceeding. The international community became giridy with the possibilities. They were further emboldeded by Security Council resolution 688 authorising Utvinservention to protect the Kurds in Northern Implicant Inquiritiesy forces following the Cult War. UNICEF Executive Director James Grant characterized the resolution as an "abrupt break with the past" and a "precedent" in the cause of burnasitarian intervention when state sovereignty is involved to violate human rights. * Respected actions of the procedent of the burnashing of the burnashing remarks of Tom

With the humanitanan intervenuen in Iraq, the international community may be perched on the brink of a new era in which states will codify the principles and identify the appropriate conditions when humanitation imperatives will override domestic.

John MacKinlay has been one of the most active and cogent shirtains about the different types of UIV military responses that will be required of peacestooppers in the post cold was Heureless to these different operations as first, sepond, and durd remember peacestooppers. See John MacKinlay...

Address by his James P. Grant, Executive fine-ctor of the United Nations Children's Fund to the Hunstinianian Censeligs: Peacebuilding: For Children Conference "Ottawa: Centre for Days of Feace Filmentations Censeligs: Peaceconfiding for Children Report of a Conference, Ottawa, 24-27 November 1991, pp. 122-123.

jurisdiction. Military humanitarianism provides a bridge between Cold War military capabilities and the vision of new world order proponents.³

It was in this heady atmosphere that UN Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali published his Agenda for Peace, which in its prescription for a comprehensive approach to peace called not only for peacekeeping but for peace enforcement.. Old and respected UN hands like Sir Brian Urquhart -- also known as Mr. Peacekeeping -- called for the establishment of voluntary UN military brigades to undertake enforcement activity especially in cases of gross transgressions of human rights.⁴ But very quickly, this sense of optimism that the UN could enforce peace and would intercede to prevent humanitarian disasters was dashed on the shores of conflicts in Bosnia, Somalia, and Rwanda. The new world order was tested -- along with many of the new assumptions about forceful peacekeeping -- and found wanting.

Out of this crucible of failure one thing became abundantly clear: Peace cannot be imposed on warring societies but must be a shared desire sincerely committed to by combatants if the effort is to stand a reasonable chance of success.⁵ It also became clear that internecine and internal armed conflicts would be a primary feature of the international landscape unless and until the root causes underlying them were addressed. While enthusiasm for peace enforcement-type activities began to recede, peacebuilding rose to the fore as method for addressing deeprooted conflict.

Defining Peacebuilding

Thomas G. Weiss and Kurt M. Campbell, "Military Humanitarianism." Survival,. Vol. 33 No. 5 (Sept./Oct. 1991), p. 463-464.

Brian Urquhart, "For a UN Volunteer Military Force." The New York Review of Books, 10 June 1993.

See, for instance: Thomas Franck, "A Holistic Approach to Building Peace." in Olara Otunnu and Michael W. Doyle, Peacemaking and Peacekeeping for the New Century, New York: Rowan and Littlefield Publishers Inc. (1998), p. 278.

unad map. Military blancastarianism provides a bridge between Cold Wes military capabilities and the vision of new world order emponents

It was in this heady strateginers that UN Secretary General Houses Bournes-Chalt oblighed his Agenda for Pence, which in its prescription for a companiestary approach to peace aliest not only for peaceterping but for neare enforcement. Old and respected UN heads like in Stran Comman - also known as Mr. Peaceterping - called for the establishment of voluntary in Military origades to undertake enforcement activity especially in cases of gross transgritusions of numeral rights. But very quotity, this sense of optimism that the UN could enforce peace the world intercede to prevent formanitation directers was dashed on the shores of conflicts in securing about forceful peaceteeping - and found wasted - along with many of the new strangulates about forceful peaceteeping - and found wasting.

One of this creedle of failure one thing persons admediantly clear Peace cannot be uposed on warring societies but must be a shared desire smootely committed to by combatants of the effort is to stend a reasonable chance of success. It also became clear that internecine ad internal armed conflicts would be a primary feature of the international landscape unless and that the root causes underlying them were addressed. While culturalisant for peace carlotteneously pe activities began to recede, passebuilding root to the tone as method for addressing deep-

tellaing Peacebuilding

Thomas G. Weiss and Eurt M. Campbell, "Military Humanitationism." Survival,. Vol. 33: No. 5 (Sept.) Con 1991), p. 463-464.

Brish-Edginst, "Form UN Volunteer Millimy Frees", the New York Review of Pools, 10 June 1993.

See, for materies, Thomps Francis, A Hollade Approach to Hollade Peace," in Okta Cyman and Mishasi W. Doyle, Farmanding and Peacekerping for the New Century, New York: Appear and Lucielled Febrikhers (no. (1998), et. 278

In the Canadian government's definition, peacebuilding is the effort to strengthen the prospects for internal peace in formerly war-torn societies, and decrease the likelihood of renewed violent conflict. The overarching goal of peacebuilding is to enhance the indigenous capacity of a society to manage conflict without violence. Ultimately, then, peacebuilding aims at building human security, a concept that includes democratic governance, human rights, the rule of law, sustainable development, and equitable access to resources.

While a more precise definition of peacebuilding remains elusive, there is considerable agreement about what it should entail on the ground.⁶ Peacebuilding can involve a wide array of initiatives and activities aimed at reducing tensions and strengthening mechanisms for peaceful conflict resolution in countries prone to large scale violence. These peacebuilding activities are intended to create a more stable atmosphere in which the root causes of conflict can be addressed. The list of activities which can considered as peacebuilding is practically endless depending on the local context, but included in most standard lists are many of the functions of modern peacekeeping operations, including:

- election monitoring\supervision\organization
- de-mining
- · disarmament, demobilization, reintegration
- resettlement and/or repatriation of refugees and internally displaced
- economic assistance\reconstruction
- legislative and judicial support\training\reform
- police and military training
- human rights monitoring\investigation\education
- institution-building
- rehabilitation
- conflict resolution, mediation, and third party problem-solving
- trust\confidence building

See Annex I for a brief overview of some of the more recent definitions that have been offered.

In the Canadian government's definition, peacebuilding is the effort to strangthen the ospects for internal peace in formerly war torn societies, and docrease the likelihood of renewed olent conflict. The everenting goal of peacebuilding is to enhance the indigenous capacity of society to manage conflict without violence. Ultimately, then, peacebuilding situs at building man security, a concept that includes democratic government, human rights, the rule of law, stalingles development, and equitable access to resources.

While a more precise definition of peacebuilding remains clusive, there is considerable received about what it should entail on the ground.* Peacebuilding can involve a wide array initiatives and activities anned at reducing tensions and designating mechanisms for peaceful officit resolution in countries prone to large scale violence. These peacebuilding activities are ended to create a more stable atmosphere in which the root causes of conflict can be addressed as list of convities which can considered as peacebuilding is practically endiess depending on a local context, but included he most standard lists are many of the functions of modern acckeeping operations, including

election monitoring/supervision/organization

disamment, demobilization, relategration

togrammer and published supportunities of the police and redinary training

human rights monitoring/investigation/education

condition resolution, men

See Amore I for a mist overview of some of the more recent definations that have

- strengthening civil society
- psychological support

The list could go on. Nearly as striking is the number of different agencies and organizations that can claim a share of the peacebuilding pie: government departments and agencies; national and international relief and development actors; non-governmental organizations; private sector companies; international financial institutions; and regional organizations. Each of them are eager to exploit the nexus between development and security commonly known as peacebuilding.

The inclusion of many of these activities, along with different civilian organizations, in the planning and undertaking of modern peacekeeping has led to the use of the broader term "peace support operations" to describe today's complex missions. It is a term that is intended to embrace the wider and more engaged nature of the activity in the field. While not used by the United Nations itself - which maintains a Department of Peacekeeping Operations - "peace support operations" or "PSOs" is the term now used by the Canadian government to describe the complex missions to which Canada is called to contribute.

A glance at the mandates of many recent PSOs demonstrates how ingrained certain of these peacebuilding activities have become to many operations. As we shall see below de-mining and disarmament/demobilization/reintegration is prominent in nearly every operation (especially in Africa), as is election (or referendum) monitoring, supervision and even organization. Human rights investigation and reporting is also a prominent activity, along with security sector reform often with the use of civilian police in both training and institution-building. Infrastructure rebuilding, of such things as roads, bridges or telephone lines is not unusual. When some activities are not an explicit part of the PSO mandate, the operation often works closely with other peacebuilding actors that have a responsibility for such activities, such as the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), The UN Development Program (UNDP), the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), and international financial institutions (IFIs).

mount in animal support

The Ret could go on Nearly as striking is the number of different against and generations that can claim a since of the peacefulding piet government departments and generics; notional and international relief and development actors; non-governmental regarded and regional financial institutions; and regional regional financial institutions; and regional regional regional financials institutions; and regional regional regional and sountly forour as peacefulding

The inclusion of many of these sonvities, along with different civilian organizations, in a planning and undertaking of moment peaceteeping has led to the use of the broader term peace support operations. It is a term that is intended to mbrace the wider and more engaged nature of the source in the field. While not used by the fulfed Nations itself - which residentees a Department of Peaceteeping Operations - "peace apport operations" or "PSOs" is the term naw used by the Canadian government to describe the ompley missions to which Canada is eated to contribute.

A glance at the mandates of many operations. As we shall see below describing personal forms and the personal forms of the personal

II. RECENT OPERATIONS AND MANDATES

The report of the International Peace Academy's most recent annual Vienna Seminar, held in July 1998, contained the following bold statement:

[P]erhaps the greatest challenge of peacekeeping operations today is coming to terms with the fact that classic peacekeeping mandates are, for the most part, a thing of the past. Besides lingering examples such as the UN Peace-keeping force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) - which many would argue has frozen the situation in Cyprus - and the UN Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP), first-generation peacekeeping is barely conceivable as a policy option today.⁷

The report went on to note that not only have non-military aspects of operations assumed a larger role in recent years, but the composition of missions has added layers of complexity to an already tangled web of relationships.

Before turning to examine the peacebuilding aspects of some of the more recent PSOs, we would be well advised to contemplate the full import of these statements. In sum, what they tell us is, first, that the PSOs we are seeing today are a relatively new phenomena for the United Nations, for member countries, and for those actors employed in the field. While, as the above statement notes, traditional operations can barely be conceived of as a policy option today, clearly the break with tradition and coming to terms with new realities in an organization as hidebound (no offence intended) and politicized as the United Nations is a test for that organization.

Michéle Griffin (Rapporteur), "IPA Seminar on Peacemaking and Peacekeeping." Vienna, 20-30 July 1998, New York: International Peace Academy, IPA Training Seminar Report, p. 5.

The report of the international Peace Academy's most recent annual Vienna Seminar, held in July 1998, contained the following hold statement:

[F] strings the greatest challenge of peaceloging operations rodgy is coming to terms with the fact that classic neaselecting mandates are, for the most part, a ming of the past. Besides lingering area for the most part, a ming of the past. Besides lingering examples such as the UN vesce-temping force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) - which many would argue has frozen the situation in Cyprus - and the UN Military Observar Group to India and Trakistan (UNMOSEP), first-generation peacefeeping is barely conceivable as a policy option today.

The roport went ou to note that not only have con-military aspects of operations assumed layer fold in second years, but the deseposition of missions has added layers of complexity to a stready tuneled web of relationships.

Before trading to examine the prescholding aspects of the anore recent PSOs, we would be well advant to contemp at the field import of these statements. In sum, what they we would be well advant to contemp at the field of the second to the field of the second to the field. While, as the above derived to the their field. While, as the above this ment cores, maditional operations can berely be concerved of as a policy option codes, clearly the break with tradition and coming to terms with pew realities in an organization as indevound to organization as indevound.

Michele Guiffin (Raymontaur), "FA Spaintr on Postenishing and Postekeeping," Vienna, 20-30 July 1998, New York: International Peace Academy, JPA Training Seminor-Report of S.

In this regard, we also need to remember that the UN has been faced with a series of quite different and dangerous challenges in the last ten years, challenges for which, for the most part, it has never been equipped nor prepared, either constitutionally or in terms of human and financial resources. While it has met some of them, it has failed abysmally at others. Nevertheless, it tends to be judged by its performance as a whole and each new operation contemplated, regardless of what type it is, bears the stigma of all past failures. If the organization can be criticized for moving too slowly to adopt new methods, procedures, and mechanisms to meet today's realities, it might also be excused somewhat for practicing due diligence in a complicated international environment.

The second thing to take from the IPA statement is that the new PSOs are highly complex undertakings involving a bewildering array of actors from a variety of backgrounds with different levels of experience, not to mention motivations, engaging in what is intrinsically and intricately a deeply politicized and resource-challenged process. No wonder, then, that progress is slow and advancements are incremental. We should not be surprised either that given the political and bureaucratic nature of the organization, there are limits to what can be expected in terms of procedural improvements.⁸ This does not mean that we shouldn't keep trying to improve, but neither should we discount the progress that has been made in the last ten years in new and very difficult circumstances.

In short, today's PSOs should be judged not only against some future ideal or even what the present context demands, but also against the recent past and the enormous challenges that the UN has faced this decade. By that measure, as we will see from an examination of recent PSO mandates, striking progress has been made in some areas.

Peacekeeping Yesterday and Today

Interview with Col. Michael Snell and David Angell, Canada's Permanent Mission to the United Nations, New York, December 7, 1998.

The second coing to take from the IPA statement is that the new PSOs are highly complex, adensicings involving a bewildering array of autors from a variety of backgrounds with different vets of experience, not to mention motivations, engaging in what is intrinsically and intricately despity politicized and resource-classicaged process. No wonder, then, that progress is slow and Ivancements are incremental. We should not be surprised either that given the political and meantratic nature of the organization, there are timits to what can be expected in terms of coedural improvements. This does not mean that we shouldn't keep trying to improve, but sither should we discount the progress that has been made in the last ten years in new and very

In short, today a PSOs should be judged not only against some future ideal or even what present domain demands, but also against the recont past and the enormous challenges that a Till has faced this decade. By that increase, as we will see, from an examination of resent O man terms, surface progress, has been made in crails areas.

Peacekeeping Vesterday and Today

Interview with $100 Michael Saell and David Angell, Canada's Permanent Mission to

In January 1949, unarmed UN military observers were deployed to the border between India and Pakistan to patrol and observe a cease-fire line in the disputed state of Jammu and Kashmir. UNMOGIP's functions were to observe, report, and investigate complaints of cease-fire violations and submit its finding to each party and to the Secretary-General. Seven-years later the first armed peacekeeping troops (UNEF I) were deployed to the Middle East during the Suez Crisis to secure and supervise a cease-fire between Egypt on one side and Britain, France and Israel on the other.

For forty years, until 1989, peacekeeping fell into the pattern that these operations set. Prior to the UNTAG mission to Namibia, peacekeepers primarily conducted one of four jobs: internal pacification to prevent the renewal of fighting in an intra-state conflict; buffer forces separating warring parties in an inter-state conflict; border patrols, involving cease-fire supervision, fact-finding, reporting, and patrolling; and observation, unarmed supervision of a truce, cease-fire, or armistice line. Fifteen such mission were conducted between 1949 and 1989.

In only ten years since 1989, twenty-six missions have been launched. Most of those missions bear little resemblance to the earlier operations in that they contain predominantly civilian elements and their mandates are far more demanding.

Peacekeeping in transition

Peacebuilding activities in peacekeeping operations and civilian participation in them is not new:

In 1962-63 the United Nations Temporary Executive Authority (UNTEA) administered the territory of West New Guinea (West Irian) during the handover of authority from the Netherlands to Indonesia. This civilian effort was complemented by a 1,500 strong United Nations Security Force.

International Peace Academy, Peacekeeper's Handbook, New York: Pergamon Press, 1984, p. 31.

In January 1949, unarmed GIV military observers were deployed to the border between a send Palestan at parrol and observe a cease-fire line in the disputed state of Januari and himir. UNIMOGIP's functions were to observe, report, and investigate complaints of cease-fire stions and attend in finding to each party and to the Secretary-General. Seven-years later the sumed peacekeeping troops (CDUEF I) were deployed to the Middle East daming the Suez as to secure and supervise a cease-fire between Egypt on one side and Britain, France and

For forty years, until 1989, procedescoing fell into the pattern that these operations set in to the UNITAG mission to Number, pracessores originarily conducted one of four jobst real procedence to prevent the reserval of fighting in an intra-scate conditor, inspire forces making warring parties in an inter-state conflict, forder patrolly broken proceding cease-fire experiment reporting, reporting, and parolling, and observation, unarmed supervision of a consection of a statistics line. Fifteen such mission were conducted between 1949 and 1989.

In only ten years since 1989, menty-six missions have been istinched. Most of those tons been little resemblades to the seafler operations in that they contain predominantly in elements and their mandates are far more demanding.

Peacekeeping in transition

Peaceballosing appyrides in peacetic sping operations and civilian participation in them in

In 1962-63 the United Nationa Temporary Executive Authority (UNTEA) administered the tentiony of West Erac) during the handover of authority from the Netherlands to independ This civilian effort was complemented by a 1,500 arong United National Security Force.

integrational Peace Academy, Feacehaguer's Hondbook, New York, Pergamon Press, 0821 o. 01

- A large Civilian Operations component was attached to the mostly disastrous 1960 to 1964 UN mission to the Congo (ONUC). This component was responsible for relief and civil reconstruction and remained after the military peacekeeping forces had left.
- The interminable peacekeeping mission in Cyprus (UNFICYP) has included both a civilian Operations Economic department and a civilian police (UNCIVPOL) component to help maintain law and order; and
- Peacekeeping operations in Lebanon (UNIFIL), Israel-Syria (UNDOF), Gaza (UNEF I), and following the 1973 Middle East war (UNEF II) all engaged in peacebuilding-type activities, from involvement in civic affairs to the provision of humanitarian relief.¹⁰

Still, the point of departure for the current trend in multi-disciplinary peace support operations is generally agreed to be the relatively recent undertaking in Namibia in 1989. There, UNTAG was deployed to supervise and oversee elections that established the country independent of South Africa. Election observers, civilian police (CIVPOL) constitutional experts, and an international jurist spearheaded the mission whose activities, again, were complemented by a UN military force that provided security leading up to and during the elections. A civilian Special Representative of the UN Secretary General (SRSG) headed the mission instead of the military commander, a rare though not unheard of arrangement at the time.

The timing of UNTAG -- just as the Cold War was winding down -- and its success, emboldened the UN to undertake similar civilian-military operations in the Africa, Central America, and, most ambitiously, Cambodia. Taken together, these missions provide a template for some of the PSOs we are seeing today. They improvised on the Namibian precedent in ways that opened the door to broader peacebuilding during peace support operations.

ONUCA AND ONUSAL

For a fuller description of these and other peacekeeping operations with civilian components see: Robin Hay, "Civilian Aspects of United Nations Peacekeeping." Ottawa: Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security Background Paper, No 38 (October 1991).

A large Circles Operations component was attached to the mostly disserone 1950 to 1964 UN mission to the Congo (ONIAC). This component was responsible for relief and civil reconstruction and remained after the military peacekeeping forces had left

The interminable pesceleoping mission in Cygnus (UNFICYI) has included both a civilian Operations Economic department and a civilian police (UNCIVPOL) component to help maintain law and order; and Peacekeeping operations in Lebanon (UNIFIL), Israel-Syria (UNDOF), Cara (UNEFI), and following the 1973 Middle East war (UNEF 1) all engaged in reaccondiding-type activities, from involvement in civic arisins to the provision of humanitarian relief.

Still, the point of departure for site current wend in stabilistical posce support perations is greately agreed to be the reintively nevent undertaking in Namibia in 1989. There, NTAG was deployed to supervise and average alactions that established the country independent South Africa. Election courtwars, from points (CIVPOL) constitutional expens, and an iterational jurist speatheaded the mission whose activities, again, were complemented by a UN ditury force that provided security leading up to and during the elections. A divillan-Special opposementary force that provided security leading up to and during the elections. A divillan-Special opposementation of the UN Secretary General (SESG) headed the mission instead of the military mander, a rate though not unbeard of errangement at the time.

The firming of UNITAG — just as like Cold War was winding down — and its success, doldered the UNITAG underske similar civilian-military operations in the Africa Central cories, and, must embitiously. Cambodus. Taken regetter, these missions provide a templane some of the PROs we are seeing today. They unprovided on the Namibian psycodest, in ways a come of the PROs we are seeing today. They unprovided on the Namibian psycodest, in ways a come of the PROs we are seeing today. They unprovided on the Namibian psycodest, in ways.

ONUCA AND ONUSAL

For a failer description of these and other peacekeeping operations with civilian components are Roam Pay, "Civilian Aspects of United Nations Peacekeeping." Onewar Canadian Institute for international Peace and Security Background Paper No. 38 (October 1991).

The United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) was a more or less conventional peacekeeping operation, while the United Nations Observer Group in El Salvador (ONUSAL) went beyond traditional peacekeeping. ONUCA was a military operation established in December 1989 to monitor compliance by the signatories with the security aspects of the Esquipulas II peace accord in Central America. It was, however, accompanied by both a civilian International Support and Verification Commission (CIAV) to assist in the demobilization of the contras in Nicaragua, and an election supervisory component, the United Nations Observer Mission for Verification of Elections in Nicaragua (ONUVEN).

Like UNTAG in Namibia, the tasks of the military component of ONUCA were similar to those traditionally associated with peacekeeping. It is worth noting, however, that the Chief Military Observer for ONUCA did participate with the head of ONUVEN in negotiations between the outgoing and incoming Nicaraguan governments, and the National Resistance following the election. ONUCA also collaborated with civilian UN agencies in offering material inducements for demobilization including food, temporary housing and basic social services. Finally, ONUCA provided police training to demobilized National Resistance members.

ONUSAL, with its human rights verification mandate and its emphasis on judicial, military and police reform, undertook a role unprecedented in UN history. It moved peacekeeping further into the areas of peacebuilding and democratization.¹¹ And it introduced the notion that

The United Nutlous Observer Group in Central America (CIRLICA) was a more or less preventional passes/septing operation, while the United Mations Observer Group in El Salvador ONUSAL) went beyond traditional posses/septing ONUCA was a military operation established a December 1989 to monitor compiliance by the signatures with the security aspects of the sequipulas II prece accord in Central America. It was, nowever, accompanied by both a civilian stampational Support and Vertification Communical (CIAV) to assist in the damphilization of the forms in Micaragus, and an election appearance component, the United National Observer.

IASE UNTAG in Namibia, the make of the military component of ONUCA were similar three traditionally materiated with peacekeeping. It is worth noting, however, that the Chief of theme Osserver for ONUCA did participate with the head of ONUVEN in negotiations between a outgoing and incoming Palestageau governments, and the National Resistance following the content of the ONUCA also nollaborated with civilian UN agencies in offering material inducements of demobility and including food, temporary housing and basic social services. Finally, ONUCA ovided police training to describe National Resistance members

ONUSAL, with its Bussen rights verification mendate and its emphasis on judicial, utility and poince referre, andergook a relative statement in UN bistory. It moved peacekeeping maker into the areas of pracebuilding and demonstration. And it introduced the notion that human rights monitoring could serve, not only as a component of a UN peace support operation but could be central to such undertakings While ONUSAL consisted mostly of civilians (human rights observers, legal and political advisers and educators) it included fifteen military liaison officers and twenty-seven police advisers (the total strength projected for these two components was 1000). With other UN agencies, ONUSAL also focused its efforts on socio-economic development in El Salvador.

In the early 1990s, both ONUCA and ONUSAL illustrated the need for even further-reaching peacekeeping mandates, where possible, emphasizing peacebuilding in depth. Indeed, Stephen Baranyi and Liisa North argued that ONUCA and ONUSAL were illustrative of why peacekeeping must be combined with effective peacebuilding if conflicts are to be resolved, not just managed temporarily:¹² areas rights measuring could serve, not only as a component of a UN peace support operation at coals be ceated to such undersulings While ONUSAL consists a mostly of civilians (human glue observers, legal and political advisors and advisors) it included fifteen utilitary liaison fireers and twenty-seven police advisors (the total strength projected for these two components as 1000). With other UN agencies, ONUSAL also focused its efforts on socio-economic value masses in El Salvador.

In the early 1990s, both ONUCA and ONUSAL illustrated the need for even furtheraching peacestosping mandates, where possible, emphasizing peacebuilding in depth. Indeed,

Lie
Lies therefore Baranyi and Liles there are not ONUCA and ONUSAL were illustrative of why accesseping must be combined with effective peacebuilding if conflicts are to be resolved, not

...while the shooting wars have stopped in Nicaragua and El Salvador...many of the structural underpinnings of conflict remain, and the progress which has been achieved in some areas remains fragile. This is obvious in the case of the region's dramatic socioeconomic inequalities, but it is also true with respect to human rights violations, military praetorianism and other conflict sustaining features of Central American societies.

MINUGUA

Human rights violations as a conflict sustaining feature in Central America were addressed head on in the 1994 UN Human Rights Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA). Established by the General Assembly, a rare but not unheard of occurrence, MINUGUA was directed specifically to address a persistent pattern of human rights abuses in the country. It carried out both verification and institution-building activities, employing more than 250 human rights monitors, legal experts, police, and indigenous specialists. In verification, MINUGUA monitored compliance of the government and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG) to both the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and human rights aspects of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

In a reversal of the usual process, the civilian operation was in 1997 joined by a group of 155 UN military observers dispatched to verify the ceasefire in Guatemala. In March 1998 MINUGUA mandate was expanded to verify all aspects of the peace accord. This necessitated the creation of five separate verification areas: human rights; indigenous affairs; social, economic, and agrarian; strengthening of civilian power and role of the army in a democratic society; and resettlement and integration. In MINUGUA, peacebuilding led the way while peacekeeping assumed the role of add-on. MINUGUA also firmly incorporated human rights as a critical aspect in building peace. The fact that the mission was established at the behest of the General Assembly, which claims responsibility for peacebuilding over the Security Council, may serve

Baranyi and North, supra note 2.

...while the shooting was have stopped in Nicaregua and El Salvador, many of the structural unisepannings of conflict remain, and the progress which has been somewed in some areas remains flagile. This is obvious in the case of the region's dramatic socioeconomic mequalities, but it is also true with respect to human rights violations, but it is also true with respect to human rights violations, military praetorianism and other conflict sustaining features of Cantral American sometics.

AMERICALIA

Hieran rights violations as a conflict sustaining feature in Central America vers addressed each on in the 1994 UN Human Rights Neitheation Afficient Notation in Contempale (Mignily U. America on the General Assembly, a time but not unbeard of occurrence, MINUGUA was read to the specificality to address a persistent pattern of human rights abuses in the country. It exists out both verification and institution-building activities, employing more than 250 human ghas monitors, legal expects, police, and indigenous specialists. In verification, MINUGUA controlled compliance of the government and the Unided Revolucionaria Nacional Customalities of Astronom on the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and human rights aspects of a Astronomy on Manual Rights of human rights aspects of

In a reversal of the usual process, the civilian operation was in 1997 joined by a group of 155 UN military observers dispatched to verify the consciure in Guatemala. In March 1998 Thirtically prantises was expanded to verify all aspects of the peace account. This necessitated a creation of five separate verification areas; human rights, indigenous affairs; social, economic, id agration, strengthening of divilian power and toir of the stray in a democratic secrety; and settlement and subgrasson. In MINUGUA, peacebuilding led the way while seacekeeping surged the role of add-one. MINUGUA, also firmly incorporated minual rights as a critical secret in building peace. The fact that the mission was combished at the behast of the General recently, which claims responsibility for peacebuilding over the Seartly Council, may serve as a worthwhile precedent for attempts to entrench peacebuilding into future PSO mandates.

Barcay, and North, sepre note 2

UNTAC

The UN operation in Cambodia set a precedent of a different sort. In conception at least, the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) carried peacekeeping beyond peacebuilding into nation-building. It was one of the largest, most ambitious (and expensive!) full- service peacekeeping operations ever, involving seven components: human rights, electoral, military, civil administration, civilian police (CIVPOL), repatriation, and rehabilitation. Together these components were responsible for supervising the peace agreement, administering the country during the transition period, attending the birth of democracy through the holding of an election, and initiating, through rehabilitation efforts, the reconstruction of Cambodia.

The civilian aspects of UNTAC clearly focused on a number of peacebuilding activities that could be interpreted as precursors for today's operations. CIVPOL's duties, for instance, included protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms and supervising the local police force to ensure the effective and impartial implementation of law and order. It trained local forces in basic police methods and traffic-control procedures and provided special training to police officers and judges in human rights and the implementation of the new Cambodian penal code.

The repatriation program of UNTAC emphasized "Quick Impact Projects" focusing on infrastructure, health, water, agriculture and education. The rehabilitation program concentrated on food security, health, housing, training, education, transportation, and the restoration of basic infrastructure, including public utilities. The military component and CIVPOL also supported information\education activities of UNTAC, helping to distribute audio-visual material throughout the country.

as worthwhile precedent for aftempts to entrench pascebuilding into future PSO mandates

DATES

The UN operation in Cambodia set a precedent of a different sort. In conception at least, be United Namens Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) carried peacekeeping beyond reaconditing into nation-building. It was one of the largest, most ambitious (and expensive) will-activing peacekeeping operations aver, involving seven components; numan rights, electoral, nationally civil administration, civil administration, civil administration, civil administration of the expervising the peace egreement, administration to gether these components were responsible for supervising the peace egreement, administration in occupant attenting the tenerately through the holding of an election, and installing the massition peace attention of democracy through the holding of an election, and installing through rehabilitation enforts, the reconstruction of Cambodia.

The civilian aspects of UNTAC classiv footsed on a number of peacebuilding activities at could be interpreted as presented to today's contained. CIVPOL's duties, for instance, chided protecting burner signer and fundamental freedoms and supervising the local poince force for ensure the effective and ungestal implementation of law and order. It trained local forces in each poince methods and traffic-neutral procedures and provided special training to police officers at judges in human rights and the implementation of the new Cambodian penal code.

The renamed health, water, agriculture and education. The reliabilitation program concentrated restractors, health, water, agriculture and education, the reliabilitation program concentrated food security, health, measing, training, education, transportation, and the restoration of basic restracture, including public utilities. The military component and CIVPOL also supported remained and civities of UNITAC, helping to distribute audio-visual material diroughout

III. PEACE SUPPORT OPERATIONS TODAY

MINURSO in the Western Sahara

The peacekeeping operation in the Western Sahara followed close on the heels of the UN's successful undertaking in Namibia. The Settlement Plan of 1988 that MINURSO was established to implement called for an interim ceasefire between Morocco, which was then (and still is) occupying the territory, and their POLISARIO adversaries. It also called for a process to ensure that the people of the territory were able to express their will on the issue of self-determination in a free and fair referendum.

More specifically, the peace plan asked that a Special Representative of the Secretary General, currently Mr. Charles Dunbar of the United States, be solely responsible for organizing and conducting a referendum -- and ensuring that when it took place, it did so in a free and fair environment -- in which the people could choose between independence and integration with Morocco. The SRSG was to be assisted in this task by a UN civilian military support group. In addition to a ceasefire, an exchange of prisoners between the two sides, and the cantonment of troops, the plan called for the return, assisted by the UN, of refugees and other Western Saharan residents after their right to vote had been established. The peace plan also called for the UN to monitor administration of the territory especially the maintenance of law and order.

MINURSO's mandate, as spelled out in Security Council Resolution 658, pointed to a truly composite military-civilian operation that has been tasked with fulfilling all the elements of the Settlement Plan, including: monitoring a cease-fire between Morocco and the POLISARIO Front; verifying the reduction of Moroccan troops in Western Sahara; monitoring the confinement of both sides' troops to specified locations; ensuring the release of all Western Saharan political prisoners or detainees; overseeing the exchange of prisoners of war; implementing the repatriation program, identifying and registering qualified voters, and organizing, ensuring, and proclaiming the results a free and fair referendum.

MENTIESO in the Western Schara

The peacekeeping operation in the Western Sahara followed close on the heels of the ANV s successful undertaking in Namibra. The Sanisment Plan of 1988 that MINURSO was stabilished to implement called for an interim certainty between Marcocco, which was then (and bill is) occupying the territory, and their POLISARIO advarance. It also called for a process or ensure that the people of the territory were able to express their will on the issue of self-cternination in a fine and thir pricegram.

More specifically, the peace plan axied that a Special Representative of the Secretary teneral, currently Mr. Charles Dunhar of the United States, be solely responsible for organizing and conflicting a referendant — and ensuring that when it took place, it did so in a fire and this ovironment — in which the people could aboose between independence and integration with forecast. The SRSC was to be assisted in this task by a UN civilian military support group, addition to a cestellier, an exchange of prisoners between the two sides, and the carbohinent theory, the plan called for the secure, assisted for the tearties of the tearties, especially the maintenance of law and order at UN to monitor administration of the teartiesy especially the maintenance of law and order.

Mainting of manuals, as spelled out in Security Council Resolution 658, possible to a survey consposite mintery civilize operation that has been tasked and fulfilling all the elements are Settlement Pian, including monitoring a cease-fire between Morocco and the POLISARIO out, varificing the reduction of Moroccan troops in Western Sahara monitoring the confinement both sides' troops to specified locations, ensuring the release of all Western Sahara political isoners of descinate overseting the exchange of passages of passages of war, implementing the repairing openishing describing qualified voters, and organizing, ensuring, and proclaiming openishing MINURSO is comprised of military observers, armed troops, a civilian component. And local staff. Its civilian component includes an Identification Commission, a Referendum Commission, a Repatriation Component, and civilian police.

Analysis

MINURSO has been dragging on for nearly eight full years now. A referendum was originally scheduled to take place in the early 1990s, but the process leading to that event has failed to breech the starting gate. While the SRSG was appointed to take full charge of referendum preparations during the transitional period following the ceasefire, the parties in conflict have squabbled over voter eligibility, blocking commencement even of the transitional period. MINURSO seems to have spent much of its time trying to identify those who are eligible to vote.

The operation in Western Sahara may yet prove successful once the parties agree on a way to resolve their differences over voter eligibility. Still, it has been a considerable drain on the financial resources of the UN, with a proposed budget of $65.1 million for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 alone. Not surprisingly as of September 1998 the overall budget shortfall for the mission stood at $55 million.

MINURSO shows the importance of dotting the Is and crossing the Ts in any settlement plan and ensuring that both parties share common perspectives on each element and are committed to implementing the agreement. This was not the case in the Western Sahara. As the operation began, several issues in the settlement plan remained outstanding, including agreement on who would be eligible to vote, how to get refugees to the polling stations, and the procedure for Moroccan withdrawal should the referendum vote decide against integration.

The decision to move ahead with the peace process, even when certain important issues remained outstanding in the Western Saharan settlement plan, has resulted in another costly, seemingly never-ending peacekeeping operation, which reflects badly on peacekeeping as a whole.

MENTERSO is compased of military observers armed troops, a civilist component. And at staff. Its civilist component includes an Identification Commission, a Referendum municules, a Recentiation Component, and civilian police.

Againsta

MINUMED has been dragging on for searly legis full years now. A referendum was ginally subcauded to take place in the early 1990s, but the process leading to that event has led to beseth the starting gate. While the SRSC was appointed to take full charge of erendum propersions during the traffitional period following the cesselfire, the parties in affer have squabbled over votar eligibility, blocking commencement even of the franctional riod. MINTIRSO seems to have span much of its time trying to identify those who are eligible.

The operation in Western Schem may yet prove successful once the parties agree on a considerable drain on the cooks their differenties on services of the CPA, with a proposed budget of S65 1 million for the cpatient of July 188 to 30 fone 1988 the overall budget shortfull.

MORE TEST Shows the importance of datting the Is and crossing the Is in any sentences a sed enduring that both parties share common perspectives on each element and are monthed to inquisionally the agreement. This was not the case in the Western Sahata was the control began, saveral assess in the sentences plan remained outstanding including agreement who would be eligible to you, how to get colleges to the politing stations, and the procedure More cose withfleaval should the referendum were decide against integration.

The decision or raws sheat with the peace process, even when certain important hands natined outsissing in the Western Sabaran sellioment plan, has resulted in smother south, mingly never-ceases peaceteeping operation, which reflects badly on peaceteeping as a whole, at least in public perceptions.

UNOMIL in Liberia

The savage armed conflict in Liberia that began in 1989 is an archetype of the kinds of internal wars that UN PSOs are established to help resolve. Civilians have been the primary victims, numbering up to 150,000 killed. Law and order broke down completely during the war. Refugees numbering 700,000 flooded into neighbouring countries and untold numbers of people were internally displaced.

At the same time, a subregional organization -- the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) -- took the lead in settling the conflict establishing a Military Observer Group (ECOMOG) in 1990. UNOMIL was established three years later under Security Council resolution 866 to help ECOMOG implement the Cotonou Peace Agreement.¹³

UNOMIL contained both military and civilian components, the latter of which included political, humanitarian, and electoral personnel. The mission was led by an SRSG to whom the military commander reported. The office of the SRSG was filled respectively by Trevor Livingston Gordon-Somers (Jamaica) from November 1992 to November 1994; Anthony B. Nyakyi (United Republic of Tanzania) from December 1994 to April 1997; and Tuliameni Kalomoh (Namibia) from April to September 1997. UNOMIL's mandate stressed full cooperation and close coordination between UNOMIL and ECOMOG. Established originally for seven months, UNOMIL was to comprise military observers as well as medical, engineering, communications, transportation and electoral components. It was to:

- observe and verify both presidential and legislative elections;
- assist in the cantonment, disarmament, and demobilization of combatants;
- assist in the coordination of humanitarian assistance activities in conjunction with existing

Subsequently amended and supplemented by the Abuja Agreement of 1995.

DNOMEL IS LIBERTA

The savage armed conflict in Liberts that began in 1989 is an archetype of the kinds of command wars that UN PSOs are established to delp resolve. Civilians have been the primary victims, numbering my to $50,000 killed. Law and order broke down completely during the war, kintigees numbering 700,000 flooded into neighbouring countries and untold numbers of people were internally displaced.

At the same time, a subregional organization—the Economic Community of West African sates (ECOWAS)—took the lead in sattling the conduct satablishing a Military Observer Group ECOMOG) in 1998. UNIONIE was established three years later under Security Council esolution 865 to help ECOMOG implement the Cotonon Peace Agreement.

UNIONEL humanization and electoral personnel. The mission was led by an SRSG to whom the olifical humanization and electoral personnel. The mission was led by an SRSG to whom the military commander sequence. The office of the SRSG was filled respectively by Travor military commander Stancia (Jameira) from November 1992 to November 1994; Ambony B. yelleyi (United Republic of Therania) from December 1994 to April 1997, and Tultament alternation (Jamiela) per April to September 1997 (UNICAMI semandate surested full cooperation alternation forward UNICAMI and EUCHAOO. Emandiate originally for seven delices december to comprise maintary observers as well as medical engineering ones.

observe and verify both presidential and legislative elections;
assist in the estimation of humanitarian assistance activities in conjunction with existing Subsequently amonded and emphanement by the Abusa Agreement of 1995.

- UN humanitarian relief operations;
- · report on violations of humanitarian law; and
- train ECOMOG engineers in mine clearance

In 1995, UNOMIL's mandate was modified by Security Council Resolution 1020 to include investigation and reporting on violations of human rights. It was also tasked with assisting local human rights groups, as appropriate, in raising voluntary contributions for training and logistic support.

In a report to the Security Council on September 13, 1995, the Secretary General pointed to several elements that he considered crucial for the success of the peace process in Liberia. Those included international assistance in rebuilding the country's economy and infrastructure and strengthening governmental institutions. He also stressed the importance of disarmament and demobilization of Liberia's estimated 50,000 to 60,000 combatants, of whom as many as 25 per cent were children, and their effective reintegration into civilian life.

There were a number of striking peacebuilding elements in the UNOMIL operation, not least of which was the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR) aspect. As Mats Berdal points out, DDR is central to peacebuilding, given that war over time imposes a social and economic order all its own. Successful DDR depends on ensuring that those who have benefited from this social order (warring parties and their soldiers) believe that their physical and economic security will not be adversely affected by "relinquishing arms and abandoning what for many is not just a profession, but also a way of life."¹⁴

Civilians played an important role in the DDR process in Liberia. The Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Office set up a Demobilization and Reintegration Unit (HACO). This unit was responsible for coordinating and managing the provision of food health, services, shelter

Mats R. Berdal, "Disarmament and Demobilisation after Civil Wars. arms, soldiers and the termination of armed conflicts." London: International Institute for Strategic Studies, Adelphi Paper 303 (1996), p. 73.

UN humaniarian relief operations:
report on violations of humaniarian law, and
train ECOMOG engineers in mine clearance

In 1995, UNOMIL, a mandate was modified by Security Council Resolution 1020 to study investigation and reporting on violations of humain rights. It was also tasked with isting local framap rights groups, as appropriate, in reising valuntary contributions for training a localing support.

in a report to the Scourity Council on September 13, 1995, the Secretary General pointed several elements that he done-like audies for the success of the peace process in Liberia. Ose included international assistance in rebuilding the country's economy and infrastructure and engineering governmental neithrations. He also succeed the importance of disarrangment and mobilization of Liberia's estimated 50,000 to 60,000 combinants of whom as many as 25 per mobilization of Liberia's estimated 50,000 to 60,000 combinants of whom as many as 25 per mobilization of their official and their official of their official into civilian life.

There were a number of attiting precedualistic elements in the UNONIL operation, nor set of which was the disarranged, derechanted and reintegration (DDR) aspect. As Mass and a points out, DOR is aspect, derechanted, given that war over time imposes a social and outernic order all its own. Successful DDR depends on ensuring that those who have benefited in this social order (warring parties and their soldiers) believe that those who have benefited and in this social order (warring parties and their soldiers) believe that their physical and economic unity will not be adversely affected by "reinquisling arms and abandoning what for arrang is

Civilians played an emporate role in the DDR process in Liberia. The Humanisanan sistemes Communication and Reintegration Unit (NACO). This visions responsible for coordinating and managing the provision of food health, services, shalter water and sanitation for the demobilization centres. It also coordinated bridging activities with local authorities, UN agencies and international and local NGOs. HACO also chaired the Task Force on Demobilization and Reintegration, which was comprised of UNOMIL, UN agencies, ECOMOG, the Liberian National Disarmament and Demobilization Commission, and representatives of the European Union, USAID, and international and national NGOs. The Task Force established subcommittees to deal with child soldiers and resettlement. UNICEF working with UNOMIL took the lead on this issue.

Mars R. Berdal, "Disarroament and Denobilisation after Civil Wars arms soldiers and the femiliarion of armed conflicts." London: interpational institute for Strategic Studies, Makinia Paper 303 (1994), or 73.

UNOMIL also included a human rights officer who provided assistance to the SRSG in fulfilling the human rights aspect of the mandate. In addition to the duties prescribed by its mandate in this regard, UNOMIL worked with the Liberian Ministry of Justice, UNDP, and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the UN Secretariat in Vienna to examine ways in which the Liberian justice system could be strengthened.

Finally, UNOMIL assisted ECOWAS in developing an electoral framework and holding elections. A UN technical survey team was dispatched in December 1996 to identify what steps would be needed to create a viable and credible framework for free and fair elections. Elections were held in July 1997 with UNOMIL's Electoral Division supporting the efforts of ECOWAS, who organized and conducted the elections.

Still, the most prominent feature of UNOMIL was the fact that it cooperated with a regional organization that took the lead. These types of arrangements are likely to be a prominent feature of PSOs in the future, and as we shall see, are not without their drawbacks and pitfalls.

Analysis

The war in Liberia may give rise to an adage: the longer and bloodier the war, and the more bloodthirsty the combatants who wage it, the greater the need for a truly comprehensive peace support operation to rebuild the peace (it is true of conflicts in Angola and Sierra Leone water and sanisation for the demobilization centres. It also coordinated bridging activities with ocal authorities, UN agencies and international and local NGOs. HACO also chained the Task force on Demobilization and Reintegration which was comprised of UNOAIL, UN agencies SCOMOG, the Liberian National Disarrangement and Demobilization Commissions and opresentatives of the European Union, USALD, and international and national NGOs. The Task force established subcommittees to deal with coild soldiers and resettlement. UNICEF working the UNIOAIL work the lead on this usual

UNIONITY also included a burners rights offer who provided assistance to the SRSG in affiling the human rights espect of the mandate. In addition to the duties prescribed by its landers in this regard, UNIONITY worked with the Liberran Ministry of Justice, UNIOP, and the rime Prevention and Crimmal Justice Branch of the UN Secretariat in Vienna to examine ways which the Liberran justice system could be then whered

Finally, UNONEL assisted ECDWAS in developing an electoral framework and holding entires. A UN recitation survey trans wer dispatched in December 1996 to identify what steps outdoor be needed to create a visite and redible frame work for free and fair electrons. Electrons are held in July 1997 with UNONELL'S Electoral Division supporting the efforts of ECOWAS.

Still, the most prominent feature of UNOMIL was die fact that it cooperated with a gional organization that took the lead. These types of arrangements are hirely to be a minimum testure of PSOs in the farmy, and as we shall see, are not without their drawbacks and Mexicon.

The was in Liberia may give rise to an adage; the longer and bloodier the was, and the me bloodinists in a bring of the completeness who was a true of the med for a brilly comprehensive to authors which the sound of the complete to the complete to the complete to the complete to the complete the complet as well). A Liberian peace seemed to demand every element of the peacebuilding repertoire -in spades -- from disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, through demining and dealing with child soldiers, to human rights monitoring and elections. A full grab bag.

The results have been mixed, primarily because the UN came late and as a secondary partner to an operation that had, until then, been conducted by a subregional organization – for six years. The resolution establishing the mission explicitly acknowledges the secondary role and late arrival of the UN. For instance, it assigns ECOMOG primary responsibility for "supervising the implementation of the military provisions of the Agreement and envisages the United Nations role shall be to monitor and verify this process." Elsewhere it notes that UNOMIL will be the first peacekeeping mission undertaken by the UN in cooperation with a peacekeeping mission already set up by another organization (emphasis added), in this case ECOWAS. The Security Council also commended ECOWAS for its continuing efforts to restore, peace, security and stability in Liberia.

While regional organizations are considered by many to be the wave of the future in peacekeeping they are for the most part less than adept at these types of missions not to mention at peacebuilding. For instance, while the mandate of ECOMOG was to create the conditions for free and fair elections, few of the governments contributing troops to the force were democratically elected themselves. Moreover, ECOMOG forces frequently engaged in a pattern of human rights abuses and transgressions -- including excessive use of force at checkpoints, torture during interrogation, and beatings in detention sometimes resulting in death -- which their officers often failed to address.

By coming late to the field, the UN in effect ceded control of the operation. ECOWAS was not established under Security Council authorization and was not required to keep the Council fully informed of its activities, as is normally the case in UN operations. Coordination well). A Liberran posce seemed to demand overy element of the peacebuilding repertoirs -spaces -- from discrimances, demobilization and reintegration, through demining and dealing to child soldiers, to human rights monitoring and elections. A full grab bag.

See: Herbert Howe, "Lessons of Liberia. ECOMOG and Regional Peacekeeping." International Security, Vol. 21 No. 3 (Winter 96/97), p. 62.

The results have been mixed, primarily because the UN came late and as a secondary of men to an operation that had, until then, been conducted by a subregional organization—for years. The resolution establishing the unistion explicitly seknowledges the secondary role and a strival of the UN. For instance, it assigns ECOMOG arrmary responsibility for "supervising implementation of the UN. For instance of the Agreement and envisages the United Nations of an elementation of the Agreement and envisages the United Nations of the to monitor and venity this process." Eisewhere if notes that UNOMIL will be the adoption with a peacel explay mission and years of the United Security and see no for another organization (emphasis added), in this case ECOWAS. The Security and that also communicated ECOWAS for its conguning efforts to restore, nearch, security and

While regional organizations are considered by many to be the wave of the future in occienting they are for the most part less than a lept at these types of missions not to mention reacebuilding. For instance, while his mandate of SCOMOG was to create the conditions for and fair circulous few of the governments contributing troops to the force were noceasedly elected themselves. A horsever, ECOMOG inness insquently engaged in a pattern human rights abused and transgivestions—including excessive use of force at chertiquing human rights abused and transgivestions—including excessive use of force at chertiquing the death of their vivide their

By coming fate to the field, the UN in effect seded control of the operation. ECOWAS and established under Security Council subscription and was not required to here the most fully informed of its schwides, as is normally the case in UN apprehions. Courdination between UNOMIL and ECOMOG was also lacking in the beginning since no mechanism was established for such. This raised serious problems for the UN in its efforts to achieve its peacebuilding agenda in Liberia. For instance, the UN was not involved in negotiating the time frame for elections that it was suppose to supervise and observe. Similarly, UNOMIL was at a loss as to what to do in the face of ECOMOG human rights transgressions.

See Heibert Howe, Lissons of Lineira, ECOMOC and Regional Peacekreeing," personnel decorrer, Vol. 21 No. 3 (Winese 96/97), p. 62;

The question to ask when considering the increase in regional and subregional involvement in peace support operations is, do these organizations have the resources, skills, commitment, and will to conduct PSOs according to UN principles, design and Charter requirements? When the UN abdicates in favour of regional intervention, this is something it will have less control over.

UNOMSIL in Sierra Leone

Security Council Resolution 1181 established UNOMSIL for six-months beginning in July 1998. Mr. Francis G. Okelo (Uganda) was appointed chief of the mission and Special Representative of the Secretary General. The priority in Sierra Leone, as the Secretary General reported to the Council in June, is to promote stability and security by disarming and demobilizing former combatants. Overall authority for the mission resides in the hands of an SRSG. Again the UN finds itself working with ECOWAS and ECOMOG. Again, too, this PSO includes distinctive and strong civilian peacebuilding elements.

Security Council resolution 1181 was particularly concerned with the plight of civilians in the Sierra Leone conflict. It expressed grave concern over the immense suffering and deaths that the conflict had visited upon refugees, displaced persons and especially children. It condemned the continuing violence against civilians carried out by the ousted junta and called for a process of national reconciliation to end the war.

In this effort, UNOMSIL is mandated to monitor the military and security situation in Sierra Leone and provide the SRSG with regular information on that situation. An initial group of 40 observers was established to do this with more being deployed as the security situation between UNOMIA and ECOMOG was also lacking in the beginning stoce no mechanism was established for such. This relied serious problems for the UN in its efforts to schieve its peacebuilding agends in Liberia. For instance, the UN was not involved in negotiating the time frame for elections that it was suppose to supervise and observe. Similarly, UNOMIL was at a loss as to what to do in the face of ECOMOG human rights unnegreesions.

The question to ask when the second my the increase in regional and subregional involvement in peace support operations is, do these arganizations have the resources, skills, communication, and will be conduct PSOs according to OM principles, design and Charter requirements? When the till to conduct favour of regional intervention, this is comething it will have less control over.

UNOMIST IN SIGITA LCONG

Security Council Resolution 1181 established UNOMSH, for six-months beginning in July 1988. Mr. Francis, G. Oktio (Uganda) was appointed chief of the mission and Special Copresentative of the Secretary Control. The priority in Siema Leone, as the Secretary General council to the Council of June, is to promote stability and security by disarrang and smobilizing forms commissions. Overall authority for the mission resides in the bands of an RNG. Again the UN finds hard working with ECOWAS and ECOMOG. Again, too, this PSO RNG. Again the UN finds hard working with ECOWAS and ECOMOG. Again, too, this PSO RNG.

Security Council resolution 118: was particularly concerned with the pright of rivilians the Sterra I cone conflict. It expressed praye concern over the unmense suffering and deaths at the conflict had visited upon refugees displaced persons and especially children to indemned the nominating violence against civilians carried out by the outled junta and called a process of patient fectorification to end the week.

In the effect CPCMSEL is mandered to mention the military and security sintation in the Leone and provide the SRSG with regular information on that situation. An initial group 40 observers was antablished to do use with more being deployed as me security abusing permits. Furthermore the military observers are to monitor the disarmament and demobilization of former combatants and monitor the role of ECOMOG in the provision of security and in the collection and destruction of arms in secure areas. As in UNOMIL, the observers in Sierra Leone are also charged with monitoring respect for international humanitarian law. Finally, the military component is asked to monitor the disarmament and demobilization of the Civil Defense Forces (CDF).

The civilian component of the operation is mandated to advise the government and police officials on police practice, training, re-equipment and recruitment, in particular on the need to respect internationally accepted standards of policing in democratic societies. It will also advise on and monitor the progress of police reform and restructuring in Sierra Leone. Finally, the civilian element of UNOMSIL is to report on violations of international humanitarian law and human rights and assist the Government in addressing human rights needs.

It should also be noted that Resolution 1181 encourages the international community to assist and participate in the longer term task of reconstruction and economic and social recovery and development in Sierra Leone. It also welcomes efforts of the Sierra Leone government to coordinate an effective national response to the needs of children affected by the conflict. Along these lines, the resolution also welcomes the efforts of the Special Representative for Children in Armed Conflict to make Sierra Leone "one of the pilot projects for a more concerted and effective response to the needs of children in the context of post-conflict peacebuilding".

Analysis

The conflict continues to rumble and flare in Sierra Leone and peacebuilding has hardly begun to make an impact. Again the UN is working with ECOWAS and ECOMOG, who hardly seem up to the task of defeating the rebels.¹⁶ What is striking about the mandate and the Security Patricia Fortier, Deployment: Crisis and Credibility. Notes from recent crises: Kosovo, Central America, Africa, Indonesia, and Iraq. An informal discussion paper (unpublished).

Inits. Furthermore the rightery observers are to monitor me disamments and demobilization format combattatis and monitor the role of ECOMOG in the provision of security and in the listoical and destruction of sense in secure mass. As in UNOMIL, the observers in Stems Leone also charged with monitoring respect for international humanitarian law. Finally, the military moment is asked to monitor the disamagnett and demobility atom of the Civil Defense Forces.

The civility component of the operation is mandated to advise the government and police broats on police practice, training, re-equipment and recruitment, in particular on the need to past internationally accepted smadards of policing in democratic societies. It will also advise and monitor the progress of policie reform and restructuring in Sierre I cone. Finally, the ritian element of UNOMSEL is to report on violations of international humanitarian law and man rights and asset the Government in addressing human rights needs

It should also be noted that Resolution 1181 encourages the international community to the and participate in the longer tens to be reconstruction and conomic and social recovery in an animal social secure it also incloses efforts of the Sierra Louis government to indicate an effective national response to the maste of the Special Representative for Children and Conflict to make Sierra Louis one of the pilot projects for a more concerned and service response to the paste of the pilot projects for a more concerned and service response to the paste of the context of post-conflict peacebuilding?

Maritan

The conflict continues to tumble and flare in Sterra Laone and peacebraiding has hardly unite make an impact. Again the UN is working with POOWAS and BOOMOG, who hardly in up to the task of defeating the rebels. What is ending about the mandate and the Security Patricla Portor Deployment Crists and Cristining. Notes from recent crises Kessuc, and America, Aldrew Carles and Free An informal discussion paper (unpublished).

Council resolution establishing it, is the explicit attention to the need to protect civilians, especially children, from the brutality of war. 1181 recognizes that civilians are the main victims of the war. It pays special attention to children and calls for support for national programs and for the Special Representative on Children and Armed Conflict. Indeed, given the increase in child soldiers and the impact of many wars on children generally, 1181 offers a precedent for including children's needs in future post-conflict peacebuilding PSOs.

MINURCA in the Central African Republic

The UN mission to the Central African Republic has been hailed by one analyst as Canada's return to peacekeeping in Africa in a country which he also says is a financial outcast, ruined by years of government corruption and political instability, and on the brink of sliding into the kind of violent turmoil that engulfs its neighbours.¹⁷

Established by Security Council Resolution 1159 in April 1998, MINURCA is to assist in maintaining and enhancing security and stability, including freedom of movement in the city of Bangui and the immediate vicinity. It is also expected to heop maintain law and order, supervise\control storage\monitor the final disposition of all weapons, assist in a short-term police trainers program and in capacity-building efforts of the national police, and to provide advice on the restructuring of the national police and special police forces. Finally, MINURCA is tasked with providing advice and technical support to the national electoral bodies.

Notable about the mandate is that the SRSG, Mr. Oluyemi Adeniji of Nigeria, has been appointed with his own very strong and specific peacebuilding mandate, which is:

a) To assist in the promotion of the reforms necessary to achieve national reconciliation, security and stability in the country;

Andrew McGregor, "Peacekeeping in the Central African Republic: Canada's Quiet Return to a Troubled Continent." Toronto: Canadian Institute of International Affairs, Behind the Headlines, Vol. 55 No. 4, p. 18.

cil resolution establishing in is the explicit attendon to the need to protect civilians, is in children, from the bratality of war. 1181 recognizes that civilians are the main victims war. It pays special attendon to children and calls for support for national programs and to Special Representative on Children and Anned Conflict. Indeed, given the increase in soldiers and the impact of many wars on children generally. 1181 offers a precedent for the children reads in fitting normality nearestable respectivity.

MINUSCA in the Central African Republic

The UP mission to the Central African Republic has been haifed by one analyst as idea tenum to peacelosping in Africa in a country which he also says is a financial outcast, of by years of government concupues and political instability, and on the brink of sliding into

Herablished by Scourty Council Resolution 1159 in April 1998, MINURCA is to assist airtaining and embanding security and stability, including freedom of neovement in the city angular and the immediate vicinity. It is also expected to heop maintain law and order, vise convolutionation the final desponsion of all weapons, assist in a short composite excited an expected or the national police, and to provide advice on connectating of the national police forces. Finally, MINURCA is usked providing advice and technical apport to the outcomed circosy. Finally, MINURCA is usked Noteinte about the mandate is that the SRSG, Mr. Oluyemi Adeniji of Nigeria, has been noted white his own very strong and specific peacebouilding mandate, which is:

d) To exist in the promotion of the reforms measure to sobieve national reconciliation, security and suchitary in the country;

Andrew McGregor, "Pesseke-rimg in the Central Amican Republic: Canada's Cudet Return to a Troubled Consinenc" Townso Canadian Institute of international Affairs, Sching die Macalines, Vol. 55 No. 4 p. 18.

- b) To head MINURCA;
- c) To have overall authority over all United Nations activities in the Central African Republic, in support of MINURCA's mandate;
- d) To provide good offices and mediation between the Government and political parties;
- e) To provide advice and facilitate technical assistance in the areas of good governance and the rule of law;
- f) To cooperate with other international partners, including international financial institutions, with the objective of supporting activities aimed at establishing the foundations for lasting peace, national reconstruction and development; and
- g) To encourage the United Nations agencies and programs to provide assistance to the Central African Republic, in particular in the areas referred to in the report of the Secretary General.

Notable, too, is the paragraph in resolution 1159 that forms part of the Security Council rationale for establishing MINURCA and giving it the kind of mandate it has. That paragraph states:

Recognizing the link between peace and development and that a sustained commitment by the international community to assist and support the economic, social, and institutional development of the Central African Republic is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in the country, and in that regard welcoming the cooperation between the Government of the Central African Republic and the international financial institutions in developing an economic reform programme.¹⁸

Peacebuilding was intended as a central element, if not the central element, of the MINURCA operation. In his January 1998 report to the Security Council prior to the establishment of the mission, the UN Secretary General wrote that in addition to its military role the prospective UN mission should cooperate with other international actors in support of all activities aimed at laying a foundation for lasting peace. More specifically he noted that the mission would facilitate the provision of technical assistance and support by the United Nations system for national reconciliation efforts and the rehabilitation and effective functioning of Security Council Resolution 1159 (1998), (http://www.un.org/plweb-cgi/idoc2.pl), p.

CADRITION Book of (d

c) To have overall authority over all United Nations softwise in the Central African Republic, in support of MINURCA's mandate;

d) To provide good offices and mediation between the Covernment and political parties

e) To provide advice and facilitate reclamical assistance in the areas of good governance and the rule of law;

f) to ecoperate with other international parameter including international financial austicutions, with the objective of supporting activities aimed at establishing the faundations for letting personal content of the content of the

g) To encourage the United Mations agencies and programs to provide assistance to the Cancral African Republic, in particular in the areas referred to in the report of the Secretary General.

Notable, too, is the paragraph to resolution 1150 that forms part of the Security Council orionale for establishing MINURGA and giving it the kind of resudence it has. That paragraph

Recognizing the link between price and development and that a sustained commitment by the international community to assist and support the economic, social, and institutional development of the Central African Republic is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in the country, and in that regard welcoming the cooperation between the Central African ecoperation between the Central institutions in developing and the international financial institutions in developing an economic return measurement.

Percentiliting was intended as a central element, of not the central element, of the MINUREA operation. In this famely 1998 report to use Security Council prior to the stablishment of the disable, the UNIVERSALE Security Constral wrote that in addition to its military tole the prospective UN mission should cooperate with other international actors in support of all convines sined at laying a foundation for its ing peace. More secrifically he noted that the mission would facilitate the provision of solutional assistance and support by the United Nations years for carbonal reconstitution of tacknical assistance and support for functioning of years for carbonal reconstitution of tacknical and the relabilitation and effective functioning of accountable and democratic institutions, including assistance and advice on constitutional and human rights issues. He noted, too, that close collaboration with the UNDP, international financial institutions and bilateral donors would be essential in "promoting an integrated approach to post-conflict peace-building in the Central African Republic." He proposed the establishment of a special United Nations Trust Fund for this purpose.¹⁹

Security Council Resolution 1159 (1998), (http://www.an.org/plweb-og/fider.2 pll, 9.

Analysis

Perhaps most striking about MINURCA is the comprehensive peacebuilding mandate given to the SRSG above and beyond his leadership of the PSO. Indeed, he was given "overall authority over all United Nations activities in the Central African Republic, in support of MINURCA's mandate." Thus, the SRSG is placed at the centre of peacebuilding not just in the PSO but in the country. In the absence of formal mechanisms for coordination this arrangment provides the SRSG with the power (in theory) to ensure that all those peacebuilding elements work together.

Also notable in resolution 1181 is its reference to the need for a sustained commitment by the international community to the Central African Republic, something that is considered indispensable for long-term peace and stability in the country. This reference flags the importance of linking IFI involvement in economic reform in a conflict torn country to the peace and security effort. This has not always been the case and the disconnect between the two processes does not serve either well.²⁰ Moreover, IFI involvement in peacebuilding and linking

Report of the Secretary-General Pursuant to Resolution 1136 (1997) Concerning the Situation in the Central African Republic, 23 January 1998, par. 31 (http://www.un.org/Docs/sc/reports/1998/s199861.htm).

See: Alvaro de Soto and Graciana del Castillo, "Obstacles to Peacebuilding." Foreign Policy, No 94 (Spring 1994), pp. 69-83. The authors argue that often the economic stabilization programs run by the IMF clash with peace programs run by the UN, so that countries, El Salvador for instance, are faced with the dilemma of choosing between the two. See also: Timothy M. Shaw, "Beyond Post-Conflict Peacebuilding: What Links to Sustainable Development and Human Security?" International Peacekeeping (Special Issue: Beyond the Emergency: Development Within UN Peace Missions), Vol. 3 No. 2 eccountable and democratic institutions, including assistance and advice on constitutional and bluman rights issues. He noted, too, that close collaboration with the LIVIDP, international financial destroit one and bilateral donors would be essential in "promoting an integrated approach to post-conflict peace-building in the Central African Republic." He proposed the establishment of a special United Nations Trust Pand for this purpose."

MagismA

Perliens most striting shout MINURCA is the comprehensive peacebuilding mandate given to the SRSG above and beyond his leadership of the PSO. Indeed, he was given "overall authority over all United Nations scrivities in the Central African Republic, in support of MINURCA's mandate." Time the SRSG is placed at the centre of peacebuilding not that in the provides the SRSG with the power (in theory) to ensure that all those peacebuilding elements work tonether.

Also notable in resolution 1181 is its reference to the need for a sustained continuent by the international community to the Capital African Republic, something that is considered indispensable for long-term peace and stability in the country. This reference flags the uncontaine of linking IFI involvement in economic referm in a conflict torm country to the peace and sacurity effort. This has not always been the case and the disconnect between the two processes does not serve either well. Moreover, IFI involvement in peacebuilding and linking much have not serve either well. Moreover, IFI involvement in peacebuilding and linking

Report of the Secretary-Central Pulsuant to Resolution 1136 (1997) Concerning the Situation in the Central African Republic, 23 January 1993, par. 21 (http://www.po.org/20cestec/reports/1998/s199861.htm).

See Alvero de Soto and Graciana del Castillo, "Obscicles do Fessebuilding " Fossepa Possepa Nos de (Spring 1994), op. 69-83. The authors argue that offen the contourne data francismon programs can by the Dy the living class with peace programs can by the UN, so that countries of Salvador, for instance, we faced with the difference of choosing between the two size Timothy M. Shaw, "Beyond Post Conflict Peacebuildings What Links to bustainable Development and Human Sacarity?" International Fessesburg (Special Lance they and the Ernergemey: Development Within UN Peace Advances). Vol. 3 No. 2 that involvement to the PSO, means that these organizations would be an appropriate source for bridge funding for peacebuilding once the PSO leaves.

UNTAES in Croatia

The United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) is perhaps a model of modern peacebuilding PSOs. It was established in response to the 1995 Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, which sought the peaceful integration of that region into Croatia. The Agreement further requested the Security Council to establish a transitional administration to govern the region during a transitional period, and to authorize an international force to maintain peace and security and assist in the implementation of the Agreement.

On January 15 1996, UN Security Council Resolution 1037 established UNTAES to govern the region for an initial period of 12 months, which could be extended to two years at the request of one of the parties. The transitional administration was to help reintegrate the region peacefully into Croatia's legal and constitutional system. While reaffirming that Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium were integral parts of the Republic of Croatia, resolution 1037 also stressed the importance of full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in those territories.

Notable about Security Council Resolution 1037 is that it instructed UNTAES, over and above its core mandate, to monitor the parties commitment in the Basic Agreement to respect the highest standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms and promote an atmosphere of confidence among all local residents irrespective of their ethnic origin. The resolution also stipulated that the Security Council could reconsider the mandate of UNTAES if it at any time it received a report from the Secretary-General that the parties had significantly failed to comply with their obligations under the Basic Agreement. Significantly, the resolution called for close at involvement to the PSO, means that these organizations would be an appropriate source for idee funding for peacabuilding once the PSO leaves.

⁽Summer 1996), pp. 38-48.

UNITARS OF Croatla

The United Nesions Transitional Administration for Pattern Slavonia, Barants and Western cruting (UNTAES) is perhaps a model of modern practiculding PSOs. It was established in spouse to the 1995 Basso Agreement on the Royton of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western transmin, which sought the percent intervation of that region into Creatia. The Agreement riter requested the Security Council to establish a transitional administration to govern the gion during a transitional period, and to establish a transitional force to maintain peace and courty and assist to the implementation of the Agreement.

On tenarty 15 1996, UN Security Council Resolution 1037 established UNTAES to by the region for an initial period of 12 months, which could be extended to two years at the quest of one of the parties. The transminus summinus was to help reintegrate the region monthly into Counta's legal and constitutional system. While restlictning that Eastern Stavonia, arenia and Western Simulatio was integrat parts of the Republic of Croatia, resolution 1037 also reseed the integrations of this respons for human rights and fundamental freedoms in those

Slots his core mandate, to monitor the parties commitment in the Bario Agreement to respect the given standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms and premiote an atmosphere of middiness among all local residents are successful the their educic origin. The resolution also pulmed that the Security Council could reconsider the mandate of Civitatis if it at my time received a report from the Secretary-General that the parties had significantly failed to comply the right objections under the Secretary-General that the parties had significantly failed to comply the their objections under the Secretary-General that the parties had significantly failed for close coordination with UNTAES by all international organizations and agencies in the region. Lastly, it implored States and IFIs to support and cooperate with efforts to promote development and economic reconstruction in the region.

UNTAES had an authorized strength of 5,000 troops, 100 military observers and 600 civilian police. Its combined civilian-military mandate was to:

- supervise and help in the demilitarization of the region;
- oversee the return of refugees and displaced persons;
- establish and train a temporary police force to build professionalism among the police;
- monitor the prison system and the treatment of offenders;
- · organize elections for all local government bodies;
- maintain international monitors along the international borders of the region to facilitate free movement;
- restore the normal functioning of all public service in the region;
- monitor the parties' commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms;
- cooperate with the international Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia in its task of investigating and prosecuting war crimes; and
- promote the realization of the commitments made in the Basic Agreement between Croatia and local Serb authorities and contribute to the overall maintenance of peace and security.

But a simple review of the mandate barely does the civilian component of UNTAES justice in peacebuilding terms. Rather than an SRSG, Mr. Willian Walker of the United States was appointed Transitional Administrator with complete authority over both the civilian and military components of the operation. These components worked closely together often sharing resources and co-locating support teams.

The civilian police component as the mandate indicated had to establish and train a Transitional Police Force (TPF), defining its structure and size, developing a training program and overseeing its implementation. The training courses included a focus on human rights. The challenge was to achieve a balance between Croats and local Serbs that reflected the population ratio in the region, meaning 40 per cent each of Croats and Serbs and 20 per cent of other minorities. By the end of the operation the TPF comprised 815 Croat officers, 811 Serbs, and coordination with UNTA as by all international organizations and agencies in the region. Lastly, it implored States and IPIs to support and cooperate with efforts to promote development and conomic reconstruction in the region.

UNTAES had an authorized strength of 5,000 troops, 100 military observers and 600 an police. Its combined civilian-military mandate was ter supervise and help in the demilitarization of the region;

oversee the return of refugees and displaced persons;

establish and train a semporary police force to build professionalism among the police; monitor the prison system and the treatment of offenders

organize elections for all local government bodies;

maintain international monitors along the international benders of the region to facilitate free movement.

respire the normal fratchoung of all public service in the region;

monitor the parties' commission to human rights and fundamental freedoms; copperate with the instruction of the former Yagoslavia in its task of investigating and presentating was origines; and promote the realization of the communication made in the Basic Agreement between Croams at least the realization and communicates made in the Basic Agreement between Croams

But a sample review of the mandate barely does the civilian component of UNITAES placed in precedual deep terms. Rather than an SEEG, Mr. William Watter of the United States was appointed Transitional Administrator with codesion authority over both the civilian and military components of the operation. These components worked closely together often abaring manuacy terms.

The divilian police component as the mandate indicated had to establish and train a francitional Police Force (TPF), defining its structure and size, developing a training program and overseeing its implementation. The training courses included a focus on human rights. The challenge was to achieve a between Creats and local. Serbs that reflected the population and in the region, menuing 40 per cent each of Creats and Serbs and 20 per cent of other amongines. By the cast of other comprised $15 Creat officers, $11 Serbs, and

A Human Rights Monitoring Unit was established as a part of UNTAES, though not until August of 1997. In the meantime, CIVPOL played an important role in monitoring human rights, reassuring local residents that their rights would be respected during criminal investigations and while in custody. UNTAES conducted human rights training programs, including a human rights seminar sponsored by the Council of Europe and conducted by the operation's Joint Implementation Committee on Human Rights. The rights of refugees and internally displaced were monitored by both CIVPOL and UNTAES military observers.

UNTAES participated in or sponsored economic reconstruction efforts, which Jacques Klein the Transitional Administrator considered critical to lay the basis for lasting peace and reconciliation. Besides hosting events such as Donors meetings that raised more than $50 million dollars for economic reconstruction, UNTAES carried out or facilitated specific projects, including the reconnection of telephone lines between towns, re-opening of the Zagreb-Belgrade highway, and reconnecting the Adriatic Oil Pipeline between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

UNTAES engaged in a host of other peacebuilding activities too numerous to mention in detail. Very quickly they included among others, de-mining, weapons buy-back programs as a part of demilitarization, civil affairs efforts that included everything from facilitating family reunions to overseeing and coordinating the work of local government bodies. And finally, in April 1997, it successfully conducted elections at the municipal and local level simultaneously throughout Croatia. In this effort it deployed more than 150 observers to all polling stations. They were complemented by 30 OSCE observer teams along with observers from the Council of Europe and diplomats.

Lessons Learned Unit Department of Peacekeeping Operations, The United Nations Transitional Administration in Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) January 1996 - January 1998. Lessons Learned July 1998, New York: United Nations Department of Public Information (1998), p. 17.

A farmer Rights Monitoring Unit was established as a part of UNTARS, though not until August of 1997. In the meantime, CIVPOL played so important role in monitoring human rights, reassuring local residents that their rights would be respected during emminal investigations and winds to custody. UNTARS conducted human rights training mograms, including a human rights senting, apontored by the Connected human rights and conducted in the operation's foint displaced function Committee on Human Rights. The rights of refugees and internally displaced forementation Committee on Human Rights. The rights of refugees and internally displaced forementation Committee on Human Rights. The rights of refugees and internally displaced forementation Committee on Human Rights.

Contraction of the Transitional Administrator considered edited to lay the basis for insting peace and reconciliation. Besides hearing events such as Denote meetings that raised more than $50 million delians for economic reconstruction. UNITARS carried out or facilitated specific projects, including the reconnection of telephone fines between towns, re-opening of the Zagreb-Belgrade bightway, and reconnection of telephone fines between towns, re-opening of the Zagreb-Belgrade bightway, and reconnecting the Advisite Out Pipeline howern Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yogoslavia.

CRYAMS suggest in a bost of other peaceboliding sourcines no numerous to mention in detail. Vary quickly droy included among others, de-minung, weapons buy-back programs as a part of detailized addon, savit attains efforts that included everything from facilitating family readings to overseeing and coordinating the work of local government bodies. And finally, in April 1997, it successfully conducted elections at the municipal and total level simultaneously discussions. In this effort it deployed more than 150 observers to all polling stations. They were correlesseemed by 30 OSCE observer toams along with observers from the Council

Lances Leavied Unit Department of Pososkeeping Operations, The United Nations Transitional Administration in Equiery Shoronia, Barania and Weston Savaism (UNIAES) Justicey 1995 - Jonains 1998 Lessons Leavied July 1998, New York: Linked Nations Department of Fublic Information (1998), p. 17.

Analysis

By most accounts, UNTAES was an unqualified success. It is an example of one of the more comprehensive and intrusive of recent PSOs, which benefited in its operations by the parties' commitment to fulfilling the terms of the Basic Agreement. Human rights monitoring was a prominent aspect of the operation that UNTAES implemented effectively by involving local organizations and individuals in the implementing committee. The electoral process, too, was a success in part because the people and parties involved were given some responsibility for managing the process.

What is most striking about the operations was its depth and the thoroughness with which its mandate was implemented. UNTAES seemed to be everywhere doing everything from the reintegration of public institutions, to involvement in education and culture. It also operated innovatively, for instance in its organization of a marketplace where people from all sides in the conflict could come together and trade goods. Finally, the operation was notable in that it provided for successor arrangements once the PSO had left. This arrangement highlighted once again the growing importance of CIVPOL in modern PSOs and in providing continuity to a peacebuilding exercise: The successor to UNTAES is the United Nations Civilian Police Support Group set up to monitor police operations in the Danube region and to help further professionalize the multi-ethnic police forces.

IV. PROGRESS, CHALLENGES AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Progress

Since 1995 only three UN peace support operations have been mandated. The complex nature of these operations, their heavy requirements in human and financial resources, and the potential for disaster when the UN intervenes in internal wars, means that the organization will

Agalysis

By most accounts, UNTAES was an anqualified success. It is an example of one of the more comprehensive and intrusive of recent PSOs which benefited in its operations by the parties' commitment to fulfilling the terms of the Basic Agreement. Human rights monitoring was a prominent aspect of the operation that UNTAES implemented effectively by involving local congenizations and individuals in the implementing committee. The electoral process, too, was a responsibility for species in pays because the people and parties involved were given some responsibility for

What is most stricture about the operations was its depth and the thosoughness with which its mandate was implemented. UNIAES seemed to be overywhere doing everyibing from the reintegration of public insufficious, to involvement in adaptation and outpre. It also operated innovatively, for insufficious in its organization of a marketplace where people from all aides in the conflict could conse together and wate goods. Finally, the operation was notable in that it provided for societies in the ESO had left. This arrangement highlighted once again the growing importance of CIVPOL in modern PSOs and in providing continuity to a posterior and the growing continuity to a precedential against the growing continuity police operations in the Danube region and to help further modern parties the realist of the order of the figure.

IV. PEOGRESS CHALLENGES AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Trengorii.

States 1005 once of the United States and States and States and States and States and the complex states of these operations the states and the states and the constitution of the states of the state move in a considered manner and practice due diligence before approving any new ones.²² Those that are approved, however, will no doubt be civilian-military in composition and peacebuilding in focus. This has been the trend for the last ten years and it seems to be only increasing in intensity.

We need to remember, however, that intepositionary types of peacekeeping operations held sway for some forty-years. Indeed, that approach still characterizes the role that military peacekeeping forces play, even in modern missions. Remember, too, that today's operations may be drastically different from pre-1989 missions but they are not a reinvention of the wheel. PSOs are an outgrowth of traditional peacekeeping, slowly making advances and adapting to new situations and requirements. Change comes about slowly in highly politicized organizations such as the UN, so before looking at some of the challenges it is important to understand and recognize the progress that has been made.

Overall, what is most significant perhaps is the intellectual development that has taken place only a decade. It is clear from a review of the literature and from talking to practitioners in Ottawa and New York that everyone involved in PSOs today, from the military to those working in development agencies, consider these missions to be civilian-military affairs with peacebuilding as an integral feature.²³ The same could not be said ten-years ago when following the operation in Namibia those involved in the mission from the UN in New York to the election monitors in the field were clearly under the impression that composite peacekeeping missions were something new, innovative, and, for some, perhaps even a little subversive.²⁴ move in a considered manner and practice due diligence before approving any new ones. It has the approved, however, will no doubt be civilian-military in composition and peaceboilding in focus. This has been the trend for the last ten years and it seems to be only increasing in intensity.

We need to remember, however, that interpositionary types of peacekeeping operations held sway for some fenty years indeed, that approach sull characterizes the role that military peacekeeping forces play, oven in modern missions. Kamember, too, that today 's operations may be drastically different feets pre-1969 missions into they are not a reinvention of the wheel. People and an eatgrowth of maditional peacekeeping, slowly musing advances and adapting to new distinctions and requirements. Change comes about stowly in highly polynoized organizations such in the UM, so before looking at some of the challenges it is important to understand and accounted the true that has been med.

Poerall, what is most significant perfugs as the interfection development that has taken discounted only a decade. It is clear from a rate with the liberature and from taking to practitioners to Ottawa and New York that weavens involved in PSOs taday, from the unitimy to home of Ottawa and New York that weavens involved these missions to be dividing unifitary affairs with the development agencies, to consider these missions to be dividing agent when following the operation is Manifeld were clearly under the involved from the life of the allegent missions and for a start composite perceivage missions and the field were clearly under the insulate on the start composite perceivage missions and some smething day, incovering and, for some mission and as little subversing.

Progress at the United Nations

We should also be aware that not inconsiderable improvements have taken place in the management and planning for these operations. In 1993 the Mission Planning Service was established as a part of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) at the UN. Responsible for providing advice in the planning of missions, it works with other units of DPKO, for instance CIVPOL, as well as with specialists from other UN departments and agencies, along with NGOS, in designing carefully integrated civilian-military plans for complex multidimensional operations. A Policy and Analysis Unit was established in 1993 providing research to the department. Two Assistant Secretary-General offices have been created each with political and military desk officers for peacekeeping operations. A twenty-four hour Situation Centre established in 1993 keeps field missions in touch with UN headquarters. ²⁵

Notable, too, have been improvements on the humanitarian side, including:

- the establishment and recent strengthening of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC), composed of UN and non-governmental agencies and intended to provide a more rapid and coordinated response to humanitarian emergencies, including a strategic approach emphasizing the contribution that humanitarian assistance can make to peacemaking and peacebuilding;

 This
- the creation of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) and of the office of an Emergency Relief Coordinator. In 1997, the DHA became the Office of the Coordinator for Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) and the ERC's coordination role was enhanced; ²⁶

Progress at the United Names

We should also be sware that not inconsiderable exprovements have taken place in the name getnem and planning for these operations. In 1993 the Mission Planning Service was stabilished as a part of the Department of Penceleoping Operations (DPKO) at the UNI department of the UNI departments and agencies, along a presence CIVFOL, as well as with specialists treat other Uni departments and agencies, along the MOOS, in designing carefully integrated civilian-rollinary plans for complex multidemental operations. A Policy and Analysis Unit was cambrished as 1993 providing memors to the department. Two Assistant Secretary-General offices have been created each with memors to the department. Two Assistant Secretary-General offices have been created each with colours and spilitary deals officers for potentiary operations. A exemptions four Situation

Vossbig tal, have been legaryeneers, on the horsesterium ode, moudium

the authorisement and recent strengtheness of the later Agency Plancing Committee (LASC), composed of CNI and non-governmental agencies and intended to provide a more rapid and coordinated response to humanism an emphasizing a sharegic opproach amphaenting the committees due intended assistance can make to-presentating and goacemaking the creation of the preparation of fermandarian Additio (DRIA) and of the office of an Energy Relief Chordinator is 1967, the DRIA became the Office of the Coordinator for Humanucadan Allans (OCIA) and the ERC s creatination rate was enhanced:

• in 1994, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights was established and is now among four departments, along with the Department of Political Affairs, the DPKO, and the OCHA, responsible for responding to complex emergencies.

Other new measures include:

- the Rapid Deployable Mission Headquarters (RDMH), developed in 1996, which when implemented, would deploy, immediately upon authorization of a new operation, an essential core of civilian and military personnel to manage the initial phases of an operation;
- the Stand-by arrangement system (SBAS), a data-base of resources that individual states can make available to the UN on short-notice; and
- the Multinational Stand-By Forces High Readiness Brigrade (SHIRBRIG), involving ten countries and intended to allow for the rapid deployment of a brigade to the mission area.

In peacebuilding, too, the UN has begun to make improvements consonant with the growing attention the organization is paying to that area of activity. In his 1997, Programme for Reform, Secretary General Kofi Annan noted that the UN has come to understand the necessity of taking a comprehensive approach to promoting peace and human security, deploying in an integrated fashion the political, human rights, military, humanitarian and developmental assets of the organization. He bemoaned the lack of resources and political will that undermined past UN efforts at complex peacekeeping operations admonishing that "peacekeeping will remain an indispensable instrument of the United Nations and it is thus crucial to maintain the Organization's capacity to plan, manage, and conduct these operations efficiently and successfully." In that spirit, the Secretary General noted that while the civilian-military integration within the Department of Peacekeeping Operations is being tightened, there is a need for more resources to consolidate efforts to plan and prepare operations through to particular reform has not met with universal approval. See: Thomas G. Weiss, "Humanitarian Shell Games: Whither UN Reform?" Security Dialogue, Vol. 29 No. 1 (March 1998), p. 9-23.

Renewing the United Nations: A Programme of Reform. Report of the Secretary General to the General Assembly 16 July 1997 (A/51/950), par. 106.

in 1994, me Office of the fligh Commissioner for Human Rights was established and is now among four departments along with the Department of Political Affairs, the DPKO, and the OCHA, responsible for responding to complex curergencies.

Orber new measures include ete Rapid Danloyable Mission Heacquarters (RDAMI), developed in 1996, which when implemented, would deploy, insuctiately upon authorization of a new operation, an essential core of civilian and military personnel to manage the initial phases of an operation;

the Mand-by arrangement system (SBAS), a data-base of resources that individual states can include available to the UR on snort-nonce and the Multiproposition of the Forces for the statement of a suignate (SHIRBILIG), involving ten countries and in a statement of a suignate to the mission area.

In general distriction the organic data is never by make a proposed to the 1997, Programme for conving attention the organic data is now by the data of the UN has come to understand the necessity of the last of the Control of Control of the Control of Control of the Control of the Control of the Control of the Control of Control of the Control of Control of the Control of the Control of Control of Control of the Control of Contr posterial reform his act ince with neithered approvat Sec. Thomas C. Weise. "Remainistian Sort Connes Whiter UV Relater?" Second Dialogue Vol. 29 No. (Alarch 1998), p. 9-43.

Asserting the United Statement of Programme of Astoric Report of the Societary General to the General Assembly 16 July 1997 (AS 1999), page 106 implementation, closure, and post-mission analysis.

In the same document, Mr. Annan confirmed the Department of Political Affairs (DPA), convenor of the Executive Committee on Peace and Security (ECPS), as the focal point at the UN for post-conflict peacebuilding. In the interest of coordination, he noted the need for DPA to work closely with the OHCHR, DPKO, UNHCR, UNDP and the World Bank. The ECPS itself, in collaboration with other Executive Committees as appropriate, was made responsible for designing and implementing post-conflict peacebuilding.

The appointment of DPA as the focal point for peacebuilding is belied somewhat by the fact that it is not a full participant in the "strategic frameworks" initiative of the UNDP and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA). This initiative, launched in 1997, is attempting to develop greater coordination in field operations involving humanitarian, political, and development activities.²⁸

Two other notable developments that support the peacebuilding intentions of the UN are:

• the creation of a Strategic Planning Unit to address, study, and provide policy information on emerging global issues; and

• consultations with the President of the World Bank to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the Bank and the United Nations.

Clearly not all of these improvements and mechanisms work as well as one might like. As Colonel Roger Little, the head of the Mission Planning Service noted, the UN is an organization with Charter limitations and a 185 member Board of Directors, so to an extent it will always be working within constraints. Change is also difficult because people, agencies and organizations that should be cooperating and coordinating in these missions often have their own agendas and turf to protect. It is interesting to note in this regard that the different Executive See: John G. Cockell, Peacebuilding and Human Security - Frameworks for International Responses to Internal Conflicts (unpublished paper), p.17-18.

In the same document, Mr. Annen consisted the Department of Political Affairs (DPA), convenor of the Executive Committee on Feace and Security (ECPS), as the focal point at the ton post-conflict peacebuilding. In the interest of coordination, he noted the need for DPA to work closely with the OHCHR, DPKO, UNHCR, UNDP and the World Bank. The ECPS itself, in collaboration with other Executive Committees as appropriate, was made responsible for designing and implementing post-conflict peacebuilding.

The appointment of DPA as the social point for peacobaliding is belied somewhat by the fact that it is not a full participant in the "strategic frameworks" initiative of the UNDF and the Confice for the Condination of Romannanae at time (OCHA). This initiative, launched in 1997, is attempting to develop greater court leating in their operations around a political.

I'wo other notable development that support the pracebuilding intentions of the UN are:

the creation of a Standard Planck of Act to address, study, and provide pointy information as anomalistical with the President at the West Bank to aroughton cooperation and coordination between the truck for the United Mariane.

Circuly not all of these innerconnects and menistrians work as well as one might like to Colonel Roger Liftle, the head of the head of the head of the high Service noted, the UN is an exact readon with Charast Limitations and a 185 mention floated of Directors, so to an exact it well liways be working writte constraint. Charact in size difficult because people, agencies and reading and conditions for these newstons often have their own condax and took to protect. It is interesting to note in this secand that the different Executive condax and took to protect. It is interesting to note in this secand that the different Executive

See John G. Gockett. Peace-conting and Flamour Security - From excepts for International Responses to Jumped Conference (amortisated proof), p. 17-18.

Committees established in 1997 all have an interest in peacebuilding.²⁹ It remains to be seen how committees established in 1997 all have an interest in pososbuilding. It remains to be seen how they coordinate those interests -- or not -- but the Strategic Frameworks experience does not bode well. And clearly, the enormous complexity of PSOs and the multiplicity of actors involved, including NGOs outside the UN family, only further complicates the coordination of PSOs in the field and at UN headquarters in New York.

Progress in the Field

As the mandates from the abovementioned PSOs indicate, peacebuilding is integral to all of the new missions. One of the most significant indicators of this is the tendency for the Secretary General to appoint a civilian Special Representative as a head of mission in the field. Ten-years ago the idea that everyone in a peacekeeping mission would report to the SRSG would have been considered ludicrous.³⁰ Today it is de rigeur, especially in those situations where the UN has been asked to play a peacebuilding role.

The success of many operations depends on the effectiveness of the SRSG who acts as the centre of operational relationships in the field between the UN Secretariat, the wider UN family of agencies, funds and programs, other international organizations, the parties to the conflict and donor countries. The ad hoc nature of many missions, places responsibility for coordination of the operations many elements squarely in his or her hands.

It should be noted, too, that while improvisation continues to characterize many missions, civilian-military coordination does take place in the field. In many of the more recent operations, civil-military cooperation centres have been established to foster this type of cooperation.³¹ Indeed, the Canadian Department of National Defence has developed a lengthy manual on all four committees are on Peace and Security, Humanitarian Affairs, Economic and Social Affairs, and Development Operations.

Interview with Snell and Angell, December 7, 1998.

Interview with Lt.Col Don Lecarte and Commander Bob Edwards, Department of National Defence November 24, 1998.

they coordinate those interests - or not - but the Strategic Frameworks experience does not bode well. And clearly, the entimous complexity of PSOs and the multiplicity of actors involved, including NOOs outside the ON family, only further complicates the coordination of PSOs in the field and at LOV headquerters in New York.

Progress in the Field

As the grantletes from the abovernment of 30s reports peacebuilding is integral to all start the new missions. One of the next significant indicators of this is the tendency for the Societary General to agree as a fixed by Special Representative as a head of mission in the field. I are years ago the idea of the services of a research of the services of the services of the report of the SRSG would have been considered indicators. Total of a regar expensably to those simultions where the UN has been asked to play a presental start of the role.

The states of operational relationate repends on the effectiveness of the SRSG who acts as the centre of operational relationate relationate of the UN Secretarian, the wider UN family of egoticies, fixeds and programs, other americans organizations, the parties to the conflict end donor emaintees first as her nets of many missions, places responsibility for constitutions of the operations are energy element squared or mission and the conflict of the constitution of the operations are one of the constitutions of the operations are one of the operations of the operations are one of the operations of the operations are one of the operations of the operati

If should be about tool the whole expressions contained to charge many missions or village explicit and the state of the state operations, dividentifies according to the state of the state of the state operation.

Indeed, the Canadian Department of Market of Detailed has developed a Lengthy manual on all for an initial set as feate and Sagary, Hamanitadas Affair, Economic and Social Affairs, and Domeinstein Vigetorians Interview with Sagil and second lowerows a room

Interview with Lacket Ran Lackets and Commander Rob Edwards, Department of aspects of civil-military cooperation (CIMIC), which pays due attention to peacebuilding.³² Joint Implementation Committees in UNTAES were used to bring local actors in that mission into dialogue on peaceful reintegration. The pooling of civil and military resource, joint briefing sessions, co-location of civil and military elements of the mission was also a highlight of UNTAES. In Rwanda, the Force Commander set up liaison teams to advise him on the civilian side of the operation. This team included political, humanitarian, legal, and human rights advisors.

Still, coordination remains a problem in operations, as the IPA has noted, where a multiplicity of UN actors is present and where humanitarian, military, political, human rights and development activities are all taking place:

There are far too many examples of inter-agency and inter-entity rivalry in the field impeding progress by any UN actor and exacerbating what is often an already negative perception of the UN on the part of the local population. Overlapping mandates often result in tension and the ability of multi-faceted operations to function on the ground is frequently determined by the quality of the personnel and the leadership on the ground, rather than by contingency plans or formulae for operations. This is equally the case for the specialized agencies as it is for the military and civilian components of an operation.³³

It is especially critical to remember in today's PSOs that coordination has both space and time dimensions. The very nature of peacebuilding means that operations need to consider the transition to longer term peacebuilding. This can often be a problem when UN missions are subject to limited mandates and hostage to exit strategies from the outset. Yet peacebuilding is a long-term process. Time and again interviewees, whether military or civilian, stressed the need to look and think in the long term. As Kumar states, the question is how to build in Civil-Military Cooperation in Peace, Emergencies, Crisis and War. Ottawa: Department of National Defence (1998), p. 1-7..

Michéle Griffin, supra note 11, p. 15.

assents of eight military cooperation (CBMIC), which pays due attention to pracebuilding. I tent insplantation Commutates in (INTAES were used to bring food school school mission into interpretation of praceful reintegration. The product of civil and military resource, joint briefing sessions, ob-location of civil and military eigneents of the mission was also a highlight of UNTAES. In Rwards, the Force Communder set up nation towns to advise him on the civilian wife of the operation. This ream included political, humanitarian, legal, and human rights

Still, coordination regrains a problem in operations as the IPA has noted, where a serious updicity of Util actors is present and where humanitaries, military, polineal, human rights and financial content extintions are all taking place.

These are far soo many evancies of undesegoncy and inter-only store and inter-only in the field impeding progress by any UN actor and sivily stores in the field impeding progress by any UN actor and the season of the order an already nagative perception of the local population. Overlapping mandates to the social and the season as required to the quality of the social and the free features as contact to the social and the season as the ground. Thus to aqually the order first to appear the contact of the special and the season as it is for the military mid-civilities of an exercise of an exercise of an exercise.

the denembers. The year some of recobuling means that operations need to consider the remaining to longer and the consider the remaining to longer of the year soundary. This can often be a problem when UN marions are religion to longer of mandates and mandates are mandated than a limited mandates and mandates and mandates and mandates and mandates and mandates are mandated than a limit of the search mandates and think in the long case. As fine at cases, are question is how to build in Child-Adimary Characterists in Posts. Energencies, Orisis and War. Ottawa. Department of Marianal Defence (1998), a 1-1.

Michaele Gariffel store unte 11, a, 15.

sustainability.34

This will require strategic thinking and planning from the beginning of an operation and maybe even before. It will also require an emphasis where possible on capacity-building, working with local actors, and institutionalizing peacebuilding as far as possible. As Michael Doyle writes, using elections as an example, voters are only powerful for the five minutes it takes to vote unless there is an institutional mechanism to translate democratic authority into bureaucratic practice. Resources are bound to come into question here. The need is to bring all the appropriate resources to bear at the appropriate stages. Thus, after the PSO leaves responsibility should be handed to development agencies and banks for funding follow-on efforts. This means, these organizations will need to be in on the planning from the start, including where possible planning the transition.

Challenges and Tentative Recommendations

Peace support operations are and will continue to be the art of the possible. Impediments to effective and successful missions abound, including a lack of financial and manpower resources at both the United Nations and in Canada and a UN system that is rife with politics and turf protection. There are no easy fixes to these problems. Given these obstacles we need to be cleareyed about the challenges we face and realistic about the solutions. It is of little practical help, especially in the short-term, to suggest as Thomas Franck did recently that the solution to the UN's problems in PSOs is to create a permanent UN military and civilian cadre -- consisting of 20,000 military and 10,000 peacebuilding specialists and costing between $2-3 billion per year -- to staff holistic missions. ³⁶ While this is an ideal solution, our purpose here is to focus on what is doable.

Interview with Elizabeth Cousens, Chetan Kumar and Margaret Vogt at the International Peace Academy, New York, December 9, 1998.

Michael W. Doyle, "UN Peacekeeping in Cambodia: UNTAC's Civil Mandate." New York: International Peace Academy, Occasional Paper Series (1995), p. 88.

Thomas M. Franck, supra note 3, p. 291.

This will require strategic friending and planning from the beginning of an operation and maybe oven before. It will also requires an suspinals where possible on especity-building working writes using secretions as an example; volus use only powerful for the five mirrules it rakes to vote smiss there is an insulational mechanism to mastere democratic authority into the specific presence is an insulational mechanism to mastere democratic authority into the appropriate passings to been at the appropriate stages. Thus, after the PSO leaves are specififly should be leaded to development against the figure first the PSO leaves are planning from the start, including where appropriate planning it and the specific or development against on the start, including where appropriate planning it as transfirm.

Challenger and lentative Recommendations reason support operations are and will contained to be the art of the possible. Impediments to off ective and successful missions abound, instructing a lack of formatial and manpower resources as both an itempo reasons and as the system than is take with politics and not protection. Thus, are no only than to already and a that system that is take with politics and not extend about the confidence we term and realistic about the solutions. It is of little practical help appearably in the smallenges we term and realistic about the solution to the appearably in the shiften in the suppose of the solution of the military and civilian caffer—consisting of the solution proved.

The appearably in the shiften is no courte a personant the military and civilian caffer—consisting of the said believe missions. The While this is an ideal said for, our suppose here is to focus on the size of the politics missions. The While this is an ideal said for, our suppose here is to focus on the size of the said to the said for the suppose here is to focus on the said to the said to Interview will bit should consone Chetan Erman and Margaret Vogt at the international Russes Academy, New York, Discending S. 1998.

Michael W. Doyle, "138 Pracekeeping in Carnodia UNITAC's Civil Mandate." New York: International Peter Auntamy, Order Sense (1983), p. 88.

St. M. Franck, some rose 3 or 501.

Challenge 1: Intra-state wars will continue to plague the international system and the call for PSOs to address these situations will grow not shrink.

Canada needs to recognize this challenge and understand that it cannot be everywhere at once. We need to play to our strengths and deploy our resources strategically. This means paying careful attention to the mandate of each operation, reassuring ourselves that it is realistic, doable and flexible enough to allow peacebuilding improvisation (and with discretionary funds provided to the SRSG to make that improvisation possible).

Canada should press to ensure that any operation it gets involved in has an effective and proven SRSG at the helm and that he/she is supported by a deputy(s) who serves as both the humanitarian and development coordinator.³⁷ Along with a Military Force Commander that reports to the SRSG this arrangement will ensure that at the very least all aspects of the operation, including how they interact, are duly considered at the top in the field. Information sharing and coordination will also be encouraged. In this regard, a transitional coordinator should be appointed to each operation to ensure a smooth handover to humanitarian or development responsibles when the PSO leaves. Alternatively, responsibility for transitional coordination could be made an explicit task of the SRSG's deputy. To avoid turf wars, the terms of reference of the SRSG should be clearly defined and developed in consultation with other agencies in the field.

Challenge 2: Peacebuilding will continue to be a primary feature of PSOs.

Canada has made peacebuilding a prominent aspect of its foreign policy. At the same time it is and has always been closely identified with the institution of peacekeeping. It will be

For more information on the role of the SRSG in PSOs see: Fafo Programme for International Cooperation and Conflict Resolution, Recommendations Report of the Forum on the Special Representative of the Secretary-General: Shaping the UN's role in Peace Implementation, New York 8-9 July 1998.

Challenge is intra-state ware will continue to ployue the international system and she call for PSOs to address these situations will grow not sheigh

Canada needs to recognize this challenge and understand that it cannot be everywhere at once. We need to play to our strengths and deploy our resources contegionly. This means paying careful attention to the mandate of each operation, reassuring ourselves that it is realistic, double and flexible enough to allow nearebuilding improvisation (and with discretionary funds) provided to the SPSC to make that improvisation possibles.

Canada should press to ensure and any operation it gets involved us has an effective and proven SESC as the halm and that he she is supported by a deputy(s) who serves as both the humanisation and development coordinator. Along with a Military Force Commander that reports to the SESC this arrangement will mustic that at the very least all especia of the operation, including how they remark are duly considered at the top in the field. Information charming and coordinates well also be encouraged. In this regard, a transitional coordinator should be appointed to each operators to ensure a smooth handover to humanismism or development to appoint the first three theorems of the resolution could be made an explicit test of the SESC about the SESC about the SESC about the clearly defined and developed in accordination with other agencies in the tions it is said has givenya been closely identified with the untilities of peacekeeping. It will be

Challenge de Personaling wal continue to be a primary feature of 1930s.

For more mionalities on the rate of the STOR sear Path Programme for International Superarious and Calabias Region and Americans Report of the Forum on the Aperial Report of the Aperial Repor natural for the United Nations to look to Canada as new operations arise. We need to be prepared both intellectually and operationally to respond.

Operationally we need to look at the mechanisms we have and determine how they can be strengthened. The Civilian Policing arrangement is a good one but underfunded. Police now represent some 25 per cent of UN peacekeepers. If Robert Oakley and company are right they are the wave of the future in peace support operations.³⁸

Police contribute in a number of ways to peacebuilding especially with their emphasis on community-policing. They also provide continuity to an operation playing roles in every phase of the transition to development, including in institution-building. Canada should work to bolster its strength in this regard by providing more funding for the Civilian Policing Arrangement. Given the fact however that police manpower in Canada is finite³⁹ more emphasis might also be given to bringing recipients to Canada for training and increasing the budget for the Police Training and Assistance Program.

At the UN, Canada should push to have a CIVPOL advisor attached to the office of the Secretary General, similar to the arrangement for a military advisor. Canada should also consider CIVPOL secondments to CIDA and or DFAIT.

Human rights, too, will continue to be a constant and prominent feature of the new PSOs. Human rights arrangements and mechanisms need to be built into every mandate including the establishment of Human Rights Monitoring Units or the appointment of a Human Rights Officer where possible; Canada needs to consider ways to mobilize and deploy human rights monitors, Robert B. Oakley, Michael J. Dziedzic, and Eliot M. Goldberg (eds.), Policing the New World Disorder: Peace Operations and Public Security. Washington: National Defense University Press, (1998) 547 pp.

As RCMP Sergeant Doug Coates pointed out, unlike the military, who are supposed to go abroad, police have a job to do here and that is what they are being paid for. Interview with Sgt. Doug Coates, RCMP CIVPOL Unit, November 19, 1998.

nestured for the United Mations to look to Canada as any operations arise. We need to be prepared both intellectually and operationally to respond.

Operationally we need to look at the mechanisms we have and determine how they can be strengthened. The Civilian Policing arrangement in a good one but underfunded. Police now represent some 25 per cent of UN peacekeepers. If Robert Oaklay and company are right they are the wave of the future in posce support operations.

Police contribute in a manifer of ways to pensainfiding especially with their emphasis on dominantly policing. They also provide continuity to an operation playing roles in every phase of the transition to development, estimating in instruction-building. Caused should work to belief in this regard by providing more funding for the Civilian Policing Arrangement Given the fact however that policy manipowers in Canada is finite" more emphasis might also be given to bringing cacipients to Canada for resining and manessing the budget for the Policy Training and Assistance Program.

At the UN, Corrects should push to have a CIVPCL advisor attacked to the office of the Secretary Corrects simular to the arrangement for a military advisor. Canada-should also consider CIVPCL seconds and CIDA and confugator.

Former rights arrangements and mechanisms need to be holds into every mandate including mechanism rights arrangements and mechanisms need to be built into every mandate including mechanism of Function Rights Monitoring Units or the appointment of a Human Rights Officer when possible Canada needs to compiler ways to mention and deploy instrum rights monitors, Robert B Onc. sy, Merined I. Dereden, and Blice M. Goldberg (eds.), Policing the Vere Fortal Director Panes Operations and Public Security, Washington: National Definish University Press, (1908) 547 pp.

As Allon designed Desig Costes pointed out united the military, who are supposed to go arroad, police have a job to do note and that is what they are being paid for fronty-view with Set Doug Costes, REDER CIVEOU Unit, November 10, 1906 perhaps in cooperation with like-minded countries like Norway and Denmark. Canadem is a good start, but it is a roster not a deployment mechanism.

Canada should not undersell the military in terms of peacebuilding. They can move most quickly to an environment and have the requisite skills and training to undertake peacebuilding tasks. While providing security will always be the military's main task, their ability to conduct peacebuilding tasks when civilians are not available to do so should not be ignored. This will also redound to the benefit of the mission overall. Having suffered at the hands of combatants, recipients in war zones are usually wary of the military. Peacebuilding by the military can reassure them and build trust and confidence. The experience of troops in IFOR and SFOR is a good recent example of how civil affairs operations can benefit the people and the mission without creating a dependency. (The same holds true for CIVPOL whose community relations emphasis allows wide scope for initiating or helping to facilitate peacebuilding projects).

While we need to develop better ways to mobilize civilian peacebuilders and deploy them to the mission area as quickly as possible, we would be well advised also to push for the full implementation of such already developed measures such as RDMHQ, SHIRBRIG, and SBAS. In this regard we also need to ensure that those troops and civilians mobilized have the requisite skills to do the job. It is one thing for a soldier to patrol a buffer zone and quite another to provide training in democratic military methods.

Challenge 3: The UN, flawed as it is, remains the most experienced organization in the world when it comes to the conduct of peace support operations. Canada must do what it can to support progress and improvements that the organization has undertaken in New York and in the field to better conduct these operations.

See Robin Hay, "Military and Security Institutions: Challenges in Democratization and Development." Kingston: Queen's University Centre for International Relations, Martello Paper (1995).

Peter Caddick-Adams, "Civil Affairs Operations by IFOR and SFOR in Bosnia." International Peacekeeping, Vol 5 No.3 (Autumn 1998).

perhaps in cooperation with like-minded countries like Morway and Deumark. Canadem is a good start, but it is a rester not a deployment mechanism

Canada sionald not undersell the unitiary in terms of posentialiding. They can move most quickly to an environment and have the requisits addits and training to undertake peacebriding tasks. While providing security will always be the minimy's main task, their ability to conduct peacebriding pasts when civilians are not evaluable to do so should not be ignored. It his will take reduced to the mission overall. Having suffered at the hands of combatants, recipions in war conce are pausity way of the military free shutding by the military can describe the following the build trust and confidence. The experience of moops in IFOR and SFOR is treasure them and build trust and confidence. The experience of moops in IFOR and SFOR is according to the confidence of how civil affairs appearance of moops in IFOR and SFOR is described at the people and the mission without creating a dependency. (The same holds true for CIVPOL whose community relations compassis allows wide scope for initiating or helpins to facilities respectivelyting projects.)

While we need to develop better ways to mobilize civilian peacebuilders and deploy them to the mission area as quickly as parable, we would be well advised also to push for the full implementation of such angular transmiss such as RDMHQ SHIRBRIO, and SBAS in this tentral we also need to enotion these course and divilians mobilized have the requisite dills to do the got. It is one thing for a soldier to panel a buffer zone and quite another to provide training in democratic military mercode.

Control of processing the state of the control of the most control of processing the control of the control of processing the control of the control of processing the control of the cont

No Labin Say, Military and Security Institutions Challenges in Democratication and Development, Emgran Guera's University Canar for International Relations, Adapted Paper (1995).

Peter Caddick Adams, "Not Adams Operations by 1903 and SPOR in Bosing." International Petersheeping, Vol. 5, No. 9 (Autumn 1968).

At the UN, Canada should push for peacebuilding mandates for the SRSG that accompany the mandate establishing a mission. This will not only promote peacebuilding as an integral part of an operation, but provides the SRSG with overall authority for peacebuilding among all the UN agencies in the mission area enabling him to harness and coordinate their contribution. Such a mandate will allow the SRSG freedom to improvise within the mission. Again, peacebuilding trust funds that the SRSG can draw on to improvise should also be a regular aspect of each mission. Canada should be among the first to contribute to such trust funds, even if they are not participating in the operation.

Canada should also make the argument for strengthening the capacity of DPKO or at least ensuring that its capacity is not diminished when gratis military officers leave. As it stands, its strength in training will be reduced from eleven officer to two and its police unit will be reduced from seven to two. We should also ensure that DPKO personnel makeup should reflect the complexity of PSOs. While civilian police are represented on the staff no humanitarian officer is in house. This should be corrected. It might also take the lead in mobilizing private sector donations to the UN that could be dedicated to specific aspects of peacebuilding and PSOs and make up for public sector shortfalls.

Canada needs to stress the importance of peacebuilding being sustainable and transferable beyond the life of the PSO. Responsibility and ownership of peacebuilding projects should be given to the locals as soon as that is possible. Mechanisms for continuous funding need to be developed so projects do not come to an end once the PSO leaves. This issue goes to the need for coordination over time, as mentioned above.

One of the most persistent problems in PSOs is the need to renew mandates. In Liberia, UNOMIL's mandate had to be renewed or extended at least three times. In Haiti, the various UN missions there had to have there mandates renewed time and again over four years, each time for three to six month periods. Short mandates, due to resource shortfall etc, completely contradict the long-term peacebuilding nature of many PSOs. Whenever possible, Canada should insist that peace support operations be given a mandate whose length is commensurate with the

At the UN, Canada should push for peacebuilding mendates for the SR of that accompany the mendate establishing a mission. This will not only promote pracebuilding as an integral part of an operation, but provides the SRSG with everall authority for precebuilding among all the UN agencies in the mission area enabling into to harmon and established that contribution. Such armondate with allow the SRSG theedom to improvise within the mission. Agein, peacebuilding Limis funds then the SRSG can draw on to improvise should also be a regular aspect of each Limis funds then the SRSG can draw on to improvise should also be a regular aspect of each transform. Canada should be among the firm to contribute to such that funds, even if they are not transform to the operation.

Canada should also make the engineed for grangithming the capacity of DPEO of at least ensuring that its expectes is not diminished when grade military officers leave. As it stands, its effected in usining will be reduced from elevas officer to two and its points unit will be reduced from elevas officer to two and its points unit will be reduced in seven to the complexity of PSOs. While divided police are represented on the staff no humanitarial officer in house. This should be convected. It might also take the lead in subdiving private sector denautons to the UN that could be dedicated to granific superts of pessebuilding and PSOs and denautons to the UN that could be dedicated to granific superts of pessebuilding and PSOs and make up for might prevent shoutfalls.

Census dieds on wreat the caporance of pracebuilding being susisinable and transforable expends the item 250. Responsibility and ownership of pracebuilding projects should be given to the totals as soon as that a possible. Mechanisms for continuous funding need to be developed to prace on our sone to as and once the PSO leaves. This have goes to the need for coordination our sone, as mostleness above.

Take of the races persistent problems in FSUs is the good to renew manufaces. In Liberta, INOSET 's measure bad to be removed or extended at least times times. In Hant, the veryous UN massions there had to nave these manufaces renewed time and again over four years, each time for there to an meach periods. Short manufaces due to resource shortfull dto, completely contradict that the long-tam people of the or many PSOs. Whenever possible, Canada should insist that the long-tam people of given a manuface whose longth is commensurate with the peacebuilding task. Things like de-mining, reintegration, institutional reform do not take place over night or even in a matter of weeks or months. A realistic mandate will provide both the mission participants and the recipients with the confidence that the task will be seen through to the end. Because funding of long-term mandates is often problematic, we need to be sure that all the agencies, departments and organizations who might be responsible for funding at different phases, are consulted at the planning stage so that an agreed framework for transition is developed at the outset of the mission. This will better help determine both the required length of the mandate and its realism and hopefully reconcile the tension between short-term mandates and long-term peacebuilding.

Challenge 4: Regional organizations will be a permanent and prominent feature of future PSOs and will take the lead in many circumstances. The challenge is to ensure that they are fit and equipped to perfom the task in accordance with UN principles.

In many ways this is a welcome development, but in practice the record is mixed. 42 Regional organizations usually lack both operational and financial resource and experience in conducting PSOs. The motives of some troop-participating countries in regional interventions are sometimes questionable. It also creates problems of coordination and authority if the UN comes to the operation late.

While Canada can do little to address the resource problems of regional organizations (we have our own), it can act on a number of fronts. First, Canada's Military and Assistance Training

See: Herbert Howe, supra note 15; Carolyn M. Shaw, "Regional Peacekeeping: An Alternative to United Nations Operations?" The Journal of Conflict Studies, Vol. 15 No.2 (Fall 1995), pp. 59-81; and Case Study: Cooperation Between the United Nations and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS): UNOMIL/ECOMOG. New York: Lessons Learned Unit. Department of Peacekeeping Operations. Lessons Learned from Cooperation with Regional Organizations in Peacekeeping and Peace Support. Working Paper No. 147 pp.

Program should emphasize peacekeeping and peacebuilding skills when training troops from regional organizations. Participation by those troops at the Pearson Peacekeeping College should be encouraged and subsidized. We should encourage the United Nations to share its vast experience in peace support operations and the lessons learned from those operations with regional organizations through whatever means feasible .We should also ensure that the UN arrangements with regional organizations in PSOs respect Charter provisions and are run under UN imprimatur. Canada should share its knowledge and experience through institutions like the Commonwealth, the Francophonie and the OAS.

Challenge 5: Neither financial nor human resources are infinite, though the number of possible peacebuilding tasks seems to be.

Canada should concentrate on some critical, (dare I say it) niche tasks for which it has expertise. Civilian police, as mentioned above, is one. Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration is another. This is a critical aspect of any PSO and a determining factor in the long-term success of peacebuilding. Since Canada is making children and armed conflict a priority and child soldiers are an important aspect of that, focusing on DDR will double our investment. A focus on DDR also reemphasizes the importance of the continuous long-term view of peacebuilding during PSOs, since reintegration requires the participation of development agencies and banks. This focus will reinforce our emphasis on sustainability. In emphasizing this however, we need to pay due attention to civilians so that they do not perceive that the military, at whose hands they may have suffered, are disproportionately benefiting from their role.

Challenge 6: If Canada is to continue to be engaged in PSOs and wants to ensure their effectiveness, a premium should be placed on intellectual contemplation, study, and long-term thinking Intellectually, Canada can take a number of initiatives. The first, and probably most important requirement, is for long-term and strategic thinking. Thinking about all the issues,

Program should emphase a perceivagang and perceptulating skills when uniting weeps from regional organizations. Participation by those troops at the Pentson Pentskiesping College should be encouraged and arbsidized. We should encourage the United Nations to share its was experience in peace support operations and the lessons insmed from those operations with regional organizations through whatever means fensible. We should also ensure that the UN strangements with regional organizations in PSOs respect Charter provisions and are run under the primarus. Canada should share its knowledge and experience through institutions like the Canada should share its knowledge and experience through institutions like the Challenge 5: Assistor fragacial new himsen resources are infined though the number of reactible percentiling taken to be Canada should concentrate on some certical, (date I say it) niche tasies for which it instead separation. Civiliza police, as mendoned scove, is one. Disarinament, Demobilization, and Reintegration is another. This is a critical sepect of any PSO and a determining factor in the long-term success of percebuilding. Since Canada is middle, children and armed conflict a priority and child softlers are an important aspect of that focusing on DDR will double out musument. A mous see DDR also reamplessives the importance of the continuous long-term view of peacebuilding during PSOs, since reintegration requires the participation of development expensives and bardle. This focus will reinflures our emphasis on sucremphistiv, in emphasizing this however, our need to get due attention to civilize as that they do not perceive that the military, in whose hands they may have suffered as disproportionately benefiting from steels role.

Challenge 5. If Canada is to continue to be engaged in PSCs and recent to move their effectiveness, a promium should be placed on area seens a contemporary and long-term thinking trom videdorq bus item off seviratives of seminates The first and probably most operant requirement, is for congruence, and suspection chindren Thinking about all the issues

many of which have been raised in this paper. This needs to take place not just in the heat of a mission, but far in advance. The second is to regularly share information and knowledge among experts and practitioners, again in a dispassionate environment.

There are a number of ways that these processes can take place. Last year in Britain the British army participated in Rebuild 97, a simulation that explored the civilian-military perception of PSOs. 43. Canada can engage in similar and regular scenario building or simulation exercises that reflect the realities of PSOs on the ground, at the UN, and in Ottawa. Participants in these simulations should include both civilian and military practitioners who engage in realistic and perhaps reverse role playing. These simulations can provide the players with an appreciation of each others perspectives and constraints as well as set the ground for better cooperation and coordination.

Canada could organize regular conferences, perhaps biannually, of players from the UN and in the field to discuss problems, approaches, solutions and best practices. These conferences could serve as reviews and progress reports. The opportunity (and excuse) for the first such conference will take place in November this year on the tenth anniversary of the election in Namibia. This anniversary conference could provide a retrospective of PSOs in the nineties since UNTAG, and include those individuals -- from the UN, the field, and Ottawa -- with experience in recent and past operations dating back to 1989. The conference should address a host of recent issues germane to the conduct of PSOs (e.g. UN reform, coordination problems, working with the World Bank), but would also look at the progress that has been made. At least a part of the conference should look at policy options for Canada. Funding could then be sought from the John Holmes Fund in addition to all relevant Canadian Departments and Agencies. Canada should also sponsor more frequent seminars on peacebuilding during PSOs, inviting specialists and experts to give talks and exchange viewpoints on different aspects and perspectives.

Anthony Verrier, "Rebuild97: a Simulated Exercise for Peace Support Operation." International Peacekeeping, Vol. 5 No. 2 (Summer 1998), pp. 103-111.

many of which have been raised in this paper. This needs to take place not just in the heat of a mission, but far in advance. The second is to regularly stare information and knowledge among expens and procedurers, again in a dispassionate environment.

There are a number of ways that these processes can take place. Lest year in Britain the Saidish army paraiospated in Vebuild 97, a simulation distributed the civilian culitary perception of PSOs. 4. Canada can engage in similar and regular scenario braiding or simulation exercised distributes the restities of PSOs on the personal at the UN, and in Ottawa Participants in these refinal ations should inchade both civilian and military practitioners who engage in realistic and perhaps reverse role playing. These simulations can provide the players with an appreciation of cases perspectives and constraints as well as set the ground for boner cooperation and constraints as well as set the ground for boner cooperation and Canada could organize regulas conferences, perhaps bianqually, of players from the UN nd in the field to discuss problems, approaches, solutions and best practices. These conferences ould serve as reviews and progress reports. The opportunity (and excuse) for the first turn ould serve as reviews and progress reports. The opportunity (and excuse) for the first turn outforcace will take place in Neuraphor this year on the cash analysation of field in the timetics since familia. This appreciate continues could provide a representation of RSOs in the timetics since ATAO, and include those meioridanis— from the UN, the field, and Ottaws—with experience a recent and past operations daring back to 1989. The conference andle address a first of recent outer past operations daring back to 1989. The conference andle address a first world also fook at the progress that has been made. At least a part of the outcomes should look at political for Canadian Departments and Apending Octavities of the Monte Spansor made from the addition to all relevant Canadian Departments and Apending specialists and expensor made from eaching verypoints on perceptibility during PSOs, invoking specialists and expensor made factuants and exchange verypoints on different attents and perspectives.

Achter Verrier, Rebeilder a Declared Decision for Peace Support Operation, introductional Peacetrepung Vol. 5 No. 2 (Summer 1998) no. 103-111

Inter- and intra-departmentally there needs to be more frequent and regular sharing of information, views and problems. While most of the people interviewed in Ottawa are singing from the same songbook they tend to be carrying different tunes. In complex peace operations it is important to make sure that input from the different departments, divisions, and agencies is shared. Each is responsible for different aspects of the operation so their views will be critical to the success of the operation and long-term peacebuilding. It would also be worthwhile whenever possible to set up an interdepartmental task force or liaison teams whenever Canada is participating in a PSO. This should include the usual government suspects (DFAIT, DND, CIDA) and NGOs. This would begin to improve coordination in Canada.

The government should also consider establishing a small dedicated think tank to focus on the development security-nexus, particularly peacebuilding during PSOs. This organization could include, perhaps on a rotating basis, academics, experts, specialists, and practitioners with recent experience in the field, in government departments, in NGOS, and at the United Nations. While independent of government, it might develop a practical research program in consultation with the government. It could also provide issue specific policy analysis as required by the government. Canada would then have ready at hand a specific group of experts knowledgable and current on relevent on issues, themes, and regions relating to its peace and security responsibilities.

There are no quick fixes to coordination problems at the UN or in the field. But regular sharing of perspectives and information, along with considered study of the issues, can go along way toward building a shared understanding of issues and mutual cooperation to reach common goals. At the very least the government should sponsor more detailed and in depth studies of UN PSOs and all there aspects.

CONCLUSION

Clearly, this paper scratches only the surface of very complex issues. In peacebuilding terms we are confronting a good news bad news scenario. While in many respects we have

Inter- and intra-departmentally there needs to be acore frequent and regular starting of information, views and problems. While most of the people interviewed in Ottawa are singing from the same songbook they tend to be carrying different tures. In consoler, peace operations it is important to make sure that input from the different departments, divisions, and agencies is abased. Each is responsible for different aspects of the operation so their views will be critical or per success of the operation and tong-term peacebuildings are would also be worthwhile whenever possible to set up an interdepartmental task force or linison teams whenever Canada whenever possible to set up an interdepartmental task flower or linison teams whenever Canada whenever possible to set up an interdepartmental task government suspects (DFALT, DMD).

The government security nexus, puricularly pracrouding a small dedicated think tank to focus on the development security nexus, puricularly pracrouding during PSOs. This organization could include, perhaps on a rotating boats, academics, experts, specialists, and practitioners with recent experience in the field, in government departments, in NGOS, and at the United Nations. While independent of government, in might develop a practice policy analysis as required by she with the government. It could also provide issue specific policy analysis as required by she government. Canada would then have ready at hand a specific group of experts knowledgable and current on relevant on issues, themes, and regions relating to its peace and security responsibilities.

There means quick these to coordination problems at the UN or in the first, but regular shading of parameters and mistast entry of the largest can go along were toward building a shared understanding of issues and mistast cooperation to reach common years for the government should sponter more dessited and in don't studies of UN.

CONCLUSION

Clearly, this paper accounted only the surface of very complex issues. In peaceboilding come a long way, in others there is a considerable road to travel. Thinking about PSOs as integrated undertakings has advanced enormously in the last few years, but our ability to implement that thinking still lags. Peace support operations suffer from seemingly time-honoured problems: poor coordination, a lack of resources, and political infighting at the UN. The tendency to rely on regional organizations with little or no experience in "democratic" peacekeeping could bring us back to square one in a lot of ways.

Still there have been significant successes, notably in UNTAG, ONUSAL, MINUGUA, and UNTAES to name a few. Much depends on the skill of the personnel involved and the commitment of local actors. Future success will depend on providing the requisite resources, a workable mandate, and committed cooperative personnel all sharing the same aim.

Canada needs to bring to the table realistic suggestions for improving the planning, deployment, and implementation of these complex operations. It also needs to provide resources, both intellectual and financial, to support our participation in such missions. It is one thing to wring your hands about what needs to be done and quite another to provide resources to help ensure it happens.

ANNEX I

Defining Peacebuilding

If PSOs are those operations attending the implementation of a peace agreement, what is peacebuilding? It is important to answer this question since we are alleging that PSOs engage in peacebuilding activities while there continues to be some disagreement about precisely what peacebuilding is. Still, this is not the place to try and settle the debate. A quick survey of many of the definitions that have been proffered should tell us whether civilian activities conducted during PSOs qualify as peacebuilding.

come a long way, it others done is a considerable med to travel. Thinking about PSOs as integrated undertakings has advanced exomously in the last few years, but our ability to maplement that thinking still lags. Peace repport operators suffer from seemingly time-honoured problems; near coordination, a lack of resources, and political infighting at the UN. The tendency to rely on regional organizations with little or no experience in "temogratio" grandency to rely on regional organizations with little or no experience in "temogratio" grandency to rely on the constitute of the const

Still there have been significant successes, totably in UNIAG, ONUSAL MINUSULA.

Canada needs to bring to the table redistic suggestions for improving the planning, deployment, and implementation of these complex operations. It also needs to provide resources, both intellectual and financial, to support our participation in such missions. It is one ming to wring your hands about what needs to be done and quite another to provide resources to help answer it impresses.

ANNEX I

If PNAN are those operations attending the implementation of a peace agreement, what is prescentified? It is important to answer this question since we are alleging that PSOs engage in peacebuilding activities while there communes to be some disagreement about precisely what acceptualing is. Self, this is not the place to my and seeds the debete. A quick survey of many if the definitions that have been profitted should tell as whether civilian activities conducted Kofi Annan, the UN Secretary General described post-conflict peacebuilding recently as "action undertaken at the end of a conflict to consolidate peace and prevent a recurrence of armed confrontation." More important, he noted that peacebuilding requires an integrated effort to address the various factors that have caused or are threatening a conflict. Specifically, he noted that peacebuilding may involve the creation or strengthening of national institutions, monitoring elections, promoting human rights, providing for reintegration and rehabilitation programs, and creating conditions for resumed development.

Chetan Kumar elaborates on the Secretary-General's definition somewhat, pointing out that it is important to consider not simply the basket of activities that can be undertaken to build peace but whether a self-sustaining process can be initiated for the pre-emptive management of disputes.⁴⁵

Most others who define peacebuilding approach it from a much broader perspective, allowing plenty of room for interpreting what is and isn't peacebuilding. Fen Hampson, notes that peacebuilding covers a wide range of activities and functions associated with political, social, and economic reconstruction in war-torn societies. Hampson, as noted earlier, advises that such activities need to be linked to a negotiated peace settlement if they are to stand any chance of success in building peace.

Canadian Foreign Minister Lloyd Axworthy describes peacebuilding as "a package of

See Hamps on, supra note 2, p 702.

The Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa. Report of the Secretary General to the United Nations Security Council, April 1998, par 63 (www.un.org/ecosocdev/geninfo/afrec/sgreport/report.htm Chetan Kumar, "Building Peace in Haiti." New York: International Peace Academy, Occasional Paper (1998), p. 31.

measures to strengthen and solidify peace by building a sustainable infrastructure of human security." He continues: "I see peacebuilding as casting a life line to foundering societies struggling to end the cycle of violence, restore civility and get back on their feet."47

Necla Tschirgi, reminds us that peacebuilding is an internationally-coined and promoted concept that "refers primarily to the international community's response to violent conflict, threats of violent conflict or the aftermath of such conflicts." "Peacebuilding, then," she writes, "is the point of intersection between local realities and international response, what one observer has called the meeting point of 'two anarchies'." For the most part she relies on the definitions of peacebuilding provided in former UN Secretary General Boutros Ghali's An Agenda for Peace, though she cites others who would expand the concept. One of these is Gareth Evans who defines peacebuilding as a set of strategies which aim to ensure that disputes, armed conflicts and other major crises do not arise in the first place -- and if they do arise that they do not subsequently recur.49

Clearly these perspectives, though slightly different one from the other, are hardly conflicting and in many senses are wholly compatible and even complementary. They also place the activities of most of today's PSOs squarely within the parameters of what is commonly understood as peacebuilding.

ANNEX II Peacebuilding in Recent UN PSOs

Lloyd Axworthy, Speech....

Necla Tschirgi, Defining Peace building. Ottawa: International Development Research Centre, unpublished paper (1997), p. 1.

See: Gareth Evans, Cooperating for Peace: The Global Agenda for the 1990s and Beyond. Australia: Allen and Unwin (1993).

measures to strengthen and solidity peace by cuilding a sustainable infrastructure of human security." He continues: "I see peacebuilding as casting a him ime to foundering sociolies struggling to end the cycle of violence, maters civility and get back on their feet."

Necla Technes, reminds us that peacebuilding is an intermediately coined and promoted denoted denoted that refers princarily to the intermediatel community's response to violent conflict, dressed in violent conflict or the aftermants of each conflicts." Teacebuilding than," she writes, "to the point of intermediate between local realities and intermediatel response, what one observes has called the macting noise of two searchies." For the nost pair she relies on the definitions of peacebuilding provided in forms. UN Searchy General Boutos Ghalf sain Agenda for Peace, though she cites outers who would expend the concept. One of mess is Garein Evens who defines also concept that disputes, armed conflicts and other major crises do not sense in the first place — and if they do not subsequently recurs."

Clearly diese perspectives, though slightly different one from the other, are hardly cufficulty and in many senses are wholly compatible and even complementary. They also place activities of most off today's PSOs squarely within the parameters of what is commonly addressed as accommonly to commonly.

THE REMAINS OF THE PROPERTY OF

doyd Axwendy, Speech.

Needla Tachnya, Defining Peace building Ottawai International Development Research Centra, unpublished paper (1997), p. 1 See: Greedli Brans, Cooperating for Peace. The Global Agenda for the 1990s and Daycard.

	MINURSO Western Sahara	UNOMIL Liberia	UNOMSIL Sierra Leone	UNTAES Croatia	MINURCA Central African Republic
Elections\ Referendums	X	X		X	X
Democratic Development		X	X	X	X
DDR		X	X	X	X
Resettlement\ Repatriation	X	X	•	X
Civilian Police	X		X	X	X
Human Rights	-	X	X	X	X
Reconciliation		Per nessage	X	X	X
CBMs		9020 #11005 02 1200211 12	a survey self	X	X
Economic Reconstruction		18980785	X	X	X

DOCS
CA1 EA751 98P22 ENG
Hay, Robin
Peacebuilding during peace support operations: a survey and analysis of recent missions (second draft) 16988786

