WORLD TRADE CONFERENCE

COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I wish to announce the Canadian delegation which will attend the second session of the united nations economic and social council preparatory committee of the international conference on trade and employment which will convene in Geneva on April 8.

Mr. L. D. Wilgress, Canadian ambassador to the U.S.S.R., will head the delegation, with Mr. Hector B. McKinnon, chairman of the tariff board, as alternate. The other delegates will be: Hon. Victor Doré, Canadian ambassador to Belgium; D. Sim, deputy minister of National Revenue (Customs and Excise); J. J. Deutsch, Department of Finance; H. R. Kemp, Department of Trade and Commerce; F. A. McGregor, Commissioner, Combines Investigation, Department of Justice; A. M. Shaw, Department of Agriculture; S. D. Pierce, Department of External Affairs. Advisers to the delegation will be: W. J. Callaghan, Commissioner of Tariff, Department of Finance; R. Cousineau, tariff board, Department of Finance; G. C. Cowper, Department of Trade and Commerce; J. P. Manion, Canadian Commercial Representative, Rome; A. L. Neal, Department of Trade and Commerce; A. E. Richards, Department of Agriculture; G. B. Urquhart, Department of National Revenue; A. S. Whiteley, Department of Justice. The secretary general of the delegation will be L. E. Couillard, Department of Trade and Commerce.

At the conference the representatives of nineteen countries including Canada will seek to negotiate specific tariff concessions on a multilateral basis, the removal of other barriers to trade and the elimination of discriminatory practices. They will also seek to agree on a charter establishing common principles of world trade policy and setting up the proposed international trade organization of the united nations.

The Canadian delegation is at present en route to London where it will hold preliminary discussions with commonwealth representatives on tariffs and preferences prior to the opening of the conference in Geneva.

WEATHER FORECASTING

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF STATIONS IN THE ARCTIC

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I should like to make a short statement with respect to Arctic weather forecasting stations.

To enable Canada to provide more accurate and longer range weather forecasting to meet her domestic and international obligations, the government proposes to establish nine weather stations in the Arctic during the next three years. The most northerly of these will be located in the vicinity of Eureka sound on the northwestern side of Ellsmere island approximately 600 miles from the north pole. The main weather station will be established at Winter harbour on Melville island at approximately latitude 75 north, longitude

110 west. It is planned to have Eureka sound and Winter harbour in operation this coming summer. The actual location of the other weather stations is a matter for further study. It is considered essential that these stations be operated for a minimum period of five years to enable accurate assessment of their value with a view to determining the advisability of continuing or expanding weather reporting operations in these Arctic regions.

Our Canadian climate and weather are more definitely influenced by currents of air and storms from the Arctic than from any other points of the compass. It is anticipated that the establishment of Arctic weather stations will provide our meteorologists with accurate information which will be of inestimable value to our national economy, and particularly to enterprises in many fields, such as agriculture and lumbering, to say nothing of aviation and other forms of transportation. From an economic point of view, long-range weather forecasting would result in savings far in excess of the monetary costs in establishing and maintaining these stations. Their establishment would also determine the feasibility of air routes across the Polar regions. Reports from the proposed Arctic weather stations will reduce the number of errors in the weather forecasts by providing advance information of outbreaks of cold air from the far north.

To our knowledge, the U.S.S.R., which is equally affected by polar storms and currents of air as the North American continent, maintains a large number of weather stations in the Arctic regions on the other side of the north pole. It is hoped to be able to interchange Arctic weather information with the U.S.S.R. and other neighbouring countries in the north when possible. The U.S.S.R. has already a very extensive exchange of weather information with Canada and will be greatly benefited by the additional reports which will be made available to them.

These new stations will be of great value to the United States as well as to Canada, and their operation will enable more accurate long range forecasting by the United States weather bureau. The United States has therefore undertaken to assist Canada in the establishment and operation of these northern stations, which will, of course, be under the control of the Canadian government, which will supply the officers in charge. United States technical personnel will be included in the staffs required. The Canadian government is grateful for this assistance, which will be invaluable until sufficient technically qualified Canadian-trained personnel are available. It is believed that this extension of weather-reporting facilities, in which the two countries will cooperate, will be of service to all countries interested in improving our common knowledge of the north.

TAXATION

RELIEF MEASURES TO BE EXTENDED TO GOLD MINING INDUSTRY

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement to the house regarding certain tax relief measures which the government proposes should be extended to the gold mining industry.

The house is doubtless aware of the difficulties facing the gold mining industry in Canada today and of the urgent representations that have been made to the government from associations representing the industry, from responsible citizens of mining districts, and from members of this house representing many constituencies in Northern Ontario and Quebec who have expressed to me personally their real concern over conditions in their constituencies.

No one who examines the record of current gold production and compares it with the level of output in our best years can fail to be impressed with the seriousness of the decline. Production has fallen from its all time high of 5,345,000 ounces in 1941 to 2,808,000 ounces in 1946. This is a decline of more than 47 per cent. Moreover, with rising labour and material costs and with the loss of the 10 per cent premium on United States funds, the immediate outlook is not bright.

It is, of course, a characteristic of the gold mining industry, which produces a product with a fixed price, that the margin of profit narrows down in the face of rising costs of labour, materials, and equipment at a time when business generally is prosperous. On the other hand, favourable conditions appear in this industry when others are in depression. It is well remembered how active the industry was during the hard years of the thirties, and how important it was to our whole economy during those years as a support to employment, to our foreign exchange position, and to our domestic purchasing power. Accordingly, I believe there will be general endorsement of the proposals I am about to make which are designed to assist in increasing production and to encourage prospecting and development in this field.

The government's proposals for the industry are threefold. In the first place, the depletion allowance for gold mines will be increased from 33⅓ per cent to 40 per cent of profits earned on and after January 1, 1947. This will apply to mines the value of whose output is to the extent of 70 per cent or more from gold. This will be of general benefit and encouragement to the industry as a whole. By widening the margin of retainable profits, the well-established mines should be able to utilize more low-grade ore than they might otherwise feel it worth while to bring to the surface. This provision should operate naturally to lengthen the productive life of existing mines in the industry. To this extent, therefore, it can be regarded as contributing towards future employment in the industry.

The second proposal is directed particularly towards the low-grade marginal mines where the impact of adverse conditions has been most severe. As a special relief measure in this direction it is proposed that the amount allowed as depletion for gold mines, as defined above, shall not in any case be less than $4 per ounce of gold produced. This new minimum allowance of $4 per ounce will replace the present minimum of $2 per ounce, and will be effective as from the date of commencement of the existing $2 per ounce minimum, that is to say, it will apply in respect of gold produced in fiscal periods ending after June 30, 1946. This provision will have the effect, for example, of exempting completely from tax those mines whose profit margin is $4 per ounce or less. This minimum depletion allowance will likewise be of benefit to those mines whose profit margin is more than $4. As it is an alternative to the 40 per cent depletion mentioned above, it is obvious that this $4 minimum will be of benefit to every company whose profit margin per ounce is less than $10.

The third proposal relates to new gold mines which have come or come into production on or after January 1, 1946. As the house is already aware, the law allows a three-year exemption period for new mines. In this three-year period companies are at present expected to take into their books the appropriate write-off for depreciation and pre-production expenses. It is now proposed to relieve gold mines from this requirement. These deductions which the companies have been required to take regardless of the size of their profits may now be carried over and taken in the remainder of the ordinary period of write-off remaining after the three-year period. This provision, while somewhat technical in nature, will, I think, be recognized by the industry as a substantial addition to the value of the three-year exemption. It should give added stimulus to the search for and development of new prospects since it increases significantly the tax concession to new mines.

The government has given very careful and sympathetic consideration to a number of other suggestions which have been made. There has, for instance, been some talk in the press of an outright subsidy for gold production. It is significant, however, that this was not urged by those who speak on behalf of the industry as a whole. In the government's view, at a time when subsidies on essential foodstuffs and other commodities are being withdrawn, it would be most inappropriate to embark upon a policy of subsidizing gold mining operations.

I would also like to take this opportunity of clearing up one point on which I find considerable misunderstanding in some quarters. It has been suggested that the government is obtaining more than $35 per ounce for the gold it sells abroad, because the Canadian dollar has been selling in the unofficial markets in the United States at a discount of several per cent. There are also suggestions that the industry should be entitled to the value of its gold converted at this unofficial exchange rate in New York. Let me say first of all that the proceeds of all Canada's sales of gold abroad are paid into the exchange fund account held by the foreign exchange control board and converted into Canadian dollars at the official rate of exchange, so that the government is making no profit in the way that some have apparently thought.

It would be out of the question to convert the proceeds of the sale of gold abroad into Canadian dollars through the unofficial market in New York and other American centres, and this is obvious when the nature of this unofficial market is understood. The transactions which take place in this market are only certain transactions between non-residents. All exporters of all products are required to account to the foreign exchange control board for the foreign exchange they receive from their exports and are not permitted to sell it in the unofficial market. This is one of the most basic elements in our system of exchange control, because it is necessary that the foreign exchange produced by the sale of our exports shall be made available for the purpose of purchasing imports for Canada and paying our other commercial and financial bills abroad. This is the use to which the foreign exchange is put when it is sold to the foreign exchange control board. If the proceeds of our gold exports or any other exports were sold in the unofficial markets abroad, they would not be available to Canada for normal purchases or payments abroad, but would instead be diverted to the export of capital from Canada by non-residents, thus undermining one of the main purposes of foreign exchange control.

This will be clearer if I take a moment to explain in more detail the nature of this unofficial market. This market arises because certain Americans or other non-residents of Canada may wish from time to time to withdraw capital from Canada and they find that they are unable, under the Canadian foreign exchange control regulations, to withdraw it by purchasing United States funds from a Canadian bank in the normal way. As members of the house are aware, United States funds are provided under present policies for all current account transactions, that is to say, for all imports, for reasonable travel expenditures abroad, for the conversion of the income earned by Americans on their investments in Canada, and they are also provided for the repayment of debts, including outstanding bond issues which are payable solely or optionally in United States funds. In addition, there are certain other types of capital transactions which we are prepared to see take place in the form of Canadian dollars but for them we are not prepared to provide United States funds out of our official reserves. For example, an American granted a permit to sell a security in Canada comes into possession of Canadian dollars which cannot be converted into United States funds in Canada. Similarly with an American selling real estate in Canada or reducing his capital investment in a Canadian business. Nevertheless, although Canadian dollars so acquired are not convertible into United States funds out of our official reserves, they are not blocked. The American receiving them is perfectly free to sell them to another American who wants Canadian dollars, at whatever rate they agree upon. The American purchasing the Canadian dollars can only use them for certain purposes. For example he cannot use them to pay for Canadian exports on account of the requirement that exports from Canada to the United States be paid for in United States funds. The main purpose for which they can be used is to make new investments in Canada, though Canadian dollars can also be used for tourist expenditures here.

The fact that Canadian dollars acquired in the unofficial market can thus be used only for certain limited purposes naturally makes them less valuable in the hands of non-residents than United States dollars, which can be used for any purpose. Hence a discount may arise, but this discount is no indication whatever of the true value of the Canadian dollar. This discount represents merely the price paid by one non-resident to another as an inducement to make a capital investment in Canada which cannot be converted into United States funds through the official channels. This unofficial market is highly specialized and accounts for only a small percentage of our total international transactions.

While I realize that this is a highly technical subject, I thought I should make this explanation to remove some of the misunderstandings which appear to exist.

In closing I should like to emphasize that the new pattern of taxation of the gold mining industry which I have outlined must not be regarded as fixed policy. It represents a programme which the government considers proper under the present circumstances, and will, of course, have to be reconsidered when circumstances change and particularly if and when general economic conditions become much more favourable for gold mining.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the Minister of Finance indicate to what extent the discount of the Canadian dollar in the United States market is attributable to the management of the Canadian dollar by the Canadian authorities?

Mr. ABBOTT: I would say not at all.

Mr. COLDWELL: Will the Minister of Finance inform the house why it is that the government alters the basis of the budget established by this house without referring it to parliament?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not altering the basis of the budget. This is not a statutory provision. It is a provision which is within the discretion of my colleague the Minister of National Revenue. The rates of depletion and depreciation are such as the minister may allow. My hon. friend will recall that those are not fixed by statute.

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not recall that.

Mr. ABBOTT: They are a matter which is within the determination of the administrative branch of the government. That is why I am in a position to make this announcement which is a matter of government policy and does not require an amendment to the existing statute.

UNITED NATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SPECIAL SESSION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY TO DISCUSS PALESTINE MANDATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has Canada been sounded out either officially or unofficially by the secretary general or any other official of the united nations organization as to the Canadian view on calling a special session of the general assembly to discuss Britain's latest proposal with respect to the handing over of the mandate of Palestine to the world organization?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer is no.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I thank the minister for such a prompt and brief answer.

NATIONALITY AND CITIZENSHIP

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State? Did Canada participate in the commonwealth conference on nationality and citizenship which has just been concluded in London? If so, who represented the Canadian government?

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): I think that question should more properly be referred to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. GRAYDON: He would just say no.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I may say that the representative from the department of the Secretary of State was the under-secretary of state, Doctor Coleman.

COAL

IMPORTATION FROM UNITED STATES INTO MARITIMES PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, arising out of many telegrams I have received from civic bodies throughout the maritimes, stating that the fuel requirements of that area are being supplied by United States coal. Can the minister inform the house who are the importers of this additional coal, and can he assure us it is not being imported by the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation? In the second place I should like to inquire if the government of Nova Scotia or of New Brunswick has made representations to his department or advanced any proposals with regard to a settlement of the present work stoppage.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): The answer to the second part of my hon. friend's question is no. The other part of the question comes within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, and no doubt he will answer it.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I must advise my hon. friend that coal control ended on December 31 last. For more than six years prior to that date the Department of Reconstruction accepted responsibility for seeing that every citizen of Canada received coal sufficient for his needs. That responsibility is now in the hands of others. The government has neither the machinery nor the power to protect any user of coal to the extent that he will receive his full supply. The only machinery left is the statutory dominion fuel board. I am told by that board that it has received requests from the province of Nova Scotia for certain help in rationing coal and in moving coal from one part of the maritime provinces, where there is a surplus, to another part where there is a deficit. I am informed that, to the extent its staff will permit, the board is helping in this way.

As far as the importation of coal is concerned, I have no knowledge of it. I do not know whether or not coal is being imported; or, if it is, I do not know who is importing it.

Mr. GILLIS: The point I am interested in is whether or not the company which is carrying on a strike at the present time is being paid the subsidy the government pays on United States coal.

Mr. HOWE: I have explained that there is an agreement with the company, and I notice on the order paper a motion asking that the agreement be tabled. I will attempt to facilitate that motion and table the agreement at the first opportunity.

Mr. GILLIS: The subsidy to which I have reference is the $3.50 a ton paid on United States coal used for domestic purposes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO MOSCOW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, arising out of the announcement he made a few moments ago respecting the Canadian delegation to the preparatory commission on trade and employment. In view of the many assignments being given Mr. Dana Wilgress, whom I regard as well fitted for them, may I ask if he will soon be returning to his post as Canadian ambassador to Moscow, or is consideration being given to the appointment of someone else in his place?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No decision has been made with respect to that matter. When a decision is made it will be announced promptly.

NAILS

ALLEGED SHORTAGE ON PACIFIC COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Reports from the Pacific coast indicate a serious shortage of nails there. Can the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply make any statement with regard to the situation?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I have not heard of a shortage of nails in any part of Canada during the past two months.

Mr. FRASER: You have not been around, then; for there is a shortage.

Mr. HOWE: The fact of the matter is that there was a shortage last year, for several reasons, the principal of which was the strike in the steel industry. The limiting factor today is the amount of wire rod that can be devoted to the making of nails. The rod making capacity of Canada is being operated to the fullest extent, and the nail making capacity is being operated to the extent that rods can be made available. I might add that steel rods are being supplemented by aluminum rods, which make a satisfactory nail for some purposes. I have just received from the statistical department a forecast of production which indicates that whereas the production of nails in 1946 was 59,000 tons, production for 1947 is estimated at 72,000 tons, an increase of twenty-two per cent. I can assure my hon. friend that the industry is today operating at the rate of 72,000 tons of nails per annum, which should more than satisfy the requirements of Canada.

Mr. FRASER: How many nails were exported?

Mr. HOWE: There is, and for many months has been, a prohibition against export of nails from Canada.

[Mr. Knowles.]

INCOME TAX

COMPULSORY SAVINGS—REQUEST FOR REPAYMENT IN ADVANCE TO PERSONS IN NEED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Will the Department of Finance give consideration to advancing the date of payment of compulsory savings to persons in need? I am being inundated with letters from people in need.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I shall be glad to give consideration to that matter.

MEAT

INQUIRY AS TO DISCONTINUANCE OF RATIONING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if the discontinuance of meat rationing is in contemplation; and, if so, when?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The question has not been considered. When a decision is made it will be announced in due course.

WAR SAVINGS CERTIFICATES

QUESTION AS TO PAYMENT BY CHARTERED BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): Will the Minister of Finance say whether the chartered banks will be allowed to cash war savings certificates when the first of them become due, which will be within a few months? I understand that according to P.C. 306, dated January 28, only the post office will be allowed to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

FEED GRAIN

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO PRICES OF BARLEY AND FLAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): I want to direct a question to the appropriate minister; I am not quite sure who it may be. When will an announcement be made with respect to the price of barley and flax for the 1947 production? Many farmers are anxious to make their seed arrangements for the approaching season.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The whole policy in connection with feed grain was held over for consideration until after representations were received from the farmers' organization last Friday. It is now being given consideration, and an announcement will be made in due course.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PEARKES—WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN TROOPS FROM EUROPE—PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): On April 8, 1946, the Prime Minister asked me not to press at that time my request for the production of papers connected with the withdrawal of the Canadian occupational troops from Europe. In view of the statement made last evening by the Secretary of State for External Affairs will the government now table those papers so that this house may obtain full information on the subject in its relationship to other pending international agreements?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: There should be an answer.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The regular way to obtain the production of papers is by a notice of motion on the order paper.

Mr. PEARKES: Mr. Speaker, it was on a motion for the production of these papers that the Prime Minister made the statement to which I have referred.

Mr. GRAYDON: The minister and the Prime Minister are as far apart as the poles.

MR. GILLIS—INCOMPLETE ANSWER TO ORDER FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in order to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that sessional paper No. 142A, tabled yesterday in answer to some questions I asked, is incomplete. I suggest that now he should advise me how I might go about getting the necessary information. In my opinion questions 4 and 5 in this order were not answered at all. I believe the Department of National Revenue were in error in their answer to question No. 4, when they said it was contrary to the practice of the department to furnish information which would disclose the private transactions of the importers at customs. In my question I did not suggest that any private transactions should be disclosed. I merely asked for the names of companies importing fuel into Canada—nothing about their private transactions.

Question 5 was whether any of the importing fuel companies in Canada were subsidiaries of operating coal companies in Canada or the United States, and the answer was, no information. If the Department of National Revenue or the wartime prices and trade board, which answered these questions, have not that information, then surely some other government department has it. I wonder if I could impose upon the good nature of the Secretary of State to the extent of asking him to suggest to me some way by which I could get this information. I should like to have it because it involves large expenditures of the taxpayers' money, and it is information to which I believe we are entitled.

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): I shall look into the matter.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Friday, February 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. RODNEY ADAMSON (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that there is at least somebody in the Department of Finance who realizes there is such a thing as a gold industry in Canada. But I want to say here and now that the plan just brought down to the house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) will be of as little use as the plan he brought down previously.

Mr. CHEVRIER: You have not even looked at it.

Mr. GRAYDON: He did not have to look at it; it was read to the house.

Mr. ADAMSON: The plan will be of no use whatsoever, because the mines which are facing virtual extinction are those the basic costs of which to produce an ounce of gold are greater than $35. To offer any tax relief, or to call this a measure of tax relief for mines which at the present time are operating in the red, is only adding insult to injury.

There is one thing to be said about the minister's statement: After four or five years of constant hammering at the Department of Finance and its experts over in the east block, eventually they have done a little with regard to the depletion allowance. If I read the statement correctly, the depletion allowance to mines is increased from 33⅓ per cent to 40 per cent. Nothing is said in the statement about shareholders, so presumably the shareholders still take it in the neck.

My next observations will be directed to the free exchange. The minister went to great lengths to show that free exchange was not helpful to the Canadian or United States owner. If it is not helpful, and if it is not a real differential in cost, then why is it that Canadian stocks selling on the New York stock exchange sell from anything up to ten per cent lower in American dollars than they do in Canadian dollars? If the exchange disparity is not something that is very real, why is there a disparity in the prices of stocks on the two markets?

Having said that I should like to attempt to show the house the real danger which is facing the mining industry. I believe I should begin by pointing out the difference between mining—particularly gold mining—and any other type of industry. In a normal industry if the product is not marketed at a profit one can increase the price to the consumer. If the manufacturer still cannot operate at a profit, he can go into some other line and make some other type of article. Then if he fails to make a profit he can close his plant and wait until times improve, and pay only the small cost of maintenance and insurance.

On the other hand with a gold mine one is faced with a fixed price of $35 an ounce. Expenses are constant: one cannot close a mine or shut down a mill. The company has to keep it operating, because if it is not operating the mine will fill with water and become of virtually no value. Furthermore the management cannot make or sell any other product. Therefore as gold mining costs increase the mine is constantly driven nearer to the wall, until such time as costs equal selling price, which must bring about the closing of the mine. There is no other answer.

Under normal conditions mining is a hazardous and extremely vulnerable industry. There is no way in which one can look forward to what he is going to discover with the aid of the diamond drill. Except under most exceptional circumstances reserves can never be blocked out years in advance. Mining is always a wasting asset: the deeper one gets, the higher go the costs. Even under the best circumstances mining is a difficult, dangerous, hazardous and speculative business.

On many occasions I have drawn the attention of the house to the importance of mining, and particularly gold mining, to Canada. Under normal conditions a man employed in a mine gives work to at least five other men in other parts of Canada. In the United States the ratio is even higher, because the extent of fabrication of metals in that country is greater than it is in Canada.

Mines have beaten back our northern frontier. Without them northern Quebec could not have been properly and adequately colonized. Without mining, the great clay belt represented by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Bradette) would not have become a potential farming area. Today in Canada eighty per cent or more of our land can be used only for mining purposes. North of the tree line, and even approaching that line, the only asset we have lies under the ground. It seems therefore that everything possible should be done by any government in Canada to see to it that that eighty per cent is developed.

I now come briefly to the question of base metals. Today we have a differential between the controlled price of base metals in Canada, and the world market for those products. I wish to place on record a table showing these comparative prices:

	Canadian	United States	World
Lead	10·63	14·00	14·00-14·50
Electrolytic zinc	10·25	11·50	11·50-11·75
Electrolytic copper	16·63	20·50-22·00	20·50-21·00

It will be noted that the world market runs similar to the United States market. The differences between the Canadian and United States prices are 3·37 cents for lead, 1·25 cents for zinc and 5·37 cents for copper. There would be the same differences between the Canadian and world prices. If the price of base metals was keeping up the cost of living in Canada to any extent there would be some excuse for continuing controls, but there are two things to be taken into consideration. First, a difference of two or three cents per pound may mean the difference between a mine operating at a profit or at a loss. The net result of these controls has been that in effect a subsidy is being paid to the fabricator.

The price per pound does not mean much to the consumer of the average article, because the metal content costs of most articles is quite low. The cost of the metal is only a fraction of the total consumer cost. One of the first things that must be done is to remove the ceilings and controls on base metals.

There has been considerable activity in the stock market and people will say that if the stock market is good there cannot be much the matter with the industry. That is a very dangerous situation because the condition of the stock market does not necessarily denote a healthy condition in the industry. The boom in the stock market is largely due to two factors. First, there was a recent discovery of large nickel deposits in Manitoba and, second, some high grade deposits of copper ore have been discovered in the Rouyn and Noranda district. I will not mention the names of the companies, but those discoveries have been outstanding and large paper profits have been made in the stock market. All this does not indicate that the mining industry is in a healthy condition. There is only one thing that will make a healthy mining industry, and that is production. At the present time that is anything but good.

I come now to gold. The trouble with the gold industry can be summarized as follows: First, there is the parity of exchange. Second, there is the increased cost of materials. Third, there is taxation. Fourth, there is the increased labour cost. Fifth, there is the inefficiency underground because labour is getting older and the mines are getting deeper. As a consequence in many cases the output is not as good as it was before the war. Sixth, there is a drop in the ore reserves. Seventh, development work has been virtually at a standstill during the entire war, and ore is being broken on a hand-to-mouth basis.

I come now to the crucial point in connection with the entire gold situation. Unless a gold mine can produce an ounce of gold for $35—it is really $34.80, because there is a mint charge of 20 cents—that gold mine is not producing at a profit. There is only one answer: if you cannot produce your gold for $34.80 an ounce you cannot continue your mine. There is no other option open to such a mining company. You must produce for $34.80 or you go broke and your mine closes.

Let us look at the situation which existed in Canada at the end of last year, and it is considerably worse today. I have the names of the companies here but I shall not give them because I do not think it would be fair. This is all a matter of public record through published statements. In Ontario there were 14 mines which were not producing gold for less than $35 per ounce; in Quebec there were nine and in British Columbia there were four. The aggregate daily tonnage of the Ontario mines was 7,975 tons; of the Quebec mines, 6,175 tons and the British Columbia mines, 1,570 tons. There was a total installed mill tonnage of 15,720 tons per day. In other words, there was installed in Canada 15,720 tons per day in mills in mines which were operating in the red.

I am assuming that the average grade was $5 per ton. It would be a little less than that in Quebec, probably a little more in Ontario and considerably more in British Columbia. Assuming your average value per ton to be $5, the daily loss would be $78,600. On the basis of 350 working days a year, the loss per annum comes to the staggering sum of $27,510,000 which is almost entirely attributable to the policy of putting the Canadian dollar on par with the United States dollar and thus decreasing the price by $3.50 an ounce. I ask the house, through you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the country through the house: is that policy worth it? The answer must come from the people of this country. They must answer whether the fiscal policy of this government with regard to the gold industry is worth $27,000,000 per annum, based on conditions at the end of last year.

There are other things which are almost as serious. One is the tremendous shrinkage in the ore reserves of every Canadian gold mine. Since parity was established, twenty-five mines have cut or omitted their dividends. This constitutes a direct tax loss to the country. More dividends will be cut or omitted this year. There were only forty-seven mining companies paying dividends in 1946, and parity occurred early in July. The most recent information is that Hollinger has shown a loss of 200,000 tons in ore reserves this year, with an estimated value of nearly $3,000,000. This is the most substantial drop in ore reserves in the history of this great Canadian mine.

I come now to the other factors which are increasing the cost of mining gold. The first mine of continuous record to report was Kirkland Lake Gold Mines. Kirkland Lake estimates that parity meant a loss of $1.30 per ounce produced during the last half of 1946. This mine also said that the increase of ten cents per man-hour to labour meant an increase in costs equivalent to $1.61 per ounce of gold produced or 64 cents per ton milled. The increase in the cost of supplies in 1946 equalled $1.50 per ounce produced. By adding together these three items of increased costs it will appear that the 1947 costs will be between $4 and $4.50 per ounce produced higher than the 1946 pre-parity costs at this mine.

Kirkland Lake Gold is an old established mine and has a steady record of production. It is therefore reasonable to say that the conditions of increased costs found there will apply to the whole gold mining industry. An over-all cost per ounce of between $4 and $5 will put every straight Canadian gold mine in the red with the exception of eight mines, several of which are small high grade producers with a small output of gold. These are the facts. Can parliament and the government sit idly by and watch the destruction of this industry?

It may be asked, what should be done to assist the gold mining industry? The Minister of Finance and his advisers have always said that to export gold was to export capital. There are a number of mines in Canada today which are willing to market their own bullion. They are prepared to turn over to the foreign exchange control board the funds realized for this bullion, and they are prepared to turn over these funds in United States currency. Is that an export of capital? With our desperate need for United States dollars, surely if a man can get $40 or $45 per ounce in United States currency he should be allowed to do so, on the understanding that he turn over the currency to the foreign exchange control board. Surely that is not an export of capital.

I hold in my hand a short article which was published in the New York Herald Tribune last week, having to do with the marketing of gold. It reads as follows:

> There was little gold to be had anywhere in the world with the exception of London, where brokers were offering metal, presumably of Swiss origin, at from $41.75 to $42 an ounce.
> Informed quarters speculated whether the unofficial pressure being exerted by Washington would also be brought to bear on licensed international dealers to hold down the wholesale price which has been increasing consistently over the last two months.
> However, as long as the black markets were bidding ever higher prices for gold at retail, which has exceeded $80 an ounce in oriental markets, there was very little chance of keeping private wholesale dealings at reasonable levels.
> If the present international move to stamp out excessive black market operations should be successful, there is reason to believe that wholesale prices would respond, subject, of course, to the law of supply and demand.

This is the important sentence:

> The relative scarcity of gold would seem to act against any substantial decline of quotes at this time, regardless of all other factors involved.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, regardless of what the United States government may do, the price of gold is going up. It cannot be stopped.

That is the first step. The second step is to establish a free bullion market in Canada. The third step, which would be taken some time later, is to mint convenient sized bars and allow Canadian citizens and corporations to hold the gold. I mention this particularly in reference to the annual report of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada. The Sun Life has some $3,500 million of insurance in force at the present time. One of its greatest difficulties is with international currency. I shall not read the report of the company, but at the present time it is doing one of the great works of mercy in the world in that with its world-wide organization it is financing its policyholders, many of whom have kept their policies in force or at least have a considerable equity in them. It is providing destitute people all over the world with funds. If that company could supply its policyholders with gold, what a great asset it would be to policyholders in the orient, on the European continent, in Africa, in South America and even in England, and what a wonderful piece of good will it would be for Canada!

I come now to the matter of depletion allowance. I have said that the depletion allowance of 40 per cent at the mine is minuscule; it is nothing compared to what is needed. I have suggested 50 per cent and the senate committee agreed. The mining association and the chamber of mines have all agreed that not only do we want an increased depletion allowance to the mine but it should be given to the shareholder as well, and it should be in the neighbourhood of 50 per cent to really encourage the industry.

The mining industry is wholly opposed to a subsidy. If a mine cannot produce at a profit it is not the duty of the Canadian people to support it. All that the gold mines ask is to be allowed to get the world price for their metal. Surely that is not asking too much.

So far we have considered the industry merely from its own point of view. Let us look at it in the light of our present economic position. I say, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness that this country is in one of the most perilous international monetary conditions of its history. I should like to refer briefly to our position vis-à-vis the United States. In 1946 our imports from the United States were $1,405,300,000 and our exports to the United States $887,900,000, leaving a net deficit of the staggering sum of $517,400,000 in 1946 as against a small deficit of only $5,400,000 in 1945. That is not all. The situation is much worse than that today. In December our imports from the United States were $145,600,000; our exports were only $83,900,000, leaving a debit to the United States in December of last year of $61,700,000, the highest of any month in our history. Let us look at the ways in which we can meet that debt. We can meet it by currency devaluation, by tariffs, by selling more goods to the United States. I suggest to hon. members that they read an excellent article by Professor Palyi in last week's Financial Post. It seems unlikely that we are going to do any of these things, although we may be forced into devaluation; it is unlikely that our exports to the United States will greatly increase. We need their coal and oil and we are going to need them more and more. But there is one way in which we could help to meet that deficit, and that is by increasing our gold production. Our non-monetary gold exports in 1946 fell, I believe, to the low of many years of 95·8 million dollars. The average for the period of 1935 to 1939 was $124 million; that is, the average of the four years prior to the war was 35 per cent higher than the gold exports last year. In 1941 the maximum gold production was $206,000,000, and in 1946 is was just half that, $103,000,000.

In our desperate position in relation to United States exchange, in relation to United States dollars, I suggest that the first job of any government should be to see to it that we increase our gold production to meet this astounding deficit.

Let us look at the situation in another light. Canada's reserve of United States dollars in 1945 was $1,500,000,000. In 1946 it was down to $1,200,000,000. At the beginning of 1947 it was down to between $600,000,000 and $700,000,000, and at the present rate of dissipation it will take about six months to exhaust it entirely. Are we going to wait until we entirely denude ourselves of United States funds and become pauperized, or are we going to act now?

Let me mention another thing in this connection. The very stoppage of Nova Scotia coal mining is aggravating the situation, because for every ton of coal produced there we have to import a ton from the United States, further increasing the debit balance. I wish to quote one sentence from Graham Towers' report on the Bank of Canada, page 23 of the annual statement for 1946:

> Canada cannot continue indefinitely to sell on credit in overseas markets while she is incurring a substantial cash deficit in her balance of payments with the United States.

I say that Mr. Towers' "indefinitely" means about six months; in that time at the present rate we shall be denuded of American exchange. We may be denuded by the summer of this year. Can we look upon that with equanimity? I say not. We are in very truth facing bankruptcy if we continue in our present course.

I come now to the international monetary fund. It was hoped that the fund would provide a means whereby we could stabilize our exchange. At the present time controlled exchange are for the most part entirely fictitious, the pound sterling being worth $4.04 and the French franc one cent or nearly one cent. That is a fictitious exchange. It has no true value as an exchange rate. The franc today is selling for probably one-fifth of a cent, and the pound sterling, according to the last quotation I saw, was around $2. Are we to expect a hard boiled Republican congress of the United States to kick billions into the international monetary fund in view of these fictitious values of the pound sterling, the franc and other currencies in terms of United States dollars? We cannot count upon their doing so.

I wish now to quote some words from Camille Gutt, managing director of the international monetary fund:

> I cannot see any purpose in having a country go through deflation and depression to hold on to a currency parity which is fundamentally unsuited to its international economic position.
> We saw that in the 1930's, when depreciation was used not merely as a remedy for an unbalanced international position, but also as a device to export unemployment by depreciating a currency below the rate warranted by the international economic position of the country. It was what has been very appropriately called "a beggar my neighbour" policy. If we do not want a repetition of monetary chaos, we must replace conflicting national policies with cooperation in dealing with international monetary problems. That is the primary purpose of the fund—to provide a means for consultation and cooperation.
> Under the gold standard, short-term movements of capital were supposed to help countries to tide over difficult periods. Before the first world war, they were mostly of an equilibrating character. During the last twenty-five years when we had such movements, they were quite often of a disequilibrating character, what was called "hot money." Balances shifted from one centre to another for speculative or for political reasons. They could and, in some cases, did induce inflation or deflation in a country.

That statement was made recently in a symposium on the international monetary fund at Columbia university, academy of political science. The significant part in it is what he says about the gold fund flowing from one country to another owing to political unrest. That is very true, and it will always remain true so long as there exists political unrest together with controlled and managed currency throughout the world. The only way in which you will stop this flow from one country to another, in a politically upset world, is by establshing and retaining confidence in a country and the availability of hard exchange. The way in which that can be done, and the only way that has ever been found by which it can be done, is by establishing convertibility or exchangeability into gold.

I want to quote one thing more with reference to the international monetary fund. This is from Professor Jacob Viner, professor of economics at Princeton. I quote this to show that it is not merely my ideas on this matter that I am putting forward. I have a considerable amount of expert opinion behind me. This is what Professor Viner says concerning the international monetary fund:

> The means for dealing with economic problems must be adjusted to new conditions. Otherwise the economy breaks down. That does not require a change in objectives; but it does require a change in techniques. The gold standard was fundamentally a means of securing a common international monetary policy. With the more rigid structure of the present industrial economy, the gold standard can no longer perform this function.
> The international monetary fund could, and should be made to operate, within the limits of its resources, as a cycle-dampening agency. If it operated in accord with what I interpret as the spirit and even the letter of its charter, strictly as an exchange stabilization fund, such would be the natural result of its financial operations. But if newspaper reports have any basis, the managers of the fund are impatient to begin credit operations.

A sinister implication with respect to the use of the monetary fund.

> At this time price controls, rationing, subsidies, black markets, import and export controls, and direct governmental trade operations are almost everywhere either substituting for or distorting the traditional role of free-market prices as regulators of economic values. At this time every exchange rate in the world has a questionable and indeterminable relationship to the lasting values under free exchange market conditions of the currencies involved. At such a time there is little obvious value in stabilizing the existing more or less arbitrary exchange rates. At such a time there is no technique, except patience and trial and error, for ascertaining what levels of exchange rates would be deserving of stabilization. If the monetary fund authorities nevertheless embark upon active operations without waiting for less unsettled and less transitory conditions, the fund will inevitably operate as a reconstruction agency, or as a relief agency, instead of as an exchange stabilization agency. Once the time arrives when exchange stabilization proper will be feasible and urgent, the fund will have a till empty of the currencies then in demand and choked with the currencies in over supply in the foreign exchange markets of the world.

By that he means, Mr. Speaker, that if the monetary fund continues as a relief agency, which apparently is what it may do, the hard currencies, those which it is possible to transfer into gold, will be used up by the devastated soft currency countries until eventually the fund will find itself full of nothing but soft currency for which there is no use. I say "no use," Mr. Speaker, and I mean no use. The only way currency stabilization can ever be put into effect is by allowing a free exchange. I do not suggest that within a period of many years we shall be able to go back to a fixed gold standard. But we should use the gold we have to assist our own economy. We should use it by allowing our citizens to have it and by allowing it to be used as a trading asset instead of selling it at $35 an ounce when we know it is worth a great deal more than that, and selling it to a country to whom we are going in the red to the extent of $600 or $700 million a year. We are selling it, at a price far below the world price, to the United States, who will use it as one of her great assets in the time to come. I say that we need every ounce of gold that we can possibly produce in Canada. The function of the government should be to see that the gold industry is encouraged in every possible way. What are we doing now? The gold industry is being quietly strangled, and the statement made by the Minister of Finance today will do practically nothing to stop it.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make these last points. First, Canada is in an extremely vulnerable position with regard to her international exchange. Second, the controlled exchange rates now in force throughout the world are almost entirely fictitious. Third point, in view of Professor Viner's statement, it is improbable that the international monetary fund can operate as a currency stabilizer under the present rates of exchange. Fourth, bankruptcy is inevitable at the present exchange rates, which cannot be maintained. Fifth, the only way which has ever been found of bringing about a free exchange is to allow a free market for gold. Canada is in an extremely favourable condition in this regard. We are a great trading nation in our own right. We are today probably the greatest per capita trading nation in the world. The use of gold as an asset in the hands of our traders abroad would be of inestimable value.

Finally, we have an opportunity to push back our northern frontier. I do not know what gold is worth in the open market today, and nobody knows. It is selling at $80 an ounce in some places and $60 in others, and reasonable transactions are taking place. On the bullion markets of the United States it is $41 and $42. Nobody can say what the true value of gold is today, at least in terms of the Canadian dollar or the American dollar. I do say, though, that the value is certainly a great deal higher than the $35 Canadian which we are being paid for it. If gold is increased in value, in relation to the Canadian dollar, to anything like the rates currently in effect throughout the world, you will see not only $200 million, but $300, $400 or $500 million worth of gold produced in Canada annually. We have the possibility of entirely altering our whole economic structure. It is the one thing which will pull us out of the doldrums of upset international trade. The world is hungry for gold. The United States is hungry for gold.

An hon. MEMBER: The world is hungry for wheat.

Mr. ADAMSON: They are hungry for wheat, yes, but we do not get paid for it. I have no quarrel with that; we must do what we can to prevent mass starvation. But I do say that gold is the one thing that the nations of the world have ever put any trust in. We can use our gold for our own advantage and become a great international trading country, or we can continue with our present policies, in which event I say in all seriousness that we face bankruptcy. That choice rests with this parliament.

Mr. DAVID CROLL (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, if there is a single topic which has been thoroughly debated throughout the length and breadth of this land, that topic is immigration. This perplexing problem will continue to agitate this nation for many days. As this house knows, many speakers—including repeaters like myself—have discussed the subject from the social, economic, moral and humanitarian aspect. While, on the practical level, there has been a nation-wide demand from every walk of life for more people, yet the doors of this country have been opened only a crack. We still say to the world at large, "If you are lucky enough to come within a few narrow categories, you may enter at some time in the future." To the others we simply say, "We have not been able to make up our minds." I do not want to derogate from the little we have done to open Canada's narrow gate. It is at least a beginning, though its greatest fault, as I see it, is that it is vague, indefinite, wholly inadequate, and will bring us only a trickle. Yet one thing we have achieved. In common with other hon. members I hailed the statement made in this house by the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen), when he announced that there would be no discrimination against any group or class of immigrants. That all will be treated alike is in itself a victory. It was undignified for the government and an insult to the foreign-born among us that certain people were preferred. Now this invidious distinction has been removed in principle, and I trust the department will not fail to do away with it in practice.

There are two fundamental bases for the opening of immigration. The first is our obligation and our desire to help the war-stricken areas of Europe. This is a limited, short-term humanitarian plan, but it is not an immigration policy. The second is the long-term development of Canada. I bring to the attention of the house a booklet recently issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon), referred to as "educational bulletin No. 1, 1947, Canadian census occupational data for counsellors", containing some 165 pages. Rather than give my view, I give the opinion of the Montreal Gazette, as expressed this morning. They say:

> Support for the general view that increased immigration is essential is now offered from an additional and surprising source; the dominion bureau of statistics in a report on census occupational data. The figures, tables, charts and conclusions of the bureau report are as coldly practical as they are irreproachably accurate mathematically.
> Unmoved by sentiment, unswayed by prejudice, uninstructed in political considerations, the bureau of statistics argues from the basis of collated facts and nothing more. Its presentation begins at the beginning. It arrives by way of charts of figures at the only logical conclusion arithmetically. And it proves its opinion that "only a robust immigration policy could provide such expanding home markets as were previously available," whilst the Canadian birthrate is stationary or declining.

Further:

> If Canada is to maintain its present standard of living and develop its natural resources—still largely unexplored, unexploited and unharnessed—while taking its appropriate place in the comity of nations, it must fill some part of its empty places with men and women from other lands; men and women working together for themselves and for Canada.
> A generous immigration policy is not only humanitarian, it is the best tradition of enlightened self-interest.

To date, Mr. Speaker, we have done very little under both these heads; not enough either to relieve the basic need or to salve our own conscience, as continuing demands from home and abroad would indicate. We are profoundly uneasy about immigration. We know we must adopt some positive plan; yet we seem to do so reluctantly. Instead of formulating a broad, clearly defined policy, we juggle around the regulations, raising the age limit here and including another small category there, until even the immigration officials are as confused as are members of the public. It is true that a fifteen-year negative mentality is hard to change, but that is our task.

I shall deal with the immediate aspects of this problem. The question of refugees and displaced persons is a vital one, not only for the displaced persons themselves, who have been driven from their homes and have spent long years at forced labour and in concentration camps, but for the future peace and welfare of the whole world. Not until the disruptions and disorganizations of war have been settled, can we hope to proceed with the rebuilding of Europe. It is important that we should have a clear idea of the issues involved. There has been and still remains much misunderstanding concerning the number of refugees and their racial and national composition; and I should like, therefore, briefly to review the facts in the case. It is estimated that about thirty million persons were displaced from their homes in Europe during the war. Of these some ten million were removed to Germany as labourers in agriculture and industry. Some of these went voluntarily because of their enthusiasm for the nazi cause, but many more were coerced, becoming virtually slave labour. In addition, several million were prisoners of war, and about a million were held in concentration camps. The remnants of these groups constitute the core of the present displaced persons' problem. To these must be added a quarter of a million or more children whose parents were killed in concentration camps or during military operations, or who wandered over the country following the moving armies, or who were placed with families in Germany, France and the low countries. Following the end of hostilities in Europe, the task of sorting out and repatriating these displaced millions fell on SHAEF and on UNRRA displaced persons' teams, which succeeded in moving the majority of them in orderly fashion back to their former homes. From V-E day to April, 1946, some six million displaced persons have been repatriated; and the task of repatriation has been continued, thanks to the admirable work of UNRRA, the intergovernmental committee on refugees, and the British and United States military governments.

There still remains, however, what we may call the irreducible minimum, those who, after almost two years of peace, remain homeless and the responsibility of the victorious allies. These number approximately one million people, mostly in displaced persons camps in Germany, Austria and Italy. They comprise roughly 400,000 Poles, 200,000 Baltic peoples, 70,000 Yugoslavs, 150,000 Jews and 100,000 Ukrainians. Of these, some 600,000 are found in the United States zone, 350,000 in the British zone and 50,000 in the French zone. The rest are in smaller groups. In other words, they are mainly from central and eastern European countries and are unwilling, for either political, economic or racial reasons, to return to their homelands.

It is well to examine what manner of people are these displaced persons. As we have seen, they are of varied origins, occupations, cultures and abilities, but all have undergone common experiences. They have been uprooted from their homes and separated from their families, many of whom met death at the hands of the invaders. They spent years in internment camps or barracks, where lack of humanizing contacts with friends and loved ones, coupled with the brutality of the nazi overseers, has broken and upset their previous life pattern.

Most of the displaced persons showed little interest in politics. There was deep hatred of the oppressor. But the violent uprooting and long separation from their homeland tended to blur their political as well as their other affiliations. To add to these deprivations, they enjoy none of the rights guaranteed to prisoners of war by international convention, and even the little privileges of food parcels and gifts were denied them.

The majority of these persons were set to work in the German economy. Eastern Europeans were usually assigned to agriculture and heavy manual labour, while western Europeans were employed largely in industry. As might be expected, their output of work was usually less than half that of the German workers, owing to their resentment, inferior living conditions, and lower level of skill, coupled with a great deal of deliberate sabotage.

Yet even before the end of hostilities the displaced persons were beginning to rise out of the depths. Community life, if only on a very rudimentary level, became reestablished; and with the advent of peace and fewer deprivations, some return to a more normal behaviour pattern was possible. So long, however, as the homeless remain virtual prisoners in the same camps that housed them in the days of their slavery, and so long as four-fifths of them continue in enforced idleness, we may expect their resentment and restlessness to continue unabated.

These people have no future, in their present way of life. We must help them to become self-sustaining economically if we ever hope to rebuild them morally. At present they are homeless and hopeless. Their host countries look upon them with hostility. So many Germans have been deported from the east into the United States and the British zones that the population has increased from 34,000,000 in 1939 to 43,000,000 in August of this year. No doubt some of them can be integrated into the German life; but there is little there worth while. It is very crowded, and even they are looking to the British and to the Americans for food to be provided for them, while all the rest of the world appears in their eyes to be indifferent to their fate.

We must not forget the children. In their desire to destroy the biological basis of adjoining countries, the nazis kidnapped hundreds of thousands of children from their homes and cast them adrift on the continent. UNRRA workers have been able to find only 10,000 of them, most of whom have now lost their native language and their desire to return home. As children will, they remember only dimly their past associations. Their lives will have to be rebuilt from the very foundation.

What is to be done with this tragic residue of men, women and children? Return to their homes is out of the question for a variety of reasons. In many instances their homes and possessions have been destroyed, through military operations. In other instances their property has been acquired, legally and otherwise, by people who refuse to restore it, even if legal title could be established. Still others, notably Poles, Ukrainians and Baltic peoples who make up the majority of the displaced persons, cannot go back because of hostility to the governments which prevail in their homelands. Often this is aggravated by fear of violence and even death, if they return.

The Jewish displaced persons, who number approximately fifteen per cent of the total, suffer most of these disabilities. They do not want to go back to the homelands, and they are not now wanted. Their homelessness poses an especially sad problem, because the war left tragic residue of anti-Semitism in Europe.

To settle this problem, the general assembly of the united nations has approved the formation of the international refugee organization which will come into existence formally, we hope, when the constitution has been approved and signed by the fifteen member states whose contribution to the operational budget is not less than seventy-five per cent of the total, which has been tentatively set at $160 million.

The international refugee organization must be prepared by June 30 of this year to take over the work of settling displaced persons previously carried out by the various bodies I have mentioned. What is Canada's position in all this? Our position has been ably presented before the general assembly of the united nations by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). Our view throughout the discussions was that the question of refugees can be solved only through cooperation among all the united nations to the fullest possible degree, and we have consistently supported the formation of the international refugee organization. In this connection I quote the words of the minister:

> . . . with the clear understanding that we will play our full part as a member state of the international community.

We take as our major premise these four points on which general agreement has been reached:

1. The problem of refugees is an international responsibility;

2. Repatriation should be carried out to the fullest extent possible;

3. No genuine refugee should be forced to return to his place of origin against his will; and

4. No aid should be extended to war criminals, quislings or traitors.

This last point is of paramount importance. The basis of our approach is on humanitarian principles, and traitors and Quislings are certainly not entitled to look to us for mercy and assistance. In addition, if such people were false to their countries of origin, what assurance should we have that their attitude toward their land of adoption would be any less reprehensible? We have no room for political turn-coats or economic opportunists. Our sole desire is to extend the helping hand of humanity to those who deserve our aid. Our doors will be forever closed to those who backed the wrong horse and betrayed their own countries.

Most important of all, we must do our utmost to make the international refugee organization a reality and not a polite fiction which will salve our consciences and leave the great human problem unchanged. To date, as the minister has pointed out, despite our fine words, scarcely a single refugee has been actually aided by the united nations. Words in themselves solve nothing. We must get on with the great social task before us.

We are in agreement upon one fundamental principle. The refugee problem which is an inevitable legacy of war is an international problem and it must be given an international solution. The united nations, on the basis of their available space and their economic stability, must be prepared to offer immediate haven to a million refugees. We must all do our share. Already the South American countries have announced their willingness to participate. Brazil has expressed the desire to take 120,000; Paraguay is calling for agricultural workers, including 5,000 Ukrainians, and will take professional workers up to fifteen per cent of the number of practising in that country. Venezuela will accept 10,000 families, amounting to from 30,000 to 50,000 persons. Chile has appropriated $20 million for immigration. Argentina will take 50,000 a year up to 4,000,000, and Colombia has announced that she will accept displaced persons. What I think will interest the house more is the fact that Britain has announced that she will admit 500,000 displaced persons to relieve her manpower shortage. I should like to quote from the Montreal Gazette of today:

> The admission of a half million displaced persons to relieve Britain's manpower shortage has been agreed upon by the ministry of labour and the trades union congress, it has been learned.
> As a result of continuous pressure by the cabinet, faced with accumulating evidence of Britain's deteriorating economic position, union leaders are understood to have agreed under two conditions to a drastic move to break the vicious circle of shortages. The first is that the immigrants shall become subject to union rules and standards. The second is that the immigrants shall be selected individually on a basis of their skills and general suitability for Britain's most seriously undermanned industries—coal, foundries, textiles and agriculture.

Britain, the Argentine and Brazil already have missions in Europe weeding out the displaced persons. They are stealing a march on us and we are going to be left holding the bag. Let us not deceive ourselves; Canada must take a stand in this matter and it must be a realistic stand. On the basis of the room available and on the basis of our strong economy, we shall probably have to take into this country a minimum of 100,000 displaced persons. If they are picked, they will strengthen rather than weaken our economy. Until the present, we have gone along with the united nations, agreeing in principle with the united nations. We now stand committed to the fullest possible participation, a participation which we accepted as part of our responsibility to the world. But words only have been spoken and now the time has come for us to take some action.

As I said, we shall probably be called upon to take a minimum of 100,000 displaced persons. Rather than sit back and take what they give us, let us go in now and choose and take as Britain, the Argentine and Brazil are doing. Let us send our teams into these European camps without delay. If we wait we shall be left with the leavings, and that might well give immigration into this country a set-back from which it will never recover. We are ready to take our fair share numerically of displaced persons, but we want the very best we can get. First come, first served, seems to be the order of the day according to the announcement in the press.

Whom shall we take? First of all, there are those with relatives in Canada. Under present regulations these would number at most 2,000. But our test must not be whether they come within the present narrow regulations. The test should be: Has the displaced person relatives in Canada and have the relatives asked for him? We must be careful not to break up family groups. Those people who have relatives in Canada already have one foot in this country. They have someone here to speak for them, to welcome them and to look after them. They will assimilate quickly and will readily be absorbed into the Canadian stream.

Next come the children. On several occasions during the war the question of bringing orphaned children to Canada was broached and the response from the country at large was immediate and good. We showed what we could do in a small way with the British war guests, and I am confident that Canadians will open their homes and their hearts to the orphaned children of Europe whose lives have been shattered before they have scarcely begun. I know they will find among us foster homes where they will become workers and citizens in a society that needs them as much as they need it.

Next come the kind of people we want; that is, the workers, the same kind of people Britain wants. At the present time we can certainly use 5,000 domestics, and they are available. Mining, agriculture, textiles and other industries are all desperately in need of man-power. We are faced with the opportunity to do two great and inspiring things: help the homeless of Europe and help ourselves at the same time. It is a challenge which we must meet boldly.

I see the problem as being one primarily of organization. We must send our immigration teams to Europe at once with instructions to go ahead at full speed and with the fullest support from the government agencies concerned. This is not the time for administrative delays or departmental complexities. We are faced with an emergent situation which calls for the same bold planning we threw into our war effort. Present facilities patterned on our pre-war set-up are inadequate for the task. We must set up a large efficient immigrant processing department with ample powers. There will be labour department officials to designate what kind of people we want and where they can best be employed. There will be a medical group to examine refugees on the spot, including the use of X-rays. There will be an administrative group to screen and document refugees and a transportation group to move them from the camps to Canada. There will be a reception group to receive them on arrival and distribute them to their destinations, and educational groups in the provinces must seep them in Canadianism.

Let no one say that this cannot be done. Once before in our history, at the height of the great immigration boom before the first great war, new Canadians were landing on our shores at the rate of 1,000 a day and we handled them with dispatch. In 1911, a total of 286,839 came into this country; in 1912 they totalled 331,288; in 1913, 400,870; and in 1914 almost 250,000. Who will say that Canada is not up to such an effort today? Any country that built up the great organization that we did in the war, that sent half a million men overseas and brought them back again, cannot possibly bog down on this task. There is no shortage of help. We trained thousands of men during the war to examine and move whole divisions of men half-way across the world. This personnel, trained in military operations and UNRRA work, is available today and is waiting to tackle the job. We have only to give them the word to go ahead.

There is no shortage of ships. I have here a copy of a Canadian Press dispatch, datelined London, February 25, 1947, quoting Foreign Secretary Bevin's report to the British House of Commons on the plight of displaced persons. This is what Mr. Bevin had to say about shipping:

> Foreign Secretary Bevin told the House of Commons today that there are 1,000,000 displaced persons on the continent.
> He said he had suggested that all countries take a proportion and "end this miserable state of affairs," but no one wanted these people.
> "I will not mention names but one great statesman in the British commonwealth came and gave me a lecture on this problem. I said to him, 'How many will you take, I will get a ship and send them tomorrow'."
> "But," said Bevin, "the statesman didn't take one."

I wish to make it clear to the house that that reference is not to the Prime Minister of this country. Here are Bevin's boats that are available merely for the asking. There is no shortage of ships, and even if there were, this matter should have the highest priority. Everything depends upon the will to do it and upon organization. The nation with the best organized and most efficient immigration scheme will leave the others behind.

Then we come to the shortage of housing. A number of years ago when we first opened the debate in this house on post-war immigration this argument for going slow was advanced. We had to bring back the soldiers first and the soldiers' wives and dependents, and we all agreed that they should have first priority. So we waited and some 50,000 families of ex-service men came and were absorbed into our economy and were most welcome. We must now tackle the refugee problem. Our answer cannot be that of the Mad Hatter in "Alice in Wonderland" when he cried "No room, no room"; for, as Alice very properly replied: "Nonsense; there is plenty of room." To begin with, five to ten thousand displaced persons with relatives here will be absorbed into the family circle; they will be taken into the homes without aggravating the present situation. Nor do the orphan children present much of a problem. Certainly room will be found. As for others, how can we honestly say to them, "We have not much room for you," when they have no room at all? The little we can share with them is infinitely better than the nothing they have at the present time.

The house must not forget that every displaced person brings with him one mouth and two hands, and he, too, can create. In the past we have used the need for reestablishing soldiers and their dependents as a reason for allowing no new immigration; but now the housing shortage is being used as an excuse for sloughing responsibility. We can never justify failure on this basis. If this is to be government policy, then I begin to believe in the impossible and the incredible, but I do not believe it is government policy.

As people who solved the tremendous organizational problems of war, who built up side by side a great double economy of industry and agriculture, who controlled our economic life in the midst of world-wide inflation and confusion, surely we are not going to be fazed by a problem like this. One thing is crystal clear. Canada cannot afford to act like a nation of "Richards". It does not become us. This is no time for slow halting steps. We have to open that door now.

There is one thing I wish to emphasize strongly. The settlement of displaced persons is not an immigration policy. It is a strictly limited short-term humanitarian aim arising out of our obligation and desire to help the war-stricken peoples of Europe. We are faced with the problem of resocializing our share of a million human beings who have been deprived of affection, stability and the freedom to live normal lives. Since the end of the war we have shipped our old clothes and surplus food, but that is not enough. A great work of group therapy and social rehabilitation lies ahead, and Canada, as one of the united nations, is called upon to give them an opportunity to rise above this present useless, hopeless existence and build a new life with freedom and dignity, and to take their place amongst the nations that want them.

We owe it to their relatives here. They are Canadians and they feel a responsibility to their own blood and kin overseas. If we give them the chance to help their own, the new Canadians will appreciate that far more from the government than we shall a tax reduction if the house can believe that. This thing is vital to them; they feel that they are saving lives. As years pass, the memory of the generous humane act increases rather than fades. Offspring grow up and the family circle will never forget the generous act of the government.

Let us not worry about the inconvenience to these people; they are asking for it. They are not concerned with housing shortages. They only know the human problems involved and they seek permission to do everything they can to help.

If we do what I suggest, people will appreciate that we are seized with the urgency of the present problem, and it is an urgent one, as I have indicated. When Canada was refused permission to go before the "Big Four" powers the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) talked of the drying up of the wells of chivalry. Let us not dry up the wells of compassion. Every human instinct within us cries out for these people. Today the narrow gates of Canada are almost as hard to pass through as St. Peter's gates, and to the homeless of Europe they are the pearly gates on earth.

Mr. R. R. KNIGHT (Saskatoon City): In speaking in this debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne I wish to bring before the house a subject of great importance to my home city of Saskatoon, to the province of Saskatchewan and to the nation of Canada. I had expected that we might have an opportunity to have a full debate on this subject, but the likelihood of that is now small. The subject to which I refer is the use of the port of Churchill and the Hudson bay railroad, and I propose to make of it, if a colourless, at least a cautious and a careful analysis.

On October 15, 1945, this subject was debated in the house on a motion moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Moore), who had asked for the encouragement by this government of the fullest use of the harbour facilities and the railroad. The house divided on the motion and hon. members will remember that it carried by a vote of 105 to 24. It would appear that the people of this country, as represented in this House of Commons, favour the idea of giving this route an opportunity to prove itself, something which up to the present it has not had. Proof of its feasibility can be furnished only by its use at full capacity over a period, and I hope that the few remarks which I shall now make will carry in them the impact of that single idea, for I shall not attempt to foresee in prospect the possibilities of the route. That might be interpreted as wishful thinking. Nor shall I attempt to give its history, interesting and romantic as that may be; for that can be obtained from the record of the 1945 debates, as can the statistical record of its operation. I shall endeavour to restrain the exaggeration of enthusiasm, and try to show clearly and precisely why and how in this year of 1947 a proper test of the whole project may be made.

First, it is the wish of the people of this country that such a test be made. I have already spoken of the expression of that wish in this House of Commons by the representatives of the people. But what of the people themselves? Rightly or wrongly, many western people believe that this route has been deliberately sabotaged by some of those whose interests it contravenes. They have upon occasion expressed themselves strongly in that regard. This government should note that the farmers in the recent farm strike in the west had some opinions to express about the Hudson bay route.

I hold in my hand a booklet entitled "Farmers' Action Program of Alberta Farmers' Union and United Farmers' of Canada", and on page 6, which has to do with a discussion on freight rates, I read this:

> An equitable adjustment must be made in the grossly unfair freight rate structure which discriminates in freight charges against prairie farmers exporting and importing goods an all lines of railway, including the Hudson Bay railway.

On page 15, under the heading "Hudson Bay —Churchill railway", we find a strongly worded plea for this route from this organization, with a recommendation that a committee of their number be empowered to carry out an investigation to discover if there is any valid reason why the route should not be used. There are out there many farmers who are interested in this question, and their tempers are becoming somewhat short and somewhat worn by reason of what they consider unwarrantable delays. Here is a resolution passed by the December 1946 convention of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section:

> Therefore be it resolved that the dominion government forthwith appoint a royal commission of inquiry to investigate all matters pertaining to the operation of the Hudson Bay railway and the port at Churchill, and that a member of the Hudson Bay Route Association be appointed on the said commission.

So my first point has been to attempt to show that there is a demand for Churchill to have its chance. I shall adorn this part of my argument by quoting the words of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) whom

I am glad to see in his seat. They will be found recorded as quoted in Hansard of October 15, 1945, at page 1099. He said:

> The policy of the government in the matter of Churchill is to facilitate the use of this port in every way possible.

That would appear to make it unanimous.

This route is a matter of national concern. It is important that this outlet to the world should be available as a means of export and import, even if at the moment it can handle only a mere drop in the bucket of the total wheat export; for that is all that it can do. In spite of some statements to the contrary, it can by no means be considered as an important rival to any other port in Canada; for the amount of grain that it is capable of handling at present is very small in terms of the total export of wheat from this country. The investment of the nation in this railway and port must be preserved.

Much attention has been given to the military significance of the north. I see that at the moment there are 600 armed personnel, including 100 Americans, at Churchill. That is from a dispatch by the Canadian Press of February 12. During the war, emphasis was on Fort Churchill rather than on Port Churchill. I personally would rather see the development of the north on a civilian basis, and I wish to be very clear here that I am not asking for any military development of the north. I would rather see the development of those industries of peace which will one day centre upon that region; such industries as the export of white poplar, the value of which is becoming more and more recognized; the development of mining, the development of a tourist industry, the development perhaps of the oil industry, based upon the prolific white whale; perhaps the establishment even of a reindeer herd. I forget I had promised to keep my feet upon the ground. However, the point I was trying to make is that, if defence is a consideration, then Churchill becomes a place of considerable importance.

Churchill is in the Musk-Ox area; that is, the eastern Canadian arctic. It is the only railhead with continental communications, the only tide-water port with oceanic communications, and also, of course, an air base. I would point out the vulnerability of our single-track trans-continental railways, the vulnerability of the Hudson Bay railway itself. It seems to me that from the military point of view it behooves the Canadian government, and the British government also, to prove once and for all this Hudson bay route, because the fate of a force based upon Churchill might some day depend upon such knowledge. I presume that we shall preserve at least a part of the Canadian navy we used during the war. The navy will have to manoeuvre somewhere and I suggest that it might very well manoeuvre some time in the waters of the Hudson bay itself. By so doing, it would prove once and for all what the ice and weather conditions on that route are, and this information and knowledge could afterwards be used for commercial and personal purposes.

This is a national question too, in that the proving of the route would open up possibilities of interprovincial trade. I hope there are some of my hon. friends of the maritime provinces listening to what I have to say, because the maritime provinces, rather than setting their face against the whole project, might well consider these possibilities. The prairie provinces could ship to Charlottetown great quantities of feed grain, upon which there could be based a great live stock industry and bacon industry. Nova Scotia lumber companies could export wood pulp through Hudson bay, and were the freight rates equitable and the water route proven, such projects would have a chance to develop. Far eastern and middle western Canada would be brought together as never before, and that is surely desirable from the national viewpoint.

I now come to the recent and current history of the bay route. Let us review what has taken place since the debate in this house in October, 1945. Hon. gentlemen who took part in that debate will remember talk of the setting up of a committee appointed by the governments of the three prairie provinces. I am glad to be able to inform the house that such a committee was formed in July, 1946. It consists of the minister of mines and resources of Manitoba, the minister of railways of Alberta, the minister of cooperation of Saskatchewan, together with two members of the Hudson Bay Route Association. Through this committee the efforts of the provincial governments can be coordinated with those of the federal government in making the most efficient use of the port. This committee in turn set up a continuing technical committee to assemble information and to study the whole question of the use of the port. This committee of economists from the three provinces met in October, 1946, in Winnipeg and subsequently in Regina in November, 1946, and in January, 1947. The committee did, and is doing, valuable work, investigating such matters as the possible length of the shipping season, navigation aids, operation and administration of the Hudson Bay railway, possibilities for the shipment of certain commodities through Churchill, among others wheat, coal and poplar wood. All this, as well as research into other matters relevant to the whole question, is being done, and I am indebted to some of the findings of this particular committee for some of the facts which I shall produce later in this talk.

As to the actual use of the railroad and port since the debate in the House of Commons in 1945, in that season there were shipped from the port approximately 3,000,000 bushels of wheat, of which 2,000,000 bushels had been in storage at Churchill all during the war and which were in perfect condition after all that time. Import of commodities was very small, only some forty tons, made up in part of curling stones, Scotch whiskey, earthenware and some china from Britain destined for prairie points. These amounts were inadequate to furnish proof of anything except that shipment by the route is physically possible, and that, all other things being equal, such shipments would bring advantages to shipper and receiver alike.

I shall only briefly review the physical set-up at Churchill. That is a matter of record. The port facilities as at present would allow the unloading and loading of about forty-five ships during the effective season. When I say unloading and loading I put the emphasis on the export of grain rather than on imports, because the situation is such that too great an import would interfere with the export business. Six or seven ships can be in the harbour at the same time and three can be loaded simultaneously. The loading of a ship a day is quite possible under the best conditions, but the average would be a day and a half. The capacity of a ship is, on the average, 325,000 bushels and storage capacity of the elevator at Churchill is 2,500,000 bushels.

With regard to the railway, this Hudson Bay railway is the property of the people of Canada. Its operation is in the hands of the Canadian National railway under a general manager.

The effective practicable capacity of the Hudson Bay railway in the navigation season is about 150 cars of wheat a day. I think that is fairly conservative. It could be increased, but I want to give the picture exactly as it is. The distance from The Pas to Churchill is 510 miles over an excellent roadbed. I am informed that there is none better in Canada from the point of view of handling freight. This roadbed is furnished with eighty-five pound steel. An old railroader who travelled that line for years told me that it was quite possible to haul the wheat to Churchill, unload it, and have the cars back at The Pas inside of four days; and a car of cattle could reach the port within the thirty-six hour limit after which one must, by law, feed and water live stock in transit.

So we have a good port. We have modern elevator equipment with large storage capacity. We have a working railroad. Now let us look for a moment at the things which militate against the fullest use of these facilities.

In speaking of these difficulties, I am speaking of things as they are in relation to my proposal that the port be used to its maximum extent this present year of 1947. There is, first, the handicap of its geographical position —and, contingent upon that, its climate—and the brevity of the shipping season. There are three seasons. First, there is the effective shipping season of the ships' masters—that is to say, the season in which they are willing to come in there with their ships—and that lasts from sixty to sixty-five days. In the second place, there is the maximum insurance season, in which marine insurance can be obtained; and of course one has to obtain that to make operations anything like practical. That date is from August 5 to October 15. The third season is the natural one, which is considerably longer than the other two and is of a duration of three months upward.

The first of these—that is to say, the effective shipping season—can and must be lengthened if the port is to be a success; and I claim that we already have in our possession scientific discoveries by the use of which it will be so lengthened.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the hon. gentleman will permit an interruption, will he tell us just what those scientific developments are which could be used to increase the period of navigation at the port of Churchill?

Mr. KNIGHT: If the minister does not mind, I shall develop that answer in the course of my remarks; or, if he prefers, I can give the answer now.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I did not mean to interrupt the hon. gentleman in his speech, and I am quite willing that he should proceed.

Mr. KNIGHT: The next drawback, and a direct result of the first, is the high marine insurance rate. About this we can do little or nothing except one thing, and that is to demonstrate the feasibility of the route by its use to capacity over at least one season; and I would ask hon. members to note that phrase "by its use to capacity over at least one season". Insurance is an important consideration, for it determines the maximum limits of the season ships may use, the cost of ocean freight borne by shippers, the cost of imports laid down at Churchill, and in general the profits or the savings of operating the route. The trend of the insurance rates over the years has been downwards, accompanied by some extension of the limits of the season. The number of ships since 1931 has not provided an adequate actuarial basis for arriving at a lower rate. Full use of the port for one season would provide that. The imperial shipping committee in its report of July 19, 1939, stated:

> Except in the matter of salvage it is the view of the committee that the Hudson bay route need not be considered as more risky than the St. Lawrence.

And the report added:

> . . . in consultation with our chairman, the joint Hull committee . . . have agreed that if some twenty cargoes in all are brought away from Churchill in 1939 and no serious loss occurs, they will be prepared to give favourable consideration to the question of recommending a further reduction in 1940 from the rates of premium chargeable in 1939."

But, as hon. members will remember, in 1940 we were engaged in a still more serious matter, and the ships en route to Churchill were diverted in another direction. It is, however, reasonable to assume that the principle of the statement which I have just read still applies, and will have weight if twenty or more ships enter the bay in 1947, which is the thing for which I am pleading in this particular address.

The fact that the route never did have a proper test to capacity has left many problems unsolved, and has prevented the accumulation of accurate data for future guidance. The equipment at the port necessary for efficient operation was not complete until 1936, and during the war years the whole plans for operating the port for the exporting of grain were shelved. Then came the operations of 1946 which I have described as being too puny a test upon which to base any reasoned judgment.

The rail freight rates at which wheat will be hauled to Churchill has a distinct bearing on this whole question. Should wheat coming down the Canadian National railway on a long-haul rate be saddled with a heavier rate when it reaches The Pas? We must have an extension of the import-export rate to The Pas-Churchill track. Is the full-time salary of a general manager all charged against the operations of the Hudson Bay railroad? If it is, should it be? Is the Canadian National railway encouraging or discouraging the use of the Hudson Bay railroad? It is because the farmers of western Canada do not know the answers to such questions that the united farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, asked by resolution that a royal commission be set up to find the answers.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the hon. gentleman will permit an interruption, the answers to these questions can be obtained when the committee on railways and shipping is sitting. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but surely he must know that such information can be obtained from that committee.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. member has a right to make his speech.

Mr. KNIGHT: There are some other points about operations at the bay which such a commission might look into, or which might be revealed by the use to full capacity which I advocate. I have picked these at random, and they are not necessarily in the order of importance. Is there anyone whose job it is to canvass traffic for this road? Are the necessary minor repairs at the port being made? Did the Americans use or remove or destroy any equipment, and on what terms? If so, has such equipment been replaced? What are the labour conditions at the port? Are the stevedores efficient? Are the living conditions in bunkhouses adequate? Is there proper and convenient sanitary accommodation at the dock itself? I would draw the minister's attention to the last phrase, "at the dock itself."

Mr. CHEVRIER: In reply, I would say to the hon. gentleman that the information he has requested can be obtained from the committee on railways and shipping.

Mr. KNIGHT: I shall make up my mind, Mr. Speaker, not to ask any more questions of the minister.

Are the operators, including the key men imported from Montreal, enthusiastic about the success of Churchill? Personally, if I may say so, I do not see why the minister should be on the defensive in regard to this whole question.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not on the defensive; I am simply indicating to the hon. gentleman where he can obtain the information.

Mr. KNIGHT: Thank you.

Mr. HEON: Apparently the minister is on the offensive.

Mr. KNIGHT: Well, he is not so offensive after all. What tests have been made of the gyro compass, of radar, of loran—long-range navigation aids? Perhaps in some respects mention of those will answer the question the minister asked me some time ago. What tests of these have been made in their application to the climatic conditions in the strait? Has the government obtained from the Americans, who made continual air surveys during the war, the facts about the freezing of the waters of the bay proper, facts which have been continually in dispute? These are some of the questions for which a royal commission might obtain the answers, but I submit that, to be correct, such answers must be based on only the actual, full capacity of the route for a full season. Accompanying this test should be a beginning of the civilian opening of the north. I think this point is important, because it would result in a permanent and interested population at Churchill from which the necessary trained and acclimatized personnel for the operation of the port and railway could be drawn.

My plea is that this year we should ship a minimum of 15,000,000 bushels of grain by the Hudson bay route. This figure is based upon careful and cautious calculation, and is chosen for several reasons. That amount of shipping would keep the facilities reasonably busy throughout the season, thus reducing the overhead which has plagued what up to the present have been only token shipments. In the second place, with that amount of exports, an amount of imports in excess of those handled in any other year, that is in excess of 2,500 tons, could still be brought in and handled with the present wharfage and shed facilities, and without conflicting with export operations. Third, the movement of 10,000,000 bushels would cover the operating and maintenance deficits of the elevator and port, and anything over that quantity should show a profit. Such a greater movement would also wipe out the deficit on the railway. The trade services division of Saskatchewan estimates that on a movement of 16,000,000 bushels, the saving to the dominion government, in wiping out the deficit on operations of the Hudson Bay railway, would be close to $500,000.

Under section 2(a) of the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement of July, 1946, wheat can be picked up at Vancouver, the lakehead, Montreal or Churchill. The savings on freight from shipping through Churchill as to rail traffic would accrue to the Canadian wheat board, and such savings as might be made on the ocean freight would accrue to British shipping. The closest and most friendly cooperation between the various governments and agencies concerned will be necessary if this test is to be carried out. The technical committee set up, while invaluable in the matter of research, has no authority of itself. I hope that the interprovincial committee will press the dominion government in the matter, and that the latter will carry out its pledge to give every assistance.

I should like to underline one or two things I believe the dominion government should do. Through its Minister of Trade and Commerce and its Minister of Transport, it can render vital assistance. It can give a directive to the wheat board in regard to assembling the right quantities of wheat in the right places. It can see to it that the facilities of port and railroad are in good repair and up to date. It can ensure the safety of navigation by special precautions based on a study of navigation aids and the installation of high frequency to replace low frequency direction-finding stations. It can see to it that the radar used is the modern type, superseding the older type with which there was some difficulty in floating icefields. Then, too, only with the assistance of the wheat board can this scheme be possible; for one great problem will be the finding and the placing in strategic positions of the necessary wheat. The movement of wheat within the freight rate areas preferential to Churchill if necessary should be restricted in order to ensure that on August 1, 1947, sufficient wheat will be in that area to provide a fair test; and that amount, I suggest, is a minimum of 15,000,000 bushels.

The reluctance of the wheat board to move wheat to a location where it will be what the grain trade calls "out of position" is understandable. I would urge the fullest use of the government storage elevator at Saskatoon as a base for the supply of wheat for Churchill. Wheat stored there would be in position, no matter by what route it was shipped to the sea. This elevator has a capacity of 5,500,000 bushels, making the combined capacity of that elevator and the Churchill elevator some 8,000,000 bushels; and I understand that Mr. McIvor has given at least a verbal assurance that the Churchill elevator will be filled in good time.

So much for what the dominion government can do. We hope, too, for the cooperation of wholesale and retail business people of the prairies, cooperatives and other marketing agencies, in arranging for imports. The other day I heard of an order for two diesel engines from Britain which are to come through the bay. We hope the people of the maritimes will wake up to the possibilities of trade with Churchill and realize that they can send us their woollen goods, the products of their industries, send us their coal as ballast. If there were an elevator at Charlottetown to receive feed grain from Churchill, the whole live stock and poultry industry of the maritime provinces might be revitalized. Maritime shipping would not be hurt and might be helped by trade with Churchill.

I now come to the question of the finding of the ships. Under the British wheat agreement our wheat will be hauled out in British bottoms. So we must interest the British government itself, the shipping agencies and companies, the cooperatives and export groups on the other side of the Atlantic. I said before, we had never had anyone vitally interested in finding business for the Hudson bay route. That situation is now to be changed. Mr. Graham Spry has been appointed as commercial representative of my province in London, where he has just arrived; and I think no one better qualified for that position could have been found. He will use his broad experience of affairs and his contacts within government circles in Britain to promote the trade upon which the development of the Hudson bay route depends; and Manitoba and Alberta, no less than Saskatchewan, will look forward with confidence to the success of his efforts.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask the hon. gentleman if he has any figures to support what, to my mind, is his good argument, as to the amount of cattle that could be moved from the prairies through Churchill? On former occasions they did ship large numbers of cattle to the old country through that port.

Mr. KNIGHT: I dealt with the question of cattle.

Mr. MacNICOL: Did you give the number? I did not hear that.

Mr. KNIGHT: No, I have no idea what the possible export might be, but the figure would be easily obtainable.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the government and to all parties in this house for support for this concrete objective for 1947. Let me summarize some of the arguments in its favour.

1. The movement of 15,000,000 bushels of wheat will provide a proper test, and is within the present capacity of the railway and port.

2. We are wasting the money of the Canadian taxpayers by not giving the route this test.

3. The small volume advocated will not compete seriously with the interests of any other port.

4. Movement in the quantity recommended would eliminate deficits and mean savings for (a) the Canadian government; (b) the wheat board and (c) British shippers.

5. The use of thirty to forty-five ships will provide a basis for reduction of insurance rates.

6. A full test of the port would reveal if there is need for extension of facilities or of navigation aids at the port and will add to our knowledge of radar and long-range navigation.

7. It is essential that the route be tested on account of the strategic importance of northern Canada.

For these and the other reasons mentioned previously I ask for what I think may be characterized as a cautious and reasonable test for the Hudson bay route in this coming summer and autumn of 1947.

Mr. WILFRID LaCROIX (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, since reference is made in the speech from the throne to the relations between the dominion and the provinces, allow me to present my views which are shared by the majority of wage-earners in this country.

Everyone admits that we are now witnessing a tremendous struggle between, on the one hand, the wage-earners who wish to be relieved as soon as possible of the heavy burden of income tax deductions from their weekly or monthly pay-cheques and, on the other hand, certain wealthy people from Toronto and Montreal, supported by all Tory newspapers in the country, among others the Montreal Gazette, who do not wish to pay their share of income tax to meet the consequences of a war policy which they have themselves enthusiastically endorsed and the cost of which has been exorbitant to the nation.

Those same wealthy fellows, most of whom live in Toronto and Montreal, have rallied around Drew and Duplessis, in order to ensure the failure of the dominion-provincial conference and, in the event of their death, spare their estates from difficulties with the income tax division, should the dominion authorities be entitled to investigate what they actually leave, as compared with the amount they have paid in income tax for the past seven years.

Mr. GRAYDON: The common people are with Duplessis and Drew.

Mr. LaCROIX: That is what you say. Mr. Duplessis has stated in the Quebec legislature that the levying of income tax from a dead man is unfair, since he is no more in a position to defend himself. My answer to Mr. Duplessis is that some people have defended themselves so well during their lifetime by piling up colossal fortunes through non-payment of taxes—and this to the detriment of wage-earners who have to make up the difference—that no one need defend them after their death.

You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, that everyone admits today that certain wealthy people convert their holdings into bearer securities which they afterwards place in a bank safety deposit vault in the name of some member of the family, or of any other person, while carefully keeping the key themselves, these same bond-holders putting into their own vaults only securities of little value, which their estates will use as a basis when filing their returns to the provincial government.

Now, since only the safety vault of the deceased is put under seal at the time of his death, the family takes possession of the other vault containing bearer bonds and quite frequently divides a huge fortune accumulated during the previous ten years, either on the black market, or in some other way, and on which the deceased has paid little income tax, if any, thus committing a glaring injustice to the wage-earner whose income tax is deducted at the source.

It is also admitted that some Montreal millionaires rent safety vaults in Ontario banks in the name of one member of the family, or of some other trusted person, and that some wealthy individuals from Toronto are doing the same in Montreal; all this in order to avoid the filing of too high a return on succession duties to their respective provinces, and especially so as to prevent the dominion from recovering the income tax which has not been paid for seven or eight years.

Some may object and say that this is the only way of subscribing to election funds or of bequeathing what is called "conscience money" to religious or charitable institutions without interference from the income tax division, but I regard such a practice as a robbery whose victims are the wage-earners who must pay the difference. Did not Christ say: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's"?

I am certainly in favour of having all moneys collected as succession duties remitted to the provinces, but I believe that the only way to arrive at a true valuation of an estate is to leave to the federal government the right to collect such duties, because the dominion government has control over our whole banking system and may also use its facilities for international relations to deal with estates having safety deposit boxes in foreign countries. That, however, is beyond the power of Quebec or Ontario whose control over the banks does not extend outside their respective territories.

Those monopolizers are so anxious to avoid paying the state its due, which in their case represents a fortune, that, rather than be caught, they would sooner sacrifice their bearer interests and dividends. I am sure that our large public utilities and manufacturing companies know what I mean, and so does the government on whose bonds the unclipped coupons are accumulating.

That explains why so little is collected in succession duties by the provincial government in the Montreal district where so many enormous fortunes are concentrated. Should the task of collecting these duties be left to the dominion government it would mean a much larger revenue, and the province would then be in a position to help more substantially our school boards and municipalities for whose welfare the province is directly responsible, not to mention the setting up of a public works programme as a means of alleviating unemployment.

The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) himself has said, and I am sure he will confirm my assertion, that if the federal government had the right to legislate in the matter it would be in a position to recover millions of dollars legally owing to the state, thereby reducing in like proportion taxes deducted at the source from the wage-earner's pay envelope. This would undoubtedly allow for an important reduction in the tax rates of the wage earners under the $3,000 bracket from whom, as we all know, the largest proportion of income tax is collected by the federal government.

There are cases where a man's death offers the only opportunity to ascertain whether or not he has paid his income tax. In the United States as well as in Great Britain the control over both income tax and succession duties rests with the central government. It is devised as a means of gradually eliminating the taxes paid by the wage-earners, who form the bulk of the population. When a man dies in those two countries the seals are affixed to any strong-box he may have in his home. This also is intended to reduce the amounts paid to the state by the small wage-earner. The province of Quebec has no income tax and, if it had, the federal government would no doubt be invited to do the collecting. I am of the opinion that in thus keeping the federal government away from this field a serious injustice is done to the wage-earner

As to the failure of the dominion-provincial conference, you may rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that the real responsibility rests with some Toronto and Montreal millionaires who, worried over their own interests, have brought pressure to bear upon Drew and Duplessis in order that they may do their utmost to impede the conclusion of any arrangement so long as the word "succession" appears on the agenda of the conference. That explains why Duplessis offered no alternative, but simply shut the door with a bang and returned home.

You know as well as I do, sir, that the rich capitalist or the man operating a business of his own is in a far better position than anyone else to avoid taxation, a practice which I regard as criminal since the difference must be borne by that poor sucker, the wage-earner. Only an equitable distribution of taxes levied to pay the tremendous cost of the last war will prevent the spread of communistic ideology. As you well know, communism is taking full advantage of the unfair distribution of our national wealth to prey upon the minds of our working people in the hope of finding them willing and ready to accept this new way of life.

The suppression of income tax would help the wage-earner in the lower income brackets to improve his family budget, thereby eliminating the misery which is, in many cases, the most potent and virulent microbe of communistic disease, the contagion of which we all want to avoid in the interests of our economic stability.

Some taxpayers make honest statements of their income. However, when a person who has paid practically no income tax leaves several thousand dollars upon his death, the greater part of which was accumulated during the past ten years or so, surely that money did not fall into his lap of its own accord.

I think it is unfair for a family to divide among themselves a fortune which was accumulated out of the income tax paid by the majority of wage-earners. You may rest assured, sir, that the supporters of Duplessis and Drew prefer making important subscriptions to the election fund to paying heavy amounts accruing from their estates. There are those who will no doubt argue that certain Liberals think otherwise, but it does not matter since it is not the first time I have held a different point of view.

Mr. Speaker, members of the Liberal party enjoy freedom of thought, which is the best means of assuring the party's evolution. However, this is the antithesis of the attitude within the Duplessis party, where each and every member is compelled to "follow the Fuehrer". Have you ever found such men as Cardin or Power in the Duplessis party? You may seek all you like, but, "It will avail ye nothing". The wage-earners of Quebec, that is the majority of the people, should not be compelled to assume the cost of a war which they did not want and which I certainly did not want either. Why should we let Toronto and Montreal millionaires enjoy a fortune, part of which is derived from the income tax paid by the common people to cover those war expenses?

People in Quebec who own small fortunes have nothing to fear, because, as everyone knows, there are no succession duties, or practically none, on estates of less than $20,000. So, if in the future our Quebec farmers are compelled to pay income tax it will be as a result of the present attitude of Tories like Duplessis and Drew. Again, if Quebec cannot attain social security and obtain an old age pension payable at sixty-five years of age or under, the blame should be laid on Duplessis and Drew, who have compelled the wage-earners to pay these taxes alone, or almost alone. They cannot continue to do so without decreasing the purchasing power of the people and bringing about a period of unemployment more acute than that of 1931.

It seems to me that Liberalism has always been prompted by the interests of the people. It should understand, therefore, that in both the provincial and dominion fields no income tax is fair unless it is on a common basis with succession duties because, if there are honest people, there are also scoundrels and Scrooges. Moreover, no government will be able to control the situation unless it has the power of enacting laws to that effect.

I am in favour of autonomy, but not to the point of forcing wage-earners to pay taxes for those who do not. Income derived from succession duties should remain the property of the province of Quebec, but it is essential that the dominion be allowed to legislate in that field since income tax is collected by the federal government. Even though provincial legislatures have the same right as the dominion to tax income, we must realize that income tax is now a federal responsibility and that it will remain so for some time to come. Wage-earners should, therefore, be granted relief from taxation. Taxes will decrease inasmuch as the dominion government is able to recover its legitimate dues. Furthermore, Ottawa would then be in a better position to expand social security plans on behalf of farm, industrial and forest workers who are in dire need of such help when old age robs them of the physical ability to earn a living for themselves and their families.

I know that some large newspaper owners hold other views on the matter and that I am coming up against vested interests; but I do not mind at all; I am used to it.

Invisible forces are at work even here, in Ottawa. Drop the succession duties item from the order paper, and you will see Messrs. Duplessis and Drew come to terms with the dominion. Their declarations about autonomy will vanish as if by magic, since they will no longer have the support of high finance which has always been the backbone of Toryism.

The same men who claimed that the government never spent enough money on war are now trying by all the means at their disposal to avoid paying for it.

I certainly do not approve all the government's policies, as my votes in the past have shown, but when the federal authorities are in the right, one should have the courage to congratulate and support them.

I urge my compatriots who are each week deprived of part of the pay which they so urgently require to provide for their families' vital needs to join forces with the Liberal party whose loyal stand behind our great working classes should encourage them to act. Let them oust Duplessis and his gang, who are using autonomy as a screen to hide the plutocratic selfishness of the few.

The Tories, even in this very house in Ottawa, are 100 per cent behind Duplessis and Drew on this succession duty business. I therefore offer this truth as a conclusion, Mr. Speaker: Tory in Ottawa, Tory in Toronto, and Tory in Quebec; they are but one and the same thing.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, coming from a large financial and industrial centre such as the Toronto district, I wish to say something tonight regarding the motion which is before the chair. This is one of the few opportunities afforded a private member to bring before the house and the country some constructive suggestions, not by way of criticism of the government, because, after all, the function of the opposition is to try to aid the government as far as possible, so long as it is the government of the day and has the confidence of the people.

We have one of the largest taxpaying districts in all Canada. I may say that twenty-nine per cent of the postal receipts come from that district and we pay $13,000,000 towards the post office each year. Unfortunately, however, for the first time since confederation we are without cabinet representation. Indeed, we have not had in the cabinet a representative from the Toronto district since 1935, when the Bennett administration was defeated. However, we are not suffering greatly in any way as a consequence because there are a couple of very good members on the other side representing our city and we all get along very well together.

If you look around you at home and abroad today, Mr. Speaker, you will find only a storm-tossed world. That is natural after such a vast conflict as we have gone through. It was only to be expected that after such a war there would be a grave dislocation of business and that things would be upset generally. We as a country, however, were singularly fortunate, because we were not invaded during that war, although we came close to it.

I submit, sir, that the Canadian people today are expecting some relief from the intolerable conditions that exist. I admit that the government has a very hard task before it, saddled as it is with all the expenditures which a government must face after such a terrible war. Nevertheless, there are certain features of the situation that do not appeal to the businessman. For one thing, the businessman is complaining of the overgovernment and overtaxation we have in Canada today, dominion, provincial and municipal. Each of these agencies is announcing extra burdens for the people to bear.

It is unfortunate that we have not seen in Canada some of the reforms that I for one have been advocating for some considerable time now, reforms which we should have had years ago. In 1927 I introduced into the house the question of parliamentary reform such as was instituted in England many years ago. We should have also constitutional reform, cabinet reform and law reform. All these reforms have been brought about in the old land.

In the course of the debate in 1927 the then minister of justice, an able man, said that he would see that the maritimes were given a royal commission to investigate their grievances concerning many matters that were brought to light at that time, and that was done. As to constitutional reform, I submit that the time has come when we should have something of that sort in this country. It is long overdue. In fact, it was due at the time the war broke out. The time is ripe also for cabinet reform and law reform along the lines indicated in this house.

In my opinion there has been altogether too much collecting of funds from the public for various purposes. Every day the ordinary businessman receives half a dozen letters from various agencies demanding subscriptions to one undertaking or another, and with the heavy taxes that we already have to bear, federal, provincial and municipal, the people cannot stand this extra burden. I know that members of the House of Commons receive such letters because I have seen some of them opening their mail, and every morning I notice half a dozen letters from various people seeking relief or money or assistance for one reason or another.

Taxation being what it is, there should be some central government agency to take care of all these demands. There was a government agency that operated under what was known as the War Charities Act, the purpose of which was to regulate all such appeals. Something of this sort is needed because there are altogether too many demands on the public today.

We have requests coming also through radio propaganda, but the people are not told the truth about public affairs. Then you have the Gallup poll. It seems to me it is all Gallup and no poll. I believe there was a racehorse known by that name that ran at a racetrack. We on this side of the house have not the public ear, although we polled a large vote at the last election. I suggest that the government should direct all these activities. As regards the Gallup poll, may I ask who conducts the poll? Has anyone in this chamber a vote? I doubt very much whether the leader of the house tonight has a vote in the poll. I do not know whether he bets on racehorses. I bet on a horse Gallup once myself and it was the lamest duck you every saw. It was like the Gallup poll, which has so much to say about the government, about our hon. friends to the left and others.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian people today are demanding relief from the intolerable control system which we have in Canada. We are overgoverned and overtaxed, and we find now a slowing down of the process of reconversion from a war to a peace economy. The people were expecting much more satisfactory progress in reconversion than we have had, and, dear knows, they are entitled to it. The Canadian people are long-suffering, but there is a limit to their patience, and that limit has been reached. I do not say that by way of criticism of this government, because I believe the people are criticizing all governments. The fact is, however, that mistakes have been made in the process of reconversion and the people are losing confidence in all governments. They are being called upon to pay too many taxes.

The people are not acquainted with the facts. I think there is too much soothing syrup being served up for the comfort and happiness of the people. There is no sacrifice that Canadians are not prepared to make if it can be shown that they are in the public interest. I believe our people are willing to face the facts, if only they know what the facts really are. But they want to be told the truth. They will no longer be treated as they have been. They want to know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth about what is going on, not only here but throughout the country, in connection with all these matters for which they are being taxed. They want to know how our public business is being conducted, and they want to know the official truth. They want to have something besides propaganda.

After all is said and done, who is paying for the great war and for the reconstruction days after it? The public back in the constituencies are. Some of them have already contributed blood and treasure which is uncountable. It is the ordinary man back home in the country who pays, and he is looking for a better deal from everybody.

There are some truths in connection with public affairs which I should like to mention. As I have always said, I have always believed in the maxim that if you tell the people the truth and trust them, they will trust you. Never be afraid to tell the public that you have made a mistake, because the public back in the constituencies do not expect their leaders to be gods. I would commend that truth to some of the younger members who have come into the house and have done very well.

As I was saying the other night at a commencement in a large collegiate institute, some of the graduates will sooner or later be treading the thorny path of public life; they should pay strict attention to what their constituents say, and nothing that anybody says should prevent them from doing what they themselves think is right. After all is said and done, the greatest crime in history was committed by one who thought he was doing what was right, and had public support for it, namely, Pontius Pilate. It is not cleverness which is lacking in this house and in the constituencies, or in our leaders in all countries; it is an independence of character which is lacking in them. As the late Edmund Burke said when he laid down the duties and functions of a member of parliament to his constituents away back at the time of the American revolutionary war: to be a good member of parliament is not an easy task. He laid down the general principle that a member of parliament owes a duty not only to the constituency which he represents but to the country at large.

Coming to the reconversion question, I have been very much dissatisfied with the way in which large and small business has been hamstrung. I admit that the control system is a very hard thing to get rid of, because once a controller, always a controller. He thinks he is indispensable. He thinks the country cannot get on without him, and he is over the whole civil service. Price control, unless unified with wage control, is no control at all and means inflation. Since the war closed, the board has been seeking to control almost every walk of life and almost every commodity over parliament's head and without any responsible action by a minister of the crown attempting to check or regulate it. The ministers never even see the speeches. These officials just issue them over the heads of the ministers. In answer to a question I asked of one minister as to whether he had any control over them, or did he see the proposed measure, he said, no; he had just received general instructions about it. In that way these controllers have the advantage of the dead hand of the treasury because the treasury is more or less inactive in that connection; and, when it exists, it is only an academic non-existence.

Since the war closed, the board has hamstrung almost every private business. If you go into a small retail store or go into a larger departmental store you will find that they are continually being asked by their customers, where and when are we going to get rid of this system? It is a tragedy that nobody can conduct his business in the manner which he should be able to do, from the commercial aspect, because of the large number of information reports which he has to make from time to time, which is something which is giving a headache to nearly all those operating large and small businesses and to departmental managers in the big stores. I hope something will be done to eliminate this as soon as possible, because the board's actions threaten our system and Canada's prosperity in reconversion. Many of these officials who have charge of this control system have never been trained in trade or commerce. They almost have the dead hand of the treasury on all kinds of business.

Do not forget this: there is a great deal of material decay in Canada. Canada is going to face some hard times in the days to come. We have squandered our natural resources at a rapid pace. We have given our best asbestos away in the raw state to the United States, and other metals. Asbestos finds work there for 36,000 hands. The result is that a large number of young people who will graduate this spring from the universities of Canada have already decided to depart and go to the United States to find work at better pay and less taxes. I have opposed this in and out of the house from time to time. As I said away back on the first day we met here in this chamber in a similar debate, there is an insistent demand all over the country that the government should make some declaration of policy regarding control bodies and bureaucratic expenditures which are being made over the head of parliament. At the present time there is virtually no control. All kinds of bodies are spending a great deal of money over the head of parliament. Every principle for which the British nation struggled in the old land since the seventeenth century has been surrendered to the political caucuses. Parliament itself, which came into being to ensure that taxes shall be voted only by those who have to pay them has become the institution through which those who do not pay them impose them on others.

I wish to emphasize to the house that the powers of legislation, even older than the right of taxpayers to determine the national expenditures, have been surrendered and, if we are to continue this sort of thing, the power of parliament will be gone forever. Whole spheres of activity involving the livelihood of every man, woman and child in this country have been removed from the jurisdiction of the law and of parliament and reserved for the determination of tribunals, irresponsible, irremovable, governed by no control and subject to no appeal. I do object, now that the war is over, to the way that business is being conducted over the head of parliament. We are told that parliament is supreme. If parliament is supreme, why has it not now control over these outside bodies and their expenditures and in the result we shall only hold a postmortem as the money is spent.

Coming to my own province, the province of Ontario, I wish to say a word or two about it. I have always been in favour of the principle of confederation and the old Cornish battle cry of "each for all and all for each." I believe that what is good for one province is good for them all. Ontario and the province from which you come, Mr. Speaker, are the two industrial provinces and were contributing before the war about seventy-six per cent or seventy-eight per cent of the cash taxes of Canada. I might go on to say that I never believed in the Sirois report. I thought it was very unfair in many ways to the province from which I come. We in Ontario have a large number of members of parliament, but they do not seem to stand up for their province in the same way as do members from British Columbia, the maritimes and the prairies for their respective provinces. I hope there will be an improvement. I have spoken about the matter myself, and I hope we may have further assistance in seeing that our own great province gets a better and fairer deal. In my opinion, and I am sorry to have to say this, Ontario seems to be the forgotten province of confederation.

I now come to the question of income tax. Up to 1917 this belonged exclusively to the municipalities since confederation; it was collected in the municipalities where it was earned, and was used to relieve the burden on real estate. In 1917 the income tax was taken away from them by Ottawa. I opposed that at the time. We came here to meet the government about it, but they imposed the tax anyway. Then the province came along and imposed a provincial tax of one mill on the dollar. At that time Ottawa said that the tax would be imposed by the federal government for one year only, or until the war was over; they are now collecting the whole thing. What have the municipalities left to relieve the burden on real estate? I do hope some better and fairer way of taxation handling this question will be found.

In regard to housing, I am sorry to say that this is an acute problem in our city. I have visited some of the homes of our soldiers, and I have found disgraceful conditions. In 1935, the federal administration, on my resolution in the house, appointed a committee on the matter of housing and reconstruction, which prepared a report as to what should be done. The government opposite, which came in after, in 1937, has done a good deal to help solve this difficulty, but much remains yet to be done. I supported an amendment to our report which would permit the banks to lend money on these houses at a low rate of interest. Over $90,000,000 has been spent in the Toronto district alone in connection with these houses, which have gone up to the north, south, east and west of our city. To serve them, existing light, power and transportation systems by our civic car system had to be extended, and a great deal of good work has been done in that connection. I hope that further efforts will be made, and that non-essential construction will not get the materials, but that priorities will be given for housing. I trust we may see a year of real progress in meeting the housing situation.

As I visit some of the institutions of this country, I find many returned soldiers in them. Only a short time ago I noticed lengthy articles in the Ontario newspapers about a poor soldier with no charge against him, being detained in the gaol at Orangeville because the magistrate had no other place to put him. He had been in the hospital there for six weeks; when he was put out, the counties of Dufferin and Grey quarreled as to who should pay for him. I have seen this sort of thing in the past, and I should think things would be different under our charter for soldiers. These men bore the burden and heat of the day; many of them are too poor to provide adequate accommodation for themselves and their families and now, after the services they rendered, we find them in this condition. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) has hundreds of employees at 55 York street, Toronto. I believe his department should carry on a survey all over Canada so that, if the provinces and municipalities will not do what is necessary, something may be done to take these men away from such gaol institutions as I have mentioned and to find them a decent home with federal aid.

Recently the Canadian institute of mining and metallurgy met in Ottawa, and in attendance were delegates from all over Canada. The universities have turned out magnificent engineers to develop the mines and natural resources of this country. His Excellency the Governor General addressed that meeting and showed himself a statesman. He made a wonderful speech, in which he made several helpful, constructive suggestions in regard to the development of our natural resources, following his visit to the northwest territories. This afternoon I was glad to hear the government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), announce some concessions to the gold mining industry. I hope that this will be only a beginning, that these concessions will be extended to base metals and other types of mining, because, if ever there was a country where Providence had done so much and never man so little, it is Canada. I do hope that during May and June of this year the graduates of our universities will not have to go to the United States to look for jobs. This morning I met a young man whom I did not recognize at first; he is looking younger all the time. I knew him well at the university of Toronto, first as a student. I refer to the great Doctor Best, of Varsity, co-discoverer of insulin with Sir Frederick Banting. I remember when he and Sir Frederick Banting were associated in Toronto. At that time Doctor Banting had an office in London. He received an offer and was thinking of going to the United States. If he had done so, what would have happened to that great discovery they made? Doctor Best is one of the world's greatest scientists and a wonderful man who has brought health to thousands. He has the element of greatness, humility and usefulness like all great men.

When I speak of medicine I must say that the strides science has made have been phenomenal. Our expectation of life has been increased. Medicine is said to be the brightest gem in the crown of science; her achievements have been so impressive, so far-reaching as not merely to silence all criticism but also to arouse a noble enthusiasm and enlist in the cause of humanity a legion of recruits, missionaries of her gospel. If medicine has not mastered at least it has diminished pain and robbed it of its terrors. Plagues and pestilences have been stayed; a multitude of diseases—diphtheria, rabies, smallpox, typhus, yellow fever, Maltese fever, to name only a few—have been almost exterminated. Great scourge-ridden tracts of the earth's surface have been rendered habitable; food values have been understood; vaccines and anti-toxins have been discovered; antiseptic surgery has been so established as to open up new fields of remedial agency; ailments of the mind as well as of the body have been controlled and relieved. This is an achievement to which no previous age in history can produce a parallel. Within a century the expectation of life in all civilized countries has been amazingly increased; in our own country by sixteen years; in Denmark by seventeen years, in parts of America by fifteen years. These are the facts. What is happening to science now, with the discovery of the atomic bomb? There were days when the church turned its back on the scientists and imprisoned them. Today, however, religion and science are marching hand in hand because today people are turning to religion more than ever before, largely because man does not know what to do with this new atomic invention he has discovered and science has come closer to religion at last.

In conclusion, I should like to add a few words on the subject of foreign affairs I dealt with last night. I believe we cannot get on without the imperial preference, which proved such a wonderful thing between the two wars. The Ottawa agreements increased the trade between Canada and Britain by forty-one per cent and between Britain and Canada by forty-three per cent, and we have had multilateral trade. Formerly it was known as most favoured nation treaties. We made these treaties with some thirty-two different countries between the two wars, but they brought us very little in the way of exports. What countries can afford an export market for Canadian goods? Upon exports we live. Markets are available with respect to many things, but the only great agricultural market left in the world for Canada is Great Britain. We acquired a preference in that market for wheat at six cents a bushel, which Sir Wilfrid Laurier once said he would give almost anything to obtain. It is equally true that the preference on apples, pears and so on meant the sale of a million barrels of these fruits from Nova Scotia in one year. What we lack is markets for our exports; and if anyone thinks we are going to find in the United States a market for either our agricultural products on any substantial scale, or for manufactured goods, I am afraid he will be disappointed. The only things they will be willing to take from us are the raw materials from which to manufacture finished products, as they have done previously.

I am much disturbed at the present state of the world. I do not like the terms of the loans made by the United States. In my opinion they are much more like the ruthless and vindictive demands of a victor made upon a vanquished foe than arrangements between allies. It must be apparent by this time that, had it not been for Britain alone, and with her holding out as she did, all would have been ended, and there would have been a complete collapse of civilization.

As I look around me today I am pleased to note that a great soldier has been made secretary of state for the United States. I refer to General Marshall, who has succeeded the other great head of that department, Secretary Byrnes, who had to retire because of illness. General Marshall did not have what is known as the tradition of American politics as horse trading, but the fact remains that they have given him this office. General Marshall brings to his task the qualities of a first-class soldier, and he has taken office at a crucial time in the history of the world. He has won for himself the high regard of those Britishers who were associated with him in the war. I believe the new secretary of state is a man of great culture and high intellectual attainments.

It is my belief, however, that sooner or later his country will become isolationist, because it has never had a foreign policy. They have fought four wars without having had a foreign policy. Two of them were fought in our generation against Germany; one against Spain and one against the Philippines. Then they took part in the first great war. Yet they have come down to the time of the last great war without having had a foreign policy.

Another important subject will be taken up next week in Moscow. I refer to the subject of the bases. The principle of the joint Anglo-American use of bases is now in full operation. But the precedent of long-term leases of bases from Newfoundland to British Guiana, under the fifty-destroyers agreement of 1940 contains the seeds of future conflict. That agreement, which confers 99-year leases on the United States, does not provide for the British use of these bases and apparently contains no release clause in any form. If bases are to be held jointly such arrangements should be made on terms of strict reciprocity. In the present case, the use of land and the cost of bases in allied territory should be charged to lend-lease account and an agreement should at the same time be made to terminate the 99-year lease and cancel it and to transfer the costs of the destroyers to lend-lease account.

An agreement should be made along these lines, and I hope it will be made in Moscow next week. The true cost of those destroyers should be charged to lend-lease account; in fact, that should have been done long ago. Those ships had very little value in the war, because at that time the battle of the Atlantic was being fought, and the British navy was bearing the brunt of it.

I would say as the great Kipling said in "The English Flag":

> "And what should they know of England who only England know?—
> Never was isle so little, never was sea so lone
> But over the sand and palm trees an English flag was flown."

Wordsworth said on the death of Milton:

> "Milton! thou should'st be living at this hour:
> England hath need of thee!"

So I can say: Kipling, thou should'st be living at this hour; Britain hath need of thee.

One of the outstanding events in recent days has been the visit of Their Majesties and the two princesses to South Africa. They landed at that beautiful city of Capetown, from H.M.S. Vanguard, and have seen that magnificent country, with its flowers and historic beauty. Drake on his tour of the world called it a great harbour. Their Majesties and the princesses have gone through that country, just as they went through Canada shortly before the war broke out in 1939, at which time they won the admiration and affection of all our people. In no part of Canada did they get a warmer reception than in the province of Quebec. They are beloved by all the people of this country.

It was Field Marshal Smuts who prepared the speech from the throne. The king is the King of Canada; he is also the King of South Africa. They are now trying to build up a republic in South Africa. During the war Field Marshal Smuts rendered a service of great value. His life's work has been devoted, however, to the establishing of a republic in that great country.

A few days ago I referred to what I considered were three very important matters. First is India. Then comes the abandonment of the Suez canal, which was called by Mr. Churchill the jugular vein of the British empire. Equal in importance is the issue in Palestine. These are the most important matters at the present time. Then, one must consider the preservation of Greece. I do hope that we will arrive at some solution of these problems in the days ahead, because the British empire has been one of the greatest agencies for good that the world has ever known.

As we look around us we see a tendency toward the dissolution of the empire. Many people do not believe in empire; I gave their names last night, and some of them would have it liquidated. I fear a great mistake has been made by Great Britain in respect of India, and I hope some solution will be found before it is too late; because, after all is said and done, Great Britain has given India peace, security and justice for over 100 years, and freedom to 400 millions of India with security and none were armed. If she stepped out tomorrow, somebody else would step in. I fear that soviet Russia would come in and draw an iron curtain across that country. It is my view that a tragic mistake has been made by the government, and it is my hope that before many months have passed something will be done about it to repeal such a foolish proposal to withdraw British control of India, a blessing for over 100 years. The same of the Suez and the Nile. It should be held by Britain for security reasons.

I have mentioned bases in the Atlantic, the Arctic and the Pacific. At the present time the United States is saying that the Pacific is her territory, just as Mussolini talked about mare nostrum, meaning the Mediterranean. The truth is that Great Britain, before the war had control of the Pacific entirely. She was mistress of the seas. The mother country gave the world peace for 100 years between Waterloo in 1815 and the outbreak of the first world war in Belgium in 1914. She gave the world peace and security, just as she has given India peace, justice and security for the past 100 years.

May I say in conclusion that I should like to read briefly from Green's "Short history of the British People." I am sorry this book is no longer found in our schools. It was Woodrow Wilson's favourite history. In this extract the author is referring to Great Britain's losing the American colonies, but Britain survived that disaster, and he says:

> What startled men most at the time was the discovery that England was not ruined by the loss of her colonies or by the completeness of her defeat. She rose from it indeed stronger and greater than ever. The next ten years saw a display of industrial activity such as the world had never witnessed before. During the twenty years which followed she wrestled almost single-handed against the energy of the French revolution, as well as against the colossal force of Napoleonic tyranny, and came out of the one struggle unconquered and out of the other a conqueror. Never had England stood higher among the nations of the old world than after Waterloo; but she was already conscious that her real greatness lay not in the old world but in the new. From the moment of the Declaration of Independence it mattered little whether England counted for less or more with the nations around her. She was no longer a mere European power, no longer a mere rival of Germany or Russia or France. She was from that hour a mother of nations. In America she had begotten a great people . . . Her work was to be colonization. Her settlers were to dispute Africa with the Kaffir and the Hottentot, to wrest New Zealand from the Maori, to sow on the shores of Australia the seeds of great nations. And to these nations she was to give not only her blood and her speech, but the freedom which she had won. It is the thought of this which flings its grandeur round the pettiest details of our story in the past. The history of France has little result beyond France itself. German or Italian history has no direct issue outside the bounds of Germany or Italy. But England is only a small part of the outcome of English history. Its greater issues lie not within the narrow limits of the mother island, but in the destinies of nations yet to be. The struggles of her patriots, the wisdom of her statesmen, the steady love of liberty and law in her people at large were shaping in the past of our little island the future of mankind.

Mr. GEORGES H. HEON (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, I should hate myself for speaking after my hon. friend from Broadview in any other language but French. Knowing as I do that he and his constituents have always favoured bilingualism in this country, I wish to pay him a tribute that will help him secure re-election and shall therefore preface my remarks with a few words in French.

It is a matter of deep regret to me, Mr. Speaker, that the adjournment of the debate on the address in reply deprived me of an earlier opportunity to congratulate my two French-speaking colleagues recently elected in Pontiac and Richelieu-Vercheres. Their maiden speeches in this house have been rather remarkable although they probably realized that parliamentary oratory has little in common with the hustings, for enthusiasm is not as easily stirred up here as it is in an electoral campaign. Nor could my hon. friends fail to realize that French-speaking members are to be found on both sides of the house and that, while the latter are not uniformly smitten with the liberalism practiced by the present government since 1940, and while they have not applied for membership cards in Union des Electeurs, they will none the less work with the liberalism practised by the present in any concerted effort in the service of their country, Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, at this date and therefore quite belatedly I want to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) and the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Timmins) upon having been elected to the house. Winning a by-election when one's political party is in opposition is a considerable achievement, no matter how you look at it and whether you sit to the right or left of the Speaker. In the case of these two hon. gentlemen I am informed that this is a richly deserved reward for their excellent record of public service in the realm of municipal government, which is indeed the government nearest to the people. They are most welcome to this green chamber where I hope much distinction awaits them.

The mover (Mr. MacNaught) and the seconder (Mr. Cournoyer) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne have been rightfully congratulated upon their speeches. They performed a brilliant feat in managing to say so much so eloquently about a message which contained so little of any definite meaning to so few. The very vagueness of the terms of the speech vaguely indicated a vague situation which it was vaguely proposed vaguely to remedy. Even with the legislation already placed before this house, one can only surmise the trend and purport of the legislation which will be brought down later. It might not be amiss to utter some words of warning as to the pitfalls which lie clearly ahead for all Canadian statesmen. In the field of international relations the situation is not reassuring, notwithstanding the bland pronouncements of well-meaning and honest statesmen whose good faith is being thoroughly exploited by others whose bad faith is becoming apparent even to the man on the street.

It must not come to pass that one may outwardly prepare to sit at the peace table and secretly prepare to sit at a council of war. The old diplomatic game of playing for time, bluffing, ace in the hole, must give way to blunt speaking, fair dealing and cards on the table. A distinguished Canadian clergyman who was chief padre of one of our Canadian divisions in Europe was repatriated last summer. He was able to travel fairly extensively in conquered Europe, and he told me recently that in some of the conquered territories the population were praying secretly and hoping for another war which would rid them of their recent conquerors whose rule was more cruel, more autocratic, than that of their former ones. Did we enter the late war to legalize wholesale displacements, wholesale looting and wholesale disfranchisement? It is high time that the world was informed that, so far as Canada is concerned, it will not be a party to a treaty which will encourage sanctions or foster the geopolitics and dictatorships which we were asked to help destroy in the gestapo and wermacht. Shall the "Big Four" turn out to be the Big Stick? What then becomes of the solemn pledges of the Atlantic charter to all the small nations of all the world? What, then, will be the lot of the common man, the small man all over the world, who has been asked, and is still being asked to bear in times of precarious peace and reconstruction the same preponderant share of the burden and sacrifice he bore during the war?

If the words of democracy and freedom are not to be further indecently uttered and invoked some definite and concrete reassurance must be given by the great powers before treaties are signed, and in the texts of the treaties themselves, that the small nations, the small men, wherever they may be, have nothing to fear, and that their moral, political, economic freedom, security and welfare will be fully and permanently assured and safeguarded.

In fewer words the "Big Four" may have titles to ensure and direct the true destiny of our civilized world, but since when have they the right to dominate it? Our Canadian government took a definite step in the right direction when it lately made known Canada's views to the special agents sitting in London. These views were in conformity with those of the right-thinking Canadians of all political parties.

The speech from the throne made passing reference to interprovincial relations. This is a subject loaded with dynamite and of great concern to all of Canada. If it is not finally, fairly and justly solved, for the nine, not the six provinces, it may lead—and I wish to emphasize this—to internecine strife, distrust and discontent.

Great emphasis has been laid by previous speakers and eminent members in the house on the fact that six provinces have already accepted federal proposals. It has been underlined, not without some ironical touch, that some difficulties were being experienced with Ontario and Quebec and that Premiers Drew and Duplessis were somewhat adamant and unreasonable in their demands. Much less has been said about the obstinacy of Nova Scotia, where apparently a Liberal administration holds sway. Most speeches made in this house have given the impression that if Messrs. Drew and Duplessis were in the Liberal ranks they would be more amenable to an agreement and that there lies a sinister political behind their stand. I for one cannot see the matter in that light. Ontario and Quebec have a greater population and pay more taxes than the other provinces put together.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Where do you sell your products?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HEON: As one back-bencher to another, I may tell the hon. member that I cannot hear him.

Logically they have, therefore, a greater interest in the proposed agreements and Premier Drew of Ontario and Premier Duplessis of Quebec have a correspondingly greater share of responsibility.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Why do they not show it?

Mr. CASSELMAN: They do.

Mr. HEON: We shall come to that later.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HEON: Will the hon. member listen to this, please? Public men, real he-men, who speak for seven-twelfths of the population of Canada are certainly entitled to as much respect and consideration as those who speak on behalf of half a million. In the case of the Hon. Mr. Duplessis—and I am not asking the house to share my opinion—he is most ably directing the destinies of the province of Quebec. He finds himself as premier of a province—and I ask hon. gentleman opposite and all hon. gentlemen in the house to remember this—wherein dwells the bulk of the French-Canadian population of Canada, and there are certain and most important items to be remembered. Quebec is Quebec. The premier of any party who is elected in the province of Quebec must, does and should always remember this: he is the elected premier of a province where there are certain particular and most important traditional, cultural and racial factors which have to be taken into account. If hon. gentlemen could have read, as have I and all the French-Canadian members on both sides of the house, the editorials in French-Canadian newspapers, resolutions passed by national societies, youth societies, municipal councils, and school boards, approving the premier of Quebec, possibly all of us here would not be so hasty—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: What do Jehovah's Witnesses say?

Mr. HEON: I want to tell my hon. friend this. I am prepared to discuss that subject at any moment, but he is too broadminded to bring that matter into the house at this time. Later on, if he wishes to, I shall be glad to discuss it.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Page the hon. member for Lake Centre.

(Translation):

Mr. HEON: Has any other hon. member said that he was willing to discuss the matter of Jehovah's Witnesses?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. HEON: Who said that?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No one said that.

[Mr. Heon.]

(Text):

Mr. HEON: Be that as it may, both Premier Drew and Premier Duplessis are duly elected prime ministers of their respective provinces; and there is certainly nothing to show, in the light of recent provincial by-elections, that the confidence placed in them by their fellow citizens has lessened in the least degree.

We have been told that the legislatures of Ontario and Quebec will fully examine and discuss federal proposals at their present session. Surely, Mr. Speaker, we in this house have sufficient respect for the provincial legislatures not to deny them, as the freely elected spokesmen of their provinces, the right to speak for their constituents on so important a problem.

Personally, and I speak for myself alone, I shall await with a great deal of interest—and not electoral but Canadian interest; that is what I have in mind—the outcome of the discussions in the provincial legislatures. Coming from Quebec, and proud to come from Quebec, I cannot fail to be influenced by what my own provincial legislature will decide.

May I add just one more word, Mr. Speaker? There are rumours circulating in this house that the country may be heading toward another general election. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), in his speech of February 3 last, was not overreassuring. Further, the newspaper Le Droit of Ottawa, dated Wednesday, February 5, 1947, in revealing to its readers the smallest details of what went on in the Liberal caucus of that same morning, published—and my hon. friend cannot deny that—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I can say that you do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. HEON: Have you read it?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Were you in the caucus?

Mr. HEON: Have you read it?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You are repeating rumours, that is all, like the rest of your speech.

Mr. HEON: Listen to me and you can contradict me later.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You are talking nonsense.

Mr. HEON: Apparently something tickles the hon. member. Before hon. members interrupt, I want them to listen to what I shall say next; then they can criticize me if they wish to. If my hon. friend does not like my citation I cannot avoid it. It was a French newspaper, but to help my hon. friend I will translate what it said. This was Le Droit of Ottawa, Wednesday, February 5, 1947, and this is the headline: "Flag—" my hon. friend, coming from British Columbia! will understand that—"Flag Without Union Jack. The Country is Heading Towards a General Election." Then it went on, at page 11—my hon. friend has the reference—"That is why the Prime Minister is thinking of having recourse to his tactics of a sudden election to obtain a more stable majority in parliament."

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Sudden or delayed, you will never come back.

An hon. MEMBER: That is a bed-time story.

Mr. HEON: I understand that my hon. friend wants to go to sleep now.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Take it and like it.

Mr. HEON: This article—and my hon. friends on the right will like this—is possibly unfair to the Prime Minister, and possibly it is untrue in its conclusions on what was, after all, a more or less harmonious party caucus. But the C.B.C. and affiliated stations and most newspapers carried this interpretation across Canada. The impression has been given, rightly or wrongly—personally I think it is wrong—that a general election is in the offing if—there is always a big "if"—a substantial majority is not accorded the administration; if the amendment of the leader of the opposition is carried, or if the tempers of the cabinet members become so frayed and irritated in the face of opposition criticism that they may decide upon a general election. I wish to make my position perfectly clear, and that will please members to the right of the Speaker, though I am not out to please them. I want to say this. The present administration went before the country on June 11, 1945, seeking a mandate to build a new social order, to protect social and economic gains, and, as they said, to finish the job together. This being so, Canadians in great numbers approved by their "X's", and my hon. friend will recognize an "X".

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The Gallup poll shows we are leading.

Mr. HEON: Canadians approved the proposed legislative trends set forth by the outgoing Liberal administration; and the final result, although not giving the administration a clear majority, since more Canadians voted for the various other political parties than for the administration, gave the present administration a mandate. Clearly the duty of the present administration is to accomplish this mandate, unless it is prepared to state officially that it cannot fulfil its numerous and most generous promises. Eighteen months have elapsed since the present administration came into power. It is a crude fact, an admitted fact, that the administration has not yet accomplished all that it promised. Would a general election solve the problem?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The electorate will give us a bigger majority.

Mr. HEON: My hon. friend is thinking in terms of votes and I am thinking in terms of Canada. That is the difference. I say this in all seriousness and I want to make my stand perfectly clear. A general election at this time would only add to the confusion already existing in industrial, agricultural and labour circles. The administration's job is not to render the economy of the country less stable; it is to render it more stable. It is its job, as it is the job of all of us, to render Canada's economy more stable. A general election at this time, Mr. Speaker, in my very humble opinion would amount to a catastrophe. Personally, and mind you I am speaking only for myself, I have taken great pains to consult all classes of the electorate in my own constituency, both Liberal and anti-Liberal, before making this statement. I shall not cast in this house any vote which will favour an early election. I hope that is clear enough. The general sentiment among my constituents seems to be: "Let the administration fulfil their promises; if they do not, we shall throw them out in good time." May I add this: The political temper of the average Canadian at this time is not one that should be fooled with, and woe to the political party which does so. Our countrymen want us to do things and accomplish results. Is there any hon. member, who, having been elected on June 11, 1945, is prepared to go back to the country tomorrow? Is there any political party which is prepared to go back before the country and say, "I am sorry; you gave us a mandate to do certain things, but we have not had the courage to do them. If you re-elect us, we will try"? The whole thing is silly. It applies to all Canadians of all parties.

My Liberal friends—and I have very many of them—last year sent me as a Christmas present, if hon. members to the right can imagine it, a copy of a pamphlet entitled "Programme for Canada". I quite frankly say, Mr. Speaker—and you have been through the classical colleges of the province of Quebec:

(Translation):

Mr. HEON: Timeo liberales et dona ferentes. Which means "I fear the liberals even when they bring me gifts".

Mr. PIERRE GAUTHIER (Portneuf): You mean "Timeo Danaos". You do not remember your Latin.

Mr. HEON: I have possibly forgotten it, but I am lost like my hon. friend.

(Text):

This is what I received as a Christmas gift, "Programme for Canada".

An hon. MEMBER: Put it on the table.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I can think of something better to do with it.

Mr. HEON: The foreword to this pamphlet is signed by the national Liberal committee. I want to say that I am serious about this. It has been circulated, according to the figures quoted, among 10,000,000 Canadians. The foreword, signed by the national Liberal committee, says this, and I am trying to point out that the duty of this house and of every member is not to look forward to a general election; the duty of every member is to try to go forward and do things irrespective of any party. This was sent across Canada, and this is what was signed by the national Liberal committee. No doubt the Progressive Conservative literature was just as good or as bad. But this was circulated and the Canadian voters approved it. So it is a duty to see that what is promised to the Canadian people should be accomplished. This is the foreword:

About one hundred days ago—

I would like to see "one hundred years", but the word is "days".

—the people of Canada voted to continue the Liberal administration. Thirty days ago the last aggressor accepted the allies' terms of unconditional surrender. The twentieth parliament elected in war time now meets in peace. The Liberal party's programme for peace as presented to the electors in the national election campaign is reproduced in these pages.

Page 3 of the pamphlet says that these advertisements had an aggregate circulation of twenty million. Any hon. member who wants to look at this after I am through, but not before, may have it. Page 4 says:

Liberal policies will create post war opportunities for all.

Page 5 says:

Liberal policies make jobs.

[Mr. Heon.]

And it adds:

These are just some of many steps in your Liberal government's working plan to ensure full employment after the war . . . Make sure the team which made this plan for full employment shall see it through—and win the peace.

Page 4 says, and any hon. member who doubts my words may consult this, as follows:

Reduction in taxation. The Liberal government will gradually reduce taxation when the European war is over.

That word "gradually" is a most elastic word. To continue:

Taxes will come down to free spending power and to give Canadians every opportunity for prosperity, employment and freedom. What you have done in war—you can do in peace. You can do your part by supporting the Liberal candidate in your constituency.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but he has exhausted his time.

An hon. MEMBER: He is helping us.

Mr. SPEAKER: He may go on with the consent of the house.

Mr. HEON: I want to thank hon. gentlemen. They have always been gentlemen and there is no reason why they should not be tonight. Page 5 says, "Liberal policies make jobs." Page 7 says:

Just plain sense! The Canadian people have made a magnificent contribution to the common victory in Europe. The Liberal administration can say with honesty and justice: "This is the government which has directed Canada's war effort at home and abroad. This is the government which during the war worked out a programme of full employment and social reform . . ." These things are a matter of record and of common knowledge. On the basis of its record the choice of Prime Minister King's party to form the next government of Canada is a matter of just plain sense.

And it did. The same pamphlet continues with the heading, "Let the Liberal government finish its work", and I ask hon. members to listen to this, under the heading of "New low cost homes":

50,000 homes immediately. 100,000 each year for ten years. Instalments as low as $9.58 per month under the new national housing plan.

Then item No. 11:

Controls coming off. No controls for the sake of control. As promised, the Liberals have been relaxing supply controls since V-E day; materials for houses, furnishings, electrical appliances, radios, cars, etc., released every day; gas ration soon to be abandoned.

An hon. MEMBER: Now let us hear your programme.

Mr. HEON: You want to hear mine?

(Translation):

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Additional time has been given to the hon. member so that he might finish his speech. Is he about to conclude?

Mr. HEON: I am about to conclude.

(Text):

I want to conclude with these words. This is no time for party politics. This government has been elected, and it is its job to carry out its programme. If it is unable to do so, it should say so officially. Personally I am in favour of following the constitutional principle that an elected administration should serve out its term. Then let the electors judge, because Canadian electors have a reputation for judging their public men carefully. They have made mistakes since 1935, but one day or another they shall correct those mistakes.

Mr. RONALD MOORE (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the postponement of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne has obviously had the effect of reducing interest in a great many of the subjects which would have been discussed had the debate continued until the votes on the amendments were taken. However, I understand that when the estimates of the various departments are brought down ample opportunity will be provided to deal with most of the subjects which would have been discussed had the debate continued.

On glancing over the speech from the throne, I see very little on which discussion could be carried on. It seems to me that the speech from the throne is more concerned with concealing than with revealing the legislation the government intends to deal with this session. It was stated that the problem of reconversion, started some time before the end of the war, has now been completed, and Canadian industry stands ready to supply the needs of a country at peace with the world. Before the war, other countries marvelled at the efficiency of Canada's industrial machine. If our industrial machine had a great productive efficiency before the war, those years of war greatly increased that efficiency.

Many of our scientists, engineers and economists have told us that a great many of our economic problems during the depression years were due to the fact that technological developments had caused industry to displace men with machines. Unfortunately there has not been a study of this situation as far as Canada is concerned, but in the United States a definite study of technological development has been made. According to Mr. Nathan Robertson, an American authority who writes articles for the New Republic, in the thirty-year period from 1909 to 1939 there was an increase in the productive efficiency of industry ranging from three to three and a half per cent a year. Mr. Robertson goes on to say that this productive efficiency was brought about by revolutionary new methods introduced to American industry. Some of those revolutionary new methods were such things as the machine production of cigars, the development of production lines in mass-production industries, and the introduction of the continuous strip mill in the steel industry. In this same period of time the production of rayon was quadrupled; the manufacture of industrial chemicals was trebled, and the production of automobiles increased by 180 per cent. In the refining of petroleum the increase was 290 per cent, while in the manufacture of tires and automobile tubes the increase was 325 per cent.

According to the same authority, who is quoted in the New Republic of October 1 last, in the twenty-year period from 1919 to 1939 the production per man-hour increased by 107 per cent, which meant that in the period between the two wars the production of industry was more than doubled. But what was the position with respect to labour during this period of time? It is true that the wages of labour increased, but only by 28 per cent. By 1939 unit labour costs were reduced by 44 per cent. I have not yet been able to find figures giving the technological picture of development during the last great war, from 1939 to 1945, but I think it is safe to say that the development of industry during the second world war was just as great as during world war I. It is necessary only to mention a few of the things the production of which was greatly stepped up during the war years. I remember the Department of Reconstruction and Supply stated that shells were produced during the second world war for a fraction of what they cost per shell during the first world war. In the United States ships went down the ways almost as rapidly as automobiles came off the assembly lines.

All these technological developments should be a boon to mankind, but in the past that has not been the case; actually they have been a detriment. One of the chief reasons for that is, I think, that the ownership of those means of production is in private hands. It seems to me that in the near future some step will have to be taken to make production of such machines which should be socially owned available to all the people of this country.

In the past a great many royal commissions have been set up to investigate various problems. We have had the Rowell-Sirois report respecting dominion-provincial relations. We have had the coal commission report, and several other commissions have investigated railway problems. The general procedure seems to have been to appoint a commission to take evidence, and then to shelve the report, doing nothing about the situation.

I believe this government at the present time should set up another royal commission, the purpose of which would be to investigate the amount of technological development that has taken place in Canada since the turn of the century, with particular reference to the development between 1920 and 1945. If that information were readily available it would afford labour an opportunity of getting a settlement for some of its present problems.

I hold in my hand an article which I clipped from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix. This contains a report given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) and deals specifically with Canada's foreign trade. The article states:

During 1946 the minister announced the dominion's exports rose to a total value of $2,312 million, or more than two and one-half times as great as the five-year pre-war average from 1935 to 1939.

"It is encouraging to note that despite the elimination of these war goods from our export trade," Mr. MacKinnon said, "the volume of peace-time commodities has been maintained at a high enough level to ensure full employment in Canada's great but vulnerable export industries."

I am sure every hon. member is pleased to know the minister was able to make a statement of that kind respecting our foreign trade, particularly with respect to the aspect of full employment. That, again, is something which should receive due consideration from the house, because there is great danger that in the future our government and private enterprise will not be able to afford full employment to the people of Canada.

I note the minister has said that the providing of full employment to our people is largely dependent upon our export trade. Here are some figures which deal with that export trade. At this point I should like to compare our best peacetime year after the economic depression of 1929 with the year 1946. In 1938, which was the best year following the depression, we had in Canada 870,173 unemployed employable persons, while in 1946 we had approximately 158,000, a comparatively small figure when compared with that of 1938.

But here are our present exports, for the first nine months of 1946, as compared with our exports for the twelve months of 1938. I believe the figures I am about to place on record reveal the fact that, unless we are able to maintain our trade as it is today, we shall have difficulty in the future in providing full employment. These figures for Canadian exports are as follows:

	9 months 1946	12 months 1938
Newsprint	$187,400,000	$115,600,000
Wood pulp	82,800,000	33,500,000
Planks and boards	79,300,000	43,400,000
Automobiles and trucks	45,800,000	22,900,000
Farm implements	22,900,000	8,200,000
Bacon and ham	51,600,000	32,300,000
Fertilizer	24,300,000	7,900,000

I believe the minister is right when he says that these exports must be maintained if we are to provide full employment in this country. But I believe other hon. members who belong to different groups in the house are right when they say that these exports will not be maintained. And they will not be maintained because the countries to which exports are made are going to rebuild. As soon as the devastated areas in Europe and Asia have been rehabilitated, we shall encounter difficulties in the marketing of our commodities.

I suggest that if we are not to face a serious unemployment problem in the future the government must now take steps to overcome conditions which may develop. The first action to be taken should be that of investigating the possibilities of establishing in our better industries the forty-hour week. That could be done, if the findings of the royal commission, the setting up of which I have just suggested, were put into effect. We could pick out our best industries where the profits are highest, and have those industries establish the forty-hour week, with no reduction in take-home pay. Then the government could go forward and maintain investment in Canadian industry from the public treasury. By that, I mean it could institute public works, reforestation programmes, highway construction programmes in cooperation with the provincial governments—anything to maintain a condition of full employment throughout the country.

It is interesting to note that in 1938, our best peacetime year, we had in circulation in Canada $352 million, or a per capita income of $404. Those figures have increased steadily until at the present time, they have reached an all-time high. The money in circulation today stands at $1,079 million, or a per capita income of $708. If that condition is to be maintained—and it must be maintained if prosperity is to exist in Canada—the government will have to take action. What private enterprise cannot do, the government will have to take upon its shoulders, and will have to accomplish.

I should like to deal somewhat more fully with the possibility of our present unemployment problem becoming a serious one. I know there are many people who would not like me to say that Canada has an unemployment problem. When one compares our present unemployment with that of our best peacetime year I do not think it would be fair to say that the problem is serious at the present time. Nevertheless we have today the beginning of an unemployment problem which, unless something is done about it, could become serious.

I hold in my hand a clipping from the Financial Post for March 1, 1947, giving the employment picture in Canada for February. This summary is broken down according to areas, and it gives the following information:

	Unplaced applicants	Unfilled vacancies	Men per job
Maritimes	26,000	3,000	8·7
Quebec	50,000	28,000	1·8
Ontario	54,000	28,000	2
Prairies	38,000	9,000	4·2
British Columbia	28,000	3,000	9·1

It might be worth while noting that at the present time Windsor has the worst unemployment situation of any city in the Dominion of Canada. The average for the whole dominion is two men for every available job, but in Windsor the ratio is twenty for every available job.

There is one other item I should now like to deal with; that is freight rates. For many years the western provinces have felt that they were paying the shot so far as freight rates are concerned. Investigations held in the past have more or less substantiated that contention. As far back as 1922, investigations have shown that railway revenue was much higher in the west than in the east. One of these investigations was held from 1922 to 1925 and it revealed the fact that the Canadian Pacific net earnings in the west amounted to $105 million, while the eastern divisions earned only $56 million. Evidence from the same report showed that western freight rates on the average were fifteen per cent higher than they were on eastern lines.

This situation came to a head shortly after the first world war, and two equalization boards sat to deal with freight rates. The first one sat from 1920 to 1922, and the second, from 1925 to 1927. The railroads left no ground uncovered to justify higher western rates. They attempted to justify their western rates by saying that the rate per ton-mile was much lower than the eastern rate. The recent request of the railroads for an increase of thirty per cent in freight rates has met with a storm of protest from most sections of the country, particularly the western provinces. I know of no single item which will retard western development to a greater degree than the proposed increase in freight rates. If the present investigation into the case put forward by the railroads for increased freight rates results in higher freight rates it will lead to an ever-increasing demand by the western provinces, particularly Manitoba and Saskatchewan, for the fullest possible use of the Hudson Bay railway and shipping route.

Speaking in the house this afternoon, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) surprised me to some extent when he made the announcement that new measures of relief were to be granted the gold mining companies. I have gold miners in my constituency, but I noticed that, when the miners who dig the ore were seeking wage increases and union recognition in the different parts of Canada, not much concern was shown by the government for their general welfare. However, the government appears to be greatly concerned with the production of gold and the welfare of the gold mining companies. Personally I cannot see why this should be. Gold is not an essential commodity. The world could get along very well without it. When the war first broke out, we actually curtailed the production of gold in this country in order to put men at more useful work. Using it as a base for our currency is an old-fashioned idea. We got rid of that during the war also. We used currency and credit and there was nothing to support that currency and credit but the printing presses and the effrontery of the issuers.

The generous allowances outlined by the minister this afternoon, such as increasing the depletion allowance from 33⅓ per cent to 40 per cent for the whole industry and the many other concessions that were granted in that statement will cost the taxpayers of this country a great deal of money. This contrasts greatly with the government's attitude to the request of 13,000 coal miners in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick when they appealed to the federal government to subsidize their wage increase of $1.40 per day. That would cost the federal government and the taxpayers approximately five and one-half million dollars. It would help establish fair standards of living for the mine workers; but, in return, coal would be now produced in Nova Scotia. Thousands of dollars would be accruing to the government for personal income tax.

Thousands of dollars would be saved by the miners' contribution to the unemployment insurance fund and more thousands would be saved because it would prevent the closing of other industries in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick through lack of fuel. I would strongly urge the government to show the same consideration to the mine workers of Nova Scotia that the Minister of Finance has shown to the operators of gold mining in Canada.

Mr. W. G. BLAIR (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I regret to note that there is no mention of health in the speech from the throne. There is mention of a measure to be introduced in connection with social security, but that is the only reference to any new legislation from the Department of Health and Welfare. It is my intention at this time to review health conditions in Canada and to bring before this parliament the urgent necessity for action which cannot be further delayed.

In order to lay a sound foundation for a nation, the people of that nation must be fit mentally and physically. It is the duty of the government to give leadership, direction and financial support in order to reach that goal. For the past six years all our energies have been devoted to war for the defence of liberty, but it is now high time to take stock of the health standards of our people. We received our first intimation of the necessity for a health stocktaking when it was discovered that approximately forty per cent of our young men were unfit at the time of enlistment in the last war. The high percentage of unfitness in this group would indicate that the general health situation is even worse in other age groups.

This is an alarming state of affairs and is sufficient reason for the Canadian parliament making an inquiry into the cause of this situation. Many of these conditions could be corrected and it is the duty of the government to act, instead of complacently taking the attitude that there is no cause for alarm or that nature will heal the difficulty. I cannot find any reason for congratulation or satisfaction in the government's programme. It is to be noted that, while there are house committees on agriculture, veterans affairs, railways, fisheries and so on in this parliament, there is no house committee on health except a joint committee which met only four or five times last year. Surely the health of a nation, the relief of suffering and the urgent need for medical research should be of as much importance, or even of more importance, than the matters brought up for discussion and debate in the other house committees I have mentioned.

I point out the necessity for action for the following reasons:

First, cancer, tuberculosis, and mental illness have reached an appalling total and the first two show an extremely high death rate.

Second, the death rate in preventable disease is high.

Third, hospital facilities are inadequate for the treatment of all disease and especially so for the treatment of mental diseases, tuberculosis, and for the care of incurables. Hospital facilities are especially lacking in rural areas.

Fourth, there is a shortage of trained nurses to staff new hospitals and existing hospitals and for service in public health.

Fifth, the high cost of sickness.

Sixth, the necessity for organized services in child and maternal health.

Seventh, the need for early diagnostic measures.

Eighth, the crying need for research into the causes of such disease as cancer, arthritis, poliomyelitis and rheumatic fever.

Let us first consider the situation regarding cancer. Every year, cancer kills approximately 14,000 Canadians. It is second only to heart disease as a cause of death. We do not know the cause, but we know that in many cases this disease can be checked or even cured if an early diagnosis is made. Apart from the death rate of this disease the course is usually long and the cause of much suffering.

I am pleased to note that the National Cancer Institute of Canada has been formed. When a meeting of those interested in this dread disease was held in Ottawa a short time ago the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) said that the resources of the King George V cancer fund were at the disposal of this newly formed organization for cancer research. The King George V cancer fund was raised in 1935 by the citizens of Canada. It amounted to $500,000. It was raised by public subscription and not by government grant. From 1937 to 1940, $14,000 was paid out each year to the cancer research committee of the Canadian Medical Association. In 1940, one-half of the grant was paid to the association. In 1942, the grant to the association was reduced to $7,000. In view of the fact that 14,000 people of Canada died last year from this disease, it would appear to me that the government is pursuing a niggardly policy in dealing with research on this national problem.

The provincial government of Ontario gave a grant of $500,000 to the Ontario cancer research foundation which has raised over $1,000,000 for research and treatment.

Canadian citizens are demanding action. The support for any campaign for cancer research must come from the people and be directed by the government. The problem will have to be met in the same way and with the same energy as research workers discovered the secrets of radar and atomic energy.

Let us next consider tuberculosis. In 1944, 5,724 of our population died of this disease, the majority in early life. It rates as the seventh cause of death in all age groups in Canada, and the first cause of death in the age group from fifteen to forty-five. Not only has it a high mortality rate, but it is easily transmitted from an infected to a healthy person.

Several of the provinces are carrying out an excellent plan for the elimination of this disease. In addition to observing precautions for our own citizens, it is necessary that all potential immigrants to Canada pass a strict medical examination with chest X-rays before they are allowed to enter this country. It is agreed among workers in this field that the scourge of tuberculosis can be defeated if proper methods are taken.

Arthritis is a disease of long duration; and, while it is prevalent throughout Canada, certain districts seem to have a higher incidence than others. It is commonly called Canada's No. 1 crippler. The number of cases in Canada has been estimated at as high as 400,000, of whom possibly 100,000 are crippled. Arthritis has the ability to cripple without killing; therefore it leads all other diseases in causing chronic sufferers. It accounts for a greater number of work-days lost than any other chronic illness. In Canada we have few hospitals equipped for the treatment of this disease. In addition very little research is being carried out. Not only does arthritis cripple and destroy, but, like cancer, it causes excruciating pain and suffering.

When we are considering arthritis, there is a somewhat similar disease known as rheumatic fever which causes a high percentage of casualties, especially in the young. Even in the event of a cure of this disease the heart is frequently left damaged, resulting in invalidism and early death. If all the cases of heart disease which are given as the cause of death were fully investigated, many could be traced to rheumatic fever in early life. Like arthritis, this disease demands research.

Mental illness is apparently increasing with the growth in our population. The number of cases in mental hospitals has increased by sixty per cent in the last fifteen years. New methods of treatment have proven successful but there is a marked shortage of accommodation in mental hospitals. It is deplorable that there are waiting lists for admittance to many mental institutions.

Venereal disease can be eliminated, but more money must be spent on its treatment and more propaganda must be carried out. The fight against venereal disease must be carried into the open and the problem approached by treatment, moral propaganda and education. Money spent on venereal disease now will save money which is at present being spent in mental institutions and hospitals for patients who are chronically ill in many cases. Further to help eliminate this disease, I would urge that pre-marital blood tests be carried out, and also blood tests of all immigrants coming into this country.

In pointing out eight urgent needs for action on health matters, I grouped together child and maternal welfare. While it is a fact that maternal mortality has dropped from 4·2 per thousand live births in 1939 to 2·7 in 1944, the rate is still too high, and many of these mothers could have been saved if given adequate treatment. The rate of 2·7 per thousand live births means that 776 maternal deaths occurred in 1944. The drop in the mortality rate may be attributed to these circumstances: one, the advent of new treatment by penicillin and the sulpha drugs; two, the increased tendency to hospitalization of cases and, three, educational programmes. It is hoped that the difficulty in obtaining hospitalization will not mean a further rise in mortality rates. Much difficulty is experienced in obtaining hospital accommodation in crowded urban hospitals. I cannot therefore agree with the statement in a recent periodical from the Department of National Health and Welfare, speaking of maternal mortality, that the risk is negligible. The rates per thousand live births per province are of interest as of 1944. They are as follows: Prince Edward Island 5·2; Nova Scotia 2·1; New Brunswick 3·2; Quebec 3·1; Ontario, 2·5; Manitoba 3·1; Saskatchewan 2·3; Alberta 1·6; British Columbia 2·6.

I come next to the consideration of preventable disease. One thousand children die each year from whooping cough, diphtheria and scarlet fever. The use of diphtheria toxoid is 100 per cent effective for immunization against this disease, and eighty per cent of those treated by immunization against scarlet fever do not contract the disease. Like rheumatic fever, scarlet fever often leaves complications in its wake. I present the following statistics of diseases in the past three years: diphtheria, 8,801 cases, 868 deaths; whooping cough 44,656 cases, 1,206 deaths, scarlet fever 51,566 cases, 293 deaths; poliomyelitis 1,432 cases, 89 deaths.

As regards poliomyelitis, no statistics are available as to the number permanently injured.

I am considering preventable cases, and a large percentage of these children could have been saved if we had had proper immunization methods. The lives of the younger generation of Canada should be paramount to any much discussed immigration. I am interested, first, in Canadians, and surely many of these children dying annually of these preventable diseases could be saved. Even if protective measures are available by immunization, these diseases still menace the health of the children of Canada. The Canadian infantile mortality rate is scandalously high. It is twice that of Sweden, twice that of New Zealand, and nineteen per cent higher than in the United States. There has been a decline in the past two years, but the rate is far above what it should be. It is estimated that during the six-year period of the war, Canada lost 90,000 infants. While there has been a drop in the infantile mortality rate in the past six years, it is probably on account of improved methods of treatment. Over half the infant deaths occur in the first month of life. Statistics show that 18,868 children under five years of age died in 1944. We can ill afford this drain on the population of Canada. The rate could be reduced further by pre-natal care and care of mothers and babies at birth and in early infancy. Sir Arthur Newsholme, author of the book "Vital Statistics", states:

> Infantile mortality is the most sensitive index we possess of social welfare. If babies were well born and well cared for, mortality would be negligible.

I now come to a consideration of the so-called milk-borne diseases, which is one cause of a high infant mortality. This group includes a number of diseases caused by infected raw milk. The diseases are diphtheria, streptococcus infections of the throat and tonsils, scarlet fever, bovine tuberculosis, typhoid, paratyphoid and undulant fever. Of these, undulant fever and streptococcus infections are most common. In addition, thousands more infants suffer gastric and intestinal disturbances, and hundreds of infants contract intestinal infections, more or less fatal. When the province of Ontario made the pasteurization of milk compulsory, undulant fever was cut down forty-five per cent in the first year. Deaths from other milk-borne diseases were reduced, and there was a marked fall in the infant mortality rate.

Pasteurization kills the germs and renders the milk safe. I have twice appealed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) for a programme of vaccination to cut down Bang's disease which is the cause of undulant fever in human beings. Unfortunately Bang's disease is present in all provinces of Canada. I point out to the Minister of Health that this disease could be lessened and even eliminated if the Department of Agriculture would act. Farmers require help in cleaning up mastitis in herds. This disease is one cause of streptococcus infections in humans. Pasteurization of milk and treatment of the primary causes of infected milk would cut down the death rate of the diseases caused by infected milk. We have, therefore, the means to eliminate these diseases in Canada. Milk is our finest single food, and with clean handling and a clean source of supply from healthy cows, it is safer than any other food we use. But sometimes there is disease in milk, and whether it arises from disease in the herd or bad handling or from other causes, it has become necessary to pasteurize it for the safety of infants and adults. It is, therefore, a tragedy that the federal government does not give full cooperation in using all means to wipe out or curb diseases, which are wholly or partly preventable, on account of infected milk. Milk-borne diseases should be eliminated from Canada.

Hospital accommodation shows a tremendous shortage in Canada. One of the great needs today is sufficient hospitals where patients can be taken to receive expert diagnosis and treatment. It is estimated that we require 153,000 beds, with an additional 20,000 beds more required within the next ten years. The shortage of beds has reached such proportions that practically every hospital in Canada has a long waiting list. All available hospital space is crowded. There are only nine convalescent hospitals in Canada and they are all in three provinces. We require additional hospitals for the chronically ill. It is difficult to obtain accommodation for those who are chronically ill, on account of long periods of hospitalization. In many general hospitals it is difficult to obtain beds even for those acutely ill and requiring emergency treatment. Many of the beds in the public general hospitals are occupied by chronically ill cases, thus barring acute cases from hospital treatment. These chronic cases are not all old, nor are they all indigents. Many of them are in the younger age group. I quote from an address by Mayor Lewis of Ottawa on February 19:

> There are no spare beds in the hospitals. There are no spare places for persons suffering mental illnesses. We are keeping people in our county gaol because there is no room for them in proper mental institutions . . . Our reformatories are filled and our gaols are filled. There is no place left for incurables and aged.

The degree of sickness among the people cannot be decided by the number of beds occupied in hospitals. Thousands, unable to afford treatment, or unable to procure accommodation, occupy beds at home, of which we have no records. A large percentage of the people cannot afford to pay the high cost of sickness. New methods of treatment and diagnosis have been discovered, but the cost of medical and hospital care has increased tremendously. There is a serious gap existing between advanced medical science and application in so far as treatment is concerned. Many people in the lower income brackets receive from sickness financial set-backs which they are never able to overcome, and which leave them constantly in debt. The cost of hospitalization, nursing and medical care is beyond the limits of their resources.

The shortage of nurses and trained hospital attendants is another serious problem. Wards in general hospitals in Canada have been closed because there are not enough nurses to care for the patients. Tuberculosis sanatoria and mental hospitals are understaffed for nurses. The demand for nurses in army hospitals has further reduced the number available for public hospitals. Many nurses are overworked and hospitals are short staffed. Patients, unless they can afford special nurses, often do not receive enough attention. Nurses have been overworked to the point of endangering their health. Many married nurses who returned to their profession during the war years are now retiring on account of income tax regulations. In order to give efficient and competent care of our sick, and to staff the 150,000 beds required, larger numbers of trained nurses must be graduated from training schools. In taking steps to rectify this situation, it must be remembered that young women entering this profession require matriculation from high schools, and a course of three years' hospital training. The shortage cannot be solved by short courses to graduate additional nurses. Any lowering of the standards will mean an inefficient service to the public.

It is often stated that the health of a nation is the wealth of a nation. The health of the people depends also to a large degree on the conditions of environment under which they live and work. It depends on decent housing and elimination of slums. It depends on adequate nutrition and facilities of education. The loss in wages to our industrial workers in 1942 amounts to $135,000,000 on account of sickness. The loss in production by reason of absence from work amounted to millions, and the total for sickness, loss of time, and production, has been estimated at a billion dollars. We must attack this wastage and cut down the losses on account of diseases. We are paying dearly for sickness. Preventive and early treatment could cut down sickness. Our national bill for sickness is higher than what it would cost to keep these people well and producing. I am not advocating a programme of expenditure, but rather a programme of economy.

The medical colleges and science faculties in our Canadian universities are of high standard. They graduate many students, anxious and capable of doing research. Unfortunately, a large proportion of these graduates move to the United States where they receive more lucrative salaries. This country can ill afford to lose these citizens, and conditions should be made more attractive to retain them here either on health problems or in research on the products of our national resources to build up new industries and create employment for our people.

I am aware that many of the matters mentioned are within the jurisdiction of the provinces, but, as I have previously said, it is the duty of the federal government to give leadership, direction and financial support. If the solution of these urgent national health problems is dependent on a successful dominion-provincial agreement among all the provinces, and if the declarations made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) regarding the bringing of the provinces together is to be accepted, then there seems little hope for improvement in the standards of health within our dominion. It is, therefore, an obligation on the part of the government to reconvene the dominion-provincial conference. There is no alibi for inaction by those responsible where the lives of Canadian citizens are at stake.

Mr. H. W. WINKLER (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my first words in my brief remarks in this debate are of congratulation to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne for their admirable speeches. Both those hon. gentlemen are members of this section of the house, and I must say there are certain advantages in sitting in this section. Chief among them would be the undoubted bond that exists between the members. There is, however, a disadvantage in sitting in this neighbourhood, and that is the difficulty of hearing, possibly not at this moment, but when the house is comparatively full. A recommendation has been made that loud speakers be installed in the house. With the exception of a few of us who might use them advantageously, I believe that loud speakers would not be of any benefit in this corner, but that hearing aids would be of more value. I would suggest that consideration be given to a hearing aid of the antique type such as the ancient earhorn which would be in keeping, sir, with the uniform which you and other officials of this house wear, reminiscent of a few centuries ago. This aura of dignity and antiquity would thereby be enhanced when we hoisted the earhorns in this corner of the house.

It has been a custom for new members to describe briefly their constituencies. While I doubt if that privilege is accorded to older members, nevertheless I should like to impose upon the generosity of the house to describe my constituency from one particular angle, namely, the racial background. The honour of being the first agricultural settlement in Manitoba does not go to the constituency of Lisgar. The first agricultural settlers in that province were the Selkirk settlers of 1812; but that settlement was not an agricultural success by reason of the fact that, first of all, the settlers were not trained agriculturists; in addition, there were many other hazards which I need not mention at the moment.

The settlement did not prosper as an agricultural settlement until comparatively recently. In fact, it did not grow to any extent until in the sixties when, by reason of the railroads which had moved westward through Chicago, transportation was diverted from the water routes which had been in use earlier, to the railroads of the United States. To reach them, the trails leading south of the international boundary and beyond were used. Along that trail a new settlement grew up.

Early in the seventies small settlements and people from Ontario chiefly, grew up along the Assiniboine and Boyne rivers in Manitoba; so that it was not until 1874 when the first settlements in Lisgar constituency took place. Those settlers were mostly from Ontario and they followed the wooded slopes of that area, the reason being that the Ontario settler had been trained to work in the woods and understood clearing land and converting it to the use of grains.

In 1873, however, the government of the day entered into a treaty with a certain sect of people in the kingdom of Russia. These people were known as Mennonites and were of the Dutch race. For centuries they had migrated, as many sects had done in Europe, and eventually found themselves in Russia as the guests of Queen Catherine, who wished them to be an example to the Russian peasants in the way of agriculture.

Those settlements had been in Russia for approximately a century when delegates came to Canada to try to arrange for a settlement in Manitoba. An order in council was passed permitting them to come, under certain conditions. They were granted freedom of religion and exemption from military service; and strangely, the order in council was kept secret. I say "strangely", but possibly it was not so strange, because the order in council permitted them to teach in their own schools in the way they saw fit.

However, in 1875 the Mennonites arrived and settled on the plains of Manitoba. They formed an area approximately forty miles long by twenty miles wide; and suddenly that portion of Manitoba bloomed like a garden. Never before had such an area in Canada been seen growing in wheat. It was a wonderful sight to those who saw it, and the news spread to eastern Canada.

In the following four years, and prior to 1880, practically all the arable portion of southern Manitoba was homesteaded, principally by settlers from Ontario. The point I should like to make is that at that time there was no experimental farm system, at least none engaged in experiments in dry farming. The Mennonites who came from Russia had learned how to carry on that type of farming and were quite experienced in it when they arrived in Manitoba; therefore their colony was a success from the beginning. When the Mennonites came to treat for settlement in Manitoba, did they ask about housing? No, they did not; they were quite capable of pioneering. They ploughed up the sods and stacked them one on top of the other, packed them firmly together, packed them around window and door frames, from the bush brought saplings which they tied together at the peak, and then thatched the roof. Sod houses last for only a few years, but for a short time they are warm and dry. In due course the sod houses were replaced by log houses, which lasted for many years; in fact, many are still standing. Last year I believe the last thatched roof in that district disappeared; they last for a long time.

That leads me to refer to the Ukrainian colony in Manitoba. Any Manitoban over thirty years of age recalls the Ukrainian immigration into that province. They were dumped in large numbers almost anywhere in Manitoba, and settled in the outlying districts. We recall those picturesque little huts built by twining saplings together and then plastering them with clay. Of course they had thatched roofs. Many of those houses lasted for twenty years; they were dry and serviceable.

This brings me to another migration which not only affected my constituency in Manitoba but extended practically all through western Canada. In 1924 certain Mennonites who were refugees from the Russian revolution, who had fled to Germany without their belongings, found themselves stranded in that country without any means of livelihood or employment. They sought the aid of Canada. The department of immigration was not equipped to take care of such a large group in one move; there were approximately ten thousand of them, and ultimately the matter was handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I should like to pay tribute to that corporation for the magnificent way in which it handled this movement. It brought these people to Canada without the payment of any money down. Last year the final dollar of the $2,000,000 they borrowed for their expenses was repaid.

This movement was perhaps concentrated more in Lisgar constituency than any other in Manitoba. I was personally acquainted with a great many of these people, and I must say that from every point of view they have shown themselves to be citizens of Canada equal to any Canadians, no matter how many generations their ancestors may have been in this country. I should like to say also that immigrants who have come from Europe have been doing most of the pioneering in this country for many years. These people are willing to do outdoor work and to exchange the sweat of years for the privileges of freedom. There is no doubt about the fact that Canadians generally, through education or for some other reason, are inclined to be diverted from outdoor life, and we must rely upon people who are willing to use their muscle and brawn to take the place of Canadians in certain occupations.

This brings me to another point, and I should like to say a word about Canadian industry today. What is the state of Canadian industry? My answer to that question would be that the war has given Canada a pattern for her industry, but primary industry definitely lags for want of workers. The need for workers in agriculture was never greater. On many farms old people, unable either to dispose of their property or to get suitable farm help, are attempting to carry on. As for domestic servants, I should say the need was never greater than it is today. In the pulp and paper industry the advance has been definitely delayed, I am told, by the lack of suitable axemen, men willing to go out and work hard during the time they are needed in that industry. At the same time the emigration of trained young men and women to the United States proceeds apace.

During this debate the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) referred to the immigration regulations laid down on May 29 of last year, and also the order in council of January 30 of this year. I wish to say at once that I have every faith in the government and its advisers, and believe that a permanent policy on immigration will be developed. But one can readily see that in a changing world a matter of this sort cannot be worked out overnight. We have to feel our way, and I have no doubt that is being done. However, I doubt if the present situation can be met by a long-term immigration policy. As I have endeavoured to point out briefly, we have an emergent situation in primary industry, and I believe the answer lies in the displaced persons camps of Germany and Austria rather than in the more settled portions of France, Belgium and Holland. Ultimately I may be shown to be wrong, but I doubt if immigration from the more settled districts will ever suffice to meet the requirements of Canada in this regard. Certainly I doubt if the workers required for primary industry will come from those stations. I believe we should declare that we have an emergency, and then go after the type of people we need.

As to screening, I know it takes time to develop a team, let us say, which can effectively screen immigrants, and certainly we know that immigrants must be screened at this time. But we are told that they have been fairly effectively screened already by UNRRA, as far as these displaced persons camps are concerned. From personal observation during the short time I was over there about a year ago, I would say that I saw a great many people who, in my opinion, would be ideal candidates for immigration to this country, and who indicated a keen desire to come here. Just three weeks ago the steamer Volendam left Holland for South America, carrying 2,000 Mennonites from Holland. These were displaced persons from Russia. They, together with the people in the displaced persons camps in Germany, are guilty of only one crime: they fled before the Russian advance, and would rather die than return to the country from which they came.

It has been said in the house that there are at least 800,000 displaced persons. That figure may be somewhat high; but we know that of that number there are about 8,000, or one per cent, of the Mennonite faith. I would, therefore, urge the government to treat this as an emergency situation and, by using every facility available, try to bring to this country as rapidly as possible those people who give every indication of being the type of citizens we want for our primary industries.

Before resuming my seat, I should like to make brief reference to a subject which has been mentioned in the house this evening, namely the application of the railroads for a thirty per cent increase in freight rates. I have been asked why the prairie provinces are so much opposed to the request by the railroads for this increase. My answer is that those provinces feel they are being discriminated against.

Someone may ask: Why do they feel that there is this discrimination? It amounts to this, that a thirty per cent general increase in freight rates is not actually what the railroads want. We know that water rates compete with the freight rates structure, and that the railways must meet those rates. Therefore a general increase can be general only with the exception of those places where water rates apply. In a nutshell that is why the prairie provinces are so much opposed to the proposed increase. As I said, water rates do not affect the prairie provinces in any degree. We have no waterways and, therefore, water rates cannot apply. But certainly if an increase is allowed it will be made to apply, regardless of those whom it may not affect.

For instance, inland waterways are waterways just as surely as are those along the seacoasts. Steel shipped from Hamilton to Vancouver is accorded the waterways rate, and if a railway carries that steel by rail it must meet the water rate. I would ask on what basis the railways association fixes its rates. It is generally known that in the past it has fixed the rates, and any changes which have become statutory or otherwise have been negotiated at a later time.

Once again I shall refer to my constituency to give an example of what I have in mind. Out there we have the Pembina Mountain Clays Company Limited. This was a strategic wartime industry; in fact, it was on that basis that it got its start. It is engaged in the mining of clay, the greater proportion of which is talc. It may be known that talc is a material which is highly heat-resistant. It is found in my constituency, because some 70,000,000 years ago, when most of that area was under water, volcanic ash was deposited on the water, settled in the form of silt and later became rock. It is this material which is mined today and which, after purification, is shipped to Sarnia, at which point the Imperial Oil Company, the chief customer, uses it in connection with the purification of oil.

There is only one other industry like it on the North American continent, and it is situated near Jackson, Mississippi. In other words, that is the only competing company. The freight rate from Jackson, Mississippi, to Sarnia was, and for many years has been, $9.46 a ton, on the United States railways. When the Canadian industry started operations during the war the Canadian freight rates association fixed the rate from Morden, Manitoba, to Sarnia at $16.60 a ton, or almost double that charged by the United States railways for a similar distance. Three years later, in 1944, after this situation had been aired in the House of Commons by an hon. member whose name I shall not mention, when speaking on the budget debate, without being asked to do so the freight rates association reduced the rate to $12 a ton.

The company still felt, however, that they were being discriminated against and made further representations, with the result that on October 1 of last year the rate was reduced to $9 a ton. It will be readily seen that, at a time when transportation costs were increasing, in this particular instance the rate was going down, and that, indeed, it came down from $16.60 in 1941 to $9 in 1946. If the basis used by the railways is similar on most occasions, one is led to suspect that the basis on which they arrange these rates is that of charging what the traffic will bear. We claim, therefore, that their basis is open to question.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I have said all I wish to say at this time.

(Translation):

Mr. GEORGES H. HEON (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Am I to understand that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Cloutier) will not speak tonight? He is a graduate of the best college in the province of Quebec, Victoriaville College, whose former students include the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Bertrand), the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Dionne), the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Dubois) and the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Caouette).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I see no privilege in that. I would therefore ask the hon. member to state his question of privilege as briefly as possible.

Mr. HEON: I merely wished to inquire if we should have the pleasure of hearing tonight from the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska. I also wished to extol the merits of Victoriaville College.

An hon. MEMBER: We shall hear from him later.

(Text):

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I have received many requests and resolutions from my constituents in Manitoba asking me to protest against any increase in freight rates. Some of these people may not realize that this is a matter which is not before parliament, that the matter is before the railway board, but still they protest. The people appearing before that board are fortified with a mass of able legal talent, but should the matter ever become an issue in this House of Commons I can assure all these people that I will advance the strongest arguments I am capable of in opposition to any increase in freight rates at this time. That would add to our cost of production and cost of marketing, a matter which would affect the people of western Canada to a greater degree than those in any other part of this dominion.

I should like to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair) with respect to medical research, and more especially that dealing with cancer. Some 14,000 people died in Canada last year as a result of cancer and this death rate was exceeded only by the deaths from heart ailments. One in every eight deaths is a heavy rate. The King George fund of some $500,000 was raised by the school children of this country. The medical people have been doing good work with this fund at their disposal. I understand that Ontario is to contribute $1,000,000 this year for this work. There is a tremendous field open in cancer research to try to find a cure for this terrible scourge. The dominion should assist financially in this matter because it is most important and worth undertaking.

Mention was made also of tuberculosis, from which 5,000 people died in Canada last year. Tuberculosis is the seventh cause of deaths in Canada and is the greatest killer of Canada's younger age group. Here again I should like to associate myself with the hon. member for Lanark, who said that all immigrants coming into this country should receive a thorough medical examination, including chest X-ray and blood tests. We had a glaring example of this when some 2,900 immigrants entered this country from Europe. Just the other day I noticed a report in the paper concerning a Department of Veterans Affairs hospital in my province, and it was stated that in one of the wings of that hospital there were ninety-eight of those Polish immigrants suffering from tuberculosis. This disease is very contagious and we cannot be too careful about seeing that these people have a thorough medical examination.

Mention was made of tuberculosis and Bang's disease in dairy cattle. When children drink milk from these cattle they may suffer from tuberculosis. I think all milk fed to little children should be pasteurized. Because of these diseases, many states in the great nation to the south will not permit the importation of cattle from Canada unless they are from purebred accredited herds. We have not had an efficient animal health inspection service and an improvement in this regard should be fostered by the Department of Agriculture.

As was pointed out, there is a great lack of hospital facilities in Canada and a great shortage of trained nurses for home and institutional nursing. Greater asistance is needed in this connection and there should be more dominion-provincial cooperation. The dominion government should provide more financial assistance for certain types of medical research and for hospitalization throughout this land.

What I really wish to speak about at this time is a matter that concerns veterans, and I refer particularly to veterans housing. It must be realized that it is only on this debate, on the budget, or possibly on the departmental estimates, that we are likely to be able to discuss these matters. I understand that no committee is to be set up to deal with veterans affairs generally. The committee last year did a good job and brought forth many fine acts, but there is still a great deal of criticism of the administration.

I receive many complaints from young veterans who want to settle on the land. Some of them were taking special agricultural courses last summer. Then a change was made in the regulations and some of these chaps quit their courses. Some of them have relatives who will supply land upon which they could settle and they want to take advantage of the new legislation in order to get a loan with which to buy farm equipment and machinery. They are finding this difficult to obtain because the local officials are turning them down. I hope the departmental officials will be able to straighten this matter out before these men are ready to start their spring operations.

Then there are other chaps who have bought their own land and who are not asking for any financial assistance. These men cannot obtain priorities for the purchase of tractors and farm machinery, despite the fact that they are ready to pay for these things themselves. I realize that equipment is scarce, but I think the board could give further consideration to the men in this category. They are deserving of more assistance.

Veterans housing constitutes a pretty thorny problem all across Canada. I am referring particularly to the small holdings. There is one project in Manitoba known as the Charleswood, and I have had occasion to visit this many times during 1946. I have some personal friends living in houses on this project. The construction of some ninety homes was commenced, I think in 1945, and a good deal of dissatisfaction has been expressed by a number of these settlers since they have occupied their houses. I brought this matter before the committee on veterans affairs which sat last session when I returned from a trip out west during the month of June.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Are those Veterans Land Act houses?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Yes, small holdings. When I was out there later in the season I had a contractor who is a personal friend of mine in Winnipeg accompany me. He made a thorough survey of one of these homes which the government had built and for which they are asking $7,300. After measuring the housing unit and listing everything which went into its construction, he assured me that with better material and better workmanship—I must confess that it is not very good workmanship or good materials that are used in most of these housing units—he could have built a like unit in 1939 for $3,145. The difference between $3,145 and $7,300 is $4,155, or approximately 130 per cent inflation since 1939.

These units were built on a cost-plus basis under government supervision. I have inspected these units and discussed the situation with their inhabitants and I think they offer a fair value of socialism. They were built for the government under government supervision on a cost-plus basis, and I am sure that is the way in which any socialist government would operate.

Mr. KNOWLES: Since when did you start writing the doctrines of socialism?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am not writing it, but I have studied the doctrine of several of these European countries for the past few years.

Mr. JACKMAN: He who hath eyes to see.

[Mr. J. A. Ross.]

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Remember, according to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) who was Minister of Finance during the war years, in a statement which he made on February 28 last, lumber produced in Canada selling at a ceiling of $26 per 1,000 feet in Canada is exported at the prevailing price of $70 per 1,000 feet. We had an interesting set of figures on the construction of these houses at this time. I understand that an order in council was passed in May, 1946, making provision for $1,000,000 to be used by the Department of Veterans Affairs, for the adjustment of the cost of these houses, or whatever adjustments may be necessary, but that as of February 27 last nothing of a satisfactory nature has been accomplished in respect of a settlement with many of the occupants of the houses in the Charleswood area, and that information is up to within the last few days.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) also visited there during the election campaign.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Did he?

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I will confess that I was there myself during the election campaign and was there for many months before any candidate was nominated or anything said about an election, and I have been there several times since. I have gone right through the whole trend of events.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Minister of Agriculture promised to come back to Ottawa and have something done about the matter.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Did he?

Mr. JACKMAN: Where were you?

Mr. KNOWLES: In Winnipeg.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): According to the Canadian building authorities claim—and it has never been repudiated by anybody—no person can afford to purchase or agree to purchase a house valued at over twice his or her annual income. I think that is generally recognized across the country. The average veteran in Canada today does not receive an annual income of over $1,500. I believe that can be admitted. Therefore one of these five-room housing units at $7,300 is altogether too costly to be charged to the average veteran during these times. I believe it is recognized that things are pretty much at a peak now. If we are to have a recession and this is the peak of the average income of the veterans they will have great difficulty in fulfilling their obligation.

I have quite a sheaf of correspondence on this Charleswood housing project, apart from what I have discovered at first hand myself. I do not intend to go into it all, but it does point out something about the values of the construction of these houses and the difficulties they are now having. They do raise one pertinent point, namely, that several officials are putting the pressure on these people to have them sign these agreements at these amounts of $7.300. If they do not do so they will be asked to vacate on May 1, and that is less than two months from today. The people are now living in the houses on a rental basis of $30 a month. They are told by these officials that if there is any difficulty about having them sign these agreements or vacate, the rent will probably be raised considerably per month to the present occupants of the house.

I know, from my own personal inspection of these places, that some of them are most unsatisfactory in the matter of construction. When I was there, some of the houses had a great deal of water in the cellar. The basements had heaved and the centre was cracked wide open, throwing the foundations out of line. Some of the buildings were really in bad shape at that time. In fairness to the department, I must say that a great deal of repair work has been done to houses in that unit, but many of the people are still unsatisfied. They think there should be a 100 per. cent repair job done on all these houses before they are asked to sign an agreement to purchase the property. They are rightly entitled to that. They go farther, and a number of them ask for an independent royal commission. They claim that if such an independent commission were set up it should hold sittings in the larger centres throughout Canada. They mention, in particular, Winnipeg, because if the sittings were held there these people could get their own counsel and appear before such a body in Winnipeg. The same thing would apply to all centres across Canada where difficulties arise.

As a member of the committee on veterans affairs, I have heard of cases of a like nature in almost every province. To bear that out, I remember last summer I asked the minister a question, and probably some of these matters are still under investigation. In their complaints, many of these people point out that at this time the septic tanks have frozen up and the water has backed up into the basement. One can understand that this would cause an embarrassing situation to the people occupying these houses. They say that there is a great deal of danger from disease in the spring when warmer weather sets in.

As I have said, the cement floors in the basements have cracked and heaved from the frost and the water. There is a lot of water in that area at times, and the places are in an unsatisfactory condition. The carpentry work in many cases was very poor. Some of these chaps told me about their own relatives working on the job, chaps who had never done any carpentry work in their lives before. They had come in from the farms and were paid carpenter's wages, working on the construction on a cost-plus basis. Not knowing anything about the job, they did not hustle very much. They were greenhorns on the job.

I remember last summer that a resolution came before the veterans affairs committee, and I believe it was agreed to because a question was asked the minister respecting the resolution on August 5. The committee recommended that if the outside cost of the veteran's house had gone over $6,000 the government should subsidize the excess up to at least 23⅓ per cent, and the minister said that the matter was still under consideration and would probably be dealt with at the next session. By that, he meant this session of parliament.

On motion of Mr. Ross (Souris) the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, March 5, 1947

The house met at three o'clock.

REDISTRIBUTION

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) presented the first report of the special committee appointed to consider Bill No. 18, to readjust representation in the House of Commons, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TAXATION AGREEMENTS

INQUIRY AS TO COST OF CARRYING OUT OFFERS MADE TO THE PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance, notice of which I have given him. I should like to ask him how much the estimates would have been increased beyond two billions if they had included the amounts necessary to carry out the various offers which we understand he has made to the provinces.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I received notice of the question just before coming into the house, and I shall have to make the necessary calculations and give the answer to my hon. friend later. The question is of course one that should be put on the order paper.

Mr. GRAYDON: Thanks for the advice.

Mr. ABBOTT: Then take it.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUNNYBROOK HOSPITAL—AVAILABILITY OF ACCOMMODATION FOR PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Why are many beds allowed to remain empty at Sunnybrook hospital at the present time while many military patients under Department of Veterans Affairs care are accommodated at overcrowded civilian hospitals?

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I received notice of the question just as I was entering the house and have ascertained since, from the director of treatment services, that there are 200 vacant beds now in Sunnybrook hospital. The difficulty has been in obtaining the necessary staff but that has been overcome and the transfer will be made at the earliest possible time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POLISH VETERANS ENGAGED IN AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): May I ask the Minister of Labour the following questions. First, is the minister informed of a reported meeting recently held by former members of the Polish corps now employed on farms in Canada, at which demands were made for release from the terms of the agreement under which these persons entered Canada? Secondly, is it the government's intention to insist upon the terms of this agreement being kept?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I have knowledge of a meeting having been held by the persons referred to by my hon. friend. As to what they discussed, I know nothing. I did arrange for an officer of the employment service of the Department of Labour to attend that meeting. Owing to weather conditions, however, the report has not yet reached me. As to the second question, my hon. friend is well aware that any announcement of government policy will be made at the proper time.

MR. CRUICKSHANK—OTTAWA "JOURNAL" REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS OF MARCH 3

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): I rise to a question of privilege. The Ottawa Journal took care to criticize me for suggesting that the press gallery could not hear in this house, and I wish to refer to an article appearing in that newspaper on Wednesday, March 5. It is headed:

"We were left out," not "kicked out," St. Laurent said.

As a veteran member of this house I desire to make it perfectly clear that if there had been amplifiers in this house the press gallery would have heard that the statement was, "We were left out." The Canadian army has never been and never will be kicked out of any place in the world.

Mr. GRAYDON: You and the minister had better talk that over.

MR. POULIOT—PRESS REFERENCE TO MEMBER FOR TÉMISCOUATA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege in reference to a statement that was made a week ago and a question that was asked of the cabinet ministers when each one was challenged to rise or to raise his hand if any one of them had said to a newspaper man that I was the implacable enemy of the government. I have two hundred witnesses that no one rose or raised his hand. Notwithstanding that, the correspondent of the Gazette has made this observation, "Several cabinet ministers did not seem to be convinced." I will answer that young man, who is not a mind reader, by a citation from Oliver Goldsmith:

> But alas! your good worships, how could they be wiser,
> When both have been spoil'd in to-day's Advertiser?

FREIGHT RATES

INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION FOR INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. TUCKER (Rosthern): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The suggestion was made by the premier of Saskatchewan in the legislature there that the application by the Canadian National Railways for an increase in freight rates had the approval of the government. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if the government was consulted about the Canadian National Railways' application for an increase in freight rates. If so, did it have their approval or consent in any way, shape or form?

Mr. GRAYDON: Order paper.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): The application for an increase in freight rates was not made by the Canadian National Railways. It was made by the Railway Association of Canada on behalf of the railways. The government had no knowledge of the application, did not authorize it, and, I am in a position to say to my hon. friend, was not consulted in the application made by the railway association to the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. GRAYDON: But is the government against it?

An hon. MEMBER: That is another question.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Let my hon. friend ask the question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR TEST OF ACOUSTICAL PROPERTIES OF CHAMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I should have given him notice, but as he is a man of resources, he does not need it.

An hon. MEMBER: What kind of resources?

Mr. McIVOR: We have received a report from the Speaker of this house saying that he has made extensive research into the acoustics of different buildings. I would ask the minister now when it will be possible to have a test made in this house.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I wish to thank the hon. member for his kind words. In this case I have not many resources. I understand a report has been made by the Speaker and that the conclusions arrived at therein do not favour the installation of a loud speaker system at the present time. I should not like to override His Honour the Speaker in this matter.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We cannot hear.

Mr. GRAYDON: There is too much noise on the other side now.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On the other side there always is.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, last evening at adjournment I had set forth a series of complaints by veteran settlers of the Charleswood area in Manitoba with respect to the type of construction and the costs proposed to be charged to the occupants of those houses under the Veterans' Land Act. This project happens to be a few miles west of the city of Winnipeg. In fact it is located in the eastern end of the constituency of Portage la Prairie. I believe the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) in a public statement last October suggested an immediate revaluation of the Charleswood properties and a reduction of the purchase price to a fair level. I understand that since then he has discussed the matter with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie). Prior to these last complaints we received the hon. member had spoken on this address in reply to the speech from the throne and therefore probably would not have another opportunity to discuss the matter in this house until either the budget is brought down or the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs are considered.

I think the condition which I have set forth concerning the Charleswood project exists in like projects in almost every province. On July 28, 1946, the Vancouver Province pointed out that the government, through the Veterans' Land Act, asks $7,636 for veterans' houses in British Columbia, and they suggested a complete investigation of the entire business.

On July 5 last, I asked the following question in this chamber:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, based upon a report in this morning's press to the effect that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Montreal have exposed an alleged black market of homes built for war veterans in a government-approved Veterans Land Act project at Boucherville, across the St. Lawrence river and east of the city of Montreal. The article is headed, "Say Veterans Charged $4,000 extra for Homes." Will the minister say what foundation there is for this report?

That report said that veterans were being asked as high as $11,000 for those houses and that contractors had sold them for that amount. That was all published in the press report. The minister's reply at that time was:

I saw the report in the press this morning. May I inform the hon. member that I received notice in January before I went west to Winnipeg, and in five minutes I directed the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to have investigations made immediately. Their final report has not yet come in. If any impropriety is discovered, we shall promptly rest the matter with the courts for final disposition.

Mr. Ross (Souris): But the minister has had reports on it?

Mr. Mackenzie: We have had suggestions of impropriety, but no final report.

Then about six weeks later, in August, I asked the same question in this chamber; and the answer I received from the then minister of justice, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent), was to the effect that an investigation was being made and that officials of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were asking for legal counsel. I do not know where the matter stands now, but after all these months, surely a report should now be given to this house at this time.

Coming back to the province of Ontario, I understand that in the Windsor area some forty houses of the Oliver farm project are flooded to the extent that it is impossible to keep fires in the heating units in many of them. Also, I understand that some reversal of policy is being effected in that area and that one of the officials there who has been in charge of repairs has been let out of the department. Later on, when the minister comes to give an account of the housing situation, I trust he will be able to explain this matter, among others.

I am also told that a housing unit in the Sarnia area now sells for $400 and upwards more than the same type of housing unit in the Windsor area. Speaking in this chamber a month ago yesterday the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy), in whose riding the Sarnia project is located, said, at page 109 of Hansard of that date:

Therefore, in view of the excessive and outrageous prices asked by the government for these veterans' homes and in view of the manner of their construction, I respectfully ask that a royal commission be appointed to make a full inquiry . . .

Therefore on behalf of the taxpayer and the veterans who were fortunate enough to return . . . I demand that a royal commission be appointed to inquire into all contracts for purchases of land acquired for small holdings under the Veterans Land Act and contracts for the construction of roads, the installation of water mains and other costs involved in the purchase price of these homes.

Within the last few days a member of the Manitoba legislature, Lieutenant Colonel Gordon Churchill, who had a very good record in the front line during the last great war, speaking of veterans' housing said this was Canada's second great betrayal; the first was the lack of proper reinforcements by Canada at crucial times during the battles of the recent war. That is the statement by the officer commanding a unit, who saw action himself and was elected by his comrades as a soldier representative in the Manitoba legislature.

I now repeat the request of the hon. member for Lambton West for a royal commission to make an impartial investigation, and following that a recommendation to this parliament, upon the property and construction involved in veterans' housing under the Veterans Land Act throughout Canada. I would also respectfully suggest that such a commission should hold sittings in the principal centres of each province across Canada. This would be an important factor in reducing wasteful public expenditure at this time in the interests of the taxpayers, and in obtaining a better deal for the ex-service men of the last war.

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with the kind permission of the house and the indulgence of my hon. friend I shall say a word or two at once in reply to the statement just made by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross).

I believe all hon. members of this house should recall how the projects under the V.L.A. in regard to housing were formulated. In the first place, in 1942 we had appointed an excellent committee of this house, of which I believe my hon. friend was a member, which made recommendations in reference to the land act. One feature of those recommendations was that there should be a small holdings section in the act. If we recall what took place on that occasion we will remember that many of those present, including many hon. members here today, were opposed to the idea of having housing under what was really supposed to be a land act as such. That objection was voiced by the hon. member for Souris, the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell) and others at that time.

We had the housing crisis of 1944, the year I took over this department. Hon. Mr. Crerar was in charge of the department previously, and it was the recommendation of the committee of 1942 that I should take over the matter. There is still a committee out in the field inspecting these projects throughout Canada, but perhaps the house will forgive me if I make certain statements though the final reports of that committee are not before me at the moment. The subject has been mentioned during the course of this and other debates, and I think it fitting that I should say a word or two on it at this time.

This matter involves the construction of 2,600 houses on small holdings under the Veterans Land Act. There have been representations and some misrepresentations, possibly not intentional, both in the house and outside. I am not going to engage in any controversy whatever on the subject. I have had these projects carefully inspected during the past few weeks; and I am able to assure the house that while there have been numerous instances of faulty workmanship, as is known to every hon. member who is familiar with any of the projects, and in some cases faulty materials have been employed, all the defects are of a kind that can be made good, and at the moment they are being made good as quickly as that can be done. Last evening the hon. member for Souris mentioned a one hundred per cent repair job. This is to be effected in every case where it is required throughout the country.

Mr. MERRITT: If the minister will permit a question, is the repair job being done at the public expense or at the expense of the contractor who did the faulty work?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The repair work will be done at the expense of the Canadian people. The total cost will probably amount to some five or six or seven hundred thousand dollars, not a cent of which will be charged as an expense against the settlers on these small holdings.

Mr. GREEN: What about the contractor?

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is a legal question which has received and is still receiving consideration, as to the obligations of a contractor under the contract. Last evening my hon. friend referred to a cost plus contract, to which I shall refer in a moment. These, however, were not cost plus contracts; they were management fee contracts, and the average price or fee or reward to the contractor was in the neighbourhood of $200 per house.

Mr. MacINNIS: The good old free enterprise system, was it not.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Well, it was not very much by way of reward. I am assured by the officers I sent around to visit these centres—and we must look at this side of it as well as the other side—that the men and women for the most part are happy and contented, taking pride in their homes and environment. On the other hand, with complete frankness I have to acknowledge some defects. Had we not been so eager, to the point of hastiness, as a result of the need for shelter, possibly we could have done a better job. But at that time, in the winter of 1944 and in 1945, we were confronted with an absolute housing emergency in Canada. An interdepartmental committee was formed here, with Doctor Clark of the Department of Finance as chairman, on which most of the departments were represented. The director of land settlement was asked at that time if he could undertake the construction of some two to three thousand houses in Canada. He said he thought he could, because as my hon. friends will recall, material had been previously contracted for, for that very purpose. That took place before I came into the department, I think in 1944.

In a time of great difficulty, Mr. Speaker, and with the means at our disposal we have provided 2,600 homes for veterans and their families. A land settlement organization created for the purpose of reestablishing veterans in agricultural production was, through the inexorable demands of the housing shortage, thrown into the large scale construction of houses on suburban subdivisions. The plans and specifications were prepared by architects selected by the architectural institutes of the various provinces. The work was supervised by engineers and inspectors selected through the usual competitive procedure of the civil service commission. In other words all the members of the inspection staff were appointed by the civil service commission.

The contractors were among the most outstanding firms in Canada. They were financially sound and of the highest reputation. The programme was undertaken in a time of extreme difficulty. It was begun before the end of the war, and was carried out during the economic disturbances of the transitional and reconstruction period. The ultimate experience was fraught with difficulties. It was neither very much better nor very much worse than that which has been encountered by others who have engaged in large-scale construction projects. As a matter of fact we hear the same complaints from private construction projects as well as from those conducted under government auspices.

The hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) spoke in the house. He knows the contracting firm which did the work, because it is in his neighbourhood, and he knows of the high reputation of that firm. The hon. member has listed before the house a whole series of defects in the houses built in his constituency. As a result of inspection which has just been completed, it is recognized that there have been many instances of inexperienced workmanship. Just take your minds back to the time, and you will recall what conditions were in this dominion—and let it be understood that I am not blaming labour in any way for that. But there was a scarcity of materials—indeed a grave scarcity of materials—and in many instances a scarcity of experienced workmanship.

We were unfortunate enough in three projects, through no fault of our own, to have used plaster made from a cargo of lime which was subsequently condemned, and which was used by others as well as by ourselves. Because of a ruling prohibiting the use of certain materials for flooring, certain houses were built with quite unsuitable flooring material. The result was an imperfect job. We propose to replace the soft wood with hard wood.

Disturbances of the earth due to multiple excavations have resulted in drainage problems which probably should have been foreseen and more thoroughly provided for. These facts exist; but I am glad to be able to assure the house that all of these conditions are remediable, and that, with very few exceptions, at relatively small cost.

Furthermore I have consulted with my colleagues and I am able to assure the house that these defects will be made and are at the present time being made good. Complaints and protests which have reached the public press are inevitable in connection with a project which has been carried out under government auspices. They reflect the pride which young couples take in the construction of their first homes.

I am free to confess that assurances of correcting all defects should have been more explicitly given by those who were in close contact with local developments. This work of repairing defects is of course under way and will be accelerated under the best available direction. Let me make it quite clear that the defects, with a comparatively small number of exceptions, are the inevitable result of a shortage of skilled workmen and properly seasoned materials. They are not defects which when repaired will in any way affect the true value of the house.

Mr. LOCKHART: Were not all those jobs throughout the country in charge of selected superintendents who were supposed to know this work?

[Mr. Mackenzie.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes; but my point was this, that the field was limited, and these superintendents were not selected by our department. The inspection staff all the way down the line was as a result of appointments under the civil service commission.

When these defects have been made good —and they will be made good—I have no hesitation in saying that veterans who buy these homes will have received for their investments a type of home which they cannot duplicate under present conditions at comparable costs.

The down payments are limited to $600. There is a conditional grant—and this is what my hon. friends seem to forget, when they refer to a price of $7,300 to the veterans, as was mentioned by the hon. member who spoke last night. There is no such thing as a cost to the householder of $7,300. I will give the actual costs in a minute or two. As I said, the down payments are limited to $600. Then there is a conditional grant which, in all but a few cases in respect of houses built at exceptionally low costs, reaches the sum of $1,400. That is the conditional grant. Monthly payments which are payable by these householders range from $16 or $17 a month to $28 a month.

Provided we assume that these houses are to be placed in first-class condition, where can they get accommodation today in Canada for a monthly rental which ranges from $16 or $17 to $28 per month? I say you cannot rent comparable accommodation at those prices at the present time.

Mr. GREEN: Was it not the intention that the total cost of these houses should not be over $6,000?

Mr. MACKENZIE: It was the intention at the start that the cost of the houses would be far less than that.

Mr. GREEN: I said not over that.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Quite correct. But there was never any guarantee given. I believe it was the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) who pointed out what had happened, when he was quoting from some propaganda put out some years ago; the monthly rental value was given as $13.82, if my memory serves me correctly, on a house estimated to cost something over $3,000 under the National Housing Act.

As my hon. friend knows, the first house we built under this project, near Vancouver, cost about $4,000. In every case now we have done two or three things which I shall mention in a moment or two. In the first place this conditional grant of $1,400 is a rebate of some twenty per cent upon the highly priced houses.

Mr. GREEN: But it was always the intention that there would be a rebate, was it not?

Mr. MACKENZIE: It was not the intention that there would be any rebate beyond the $1,400.

Mr. GREEN: That is under the act.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That was a conditional grant to enable the settler to have a better opportunity to settle in these new homes. It enabled him after ten years to have an equity in the house, and then over a period of twenty-five years at three and a half per cent at payments running from $16 or $17 to $28 a month, he can own the house.

That is the actual economic situation. True, there have been cases where costs have been high to the director, and that was in many instances because of the cost of such services outside the actual house itself as roads, sewerage and drainage. These amenities would be charged to the total cost to the director. But as against that there was the conditional allowance of $1,400.

Mr. GREEN: Notwithstanding that, the original intention was that the total cost would not be over $6,000 on any residence; is that not true?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The intention was at the start that the cost would not go over $6,000. In a general way it was expected to range from $4,800 to $6,000, but we encountered rising values and rising costs. It is the same in private construction today. I invite anyone in the house to try to build the same house today, and to compare the cost of that house with the cost in 1939.

I asked Mr. Mansur of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—well, I did not ask him, but one of my friends did—what was the total increase in cost as between 1939 and now. I think his figure ran up to 73 per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was 130 per cent in the one I mentioned.

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend used a higher figure.

Mr. MURPHY: Does not the veteran who accepts the $1,400 waive gratuities which he would otherwise get?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No. That is a good point; I am glad my hon. friend asked that question. I think what I am going to say now will make my hon. friend realize—he probably does already—the real service that is rendered by the state in these cases. For instance, take the service men who built or bought within urban areas, and there are 40,000 of them. What they got was their reestablishment credit—and this averages $445—and the consequent obligations throughout the years. That is what they got as against the amount given by the state in these 2,600 cases. In this case there is a down payment of $600 and additional allowances up to $1,400. No matter how high the cost may be, the additional allowance is not interfered with.

Mr. MURPHY: When a man accepts the $1,400 referred to, does he not waive some credits?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind hon. members that we are not in committee, and it is against the rules to ask questions of the hon. member who has the floor, without first asking his permission.

Mr. MURPHY: I wonder if I could ask the minister this question, through you, sir, to clear up the point. If the veteran accepts the $1,400 does he not waive other credits or gratuities that he would otherwise be entitled to?

Mr. TUCKER: It is in the Veterans Land Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Grants under the land act.

Mr. MURPHY: That is what I mean.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Certainly. Let me give the rest of the picture. The Veterans Land Act administration has already established some 22,000 veterans. More than 11,000 have been settled in full time farming; approximately 9,500 have been established on small holdings, and these subdivision projects which I have been discussing represent only 2,600 of those 9,500 holdings. The financial assistance under the whole act amounts to more than $111 million. The cost of the 2,663 subdivisions will be in the neighbourhood of $20 million. I mention these facts because I think it is only fair to the director and his staff that the difficulties which have been encountered in house construction should be viewed in their proper perspective in relation to the magnitude of the other operations which have been carried on simultaneously and successfully.

I do not propose at this time to try the patience of the house with a complete description, because I shall probably have further information from the committee of three gentlemen which is inspecting these projects.

Requests have been made here today, and previously, for a royal commission. But what would be the use of a royal commission at this time? In the first place you would have to wait for a year before these men's houses were fixed up. We hope with any reasonable chance of success to have it done in two or three months.

I come now to another question, and the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) will know about this because this has reference to one of the projects in which he is interested. I refer to the matter of drainage and sewage. It is the intention immediately to get the best experts on drainage to look at these particular projects, because we realize that drainage is of paramount importance.

Mr. PEARKES: Could not that have been done before the buildings were started?

Mr. MACKENZIE: That goes back to the basic conception of the act. The basic conception of small holdings under the Veterans Land Act was that they were to be semi-rural and semi-urban. In other words, part of the man's earnings were supposed to come from an industrial occupation and part from the tilling of some land. As a result, whether it was right or wrong—we discussed it in the committee last year—agricultural land was used largely for these projects and this land was thoroughly unsuited for good drainage. That is one of the troubles we have had on the island.

We will have all the necessary information in two weeks and we will make corrections as fast as the right materials can be obtained in sufficient quantities. I have also learned to my great regret that the organization which was charged with this building project was not well suited for the purpose. I am referring to the inspectional division of the land settlement act. I reached that conclusion one year ago and we put a stop then to the initiation of any further subdivision projects, although certain houses were being constructed in certain areas. A sharp line of division was drawn between the housing activities under the direction of my colleague, the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe), and the settlement work of the Veterans Land Act.

The Veterans Land Act is not the only method of assisting veterans to obtain houses. Thirty-nine thousand veterans have acquired houses, as I said, by using their reestablishment credits, and more than $17 million have been advanced for this purpose. What is called for at this stage is the assurance which I have endeavoured to give in this brief statement, that the veterans who buy Veterans Land Act houses shall receive fair and just treatment and that such defects as have been found shall be made good so that young veterans and their families may start off in life with comfortable houses of which they can justly be proud.

I want to give the house a few figures. The cost of the first 1,908 houses built under the scheme can be broken down as follows:

127 cost less than $4,500.
247 cost between $4,500 and $5,000.
295 cost between $5,000 and $5,500.
533 cost between $5,500 and $6,000.
383 cost between $6,000 and $6,500.
323 cost more than $6,500.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Could the minister state where those are located?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I could not do that offhand, but I could easily find out for my hon. friend. In other words, 84 per cent of the houses were built for less than $6,500; the remaining 16 per cent cost more than that amount. As I said before, the veteran must pay ten per cent of that figure, and where the cost exceeds $6,000, the down payment is limited to $600. Where the director's cost is $6,000, there is a conditional grant to the veteran of $1,400. Where a director's total cost is more than $6,000, the grant is maintained at $1,400. Where the director's total cost is $5,500, the total cost to the veteran is $4,216.67 with monthly instalments of $18.24. Where the director's total cost is $6,000, the total cost to the veteran is $4,600 with monthly instalments of $19.82. Where the director's total cost is $6,500, the total cost to the veteran is $5,100 with monthly instalments of $22.39. Where the director's total cost is $7,000, the total cost to the veteran is $5,600 with monthly instalments of $24.87.

Mr. GREEN: Does that cost to the veteran include interest?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes; in the monthly payments. Sarnia and Windsor have been mentioned quite often, and I got the figures of the lowest and highest cost houses at both these points. The price to the veteran of the lowest cost house at Sarnia was $6,055 with monthly payments of $27.14. The price of the lowest cost house at Windsor was $5,863 with monthly payments of $26.18. The highest cost of a veteran's contract at Sarnia was $6,491 with monthly payments of $29.27, and the highest price at Windsor was $6,235 with monthly payments of $28.02. The cost to the veteran as far as Sarnia is concerned involves the adjustments that were made as a result of the writing off that was done there last year.

Mr. MURPHY: Do the figures given by the minister for Windsor and Sarnia include the $1,400 which was deducted from their contracts? That $1,400 includes the veteran's credit or gratuity.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The figures quoted were after deduction of the $1,400. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) spoke last night of veterans being called upon to pay $7,300. Again I want to give the facts in regard to the project he mentioned in the neighbourhood of Winnipeg. The facts are that the veterans pay $600 down. For the larger house they pay an additional $5,256 in monthly instalments. For the smaller house they pay an additional $4,709 in monthly instalments. The actual cost to the veteran is not $7,300, but $5,856 for the larger house and $5,309 for the smaller house.

The other question raised was the possibility of a further reduction in the capital cost. I feel reluctant to speak on this before receiving the report of the committee of inspection dealing with the physical nature of the project.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What are the names of the three men on the committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The deputy minister, Mr. Walter S. Woods; the director, Mr. Murchison, and Colonel Parish, M.E.I.C., of Montreal, a reputable engineer in every way.

Mr. FLEMING: Is it the intention that that committee shall inspect all the houses?

Mr. MACKENZIE: That would take exactly one year and I think it will be agreed that our first duty is to put these houses in first-class shape as soon as possible.

Mr. BROOKS: May I ask—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. These continuous interruptions are absolutely out of order and I would ask hon. members to abide by the rules.

Mr. CASSELMAN: So is the minister's conduct out of order. He is not on the speakers' list at all.

Mr. GARDINER: That would be very nice if you could get away with it.

Mr. CASSELMAN: He is getting away with it.

Mr. GARDINER: I mean getting away with charges and no answer being made.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I have been as frank and explicit as I could be in regard to the two features of this housing situation: first, defects in construction and the necessity for replacing some of the material that was used, such as soft wood and other materials which were used in these houses which were built in a hurry. That work will be done during this summer. As to drainage there may be engineering features which will make the completion of that work come a little later.

Mr. BROOKS: Are the same contractors being used to make the repairs?

Mr. MACKENZIE: In one or two cases, but generally speaking, no. We are trying to get experts who are entirely outside the old organization and I am receiving every assistance from the Minister of Reconstruction. The two fundamental features that we are dealing with are, first, the repairing and reconditioning and putting into first-class shape of all these houses wherever they are throughout Canada, and seeing that wet basements and conditions of dampness caused by faulty drainage or otherwise are corrected as soon as possible. The second is the request which has come from various sources for a royal commission. The only feature with which a royal commission could deal would be in my judgment, the question of a cut in the capital cost. If we were to ask a royal commission to examine the physical condition of these houses it would simply be delaying their completion and delaying the furnishing of the amenities to which these settlers are entitled.

I have been very frank with the house, as I should be, in dealing with this whole situation. I have held nothing back. I have told the house that the construction work was hurried, and, further, that it was impeded by a lack of materials. We all know what the material situation was in Canada and the difficulties that were experienced in getting housing outside altogether of this project. The faults are being corrected at once and we believe that these houses, when completed, will be a social pleasure to the occupants.

This is my final word. Let us not forget that our main interest in this thing, the main interest of every one of us in the house, is not the pointing out of faults but going along together along a trail of twenty-five years with the servicemen, and I invite the cooperation of every party in the house in doing all we can to ensure that our veterans shall enjoy the happiness, security, prosperity and environment which they so richly deserve.

Mr. GREEN: Is there to be any cut in the cost to the soldier?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No, not further than the conditional grant and the equalization adjustment under the order in council.

Mr. ARMAND CLOUTIER (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with deep interest to the remarks and exposé of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) in regard to veterans housing, and on behalf of the electors of the historic constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska, which I have the honour to represent in the Canadian House of Commons, I wish to congratulate him most heartily.

Availing myself of your customary kindness, Mr. Speaker, I shall continue my speech in French, the language of my forebears, and conclude it in English in order to show my esteem and regard for my English-speaking fellow members, from whom I have received so many marks of kindness and consideration since I entered parliament.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, ever since my election as member for Drummond-Arthabaska, a constituency which has had outstanding representatives, it had been my wont to deliver one speech in the course of each session. To those who may be wondering why I have not risen in my place since I was reelected in 1945, I may say that, owing to my esteem and consideration for my new fellow-members, I felt I could wait, thus affording them the opportunity of stating their views and their policy. I avail myself of this occasion to pay a tribute to the present members, who form the finest body which, so it seems to me, we have had for a number of years.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot but take advantage of this opportunity to extend to you the customary congratulations and to tell you that every citizen in the fine constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska was as delighted as I have been when you were called upon to fulfil the high functions of Speaker of this house. No better choice could have been made. As a grandson of the great Honoré Mercier, you have, through your talents, your personality and your industry, attained the high post which you occupy with so much dignity. You may be assured of the best wishes of all the electors of my constituency and myself.

May I sincerely compliment the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The hon. member for Prince has performed his task in a most admirable manner, and I could hardly tell how glad I was to note the truly Canadian spirit he evidenced in speaking as well as he did the language of my ancestors.

As regards the seconder, I knew beforehand that he would be equal to the task, as I had frequently had occasion to admire him in political contests. I knew that he would make good use of his eloquence and that he would win the plaudits of all members of this house through his gentlemanly qualities and his quite personal appeal.

I am now constrained to introduce a note of sadness. I cannot forgo this opportunity of paying a tribute to a great Canadian, who was minister for my district and whose death is lamented by all. I have known and esteemed him and he has often given me sound advice. I am referring to that great Canadian, the late lamented Hon. P. J. A. Cardin. His thirty-five years of active political life will ensure him an honoured place in the history of this country. During his splendid and fruitful career, Hon. Mr. Cardin enjoyed the respect of all, because he was always upright and sincere. He had firm principles and his courage was indomitable. The sterling qualities which made him a beloved and respected leader will always cause him to be cited as an example. His name will live in history, with the radiant qualities of heart and mind of a great statesman. Through his ability, his eloquence and his powerful mind, he rose step by step in the political sphere and attained the highest functions in the federal administration. While proud, he was never haughty and to him honours were of minor importance, as against the respect of his principles and the interest of his fellow-citizens. I was deeply moved when I saw his noble countenance immobilized by death, but still keeping an expression of gentleness and firmness. I felt I still heard his musical voice, his eloquent words, when I pondered the heavy loss his death meant for his compatriots and all Canadians. Now that he has left for the great beyond, many among those who knew him less will better realize the important and patriotic part he has played in our public life. His memory will endure and his life will remain a symbol, an unforgettable example of public spirit and devotion.

The population of the constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska is made up of the two best elements that can be found, as it includes both farmers and workers. We know what an asset the land is for a country, and what vitality the people derive from it. The farmers in our district keep on, peacefully but without respite in this twentieth century, ploughing the toilsome and everlasting furrow which was begun in the seventeenth century by the settlers of Richelieu, Colbert and Talon.

As regards the workers, I feel quite close to them, because for nearly twenty-one years I was paymaster, accountant and statistician for the Drummondville Cotton Co., which is a subsidiary of the Dominion Textile, and whose plant is one of the most important in Drummondville, employing as it does more than 1,600 workers. I say, Mr. Speaker, that my contact with them has enabled me to understand their problems and to sympathize with their most legitimate wishes. Drummondville, Victoriaville and other industrial centres of my constituency deserve mention for the harmony and the good spirit which exist between employers and workers. Both groups are cooperating whole-heartedly and their relations are of the best.

Mr. Speaker, permit me to extend my most sincere congratulations to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), the former Secretary of State in this government, for his splendid work in connection with the citizenship act, both in sponsoring the bill in the Canadian parliament and in supervising the administration of the act. That legislation affords fresh hope for a prompt and sincere effort toward the achievement of a Canadian spirit. But it should not be forgotten that this agreement, this Canadian unity will only be attained if the spirit of 1867 is strictly adhered to and it is realized that the people of this country are all Canadians, having equal rights, there being neither a conquered nor a conquering element.

Canadian unity has long been a moot question. I know, Mr. Speaker, that there will always be narrow-minded people who will seek to curb any movement toward good understanding and unity among all Canadians. Those extremists form a small minority and they are more vocal than dangerous. However, I say that the Canadian nation is gradually developing.

Bilingualism is the very basis of our great national principles; it is for us an element of strength, marking as it does our racial duality, and the union of two great modern civilizations through a double classical and scientific education. Our cultural idealism is blended with a practicalness which permits us to benefit from that deep culture.

The French element does not exist only in Quebec; the French Canadians are prolific and they have preserved the adventurous spirit of their forebears. They have spread over every part of the country. They are good settlers, they know how to clear new land and they are born builders and pioneers. Courageous and industrious, they have at heart the success of their task and the preservation of their language. Western Canada as well as the maritime provinces have many French-speaking communities. Two million French Canadians are to be found in the United States. Recent statistics show that in these last two or three years, more than 11,000 people from Quebec have taken up residence in Ontario.

A great Toronto periodical, Saturday Night, notes these facts and states that such a trend cannot be changed and that it is likely to become more and more noticeable. The Ontario writer states in conclusion:

> Under such circumstances, why should we not improve our relations with the French Canadians and admit once for all that Canada is a bilingual country, a confederation of two racial groups having each its own language and its own culture. At the present time, bilingualism means more particularly that the French Canadians must learn English.

The writer goes on to deplore the fact that the French language is poorly taught outside of Quebec and he emphasizes that sooner or later the majority of Canadians will have to speak both languages.

That article from Saturday Night reflects credit on its writer and it greatly enhances the cause of Canadian unity. It recalls the very principles of the Canadian confederation and opens out new prospects for this country.

It is indeed desirable that the French language should be better taught throughout the country, so that English-speaking Canadians may better understand us. At the same time, it must be stressed that the English language should also be taught more efficiently within our province, for similar and other still more important reasons. Otherwise, we shall always have but one official language, our own. Newcomers in this country prefer English because it is easier to learn. It would be to our advantage and interest to learn better the language of the majority. If we did so, and if the rest of the people followed the advice given by the author of the article published by Saturday Night, Canada would become a bilingual country and we could rightly speak about a Canadian nation.

Mr. Speaker, how shall we be able to attain to the rank of a true nation or achieve Canadian unity? We shall reach such an objective by giving our country an emblem, a truly Canadian and distinctive flag, which will enable us to identify ourselves clearly, proudly and promptly. In this connection, I must compliment the government, on behalf of all my electors, for having included that commendable measure in the speech from the throne last year and having appointed a committee for that purpose. That committee in which I did not sit included outstanding people from Quebec and other provinces, men who are no doubt conscious of their responsibilities and of the importance of their task, an enlightened and competent committee which will do justice to all, willing to consider the legitimate claims of the people and of the press as well as the merits of all the designs which have been submitted to it. We all know that the committee has reported that in its opinion Canada should have a national and distinctive flag.

Mr. Speaker, what more shall we have to do in order to attain to the rank of a true nation and achieve Canadian unity? We shall have to adopt a national anthem. I know of nothing more beautiful or loftier than the anthem O Canada. It is a martial poem which evokes our whole past featured by struggles, toil, efforts and pride, a true epic from which the people derive courage, strength and ideal, as well as a purpose for living, fighting, conquering, and if needs be, generously sacrificing their lives.

And what can be more stirring than that music to the rhythm of which our boys, in these times as in the past, have marched and defeated the enemy.

Canada's national anthem does not belong exclusively to my kinsmen, who find in a distant past the chief reasons of the love they feel for their country. The other racial groups who live in Canada also have their heroes and their martyrs. We all sing the same anthem; may we all understand it, and make it the basis of our thoughts, of our very life, and of our common love.

O Canada is the true anthem of this country; its accents arise from the land and are echoed by our great river, by the boundless forests which extend from the east to the west, forming the poignant voice of the past, the dynamic voice of the future. O Canada should remain our national anthem, it should continue to give expression, in this country as outside, to the spirit and the soul of our people.

Mr. Speaker, the French Canadians, like all other racial groups, are proud of their nationality, of their glorious past, featured by intellectual endeavours and contributions to moral improvement. They are proud of their language, they cherish their institutions and they intend to survive, to preserve their position in a country they have developed and in which they have multiplied. I consider national unity as a vital pact so lofty and noble in its scope and its inspiration that the parties to the agreement should esteem and respect each other. We are the most truly Canadian among Canadians, inasmuch as we have long been rooted in this country and we have benefited for many centuries from the numerous influences of our environment. In passing, I wish to recall with pride that my own ancestors came from France in 1616, eight years only after Samuel de Champlain had founded Quebec, but nevertheless, my only claim is that I am simply a Canadian.

We are of French and English descent, our culture is both French and English and that is the very reason why we feel impelled to safeguard the sacred heritage which our ancestors and yours have left us, those principles which are the very basis of our lives, which condition them and give to Canada a truly distinctive character.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, so that this appeal of mine for cooperation, for Canadian unity, may also reach my English-speaking colleagues, I shall now complete my address in English, a language not altogether unknown to me, of course, but understandably less familiar to me than my own.

I thus wish to show my esteem and regard for my English-speaking colleagues both in and outside the province of Quebec, so that all may hear and understand my message, this appeal of mine, for earnest cooperation in the furtherance of national progress. Since Quebec members are ever ready to share in this effect, I too have wanted to do my bit in the furtherance of Canadian unity. I shall therefore continue my remarks on Canadian unity, following those I have just spoken in French. I can well imagine two great races of different backgrounds growing side by side in mutual respect, each striving better to understand the other. It is my feeling that war, in demanding closer contacts between provinces, between eastern and western Canada, between the French and the English elements of this country, has enormously helped a closer association of the people of Canada, a country so vast that differences may be noted in the mentality, outlook, habits and customs of people in the various provinces.

No wonder then that English and French Canadians, though living side by side, but being of different backgrounds and extraction, remain strangers. It may be that war shall have served to establish unity, wrought this miracle of rapprochement and mutual regard which long years, nay, a whole century of striving failed to bring about. The scourge of war then has had this beneficial result, for it has brought us to the threshold of a true and real understanding. I believe there is not a single member of the armed forces in this country who does not count good friends in some of the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents, and as representative of the historic constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska, once represented here by Sir Wilfrid Laurier whose voice I modestly echo, I say that we Canadians of French ancestry from old Quebec are ready to extend a cordial hand of friendship, to cooperate in the attainment of this common ideal, so that in the surge of progress now apparent throughout the world, Canada may play a part befitting this vast, wealthy, young and free country. It is necessary that we strive not for a national but for an international outlook. Let our thoughts and discussions no longer dwell on the past but let them carry us into the future in union, harmony and unity.

In my enthusiasm and sincerity, Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of those glorious monuments on parliament hill that recall our political history and the memory of past statesmen: first, the great Queen Victoria, of whom our elders still speak with reverence and whose memory remains dear to all Canadians, then Sir George-Etienne Cartier, an outstanding father of confederation, an inspired patriot, who gave us the song "O Canada", my beloved country, and whose death was truly a national loss, Sir Alexander Mackenzie who, in 1878, asked Sir Wilfrid Laurier to join his cabinet, George Brown, who may well remain as the symbol of the hard task that had to be faced by our first Canadian politicians at that decisive period. At the base of his monument the sculptor has placed a ballot box, a sword at rest, an olive branch and a banner upon which are inscribed the words, "Government by the people, free institutions, religious, liberty and equality, unity and progress of confederation." These are the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty more enduring than the stone upon which they are inscribed. May this ever be the monumental position of a nation of liberty loving peoples unshackled by injustice and tyranny.

At a distance I see the monument of D'Arcy McGee, the great Irish patriot, murdered by the Fenians, whose memory remains green in the hearts of all true Canadians; Lafontaine and Baldwin, who struggled side by side for responsible government, whose administration is not forgotten. Though of different creeds and of different racial origin, they found in their common desire to serve their country and their countrymen, as well as in mutual esteem, grounds for union and lasting affection. What an example of understanding; what a testimony to Canadian unity!

Sir John A. Macdonald was another father of confederation, and not the least, who did much to build up this great and beautiful country, and whom Canadians rank as one held in high esteem in all parts of this country.

Finally I see, gazing eastward as if still watching over his province, the great Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the silver-tongued orator who, in a memorable speech in Paris, once said: "France gave us life and England gave us liberty." How dearly he loved that province of his, and yet, truly a Canadian, he remains the great advocate of friendly understanding.

In the presence of those statues or material symbols, which are so many landmarks in Canadian political history, there comes to me a vision, an insight into the future of this great country of ours. I can imagine a Hill; a Louis-Philippe Hebert, a Soucy, a Brunet, a sculptor shaping his medium, gathering and putting together bits of material that will soon blend into a complete harmonious whole. What a marvel. It is possible only for a genius, this creation of a living, animated being. Would I were that genius, Mr. Speaker, this sculptor before his task, a creation unlike any other, strong, huge, endowed with the breath of life.

At this moment, Mr. Speaker, I can well picture our country, this Canada of ours. And to close this allegory, I shall quote from the works of one of our poets these few lines from "The Mixer", whose meaning reaches the very depths of my soul, and which I should like to share with you:

> In the city, on the prairie, in the forest, in the camp,
> In the mountain-clouds of colour, in the fog-white river damp,
> From Atlantic to Pacific, from the great lakes to the pole,
> I am mixing strange ingredients into a common whole.
> Every hope shall build upon me, every heart shall be my own,
> The ambition of my people shall be mine and mine alone.
> Through the pangs of transformation in my fiery furnace-blast,
> Do I shape and mould and make them "Canadians at last."

Mr. H. R. ARGUE (Wood Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, I find there are a good many topics I could cover which affect the people of my province. The farmers of western Canada would appreciate a good deal of information on several subjects. For example, they would like to know what is likely to be the policy of the government in coarse grains, so that they can plan their production in that regard for this year. They would like to know if their costs of production are going to increase step by step continuously this year, as they did over the past year.

However, the one problem perhaps foremost in the minds of the people of western Canada particularly at this time, and indeed in the minds of all Canadians, is the question of an adjustment in freight rates. Over the years western Canada has been handicapped because of its transportation problem. Because of our geographical position, because we are in the centre of a large continent, and because manufacturing is carried on largely in the central provinces, we are wholly dependent upon the railways to bring in freight and export our produce. The cost of freight to the consumer is usually a mark-up over the price charged by the manufacturers in the central provinces. On top of that freight cost are mark-ups by the wholesaler and the retailer, which of course increase the cost to the consumer.

Over the years, there has been a tendency for the board of transport commissioners to take cognizance of the vast disparity in freight rates as between western and eastern Canada, and there has been some closing of that wide gap between the freight rates of Ontario and Quebec and those of western Canada.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would remind the hon. member that the question of freight rates is now before the board of transport commissioners. If the hon. member will look at Beauchesne's, third edition, page 105, paragraph 251, he will find it states that the board of railway commissioners is a court of record. Any matters before a court of record are sub judice and, in my opinion, should not at this time be discussed in the house.

Mr. COLDWELL: The paragraph states:

> The board of railway commissioners is a court of record and therefore may not be attacked except by way of impeachment.

Surely this debate is not an attack upon the board of railway commissioners. If I remember correctly, last night the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Winkler) dealt extensively with this subject, as other hon. members have done. It will be noted that paragraph 252 states:

> Matters which have been adjudicated upon by the railway commissioners and taken in appeal to the governor in council cannot be considered sub judice while the appeal is pending, because the governor in council then acts in an administrative and not a judicial capacity, and therefore such matters may be debated in the House of Commons.

[Mr. Argue.]

If, when an appeal from the board of railway commissioners is pending, the discussion of such matters is not precluded in the house, then surely it follows that matters of this description before an appeal, or before a judgment has been given, should not be precluded from discussion.

I repeat that other hon. members have been allowed to discuss this matter; and, since it affects the hon. member's constituency very closely, I suggest that he should not be precluded from doing what others have already done.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I did not happen to be in the Chair when other hon. members were discussing this matter. I do not recall that a general discussion on an increase in freight rates did take place.

Mr. KNOWLES: The matter was discussed last night by the hon. member for Lisgar.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member for Lisgar may have mentioned it.

Mr. COLDWELL: And the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross).

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not think he went into a discussion of the subject. Hansard will record what he said.

Mr. KNOWLES: He spoke for fifteen minutes on the subject.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Paragraph 252, to which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has just referred, states that the reason the matter can be discussed after a decision has been made and an appeal taken to the governor in council is that the governor in council is not acting in a judicial capacity. But when a matter is being considered by a court—and anything being considered before a court is a judicial proceeding —then it cannot be discussed in the house, and is definitely sub judice at that time.

I feel satisfied that this matter is now before a court of record, and that in compliance with paragraph 246 (c) it is now out of order to refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending. Surely a judicial decision is now pending with respect to freight rates.

Mr. COLDWELL: Does it not depend upon what the definition of a judicial decision is? Surely a board of commissioners appointed by the House of Commons or by the crown is not a court giving judgment; or, to put it in another way, is not a judicial court. Hence it seems to me that the hon. member should be allowed to continue his remarks, particularly, as I say, because it would not be fair—and I know Your Honour always tries to be fair—to limit his remarks after the house has allowed other hon. members to consider the matter at some length.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, last night I was in the house when two hon. members did discuss this matter, namely the hon. members for Lisgar and Souris. It was not discussed at great length.

Mr. COLDWELL: I said "at some length".

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it was at some length, and at sufficient length to have resulted in its being ruled out of order, if, indeed, it is out of order. The point was brought up by those of us who were in the chamber at the time as to whether that question should be raised. I do not know whether any study has been given to the matter since that time. But if there has not been, inasmuch as we have only another hour and a half before concluding today's sitting, and so long as there is not a lengthy discussion on the subject, probably in fairness to those who desire to say a word or two on the matter it would be better to permit them to proceed, and to have a final decision before we begin discussion again tomorrow.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Mr. Speaker has given the matter some consideration since it was mentioned in the house. I hold in my hand a written memorandum, the contents of which I have not seen nor have I discussed with Mr. Speaker, but which, I am sure, he would have no objection to my reading at this time. Apparently he has given it careful consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: I was not aware it had been given study. If it has, we would like to have the benefit of it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I shall read the memorandum.

Mr. COLDWELL: I must suggest that, whatever Mr. Speaker's memorandum may be, the proceedings having been allowed to go as they have gone, the suggestion offered by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is the one which should be considered. I would not be inclined to appeal a ruling on the ground that if Your Honour gave a ruling it would be the wrong one; I would be inclined rather to appeal on the ground that a matter of equity is involved, and that because of that a ruling should not be given.

Mr. GRAYDON: You are getting to be quite a lawyer.

Mr. COLDWELL: Thank you.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Perhaps it would be better if I were to read this memorandum, so that it may be on record. Then the hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue) could govern his remarks accordingly. The memorandum states:

Some reference has been made during the present debate to the question of freight rates. It is a matter of public information that the board of transport commissioners is at present hearing an application by the Canadian railways for an increase in freight rates. For this reason, I have been somewhat concerned with regard to the matter and thought it well to make a statement in regard thereto.

I am fully aware that the question of an increase of freight rates is a matter of great public interest, and that this public interest was bound to reflect itself in this House of Commons. I am also aware that our parliamentary system is one based on the right of free speech, and particularly on an exercise of this right, by the elected members of this house.

However, I think it my duty to bring to the attention of the house, the long-established rule of Canadian parliamentary practice, that a member while speaking must not refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending. (Beauchesne's third edition, citation 246 (c)). I may say that the same rule applies in the British House of Commons. (May, fourteenth edition, p. 430.)

Section nine of the Railway Act provides that the board of transport commissioners for Canada shall be a court of record. It is quite clear, therefore, that proceedings taking place before the board of transport commissioners are sub judice, and reference to such matters is barred by the rule to which I have referred.

It might be well for me to point out to the house that the board of transport commissioners, formerly known as the board of railway commissioners, is set up under the provisions of a statute duly enacted by the Canadian parliament. Every section of Canada is represented on the board and there is little doubt that parliament in creating this board felt that matters within its jurisdiction could best be dealt with by an independent board, free from what might be described as the heat of party politics. The members of the house will, I am sure, desire that the board should have an opportunity of discharging its duties impartially and without prejudice. Any judicial body is given like protection under our system of government. For instance, the press with all its freedom is restricted in its right to comment on matters being adjudicated upon by a court of record.

It is of course the privilege of any hon. member of this house who is sufficiently interested to make his representations to the board at its present sittings.

I would also point out the Railway Act provides that any party interested may petition the governor in council to vary or rescind any order or decision of the board. After the board has completed its work or, should such an application be made to the governor in council, this house will have ample and proper opportunity to debate the whole matter.

In making this statement, I have not overlooked the fact that the only discussion excluded by the rule is the matter actually before the board of railway commissioners, namely, an application by the railways for an increase in freight rates. I ask, therefore, that the members keep in mind the rule to which I have referred in speaking in this debate and in any debates which may follow while the matter is sub judice.

Mr. ARGUE: The only reason I went to the trouble to get this information together was that I think this particular matter is of vital importance to the people of western Canada. As I understand it, an appeal from a decision of the board is to the governor general in council and I would not consider I was doing my duty if I did not speak on freight rates before a decision is made. I shall attempt the best I can to keep away from referring to the application.

In making a submission to the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations in 1939, Mr. R. A. C. Henry said:

From 1916 to 1920, the various general increases in rates which were granted, while allowed as protection to the carriers against increased costs, were at the same time used to reduce further the disparity between eastern and western rates.

It is generally well known that there is disparity between rates. For instance, it costs twenty cents to ship 100 pounds of petroleum products fifty miles from the city of Regina, whereas it costs only eight cents to ship a similar weight a similar distance from the city of Sarnia. Surely it can be seen that any upward revision of these rates on a proportionate basis would further widen that disparity.

The argument that there is competition from trucks operating on the highways in western Canada can be met. This type of competition is very small in western Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan. There are only 139 miles of hard-surfaced roads in Saskatchewan, whereas in Ontario there are 7,407 miles of hard-surfaced roads, including Portland cement, bituminous pavement and bituminous surface. Then there is water-borne competition which is not available in western Canada. The people of western Canada are wholly or nearly wholly dependent upon the railroads for transportation of goods into and out of that part of the country, and consequently they are concerned with what freight rates may be at any particular time.

We should remember that a tremendous backlog of demand for goods has been built up, particularly in Saskatchewan, on account of the long years of depression before the war and to the fact that the production of most items was drastically curtailed during the war. Because of that backlog, the freight rates that must be paid on incoming goods will have a serious effect upon the living standards of the people in that part of Canada.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

For instance, in 1946 the Ford dealer in Regina had a quota of 300 cars; this year his quota is 600. The same figure applies to the Chevrolet dealer. Increased freight rates on 600 cars, twice the number of cars shipped in 1946 will mean a real added cost to the epople of that province of Saskatchewan. The cost of transporting a Dodge de luxe special four-door sedan from Windsor to Moose Jaw is $117.23. Thirty per cent of that figure amounts to $35.17. It costs $41.50 to ship an eight-foot tiller combine with seeding attachments from Brantford to Regina, and thirty per cent of that is $12.45. The freight charges on an eight-foot combine are $74.63, thirty per cent of which would be $22.39. Then there is the mark-up put on the freight charges by the wholesaler and the retailer. That adds further to the transportation charges. Taking $35 as thirty per cent of the cost of transporting a car from Windsor, the mark-up would probably raise that amount to well over $50.

We should keep in mind, too, the fact that housing conditions in Saskatchewan are bad as a result of the depression and because of the small amount of building during the war years. A survey in the prairie area was made by the farm management department of the university of Saskatchewan. This showed that 23·5 per cent of farm homes were considered to be in poor condition; 70·4 per cent were considered to be in fair condition, and 6·1 per cent in good condition. The report states that at least fifty per cent of the houses in poor condition need to be replaced by more adequate and suitably constructed dwellings, while the remaining fifty per cent need the expenditure of at least one-half of the replacement cost to put them in fair condition. The farm homes in fair repair need from ten to twenty per cent of their present value spent in the way of repairs to put them in satisfactory condition.

Facilities such as furnaces, electricity, flush toilets, bathtubs and so on, are to be found in less than one in ten of these homes. It costs a minimum of $425 to equip a home with sanitary facilities. The freight charges on the lumber, cement, iron and steel products and everything else necessary to build and repair a home constitute part of the cost. When freight rates are high, the cost of those materials is consequently high. Any upward revision in freight rates will seriously affect the cost of home building.

I have here the rates on lumber from Saint John, New Brunswick, to Chatham, Ontario, and from Vancouver, British Columbia, to Herbert, Saskatchewan. In each instance the distance is 985 miles. The freight rate in eastern Canada is thirty-seven cents per 100 pounds and, in western Canada, fifty-four cents per 100 pounds. I quote these figures merely to show the difference in freight rates and to emphasize the fact that western Canada freight rates are today high and that any increase in freight rates will add to an already heavy burden.

Let me cite a few instances. The freight on cement from Fort Whyte, Manitoba, to Regina is twenty-seven cents per 100 pounds. An increase in freight rates of thirty per cent would mean an additional charge of seven cents for an 87½ pound bag of cement. It would also mean that the price of canned goods would be increased by one cent per can. The cost of furniture would increase too. The freight charges on a studio lounge weighing 150 pounds from Montreal to Saskatoon amount to $2.97. An increase of thirty per cent would add eighty-nine cents to the cost of that lounge. The people of the western provinces as consumers have to import all the manufactured goods they use, so that any increase in freight rates would add to the cost of the articles they buy.

We must remember that the people of Saskatchewan in particular are producers of primary products and the cost of exporting these products out of the province to markets such as Toronto and Montreal is indeed high. The cost of sending a 1,200 pound steer from Maple Creek to Toronto, with a freight rate of $1.12½ per 100 pounds amounts to $13.50, and thirty per cent of that amounts to $4.05. An increase in freight rates of thirty per cent would mean a decreased revenue to the farmer of approximately $4 on that steer. One might argue that when cattle prices are high, as they are relatively today, $4 does not amount to much, but if cattle again go down to a price of two or three cents a pound, that freight burden would indeed be enormous.

On all the cattle marketed in Saskatchewan in 1944, namely, 378,859 head—these figures are taken from the Canada Year Book—if it is assumed that the average weight was 1,000 pounds and that the cattle were shipped from Moose Jaw, the freight would amount to over $4,356,000, and a thirty per cent increase in that amount would mean a loss in revenue to the farmers of Saskatchewan of $1,300,000.

I have some figures here to show the butter production in Saskatchewan. Sometimes we lose sight of the fact that Saskatchewan has a substantial dairy industry. If one forgets about the dairy production of Ontario and Quebec, 33.6 per cent of our butter production in Canada comes from Saskatchewan.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is outside of Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. ARGUE: Yes. I think all members realize that butter production is an important thing in Canada today and anything that will tend to decrease the supply of butter is certainly something that cannot be pardoned by this house. If we want to get away from the rationing of butter and to get into the position where we shall not have to take butter from New Zealand, which forces the people of Great Britain to go without some of the very small amount of butter they are receiving at the present time, nothing should be done to decrease our butter production. The average freight on butter leaving the province of Saskatchewan is 2·61 cents per pound, according to the Saskatchewan Dairy Association. The freight cost on the bulk items required in the processing and marketing of creamery butter is ·15 cents per pound, and the average freight on the incoming product to the creamery is 1·5 cents per pound. So that here we have a total charge of 4·26 cents per pound on butter produced in Saskatchewan. An increase of thirty per cent in the freight and express rates would add 1·28 cents to the cost of a pound of butter. The Saskatchewan Dairy Association contend that a thirty per cent upward revision in freight rates would mean the loss of at least three-quarters of a cent a pound and perhaps more to the Saskatchewan butter producers. Certainly, if that happens, Saskatchewan producers of cream are going to leave the production of dairy products and return to straight wheat farming and thus there will be less diversification than there now is. I think diversification where possible is a good thing, and certainly we should not support anything that would tend to make the farmers of western Canada leave the production of butter and dairy and meat products and go back into the highly hazardous business of straight grain farming.

It is estimated that a thirty per cent increase in freight rates would mean a reduced income to the producers of poultry of at least three-quarters of a cent a pound and a decreased income from eggs of three-quarters of a cent a dozen. All these figures, based on statements of the Saskatchewan Dairy Association, show that any increase in freight costs would mean a serious reduction in farm prices and, therefore, a serious reduction in the living standards of our farm people. And so the people of western Canada, and of Saskatchewan in particular, feel that they have a real stake in freight rates in this country. They know that any freight charge, whether it be high or low, is added to the price of goods that they must buy and deducted from the price of the goods they have to sell. It is estimated—I have seen this in the press—that a thirty per cent increase in freight rates might amount to a sum of $85,000,000. Surely that is a large sum of money, and the burden of supplying that money will bear most heavily on the people of western Canada, and will mean a considerable reduction in their standards of living.

I have here some figures on the financial position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Its reserve in 1937 was $91,000,000. In 1946 the reserve had increased to $350,000,000, or an increase of some $259,000,000 in that period of time. The funded debt of the C.P.R. in 1939 was $228 million; in 1946 that debt had been decreased to $83 million. Moreover, the average rate of funded debt paid by the C.P.R. in 1939 amounted to 4·1 per cent, whereas the average rate on their funded debt still held in 1945 was only 2·84 per cent. It is estimated that this decrease in the C.P.R. funded debt and the decrease in the carrying charge will amount to an annual saving to the C.P.R. of $7,018,000.

Surely these figures do not in any way suggest that the C.P.R. is in financial straits. Certainly it is not a poor company that needs greater consideration from the people of this country.

The C.P.R. too, I notice, is asking for additions and betterments to railway property amounting to $15,235,000; asking for $15 million out of the freight rates of this country to provide for additions and betterments. Surely additions and betterments are capital extensions and capital investments, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should not wish to ask the people of Canada to provide money for this purpose through freight charges, whether increased or otherwise.

Mr. Walker referred—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman. He has been speaking about freight rates for some time, but the moment he starts to discuss evidence before the hearing I think he is entirely out of order.

Mr. ARGUE: I will accept the correction.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: When the hon. member commenced his speech I referred to the fact that discussion in this house of the application for an increase in freight rates was out of order. I read a lengthy memorandum which Mr. Speaker had prepared, and I believe all hon. members agreed that it was not in order to discuss at the present time an increase in freight rates. It was however, I took it, the consensus of all hon. members that the hon. member for Wood Mountain might make a brief statement because other hon. members had done so. I do not think it was the feeling of the house that an extended argument on freight rates should be allowed at this time.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask you to consider the portion of the memorandum which you read in which reference was made to the freedom of the press. It was pointed out that that freedom was not denied by the understanding that the press cannot discuss matters that are sub judice. I would call your attention to the fact that the press is discussing this matter quite freely, which would seem to suggest that it is not sub judice, and I would press the view that members of parliament should have as much freedom to discuss these matters here as is accorded the press.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was not here when you read the ruling, and I knew nothing about it until my colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) drew it to my attention. I do not think it was the intention of the ruling that there should be no discussion at all on generalities, so far as the application was concerned. But the moment there is discussion concerning the evidence before the board, which is a court of record, then that is tantamount to discussing a case which is before a court, and I am sure the hon. member for Wood Mountain had no such intention. Last night one hon. member referred to a rate in general and went on to say that it had been reduced. I do not think there can be objection to that particular discussion; but when there is reference to the evidence which is before a court, on a hearing upon which there has been no decision, surely that is clearly out of order.

Mr. KNOWLES: I would point out equally that there has been no definite ruling on the matter. A memorandum has been read and a suggestion made.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister says it is a court of record. I assume that must be a provision of the Railway Act. I do not remember it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is a provision of the Railway Act. I think I have allowed the hon. gentleman wide latitude and I suggest to him that he refrain from any further discussion of the application for an increase.

Mr. ARGUE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to discuss the application, but there are two or three points to which I wish to refer. I do not think any exception can be taken to them. I wish to read from the war labour board's order of October 16, 1946, which states in part:

> During the years 1939 to 1945 inclusive the total assets of the Canadian Pacific increased considerably, as have reserve and profit and loss balances. The liquid position of the company has been maintained and indeed improved. Funded indebtedness is down substantially thereby and to a commensurate extent freeing the company from certain recurring fixed charges.

I think the question of fair freight rates can be argued on the basis of advocating for western Canada rates that are similar to rates in eastern Canada. Moreover, one would not consider it fair for a railway company to make a relatively large profit in one section of Canada and a relatively small profit in another. For instance, in the years 1936 to 1946 the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on its western lines made a profit of $248,150,000 and in the same period, on its eastern lines, $126,700,000. Those profits are indeed large, and the significant fact in them is that the profit made in western Canada was almost twice as much as that made in eastern Canada and follows a pattern that is shown in the profits of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in past years.

Mr. McCANN: Income or profits? In what year did they ever make $248 million profit?

Mr. ARGUE: From 1936 to 1946, a period of years.

Mr. McCANN: Oh, ten years?

Mr. ARGUE: Yes. I think it would be well for the house to bear in mind that Dominion cash subsidies to the C.P.R. over the years have amounted to a total of $89,671,000 and that federal land grants have been made, totalling 32,902,000 acres. The people of this country have a real stake in the C.P.R., because the people, through the federal government, have provided large subsidies and large land grants, and certainly because of that they should have the right to see that the C.P.R. provides adequate service at reasonable cost to all parts of the nation.

As reported in yesterday's Hansard, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) announced that certain increases were to be made in the depletion allowances for gold mines in this country. I should like to point out that such an increase in depletion allowances means an increased value of the capital stock, and the amount of that increase is not subject to income tax as would have been the case, for instance, if a subsidy were paid to the company and, as a result of that, profits were increased. I should just like to suggest to the government that at some time it consider the feasibility of a capital gains tax.

Getting back now to the whole question of the standard of living of the people of western Canada, I believe it should be pointed out,—and it cannot be pointed out too strongly—that the people of western Canada, the wheat growers in particular, will until 1950 receive a price for wheat of $1.35, which is a frozen price. I would say that it now rests on this government to see that the farmer is not faced with increased costs which would reduce his income and his standard of living. I should hope that the government, after the report of the board of transport commissioners is made to it, will consider all these facts.

Mr. N. J. M. LOCKHART (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, it has been my considered opinion that in this debate it is the duty of members who may feel so disposed, to bring to the attention of the government matters of particular concern to their constituents. I wish to detain the house with only a few remarks, and to a large degree they will be of a general character; but at the end of them I wish to sum up specifically.

In my constituency at the present time the rural telephone lines are working overtime. I recently sat in on some of the discussions, and to say that the people are concerned would be putting it mildly.

There has been a considerable surplus of domestic vegetables in southern Ontario and in my area particularly. I refer to such commodities as carrots, beets, cabbage and the like; there is a large list of commodities which might be referred to. An urgent demand is being made that the federal government should do more than they are doing to protect the home market for fruits and vegetables. I will not enlarge on the caustic criticism that is sometimes heard; but, summing it up, I will say that the feeling of the vast majority of producers in my community is as I have indicated. The producer groups have been very active during the past few weeks in particular, since it is the off-season; and I suggest most earnestly to the government that at every opportunity they sit in with these organizations which represent the various fruit and vegetable growers groups. I can assure the government that these men are sincere. They do not approach the matter from any political angle. They desire to turn out the best possible produce at the lowest possible price.

I have discovered one other thing, namely, that there is a general consensus that the system of import and export permits meets with general approval, subject, of course, to certain safeguards which always need to be exercised.

Passing on from that, I find that considerable alarm is manifest among a great many of the groups of fruit and vegetable growers with respect to the rapid increase in imports, ranging from five per cent on cabbage to as high as 175 per cent on cauliflower. There are one or two commodities with regard to which the figure has gone so high that it is far out of bounds. I am not going to detain the house by putting on Hansard tables showing the trend of these imports. I would, however, direct the attention of the house to reports that have been issued recently by the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association and the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association, setting forth clearly how the domestic markets are being invaded. In order to save time, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the permission of the house to have this one table inserted in Hansard. It would save my reading it, and the members could then see for themselves the effect that this importation is having.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to put the statement on record?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. LOCKHART: Thank you very much. The table follows:

[Mr. Lockhart.]

During the past year, Canadian processors packed about 4,300,000 cases of tomato juice. I do not know whether many members of the house know this, but recently one million cases of unsweetened grapefruit juice were imported and dumped on the Canadian market, and the price went down as low as 62½ cents a dozen. In all sincerity I ask what chance have the processors and producers of building up a profitable industry when they are faced with such importations? I say that these are matters to which the government should be ever alert. I noticed in one press report that, out of the forty-six Florida firms which are processing fruit juice and the like, only about twenty are in a solvent position. That is only an indication that this kind of dumping on the Canadian market should not be permitted. Surely our growers and processors should not be subjected to this kind of unfair competition.

I think it is generally conceded by most of the groups that, when fruit and vegetables which are produced by the Canadian grower are not available in the Canadian market, it is only fair to the consumers that they be allowed to have these commodities if they desire to pay the price which is asked for them. There does not seem to be any particular disagreement with that, as long as it is understood that, as soon as our domestic products become available, the market is protected. There is a growing demand for more rigid inspection; in fact I believe it is almost the unanimous view that proper inspection will largely overcome all the difficulties in connection with our marketing problem. I urge the government to make sure that every possible avenue is sought to safeguard the markets for our domestic producers and processors. I bring that point to the attention of the house at this time because I believe that when hon. members take time to read the table they will agree that a serious situation is developing.

What I have said in favour of adequate marketing controls through import and export permits seems to me one way whereby private enterprise can survive. I turn now, however, to a type of control that is proving to be a hardship. This has to do with housing; and I wish to emphasize the need for housing, more particularly for the veterans. The situation in this respect is not improving, and I believe the rather confused statement made by the minister this afternoon will only bear out what I am saying. Notwithstanding all the boasts that have been made as to the extent of the housing programmes that have been gotten under way, today we find the minister rising in his place and making definite apologies for what has been done.

I want to recite a little of the history of the developments in our city. There we have 102 units being erected by Housing Enterprises Limited, which of course is a crown company. Others in smaller numbers have been erected by Wartime Housing Limited. The 102 units I mentioned are for rental only, and are of three designs. The smallest, having just four rooms, rents at $42 a month. I did not have a chance to measure the next sized house, but I was told that it is two feet longer, and rents for $46 a month. These are both one-storey structures. Then, by increasing the pitch of the rafters and getting what they call two more rooms upstairs, reached by a straight stairway, they produced what they call a six-room unit, which rents for $55 a month. Perhaps the capital cost might warrant those rentals; I do not know. In any event I made an inspection of these homes last Saturday afternoon. One of the tenants told me that, before any application is received or accepted, the guaranteed income of the applicant is reviewed. This man also went so far as to say that he had to pay the sum of $10 to have himself investigated. I do not know whether or not that is true, but that was the statement he made, and he is a responsible young man. Sometimes it is a little difficult to get information in this house, but perhaps at an appropriate time the minister will make a statement and let the house know exactly what the cost of these homes was, and give other full information. I should like him to give us full and complete details, also, as to the conditions under which these homes are made available to veterans, and to what extent they are assisted. I was told at the same time—and the minister might bear this in mind when he makes his statement—that, unless a man has a fixed income, his application to rent one of these homes is not even considered. I was told by one of the tenants that a man working on an hourly basis and earning ninety-eight cents an hour or thereabouts, in a trade where there are occasional fluctuations in wages, could not obtain consideration in connection with the renting of one of these homes. I do not want to put a lot of questions on the order paper to clutter up the record, but I am sure that a clear-cut statement by the minister, dealing with all these points and all their implications, would be acceptable to hon. members.

I now turn to the type of housing being erected by Wartime Housing Limited in my area. These houses are being sold to veterans. I listened with interest today when the minister was trying to cover up the defects, and I am going to give him a little more information. I am one of those who thought it was bad enough to have a royal commission investigate, but when this committee mentioned by the minister is checking up I want it to look carefully over what we call the Louth street development on the outskirts of the city of St. Catharines, because I should like this house to be given a full and detailed report of the findings of that committee. I made three inspections there last Saturday afternoon. The first home was a small building, fairly well constructed, which had been sold for about $5,000. The occupant thought the amount was $5,100, and then corrected himself and said he thought it was $5,000. The next was of poorer construction, and it had been sold for just under $6,000. The third house I inspected was terrible, and when I say "terrible" I mean just that. Having spent twenty-five or thirty years in the builders' supply business, I believe I know what terrible construction is. When I got into this last house I could not leave it, I was so shocked. It was a four-room house, on which the veteran who owns it told me he had paid the sum of $5,960, as he recalled.

In a vague sort of way this afternoon the minister tried to say that the price quoted for these houses included everything. I tried to get the meaning of what the minister gave us in connection with the prices he placed on record. But this veteran tells me that because of his having purchased one of these homes at, I believe, $5,960, he surrendered certain other benefits which would have accrued to him.

I believe that there is a conflict of opinion in this matter, and that it should be cleared up definitely in the house. The veteran about whom I have spoken last had a four-room house for which he paid the amount I have mentioned. There were no sidewalks, and on the land only rough grading has been done. I wish the committee could check what I have said and get the opinions of neighbours as to the type of places on which these poor, unfortunate veterans have been planted in that area, and in that particular development.

The front door of the house I have mentioned is an inch out of plumb at both the bottom and the top. There is no storm door, and the wind howls and whistles through the front door. Believe me, the wind was whistling the day I was there. Mark you, this is only a four-room house, but there were plaster cracks between two of the rooms into which I could lay my hand. I should very much like the committee to see those things themselves.

The shingles on one side of the house were completely blown up on end. I asked the veteran what he was doing about it, and he said, that he had climbed up on the roof and had nailed many of them down, and that he was going to surface-nail them. Well, if there is anyone in the house who knows anything about construction he must know what is bound to happen from surface-nailing asphalt shingles. A year from now that man will think a sprinkling can is being held over his head. The nails loosen in the asphalt base of the shingles, with the result that there is a constant drip, drip, drip. That is what this veteran is up against.

So I say, here is a good chance for the government to take action. I will give them much more information if they will undertake to go into that district and look things over. This veteran paid about $600 down; I believe he said the exact amount was $596 he thought. He asked for my candid opinion as to whether he ought to throw up the whole deal. It was at that time he mentioned that he had made certain financial sacrifices in order to obtain the contract at $5,960. He paid his deposit, and he had his four-roomed house. As the minister said today, probably it was necessary to take the action he did if he was to have a roof over his head.

I am glad to see the minister has returned to the chamber, because I do not hold him entirely responsible. Much of this was begun long before he had a hand in it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: And a lot of it after, too.

Mr. LOCKHART: And, as the hon. member says, there was a lot of it after too. I hope the minister will read what I have put on record today, and have the committee go to the area in question and consider carefully the situation, particularly with respect to this one development.

Then, this poor fellow paid down his ten per cent. He is wondering whether he should surrender his contract; that is, if he can do it, or is not held in some way. His wife has taken work trying to earn a little bit of money. She has taken a part-time job, to see if they cannot see it through.

What kind of security is that, for the man who has gone into the very jaws of death, in your interests and mine, and who comes back to receive all the lip-service given him, and then is given this kind of deal?

During the last two or three years, construction materials, or a large percentage of them, have been channeled into this type of construction. Today I asked the minister about inspection. I have never seen such wilful waste of materials. The materials on any of these jobs were good. I heard the minister say something about defective lime. That might have happened in an isolated instance, but in the main the materials in these houses were good. I say that an inspector, or someone else, should be held responsible for the type of thing that was permitted. If something is not done the veteran will never have confidence that he is getting a square deal.

I would now point out another type of veteran who has been deprived of doing the thing he would have liked to do. There are large numbers in this group in my area, and what I say will no doubt be applicable in other parts of Canada. I am not exaggerating when I say that in my own area there have been hundreds who have purchased small parcels of land, whether within the city limits on improved streets, having local improvements, or just outside the city limits on selected land which they have purchased and for which they have laid out their cash.

Hundreds of those young men are recently back from overseas. But today they cannot get materials. Perhaps the minister will say that certain priorities have been granted to veterans, but the priorities on government housing schemes took precedence over everything. And because there were limited supplies of materials those veterans could not obtain any materials to build their own small homes in their own way. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, they did not want assistance from anybody. They owned their lots, and had a little money. Perhaps they had friends or relatives who were willing to grub-stake them for the additional amounts they required. All they wanted were materials.

I say hundreds of homes would be produced by those veterans if steps were taken to direct materials into the proper channels. Someone may ask what I would do, or what I would suggest should be done under these circumstances. I shall make one suggestion. We have an army of men of various types running around the country doing a useless job, and it is about time they were put on the production end. I have reference to employees of the wartime prices and trade board. I say in all sincerity it is about time they were put on a production basis—and I do not care whether it is with a pick and shovel, or in what manner. They are travelling around the country today, and it is supposed they are looking for prosecutions. Mr. Speaker, most of their work is persecution—and I say that sincerely. If those men were put in the production lines from the bush down so that they could get out some building materials they would be doing something worthwhile.

Let me give an illustration of what I discovered last week-end in connection with this great army we have. Incidentally I know the personnel of the wartime prices and trade board in about ten different offices in my part of the country. I made the statement in this house about three or four years ago that fifty per cent of these officials were derelicts. I still say that they are derelicts and I base that statement upon the type of men we find doing this work. A shoe man will be running around looking after hog inspection, and we find an insurance man or the like inspecting the building industry. That is the type of thing that is going on.

Let me give an example. Five young men took over a small packing plant in my district a year or two ago. Two of them were overseas veterans with some four years of service and they pooled their resources to purchase this small packing plant which was in operation. The former owner told me that he was fed up with the regulations and red tape he had had to put up with and was glad to get away from it. He told me he hoped the strength and numbers of these five young men would result in better success than he had had.

It took them quite a long time to have their quota set, which was the same as that of the original owner. I think they could kill only thirty-nine hogs a week, but finally they got that quota. Then, with all the restrictions and red tape, only just a week or two ago one of these brilliant inspectors came to this place of business and there was a heated discussion about some irregularities. I do not know the exact conversation, but I am told that one of these men, who now travel in twos and fours rather than singly, I suppose because they are getting short of work, said to one of these five brothers who are trying to earn an honest living, "One of the reasons why we have to come in here in this manner is that in the last six months of 1946, 50,000 hogs found their way into the black market in the six counties around the Niagara peninsula." That was the statement made by one of those inspectors. If that is true, what a reflection upon the ability of the men who are supposed to be doing a job in the Niagara peninsula! I repeat that they are derelicts.

I go one step farther. On another occasion they came into the same place of business persecuting and trying to make things as unpleasant as possible. There were more than one although I think one man could have done the job. One of these men said, and I have it in writing, "Remember we are working for the largest employer in the world, so don't try to buck us." If the small businessmen of this country have to put up with this kind of thing it is time that somebody took a sawed-off shotgun and started to work.

If we stop to consider when the war ended—this is utter nonsense. Why should we have to put up with this kind of thing. Small business is being pushed to the wall as fast as possible. For goodness sake, let us get back to normal. Let the law of supply and demand hold sway. My prediction is that the shrewd housewife will regulate her purchases so that the pendulum will soon swing back to normal.

I should like to say a further word in connection with a group of veterans to whom reference was made in this house the other day. The minister made the statement that some relief was being given in connection with rental controls and I asked about the veteran who could not get possession of his house. I was told that it did not matter what class of tenant was in the house, he could not get it. The minister said that if the house had been bought between November, 1944 and July, 1945, the owner could not get possession. He then went on to say that the owner could go before the rental appeal court and endeavour to show that his need was greater than that of the tenant. I think anyone who knows anything about these rental appeal courts will agree with me when I say that I do not know where any great change has been made in a decision of a rentals officer by the rental control judge reviewing the case. If there are any cases, I should like to know of them. I do not know of any and I know that many cases have been reviewed. The owner will have to prepare a case; he will have to hire a lawyer and produce all kinds of evidence to show that he has more need than the person living in the house. There have been some caustic things said about that type of suggested regulation.

The minister says that there is no hope for the man who bought a house during that period. I know of many cases where the wife of a man has worked on victory shifts and saved two or three hundred dollars. Then the husband has sent home more; the father has helped and the mother has helped. A down payment was made on a little home perhaps in 1942, 1943 or 1944. The young man may have been fighting overseas for his life. Perhaps he went through Dunkirk, over Normandy or through the long grind in Sicily and Italy. He was not worrying about a house.

Then he came back home to his family who were thinking ahead of time in trying to have a place to which they could go. These homes were bought by the dozen. These men came back from an experience such as only those who went through it know about. They were discharged a year or a year and a half ago as the case may be and now they find that they cannot get possession of their little homes.

If the government does not see the need of extending these regulations to take in these young men, then I say it is doing a gross injustice to one type of veteran in this country. I urge the government to consider extending the regulations, so that these men may get their homes which were bought perhaps two or three years ago.

Finally, I again urge the government to abandon this present chaotic system of controls, and to devote their entire energies to producing food. Let them encourage the fruit and vegetable men by giving them all assistance possible to produce food for the starving world that we hear so much about. Let them take out of inactivity every available man—and the wartime prices and trade board is the most glaring example—and put them into active production. That is one of the most urgent needs at this time. Let us build up a national income so that the devastating effects of high taxation can be overcome. This, Mr. Speaker, I submit, is one solution of our problem of high taxation.

Mr. F. W. TOWNLEY-SMITH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed once more to draw attention to the fact that it is only with extreme difficulty that a great number of members of this house are able to hear what is going on. Architecturally and artistically this is a beautiful building, but I fear that acoustically we are not so fortunate. In spite of all that has been said to the contrary, I repeat that a great many members are not able to hear one-half of what is being said and a still greater number are unable to hear with ease what is said. Very few of us are able to sit back and relax and listen with pleasure, and I do not mean that in the way that some hon. members are taking it. I again ask that something be done about the matter.

On motion of Mr. Townley-Smith the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie the house adjourned at 5.55 p.m.

Thursday, March 6, 1947

The house met at three o'clock.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. D. F. BROWN (Essex West) presented the first report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to continue and complete consideration and examination of the Indian Act, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRICE CONTROL

MILK, BUTTER AND SUGAR—REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT AS TO PROBABLE PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the report in today's Montreal Gazette that retail prices of milk, butter and sugar are soon to go up, will he assure the house that no such increases will be allowed until the subject of price control has been discussed in the house?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I did not catch the last part of my hon. friend's remark, but I saw the statement in the Gazette. It is the usual newspaper comment, and I have no comment to offer with regard to what has been said there.

Mr. COLDWELL: The last part of the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was: Will the minister assure the house that these price increases will not go into effect pending discussion of price control in the house?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; I cannot give any such assurance. I am not of course suggesting that the price increases will go into effect. I answered my hon. friend the other day and said that the matter of price increases was one of government policy which would be announced at the appropriate time. But I can give no assurance that no price increases will go into effect until the general policy has been discussed.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is a matter which is of great concern to the people of Canada.

NAILS

REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON MARCH 4

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HAROLD W. TIMMINS (Parkdale): Having regard to the statement which the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply made on March 4 to the effect that he "had not heard of a shortage of nails in any part of Canada during the past two months", is the minister not aware that in the Toronto area the shortage is so acute that the builders cannot complete the houses started in 1946, and will he make a statement in regard to the matter?

Mr. GRAYDON: Is the minister not going to answer?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The question is clearly out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is a lengthy question, and I would ask the hon. member to put it on the order paper.

Mr. GRAYDON: I submit that it is a very urgent matter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROSS (SOURIS)—VETERANS' HOUSES—COST PLUS CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon at page 1040 of Hansard the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) said:

> . . . I shall say a word or two at once in reply to the statement just made by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) . . .
> Last evening my hon. friend referred to a cost plus contract, to which I shall refer in a moment. These, however, were not cost plus contracts . . .

According to the minutes of the proceedings of evidence before the special committee on veterans affairs on June 3, 1946, in reply to a question I asked, Mr. Murchison, director of Veterans' Land Act, stated that the great majority of these houses were built on a cost plus basis; that some 2,551 housing units, out of the lot, were on a cost plus basis in seven provinces of the dominion. If I may be permitted to do so I should like to refer to that evidence, to establish my point:

> By Mr. Ross:
> Q. Are all the veterans' homes under the Veterans' Land Act constructed on a cost plus basis?
> A. No; I mentioned in the statement which I made this morning that a number of these houses were let on a firm price basis, one at Calgary, one at Lethbridge, and one at Moncton, and also a few in Ontario, about two hundred, which were let on a firm price basis. The rest were all cost plus basis.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): If I may reply quietly to this question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should say my statement was absolutely correct, and that the contractor's fee was about $210 per house.

MR. POULIOT—REFERENCE IN "LA PRESSE" TO RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, to vindicate Your Honour. My contention is that no journalist may impute motives to Your Honour or mention in the press motives which Your Honour has not expressed in your rulings. So far as I am concerned the rulings of the Chair are complete in themselves, and no press reporter has the right to impute motives to the Chair. Since the beginning of last month I have been waiting for a correction of a report which appeared in La Presse of Montreal of February 1, in connection with the tributes which were paid the day before to the late lamented Mr. Cardin. I have checked up what was said by Your Honour, which appears at page 21 of Hansard, and I do not find anything of the kind reported by the correspondent of La Presse and appearing at page 25 of the issue of that newspaper of February 1. This is what it said:

L'Orateur avait interrompu M. Pouliot parce que celui-ci avait émaillé son discours de citations de M. Cardin, choisies parmi les occasions où l'ancien ministre libéral s'était trouvé en désaccord avec le gouvernement.

Since my English speaking friends are kind enough to listen to me and no doubt are anxious to know how the remarks of Mr. Speaker were reported, I shall translate what I just said:

Mr. Speaker interrupted Mr. Pouliot because in his speech the latter mentioned quotations from Mr. Cardin chosen from the speeches in which the former Liberal minister was in disagreement with the government.

I contend, sir, you never said anything of the kind. I believe it was unfair for this newspaper to give these remarks as having been made by you, and I hope the proper means will be taken to have that newspaper report corrected as soon as possible.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

[Mr. Mackenzie.]

Mr. F. W. TOWNLEY-SMITH (North Battleford): On two previous occasions, Mr. Speaker, I have drawn attention to the fact that in my constituency of North Battleford we have two branch lines of the Canadian National railways that are incomplete. In each case the ends have been built but the centre portion has not been completed. In the line from Frenchman's Butte in northern Saskatchewan to Heinsburg, in northeastern Alberta, there is a gap of roughly forty miles. In the line from St. Walburg to Beaver River, some 135 miles still remain to be constructed. Many years ago people were encouraged to settle in these districts, which are heavily wooded, with the definite promise that a railway would be built to take care of their needs. They have been let down very badly and are now suffering unnecessary hardship because of the failure of some people to keep their word. Both Liberal and Conservative parties promised these branch lines. It is always bad business to break a promise.

The difficulties experienced by those unfortunate people who were persuaded to spend the best part of their lives in these two districts have been recounted on several occasions by the hon. member for The Battlefords (Mr. Campbell), the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Dechene) and myself. There are no good roads, and when winter comes the obstacles these settlers encounter become almost insurmountable. There is no encouragement for them to increase production either of grains or of live stock, as the long haulage, running anywhere from twenty to one hundred miles, is prohibitive. Schools and social services were practically nonexistent until the new government took over in Saskatchewan, when schools and teachers were provided under great difficulties. The lack of railway facilities makes the situation very bad; the whole area which should be serviced by these lines is really an economic loss. If sickness assails them they can get no help. The emergency hospital planes which have been inaugurated by the government of Saskatchewan have proved very helpful, but even so the situation is still bad and the mortality rate is high.

May I say here how thoroughly I agree with the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair), who dwelt upon the lack of consideration being shown the unfortunate people suffering from tuberculosis, cancer, arthritis and the like. I should like to say, however, that in my province of Saskatchewan free treatment has been provided for those suffering from cancer. Cancer clinics, hospitalization and all treatments known to medical science are provided, and at least we have awakened to the great need for research and free treatment.

I would not feel inclined to encourage any further immigration into that part of my constituency until the railways are completed. In my opinion there is no need for giving occasion to the distress the newcomers would be called upon to undergo, and it would be both unkind and unfair to ask them to consider making their homes in these districts.

For the third time I appeal to the government to take steps to have these lines completed.

Arrangements which have been made with Great Britain for the disposal of the major part of our wheat crop appear to be in the main, satisfactory. Most of my constituents agree that the handling of the wheat by the Canadian wheat board is the proper way to do it.

In this northern country, however, large quantities of coarse grains are grown. It is felt that if the system of handling wheat by the wheat board is sound and satisfactory, then coarse grains, particularly oats, barley and rye, should be handled in like manner. The wheat board has certain authority over these grains, fixing quotas, arranging ceiling prices and the like; and it is felt—and I quite agree with the idea—that the one board should be completely responsible for all grain in exactly the same way as it has complete authority over the nation's wheat.

May I suggest that serious consideration be given to this request. It is already within the power of the governor in council to order that this be done, and I can assure the government that steps in this direction would be highly appreciated by the majority of the growers. I have heard it argued that while our wheat is mainly exportable, and can properly be handled by the wheat board, coarse grains trading is mostly interprovincial and cannot be handled by the wheat board because it comes under a different classification, and any definite attempt to have it handled compulsorily by the board might have the effect of upsetting the legislation and making it ultra vires.

If that argument is sound, then it is fair to say that if we were unfortunate enough to have two disastrous crop years, and no wheat were available for export, but just barely enough for the country's own needs, the wheat board act would become ultra vires and the Canadian wheat board would have to go out of existence. This, in passing.

I express the hope on behalf of my constituents that eventually the government will bring all grain completely under the control, regulation and sale of the Canadian wheat board. I am indeed happy to see this request made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, following the ideas and suggestions made by this organization fifteen years ago.

The matter of quotas for coarse grains, which is arranged by the wheat board from time to time, is causing some concern. As is generally known, the yield of oats is roughly twice that of wheat, and it would therefore be reasonable and logical for the delivery quota of oats to be twice that of wheat. This, however, was not done; and until nearly the end of the year only five bushels per acre could be delivered at country elevators. The natural result is that thousands upon thousands of bushels of oats are lying in heaps on the ground, without any protection, and now covered with several feet of snow—all this in spite of the fact that feed grains are badly needed, especially in eastern Canada. There is no possible chance of this grain being delivered to the elevators before spring, because all the country roads are blocked, and unfortunately there is a good chance of a great deal of it being spoiled and becoming a complete loss.

The same thing to a lesser degree is true with respect to barley. Farmers haul in wheat, the higher priced grain, first. And then, being short of storage accommodation on the farms, the cheaper grains have to lie in heaps with little or no protection. If the quota on these coarse grains could have been increased earlier —the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) told us a little over a week ago that the quotas were now open—I do not think the shortage of feed grains would have been nearly so serious. May I call this point to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) who may see in it some connection with the shortage of hogs and the consequent difficulty with the British bacon contract.

Another point in connection with quotas and the storage of coarse grains was brought up within the last few days, while Bill No. 23 respecting the Canadian wheat board was being considered. Fear was expressed by some western members—indeed an amendment was offered because of this fear—of the possibility that there would not be enough room in the elevators before July 31, 1950 for just the wheat crop. What, then, is to become of the coarse grains crop, if this fear is realized? Where and how is it to be stored? And if prices are descending, is the grower to take the loss because the elevators cannot make room for him? I fear the decision of the agricultural conference recently held in Ottawa to increase the quantity of coarse grains, and the desire of the Minister of Agriculture to see more barley grown will meet with disappointment, unless some definite consideration is given both as to quotas and to prices.

Coarse grains must be carefully considered if the production of live stock—pork, beef, mutton and poultry—is to be maintained; and also if dairy products—milk, cream, butter, cheese and eggs—are of sufficient importance to enter into the national scheme of things.

Now for a few words on the prices of grains. The prices of oats and barley are quite out of line with wheat. If wheat is worth $1.55 per bushel, then oats should be worth 75 to 80 cents per bushel, instead of 51½ plus the 10-cent equalization bonus, making 61½ cents. Further evidence of the inequality of values in oats is demonstrated by the fact that five grades are selling for the same price. No. 2 C.W., No. 3 C.W., Extra No. 1 feed, No. 1 feed, and No. 2 feed, are selling at the ceiling price. The best oats, No. 2 C.W., are selling at the same price as a very poor sample, five grades lower, namely No. 2 feed. The reason is, of course, that the ceiling for the good oats is much too low. It should be around my earlier estimate of 75 cents, while the ceiling for the low grades of oats is somewhere near their value. I will not go into detail, but a similar situation exists with respect to barley. No. 3 C.W., a very good grade of barley, is selling at 64¾ cents plus a 15-cent equalization bonus, making 79¾ cents; while No. 3 feed is selling for the same price. Barley, incidentally, ought to be priced, to be in fair alignment with wheat, at two-thirds of the wheat price; so that the good barley should be selling for $1.05 per bushel. Again may I draw to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture what I believe to be an important factor in the present shortage of barley, namely the price factor.

This question of proper alignment or true relationship of prices is far more important than many people think, and has a definite effect upon the state of an industry, and even upon the economy of a country. According to the Canada Year Book of 1945, in which at page 204, average long-term yields and prices are given for the three principal grains, wheat, oats and barley, we see that the yield of wheat is 15·6 bushels per acre, and the average price 87 cents per bushel, and that for oats the yield is 30·3 bushels per acre and the price 41 cents per bushel. For barley the yield is 23·3 bushels per acre and the price 51 cents per bushel.

Let us extend these yields and prices and find out what the farmer is really interested in—the return in dollars and cents per acre. We find that for wheat he received $13.57; for oats, $12.42 and for barley $11.88. In other words he received $1.69 per acre more for growing wheat than for growing barley, or better than 14 per cent. If we consider the question in the light of today's prices we find that the return per acre for wheat is $24.18; for oats, $18.48, and for barley, $18.64. There is a gain for the wheat grower over the barley grower amounting to $5.54, or 35½ per cent per acre. Who then would want to grow barley when he can make 35½ per cent more by growing wheat?

This is what I mean when I say that prices are out of line. This is one of the reasons, and a very important one, why there is a scarcity of barley. If these prices were adjusted, our farm economy would level itself off. The barley farmer could grow barley, the oats farmer could grow oats, and the wheat farmer could grow wheat. As a start toward this happy and logical state of affairs I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture, who is concerned, and rightly so, over the shortage of barley in the country, that the ceiling price on this commodity be raised by ten cents per bushel, and that he arrange also for a bonus of $5 per acre. This will still fail in bringing about a proper equivalent value, but it will help give evidence of a desire to correct the situation and may be a means of getting more barley. The same thing applies to oats.

In my opinion feed grains will not be forthcoming until some levelling up of prices takes place. Indeed the whole question brings us into the realm of what we call parity prices. A great deal has been said about parity at different times, and demands have been made frequently for an explanation of the term. I think the word was most unfortunately chosen. Webster says that it means the quality or condition of being equal or equivalent. When we use the term in connection with prices I think of it as meaning a true or equivalent relation in the values of the commodities being priced.

I believe that the values of all the things in common use in our economy can be brought to a common denominator and the prices all made to bear a true relation to each other. This will not be easy, but it can be done. First, we shall have to make a start within an industry itself. It has been said that parity means the true relation between the price of the things a farmer has to sell and the price of the things he has to buy. This is so, but I think we shall have to begin even closer to home than that, and establish, first of all, parity between the things themselves which a farmer has to sell. Thus, as I said a short time ago, if wheat is worth $1.55 per bushel, then oats are worth 80 cents and barley $1.05.

Working on this hypothesis, how much is butter worth per pound, or potatoes per bushel, or hay per ton? A great many factors will come into the question, including, of course, our old friend supply and demand, which will be the classical variable. Then after straightening things out in this particular industry and that particular industry we can begin to work on parities as between different commodities. If wheat is worth $1.55 per bushel, how much is an eight foot binder worth, or a six tube radio, or a pair of shoes? Once we have decided what the common denominator is we can get pretty close to equivalent values.

The really difficult ones will be those that are not quite so tangible. For instance, what are a medical doctor's services worth, (a) if you die; (b) if you don't die; (c) if you get better but wish you had died? What is a lawyer's advice worth (a) if it is good; (b) if it isn't? What are the services of a minister of the crown worth, (a) if he is a Liberal; (b) if he is a Conservative? We may after all have to be a bit arbitrary about some of these things.

Seriously, to get back into agriculture, my farmer friends are satisfied that $1.35 per bushel for four years is a reasonable and stable income. What they may think about it if the prices of other things are allowed to go up sky-high is something else. I have not quite understood a lot of the criticism that the price is so much below the world price. As the $1.35 is an average price spread over a number of years, how is it possible to tell whether the price is good or bad until the four years have passed and the average can be computed? Anything else is merely conjecture or guesswork and may prove to be badly wrong. The farmer knows he will get $1.35 and if he feels he cannot produce wheat for that price he has the opportunity of quitting and directing his energies into some other chanel. Also with the further assurance that the wheat board will buy all the wheat that will be grown during the term of the contract the great fear of being left with a large quantity on his hands has disappeared.

May I now be allowed to discuss for a short time a matter which has not been brought up in this house or if at all, then not for a considerable time. Every year about this time we see in the newspapers what are called estimates of the amount of grain which will be grown in Canada. May I suggest that this guesswork is no help at all to the agricultural industry but is, on the contrary, quite detrimental? In the first place, the guess is never accurate, or even nearly accurate; in the second place, it is invariably too high—I could say with reasonable safety always too high. In the third place, the principle or the practice of telling the world how much wheat or oats or barley or rye or anything else may be expected from our growers in any given year, especially when the estimate is too high, is a bad one and is a great disservice to the farmers of the country.

Let us first consider the matter of accuracy. Hon. members will bear me out when I say that two or three guesses are made during the year. They are all different, and they are practically always adjusted on a descending scale. The first guess for 1947 may be expected any time now. Before seeding is finished, we shall read that John Jones, the famous maker of fur-lined refrigerators, in his journey from Montreal to Vancouver, said in an interview that his observations led him to believe that the prospects for a bumper crop all across Canada were never brighter. There could not possibly be less than 500 million bushels of wheat, and coarse grains would be grown in like degree. Unfortunately, because John Jones spends a lot of money on advertising, this foolish statement of his gets big headlines. Even now nobody knows for sure how many acres have been planted to wheat, but a small thing like that does not deter the publication of the second guess. Now we are getting closer. A number of organizations who have agents out in the country are getting into the game. By now it is known that the weather has been unfavourable, perhaps dry and windy, or there have been late frosts. Cutworms and grasshoppers have taken their toll. Root-rot and browning have cut the stands considerably. They are still guessing at the acreage, because no one but the farmer himself knows exactly what has been planted. So the third inaccurate guess is made—300 millions.

Then a newspaper, in a moment of enthusiasm, sends out someone from its city office to drive all over the grain-growing provinces, to put the finishing touches on the guesses. But, Mr. Speaker, the farmer owner himself, who has walked into his grain fields a hundred times already this season, and who knows where the thin places are, and whether the heads are large or small, whether they are well filled or just half filled, still does not know what the yield will be. If after threshing he finds that his guess was within one and a half bushels per acre, then he knows that he was an excellent estimator. Yet this guess, according to the Year Book 1944, would produce an error of 35 million bushels in the total crop estimate for wheat alone. But the man driving along the country roads in a good car at forty or fifty miles an hour, seeing perhaps the best crop, perhaps the worst, is acknowledged to be able to say what the harvest will be.

If we must indulge in this pastime, why do we always get our estimates too high? If there is any merit in sending out information to an anxiously awaiting wheat market, why do we always send it out in a manner calculated to break the market down to lower prices? Why not, every once in a while, give the farmer a break and lead the markets to believe they may be short of wheat, and the people short of bread?

I believe the principle to be unsound. A parallel case would be for the Department of Trade and Commerce to tell the importing countries that Canadian pulp and paper mills will this year produce $500 million worth of pulp and paper, and then about June cut the estimate down to $400 million, and finally cut it again to $350 million, which would be within $50 million of what it was in 1944. What a howl would go up! Yet the case is not quite parallel, because nobody ever knows how much grain is produced in any given year. We know, of course, how much is delivered to the elevators, but no one knows how much is used for feed on the farms, how much is spoiled and lost, or how much is held back in storage in the farm granaries. There is no system for finding that out, so that even final estimates are at best just guesses which may or may not be reasonably close. The pulp and paper mills would know exactly what their production was, but whether or not they would want the information broadcast half way through the production year is something else again.

No; the principle and practice of issuing inaccurate information is vicious and wrong, and when it concerns foodstuffs or wearing material it is more particularly so. It is just as wrong as the practice of gambling in these commodities on the grain exchange or the cotton exchange, and is often regarded as being part of the system. It is high time we cut ourselves away from this iniquitous system of trading upon the wants and needs of the common people and regarded these gambling operations as the relics of a careless and selfish civilization. This must be what Mr. LaGuardia had in mind in his statement before the food and agricultural organization at Copenhagen, which he repeated before the united nations organization at Lake Success last November, where it was greeted with prolonged applause. This is what he said:

> You cannot have both stability in prices and security for the farmer, as well as fluctuation in prices. It is no use saying that we are not going to interfere with free exchange and free sales. If you want what is needed, you will interfere and you will put every gambling grain exchange out of business in Chicago, Winnipeg, or Liverpool, or wherever it exists.

[Mr. Townley-Smith.]

As is generally known, Mr. LaGuardia was secretary general of UNRRA, and his knowledge and experience in the feeding and clothing of the poor and destitute peoples of the world cannot be denied. His statement, therefore, must be listened to with the greatest consideration and concern. It is indeed fortunate that we in this country have taken steps to check the gambling in grains. Let us hurry the process along and bring into being a system of orderly marketing which will be acclaimed by ordinary peoples all over the world. Let us be fair and compassionate, and put humanity first.

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to refer to a statement made yesterday by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) at page 1041 of Hansard, where in replying to certain remarks that had been made by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), he said:

> Last evening my hon. friend referred to a cost plus contract, to which I shall refer in a moment. These, however, were not cost plus contracts; they were management fee contracts, and the average price or fee or reward to the contractor was in the neighbourhood of $200 per house.

A few moments ago the hon. member for Souris rose on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, but he was not allowed to make his statement. I would therefore refer the minister to the proceedings of the special committee on veterans affairs of June 3, 1946, where at page 773 the hon. member for Souris asked the following question of Mr. Murchison, director, Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act:

> Are all the veterans' homes under the Veterans' Land Act constructed on a cost plus basis?

Mr. Murchison's answer was:

> No; I mentioned in the statement which I made this morning that a number of these houses were let on a firm price basis, one at Calgary, one at Lethbridge, and one at Moncton, and also a few in Ontario about 200, which were let on a firm price basis. The rest were all cost plus basis.

Then I would refer the minister to appendix "B" to the proceedings of the veterans affairs committee of June 24, 1946, where at page 1082 a table is given headed "Veterans' Land Act—Cost plus fixed fee contracts" which shows that 2,551 housing units were constructed in seven provinces; one of the units specially mentioned is the Winnipeg, Manitoba, project, where 245 houses were constructed, and comprised in that are 90 units which are known as Charleswood units, of which the hon. member for Souris was speaking. Having regard to this information contained in the proceedings of the veterans affairs committee, perhaps the minister would make a further statement particularly in view of the statement made yesterday that these contracts were not on a cost plus basis.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I think perhaps there is a little confusion over the term used. As I stated, and this is the actual fact, there was a management fee paid in certain cases, and it amounted to $210. In one case it is cost plus and in the other it is cost plus a fixed fee. That is the only difference. The fixed fee was $210.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): So that there will be no misunderstanding, when the minister refers to $210 as the management fee, does he call that a cost plus contract?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No, I would not; some might.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Am I correct then in stating that the proceedings of the veterans committee which I quoted, and I refer particularly to the evidence of Mr. Murchison, the director of the Veterans' Land Act, is wrong? In answer to a question put by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) Mr. Murchison said that apart from the few units which he mentioned the rest were on a cost plus basis.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is not necessarily wrong at all. I say I have given the correct analysis of the situation. It is a management fee, plus cost basis; actual cost, plus a fee of $210 a house. Nothing can be more explicit than that.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): The minister may say that nothing can be more explicit than that, but when you speak of a cost plus contract the ordinary person understands that to mean exactly what it says.

Mr. TUCKER: What does the hon. member find fault with?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): May I ask the minister one further question? Yesterday he informed the house that repairs would be made to these veterans' houses at an expenditure of some $500,000 to $700,000. Until such time as these repairs are completed, what will be done about the contracts now pending, and what will be done about eviction orders now pending?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I think it is unfair to ask such a question at this time. All I can say is that the administration will deal with the whole situation with sympathy, with understanding and I hope with some expert knowledge.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I do not think it is a bit unfair at all.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I should like to remind hon. members that we are not in committee. Hon. members should make their speeches and not question other hon. members.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): The minister of his own accord introduced this matter into the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Just a moment, please. He said that he was being very frank. He explained that the taxpayers were to be called on to pay $500,000 to $700,000 to repair these houses. I am not quarreling with that, but I am bringing to his attention now the fact that in a great many instances there are contracts pending for the purchase of these houses. Where repairs are to be made it is only fair to know what is to be done in regard to these repairs before the contract is signed. The same thing applies to any veterans who may be faced with an eviction order. There are to be repairs to be made on these houses. What is to be done in regard to the eviction orders? I am not trying to embarrass the minister.

Mr. TUCKER: What does the hon. member mean by "eviction order"? Explain that.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): The hon. member is a lawyer, and surely I do not have to explain to him what is an eviction order.

Mr. TUCKER: When a man buys a house under the Veterans Land Act he cannot receive an eviction order. I wish the hon. member would explain what he means.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Some veterans have received orders to get out by May 1.

Mr. TUCKER: That is not an eviction order. The hon. member is talking about a legal eviction order. That is not one at all.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is a dispossession.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I should like to remind the minister and his parliamentary assistant that it is most difficult, indeed almost impossible, to do certain repairs on a house and have anything like a first class job after they are completed.

I should like to refer to the announcement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) a few days ago in regard to the rental regulations. He dealt with relief to be given certain people who had bought houses between November 1, 1944 and July 25, 1945. This relief will be of litle effect, because like all these controls there are certain strings attached to it. The minister said that the landlord who had purchased property would be given an opportunity to prove to the court of rental appeals that he needs the house more than the tenant needs it, in which event he can give the tenant three months' notice to vacate. I do not need to point out that any practising solicitor in Ontario who has had any experience at all with a court of rental appeals would certainly advise his client that he had little or no hope of succeeding. The landlord must go through further red tape and expense, and what possible chance or hope has he of convincing a court of rental appeals that he needs the house more than the tenant does? What benefit will this be to veterans?—because the dates mentioned in the remarks made by the minister were November 1, 1944 and July 25, 1945, and the great majority of veterans were overseas at that time. They had not purchased any houses, so apparently the veteran is getting no better treatment than anybody else.

Because of the policy of rental control adopted by the government in the freezing of leases many landlords refuse to allow tenants in any part of their property, because once a tenant gets in there is no way of getting him out. One often hears the poor landlord much abused, but I would point out that every municipality receives practically all its revenue from the taxation of real estate. While rents have been frozen for years, the cost of labour and materials for repairs has sharply increased. In fact landlords who supply services such as light, heat and janitor have been doing so at increased cost; and yet they have had no rent increases.

I suggest that these rental regulations are most unjustified when they apply to small villages and rural townships. They even apply to a farmer who may rent his farm house as a dwelling. Once that house is rented it comes under rental control, and if he should decide to rent the whole farm he must apply for an order to exempt his lease as far as the farm house is concerned.

I suggest to the minister that some reasonable increase be allowed in all rents and that veterans who have purchased dwelling houses at any time in the past or in the future be allowed to obtain possession of them within a reasonable time.

The present rent controls are an injustice, and the real pity of the whole thing is the utter futility of the government's policy as a solution of the housing problem. The only solution of the housing problem is to provide an adequate number of housing units. Rental controls have made housing construction unremunerative, and eviction control has frightened capital from housing. I submit that unless houses are built soon and in sufficient numbers, the present policy of rental and eviction control will materially contribute to inflation.

Many veterans and others find it difficult to obtain building material, yet there are no shortages, at least in Ontario, of building material for garages, summer cottages, theatres and buildings of that type; one has only to look at the pictures published in the Toronto papers to see that a large number of garages, theatres and buildings of that type are being constructed.

The speech from the throne made no mention of any reduction in the income tax, but the estimates tabled on Tuesday of this week may be some indication that relief will be afforded to the income tax payer in the lower brackets. The small reductions announced in the 1946 budget and made effective only in 1947 were trifling when one considers the reductions already made in the United States and the still further reductions proposed. For example, we find that in 1947 an unmarried person—and I particularly refer to an unmarried woman—must pay this most excessive tax on all income over $750. In the city of Toronto the cost of board, street car fare and laundry amounts to at least $750 a year. Thus we find that once the bare necessities of life are paid for, the unmarried woman must pay income tax beginning at twenty-two per cent on income over $750, which percentage increases rapidly as the income rises.

The provision in the 1946 budget by which a married woman cannot earn more than $250 a year without reducing the exemption allowed her husband is in large measure responsible for the present shortage of nurses. This matter was referred to in detail by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair) the other night. During the war years many married women who were registered nurses were prevailed upon to return to their profession, and they did so; but from the first of January, 1947, many of these women refused to work any longer in hospitals. In my opinion the minimum allowance for a single person should be at least $1,200 a year and the minimum allowance for a married man should be $2,000 a year, with increased exemptions for children.

I would point out to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) that the provision with regard to medical expenses is most unfair, because the only exemptions allowed are for amounts in excess of four per cent of the taxable income. I suggest to the minister that all medical expenses be allowed as a deduction.

I would draw the attention of the Minister of National Revenue to the 1946 personal income tax form. Any income tax payer who comes within the provisions of section 31 of the form finds that in computing his tax he must still use the method employed when the normal and graduated tax was in effect, and make the deductions at the rate of $150 for his wife and $28 for each child under the normal tax and $80 for each child under the graduated tax. Surely the minister and his department are able to bring these forms up to date, especially when one remembers that the savings portion of the tax was abolished on July 1, 1944.

I should also like to point out to the Minister that the luxury tax of twenty-five per cent on all silverware articles, watches, clocks and so on, is most unfair. Any young couple who start housekeeping today must pay this most excessive tax on silverware. I do not think even the minister would deny that silverware is a necessity. If the tax on silverware applied only to sterling silver, no one would complain. Clocks and watches are also necessities, yet they bear a twenty-five per cent luxury tax. To the average young couple of today the cost of house furnishings is high enough without their being called upon to pay the twenty-five per cent luxury tax on certain necessities.

I should like to refer to the matter of cheese, in which the county of Hastings is most interested. This county not only produces the best cheese in Ontario, but also the largest quantity. Yet during the past few years the production of cheese in the county of Hastings, as well as throughout Ontario, has been falling. It is interesting to note that a brief on prices of dairy products was presented by the Canadian federation of agricultural and dairy farmers of Canada to the cabinet on November 28, 1946. In this brief are set out the results of a survey in Ontario, as to the price received for milk and the cost of production in August, 1946. There is also an itemized statement showing in detail the cost of production. The cost of production for milk for the various commodities, f.o.b. plant, as shown by the brief, is as follows: Fluid milk per hundred pounds, $3.65; milk for cheese per hundred pounds, $2.88; milk for concentrated products per hundred pounds, $3; cream for butter, per pound butterfat, 74 cents, or in terms of 3·4 milk per hundred pounds, $2.54. For purposes of comparison, the present prices received by farmers, f.o.b. plant, for milk going into these products is as follows: Fluid milk in Toronto per hundred pounds for 3·4 milk, $3.45; milk for concentrated products per hundred pounds, approximately $2.25; milk for cheese per hundred pounds, approximately $2.15; cream for butter, per pound butterfat, 52 cents, or in terms of 3·4 milk, per hundred pounds, $1.77.

I have also a statement from the agricultural food board dated February 24, 1947 which shows returns to producers in Ontario on a delivered basis. These prices are as follows: Milk for fluid sales, $3.35 to $3.50 per hundred pounds of milk; milk for concentrating purposes, $2.25 to $2.35 per hundred pounds of milk; milk for cheese, $2.05 to $2.15 per hundred pounds of milk. Returns for butter fat, 52 to 54 cents per pound, which converted to a milk equivalent basis would be $1.82 to $1.89 per hundred pounds of milk (no value allowed for skim milk).

I would point out that there is practically no difference between the figures quoted in the brief of the Canadian federation of agriculture and those quoted by the agricultural food board as to the returns received by the farmer. In every case, with regard to fluid milk, milk for concentrating purposes and milk for cheese and butter, the cost of production is more than the actual price received.

The brief submitted to the cabinet on November 28, 1946, contains a detailed statement of the cost of producing 100 pounds of milk for sale to cheese factories, condenseries, and creameries; and with your permission and the consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have this table appear on Hansard.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to have the table appear in Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Thank you.

From this brief it is clear that in future the milk producers must receive higher prices for their products if present production is to be maintained, let alone increased. Each year one reads in the press of certain cheese factories in Ontario being closed or amalgamated, which means a further decrease in the production of cheese. I remember what was said in the house on February 27 by the Minister of Agriculture as to the price of cheese under the contracts, and I trust that the minis- will make some statement soon as to the future price of cheese. In the county of Hastings and the surrounding district the price paid for cheese is at the place of pick-up by the railway company. This means the rural cheese factory has to pay the cost of hauling and delivering the cheese from the factory to the point of shipment. Yet I am advised that in other areas of Ontario the price paid is the same for the cheese picked up at the factory. Already this matter has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, and I understood some correction was to be made. I hope the minister will announce some change before the cheese factories open next April.

A few days ago I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) for a ruling by the deputy minister of taxation on whether or not the 1946 amendments in reference to cooperatives would apply to cheese factories. The reason for my question was that every cheese factory president has received notice from the inspector of income tax asking him to file certain returns and supply certain information in reference to the taxation of cooperatives and the payment of patronage dividends. Naturally I do not know what ruling the deputy minister of taxation will give, but whatever his ruling may be, it will be of the utmost importance to the cheese factories concerned. An interpretation by the deputy minister that cheese factory companies are to be taxed will do more to decrease the production of cheese in Ontario than any other action the government might take.

I wish to concur in and approve the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lockhart) in reference to the wartime prices and trade board. If I had any criticism of his remarks it would be that he was too mild in his treatment of this octopus that has wrapped its strangling arms around every retail activity in Canada. I submit that the general public in Canada are completely fed up with government control, along with the wartime prices and trade board which has long outlived any useful purpose it ever served. I ask why this board, at public expense, should have a network of spies, investigators, prosecutors, persecutors, inspectors and officials of every kind spread over this country from coast to coast attempting to tell every individual how to run his own business, trying to tell him what he can do and what he cannot do. All this takes place in Canada, which is supposed to be a free country. Why should every retail merchant in the province of Ontario be afflicted with these pests of inspectors, who invade their stores, who think nothing of taking a whole day of a merchant's time, checking prices, asking all sorts of absurd and ridiculous questions, insisting on the filling in of certain forms, asking for the production of invoices and every other sort of obnoxious procedure, and always with the threat of prosecution if any murmur is raised?

These investigators always try to find at least one article without a price tag; then how they love to lodge a prosecution. As was well said by the hon. member for Lincoln yesterday, many of these officials had no previous experience in the work they are attempting to do, but armed with official authority they take delight in causing annoyance to our retail merchants. It is no wonder that yesterday the hon. member for Lincoln said that a little action with a shotgun would be in order. Surely we Canadians have enough sense and business ability to run our own affairs without having government officials constantly at our elbows, trying to tell us what to do and asking us to complete endless stupid forms and answer silly questions. As the hon. member suggested, let this horde of officials now in the employ of the wartime prices and trade board be put in the production line. If they had to go to work for a living you might find many of them on relief. Is it any wonder there is a black market in this country in almost every article that is in short supply? These black markets will continue until such time as the law of supply and demand operates, and it can operate only when production is increased. One of the most effective ways of having the law of supply and demand operate is to have all controls removed and throw the wartime prices and trade board, together with the czar who operates it, into the discard.

Surely at this late date the government must realize that no law can be enforced which has not the backing of the public, and certainly in my opinion the general public no longer support controls, nor do they wish the activities of the wartime prices and trade board to continue. Of course the thousands of employees of that board who now have cushy jobs and some measure of authority—and how these little officials love some authority—will want the board to continue indefinitely. The control of lumber is a typical example. In any county where there is considerable lumbering a black market has existed for months and years, and will continue to exist until the controls are removed. The government can hardly complain of the cooperation they received during the war from the Canadian lumber dealers' association and the retail lumber dealers' association. Surely, then, after this cooperation the government timber control officials must have some confidence in these organizations, so why not remove these timber controls?

In regard to veterans affairs I should like to mention only one matter; it has to do with veterans who are in receipt of pension and are attending university. These veterans who receive pensions do not receive their full monthly educational grants of $60 for unmarried men and $80 for married men. This educational grant is the reestablishment credit due to the veteran. I would ask the minister why this grant should be cut down or reduced in any way. So far as I know, a veteran who takes up his reestablishment credit under the Veterans' Land Act, and who receives a pension, does not suffer any reduction in the amount he receives, nor does a veteran who takes up his reestablishment credit in any other manner receive a lesser amount on account of his pension.

In many instances the veteran who is not disabled and who is attending university is able to undertake certain work and thereby earn additional moneys. This opportunity is denied the veteran who is disabled. I hope the Minister of Veterans Affairs will in the near future do something to correct this injustice.

Mr. DAVID GOURD (Chapleau) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, as the representative of one of the northeastern Quebec constituencies, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacNaught) on his excellent speech on the address in reply to the speech from the throne and on the interest he takes in his constituency and the country at large.

I must also compliment the new member for Richelieu-Verchères (Mr. Cournoyer), the successor of the Hon. P. J. A. Cardin. Seeing the sincerity, the tact and the fluency of our young colleague, I have felt proud for the constituency of Richelieu-Verchères and the whole country. The thirty-five years spent in the public service by his predecessor will not have been lost. His work will be continued; the new member has the required ability for assuming such a heavy succession.

Mr. Speaker, as I intend to tell about my constituency, Chapleau, its economic possibilities and its needs, may I be allowed to congratulate the government and the Hon. the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), on the foresight they have shown in deciding to build in my constituency a railroad branch line from Barraute to Kiask Falls. It is expected that the work, which has already started, will be completed about the end of 1947. Kiask Falls was a strategic choice, since it will be easy to extend that branch line toward the west, in the direction of the Harricana valley and toward the northeast, along the Bell river valley, as far as the Chibougamau district.

Mr. Speaker, while speaking in this house on July 24, 1946, I quoted figures to prove that if northwestern Quebec may be called a land of tomorrows it is first and above all a land of the present. Those statistics showed the contribution of that district to our peace-time and still more, I might say, to our war-time economy.

Pioneers of that district who, like myself, have witnessed the construction of the first Canadian National Railway line, which was completed in 1915, and the economic development that ensued, can easily visualize the progress that will result from the construction of this new branch line.

According to a report published by Mr. K. M. Ralston, mining engineer for the Canadian National Railways, the metal production of northwestern Quebec, at the end of 1945; was valued at more than $550 million. Agriculture, forestry, fur-trading and the general development of natural resources previously undiscovered have accounted for the settlement and the prosperity of about 125,000 people in that area.

The region offers a geological formation extremely favourable to prospecting where already have been found and proved several ore deposits: gold at Flordin Mines, and Lakerose Mines wonderful finds in the Opewika region, gold and copper at Norbeau Mines, Obalski Mines, Consolidated Chibougamau and Opemiska.

One company has been granted a pulpwood limits estimated at 4,480,000 cords, which cover only part of the pulpwood area located between the Abitibi and Chibougamau districts.

Seven townships have been chosen for settlement purposes and it is expected that 1,700 families will settle on good land. It is estimated that this newly opened area provides 275,000 acres of tillable land which can provide a living for 15,000 inhabitants; we wish to stress the fact that west of the Kiask Falls, there are, in addition to the forest limits already granted, about 4,700,000 cords of pulpwood which ought to bring future settlers immediate benefits and thus help them through the first few years.

I pause here, Mr. Speaker, and urge the Dominion government to do everything in its power to persuade the provincial legislatures to adopt a policy which will help bring factories into the areas where they are tapping natural resources. In a district such as Abitibi, which depends mainly on mining, diversified sources of income are essential; a paper-pulp mill, had it been built, would have made them possible and would also have provided work.

In support of various suggestions with respect to taxation which I intend to put forth for the benefit of my constituency, I shall take the liberty of quoting, for the information of the house, from "An Economic Survey of the Mining Industry in Northwestern Quebec" a report published thanks to the efforts of three economists and one lawyer: Dr. O. J. Firestone, Dr. B. H. Higgins, Dr. E. F. Beach and Mr. Jean-Joffre Gourd, of the Mines and Natural Resources section of the Montreal Board of Trade.

You will see on page 1 that our own Canadian government has stated boldly that "the central task of reconstruction must be to maintain a high and stable level of employment and income".

> It seems clear that postwar policy must be directed towards giving every reasonable incentive to private investment . . . There are various factors in Canadian economy that will make the achievement of a high level of private investment more difficult after this war than it was before the last one. In 1913, Canada came to the end of a period of enormous expansion, based on opening up the west and financed to a large extent by foreign capital. During the 20's, the last stages of this expansion of the west were completed, and, indeed, signs of retraction already appeared.

Then, on page 7—

> It must not be thought from the foregoing account of Canadian economic problems that the outlook for Canada is necessarily gloomy. On the contrary, there are a number of factors of potential economic expansion.

Further, on page 8—

> Most important perhaps, there is room in Canada for the development of new resources, especially in the Canadian north. The development of our northland, a development which must be based largely on mining resources but which would involve many forms of supplementary expansion, affords one possible field for investment that may prove comparable to economic expansion in the west as it was before 1914. Not only is the potential of our Laurentian shield still not fully realized (except, perhaps, by Canadian painters), but, as pointed out in the report of the advisory committee on reconstruction, one of the costs of war to Canada has been a depletion of her mineral resources. "There will be a serious time lag in mineral output which can only be shortened by systematic prospecting. It will also be necessary to make mining sufficiently attractive for private capital, and to this end your committee recommends that study be given to the taxation regulations at present in effect with a view to maximizing the ore production of our mines."

> From what has been said above, it would be apparent that the mining industry is a matter of peculiar concern for postwar economic policy. The mining industry of our northland, and all that goes with it in the way of building of new towns and transportation facilities, the opening of new agricultural districts, seems to represent our chief remaining frontier. If full employment is to be maintained with a minimum of unnecessary public spending, it is essential that the opportunities in this field be exploited to the full. Governments—dominion, provincial and local—can assist in this development in various ways.

First, by creating an environment in which investment for new development is reasonably attractive. Tax policy, especially with regard to treatment of depreciation and depletion, is one of the relevant items.

Second, governments can assist private investment by undertaking their share of the investment in community facilities, such as hospitals, schools, roads, railroads, landing strips, public utilities, and other traditional items of public investment necessary to make settlement of the area attractive to new workers.

On page 19—

The mining industry of Canada is surpassed in gross value of production only by manufacturing and agriculture. It is thus greater than forest industries, construction and electric power. The province of Quebec stands second to the province of Ontario in its contribution to the mining industry of the country, and during the past decade has been gaining on that leading province.

On page 27—

Summarizing the importance of mining as a field of employment, it can be said that the employment of one miner on the site will provide livelihood for 8·2 persons.

Finally, on page 28—

In summary, it can be said that there were 23,000 persons employed in the mining industry in the province of Quebec in 1941, that the number employed in the industry has been increasing rapidly, and that this entails a large and increasing number of other people whose livelihood depends on the mining industry and in the earnings of the miners.

The last time I spoke in this house, I commended the government for having fought inflation, and I compared our prices with those of other countries, in order to show that our anti-inflation measures had been beneficial to our middle classes and the country at large. I offered some suggestions tending to complete rather than destroy what had already been done.

I suggested the steps to be taken in order to relieve industry during the crisis brought about by a decision to put our Canadian dollar on a par with the American dollar. I then forecast a considerable loss of metal for Canada unless steps were taken to encourage the production of low-grade ore and, in other cases, of low-yield ore. I also predicted—if nothing were done to prevent it—a stoppage of mining operations, as well as the loss of income derived from mining and other related industries, and so forth, the resulting drop in production as a whole considerably weakening our resistance to inflation. Fortunately the government took some steps in the right direction, and I wish to commend the Right Hon. Mr. Ilsley for what he did last year.

I sincerely wish that the government could meet all the needs of northwestern Quebec, whose growth I have witnessed. I understand, however, that the government of a country as large as ours cannot fulfil all at once the needs of every constituency and every industry, just like the head of a family cannot, as much as he would like to, comply with all of his children's wishes. I can well understand therefore why the government is so wary of decontrol and of relieving the mining industry of its burdensome taxes.

In 1946, I submitted the following methods of relieving the mining industry and creating employment:

First, the paying of a bonus for the promotion of prospecting, exploration and development work, especially in connection with low-grade ore mines.

Second, the raising from 33⅓ to 50 per cent, of the depletion or capital reimbursement allowances for all mines, as recommended by the Senate committee on natural resources.

Third, the raising of the depletion allowance over the 50 per cent level in the case of low-profit mines dealing with low-grade ores; the increase in this allowance being inversely proportional to the profit margin.

Of course, the word "bonus" must be taken here in its broadest sense, and not in the sense of "subsidy".

Mr. Speaker, while the country's finances did not allow full implementation of my proposals, the government did pass certain measures such as I recommended, as instanced again by the statement in the house, two days ago, by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). Those measures were of material assistance in preventing the break-down I had feared in northwestern Quebec. There has been a considerable drop, however, in mining activities. I repeat here, that if companies are allowed to peter out in the promotion stage, Canada will be deprived, in the future, of its mining industry. Without our great promoters and prospectors of yesteryear, we would not now have our producing mines. It is well to recall this truth to the minds of certain producers of today who have forgotten or have never been cognizant of the beginnings of their companies.

I suggest the government now adopt measures along that line and I further submit that taxation of small salaries should be reduced to a level at least comparable to that of the United States, so that workers will be in a position to cope with the general rise in prices.

Mr. Speaker, as a sequence to my suggestion to the Board of Transport Commissioners, made in conformity with the numerous messages sent and resolutions passed by the various municipalities and public organizations of my constituency, may I point out to the house the necessity, for our country, of helping the essential lumber and pulpwood industries, by avoiding any increase in the transportation cost of our pulpwood and saw timber, even were a general increase in freight rates found necessary.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the house to a practice quite effective in promoting national unity, the principle of which was so well understood by the government when they appointed a satisfactory number of French-speaking ministers of the crown. I refer to the appointment of a number of French-speaking deputy ministers, more commensurate with the importance of the province of Quebec. Moreover, I should like to stress the importance, from the standpoint of national unity, of appointing heads of departments who can speak the language of the majority of citizens with whom they have to deal. I wish, in particular, to reiterate the suggestion I already made to the effect that a French-speaking superintendent be appointed at the Kapuskasing Experimental Farm for the one reason that the majority of the people whom this superintendent will deal with, including the citizens of my county, are French speaking.

In conclusion, may I renew the recommendation that Canada follow the example of every Christian nation by immediately appointing an ambassador to the Vatican.

(Text):

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks, this afternoon I desire to refer to three subjects. The first one is the projected extention to British Columbia of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. Second, I should like to say a few words in regard to pensions, and, third, I should like to make some remarks on a particular aspect of foreign affairs, namely, that having to do with the withdrawal of our army of occupation from Germany. I notice that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) is not in his seat at the moment, which is perhaps unfortunate because I shall have to differ rather sharply with him in some of the views that he

With regard to the extension of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to British Columbia, it is difficult indeed to get any information on this subject at the present time. We know, however, that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) indicated last session that it was intended to extentd this act to British Columbia during the current year. While, as I say, we find it difficult to get information as to the exact intentions of the government, I should like in a few minutes to indicate what some of the people in British Columbia, particularly in the interior, feel should be the guiding principles governing the activities of the administration of that act in our province.

In its inception, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, which consists of only some six or seven paragraphs, was designed purely as a relief or rehabilitation measure to bring assistance to the drought areas of the prairies. As such, it has no particular application to British Columbia, because the areas to which I shall refer, lying mainly in what is known as the dry belt of the province, have not suffered from recent drought, having always been extremely dry. They consist of land upon which you can grow almost anything if the water which the land requires were made available, but without water farming there is at best a questionable operation, because the result of the spring run-off is to produce a rapid and luxuriant growth which may be entirely scorched and wither away to nothing as a result of the very hot summers we have. I refer to the area which starts approximately at Salmon Arm, which is on the border of the dry belt. There lie, it is estimated, some 8,000 acres of land which could be brought under cultivation if they could get water. Those acres are on the fringe of the present area of arable land. Then you go down the Thompson valley, a distance of approximately 120 miles, through Kamloops to Ashcroft and beyond, where there is a strip of land ranging in width from some fifty yards to half a mile on either side of the river down to the Kamloops basin, where at the junction of two large rivers in the centre of the area, the diameter is from five to seven miles in extent.

About the same is true of the Cariboo country. It is also in the dry belt and has land which is extremely fertile but requires the presence of a constant supply of water to ensure success in farming operations. There is one part of this area in particular, in the southwest corner, called Pemberton Meadows where an area of several thousand acres could be brought under irrigation, which is reckoned to be one of the most fertile areas in the province. The country to the south of Kamloops and in the Kootenays is of somewhat the same nature, with broken valleys served by streams but where the land lying half a mile or more away from the river bed itself is extremely difficult to farm because of the difficulty of getting water onto that land.

If the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act is to be of very much benefit to British Columbia and to the areas I have mentioned it will not be sufficient merely to put in irrigation projects along the bottom of the valleys. What is required is something along the line of what they do in the United States where they have what they call the integrated project. In the United States, particularly in the Tennessee valley at Grand Coulee dam and other tremendous projects, they do not just put in a dam and block up the river for the purpose of irrigating the land lying below the level of the reservoir which is created, but build a project so as not only to irrigate the land but at the same time to make tremendous sources of power available to these areas. If you have the power available it follows that you can irrigate not only the land below the level of the reservoir but the land above the reservoir, by pumping water up there. This is particularly important in the central section of the area which I have described, because a good deal of the arable land would lie above the level of the reservoir which would be created by damming one of the rivers, but if water power were made available the harnessing of that power could pump water from the reservoir or from the river itself up to the benches above the level of the reservoir. That area is abundantly supplied with potential water power. Dams could be constructed in the Adams river, the Shuswap river, the Thompson river, the Fraser river, and their tributaries. The country lends itself admirably to these integrated projects, which is the principle which I feel should be followed in any extension of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to British Columbia. We have a combination of soil and potential water supply to make that area one to which the words of ex-president Hoover of the United States are especially applicable, when he said that "every drop of water that runs to the sea without rendering a commercial return is a public waste."

I would close this portion of my remarks by saying that such a scheme or series of schemes would undoubtedly be costly. History has proven that, whenever it has been attempted to charge up the initial capital cost of these schemes against the land which the irrigation project serves, the scheme is doomed to failure because you have to charge too high a rate. You have either to sell your land at too high an initial price or you have to charge much too high a rate for irrigation for the land to be able to bear. But if you put in your project on a long-term basis, perhaps do not even make it a special charge upon the public revenues, but float a loan which would be regarded as self-liquidating over a period of fifty years, it has a chance to succeed because you would not have to charge these tremendous rates for irrigation itself. Over that period of years you would recoup the initial capital cost because your intangible results would be so tremendous. You would have an influx of population, and increased agricultural production. The settlers would pay income tax; the railways and secondary industries would all develop; the project would expand, and the profitable community which would be created would of itself in an indirect way more than pay the initial capital cost of installing these schemes. But the history of the projects which we have had in British Columbia such as the British Columbia Fruit Lands at Kamloops and the Walhachin project some thirty miles to the west, where Lord Anglesey put in over £250,000, is that they go bankrupt when an attempt is made in a period of a few years to recoup the original capital cost from the operation of the land immediately served.

These are the two principles which, I submit, should be followed in extending the P.F.R.A. to that province: first, that it be regarded as an integrated project in the creation of water power as well as irrigation resources; second, that the project be put on a self-liquidating basis and the costs spread over a period of years.

With regard to pensions, the remarks I have to make follow very much along the lines of those made at the close of his speech by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White). What I should like to do is to renew a plea which was made in the veterans affairs committee in the fall of 1945, that the principle be established that pensions payable for wounds which have occasioned a disability should be fixed and awarded to the pensioner as of right and free from deductions, revisions or variations one way or the other for various reasons. The basis of this principle is as follows: that the object of the pension is to restore to the pensioner, as far as money alone can do it, the position which he would enjoy if he had not received his wound. It is realized that money alone cannot put the pensioner back in the position which he would be in were he not disabled, but so far as money can do it that should be the basis of the principle. It might be said that this recompense to which he is entitled as the result of loss which follows from his wound is the minimum that the country owes him and that as such, it should be an irreducible minimum. In that respect I think we might even consider a change in name. We might call it a compensation for disability, or a disability compensation, rather than a pension. Perhaps that would clearly establish the fact that it is paid as of right in regard to the disability suffered. It has been established in the history of certain cases to which I shall refer that if this principle is not followed a great deal of confusion and even grave injustices may result.

For instance, in the case of student veterans, to which reference has already been made, as the result of our not accepting the principle that a pension should be paid as of right and not allowed to be varied, veterans who are in receipt of disability pensions and who apply for educational benefits when attending university, lose part of their pension. I wish to illustrate this point by reference to a brief prepared by the student veterans' committee of McGill university, and of course, the principles which they discuss apply equally to universities in all provinces. On page 1 of their brief they make the following claim:

A pensioner of less than 80 per cent receives an amount equal to the training allowance, that is $60 per month, plus 40 per cent of his pension rate.

On page 2 they say:

In the above calculations, no consideration is given to the student pensioner's rank, although other pensioners receive an additional pension allowance for each rank above lieutenant. From the total sum of training allowance and portion of pension, the Canadian pension commission pays the pensioner his full pension (rank allowance included) and he receives the balance from the Department of Veterans Affairs. People are therefore unable to proclaim that pensioners are not receiving their full pension.

That is the argument which the department has put forward when charged with this fact. They say: "We do pay the full pension but we reduce the amount of the educational benefit."

I should now like to refer to the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the veterans affairs committee of Friday, November 30, 1945. The deputy minister of veterans affairs was giving evidence. This matter was being discussed, and on page 950 Mr. Woods made the following statement:

The same effect takes place in respect to a pensioner who goes to a training school, except that we established a ceiling which comprises the training allowances plus 40 per cent of his pension. In short, if his pension is $100 we give him his training allowance; his total income would be his training allowance plus 40 per cent of whatever his pension is.

In other words, actually the training allowance is paid in full and the pension is reduced to 40 per cent of what he would otherwise receive. Let us look at the practical result of this formula. Again referring to the McGill brief, we find the case of Private Deberry mentioned on page 3:

Private Deberry was wounded in action in the summer of 1944. He was awarded a 15 per cent pension on being discharged from hospital, and as he felt he did not need it, he bought a $3,000 endowment policy. When he later decided he wanted to go to Sir George William's college, Montreal, he was told he would not receive his full grant. He therefore had to cancel his insurance outright and forfeit the premiums he had already paid. Although his pension amounts to $11.25 a month, he would receive only $4.50 in addition to his college grant.

I shall now refer to the case of Gunner George Petrie:

Gunner George Petrie was seriously wounded at Zutfen, Holland, on the 15th of April, 1945. He is now a paraplegic—

That is, he is paralyzed from the waist down.

—and has also lost a good deal of the use of his hands. He is studying arts at McGill university, getting around in a wheel chair, and later hopes to become a lawyer. He spent all his army savings and then borrowed in order to purchase an automobile, which he now drives to college every day. He states that if it wasn't for the fact that he is able to live with his parents, he could not even consider taking training and would probably spend the rest of his life in an institution. He receives $75 pension, $30 training allowance, and $62.50 helplessness allowance a month, and loses $30 on account of the present regulations. When one considers that a paraplegic usually has to maintain a full-time servant, a car (if he is taking training), and pay room and board, this total sum of $167.50 does not go very far.

The final case to which I should like to refer is that of Major J. A. L. Robichaud who was wounded on August 10, 1944, in the fighting for Falaise. Although he is a married man with the rank of major, he would receive exactly no dollars a month if he were to attend university, as he wants to do. The brief goes on to say:

It also seems ironical that because his rank was major, his helplessness allowance should be reduced to $32.50. as compared to George Petrie's $62.50.

What I have said establishes clearly, I think, that actually the disabled veteran who receives a pension for his disability loses part of his pension if he attends university and applies for the educational benefits. Surely if it were established that pension was payable as of right that result could not follow. If pension were payable as of right, there would be no reduction; if a disabled veteran wanted to attend university he would then be entitled also to the full amount of his educational benefit. The same thing applies in a more limited way to the case of the helplessness allowance.

I should like to refer to one more case which, I think, illustrates clearly the necessity of adopting this principle that a pension awarded for disability resulting from a wound should be paid as of right. I received a letter in the mail about a week ago. I should like to make it quite clear that I am not claiming that this particular pensioner will not receive satisfaction, because I referred the case to the department and am assured that it will receive sympathetic consideration. What I wish to show is that this case could never have arisen if the principle were fully established and accepted that pension is payable as of right.

The background of this case is that of an officer in the Seaforths who received a stomach wound which cut him up very badly indeed, to put it mildly. After a long period of hospitalization, he has eventually been able to get around and about. But I think all hon. members will appreciate that a man who was wounded in the stomach, particularly in the lower portion, is in a precarious condition. His health is generally very much below standard; although he may have spells when he is comparatively well, he is likely at any time to feel again the effects of his wound. In a case such as this more than in any other it becomes important to establish that the pension payable to him as a result of his disability shall be payable as of right, shall not be subject to review and reduction from time to time and then, later on, perhaps be restored to the original amount.

What happened in this case can be seen, I think, if I read some of the extracts from the letter written by this man. His case was taken up and he was given 100 per cent pension. He says in his letter:

> . . . as soon as the fuss had blown over, last July to be exact, my pension was reduced to eighty per cent. Rather ironically notice of the reduction was handed me while I was still in bed recovering from the operation I had had on the pelvic wound.

In other words, between the time of his review—at which time it was decided that his pension should be reduced—and the time when he received notification, his old symptoms had broken out again and he had actually had to go back to hospital to have an operation as a result of that wound. It was while he was still in bed recovering from that operation that he received notification that his pension would be reduced. He goes on to say:

> Regarding the practice of steadily reducing one's pension, I feel that this policy is contrary in many respects to the whole purpose of a pension for the pensioner is left uncertain as to where he stands and being unable to count on its continuance all feeling of security disappears and plans for settling into a steady job have continually to be revised . . . With all the data they have amassed during the many occasions that I have been medically examined apart from the many months spent in hospital, it should not be necessary for me to appeal and go up again before yet another board . . . I fail to see why the benefit of the doubt should not be given to the pensioner instead of this everlasting gnawing and nibbling until he finally has no fight left in him and gives up in disgust.

Again I should like to say that I have hope that this particular case will be adjusted satisfactorily. The point I wish to make is that the situation which the pensioner has described and the feeling which he has expressed could never have arisen if the principle were adopted and adhered to that a pension awarded as a result of disability following from a wound received in action should be granted as of right, paid as of right, and should not be subject to any reduction or to constant review.

Mr. TUCKER: I understood the hon. member to say that he took that case up with the department and is having it looked into.

Mr. FULTON: Yes, I have hopes that this particular case will be satisfactorily adjusted. I refer to it because I feel that it affords a very good illustration of the point I am trying to make.

The third subject I should like to refer to this afternoon is that of the occupation army, with particular reference to its relationship to the field of foreign affairs. In view of the statements which have been made recently in the course of the debate on this subject, I think we should look closely at the history surrounding the formation and withdrawal of Canada's army of occupation, because the statement that our forces were withdrawn because they were kicked out is entirely at variance with the statements of two other cabinet ministers on this subject. In fact, the whole history of this matter is one of contradiction and of reluctance or inability to give information as to the policies behind first, the formation of the occupation army and, later, its withdrawal.

I take the time to refer to this matter because I think it is extremely important in the light of the background it forms to Canada's position in foreign affairs, particularly with respect to the representations which we have made that we should have a larger voice in the formation of the peace treaties, mainly the terms of peace with Germany and Austria. The house is familiar with the arguments which were put forward, and I shall refer to them in passing, to fill in the background to my remarks; they were to the effect that if we still had an army of occupation in Europe it would put us in a much stronger position when we come to demand that we shall have a voice in the settlement of these peace treaties, because we would be able to say, "We are taking part now in the policing of Europe and in the insurance that the fruits of victory, not only in terms of advantage to ourselves but in terms of the peace of the world, will follow. By maintaining an occupation army, we are showing a readiness to admit our obligations and we have therefore the right to have a voice in the settlement of those terms."

The history of this particular matter goes back to 1945, in the last session before the general election. I wish to refer to a statement which was made then by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). Speaking in the house on April 4, he said, as reported at page 433 of Hansard:

> In Europe it is necessary not only to secure complete victory, but that achievement must be confirmed, and the continued maintenance of peace assured. Where needed, after the cessation of military operations, the inter-allied army will continue in occupation of Germany. The size of this force has been set to give continuing assurance that Germany will not be able to resist or evade the settlement which will be imposed on her.
> The burden of maintaining this force will be shared among the allies and all will be appropriately represented.
> From time to time, as progress is made, and as considerations of safety and security permit, reductions will be made in the size of this army of occupation.

I think that paragraph is important because it implies that the army might later be withdrawn; and I shall refer to that later in my remarks.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Mr. Speaker, I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, but I would ask for your ruling on the question whether the subject matter of the debate on Monday can now be revived. On Monday we spent the whole day in discussing this matter. That debate having been concluded, I submit that the subject matter is not now open for further discussion in this debate on the address.

Mr. FULTON: I can understand the minister's reluctance to have this matter opened again—

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I do not think the hon. member means that. I asked you for a ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether the matter should now be reopened. That was not because of any reluctance to discuss it, but because of reluctance to have so much more time taken than the standing orders permit when there is urgent legislation that has to be considered. It might be very agreeable to stay here the year round and discuss these matters, but there are standing orders for the purpose of determining when and in what order of priority they can be dealt with. I suggest that, when one has been disposed of, it should not be reopened on another occasion.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. GRAYDON: What is the minister afraid of?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Nothing at all but the loss of time.

Mr. GRAYDON: After all, the debate was not concluded on Monday.

Mr. FULTON: In regard to the point of order, this particular subject was not discussed during the course of that debate. That is one point. The army of occupation was referred to, but the whole matter was not discussed. The second point is that this is the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and it is my understanding that any matter may be referred to during this debate. I also understand the rule of the house which forbids reference to a subject matter discussed in a particular previous debate during the same session, but I submit that, as long as I do not refer to remarks made during that debate, or quote passages from it, I am in order in discussing this particular aspect of Canada's foreign policy.

Mr. HANSELL: Before you give your ruling, Mr. Speaker, might I offer one observation which I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) has overlooked. When the motion was made on Monday for the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, the motion was based upon the urgency of the matter. The house was adjourned, and that debate automatically died at eleven o'clock that night. If your ruling should be that we cannot discuss foreign policy on the speech from the throne, then you preclude from a discussion of that subject any hon. members who did not have an opportunity to discuss it last Monday. Our day is only six hours long. We have only six hours of debating time, and you cannot crowd 245 members into those six hours. So that while there may be some justification for suggesting to hon. members who had an opportunity to take part in that debate on Monday that they should not deal with the subject again, surely those of us who were not able to discuss it, because of the lack of time at our disposal, should be able to do so now.

Mr. GREEN: Very serious questions are raised by this point of order taken this afternoon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. They have been dealt with largely by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) whose speech is in question. I submit that the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne is wide open, and that we can discuss any subject. It so happens that at the present session certain priority was given other matters, but surely that should not alter the right of a member of this house to discuss any question whatever during this debate.

The other point is this. If someone in the course of a speech, or in the course of an interjection, happens to bring up a matter that is not the subject of debate, surely it does not mean that from that time on, during the length of this session, that question cannot be discussed.

The hon. member for Kamloops has raised the question of the army of occupation. That was not the subject of the debate on Monday last; it merely came in incidentally. It was not the subject of the debate, nor was it the subject of the motion. Surely we are not to be prevented from speaking on the army of occupation because of what happened on Monday. If Your Honour rules against the hon. member for Kamloops I would point out that you place a serious limitation on the rights of members of this house.

Mr. GRAYDON: On the point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAYDON: I know you won't like it, but you will have to take it. I believe there is much merit in the point raised by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell), because, after all, if a motion for the adjournment of the house is going to restrict something like 235 members who did not have an opportunity of speaking in that particular debate, then I think it is a gross abuse of the rules of the house. I should like to feel free, for instance, to speak on the Nova Scotia coal question if I so desire. If the point of order raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs should be upheld, then definitely that subject would be barred, because the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) dealt with it under a motion similar to one I made on Monday. I hope Your Honour will not give in to the pressure of the government benches with respect to this, because I am only—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I do not believe the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) or any other hon. member should suggest that the Speaker would be influenced by pressure from any section of the house.

Mr. GRAYDON: I should think at least your mind ought to be open, and I am hoping to bring some pressure to bear right now. The pressure I want to bring to bear is to prove my point, if possible, that, as far as the debate on Monday was concerned, to say it precluded any further discussion of these matters would certainly be putting the rest of the house in a straitjacket in regard to discussion of foreign affairs. I do not believe the government should hide behind the rules of the house in this matter. I believe it should be brought into the open and debated, because there does not seem to be a single reason why this rule should be invoked for this purpose at this time.

Mr. ADAMSON: On Friday last the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) dealt with the matter of gold taxation, and immediately afterward I spoke on exactly the same subject. If Your Honour should rule that the debate on the speech from the throne cannot include matters previously discussed, you then would be forced to rule that everything I said last Tuesday was out of order; and with all due deference, Mr. Speaker, that would be an intolerable situation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: In reply to the hon. member who has just spoken, may I say that the statement on gold was not made on any formal motion before the house, but was a statement made by the minister on the orders of the day.

With respect to the statement by the hon. member for Macleod that the debate had died—I believe that is what he said, though I am not sure of his exact words—I would refer him to page 987 of Hansard where I find:

> Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): Mr. Speaker, in order to conform with the usual requirements contained in the rules I shall be glad to withdraw my motion.

Mr. GRAYDON: At the request of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: There is nothing to that effect in Hansard.

Mr. GRAYDON: If you were here, you would have seen that, yourself.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order; Hansard does not record that Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GRAYDON: Hansard does not record all the things that take place, such as a nod from His Honour the Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is entirely improper for any hon. member to interrupt Mr. Speaker when he is addressing the house.

With regard to the point of order, I would refer hon. members to Beauchesne's, third edition, paragraph 245, which states:

It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

The matter came up on Monday on motion of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon). That was a definite motion. I am not going to rule that a discussion on external affairs is entirely out of order at this time; but I do think it is irregular to refer directly to what took place in that debate. However, in my opinion hon. members are free to discuss external affairs.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask Your Honour if an hon. member is free to discuss the army of occupation. That, of course, was not the subject of the debate on Monday.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: When an hon. member is discussing that subject, I can give a ruling upon it. In the capacity of Mr. Speaker I should not give a ruling on what might come up in the house.

Mr. GREEN: Let the hon. member go ahead.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I will give rulings when questions arise.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. FULTON: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with your ruling I shall discuss certain aspects of this question to which reference was not made last Monday when the subject of foreign affairs was debated in the house. As has been pointed out, it so happens that during that debate reference was made to the specific question of the withdrawal of the army of occupation. That has raised in our minds the whole field connected with the army of occupation, and at this time I am trying to deal with the historical background of the matter. On that occasion no reference was made to the history.

I have just said that on April 4, 1945, the Prime Minister made a statement with regard to Canada's contributing to an occupation army, as reported at page 433 of Hansard, and I want to complete the quotation:

> The quota which Canada has undertaken to maintain is modest having regard to our resources and to our direct interest in the maintaining and safeguarding of the peace of the world.

The only conclusion to which one can come on reading that statement, in the light of its context, is that the subject matter of the army of occupation had been discussed among the various allied powers, and that it had been decided that Canada would maintain an army of occupation which was modest and in accordance with our resources. Everything was harmonious and, at least on the surface, all parties in agreement.

The next statement on the subject was made in 1945 by the then minister of national defence at the first session of this new parliament. I should point out that the Prime Minister's statement was made before San Francisco and before Potsdam, so that it might be suggested that the situation was changed by those two conferences. I think hon. members will agree, however, that the statement I am now about to read, made by the then minister of national defence after those conferences, certainly suggests that the situation was not changed by them.

Speaking in the house on October 30, 1945, the then minister of national defence, referring to our army of occupation, said:

> Formally the commitment continues until March 31 of next year—

That is, March 31, 1946.

> —but obviously it will not terminate on that day. I think we must proceed on the assumption that it will continue beyond that time.

Unless the minister was then speaking without some knowledge which was possessed by others of his cabinet colleagues, one is justified in assuming that it was government policy that the army of occupation would be maintained for a considerable period beyond March 31, 1946. The minister referred to it in terms of a commitment, and stated that the commitment would continue for some time beyond that day. This again supports the conclusion that it was a firm agreement and undertaking on the part of Canada to maintain this army of occupation.

The next statement was made by the Prime Minister on February 15, 1946. The then minister of national defence had said the commitment would continue beyond March 31, 1946. Up to this time it appears that everything was agreeable and all serene between the parties who were to contribute to the army of occupation. But on February 15, a month and a half before the commitment was to terminate, the Prime Minister made a press statement in which he said that—

> . . . withdrawal from Germany of the Canadian troops in the occupation army would begin early in April, and that with the present shipping forecast all troops now in Germany should be back in Canada by September or October.

So that only some four months after the then minister of national defence had said our commitment would undoubtedly extend beyond March 31, the Prime Minister reversed that stand and said it had now been decided that even before the formal date of expiry of our commitments, our occupation army would be withdrawn.

However, there is still nothing in any of these statements which would support the suggestion that troops were either kicked out or left out of consideration for the army of occupation. This statement of the Prime Minister to which I have referred, read in the light of his previous statement with regard to agreement, is an entirely new decision. In the course of it he said:

> Now that the greater part of the Canadian army has been repatriated the maintenance of a small occupation force thousands of miles from home has become increasingly difficult. Aside from the grave difficulties in certain aspects of administration, the overhead required to provide headquarters, services, amenities, etc., for the Canadian force is inevitably quite out of proportion to its size.

Reading those statements in their context, one would be justified in coming to the conclusion that it was a matter of domestic government policy, a decision arrived at in Canada without reference to any other powers, which determined the withdrawal of the Canadian force.

During the course of the session of 1946 further references were made to this subject. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) placed on the order paper a notice of motion for the production of certain papers. In discussion of the motion, he referred to statements which were made in the British House of Commons regarding the withdrawal of the Canadian army of occupation. Those statements were referred to, and have been referred to on succeeding occasions.

We understand, Mr. Speaker, that the withdrawal of the Canadian force was a subject of communication between the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the Canadian government. Observations in the British House of Commons confirm this, and indicate that the Prime Minister of Great Britain asked the Canadian government to reconsider its decision to withdraw the army of occupation, and that comments were made to the effect that this was imposing upon the United Kingdom an additional burden and strain which, at that time, in view of their shortage of man-power, they were ill-equipped to discharge.

These papers have not yet been produced, although I understand the motion for their production has been reinstated on the order paper. But at the same time the existence of those statements, or the fact that they were made and that the correspondence took place, has not been denied, although it has been referred to several times and ample opportunity for denial has been given. When the hon. member for Nanaimo first placed his motion on the order paper the Prime Minister requested him not to press for the production of these papers because he said the request would have to be resisted.

I think the importance of this matter can be seen in the light of the observations made during the course of the debate on Monday. I realize that I am bound by the rules and I shall try to observe the letter of your ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: May I remind the hon. member that his time expired ten minutes ago. I have allowed him ten minutes in excess of his time because of the discussion which took place on the point of order. I think if I allow him another five minutes it should be sufficient.

Mr. FULTON: I thank you for your generosity, Mr. Speaker, and, through you, the members of the house who have signified their concurrence in that generosity.

As I was saying, the manner in which this matter was referred to during the debate on Monday is the thing which is of paramount importance. I think all hon. members have in mind what was said and they remember the exchanges that took place, so it is not necessary for me to transgress the rules or to do any more than ask the house to remember what was said on that occasion.

I should like to point out what I think is important in connection with this matter. In the light of the statements made by the Prime Minister and other ministers to which I have referred, it is inconsistent, to say the least, to suggest that there was no room for our forces in Europe or that we were asked to withdraw them or that we were not given any place for them in the first instance. I submit that the statements made in answer to the questions which were asked did not give the complete and satisfactory explanation which one would hope would have been given in connection with a subject of this great importance. In view of the statements I have read, I think the recent statement which was made does not reflect what must have been the true position. I believe the statements which I have read substantiate clearly the fact that this decision to withdraw the troops was taken as a result of political and domestic considerations at home. It was taken by those who did not realize at that time the consequence which that decision would have in the light of our subsequent demands for a more effective and full voice at the peace table. To my mind, and certainly in the minds of hon. members of the official opposition, they do indicate that Canada has not been consistent in her foreign policy and has not been consistent in her stand with regard to having a voice in the formulation of the peace treaties.

That is the seriousness of this question and that is what has led me to make these remarks. We feel it is essential that we should have a consistent and well defined foreign policy. I think the house and the country is entitled to a more complete and satisfactory explanation of the reason behind the decision to withdraw the occupation forces. In order that Canada's position in international relations may be maintained and may not be subjected almost to ridicule, it is in the interests of Canada that this position should be made clear so that we cannot be charged with inconsistency in our foreign policy.

As I have pointed out, there were three contradictory statements made by three presumably responsible ministers of the crown, the Prime Minister, the then Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This house and this country would like to know which of those three statements was correct.

Mr. LIONEL BERTRAND (Terrebonne): The imposing legislative programme included in the speech from the throne shows definitely, now that the war is over, that the government intends to rebuild the Canadian economy and to put back into work its peace-time economy. I am glad of this, together with the Canadians who think their country should, during peace time, hold among the united nations the rank which was granted to her by six years of collaboration in the cause of humanity.

During six years in this house measures dealing almost exclusively with war activities took up the whole time of the government and of the members. These strenuous years are now being followed by peace-time sessions, and the one we are now starting shows definitely that the government is directing all its efforts toward peace.

We won the war, but now we must win peace and we must maintain it. Indeed these conferences which are still being attended by the united nations in spite of differences of opinions brought about by the war, in spite of different civilizations and different national policies, reveal that the nations of the world will some day agree upon a form of unity which will give us peace and maintain it after the disorders caused by the last war. But if peace is to be universal, should it not first of all be established within each country? Canada, which has no territorial ambitions, wants universal peace, but in order to assure the prestige she has so valiantly obtained should she not secure internal peace within her own boundaries?

When I say peace within a nation I mean order and quietness, progress and happiness, freedom and satisfaction. During all the war our population accepted the sacrifices that were imposed upon it because it was the war; valiantly, day after day it carried the heavy burden of taxation. It accepted the heavy and boring series of restrictions, the hardness of numerous laws imposed by circumstances, but it never failed to believe that the end of the war would also bring calmer and most serene days, when work would be more plentiful, taxation less heavy and the national economy easier, a better standard of living; in other words, times where one could enjoy life, happiness and freedom to a greater extent. We all had the same dream and cherished the same hopes in order to safeguard our democratic system. These hopes should be materialized. I believe that this session is most important. Our population expects that the present parliament will materialize the hopes they have laid upon us.

During the whole war we joined forces in order to defeat enemies who intended to conquer the whole world. This threat has vanished, but we must still fight with different arms against the internal enemies of the nation. We now must secure the social defence of the country. Too many political creeds have sprung up, are still springing up and will keep on springing up, and, directly or indirectly, willingly or unwillingly, tend to destroy our present society. Their doctrines are being propagated in such a way that, unless we stop them, they will deeply anchor themselves. These propagandists, above all, are persistent. By a constant repetition of the same things in the same words they throw themselves body and soul into a programme for which they will fight like zealots. After they have hypnotized themselves, they hypnotize a group and then a crowd, and finally they create opinions which times or circumstances will not be able to destroy.

I do not need to say that in our country we shall have to check the development of these subversive opinions and of the people who advocate them. This last war created an alarming freedom and an indifferent opinion which is constantly increasing, a feeling of distrust against the established authorities, and even a natural tendency toward insubordination. Here in Canada democracy must prove by concrete facts and by positive proof, even by propaganda and by the elimination of the slightest abuses, that among all forms of government it is still the one which answers best the aspirations of our own people. At present it is far easier to laud illusions than to defend actual facts. You might tell me that I should not attack freedom. I agree with that. But I also think governments are not free to tolerate trickery; during war time laws were enacted to rid us of our enemies; during peace time we shall have to take the same measures against these people who very often were born elsewhere and endeavour to destroy the country which shelters them. We must protect the security of the state, we must protect our civil, religious and parliamentary institutions; furthermore we must secure to our population a maximum of protection, first of all by procuring for them sufficient work, and then social security.

Subversive doctrines, whether they be communism, socialism, or any other, arise out of dissatisfaction, unemployment and poverty. Some are advocating hatred against the happiness or prosperity of their neighbour, others the levelling of natural differences and the equality of our conditions. Others set up the poor against the rich, would like to do away with individual property and wealth, and stir up animosity among social classes; and from these doctrines and programmes others spring up which are more radical and more audacious in many points, and which sometimes appeal effectively to thousands of citizens. These different opinions, which differ only on the surface, sometimes converge and cause difficult times for a nation. If it is urgent to stop the breeding and expansion of doctrines which are inconsistent with our democratic and Christian principles, we must also kill the dreams they are advocating by enacting laws in conformity with the highest aspirations of our democratic principles, by maintaining a high rate of employment, creating employment when necessary, improving working conditions, bettering the fate of our agricultural classes, reducing taxation, removing useless restrictions, facilitating the purchase of individual property, giving impetus in all domains, suppressing causes of dissatisfaction by doing away with abuses.

We must also take advantage of the peace we have won, and no time could be more propitious than now to establish in every way the great Christian code of social security. I am in favour of social solidarity: the old age pension, pensions for the blind and for needy mothers, family allowances, unemployment insurance, workers' compensation, hygiene, agricultural loans, et cetera. All this proves that we care for the general welfare. This is not socialism but the carrying out of social duties, which is quite a different matter. We can never go too far in the way of social security. Social security is a protection for a nation; it ensures peace and order; it prevents the disintegration of moral values, the only real power of society. During the war we did not shun any of our duties in order to save our institutions and even civilization, and I believe that a sound material order can be based only upon a strong moral order. Human measures never impoverished a nation. The great rule of charity, humanity and benevolence still remains the eternal guarantee of the success and progress of a nation.

Therefore I am happy to see that the government will amend the Old Age Pension Act. I am in favour of greater generosity toward our aged and destitute, and this is all the more necessary because today workers are retired at an earlier age than previously, and these people should not have to wait until they are seventy before they are granted a pension. In the speech from the throne the government also announced its intention of broadening its social security programme, and for this purpose to convene or consult the provinces. It is to be commended for this. I am also advocating grants to disabled and crippled people. The resolution I introduced for this purpose during the last session received the wholehearted support of this house. Once more I have put it on the order paper this year.

I will go even farther: I am in favour of insurance against disability and sickness. I believe our people should be protected against the risks of life, against insecurity and misfortune. If certain provinces do not wish to cooperate or contribute toward a higher rate of old age pension, toward grants to crippled and disabled persons, and toward the social programme which the government will soon bring forward and the greater cost of which will be borne by the federal government, then separate agreements should be made with those provinces which are in favour of these measures and, if necessary, this house should take the proper steps to enact the best social security programme. If some provinces wish to play politics with the misfortunes of the people, then they should assume their own responsibilities. We who sit in this house must aim at granting the poor, the modest and the unfortunate their right of well-being and freedom.

I shall always give my whole-hearted support to any social security measure. In my youth, I went through hard times. How many people have I met whom the hazards of life had deprived of all means of support, and condemned to a miserable existence. I feel that in a country such as ours where we lead an easy life, spend money as a matter of course and have everything, even though we pay taxes, we have no right to remain unmoved by the hardships of the social body. To wage war and make sure of victory, the nation spent billions of dollars; can it refuse to devote a few hundred millions to foster happiness and suppress misery? The King government has to its credit splendid achievements in the field of social welfare, and it is planning to initiate new activities even this year. Thus, Canada will be sure that democracy will triumph over political theories which, fashioned for the personal ends of their originators, offer happiness at bargain prices; moreover, the nation is guaranteed peace and tranquillity, within the framework of democracy.

That is all I intended to say on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, but the Union of Electors put out a spiteful article about me, written by a chap named Corbeil who claims to be its chairman. This calls for a few comments on my part which must necessarily deal with the speech made in the house on February 4th by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Caouette). The paper which published it from beginning to end also upbraided me, in the same edition, for sitting on this side of the house.

Newspaperman by trade and not by chance, I accept the challenge of the Union of Electors' president. In my profession, we like to cross swords, and we are not loath to defend ourselves when the occasion arises. I now avail myself of a wonderful opportunity of doing so.

In that newspaper, Mr. Corbeil writes:

> Mr. Bertrand does not understand how Mr. Caouette can associate himself with members of Alberta's Social Credit party, who have supported an imperialistic policy regarding our flag, the war, and gifts to Great Britain. He no doubt confuses our group with a political party; he still does not grasp the idea of a member being responsible to his electors.

Can anyone be more stupid? When looking for an argument, the president of Quebec's Union of Electors publicly admits the Social Credit party's imperialism. Bravo! This fact warrants publication in all daily and weekly newspapers in the province. We are beginning to see behind the mask! The same issue carries the text of a speech delivered on February 4 by the hon. member for Pontiac, who states at page 122 of Hansard:

> The programme of the Social Credit party tallies with the programme of the Electors' Union. That is why I sit with the members of the Social Credit party.
> [Mr. L. Bertrand.]

He has every right to make such a statement; however, in so doing he showed his true political ties. I was awaiting that avowal, because to my knowledge, no member of the Union of Electors has had the courage to state openly that he belonged to the Social Credit party. We now know what party the Union of Electors supports. Its president admits the Social Credit's imperialism and the Union of Electors' sole representative avows his deep love for social credit. What a political liaison! The mask has now been removed.

The chairman of the Union of Electors is surprised to see me on the Liberal side. To kill two birds with one stone, let me refer to the same speech of the hon. member for Pontiac. He said:

> I am quite at ease with the Social Credit group. I believe it is the only one which recognizes real freedom of the individual, which allows one of its members to hold opinions different from those of the leader and other members.

That is not correct. Throughout the war, I do not believe that a single member of the Conservative, C.C.F. or Social Credit parties ever fell out of line with his leader's ideas or party discipline, while some of us did.

Mr. MICHAUD: True.

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne): Many even opposed their own party on controversial topics, such as the plebiscite, gifts and loans, redistribution, etc. They have not gone to the other side and nobody has requested them to do so. I did not break faith either with myself or with my electors when, on various occasions, I held to my own personal views. I cherish my opinions, and nothing in the world can prevent me from voicing them in all sincerity. The Liberal party may have erred—for to err is human—but were it only for the fact that I found there freedom of thought and of speech I should be happy to belong to it once more. Besides, none of the leftist parties has yet shown, by its policy, tenets or position, that it can live up to my conception of a political ideal, especially to my wish to think first and foremost as an unhyphenated Canadian. I dislike imperialism. Social Credit is imperialistic to the core, I cannot sympathize with the Union of Electors because it is only the disguise Social Credit has chosen to assume in the province of Quebec.

Speaking for his party, my hon. friend claims allowances for the crippled and the disabled, and seems to give himself or his party credit for the suggestion. Let us, however, keep the record straight. I seek but to serve my constituents to the best of my ability. I disclaim any wish to stand out or show off but, I must point out that, just as family allowances came as a result of a suggestion made in this house by the honourable member for Compton (Mr. Blanchette), the suggestion of allowances for the crippled and the disabled was originally made here, last session, by a man sitting on this side of the house, the member for Terrebonne. Nor was I merely claiming consideration for the crippled and disabled at 21 but for the disabled of all ages who, though without means of support, did not come under the social legislation then in force. All parties in the house supported my resolution. Besides, I am too firm a believer in this government's sense of social responsibility to doubt that it will soon enact legislation for the special benefit of the crippled and the disabled. I might add that all social measures implemented in Canada on a national basis, have been prepared and submitted by Liberal administrations.

The Union of Electors, alias Social Credit, have a platform that changes with the seasons. Last year, they were calling for tax exemption up to $3,000, while their supreme chief, in Ottawa, was asking for exemption up to $2,000. Last year, and this year again, they were sending us numberless letters asking that all controls be done away with, being of a mind with the Conservatives in this; popular sentiment must have changed, for now the Union of Electors are requesting municipalities to pass resolutions supporting the removal of controls, with the exception of rent control. Besides, the Union of Electors, while denying that they are a political party, play politics in the extreme and broadcast their programme of monthly old age pension allowances of $60 at 60 years of age; monthly allowances of $60 to the cripple and the invalid; monthly dividends of $20 to every citizen of the country. The hon. member for Pontiac, in his speech of February 4, repeats this programme word for word, and there is more, not satisfied with a speech, he wishes to have a debate on the matter and has placed on the Order paper a resolution requesting the implementation of this social programme, without increase in taxation.

I am in favour of all social security measures to help those who have been the victims of misfortune or sickness. With all my hon. colleagues, I am for increased old age pension allowances at an earlier age. This matter of old age pensions would have been settled last summer but for two provincial premiers, one of whom, Gromyko-like, left the meeting. For reasons of petty politics, they caused the failure of the federal-provincial conference.

The resolution of the hon. member for Pontiac and the programme of the Union of Electors border on Utopia and I might even say on election hysteria. In the February 24th issue of Le Droit Mr. Camille L'Heureux, a brilliant newspaperman, criticized the various features of that resolution which to his mind is nothing but a "demagogic chimera". And in a well-reasoned article from which I shall largely draw my arguments he showed quite conclusively that the proposed programme was ridiculous.

At six o'clock, the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

(Translation):

Mr. LIONEL BERTRAND (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, before the six o'clock recess I was saying that the resolution moved by the honourable member for Pontiac and the programme of the Union of Electors border on Utopia, and I might even say on election hysteria.

Mr. CAOUETTE: What about the Liberal party's platform?

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne): I live in Ste. Thérèse and if the honourable member for Pontiac wishes to answer me, I invite him to meet me there.

Mr. CAOUETTE: I shall be there.

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne): A brilliant newspaperman, Mr. Camille L'Heureux, commented in the February 24th issue of Le Droit upon the various features of that resolution, which to his mind is nothing but a "demagogic chimera". In a well-reasoned article from which I shall largely draw my arguments, he showed quite conclusively that the proposed programme was ridiculous.

La Frontière, a weekly newspaper published in Rouyn, where, if I am not mistaken, the hon. member for Pontiac lives, and which is not always in sympathy with the government, describes the resolution as having the character of an election move, and it wonders that any member could in all seriousness put such a resolution on the order paper of the House of Commons.

The Union of Electors disseminates that plan without estimating what it would cost the country.

Twenty dollars a month for each citizen would mean $240 a year. Multiply that amount by our population of 12 million inhabitants and the annual expenditure will total some $2,880,000,000. Moreover, a grant of $60 a month to all those who have reached the age of 60 and over is also contemplated. According to the 1941 census, there are in the country almost 1,200,000 people in that category. This plan would thus call for another annual expenditure of some $850,000,000.

There is more to come. Statistics are lacking on the number of cripples and invalids, but we are justified in estimating that a grant of $720 per annum to each one of them would cost the country several hundred million dollars.

In short, the Union of Electors would implement a four billion dollar a year programme while advocating that taxes be reduced and not increased.

That is a case of election hysteria, of demagogue chimera to quote Mr. L'Heureux once again. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has just announced a two billion dollar budget for 1947-48, and the Union of Electors, with its extravagant programme, asks that it be raised to six billion dollars.

Mr. CAOUETTE: It would benefit Canadians and not foreigners.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne): I repeat to the hon. member for Pontiac that I live in Ste-Therèse and I invite him to submit his programme to our people.

An hon. MEMBER: Lots of money for war.

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne): The position taken by the Social Credit party during the last war is well known.

Mr. CAOUETTE: The Social Credit party did not take any stand.

An hon. MEMBER: You have not heard the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore).

Mr. BOURGET: He took different stands.

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne): If it ever came to pass, the burden of taxation saddled on Canada, which was considered to be the heaviest in the world during the war when our budget amounted yearly to three and a half billion dollars, would grow beyond measure; within ten years our indebtedness would rise to fifty billion dollars, while taxes would be a hundred times heavier than they were during the war.

The Social Credit party claim that their financial methods would settle the problem. Can people in their right senses be taken in by such statements? No. The people want old age pensions at an earlier age, allowances for the needy crippled and invalids, gradual reduction of taxes, continued employment and fair working conditions, opportunity for ownership, in short happiness within the framework of a sound and progressive economy.

The present situation is too serious for empty demagogy to be spreading illogical and misleading delusions in an attempt to cheat the public with ridiculous platforms. Destitution can be conquered. It is our duty to stamp it out. Unemployment can be warded off our national life. It is our duty to create employment where it is lacking. The people are anxious to shield their families from insecurity and the hazards of existence. Let us pass appropriate social legislation. Above all, let the people breathe freely of the tranquillity, the contentment and the peace of our homeland. That is their wish. The people of my province dislike all those peddlers of happiness who pass on, never to return.

(Text):

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, I wish at this time to touch on the question of freight rates generally and, in particular, to discuss their relationship to western Canada. Since the west is largely subservient to the railways as a transportation medium, the matter of freight rates is of paramount concern to the people of the prairies. Because of the application which has been submitted to the board of transport commissioners by the Canadian Railway Association for a thirty per cent increase in freight rates, I shall refrain from making any further reference to the application or the evidence which has been placed before the board for examination. There are, however, certain pertinent facts relating to the subject of freight rates which I should like to discuss at this time, and with your permission, Mr Speaker, I shall present them to the house in this debate.

It is because the imposition of higher freight rates will increase the cost of production for farmers and the cost of living for wage-earners in the west, that farm, business and consumer organizations in that area—and, I believe, in the maritime provinces as well—are vigorously and earnestly opposing any increase. I wish to add my voice in further protest against adding to the burden which the west and the maritimes feel they already bear in carrying more than their fair share of the operating expenses of the Canadian railway system. I think it is generally accepted that the railways have been faced with increased operating expenses. There have been some increases in wages, but they have certainly not been out of line with increased living costs. Certainly the wages of maintenance of way employees, when the onerous nature of their employment is considered, are still woefully inadequate. Material costs have also advanced, and these advances tend to elevate operating expenses. The freight tariffs now in effect are much the same as those operating twenty years ago. Even prior to the war, railway operating overhead had so increased that neither the Canadian Pacific railway nor the government-owned railways were on a paying basis. Only the enormous traffic of the war years enabled them to operate at a profit. When traffic returns to normal it is quite conceivable that, with the railways' methods of accounting, they may experience difficulty in showing an operating profit. Because of this contingency, one must consider the question of freight rates and the successful operation of our railway system as a major problem likely to affect the welfare of the whole dominion.

Prairie people now, as in the past—and I believe this also applies to maritimers—are quite prepared to assume their share of transportation costs. But for years westerners have felt that they have been harnessed with freight charges definitely out of line with the charges being made in central Canada. The central provinces benefit from competitive rates, the effect of water and highway transportation competing with the railways in that area. The general freight tariff structure on the prairies is fifteen per cent higher than for the central provinces, and in British Columbia it is sixteen per cent higher than for the prairies. A freight charge of $1 in Ontario becomes $1.15 on the western plains and $1.49 in the British Columbia region. During the nineteen and a half year period ending in 1925, the net earnings of the western lines were more than double those in the eastern region. According to figures released in the 1925-27 equalization of rates case, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's net earnings in the western region were $520,000,000, while in the eastern region the net income of the same company was $241,000,000. The freight rate structure during those years was similar to that in effect today. These figures indicate that losses sustained in operations in central Canada were retrieved by increased profits in the west; in other words, profits on the western lines were being used to subsidize operations in eastern Canada. This discrimination in charges as between the east and the west—

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I should like to direct his attention to the memorandum I prepared on this matter, which was read by the Deputy Speaker yesterday, and particularly to this paragraph:

> In making this statement, I have not overlooked the fact that the only discussion excluded by the rule is the matter actually before the board of railway commissioners, namely an application by the railways for an increase in freight rates.

I would ask the hon. member to abide by the rule.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that, when rising to speak, the hon. member pointed out that he was not going to deal with the application now pending before the board. that he was merely dealing with the effect of the railway rates on the economy of Canada. I have been listening carefully and, as far as I could hear, that is what he has done.

Mr. REID: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have been listening attentively to the speech by the hon. member, and I do not believe he is touching at all upon the matter now before the board of transport commissioners. Grain is definitely left out of the appeal. The application before the board of transport commissioners has to do with everything but grain and coal, so I would respectfully suggest that when an hon. member discusses freight rates generally he is not dealing with the application at all.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not want to disagree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and last evening I said clearly that I did not think any hon. member should be interrupted who wants to refer to freight rates generally. But in essence the hon. gentleman is discussing exactly what is before the board of transport commissioners today. He has referred to the discrimination alleged to exist between freight rates in the east and in the west. That is exactly what counsel have been arguing before the board. There can be no difficulty or doubt about that. I hope the hon. gentleman will understand that I do not want to interfere with free speech, but certainly there is no doubt in my own mind that what he is discussing is on all fours with the evidence given before the board.

Mr. MAYBANK: Contrary to what the Minister of Transport has just said, I believe there is a great difference between what is going on before the transport board and what is being dealt with here tonight. That which is before the transport board I have in my hand, in the application of the railway association, and this is precisely what they are asking: The railway association applies under section so-and-so for authority to make a general advance of thirty per cent. That is the only thing before the transport board, and that is the only thing one may not discuss here. The mere fact that counsel may mention something else before the board surely would not preclude a member of the House of Commons from mentioning the same thing here. If that were the case the only thing necessary to gag all members of parliament would be for some person, before some tribunal, in some matter under consideration by a judge, to present a certain argument. Immediately, to use a golfing term, a member of parliament would be stymied; he would not be able to deal with that matter at all. The sole question before the board is a thirty per cent increase and, I should suppose, any increase less than thirty per cent. But as long as one is not dealing with what the transport board is being asked to do, with a view to arguing the merits or demerits of it, then I submit that everything else with respect to freight rates is obviously in order.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend is quite right when he says the sole issue before the board—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I think I have the right to bring up this point, on the point of order. My hon. friend is quite right when he says the sole application before the board is for an increase in freight rates. But surely my hon. friend knows that those who are asked to appear with respect to that application have the right to reply on other matters, and they have in their reply pleaded this particular matter of the discrimination which may exist as between certain parts of Canada, with respect to both freight rates generally and what are known as regional rates. That matter has been discussed and evidence has been submitted. That is the point I am making, and I add that, in effect, that is what the hon. gentleman is discussing.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I just submit that the matter of discrimination as between east and west does not constitute any part of the application to the board itself. The application is for a thirty per cent increase across the board. Consequently I suggest that hon. members, regardless of the point under discussion at the present time, should be permitted to discuss anything affecting their constituencies, with the sole exception of the actual application, which does not involve the matter mentioned by the minister. Supposing counsel brings forward some other consideration extraneous to the actual application, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) suggested a few moments ago. That should not preclude a member of this house from discussing everything but the thirty per cent increase.

Mr. TUCKER: I wish to say a word. Surely it is not to be held in this parliament that rates which are a matter of public knowledge, which must be filed and which are available to everyone, cannot be referred to by making the statement that western Canada is being discriminated against in the matter of freight rates. Surely it will not be held that we cannot refer to these rates, which are public knowledge and public property, just because they have been referred to by the board of transport commissioners. Those things, after all are a matter of public record. Surely the mere fact that they are being discussed before the board of transport commissioners does not prevent our laying the facts before parliament

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call the attention of the house to the fact that I did not say the hon. member was out of order. I called his attention to the fact that he should be careful because he was on the borderline. Hon. members will understand that it is the duty of Mr. Speaker to ask them to abide by the rules; he has no choice but to do that. After hearing the hon. members who spoke a few seconds ago on the point of order, and since it would appear that some who have had wide experience disagree in the matter of discussing a point of this kind, hon. members will realize the difficulty facing Mr. Speaker when he must decide as to whether a matter should or should not be discussed. I would insist, however, that hon. members be kind enough to cooperate with the Chair in order that the debate may stay within the rules of the house.

Mr. McKAY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Incidentally, I have not mentioned the thirty per cent increase, and I do not propose to do so. I left off with a reference to a certain discrimination in charges which exists between the east and the west and which has been exposed in several investigations. However nothing has been done wholly to remove the discrimination. Costs of operation have increased on all railway lines, east and west; it has been general across Canada. If these increased costs must be met by increased carrying charges, which I definitely question, the increase should be fairly apportioned and placed where it rightly belongs. Rates should be equitable and not excessive for any part of Canada.

When speaking in Saint John, New Brunswick, on November 25, 1946, Mr. D. C. Coleman, the retired president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, was quoted in the Telegraph-Journal as having said:

> Any producing or trading centre is entitled to the advantages of its geographical location and its proximity to markets, but that railway rates cannot fairly be adjusted to relieve a centre of its geographical disadvantages.

If the word "areas" had been substituted for "centre" in this statement the east would be entitled to low rates resulting from water, highway and United States railway competition. But Mr. Coleman did not use the word "areas", because, by his doing so, the western provinces would be entitled to lower rates on account of the unchallengeable advantages of their location. Density of traffic, flat terrain which cuts operating expenses, and long hauls favour low rates for the prairies. Lack of water and highway competition on the plains, however, maintain rates at the maximum, and profits realized in that area go to make up losses in revenue in the central regions of Canada.

I say that because lower charges are forced upon the railways in central parts of Canada on account of the competition from other carriers. It has been repeatedly stated in the press that the suggested increase in rates would return $84 million in revenue to the railways. That is the sum of $7 million each month taken from the pockets of westerners and maritimers to assist the railways to operate more profitably. I say "westerners and maritimers" since other modes of transportation in central Canada will protect consumers there. In the west—and I must be pardoned for speaking from the western viewpoint, since I am more familiar with the situation there,—wholesalers, producers and manufacturers maintain that, under present freight rates in relation to present prices, their margin of profit is not large. They maintain that any increase in freight rates would certainly have to be followed by an authorization from the wartime prices and trade board for commodity price increases which would be added to consumer prices. Thus any increase in carrying charges, either now or in the future, is of vital concern to every farmer and wage-earner in the west. The farmer will realize less income from the products he sells and, in turn, will find the costs of consumer goods considerably higher. The cost of living for all will appreciably increase.

A survey conducted by the Leader-Post of Regina, which in this instance rendered a service to everyone in the west, reveals that butter and poultry producers would suffer a loss of revenue exceeding $1 million yearly. Increased charges for farm machinery would range upwards of a quarter of a million dollars a year. Live stock producers would have to pay out half a million dollars more in freight charges. Housewives would find their monthly store bills up at least five per cent. Hardware and lumber prices, already high, would climb substantially, and prove a further deterrent to prospective building.

In Regina alone it is estimated that building costs would increase by at least $100,000 a year. Prospective buyers of automobiles and trucks would have an average of $30 added to the price of each vehicle. Furniture, clothing and electrical appliances will all cost the consumer more. Wholesale grocers in the same city state that canned goods would carry an additional freight charge of forty-one cents per 100 pounds; and sugar, which has a rate of $1.41 per 100 pounds would be increased to $1.84 for the same quantity.

A few months ago an increase of thirteen cents an hour for steel workers was considered by Mr. Donald Gordon, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, as likely to break the price ceiling, and was, in general effect, inflationary. So far, to my knowledge, there has been no comment offered by Mr. Gordon with regard to the effect of a general freight rate increase on the price structure of the country. If an increase of thirteen cents an hour to a few thousand steel workers is, in effect, inflationary, one must assume that increased freight charges which will increase commodity prices will make the holding of the price control line exceedingly difficult. Therefore any increase in freight charges contains a threat to the welfare of Canadians in all parts of the country.

There should be no attempt to be unfair to the railways. On the other hand, if an over-all increase in freight rates is discriminatory in effect it may have dangerous consequences. The imposition of an unfair and unwieldy freight structure upon any region of Canada can well develop an anti-confederation attitude. This has manifested itself on several occasions, both in the maritimes and in the west. This, of course, is to be avoided. All Canadians must remember that confederation should be based on equality and that economic discrimination against any area in the dominion may create separatist sentiments. I suggest that now is the opportune time to examine the whole freight rate structure so as to remove existing inequalities. Now is the time to set up a royal commission, if you will, to investigate thoroughly all charges of discrimination which have been levelled against the railways by western and other organizations. I submit that, until this whole matter is ironed out to the satisfaction of both the west and the maritimes, no body is in any position to appraise the need for a general increase in railway rates of any kind.

I have already referred to the accounting system employed by the railways; but, leaving that for the moment, I wish to draw the attention of the house to another situation. The war years brought enormous industrial development to this nation. Even though we are now at peace, there continues to be an increased income from trade. It is to be hoped that this improved state in our economy will provide much more revenue for our transportation system than in pre-war days.

Again referring to the accounting systems of the railways, I question the method which makes heavy charges against operations to provide huge reserves. It was reported in the Toronto Daily Star of January 3, 1947, that Canadian Pacific reserves had increased to $332 million by the end of 1945, and this after paying dividends for 1944 and 1945 of almost $42 million. Moreover, according to the bulletin "Railways of Canada 1945", issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce, the depreciation reserves, deferred maintenance and other contingencies funds of the combined railways of Canada had reached the huge total of $493,963,000 by the close of 1945. It may be safely assumed that these figures are substantially higher today. This fact should be carefully considered when one is examining the financial position of our railways.

In so far as the Canadian National Railways is concerned, one must view with alarm the enormous overhead of this railway. The government railway has never had an opportunity to operate on the right side of the ledger except during war time, and that situation has not been owing to inadequacy of either passenger or freight revenue. If adjustments were made to the capital structure under which this system labours I question very much if there would be any demand from this source for an increase in rates of any kind. The Canadian National Railways was organized from bankrupt, privately owned lines with impossible capital debts. No railway in America carries the burden of debt which the government-operated railway bears. No privately operated railroad anywhere would have assumed the liabilities foisted upon the national system by past federal administrations. Generosity, presumably to friends of governments then in power, apparently dictated the policies of those days.

[Mr. McKay.]

The bondholders and shareholders were in most cases well provided for. Now, when deficits occur because of an unwieldy and unfair debt overhead, all Canadians are forced to contribute to the bondholders of defunct private enterprise railways, either through raids on the public treasury or by increased railway carrying charges.

The first railway to fail was the Grand Trunk Pacific, which was followed by the Canadian Northern and others. The accumulated debt of these bankrupt privately owned roads amounted to well over $1,200 million. No one has yet explained why these bankrupt enterprises were not taken over at face value, at so many cents on the dollar. There should have been a revaluation of stock as would have been done in private business.

While the hodgepodge of privately constructed railways was being integrated into an efficient national system, the United States railways were undergoing a reorganization of a different kind. Many United States railways went into the hands of receivers and debts were reduced as much as fifty per cent. No such financial reorganization occurred with the government railways with the consequence that prior to the war this system was unable to meet the interest charges on its more than a billion dollar debt.

Some relief was granted in 1937, it is true, when the Capital Revision Act wiped out loans granted by the government to meet operating deficits. Previously such loans were added to capital debt. The same act changed government loans for capital purposes prior to 1932 to equity capital which meant that interest was paid by the Canadian National only in years of declared surplus. Even with these adjustments, interest charges were still twenty-eight per cent of gross revenue, while the Canadian Pacific rates were seventeen per cent, and that of class 1 United States railways was sixteen per cent. There was obviously no attempt to place the government railway on a comparative basis with any other railway. It seems apparent that, unless the government writes down the Canadian National Railways capital debt structure, this railway cannot ever be profitably operated, regardless of freight and other rates charged. I appeal to the government to assume directly some of the liabilities charged against the Canadian National Railways so that the system may have a square deal. If this adjustment is not made the state operated railways are handicapped so as to preclude a proper comparison with railways operating under private ownership. The efficiency of operating personnel is defeated by unreasonable and unfair overhead.

Included in the national system is the Intercolonial railway which serves the maritimes. Just a brief word about this railway. The Intercolonial railway was built for political rather than for economic reasons. It was intended to cement the maritimes into the confederation block and to be as far removed from the United States border as was feasible. This may have served a strategic purpose a half century ago, but it created a long freight haul to and from the maritimes. The alleviation from excessively high freight rates over this route received some consideration in the 1927 Maritime Freight Rates Act. The effect of this legislation should have been to place the maritime areas on an equal footing with central Canada. However, the application of maximum charges set forth in the act still militates against the provinces down by the sea. Central Canada has efficient highway competition which forces charges down below the maximum permitted; therefore the differential existing prior to 1927 is, in effect, practically unchanged.

May I commend to the government the facts just presented. In order to appreciate thoroughly the effects of the present rate structure and the possibility of an increase to the west and the maritimes, a careful study should be made of all facts pertaining thereto. An examination of the effects of the whole freight rate structure upon our economic life should be ascertained. It is my opinion that freight rates for essential goods should be held to a minimum. Moreover, there must not be regional discrimination. Should periods occur when operating expenses exceed revenues the nation as a whole should be responsible for the deficits. All parts of Canada should assume a part of that burden if it should occur. The future welfare of Canada as a nation might well be at stake if rates are to vary in different parts of the country. Moreover, it is time that the railways' dependence on the west for top operating revenue stopped. Until now the west has carried the major load in providing the railways with profits. Easterners, when apprised of this truth, will, I am sure, join with us in demanding that the federal government assume responsibility for an equalization of the freight rate burden, so that the extremities of this nation, the western provinces on the one hand and the maritimes on the other, may receive the square deal to which they are entitled.

Mr. C. C. I. MERRITT (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, in this debate we are discussing an amendment expressing want of confidence in this government, and I am sorry that I do not see in the house tonight many ministerial targets for my remarks. I shall have to content myself with my good friend the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie), for whom I have a special message this evening.

First, however, I wish to make a short reference to the withdrawal of the Canadian army of occupation from Europe and to the bearing of that on the amendment which has been moved by my leader.

This afternoon we heard quoted the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in 1945, when he said that the army of occupation as then planned was modest, having regard to our direct interest in world peace. With that statement in mind, Mr. Speaker, I say to you that the withdrawal of that force can only mean that Canada ceased to contribute to the discharge of her direct responsibility which goes with that direct interest. The reason given at the time was administrative difficulties. I wish to say to the house and particularly to the government that that reason fooled no one at the time and it fools no one now. There would not have been a reference to this matter from this side of the house had it not been for the attempt to base this withdrawal on a question of principle. I think that attempt was exploded by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) this afternoon, if indeed it needed exploding, because actually I think it blew back on him who attempted to put it forward.

What are the facts and the very simple facts? At the end of the war we had in Europe an army of occupation, consisting of approximately one division. It included many long-service men, men who had fought through most of the fighting and who were being kept, for the time being, in that army of occupation against their will. It is obvious that the government could not have left those men over there doing that duty when there were short-service men at home. It is obvious too that this government would not send replacements over to take the place of these long-service men. That is the beginning and the end of the mystery of the army of occupation. That was the administrative difficulty and I say to you tonight, Mr. Speaker, that it was a difficulty of political expediency and that only, and it is no use trying to make out anything else.

I wish to say to the government, too, and particularly to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton), who, I am sorry, is not in his seat at the moment, that in his recently expressed concern for the hearth and home of the Canadian soldier I believe he misjudges young Canadians. The young Canadian soldier does not like separation from his home. Who does? Nobody does. But the interest of all the young men of this country is in the future of their country first and in the future of their sons and their sons' sons, and it is not in any temporary disagreeable circumstances that they must put up with if they are to lead Canada on to the great future that is undoubtedly before us as a nation. I say to the government, with all the seriousness at my command, that if the absence of a few young men in Canada's service from Canada now would make any contribution to the cause of world peace in the future many young Canadians would go to the ends of the earth and stay there if this government had the fortitude to ask them so to do. If it comes to a choice between principle and expediency there never has been much doubt in the minds of the Canadian people what course this government would take.

Take national defence, for instance. On February 12 in this house, the Prime Minister reiterated the pledge he gave to President Roosevelt and indeed to the Canadian people that there was an obligation on Canada to do everything in her power to defend herself from attack from without and to prevent any aggressor from moving across Canadian soil against our great neighbour to the south. Contrast that statement of our obligation with the provision which this government has made for national defence.

Take management-labour relations. The whole history of management-labour relations under this government has been one of inability to attempt to enforce the law as it stood at any one time, again because of the political inexpediency of so doing. Or take the socialist legislation of which we have seen many an example during this session. Is this really a Liberal party opposite us, Mr. Speaker? That is what I think many people in Canada want to know. These are some of the reasons why we lack confidence in this government.

Take housing, and I wish to devote the rest of my remarks to that subject. We had a statement from the Minister of Reconstruction (Mr. Howe) on housing early in this debate, and I desire to congratulate him and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) on being the only two ministers who have made statements of government policy since we assembled here in January, although much time has been taken up by members on this side asking for such statements. The Minister of Reconstruction at least made a statement, and he took great pride in the fact that there had been built in Canada last year 60,000 houses and that his target for 1947 was 80,000. He can take what comfort he likes out of that, but to do so looks to me very much like pulling oneself up by one's bootstraps. Simply to meet this self-imposed quota will not do very much to house the people in this country who need homes so badly. What has been the government's policy of which they are so proud and which was to produce 60,000 houses? The priority system has been a joke. Less than twenty per cent of the houses built in Canada have been built with priority assistance. Large industrial orders have taken most of the remainder of the building material that has been produced. The private builder has had to scramble to get any material and yet he has built over eighty per cent of Canada's houses. Shortly put, that is the result of the government's housing policy.

I wish to test that by two further facts. I hold in my hand an extract of the Maclean building reports, as quoted in the Financial Post. It shows that in the ten months of 1946, up to November 1, the proportion of residential building in 1946 as compared with non-residential building has fallen 15·1 per cent since 1945. That is a pretty good gauge of what the housing policy of this government has brought about. For three years before the war the proportion of housing to industrial production has been over fifty per cent, and this year it has dropped to 39·6 per cent. Then again, testing it by the same report on the total construction contracts awarded in Canada, I find that engineering contracts increased 212 per cent over 1945; commercial and industrial contracts increased 123·5 per cent over 1945; industrial contracts increased 102·7 per cent over 1945 and, if you please, residential construction contracts awarded increased 8·9 per cent. That will give the house some idea of the way in which this government distributes building material.

Even if there were completed the 60,000 houses in 1946, in my own city of Vancouver in the twelve months of 1946 there were actually fewer houses completed than were completed in 1945. That took place in a city which is growing faster than any other city in Canada and which has a housing shortage that I have every reason to believe is the worst in the country. We built fewer houses in 1946 than we did in 1945.

I now turn to the question of stimulation of building material which was the real job of the government, instead of fooling around with priorities and things like that. What has happened? Last April the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply took over the job of stimulating building material. We had been asking him to do so for a year but it had not been done. However he started a year late, and I believe he has worked hard. What did he find he had to do in order to stimulate building material? He has had to give price reliefs from the price ceiling; he has had to give incentive subsidies to get increased production; he has had to reverse the taxation policy by giving double depreciation; he has had to make loans for capital development. The people presumably have been taxed so hard that they have not the money for that purpose. He has had to give guaranteed markets to some firms before they had confidence enough in the government's policies to increase their output. And after a great newspaper campaign he finally got around—and I think this was a year and a half late—to pulling down the Debert camp and other big camps and distributing that building material where it should have gone a long time before. Despite taking these heroic measures to stimulate the building materials—and certainly I consider reversing the government's policy an heroic measure—what is the fact now? We have heard from Vancouver and Toronto in the last two days that there is an acute shortage of nails and that houses cannot be finished because of that.

The production of nails in 1946 was down fifteen per cent over 1945, despite the government's attempt to stimulate the market. I know hon. gentlemen opposite will say that there was a big steel strike last year. That is true, and it was the chief cause of the diminution in the production of nails. But whose responsibility is it for good management-labour relations if it is not the responsibility of the government? Anyone who sat on the industrial committee last year knows that strike could have been settled at 13½ cents an hour, or whatever figure it was settled at, on the first day of the strike. If the government was going to reverse its policy and go over the ten cent limit it was not necessary to keep the steel workers out for eighty days and thereby slow down the production of nails. That is a simple answer to that shortage. I hope that the people of Canada who are suffering from a shortage of nails will know it stems back to the weak policy of the government in dealing with a great management-labour problem.

There is one more thing I wish to add on the general subject of housing, and that has to do with low-rent housing. In the minister's statement earlier in the debate, he laid down the policy of the government as opposed to the introduction of low-rent housing. By that I mean municipal corporations assisted by both provincial and dominion governments bringing about low rental housing for those in the low-income groups and to those living in slum dwellings. I wish to say to the government that if that is their policy it is completely unrealistic.

I hold in my hand a voluminous report of the Vancouver Housing Association which made a detailed and intelligent survey in my own city before the war and brought it up to date in 1945. They have no doubts about the need for low rental housing for the lower income group. There are very few social, public or municipal bodies in the country, except this government, which have any doubts on that score. Knowing conditions as I do in my own city and constituency, I say the minister's suggestion that we can get along under the "filtering up" process is so unrealistic as to be unworthy of a man whom I consider to be realistic.

Finally, I wish to turn to the question which has been discussed several times in the house, and particularly yesterday and today, namely the administration of housing under the Veterans Land Act, the small holdings. There is no question that the way in which the small holdings project or programme has developed in Canada in the last two years amounts to a public scandal.

In this debate we have heard from the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy), who has told us about the Sarnia and Windsor houses; we have heard the minister; we have heard from the hon. member from Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) with regard to the Braefoot subdivision; we have heard from the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) about the Charleswood project, and yesterday we heard about the wartime housing project in the Louth subdivision near St. Catharines. I wish to call the attention of the house to the fact that the conditions in all of these subdivisions across the country are the same. In every case there is bad workmanship; in every case drainage apparently has not been thought of at all; in every case there has been bad material delivered to the job and apparently also in one case short material. In every case the veteran has ended up with being charged an excessive cost for the work which was done, and a cost which was very much over what he was led to believe, by the government pamphlets, he would be charged for one of these houses.

I just wish to add my little song to that of the other members on this side of the house. I have an example from Lulu island near Vancouver, in the Veterans Land Act subdivision there, which I have called to the attention of the minister. This was the case of a veteran who was wounded overseas, who has a wife and child and whose wife was expecting another. Last June he bought his house and the contract price was $5,861.22. This winter he has had to vacate his house. There were eight inches of water under it. His septic tank was leaking and flooding the land. Two houses away, the whole top of a septic tank simply floated off, and brought about such a condition in the area that the veteran had to vacate and go into the town. His wife went to stay with her parents and he went to stay with his, both of them sleeping on couches in the living room.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I interrupt my hon. friend for a second? I do not wish to interfere with the theme of his speech, but he realizes that when he wrote me about that case, I took it up with the authorities under the Veterans Land Act. They visited that particular house and found conditions different from the way in which my hon. friend now describes them.

Mr. MERRITT: Yes, I am well aware that the director of the Veterans Land Act took up this case. The minister was kind enough to send me the report, which suggested that the flooding conditions were not serious; and I answered the minister on that score.

I have in my hand two photographs. I wish that Hansard were an illustrated document, but I will try to illustrate to the house what these photographs show. One of them shows "the back of the house which I have." You can see the reflections of two telephone poles in the water and the water is covered with ripples, there being on this day quite a wind. I would not call that just dampness, and I doubt if the house would. Then I have another photograph, which is of "my next door neighbour's place, and it was nearly as bad as my own." There you can see not only the reflection of the telephone pole but the reflection of the whole house in the water; and you can trace perfectly clearly in the water the reflection of a ladder which lies against the side of the house and which may have been used to climb from the boat into the house. Those are serious conditions, and are not such as could warrant the director's characterization of this situation as being not serious. It seems to me that anyone who does not live in such a place should at least withhold comment on the "relative" seriousness of the flooding of one's basement.

Mr. TUCKER: Is the hon. member referring to the city of Vancouver when he says "live in such a place"?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MERRITT: As a matter of fact, although I do not see what it has to do with the discussion, I am referring to a Veterans Land Act project situated, not in the city of Vancouver but outside the city limits, which is under the direct responsibility of the department of the minister to whom my hon. friend who has just spoken is the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Who took the photographs? Where did they come from?

Mr. MERRITT: The photographs came from the man himself.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The man about whom the hon. member wrote to me?

Mr. MERRITT: Yes. I received them just today, which I consider very fortunate.

Mr. ROWE: You might send the minister a copy.

Mr. MERRITT: I will send them over to the minister. I just outlined that case to show that there is hardly a place in Canada where these same conditions do not exist.

I now wish to refer to the minister's speech. He ended up yesterday by referring to our main interest in the veterans. He made promises to repair the damage and expressed his desire for the cooperation of all members of the house and the hope that we would be satisfied with his frankness with us yesterday. I can assure him of the cooperation of every member of this party. We raise this matter only because it must be raised and must be settled, and he has our full cooperation. We appreciate his frankness. We know that the minister personally has every good wish toward the veterans and would do anything in his power to assist their cause; but those good wishes are not enough and the minister's speech is not enough. We need results as well as good wishes with respect to these Veterans Land Act projects.

I am now going to outline some of the results we hope to attain before we stop talking about these matters. We want the following assurances from the minister, from the point of view of the veteran. First, we want to be assured that all these houses will be put back in proper repair. I think he has given us that assurance. We want to be assured further that the drainage problem will be attacked immediately and successfully and not at the cost of any of the veterans on any of these projects. Those are the first things upon which we want the most positive assurances. We do not want to wait, as one correspondent of mine suggested, ten years before a municipality can get certain pumps and thereby drain the low-lying land. We want these houses fixed so that the men can live in them now. We want the most energetic steps taken at once.

Second, we want the assurance—and this is particularly important—that no veteran who has a house in bad repair or with bad drainage is called upon to sign a contract until he has satisfied himself that the house has been repaired so that he can keep it as his home and be proud of it in the future. This is a most important point, because it is my information that in the Charleswood project veterans have been given until May 1 to sign these contracts for these houses, even although they are not fully repaired, or else they must vacate. That attitude on the part of the officials of the minister's department, if it is correctly described, is not, I think, the one the minister himself would adopt toward any veteran. So we want that matter looked into and an assurance given us that that kind of thing will not occur. There have been other cases of pressure by officers of the Veterans Land Act division of the minister's department, pressure to sign up originally, pressure to hurry up and make a choice. We have much evidence of that kind of thing, and we want the minister to look personally into the question of what pressure is being put upon these veterans.

Mr. MACKENZIE: By the department?

Mr. MERRITT: By the departmental officials, so that, as some of us believe, the shortcomings of the people who administer this scheme might thereby be minimized.

I wish to make particular reference to the remarks of the director, in the case I referred to the minister. In addition to suggesting that this "lake" was not seriously flooding, he also suggested that perhaps the veteran had acted with too great haste in accepting this house, and that, after all, the veteran had not been able to provide himself with a house from any other source. If that is the attitude of the director I say I believe it is the duty of the minister to have that attitude corrected. The veteran has no responsibility whatever for the fact that he is without housing accommodation. It is not his fault that he cannot get a house on his own resources, and that sort of statement does not give me confidence in the eventual happy settlement of these difficulties under this administration.

Mr. MACKENZIE: With reference to the pressure mentioned by my hon. friend, would he be good enough to send me any cases which have come to his attention? I have received none up to the present time, and I should be glad to have them.

Mr. MERRITT: Yes, I shall be very glad to do so; I have some here. It seems to be thought by some of the officials of this department that, as to these veterans who have flooded or badly constructed houses, the principle of caveat emptor applies; that these veterans, having bought the houses, must take them as they are and suffer the consequences. I want to say to the minister that in the circumstances in which this small holdings scheme under the land act was born and introduced to the veterans who came back from overseas, there is a great responsibility on the government, as I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs appreciates, to lean over backwards in seeing to it that these veterans get every possible break, and even more breaks than they would have been given in an ordinary commercial contract. The very fact that they were contracting with the government which said it owed them such an obligation was likely to make them less careful in regard to the business details; and if a house was recommended to them by a government official, many of these men would not think it necessary to make any inquiries themselves before signing up. I think there is a great paternal obligation on the government to people settled in these subdivisions.

Mr. TUCKER: Would the hon. member not admit that any of these cases which have been brought to the attention of the department have been looked into right away and rectified if at all possible?

Mr. MERRITT: Yes; I want to assure the minister and his parliamentary assistant that I personally have had every courtesy from both hon. gentlemen in regard to these matters, but I am talking of the way things sift down across this wide country; and it does appear to me that there is need to jack up the administration under the Veterans' Land Act. My goodness, it is perfectly clear to everybody that there is a need for this. Bad workmanship; floods; choice of location—these are not the results that flow from competent management.

There is a third assurance we want from the minister; that is, that the excessive costs of these homes will not have to be borne by the veterans. As to that I wish first to refer to the resolution of the veterans affairs committee contained in its final report of July 25 of last year; it is recommendation No. 2, on page 6:

That the government give consideration to the introduction of a bill to amend the Veterans' Land Act, 1942, to provide that the total cost of all homes over six thousand dollars presently constructed or in actual process of construction under the small holdings scheme be subsidized twenty-three and one-third per cent.

I hope we may be assured by the minister that effect will be given to this recommendation now. Then I want to ask the minister to see to it that a revaluation is made of all these damaged and flooded houses. I say these houses were built on a cost plus management fee basis; that they are now damaged goods, and that you cannot expect to get cost plus fixed fees for damaged goods. Even if they are repaired, in many cases they will not be as suitable for the veteran as they would have been otherwise. Each house should be revalued to make sure the veteran is not called upon to pay more than he should for it.

I want to make the second point, that in this revaluation any consequential damage which has been suffered by the purchaser through no fault of his own should be taken into account in fixing the final price. To mention again the case I referred to the minister, in order to give him my idea of consequential damage, that veteran went on the land last summer, ploughed it and paid for the ploughing. His wife bought curtains, carpets and so on to fit that house, together with many other household accessories that go only with the house in which you are living, as many hon. members know. These are consequential damages, for which that man should be reimbursed. In the case in point the veteran concerned is now being given a wartime house and his deposit on the house under the Veterans' Land Act has been returned, so that his case is dead except as an example, but for this consequential damage. In his new wartime house, however, he has lost the value of his ploughing, his curtains and so on, and is suffering considerable inconvenience for which, under a commercial contract, he would be reimbursed. I think that should be taken into account in the revaluation. It is not as though caveat emptor applied; it is not as though he knew the house was going to be flooded. On the facts as related to me he did not know that. The local officials knew it, however, because, when the house was being built the previous winter, men could not get in to work on the place for several days, and all the neighbours were surprised when this man moved into the place. Apparently that was a disability within the knowledge of the department and not within the knowledge of the veteran, so that I do not believe he should suffer for that.

From the point of view of the taxpayer, hon. members on this side of the house would like certain requirements met. The first is that all necessary repairs shall be done at the expense of the contractors. The minister said that was being looked into. I understand that in most government contracts there is a "sound workmanship" clause. It seems to me the things we have heard about cannot be considered sound workmanship, and must be in breach of contract. The general public should not be called upon to pay for those repairs. Then, by order in council last year, with the approval of the veterans affairs committee, $1,000,000 was applied to this project. We should like to know whether that floated away with the top of the septic tank, or what happened to it, and why it has not reduced the cost to the veterans.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I may say that part of it, in any event, has been carefully and prudently expended.

Mr. MERRITT: I simply suggest that we should like to know.

Then I believe we should cut out these cost plus fixed fee contracts, and I shall give my reason for that. I have a case here of one of the Braefoot houses, which was worked out at a cost per square foot of $8.14. Last summer, in the debate on housing, the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply gave the National Housing Act figure as $4.20 per square foot, with an increase of ten per cent last year. So that apparently under the National Housing Act, in calculating lending value, one is allowed $4.62 per square foot and this house cost $8.14 per square foot. I had some figures from Vancouver for private housing at $6 per square foot. I believe I have said enough to show what is wrong with a cost plus management fee contract.

What we want is that the government shall not simply say, "Oh it was very hard; we could not get good materials; we could not get good workmen." They had good materials to make munitions of war; they had good workmen to make munitions of war. I am sorry to say I cannot accept that excuse for the bad workmanship in these projects. Good inspection—the inspection upon which the government insists under the National Housing Act—would have obviated every bit of this.

A letter from the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) in September, 1945, called the danger of bad drainage to the attention of the department. Therefore there could have been no reason why that was not properly looked after. I believe the taxpayers should know that any sum of money they have to pay, which is not paid by the contractors, is the responsibility of the government.

I realize I have only a short time left to speak, but with the time at my disposal I would refer to the suggestion for a royal commission. The minister has said that a royal commission would do no good because it would keep people waiting for a year to have repairs done. We do not want a royal commission before the repairs are done; we want that to go ahead at top speed. But what we do want a royal commission to do is to see that these financial adjustments, of which I have spoken, are carried out, and to see that the mess in connection with these projects does not fall on the veteran, and that it does not fall on the taxpayers any more than it must.

My final word is this, that against the failures of this government in housing, labour relations, foreign affairs, tax reductions and many other things which hon. members have mentioned, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in this debate took pride in the fact that forty per cent of the voters of Canada voted for his party and government during the recent by-election. I say to him, Mr. Speaker, that it is high time we got rid of a government which prides itself on forty per cent efficiency.

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that this evening and on other occasions the question of freight rates, in a general way, has been discussed. And in a "general" way I also wish to enter into discussion of the freight rate structure of the country, from the viewpoint of its being "generally" an inequitable structure.

It is true I may have occasion to remark something about an application which is now before the transport board. But any reference to the application before the board is, as authors so often say in their introductory words in books, purely coincidental.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Obiter dictum.

Mr. MAYBANK: I would repeat what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) has said, that he hopes that all such remarks will be obiter dicta—and I believe that means in the nature of an aside or asides. I suppose any references I would make would be obiter dicta. So that at least the Minister of Transport and I start out in complete agreement at the present time, although some little time back we were in disagreement on a point of order.

But before touching upon the freight rates question, I wish to make one other remark—but shortly—upon a different subject. My first observation shall be to compliment and congratulate the government upon the agreements thus far made relating to interprovincial and intergovernmental settlement of finances. I believe the government is to be highly complimented upon the progress it has thus far been able to make.

I have been reading the speech from the throne from Queen's Park, and there would appear to be some disagreement in that quarter as to the adequacy of the proposals of the dominion government. But whether they agree with the adequacy of the proposals or not, I think people in all provinces must realize that some changes had to be made in the financial set-up in Canada, and the load placed upon the provinces having the opportunity to get the wherewithal to carry the load. I believe all must realize that the poorer provinces could not carry their load; and this is particularly true in my own province which, from a tax collector's point of view, is too poor to go ahead with such developments as are necessary and to effect necessary social amenities, although it does create a great deal of wealth. But from the point of view of the tax collector, and including only direct taxation, it must be regarded as a poor province. For that reason, and because a settlement greatly beneficial to it was made possible, I believe the government is entitled to great credit.

But when paying tribute to the government for a job well done, I do not want to overlook one man who played a great part in these dominion-provincial negotiations and whose work in no small measure contributed to their success. I refer to the Hon. Stuart Garson, premier of Manitoba. I have sometimes thought he was the most far-sighted of any of those who gathered about the table. I do not press that comparison; but he certainly was clear-sighted, patient, conciliatory and resourceful in negotiating for his province. And, above all, he was sincere—and that is important. He was sincere in trying to work out something that would be for the benefit of all Canada, while working especially for his own province. It is my belief that he is responsible for a large measure of the success attained.

But now, just when we have concluded satisfactory interim agreements which will put the provinces upon a better situation henceforward, we in western Canada face a serious threat to our economy, and I believe the same is true of the maritimes. However I speak more particularly with respect to the prairies.

A special endeavour is being made by certain agencies in the country to place an additional tax on the backs of the people of western Canada. It is a scheme peculiarly designed to tax them, and only them; and if it succeeds it will go far to undo a great deal of the good that has been accomplished in the proposals contained in the agreements I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the difficulty of determining a point of order in the house with reference to a discussion of freight rates is extremely difficult. I am, and I think all hon. members are, deeply sensible of the hard position you have to fill. I am—and I believe this view is shared by all other hon. members—keenly sensible of the excellent manner in which you discharge your function as Speaker in endeavouring to keep us within the limits laid down by the rules. Certainly I do not wish to offend against the ruling handed down by Your Honour through Mr. Deputy Speaker last night in relation to this subject. If I do mention the proposals before the transport board I wish you to know now that it is done only for the purpose of leading up to a conclusion and recommendation I have to make, and independent of what happens to be before a court at the present time.

I had occasion a little earlier this evening to discuss the exact case that is before the board, and I would recall to you that the case before the board is expressed in these words—I am leaving out certain interconnected words in order to get it more clearly—"the railway association applies under section 325 and certain other sections for authority to make an advance of thirty per cent in tolls and rates." That is the only question before the transport board. There is nothing before that board at the present time about grain rates because I think it is made clear that since grain rates are statutory, they do not come within the purview of the jurisdiction of the board. So they could be discussed. By the same token, increases of thirty-one per cent or thirty-five per cent or ninety-two per cent are not before the board. All that is before the board is a thirty per cent increase, a very narrow sort of application—a narrow field from which we must keep away.

I should like to introduce with this comment what I am going to say. Sometimes, when one is discussing what will be the effect of a judgment, he does not need to enter into a discussion as to what the judgment ought to be. You may discuss the effect of a judgment without saying anything about the merits or demerits of the arguments pro and con which lead up to the judgment. If there were a murder trial going on in Ottawa I feel that we would agree that we should not discuss the merits of the case for the prosecution or for the defence. Whether the accused should be convicted or not is something that we would feel we had no right to discuss. But the effect of being found guilty and hanged is that after you are hanged you are dead. There would be no prohibition upon our discussing the effect of hanging.

With reference to this freight rate application, I may say that, while all the railroads are making it, I think it can be viewed chiefly as a Canadian Pacific application. Most of the railroads with the exception of the Canadian National are small, but the Canadian National situation is not important in connection with freight rate making. That is a point that I may develop a little later. It is something which has been pretty well accepted over the years in rate-making circles. that the Canadian National and its needs are not to be taken as the criteria. So one may say that this is pretty well a Canadian Pacific proposition.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You are not serious about that?

Mr. MAYBANK: I am quite serious. It will be recalled that the application has been made not to raise certain uneconomic rates, not to seek an increase by having cost saving schemes made effective; it is simply an application that everything be raised thirty per cent. I think, in regard to coal, a specific figure is asked for. By reason of the inequitable situation in which we find ourselves today in connection with the rate structure, a demand of that kind is levelled particularly at western Canada. There can be no doubt that the allowance of such an increase will be permissive. I do not say what the judgment of the board ought to be, but I do say that, in the event of a judgment permitting the increase, the railroads ought to take counsel together and with the government before they put it into effect. I suggest that such a remark is apt in the case because the Canadian National Railways is our own creature. Before the Canadian National Railways actually increases rates, there ought to be a conference to consider the effect of that raise before they take advantage of any judgment that may be rendered in their favour. I do not speak as to the merits of the judgment itself, but the railroads, particularly the one which is ours, ought to consider the situation carefully before taking advantage of any judgment.

I have said that, by reason of the inequitable system under which we labour at the present time with rates as they are, any change will necessarily bear rather heavily upon us in western Canada. Some other speakers have already pointed this out. If the railroads have the power at any time to raise rates, they will not raise them in central Canada but will raise them in western Canada. I do not suggest by this statement, any moral obliquity on the part of the Canadian railways; it is simply a matter of fact that when it is possible to raise rates by reason of a judgment they raise them in western Canada because western Canada is a natural monopoly. The contrary holds true here in the east. There is no monopoly, there is water competition, and there is good truck competition here.

If any person has any doubt about this I ask him to note what has appeared in the newspapers, and then I think he will be convinced that what I am saying is correct. The newspapers do not report any person appearing before the transport board at the present time for either Ontario or Quebec, although an application is being made for an increase "straight across the board".

Mr. REID: That is significant.

Mr. MAYBANK: It is most significant and I thank the hon. member for New Westminster for adding a punch to what I was saying. It is most significant that people should be faced with an apparent thirty per cent increase and not care. Since I have been interrupted by a Scotsman, helpfully I admit, I am reminded of what happened in Glasgow.

Mr. REID: I got my Canadian papers the other week.

Mr. MAYBANK: They say that you cannot take the breeks off a highlander, and I do not think you can take the Scotch away from a Scotsman even though you give him Canadian citizenship papers.

Mr. REID: I rise to a point of order; I am a Canadian.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think it is a point of privilege.

Mr. MAYBANK: I agree that the hon. member is a Canadian, and a very good one. However I know he will not take umbrage in being reminded that until a short time ago he was Scotch. As I was saying, the action taken by the governments of Ontario and Quebec reminds me of the people of Glasgow. They had a municipal railway in Glasgow and the city fathers raised the rates. There was no protest. The city fathers raised the rates again, and still there was no protest. The city fathers raised the rates again, and there was no protest. After a short time, despite the fact there had been no protest, the city fathers lowered the rates one notch. Then there was a protest. All the citizens of Glasgow came forward complaining bitterly of the reduction and demanding that the rate should be put back at the high spot in order that they might save more money by walking.

Here in the central provinces the position is like that. It does not make any difference whether the rates are raised or not because the people would save money by not using the railroads, and so the companies will not do it. There cannot be any doubt, on the other hand, that any threat of this sort is a gun aimed at western Canada and, if permission to increase is granted, the gun will go off. Moreover, we are at the present time in the position of having, on the whole, about a fifteen per cent higher level of freight rates in western Canada than exists in central Canada, and so far as British Columbia is concerned the level is about twenty-five per cent higher; so that any increase which is granted, say thirty-one per cent, would be thirty-one per cent on $1 in the central provinces, thirty-one per cent on $1.15 on the prairies, and thirty-one per cent on $1.25 farther west, and whereas we have already an inequitable system, the same percentage applied to different bases would naturally increase the discrimination, which is something that, as we look ahead, causes a great deal of concern.

I know a certain business institution in Manitoba with an annual freight bill, on outgoing goods, of $1,250,000 and, on incoming products, about $400,000, or a total of about $1,650,000. Half a million dollars added to that would be a great addition to the expense of doing business. Its competitor at the present time, a large competitor in the central provinces, has a freight bill which compares with the Manitoba company's bill as six compares with twelve. If the increase is granted you have in the one case a percentage increase on twelve and in the other case an increase on six. You see the great disparity that at once occurs, and that applies on everything. It is so with a pound of rice; it is so with a binder; it is so with a tractor, with a pair of shoes and a pair of shoe laces. It applies to everything. I do not know of anything that could be more inflationary than a freight rate increase. Suppose that by reason of transportation costs the cost of an article increases by one cent. In small towns, particularly mining towns, the retailer will naturally nearly always add a nickel to the price of the goods, and when that is done on every single article that people are using the effect is very inflationary indeed.

I do not think any person has yet adequately presented the difficulties in which the railroads find themselves, and I am not adequately presenting their difficulties. I am willing to take on faith that the railroads will need some kind of relief. The only point which I should like all members of the house and all people in the country to consider is just what sort of relief ought to be granted.

There is one thing I should like to warn against. Some of the protagonists for the railroads, in saying that they need some relief, would attempt to make out of their position a sort of wage claim. I know one advocate of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, speaking at a public meeting somewhere, indicated that the freight rate question was just a wage claim. Frankly, I regard that sort of propaganda with a good deal of suspicion. I am not forgetting that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was the only employer that did not deal generously with its employees who got tangled up in the 1919 general strike, and I am not forgetting that every effort to get them to act in the same manner as other employers was fruitless. I am not forgetting that, when they were asked to acquiesce and assist in a general inquiry into the position they had taken with respect to their employees, they turned a deaf ear to that request. The request was made by the Minister of Labour of this government (Mr. Mitchell) but the C.P.R. would have none of it, and so, when they talk about their needs in terms of the needs of their workmen, I cannot help viewing their propaganda with a good deal of suspicion.

I have dealt already with the general inequity that exists in freight rates in the country, and I wish to say that there are a good many reasons why the prairie provinces, and British Columbia too, should not be paying to the railroad economy of Canada more than they have already, over the years, been paying. I was reminded this afternoon by a right hon. gentleman of this house that our freight rate structure has never been scientifically devised. Like Topsy it has just growed. One time a long time ago a rate was fixed and that rate became the datum. I am sure the Minister of Transport will agree with me that they used that one rate as a datum, and from that moved on to another rate. We have never really had a scientific investigation of our freight rate structure.

Mr. REID: All the traffic would bear.

Mr. MAYBANK: For a long time—and this was borne out by the statements of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Winkler) a night or so ago—it would indeed appear that the charges were often levied on the basis of what they could get the shipper to pay; in other words, on whatever the traffic would bear. I think the rates should be set basically on the costs of doing business and if, when the rates have been fixed in that way, taking into consideration all things, some part of the country cannot get railroad service on the rates so levied, some method of relief must be worked out because, being the political entity that we are, we must see that decent railroad service is provided everywhere. But the first consideration should be the cost of doing business.

It costs a good deal less to operate a railroad in western Canada than it does anywhere else. This was brought out most clearly in hearings before the board in the 1920's. I shall have something to say a little later about the need of using stale figures in presenting an argument in this house. In 1925, 1926 and 1927 and perhaps some other years, the province of Manitoba was represented by H. J. Symington, K.C., in various hearings. He is now president of Trans-Canada Air Lines and a director of the Canadian National Railways. Under a searching examination, resulting from years of research and a natural acumen and aptitude for this sort of inquiry, he brought out a great many facts respecting our railroad problem, particularly as it relates to western Canada. Those inquiries showed that western Canada supplied to the railroads the major part of their net revenue. It did then and it does now. I made extensive notes of the transcript of proceedings taken at that time. I do not mean that I did it at that time; I have done it since. For example, in February, 1927, Mr. Lloyd, who was then assistant comptroller of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, gave evidence. He said that in five years the net earnings of the railway for eastern Canada were $76 million, and in the same period in the west the earnings were $146 million. Incidentally he said that he could not think of any operating factor that was unfavourable to western Canada in a comparison of the value of the two sections.

Reference is often made to the low freight rate in western Canada on grain and flour under the Crowsnest pass statute. Mr. Lloyd said at that time that, despite these rates being low, they were highly profitable. A little later, Mr. Neal, who is now president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, said that he agreed substantially with everything that Mr. Lloyd said. He said that the Manitoba district, which runs from the head of the lakes to Broadview, Saskatchewan, was the most profitable district in the Dominion of Canada. He said that every comparison showed it to be nearest to the ideal. He also said that western Canada—that is the larger section from the lake head to the Pacific coast —was more favourable from a railwayman's point of view than the eastern part. He said that in the last four months of the year the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had moved fifty-two per cent of its total freight; that in those four months the earnings of the road were $26 million as against $15 million over the whole eight months before, and that this favourable factor was due to the western freight traffic which, as hon. members will understand, begins in the last four months of the year. He showed that the out-of-pocket expenses of the railway had been $52 million and the movement of revenue tons of freight for that amount of money had been 637,000, and that in September these revenue tons were increased two and a half times to a figure of 1,501,111 revenue tons, but the expenses went up only one million dollars. That was a case of the west paying dividends in a big way.

George Stephen, assistant freight traffic manager at that time, indicated that he was in agreement with all that had been said. From him it was learned that in 1925 the out-of-pocket railroad costs for the east were $31 million, and in the west they were $34 million; but for that difference of only $3 million there was a vastly greater amount handled in the west. For that slight difference in cost in the two sections he said they moved 8·7 billion tons in western Canada as against four billion tons in eastern Canada.

Mr. Symington also caused Mr. Stephen to show that the large net earnings over the years came from its profitable western business. The greatest proportion in earnings occurred in the last four months of 1921. Fifty per cent of the net came in the last four months. In 1922, sixty-one per cent came in that period; in the next year 65·8 per cent; in 1924 they got 59·5 per cent, and in 1925 they got 63·6 per cent. That is the story all down through the years as far as the figures carry. The earnings have been in the last four months by reason of western traffic. In other words, the west has been paying dividends in a big way over these years, despite the fact that costs have always been very much less in carrying that business. In a period of twenty years there were $240 million of net revenue obtained in eastern Canada and $500 million obtained in western Canada.

Not only is it a fact, according to these figures, that western Canada has kept the railroad going with net revenues, but in practically every department the cost of operations was less there. We have a great many geographical disadvantages, being a long distance from tidewater being perhaps the chief, but we do have one great advantage of flat country, greater ease of building a railroad, greater ease of operating a railroad, and that is the only advantage the prairies have. An increase in freight rates tends to take away that one advantage. If other parts of the country cannot support a railroad, and yet a railroad is needed there, there ought to be some more equitable way of seeing that the service is given, something more equitable than imposing costs upon us who are already much more than paying our way.

In 1927 the operating costs of the Manitoba district were less than anywhere else. Mr. Lloyd said that the density of traffic out there was greater than anywhere else and that tended to reduce costs. That has always increased in favour of the west from that day on. He said that the average tons of revenue freight per loaded car mile and average tons per train mile, and the average haul were all factors more favourable in the west than in the east. He said that loadings were heavier and the average length of the train greater. Since that day, the length of the freight train has greatly increased. I know that of my own knowledge. I see trains going by now with a hundred cars. That is much more than in the years that I have mentioned. Even one hundred empty cars then was a very unusual train. The trains I see going by now are made up of cars, not of 30-ton or 40-ton capacity, but of 50-ton capacity. It is a common thing to see a hundred of them. That is the situation in western Canada. The disparity of the 1920's is greater still today. At that time the average train in western Canada consisted of 48·02 cars and, in eastern Canada, 29·20. That situation has obtained all through the years except—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Does that cover the mountain section?

Mr. MAYBANK: The greater of the two figures I gave covers the Manitoba division. It would be somewhat less if you take in Calgary West. My recollection is—I am speaking now from memory only—that, over the whole, the average of western Canada was about thirty-nine as against twenty-nine in the east.

Mr. REID: It would obtain on the Canadian National all the way through.

Mr. MAYBANK: I appreciate that on the Canadian National there might not be any change at all because the gradients are very much better. The witness whom I was quoting was Mr. George Stephen of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Naturally they would be Canadian Pacific Railway Company figures.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is somebody suggesting that they take trains over the Yellowhead pass as they do on the prairies?

Mr. REID: The grades on the Canadian National are the lowest of all Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I know that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MAYBANK: I did not get that last question, but even had I got it I might not have been able to answer it; in the second place, it may not have been desirable from the point of view of the time which would be involved in doing so.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): For which I am grateful.

Mr. MAYBANK: There is one thing about the hon. member for Calgary West; he is always very frank. When he desires to thank any person he always does it in such a nice way, and we all love him.

A further piece of evidence showed that there were 173,000,000 freight car miles for the year in Manitoba as against 99,000,000 in Ontario.

Now, then, I did remark somewhat earlier, and somebody questioned it, that the Canadian National was not to be taken as a criterion in rate making. I believe I can indicate to the house that that is so, and I believe it is generally accepted as being the case. I believe Mr. Vaughan admitted that not very long ago in a public address. I have a large number of clippings and I am quite sure that Mr. Vaughan's statement to that effect is among them, but anyway I am quite sure it is a fact. That railroad is made up of a considerable number of lines which were built for one reason or another, very often not for economic or financial reasons. One great stretch was built for purely political reasons in connection with confederation. A whole collection of lame ducks were all shoved together and called a system. All the debts were heaped up on the new organization; and everybody knows the fixed charges of the Canadian National Railways are far beyond the ability of the system to pay. If the Canadian National Railways were in the United States under the interstate commerce commission it would have been run through the wringer long ago.

Mr. JACKMAN: Your party does not agree with that.

Mr. MAYBANK: The Soo line of the Canadian Pacific was run through the wringer long ago and of course its fixed charges when it came out were nothing like what they were when it went in.

But if the Canadian National Railways were to be considered, the story its figures would tell as respects costs and revenue in western Canada as against those in eastern Canada would be substantially the same as that of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That railroad in 1927 handled twice as many gross tons and had twice the revenue traffic in the west as it had in the east. On one formula one might say, if it had twice as much traffic, it ought to have a cost of twice as much, but the fact is quite otherwise. The total cost in eastern Canada for a certain amount of traffic was $101,740,000 and the total cost in western Canada was $102,220,000. That is very close to an equation, although twice as much revenue traffic was handled in the west by the Canadian National as in the east. Superintendence costs in the west were only a little higher than in the east; dispatching costs were actually less; station employees were only a little higher in cost; yardmasters and clerks were actually less; yardmen and trainmen were just on a par. I have a statement which sets forth in figures actually what all these costs were; if the house would permit it, I would place it upon Hansard, since it would probably take too long to read.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to place the statement on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

An hon. MEMBER: Put the rest on Hansard.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The Canadian Pacific over there have been interrupting all the time.

Mr. MAYBANK: Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to impose on the house, but I should be glad of the opportunity to complete the record, if I may be allowed to do so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: With the unanimous consent of the house the hon. member may continue for a few minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK: Thank you.

Mr. MacNICOL: He does not waste much time, so that we shall give him a little extra.

Mr. MAYBANK: The statement follows:

National railway handles twice as many gross tons or twice the traffic in the west as in the east. On one formula it ought to cost twice as much. Figures 1921 to 1925 are as follows, i.e., the aggregate in those years

	East	West
Superintendence	5,348,000	5,910,000
Dispatching	3,200,000	2,300,000
Station employees	26,000,000	27,000,000
Yardmasters and clerks	2,187,000	2,103,000
Yardmen and trainmen	7,600,000	7,058,000
Yard enginemen	5,000,000	4,000,000
Locomotives	8,380,000	6,000,000
Train enginemen	18,000,000	20,000,000
Engine house expense	6,700,000	7,300,000
Trainmen	19,325,000	20,549,000
Total	101,740,000	102,220,000

A system which allows of additional taxes being levied on a community which is so well paying its way at relatively low cost is not an equitable system. That is the point which I want to have well understood.

I should like now to comment, for just a few minutes, upon the necessity there has been tonight for me to use figures of 1927, which are as I remarked, stale figures. The only reason I have presented them to the house is my confidence that they still represent the situation, although they understate the case for western Canada. The reason one must use stale figures in dealing with the costs and revenues in various sections of the country is this. About the time the facts which I have presented to the house were obtained from the railway companies, the railway companies stopped keeping their books as they had been doing and began to keep them in such a way as would prevent them ever again from being able quickly to make such a disclosure. They found out that, if they kept their books in the manner in which they had been accustomed to keep them, the same use could be made out of their figures as Mr. Symington made of them in 1927. The Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and, I suppose, all other railroads, stopped keeping their books in such a way as quickly to give a break-down of their revenues and their costs. Consequently, as the years have gone on we have not been able to obtain the information we used to be able to obtain. I say that I do not look kindly upon the action of the Canadian National Railways in working out what looks to me like a scheme of that sort. It seems to me that the Canadian National railway system, owned as it is by all the people of Canada, should be prepared at all times to give that information. We of western Canada and of the maritimes are Canadians too. It is no part of the business of an organization like the Canadian National Railways, owned by the people of Canada, so to behave as to make it difficult for some of the provinces to learn just what the true situation is with reference to that railroad.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman knows that the instructions are to give all the information?

Mr. MAYBANK: Yes, I know that, and the Minister of Transport has been very good in that respect. The Minister of Transport has indicated that it is the view of the government they ought to give all that information, and I believe instructions or suggestions to that effect have gone forward. I want to give him full credit for that. But giving the information when you are cross-examined is an altogether different thing from laying all the information out in a set of statistics year by year. The cross-examiner cannot begin to get the information in the way he wants it when he has to drag it out piecemeal in a hearing. My complaint is that they have not kept themselves ready at all times to give this information and that they have not filed it somewhere. Of course I cannot refer to the way in which they acted before the transport board in this hearing; but if you have a picture in your mind of one person dragging another along by the nose, you may perhaps not be far wrong if you label one the C.P.R. and the other the C.N.R.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): This is with unanimous consent. When is it going to end?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You can't take it.

Mr. MAYBANK: I think the C.N.R. is likewise to be criticized in its insistence upon haste just as the C.P.R. is in calling for haste. I am now referring to what has been said publicly at various meetings here and there all across the country.

Mr. JACKMAN: Five minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK: "We need money; quickly give it to us" is the railway approach to this whole question. I have no time to state the extent to which both railroads have improved their position in the last five years, but I know the Canadian Pacific Railway Company over five or six years—let us say six years—had a net, after paying all their operating expenses, of $692 million; all they had to pay out of that were taxes and fixed charges, and some of those taxes would come back to them, being refundable. I know the shareholders' equity, if you might call it that, in the case of the Canadian National has greatly increased over the years. I say that, for the officials of these railroads to cry out for haste and that they are near death, is ridiculous, with such moneys as those either saved or put into capital improvements or something similar. They are not in extremis at all. Indeed, they are very much like the camel with a well-fattened hump. As everybody knows, the camel can live for quite a considerable time on his hump. There is no reason why there should be any such great speed.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is the dromedary to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. MAYBANK: I have said this much in reference—

Mr. JACKMAN: Time. You cannot go on forever.

Mr. MAYBANK: —to the general inequity there is at the present time in the freight structure. There is the fact that it has never been scientifically worked out at any time. I should like to remind the government that in the report of the Rowell-Sirois commission it was recommended that a full inquiry be made into this subject of our railway rate structure. I know that boards of trade of different places, including Edmonton, Calgary and other cities, together with large numbers of interested shippers, have made representations from time to time that there should be a general inquiry into the matter, with a view to working out an equitable system. So I suggest to the government that, no matter what may be the decision of the board of transport commissioners, the government should first suggest to the railroad which we own that increases should not be put into effect pending a further and fuller inquiry, and that the government should now begin to plan for such a general inquiry into the rate structure with a view to finally establishing a scientific system.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you and the members of the house for having granted me extra time to conclude my remarks.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): In the beginning, Mr. Speaker, may I make the frank confession that, in rising to speak in this debate, what I am about to give is a sort of shot-gun speech, largely because of the speech, if I may dignify it by that name, to which I have just listened. I believe counsel for the Canadian National Railways has done very well, but I intend to come to that matter and deal with it in detail in a moment.

Before doing so, I wish to refer to one or two other matters. I am glad that the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) is now in the house, because one subject I want to mention is of particular interest to him, and when I have finished I am sure he will be my strongest supporter. You know, sir, when one takes part in the debate on the address, of necessity one's speech must be made of bits and pieces, because these great, broad subjects have been so well covered by the great orators on all sides of the house, and I do not intend to thresh any of the old straw they have left.

I turn first to something which geographically is local, but which I believe is of tremendous interest to the whole country. I am sorry my old friend the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) is not in the house at the moment, because the other day I was so pleased at his reference to the amazing effort, achievement and accomplishment of Barbara Ann Scott. I have the good fortune to know that young woman, and the greater good fortune, perhaps, of having been rather a close friend of her mother and her late father who, as hon. members know, was badly shot up in the first great war and died still serving his country as secretary to the Department of Militia and Defence as it was then known. That incident—and "incident" is a poor expression for this girl's achievement—has done something for this country which perhaps we here at least do not appreciate sufficiently. It has turned interest to Canada with respect to winter games which otherwise we would never have had. My suggestion to the minister now is that, when the next Olympic games take place, two years from next year, Banff, on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains, should be the site of the winter olympics.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Somone may say I must have had a good majority in Banff. I did, and I hope I always shall. The point I have in mind—and I have ample authority for what I am going to say—is that nowhere else in the world, Switzerland, Austria or anywhere else, are there snow conditions for skiing and all the other events of that type such as we have on the eastern slope of the mountains, right in the town of Banff, in our national park. And we own that place; the Dominion of Canada owns that park. No private organization in the world is capable of staging the winter olympics. I have visited Lake Placid, where they had the winter games the last time they were held on this continent. It is not even comparable with Banff. The minister is a Scotsman, though perhaps not from the same place as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). I know Scotsmen vary, and I say to him: do not let us be afraid of a little bit of expense. I have learned that the construction of the bobsled run costs the most money. That rather surprised me, but it is the simple fact. Can you not conceive, Mr. Speaker, that if we could get those olympic games for this country, then the whole mountain area from Coleman clear up through Banff to Jasper would become a winter mecca for millions of people from whom—and I hate to put it on this basis—we would get revenue; dollars, United States dollars and all the other kinds of money people might have. The accommodation situation can be overcome. I am sorry the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) is not here at present, because I wanted to talk to him about these railways, but the C.P.R. hotel could be kept open in the winter, and nowhere in the world could they do better. I have authority for this statement, and my authority is the hon. member for York West (Mr. Adamson) who, though perhaps the house may not know it, is one of the best known of international skiers. That is a simple fact; though I want you to observe, sir, that in speaking of him in that way I used the "k" pronunciation rather than the "h".

I leave that and come to something I wish to say to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), and particularly to his predecessor in office. I think, in the appointment of judges we have embarked upon a procedure that drives at the whole integrity of our judicial system. I refer to the promotion of district, or as people in the east call them, county court judges to places on the supreme court bench. In Alberta three of the last four appointments were made in this way; it has been commenced in British Columbia, where two such appointments have been made, and now we have one in Saskatchewan. In all seriousness, I say that has made a politician of every district or county court judge in the whole of western Canada; that is what has been accomplished by that procedure. Let no one think I am saying one word against the men appointed. In my own province I know the three men well; they are excellent men and good lawyers. But the system is being attacked. If we are to do things like that and have promotions, let us elect them as they do in the state courts of the United States. But when we give a man a job on the bench, be it district or supreme court, let him know he has nothing more to expect anywhere, so that in probity and honour he will carry out his duties and we shall not have what I say is now the case, the suspicion that a man in a lower judicial position is seeking advancement for politicial reasons. That is all I wish to say on that point.

I now come to the business of freight rates, and I trust I may be as successful in skating around this thing as was the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. As a matter of fact, when it came to skating around those brittle edges, Barbara Ann Scott had nothing on him.

Let us look at this whole freight rates situation sensibly. But before I say anything more, may I say this: You, sir, and the house, will discount what I have to say in this regard. I have acted for both those railways in southern Alberta for over thirty years. I say that. And if, by that, you think I am prejudiced in my views, then I am afraid there is nothing I can do to help myself or to help you. But I intend to discuss something which ought not to have been raised here, and that is the advocacy of the C.N.R. position as opposed to that of the C.P.R., as outlined by the hon. member who preceded me. I act for both railways, and I think I therefore might be credited at least with fairness in what I have to say with respect to that.

Mr. MAYBANK: Rising to a point of order, I do not think the hon. member will object, but if there is any objection I will, of course, yield to him. My hon. friend, I am afraid, has misunderstood me. I did not intend to make a comparison of one with the other. I was only desiring to point out that, the nature of the two companies being different, one of them cannot be taken as a criterion in fixing rates. I did not mean to make any comparison between the two of them, either as to their excellence or otherwise. I do not know whether the hon. member thought I did. But I am sure he will be glad to have me point out that such was not the intention.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I say that I am glad of the interruption and the explanation given. But he began his speech by saying this, that the present application before the railway board was in fact a C.P.R. and not a C.N.R. application.

Mr. MAYBANK: No, I did not say that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It is quite untrue and thoroughly false.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MAYBANK: I did not say that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I was not in the chair at the time the statement was made. But may I suggest to hon. members that any reference to the present application to the board of transport commissioners is entirely out of order, and if reference has been made it has been entirely irregular.

Yesterday I referred hon. members to the rules of the house. It is clear that the board of transport commissioners is a court of record, and that any reference to an application before a court of record, while the application is being heard, is out of order.

Mr. MAYBANK: Anyway, I did not say that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I say this to Your Honour, that I bow to your ruling, but I hope, being the good lawyer that you are, you will bear in mind this fact, that the board of transport commissioners being a court of record, the only thing which may not be discussed is the evidence and argument used before that board. Beyond that, the house is certainly wide open to go.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We will support you in that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): If I am wrong about that, I will bow to your ruling, sir, and I have no intention of discussing either the argument or the evidence heard before that court of record.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I cannot make a ruling different from that I have already made, which is that any reference to the application now being made before the board of transport commissioners is out of order. A general discussion on freight rates is, of course, in order. A discussion as to the discrepancy between the rates charged in the east and those charged in the west would be in order. A discussion of freight rates, as they affect the general economic conditions in our country, would be in order. But a discussion here of what is taking place before the board of transport commissioners is definitely out of order.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then, sir, I think you force me into devious ways. I want to assure you that anything I say about freight rates is based purely on a suppositious case that some of us may have heard about, here or there.

However, dealing with this whole question of freight rates, to a large extent I want to agree with what was said by the hon. member who immediately preceded me. He said, in effect, that our whole freight rate structure just grew, like Topsy—and it did.

There is not any doubt about that. I know now that they use a new word, but the fact is that our whole structure is built on what the traffic will bear. It may be that I shall lose a couple of clients when I have finished this speech, but I intend to say what is in my mind.

For example, a couple of years ago I remember dealing with the Canadian National Railways with respect to freight points equally distant from Edmonton. One was Cadogan on the coal branch, and the other was Drumheller. I was acting for a labour union which was protesting about both express and freight rates to Cadogan. It will be remembered that between Edson and Cadogan there is no highway. There the rates were substantially two to one. The reason given was that there was truck competition to Drumheller, whereas there was no truck competition to Cadogan.

Let no one think for a moment I am attempting to destroy anything. That condition arose through necessities which developed from year to year. We all know the effect of the Panama canal. We all know that these people from British Columbia, who have been complaining, had their rates to Vancouver cut when the Panama canal was built. We all know that you can ship cheaper from here to Vancouver than you can to Calgary.

It seems to me the Spokane decision in the United States is one which might well be adopted. In effect, it says that there shall be no greater charge on any line of railway for a short haul than for a long haul. I believe, if we followed that, many of our difficulties would be cured. And when I say that I am far from saying that, if I were to ship from here to Prescott—is that on the main line?

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Well, I do not see our whip at the present time. I do not say that if I ship on the main line for only a few miles, having regard to handling charges and the like, I should simply take the rate to Vancouver, divide it and, having in mind that Prescott is sixty-five miles from here, or whatever it is, that I should pay that part of the rate. That would be utterly silly.

But I go along with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre; and go a little farther and say that no railroad in Canada knows what it costs them to haul a ton of freight from that end of the room to this end, or from here to Toronto, or any other place.

This just arose through the development of a country; and the freight rate structure was built on that basis. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre told us about a great man called H. J. Symington who is now out of railroading and is making flour and flying aeroplanes around the country. And he overlooked myself. I appeared before the board on one occasion in Ottawa. I was endeavouring to find out what it cost to haul a ton of coal from Drumheller, first to North Bay and, second, to Toronto. My experts were not very expert, and I was left almost alone in the picture. The C.N.R. brought a gentleman from the United States of America, and that was the first time I had ever heard anyone described as a railway cost accountant. There were only six of them in the world at that time, and they had all been produced by the interstate commerce commission of the United States. That same gentleman today is vice-president of the Canadian National Railways, an able executive and a very fine man. We decided that we would exchange brief's beforehand. Mr. Flintoft of the Canadian Pacific and Alistair Fraser for the Canadian National were acting, so I said, "Yes, we will exchange briefs." I saw my expert and he said, "We cannot exchange." I asked why and he said, "Because ours is all wrong." So I was kind of on my own when we got before the railway commission.

I want to point out how they found the cost of hauling a ton of coal from there to Toronto. In that cost I found something which I think is highly amusing. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who knows a good deal about railroading and who is an expert on the 1919 strike, tells me—and I was glad to have him do so—of the change in the tonnage of cars and in the loads that engines can now pull. The railroad said that they had to ship these cars back to Drumheller empty. That is quite true; that is not even arguable, because practically all cars, in any event over ninety per cent of them go back to Fort William empty. One of the charges they showed in making up their costs of hauling a ton of my poor Alberta coal was the extra shaking their steel bridges would get by hauling the empties back over them. That is what you get in cost accounting when you try to find out what it costs to move a ton of this or that from here to there.

I think they have made considerable advance in the United States in their effort to find a more scientific basis for the haulage of freight. I agree entirely with the hon. member in that. It seems to me that the time has come when we might have a complete revision. The railway board has not authority to do this and the last time it was tried by the parties appearing before the dominion cabinet. I will admit that in those days the cabinet ministers were not the hard-worked gentlemen they now are. They lived longer; in any event they seemed to get along. I remember the late Sidney B. Woods of Edmonton appeared for those of us out there, but what happened was that today you would have three ministers, and the next day you had three other ministers. There was no consistency or continuity ir the whole picture. I am not blaming the cabinet ministers at all, but we had no way of achieving that consistency or continuity.

I do not agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre when he said a moment ago that somebody had changed his method of bookkeeping to keep the facts from the Canadian people. I agree heartily with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), who endeavoured to correct the hon. member with respect to that. Here is the picture in so far as freight is concerned in this supposititious case which I have in mind. A railway is asking for a 100 per cent increase in its freight rates. Obviously that has nothing to do with a case where they are asking for only thirty per cent, and so I am within Your Honour's ruling. Perhaps I am outside your ruling, well outside.

What are the simple facts of this whole story? Granting that the railroads were not profiteering before, they cannot continue, without some additional revenue to pay the tremendous increases in wages that have been granted. Let me say for railway labour that that was done without a strike; it was done without a lot of nonsense; it was arrived at more or less by agreement. The railroads cannot do that and carry on unless they were profiteering before. I know how unpopular it is for me or anyone else to say in this House of Commons that the railways need more money to carry on. But I do say it, and I say it because I believe it. I mean it, and anybody who does not like it can just adopt his own course because I am adopting mine.

Whether the railway is given a 100 per cent increase or any other percentage, in my supposititious case, I do not care, but I know it needs revenue to meet the extra expenses. I also know everyone who has spoken over here and there knows that what we need to be concerned about is not so much a small increase in the revenue as the equalization of freight rates. All of us from the west will agree with that, and I am certain that no one in Ontario—what do you call these provinces, the middle provinces?

An hon. MEMBER: The great provinces.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Some one says "the great provinces". That may be so, but some of their sons are not nearly as great as the provinces. I have never known the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to refuse to accept a fair proposition. I do not think you can go to one line and say, "You have earned so much money." We know that certain railway lines lose money and yet, for our economy and for the convenience of our people, we insist that the railroads operate those lines. Those of us who live in certain parts of the west know perfectly well that, while we may be dissatisfied with the service we get, the service we are getting is not a paying one. But being a dominion undertaking, being a country like Canada, the fat must go with the lean, and so we have that situation.

I am coming now to the Canadian National. May I say that I have not been only their counsel but their solicitor. I am not getting wealthy out of it, because I telephoned my office yesterday and found that last year I got $300 from one company and $11.20 from the other, and I think that was a disbursement. I just wanted to make my position plain. What we need is this: we should find out what revenue is necessary to carry on.

I am sure that every hon. member in this House of Commons will agree that we cannot have our railroads go broke. If they go, our whole economy is gone. There is no question about that. Let us be fair about this thing. Let us see if they need $2 or $10 or $10,000,000. Ten million is not very large. We ship that down to some of the coal mines in the district of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) every year. No matter what it is, it is essential for our economy that they operate and operate profitably. May I agree with what has been said by my hon. friends to my left and by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. We feel that we must pay our way, that we must keep these transportation systems operating, even though in a particular area it does not pay back all that the railroad puts in. We think we are entitled to equalization, and equalization will never be possible until we find the amount of revenue necessary for them to carry on.

The Canadian Pacific was the one who paid me $11.20.

An hon. MEMBER: They overpaid you.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think I had better find out what that was for. It must have been a disbursement, for I cannot imagine my working for as little as $11.20. What we need is equalization; let us be realistic about the matter. Let us realize that the railroads must have enough money to carry on. Let those of us who come from distant parts of the country, both the maritimes and in the west, suggest kindly but firmly that we think that, even though here you are meeting truck competition, you still should bear your share, and that we should not bear the unequal burden which has been so forcibly and plainly put by my hon. friend who preceded me and by hon. members to my left.

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne does not offend me, because I now realize that it was meant to be meaningless anyway. All that can be said about it is that it is a nebulous mass of verbiage with no content, a very poor legislative diet for the Canadian people. Its ineffectiveness can be surpassed only by the stand taken by the official opposition. whose intellectual bankruptcy has reached a point where they lack the faculty to disclose an alternative to the policies which they condemn.

This year has been described as year two of the atomic age, and in that respect highlights the fact that we are living in an age of rapid change and crises. The storm warnings stand out clear and sharp. The agreed decision of the official representatives of seventeen governments at the preparatory commission on world food proposals is that, unless the nations of the world undertake as part of their national policies a quick expansion in the production of food and goods, they will walk straight into a worse collapse than that of 1929 to 1932. The considered judgment of these representatives of seventeen governments, including those of the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada, is that, unless all nations increase consumption in an expanding economy, they are heading for a disaster greater than that of 1929 to 1932. In the face of this, how has the Liberal government reacted? Is it pressing and leading this country into what could be economically called a dynamic economy? Perhaps it might be best described in these words:

> Certainly that Liberalism which nearly a century ago moved men's hearts and minds towards ideas of freedom and social justice, towards the defence of ethical ideas and of trust in the people, has not died out. On the whole there is as much of the genuine product in the world today, perhaps more. But it has escaped from the bonds of party. It has entered into new forms and conceptions of human liberty on a world-wide scale. And nearly everywhere the parties that once embodied and expressed it, no longer do so adequately. Today, Liberal parties, if they exist at all, are fighting a rueful retreat which may not be their fault, but whatever the reason, the fact remains. There is a political moral in this and it would seem to be that in an ever-changing world parties which do not evolve new applications of their established principles find themselves superseded by those which do.

Those are the words of an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen of February 6, under the ironic caption "Splendid Isolation".

This position of the present government was further emphasized by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) when he stated that, if capital did not industrialize the west, the people would. That, coming from a cabinet minister representing a responsible government, shows a lamentable lack of leadership in the age in which we are living, with the necessities that are staring us in the face. Yes, we must accept new principles to avert catastrophe. It is useless to speak of adequate old age pensions, adequate health insurance, and a planned immigration policy unless we revitalize our economy to show the people that we can have continually higher standards of living along with a large increase in population. The law of diminishing returns has so caught up with us that private capital will no longer take the risks necessary to develop our frontiers on the colossal scale necessary to maintain a dynamic economy. History has shown us time and time again that nations which settle back into a state of self-complacency are wiped out and obliterated by people who require more living room. This law of the jungle is still apparent in this world today; and all the plans of standardizing arms, establishing larger national defence organizations, et cetera, will be of no avail unless we can show that we are vital and alive by having a firm growing economy in which we have complete faith.

There was a time when this country was vital and alive. When I look back through the paper of 1910, I run across these headlines: "Telegraph Line to Stewart", "Railroad at Mile 45", "Sir Ernest Shackleton heads English Company to develop the falls of the Bulkley river for power project", "Company is ready to build road from Vancouver to Alaska and confers with Premier McBride", "Mining crews go into the Groundhog coal fields", and many similar ones.

No such headlines are in our paper today, but rather the very opposite. We live in fear of depression. The events of the past year or two should be a lesson to us. We read of terrific shortages in other countries caused by the crises of war or from the lack of development during the thirties. That could very well arise in this country in the immediate future, and yet no plans or no lead is given by the government of the day to avert this condition. We read that four million were unemployed in Great Britain because of a shortage of coal. We, too, have suffered from a shortage of coal just in the last year, but of course not in the same proportion. But a shortage could arise again and be of far more drastic proportions. In 1939 we spent $45·5 million on the import of coal from the United States, and in 1946 we spent $131·2 million on importing coal from the United States. Coal is the backbone of our industrial economy even yet. If our economy is to expand, the western regions must be industrialized, especially the west coast; yet the resources of coal, the very backbone of that industrialization programme, are being depleted to the vanishing point.

The Carroll commission on coal has this to say about the two main fields on Vancouver island:

> Mining has been carried on in the Nanaimo field for more than fifty years and most of the known available coal has been recovered. Recent investigations of the geological survey indicate that the reserves in the area are only sufficient to allow operations to continue at the current levels of production for from ten to fifteen years. This is confirmed by the estimates of reserves submitted by the Canadian collieries, Dunsmuir Limited. The mines in the Cumberland area have also been worked extensively and all easily available coal has been mined.

That is the position of coal mining in the two main fields on the Pacific coast. There are other fields open for development within 150 miles of tide-water and that coal is anthracite, the only anthracite in any quantity west of Pennsylvania. I am referring to the Groundhog coal field of central British Columbia.

Mr. G. S. Malloch spent some time in the Groundhog field during 1912, for the federal Department of Mines, and he made a report which can be found in the sessional papers of 1912: 26 to 26A, No. 19. On page 87 of this volume, under the heading "Character of the Coal", Mr. Malloch had this to say:

> The character of the coal differs essentially from any hitherto described. It is anthracite, non-coking, and contains exceptionally high percentage of moisture. In many cases, the coal has a resinous lustre which is usually found in lignitic coal, and very likely the high moisture produces this lustre.

While in the field, he investigated the properties of the Western Development Company, the British Columbia Anthracite Syndicate and the British Columbia Anthracite Company. These companies, at that time, had claims staked in this area. In this report he has detailed data on the various seams he investigated, width of seams, moisture content, ash, fixed carbon, et cetera. He also gives descriptions of the structural geology of the area, description of the coal out-croppings and a description of the routes which a railroad would have to take to enter the field.

In 1921, evidence was given before a special committee of the House of Commons at Ottawa, named to inquire into the fuel supply of Canada. This evidence was given by Mr. J. G. Scott, an official of the B.C. Skeena Coal Company, controlling 34,000 acres of anthracite coal lands situated at Groundhog mountain, British Columbia, on the head waters of the Skeena river. In appealing for aid for the development of this coal field he had this to say at one point:

I think this is a national project which is well worth the attention of parliament and if it could be realized, and I am sure that it will be realized. I believe it will cause the reproduction in northern British Columbia of all such industries as are caused by or have resulted from the development of similar classes of coal in Pennsylvania.

There are three routes by which a railway may reach the field. First, a branch northward from Hazelton on the Canadian National Railways which would follow the valley of the Skeena river, a distance of about 150 miles. Second, a route for which an independent railway once had a charter, from the mouth of the Naas river on the Pacific coast a little north of Prince Rupert to the coal field, a distance of 180 miles. The dominion government voted a subsidy of $640,000 in 1912 to the company which was going to build a railway on this route. Third, an alternative line could be built from the Alice Arm or Stewart on the Portland canal, a distance that way of a little over 100 miles. These are the three routes by which this coal could be moved.

Mr. Scott, further in his evidence, pointed out that just prior to the 1914-18 war, he had correspondance with Lord Rhondda, the coal baron of Great Britain, about the Groundhog coal field. Lord Rhondda was so interested in this matter that he took an interest in the company, of which Mr. Scott was a member. With the outbreak of world war I, Lord Rhondda's interest was, of course, discontinued and he died shortly afterwards.

Mr. Scott, under questioning of Mr. Douglas, then a member of parliament for Cape Breton, revealed a report of a Mr. Gustav Grossman, a Pennsylvania engineer, who examined the field. Mr. Grossman had this to say:

During my visit to the Groundhog mountain coal field from May until October, 1912, for the purpose of investigating its economic value as far as an exhaustive superficial examination and inspection of its various exploration workings could disclose, I also examined among others, holdings of your syndicate. Without going into details as to geology, transportation facilities, et cetera, a general synopsis of the merits of your property may be given as follows, forty-seven sections, 30,080 acres, situated 56 degrees, 45 minutes north latitude and 128 degrees 15 minutes west longitude, in the west portion of the Groundhog mountain coal field, a considerable portion of which is favourably located, and containing coal seams of superior quality and of workable dimensions. Number of workable seams uncovered, six, with an aggregate thickness of 28 feet. Quality of the coal, anthracite, very bright and hard and of excellent steaming quality, comparing favourably with the Pennsylvania product.

Mr. Scott, further in his evidence stated:

No extraordinary or unusual engineering difficulties will be encountered in the opening up of this property, which should be capable of producing a large daily tonnage of a superior quality of fuel and I would consider the development of this group of coal claims an inviting business proposition which should be attractive to investors. There is no coal mine in the Dominion of Canada which is of the same or similar quality as this, either in physical or economic properties, and so far no such coal has been discovered in commercial quantities in the dominion. Practically speaking, there is no anthracite west of Pennsylvania in the United States. Judging by the amount of Pennsylvania anthracite that is used in the United States and Canada, it may readily be seen what a gap in the coal supply in the west will be filled by the opening of this field. The smokeless character of this coal should open for it a large market in the coastal cities, where the smoke nuisance is prohibited. Its cleanliness for household use and its steady burning properties should bring it into general use for domestic purposes. In illustrating the comparative importance of such an area as this, it may be stated that this area alone probably contains as much coal, possibly ten times as much, as is found in all the present known coal areas in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Mackenzie, then member of parliament from Nova Scotia, had this to say on the latter's statement:

I am afraid that damns that report very badly. This is a hint to you that I am from Nova Scotia.

Mr. James McEvoy, geological and mining engineer, formerly a member of the staff of the geological survey of Ottawa, had this to say:

I have no doubt that a large market can be found for this coal and at good prices. The domestic market will be the most important at first and as the coal is practically smokeless and will not make dust and dirt all over a house, as the soft coals of the west invariably do, it will be self-advertising.

The quantity of coal in this great field has not been computed. Two experienced mining engineers who examined forty-seven square miles of the territory, owned by Quebec and London capitalists, estimated that on the 30,000 acres in question there were one billion, one hundred million tons of coal.

At the present time, all licences and leases have expired in this area. There are no existing alienations. Therefore a government which is increasingly becoming concerned with the lack of industrialization in the west could afford to survey this whole area for development of its coal resources, as well as other resources that could be tied in with the development of the coal field of this area.

Our economy under present conditions consists of a series of economic islands, each functioning within itself, but deprived of its full measure of success, owing to the lack of a balanced over-all industrial policy. Instead of our economy expanding and developing toward the maximum self-sufficiency, we are drifting more and more toward becoming a colony of the United States. This tendency must be checked and I would urge the government, as one step away from this drift, to survey and open for development such resources as are found in the Groundhog coal field. It will save needless confusion and suffering when the time comes for us once again to wake ourselves from our lethargy.

This area, known as the Groundhog region, would be intersected by the highway from Hazelton to Whitehorse, which has caused so much international conjecture, in both military and civilian circles. This Hazelton project would give access and outlet to many billions of feet of merchantable spruce and hemlock and other timber suitable for lumber and also for mining props.

The coast range carries the same geological formation on its eastern flanks, as at the Premier mine above Stewart, on its western slope. There is room for and the probability of the discovery of several Premiers, as well as the coal field that I have mentioned, on these eastern flanks, which are at present inaccessible, or practically so. Laterals from the Hazelton route would give access and outlet. The benefits to the development of this area, both as to economic resources and means of transportation, would develop great industries on the coast, and the beneficial influence would be felt from Frisco to Vancouver to Nome.

The agricultural lands of the Naas river, with its soft, healthy climate, are eminently suitable for settlement. With mining and logging underway, there would be unlimited markets for all produce. This portion of road to the Yukon and Alaska, the Hazelton-Whitehorse project, is a big undertaking in itself, but it is a mere gateway to infinitely vaster possibilities.

On motion of Mr. Castleden the debate was adjourned.

CURLING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF WINNING OF CHAMPIONSHIP OF CANADA

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the house adjourns, may I be permitted to take just one minute. As a number of hon. members know, there have been taking place in the city of Saint John during this week games for the curling championship of Canada. The last game took place today. The championship was won by a young man and his associates from an important city in a great province in the great country of Canada. The winner was Mr. Jimmy Welsh of Deer Lodge club, Winnipeg. I may add that he was successful in winning nine victories out of nine games played.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, March 7, 1947

The house met at three o'clock.

BARBARA ANN SCOTT

WOMEN'S WORLD FIGURE SKATING CHAMPIONSHIP —RESOLUTION OF GREETINGS AND GOOD WISHES

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this morning it was suggested to me by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that the house might be disposed to adopt a very simple resolution; I asked the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) if he would be good enough to second it, and he has been kind enough to agree to do so. The resolution reads:

> That on this, the day of her arrival home in our capital city, the house extends its warmest greetings and good wishes to Barbara Ann Scott, who, by her great achievement in winning the world women's figure skating championship, has brought distinction to herself and honour to our country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There are three simple elements involved, I think, and that is all I am going to say: first, our pride in her remarkable achievement and accomplishment; second, our best wishes for her future success, and third, despite the acclaim, the applause and the triumphs she may be accorded elsewhere, there is nothing so valuable as to have the record of this resolution in the free parliament of the country which is her native land and to which she has brought such lustre and renown.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I am particularly happy to have the opportunity of seconding the resolution moved by the leader of the house. No statement more true has ever been made than that this victory by one of our own people has brought fame to Canada. I have seen many receptions to champions, both individuals and teams in different lines of sport during the last thirty or forty years, but I have never seen one where the enthusiasm of youth so manifested itself as it has in connection with the winning of the women's world figure skating championship by Barbara Ann Scott.

It is no wonder her record in this sport is most remarkable. She started to skate at seven years of age. By persistence, regular practice and hard training she won first the junior Canadian championship, then the senior Canadian championship and then the North American championship. This year, by dint of iron discipline, she won the European title at Davos, Switzerland, and went on to win the world title at Stockholm. And now we are told she is planning to defend her North American title in this city at the end of this month, and next year will seek another world title at the Olympic games.

Her victory was not won by chance, or by a stroke of luck. It was won because she deserved to win. Whenever we think of perfection in sports we are taken back to the age of Pericles. I want to refer to one comment made at that time. Of all the civilizations of the past which shaped the course of history, none was more influential than that of Athens. Practically all our competitive events, from the throwing of the discus to the marathon race, had their origin in that ancient city twenty-five centuries ago. In that age character was associated with perfection of the human form. The ideal of that day was set by Pericles, when he said that the individual Athenian should have, if I may use his own words, "the power of adapting himself to the most varied forms of action with the utmost versatility of grace".

That is the standard of physical perfection Miss Scott must have set for herself. She was living up to that ancient tradition when she went to Stockholm and brought back the women's figure skating championship of the world. Her outstanding success cannot help but be an inspiration for all Canadian youth.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to associate myself and the group about me here with the motion moved by the leader of the house (Mr. Mackenzie) and seconded by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken). It is a graceful tribute to a distinguished Canadian.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself and the group I represent with the mover and the seconder of the motion before the house. To me the amazing thing about Miss Scott and her great achievement is that one so young would be willing to submit herself to the rigorous discipline necessary to attainment of the perfection or near perfection required to win a world's championship. It all goes to show what can be done if one is inspired by the ambition to reach a worth-while goal.

What a great Canada this would be if thousands of our young Canadians, perhaps equipped with just as much native ability as Miss Scott possesses, could be inspired to do their best, as Miss Scott has done. Certainly she has brought distinction to this land.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, Barbara Ann Scott is the daughter of one who for several years occupied the position of military secretary. Lieutenant Colonel Clyde R. Scott was military secretary to five ministers of national defence. He served them as he only could serve them. He earned their gratitude; and I ask that it be added to the record that this is the daughter of that great man.

Mr. G. RUSSELL BOUCHER (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as one of the members from Barbara Ann Scott's home city and federal area I believe it would be proper for me to point out to hon. members and to the public at large the true and perfect emblem she is of modest, wholesome Canadian grace. May I say to hon. members that to exemplify this young, virile and growing nation none could have done better in a world competition than Barbara Ann Scott has done. I am sure, on this occasion, we all join in paying tribute to her, to her late illustrious father and to her esteemed mother.

Mrs. GLADYS STRUM (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are all proud of Barbara Ann Scott, and I share in the pride of our sex that she is the second Canadian woman this year to win a world championship. A few weeks ago Mrs. Kelsey, in a province not noted as a wheat growing province, won the world championship for the growing of wheat. This is indeed a hopeful sign. I hope that Barbara Ann Scott and her generation will take an interest not only in sports but in citizenship, and that some day half these benches will be occupied by the Barbara Ann Scotts of this country.

Mr. J. T. RICHARD (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I have the rare privilege of numbering among my constituents the world's champion skater, Barbara Ann Scott. I was privileged to go to the train at noon today, and was very glad to be among those who were there to welcome her. In the name of my constituents and also in the names of my friends here in "Little Chicago" the best corner of the house—we greet Barbara Ann Scott, who represents the finest in Canadian womanhood.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO GIVE PRECEDENCE TO GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (for the Prime Minister) moved:

That, on Monday and Tuesday, March 10 and 11, instant, government notices of motion and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except the debate on the reply to the speech from the throne, and that on Wednesday, March 12, instant, and every sitting day thereafter until and including Friday, March 28, instant, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except introduction of bills, questions and notices of motions for the production of papers, all notwithstanding anything contained in the resolution of this house on January 30.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSING

SHORTAGE OF FLOORING MATERIALS AT NELSON B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): I should like to ask a question of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe). I have just received a telegram to the effect that a considerable number of war-time houses in the city of Nelson in my constituency cannot be completed because it is impossible to obtain flooring. Has the parliamentary assistant any information on the subject?

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): The first intimation we had of any shortage of flooring in the war-time housing project at Nelson was received yesterday. An order has gone forward for this flooring, and I understand it will be shipped from Montreal on Monday.

ATOMIC ENERGY

REPORTED REMOVAL OF REFINERY FROM LOCATION AT PORT HOPE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. STEPHENSON (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe). As the minister is not in the house, perhaps his parliamentary assistant would answer for him. An article appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of March 5 stating that the Port Hope refinery which made uranium for atomic bombs will be moved shortly, or some time in the future, to Deep River. Will the parliamentary assistant state whether this is true; if so, why is the plant to be removed?

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I have not a copy of the newspaper item, but if it contains what the hon. member says it does—I have no doubt that it does—it is founded on rumour only, and is not supported by fact.

TAXATION AGREEMENTS

COST OF CARRYING OUT OFFERS MADE TO THE PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he has yet been able to make the calculation he said he had to make before answering the question I asked the day before yesterday?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I must offer my apologies to my hon. friend. I asked my officials to make the calculation, and I have knowledge that it has been made. But due to my defective memory I forgot to ask them to give it to me before I came to the house. I will give it to my hon. friend on Monday or Tuesday. I can give him an approximate figure now but I would rather give him the accurate figure.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Thursday, March 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the debate on the address has wended its weary way for a considerable period of time, and we are now approaching a vote on the amendments. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) is couched in simple terms. It reads:

> We respectfully submit to Your Excellency that Your Excellency's present advisers do not possess the confidence of the country.

A subamendment has been moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Cold-well) which to all intents and purposes is a motion for the establishment of socialism in this country. In the amendment of the leader of the opposition the question of confidence is placed clearly before every hon. member of this house. Every hon. member on this side, without regard to party considerations, has for varying reasons declared a lack of confidence in this government. In my submission, to declare lack of confidence without voting lack of confidence is to be inconsistent.

There may be some who will say that while they have no confidence in the government, neither have they confidence in His Majesty's opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am glad I have approval of one thing from the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I did not say a word.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: A little later I shall be saying something which will not gain that same degree of approval. The amendment of the leader of the opposition places clearly before the members of this house the situation of non-confidence. It does not mean the substitution of one government for another, because the Prime Minister has stated that if it is carried there will be an election. We at least know the situation, and we are asking all those who have no confidence in this government to support the amendment of the leader of the opposition.

I repeat that the amendment of the C.C.F. embraces nothing but the establishment of socialism. Anyone who believes in the maintenance of private enterprise to the maximum cannot support that amendment. The time has come when there should be an outspoken declaration in favour of freedom from unnecessary interference with private rights, private property and private industry by those who believe in the maintenance of private enterprise in this country. While the present government gives lip service to the maintenance of free enterprise, and in that regard it goes far, although it is only a matter of degree it does not go as far as the government of Saskatchewan which avows socialism. While the members of the government profess to believe in private enterprise, the business men of this country have been pushed around, not only during the war but since, as though they were enemies of the state. Success on the part of the individual is becoming a subject of deprecation. To many bureaucrats a business man, however honest he may be, is an object of suspicion and in many cases a parasite to be denounced. The honest business man, no less than the farmer and the worker and other citizens, should be entitled to fair and equitable treatment.

I have no sympathy with wrongdoers or those who would exploit and take advantage of their brothers. but when we ask private enterprise to provide jobs we must at the earliest possible moment remove the controls which prevent business from doing that. The honest business man should be protected against attacks made maliciously and for the purpose of creating political capital. Canada has the right through her people to decide whether or not she shall become a socialist state. Canada cannot exist and prosper under a government which while it avows private enterprise is afflicted with a definite trend toward socialism.

Business will be responsible if it fails to discharge its duty and provide jobs. It is true that business must be supervised, but the spirit that called the peoples of the world to our shores, the spirit of adventure, of initiative and of courage, is the spirit that is needed, not the bureaucratic attitude which is encouraged and fostered by this government and which consists of penalizing business, denouncing it, catechizing it, frustrating it, overtaxing it and at the same time expecting it to provide jobs. The danger to our economic future lies in the fact that the business man, however honest, if harassed by snoopers will find that the incentive to expand and to produce has been destroyed by excessive taxation, unnecessary interference by bureaucracy and the maintenance of unfair and unjust controls.

While bureaucracy was not the creation of this government, it has been expanded by this government to the point where the bureaucrat has developed the psychology of an autocrat, independent by being above the courts. First the bureaucrat passes an order in council or a regulation. Then he decrees what shall be done under it. Then he prosecutes those who infringe it. Finally, having made a determination on the question behind closed doors, he denies the right of recourse to the courts. Canadians should no longer be required to dance like marionettes under the untrammelled control of bureaucrats appointed by and responsible only to this government.

Some will ask what difference there is between those who believe in private enterprise and those who believe in the socialist form of government. There is one similarity between this government and those who profess socialism in this country. Both operate under and through the instrumentality of a bureaucracy which carries out the will of the cabinet and which denies the right of appeal to the courts on the part of those affected. In Saskatchewan—and the government of Saskatchewan is in no worse position in that regard than this government—compulsion has become the order of the day. Insurance must be taken out by all public institutions or by recipients of grants from the government in the government insurance company. Trappers must sell through government boards. Fishermen dispose of their catch through government agencies. In the lumber business the government is in competition with private business, and it has this advantage over them, that it does not have to pay taxes.

What about the government of this country preaching the doctrine of free enterprise and the rights of the individual? It enjoys monopoly control over wheat and rubber. It has extended its interests into shipping, air and land transportation, housing, mining, moving pictures and public information. How serious the trend is may be indicated by a return brought down in the legislature of Saskatchewan the other day in reply to a Liberal member who had asked the government how many crown corporations were operating in the province. The answer was: Twelve federal crown corporations, as against eight established by the government of Saskatchewan, under a socialist government. There is the situation in this country today.

Mr. TUCKER: Are you against the Bank of Canada? Are you against the industrial development bank? Are you against the wheat board? Why don't you say where you stand? Are you against the C.N.R. and Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Mr. GRAYDON: The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) is a super-socialist.

Mr. TUCKER: Answer the question.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker, it is without reluctance that I answer my hon. friend. The Conservative government set up the Bank of Canada.

Mr. TUCKER: May I make this correction, on a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would remind hon. members that the member who has the floor should not be interrupted without his permission.

Mr. TUCKER: On a point of order, sir, the hon. member spoke of the Conservative government having set up the Bank of Canada. They set it up as a privately-owned institution.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member will please not interrupt the hon. member who has the floor, without his permission.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker, do you count out time for this?—because I find that I never get much more than about twelve minutes out of my forty.

I do not wish to be understood as criticizing the civil service. Canada needs and has an efficient civil service. But Canada does not need and must fight against the type of bureaucracy that is today controlling this country. When a government which depends to be in favour of private enterprise goes as far as this government has gone in the matter of export controls and other legislation introduced at the present session, then private enterprise becomes merely a phantom, a dream, a nebulous memory.

The Progressive Conservative party demands the maintenance of freedom. It stands opposed to privilege. It stands opposed to a coercive society, but it believes in maintaining a maximum stimulus for the productive activity of the individual without permitting detriment to others. It believes that the individual is entitled to a fair reward and a fair return for what he does. It is opposed to monopoly, whether that monopoly be by private greed or under the principles of Marxism.

Mr. MITCHELL: You are talking like a Liberal now.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Like a Liberal used to be.

Mr. TUCKER: Like a Liberal of fifty years ago. You have just caught up with them.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is difficult to understand my hon. friend, because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in his western tour made a statement—when he was in the house he said to the C.C.F.: "You are Liberals in a hurry," and now the hon. member for Rosthern says that he is a Liberal of fifty years ago.

Mr. TUCKER: No; I said you were.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: We of the Progressive Conservative party take a stand for minimum interference by the government in business. We believe that the government exists for the purpose of preventing abuse, but that it is not a function of government to engage in competitive business. For these among other reasons we cannot support the subamendment of my hon. friends to the left.

Sometimes people ask me what is the difference between those who believe in Socialism and those who believe in Conservatism. The answer was given in the course of a speech delivered by the Right Hon. Anthony Eden at Blackpool, England, in October, 1946. Without any argument about the sincerity of those who have one belief or the other he pointed out the difference between the philosophy of Socialism and that of Conservatism, in these words:

> Socialism says to a man: "You are a unit in the state. Work hard for the state as the state thinks best and the state will provide you with what it thinks you should have." The Conservative party says: "You are an individual. Choose your own way of life and seek to develop to the full your own talents. If you do this and if you are prepared to accept the obligations that are essential to life in an ordered community then we regard it as the duty of the government to see that out of the fruits of your labour you can build a life of your own for yourself and your family and at the same time feel the satisfaction of sharing in the common purpose of a free society."

Then he went on to say:

> I call for a way of life for the people under which industry may prosper and men be free. Man should be the master of his environment, and not its slave. That is what freedom means. It is precisely in the conception of ownership that man achieves mastery over his environment. Upon the institution of property depends the fulfilment of individual personality and the maintenance of individual liberty.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Where is Anthony Eden now?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: He went down fighting the battles. When he stood in the house near the chair in which the Clerk now sits there was nobody even to my left who asked: Where does Anthony Eden stand?

Mr. TUCKER: I thought the hon. member was a member of the Progressive Conservative party, not the Conservative party.

Mr. ROWE: The hon. member for Rosthern is not even progressive.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I now pass to another subject which I hope will be just as favourably accepted by my hon. friends opposite as were the remarks I have just made. I shall deal with the question of dominion-provincial relations only for the purpose of giving an opportunity to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to clarify certain statements he has recently made.

In August, 1945, negotiations began on what was called a "scientific" proposal worked out by the experts under which each province was to receive a capital grant of $12 per capita in lieu of certain taxation rights subject to increases in the event of an increase in population, and also on the basis of gross national production. Then came the conference of April, 1946. By this time the federal government had arrived at a new figure of $15. The discussions throughout the conference centred around the minor taxes as the grant of $15 was all-inclusive. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) indicated that if the provinces wished to retain any of the minor taxes the amount thereof would have to be deducted from the grant.

On June 27, 1946, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), then minister of finance, in his budget speech set out the situation whereby the grant was to remain at $15 per capita, to which was to be added a special 5 per cent corporation tax. The budget offer was duly accepted by certain provinces and agreements were signed. In November or December the premier of British Columbia, having held back, the matter was again up in the air. Finally in January a further offer was made under which a material increase and change was made in the offer of the federal government. The Winnipeg Free Press had this to say:

> The dominion has been compelled by the resistance of various provinces greatly to increase the price offered for these taxes. The taxation agreements of 1941 cost the dominion treasury annually $86·2 million. to this should be added $14·4 million statutory subsidies and $23·9 million collected by the provinces. The total is $124,900,000.

Then it goes on to say that the last offer—that is the January offer—was $100 million in excess of the original proposal of 1945. Gradually the dominion raised the amount as resistance continued. Finally in December of 1946 or January of 1947 the offer was $12.75 plus half the revenue collected in the province in 1941 for income and corporation taxes, plus statutory subsidies, together with the release of the gasoline tax. In May, 1946 the federal government took the position that it could not hand back the gasoline tax and could not pay statutory subsidies. What change took place during that period which permitted in December, 1946 or January, 1947, what could not be done in May, 1946? What happens to social security now? I should like to hear from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in reference to this matter.

Under the original scheme, without taking into consideration health insurance, some $600 million was to be provided for. Having increased the amounts paid by way of rental, how much do the federal government intend to provide for in the matter of social security? Apparently they have changed their point of view. Having increased the amount given to the provinces they will require the provinces to take over a larger measure of social security than ever before. I have read the dominion-provincial correspondence since the budget was brought down in 1946 and I find that throughout the year the attitude of the dominion was that social security measures to be provided by the federal government would remain the same. There was to be no change; the position in that regard was final and definite. I wish that the Minister of Finance were in his place, because I intend to ask a specific question. If all the provinces accept the new offer, how much more social security are they to be required to provide than they would have provided under the offers of June, 1946, and of August, 1945? Do any of the provinces who have signed today know to what extent they will be required to contribute more for social security than they would have contributed under the original agreements? The question is a simple one.

That there has been a change in the attitude of the government is revealed in a speech which the Minister of Finance delivered in Toronto on January 27 last. These were his words at that time:

> I wish to make it quite clear that I am not going to forecast tax policy for 1947 in advance of the budget. But I wish to make it equally clear that the over-all commitments of the dominion are not being increased. As a result of increased rental payments from the dominion, the provinces will be able to assume, and must expect to assume, a somewhat greater financial responsibility. The dominion government will be able correspondingly to reduce some of the burden it was prepared to assume for a public investment and social security programme.

What does this all add up to? The amount of the rental to the provinces was increased, but what are the provinces expected to provide in the way of additional social security measures because they have received that increase? As a matter of fact originally it was intended that the social security scheme would stand intact. In his several letters which are published in this document to which I have referred, the then minister of finance took the stand that social security proposals would not be changed; but the present Minister of Finance has said that there are changes; that the provinces will have to take over a larger measure of social security. Surely, sir, we in this house and the premiers of the various provinces have a right to know the extent to which, having accepted the additional rental in the December proposal, the provinces will be expected to add to the social security legislation which they have. Is the final offer a means by which the government gets out of its responsibility to bring in a larger, more comprehensive and more reasonable measure of old age pensions? There is some reason for the delay in the introduction of old age pensions legislation which is being continued under the order in council as an appendix to the omnibus bill.

Why is this issue not faced? Is it because the provinces are receiving an increased rental in return for the fields of taxation that they give up, and will be required therefore to take over a larger measure of old age pensions and other security measures? I should like to know what the Minister of Finance advised the premiers in this regard. It is difficult to know what passed between the provinces because, as one reads over these letters, one is struck by the fact that some of the provincial representatives were men of few words, and those few were sometimes capable of ambiguous interpretation. There I leave that matter, but I wish to find out what social security measures will have to be carried out by the provinces by reason of the increase.

Mr. TUCKER: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? I want information.

Mr. GRAYDON: You need plenty.

Mr. TUCKER: Yes, on this I need a lot. What is the position of the hon. gentleman and his party in regard to Premier Drew? Do they support his position or not?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is a good question—

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Answer it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:—but charity begins at home, and—

Mr. TUCKER: It is hard to answer it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Oh, there is no difficulty about it. I am placing the government in a position to answer so that I in turn shall be in a position to know the degree to which—

Mr. TUCKER: Don't you know yet?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Surely, sir, my hon. friend can contain himself in silence. He is talking all the time in Saskatchewan.

Mr. GRAYDON: Who supports Tommy Douglas out there?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Having asked these questions, when I get an answer—because I am not going to be in the position of some of the premiers of the provinces who do not yet know whether they got a pig in a poke—as to the extent to which the original proposals on public investment and security legislation will be upheld by the federal government in accordance with its original offer, I will answer the question. Some of the provinces entered into agreement, with approval and found out later that somebody else had got a better deal, and then they came back for a second chance. The federal government having secured signatures of some provinces to the last agreements and the Minister of Finance having thereafter made the declaration that the provinces will have to assume a larger share of social security, the provinces still do not know what they got, or what they have undertaken, or what their additional responsibilities for social security or public investment will be in the matter.

There is one other matter to which I wish to make reference. In the speech from the throne the following words appear:

My ministers are also following with interest the activities of the united nations with regard to the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the manner in which those obligations, accepted by all members of united nations, may best be implemented. It is the intention of the government to recommend the appointment of a select committee of members of both houses to consider and report upon these matters.

I do not wish on this occasion to discuss the arguments in favour of a national bill of rights for Canada. Last year when the matter was before the house the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) undertook to give consideration at this session to the introduction of a measure to ensure the preservation of the rights and constitutional freedoms of our people. The means adopted to that end is apparently the setting up of a committee from this house and the senate to discuss the terms of an international bill of rights. But what in common is there between an international bill of rights and a national bill of rights?

An international bill of rights must represent the consensus of some sixty nations with varying constitutional backgrounds and varying systems of government. What would be suitable in an international bill of rights would not meet the needs of the people of Canada, since we possess one of the highest forms of democracy in the world. An international bill of rights is being drafted at the present time; I believe the work has almost been completed under the chairmanship of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt—

Mr. MARTIN: Just started.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, Canada is not one of the representatives.

Mr. MARTIN: Canada is certainly a member of the united nations.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There are eighteen members on the organization.

Mr. MARTIN: That is the committee. Canada is a member of the united nations.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I realize that perfectly well, but Canada has no representative on that committee.

Mr. MARTIN: Canada is a member of the united nations. My hon. friend knows it.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I can understand my hon. friend's position on a bill of rights, because last year he said that Canada did not need it, and the Minister of Veterans Affairs finally admitted that it did, so that there was slight cleavage there. I presume now that this is a means taken to prevent the people of this country from having a bill of rights of their own. This is a means taken to get around the need for a declaration of our constitutional freedoms in Canada.

Last year the argument was that it was not within the legislative competence of parliament to pass such a bill of rights, that it came within the purview of property and civil rights and as such was a matter of provincial jurisdiction. I would ask those who are interested in the problem to read the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Alberta statutes reference, which is cited in the Supreme Court of Canada reports, 1938, beginning at page 71. I may say that this reference was one respecting certain legislation passed by the government of Alberta which it was alleged had the effect of restricting the freedom of the press. When the matter came before the supreme court it was argued that the provinces had the right to interfere with freedom of the press, one of the fundamental freedoms under our democracy. It was argued that only the province could do that because primarily it concerned the matter of property and civil rights, and this is what Chief Justice Sir Lyman Duff said at page 133:

The right of public discussion is, of course, subject to legal restrictions; those based upon considerations of decency and public order, and others conceived for the protection of various private and public interests with which, for example, the laws of defamation and sedition are concerned.

Then he goes on:

We do not doubt that (in addition to the power of disallowance vested in the governor general) the parliament of Canada possesses authority to legislate for the protection of this right. That authority rests upon the principle that the powers requisite for the protection of the constitution itself arise by necessary implication from the British North America Act as a whole (Fort Frances Pulp & Paper Co. Ltd. v. Manitoba Free Press Co. Ltd.); and since the subject matter in relation to which the power is exercised is not exclusively a provincial matter, it is necessarily vested in parliament.

Then he goes on to say:

But this by no means exhausts the matter. Any attempt to abrogate this right of public debate or to suppress the traditional forms of the exercise of the right (in public meeting and through the press) would, in our opinion, be incompetent to the legislatures of the provinces, or to the legislature of any one of the provinces, as repugnant to the provisions of the British North America Act, by which the parliament of Canada is established as the legislative organ of the people of Canada under the crown, and dominion legislation enacted pursuant to the legislative authority given by those provisions.

In other words under that authority the dominion has power to legislate in regard to the maintenance of the freedoms incident to the maintenance of our democracy, under the British North America Act. Having regard to what has taken place in recent years, I suggest that in this parliament, supported as the need is by a large majority of the press of this country, a committee should be established including members of the House of Commons and of the Senate, with representation from the provinces, to the end that through conference a bill of rights may be established which will assure the people of Canada their constitutional rights, and further assure that no government in future will ever be able to endanger those rights without the approval and consent of parliament.

You have indicated, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: An international bill of rights cannot meet the needs of our people in Canada. It would be like a convoy the speed of which is regulated by the speed of the slowest ship. A bill of rights satisfactory to all the nations of the earth would provide for a lesser degree of freedom than Canadians have a right to expect. I may not have the opportunity of speaking to this matter on private members' day, because that is gradually being done away with, but I do make this appeal to the government. Let us consider this matter as members of parliament without regard to party considerations, and build the future of Canada upon the foundation of a declaration of our rights which will assure the maintenance of the priceless rights in which we believe and for the preservation of which ninety thousand Canadians gave their lives in two world wars.

Mr. L. O. BREITHAUPT (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, even at this late stage of the debate I wish to pay my compliments to the mover and seconder of the address. This may be customary, but it is none the less sincere. No doubt by this time the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacNaught) will have had all his potatoes moved into the export market, and certainly the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cournoyer) is rapidly becoming acquainted in this house, and is demonstrating to all hon. members that he is a worthy successor to that great Canadian, the late Hon. P. J. A. Cardin.

In an analysis of the speech from the throne and an interpretation of its legislative forecasts one definitely finds much in the way of encouragement. I believe there is justification for hoping that substantial reductions in taxation may be in the offing. In spite of the fact that no definite assurance is given in the speech from the throne itself it is entirely reasonable to infer that our amiable and agreeable Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) will have some good things to tell us in this connection in due course. A general reduction in taxes is surely in the cards. When one ponders the large and mounting government surplus and considers that the speech from the throne itself points out "that the estimates will disclose substantial and gratifying reductions in expenditure", surely something of this kind should be forthcoming.

That being so, Mr. Speaker, I wish to put in a strong plea for consideration of the just claims for a reduction in taxation of the oft overlooked and neglected so-called white collar group, which forms such a large part of our population and is such an important element in our democratic institutions. When it comes to raising money for the Red Cross, for crippled children, for community chests and all that sort of thing, no greater support is given than by this great group of which I speak. An analysis of the 1945 tax tables shows the total number of taxpayers to be 2,365,000 persons. Of these some 1,677,300 received $2,000 per annum or less, while 478,200 received from $2,000 to $3,000. In other words ninety per cent of all Canadian taxpayers were in the $3,000 and under bracket. To encourage this group I suggest an all-round reduction of taxes and further simplification of present methods enforced in their collection. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann), I may say, has made great progress in this direction, and it is to be hoped that further simplification will be achieved. I am sure we would all like to see some real progress made along these lines, which would permit those in this great group to retain a larger share of their income than has been possible during the war years.

Realistically speaking, incentive has been lacking for many to turn in their best work and to stay on the job. It is important not only that as many as possible should be employed, but also that those employed should be as productive as possible. This objective cannot be achieved as long as there is widespread uneasiness and bad feeling with regard to actual take-home pay. It seems quite evident that a reduction in personal income tax will lead more people in all groups to actually put their backs into their work, with a very beneficial effect on production, and in the long run government revenues themselves would greatly benefit.

What applies to the individual also applies to business. Now that the war is over greater incentives for production and employment should be the order of the day. The excess profits tax may have been sound in war time, during the period of non-competitive business; but now, with the need for a greater volume of export trade, full production and full employment are more than ever essential to our welfare. So, not only should the excess profits tax be eliminated entirely, but the high personal income tax should be eliminated also. Two great exporting nations have already abandoned the excess profits tax, and I think it is high time Canada did the same—and I mean not for 1948, but for the current fiscal year, 1947.

It is to be hoped that in the budget speech of the minister its entire repeal for the current business year will be announced. If we are to compete in export markets so earnestly striven for by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon)—and I should say, so effectively—then certainly industry should no longer be fettered by this impost.

I wish to compliment members of the treasury board for the realistic approach they have taken in the matter of reduction of government expenditures in all departments. Their record, to date, is impressive, when one studies the estimates for the coming year. Where services are no longer necessary, I think every hon. member will agree that they should either be discontinued entirely or materially curtailed. We cannot reduce taxes on the one hand and maintain unnecessary services on the other.

I note with some concern, as most hon. members on this side must have done, that opposition members while advocating strict economy and reduction of taxes have not up to now, so far as I have seen, shown any marked tendency to assist the government in practising what they themselves preach. While I am a strong believer in bringing the tax structure down for all groups, so that greater incentive may result, I feel all Canadians should realize we cannot get anywhere unless we stay on the job.

I believe it was Benjamin Franklin who said:

> Friends and neighbours, the taxes are indeed very heavy, and if those laid on by the government were the only ones we had to pay, we might more easily discharge them, but we have many others and much more grievous to some of us. We are taxed twice as much by our idleness, three times as much by our pride and four times as much by our folly, and from these taxes the commissioners cannot ease or deliver us.

[Mr. Breithaupt.]

Obviously conditions have not changed much since Benjamin Franklin wrote this. To prosper we must humbly and wisely work, but most of all we must work.

As hon. members will agree, perhaps in this debate more than in any other a member is justified in referring as briefly as possible to the problems of his constituency. The riding of Waterloo North, which I have the honour to represent, is the one which first sent its most illustrious native son, our distinguished Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the house. It is most diversified, and contains more contented and happy people than any other riding in Canada.

Even so there are some problems which concern my people back home from time to time. With your consent I feel it is my duty to refer briefly to these, and at the same time perhaps suggest some remedies. My farmers are looking for some upward price adjustments. I was pleased to notice that one of these adjustments was made this week in respect of better cuts of beef. This will have the ultimate effect of returning a higher price to cattle producers and increasing the flow of livestock to market. By the same token I would like to see a reasonable upward adjustment made in butter prices, which would have the dual effect of encouraging dairy farmers in my riding as well as in other parts of Canada, and it would automatically also increase the supply for the benefit of all Canadians.

December 1946 statistics indicate that whereas manufactured goods have advanced 9·6 per cent since December, 1945, farm products have only advanced 5·4 per cent during the same period. This indicates some consideration might well be given to the request from farmers that butter and other farm commodity prices be reasonably adjusted.

Two other matters which are at present disturbing the agricultural section of my riding are the shortage of feed grains and farm labour. I am pleased to note that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) has taken effective steps to provide a further supply of freight cars to relieve the former situation. I hope that so far as farm labour is concerned, actual conditions will be studied further by the government, and that the department of labour will take necessary steps to provide this very necessary labour.

There is no shortage of good living quarters on the farms in my riding. Therefore I hope that everything will be done that possibly can be done to encourage young fellows to stay on the farms, where there are good farms and where, according to present statistics in agriculture, financial returns were really never greater than they are today.

Turning to industry for a minute; on behalf of the luggage industry I should like to suggest that now that the war is over luxury taxes be eliminated on luggage. Employment in this industry, while it has been at a high level, is now in grave danger of being seriously affected if early relief is not forthcoming. A large percentage of factories in Waterloo North employ female labour, particularly shirt and footwear factories. Income tax regulations regarding female married personnel have reacted very adversely and have still further accentuated serious shortages existing in shirts and shoes. It is to be hoped that in the forthcoming budget some adjustment can be made which would permit married women, where possible, to remain on the job if they so desire, and assist in necessary production at least until the shortages are alleviated. Every hon. member in the house must realize that what I have said, particularly with regard to shirts, is true. I do not believe there is a place in Ottawa today where one can buy a white shirt.

Now a word about wartime controls. It will be recalled that in the speech from the throne it was stated that the government planned to keep——only such price and commodity controls as may be required to protect consumers from a sudden and drastic rise in the cost of living and to ensure the fair distribution of essential goods and services which are in short supply.

At the same time it was also stated that——many of the controls and restrictions during and immediately after the war are no longer in existence; others have been considerably relaxed; controls over wages and salaries and over many prices and commodities have been removed; other controls are being removed in an orderly manner.

Just how well this job has been done is well illustrated in a recent Canadian press dispatch from Montreal:

Statistics show that over-all cost of living figures in Canada have increased less since 1937 than in 16 other nations surveyed. These were released by the International Labour Office.

Other hon. members besides myself will probably have vivid and bitter memories of what happened after the last war, how prices suddenly collapsed and we went through a wave of liquidation. Most people had nothing left but debts. Conditions existed such as this country had never seen. Many firms, through no fault of their own, went out of business and into bankruptcy. No one was happy. There was a general state of disorganization, uncertainty and unemployment. That is what we would like to avoid now, if we can. I believe the government has made the proper plans to avoid a recurrence of this condition. True, we on this side of the house are not perfect. Mistakes have been made by the wartime prices and trade board and by us all. To err is only human. I maintain however that our record of price control is very good. It is good in comparison with what happened a year or two after the last war, and it is good in comparison with what has been happening in the United States during the past year. There have been a number of press items recently telling of falling prices in the United States. From our point of view this is all to the good. The sooner and the farther they fall, the sooner our price controls can and should be done away with, without any sudden jump in prices here. People should not be misled by these newspaper stories into thinking that conditions are entirely satisfactory in the United States. I took the trouble to look up the latest figures on price movements in this country and in the United States since their price controls cracked wide open at the end of last June. I found that between that time and around the end of 1946 the average United States wholesale prices had gone up twenty-six per cent and their cost of living had gone up fourteen per cent. In the same time our wholesale prices and cost of living had each gone up only three per cent. In other words, United States prices have still a lot of falling to do before they are back in line with ours.

I certainly would not want to perpetuate controls or carry them on for one month beyond the time when they cease to be necessary. No one in his right senses would. However I am satisfied that Donald Gordon, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, and his able staff have by and large done a very good job. May I say that it has been a thankless one in many quarters. They are still doing a good job. The government should be given the necessary powers to finish the job in an orderly and efficient manner as long as world shortages and dislocations exist. I have noted, as have other hon. members, that sometimes the biggest beneficiaries of the sound policy that the government set up in connection with price controls are the biggest belly-achers when it comes to giving anybody credit.

As I say, I think controls should be continued as long as world shortages exist. One thing is sure, if the present policies are continued any recession which might take place in the United States would not have as serious an effect here because of our relatively sounder position in which we are well cushioned against precipitate price declines across the border.

I wish to say a word at this time in connection with immigration. Canadians received with much interest the announcement made in the house a few weeks ago by the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) that immigration regulations had been relaxed to provide much needed labour for agriculture and Canada's basic industries. It is gratifying to know that, while this step is now being taken, further important changes and improvements in the immigration regulations are to follow. The minister's announcement was received with much relief by farmers in my riding and by basic industries throughout the country. There is a shortage of help in certain fields.

While I am on the subject of immigration, I should like to suggest that because of the importance of this portfolio in our present economy the minister in future should be known as the minister of immigration as well as the Minister of Mines and Resources. My constituents, and no doubt yours, Mr. Speaker, find it confusing when you tell them to get in touch with the Minister of Mines and Resources in connection with their immigration problems. This is just a little suggestion as I go along.

I wish to say just a brief word on dominion-provincial relations. I am not going to discuss this contentious question bit by bit or blow by blow because I do not know enough about it to be an authority to the extent to which some of my legal friends in this house are. But I do know that people throughout the country whom I have been in touch with, and particularly those in Ontario, feel that the time is not far distant when some satisfactory solution must be arrived at so that the people of our province—I can speak only for those of us who come from Ontario, but I imagine our friends from Quebec feel the same way—will not be faced in the near future with double taxation, provincial and federal.

May I say a few words about Canadian business. To listen to the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) it would appear that business generally and employment were suffering severely from the policies of this government. Personally I cannot subscribe to his theory of "cry havoc". I have gone to the trouble of looking up some independent statistics as well as those provided by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and at this point I should like to place them on the record. I am glad the hon. member for Lake Centre brought up this question because it ties right in with what I had prepared for delivery to this house during this debate. Sometimes when one listens to some of the political pessimists who are members of His Majesty's loyal opposition one is likely to become discouraged, sell Canada short and move out unless one knows the facts in connection with the actual state of the nation, but as a matter of fact Canada is one of the last countries in the world that anyone in his right senses would want to leave. In my opinion there is no better place in the world to live and work in than this same Canada of ours.

Here are some facts worth pondering which I obtained from the "Year End Review" issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon), Canada is now the third largest trading nation in the world. There are more people employed in industry now than at any time in the history of the country. Canada's exports during 1946 rose to a total value of $2,312 million, or more than two and a half times as great as the five year pre-war average from 1935 to 1939.

As convincing as these statements by the Minister of Trade and Commerce are, and in case some opposition members wish to have further information in connection with Canadian business conditions, I have pleasure in quoting from a neutral source, the report of the Bank of Nova Scotia, dated February 19, 1947, which states:

> All time records for construction contract awards were again broken in January for a further three per cent rise in the index.

A general year end review by the Canadian Bank of Commerce notes:

> Canada's present working force of nearly 5,000,000 exceeds by a million that of 1939, and not only have these million workers been absorbed; but nearly three-quarters of a million veterans and half a million war workers have required to be reestablished in peace-time occupations since the summer of 1945.
> Total sales of all retail stores during 1946 were almost fourteen per cent higher than in 1945.

What is the matter with business? I quote again:

> The first month of 1947 was generally the most active industrially since October, 1945, when of course, a considerable volume of war work was still in process. The bank's industrial activity index number rose in January to 152—

The 1937 figure is taken as 100.

> —the highest point for civilian goods ever reached.
> The twelve months under review, 1946, though irregular and not measuring up to all economic opportunities were, on the whole, the most active in Canada's peace-time history. In fact, the production of certain commodities was greater than in some war years.

But that is not all. I have here another authority, the Canadian Executives' Digest, of February, 1947, published by the Thomas A. Edison Company of Canada, Limited, of Toronto, and coming out of Toronto it must be pretty good. Speaking of Canada's mineral production, it says:

> Value of mineral production of Canada in 1946 has been estimated at $493,840,000. The value for 1946 was $4,915,000 under that for 1945, but was higher than any peace-time year in history.

It has this to say of cheques cashed:

> Total value of cheques cashed in Canada in 1946 at $69·3 billions was greater than in other years, exceeding the previous 1945 high by 1·3 per cent, and 48 per cent higher than 1929 (culmination of the previous major economic cycle). The 1946 total was about two and a quarter times the 1938 figure.

And on newsprint it says this:

> Both from a production and financial point of view, the year 1946 will go down as the best to date in the history of the Canadian newsprint industry; all records were broken with a 4,143,392-ton production figure. The industry realized $300 millions gross revenue, it is reported.

Surely that is not an indication of bad business in Canada under government policy. It goes on to speak of radio manufacturing:

> In spite of shortages, the Radio Manufacturers Association of Canada production figures indicate that more radio receivers were produced in Canada in 1946 than in any previous twelve months in the history of the Canadian radio industry. If current production is maintained, a new annual record of 550,000 sets will be set.

Then it goes on to give the impressive record of car loadings:

> Loadings of railway revenue freight for the 52 weeks in 1946 at 3,681,699 cars were higher than for any of the war years and exceeded the 1945 total by 1·3 per cent, according to figures recently released.

Now I want to say a word about life insurance sales. Mr. Finlayson, dominion superintendent of insurance, informed me yesterday morning that new life insurance issued in Canada for the year 1946 broke all records. It reached the imposing figure of one and a half billion dollars, or half a billion dollars more than the sales for 1945, which I understand was the previous record year.

I think the review of Canadian business and employment conditions which I have just given provides proof positive that the country is far from going to the dogs under the Liberal administration of our great leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). I believe that those who are fair enough to take a realistic and politically unprejudiced viewpoint must admit in spite of themselves that an excellent job is being done by the government of the day, not a forty per cent job as was charged last night by my friend the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt). Surely he could not have meant what he said to be taken seriously.

I agree fully with the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Heon), when he said in the house the other night that a general election under these circumstances is certainly not necessary. I wish to add on my own account that there can be no doubt that the Liberal party has delivered the goods as advertised in the brochure to which he referred and displayed, "Programme for Canada". I think we have lived up to the promises contained in that brochure, at least ninety-five per cent, and certainly, until any other party has anything better to offer this country, there is no need of going to the country. It would be a sheer waste of money; and the results after the next election, whenever it comes, will no doubt be a more emphatic mandate than ever to the Liberals to continue their good work.

I am voting, Mr. Speaker, against both amendments submitted by the right and left groups, and against any more that come in from them, and I am supporting the safe and sane middle-of-the-road policy of the government. I am voting for the main motion, to support the government.

Mrs. GLADYS STRUM (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon will long be remembered by hon. members of this house. We were privileged to witness one of the most delightful spectacles of the session. To see the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan on his feet defending government enterprise was indeed a treat, and I hope he keeps it up when he returns to his native province. To see the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) refusing to allow the Liberal party any credit for establishing perhaps one of the most useful and important of these government enterprises, the Bank of Canada, and insisting that the Tories be given credit for it, indeed marks a milestone in our political history.

My quarrel, however, is not with government enterprise but with the lack of government enterprise in implementing its promises to the old age pensioners of this country. The other day the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) gave us impressive figures of our contributions to the stricken countries of Europe and the part that Canada had played in winning the war. He pointed out that there was no such thing as partial participation in the war, that it was all-out participation or defeat. Canada has not been niggardly in her participation in relief to the stricken countries of Europe and of the world, but I submit that in Canada, the government's price decontrol policy and its social security measures result in only a partial participation in social security. It is a policy that is responsible for untold anxiety, humiliation and actual suffering in thousands of cases for Canadians in the lower income brackets who are struggling unsuccessfully to make ends meet, and particularly those who are trying to survive on the miserable dole that we know as the old age pension.

Again I do not wish to belittle the war achievement. We are all proud of the part that Canada played in the war, and I am sure we are all proud of the figures quoted by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Breithaupt). We do want to go on living in Canada, and it is because we believe that Canada could be much greater yet, greater in justice and mercy as well as in industrial output, that we believe that changes should be made. It all depends upon where you find yourself in Canada. It depends upon the particular income bracket in which you happen to operate. If you are a person who has extensive investments and are paying heavy income tax, you will not have much difficulty except with the Minister of Finance; but if you are trying to get along on a small fixed wage; if you are trying to live on a small annuity, if you are trying to exist on a pension for the blind or an old age pension, you will experience the greatest difficulty and humiliation. As the late Judge Emily Murphy said:

> There is only one thing worse than a guilty custom, and that is a guilty acquiescence.

That is why we must raise our voices in protest against the treatment of these dependent people.

The first recognition of rising living costs was made in 1943. Canada had been at war almost four years when the government saw fit to recognize this and make an adjustment in old age pension. On August 10, 1943, an order in council was passed authorizing the making of agreements with the provinces governing old age pensions. P.C. 6367 says in paragraph 1:

> Under war-time conditions it has become desirable and necessary to provide additional assistance to old age pensioners and blind pensioners.

This order allowed the pensioner to receive a special supplement not exceeding $5 a month, which brought the pension up to $25 instead of the original $20, and on the original basis, with the provinces bearing 25 per cent of the increase and the federal government putting up 75 per cent. Out of the original $20 the federal government had supplied $15. It now supplied $3.75 of the $5, so that actually the federal government has never and is not yet paying more than $18.75 a month for the support of these aged poor. Of course some provinces have done certain things, and I think they should be given credit for it. They have raised the individual pensions and provided medical services, drugs, hospitalization and other services. These provinces are to be commended because they have done so without assistance from this government. They have taken it out of their limited provincial budget; they have taken some measures to relieve the suffering of these aged poor. But we, the members of this federal house, have it within our power to do much more than the limited provincial legislatures of the country, and I hope that at this session we shall do something worthy of this country and this parliament.

The means test, still in effect, limits the income of old people in spite of the almost daily rise in the cost of living, and it has imposed untold hardship on these innocent people. Many old people have been able to take part-time employment. During all the years of the war there was a steady demand for all kinds of labour, skilled and unskilled, full and part-time. Old people found to their surprise, and learned to their sorrow, that a few dollars earned in honest and useful employment resulted in only one thing, in having their pension suspended by the inspector at the time of his next visit. This means that the government is guilty of a double crime, first of imposing compulsory poverty on this helpless and innocent group by limiting its contribution to only $225 a year, and second by denying any remedy to the individual and imposing a penalty if the pensioner sought to better his condition through his own effort.

Further the whole policy of the government in regard to old age pensions is a contradiction of its own avowed Liberal principle. In its proposals to the provinces on reconstruction on August, 1945, at page 27 the government sets out this policy. This comes under "Social Security," a brief on "Reconstruction, proposals of the government of Canada." Here is what the Liberal government said:

> The Economic Argument for Social Security.
> Reference has been made to the effect of large-scale social security measures on the economy of the country as a whole. This need not and should not be the prime consideration in adopting health and welfare legislation. But since this aspect of the problem has not received the attention that it merits, perhaps a further reference to it would be in order.
> During the war we have succeeded in establishing new high levels of employment. Our national income has risen to record heights. Income and purchasing power have been more evenly distributed than ever before. This has resulted in an unprecedented increase in consumer demand.

During the war years we have been obliged to keep this consumer purchasing power under control as far as possible. But as scarcities disappear and wartime demand falls away, it becomes essential to encourage a freer use of consumer purchasing power in order to take up the slack that will otherwise develop. It is in this connection—namely, the maintenance of a high degree of consumer purchasing power—that large-scale social security measures can and do play an important role.

A significant volume of social security payments, flowing into the consumer spending stream, will stabilize the economy of the country as a whole and work against a fall in the national income. Social security payments therefore become, in these circumstances, a powerful weapon with which to ward off general economic depression.

Why then does the government hesitate to carry out its own policy? Speaking over the C.B.C. on January 29, 1947, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) had this to say:

The Liberals are right when they say that profits which are not required in the business are not your money. They are the money of those who applied their labour to the natural resources of this country to produce wealth, and if you do not or cannot pay them out in wages, local taxes, widespread dividends—share or patronage—to provide services, then we must tax them from you.

The money so obtained must be redistributed through provincial payments to the areas from which the wealth came. Where local authorities cannot, as in the case of family allowances and old age pensions, make the distribution equitably, the dominion government must. Where local authorities cannot stabilize returns to primary producers of exportable products such as farm products, the dominion authority must. The Liberal party is opposed to state ownership and control of all the resources and machines of production but the Liberal party is also opposed to any authority within the state attempting to take unto itself the right to tax the labour of the masses for personal or corporate gain or aggrandizement.

The Liberal party going into this session challenges any of the opposition groups to name one social service which is not already provided for, directly, or proposed through provincial cooperation, which they would make effective if returned to office. The Liberal party challenges any opposition group to advocate that any social service provided for be taken away.

I challenge the Minister of Agriculture to deny that the pension provided is inadequate, shameful, and a contradiction of their avowed policy of redistribution of the national income on an equitable basis. It is useless for members of the government to say that we have provided for increased living costs through price control, subsidies, family allowances, cost of living bonus, and that we have the greatest social security programme in the world.

Canada's productive machinery and her ability to feed the suffering of other countries does not in any way excuse this government in its neglect of our own aged and suffering people. True, we are striving to attain better standards of nutrition, and I think the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) did an excellent job as minister of national health and welfare. I think the programme of education carried on through lectures, films, publications and advertising releases of all kinds is a part, and a very important part, of a programme aimed at better health standards. The one disturbing aspect of this, and the thing which nullifies the effect, is the cost of food and the size of the pensioners' food budget. I hold in my hand the recommended programme for nutrition. In this booklet Canada's food rules read as follows:

These are the health-protective foods. Be sure you eat them every day in at least these amounts. (Use more if you can.)

Milk: Adults, one-half pint. Children, more than one pint. And some cheese as available.

Fruits: One serving of tomatoes daily, or of a citrus fruit, or of tomato or citrus fruit juices, and one serving of other fruits, canned or dried.

Vegetables: In addition to potatoes, of which you need one serving daily, two servings daily of vegetables, preferably leafy green, or yellow, and frequently raw.

Cereals and bread: One serving of a whole-grain cereal and four to six slices of Canada approved bread, brown or white.

Meat, fish, etc.: One serving a day of meat, fish or meat substitutes, liver, heart or kidney once a week.

At least three or four eggs a week.

Eat these foods first and then add other foods as you wish.

These are the basic essentials of an adequate diet, and I got a list of the costs of these items from my grocer at noon today. These are the things which people are supposed to eat, as set out by our department of health, and these are the prices we have to pay for them:

For one raw tomato, 5 cents; orange, 5 cents; banana, 5 cents; carrots, 3 cents; rolled oats to cover the cereal, 2 cents; six slices of bread, 3 cents; one serving meat, 14 cents; one egg, 3 cents; one potato, 2 cents; one pint of milk, 9 cents; cheese, 5 cents. That adds up to 56 cents for a day or $3.92 a week, or $15.68 a month. If we are to take the advice of our department of health and welfare we should not spend more than 25 per cent of the budget on food, so that with food at today's prices we need more than $60 a month if we are to have any kind of adequate diet.

There is something else to which I wish to call the attention of hon. members. I think the greatest curse of this house is that we live in paper estimates and paper files. You want something and you send to the bureau of statistics; you want something else and you send to some other place. But if you want to know what it is like to live on $25 a month, go and see how an old age pensioner does it. If you want to know what it is like to find money for a room, or even to get a room, cut an advertisement out of your newspaper and telephone the people advertising. I did that today, and I can tell you it is difficult indeed to find a room where you have cooking privileges. Of fifteen rooms I found listed in today's paper, do you know what the rents are? Fifteen dollars a month for the lowest, and $32 for the highest, and one had grill privileges while another gave you the privilege of using the kitchen.

Where are our people to live? A single room is the cheapest accommodation there is, and if one tries to get a suite or an apartment or a house, the rents are of course much higher. The rents ran $15, $16, $17, $18; three at $20, one at $22, one at $25, one at $28; two with two rooms, one for $35 and the other for $42.

Where is the old age pensioner to sleep? If he eats according to Canada's food rules, the food which the minister's government in its wisdom advises people to eat, it will cost far more than the pensioner can afford to spend for that purpose, and still he has nowhere to stay. He has nothing to wear, he has not utensils to cook with, he has no bedding, he has no money for haircuts, no money for any of the things that make life half decent.

I advise hon. gentlemen again, as I did last year, to take $25 and try to live on it for a month. And let them try wearing cast-off clothes for a while and see what it feels like. Or they should try living as unwanted guests among relatives. If they really want to learn humility, let them go to an institution where old people are crowded together several in one room, where there is no consideration of the need for privacy, no consideration of the right of a person to be alone sometimes, or to have friends in or to entertain anyone. If all hon. members would do that, we would be amazed at the speed with which we could do something about the old age pension law. After a month of that we could put through $100 a month at the age of sixty, although I would not advise it.

Coming back to the inadequacy of food, here is one of those papers I referred to a while ago. This is statistical proof of the fact that the food dollar has shrunk. It is from the Department of Trade and Commerce and is as of this week. In it the Department of Trade and Commerce tells us that prices of food have advanced, from the base of 1935-39, 47 points. That is to say, taking the outbreak of war as 100, the food index stands at 147, which means that the food dollar has been cut in half, so that the old age pension buys a little more than half what it did in 1939 when the war broke out.

We who talk about our financial statements and industrial output from our factories and granaries, and of our kindness to the suffering in other countries, are still contributing only $18.75 a month from the treasury of the nation to our old age pensioners.

Some hon. members last year had the privilege of listening to Doctor Tisdall, and I wish all hon. members had taken advantage of his excellent address on nutrition. Those who were present will remember he told us that he had been responsible for the nutritional aspects of the rations of the Royal Canadian Air Force. It will be recalled that he told us about experiments in feeding Canadian flyers. He said that the original ration of milk was 10 ounces a day, which was considered not bad. The men however were having difficulty with their eyesight. The glare of the sun over the Atlantic was giving almost every flyer eye trouble. All the men had this difficulty, so they considered it a normal condition. Eye strain was regarded as part of a flyer's bad luck. After a while however they tried an experiment in the use of milk and obtained the most surprising results. I am going to quote Dr. Tisdall. I will give his own words, which will be found in this book, which I hope all hon. members will consult when they get back to their offices. It is an excellent publication called "Health" and in the September-October issue will be found the article to which I refer. This is what he says:

> We gave them additional riboflavin and, inside of two months, the vast majority of these men had such a marked improvement in their eyes that it wasn't necessary to take photographs to see the difference. They said themselves they could see better, and one of the publicity boys found that just at that time the number of submarines sunk increased very markedly. Of course, it could not be published.

He refers to the need for milk in the diet, and he has this to say:

> We believe that riboflavin is most important for health and unless you take a reasonably good amount of milk—at least a pint a day—you cannot get enough riboflavin. That is why the ration of milk for the Canadian armed services was increased from 10 ounces of milk a day to 20, the largest milk ration of any service in the world. Just a few months ago it was again increased to 24 ounces.

Then he tells of an interesting experiment carried on in Newfoundland by a group of scientists from Great Britain and the United States. We are all familiar with the very low incomes and nutritional levels common to Newfoundland. We are not so familiar with the physical results and the damage that poor feeding does to the human being. Doctor Tisdall said, referring to the survey made among the people of Newfoundland:

> One thing that struck us all was the early ageing of the people. Time and again the first few days one clinician would call another over to look at someone and say, "How old do you think this person is?" Time and again he would guess from fifty to sixty, and the person would be in his early thirties. Recently Doctor Sharman of New York has done a study in which he gave experimental animals a diet consisting of one-sixth whole milk powder and five-sixths wheat. He found that those getting a larger amount of milk retained their youthful appearance longer, retained their period of adult vitality longer, and prolonged their period of life by ten per cent. We saw the same thing in Newfoundland—early ageing—and their records indicate they don't live as long as we do here where we get more milk.

This article by Doctor Tisdall is just one of many appearing in the medical journals every month, pointing out that senility could be arrested and the useful and active period of a person's life could be extended if older people were able to enjoy proper nutritional standards. A meagre and inadequate diet, the only one possible under the old age pension, brings on premature senility and speeds up ageing. This, combined with the means test, which puts a penalty on activity and self-help, can only have one result—that is, a lowering of vitality, a sense of helplessness and frustration, and the hope for a speedy end to it all. You know, there are some who might say this was a definite attempt on the part of the government to save money, but I would not accuse the administration of deliberately planning to reduce the number of old age pensioners. I think it is the result of complacency and callousness rather than deliberate cruelty; nevertheless I submit it is cruelty and sheer social waste.

The government's policy in regard to milk has been met only in part by family allowances. The experiment with the flyers proved that milk could greatly improve vision. If this is true of a selected group, it becomes an established nutritional truth and milk becomes a national necessity for people of all ages, not just those under sixteen covered by the family allowance. If it is true that the use of milk can combat age and preserve youth and vitality, then milk becomes a national asset in building up the pool of goods and services which is the only real wealth of a country and the basis for all spending, private and public.

The removal of milk subsidies, effected in two stages, raised the price of milk to the consumer in Ontario and Quebec, where there is the heaviest concentration of population, from 10 cents to 15 cents a quart, and to a slightly lesser degree in other provinces. This jump from 10 cents to 15 cents in the cost to the consumer represents an increase in the cost of milk of 50 per cent. We are told by the department of health that every child must have a quart of milk a day. At 10 cents a quart thirty quarts, for thirty days, will cost the mother $3. At 15 cents a quart the mother can buy only twenty quarts for $3, so we have cut the monthly intake of the child by ten quarts, on the same expenditure of money. To that extent we have destroyed the chance of building good vision, resistance to disease and vitality, and we have shortened what might have been the life expectancy through the use of an adequate diet and the provision of milk for each child. If we are to choose between reducing the consumption of milk and the granting of income exemptions and other incentives to the corporations of Canada, it is a short-sighted choice on the part of the government to decide against the health of the Canadian people; and to say that we have covered the milk situation by the family allowances is just so much rubbish. The family allowance has been credited with being an umbrella over the head of the Canadian people to provide for education, health services, nutrition, crop failures and anything else brought forth by the imagination of the speaker on the stump at the moment. Again let me say that I am in favour of family allowances, but they are only a small part of over-all security and should be considered in the light of reality rather than as an excuse to avoid thinking about the people who are not covered by family allowances, and on whom they have no effect except that they must help pay the $260,000,000 voted this year to meet the expenditure.

I did not expect a government such as this, elected on the cry "defeat socialism" to bring in a policy such as the C.C.F. would institute; but the C.C.F. recognizes the practical value of the proposals set forth in the brief on reconstruction, and the validity of family allowance payments as a means of underwriting consumer spending in Canada. The C.C.F. programme, and the recent decision of the national council of the C.C.F. which met in January, would pay old age pensioners $50 a month, lower the age to sixty-five years, and eliminate the means test. The national council also recommended the payment of invalidity supplements, cost of living supplements, and free medical, hospital, dental and optical care to old age pensioners.

What would it cost to do this? Well, the costs are worked out, too. The cost of the plan after 1948 would be $559,800,000. That is not such a staggering sum. To give a pension of $50 to all persons sixty-five years of age, and remove the means test, would merely be extending the principle now being followed in connection with family allowances. The family allowance payments this year will be made to all families in Canada, regardless of income, and the set-off will be taken care of under the income tax. That is, the payments will be considered as income, and all couples receiving more than $1,500 will be given family allowances and an additional exemption for each child. This we believe to be a sensible and sound arrangement and a useful technique from the standpoint of simplifying administration. To give $50 a month to all old age pensioners at the age of sixty-five would cost the government, it is estimated, $459,000,000 on the basis of the 1941 census; but this sum is $2,000,000,000 smaller than the amount we gave in mutual aid. According to the figures given by the Minister of National Defence appearing in Hansard of March 3, our mutual aid amounted to $2,471,000,000. If we take off the $2,000,000,000 and retain the $471,000,000, that is still more than we would pay out in one year to old age pensioners. True, it is more than we now pay in family allowances; but the payments made to children, while a very good investment, have no off-set in production or earnings. They are paid on behalf of dependents who are immature and incapable of adding to Canada's pool of goods and services. There is much that an adequately nourished population of sixty-five years and over could do and would be more than happy to do as part of the nation's work.

In closing I merely wish to say that the record of a nation must not be judged by its guns and tanks nor by its grain elevators, the value of its exports or its bank balances. The real test of a nation's character comes in its regard for moral values. That nation is greatest that has the greatest care for human life and welfare. Let us not only talk of mercy and justice in the international field. Let us be worthy of our great wealth and our great trust:

> For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more.

[Mrs. Strum.]

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to follow the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum). She is worthy of the highest commendation for the eloquent way in which she has presented her case.

There is one matter which should be pointed out to all members of the house and all people of the country, and particularly to our C.C.F. and Progressive Conservative friends, and that is that there is no disagreement among the different parties as to what we want. Every heart in the house throbs in accord and in sympathy with every word the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has spoken. Any hon. member would have been happy to make that speech.

It is when we come to the question of how to finance all these things that the difference develops. I believe that matter should be faced sincerely and frankly by every hon. member. And I would appeal to hon. members of the C.C.F., when they are out talking to the people: For goodness sake, tell the people there is no difference between you and other hon. members in the house with respect to what you are aiming at. The whole question is as to how you are to get the money to do these things. That is the matter to bear in mind.

Technically, Mr. Speaker, we are now discussing the amendment offered by the C.C.F. as it is recorded at page 73 of Hansard for February 3, 1947. The essential passage of that amendment, I take it, is the one I now quote:

> And further that Your Excellency's advisers have failed to introduce comprehensive measures for the socialization of the financial institutions and monopolistic industries of the country, and thus have failed to plan the full and proper use of our natural resources and our currency and credit in such a way as to provide for full production and a rising standard of living for the Canadian people.

It will be noted by every member in the house that the assumption is made in the amendment that if the government nationalizes or socializes—whatever is meant by the expression—the financial institutions of the country, and the country's industry, then immediately we shall be at the beginning of the solution of our problems. To that stand I take a diametrically opposite view. That would not necessarily produce the results Canadians wish.

The immediate question with which we as members of the house are faced, is this: Shall we vote for this C.C.F. amendment? Should I, as one member in the house, vote for it?

Let us for a short time examine this C.C.F. amendment with some care. In the first place, may I point out to all concerned that it is next to impossible to tell what the C.C.F. leader means by his amendment. It calls for the socialization of the financial institutions and monopolistic industries of the country.

What does he mean by the socialization of financial institutions? Does he mean government ownership, or does he mean the socialized use of those financial institutions? Right here may I point out that a great deal of confusion which is being talked and scattered throughout the country by C.C.F. people arises from the fact that they lead people to believe that what members of the C.C.F. have in mind is a sort of socialized use of the financial institutions, rather than government ownership; or, if when government ownership is accomplished, a plan that automatically entails the socialized use of financial institutions.

There is no justification for that propaganda at all. This kind of thing, as I have said, is contributing to the confusion in men's minds throughout the country. Does he mean what I have indicated, or does he mean government ownership together with a particular financial policy, a special method of employing the financial institutions? I submit that, unless there is a special method of employing those financial institutions, mere government ownership of financial institutions in this country will have no more beneficial effect on the economy of Canada than had the government ownership of the Bank of Canada—which amounted to practically nothing.

Mr. LOW: Utter futility.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That ought to be faced frankly. May I say this word now to my good friends of the C.C.F. I do not know of any group of people I honour more than I do C.C.F. people. At least they are aware that something has to be done, and they are sincere and earnest in their desire to do something which is necessary. They ought to be very careful to see that they are not barking up the wrong tree. I believe they will find they are, if they will examine carefully what is in the amendment and in the speech of the leader of the C.C.F.

Does he have in mind, for instance, a method of distribution through the financial institutions, a combination of techniques for the financing of consumption, something more or less closely resembling social credit proposals? Does he have that in mind?

In my constituency C.C.F. people have gone around saying, "We believe exactly the kind of thing that social crediters are advocating. Look at this, and this, and this, that we have moved." Well, why not be honest with everybody and make that quite clear in the amendment, so that we shall all know what we are talking about.

Or does the C.C.F. leader mean merely the government ownership of banks, with no effective change in policy? Who knows? Not an hon. member in the house, even including those of the C.C.F., can tell from reading the amendment what it means.

A change of ownership of the financial institutions, without certain fundamental changes in financial policy which would bring about financing consumption in this country, would be of no more value as an aid to the Canadian economy than was government ownership of the Bank of Canada.

Suitable fundamental changes of policy could be made without government ownership or socialization of financial institutions. This is the next important thing for every member in the house to keep in mind. It is not necessary for the government to have ownership of any of the financial institutions in order to bring about fundamental changes in the financial policy of the country which would enable the country to finance consumption. Let that clearly be remembered.

Mr. GILLIS: Explain.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I can explain it. However I have not the time to do so now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BLACKMORE: A lot of silly laughs come from the C.C.F. They ought to have sense enough to know, because they have been here long enough, that a member's time can be used up by things of that sort. I think that is what they want.

Mr. MacINNIS: Why take your time to criticize the C.C.F.?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I will take time later on to go right to the mat with the best C.C.F.'er in the group. I am ready for them. Social Crediters desire such fundamental change in financial policy as would make for distribution, or consumption, that is, the marketing of Canada's production of goods and services.

The C.C.F. amendment does not call for such fundamental change. It may imply it, in the minds of members of the C.C.F.; but, so far as other hon. members in the house are concerned, there is no way of being sure what it means. Social Crediters would look at that matter before they decided how they would vote.

What does the C.C.F. leader mean by the socialization of monopolistic industries? Does he mean government ownership of such industries? And what constitutes a monopolistic industry? Is it industry that has become a monopoly, or is tending to become a monopoly? There is nothing in the wording there to show whether he has in mind one that is a nation-wide monopoly or one that is a monopoly in a community, such as a dairy in a small town. As far as the wording is concerned, there is no indication at all. Does the C.C.F. amendment mean that the C.C.F. would have the government assume ownership of Canadian industry, even down to the dairy in a small town if that dairy happens to be supplying all the milk being used in that town? Social Crediters can see neither need for, nor any advantage that would be derived from, socializing industry. Social Crediters can see in government ownership and the socialization of industry a serious danger to Canadian prosperity and freedom. Therefore they will take that matter into careful consideration before deciding how they will vote.

C.C.F. speakers, like other socialists, contend and argue that private enterprise has failed. I turn now to a general discussion of the whole point of view the socialists seem to take in this regard. Almost every member of the C.C.F. who has risen to speak has said that private enterprise has failed. But has private enterprise failed? That is the question which the house should face, including all members of the C.C.F. as well as the Social Credit group.

To answer the question as to whether or not private enterprise has failed, we must consider several aspects of the economics of our day, nationally and internationally. Time forbids that I discuss the matter internationally, but I will give a little thought to it nationally. First, what is economics? Economics is the science and art of producing and distributing goods and services. I think all will agree with that. As I go on, my C.C.F. friends can decide whether or not they agree with the statements I make. I think there will be no disagreement on their part.

This means that the economy of a state such as Canada or the United States has two great functions to perform. First, it has to manage to have goods and services produced or obtained by trade. Second, it has to manage to have those goods and services consumed or distributed. I think we can all agree on that. It is very pleasant for us to agree; after we are working together on this thing we shall find out exactly where we disagree.

Production is the first thing to consider. If Canada's government brings about conditions in Canada so that Canadian farmers, fishermen, lumbermen, miners and manufacturers can and will produce enough food, clothing, shelter, educational services, cultural services, health services and other services to give each family in Canada, say $3,500 worth in a year, then the Canadian government thereby makes physically possible in that year a standard of living and prosperity equal to $3,500 per family. I think we all agree on that.

Consumption or the distribution of goods is the next consideration. If the Canadian government is able so to manage the Canadian economy that, after the $3,500 worth of goods and service per year for every family in the country have been produced, they can be got into the hands of those people so that those people can consume them, then the Canadian government has performed the function of distribution or consumption. The government may be held responsible for both of those functions today. Is there any disagreement by my hon. friends of the C.C.F. on that point?

It is our problem, first of all, to consider our economy from the point of view of production; then to consider our economy from the point of view of consumption. As we go on to consider private enterprise, let us see what bearing private enterprise has, first upon production and, second, upon consumption, so that we may see wherein it has or has not failed, either as a means of production or as a means of consumption. We shall then be considering this matter in a scientific sort of way, which I know the C.C.F. like to do.

It has been often said that mankind has solved the problem of production. I believe our C.C.F. friends will all agree with that. It is commonly suggested, and I believe it is accepted by them, that we have solved the problem of production in Canada and the United States. That has been done by private enterprise. There is no doubt in the world about that, because private enterprise is the system we have used up to the present time. Mankind must now solve the problem of consumption or distribution.

Private enterprise is being blamed largely because up to the present time it apparently has not been able to distribute goods. We shall have to examine the matter to see whether we have any right to expect private enterprise to distribute goods. That is the first point. Let us consider that frankly. Unquestionably production has succeeded; that is obvious. Consumption or distribution has more or less failed. Everyone agrees with that. I do not think the C.C.F. or anyone else will disagree with that point. What we want to find out is why distribution has failed, why consumption has failed, what private enterprise has to do in each case and what to do in order to remedy the difficulty.

Where does private enterprise fit in? To what extent is private enterprise responsible for the success of mankind's production? To what extent is private enterprise to blame for the failure to distribute those goods? Let us try to clear away the confusion in men's minds as regards private enterprise. I myself have heard C.C.F. speakers—doubtless they were not speaking with party authority—point out the fallacies of our consumption system, and then say that therefore private enterprise has failed. In the light of the facts, such a conclusion is utter nonsense. That is merely blind people leading blind people farther astray. Let us see whether or not that is so.

Let us first try to define private enterprise. Funk and Wagnalls new standard dictionary defines enterprise as follows:

> The act of engaging, or the disposition to engage in difficult undertakings; boldness, energy, and invention exhibited in practical affairs, especially in business.

That is the definition of private enterprise. Have we any lack of that kind of thing in Canada? Are these splendid lads who are coming home from overseas manifesting any lack of initiative, boldness or courage in going into business? All you have to do is to come in contact with a few of them to know that they want to go into business. Many C.C.F. people have never taken the trouble to find out what private enterprise means. If it has failed it is because of conditions under which private concerns have made their efforts to carry on.

Will any one in this house argue seriously that in Canada there is any lack of boldness, energy and invention in attempting to establish and maintain practical business undertakings? I do not think the C.C.F. or anyone else will. There can be no doubt that there exist in Canada plenty of citizens ready and eager to undertake to produce goods such as wheat and other foods, or services such as trucking, flying, repairing and all other manner of services. The only deterrent these boys or girls run up against when they seek to go into business is: first, the question of security of tenure—are they going to be able to hold their jobs?; next, the adequacy of income, and, then, the opportunity to rise.

There is no lack of private enterprise. There is thus far no fault with private enterprise. It is a fact that there is a lack of security, but that has nothing in the world to do with private enterprise. There is a lack of surety of adequate income, which again has nothing to do with private enterprise. The lack of the opportunity to rise is only indirectly related to private enterprise. The adverse circumstances which face our people when they undertake to go into private business is a matter over which the government has the power to exercise control. If the government does not have that power, then the government should seek it.

To state that private enterprise in that sense has failed is to tell a falsehood—let any one challenge that statement—and to slander the splendid Canadian youth. Will any C.C.F. member attempt that? Or any other? In this sense private enterprise has not failed, is not failing and will not fail if it is given the ghost of a chance. The only difficulty is prices and markets and taxes, purely matters of government policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There is a lot of laughing by silly, superficial people, but let me point out that these matters are important. The government has that power, and the C.C.F. have shown that they believe so, by rising in their places and declaiming against the government because it has not an adequate price and wage policy. Surely they realize that the government could have control over prices, markets and taxes. In other words, the government has responsibility for the conditions under which private enterprise must endeavour to make good.

If private enterprise fails, it is the fault of the government and of the government's financial system. Why not be honest and face up to that? Then we shall know where we are going. The fault is a matter of government financial policy. The financial policy of this government has failed miserably and despicably, and that is true also of the United States. It is not the fault particularly of the men occupying governmental positions but the fault of the outmoded, useless financial system under which they are trying to operate. Why not be frank and face up to that fact? I call on the Progressive Conservatives to face up to it. Why give the people the idea that if you were on the government benches you could make the old car run any better than the present government is doing? What nonsense! There is a species of dishonesty about this which must be cleared away. We must face the facts, find the ball and follow it through until we get a solution. Surely this house was sent here by a despairing, suffering people to find solutions, and not get up here and play politics.

But when the C.C.F. use the expression "private enterprise has failed" they appear to have in mind private business, such as farms, sawmills, machine factories, textile mills, steel companies, coal companies. The C.C.F. do not seem to have in mind the desire on the part of Canadian youth to go into business, but rather they think of some business that is established. If I am wrong they can correct me. Very well. Let us consider these factories we have in Canada and of which we can be very proud. They are great, splendid, efficiently run concerns ready to produce in superabundance and in high quality almost everything that Canada needs.

In the first place, for an example of private enterprise let us fix our attention on a coal mine. A coal mine is a producer. Remember we have two functions to perform: we have to get production, and we have to get consumption. Can you hold a coal mine responsible for consumption? Its business was never to consume or to cause consumption, but to produce coal, and if it produces coal in sufficient quantities and of a high enough quality at a reasonable price it has succeeded. If there is any failure to distribute its product, that failure is to be attributed to the government and the government's financial policy and to no other possible factor. Let us get that perfectly straight. We can hold the coal company to blame if it fails to produce abundantly and economically goods of fine quality. But we have no right to blame the coal company for a failure of consumption of its goods. The coal company may lay off men; and for every man it turns off it destroys a certain amount of wages and a certain amount of consuming power, so that when the coal company turns off a man who is no longer needed and thereby economizes it is defeating the object of consumption. Let that be borne strictly in mind. The more efficient the coal company becomes as a producer, the less efficient it becomes as a distributor of consumer purchasing power.

One of the causes of confusion lies in the fact that the C.C.F. seem to blame the coal company because it does not distribute enough purchasing power to purchase the coal it produces. There could not be a more monstrous fallacy. Let us face up to it fairly and squarely. It is utterly absurd to blame the coal company for failure to distribute. It is just as absurd to blame the coal company for failure to distribute as it would be to blame a hen because it does not give milk or to blame a cow because it does not lay eggs. Hens were not made to produce milk and cows were not made to lay eggs, and a coal company was not made to distribute purchasing power. What purchasing power it does distribute is only incidental, accidental, and unavoidable or inevitable. It distributes just as little purchasing power as it possiblly can, and it has to do that in order to be efficient as a producer.

Let us bear in mind that industry is part of the productive mechanism of Canada, and not a part of the consumptive mechanism. The people of Canada and members of parliament must keep these two functions, production and consumption, constantly in mind; for otherwise disaster will face us, and frustration and misery, depression, and all the other ills which we fear so much will be our lot.

Consumption has to be taken care of by some other mechanism than by industry; it has to be taken care of by some sort of financial mechanism. The C.C.F. appear to commit the colossal blunder of blaming industry for failure of the consumptive mechanism of Canada, and because of the failure of that consumptive mechanism they say "private enterprise has failed." The leader of the C.C.F. party, in his speech on his amendment, talked of the failure of private enterprise to produce houses. What is the reason it cannot produce houses? It is that private enterprise knows from bitter experience that the more it puts money into housing, the greater its taxation will be; it does not matter a particle whether the houses are rented or not the taxation will still go on. The first thing you know the municipality will have the house. Is that giving private enterprise a fair deal? To blame private enterprise because houses are not built in this country is a monstrous species of dishonesty. We have to face the facts and be realistic in these matters.

Let us turn now to consider government ownership. It is proposed that the government should own this coal mine we have been talking about. Could the government, by taking over the coal mine, increase the production of coal? Second, could the government, by taking over the coal mine, increase the consumption of coal? If the answer must be "no" in both cases it must be obvious that the proposal that the government take over the coal mine is purely futile, if not mischievous. Would government ownership increase the productive capacity of the coal mine? It is very doubtful. The vast proportion of our private industries, when given a chance, produce magnificently, efficiently and in superb abundance goods of a very high quality, and no one is honest who will question that statement. If the government took over the coal mine it would not increase the production or quality of the coal. It might have the very opposite effect. Government ownership as proposed by the C.C.F. amendment could not aid production.

Could it aid consumption? It is very doubtful if the taking over of the coal mine by the government would increase consumption. If the government were to increase consumption by taking over the coal mine it would have to put more money into it; it would have to put in two men to do the work of one.

An hon. MEMBER: Put in machinery.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The hon. member who suggests that without having thought it through fails to see that if the government put in machinery it would have to lay off a lot more men and thereby decrease consumption. That is quite obvious, is it not?

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is obvious, is it not? If a government mine put in more machinery it would put men out of work. That would decrease consumption. The government, if it were to increase consumption through the coal company, would have to raise wages. Would a C.C.F. government propose to raise wages in a mine and thereby increase the cost of the coal? I hardly think so. No! The government, by taking over the coal industry, could not economically increase the consumption of coal by any means whatsoever. Therefore I think we would be safe in assuming that the proposal in the C.C.F. amendment that the government take over the means of production as a means of increasing either production or consumption is simply futile, will not do any good at all—and may do harm.

Let us come to the socialization of financial institutions. Let us assume that what is meant is government ownership of the banks. Probably our C.C.F. friends will not object to that. Why would they want to nationalize the banks? Banks are private enterprise. Would you nationalize them because they have not lent enough money to produce goods? Have the banks recently neglected to lend enough money to produce goods? How do you account for the fact that there has been such a tremendous increase in the production of goods whenever there has been purchasing power among the people? If the banks had not been willing to lend money would there have been such tremendous production in the past? There has been no recent refusal on the part of the banks to lend money for any sound enterprise, and surely a C.C.F. owned bank would not lend money on an unsound enterprise.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think you are wrong there.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Maybe they would, but they would soon repent. Have we the right to expect our banks to do any more than lend money for the production of goods? That is the point. The private banks are lending money necessary to produce goods. Have we the right to expect them to do any more than that? Banks lend money for production. Let us face facts. Inane remarks will not solve the problem at all. Let us get down to the facts. The banks lend money for production. Is that not right? Banks cannot lend money for consumption. How long would a bank last if it began to lend people money to buy goods like coal for consumption? It could not do so. Even a C.C.F. bank could not do that. Banks cannot give for consumption either. Imagine a bank which began to give to people who needed money; to old age pensioners and others! Imagine a bank in a community giving money for that purpose! How long would it last as a bank? You cannot expect banks to finance consumption. They were not made to do that.

Let us go back to the coal company illustration. If a bank lends money to that coal company on a suitable amount of interest and time, then the bank has discharged its function and cannot be said to have failed if we are to be honest and face up to the situation. Banks are part of the productive system. I think there is a lot of cloudy thinking abroad in this country on this point—many people and politicians imagine banks are part of the consumptive or distributing system. Banks are part of the productive system. If anyone can prove that is not so, let him do it. Banks lend money for production; they do not, they cannot issue money for consumption, only indirectly. That is true both in Canada and in the United States. What good then would government ownership of the banks do? How could government ownership of banks help in consumption? If private banks refuse to lend on unsound propositions, do you suppose the government would lend on such propositions? A government might be a bit more lenient but I doubt it very much. No government owned bank would or could give money for consumption. No banks could lend for consumption or give for consumption and keep it up.

Consumption might be financed through the Bank of Canada, but I just wonder whether the C.C.F. would so modify the policy of the Bank of Canada. If they would do so, they have never indicated their desire to do so by anything they have ever said in this house.

Now the Bank of Canada is already government owned. What would be the object in having it owned any farther? It is socialized far enough; the C.C.F. proposal would produce no improvement at all.

If the government desired to have the present privately owned banks lend on propositions that they are afraid to lend on, the government could remedy the matter by guaranteeing the banks' loan; it does not need to own the banks. If the government is not satisfied with the interest rates that the banks feel they are obliged to charge, the government can subsidize the banks and thereby lower the interest rate. There is no need at all for the government to own the banks. In connection with the socialization of banks, I must confess, and I believe every hon. member who faces the facts will agree that the C.C.F. proposal is simply utterly worthless as a means of solving the problem of consumption, which is the real problem facing Canada.

Let us turn for a few minutes to the tremendous success of private enterprise during the war. It is said that private enterprise failed. I will challenge anyone to prove that private enterprise has failed in any of the essentials for which private enterprise can be primarily held responsible. Let us see what happened during the war. I hold in my hand the Bank of Canada "Statistical Summary, 1946 Supplement". If one turns to page 64 he will see just what happened during the war—and remember private enterprise was carrying on in Canada all during the war! On page 64 we find a table headed: "Gross national product at market prices". The market prices were as follows: In 1938, $5·1 billion; in 1939, $5·5 billion; in 1941, $8·3 billion and, in 1942, $10·3 billion. In 1943 it was $11·1 billion; in 1944, $11·8 billion and, in 1945, $11·4 billion. If it be argued that private enterprise was failing to produce in 1938, what can be said of the same private enterprise in 1944 when production increased to $11·8 billion? Someone will say, "Oh, yes, but you are supporting private enterprise". What I am doing is supporting Canada. I am anxious to keep a system in Canada which will produce an abundance of goods.

Mr. MacINNIS: Will my hon. friend say that war is a part of private enterprise?

Mr. BLACKMORE: No, it is not.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. MacINNIS: That to which the hon. member referred took place during the war.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The war was something which came and which forced the government to adopt a change in its financial policy; that is all. It forced the government to buy the goods and distribute them. If the government had bought Canadian goods and distributed them in 1933 there would have been a tremendous output of goods just the same. That is the point. Should the government provide the money with which to buy the goods? That is the whole point.

What is the reason why we have had relative prosperity in 1946? What does the president of the Bank of Canada say? He says that the reason that we have been able to sell so successfully and have such a high degree of prosperity is that we have been lending abroad. He says we cannot continue to lend abroad to keep up our market. What are we to do when we no longer lend abroad and no longer buy the goods to send away? What is to happen then? Is private enterprise to be denied markets? If so, surely private enterprise will not be able to produce the goods and services. It will not be private enterprise then which will fail, but government policy, because it is the government's policy which will determine the purchasing power. That has been obvious during the last five or six years when there has resulted the tremendous increase of production in this country.

May I turn to the United States. I hold in my hand a book entitled "Tomorrow Without Fear", by Chester Bowles. He was head of the OPA in the United States. I think I am safe in saying that he is one of the best informed men in the United States. He gives some figures on what happened in that country. There was a situation there completely comparable with what was happening in Canada. Private enterprise prevailed there. At page 21 he says:

> Between 1923 and 1929 output per man-hour in the manufacturing industries increased by aproximately one-quarter—24 per cent, to be exact.

Private enterprise did that!

Mr. Speaker, I think my time has just about run out; therefore I shall give no more evidence to support what I was saying.

I will say that Canada as well as the United States needs a new system of distribution, a new system of finance. It needs debt-free money. This Social Credit group has contended for debt-free money ever since it came to the house. I submit to hon. members in the house it will surely be impossible to solve the problem which faces us, that of increasing consumption in the country, without debt-free money—debt-free money in accordance with the amount of goods which can be produced in the country.

I warn the members of this house that if they do not work towards the adoption of some such proposal, then the country will go into depression and there will be only one group of people in Canada responsible and that will be the gentlemen who sit in this house on the other side.

The C.C.F. amendment offers no hint of a solution. I therefore intend to vote against it.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): I rise to speak because what I have to say bears on the amendment before the house, and I wish to discuss that before the vote is taken. I should like to refer specifically to that part of the amendment moved by my leader, namely, the first paragraph, which refers to price control and a planned economy:

> We respectfully submit, however, that in the opinion of this house Your Excellency's advisers have shown a readiness to return to the policies of uncontrolled and unplanned private enterprise which resulted in the depression and unemployment of pre-war years.

I realize there is a difference of opinion on the merits or otherwise of a planned economy, but I do not think there is any difference of opinion on the fact that, unless the government takes certain steps, there is great danger that we are going back on the road to depression and economic crisis. The words of the amendment I have quoted are that the government has shown a readiness to return to the system we had before the war, and in my opinion they are an understatement because the government has shown not only a readiness but almost an eagerness to get back to what some members here have called normal times.

In that connection I wish to refer to the speech made the other day by the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lockhart), in which he said, as reported at page 1060 of Hansard:

> For goodness sake, let us get back to normal. Let the law of supply and demand hold sway.

That is a statement of policy and I presume the members sitting around him concurred in what he said. If I had not thought so, then I would have thought so today after hearing the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) speak. The official opposition, the Progressive Conservative party, have definitely come out for what they call normal times, the doing away with controls, and the return to what they term free enterprise; and as the hon. member said, so long as these opinions are held sincerely and in all earnestness there is no reason why we should attack each other because of them, except to point out fallacies where they exist.

On the question of controls. and particularly price control, I think we should at this time try to hammer out a policy which is suitable to the nation, regardless of what our particular philosophies may be, and it would be valuable to go back a little and trace the history of controls as such to find out whether they are really of such a terrible nature as some people hold them up to be.

I have here an excerpt taken from the royal commission on price spreads, which, as hon. members know, was appointed during the administration of the Bennett government and which reported in this house in 1935. No one can say that that commission, which was first set up as a committee, was by any stretch of the imagination a socialist commission. The majority of the members of that commission were of the Conservative party of that time and, when they reported, they brought out some interesting statements which I should like to place on the record. I quote from page 248:

> At no time in history have economic activities ever been completely free from social control. For centuries its has been recognized that there must be some state mechanism for supervising contending economic rights and interests.

There is a statement by a commission which had gone into the question of price spreads, which had taken evidence, and which had eminent counsel to advise it. They came to the conclusion at that time that controls as such are a part of our present economic civilization, so to speak. They quote from another eminent economist. They say:

> As the great master of English classical economists, John Stuart Mill, whote in 1893 "that principle (laissez-faire) like other negative ones, has work to do yet, work mainly of a destroying kind; and I am glad to think it has strength left to finish that, after which it must soon expire . . ."

That was fifty-four years ago. John Stuart Mill at that time felt that laissez-faire, which he called a negative system, the system of allowing things to balance themselves or work themselves out, leaving full sway to the law of supply and demand, was needed in 1893 and a period of time after that, but in his opinion its work would soon be done and then it would have to expire. We find, more than half a century later, members of parliament rising in this house and saying in effect that we need more laissez-faire, that we need to have the law of supply and demand in full control and that we must get rid of government control. Surely, if we are going forward instead of backward, what was predicted half a century ago as being of a temporary nature, something that must soon expire, a temporary expedient, cannot now be held to be anything progressive.

Mr. JACKMAN: John Stuart Mill might have changed his mind had he lived during the intervening years between the time he made his prediction and the present day.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I would not be surprised to learn that a gentleman who does not now live could not change his mind, but I am surprised that people now living cannot change their minds. Let me go farther. Here is the most telling sentence in the whole report of the commission, to be found at page 249. I wish to emphasize that this was not a socialist commission. It was a commission set up by the government in 1934. I quote:

> Under present conditions, then, the question is not intervention or non-intervention but merely the nature and extent of intervention.

They came to the conclusion that the state must intervene where the interests of its citizens are at stake.

Mr. KUHL: They did not know much about Social Credit at that time.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: When the house rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the question of controls; and, if I remember correctly, I said it was no longer a question of whether or not we should have controls but rather a question of who should control, and for whose benefit. I believe it is quite well established now that whenever the interests of the people of this country are at stake the government which is charged with the responsibility of looking after those interests must intervene. In that regard I might refer to something said in this house the other day by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lockhart) in discussing the waste of man-power in connection with the wartime prices and trade board. The hon. member was quite incensed and indignant about it; perhaps his experience put him in that frame of mind. I looked up his words as reported at page 1060 of Hansard, and found that he advocated the use of a sawed-off shotgun to get rid of gentry of that kind. I do not believe anything so drastic is necessary; and while I am not here to defend any official of the wartime prices and trade board I would say that the gentlemen charged with the responsibility of administering price control in this country are only carrying out their duty. They are civil servants and are not responsible for the policies they are required to carry into effect. If any sawed-off shotguns are to be used I believe they might be more properly used on the people who pass the laws—not that I am suggesting this—because in my opinion it is useless to pour that kind of invective on people who are only endeavouring to carry out regulations which are laid down for them. I might also remind hon. members who talk in that way that the wartime prices and trade board was set up by this whole parliament; and, if I remember correctly, there was no opposition to it at that time.

Mr. GRAYDON: I do not remember its being set up by this parliament. I understood it was set up by order in council.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: This parliament gave the authority to set up such a board, and it amounts to the same thing.

Mr. GRAYDON: It is not the same thing, just in case that goes on the record.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The point I wish to refer to particularly is the question of this waste of man-power. I agree that man-power should be conserved as much as possible and used as wisely as possible, but it is an open question whether putting a few hundred or a few thousand extra men at work in this country hewing down the forests or doing anything else would be of more value to the country than having a price control administration. I want to reinforce that statement by again quoting from the report of the price spreads commission, where they said:

> We are convinced that certain forms of intervention are likely to be less expensive than the wastes of goods and of life that (would result from) the collapse of our economic system.

In other words, it is a question whether we want an economic system which will work in the interests of all the people, or whether we are concerned only with dollars and cents. These days we hear a great deal about cutting down government expenditure. I say we would be making one of the greatest mistakes possible if we were to go on a spree or crusade of cutting down government expenditure on necessary projects at this time. It is not a question of how much it costs to administer a certain law or set of regulations. The question should be whether that law or those regulations are good or bad. If they are good for the country, no expenditure should be spared to see that they are justly and fairly administered. If they are not good for the country, then even one cent is too much to spend on them.

What is the present trend of the government? What I have said so far leads up to this question. Is the government taking the advice, in the matter of decontrol, of our hon. friends of the official opposition to my right? The government have a perfect right to take their advice if they wish, but in my opinion they should be very careful, because the line of action they have been following since January 1, 1946, in going ahead with their decontrol policy, has not been in the best interests of the Canadian people. It may be that my hon. friends to my right are quite sincere and quite convinced that what they are advocating is the right thing, but the best of intentions will not help if the results are such that the people of this country must suffer. Let me give an illustration of what I mean. It is easy enough for the official opposition to say the government must go ahead and decontrol as quickly as possible, but they are not in a position of responsibility, and the results of such a policy will not be their responsibility. I have before me a clipping from the Toronto Globe and Mail, dated March 7 of this year, and the heading is: "Liberals jittery when decontrol ups living cost." It goes on to make this interesting and pointed statement:

> Liberal party members are pressing on the cabinet the necessity of braking the price board's decontrol programme and continuing present subsidies for a longer period than is now contemplayed. Some of those who six months ago were chafing at the government bit and urging more rapid removal of controls are now getting worried at rising costs of living and suggesting that the line be held even if subsidies have to be increased rather than curtailed.

What does that add up to? It simply means that the wave of propaganda this country saw last year and the year before apparently had some effect upon the government and forced it to carry on decontrol before the country was ready for it. Unfortunately some of the rank and file members of the Liberal party fell for that line, too, and urged upon the government a programme of decontrol. Now apparently these same members, having found what it did to the cost of living, and having heard the reaction from their constituencies, from the housewives in their areas as to the cost of living today, are beginning to change their minds, are urging the opposite policy upon the government. That shows the danger of taking advice from those who have not positions of responsibility in that respect.

I want to go ahead from there and point out how a decontrol policy such as the government is carrying out, is affecting different parts of our population. Let us begin with the farmers. As has been so eloquently said on this side of the house, it is well known that the farmers of this country were carrying the load of price stabilization during the years of the war, and are continuing to carry that load.

The government has made a wheat contract, under which the farmers are to receive $1.35 a bushel up to 1950. Those farmers who are engaged in wheat farming are expected to live out of that $1.35, less what it costs to deliver the grain to the lakehead. The farmer knows now he will not receive any more than that, except what he might get out of participation certificates. The farmer has his income fixed; yet every day he picks up a newspaper, finds that the prices of the things he has to buy, manufactured products, are being decontrolled and going sky-high.

What will be the effect? What has been the effect? We have been told from different quarters of the house that the production of live stock, including hogs, has been decreasing. This is not because the farmer does not want to produce. Perhaps at the present time it is not even a matter of price. But if the farmer is to see his way clear to carry on the production of live stock, grain and other products for the next four years, then he must see some stabilization of prices of the things he has to buy. But there seems to be no prospect of that. The programme of the government is apparently one of a down-hill rush toward decontrol.

I state frankly that I am very much concerned and disturbed, however, by the trend which has been apparent since the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has taken over. Very early in this session—or it might have been just before the session opened—I heard a speech over the radio by the Minister of Finance, when he addressed the Toronto board of trade. I tuned in after the minister had started, and was not sure as to who was speaking. But before he had gone very far I was quite sure that it must have been one of my hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative party who was talking about decontrol. And, judging from the applause he received from his good friends there he seemed to have won the hearts of at least some of them when he had finished.

I have great respect for his ability; but let me say to him that if in that speech, he won the hearts of some of the people in the board of trade of Toronto, I am afraid that by the same speech he did violence to any ambition he may have of being the next Prime Minister of Canada, because the people of this country are getting a rude awakening today. All one has to do is to talk to someone on the street or to the people who are riding up and down the country in railway trains. Talk with anyone of them and the conversation will be about the increase in the cost of living. Today it is only a whisper; tomorrow it might be a gale, and then will come the hurricane. And the Minister of Finance will find himself caught in the vortex of that hurricane, because the people of this country are and always have been ahead of the government.

Today the people of Canada are beginning to see what will happen if the present policy of decontrol is followed any faster or farther along the lines it is now going. We are going to have a period of inflation such as we never had before.

When I mention inflation I should like to quote something that appeared in the Manitoba Co-operator of November 1, 1946. This is an interesting article by Edna Jaques, a well known author, and is entitled "I am Inflation.." She states:

"I am inflation."

Thousands of people never recognize me. True, I have an ugly mug but I disguise it under a thousand different forms of camouflage. Here is my favourite one, it always goes over big with the men.

More money to spend.

I chuckle every time I pull that one, it's old as the hills. I've been using it for hundreds of years. Every time there's a war I pull it out of the bag, and it works every time. The catch in it is that in war there are fewer civilian goods on the market and people are willing to pay more to get what they want.

From then on it's in the bag.

Then it goes on to give us a few reminders.

Remember after the last war when Canada's cost of living went to 192 per cent, in July, 1920.

Then she goes on to say:

In 1920 farmers were paying $8 to $12 for boots, $60 to $100 for a suit of clothes, $7 and over for a bag of flour and so on.

And so it goes on.

Mr. MITCHELL: Would my hon. friend go a step farther?

Mr. MacINNIS: Give him time.

Mr. MITCHELL: Just a minute; you fellows play both ends against the middle. Would my hon. friend go a step farther and say what the industrial worker paid for food in 1919 and 1920?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Let me go on with what I am saying.

Mr. MITCHELL: You can't answer that.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I do not propose to be diverted by that statement. It is not a question, and I do not see the purpose of it.

I was proceeding to quote further from the same article:

Since this war, plenty of people are working for all they're worth to run inflation up—but folks are scared of me. I'm the two-headed monster that broke the country after the last war when the bubble burst and deflation set in.

They'll never forget that I'm the two-headed monster that sent nearly ten thousand decent hard-working business men to the wall. I closed factories and shops from Halifax to Vancouver.

I made hoboes out of nice boys, while girls with university degrees were working as maids, anything to keep a roof over their heads.

It ends by a quotation from a practical farmer:

An old, weather-beaten farmer who had lived through four wars said, "It ain't the money we git that counts so much, it's what it will buy in return. A dollar ain't worth a cuss unless it will buy an honest dollar's worth of goods. That's the real measure of a dollar, son—the real measure."

That is just a mild reminder of what may happen if we go farther along the road the government has been travelling for the last thirteen or fourteen months. I want to warn the government that it is not only a matter of the cost of living going up; it will be more serious than that. During the past year we have had a certain amount of labour unrest. At the last session of parliament we had an interesting and, at times, a heated debate about strikes. Expressions have been voiced during the first part of this year, expressions of hope, that 1947 would be a no-strike year, and that we would have industrial peace, for once. But this is what the Globe and Mail has to say, in the same clipping to which I referred earlier:

Other members express serious alarm over the possible effect of rising prices on the labour situation in Canada. If prices can be held steady there is a good chance that the industrial picture this year will remain quiet, but with rising prices a repetition of last year's strike epidemic is considered inevitable.

This is the Globe and Mail speaking; this is not any rabid newspaper that may be considered radical or rabble-rousing. It is a good, staid Toronto paper warning the government not to take the advice of the official opposition in this house because, if they do, they will have an epidemic of strikes on their hands. My hon. friend asks me what we would expect from a Liberal paper. This is the Toronto Globe and Mail, and I imagine a Liberal paper would be just that much more to the point. It would be more willing to give advice.

That is the effect it will have on the farmers and workers of this country. But there are other people who will be affected, such as those who have fixed incomes like retired persons, railroad men for instance, old age pensioners and others of the type which could be included in the group sometimes referred to as the white-collar workers. These people have a more or less fixed income from year to year. How will this trend affect them? They are not going to go on strike. Retired people and old age pensioners are not going to be able to force the government to give them more; they are going to have to take what they can get. The cost of living is rising so rapidly that a pension which might be considered good today will be a mere pittance in six weeks or a couple of months from now.

This is something to which the government should give careful consideration. There are two ways in which they can help these classes of people. First, they can give them a larger pension, or, second, they can give greater relief from income taxation or provide some other advantage of that sort. The cost of living could be kept down to a level where these people could live on what they are receiving. There is a large section of this country made up of forgotten people who have been overlooked in this scramble to raise prices and to get in on the ground floor.

How will it affect the war veteran? For several days we heard eloquent and excellent speeches on the Veterans Land Act and allied subjects. We were told how the veterans have not been able to build homes, how homes they have built have cost so much more than was expected.

While I am on the subject I should like to refer to something that looks like an election pamphlet, although it does not say so. It is put out by the national Liberal federation of Ottawa, and across the top in big letters it says, "New housing for the public." On the front is a picture of a man holding a house in his hands, and then it says, "Only $13.82 a month plus monthly taxes." It then goes on to say how much it will cost the veteran to build a house or to get a house under the new Liberal regime. It says that under the new social order in Canada an $8,000 house can be purchased under the Liberal housing plan for $35.42 a month. It says that a $2,000 house will cost only $10.52 a month. I am not going to impute any motives to the Liberal federation when they printed that pamphlet. I will give them the benefit of the doubt and say that perhaps they actually believed that they could do that at that time, which was only two years ago.

Since then we have heard in this chamber that a four-roomed house will rent for something like $70 a month. There is quite a difference between that figure and $10.52. All this in the short space of two years! Why? It is not because it was necessary; it is not because there was any urgency to remove these controls in order to get back to what are called normal times; it is because pressure was placed upon the government by interests who saw an opportunity to clean up fortunes during the inflationary period, regardless of what happens to the general public in the deflationary period which will follow and which will bring about so many casualties.

How will this affect the dairy and other farmers? I have here a clipping which shows what the government is prepared to do in the matter of removing subsidies. It points out that during the fiscal year the estimates will show a slash of $51,431,529 in the vote for the agricultural food board. This vote is being reduced from $53,000,000 to $2,000,000. How is this brought about? The fluid milk subsidy of $12,000,000 is being dropped. The concentrated milk subsidy of $2,000,000 is being dropped. The butter subsidy of $25,000,000 will expire on April 30, as will the cheese subsidy of $6,000,000, the bean subsidy of $1,250,000, the corn and tomatoes subsidy of $3,000,000 and the fruit for jam subsidy of $500,000. That is what appeared in the Ottawa Journal of March 5, 1947. Sharp price increases in all these things are expected when the subsidies expire at the end of April. I could go on down the line to show how the cost of living has been rising at an alarming rate, as a result of the decontrol policy of the present government.

I said a little while ago that there are people who are putting pressure on the government to take off the ceilings and to do away with controls. In my opinion this is a short-sighted policy, because it will eat up the purchasing power of the people at a much greater rate than it is being eaten up today or during the war. Then these people who expect to benefit from higher prices will find that there are no customers who have any money with which to buy their products at the higher prices. For this reason I feel it is important that the government should realize that they have gone too far down the road of decontrol. Not only should they stop, but in my opinion they should go back up the road a bit and reduce prices instead of just holding the line. I notice that in France they found it possible to reduce prices. Certain labour unions in this country have been advocating a reduction of ten per cent in the prices of manufactured goods. It can be done and, in my opinion, it will have to be done if we are to do justice to the farmer who is trying to farm with a price ceiling on his wheat.

I should like to refer to an incident that happened today, the reference by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) to certain things that are going on in this country. I was quite amazed to hear that the Liberal government had gone socialistic and that apparently the C.C.F. was having some effect on government policy. It does not look that way to me from where I sit, but perhaps the hon. member has a better vantage point. As I look across western Canada, especially from the great lakes west, I find that the very opposite seems to be the case.

If we start in British Columbia or in Manitoba we find that in those provinces it is not the C.C.F. and the Liberals who have formed a coalition, who are now locked in an embrace; it is the Conservatives and the Liberals who have formed a coalition. I am just pointing that out to show that the hon. member was pretty wide of the mark when he attempted to throw the C.C.F. and the Liberals in the same bag, so to speak, and call them all socialists.

We do not object to the Liberals going socialist; we do not object even to the Progressive Conservatives going socialist if they so please, but let us keep the record clear. If we go to other provinces in western Canada, such as Alberta, we find there again that the C.C.F. is the only opposition. On the other side of the house you have the Social Credit group and whatever independents may be there, or a small number of Liberals and Conservatives combined. There you have a situation quite different from what the hon. member tried to imply. In Saskatchewan, for example, there would probably be a coalition of Liberals and Conservatives. One-half of the coalition is missing, but that does not mean that they are not trying to get together, because, according to the Star-Phoenix:

> Regina, March 3 (CP).—A meeting of "representative citizens," including both Liberals and Progressive Conservatives, resolved at a week-end meeting here that "concerted action by all citizens is desirable to supplant the present C.C.F. government by a democratic one," it was announced today.

It goes on to say:

> Approximately 40 prominent Reginans met to form an organization with plans to support at the next provincial election, two candidates "who will uphold democratic principles."
> "The plan of the new movement is to work with existing political constituency associations in ousting the present C.C.F. government."

That looks a little strange in view of the shadow boxing today between the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) and the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). Apparently they should go back to Saskatchewan once in a while and see what their boys are doing. At another meeting to draw up a scheme for a united front against the C.C.F. government, one of the Liberals said, according to the Star-Phoenix:

> This is not a meeting of Liberals; it is a meeting of inferiority complexes.

He did not like the idea of the two old parties getting together to do nothing but grumble against the C.C.F. government.

The Progressive Conservative association also had a meeting, and the question which came up there was that of nominating only one candidate in the constituency of Regina at the next election. This question was referred to the executive, with power to act on the matter. Those are wide powers, as the hon. member for Lake Centre would say, to hand over to an executive, to determine whether a Liberal or a Conservative shall be the opposition candidate in Regina. In view of all this, I think a great deal, if not all of what the hon. member said today about a so-called socialist coalition between the Liberals and the C.C.F., can be discounted because it does not stand up to the facts.

Mr. LOW: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny), who has just taken his seat, a question, because he made a statement which I think should be clarified. Did the hon. member say that in Alberta the only opposition was the C.C.F.?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The statement I made was that the only opposition to the Social Credit government in Alberta was the C.C.F., because all other parties were in practically the same bag.

Mr. LOW: I should like to correct that statement for the record. There are only two members of the C.C.F. and, if they are the only opposition, then there is none in Alberta.

Mr. MAURICE BOURGET (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to avail myself of the opportunity provided by the debate on the address to discuss a few points which are of national import at present.

Before doing so, however, I would like to join previous speakers in warmly congratulating the mover (Mr. MacNaught) and the seconder (Mr. Cournoyer) of the address on the splendid manner in which they performed their duties.

(Translation):

A few of the measures advocated in the legislative programme mentioned in the throne speech appeal to me particularly. Representing as I do an urban constituency, peopled mainly by the working classes, I have considered it my duty, during the past seven years which have given me the opportunity of establishing closer contact with them, to try to understand them better, to look into their needs and to analyse their claims.

If I have been helpful to them in any way, and if, through that cooperation, we have succeeded in obtaining for them certain privileges, I am most happy indeed. I can state that our workers, and especially those of the Quebec district who are better known to me, are conscientious and honest people—and it is to their credit—who, in their respective fields, want to cooperate with their employers in the development and the progress of Canada, that it may become a still greater country. They understand that they have rights to defend, but they are also aware that they have duties to fulfil. They will only be able to protect those rights by becoming members of the union of their choice, a union in which they will have confidence, and by choosing leaders who will prefer to protect the workers rather than indulge in politics. No party may claim to be the sole defender of the working classes. I would even suggest that some union leaders, while too prone to exalt a political group and to censure the government in power, are neglecting their responsibilities and harming the very people whose interests it is their duty to protect. Consider for example what is happening in the United States at this time. During the November election, the political action committee of the C.I.O. supported the defeated party. We realize today, from the legislation introduced in the American Senate and Congress, that the workers are the sole victims of their leader's blunder. If those bills are passed they will lose many hard-won privileges.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the interests of the working classes must remain above those of any party. Thus, the claims of labour will always be better received and understood by the government, and no doubt, we shall have fewer strikes on our hands. I don't mean by that that union leaders must take the blame for all strikes past and present, but I do mean that conditions might be very much better if they were politically impartial.

At the same time, workers will better live up to their obligations if they feel that their efforts and the interest they take in their jobs receive better recognition. They want to share in the success of the business, but expect appreciation in return. It seems that far too many industrial leaders fail to understand the changes that took place in capital and labour relations, especially in the last war. They have to realize that the worker is no longer to be looked upon as a slave, an underling, to be ordered about at will, but a valued partner worthy of regard and sympathy. Nothing must be left undone that will improve working conditions and the worker's safety. And when company finances allow, he should be given adequate increases without his having to strike for them. I am sure employers would thus eliminate the many industrial conflicts that must follow, unless these steps are taken to avoid them.

For example, has there ever been such a depressing condition, so much opposed to the national interest, as the strike that held sway, for a period of three months, at the Noranda mine? Would it not have been feasible to settle this labour dispute at the outset, with a measure of charity, good will and, especially, common sense? Thousands of workers were jobless because the company refused to grant the check-off or optional collection of dues, on which the union insisted. I feel that the company should have complied with the union's demands or, at least, agreed to a vote being taken among the workers.

Last year, at the meetings of the industrial relations committee, this matter of the check-off was discussed and I cannot recall that a single member was opposed to the acceptance of this union security measure. I was astonished, the other day, to hear the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Caouette), whose friends in Quebec endeavour to build a reputation as defenders of the working classes, say that he was opposed to the check-off because this measure, in his opinion, aimed at depriving the workers of their freedom. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how could this optional collection of dues ever be an obstacle to individual freedom? Are not the workers themselves asking that the deduction be made on their salary? That being so, how can it be said that their freedom is being curtailed? Mr. Speaker, I believe that if my honourable friend realizes how important it is for the workers to organize themselves into a labour union and if he really has their success at heart, he will raise no objection to that form of union security being granted to them. I also think that some good will and cooperation on the part of the company would certainly have had the effect of preventing that disastrous strike.

However, past experience shows that if the protection of both parties is to be ensured and harmonious relations established between them, governments must necessarily intervene and enact appropriate labour legislation.

Last fall, all the labour ministers of this country met in Ottawa. They unanimously agreed to a resolution recommending the enactment of uniform legislative measures for the settlement of disputes between capital and labour. A short time afterward, the dominion department of labour submitted to each of the provinces the draft of a national labour code, requesting them to consider it and make whatever convenient suggestions might be necessary under the circumstances. As yet, we do not know what the answers of the provinces will be, but I for one sincerely wish that the ministers concerned may closely scrutinize that report before improving the existing legislation; moreover, I feel that they will cooperate with the dominion labour department in the drawing up of a code which would apply throughout the country. The various provinces could themselves enforce such a labour code, which would afford protection to those among them who are so touchy about their autonomy. Uniform legislation of that kind would, in future, do much to redress the wrongs which the workers are now suffering in the province of Quebec, especially in connection with the salaries they receive as compared with those given to workers in other provinces for identical work, because it must not be forgotten that they have to pay the same taxes as their fellow-workers and pay the same prices for the things they need.

It is my belief that the labour ministers from all provinces will generously contribute to that task, so that we may find the required solution which will put an end, if not to all, at least to most of the disputes which might occur in future between capital and labour.

(Text):

Since I am dealing with labour, I believe it is my duty to draw the attention of the house to a section of our population which is performing essential services in the economy of our country, even if this section is not great in numbers. I refer to scientists, architects and engineers. Since I am a professional engineer, I may be in a better position than many of our people to understand the role played by the members of these professions before and during the last war, and the great task which they will be called upon to fulfil in the future. But for the information of hon. members and for the public in general, may I quote an extract from an article which appeared in the Institute Journal of December, 1945, and which is entitled, "Scientists in Government Service", by C. R. Twinn:

> The British and United States governments have publicly expressed their comprehension of the tremendous importance of science in the modern world. In a white paper dealing with the scientific civil service presented to parliament in September, 1945, by the chancellor of the exchequer appeared the statement:
> "The governments are deeply conscious of the contribution made by scientists toward the winning of the war. They are equally conscious of the contribution which science can make during peace to the efficiency of production, to higher standards of living, to improved health and the means of defence."

In November, 1944 the President of the United States, impressed with the importance of scientific research in the national life and concerned with its continuing future in that country, requested Doctor Vannevar Bush, director of the office of scientific research and development, to make recommendations on a number of points related thereto. Doctor Bush, in reporting to the President in July, 1945, had this to say:

> Without scientific progress no amount of achievement in other directions can insure our health, prosperity and security as a nation in the modern world.

Nobody can deny that men who merit such magnificent praise are at least entitled to recognition from their respective governments of the service which they render to society.

The following is an illustration of the way in which many professional men are paid in the civil service and this situation is not peculiar to the federal civil service. I believe it is even worse in the provincial field. In an article that appeared in the November, 1945, issue of the Engineering Journal at page 718, I read the following under the heading, "More About Civil Service Salaries":

> For a long time the Engineering Journal has been pounding away at the salary scale paid to members of the profession by the federal civil service. It was very encouraging to see, recently, in the Ottawa Citizen an editorial on the same subject. Under the heading "Why Men Leave Home" the Citizen lays bare the situation in Ottawa all of which will be of more than passing interest to the Department of Finance and the treasury board.
> The editorial quotes half a dozen cases that to the casual reader would seem almost too fantastic to be true. Here they are. One of these is a B.Sc. of British Columbia and an M.A. of McGill who receives a salary of $3,180 after 19 years' experience. Another is both a B.A. and an M.A. with four years' experience and an $1,800 salary. A third is a graduate of Manitoba with an M.Sc. from Cornell; he has had three years' service and he receives the munificent sum of $1,620 a year. One man with a B.A. from McGill and an M.A. from Wisconsin and a D.Sc. from Edinburgh, with fifteen years' experience, draws a salary of $3,180, and there is another with a Ph.D., B.A. and an M.A., who has had six years' experience and receives from His Majesty's loyal government the sum of $2,160.

I have before me recent civil service application notices and I find, for instance, according to one, that the public service of Canada requires architects and engineers, class 1 and class 2, at salaries ranging from $2,100 to $3,120. I might also cite the case of a chemical engineer who holds a diploma from a recognized Canadian university and also the degree of Doctor of Chemistry from a European university. He has to his credit twenty-one years' experience and is working for a federal department and earning the enormous salary of $2,860 a year. In view of this, is it surprising that governments are having difficulty in retaining valued employees after they have worked under these unsatisfactory conditions for a few years? Will our governments not realize that they will lose employees whom it will be impossible to replace? Will our governments not realize that such loss will cripple the public services of which we should be so proud. I believe that in some quarters it seems that a sense of proportion has been altogether lost. I hope that, since war-time restrictions are abolished, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and the treasury board will do their best to remedy these wrongs.

May I ask fair-minded members of this house, whatever may be their political creed, to support me on this issue. This is not a political issue. I should like the public at large and the federal and provincial governments to recognize that those whom Doctor Samuel Smiles rightly called "the makers of modern civilization" are entitled to a salary commensurate with the great services they are rendering.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, another matter of national import which gives rise to serious controversy is that which deals with the dominion-provincial tax agreements. At present, six provinces have accepted them while three have turned them down, for the time being, at any rate. They object to these agreements on the ground that acceptance of the proposals would jeopardize their autonomy. Mr. Speaker, we have not yet heard any of the six provincial premiers who accepted the agreements complain that they had sacrificed the slightest particle of autonomy; still, and this I should like to emphasize, these premiers are not all friendly to the present government.

On the other hand, we are still awaiting one argument from the refractory provinces to convince us that those proposals imperil provincial autonomy. Some have endeavoured to prove it, but upon analysis, we find that their arguments can be easily refuted. On February 6 last, speaking on the address, the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Gagnon) stated:

> Is it not true, however, and does history not prove that the dominion government never returned the provincial rights and prerogatives it had taken over although many of them were surrendered only temporarily?

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will refer to sections 51, 52, 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, he will find that the dominion government had complete authority to that effect and therefore did not encroach upon the autonomy of the provinces. I shall gladly give him, upon request, the subsections applying to each of the said acts. No, Mr. Speaker, the dominion government has no intention of encroaching upon provincial rights and does not ask that the constitution be modified or amended.

Their only wish is to secure a tax agreement for a definite period of time. My hon. friend and the premier of my province may rest assured that no Quebec Liberal member will ever tolerate any infringement of provincial autonomy. We prize our rights as highly as they do and we are determined to fight for them. We go about it with less fanfare and histrionics, but with greater logic and sincerity. We realize full well that such agreements, while respecting individual rights, will ensure prosperity throughout the nation. It is generally admitted, I think, that prosperity is indivisible. We must, therefore, use every effort to spread it in all provinces. These agreements are designed to provide the provinces with a fixed income to avoid overlapping and inequality of taxation and to protect trade within the country. There is no doubt but that their acceptance would make it possible for the various governments to stabilize their financial position, improve their social legislation and prevent the recurrence of unemployment. I have given my reasons for hoping that the premier of our province will assent to the proposals. I hope that he will stop playing petty politics and if he thinks our rights are being trampled on, let him show us in what respect they are being ignored and let him bluntly refuse to sign an agreement. If, on the other hand, our autonomy is unimpaired, let him come here and take up the matter with the federal government so that we may know once and for all what he does want. No further conference need be held to thresh out the matter. We have had two already, both ending in failure. Besides, by the very principle of provincial autonomy, any province is fully entitled to enter into tax agreements with the dominion without in any way affecting the rights of other provinces. Mr. Speaker, while the Canadian people were disturbed for a time by such appeals to impaired autonomy, they are getting to understand just why certain governments turned down the agreements, and the time is at hand when they will pass harsh judgment on those genuinely responsible for the failure of the conference.

Before closing, I wish to ask the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), who must now be getting ready for the forthcoming budget, to keep the taxpayers in mind.

During the war, all Canadians generously accepted the sacrifices necessary in such circumstances, but they all realize today, that they cannot indefinitely assume the present heavy burden of taxes. I believe the time has come to grant important reductions, especially to wage earners and heads of families. It does not seem essential to me that the total cost of the war just ended be paid entirely by the present generation. I feel that future generations should be called upon to pay part of that expenditure, as they may possibly be the first to benefit from the sacrifices made by the present generation in order to ensure a happier future for their descendants.

Mr. HEON: Mr. Speaker, according to a written agreement which will last for the duration of this session, I was paired with my very distinguished friend the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Lapalme). Had I voted, I would have voted against the subamendment.

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Lake St. John-Roberval (Mr. Dion). Had I voted, I would have voted against the subamendment.

(Text):

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have just a few minutes to deal with the position this group takes with respect to the amendment proposed by the Progressive Conservative party and to place our position firmly before the members of the house. It is true that this is the second time I have spoken in this debate, but I make no apology for doing that because the rules of the house forbid me, in the succession which is arranged, to move an amendment. I may wish to do that before I finish my address tonight.

An hon. MEMBER: Nonsense.

Mr. LOW: It cannot be any more nonsensical than my hon. friend looks. There are two aspects of the Conservative amendment which I think require considerable attention before the vote is taken. On the negative side I should like to ask certain questions. Do the Conservatives claim that the government has lost the confidence of the people because, during its regime, centralization has intensified, taxes have increased many times, the national debt has mounted to staggering proportions, and bureaucracy and regimentation have proceeded to lengths that are unbelievable? If so, then we agree.

Do the Conservatives claim that the Liberal government no longer enjoys the confidence of the people because of the manner in which the government has been introducing socialism while at the same time giving lip service to Liberal principles? If, so, then we quite concur. Do the Conservatives, the movers of the amendment, believe that the flagrant violation of the promises which they made, particularly to the men of the fighting forces in regard to the post-war period, contributed to the loss of confidence in the government? If so, then certainly we agree. Finally, do the Conservatives claim that the government has lost the confidence of the people through its failure to preserve and vitalize true democracy in Canada and because in its neglect it has allowed conditions to develop which encourage the growth of communism and other forms of totalitarianism to the extent that they have become a distinct danger to the security and welfare of Canada? If so, then we agree. These are objectionable policies which the C.C.F. party would intensify in their efforts to introduce the socialist state in Canada.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is your opinion, but it is not correct.

Mr. LOW: We shall let the hon. member show that it is not. Those are the negative aspects of the matter. By implication the amendment before the house suggests that there is some party or there are some alternative policies in which the people do have confidence. I think we must rule out any possibility that the people's confidence rests in any political party. It is my opinion that political party machines have never been quite so much in disrepute as they are at the present time in Canada. Therefore it must be that the Conservatives believe there are policies which would command the confidence of the people. There can be no question that this is the case. So I put it squarely to the Conservatives who are sponsoring the amendment: Do they concur that these policies which they claim that people have confidence in are as follows:

1. That full and unfettered freedom shall be restored to the people of Canada—I mean all the people of Canada, not just some of them.

2. That as one of the means to the restoration of freedom, all unnecessary controls, domination of the individual citizen by a growing state bureaucracy, and the increasing centralization of power by a multitude of regulations, orders in council and restrictive legislation shall be brought to an end.

3. That the present burden of crushing taxation shall be reduced by at least thirty per cent immediately, and within reasonable time by at least sixty per cent.

4. That every Canadian shall, as a right of citizenship, and so long as he assumes his responsibilities as a citizen and cooperates to the full in keeping up Canadian production, be entitled to a social security income, in addition to his earned income, if any, which will render him independent of state charity or economic coercion and will enable him to live in decency and security. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that nothing less than this will confer on him economic freedom; and without economic freedom he can have no freedom in any real sense of the term.

5. That the paralyzing restrictions on agriculture and industry shall be removed to give full rein to the country's productive efforts, and immediate action be taken to divert the necessary effort and materials so that private enterprise and existing government agencies might together provide an adequate housing programme to meet the national requirements.

6. That farmers and other primary producers, together with manufacturers and merchants, shall be assured a fair return for their services in an expanding market in which consumers will at all times have sufficient purchasing power to buy the available goods and services.

7. That there shall be established stability of wage scales and incomes generally, with a downward revision of prices without loss to any individual.

8. That the parliament of Canada shall be made responsible to the will of the Canadian people at all times; and that the necessary constitutional changes shall be made to establish every Canadian in his legitimate rights as a citizen of this great country.

These policies in almost every respect are the opposite of those being pursued by the present government and of those being advocated by the C.C.F. and communist parties. Yet not only do these policies represent what the overwhelming majority of the Canadian people want but, with our vast national resources, they are entirely practicable.

If these are the policies to which the Progressive Conservatives give their support as the alternatives to the policies in which they claim the people have lost confidence, the Social Credit group would like them to make it very clear, by declaration in this house, so that we shall know what to do about the amendment they have proposed. We like as a group to be faced with positive proposals when making our decisions. We are determined to do what is best for Canada, and we do not want to be guilty at any time of political manoeuvring. To the very best of our ability we will do what is best for Canada so far as it is possible for us to see what is best.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is a good deal of merit in the old saying, "I'd rather have the devil I know than the devil I don't know."

In order to clarify the whole situation, I wish to move an amendment to the Conservative amendment. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore):

That all of the words in the amendment following the word "Excellency's" be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor:

"Ministers ought to have advised Your Excellency that they would introduce in the present session measures providing for:

A. The return to parliament of complete and effective control of Canada's financial policy.

B. The use of the national credit to meet at least some of the financial requirements for essential services; and, as a guarantee that this country shall not again be subjected to financial depression, to make available to each and all Canadian citizens a proper portion of purchasing power which shall not first pass through the usual channels of industry, this on a basis calculated to maintain a balance between effective purchasing power in the hands of consumers and the aggregate of the prices of goods available for sale.

C. Removing the discouragements to the production, and sale in Canada, of building materials of all kinds; and, the providing of financial assistance required, so that an all-out housing programme can be initiated to meet the needs of the Canadian people.

D. Redefining and clarifying the constitutional rights and responsibilities of dominion and provincial governments together with the adoption of scientific formulae for allotting to the provinces sufficient revenues to enable them fully to discharge their responsibilities without increasing the tax burden already borne by their people.

It has been widely claimed that the social crediters have turned away from their monetary reform efforts. I suppose this claim arises from the fact that during the war years we did not press so strongly for monetary reform as we did before the war. We did not emphasize this phase of our programme for two main reasons: (a) for patriotic reasons. We were in a war that required the combined efforts of all Canadians to win, and we did not think it desirable at that time to press too strongly for changes while we were engaged in a life and death struggle; (b) but much the more important reason is that the chronic shortages of purchasing power disappear during war time when a big part of our production is being given away free to our enemies or being destroyed in battle. In fact, as the war reached its climax, there developed a situation where we had more money than consumer goods to be bought. Social crediters realized that, and were not such fools as to press for more money to come into existence at that time. The fact that we did not has been misinterpreted to mean that we have dropped our demands for financial reforms. Nothing is farther from the truth.

Amongst those who make the claim that we have abandoned monetary reform efforts are many who say they have made a careful study of social credit and that their studies have convinced them of its fallacy. I doubt very much that they have made these studies because these same people charge that social credit is merely a monetary reform scheme; in fact many of them say "a funny money scheme". Let me tell them in no uncertain terms that they have not studied social credit at all or they would know that social credit is a complete philosophy of life, a way of living which concerns itself with every phase of the political and economic welfare of every human being within our borders; if they had made a study of social credit they would know that our financial reform proposals are simply a means to an end. What is that end? Establishment in our country of conditions under which every individual may have an opportunity of developing his own personality to the farthest possible extent of his capacity, together with the fullest freedom to live his life as an individual and not as part of a regimented group.

Every observant Canadian knows that before and during the war years the social credit organization was the spearhead of the movement to save Canada from communism, fascism, or any other totalitarian "ism". We have led constantly in the effort to preserve the right of private enterprise in this country, because we are convinced, as the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) so well demonstrated this afternoon, that individuals develop and expand toward perfection best under such a system, private enterprise.

It is common knowledge that social crediters have consistently pressed for lower taxes, reduction of debt, the abolition of restrictive bureaucratic control and the introduction of a Christian democracy in this country. We have never relaxed for one moment in our demands that parliament set out at once to unlock the door to abundant living for every Canadian. Social credit contains the three keys by which these doors can be opened wide. The first of these keys is personal freedom, which is the key to political democracy. We have been the champions of political democracy and of personal freedom. The second of these keys which is involved in the social credit philosophy is financial reform, which is the key to economic democracy. Unless we have economic democracy which carries economic freedom to every citizen, those citizens cannot be said to have freedom in any sense. The third key which is contained within the social credit philosophy is a sane policy of international relations, which is the key to peace.

The shooting war is over. Canada should soon be giving full rein to productive effort; in fact we should have been straining much harder these past years to open wide the floodgates of production to meet the dangerous situation which had developed with respect to the possibility of inflation. As we remove the restrictions to full production we shall very soon begin to pile up unsaleable surpluses of goods and services; surpluses not above what the people want and can consume, but so-called surpluses above what the people can pay for with the meagre amount of money in their pockets. Within a few years at the most, unless some basic reforms are made to prevent it, Canada will once more face a condition of unsaleable surpluses and poverty amidst abundance. I say with all gravity, Mr. Speaker, that if that condition is ever allowed to develop again in this country I very much fear that nothing can possibly prevent tragic disturbances and upheavals which might be the signal for the communist world revolution that is still in the course of active preparation.

Let me say right here that the government has shown some evidence—and I recognize that evidence—of an awakening to the situation. It has introduced some measures designed to bring up internal consumption in Canada, but it has steadfastly refused to get right down to the real causes of periodical depression. The government seems to prefer putting crutches where a surgical operation is needed. In the light of modern knowledge of economics, does it not appear stupid to hon. members, stupid, let us say, to distribute money for family allowances and then turn around and, by hundreds of hidden ways, steal it back by taxation? Who benefits from such a thing?

If one examines into the situation he will find that the beneficiaries are mainly the hordes of bureaucrats who administer these acts of extortion. Has not anybody the gumption to see that if more of the products of his labour is left in the hands of the rightful owner, namely, the citizen who produces them, there would be infinitely less necessity and reason for the people becoming dependent upon a paternal state?

I said that financial reform is the key to economic democracy. The need for financial reform arises from two basic faults or weaknesses in our financial structure. The first is that Canadian governments of the past have allowed a private monopoly to control the issuance of over ninety-five per cent of our money. This monopoly issues money as a debt owing to itself that must be repaid with interest. I do not intend to spend time on this phase of the weakness just now.

The second weakness arises from the method which we use of putting money into circulation, that results in a chronic shortage of purchasing power in the hands of consumers. I should like to say just a word about this one, because it is the one upon which the proposals for reform made by the social credit programme rests.

There is general agreement among economists of the world that purchasing power finds its way into the hands of consumers through the productive process; that is, through the process of making goods, paying salaries and wages, dividends and profits and compensation to the workers in enterprise and in industry. I believe, too, that there is general agreement that if a large-scale productive system is to serve the needs of this century and of the people in these modern times, it must be matched by large-scale consumption. What we need is a nation of good customers, but this cannot be unless we set to work now to remedy the basic faults in our method of distributing purchasing power. Is it true that the productive process itself fails to generate and distribute enough money to enable the consumer to buy back the whole of their produce? I think it is a matter of common observation that the productive effort fails to distribute amongst consumers enough so that these consumers can buy back the products of industry.

I shall draw this to the attention of the house as a common observation. Periodically in this and in every other country we come into a condition which operates on the same type of financial system, where we have built up unsaleable surpluses of goods, goods which the people want and can use and would use, but they cannot get at them. We saw in the thirties in this country a condition where the merchants had their shelves loaded full, where people were starving and could not get at these goods because they did not have in their pockets the money with which to buy them. That is a situation which has to be explained if we are ever to get at the root cause of our financial difficulties.

I ask again—and this is a matter of common observation—why was it that for 200 years Britain was able to maintain a favourable balance of trade without any wild deflation? The only answer to that is that in the heyday of her imperialistic efforts Britain did build up a tremendous productive capacity, but she found that she could not distribute the total of what she produced with the money that was generated in her enterprise through the productive effort, and she had to send abroad the surplus above what the people could buy with the money they had in their pockets. She maintained this position for 200 years. There was no wild deflation. Why? Because what they were sending out equalled almost exactly the surplus of the production above the money the people had.

Another matter of common observation is reported by Arthur Dunn, an economist, and a lawyer. I have in my hand a book which he put out, called "Arithmetic or Revolution". Mr. Dunn is a noted author and lives in the United States. In this book he has made a complete and detailed analysis of the situation as we now face it, with respect to finance in its relation to our economy. I should like to quote briefly from what he has to say on page 35. This follows what I have been trying to say about trade. He says:

> The science of buying power, when learned, must be utilized in all mechanized countries if the machine age is to yield its possibilities. It must also be applied in the exchange of products between nations, as well as within nations. For foreign trade is mostly an exchange of products of one country for those of other countries. As pieces of paper are used to effect exchanges within countries, so are pieces of paper used to effect exchanges between countries. We term the latter bills of exchange and the former money. The difference between them is that money represents products generally whereas bills of exchange represent only the specific products listed in the bills. The people of every country seek to export the excess unconsumed at home. If they knew better how to distribute among themselves the goods they produce, there would be less surplus for export . . .

And therefore less pressure to get goods that embarrass the economy into the channels of world trade. Then at page 34 I quote Mr. Dunn, as follows:

> George N. Peek, made for President Roosevelt an analysis of our foreign trade from 1895 to 1935. Mr. Peek shows that from 1896 to 1933 we—

He is speaking of the United States.

> —sold to the world goods in the amount of $121 billion (I use round numbers) and had bought $84 billion worth, placing the world in debt to us by over $36 billion. Part of this was paid to us by services (carrying freight and so on), but the balance still owing us up to 1934 was over $22 billion. This sum included war debts for goods shipped by us to our allies, and will undoubtedly never be paid. Also huge amounts due our private citizens are uncertain. So, up to that date, we had actually given away billions of dollars' worth of commodities abroad, for we had received nothing in return except these pieces of paper, that is, promises to pay.

When we analyse Mr. Peek's figures we make an astonishing discovery:

> . . . that it is better to produce and give part away than to reduce production. For 18 years (from July 1, 1896 to June 30, 1914) the amount owing the United States from abroad increased only $1 billion, or an average of $56 million per annum; but from July 1, 1914 to July 1, 1929, the increase was over $21 billion or an average of almost $1½ billion per annum. From 1930 to 1933 there was no increase at all in the principal of foreign debts. In other words, in the years of our greatest national prosperity we produced enormously and gave away, that is, in the sense that they were not paid for, over 26 times as much as in the years of moderately good times.

What is the answer to that? The whole thing can be summed up in this way, that the productive enterprise in the United States in those years failed to distribute sufficient purchasing power in all forms among the people of that country to enable them to buy back the goods they produced; therefore they were in the position of having to send abroad large quantities of their goods in order to keep the remainder within their own country, and they were determined not to receive in payment for those exports of theirs any imports because, if the imports had been brought back in payment for their exports a situation would have been brought about which would still be embarrassing because of lack of purchasing power among the people. Some figures have been obtained from Washington and I quote from the National Bureau of Economic Research Reports, No. 2, pages 242 to 248:

> American industries paid out in 1918 $45,548,000,000 in wages, salaries, dividends, bonuses, pensions, compensations and consumer purchasing power, and at the same time consumer goods were produced to the value of $60,366,000; in other words, there was an excess of production over purchasing power generated and distributed among the people of approximately $15 billion.

If that is so, one would find in the records of the United States for that year an export surplus for favourable balance of trade of approximately $15 billion, or a combination of favourable balance of trade and increase in the national debt amounting to $15 billion. An examination of the records in the United States will reveal exactly that. Their national debt plus their favourable balance of trade for 1918 amounted to approximately $15 billion. That is evidence that there is not sufficient purchasing power, generated and distributed in the process of producing goods and services in any country, to enable the people to buy back those goods and services.

I call attention for a moment to one or two other works that are available to students who wish to follow the question more closely, and I would exhort hon. members to familiarize themselves with these, because it is important to the future of this great country that we know. I refer now to a little booklet called "Banking and Industry" by A. W. Joseph, B.A., B.Sc., A.I.A., of Birmingham, England. This booklet goes into a logical and forceful discussion of the causes underlying the failure of the productive effort to distribute sufficient purchasing power.

Mr. Joseph outlines three causes in particular. The first arises from the way in which we have to finance the production of capital goods. He calls that one the double circuit, meaning that there are certain costs which have to be recovered from the community of people, the consumers, which costs were never put into circulation. This in itself causes a shortage. No one has yet to my knowledge produced an effective rebuttal of Mr. Joseph's argument.

The second cause, which he discusses and demonstrates clearly, is the matter of public saving, which continues to build up an expanding economy of production with a lag in the distribution of purchasing power, that creates a very bad situation periodically, a situation which people in the past have been in the habit of calling "the business cycle." That is the old laissez-faire term for it. Well, it is time we got away from laissez-faire, and established something like a decent organization of the financial structure so that we may prevent these tragic periodical occurrences.

The third cause he deals with is the time lag in the cycles of production. I commend this book to hon. members, and would suggest too, that if they cannot find one handy they go to the banking and commerce committee's report for the session of 1939. It is here in the library. They will find at page 613 the important part of this little pamphlet written by Mr. Joseph, who is a chartered accountant and a student of economics.

I should like at this point, and before I close, to refer hon. members for further evidence regarding the shortage of purchasing power to the American magazine of July, 1946. In an article written by Senator James E. Murray, beginning at page 38—I have it available for hon. members if they wish to see it—I quote the following:

> Congress has enacted—and the President has endorsed—legislation designed to plan for permanent prosperity. Furthermore, any action taken under the law will be taken within the framework of our own free enterprise system and through our existing democratic processes. This new law is a crucial first step toward enduring prosperity, just as the San Francisco charter was a crucial first step toward a world organization for peace. Both need to be implemented.

Then I go over to page 106, where the article continues. I read this part of the act, which is heartening to those of us who understand just what the basic weaknesses are in our financial arrangements:

> The congress hereby declares that it is the continuing policy and responsibility of the federal government . . . to coordinate and utilize all its plans, functions, and resources for the purpose of creating and maintaining . . . conditions under which there will be afforded useful employment opportunities—

Note that; useful employment opportunities, not useless ones.

> —including self employment—

That is, the right to turn in leisure time to things you have wanted to do for so long but have not been able to do.

> —for those willing, able, and seeking work, and to promote maximum employment, production, and purchasing power.

Then he says:

> That, in a mouthful, is the goal. You will note, in the last clause, that congress recognized it is futile to expect everyone to have jobs unless our industries have a full supply of orders and unless all our people have enough money in their pockets to buy all the goods our farms and factories can produce.

I say it is most heartening to realize that some thinking men are coming to see and understand the basic faults in our system of finance. That is heartening, because I believe they will now begin to turn to the remedies, and those remedies ought to be quite obvious to hon. members.

I should like to refer to just one other authority on this point. Professor C. E. Ayers, head of the economics department of the university of Texas, recently published a book which he entitled, "The Divine Right of Capital." In that book he makes an incontrovertible case for what he calls one of the great discoveries of this century. The discovery to which he refers is that the total productive effort in any country operating under the financial system used by Canada, Great Britain, the United States, and in fact most countries of the world, fails to distribute to consumers enough purchasing power to enable them to buy back the goods and services they have produced. This serious defect is the same one discovered and exposed by Major Douglas twenty-six years ago. Professor Ayers does not take credit for discovering the basic fault. He claims that discovering the truth of the chronic shortage defect is what constitutes the greatness of the discovery in these modern times. While one cannot totally agree, perhaps, with the remedies suggested by this professor, at the same time he has correctly divined and has built up an incontrovertible argument for the shortage of purchasing power generated in the productive effort.

I do not wish to weary the house with any further discussion along this line. In closing, let me simply say this. Surely our observations, our common sense, and the words of great economists of this day who have gone into it, ought to be enough to cause us, as the custodians of the safety and security of the Canadian people, to get down to work and discover for ourselves exactly what the defects are that we face in our great process of distributing the tremendous production which the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) showed was possible in this country. If we are to prevent recurring depressions it is necessary that we apply remedies. What those remedies should be I am going to leave for my colleagues, who may follow me in the discussion of this amendment, to deal with. Suffice it to say that it cannot be questioned that the reasons have now been established for the fault or weakness in our financial structure. The sooner we get at remedying that fault, the sooner we get on the right track toward the life abundant, the better we are going to be.

I have just one word in conclusion. I hope the speakers from the Progressive Conservative ranks who will follow will make clear their answers to the questions I have asked, because the position taken by this group on their amendment will be largely guided by what is said, the declarations made, and the vote taken on our own amendment.

Mr. W. GARFIELD CASE (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel I should presume to accept the invitation of the leader of the Social Credit party (Mr. Low) and speak for the Progressive Conservatives in any sense of the word. It will be my endeavour to make my own views clear on what I consider to be the pressing problems facing the Dominion of Canada. As many hon. members know, not so long ago I was in perhaps the same position as the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), who has been quoted as saying he was a Liberal looking for a party. I am sort of ahead of him, because I have found a party. I must say I have been very happy and contented and my association has been extremely congenial. Yet you may notice that I am sitting about as far to the right of my leader as it is possible to sit. I suppose that is in order that escape might be possible and easy.

What I should like to discuss tonight has something to do with the various levels of government. I do not want to introduce or discuss any new system. We hear so much about the new things that might be done, but I should like to discuss a formula which I believe would make the present system work; and I think that is all we need. I have in mind now the municipal governments throughout Canada. As hon. members may know, I have a background of municipal experience, having served my municipality in various capacities, including that of mayor. That brings to mind the problems faced by men charged with the responsibility of administering our affairs, at any level whatever. In that sense I am not going to be too critical. I would rather seek to appreciate, if I could, how those problems might be solved, and offer criticism of a constructive nature.

I might say, however, after listening to the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) and his fear of the removal of controls that, so far as I am concerned, one who expresses the opinion that he is fearful of the removal of controls has lost entirely confidence in his fellow man. I cannot imagine that any great degree of chaos would result in Canada if controls were removed. There are always two parties to a bargain, and surely the great mass of the people can be given credit for using some degree of judgment, and that they would not let prices run rampant. I can understand, of course, that in the matter of rentals there would have to be some controls, since there is not sufficient accommodation to go around. But the attempt to control many of these commodities results in the setting up of black markets, and means whereby people can short-circuit normal procedure, whereby they will pay prices beyond the ceilings. When they do that they are breaking the law; and when people break one law, it creates disrespect for other laws.

As one who believes in free enterprise, it is my view that the government has been over-cautious in its desire to serve the Canadian people by instituting wartime housing and housing enterprises, and by creating priorities whereby those people have the advantage in what otherwise might have been a free market. I believe that, had private enterprise been given an opportunity, not only would it have built better houses, but it would have built more of them, built them in a satisfactory manner and in locations which might have been selected by those who were likely to occupy them.

However I do know that in my own municipality, where we were hard-pressed to find suitable accommodation, we welcomed what the government sought to do. I suppose it is easy enough for me to stand here tonight and be critical of something that has already taken place. In my experience in public life I have never sought to impute improper motives to my fellow man. I prefer to feel that he is acting in good faith. I might even pay some compliments to the C.C.F. socialists, even though I detest the means they seek to employ to attain their end.

My concern today, more than anything else, is the plight of the municipality. From coast to coast in Canada these municipalities are the creatures of the provincial legislatures. They are governed by certain fixed statutes. They must raise their revenues from real property; that is their tax base. All the time, the people residing in these municipalities are demanding expansion of services, services which must be paid for by the real property owners.

There is more than one way to bring about state socialism or even communism in Canada. One method commonly employed is that followed by the C.C.F. socialists when they stand on a public platform and advocate state control and state ownership, or even when they include those principles in an amendment, as they did in their amendment to the amendment to the address in reply.

But the other and more subtle method is to increase the burden of taxation to a point where the ownership of real property ceases to become attractive, and the property owner, the real backbone of the country, will throw in the sponge and ask himself why he should seek to carry on when he is being asked to carry the burden for the whole community.

Canada has long prided herself on being a nation of homes. Her real objective should be that of a nation of home-owners; because I believe that when a man has a stake in his community, or owns property, he is not one who will be easily persuaded to follow socialism, or any other ism which has been tried and has resulted only in regimentation and the loss of personal freedom and liberty.

In support of my reference to the municipalities, I should like to refer to something which His Worship Mayor Lewis is reported to have said while addressing a public meeting in Ottawa. The Ottawa Journal of February 20, 1947, reports His Worship the Mayor in this way:

> There are no spare beds in the hospitals; there are no spare places for persons suffering mental illness. We are keeping people in our county gaol because there is no room for them in the proper mental institutions. Our reformatories are filled and our gaols are filled. There is no place left in all Canada for incurables and for the aged.

Then he went on to say:

> During the war years all eyes were focussed across the ocean, but the time had come to concentrate on affairs at home which were in a serious state. We should not lose sight of our local problems which are more serious and more complicated than appear on the surface. One of the main problems was making ends meet, giving to the people the services they demanded, and yet keeping taxation within reason. By existing laws the city was required to raise each year an amount of money needed to cover its expenditures, and it could not spend more than it could raise. Civic services were increasing rapidly in cost while ways of raising money were decreasing. This was true not only of Ottawa but of every municipality in North America.

I have known His Worship Mayor Lewis for a great many years. For some five years he was president of the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities. To my knowledge, he has been secretary of the Ontario mayors and reeves association since its inception. So I had an opportunity during two years, while I was president of that organization, to learn to appreciate this man as an outstanding municipal authority. Let me quote some figures relative to the city of Ottawa, so that hon. members may know how great this problem really is.

According to the Ottawa Journal of February 20, 1947, reporting the mayor's speech:

> The fire department of Ottawa in 1917 spent $130,700; in 1946 it spent $489,607. Social services in 1917 cost this city $13,029, while in 1946 they cost $70,865. In 1917 playgrounds cost $3,000, and in 1946 $135,031

Then, we come to snow clearance. I know something about that problem. Trains have been travelling late these days. As a matter of fact a lady told me the other day that she boarded a train in one of our northern towns, carrying a child in her arms. When they started out she did not have to pay any fare for the child; but before she reached her destination, a distance of about a hundred miles, they charged her half fare.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Joke, that is.

Mr. CASE: I continue to quote from the Ottawa Journal:

> In 1917 snow removal cost $24,000; in 1946 it cost $337,595. The children's aid society cost $1,400 in 1917; in 1946 it cost $179,000. Hospitals cost $41,000 in 1917; in 1946 they cost $108,000.

Hon. members will note by the morning paper, the Globe and Mail of March 7, that Mayor Saunders is seeking to have the provincial government pass enabling legislation to permit them to levy an amusement tax which the mayor of Toronto hopes will raise $1,000,000 in revenue.

Realizing that there is no chance to expand the municipal tax base, I am going to suggest a method that might be employed and which I believe would help this country immeasurably and would guarantee plenty of employment for many long years to come. We know how the cost of education has increased. I think it is commendable that the province of Ontario has assumed fifty per cent of the cost of education. However this has been done at a time when salaries of teachers are being raised of necessity and therefore the municipal taxpayer has not benefited greatly, although he has not had to pay out what would be a substantial amount.

I have always taken the view that a dollar which is not earned has no value. I believe the only money that has any value is the money that is earned. What I intend to propose is a method which could be used to give effect to that which already exists. July 1, 1938, was an important date in Canadian history. If we were to make comparisons I think it would be about as important as the beginning of confederation in 1867, because it was on that day that we obtained complete control of the Bank of Canada which gave us control over the issuance of currency and domestic credit.

Let me make a comparison. Back in the olden days a dollar had some relation to gold backing and bonds were redeemable in gold. That put the bondholders in a position where they could question the ability of a country to pay off in gold. That was evident at the time of the bankers' crash in the United States in 1932. Since that time there has been no gold clause in our bonds and there have not been the same fluctuations in value. A stability of value is maintained because the people have confidence in the resources of the country, even though they had no confidence in the volume of gold.

What I propose is a new charter for Canada, a means whereby we can employ the credit of the nation to assist the municipalities. It may mean rewriting the constitution, but surely we are capable of coping with the things we have to deal with. As I said, a dollar that is not earned has no value. We pay $35 an ounce for gold, which just about represents the cost of production. Sub-marginal mines cannot make ends meet even at $35 an ounce. The real value of gold is in the neighbourhood of the cost of production.

If, then, we apply that same rule to other physical assets we could employ labour to create durable capital goods and durable capital construction, and I would include those things that are bearing so heavily upon the municipalities today. I would reserve to them and to all levels of government complete autonomy and legal title to property, but I suggest that public buildings of a non-revenue or non-profit making type should be built and financed with currency issued through the Bank of Canada. Every dollar would be a dollar earned because it would employ labour in the construction of buildings of a durable nature. We would be creating an asset for every dollar we spent and we would not create any more public debt.

You may say, "Where are we going to get off at?" Someone may ask whether there will be overbuilding. I am going to suggest that the public buildings constructed should be schools and educational institutions of all kinds. With proper education a child becomes an asset to the nation. I suggest, further, that hospitals should be built. That is the closest I would come to what might be considered revenue producing buildings. Certainly very few hospitals are profit producing. Surely the care of the sick should be a charge upon the nation's resources and not necessarily a charge upon the municipality or any one part of the nation. We need hospitals; we need schools from coast to coast, and we need other educational institutions. We need mental hospitals, because our present hospitals are a disgrace to organized society. These unfortunate people, victims of circumstances over which they have no control, are overcrowded in these hospitals.

This burden is too great for the municipal taxpayer, because there is no method by which that tax base can be expanded. The real property owner can bear no more than he is bearing at the present time. The same principle could be applied to the federal or national field and harbours, national highways, canals and certain types of cargo vessels for the merchant marine could be built. After all, we are an exporting nation and means must be found whereby we can carry our goods to the furthermost parts of the world.

A moment ago I asked a question whether there would be overbuilding or overexpansion, and I am going to suggest means whereby that could be kept in check. I said that I would preserve complete autonomy to all levels of government. Once these buildings are built and equipped with heating and sanitation facilities, I would suggest that the municipality be charged with the responsibility of furnishing them with movable furniture and staffing and maintaining them. There would then be no advantage in a municipality seeking to overbuild, since there would still be continuing charges upon the local taxpayer.

In the matter of social services I would recommend that these be paid for by the federal authorities. Old age pensions, mother's allowances, unemployment insurance on a contributory basis and family allowances should all be a charge upon the federal taxpayer, as at present. I am not advocating lowering the age for old age pensions. I am always fearful of anything which tends to discourage work. I think a man's initiative and ambition should be encouraged, but as far as I am concerned that is a matter for the taxpayer to decide. If he would like to step up the old age pension to $50 a month at age seventy without a means test, then there may be some justification for it. Since the bill will have to be paid by the taxpayer it would become a revolving fund, and since everyone would be entitled to it much of it would come back into the treasury immediately in the form of taxes.

I would also be in favour, not necessarily of lowering the old age pension age, but of instituting a disability pension for anyone twenty-one years of age or over who was incapacitated from providing for himself. Such a pension should be strictly on a means test, and it would not start in at anything like $50 a month. The idea of a disability pension is sound, but it is remarkable what handicapped people can do for themselves when they have an incentive. I have been reading reports recently of cases of handicapped men who have taken employment and given more satisfactory service than those who were not physically handicapped. Such a pension could be granted on a sliding scale, so that the maximum amount would be received by the disabled at the time it was probably needed most.

What shall we do with the present mammoth debt of this nation? I should like to see this nation debt-free. I suppose someone may suggest that I am proposing to take a short-cut. But it is a natural objective to want to be debt-free, and that applies to a nation as well as to the individual. But constantly in all my years of experience I have seen the public debt piled upon debt until now the national debt has reached mammoth proportions. The shadow of socialism lengthens and the dark clouds of communism hang over us. The way to dissipate them is by giving the people that which they are seeking. I do not think we need fear communism or socialism provided that we can satisfy the Canadian people that we recognize our responsibilities. I do not believe that it is necessary to keep on piling up the national debt. We made a great discovery when we found that the nation—and the same thing may be said of practically all nations—now has the right to regulate its own credit and currency. I am not critical of the financing methods employed by the government during the war, because then there was a vast expansion of credit and a limited amount of consumer goods available, and we could not afford to have such a huge volume of spending power constantly pressing against the limited production; we would not have been able to hold price ceilings at all. In war time it would certainly seem proper that the government should borrow from the people and take away from the market some of the purchasing power. That also has the advantage of accumulating savings for the individual to be used for future expenditure. Furthermore, after the terrible conflict through which we have just passed, I think it is only fitting that posterity should make some contribution for the right to their freedom which has been won in that war. But, as the bonds mature, I think they should be retired by some method, perhaps such as I suggest for a public building programme. If it were possible to separate capital from current expenditure, certainly the capital cost should be retired. But of course we must keep faith with the bondholders. Nothing drastic should be done in seeking to remove this mountain of national debt, but no one could reasonably argue that he has a perpetual claim on the resources of this nation. Are we to develop into a nation of coupon-clippers? Rather should we not get back to where capital will be seeking investment instead of investment seeking capital.

Today industry needs capital and the farmers need capital, but we are constantly driving them to do business through sources which formerly they did not have to employ and we are denying them the advantages which they would otherwise enjoy.

It has been said that we should use tariffs as an instrument to promote trade, and with that I agree. We cannot afford to let Canada become the dumping ground for any other part of the world. But surely our trade commissioners can seek to bargain for us in other lands to which we can ship our goods and where Canada's name may become even better known than it now is. We must encourage increased production. Statisticians today would have us believe that there has not been in six thousand years overproduction throughout the world. In the dark lean years which most of us recollect only too well, while we had an abundance of foodstuffs, there were millions of people in dire need and thousands starving in other parts of the world, and so it would seem that the challenge to us is to discover some means whereby we can distribute the fruits of the earth to the farthermost corners of the globe. As a producing nation, we can indeed afford to do everything we possibly can to stimulate production and increase trade.

A word on immigration. I do not doubt for one moment that people in distant lands have heard of this great country of ours and would be only too pleased to come here if they felt they would not be burdened down with taxation, and thousands of our own would return to their native land. But, as it is today, taxation has become a threat to our democratic way of life. In glancing over the estimates the other day, I found that this government have not yet applied the yardstick of economy to its expenditures but rather are on a spending spree, in a full-out effort to create the impression that they are the leaders of the nation and that the provinces will have to fall in line. I am always concerned when it comes to the relations of the dominion government with the provincial governments. Many people have no doubt been frightened by the thought of multiple or dual taxation. But for the life of me I cannot see how the same amount of money will not have to be raised for the needs of the nation, whether it is raised by the dominion government or by the provinces, or by them both together. The great danger is that in granting subsidies you are giving the provincial governments money to spend which they were not responsible to their own people for raising. The theory laid down by Sir Wilfrid Laurier is sound, that it is not good practice for one administrative body to spend money that it is not responsible for raising. It seems to me that we may be embarking on a rather dangerous practice. There may be a great deal more money spent in the provinces than they would otherwise spend if they had to tax their people to obtain it.

I appeal to the house, to the leaders of public policy, to give consideration to the plan I have sought to outline in a limited and sketchy way. I believe it has merit. I am not as ruthless as a socialist labour leader in Britain who said, "work or starve." The opportunity to work will be here and, since working means living, the incentive to work will certainly be there. I am not in favour of dividends being passed out indiscriminately to take from our people the desire to work. I do not know how those who are working steadfastly and earning money upon which the government depends for its taxes are to meet this situation, considering that we have approximately a debt of $17 billion on which we have to raise $480 million a year to pay interest alone. The costs of government are great; the costs of administration are greater still. That is the place where I believe we can exercise a degree of economy. This government can well afford to go carefully over their departments and find out how much they are overstaffed. I know the tendency is to find work for all for whom it is possible to find work. If one may judge by the number of vacancies which have been advertised, copies of which advertisements come to my desk, it would seem that there is still plenty of room in the civil service for others to be employed.

It would appear that this nation will bear the heavy cost of social services, soldiers' pensions and things which we are definitely obligated to provide. The soldiers who fought and won and guaranteed to us this freedom will now have to bear their share of the terrific tax burden. Therefore I again offer the suggestion by which we can make our real natural resources work for us. A tree in the forest has no value of itself. It is an asset in the form of a tree, but it is of no more value to Canada than the crown jewels unless it is processed, which means labour applied to it to turn it to useful articles or to use it in the construction industry where we shall have an asset to show for it.

What about the future of gold? I would say that the future of gold would be more secure than ever before. I believe we should seek to do everything we can to encourage our gold mines, particularly our sub-marginal ones, to take this precious metal from the rocks and build up a strong gold reserve with which we could adjust international balances, because gold is a durable article. It does not take a great deal of space. It is said that a 14-inch gold cube weighs a ton and is worth over a million dollars. Therefore it is a very handy medium which can be employed to balance exchange.

I am not critical, but there is something I should like to mention. I believe we made a fatal error in putting our exchange on a par with United States dollars. I often wonder where the pressure came from, because we enjoyed a preferred position. Citizens of the United States who came here found that their dollar was worth $1.10, while the Canadian dollar was worth only ninety cents in their country. Just consider the constant drain which is taking place at the present time; our reserves of United States dollars are constantly shrinking. If we compare wheat at $1 a bushel with an ounce of gold at $38.50 we find that an ounce of gold will purchase 38½ bushels of wheat. With gold at $35 an ounce it would purchase only 35 bushels of wheat. Hon. members can therefore understand the advantage we had compared with our United States neighbours in the export of grain, which we grow for export.

Since Macdonald and Laurier—and with all due respect to the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King)—we have never had a man who has earned his place in history by introducing a great national policy. The government has been carried on, on the administrative level. We have had social services and other things as a result of the pressure of public opinion, but where is the great national policy of those who pioneered and gave stability and a democratic form to the government of this country? You cannot build prosperity on the wreck of humanity, and our much-vaunted freedom is nothing but an empty farce if our people do not enjoy some sense of economic security. It is up to this level of government to provide the leadership, to write a new charter, to rewrite the constitution, to invite all our people to join in a cooperative effort to make this a land of promise.

Three or four years ago, during the dark days of the war, I heard the Prime Minister refer to a new heaven and a new earth. We who are in public office today are the ones who are charged with the responsibility of making Canada that land of promise, a land of which all Canadians can be justly proud.

On motion of Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie the house adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

Monday, March 10, 1947

The house met at three o'clock.

THE PRIME MINISTER

RETURN TO THE HOUSE AFTER ABSENCE THROUGH ILLNESS

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I shall have the unanimous approval of all present in extending to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) congratulations upon his recovery and a most cordial welcome in his return to the house. During his absence we watched with some concern the occasional reports on his progress. While I cannot always speak with the unanimous support of hon. members in the house, I am sure that on this occasion I do so when I say we are glad to see him back. We trust he has fully recovered, and we wish for him only the best of health and strength in the strenuous days ahead.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in what the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) has said I am sure he has the unanimous support of all hon. members. We join with all others in the house in expressing our pleasure at seeing the Prime Minister back, and we express the hope that his good health may long continue.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I represent the views of all those in this group when I join with the other two hon. members who have spoken to welcome the Prime Minister back to the house after his illness, and to say to him we are happy he has weathered the storm and is back looking as well as he does. Let me hope the Prime Minister will not be able to say, as Sir John A. Macdonald once said, "Those leaders of the opposition, when they speak, always do make me sick".

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gracious speeches which have been made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) and the leader of the Social Credit group (Mr. Low). On behalf of the rank and file of the Liberal party I am delighted to welcome the Prime Minister to the house. We were told that he was not well—but he looks so well. Perhaps he just wanted to meditate about public policies. But he had us all worried about him. It is a source of satisfaction now to see him looking so hale and hearty, and especially to see him with his good smile. The Prime Minister, when he smiles, is not at all the same man as when he frowns. I prefer him when he is smiling, and I offer him our very best wishes.

Mr. BROOKS: What group are you speaking for?

Mr. POULIOT: I am speaking for all men of good will, of whom there must be quite a number in this chamber. Of course the Prime Minister may at times leave the house when he feels like it. I can tell him however that the discussions in the house and the atmosphere of it are quite different from what they are when he is outside the country. When he is within the country the only thing we have to report to him is progress.

Many members of parliament have spoken, and all have made good speeches, worthy of their constituencies. They have tried to make things as smooth as possible for the Prime Minister, so that he would have no trouble when he came back. Now he is here with us and again I extend to him our best wishes. If my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, had not spoken so well, I would have extended wishes also on his behalf.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I need scarcely say how deeply grateful I am to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, to the leaders of other parties and to the hon. member for Temiscouata for the very kind remarks they have just made. May I say to the entire membership of the house how deeply I appreciate the kindly manner in which hon. members have received my return to my accustomed seat in this chamber.

I should like also to say how very much I appreciated the kind inquiries and messages which throughout my absence came from hon. members to Laurier House. I assure Your Honour, it has been a matter of deep regret to me to have been unavoidably absent during the past three weeks. I certainly shall do all within my power from now on not to have a repetition of anything of the kind I have recently experienced. May I say that I realize at this moment, perhaps as I never have done before, what it means to be able in health and strength to participate in the proceedings of the House of Commons, and to enjoy the companionship of one's fellow members in parliament.

I do thank hon. members most warmly for the kind welcome which they have just given to me. I shall do my best to be on hand right along, but if I should find it desirable to take things a little easy for a short time I know I may count on the understanding of hon. members of the house.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

MATERIAL ORDERED IN CANADA BY RUSSIA AND HELD IN STORAGE

Mr. FRASER:

1. Is the Canadian government holding in storage; tools, machines, equipment, etc., ordered by the Russian government during the war?

2. If so, (a) where are these machines, equipment, etc., stored; (b) what is the value of this equipment, etc.; (c) has equipment been paid for by the Russian government; (d) does Canada pay the cost of storage; (e) what is the cost to Canada for guards, etc., to protect this equipment; (f) when is Russia taking delivery of this equipment?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. No.

2. Anwered by No. 1.

PENITENTIARIES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Since last session of parliament, what recommendations contained in the Archambault report on prison reform have been put into effect?

2. Has anything been done to adopt the Borstal system, recommended by this report?

3. What other improvements or changes have been made by the department since the appointment of Major-General Gibson?

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. Since the last session of parliament the recommendations contained in the Archambault report on prison reform have received detailed consideration by the commissioner appointed for that purpose, pursuant to section 4A of the Penitentiary Act, 1939. The commissioner's report which was tabled in the house on February 17th, 1947, gives details of the recommendations which have already been put into effect.

2. No. It has not been feasible to apply the Borstal system to the existing penitentiaries under the jurisdiction of the federal government. The royal commissioners, at page 199 of their report, stated: "Your commissioners are of the opinion that any satisfactory adaptation of the Borstal system is impossible in penitentiary institutions, either in its essential features or in its principles."

3. Answered by No. 1.

AMMONIUM NITRATE

Mr. BURTON:

1. What was the cost of producing ammonium nitrate by (1) the Alberta Nitrogen Products, at Calgary; (2) the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co., at Trail; (3) the Welland Chemical Works Ltd., at Welland, during each of the years that these plants were operated by the government?

2. On what market or markets was ammonium nitrate from each of these three plants sold?

3. Is ammonium nitrate now being produced at any of these plants? If so, which of them?

4. What products are now being produced at the Welland plant?

5. To whom and/or on what markets are each of these products being sold and in what quantities?

6. In the sale of each of these plants what steps if any were taken to protect Canadian users of ammonium nitrate or other products from undue increases in prices?

7. What was the retail price of nitrate of soda, ammonium sulphate and cyanamid in 1939?

8. Which, if any, of these plants have been closed down; on what dates, and why?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. The average cost of production per ton during the period 1940-1945 at the following plants was: (1) Alberta Nitrogen Products, $19; (2) Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, $29; (3) Welland Chemical Works Limited, $39.

2. Chiefly in the United States, although relatively small quantities were sold in Canada and other western hemisphere countries.

3. Yes, all of them.

4. Sulphuric acid, dicyanamid and ammonium nitrate fertilizer.

5. These plants are now privately owned and operated and their transactions are not a matter of government record.

6. None, other than wartime prices and trade board powers to regulate distribution and prices.

7. Retail prices are not available. However, the wholesale price per ton, F.O.B. producers' plants or major distributing centres, in 1939 was as follows: Nitrate of soda, $42.50; Ammonium Sulphate, $38.60; Cyanimid, $43.10.

8. None have been closed.

WARTIME HOUSING—HAMILTON AND WENTWORTH COUNTY

Mr. ROSS (Hamilton East):

1. Has the corporation of the city of Hamilton, Ontario, or any member or officer thereof made representation to the Wartime Housing Limited, with respect to purchase by tenants of individual dwellings controlled by Wartime Housing Limited, in the city of Hamilton and county of Wentworth?

2. Has Wartime Housing Limited taken any steps with respect to the sale of above mentioned dwellings?

3. If so, will veterans be given preference in the purchase of such dwellings?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. No.

2. No. However, general policy of the sale of Wartime Housing houses to tenants has been introduced. It is contingent, however, in most cases, on the municipality concerned being prepared to negotiate a new agreement permitting this sale. When this renegotiation is completed and the land surveyed, tenants are given the opportunity of purchasing under conditions outlined hereunder, or, alternatively, they may remain as tenants. The conditions of sale are:

(a) Sale is effected only to tenants.

(b) Minimum down payment of fifteen per cent and monthly minimum payments at the normal rate they now pay in the form of rent. This will include insurance, taxes, interest and capital.

(c) The tenant cannot acquire title of the property for a period of five years. The object of this restriction is to prevent resale and speculation.

(d) On completion of the agreement of sale the normal tax rate of the municipality becomes applicable.

(e) Every endeavour is made to ensure fair appraisal values when houses are sold to tenants.

3. During the war years, houses built by Wartime Housing Limited were tenanted by munitions workers, some of whom were veterans. Since July 1944 these houses were built only for occupancy by veterans. In the cases of houses which have been made available for purchase by the tenant, under circumstances as outlined in Part 2 above, the tenant, be he munitions worker or veteran, is given the opportunity of purchasing or remaining as a tenant.

VULCAN AIR TRAINING SCHOOL, ALBERTA, RAILWAY LINE

Mr. HANSELL:

1. How many miles of railway was built as a spur line between the village of Kirkcaldy, Alberta, and the Vulcan air training school?

2. What was the total cost of this railway, and was this cost borne by the public treasury?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. 5·5 miles.

2. Total cost, $70,041.88. Paid from Royal Canadian Air Force funds.

HOUSING—BROWNSBURG, QUE.

Mr. HEON:

1. How many units were erected by Wartime Housing at Brownsburg, Quebec, on (a) the MacVicar site; (b) the Filion site?

2. What was the cost per unit?

3. Was the land on which these units were erected purchased outright or leased, and what was the cost (a) at MacVicar's; (b) at Filion's?

4. How many units were rented, and what amount in rent was received per unit from date of occupation to date of dismantling?

5. How many units have been dismantled and re-erected at Cote St. Paul, and at what cost per unit, including transport?

6. What was the cost of laying water and sewerage lines at (a) the MacVicar property; (b) the Filion property?

7. How much was paid to the corporation of the village of Brownsburg for taking its water and sewerage lines to the Filion property?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. (a) Fifty housing units were erected on the MacVicar site. (b) Fifty housing units were erected on the Filion site and adjacent area.

2. The unit cost of the houses built on the MacVicar site, including land acquisition, land improvements, services and equipment was $4,083.44.

The unit cost of the houses built on the Filion site, as above, was $3,858,97.

3. All land at Brownsburg was purchased at the following cost:

(a) MacVicar, $7,250; (b) Fillion, $7,458.

4. Forty-four of these houses were dismantled and moved from Brownsburg to Montreal. Rentals collected by Wartime Housing Limited between April 1943 and September 1945, when they were dismantled, amounted to $14,157.97. 8 of these 44 houses were transfered to Defence Industries Limited during the first month of operation and were administered by that organization. Further rental data therefore is not available. See schedule below for detail.

For the other 56 houses at Brownsburg, Wartime Housing Limited collected $61,823.61 in rent. Seventeen of these were transferred to and administered by Defence Industries Limited so further rental data is not available.

5. Forty-four units were dismantled and moved from Brownsburg to Cote St. Paul, Montreal. Separate costs were not maintained on this dismantling and re-erection project as an additional 35 houses were shipped from DeSalaberry, and 49 houses were shipped from Arvida, Quebec.

The average over-all cost of dismantling, moving and re-erecting on cement foundations with full excavation was $3,927.11 per unit.

6. (a) $28,048.17; (b) $12,705.09.

7. No amount was paid to the village of Brownsburg in respect of any capital expenditure involved in the installation of water and sewerage lines to Wartime Housing Limited projects. Water and sewer rates, however, have been collected by Wartime Housing Limited and turned over to the municipality as, and when, collected from the tenants.

WHEAT AGREEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. COYLE:

1. What individual countries, other than the United Kingdom, have approached Canada since January, 1946, with a view to negotiating wheat agreements of one year or longer in duration?
2. With what individual countries are negotiations still proceeding?
3. With what countries were wheat export agreements arranged?
4. What were the reasons for failure to reach agreements with other countries?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. It is not considered appropriate to disclose approaches which other countries have made to Canada looking toward obtaining supplies of wheat, either through long-term contracts or on the basis of shorter term agreements.

2. None.

3. There are no long-term agreements similar to that of the United Kingdom but a short-term arrangement was made with the Netherlands and Belgium.

4. See answer to No. 1.

GOLD RESERVES

Mr. CASE:

1. What was the total amount of gold in ounces exported from Canada during the calendar year 1946?
2. What was the total amount of gold in ounces imported into Canada during the calendar year 1946?
3. What was the total value of gold reserves held in Canada as of December 31, 1946?
4. What was the total value of bank notes in circulation in Canada as of December 31, 1946?
5. Are gold reserves held by the chartered banks in Canada, and if so, what was the total amount of of December 31, 1946?
6. Is any gold sold to foreign countries, and held in Canada, and if so, what was the amount as of December 31, 1946?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. The total amount of gold coin and bullion exported from Canada during the calendar year 1946 was 9,831,435 fine ounces. (As all exports are included, the figure given does not necessarily reflect exports of Canadian-owned gold.)

2. The total amount of gold coin and bullion imported into Canada during the calendar year 1946 was 10,622 fine ounces. (As all imports are included, the figure given does not necessarily reflect imports of gold for the account of Canadians.)

3. This information will be made available in the report of the Foreign Exchange Control Board covering the year 1946 which, under the provisions of Section 39 of the Foreign Exchange Control Act, will be submitted to the Minister of Finance before May 30 and tabled within fourteen days of receipt.

4. The total value of Bank of Canada notes in circulation as of December 31, 1946, was $1,186,201,680.50. The total value of chartered bank notes in circulation as of December 31, 1946, was $21,422,006.

5. Under Section 28 of the Bank of Canada Act each chartered bank has been required to transfer to the Bank of Canada any gold coin or bullion owned and held by it in Canada. Consequently the chartered banks do not hold any gold in Canada apart from small amounts received from their customers and in process of being transferred to the Bank of Canada. The total amount held as of December 31, 1946, was $5.

6. Sales of gold in Canada to foreign countries in 1946 amounted to 313,915 fine ounces, of which the entire amount was held in Canada as of December 31, 1946.

NATURAL AND SYNTHETIC RUBBER

Mr. DROPE:

1. What is the cost laid down in Canadian ports of natural rubber produced in the East Indies, and what would have been the cost (a) six months ago; (b) a year ago?

CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSES IN CANADA

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. How many houses were built in Canada during the first year after the war? What is the breakdown by provinces and municipalities?

2. How many houses were built in Canada during 1945? What is the breakdown by provinces and municipalities?

3. How many houses were built in Canada during 1946? What is the breakdown by provinces and municipalities?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. No estimate has been prepared of the number of dwelling units completed in Canada during the first year after the war i.e. August 15, 1945 to August 15, 1946.

2. A full answer to this part of the question cannot be given. The figure of 47,767 new dwelling units estimated to have been completed during 1945 has as its base an actual count of sample areas throughout Canada. These sample areas consist of some 623 municipalities out of a total of 3,845 or approximately 66 per cent of the total population of incorporated municipalities plus certain unorganized areas of the provinces and the northwest territories and Yukon. The actual count of these sample areas yielded a total of some 33,000 new dwelling units completed during 1945. A detailed breakdown by municipalities of the units completed in the sample areas during 1945 is to be found in table II of "Supplement to Housing Statistics 1945" and table I of "Housing Statistics for the six months ending June 30, 1946." Both documents are published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

3. A complete answer to this part of the question cannot be given either. A recent estimate by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows that 59,846 housing units were completed in the calendar year 1946. This estimate is based upon actual reports from 623 urban municipalities and a representative sample of rural municipalities and unorganized territories. Final results will be available at a later date.

In addition a number of orders in council were passed covering remissions of duty and taxes of a general nature, the amounts of which are not available.

2 and 3. Customs refund claims are paid for various reasons, such as errors on customs invoices in values or quantities; goods lost in transit outside Canada; goods damaged in transit before entry at customs; goods wrongly classified on the customs entry and the incorrect duties and taxes paid; goods sold after importation under conditions rendering them subject to free entry or to a lower rate of duty or exempt from taxes; perfecting sight entries by filing of proper customs invoices; refunds on goods returned as not according to order; sundry appraisals and special rulings, and vary from small amounts such as 58c, 65c and 79c to large sums of money. Answers to these questions would involve the examination of approxmately 75,000 refund claims and it is estimated would require the services of ten or more employes for a period from two to three months.

Mr. BRIDGES:

1. Two draggers were built by the Lunenburg Sea Products with government assistance.

2. As to the total cost of each vessel there is no information in the Department. (The total cost is unknown in view of the fact that a subsidy was paid on the tonnage basis and not on the basis of the cost of the vessel.) The amount of subsidy paid on each vessel was $165 per ton (gross tonnage). The subsidy was paid on the terms and conditions set out in the orders in council, P.C. 7580 of August 26, 1942, as amended by P.C. 3297 of April 22, 1943.

3. The Department has no knowledge of what depreciation allowance was made on each craft as this is a matter between the owner as a tax-payer and the Department of National Revenue. The depreciation allowance, which the owner of the craft is entitled to claim, however, is set forth in the Orders in Council referred to in the answer to question No. 2.

There is also provision that every allowance to which a contractor is fairly entitled shall be included in the progress payments.

In the un-indentured contracts (below $5,000) the same procedure is followed. In the case of hull and machinery repairs to ships, or the building of new small ships, the material to do such work is considered as coming from the contractor's stock, which may be replenished at some later date.

As far as local grown wheat is concerned, the drawback is paid only to mills in the designated area of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and those parts of British Columbia known as the Peace River district and the Creston-Wynndel area. One hangar located at Cayuga was sold to the province of Ontario, together with land and other buildings. services and fencing for $12,000. The province also undertook at its own expense three very intricate land surveys, the cost of which was taken into consideration by the corporation.

One hangar located at Toronto Downsview was sold to DeHavilland Aircraft under special agreement as sale also included two other buildings at an overall price of $150,000. These buildings were sold for use on their original site.

One hangar located at Brantford was sold to Clare Brothers & Company Limited, Preston, Ontario, for $7,500. In this particular case, restoration costs of $1,000 had to be taken into consideration as the hangar was sold for removal from its present site.

Two hangars located at St. Thomas, Ontario, were sold to the County of Elgin together with two other buildings for $3,000. This sales price is low due to the heavy restoration costs involved as the Crown was obligated to remove concrete flooring and aprons and replace with suitable top soil. These hangars were sold for removal from their present locations.

WARTIME PRICES AND TRADE BOARD—PROSECUTIONS, HASTINGS COUNTY, ONTARIO

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough):

1. How many prosecutions by the wartime prices and trade board were instituted in the county of Hastings in each of the years 1945 and 1946?

2. What is the total amount of fines levied in such prosecutions?

3. What is the total amount paid to legal firms and solicitors in connection with such prosecutions (a) in legal fees; (b) in travelling and other expenses?

4. What is the total amount paid to investigators in connection with such cases (a) in salaries; (b) travelling and other expenses?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Instituted in 1945, 40; 1946, 33.

2. Total fines levied in 1945, $355; 1946, $995.

In each instance, part of these totals might be fines upon charges which have been instituted in the calendar year preceding their levy.

3. The Department of Justice taxes the accounts submitted by its agents and forwards to the wartime prices and trade board a certificate showing the amount of such taxation but not distinguishing the portion thereof which might be assignable to fees or to disbursements.

Solicitors' accounts were taxed at a total of: $1,231.98 in 1945; $679.91 in 1946.

Again, these payments may relate in part to prosecutions instituted in the calender year preceding the taxation.

4. The investigators of the wartime prices and trade board stationed in the county of Hastings are employed on a full time basis and are constantly engaged in making surveys and investigations of price infractions. Out of a large number of investigations made only a few cases ever reach the courts. It is impossible therefore to apportion that part of their salaries and travelling expenses which apply to particular cases. However, the following total amounts have been paid to investigators in the county of Hastings:

(a) Salaries, $8,496.46 in 1945; $10,948.80 in 1946.

(b) Travelling expenses, $1,799 42 in 1945; $4,010.85 in 1946.

[Mr. Mayhew.]

3. Did the British government, officially or unofficially ask that the wartime rates be continued?

4. Has the British government announced similar tariff increases on any Canadian goods?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. In 1940, many British preferential rates were temporarily eliminated, or substantially reduced below the rates in effect in 1939, as a wartime measure under the War Exchange Conservation Act. As provided under this Act, these reductions are to expire on the date of the issue of a proclamation under the War Measures Act declaring that a state of war no longer exists or on such earlier date as may be fixed in a proclamation of the Governor in Council. In view of the impending tariff negotiations and the obligation to inform other governments of the base date from which Canada will negotiate, an order in council P.C. 5356 dated December 30, 1946, has been passed providing for the issue of a proclamation on June 30, 1947, terminating the War Exchange Conservation Act, 1940.

4. How are such persons appointed, and to whom are they responsible?

5. What are the names of such persons; where are they located, and what territory is assigned to each?

Mr. McILRAITH:

(a) General state of maintenance and repair, with particular attention paid to condition of joists and supporting posts.

(b) General character of the district and the trend of development.

(c) Favourable or unfavourable influences which may affect the future value. Value and type of houses in the immediate neighbourhood.

Imported parts were placed upon a "laid down cost plus controlled margin" basis by Board Order No. 638, effective June 15, 1946, and later amended by Board Order No. 657, effective September 12, 1946.

Pandit Nehru thereupon proposed a list of names for inclusion in the interim government. These were approved by His Majesty the King and made public on August 24. They included representatives of the congress party, the scheduled castes, the Sikhs, the Christians, the Parsees, and the Moslems, but not of the principal Moslem political party known as the Moslem League. This interim government was sworn in and took office on September 2, 1946. On October 26 it was reorganized to include five members of the Moslem League. No question of non-recognition has arisen, The interim government is recognized by the governments of all other countries, including the government of Canada.

INDIA—CANADIAN AGENTS—DELHI HALL

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Is the government aware that the new so-called provisional government constitutional meeting at Delhi, India, was held without the Moslems being represented?

2. Has the government any information about the Delhi hall in which they met, or if the portraits there of the great rulers for the past hundred years were removed before the meeting?

3. Has the government any immigration, commercial or other agents in India? If so, how many; at what cost and where are they located?

Mr. ST. LAURENT:

1. The government is not aware of any so-called provisional government constitutional meeting at Delhi, India.

A constituent assembly commenced its meetings on December 9, 1946. It is composed of members elected by the legislative assemblies of the Indian provinces, and is charged with the duty of drawing up a constitution for India. For the purpose of electing representatives to the constituent assembly, each legislative assembly was divided into three sections, composed respectively of Moslem representatives, Sikh representatives and representatives of all other communities. Each of these sections in each assembly elected its own representatives to the constituent assembly, thus enabling all the principal Indian communities to be represented.

The representatives who belong to the principal Moslem political organization, the Moslem League, have not, up to the present, exercised their right to attend the meetings of the constituent assembly.

2. No information.

3. The government has no immigration agents in India.

In so far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned, we do maintain a trade commissioner office in Bombay, India. The total expenditure for the fiscal year 1945-46 was $17,998.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—BUILDING OPERATING EXPENSE

Mr. FRASER:

What items are covered by "Building operating expense $65,729.96" shown in schedule "A," page VA 122, of the public accounts, part two, covering the fiscal year ending March 31, 1946?

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to the fact that the public accounts have been referred to the standing committee on public accounts, and I suggest that quesions relating to public accounts are therefore not in order.

Mr. JACKMAN: The committee has not been set up.

Mr. FRASER: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that does not apply in this case, because the public accounts committee is not sitting and there is nothing before that committee at the present time. This question relates to what happened in 1946, and I do not see why it cannot be answered. It seems strange that we cannot get an answer to question on War Assets transactions.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call attention to the fact that on Tuesday, February 26, on motion of the Minister of Finance, it was ordered by the house that the public accounts and the report of the auditor general for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1946, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts. Therefore these questions are not in order.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion before you rule the question out of order? You have already passed a question by the member for Kindersley (Mr. Jaenicke), in connection with the patent office, which is on all fours with this one.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman knows the rule. I have no choice but to declare this question out of order, since public accounts have been referred to the committee.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—BUILDING ALTERATIONS AND IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. FRASER:

What items are covered by "Building alterations and improvements, $220,417.91" as shown in schedule "A" page VA 122 of the public accounts part two, covering the fiscal year March 31, 1946?

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, my remarks on the public accounts committee apply also to this question.

Mr. FRASER: Why cannot we have an answer? Your ruling, Mr. Speaker, is not in accordance with the ruling you gave last year.

VETERANS ATTENDING UNIVERSITY—PENSIONS AND EDUCATIONAL GRANTS

Mr. FULTON:

1. What formula is followed in calculating the total amount payable by way of pension and educational grant to (a) a single disabled veteran attending university; (b) a married disabled veteran attending university?

2. What is the reason for the adoption of this formula?

Mr. MACKENZIE:

1. The maximum rates of educational allowances payable to pensioners are set forth in the schedule to order in council P.C. 3244 of August 1, 1946, passed under the authority of section 19 of the Veterans Rehabilitation Act.

2. To encourage disabled veterans to take training.

CANADIAN ARMY

Mr. PEARKES:

1. Is the Canadian army still on active service?

2. If not, when did it cease to be?

3. If so, when will it return to its peace-time status?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. The Canadian Army (except the reserve force and the supplementary reserve) is still on active service.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. The date when it will return to peacetime status has not been determined.

LOANS TO VETERANS ATTENDING UNIVERSITY

Mr. MUTCH:

1. How many student veterans in the universities of Canada have been granted loans under the provisions of the order made last session?

2. How many have been refused?

3. What steps have been taken to make university authorities aware of the loan regulations?

4. What are the regulations governing the making of these loans?

5. Have representations been received requesting that these loans be made available to vocational students taking a course of fifteen months or more?

Mr. MACKENZIE:

1. 159.

2. 40.

3. (a) Full information has been communicated to the district supervisors of counselling and training services of the Department of Veterans Affairs who attend each meeting of the student veteran loan board of the university concerned. These officials were instructed, at the time the regulations became effective, to acquaint the university head concerned with the regulations governing loans.

(b) The veterans adviser at universities is in possession of full particulars.

(c) Each member of the advisory committee on university training for veterans, including the university members, was given full particulars.

(d) Copies of the veterans university loans regulations were sent to each university.

4. Order in council P.C. 4061 of October 1, 1946.

5. No.

PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario):

1. As of August 31, 1939; June 30, 1945; and December 31 1946, what was the total of the unmatured direct funded debt of the dominion of Canada?

2. Of this debt, what portion was held (a) by the public, exclusive of the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks; (b) by the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks?

3. As at the same dates, what was the total sum held, in the form of bank deposits, bank notes, and coin, by individuals, corporations, and public bodies in Canada (other than government of Canada, the Bank of Canada, or the chartered banks)?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Unmatured direct funded debt including treasury bills, deposit certificates and refundable portion of income and excess profits taxes:

August 31, 1939, $3,433,079,761.70; June 30, 1945, $15,082,596,797.74; December 31, 1946, $16,811,919,494.05.

2. It is not possible to furnish the answer to this question as the balance sheet of the Bank of Canada does not show separately Dominion and provincial government securities. The return of the assets and liabilities of the chartered banks for August 31, 1939, shows Dominion government direct and guaranteed securities and provincial government direct and guaranteed securities combined. The returns of the assets and liabilities of the chartered banks for June 30, 1945, and December 31, 1946, do not show separately Dominion government direct and guaranteed securities. However, in a publication dated December 31, 1945, issued by the national war finance committee, estimates were published showing amount and estimated ownership of direct funded debt of Canada as at December 31, of each year from 1938 to 1945. The figures given for 1945 were preliminary. Final estimates for that date or estimates for a later date have not yet been published. Mr. HOWE: I spoke about chairs and office furniture on an earlier occasion and explained to the house how difficult it is to prepare lists of that kind. Office furniture is usually declared surplus as incidental to a manufacturing plant, and is usually sold as an appurtenance of the manufacturing plant. With a great deal of effort and expense a partial list of furniture could be prepared, but it would be by no means complete. I suggest that the purpose of the question might be served if parts 1 and 2 were dropped and part 3 made an order for return.

Mr. GRAYDON: I should like to consider the matter before I drop it. Perhaps the minister will allow it to stand.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Question stands.

DEFENCE OF CANADA REGULATIONS—CENSORS OF PRESS PUBLICATIONS

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of letters or memoranda from the chief censors of Publications (press) reporting alleged violations of the Defence of Canada regulations during world war II by members of the Ottawa press gallery, Lt.-Col. George Alexander Drew and Mr. Rene Chaloult.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have to ask the hon. member if he will consent to drop this motion. If there are communications in that regard they would be confidential communications by the censors to the minister responsible for censorship during the war. What happened was that papers were accumulating in many departments in such volume that a committee was set up to determine which could be destroyed and not require room for housing, and which should be preserved. With respect to the censorship papers the decision was that four copies of a complete narrative with exhibits be prepared, one to be deposited with the Department of National Defence, the second with the Department of External Affairs, the third with the Privy Council and the fourth to remain with the records of the directorate. Subsequently instructions were given to the censors by the committee that these records of the directorate of censorship which had been selected for preservation, together with one copy of the completed narrative, excluding exhibits, be placed in sealed containers and handed over to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs for continuing custody. All the remaining records were placed in nine filing cabinets, which were also handed over on February 22, 1946 to the Department of External Affairs with this completed narrative.

I understand the practice in other countries is not to destroy such papers, which may at some later date have an historical value, but that the practice is that for a period of ten years at least they are not disclosed. I have not looked at the narrative nor at the files which were transferred to the Department of External Affairs. I am not in a position to say whether or not there are any memoranda referring to the matter described in the motion, but even if there were they would be in the form of confidential reports by an officer to his minister or information to the minister given for the purpose of having the minister take such action as he would be prepared to assume responsibility for. They are not documents which are usually tabled.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the right hon. gentleman for the explanation which he has given. I gladly comply with his request and I hope that the past will be distant enough in the near future to become history so that we shall know what is in these documents.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES—CARRIAGE OF MAILS

Mr. MENARY:

For a copy of all contracts, or other agreements with Trans-Canada Air Lines for the carriage of air mail.

ATOMIC ENERGY—REPORTS OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES ON CONTROL COMMISSION

Mr. MENARY:

For a copy of all reports made to the government by the Canadian representatives on the atomic control commission.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I would ask the hon. member to allow this to stand. I told him the other day that I intended to make a statement in the form of a report on the atomic energy commission. One had been prepared, but events of the last few days have been such that it is no longer up to date and it will have to be rewritten. I hope that will be done shortly.

Motion stands.

FEDERAL DISTRICT—DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL CAPITAL

Mr. BOUCHER:

For a copy of all reports made to the government, since September 1, 1945, by Mr. Jacques Greber, regarding the development or beautification of the city of Ottawa and adjacent territory.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend asks that preliminary reports by Mr. Greber on the development and improvement of Ottawa be produced. I need only point out that if that were done, speculators would immediately begin to interest themselves in the projects that were set forth, in a manner which might prejudice the whole development later on. I trust that in the circumstances he will not ask for the disclosure at this stage of any of the reports.

Mr. BOUCHER: I do not insist upon such reports as might involve the danger the Prime Minister suggests, but there should be reports covering the general scheme which could very well be tabled without divulging exact locations of interest to speculators.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I mistake not, I did table a report containing Mr. Greber's plans in a general way. However, I will look into the matter further and if there is anything that can be given, not likely to prejudice the scheme, I shall be glad to have it tabled.

Mr. COLDWELL: I suggest it might be well to consider freezing the prices of all properties before these reports are brought down so that speculators would not benefit.

Motion dropped.

Mr. BOUCHER:

For a copy of all letters or other communications dated since January 1, 1945, exchanged between the Prime Minister or any official of his staff, the Minister of Public Works or any official of his department including Mr. Jacques Greber, the Minister of Finance or any official of his department, and the mayor or any official of the cities of Ottawa and Hull on the subject of the national capital beautification and development.

HALIFAX DOCKYARD—LAYOFF OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

Mr. ISNOR:

For a copy of all correspondence from January 15, 1947, to date exchanged between the Minister of National Defence, or officials of that department, and any other party relating to the proposed layoff of civilian employees at the H.M.C. dockyard, Halifax.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

JAPANESE—FISHING LICENCES, B.C. COAST

Mr. REID:

For a copy of all correspondence including telegrams, and other documents addressed to the Minister of Fisheries or any of his officials, from individuals, companies or their representatives, representatives of any organizations, or of provincial governments on behalf of any Japanese with the view of their being granted licences to allow them to engage in the fishing industry on the coastal waters of British Columbia.

Mr. BRIDGES: It will be noted that the motion makes no reference to any date or time. If it is agreeable to the hon. member, I suggest that the time be limited to the period since January 1, 1946, in which event there will be no objection to the motion carrying.

Mr. REID: That is agreeable.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion as amended is carried.

PRINTING BUREAU—PRINTING TRADES WORKERS

Mr. KNOWLES:

For a return showing (a) a copy of all civil service advertisements since January 1, 1944, for printing trades workers for the government printing bureau at Ottawa; (b) the names of all those who have applied for positions at the said bureau and/or entered civil service competitions for the same since January 1, 1944; (c) the number and dates of said competitions held since January 1, 1944, together with the names of applicants rejected and the names of applicants employed by the bureau following each competition, with the weekly wage rate in each case; (d) the number of vacancies in printing trades at the bureau and the number of applicants for positions on file as at January 1, 1944; July 1, 1944; January 1, 1945; July 1, 1945; January 1, 1946; April 1, 1946; July 1, 1946; October 1, 1946; January 1, 1947.

RAILWAY MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. JAENICKE:

For a copy of all contracts with Canadian National Railways, Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and any other railway company for the carrying of His Majesty's mail in Canada?

DOMINION COAL COMPANY—CONTRACT RESPECTING PAYMENT OF LOSSES

Mr. GILLIS:

For a copy of the contract between the federal government and the Dominion Coal Company under which the losses of that company are paid by the federal government.

Mr. HOWE: On examination I find that the agreement with the Dominion Coal Company is covered by a series of orders in council. There is no formal agreement but I shall be glad to table the orders in council.

Motion carried.

WITHDRAWAL OF OCCUPATIONAL FORCES FROM EUROPE

Mr. PEARKES:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada, and the government of Great Britain, or any members or officials thereof relative to the withdrawal of the Canadian occupational forces from Europe.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This motion is in similar terms to that which was made by the hon. member for Nanaimo during the last session. It came up for consideration on April 8. At the time, I felt obliged to point out that correspondence of the kind was, according to long-standing precedent, privileged. I asked the hon. member not to press for it, because it would not be possible to meet his wishes. To the motion as it stands on today's order paper I would have to make a similar reply.

Correspondence between governments if of a secret or confidential nature, is not normally made public unless the consent of all the governments concerned has first been asked and obtained. Apart from this, it is the practice for the governments of the nations of the British commonwealth to communicate with one another freely and frankly on all questions of common concern. Such communications are not in general intended to be made public. To create a precedent under which communications of this character were made public in little more than a year after they were written, might inhibit in future full and frank communications between the governments of nations of the British commonwealth. It is therefore the view of the Canadian government that it would not be in the public interest to table, at the present time, the correspondence between the Canadian and the United Kingdom governments on the withdrawal of Canadian occupational forces from Europe.

Having said this much, I hasten to add that in bringing forward this motion a year ago, the hon. member stated in reply to what I had then said:

If the Prime Minister is unable to produce all the papers, perhaps he could produce sufficient to clear up the matter, or he may be prepared to make a statement with regard to the reasons behind the withdrawal of this force.

To this I replied that I had no doubt the matter would come up when the minister of defence would be dealing with his estimates or at some other appropriate moment; that I knew the minister would be only too ready to make a statement at that time.

I was absent in the United Kingdom when the defence estimates were being discussed in the house and unable, therefore, to say just how far statements made by the minister at the time may have covered the matter to the satisfaction of my hon. friend.

May I say that the request of the hon. member, in asking, if the Prime Minister was unable to produce all the papers, perhaps he could produce sufficient to clear up the matter, or might be prepared to make a statement with regard to the reasons behind the withdrawal of this force, seems to me a wholly reasonable one, and had I been in the house when the defence estimates were before the house a year ago, I would have been prepared to make the statement requested. The government has every reason for desiring that the facts be known and understood.

In the expectation that my hon. friend would be prepared to take the same attitude today as he did a year ago, I have endeavoured to meet his wishes by preparing a statement with regard to the reasons behind the withdrawal of the force. The statement is based on the communications exchanged between our government and the government of the United Kingdom and will, I believe, without creating a precedent which might inhibit in future full and frank communications between the governments of nations of the British commonwealth, meet in full the request for the reasons relative to the withdrawal of the Canadian army occupational forces from Germany.

The question of the provision of Canadian forces for occupational duty in Germany, after the defeat of Germany had been achieved, was one which was given very careful consideration over a considerable period of time. As a matter of fact, the matter was referred to in several telegrams between the governments of the United Kingdom and Canada over a period of a year and a half prior to January, 1945. It was also discussed with Mr. Churchill and the United Kingdom chiefs of staff on the occasion of the Quebec conference in September, 1944. There were further consultations through service channels.

On January 9, 1945, the United Kingdom government was informed that our government had decided to provide, for a period yet to be determined, one army occupational group of approximately 25,000 all ranks for duty within the British zone of occupation in Germany and eleven R.C.A.F. squadrons to be stationed partly in Germany and partly in the United Kingdom.

At the time of sending this word, however, the government of the United Kingdom was informed that there were some over-all considerations of policy which the Canadian government felt should be communicated intergovernmentally.

In this connection I quote the following from the communication sent the British government:

We hold most firmly to the view that, upon the cessation of hostilities with Germany, Canadian forces should be repatriated from the European theatres as quickly as circumstances will permit. A noticeable number of our troops are now in their sixth year of service overseas. A considerable proportion have now served three years abroad. In any event, the average length of overseas service of Canadian forces must be considerably higher than that of the United States forces. Consequently when fighting against Germany has ended there will be a natural and insistent demand here in Canada, as well as amongst our troops abroad, that they should be brought home in the shortest possible time and certainly with no less despatch than that with which American forces will be returned to the United States.

You are well aware that the difficult problem of sea transportation will continue for a considerable time after the defeat of Germany and that the early repatriation of all our forces, no matter how much this will be desired, will not be possible of achievement. Nevertheless, we must say that it would be both unwise on our part, and misleading to you, were we, at this stage, definitely to undertake to furnish occupational forces for the whole period of military control in Germany.

In these circumstances we take the view that our present decision should be reviewed towards the end of the next fiscal year, i.e., prior to 31st March, 1946. By that time much that is now hypothetical should be clearer. We should by then be better able to assess the length of the period of full military control of Germany, the strength of occupational forces which can be provided by our European allies, and the requirements of the Japanese war for manpower and shipping. It is uncertain, moreover, for how long after the fighting ends it will be politically possible to provide Canadian occupation forces in view of the fact that the plans for the control of Germany give the Canadian government no voice in the direction of policy.

It will be noted that this communication was sent in January, 1945—over four months before the war with Germany had ended—and before questions of procedure and representation in the making of treaties of peace had been finally determined.

In December, 1945, the Canadian government, referring to the statement made in January of that year, namely that it would be necessary for us to review before the end of that fiscal year the Canadian commitment to provide one army occupational group of approximately 25,000 and eleven R.C.A.F. squadrons, made representations as follows to the government of the United Kingdom:

The cabinet have now given careful consideration to full reports on the subject submitted by our chiefs of staff. These reports have emphasized the serious administrative problems that are involved in maintaining comparatively small forces at so great a distance from Canada.

On the basis of the shipping estimated as likely to be available, it is now probable that the Canadian army overseas, except for the occupation force and administrative staffs, will have been repatriated to Canada by March or April of next year. Until this movement is completed the occupation force can be maintained at full strength without substantial departure from established repatriation priorities and without encountering serious problems with respect to replacements. After that time, however, the retention in Europe of the whole occupation force would create administrative difficulties out of all proportion to the numbers involved. We would, furthermore, expect that by then some of the European allies should be in a position to make a larger contribution to the forces which will continue to be required in the British zone in Germany.

The government have, therefore, decided that, beginning in April next, the Canadian Army occupation force should be progressively reduced on a schedule which would provide for its withdrawal by stages with the object of completing movements from the continent before the end of next summer and repatriating all Canadian Army personnel now overseas by the autumn of 1946.

Accordingly, the staff have been instructed to proceed with plans for the movement of the occupation force to Canada via the United Kingdom and to work out these arrangements in such a way as to permit of the orderly release of Canadian formations in consultation with United Kingdom military authorities.

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the Prime Minister give us the date on which that last communication was forwarded?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: December, 1945. On January 3, 1946, the Canadian government was requested by the United Kingdom government to reconsider this decision on the ground that the withdrawal of the Canadian forces would inevitably result in the retention of an extra number of forces from the United Kingdom. It was also pointed out that when Canada had withdrawn her forces, the United Kingdom would still have a number of men serving in Germany who would have had as much as five years service.

It was suggested that Canada should keep a Canadian division and elements of the Royal Canadian Air Force in Europe at least until after the spring of 1947.

In his message, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom stated that it was recognized that this suggestion would present considerable difficulties for us but it was well that both governments should not hesitate in making known all aspects of their respective situations.

In reply to his communication of January 3, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was informed that our government would not be able to modify the decisions about the withdrawal of the Canadian occupational forces as previously communicated. It was pointed out that these decisions had been reached by the full cabinet after a close review of the problems involved in maintaining a Canadian force in Germany after March 31, 1946.

It will be recalled that at that time, namely January of last year, the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, the Right Hon. Mr. Gardiner, the Hon. Mr. Martin and officials of the Canadian government were in London attending the inaugural meeting of the United Nations Assembly. The Hon. Mr. Gibson was also in London on other business.

On January 22 a meeting was held between the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and Mr. St. Laurent and his ministerial colleagues at which the question of occupational forces was fully discussed. A verbal report of this meeting was later given to the cabinet.

On February 13, 1946, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was informed that the Canadian government had again reviewed the position of the Canadian contingent in the United Kingdom occupational forces in Germany, having in mind the considerations which were put forward at the meeting between himself, Mr. St. Laurent and other Canadian ministers who were in London, in January; that, in all the circumstances, we could see no alternative to the course of action communicated in our message of December the 8th, 1945, and confirmed in a message of January the 14th, 1946.

In view of this decision, an announcement became urgent.

The following is the text of the public statement as made on February 15, 1946:

The Prime Minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, announced today that the withdrawal from Germany of the Canadian troops in the occupation army would begin early in April and that, with the present shipping forecast, all troops now in Germany should be back in Canada by September or October.

In making the announcement, Mr. King recalled a statement he had made in the House of Commons on April 4 of last year in which he indicated that from time to time, as considerations of safety and security permitted, reductions would be made in the size of the occupation forces.

At the outset, Canadian participation in the occupation of Germany was a natural development from our participation in the military operations in northwest Europe. Unlike the United Kingdom, the United States, the Soviet Union and France, Canada is not one of the occupying powers and is not a member of the allied control commission. The Canadian contingent has consisted only of one division with ancillary troops in the British occupational zone.

Certain of the other European allies which were not in a position to supply contingents at the beginning of the occupation are now becoming increasingly able to share in occupation duties.

Now that the greater part of the Canadian army has been repatriated, the maintenance of a small occupation force thousands of miles from home has become increasingly difficult. Aside from grave difficulties in certain aspects of administration, the overhead required to provide headquarters, services, amenities, etc., for the Canadian force is inevitably quite out of proportion to its size.

As has been previously announced, one squadron of the R.C.A.F. will be withdrawn from the occupational force at the end of March, 1946, and the remaining squadrons will be withdrawn on the 30th June. If satisfactory arrangements can be made, they may be withdrawn prior to that date.

The statement I have made today is, I believe, a true and full presentation of all essential features of this matter, and will, I hope, give to hon. members the information desired.

Mr. PEARKES: I appreciate the full and frank statement the Prime Minister has now given the house on this matter. I shall therefore be pleased to withdraw or to have dropped the motion for papers, which I agree is similar to one I placed on the order paper a year ago, but which was prompted by statements made in the house last week which seemed to be at variance with previous statements.

Mr. GREEN: Not much indication of "kicking out" in that statement.

Motion dropped.

FISHERIES

PRAIRIE PROVINCES—OPERATION OF PRICES SUPPORT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask a question which the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) had intended to ask of the Minister of Fisheries. The hon. member has been called from the chamber for a few moments. In view of the probability of large quantities of fish from the fresh water lakes in Canada spoiling unless action is taken immediately by the dominion government, will the minister make a statement as to the prospects of the creation of a board under the Fisheries Prices Support Act.

Hon. H. F. G. BRIDGES (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in order to review the current situation in the fresh water fish trade to which the hon. member refers, the chief economist of this department is at present making a survey in the prairie provinces. He has been discussing conditions with members of the trade and with government officials in the three prairie provinces, and his inquiry will be completed within another week or ten days, after which he will report his findings to me.

This appraisal of current conditions must not be taken to mean that the fisheries prices support board can be established in the next few weeks, or that if it were established, it would necessarily recommend specific action in this instance. Meanwhile I can make no further comment until I have an appraisal of the current situation respecting the freshwater fish trade in the prairie provinces.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REDUCED FISH PRICES AND INCREASED COST OF GEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries a question of which I have not been able to give him notice. However, he can take this as notice. It arises out of a telegram I received from the united fishermen and allied workers union dealing with the fall in the price of fish and the rise in the cost of the fishing gear which places these fishermen rather in a jam. I should like to ask whether the government is considering placing certain classes of fish under the supervision of the prices support board.

Hon. H. F. G. BRIDGES (Minister of Fisheries): I received no notice of this question. There is nothing to add to what I have said already concerning this. Just before the house met I received a similar wire to that referred to by the hon. member, but I cannot say anything more at the present time.

BACON

PROPORTION OF INCREASED PRICE PAYABLE TO PRIMARY PRODUCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. WHITE (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Agriculture indicate to the house what proportion, if any, of the two-dollar increase for bacon, effective January 13, is being paid to hog producers?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I do not think it would be possible on the spur of the moment, or even after consideration, to give what could be called an exact answer to the question that has been asked. The situation existing at one point in Canada may be quite different from that at another. I would say however that practically all the two-dollar increase has been passed on to the producer. There might be some slight allowance because of increased cost brought about partly by increased wages put upon packing plants during the period just prior to bringing into effect the new two-dollar increase. But practically all the increase has been passed on to the producer.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN PURCHASE OF HOUSES IN STATE OF WASHINGTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Has a request been received by the minister from the city of Vancouver asking the government's assistance in the purchase by the city of some 1,600 complete houses available at Bremerton in the State of Washington? If such a request has been received, is the minister able at this time to state the attitude of the government in the matter?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): The answer to the first question is yes. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are investigating the Bremerton houses. The information we have at the present time is that they are suitable for emergency shelter but not for permanent homes. If that information proves to be correct, the government will qualify these houses for grant under the emergency shelter legislation. That would be perhaps a fifty per cent grant, with a provision that the city would provide the property required, and manage the emergency units.

Unless, however, the information we have is quite wrong, these houses would not qualify for loans as permanent houses. In other words we think they may be suitable for emergency shelter and, if so we would be willing to give all possible assistance to the city to that end, and consider whether we could give a grant to move them to Canada as emergency shelter.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PREMATRICULATION COURSES AT PRINCE ALBERT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the further representations which have been made for the continuance of the Canadian veterans' training school prematriculation course at Prince Albert until the completion of the course in June, has the government given consideration to permitting continuance beyond March 15?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): It has been extended to April 15.

COARSE GRAINS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO PRICES FOR COMING YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. This is now March 10, and we have not had a word from the government with respect to its coarse grains policy. Seeding in western Canada will commence within twenty to thirty days. Can the minister give us any indication as to when we may expect an announcement from the government respecting coarse grains and flax prices for the coming year?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I am hoping we will be able to give it some time during this week.

THE KING'S BIRTHDAY

TO BE CELEBRATED IN CANADA ON JUNE 9

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Some days ago the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lockhart) asked about the date on which the king's birthday would be celebrated in Canada. The reason for the delay in answering his question was the desire to ascertain His Majesty's wishes in the matter. The government had thought that Monday, June 9, would be the best date, and His Majesty is agreeable to that. Therefore the ninth day of June will be fixed for the celebration of the king's birthday in Canada.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LOW—PRESS GALLERY DINNER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. On Saturday night last the gentlemen of the press gallery held their annual dinner in this building. My complaint is not that they did so, and that they had a good time; it is that I was not able to be there. I received an invitation, which I appreciated, and up until the last minute I thought I would be able to attend, but matters arose over which I had no control and I was not able to be there. For this I should blame either the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Minister of Labour, or both. I was not notified that I was to be one of the speakers at the dinner, but I understand that the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) took my place.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And he made a very good job of it.

Mr. LOW: I understand he did a very creditable job.

Mr. MARTIN: He understood social credit.

Mr. LOW: I feel sure that any similarity between the doctrines of social credit and the doctrines expounded by my hon. friend in his excellent address on Saturday night is purely coincidental. I want to thank my hon. friend most earnestly for turning in and doing such a wonderful job. He certainly endeared himself further to the members of this house by that splendid and generous act.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if it is the intention of the government to refer the estimates of the Department of External Affairs to the standing committee on external affairs, as was done before.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No decision has been arrived at as yet. I will probably seek the privilege of appearing before the committee on external affairs, and ascertain what their views may be before having any decision made in that regard.

Mr. GRAYDON: If the decision is to send the estimates to the standing committee, I do hope that Your Honour will see that members of the house are not blocked from asking questions about external affairs as they have been this afternoon in connection with other questions.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Friday, March 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

Mr. PIERRE GAUTHIER (Portneuf) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, a philosophical principle states that the repetition of an act creates a habit. We all rejoice over the Prime Minister's recovery and we are all glad to see him back in his seat in the house, but we are not surprised because he is used to defeating his opponents. We have no doubt that with such good training he will also gain the next victory. It is also fitting that I should congratulate the mover (Mr. MacNaught) and the seconder (Mr. Cournoyer) of the address. That will suffice as far as congratulations are concerned because, in my opinion, praise like precious stones is valuable when scarce.

I take the opportunity offered by eight paragraphs of the speech from the throne to discuss the question of external affairs during the present debate. Canada's position among the other nations, the work of her delegates at the united nations organization and her attitude in dealing with the important problems which are constantly increasing in number, especially in Europe, are all matters whose importance should not escape the notice of Canadians.

The time limit imposed upon me by the rules of the house will barely permit me to touch lightly on the important matter of treaties which have or will be signed; it is fortunate that it be so, because my knowledge of those extremely difficult matters does not enable me to expand on them.

I have no intention of creating any discord, but I cannot refrain from deploring the attitude of those nations which have taken the name of "The Big Four", towards the other nations they condescend to call the smaller nations.

These smaller nations include Belgium, whose people in both world wars were downtrodden and massacred; Australia whose brave soldiers were fighting in Europe and in Africa before and while their own country was being bombed and invaded; Canada, which, in addition to the large establishments of her three services, kept abreast of the industrial production of the Big Four and fed millions of needy persons. In August, 1946, Canada had contributed 325 million dollars to the world's bank; France, with a population of 39 million, contributed 450 million dollars; the United Kingdom, one billion 300 million dollars, and the United States 2 billion 175 million dollars. Russia, the most outspoken of the Big Four, had not made any contribution. In addition, our country was one of the first to subscribe to UNRRA. Is not the term "smaller" nation ridiculous to every Canadian?

In my opinion the first mistake committed following the end of the second world war was the exclusion of smaller nations from the peace conference and from the signing of peace treaties. All the members of the house and the whole country have supported the protests voiced by the Canadian government.

Were we not entitled to more consideration from the United States, France and England after our tremendous contribution to the war which has just ended? Are we to understand that we are farther removed from Europe when it comes to sharing parleys for the restoration of world order, than we are when European countries need our money, our industrial products and our help? The great nations of Europe could well have heeded the advice of our statesmen. During and just after the last war, when this country contributed so generously to the relief of the afflicted and the displaced, those great countries could have been taught that charity begins at home. These would have been counsels of frankness, first, and of disinterestedness.

In paragraph 9 of the Canadian government's statement concerning the peace settlement with Germany, as read in the house on January 30, 1947, we read the following:

> The political and psychological defects of the treaty procedure adopted at Versailles in 1919 have long been recognized.

I would add that the procedure adopted for the signing of a treaty with Germany was not better in the case of the other countries. Jouvenel, in his book entitled "From One War to the Next", very aptly describes the atmosphere of the times. In those days the big four were Wilson, Clemenceau, Lloyd George and Orlando. Today Molotov has replaced Orlando. The cake has been cut and the pieces are being handed out according to the will of this council of world ministers. I would say that the situation is even worse for, instead of a representative of a Latin country (strange is it not that a Latin nation should always get the worst of the bargain), we have the representative of a brand of imperialism which no longer has any regard for others, whose arrogance is boundless and whose lack of frankness is glaring. I am not indulging in any vagary when I talk of Russia and the soviet; I am stating facts and actions that belong to the present and not to the past.

In 1918 Foch had requested that the natural barrier between Germany and France, represented by the Rhine river, be closed. He repeated his request on January 10, 1919, before the opening of the peace conference. His argument, although very simple, was most logical. On the east short of the Rhine, he said, from 64 to 75 million Germans, united by common language, culture and philosophy, may congregate at a moment's notice; while on the western shore, 49 million people only are in a position to oppose them. Heroic Belgium is as much interested in these demands as France herself. What will the Big Four do when France insists on this natural frontier—if its present leaders are as far-sighter as Foch was—when, besides requesting the establishment of this natural frontier, she asks for the Saar? At this moment, she has long been denied this privilege of an essential nature. In an editorial I read yesterday, signed by Edouard Herriot and published in the Standard, it is stated that none of the big four has yet taken a definite stand on the matter. According to Herriot, however, it seems that Great Britain is ready to allot the Saar to France. Belgium, being among the small nations, could undoubtedly not speak with enough authority to be heard that far. In the so-called small countries, are not great men as numerous, if not more so, than elsewhere? Would the friendship of the United States have been secured without the pre-eminent part played by the Prime Minister of Canada?

In section 15 of the Canadian propositions Foch's ideas are apparent, as far as the German ethnical group is concerned. The following excerpt is even more significant:

> The German people have clearly indicated that their experience in the line of autonomous democratic government is not yet sufficient to prevent a centralized state from becoming an instrument of despotism and armed aggression.

May I add that, owing to their peculiar philosophy, based on race superiority, a theory which was imported and implanted by a renegade named Stuart Chamberlain, the Germans will not readily give up their desires, because they are eternal: philosophical ideas do not die; if, at times they seem to disappear, it is only to better readapt themselves. Nazism and fascism are not dead; we have read in the papers about plots discovered very recently in occupied Germany and Austria. And the Italian fascist party comprises already over 300,000 members. The government adds, in the middle of that same paragraph:

> For this reason, the German state should be federal in character and not unitarian. The decentralization of Germany by federalism may become effective and acceptable especially if realized on an economic, as well as on a political basis.

How can the opponents of the Minister of External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) accuse him of being a centralist?

But will the "Big" nations be loathe to consider this suggestion of a small country in which is found, after all, so much foresight, an indication of a profound sense of Europe's economic and political history?

Mr. Speaker, treaties have something else besides defects; some qualities at times become apparent and they can be made to benefit mankind on the distinct condition that they be not neutralized by the egotism of the great powers, by financial intrigues or by any sectarian hatred. The nations which signed the treaty of Versailles may have been well-intentioned, and other results might have been obtained had not economic interests operated at once against the reasonable claims of some nations. Between the two Great Wars, eighteen conflicts have occurred in the world; they were more or less important, and represented, as it were, fixation abscesses for the draining of the war machine. It is true that treaties have not yet been signed, but fighting is still going on in China, in Indonesia and even in Greece.

As in 1919, there is some talk about reparations. Who shall pay and who shall receive? In 1871, France paid $5,000,000,000 to Germany. In 1919, how much did Germany pay to France and why did she not pay? History clearly shows that the vanquished Germans achieved a victory in the economic field over all their erstwhile enemies, who, at that time, for some reason or other, either concluded that Germany was on the brink of bankruptcy or did not wish to strengthen France too rapidly. We would be blind if we did not perceive the fact that at least three imperialisms are facing each other today. I forgot to say, Mr. Speaker, that in 1919 Soviet imperialism was marking time, because the Soviet revolution had not yet been liquidated; White Russia remained a stumbling block until the day when Stalin, who lacked military experience, but had a keen mind, was made head of the Soviet armies, with the result we know. I do not mention French imperialism, which is merely attempting a revival. British imperialism is now undergoing serious difficulties as we were reminded the other night by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) when he mentioned that Great Britain was calling for the help of the United States in Greece. Should this continue, the Socialists will have as a wonderful achievement the liquidation of the Empire.

I believe that the British people would have been well advised to leave Mr. Churchill and Mr. Eden at the head of their government. The United States and Canada have shown better judgment in keeping in power their present leaders. The British Socialist government received a warning from Mr. Churchill at the time it withdrew its forces from Egypt. The British statesman could already then visualize the Soviet's intentions of encroaching upon the Straits and the Middle East.

During the war, American imperialism has progressed by leaps and bounds but in the future it will have to muster all its resources in order to survive against the hard-pressing imperialism of the Soviets. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if they are to have an intelligent and consistent policy, all imperialistic countries that have accepted commitments during the war will have to rely on the protection of their armed forces. I am not a supporter of imperialism but since the world, nowadays, must admit its existence, I feel that democratic imperialism must be strong enough to resist the other kind, which aims at destroying the present regime. The most dangerous brand of imperialism is that which is combined, at the economic level, with ideological imperialism.

At the root of world wars, there is a cause, a special one which everyone knows: petroleum. During the last war and ever since it has ended, the big powers have had this matter in mind. I quote the findings of a report tabled in the United States Senate by a special committee which investigated the petroleum resources of the world. The United States have a production capacity of 37 billion barrels; British and Dutch interests, 17 billion barrels; Soviet interests, almost 6 billion barrels; other nations, small and middlesized, 7·8 billions. Obviously, three of the Big Four control the output of petroleum. If a small nation discovers petroleum underground, the big powers immediately seize this mineral product not directly, by government intervention, but through their financiers who hasten to take over those resources. Even with Roumanian wells under her control, Soviet Russia does not yet equal the production of her two rivals, but she brings great care to the expansion of her possessions. The mineral oil found in the Middle East is a cause of turmoil among the big powers and might bring about war in that area, located partly in Africa and partly in Asia. More than half the petrroleum reserves of the world lie in this distant land which also includes southeastern Russia.

Last year's output in the Middle East reached 365 million barrels. British interests come first, then American and finally French and Dutch. According to newspaper reports, France is claiming new concessions in Irak. Russia, though last to arrive on the scene, has already acquired concessions in northern Iran, thus increasing the considerable output she derives from the Baku fields, which represent 90 per cent of the Soviet Union's petroleum producing resources.

While the great powers are struggling for the possession of the world's petroleum supplies and the establishment of their trade, they will have to settle the fate of Germany and Austria, a country surrounded by Soviet satellites: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia. As everywhere else, the Soviets organize before departing. The Allies seem to have secured free navigation on the Danube, a river crossing those countries and the northeastern part of Austria. Under pretext of reparations payments, machines and raw materials have been taken away and have immediately found their way to Russia. The Potsdam agreements do not list the various German and Austrian firms, although they provide that German property will be divided among the occupying powers. For the Soviets, the Austrian properties operated by Germans during occupation are German and must therefore be removed. The Austrian legislature passed an act to nationalize industries previously seized by the nazis, but the Soviet occupation authorities rendered it inoperative. According to President Karl Remner, economic life in Austria cannot be restored without the petroleum and the mechanized industries of eastern Austria. Furthermore, agricultural production has been reduced by half, in this country, by the nazis, in favour of war industries. Then Yugoslavia demands reparations to the tune of 11 billions from Germany and Austria. This will be an interesting problem to solve if Soviet imperialism forces England and the United States to yield. Perhaps, the Big Four may be in need of advice from the smaller nations in matters of this sort.

Let us revert to imperialism. Reparations from the satellites of the axis have been assessed at one billion dollars; the Soviets alone will be getting $100,000,000, over a seven year period from Italy; $300,000,000 in eight years from Roumania; $200,000,000 in eight years from Hungary; $300,000,000 from Finland. Out of a billion dollars, $100,000,000 are left for the others. As our old classics said: Partibus factis sic locutus est leo.

What are these requests and these demands based on?

Let us cast a glance on the armies of occupation in Europe. The Soviet minister of Foreign Affairs claims that England, France and the United States still have too many soldiers under arms. Here is a table showing the size of the armies of occupation as of October, 1946:

Russia	1,820,000
	750,000	in Germany
	70,000	in Austria
	250,000	in Poland
	750,000	in Hungary

England	455,000
	350,000	in Germany
	15,000	in Austria
	40,000	in Greece
	50,000	in Italy
The United States	381,020
	315,000	in Germany
	15,000	in Austria
	50,000	in Italy
	1,020	in Iceland
France	140,000
	110,000	in Germany
	30,000	in Austria

And the Russian foreign minister, Mr. Molotov, says that the other nations have too many soldiers under arms in occupied countries.

Last year, in the debate on the loan of $1,250,000,000 to Britain, my stand differed from the one I had taken during the war on matters pertaining to billions of dollars. I have not changed my mind as regards the gift, nor about the loans at too low a rate of interest. If I endorsed the last loan, it was because I thought it my duty to support the United Kingdom against an imperialism which is now outstripping it and is becoming a menace for America and the world at large. A man whose opinion is more authoritative than mine, Senator Vandenberg, took the same stand in the United States Senate, during the debate on the American loan of four billion dollars to England. At that time, my apprehension was justified; today, my argument is still stronger.

Let us consider the rise of communism in France since 1922. That year, there were 100,000 communists in that country; in 1936, when the party was dissolved, their number had increased to 1,500,000. In 1945, the number stood at 4,886,000. We must, of course, bear in mind the fact that women now vote, which accounts for a quite considerable increase in the number of communists. At the beginning of 1946, they totalled 5,302,046 and in November of the same year, 5,475,965. That is a geometrical progression. However, France is in Europe; some people may say that it is far away, but France is comparatively near Russia.

Let us come back to our hemisphere in order to consider what is happening in Cuba, a very small country. In 1938, 40,000 communists were to be found there; in 1940, 60,000; in 1946, 150,000, so that within six years communist sympathizers increased by 90,000. As I was saying, that is the situation in a very small country.

I said at the outset that Germany's cravings were eternal; let us make no mistake about it, similar hopes are cherished elsewhere. Czarist ambition had spread Russian power, in 1914, up to a line running from Kolberg, in Pomerania, to Fiume, in Austria-Hungary, city made famous by d'Annunzio. Czarist ambition included European Turkey and the Asiatic shore of the Dardanelles; thus, Russia opened onto the Black sea, which it dominated as well as the Baltic, and reached the Mediterranean. The area included Russia proper, Poland, Finland, the Baltic states and Bessarabia; the Czarist sphere of influence thus spread to Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Albania.

In 1939, Stalin began, where the czars had left off, the expansion of Russia through the partition of Poland and the acquisition of the Baltic states at Yalta and Potsdam. The western advance was pushed to the Elba, in the north, and as far as Trieste in the south. Incidentally, I cannot help criticizing the action of Mr. Bidault who internationalized that city instead of leaving it to the Italians. My belief is that Trieste will become a second Danzig, a new Polish corridor. Perhaps Mr. Bidault was influenced by the Communist rise in France. One more Latin nation is left in the lurch, or, rather, is sacrificed. Trieste is in the main Italian; barely one third of its population is of Yugoslav extraction. Instead of satellite kingdoms, satellite republics have been set up in central and eastern Europe. The czars would have been content with stationing troops in Pomerania. The Russian army now occupies all of eastern Germany. How will it be evicted? Northern Bukowina and eastern Galicia are integral parts of Russia which now controls more than the Czars ever did. In one important respect, the Soviets have, until now, fallen short of the Czarist plan.

Turkey still has her European territory, even larger than at the time of the czars, the Bosphorus and Dardanelles. However, you have no doubt noticed that Russian ministers do not fail to mention the word "justice" every time they speak of the Bosphorus and Dardanelles, since they want an interest in the East. The Soviet are still claiming a part in the control of those straits. When they succeed they will have attained the aim set by the czars. But the Soviets have spheres of influence which place them in a better position than the czars. Their sphere of influence comprises Poland, which has her own government, acting only in conformity with Soviet Russia's policies, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Albania.

In Asia, the Soviet sphere of influence is strongly felt in Manchuria, Korea, China, Outer Mongolia, Azerbaijan and Transjordania. They have taken from Japan the peninsula of Karafuto, and the island of Sakhalin, which possess enormous reserves in lumber and petroleum.

Around Greece, we have the following satellites of Soviet Russia: Albania, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria. We must not forget the port of Dairen, in Manchuria, which Russia took over in order to protect Soviet interests in Northern China.

Are we not justified in having fears for the future of democracy, even if Tim Buck did not exist? I will go further: I am not convinced that we should share the secret of the atomic bomb. The Baruch plan proposes the inspection of uranium deposits; the Soviets have refused to submit to such inspection. According to La Presse of March 6, Mr. Gromyko has expressed, in the security council, Russia's refusal to abandon her veto right even in regard to the control of armaments. This is very significant. Russia refuses to submit her armaments to the inspection of the united nations representatives. Mr. Andrei Gromyko, Russia's delegate, has informed the council as follows:

(1) Russia will not allow the inspectors of the international control body to roam freely throughout her territory;

This is nothing new; such has been the case since 1917.

(2) Russia will not allow an international control body to control her atomic research work;

She has also a source of uranium.

(3) Russia will not renounce her veto right in matters pertaining to atomic energy.

(4) "It will be difficult, if not impossible" for Russia to accept the international control of atomic energy, irrespective of the form which it might take, unless the United States agree to destroy existing atomic bombs.

It is likely that that last paragraph led Walter Lippman to believe that Russia might know the secret of the atomic bomb. I do not hold that view.

Let us see where the quest for uranium is taking place.

While ten nations have endorsed the United Nations' plan for the control of atomic energy, it has been rejected by Russia and Poland. Why? Most undoubtedly because it provides for the inspection by the United Nations of territories behind the iron curtain. A great Canadian soldier, General McNaughton, who, as everyone knows, is not given to inconsiderate statements, has advised Canada and the United States to keep up their production. Czechoslovakia is actively prospecting for uranium. In Saxony, Russian geologists have come across uranium deposits in a discarded lead mine, formerly owned by the Germans. Uranium is to be found in the Urals. India has chlorium, used with uranium. There are uranium deposits in Mexico, Canada and the United States. Argentine has placed an embargo on her uranium. The United States have already invested two billions in the plant that turned out the famous bomb. Russia's stockpile of uranium has increased threefold and Great Britain is spending 200 millions on research.

As a handsome gesture, Russia has put forth the honour system, assuring that every nation would keep its pledge not to use atomic energy in war time. But the Briand-Kellogg pact was based on honour, and we have had war just the same.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish my few remarks,—even though they be but the utterances of a modest member in the parliament of a small nation,—were heard by all the democratic governments of the world. When I say democratic governments, I refer to the true democracies. I said a while ago, that philosophies live forever. If the Big Four are interested in the economic factors, the psychologic and philosophic elements should arrest their attention to an even greater extent. For a certain brand of imperialism, economic warfare is a corollary to ideologic warfare. A country, Turkey has dared to banish the communist party. This gesture has had and will have in the future happy or unhappy consequences according as it will or will not be seconded or copied by the democracies. My opposition to communism does not spring from mere curiosity to follow its developments or to draw attention to my poor person. It springs from the democratic principles in which I have faith and which I would like to see upheld in the world, through far-sightedness, courage, strength and frankness in the various leaders.

I once more take the opportunity of congratulating our government for the practical propositions they put forward in connection with the preparation of peace treaties with Germany and Austria and I thank them on behalf of my constituents, for the wholly Canadian stand taken by the Minister of External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) in our relations with the whole universe.

(Text):

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this is a time-honoured debate on the address to be presented in reply to the speech from the throne and the amendments that have been moved to that address. The speech from the throne is, in fact, a government statement placed in the hands of the governor general to be read to parliament by His Excellency. The present speech refers to some legislation to be introduced at this session, including old age pensions and readjustment of representation in the House of Commons. As to both these measures, I have something to say, but first I should like to tell the house something of my own constituency, as other members in this debate have told the house of theirs.

The people of Yukon depend entirely on the success of mining for their livelihood. Everything centres on mining. People engaged in merchandising, agriculture, railroading, steamboating, trucking, all manner of transportation; professional people such as lawyers, doctors, nurses, dentists, clergymen; printing houses, aviation, hotels, restaurants, entertainment, government liqour stores, civil servants, could not carry on and could not make that country their home if it were not for the mines producing gold, silver, lead and zinc.

Gold in great quantity was first discovered in Yukon on August 17, 1896, over half a century ago and Yukon's mines are still producing millions.

When the news of that great gold find became known, there was a world stampede to Klondike. People went there from all the countries of the globe, from every province in the dominion and from every state in the union. English, Scotch, Irish, French, Italians, Spaniards, Germans, Australians, New Zealanders, Scandinavians, Japanese, Chinese, Koreans and even East Indians came. Thousands made fortunes, brought them out and, for the most part, settled in Canada and the United States. Others failed and came away empty-handed. Many remained to make their homes in that grand north country. It is no overstatement, Mr. Speaker, to say that over $300 million worth of gold has been mined from Yukon, and there are millions now coming out, with more yet to come.

While it is correct to say that in the early days generous grants of money were made by the federal government to Yukon Territory, it is nonetheless a regrettable fact that a large percentage of those amounts was wasted and spent without any beneficial result to the country. Impossibilities were attempted with regard to regulating navigable waters. Roads were built where they could not be used and they had to be abandoned. Eventually capital acquired most of the mines, developed hydro electric power, operating fleets of giant gold dredges and by hydraulic monitors swept down hills rich with gold. That was all placer gold torn from the rocks of the mountains by some upheaval of nature and strewn across the country in nuggets and gold dust, as were strewn the rocks in boulders, gravel and sand.

Recently gold in place in veins has been discovered in Yukon, deposits startling in value. Development is well under way and soon these mines will be producing and adding to the wealth of Canada.

About fifty million dollars' worth of silver and lead had been mined in Yukon when, owing to the low price of those metals, silver mining for a time came to a standstill. Now with better prices, within the past year new Canadian companies have acquired large holdings and are producing ore for shipment. Within a very short time the output should treble what it formerly was.

The dominion government has had a substantial revenue from the gold and silver mines in Yukon. At first a royalty of ten per cent on gross output of gold was collected, then five per cent, now two and a half per cent. Silver and lead mines pay a graduated tax on profit.

No manufacturing is done in Yukon. Everything used is imported—food, clothing, machinery, hardware, most lumber, all coal, gasoline and liquor. On all those commodities the federal government gets a revenue in customs, excise, sales tax, transportation tax, land tax, recording fees and luxury tax. With regard to the luxury tax, the same luxury tax is imposed on a pack strap as on a bit of jewellery. Far from being a luxury, a pack strap is of necessity an instrument of torture, as anyone who has had to use one will agree.

Yukon's greatest need today is for roads from the mines to railhead, roads for development. Without roads there can be no advance. In some districts in Yukon development is at a standstill for lack of roads. Yukon did have an all-weather road from Dawson, the centre of gold mining, to railhead at Whitehorse, built with money provided by the federal government for that purpose. It was built many years ago. It was first traversed by horse-drawn coaches and sleighs, hauling freight and passengers. Then it was put in shape for motor traffic and was used by motor vehicles, tractors, trucks and automobiles. But for some unaccountable reason the federal government, by its commissioners and controllers, so wilfully neglected that road that it cannot now be used, whereas a relatively small annual expenditure would have kept it in condition and so improved it as to make it a first class unpaved road.

Owing to that policy or shameful lack of policy and common sense, Dawson, which is probably the oldest producing placer gold camp in the world, and Mayo, the silver camp, both of which have given and are giving the government substantial revenues, and will continue to do so, are as to transportation in winter, entirely isolated and cut off from the world except for a plane service which can operate only when visibility permits, and which charges freight and express rates that are practically prohibitive.

Let me cite just a few items showing the costs of household commodities which put the cost of living in Yukon sky-high, caused largely by the high cost of transportation on account of the government's neglect of that road to railhead, to which I have just referred. At Dawson gasoline now costs $1.50 a gallon; coal oil, over $1 a gallon; wood fuel—a soft poor quality of spruce—$22 per cord; electricity, twenty-five cents per kilowatt hour, plus government tax. Other necessities of life are proportionately expensive.

The Alaska highway, built through Yukon by the United States, has opened up formerly inaccessible areas. Already deposits of lode and placer gold have been discovered adjacent to it. A steady stream of traffic north and south goes over that road, winter and summer. Unfortunately, it goes nowhere near the old town of Dawson; it is hundreds of miles from that town. But it has certainly put the Yukon town of Whitehorse on the map. It is being kept in good condition by maintenance crews under the management of Canadian army engineers commanded by Brigadier Walsh. But at that, they are under a great handicap in having to use secondhand and worn-out machinery purchased by this government of Canada from the United States; for when the American army moved out and turned control of that highway over to Canada they left very little equipment that was worth having. Stopping-places and filling stations have been built along the road and tourists camps are being built.

I now come to the reference in the speech from the throne to readjustment of representation in the House of Commons. The bill, if enacted, adds the district of Mackenzie in the northwest territories to Yukon as an electoral district, an impossible proposal. It is so impossible and impracticable that one wonders if those sponsoring the bill are really in earnest. If they are, it shows them to be totally lacking in knowledge of conditions in those areas or willing to discard all proprieties.

It may interest the house to know how those affected territories, Yukon and the northwest territories, are now governed. In Yukon they have an elected council with approximately the same powers as the legislature of a province. They can legislate as to property and civil rights; they can vote or they can withhold supply. But the government of the territory is carried on and administered by an appointee of the federal government, who is appointed here in Ottawa.

The council of the northwest territories is not elected. It is composed of an aggregation of civil servants, government employees who are here in Ottawa, thousands of miles away from the people for whom they are legislating. Like Yukon, the northwest territories are governed by an official appointed by the federal government.

In neither instance is the government of those territories responsible to the electors, as is the government of Canada, and as are the legislature in the provinces. The estimates for the coming year show a vote of $155,000 for Yukon which, broken down, is shown to be practically all for salaries and remuneration payable to federal employees. There is not a dollar for the development of the resources of that country, not a dollar for transportation. Yet, handicapped as Yukon is by lack of roads, there are those who would add to the political area of Yukon over 500,000 square miles of wilderness.

Let us see how that wilderness, the district of Mackenzie, fares with its government sitting here in Ottawa. I do not begrudge them what they get; I am glad to see them get it. But surely Yukon ought to have equally fair treatment. The government of the Northwest Territories is to get $3,306,000, of which $1,130,000 is for roads. They are to have a water and sewage system installed at Yellowknife townsite at a cost of $745,000. Whoever heard of a municipal project of that kind being paid for by a federal government? Towns in Yukon have to instal their own water and sewage systems, and the people who use them have to pay for them. But here the federal government makes the town of Yellowknife a present of what is properly a municipal project.

Referring to redistribution, I would predict that before the measure becomes law—

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. I would remind the hon. member that that is a matter which is now before a special committee.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): And with all respect I should like to remind the Acting Speaker that this is a matter referred to in the speech from the throne, where it states:

> You will be invited to consider a measure to provide for the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons.

It is usual to have termination of the debate on the speech from the throne before matters are referred to committees, so that hon. members may not be handicapped in what they have to say. But at this session we have had the extraordinary procedure of referring the matter to a committee before conclusion of the debate on the address in reply. I do not think hon. members should be handicapped because of that unusual procedure. I hope I shall not traverse too far against Your Honour's ruling.

I predict that before the legislation becomes law, in its present atrocious form—and it is in an atrocious form—the people in the Mackenzie district themselves will protest, and will not submit to being so ruthlessly pushed around. I believe they would prefer to remain unrepresented in parliament rather than have to accept representation on the fantastically ridiculous terms proposed. There has scarcely yet been time to hear from them, but I predict we shall.

With its council of lobbyists, civil servants living here in Ottawa engaged in lobbying the government, whose employees they are, the Mackenzie district has not fared so badly. They induce the government to play Santa Claus to the people under their remote control —very remote control, thousands of miles away. Those people are being well cared for. As I said before, I do not begrudge them what they get; on the contrary I am glad they are getting it.

There is another matter to which I would direct the attention of the house, and I do so in view of the statement made in the speech from the throne:

> Progress is being made in overcoming the shortages in building supplies, thereby accelerating the provision of additional housing. Despite all obstacles, the number of housing units completed in 1946 approximated the objective set by the government.

The matter I should like to bring to the attention of the house, the government, the minister and his department is the neglect of veterans who returned to their homes in Yukon after the war which ended two years ago. The terms of the Veterans Land Act apply to Yukon just as they do to the rest of Canada. However, in their wisdom the minister and his staff have not seen fit to apply it to veterans of Yukon. Thus far no veteran has been able, under the act, to purchase land in that territory. Under the various housing measures not one veteran's house has been built in Yukon.

When the Veterans Land Act was before the house at the last session neglect of veterans of Yukon was discussed. Let me quote briefly what was then said by the minister and by myself, and the undertaking which he gave at that time. A question of doubt was expressed as to whether the act applied to Yukon. I read then, and I repeat at this time the wording of section 7 of that act, which states:

> The director may for the purpose of this act
> (a) purchase by agreement, at prices which to him shall seem reasonable, or > (b) in any other manner acquire by consent or agreement from His Majesty in the right of Canada or from any province or municipal authority, or from any person, firm or corporation such lands and buildings situate in any part of Canada and such other property including building materials.—

and so on.

I am sure the house, and the minister administering the act, must know that Yukon is part of Canada. By its wording the act applies explicitly to all parts of Canada.

To remove any doubt in the matter, on August 1, 1946, I moved an amendment by which I would have added a paragraph to the then section 35. The minister then asked me to refrain from pressing my amendment, and said:

> I wonder if the hon. member, after having presented his case clearly and convincingly, would be good enough not to press the amendment, with my assurance that I shall be glad to consult with my colleagues at to what can be done to meet the suggestion he has made.

To this I replied:

> Under the circumstances I hesitate to press the amendment. To my mind, section 7 is broad enough, in that it gives the director the right to purchase land from any person, firm or corporation—and not only the land, but the land and building situate in any part of Canada.

Then said the minister:

> I have not had an opportunity of consulting with my colleagues in regard to the matter. I would urge that the amendment be not now pressed, and I give the assurance that it will be carefully considered.

Accordingly the amendment was not pressed. But I should like to know now what has become of the careful consideration that was to be given to the matter during the recess, a recess which lasted from August to January 30 this year. The minister has had five months for consideration, five months during which, so far as I am aware, no action has been taken to better conditions of veterans in Yukon, notwithstanding the minister's undertaking given to the house.

Lest the minister is under any misapprehension to the effect that land in Yukon is not available for veterans, I can assure him that investigation would disclose that ample land is available for home sites for veterans. There is no shortage of lumber there, and in Dawson there are a number of large, well built and well preserved vacant government buildings which could be dismantled so that the lumber and fittings would be available for building purposes. The speech from the throne stated that the shortage of building material was being overcome. In this way the veterans in Yukon could be housed. I would regret to have to conclude that the reason why nothing has been done for the veterans in Yukon is the lack of interest on the part of the minister, notwithstanding his promised consideration.

I had intended to say something on old age pensions, but there will be ample opportunity when the promised legislation on old age pensions is introduced into the house. Therefore I will defer my remarks until that time.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne contains the promise of legislation which is so long overdue that in my view it should have been presented to the house not later than the day after the speech was read to us in the other place by His Excellency the Governor General. I refer to the matter to which the hon. member who has just taken his seat made reference in his closing remarks —old age pensions. I rise at this time to point out that, instead of the immediate attention it should have been made possible for this house to give to this matter, we have been advised that there will be a delay. Our experience with the capacity of the present government for delaying matters is a sad one and I am afraid that this delay may run into many months. I rise now to protest most strongly and to condemn the government for its delay and to express the hope that it may not last much longer.

The fact is that one can hardly find words adequately to criticize the present government's old age pension policy. To ask our deserving older Canadians, first of all to wait until they are seventy years of age and then if they live that long, to try to exist on a maximum of $25 a month, is shamefully inhuman and utterly callous. When we consider that, in addition to these inadequacies, there is in the Old Age Pensions Act, despite all the protests that have been made against it, a vicious means test; when we realize also that this government has made no provision for medical and hospital care and other things that our older people need, it all adds up to a sorry story of inhumanity and neglect.

To make matters worse, when we reach the point where it becomes necessary for the government to do something we are treated to still further delays. When I refer to reaching a point when something has to be done I have in mind the expiry of the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act which led some of us to hope that this matter would be dealt with before March 31. Instead of that, when I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) about the matter on February 4, as recorded on page 83 of Hansard, he indicated that it was the intention of the government to ask for an extension of the present $25 a month beyond March 31, leaving until a later date the amendments to the act which were forecast in the speech from the throne and which we were told would include all that we now have and something more. But when that will be done we do not know.

A few days later, on February 10, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) confirmed this policy of delay by indicating, as reported on page 258 of Hansard, that the omnibus bill which he is to introduce will make provision for the continuance of the present $25 basis beyond March 31. In explaining the reason for this delay he said that he felt it was impossible to expect the Old Age Pensions Act to be amended before March 31, and he gave as the reason this could not be done the excuse we have heard in this house time and time again, namely, that the matter is the subject of discussion with the provinces.

We contend that this matter has not crept up upon the government unawares; it is indeed of their own creation. Furthermore, I would point out that on June 24 of last year the then Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Claxton) gave the house a clear-cut promise that the Old Age Pensions Act would be amended in that year, no matter how long the session lasted. A few weeks later, on July 5, the Prime Minister gave an indication of the business to be dealt with, and when I noticed that there was no reference to the Old Age Pensions Act I asked if the promise made by the then Minister of National Health and Welfare would be fulfilled. The Prime Minister replied that he would have to take a look at the promise. A week later, on July 12, as recorded on page 3394 of Hansard, he told us that the government had changed its mind in this matter and had decided to let the old age pensions situation be covered by the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, leaving until this session the amendment of the Old Age Pensions Act itself. The excuse was that other business was more pressing.

In September, 1945, during the first session after the last election, I had something to say about this matter. It was shortly after the dominion-provincial conference in August when the government had made it clear to all the country that it was not satisfied with the present old age pension set-up by proposing an increase to $30 a month payable to all over seventy years of age without a means test. I drew attention to the fact that the figures given for that old age pension plan were all based on the year 1948, and I asked a question which apparently was a bit annoying to the government, whether that meant that 1948 was to be the year of the next election. The then Minister of National Health and Welfare asked for the privilege of interrupting me to answer that question immediately, and he gave as his answer the contention that when the figures were worked out it was thought that 1948 would be the first full year after the war. When I countered by asking him when he thought the increased old age pensions would come into effect his reply was the same old story; he said the new rates would come into effect when there was agreement among the provinces and the dominion.

So we have had this story of delay, this waiting for the provinces right across the years. In the meantime the old people of this country have suffered beyond measure because of the small pittance upon which they have been asked to exist. I am sure hon. members will know from their own experience, as I do, of old people who have passed on sooner than they otherwise might have, simply because they could not keep alive on the amount provided by the government. I suggest that even in the comfort of this chamber we should try to face the meaning of these things in the lives of the human beings who are the victims of the government's constant delay. A terrible responsibility rests upon the shoulders of a government that still continues to give such a small pittance to our old people. Their very lives are in its hands. The time has gone for this continual delay and this continual passing of the buck to the provinces; the time has come when we should deal with the matter right here in this house.

We in this group have been making specific suggestions to the government. Since making those proposals we have received comments on them from one end of the country to the other. Our proposal is that the pension should be raised immediately to not less than $50 a month and be payable at the age of 65. We also insist that the means test be abolished; let there be no doubt about that. We urge also that there be added to the pension where necessary a cost of living supplement which would fluctuate with changes in the cost of living, and also an invalidity supplement. We suggest as well that there should be provided medical, dental, optical, and hospital care for our old people, and further, that the time has come when this kind of provision should be paid for entirely by the federal government.

Not only have we been getting support on our stand from all over the country, but I was most interested a few weeks ago in the remarks made by a distinguished Canadian when he said that he did not know what attitude the Conservative party would take on this question but that it had been drawn to his attention that the C.C.F. suggested raising the ante to $50 a month and having the pension payable at the age of sixty-five. This distinguished gentleman, after discussing in the course of his speech the estimated cost of various pension plans, went on to say that a large amount of money would be required to pay old age pensions; but "I, for one," said he, "would hate to think that when I reach the age of sixty-five I should have anything less than $50 a month to live on." He went on to say that he liked much better the sound of ten times that amount and he called upon his colleagues—he was speaking in the so-called other place—to face seriously up to this question of old age pensions, which he insisted could not be brushed aside. These remarks, Mr. Speaker, were not made out on the hustings, nor were they made by someone concerned about getting votes at the next election. They were made by the government leader in the senate. And so, Mr. Speaker, with support like that from the Hon. Wishart Robertson, as well as the kind of support indicated from all over the country, making it very clear that the people of Canada really want to do the right thing by our old people, I rise today to urge the government to put an end to this policy of delay and bring this matter before the house at an early day. There is no need at all to insist on covering the old age pension question in the omnibus bill. All that would mean is that the $25 a month could stay in effect for another year. I call upon the government to bring in its amendment to the Old Age Pensions Act on Wednesday or Thursday of this week just as soon as this debate is ended and let the house have a chance to express its views on the matter, when I am satisfied that members from all parts of Canada, knowing as they do the views of their constituents back home, will support the government in any move it makes, provided that it has in it some touch of generosity, so long overdue.

It is usually the practice of the government, in rising to reply to an appeal such as this, to make a boastful speech about what it has done for our old people and with regard to social security generally. During the last few days I have been making a study of old age pension plans and related social security measures in a number of other countries just to see where Canada fits in. The countries whose plans I have studied are nine in number: the United States, the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia, France, Czechoslovakia, Sweden, Denmark, and the Soviet Union, and I wish to draw the attention of the government and the house to Canada's position in relation to these other nine countries with respect to various aspects of old age pension plans.

First, let us consider the age. I find that one of these nine countries, Sweden, does not pay its old age pension until the age of sixty-seven, but even that is three years younger than the age at which we pay it in Canada. All the others of these nine countries I have named pay the old age pension at the age of sixty-five or sixty, and in some cases even younger. Only Canada still insists upon her old people waiting until they are three score and ten.

I turn now to the means test. I find that New Zealand has two plans. One is an old age benefit which is subject to a means test, and the other is a universal superannuation, which, has no means test whatsoever. In the United States they have also two plans. As a matter of fact there are more than that, because the plans vary from state to state, but in the main the provision made by the federal government in the United States consists of two plans. There is old age assistance, something like the plan in New Zealand, which is contingent upon a means test, but there is also old age and survivor's insurance without a means test. The United Kingdom, France, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Sweden, and the Soviet Union, have no means test whatsoever. Only Canada, of all these countries, maintains the vicious kind of humiliating means test that we inflict upon our old people.

I hold in my hand a copy of the form that is sent out to old age pensioners in my province once a year, asking for detailed information of all kinds in reply to twenty-three questions that appear on this form, apart from all the sub-questions. The new income tax form is child's play compared with this document. At the top in red ink appears this statement: "Every question on this form must be answered. Leave no blanks. When completed and verified by statutory declaration mail to—" and the mailing address is given. Underneath that address there is this statement, in red ink and underlined: "Your pension will be suspended if this form is not returned properly completed."

Mr. McCANN: Who asks for that information?

Mr. KNOWLES: The Manitoba old age and blind persons' pensions board, under the means test provisions laid down in the federal act. The minister must not try to imply that this government is not responsible for it, for the responsibility for the means test lies right here in Ottawa. The way to get rid of this kind of thing is for this government to abolish the means test entirely right across Canada.

Furthermore, as I have looked over the pension plans of these other countries I have named I find that there are invalidity supplements, or sickness benefits, or both, provided in all nine countries—all but ours. Only Canada restricts its aged people to the so-called pension, and nothing else. In four countries, New Zealand, France, Sweden, and Denmark, cost of living supplements are provided. And so, Mr. Speaker, the things that we of the C.C.F. are advocating are not new. As a matter of fact I find, for example, that invalidity benefits were provided by as backward a country as Germany even before we had the old age pension, which suggests that there is no room for boastfulness on the part of this government. There are also personal supplements, supplements for children, for housing, benefits for the blind and for orphans, for widows, for miners, for occupational diseases, and so on. I find that in all these other countries their pension plans are integrated into a total plan of social security, and the effect of it is that it is a pension in the full sense of the word. Only in this country is it still a matter of charity and disgrace.

Mr. JACKMAN: Are these plans contributory?

Mr. KNOWLES: They vary; some of them are; some of them are not. The amounts paid vary considerably as well. There are amounts of money as low as ours but with additional benefits. On the other hand, the average in the state of Washington is $48.11 a month.

Mr. JACKMAN: Contributory to the extent of $48?

Mr. KNOWLES: The sum of $48.11 is the average amount of the pension that the pensioners receive in the state of Washington.

Mr. JACKMAN: Does the hon. member know how much is contributed?

Mr. KNOWLES: If my hon. friend would like the material I have a great deal of it and should be glad to give it to him and let him study it.

Mr. JACKMAN: I am very much interested in the subject.

Mr. KNOWLES: I shall be glad to lend this material to my hon. friend so that he can study it and support our proposal, as I am sure he will.

What does it all add up to? Simply this, are we in Canada not prepared to organize the work and the production which is carried on by the working portion of our population so that we can provide retirement in decency and dignity, for those who have done their day's work? I believe we are.

During the war, more particularly during the last full year of the war, we had three-quarters of a million men and women out of productive employment in this country. They were in the armed forces doing a particular job, but they were not producing goods and services, and yet the rest of the people who were working were able to provide for that three-quarters of a million all their food and clothing, medical, dental and personal supplies, and, in addition, cash in the form of pay and allowances totalling $985,270,670. In the face of that, I suggest that the government should not tell us that the $560 million which it will cost to pay $50 a month at age sixty-five is prohibitive. If we can take that many people out of production and provide them with the necessities of the job that they were doing in time of war, I submit that we can take fewer people out of production—only 190,000 are being paid pensions today, but the number would be greater if we abolished the means test, although considerably smaller than the first number I mentioned—and provide for their needs quite easily. The cost would be considerably less than what we spent to maintain our armed forces. We can do it, and in the name of humanity we must.

I now wish to deal with another subject. Like the previous one, this is a matter on which my voice has been heard in this chamber before, and it will be heard repeatedly until we get somewhere with it. I refer to the gross injustice perpetrated upon the employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company who were out on strike in 1919. I have told the story fairly often so that I need only summarize it briefly.

At the time of the 1919 strike the pension plan then in effect was a non-contributory one. Those who oppose me in this matter seem to like to point that out. I have pointed it out since the first time I raised the matter in the house. It was non-contributory, but evidence is conclusive that down through the years the men were told, particularly every time there was any discussion on wages, to remember that when they were working for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company they were working not just for the wages they received but also for the pension they would have at the end of their days of labour. As a result of this, the men were led to believe that they had a definite equity which was being built up through the years. However, when the men went back after the strike in 1919 they discovered that the company took the view that that strike had been a break in service, and therefore unilateral and arbitrary action was taken by the company in saying that the men who were over forty years of age could not enjoy their pension rights at all, and the men who were under forty, though they were permitted to re-enter the company's pension plan, were denied all the rights they had earned up until 1919. At that time about five hundred employees were affected to the extent of 100 per cent. That is, there were about five hundred who were over forty years of age and who therefore lost all their pension rights. There were another 2,200 or so who were under forty. These 2,200 were permitted to enter into the pension plan again, but they lost the rights they had earned prior to 1919.

It was a long story from that time down through the years. I refer to the efforts of the men to have this wrong righted. Finally, in 1937 a new pension plan came into effect on a contributory basis. The clause that had been used against the men in 1919 was kept in the new plan and it is still in effect. I will not discuss that, since it comes up under another matter, namely, Bill No. 24 which I have introduced and which I hope will be passed later in this session. But despite the efforts made by the representatives of the men at the time the new plan was brought into effect, the company still stood adamant in its refusal to reinstate the rights of men who were out in 1919. I first raised the matter in the house in 1944, and have had a good deal to say about it since that time.

In 1945 the government finally met us part way by appointing Mr. H. S. Johnstone of the Department of Labour as an investigator. The purpose of Mr. Johnstone's investigation was to determine whether or not the government should establish a royal commission to go into this matter. Mr. Johnstone made a thorough study and an exhaustive report, which was presented to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) on December 7, 1945. After some months of pretty hard pulling on our part, we had this report tabled in August, 1946. The report is an exhaustive one. Mr. Johnstone saw all the people concerned on both sides of the dispute and also saw people who were not involved in this dispute, but who had been involved in similar problems in 1919, such as the Canadian National Railways, the city of Winnipeg and other employers who reinstated the pension rights of their employees long ago.

After making a full study of the question, and bearing in mind the purpose of his appointment by the Minister of Labour, Mr. Johnstone made a definite recommendation in these words, found on page 17 of his report:

> It is the opinion of the undersigned that the employees have established strong claims for consideration. The nature and extent for adjustments, if any, cannot be determined except by a more exhaustive analysis than was possible, or even contemplated, in this preliminary investigation. I would therefore recommend that a royal commission be established to examine into the whole question, to determine what if any consideration should be granted, and if so, then to whom and in what manner pension adjustments should be made.

Armed with a recommendation such as that, the unions concerned have pressed for the appointment of a royal commission, and I have supported their representations in the house as strongly as I could. But the Minister of Labour, speaking for the government in this matter, has repeatedly told us that it cannot be done. The last time the Minister of Labour spoke on it was in reply to a question of mine on the orders of the day on February 3, which is recorded on pages 35 and 36 of Hansard. On that occasion he gave three reasons for not proceeding with the recommendation made to him by an officer of his department. His three reasons were these. First of all, he said that he did not believe in spending the other fellow's money. He said that this was money of the C.P.R.; that the plan was non-contributory and that he felt he should not be put in the position of being asked to spend another fellow's money. In the second place, he said that he felt this was the sort of matter which should be fought out between the unions and the company.

Mr. MITCHELL: I did not say "fought out".

Mr. KNOWLES: I am willing to correct the word "fought". I forget the exact word but the minister will admit he said that the matter should be dealt with between the unions and the company and not brought here on the floor of parliament. His third remark was that, in his view, after a study of the matter by the officials of his department or the Department of Justice, a royal commission would serve no useful purpose.

With regard to the first remark, namely that the minister does not like spending other people's money, may I say, first of all, that a great amount of the people's money, money out of public funds, has been given to the C.P.R. I understand that, across the years, cash grants from the federal government to the C.P.R. have amounted to $89,671,000. In my view, therefore, the people of Canada have some interest in how the C.P.R. spends its money, not to mention the fact that it makes all its money out of the people of Canada. But, in addition to that, the whole question as to whether these men have an equity which is theirs, upon which they have a claim, is basic in the entire dispute, and Mr. Johnstone went into that matter fully. This was his summing up, as found at page 15 of his report:

> Any established plan of this nature, whether wholly company-contributory or not, when maintained for a time becomes one of the established working conditions, and together with the actual wage paid they form the remuneration earned by the employee. The employee argument therefore, that by each year of service he is building up deferred earnings in a pension, is one which has considerable weight. To be deprived of these past earnings by reason of absence on strike or absence during a strike, does not seem to be equitable treatment; and all the more so when the decision is made by the party which will thereby save large sums of money as a result of rigid adherence to this rule.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear!

Mr. KNOWLES: Thank you. I submit therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the position taken by the minister is not valid. This money is, in part, money supplied by the people of Canada and definitely is the money of the employees who built up an equity, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has no right to expropriate it arbitrarily and by unilateral action.

As for the minister's suggestion that this matter should be taken up between the unions concerned and the company instead of being brought to the floor of parliament, I have received a number of letters since he made that statement, letters from top-ranking union men in Canada. One of these letters I hold in my hand and it typifies the way in which the men concerned take issue strongly with the minister. Here is a reference to the minister's remarks which I have just quoted:

> Does he not know that the question has been the subject of discussion between the parties themselves? Is he unaware that it has been handled by the men's represenatives up to and including the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Because we did not receive any consideration from the mighty Canadian Pacific Railway, the question is now before the elected members of the dominion parliament to ascertain if the citizens of the dominion, in this instance, cannot receive justice to which they are entitled? God help them! Where else can they look for assistance but to those who in the legislative assembly are elected to see that justice prevails to all citizens of the dominion of Canada, and not only to the privileged classes?

It is because I have received letters like that, because of my contacts with the men—

Mr. MITCHELL: Who signed that?

Mr. KNOWLES: I am sorry; I was going to mention that. It is signed by J. J. Hendrick, vice-president of the brotherhood of railroad trainmen. It is because of support like that, because of what I know to be the feeling of the men themselves that their case should be brought into the high court of parliament, that I have pressed the matter here repeatedly, and I shall continue to do so until justice is done.

The third remark made by the minister was that no useful purpose would be served by appointing a royal commission. That, it seems to me, is a case of passing judgment in advance, which he has no right to do. There has been a definite recommendation from an officer of his department that a royal commission be appointed. There have been repeated expressions of sympathy by the minister, by the Prime Minister and by members on all sides of the house, and it does seem to me that the fair thing for the government to do would be to carry out this recommendation.

If there are difficulties in the way of appointing a royal commission; if some other form of commission, it is felt, should be appointed, I am sure the men would settle for a different name. But certainly they feel that some kind of public inquiry should be held so that the facts of the matter can really be brought out and a finding made. Whether it could be made compulsory by the government is a matter the lawyers can argue about, but certainly if a public commission were to make the kind of finding that would be given if we had an inquiry by an impartial commission, it would have effect in the eyes of the public.

I mention in passing, as has been mentioned in the course of this debate, that at this time when the C.P.R. is asking, along with others, for increases in freight rates, this matter must be set alongside that request—this treatment that the company has given to these men. But I press home the point that right now the responsibility rests upon this government and upon the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister, who has taken an interest in this matter, to see that this commission is set up.

It is true that the government was not the guilty party in the first place; it was the C.P.R., but the men have appealed to the high court of parliament for action. Their unions have asked for a commission, and an impartial investigator has recommended it. I submit, therefore, that the responsibility now rests upon the government and particularly upon the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister to see to it that this recommendation is carried out.

I have here a copy of a well-known book entitled "Industry and Humanity" by W. L. Mackenzie King, and at pages 347 and 348 there are a few observations about protection for people in their old age. This was written in 1918 and, as a matter of fact, it bears upon both the subjects I have been talking about, old age pensions and these friends of mine in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The sentence I wish to read is this:

> If lifelong public service in industry is to receive its fitting reward, years that are denied opportunity of employment should not be subjected to the humiliation of dependence on charity.

I think, Mr. Speaker, of the plight of the old age pensioners generally, and I am thinking just now of the plight of these employees of the C.P.R., men who have given lifelong public service in industry, men who have served the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for thirty, forty and fifty years, and whose only reward in their old age is the humiliation of dependence or charity.

The Prime Minister said in 1918 that this should not be allowed, and I call upon the Prime Minister now to have a royal commission appointed to go into this matter so that justice may yet be won for these men; for I am satisfied that never was a case pleaded in which justice was so clearly on its side. The responsibility for the continued suffering of these men and their families rests quite clearly on the government.

There are two or three minutes left before my time expires and I wish to refer to one other group of elderly people. I have spoken about old age pensioners generally and I have spoken about the men of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I now wish to say a word about the widows of veterans of the first world war. Hon. members who were here in the last parliament will recall the long struggle to get some kind of allowance for widows of non-pensioned veterans of the first world war. It was quite a story, the way these women came here a few years ago, their perseverence, the difficulties they had, but finally their success in having their case considered, to the point that in 1943 they were granted, if in necessitous circumstances, $20 or $25 a month. A year later, in 1944, this amount was raised to the sum of $30.41 a month, which corresponds with the maximum amount payable as a burnt-out pension under the War Veterans Allowance Act. Since that time there has been no appreciable change in the position of these women. The only change of note was made last year when these provisions were made statutory rather than subject to an annual vote. It is still true that the amount is only $30.41 a month, and that the allowance is subject to a rigid means test. Widows of veterans who did not get beyond England in the first world war are not covered at all.

Only a night or two before I left Winnipeg to come here for the opening of the session in January, the last group of people I met before leaving home was an association of these women in Winnipeg. I wish it were possible, Mr. Speaker, to transplant into the comfort of this green chamber, with all the red roses we have around today, the pitiful circumstances of these widows of veterans of the first world war who are trying to exist on the amount that is given to them. I plead for further consideration of their case, for raising the amount to at least $40 a month, letting down the barriers of the means test, providing hospitalization and medical care for them. Not to do these things is an insult to the memory of their husbands who fought in the first world war. One of the things which has bothered me has been the change in the attitude of many hon. members about this matter. Back in the days before anything had been done, there was considerable agitation. Members of all parties were rising in their places and pleading the cause of these women. But somehow or another, since they got their $30.41 a month, there seems to be a general tendency to assume that the problem is settled. I have heard members of the official opposition even congratulate the government and compliment them on what they are doing for these widows. The government does not deserve any compliments at all for asking the widows of veterans of the first world war to live on $30.41 a month. I call upon the government to do something about this matter, and I call upon my fellow members in all parts of the house to support me in this plea. Let me put it in this way: let us make nuisances of ourselves about this matter again, and let us see if we cannot get something done this year.

I see that my time has gone, Mr. Speaker, and I must close. I have confined my remarks to these three groups of people, old age pensioners generally, the retired employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company who have no pension, and the widows of veterans of the first world war. All of them are victims of inhumanity and callousness; they are also victims of other matters that I could discuss, such as housing shortages, price increases, and all of that. But enough for now. Just this I desire to say. These people, and indeed Canadians all across this country, are putting a very simple question to the government these days. The question has to do with that new order about which there was so much talk during the war. The question is a very simple one, but straight to the point: Where is it?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), I do so because I believe that the adoption of the measures contained therein is essential in order that we may achieve those things for which we fought, namely an optimum standard of living for our people, with a maximum degree of personal freedom. Canada's great war effort is still fresh in our minds. But let us not forget that the sacrifices which were made during the war were made not merely for the purpose of defeating Hitler, Mussolini and Hirohito, but in order that we in this country may remain free people.

During the war the people were encouraged by promises regarding a new social order and by the declaration of principles known as the Atlantic charter, under which all people might enjoy security and freedom. But let us constantly keep in mind the fact that victory over the enemy was merely the first objective. The ultimate objective is still to be won. We have often been told that the reason the people put forth such a tremendous effort during the war was that they had the incentive to defeat the enemy; that in peace time that incentive is lacking, and that therefore in peace time they will not be prepared to make the same kind of effort as they were in war time, to reach their peacetime objective.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, under dynamic leadership in Canada it should be possible to arouse enthusiasm to attain that main objective of giving to the people of Canada the highest standard of living that the country can produce or the people may desire. Whilst it may take many years to reach that objective in so far as many countries of the world are concerned, nevertheless it can be reached, I believe, at an early day in Canada, thereby giving leadership by example to the other nations of the world.

And to those people who are so afraid of communism and socialism I would say that the only way to stop their growth in Canada is to make private enterprise work, not merely in the interests of this class or that class, but in the interests of all the people of Canada. However, when I read the speech from the throne I find no sign of the type of leadership that is essential to inspire people with a will and confidence to drive on to an objective. There can be no security for people who are physically incapacitated, when no provision is made for payment of a pension. There can be no security for the aged on a miserable pittance of $30 a month, or less.

I am aware of the fact that the speech from the throne does mention that an amendment will be passed; but recalling what was said by the then Minister of National Health and Welfare at the end of the last session I have grave doubts as to whether that amendment will bring about the changes in the Old Age Pensions Act which we consider essential. I would say there can be no security for people in the lower income brackets while the government confiscates a large part of their income. There can be no sense of security for workers in this country when they are continually being warned of the danger of approaching depression. How can we expect industry to go full steam ahead when they have no assurance regarding future markets?

As I said, there is nothing in the speech from the throne to inspire people with confidence regarding the future. Again I would remind the house of the warning that was issued to the country by Mr. Graham Towers in his report of 1946. I put it on record last year, but I make no apology for placing it on record again at this time, because it is a warning that should be kept constantly before the people of Canada. I refer to page 9, where I find this:

> Clearly it is the first two items in the expenditure table, comprising total government outlay, which represented the main driving force behind the very high level of activity which was attained during the war period. Canada's problem now is to expand the other types of expenditure, and particularly domestic private investment and domestic consumption, in order that there will be compensating stimulus as government outlays decline to their post-war level.

And on page 10:

> Looking to the future, however, there is no reason for complacency. Most of our real problems of post-war adjustment are still ahead. The backlog of demand will not be large in relation to productive capacity when industry has been fully reconverted and inventories built up to normal levels. When the time lag involved in demobilization is over, government expenditures will fall rapidly. Nor will our foreign lending to finance the purchase of Canadian goods remain indefinitely at the present level. The prevailing optimism on the North American continent is dangerous if it diverts attention from the problems which have to be faced.

Many similar warnings have been issued. I should like to refer briefly to a book which I believe most hon. members have seen. It was written by Mr. W. H. Moore, a former member of the House of Commons, and is entitled, "Grey Days". At page 5, he speaks about a report of a committee of the league of nations, and states:

> That world depression should be brought to an end and never happen again the assembly of the league of nations, October 1937, arranged that a delegation of scientists should study the conditions that bring about depression and report on measures to prevent them. After prolonged study the committee issued its report in two sections, the first one in 1943 and the second one in 1945.
> The final report contains 319 pages from which, at present, I extract but six words. After reciting the conditions that led up to the disastrous decade of the nineteen-thirties, the delegation reported: "That history is repeating itself today."

Then I noticed a press report the other day which quoted Mr. L. B. Pearson, under-secretary of state for external affairs, as warning that, unless Canada is careful and lucky, she may be looking back on 1947 with nostalgic envy.

In view of that type of warning, is it any wonder that the people of Canada are becoming leery as to what the future may hold for them? I do not doubt for one moment that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) will be careful—careful not to commit himself to anything definite. That attitude, however, does not help create confidence or inspire the people with enthusiasm. I think it must be obvious to all who seriously address themselves to this problem, that the great danger in the near future will be a depression on account of lack of purchasing power, or lack of effective demand against those goods which the people desire and can be produced in abundance. To a very large extent it will be a repetition of what we in this country suffered during the thirties. I have in mind especially the period of 1935 to 1939. It will be recalled that during that time we had in the neighbourhood of a million people on relief, industry running at less than fifty per cent of its capacity, and half a million unemployed.

During that time it was the common practice to blame industry for that situation. People said, "Why does industry not have more confidence and expand production, utilizing the unemployed to produce goods that the people so sorely need in this country?" I would say that industry was not to blame for that situation. Industry knew only too well that if they were to expand their production they would merely have an increased amount of production remaining unsold on their hands, unsold because they were already at that time with that limited amount of production having a great deal of difficulty in disposing of their goods.

The hon. member for Peace River explained in his speech the cause of this situation, namely, that owing to certain practices inherent within the capitalist system industry is not able to distribute sufficient purchasing power in the form of salaries, wages and dividends to make it possible for the people to buy their production except in times of abnormal capital goods construction such as exist in war time or in the early development of new countries. In both these last two cases the purchasing power of the people is maintained by going steadily farther into debt.

As a result of that we are faced with one of three alternatives if we desire to maintain the full development of the resources of the country. We have to export our surplus goods and maintain a favourable balance of trade as was done by the industrialized nations in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, or we have to destroy production on a grand scale as was done in 1930, or we have to adopt the only sane plan, of expanding the purchasing power of the people to the point where they can buy the total production of the country.

In the past, industrialized nations have tried to maintain employment by the first two means, by exporting their surplus goods and not bringing back imports in return. As the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, that was the policy of England for 200 years prior to 1914. It was true that England maintained a fairly high degree of employment in that period; it is true that, generally speaking, England was considered to be a prosperous nation, but do not let anyone forget that during that period there was horrible distress and destitution among many classes of people in that country.

That situation came to an end to a very large extent in 1914 when the crisis developed. What had happened was that the countries to which England had been exporting goods had themselves become industrialized and were trying to do the same thing; they were trying to export their products to other countries and a tariff war ensued. That policy must be condemned on the ground that there can be no justification for exporting more than you import when that production is sorely needed by the people of the country.

I would say that under no consideration whatsoever can the destruction of goods be justified.

These policies I think are adopted chiefly because of a false objective, the objective of full employment instead of the democratic objective of an optimum standard of living for the people of the country. If your objective is an optimum standard of living, then by no possible means could you justify exporting more than you import, nor would you dream of destroying goods, nor would you reduce production just because there was inadequate buying power to make it possible for the people to buy it. Therefore, in order to achieve that objective you must expand the purchasing power of the people to the point where they can buy the total production of the country. I should like to quote from a report by Doctor Harold Loeb, who was chairman of the national survey of potential production capacity in the United States in 1935. He was appointed by Mr. Hoover and in his book "Chart of Plenty" under "Conclusions" on page 161, he has this to say:

> It would seem that the simple and obvious way out, that of giving a buying power adequate to procure desired goods and services to the limit of our ability to produce them, might well be tried. It is simple in principle but has not been attempted.

It is in the light of this situation that we moved the amendment which is now before the house. Before proceeding, I should like to read the first two sections to which I intend to direct my remarks: They are:

> Ministers ought to have advised Your Excellency that they would introduce in the present session measures providing for:
>
> A. The return to parliament of complete and effective control of Canada's financial policy.
> B. The use of the national credit to meet at least some of the financial requirements for essential services; and, as a guarantee that this country shall not again be subjected to financial depression, to make available to each and all Canadian citizens a proper portion of purchasing power which shall not first pass through the usual channels of industry, this on a basis calculated to maintain a balance between effective purchasing power in the hands of consumers and the aggregate of the prices of goods available for sale.

We realize that we are still in a transition period and that it is not yet possible to meet all the demands of the Canadian people. However we believe that the standard of living of the people could be greatly increased it we were to remove some of the obstacles in the way of production; if we were to remove some of the heavy taxation and also some of the controls; if were to start and curtail the size of some of the large foreign loans that have been made in the past.

Nevertheless we are rapidly approaching the situation referred to by Mr. Graham Towers in his 1946 report. I would say that we cannot afford to wait until that situation develops because, once a depression comes into being, it is too late. You have then started to destroy the confidence of the people and it would not be an easy thing to revive production in the country.

Therefore we urge that the following steps be taken. We urge the setting up of a competent national monetary authority operating in conjunction with the Bank of Canada and responsible to the people through parliament. This authority should exercise full and effective control over the operation of the monetary system, including the issue and withdrawal of all currency and credit. This authority should be required to maintain a proper accounting of the national economy to ensure (a) that adequate monetary facilities are available to finance all required production, having due regard to a proper balance being maintained as between capital goods and consumer goods production; and (b), that at all times the people possess effective purchasing power equivalent to the total prices of goods available for sale.

It would also be the responsibility of this national monetary authority to finance all government expenditures that could not be met by an equitable system of taxation, and at the same time without increasing the national debt. Keeping in mind the fact that the real objective of the people is an optimum standard of living and that the main obstacle to achieving this objective in the future will be a lack of effective demand, it should be the responsibility of this financial authority to maintain a balance between the total national consumption, including capital depreciation and exports, on the one hand, and the total national production, including capital appreciation and imports, on the other.

Until such time as production has been expanded sufficiently to take care of the desires of the Canadian people and keeping in mind the necessity of giving assistance to distressed countries, our first job should be to guarantee security for the aged and incapacitated and all those people who are unemployable. It is all very well to talk about a new social order, but first of all let us set our own house in order. There is an old saying that charity should begin at home. Surely Canada with a population of only eleven and a half million to twelve million people and an income of around $10,000 million, an average of about $3,500 per family of four, can do better than a mere pittance of $30 a month for her aged people.

We have urged that pensions should be paid at the rate of $50 a month at the age of sixty; that a similar amount should be paid to all people who are incapacitated and unemployable and that no means test shall be applied. We also believe that the war veterans allowance to both veterans and their dependents should be increased to a similar amount.

In order to ensure that the people of Canada would at all times be able to buy the goods that are offered for sale, the price of these goods should be adjusted so that they bear the same relationship to their financial cost as the total national consumption bears to the total national production. For example, if the financial authority upon checking the relationship between demand and supply find that demand was equal to, say only ninety per cent of the supply, the authority would authorize the payment of a ten per cent discount. The retailers would then sell their goods at ten per cent discount and submit their sales slips to the banks and be compensated for that ten per cent loss; the banks would present their slips to the financial authority and receive credit for the amount they had advanced to various retail merchants, and there would be no increase in taxes. In this way demand would be balanced with supply, and industry could expand with confidence, knowing there would be a ready market for all the goods they produced of a desired quality. As our production steadily expands and the situation referred to by Graham Towers becomes more evident, we could either increase the amount of the discount or, on the other hand, guarantee a basic income to all people. That, of course, would be issued on the basis of the surplus goods which were available for distribution. Surely this would be a far better way of dealing with our surplus goods than destroying them or making foreign investments, and, on the other hand, better than reducing production owing to inadequate buying power on the part of the people. If, by any chance, the guaranteed basic income established was so high that it created a demand greater than could be satisfied, the discount in that event would turn into a sales tax and the balance between demand and supply would be restored in that way.

Some people say, why could we not expand the purchasing power of the people by expanding wages? Unfortunately, when you expand wages you expand costs, and when you expand costs you expand prices, so that the purchasing power of the people will not be increased in relationship to the total prices charged. I quite realize that there would be certain cases where wages could be increased without increasing prices, but generally speaking it must be true to say that a general increase in wages brings about a general increase in costs and a general increase in costs brings about a general increase in prices. Therefore, in order to expand the purchasing power of the people in relation to the prices of the goods for sale, additional purchasing power would have to be paid to the people without its passing through the channels of industry. Otherwise it would incur costs in the process, and the purchasing power of the people would not be increased in relation to the total prices of the goods charged.

No doubt some hon. members would say that an increase in purchasing power or a price adjustment is bound to bring about an increase in taxation. Obviously these payments cannot be made by an increase in taxation because that would defeat the very purpose of issuing the purchasing power and decrease the demand for goods. Obviously these payments cannot be made by an increase in the sales of bonds to the people because that would also reduce the purchasing power of the people. I think the war policy proves that point conclusively. It will be recalled that during the war we had very heavy taxation and that we indulged in heavy borrowings from the people, and one of the reasons given for that policy was to curtail the spending power of the people. If heavy taxation and bond sales curtailed the spending power of the people in war time it is bound to have exactly the same effect in peace time.

I should like to quote from a speech made by the deputy minister of finance, Doctor W. C. Clark, in 1942, at Montebello, as reported in the Financial Post. Dealing with this question, Doctor Clark said:

> The same philosophy which has led to these very high taxes in war time is likely to dictate a reversal of that policy in the post-war years. Today, demand is far in excess of supply. Consumer purchasing power is far in excess of the available supply of consumer goods and services. The taxing authorities therefore must through high taxes siphon off as much as possible of that surplus purchasing power if we are to avoid all the evils of inflation.
> On the other hand, the post-war period is likely to pose an entirely different set of conditions. If we may judge by the record of the past, we are likely to see, after a temporary period of dislocation and hesitation followed possibly by a consumer goods purchasing boom, a period during which, unless the state acts aggressively and intelligently to prevent it, supply or potential supply may tend to be far in excess of effective demand.
> What will then be needed is to safeguard against deflation, not to prevent inflation. If we are to avoid a long depression and mass unemployment, the policy required will be one of stimulation of the economy, one that will create expansionist tendencies, one that will provide incentives to expansion of production, one that will encourage the consumer to spend and expand his purchasing power, in short, one which will keep the national income from falling to abnormally low levels.

I think that is a warning we can very well take to heart at the present time. So quite obviously that problem cannot be solved through spending money obtained either by taxation or by borrowing the savings of the people, because that in itself is a deflationary policy. The money needed to maintain an effective demand against our production should be issued by the monetary authority. It should be paid direct to the consumer without passing through the channels of industry and would be debt-free, because obviously you cannot meet a deficiency of purchasing power by going into debt; otherwise when the debt is repaid the deficiency would recur.

Former ministers of finance have charged that issuing national money would be highly inflationary because it would increase the cash reserves of the chartered banks and they would then be in a position to expand their loans in the ratio of ten to one of their cash deposits. I think that proves conclusively that we have not effective control over the issue of credit on the part of the chartered banks when we as a nation are placed in the ridiculous and helpless position of not being able to issue our own money without fear of the action of a subordinate body.

Therefore, in order that effective control may be established over the actions of the chartered banks in creating money, we suggest as one means the adoption of the 100 per cent system. We are not dogmatic on this question. We quite realize that there may be many other methods by which the results desired may be achieved, but we suggest that this is one means of overcoming the objection raised by ministers of finance to our suggestion that national money should be made use of to make up a deficiency in purchasing power. That is to say, we urge that the Bank Act be amended so that the chartered banks will be required to maintain 100 per cent cash reserves behind their demand deposit liabilities. A national monetary authority could provide the banks with this extra cash by buying from them the dominion securities now held by the banks. Banking would then become wholly a business of lending and reinvesting pre-existing money. The banks would no longer be able to create money as they have done in the past. There would, of course, have to be a sharp distinction drawn as between savings and demand deposits. The savings would be term investments and would be withdrawable only on notice. In the past the Minister of Finance has taken the stand in the house that by banks surrendering interest-bearing securities for cash they would have to operate at a loss. I would say that this point has never been proved largely because the government have seen fit to refuse to disclose to hon. members the size of the banks' hidden inner reserves. Nevertheless, if the government or the banks can prove that such a proposal would mean that they would operate at a loss, then the national monetary authority could lend the banks money against their securities instead of buying them outright, and they could be charged a nominal rate of interest on the money advanced to them in that way.

May I point out that this proposal known as the 100 per cent system has been endorsed by many prominent economists and bankers. The 100 per cent system would undoubtedly effectively control inflationary action on the part of the chartered banks. I am not quite satisfied myself that you could also control the danger of a deflationary policy by them.

It is interesting to note what Major Douglas has said on this point. Some people believe that the safest way to establish control over the chartered banks would be by nationalizing them. We of this group have never taken a stand against the nationalization of the chartered banks; we have merely pointed out that you will accomplish nothing by merely nationalizing the banks unless you change their policy. In his book entitled, "The Use of Money", at page 29 Major Douglas points out that, whilst the majority of bankers would be quite prepared to cooperate, nevertheless approximately five per cent at the top would in all probability oppose the adoption of a sane monetary system. Then he goes on to say:

> I do not say that something like the nationalization of banking will not have to come. I think it probably may have to come. But what I am perfectly certain of is that if you unite the powers of government with the powers of banking before you have changed the banking system, you have got a problem which is doubly difficult to solve.

In closing, I should like to say to hon. members who are still suffering from the delusion that governments have to depend upon the receipts from taxation and borrowing from the people for their revenue, that that is not how we financed the last war. It is true that we had heavy taxation and large bond sales, but let not hon. members forget that over $3,000 million were created by the chartered banks for the use of the government. In all, over $4 billion of new money was created during that period. Therefore do not let anybody jump to the conclusion that we financed the war solely by bond sales to the public and taxation. We would have had a very different kind of war effort from the one we had if that had been done. The only exception that we would take to the method adopted by the government is that this money was created by the chartered banks instead of by the Bank of Canada. Had it been created by the Bank of Canada, then we would have had that much less debt in the country.

Let me recall the situation which we had in the country back in 1935 and 1939. Hon. members will remember that on every occasion when we in this corner urged the government to use national money to meet the needs of the people we were met with the cry that such a policy would mean inflation. Then the war came, and immediately the chartered banks were hired to create hundreds of millions of dollars in order to maintain the full development of the resources so as to have the greatest possible war effort. We say that if it is possible to create money in wartime to maintain the full development of the resources of the country, then it should also be possible to create money in peace time in order to achieve the objective that we fought for, namely a high standard of living with maximum degree of personal freedom for the people.

It was the declared policy of the government in war time that no financial restrictions should be allowed to impede our war effort. The only limits were the men and materials available. Then we come to the year 1946 and the question of the old age pension is raised in the house. It is suggested that old age pensions of $50 a month at age of sixty should be paid, and once again as from 1935 to 1939 we are met with the same old cry that it cannot be done because it would cost too much money. If, instead of our talking about old age pensions, the war had been on and we had been suggesting that we should build, we will say, so many tanks, would we have been met with the cry, we cannot do it because it would cost too much? No; it would have been merely a question of whether or not we had the men and materials to build these tanks. Surely, then, when we are dealing with the question of old age pensions the only thing we should have to consider is whether or not we can provide the goods to satisfy the demand created by the payment of increased old age pension. In view of the fact that we are being warned that the main obstacle which we have to face in the future is lack of effective demand, a very good way to create the demand will be by paying old age pensions to the old people, and paying pensions to all people who are physically incapacitated. I do not believe that people will tolerate that kind of financial dictatorship in the future. Let it not be said that money can be the servant of the people only in war, and that in peace time it has to be the master.

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my address on the speech from the throne, permit me for a few moments to say something with regard to the pleasurable event we had here this afternoon. I am referring to the unanimous welcome extended to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) when he returned to his duties in the house. It was a unanimous welcome, and I therefore would make a suggestion that, should it ever occur again, the red roses might be given to both sides of the house.

I should also like to say that during the absence of the Prime Minister the house was most capably led by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie). I am sure that his work in leading the house during the absence of the Prime Minister will enhance his position when it comes to the selection of a man to succeed the Prime Minister. Had the roses been passed to this side of the house, no doubt I would have been pleased to wear one myself this evening.

Again, sir, it is my privilege to address you as the honourable Speaker of the house, notwithstanding the rumours which have been floating around. According to the press, you are to be chosen as leader of the party in the great province of Quebec. Another press report I read—no doubt you have seen it on many occasions yourself—was that a prominent place in the cabinet awaits you when the second shuffle begins. However I am glad to see you here in your accustomed chair at the present time. I have now received my rose.

Mr. HARKNESS: How does it smell?

Mr. McLURE: In speaking in this debate, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not congratulate the mover of the address, the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacNaught). He excelled himself as he freely and fearlessly expressed his views, which would be, of course, in accord with those of his own government. The hon. member for Prince showed in his speech what his own party would say was good sportsmanship, and he built up that sportsmanship because, when his party had reviled and neglected us, he reviled not again during his speech, except to say one thing—and I quote what he said:

> It is difficult to estimate just how much Prince Edward Island suffered during that period.

[Mr. Quelch.]

No doubt the hon. member meant the delay in transportation and delay in getting our new ferry boat.

I desire also to congratulate the seconder, the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cournoyer), on the excellence of his maiden speech. He likewise did his party full justice re the speech from the throne. Despite the fact that he resides in that great shipbuilding centre of Sorel, where our car ferry has been in the course of construction for the past number of years, we shall not hold him responsible for the many unfulfilled promises of her early completion by his government.

It is a year, Mr. Speaker, since the opening of the second session and we are now in the third. During that time, death has claimed three members of this house. In stature, charm and loyalty they were real, typical Canadians. In cheerfulness, accomplishment and geniality they were typical parliamentarians of this house. They may not be missed, since their seats will be filled, but I can say that they will be long remembered. During that time also, one gentleman from this side resigned his seat, and when I say "gentleman" everyone knows whom I mean. I refer to the Hon. Doctor Bruce.

The government then called elections to fill the vacancies, and I am now pleased to congratulate the winners and also to congratulate this side of the house on securing two or three most capable members.

The speech from the throne admits of varied forms of debate, its longitude being forty minutes and its latitude any distance or any subject of interest which the speaker or the constituency which he represents may desire to select. The speech from the throne is a governmental document prepared by the cabinet and placed in the hands of His Excellency by his constitutional advisers; therefore any criticism of mine or any other member does not reflect in any way upon His Excellency the Governor General either in person or with regard to public affairs.

The speech from the throne, with its contents, is a programme, I might say, of indefinite policies and contains many speculations on what legislation may come before this house, but it is entirely void of any practical policy for the benefit of our country.

I wish to refer for a moment to some distinguished visitors who came to our province last summer. First of all, I would mention His Excellency the Governor General and Her Excellency the Viscountess Alexander of Tunis. Our province and people gave them a real welcome, only such as can be extended by that province, the garden of the gulf, and our veterans were pleased to add greatly to the celebration and the welcome they gave their soldier leader. Our idea in welcoming them was that they would return soon and visit us at greater length. That was our hope.

Another visitor I wish to mention—and we had a most pleasant visit from him—was the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), accompanied by his excellent lady Madame Chevrier. I am sure they were pleased with the honour and reception that our people extended to them. Then came the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Bridges) and some of his officials. We accorded them a real welcome—a maritime welcome to a maritimer. After that, we had the royal commission on Indian affairs, the chairman being the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown). He was accompanied by quite a number of members of the commission and their wives. While the Minister of Transport was in our province, he spoke to a large meeting of the Rotary club. His address was a smooth, idealistic speech, well delivered, on the subject of transportation. It was good study propaganda not only for his own department—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members to moderate their voices. I note with interest that hon. members can carry on conversations and listen to speakers at the same time. I am wondering if it is, after all, so necessary to have loud-speakers.

Mr. McLURE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I was saying, with reference to the speech delivered by the Minister of Transport, that it was good study propaganda for his department and government. Perhaps some of us, particularly myself, would rather have had him get down to the real problem of transportation as it affected our province. However we were glad to welcome him and regretted that his stay was so short, but he left us with the promise that he would come in another season without any time limit.

The Minister of Fisheries visited different parts of our province and spoke to the fishermen in the different localities he visited, and I must say that he dealt with the problems and the future of our fishing industry with a good deal of satisfaction to fishermen and others who listened to him. I am sorry the Minister of Fisheries is not in his seat at the moment, but I believe he made a little bit of ministerial departure when he spoke to a Liberal club in Prince county on the subject of Liberalism. The press was present, and the next day the paper that covers the island like the dew had an extended report of it. Whether these speeches of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries were well timed for the benefit of the Summerside provincial by-election or not I do not know, but I do know that the Progressive Conservative candidate won. The Canadian National railway official, the Liberal candidate, was derailed, while the high school teacher came through with a win. I should like to refer to just one matter in connection with this provincial by-election and it is this. Up to the time this election was brought on, there was a shortage of refrigerator cars in connection with shipping but the Canadian National Railways, through somebody, had a surplus of those cars in Summerside and west, even to the discrimination of many other shipping points.

The royal commission on Indian affairs came at a time when they enjoyed real autumn weather. This commission visited the chief points which they were called upon to visit, but made an extended visit to Lennox island, the chief Indian reserve in our province. No doubt this commission will be making an interim report to the department, if they have not already done so. I hope that they looked carefully into the matter with the Indian chief at Lennox island brought before them, namely, political patronage with regard to government supplies for Indians. The complaint of the Indian chief, as given, was that when a permit was given for supplies the Indians were supposed to go to some government party store and buy what they wanted. There may be nothing wrong with that but, as the chief stated at the meeting of the commission, the Indians could not even get an itemized account. Surely it would be better if, when they are given their permit for supplies, they were allowed to go out and buy in whatever market they wish up to the full amount of their permit. I mention this only on behalf of those Indians who are getting those permits. It would make them seem more independent if they did not have to go to the government party stores to have the permit filled.

I would possibly be remiss in my duty, Mr. Speaker, if, in going over the distinguished visitors, I omitted the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) and his visit to Prince Edward Island. He came on a fact-finding visit with reference to the tourist business and our transportation. I might say that nobody is more welcome to our province than is the hon. member for Davenport; and the last words which were shouted out to him when he was leaving the meeting, as he was on his way to the Borden ferry, were, "We hope you will come again, John R."

In the course of a great many of the debates which we hear in this house, and outside it as well, speakers emphasize the matter of unity.

Let me say that the unity of Canada is only as strong as the fulfilment of the terms of confederation. I believe in confederation. It has made some success; but how much greater would be that success if this young nation and each of its provinces could have the fulfilment of the terms of confederation. We seem to be drifting farther away from unity as the government legislates. We find the government seeking now, as they have been for the last six months, to set up centralization of government for Canada. This government has claimed the right to amend the British North America Act without the consent of the electors in the respective legislatures of the various provinces. What does that mean? It means that, if this government can do that, there is a certain amount of confidence lost in our confederation pact. The objective and aim of the fathers of confederation was for a united British North American nation, our Canada. But this objective and aim cannot be attained when the terms of union remain unfulfilled and ignored by this government, thus retarding progress and development, in particular with regard to my province.

I shall now come to a particular subject of my own which I have discussed before in this house on several occasions, namely, the truck freight rates on the Borden-Tormentine ferry. In dealing with this matter I do not wish to be misunderstood, because I want to be absolutely fair with regard to it. Last year I was accused of unfair criticism with respect to this transportation problem. However, it is all a matter of what we consider to be the meaning of the word "criticism". This was well defined by a soldier in the great war when he said, "I believe that the only practical thing one can do when a mistake is made is to take a crack at the man who made it." Then he summarized it all by stating a very simple, effective and concise maxim, "Scratch where it itches." The thing that itches us down home in our province is our transportation situation and the heavy and exorbitant freight rates on the ferry. On previous occasions I have endeavoured to deal with the unjust, discriminating truck freight rate on the Borden-Tormentine ferry; but now, in view of the findings of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada tabled a few days ago, I certainly regret to read in the press across Canada, after the board rendered its judgment, headlines as follows: "Board ignores confederation pact entirely."

On February 10, 1947, the Minister of Transport answered a question asked, as he stated, "by the junior member for Queens", regarding Borden-Tormentine freight truck rates, stating that the judgment of the board of transport commissioners had been rendered and would be printed for distribution immediately. Just to remind the house, this was a case of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada holding a sitting on July 17 and 18 last at Charlottetown with respect to Canadian National freight rates on the Borden ferry. It must have been a very difficult decision to render, because the judgment took over two hundred days to be rendered and brought to this house. If the judgment is as long as the time it has taken, I am afraid it will be beyond my powers to peruse it. However there is one unique feature in connection with the rendering of this judgment: it seemed to be synchronized with the very day I asked my question. Strange, Mr. Speaker, that great minds had one common thought in view.

While I have not been favoured with a printed copy of the findings so that I may study them, the press has given their main features. What do we find? The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada ignore the confederation pact by which we entered confederation, and in doing so they have rendered a judgment. However, to their credit let me say this one thing, that they made the implied admission that it was beyond their jurisdiction to consider the Borden-Tormentine ferry freight rates as part of the agreement between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada.

I protested the holding of the board meeting when it was held on July 17 last, on the ground that they had no jurisdiction. And I protest again at their findings because they are not in accordance with and under the terms of the confederation agreement of 1873. I have no quarrel at this time with the Canadian National Railways. They are the subcontractors operating under a government mandate. I am quite sure that from their point of view the railway company has done its work well in the past winter with regard to freight. During all this winter, freight has been very heavy indeed. They have only one boat with a capacity of ten cars to take care of the great amount of freight involved. I might say that for the shipment of potatoes for British account it will require 3,000 cars, or 1,500 cars each way. In addition to this, freight is piling up, such as feeds, fertilizers, fuels, and the like, which have to be carried over.

The work of the Canadian National Railways has been good, and, as I said, I have no quarrel with them. They worked hard this winter, and did their best to carry the freight

The railway men who operate their trains are excellent men, who operate under the skilful guidance of their superintendent, Mr. Montgomery. However I can readily understand that the Canadian National Railways have no interest in the welfare of our province and the transportation problem involved in the Borden-Tormentine ferry. They are in business for themselves; therefore I am not basing my claim or lodging my charges against them.

Let me cite two cases to show that they are interested only in the Canadian National Railways. When the late Sir Henry Thornton, one-time president of the Canadian National Railways, and some of his officials, were giving evidence before the Andrew Rae Duncan commission at Charlottetown in 1926, what do we find was his attitude at that time? In his evidence the president stated that the Canadian National Railways were not concerned with the terms of confederation, but they were just given a mandate from the government solely to operate the ferry.

Then again, on October 24, 1945, before a meeting of the standing committee on railways and shipping we find a similar statement made by the president of the railways. At that time President Vaughan was being asked a number of questions by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Jackman), and one of his questions was this:

Are the rates on the ferry high, and does the C.N.R. set them?

This is the reply given by the president of the railways:

We do not think the rates are unusually high. Of course everything that goes over on the ferry is in direct competition with the railway. We think we are generous in allowing the trucks to go on the ferry at all.

Let me repeat the last sentence, "We think we are generous in allowing the trucks to go on the ferry at all." That is the statement which came from the president of the railways, that they do not own, do not charter or do not maintain that ferry. Hon. members can now judge just how much interest they have in transportation rates on the Borden-Tormentine ferry.

In 1926 the Duncan commission, in its findings with respect to the cost of operation, stated that the car ferry accounting should be taken out of the hands of the Canadian National Railways, and the cost of operation should be charged to the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. The reason given for this recommendation was that it was working an injustice against Prince Edward Island.

I am sure hon. members will agree that this is conclusive evidence that the railway company should not be allowed to set the freight rates cost for the truck traffic transportation on the car ferry system, as they do today. Time does not permit my dealing fully with this question. Therefore I shall summarize a few of the points I have emphasized.

We entered the union in 1873. The terms of union with respect to transportation were as follows:

That the dominion government shall assume and defray all the charges for the following services, viz:—

Efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers, to be established and maintained between the island and the mainland of the dominion, winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial railway and the railway system of the dominion;

And such other charges as may be incident to, and connected with, the services which by the "British North America Act, 1867," appertain to to general government, and as are or may be allowed to the other provinces.

From 1873 to 1915 Prince Edward Island dealt with dominion governments and pleaded with them for the fulfilment of the terms, but to practically no avail. Then in 1915 the Borden government of that day inaugurated the Borden-Tormentine system, which was a beginning toward implementing the transportation agreement. Then the operation of the Borden-Tormentine ferry was turned over to the C.N.R., and the federal government was to pay all deficits in connection with the operation. In 1919, when our mode of traffic changed with the advent of motor cars and motor trucks, our real problems showed up. Arbitrary rates were set for conveying motor cars and trucks. The charges for conveying motor cars for a return trip was $7, plus sixty cents for each passenger, and this for a distance of eighteen miles. In 1931, when the late R. J. Manion was minister of railways and canals, the Prince Edward Island government appealed to him and he reduced the rate from $7 to $3 without any board of transport commissioners being called in to adjudicate. He dealt directly, as was his right to do, with the government of Prince Edward Island.

I should like to mention a few of the prohibitive rates. I am not going into detail because I put these on the record before. A five-ton truck load of first-class commodities cost $60.65 for the return trip; for second-class commodities the rate is $54.65; for third-class, $50.65, and for fourth-class, $44.65. Those are prohibitive rates. A truck driver told me one day that, if he bought a new truck and made a trip a day, at the end of the month the Canadian National Railways would own the truck as well as himself.

In 1945 the matter of setting rates for the Borden-Tormentine ferry was placed before this house, and at that time the house was informed by the Minister of Transport, as reported on page 3685 of Hansard of 1945, that the Minister of Transport could not set the rate; this in spite of the fact that the former minister of railways and canals had reduced the rates by sixty per cent.

Let me refer again to the board of transport commissioners. They sat in Charlottetown on July 17 and 18 last and there listened to the evidence and rendered their decision. That verdict was not in accordance with the terms of confederation. Under the British North America Act the dominion parliament, and it alone, through the Minister of Transport of the government in power, has the exclusive authority over all matters such as rates, et cetera, on ferries between a province and any British or foreign country. I made my protest on those two points.

Such ferries should be treated as national highways under the pact of 1873. There is nothing in the Railway Act which gives the board of transport commissioners jurisdiction to determine rates, charges, et cetera on an interprovincial ferry which the railway does not own, does not charter or does not maintain. I am not going to take up much more of your time, Mr. Speaker, but in conclusion I wish to say that when we entered confederation in 1873 the aim of all parties to that contract of agreement was that there should be no barrier to interprovincial trade simply because my province of Prince Edward Island was an island.

I claim that the water route from Borden to Tormentine, a distance of nine miles, should be in effect a national highway. If there is to be a charge at all it should be based on the normal cost of moving freight over an equivalent mileage on land. This should be done without waiting for the completion of the new ferry. Both leaders of the two major parties agree with me. In 1941 the Hon. Charles A. Dunning, who represented Queens county, spoke there on our transportation problems. No doubt speaking with the authority of his leader, he said: "It is in the bond of agreement and it must be fulfilled." My leader on this side of the house agrees with that, because he has said: "We believe that the water route from Borden to Cape Tormentine should be in effect a national highway and must be treated as such."

Is it any wonder that we are dissatisfied with the shameful betrayal of our island's interests by the powers that be at Ottawa? Again I charge this government with gross indifference and negligence in dealing with our ferry transportation problem. I shall give the house more of this a little later.

[Mr. McLure.]

Mr. E. L. BOWERMAN (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I do so because this debate affords an opportunity to hon. members who may feel so disposed to bring to the attention of the government matters of particular interest to their constituents as well as matters concerning the nation as a whole. I shall be brief, for all that I desire to do at this stage of the debate is to lend support to my colleagues who have so ably defended the needs of agriculture and labour, as well as the interests of our veterans and senior citizens, and to place before the government matters which concern my own constituency.

I should like to call to the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Bertrand) that the citizens of Prince Albert constituency have waited too long for the promised improvements in our postal facilities in the city and the territory surrounding it. In an area as large as most constituencies across Canada, with a population of nearly 47,000, there is not one rural free delivery route in the constituency. The postal facilities for the city itself are not what they should be for a city the size of Prince Albert and the territory it serves. Then again, all those who are so faithful in seeing that the mail gets through in all kinds of weather; in our city and from the railway points to inland post offices, whether in the offices or delivering, are paid far too little for the arduous tasks they perform. Especially those couriers who, through all kinds of weather, carry the mail from railway points to inland post offices. They, too, should come under the bonus arrangements provided for by this house and, when the Postmaster General's estimates are before us, we shall continue to press this matter further.

I should also like, Mr. Speaker, through you to call to the attention of the Minister of Transport the petition from the citizens of the city of Prince Albert to the Canadian National for a new railway station. The present building is entirely inadequate in every way. It does not meet the need of the railways themselves, particularly the government-owned railway, for efficient and proper handling of the passenger and express service of the city and the vast territory surrounding it, particularly to the north and west. The petition sets forth clearly and precisely the need and furnishes the statistical data which proves conclusively the immediate need of such an undertaking on the part of our government owned railway.

I would urge the Minister of Transport to give the matter his careful and considerate attention.

Then there is the matter of the Prince Albert national park, one of the most beautiful of nature's playgrounds in all Canada. We in Saskatchewan and the north central part in particular, feel that the government has failed to provide the means for developing the park to the extent that should have been done. There was perhaps good reason for this during the war years. But now that is behind us and we are looking toward the future. Thousands more Americans from the middle western states would spend their vacations at the park were roads and park facilities such as they should and very well could be. Money spent along these lines would pay not only dividends in good United States money, but dividends beyond measure in neighbourly good will and understanding that cannot be measured in dollars and cents. I hope that the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) will keep this matter in mind, for we hope to deal more in detail with it when his estimates are in committee.

I should also like to say in passing that Prince Albert is still waiting for the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe) to fulfil the promise which he made regarding runways for the airport when he was in the city prior to the last election.

There is another more urgent and pressing matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the government, particularly the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell), who are not in their seats at the moment. It has to do with the vocational school in Prince Albert. I have discussed the matter with the Minister of Labour and I am hoping that he and his colleagues will reconsider their decision to close this school on April 15. In letters just received from the president of the student council of the school and a prominent member of the city council, they ask that the government give these pre-matriculation students, fourteen in number, all of whom are veterans, a better break. They feel that the psychological effect of change of domicile from one city to another 110 miles distant, with the fear of unsuitable housing accommodation being found, the change of instructors, adapting themselves to new surroundings, with their examinations or tests only two months away, is disturbing, to say the least, and might easily result in their failing to pass their examinations. I believe that these veterans and their families have earned the right to better treatment. The government can well afford, in view of the small cost, to continue this school until the expiration of the term in June. Surely the government can at least be as generous as the instructors who, I am informed, have offered to continue to teach without salary in order that these men, the pick of this school, may have every opportunity to finish without hindrance to their studies. Mr. Speaker, through you, I again urge the ministers concerned to continue this school until the end of June when the veterans will have completed their studies and finished their tests.

Mr. LEWIS MENARY (Wellington North): Mr. Speaker, speaking in the house last session I put on record that I was in favour of increased pensions for persons over sixty years of age. I also stated that there should be a contributory pension plan. If each Canadian desiring this type of pension were to contribute one dollar a month from the age of twenty-one, or $12 a year, at the age of sixty he would have contributed $468, and if the government duplicated these payments the amount would be $936. If the man or woman lived to the age of sixty and kept up the payments, with the government contributions, they would amount to $1,785.62; and at sixty-five years of age the fund would amount to $1,906.47. The contributor should then receive $50 a month without any means test.

We must remember that our people to whom the government would start to pay these annuities were born in the seventies and eighties of the last century. Many of them started to build their homes around 1900 to 1910. They struggled to build their homes and rear their families through some trying periods. Surely, in view of the great development of her resources, Canada will not continue to allow her people to suffer want or hardship as they come to the eventide of life. These people have helped to make Canada what she is today, a great and prosperous country. In this connection I wish to put on record an item from the Guelph Mercury, one of the leading papers in western Ontario. It says:

> Years ago old age pensions were looked upon as the rankest kind of socialism. The view of many persons was that every man should provide for his old age or suffer the inevitable consequences.
> In this enlightened age, however, it is recognized that many factors enter into success or failure and that the most well-intentioned person in the world may suffer reverses that will leave him, in the autumn of life, with not enough funds for actual existence, and the same set of circumstances holds true, of course, for women.
> It may be argued, of course, that the old age pensions set something of a premium on carelessness, and might have the effect of making many persons less anxious to provide for their idle years. Perhaps in some cases this will be found true. It would not be sufficient reason to refrain from continuing and increasing this payment of such first rate importance to a large number of deserving people.

According to statistics, the life expectancy of every Canadian is a little over sixty-four years, and it is said that the number of persons in the United States who are over sixty-five years is growing year by year. Even if our average expectancy of life exceeds that of any other people, it falls far short of what we have a right to expect. It is generally accepted that the life span of any animal should be approximately five times the length of the period required to reach maturity. A horse, for instance, matures at five years of age and lives to about twenty-five. A man should live to 100 years of age, if he is well looked after and is free from worries when he is sixty. There is considerable evidence to support the conclusion that man should live a healthy and active life until he is 100 years old, but the confusion, competition, disappointment, and unhealthful factors in their surroundings have made many city dwellers old at the age of fifty. We have good reason to believe that the average resident of our rural districts lives to a greater age than the average city dweller, but we are living in an industrial era. Science has not yet succeeded in guaranteeing good health into the old age of any of our citizens and, until this is achieved we, the members of this parliament, must not shirk our duty. We must adequately provide for all those Canadians no longer able to care for themselves.

In spite of the time that has elapsed since the end of the war, many urgent problems of our veterans remain unsolved. Many of them are finding it difficult to establish themselves in civilian life. In my riding hundreds of men have come back from the armed forces. Some have gone into farming, others into industry and business. I wish to mention three cases. A young lad of eighteen went overseas. He was a butcher, and when he came back he started in the butcher business again. He found it hard to get meat from the packers, and he could not secure a slaughtering permit. Our friends of the wartime prices and trade board said that he did not qualify for a slaughtering permit. He wrote to me to see if I could help him. I took the matter up with the wartime prices and trade board and they listed the various things which the young man could not get. This young man had a wife and they were both trying to establish a home. One day I dropped in to see him and he was very much discouraged. I asked him how much meat he had had lately and he replied that during the last three weeks he had had one-quarter of beef—one-quarter of beef to run a butcher shop. He said that the hospital rang up one morning and wanted 10 or 15-pound roasts. He said that if he had sold them what they wanted he would have had very little left for his other customers. It seems to me that these regulations are making it difficult for our young men to get a decent start in life.

Two other young men in my riding returned from overseas and tried to start an electrical wiring business. They met the same problem, no quota. They had not been in business before. They were helped out through the kindness of a hardware merchant who, since he had been in business for a long time, was able to get some material, although not half enough to keep these two boys going.

Another young man who spent five years in the air force purchased a retail lumber yard in my riding. He informs me that he can get plenty of work, but on account of the various controls the necessary lumber cannot be obtained. Everyone knows that a black market exists in lumber. If controls are taken off, prices may rise but not for long, because the public are shopping around. There is not the wild scramble that took place in war years. The lifting of controls is necessary to help our trade, and it will reroute lumber into legitimate channels. Only by taking off these controls can we help the thousands of returned boys who are finding that even if they purchase a business they are held in straitjackets by controls administered by a lot of bureaucrats who probably would not hold their positions had they been able to run a business of their own.

Various housing schemes have been mentioned in this chamber. I come from a small town of about nine hundred to one thousand people. When I hear speakers mention houses of $8,000, $9,000 or $10,000 I can hardly see the picture at all. Just before I came here I was talking to a merchant. I said: "Clarence, when are you going to move into your house?" He said, "Oh, in about two weeks." I said, "What did it cost you, Clarence?" He has a beautiful little house; it has a cement cellar under all of it, a bathroom with all the necessary fixtures, hardwood floors, and it is built of dressed lumber. It has two rooms upstairs and three downstairs. He said it cost him $4,500. When I hear of the poor soldiers paying $6,000 or $7,000 for a house I do not see how they are going to do so. There is another house up the street built by a Mr. Geer. He has been living in it for about two months. I understand that it cost him around $4,500, and it is a splendid little house. I was in it and it is well finished inside.

I wish to join with hon. members on this side of the house in support of the stand that all controls, except that of rent, should be abolished. They have become irksome to the people of Canada. All our citizens were willing to help in all ways to win the struggle which engulfed our country in 1939, but now the war is over and we wish to return to private enterprise. Controllers quite often find themselves leaning toward dictatorship and the longer these controls continue, the closer we will approach this form of government which, I am sure, is undesirable to the majority of Canadians.

Mr. ANTHONY HLYNKA (Vegreville): In the course of the present debate several hon. members on both sides of the house have placed their stand on record on the question of freight rates now being heard by the board of transport commissioners. I should like also to take this opportunity to make clear the position of the Social Credit group on this important question, and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I shall not transgress the rules of the house.

In the Alberta brief on dominion-provincial relations entitled, "The Case for Alberta" issued in 1938, the social crediters have stated their position clearly on the question of freight rates as recorded on pages 142 to 178 inclusive. In the thirty-six pages devoted to the discussion of freight rates many examples of inequities under which the prairie provinces have suffered are cited. It is pointed out, for example, that the people of Alberta are paying the highest freight charges of any province on goods exported from other provinces, and on practically all incoming goods. This results in an addition to the cost of production, which addition is not recovered in the price the farmer receives from the sale of his products, thereby diminishing his income. It also results in a smaller return to the farmer.

Recognizing this discrimination against the western provinces, "The Case for Alberta" recommended equalization and a downward revision of freight rates structure. That, Mr. Speaker, remains the position which members of the Social Credit group take. In other words this group will keep on pressing for equalization and complete overhauling of the freight rates structure in Canada. However we are also not unmindful of the fact that it is in the interest of our national economy to have smoothly and efficiently running railways. If it can be shown that it is absolutely necessary for the railways to have additional revenue to operate efficiently we would not object to any justifiable adjustment, but definitely not at the expense of the prairie provinces or of any one part of Canada. The load should be borne equally by the whole nation.

To determine the financial position of the railways we would urge that a royal commission be appointed, on which western agriculture should be given representation, and that the problem be studied and reported back to this parliament. It would be up to the government and to the railways to supply the house with accurate figures as to the earnings and operation costs to enable members of parliament to vote intelligently. Failing this, the Social Credit group will oppose any upward revision of the freight rates structure and will continue to press for a downward revision and equalization of freight rates for the entire country.

Mr. C. W. HODGSON (Victoria, Ont.): In taking part in this debate I do so with a great deal of interest as a lumberman and on behalf of my constituents. Like practically every other hon. member, I have received many letters and telegrams on the decontrol of various products, especially lumber. In doing so, I am at the same time taking the chance of putting my own business in the bad graces of the control bureaucracy, because it is well understood that the department can make it very miserable for anyone in the lumber business if they so desire. However I shall confine my few remarks mainly to timber control. Timber control has become the home of the greatest swivel-chair bureaucracy of all times. They are becoming red-tape specialists. They have added more rigid control in the past year than we had during the whole time of the war period.

As regards control experts, somebody has defined an expert as one who is seldom right but never in doubt. I suggest that a good definition would probably be that they are just ordinary people away from home. At any rate, they set up a price of approximately $40 for hemlock. Now, anyone who knows anything about lumbering will realize that hemlock cannot be produced in Ontario or Quebec for that price. The net result has been, first, that lumbermen have been forced on the black market in different respects, and, second, that they leave their stands of hemlock and work in other species out of which they can make some profit. Therefore hemlock which is needed so badly for housing, is not being taken out. The lumbermen of today are sound business people, very few of them being fly-by-night opportunists.

As far as exports are concerned, I believe the government has to allow the exporting of lumber to some degree, I would say about forty per cent, because in the eastern part of Canada you have lumbering that depends on the export trade, as the freight haul to central Canada is too great compared with the distance to the ocean and the United States. The same applies to western Canada, British Columbia in particular.

Central Canada does get and use some British Columbia lumber, generally large and long square timber at large and long prices, or the low end, which they have a surplus of and can afford to sell at cheaper prices.

Then for Ontario and Quebec, exportation is mostly of selects, first and seconds in the heavier stock of hardwoods, which has always been in the export trade and not used to any great extent in Canada, and definitely not in housing. No. 2 and 3 com. hardwood is used in the manufacture of flooring.

I say, therefore, that the exporting of lumber does not affect our housing schemes to the degree for which it gets credit. The whole question of housing, or any other industry for that matter, is production. Therefore, if encouragement can be given to the lumber industry to produce, and a feeling of good will established, rather than the sour, disgruntled taste which is in every lumberman's mind against controls, that encouragement should be given, because lumbermen feel that, since they stayed with the ship through the war, they should now have some relief.

In my constituency there are veterans and others who have gone to the bush to take out logs, but now they find that they cannot get nails and other necessary materials with which to build homes. There are no supplies in the country. In fact, there is not a storekeeper in the country who has a nail to sell. While the war was on, we put up with controls and did our best to produce lumber under those conditions. Now that the war has been over for two years, there is not the same patriotic feeling prevailing among producers. In my riding there are five mills that are not taking out lumber this year and this will mean a difference of five million feet in one riding alone. If the same thing happens throughout Canada there will be a considerable falling off in production, running into hundreds of millions of feet.

Two lumbermen from my constituency have gone south for the winter. One, who is in Texas, wrote to me a few days ago and said that roping steers in Texas is a lot more fun than roping logs in four feet of snow and thirty degrees below zero. The other is in California. He said he was going to start picking oranges and would probably make enough in that way to pay his trip expenses.

The less efficiency there is, the more controls are added. For instance, if a lumberman wants to sell lumber to one of his old reliable customers or anyone else, he must submit four copies of the order to the timber controller's office for approval and authorization. Then, as each car goes forward, he must send a copy of each invoice for each car to the timber controller's office. They reserve the right to inspect these cars at destination or anywhere en route. Quite often a car is held for several days waiting for the inspector to arrive, and when he does finally get there, the chances are he knows very little about the grading or inspection of hardwood lumber, for out of every ten inspectors who were put on this job there were about two who could qualify to grade lumber.

Timber control was first inaugurated in 1940 and price control came in eighteen months later. H. R. MacMillan was the first controller. He knew the lumber industry and he got around him men who knew their jobs. True, he was a dollar a year man and he stayed only one year. In a little over six years of timber control there have been seven controllers. Only two of these knew anything about the lumber business: MacMillan and Nicholson. The last one or the immediate past one, was a hotelkeeper; then he practised law and then became a soldier. He was married to a well known politician's daughter, rapidly rose in the service, and became timber controller.

Since the war, the employees MacMillan brought into the timber control have mostly gone back to their old jobs, and today we have an organization operating that has only one employee who knows or ever had anything to do with the lumber industry. I ask the minister to name one, except this old gentleman in the person of Malcolm MacNickol, who did have something to do with a small retail business, but his experience was only in one phase of the industry and his outlook is limited.

All the outstandingly able assistants have retired, and the persons replacing them are men not overly confident of their ability to compete in industry and who would rather keep their hand on the doorknob of some patronage job.

When timber control came in as a war measure the government passed orders in council to ensure that controls would be free from political interference, influence or dictation, and each control immediately set up machinery for consultation with industry. Now with the close of hostilities, two years past, with the emergency of war forgotten, what have we? A general admission that decisions on matters of control are matters of political policy.

The decision as to whether or not control should come off lumber is not a question of whether or not it is to the interest of the lumber industry, but rather how it will affect votes. An analysis of these facts will give the answer to why controls are failing and will continue to fail. They have outlived their usefulness, and their continuance is a menace to the success of the whole lumbering economy as well as a handicap to other industries dependent on lumber supply. The lumber industry has no say in and no responsibility toward a control policy, and there is a condition of chaos and frustration developing, which can be corrected only by abolishing control and a return to unhampered free trading.

The lumbering business is a basic one, which holds a top-ranking position in the Canadian economy. Rather than that being the reason why decontrol of this great industry cannot be judged on its merits, it is all the more reason why forest products should be freed from restrictions which are hampering its activities.

Surely the industry has first-hand knowledge of the harm which the continuation of controls is working, and can judge the effects which the elimination of controls would have. The war is over; the justification of control regulations no longer exists, and the quicker obstacles to the normal lumber trade are removed, the better. Wage controls have disappeared and food prices have increased. The very fact that the industry is unanimous for decontrol should be sufficient. At the Canadian lumbermen's convention held in Montreal on February 10, 11 and 12—the largest group of lumbermen ever assembled in Canada—they met in separate groups representing six different organizations of the lumbering industry, which included bush and sawmill operators, retail and wholesale dealers and so on. They voted in separate groups for the removal of controls and in the general meeting they were unanimous to have controls removed at once, there being not one dissenting vote out of over fifteen hundred delegates. Can the government honestly believe that such a bureaucracy as has been set up in Ottawa can run all the lumber industry in Canada better than the lumbermen themselves? I am convinced that, unless controls are removed immediately, there is now and will be further decreases in the production of lumber. This will cause a decrease in employment in the industry itself and in every other industry depending upon a supply of lumber. Certainly, viewed from a sound business or economic point of view, the prompt withdrawal of controls would be a sound and logical move. I put some questions on the order paper on February 13, but they have not yet been answered so that I cannot tell what the cost of controls is. I know, however, that it runs into a great deal of money that is unnecessarily spent.

I wish to say a word now on taxation of soft drinks. The soft drinks industry collects forty per cent, or two cents a bottle, and pays it to the dominion treasury. It does not help the industry and, moreover, the soft drinks are paid for mostly by children. The hon. member for London said that the baby bonus was given to help the children to buy soft drinks, but he added that it was like giving a child ten cents to go to bed and taking it away from him while he slept.

There is another aspect to this matter. While the war was on, our children were buying war savings stamps and they contributed a great deal of money to the war requirements at that time. I think it was a good thing because it created in the child a sense of patriotic duty. I know when the children came home with their first stamp they were pleased, and when they got enough for a certificate they were pleased and proud of it. Now, when they go to the store and have to pay that two cents extra on pop, I wonder if this government are helping the confidence of the children and that patriotic feeling? Are they not creating a feeling in the child's mind that he is paying for his own bond all over again with every bottle of pop that he consumes?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Speaker, I wish to intervene briefly in this debate only for the reason that certain members of my staff have been attacked personally; otherwise I would not take the remarks of my hon. friend seriously. I think the attack on the timber control is the first honest attack that has been made in this house. It is an attack by a lumberman defending his own pocketbook. That is at least an honest position.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Speaker, that remark is out of order and should be withdrawn.

Mr. HOWE: Not at all. I am going to develop the subject.

Mr. GREEN: The minister is imputing motives there, and his statement should be withdrawn.

Mr. HOWE: Not at all. What about his attack on the honesty of the timber controller?

Mr. GREEN: The minister has no right to attack a member of this house or to impute motives to him, and that is exactly what the minister is doing. The trouble with the minister is that he cannot take his medicine, either tonight or any other night.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I am sure the minister will withdraw anything that can be considered as an attack on the hon. member.

Mr. JACKMAN: Do you not consider it an attack? We should like to have your ruling.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I would ask the hon. member to take his seat for a moment and allow the minister to explain.

Mr. JACKMAN: On a point of order—

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): The minister was just rising to speak. I would ask the hon. member to just wait for a moment or two.

Mr. JACKMAN: If the minister is speaking on a point of order, I shall take my seat and await my turn.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. JACKMAN: No. Are you speaking on the point of order?

Mr. HOWE: What is the point of order?

Mr. JACKMAN: Mr. Speaker, the point of order is—

Mr. HOWE: Sit down. Mr. Speaker is on his feet.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Are you speaking on a point of order?

Mr. JACKMAN: Yes. The minister has been asked to withdraw an imputation he made against my hon. colleague.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is not a point of order.

Mr. JACKMAN: Then, to be precise, it is a question of privilege. The minister has been asked to withdraw a remark which was an imputation against a colleague of mine in this house. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you will make your ruling and ask the minister to withdraw his imputation.

Mr. HOWE: Speaking to the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would remind you that the hon. member said that he was speaking on his own behalf; he started off by saying that he is a lumberman and speaking on his own behalf.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. GREEN: He did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. HOWE: If he spoke on his own behalf, he was speaking as a lumberman and on behalf of his own industry.

Mr. HODGSON: The minister is altogether wrong. I happened to have managed a business last year which did not make any money, and it was a lumber business.

Mr. GREEN: I want to point out very clearly that the minister has said that the hon. member was speaking to protect his pocketbook.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Absolutely.

Mr. GREEN: That is imputing motives of the worst kind; and no member of the house, from the Prime Minister down, has a right to make a statement of that kind. I submit to Your Honour that the minister must withdraw that statement.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, I again submit, with all due respect, that I think I am simply repeating the hon. member's own words.

Mr. COCKERAM: Withdraw.

Mr. HOWE: Withdraw nothing.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): When the point of order was raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) I did state that I felt sure that, if the minister had said anything that was an attack on the hon. member who had been speaking, he would gladly withdraw.

An hon. MEMBER: But he did not do so.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, I will substitute for my words, the exact words used by the hon. member.

An hon. MEMBER: No, no; withdraw.

Mr. COCKERAM: We want complete withdrawal.

Mr. HOWE: What did the hon. member say? Will he tell us again what he said? He said he was speaking on behalf of his own business.

Mr. GREEN: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister must withdraw that remark. We want your ruling as to whether the minister must withdraw.

Mr. HOWE: Not on your say-so, though.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): If hon. members will allow the minister to proceed, I think we shall have the matter straightened out.

Mr. GREEN: We want a withdrawal.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): You said he was to withdraw the statement, Mr. Speaker, and he has not withdrawn it yet.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, I was simply in my humble way quoting the exact words of the hon. member. If I misquoted them, I withdraw the misquotation. But he said he was speaking on behalf of his own business.

Mr. HODGSON: No, I did not.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The lumber industry.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Speaker, speaking on a point of order, where any member of this house, from the Prime Minister down, says that an hon. member is speaking to protect his pocketbook, that remark should be withdrawn; and we would ask that the minister withdraw that remark without any qualifications.

Mr. HOWE: Well, I will withdraw, Mr. Speaker. I have no desire to prolong the discussion. However, I do say this. This country is made up of several classes of people. It is made up of lumbermen, who deserve a great deal of consideration. I have a great many friends in the industry and have a high regard for the part that the industry is taking in the industrial life of Canada. But there are two considerations: one is the price for the lumberman and the other is the price for the consumer. The dishonest part of the advocates of decontrol of lumber is that they do not state both sides of the question. They state the effect on the lumbermen, but they do not state the effect on the consumer. I will say this for the industry: the delegations that visited me are fair about the thing. When asked what the effect on prices will be, they say that prices will go up.

Mr. GREEN: So will production.

Mr. HOWE: Well, I will talk about production in a moment. There is some advantage in decontrol, and I am not at all begoted on the subject, but is decontrol worth the price from the consumer's point of view? How much will prices go up? I can tell you this. The controlled price of lumber for domestic purposes on the west coast, the wholesale price for square timbers and boards, is $29 a thousand. The wholesale price of the same timber for export is $81 a thousand. The difference there is $52 a thousand. I have never had anyone suggest to me that, with decontrol, the domestic price would not go up to the export price. That is the effect on the consumer. In other words, decontrol of west coast timber would probably result in an advance of $52 a thousand. That is a high price for the consumer to pay. What is the difference today in the interior? Not as great, but a matter of perhaps $30 to $35 a thousand. A similar differential applies throughout eastern Canada. Surely there is a real argument as to whether the great bulk of our people will profit more from decontrol and an advance in price than they will under the present system. Another factor that is associated with control is the power to direct lumber into essential construction. My hon. friends opposite have been very firm in their opinions that the construction of non-essential buildings should be prohibited. I have said several times that that is impractical, for the reason that no group of men can agree with each other as to what type of building is unessential. But we offer as a substitute for prohibition the support of the government in routing materials into essential building.

That power, of course, would disappear with decontrol of the articles affected. Another freedom that people are not willing to part with—people in the lumber industry—is the right to export timber. If lumber is to be decontrolled, it should be wholly decontrolled. That is, take off all controls and let the Canadian people bid against the outside buyers. In other words, if lumber is going to the world price, let it be a free market. No member of the trade will agree to that. They say, "No, you must take off the kind of control I do not like, but keep the control I do like." That is the position of my hon. friend, who said today that we should maintain export control, and let 40 per cent of the lumber in this country be exported, which is a little more than is being exported at the present time. That would mean a tight domestic market and no control, and a certainty that the domestic price would go to the export price.

That is the other side of the argument. I represent an average constituency in this country. I have lumbermen, lots of them. I have pulp and paper mills, and I have consumers. And I believe that the present course is the course that represents the greatest good for the greatest number and fair treatment for all.

My hon. friend says that the lumber industry is unanimous in asking that the controls be removed. In that he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. HODGSON: The convention did.

Mr. HOWE: I do not know who attended the convention; but the delegation which came to see me, to bring a message from the convention, were positive in saying that they did not represent the manufacturers on the west coast. I happen to know that the largest manufacturer on the west coast made a trip throughout Canada, met all his dealers, and expressed his opinion to his dealers that the control now being maintained is in the best interests of the industry, and should be continued.

Mr. GREEN: It is only the big fellows who say that.

Mr. HOWE: Well, the big fellows cut a very large proportion of the lumber in this country.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is that H.R.?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. And I have also had a visit from his largest competitor, who has told me much the same thing.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Who was that?

Mr. HOWE: Do I have to tell that? Perhaps Your Honour will give me a ruling.

That is the view of one section of the industry. And the two firms I have mentioned cut perhaps twenty per cent of all the lumber cut in Canada. They have a stake in the industry which leads them to be very careful of the view they take of a temporary situation. Those responsible men believe that controls should be maintained, and that the domestic price should not be permitted to advance to a level which will discourage consumption in this country.

There is another matter that must be considered, and that is that the government is doing its best to produce low-cost housing in Canada. It is all very well to say to me, "It would only run about $200 or $300 on a house." I am frequently told it would only amount to $200 or $300 on a small house. But let me tell you this, another $200 or $300 on a house is a severe load on the man who buys that house and expects to pay for it over the next twenty or twenty-five years.

Now, is the lumber industry justified, for the sake of the added convenience and extra profit that would follow the removal of controls, in demanding that a burden of higher lumber prices be placed on the people of Canada? I do not believe it.

As for the men who have been administering timber control; it has not been an easy job. In fact it has not been an easy job to administer any control. But from the time timber control was instituted, lumber has been available for essential work in this country, and it has been available at a reasonable price. The administration of any control has been increasingly difficult as we draw away from the period of war. But to hear a gratuitous attack on the men who have administered this control, such as I have heard tonight, is something I resent deeply.

The hon. member referred to one man who started as a hotel-keeper and married the daughter of a politician. Incidentally, the politician referred to is one of the members of the high court in Quebec, with a long Conservative background, and is now one of the most distinguished judges in that province. The timber controller referred to left to take the vice-presidency of one of the large pulp and paper industries in this country. So I think my hon. friend should have given him credit with knowing a little bit about the timber industry; otherwise he would hardly have been chosen for his present post.

Mr. HODGSON: Where did he get his experience?

Mr. HOWE: Where did you get yours? Our timber controllers have all been men who have put forth great effort and, I suggest, contributed great skill in the administration of timber control. I have never heard anyone stand up in public before and accuse those men of dishonesty, as my hon. friend did tonight. It is all very well to accuse—

Mr. HODGSON: I did not do that.

Mr. HOWE: You certainly did.

Mr. HODGSON: On a question of privilege, I ask you to withdraw that. I did not accuse them of dishonesty.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend said he was risking his business to stand up in this house and discuss timber control because—

Mr. COCKERAM: Because they put him out of business.

Mr. HOWE: They are perfectly honest men who would do that, are they? We have a great concert, over here, people liking to talk, thinking these men are not defended, and then resenting it when something is said about it.

Mr. GREEN: And with a great little dictator across there, too.

Mr. HOWE: I am not going to discuss this matter further. I just wish to dispel the idea which has been advanced by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), and by the last speaker, that the removal of timber controls would bestow blessing on all our citizens, without cost. It may be well to call attention to the cost, which I think the ordinary consumer will wish to understand before he takes a position regarding the removal of timber controls.

Mr. FLEMING: May I ask a question?

Mr. HOWE: When I get through. My hon. friend talks about the great expansion of industry that would occur with the control removed. Let me tell him this, that if he will look at production figures for the last three years he will find that a substantial expansion in the industry is taking place under timber control. And I venture to say that a removal of the controls would not be a great factor in that direction. I say that with a good deal of knowledge of the situation, because I have been studying it carefully for the last several years.

Having said all that, I will say that the subject of the removal of controls is not closed. The situation is being carefully studied. And if those in charge of timber control and those responsible for the administration of the department come to the conclusion that the position will be improved by the removal of control, then control will be removed. But when I say that, let me say that we see nothing in the immediate situation which would lead us to that conclusion.

Mr. FLEMING: The question I would like to put to the minister is this: Is he willing that a parliamentary committee should be appointed to hear at first hand the evidence of such persons as he has referred to concerning the proper time for the removal of timber controls?

Mr. HOWE: I have always understood that the government is responsible for the administration of this country, and that its custom is not to delegate that responsibility to a committee. The government must make its own decisions as to its policy with regard to timber controls.

Mr. FLEMING: I take it the answer is "no"?

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. A. W. STUART (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate, but there have been certain information and criticism brought to my attention which I feel must be answered in order that the citizens of my own county may be protected. One department that has been severely criticized by many hon. members of the opposition during this debate is the Department of Veterans Affairs, and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie), particularly with regard to veterans housing.

I have listened attentively to the debate, and the impression I get is that in their criticism hon. members have left with many of us on this side of the house the definite idea that contractors and those engaged in the building trade in Ontario and western Canada should hang their heads in shame. It has amused me to see how cleverly an attempt has been made to place on the government's doorstep full responsibility for the condition of some veterans houses in western Canada and at the same time protect those directly responsible for this condition—the contractors themselves.

We in eastern Canada have had a shortage of building materials owing to the greatly increased demand, and in many cases it has been found necessary to make use of inferior materials in the building of veterans homes and those for civilian use as well. The home owner was fully aware of this condition, and I am convinced that in no way were these particular materials camouflaged in order to deceive the purchaser. Many veterans homes are under construction in the county of Charlotte and many have been completed. I feel confident that the contractors responsible for the erection of these homes were conscientious and that the welfare of the veteran received every consideration.

If the information disclosed during this debate relative to veterans housing is correct, deceit and fraud are evident in the building trade in western Canada and some hon. members of this house are endeavouring to camouflage the evidence, no doubt for political purposes, by placing full responsibility upon the government. If those directly responsible, that is the contractors, were dealt with as they should be the citizens would be apprised of those involved in this nefarious and shameful practice. By such action, not only would the veterans be protected but so would our entire population. I am pleased to state that in Charlotte county this condition does not exist, and in no way could those responsible for the building of veterans houses be associated with those engaged in a like occupation in western Canada.

We have on this side of the house a veteran of the last war who is directly connected with the building of veterans homes. If such accusations as have been made in this house were directed against the company with which he is associated they would not go by unanswered. Knowing him as I do, I can assure the house that he would not tolerate any man or any group of men who would take unfair advantage of any veteran.

In one breath hon. members opposite are saying that the government should reduce the personnel of departments in order to cut expenditures. Then suggestions are made to increase the staff by way of inspectors to watch over these big-hearted contractors in their own constituencies who are defrauding these young men who, as one member stated, went into the very jaws of death to protect you and me and have come back to receive nothing but lip service. That lip service is coming from some of the hon. members opposite who, during this entire debate, have been most critical, but who have made few suggestions of a constructive nature.

Unlike those engaged in the building trade in western Canada, the Minister of Veterans Affairs—I think all will agree with this—is very much interested in the welfare of thousands of returned veterans in every part of this great country. If he and his department received a little more cooperation from hon. members, instead of criticism which is not of a constructive nature, it would be of great benefit to the war veterans and would save much time in this chamber. In no way do I wish to criticize those responsible for the decision made to repair veterans homes at the expense of the taxpayers. The veteran should never be obliged to replace faulty materials or correct defects of any kind.

However, if it is found that the contractor is legally responsible, irrespective of the type of contract, be it cost-plus or management fee, he should be held accountable for all defects. Under contracts of this kind he is protected from loss in every way and the Canadian public should be given the same protection. Under such contracts it is not excusable that faulty workmanship should be found, especially if the contractors have the interests of the war veterans in their hearts. Six or seven hundred thousand dollars is a lot of money for the public to furnish to cover up blunders and defects which apparently are evident in the construction of veterans homes in certain parts of this country. I regret that such a situation does exist. I regret also that citizens of this country are associated with such a scandal. Men of this type are not good citizens, and I have little regard for any person who would deliberately and ill-advisedly wrong, cheat or defraud a veteran of this dominion who has given so much for which we should all be thankful. In many cases the particular veteran may have left a brother on the other side.

When the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) was speaking on this subject he gave the name of a construction company responsible for housing conditions in his riding, and he had this to say, as reported on page 108 of Hansard:

> I regret to say to this house that my friends built these houses, and I feel very badly because I must stand up here and tell the house and the people of Canada of such home construction for veterans. But if I am to be entitled to be elected to represent my constituency, or any other hon. members are entitled to be elected, our duty to our country comes before our duty to our friends.

[Mr. Stuart.]

I congratulate the hon. member for Lambton West upon his outspoken statement. If detailed information were given in every case the publicity might be responsible for a great improvement in the housing situation. I disagree with only one portion of his statement. The hon. member stated that his friends had built these houses. I would hesitate to say that men responsible for defrauding the war veterans of this country were my friends. If they will take advantage of a veteran, what chance has a civilian?

In conclusion, may I say that we have very little in the maritime provinces that people in central and western Canada can make use of. We have always been obliged to look elsewhere for our export markets, but in this particular case, if it is impossible to find honest men in the construction business in this part of Canada, or honest inspectors, come down to the maritimes. I assure you that that type of man can be found there. True to maritime tradition we are always ready and willing to give a helping hand.

Mr. REAL CAOUETTE (Pontiac) (Translation): I begin by congratulating the hon. member for Saint Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Hamel) and by seconding the motion which stands in his name on the order paper, requesting that the Labour-Progressive party be outlawed in this country. I also approve the proposal of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Gourd) who asked that a Canadian representative be appointed to the Holy See in Rome. These are worth-while measures which we should all support. There are hon. members and Canadian newspapermen who have deemed fit to spill ink over the motion which stands in my name on the order paper and who have written insolently about it; the resolution, so they claim, is Utopian, senseless.

An hon. MEMBER: That's true.

Mr. CAOUETTE: It may be senseless, like some hon. gentlemen opposite. In any case, those people maintain that the motion calls for ridiculous expenditure, in order to obtain senseless results; that it is an example of demagoguery and anything else you like.

Mr. Speaker, instead of speaking of the amount of money that such a programme would entail for the country, the government and hon. members should ask themselves whether it would be possible to produce sufficiently to implement such a programme.

We must take into account Canada's potentialities and distribute with logic and intelligence the corresponding amount of money to Canadian consumers. Such is the nature of the motion I have placed on the order paper. I mean that we should give our money to Canadians before giving it to foreigners.

Mr. LESAGE: If that is what you want, then it is all Greek.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Bertrand) has assailed the Electors' Union from all sides—

An hon. MEMBER: Excellent.

Mr. CAOUETTE: —as well as its provincial chairman and the member for Pontiac. Let us examine his speech and its implications.

An hon. MEMBER: Don't be afraid.

Mr. CAOUETTE: The hon. member for Terrebonne—

An hon. MEMBER: He did well.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CAOUETTE: The hon. member for Terrebonne intimated that a member of the Union of Electors was reluctant to divulge his identity, that he did not wish to say that he belonged to the Social Credit group. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am a representative of the Union of Electors in this house, and I am not afraid to say that I am one hundred per cent in favour of the Social Credit movement. I wish to make it clear that I am a supporter of the Social Credit philosophy.

An hon. MEMBER: At last, he has shed the mask.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Some people claim that the Social Credit members of parliament are imperialists, that they are warmongers; that has nothing to do with the Social Credit policies. If an English-speaking Catholic from Ontario is for conscription or if a French-speaking Catholic from Quebec is against conscription, that has nothing to do whatever with the value of the Catholic religion. One could not say, for this reason, that the Catholic religion is objectionable in Canada. That has nothing to do with the doctrine itself. Well, we, members of the Social Credit group, have an economic doctrine, a logic and a philosophy which meet the aspirations of human beings; we suggest that money must be made the servant of man and not the reverse; we want as much money in circulation in peace time as there was in war time.

Everybody knows what the government did for this country in the last war; but now that the war is over, we want these things done for Canadian citizens.

Mr. LALONDE: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. CAOUETTE: You may question me to your heart's content after I am through.

Mr. LALONDE: Would the hon. member say if he favours controls to permit equitable distribution of the money he mentions?

Mr. CAOUETTE: I favour an equitable distribution of such money as the country's production can supply.

An hon. MEMBER: When you say that, do you also mean that you favour controls to attain that end?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CAOUETTE: For its wartime needs, the government did not wonder if there was enough money in Canada. It felt it should do everything that was physically possible in the way of providing armaments, guns, rifles, and uniforms. Everything that is physically possible for warfare must be made financially possible. And at no time during the war, Mr. Speaker, was the production of guns, or even of a single cartridge, ever hindered by a lack of money. Money was raised according to possibilities or rather to the necessity with which we were confronted to produce what was required for the destruction of mankind or the protection of our fellow citizens—

Mr. PARENT: By taxes.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Yes. Since my honourable friend speaks of taxes, I should like to remind him that in 1939 the government could not raise any taxes because the people had no money. It was essential, first of all, to put money in the hands of the taxpayer. We all know how this was achieved. War was used as a means of distributing money to the taxpayer and then came taxes—

Mr. LESAGE: And loans also.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Yes, and loans also.

Mr. Speaker, the honourable member for Terrebonne stated that the programme of the Union of Electors did not make sense and in order to prove that the people had no faith in it he quoted Le Droit of Ottawa and the Frontière of Rouyn. If my honourable friend wishes to get information from people having no knowledge of its subject let him do so, let him consult people who have never made any study of our doctrine, but at the same time he will become the laughing stock of the whole province and that is only natural.

Let us ask ourselves if Canada can produce sufficiently to guarantee to the aged of 60 and over $60 a month; if Canada can produce sufficiently to guarantee our invalids $60 a month when they have reached the age of 21, and if Canada can produce sufficiently to guarantee each and every citizen decent means of livelihood. That is why we request a $20 monthly national dividend.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not enough!

Mr. CAOUETTE: This is where we have trouble making some people understand.

An hon. MEMBER: That's not surprising!

Mr. CAOUETTE: That a company should distribute to each of its shareholders at the end of the year, the percentage to which he is entitled in the profits earned, seems entirely logical. This is effected through dividends. That a credit union should distribute a dividend at the end of the year to each of its members, on the basis of his shares also seems quite in order. It is the thing to do.

An hon. MEMBER: That is the salary earned by capital.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Why admit that much? If everyone agrees, it must be right and well organized. Coordinated work always gives good results. Think, for instance, of the Noranda mine in my constituency. Some miners are working at 7,000 feet underground, others at 2,000 feet, others at the surface, or at the mill or in offices—

Mr. LALONDE: Others are in their second childhood.

Mr. CAOUETTE: And work is well organized—

An hon. MEMBER: Yes, sometimes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order!

Mr. CAOUETTE: As it is well done and well organized, what happens at the end of the year? The mine brings profits, which is normal; however, the mine would not be as profitable if work were not well organized and every miner were continuously employed at 7,000 feet underground, and the mine owner would also be in the hole.

In society, Mr. Speaker, work is organized. The hon. members did not make the shoes that they are wearing; they were made by shoe manufacturers. They did not make the clothing that they are wearing; but they are clothed just the same. There are numerous social organizations. We have doctors, we have all kinds of other professional men; all work for the common good, for the general interests of society. Because work has been organized in an intelligent way in Canada there are surpluses at the end of the year. Because the work is organized intelligently, the production system is excellent in Canada.

Mr. LALONDE: We have a good government too.

Mr. CAOUETTE: The production system suits us, because the organization is well balanced. At the end of the year the production exceeds the existing purchasing power.

An hon. MEMBER: Not at the present time.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Yes.

An hon. MEMBER: Not at the present time.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Yes, production exceeds the existing purchasing power inasmuch as we can afford to ship goods to other countries. We have a surplus.

We then export our surplus, but the question is: To what use should we put it? The difference between a country's total production and total purchasing power must be balanced with new money, not money created by bankers but money created by a responsible government, a government that should be sovereign. And that surplus production must not be distributed the world over but among the people of Canada; it should be made available to everyone. It should be computed after deduction of salaries and profits. It is not a question of cutting out salaries or profits. The new currency should be based on the difference between total production and purchasing power, and it should be distributed among all Canadian citizens, the whole Canadian people, in the form of a national dividend. I feel that this is merely logical, Christian-like and even democratic. It affords the means to ensure freedom and security to all Canadians.

An hon. MEMBER: The dividend is not high enough.

An hon. MEMBER: Eighty dollars!

Mr. CAOUETTE: It was stated in the house by the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Bertrand) that:

> The resolution moved by the hon. member for Pontiac and the programme of the Union of Electors border on Utopia, and I might even say on election hysteria.

He stated a little farther on that the resolution appearing on the order paper was simply an electoral platform. That is exactly what I stated before the election. Hon. members will, however, own that it is very seldom that arguments uttered in the course of an electoral campaign are repeated in parliament. I do it. Before the election, the electors of my constituency had this very programme. They sent me here to promote it. I shall do it in spite of everyone. I shall demand what the electors of my constituency will ask me to place before parliament. It may happen that members opposite will ask what our programme is as the hon. member for Terrebonne has done. After having criticized the programme of the Union of Electors, he spoke of a very interesting matter:

The Social Credit party claim that their financial methods would settle the problem. Can people in their right senses be taken in by such statements? No. The people want old age pensions at an earlier age.

What difference is there between this demand and ours?

. . . old age pensions at an earlier age, allowances for the needy crippled and invalids, gradual reduction of taxes . . .

The hon. member wanted to know how our programme could be implemented while reducing taxes. It is by reducing them gradually, that he intends to implement his own programme:

. . . continued employment and fair working conditions, opportunity for ownership, in short, happiness within the framework of a sound and progressive economy.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Terrebonne will eventually occupy a seat on this side of the house.

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne): No danger of that.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Our programme tends to enhance everyone's happiness. Is it possible to know, in Canada, whether the country is in a position to produce goods for the Canadians? The heavy production of weapons, during the war, in our country, is a well-known fact. When the hon. member for Terrebonne stated that the Social Credit members were in favour of extending help to strangers, during the conflict, he was forgetting that, after the war, they wish to give money to the Canadians. That is a matter he has not mentioned. That is one thing which he has not yet been willing to admit. Mr. Speaker, Canada has increased her wealth during the past years.

The honourable member then spoke about the change in seasons; he has said the Social Credit changed with the seasons. I must say that it is rather the Liberal party and the Liberal policy that have undergone such a seasonal change during the last 25 years.

Mr. Speaker, we want Canada to be for Canadians. Hysteria or demagogy does not enter the picture. Demagogy comes from those who in the past have caused the people to suffer hardships. We do not want that, we want Canada to be for Canadians. Let us consider history, and we shall see that all those who have tried to help the people have been branded as demagogues, or worse. As far as we are concerned, we shall carry on our work throughout the country, and in the near future, Mr. Speaker, we shall have in Canada a government responsible to the Canadian electors, a government which will promote their interests rather than be concerned with election funds.

Mr. LALONDE: The honourable member will kindly allow me to ask him just one question, because I am seeking information. If I am not mistaken he said a few moments ago that the government should make up for the lack of money through the issue of currency. Would he be willing to explain the machinery to be used in that connection and tell us whether that money circulated throughout the country would create debt?

Mr. CAOUETTE: That money would be absolutely debt-free, since it would be created by a sovereign government. Instead of asking bankers to issue money, or to produce it in the form of loans to the government, the state would itself create money based upon the actual wealth of the country. I mean that such money would correspond to that wealth.

Mr. LALONDE: May I ask a further question?

(Text):

The hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Caouette) is reproaching us for not studying social credit. I would like to know something about it but he does not want to answer my questions.

Mr. JOHNSTON: We have been telling you about it for twelve years.

Mr. A. E. ROBINSON (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, the riding I represent is considered a rural constituency. The people who make up that riding are good people, a hard-working, industrious people. We have not been noted for becoming millionaires but we get along wonderfully well under the circumstances. Our largest town has a population below 3,000 most of the year, and an added population of summer visitors running into the thousands. My home town of Kincardine is holding its centennial celebration in 1948, and I assure you, sir, that you and any of the members of this house who can visit with us on that occasion will be welcomed and royally entertained, not only by the members of this house who were born in Bruce but also by the descendants of the early pioneers who made our county one of the best counties in Ontario and also one of the best known counties throughout the western provinces.

It will be readily understood that in a rural riding like Bruce we have an active federation of agriculture. I have heard it said that the federation of agriculture is leaning toward socialism. Such is not the case in Bruce. I do not believe it is true of the top officials of the federation, and if the federation were leaning toward socialism it would surely defeat the object of the organization, which is to help out organized agriculture. What agriculture needs is not so much being helped out as to secure a square deal in comparison with other occupations in Canada. We have worked hard through the war years and have not received overpayment for the number of hours worked. At the present time there is not the inclination amongst young people to settle on the many vacant farms which we have. I am sure that if the farmers were getting a square deal financially there would be many of these young people who would settle on these vacant farms, and that in turn would go a long way toward relieving the acute housing shortage which this government seems unable to remedy. We know the conditions that prevail on the majority of farms. The owners are mostly elderly men who no longer have strength to carry on. They cannot get help. They cannot sell. The demand for farms is limited, and prices offered are generally lower than the value of the buildings, with nothing left for the land. They cannot rent, so they do the only thing left. They seed down the land and turn it to pasture, and the productivity is less than a quarter of what it might be. This condition prevails over most of Ontario. During the war the farmers did a wonderful and heroic job. With less help they produced a great deal more. They did it by working almost impossible hours. On Bruce farms the work week has averaged between eighty and ninety hours the year round, and no holidays. In summer, Sunday work has been from three to five hours; in winter, six to eight hours. Farm women, many of them with little families, with no help in the house, and too often without the conveniences that in towns are considered an everyday necessity, drove tractors, tended poultry, milked cows, helped with the haying and harvesting, and somehow found time besides for a good deal of social life. The average farmer is, I may say, not interested in an eight-hour day but more interested in an eight-hour night.

Such conditions are not good for the future welfare of Canada. There is talk of this government spending millions of dollars in opening up more farm lands in Canada. Would any government not be wise to try to make the present farmer's lot such that we could make 100 per cent use of the good land that is now available? Who ever heard of a merchant failing in business when surrounded with farmers who were flush with money, free from debt and adding a little each year to their bank accounts? Prosperity among farmers does not depend on crops altogether but on their having money in their pockets, and able to pay cash down for everything they need from town. The outlook for farming under the present government is not good, but I see a ray of hope from the fact that we, the official opposition, have as our leader the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Bracken), who understands farming from all angles. He has made a life study of it. He is eager and willing to fight for farmers' rights from the drop of the hat. I am predicting that our hon. leader will be the next Prime Minister of Canada. When that time comes, and may it be soon, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of Canada will get their fair share of the national income.

Before this debate on the speech from the throne finishes, I wish to say a few words on decentralization. I shall avail myself of that opportunity at the present time. Decentralization is not only a big word, but also a big subject. It is a subject that is not receiving enough attention in Canada today. Nearly every move the present government has made has been toward centralization. During the war this government encouraged the building of large industries in the thickly populated areas. Most of those industries are peace-time industries at the present time. The government missed a wonderful chance by not placing many of these new factories among the smaller towns and villages; thereby the migration would not have been to the larger centres, to the detriment of the smaller rural places.

Working conditions in those smaller centres would be much better. The working men and women would not have to travel up to an hour, or more, to go to and from their work. They would have that extra time to spend with their families, most likely in their gardens at home. Walking on their way to work they would know and be able to say "hello" to everyone they met. They would be able to live much cheaper. They would not be holed up in a crowded apartment that makes unnatural living conditions. They would be able to raise their kiddies as God meant them to be raised. Kiddies are not even welcome in most apartments by landlords today. Conditions in large centres are working toward holding down our natural increase in population. Natural increase beats any type of immigration that any country can think of. From the point of view of raising a family, the large congested city stinks. There is not even grass on the school playgrounds. Even our undertakers today furnish synthetic grass for our dead. Can we not supply a little of the natural grass for our children?

We have had much labour unrest in Canada, and probably will have more. Working conditions in smaller centres do not supply the same incentive to labour to go on strike as that given in the larger centres. In the smaller centre, each worker is not considered a cog in the wheel of industry, but is considered a wheel in the machinery that keeps industry running. I would suggest that any government would do well to find ways and means to encourage decentralization.

Before I finish, I wish to make a few remarks on what I think is an important subject, which is health. We must give better health services to rural municipalities; not because we of rural municipalities wish to be pampered but because it will be to our nation's benefit to give that better service. For the past five years our rural infant mortality rate has been from fifty-five to sixty per 1,000 live births, compared with thirty to forty-two per 1,000 live births in our urban areas. Really to bring home what these figures mean, I must say that we in Canada were greatly concerned over the loss of 41,000 of our youth in the six years of war; but in the same period of time, Canada has lost 130,000 infants in their first six months of life. Our infant mortality in Canada is nineteen per cent higher than in the United States. Are we as a nation not as hardy as the United States? Are we as a nation not as capable of giving our youth a chance to live?

There is a book entitled, "Canadian Mother and Child", edited by Ernest Couture, M.D., and published by the authority of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has been my privilege to mail a copy of this book to hundreds of mothers in my riding of Bruce, and in all cases those copies are greatly appreciated. Our youth is the greatest asset that Canada has today, so let us give them the service they deserve.

Mr. R. E. DROPE (Northumberland, Ont.): In rising to take part in the debate, I should like to offer my congratulations to the four new members who were elected since the last session. Many subjects have been discussed in this debate, but very little has been said about our basic industry, which I am sure we all agree is agriculture. The constituency of Northumberland, which I have the honour to represent, is situated in central Ontario east of the city of Toronto, bounded on the south by lake Ontario and on the north by Rice lake and Trent river. It is a great agricultural county dotted with many splendid towns, villages and tourist resorts that attract visitors from many other parts of the United States as well as from other parts of Canada. The waters of Rice lake and Trent river teem with fish of many varieties. We have also one of the best skiing runs in Ontario, situated on No. 45 highway eight miles north of the town of Cobourg.

Dairying is carried on extensively in this county. I wish to say something about the butter and cheese situation as it affects our county and nearly all parts of Canada. The Canadian people are great consumers of dairy products when they can get them. What do we find in the matter of butter? We have been rationed and controlled until we now find the government importing large quantities of New Zealand butter. The controlled prices of butter have been so low that farmers have been driven out of producing churning cream. The dairy farmers have been working long hours in milking cows and have not been compensated for the time they have put in. I am satisfied that our dairy farmers, if given a reasonable price, can produce all the dairy products that we require in this country. The cost of living index is being held at the expense of the farmers of Canada. This situation must be corrected; after all, our nation cannot exist without food and our food must first come from the farms.

Much has been said about keeping good times in this country. My opinion is that, if the agricultural industry is prosperous, it will provide the best market for the manufactured goods of our towns and cities. I was interested in hearing the Minister of Reconstruction (Mr. Howe) tonight telling us something about the lumber industry and what the controls that are being kept on meant to the people of Canada. Apparently he forgot to say that the administration of those controls cost the tax payers of Canada considerable money. Many articles have advanced in price even with controls. Higher prices across the line in the United States are bound to affect this country. Price control tends to reduce competition and thus tends to remove the stimulus of increasing efficiency and service to the consumer. We have a great country here. A great many of our returned men are coming back and taking their places in all walks of life. I am just wondering how the returned soldier is going to make out with these houses which have cost so much, and about whose poor construction we have heard so much. I hate to see the young soldier saddled with the high price which these houses have cost. I am quite satisfied that, if they had been built under free enterprise, we would have had a better job done and would have had more houses.

I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker, and I think that is about all I wish to say tonight.

On motion of Mr. Weir the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie the house adjourned at 10:55 p.m.

Tuesday, March 11, 1947

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. POULIOT—REFERENCE TO ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS AND ORDERS OF THE DAY

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege concerning the orders of today. On page 3 is a special order which reads:

No. 1. March 10—Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General, in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and on the proposed amendment thereto to Mr. Bracken, and on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

I wonder if the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low is to the proposed amendment to Mr. Bracken? I think the record should be corrected, because it is an insult to one of our colleagues to have him amended.

MR. KNIGHT—PRESS REPORT OF SPEECH OF MARCH 4

Mr. R. R. KNIGHT (Saskatoon City): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege in regard to an incorrect report in a Canadian Press dispatch of March 5, of a speech I made in this house on March 4, about the Hudson bay route. The dispatch, as used in certain western papers, notably the Regina Leader Post and the Saskatoon Star Phoenix, quotes me as saying that there never had been any suggestion that the port handle any products other than grain. I have never at any time said anything like that. Not only did I plead in general terms for exports and imports through Hudson bay, but at pages 1007, 1008 and 1010 of Hansard I specifically named certain commodities other than grain that I considered suitable as exports, among others wood pulp, cattle, poplar wood, feeds; and as imports, woollen goods and coal from the maritimes and diesel engines from England.

This is an unfortunate error; the fact that the speech was not mentioned here in the east and that the reports of it were garbled before being sent to the west might give rise to suspicions not justified by the facts. I hope it will be corrected.

PRESS REPORT ATTRIBUTING TO POSTMASTER GENERAL SPEECH OF MEMBER FOR TERREBONNE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): I wish to make a correction. On March 6 the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Lionel Bertrand) made a very good speech in French and it was commented on by the Ottawa Citizen. That paper attributed the speech to myself. I wish to give the hon. member for Terrebonne full credit for his good speech.

CORPORATION TAX

INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION TO COOPERATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance, of which I have sent him notice? Will the five per cent corporation tax to be imposed by provinces with dominion-provincial agreements apply to cooperatives?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Yes, it will apply in the same way as the dominion Income War Tax Act applies to them.

TAXATION AGREEMENTS

COST OF CARRYING OUT OFFERS MADE TO THE PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) asked the other day to what extent the estimates would have been increased had they included an amount necessary to carry out the offer which has been made to the provinces. I assume he meant if all the provinces accepted the offer made. The amount for 1947 would be in the vicinity of $157,000,000, on the basis of preliminary estimates of population and gross national product.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INTERNATIONAL TRADE CONFERENCE—EMERGENCY POWERS LEGISLATION—EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister, of which I sent him notice earlier in the day? Will the government give consideration to the possibility of setting aside some time soon in order that the house may have the opportunity to discuss Canada's part in the London trade conference, and the implications of the proposed reimposition of imperial preferences next June?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's question gives me an opportunity to touch on an even larger matter, namely the business of the house, and how we are to get through with it.

As hon. members know, at the beginning of the session the government indicated that it wished priority given to all measures relating to the extension of the national emergency transitional powers, and if possible to have the debate on the address postponed for a short time on that account. The first two weeks were taken up with a discussion of the emergency measures. Then the debate on the address was continued. That debate thus far has taken altogether, I think, two weeks. There was a request, similar to the one which my hon. friend the member for Rosetown-Biggar has made, by another hon. gentleman, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon), that time be allowed for the consideration of Canada's participation in the making of the treaties with Germany and Austria. That took up one day. We are now faced with the fact that we have a very short time left between now and the end of the month at which time the emergency transitional powers act ceases to be in force. The government must in every way seek to protect the situation it is faced with in considering how these powers can be extended for the time that in the public interest is absolutely necessary. For this reason, after very careful consideration, the cabinet has come to the decision that we must ask the house to allow us to give precedence and priority to this emergency legislation, that it must have the right of way and from now on be considered before everything else because of the appalling situation that would arise should it happen that some of the powers that are needed to run on into the new fiscal year had not been secured in time.

Yesterday a question came up about the Easter recess. Since that time the whips have met together and I understand that all parties in the house wish to have a longer rather than a shorter period for a vacation. I believe there are individual members in some of the parties who prefer it otherwise, but I am told that the majority in every party would prefer to have the Easter recess from April 2 to April 14 rather than for the shorter period. In deference to the wishes of all parties in the house I would now ask the Clerk to have a resolution placed on the order paper that when this house adjourns on Wednesday, April 2, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 14. That means that the early part of April will not be available for the discussion of these emergency measures. That will bring us to the middle of April before that discussion could be proceeded with. In these circumstances the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) before the end of the present week will have to indicate to the house how he hopes to be able to make sure that the necessary legislation will be enacted in a manner that will, as I say, protect the whole situation.

The government is anxious to have as many subjects debated as possible and questions will arise from time to time which will be important, but if this session is to be concluded before the autumn, we shall have to clear the decks of emergency legislation so that we can get on with the other business of the session. I am sure that more progress will be made in the end if we take this one important matter of emergency legislation and stay with it until we have cleared the slate of the various measures relating thereto. For this reason the government wishes to have the house proceed from now on—and I will have a word to say about the word "now" in a moment—with the emergency legislation.

I have said, from now on. There was an agreement among the leaders of the parties that an effort would be made to bring the debate on the address to a conclusion today. It was an agreement made of course with the understanding that no leader can speak for his whole following, that unless the following is willing to fall in line with an agreement of the kind it may not be possible to carry it out. I am told that there are a number of hon. members who still wish to speak in the debate on the address, that up to the present there are twelve whose names have been handed in, and there may be more as the debate proceeds. That means that if we are to get through with the debate today in accordance with the agreement, the speeches will have to be short. Should they run beyond the hour of eleven, perhaps the house would give its consent to sitting until twelve this evening to see if we cannot finish by that time, with the understanding that the vote itself would be postponed until tomorrow but would be taken tomorrow afternoon. If, however, the debate is not concluded today, if the house does not give its consent to having the debate concluded if necessary by continuing to sit until midnight today, with the understanding that the vote be taken tomorrow, we shall just have to proceed tomorrow in accordance with the agreement made some days ago among the leaders of the different parties, and continue with the emergency measures, allowing the continuance of the debate on the address to stand over to another time.

In the circumstances I hope it may be possible for hon. members to find some way to accommodate the wishes I believe of the house as a whole by bringing the speeches in the debate on the address to a conclusion today. In this connection may I point out that the United Kingdom parliament has found it necessary to adopt two practices which up to the present at any rate we have not adopted in this house. One is the use of closure. As applied in the parliament of the United Kingdom, closure has come to be regarded as a natural and necessary method of proceeding to get through with the amount of business that has to be transacted. In this parliament we have sought to avoid the introduction of closure, and I hope it may not be necessary for some time to come.

The other practice is that with respect to debates that are likely to take any length of time, no matter how important they are, there is an agreement made between the leaders of the parties as to the number of days the debate shall take. The number of days having been agreed upon, the amount of time to be allotted to the different parties is also agreed to. It is then left to the whips of the parties to arrange among the parties themselves what particular speakers are to have the preference or to speak for the party in the time which is allotted; but the minute the time agreed upon is reached, speaking in the debate ends. We have not adopted that practice as yet. If we can get agreement among the leaders, and have the followers support it, for a definite time for a debate, then we may not have to take the further step, but if we cannot reach these matters by agreement something will have to be done in the way of amending the rules so as to make possible the conclusion of debates on particular subjects within a definite time.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. GRAYDON: May I suggest to the Prime Minister that he take into consideration the possibility of taking some of the work from the overburdened Commons and giving it to the other place, which seems to be able to take a week or so off from time to time? We are not quite so fortunate in that respect. I make that suggestion with the idea of expediting the work and bringing about a better balance. I think the senate itself would welcome the suggestion, as well as hon. members of the Commons.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that his remarks would apply to the general business of the house, but with respect to this emergency legislation I think he will recognize that it must be initiated in this chamber. With regard to other matters, it has been arranged in so far as we can to have a number initiated in the senate. Whereever possible and advisable, that will be done.

PENITENTIARIES

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF ARCHAMBAULT REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice, of which I have sent him notice. Can the minister say whether vigorous steps are being taken to implement the Archambault report, particularly the recommendation which deplores the mingling of youthful and first offenders with hardened criminals?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Put it on the order paper.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): It is difficult to give a full answer to such a question on the orders of the day. I think I shall have to leave the discussion of penitentiary matters until either the estimates come up or legislation is introduced. There will be a bill introduced.

SALMON FISHERIES

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries, of which I have given him notice. Does the government contemplate any changes on the international salmon fisheries commission so that organized fishermen shall have direct representation?

Hon. H. F. G. BRIDGES (Minister of Fisheries): I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper, and it will be answered in due course. I cannot see that at the present time it is of an urgent nature.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Monday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

(Translation):

Mr. GLEASON BELZILE (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the election in Pontiac brought great hopes in the hearts of a little group of men forming what is called the Union of Electors. At long last, a voice expressing their beliefs was to be heard in this august chamber of the Canadian parliament. Every one was living in impatient and joyful expectation.

In the first days of the session, a rumour spread in parliamentary circles. The hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Caouette) was to speak on the speech from the throne and woe to the Liberal party.

Eventually, he did address the house. His first speech caused some sensation. He had selected from his electoral speeches those passages which had attracted most the favours and the applause of his electors. The speech was clearly meant for the hustings. The hon. member had nothing original to offer; he repeated well known themes and he had the rare merit of being called to order twice in succession. After all, one should not expect too much from a maiden speech.

Then some of his most fanciful statements having been challenged by the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Bertrand) it was once more rumoured that the hon. member for Pontiac was to speak, this time on the social credit amendment. He spoke once again last night, but I doubt very much that this time his speech, adorned with a picture of the hon. member on the title-page, will be distributed throughout the province. He reiterated these doleful denunciations of the past and made dire predictions for the future. The remedies boil down to empty suggestions and impractical generalizations. He has taken up once more the social credit gospel, pointing out the lack of purchasing power as compared with production. On March 10, however, the leader of his party agreed that during the war, our purchasing power far outstripped our productive capacity; this situation still prevails and has given the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) many a nightmare.

It would have benefited the hon. member for Pontiac to read his leader's speech so as to agree with him on that point.

Mr. CAOUETTE: You know our potential production.

Mr. BELZILE: Like his leader, however, the hon. member for Pontiac stated that his party advocated an economic theory, a doctrine and a philosophy which fulfilled the aspirations of the human individual.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BELZILE: His leader had said—

(Text):

Mr. SPEAKER: I would again ask hon. members to moderate their voices. I should like to repeat what I said last night. I do not think the house needs loud speakers so much as it does silence.

(Translation):

Mr. BELZILE: His leader had said: "Social Credit is a complete philosophy of life."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. BELZILE: That is reported at page 1146. I am happy that the discussion should have been raised to such a level.

Social Credit is therefore based on unity of theory and practice.

We must examine that question from its doctrinal aspects and I shall therefore deal with it from the philosophical and economical points of view.

Philosophically speaking, the Social Credit doctrine is primarily and fundamentally materialistic. This is in no way an insult to the Social Credit party, since its members deliberately say so themselves. They do not however accept any kind of materialism, but claim to offer a delicate epicureanism. They want in the first place to satisfy material needs. It is the same old story:

People live miserably in a land of plenty. The bankers who control money and credit are responsible. Social Credit can produce abundance for everyone by reforming the monetary system and controlling credit.

All those denunciations of capitalism tend to prove that the latter has not succeeded in bringing good living and leisure to everybody. It is evident from the arguments of its supporters that those are the basic elements of the economic and social problem.

Such materialism does not make abstraction of the spiritual factor; on the contrary, since it contends to be a complete philosophy of life; first it aims to satisfy every physical need and the spirit fulfils itself in physical surfeit.

This distinguishes their materialism from ordinary materialism which denies the existence of the soul; it is even more dangerous since it is less crude.

According to the concepts of social credit, society is primarily dependent on the economic fact of consumption; man is essentially a consumer of the products of his labour. It is that activity which distinguishes him from other creatures of nature.

All his other activities not only presuppose consumption but they are entirely dependent thereon. It is consumption which determines those activities including purely spiritual pursuits. Consumption is achieved by means of purchasing power, by means of money. The hon. member for Pontiac expressed himself as follows:

For the Canadian people and for any one of us, having security and freedom means having buying power. When we have money we also have security and freedom. Without money we have neither.

It must be noted that this is a direct cause to effect relation. Purchasing power, that is money, determines not only the economic relations between human beings but the fundamental relations of social life. Like any epicurean, social credit abhors work and seeks by every possible means to reduce it to the bare necessity. I wish to refer in this connection to the speech delivered last session by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Kuhl) in which he denounced the obligation to work.

Mr. POULIOT: He is telling us.

Mr. BELZILE: Because Social Credit would saddle the state with full responsibility for the people's welfare, it advocates a national dividend for one and all.

And there, Mr. Speaker, we have a whole set up of errors and half-truths which make Social Credit a perilous philosophy. It rests on man's baser needs and appeals directly to his digestive system.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BELZILE: It could be briefly described as the philosophy of the belly.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. BELZILE: It can only lead to a social order based solely on the material needs of man, and thus, paves the way for the soviet.

[Mr. Belzile.]

Mr. CAOUETTE: Just take a good look at the Quadragesimo Anno encyclical; then you shall know.

Mr. LESAGE: One should understand what is being said before venturing any remarks.

Mr. CAOUETTE: That's it; let us follow the example of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Lesage).

Mr. BELZILE: Here is how John Lewis put it, on page 8 of his book "Douglas Fallacies":

(Text):

In so far as he (Douglas) convinces people, often those whom socialist propaganda cannot get near, that capitalism has broken down and must be scrapped, his influence is all to the good.

(Translation):

This theory overlooks the fact that work is the first duty of man as well as a factor of social evolution because of the spiritual qualities it presupposes.

In this connection, I wish to quote from a book by Ferdinand Cavallera, professor at the Catholic Institute of Toulouse. Its title is Précis de la doctrine sociale catholique and the following is an excerpt from page 199:

God has made work the means by which man must attain to his full development. Of course, God has placed in the world all elements necessary for the conservation and development of the human race, but He has decreed that through work and work only must man secure those goods, some of which are indispensable, others useful, but answering in the aggregate to all intellectual and material needs of mankind. Any society unmindful of the law of labour is on the road to collective suicide. In some regards, the history of civilization is nothing but the history of labour and its achievements.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. BELZILE: The Social Credit tenets also overlook the real part to be played by civil society and which is to promote not individual interests but the common good. To show this, I shall again quote Cavallera. Here is what he said on page 316:

The object of civil society is to promote the general well-being of its members, not of the individual, not of each of its members taken separately, but that which is a necessary accompaniment to the normal development of their activities and on which all the rest is dependent. Although society is not called upon to ensure the happiness of the individual as such, by entrusting him with certain functions rather than others, it is nevertheless interested in the useful and efficient discharge of all functions and must be anxious to inaugurate and maintain a regime where security and the wealth of resources and services may encourage the establishment of general prosperity.

From a purely economic standpoint—I am keeping the discussion on the doctrinal ground —it must be said that the distribution of a national dividend is impossible outside a communist system.

No permanent control could be established at any stage of private enterprise, without the necessity of introducing further and more numerous controls in connection with all phases of the national economy.

The establishment of a permanent credit control by the state necessarily implies the control of domestic and foreign trade. That is such an obvious truth that the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) admitted last night that in the absence of a national dividend the state should, as an alternative, impose a compulsory discount on sale prices, which is tantamount to permanent control of prices. The control of trade necessarily implies the control of production. This government made such an experiment—a very hard and difficult one—during the last war, solely through the use of temporary controls. The state control of the economy is the communist system. This leads to the paradoxical situation where a group of people are promoting, no doubt unwittingly, the establishment of the communist system which they have bound themselves to fight.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAOUETTE: You have gone a long way in that direction.

Mr. BELZILE: For two fundamental reasons, moreover, the supporters of the present day liberal doctrine cannot grant the state a credit monopoly.

First, the state, should it become the sole dispenser of credit, would thus have at its mercy the whole economic life.

Second, the lack of competition would do away with the possibility of adjusting any mistaken credit policy which the state might advocate.

Such is the opinion of the Reverend Albert Muller, S.J., Doctor of Political and Social Sciences, Professor at the Institut supérieur de Commerce Saint-Ignace, in Antwerp, as stated in page 320 of the second volume of his book Notes d'Economie politique, where he sets out and refutes, I believe, the whole economic doctrine of Mr. Douglas. We may have the opportunity of dealing with this again.

In conclusion, I think it fitting to recall, with reference to Social Credit, the opinion of His Eminence Cardinal Villeneuve, quoted in the Quebec Semaine Religieuse of November 24, 1938.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. CAOUETTE: You awaken quite late!

An hon. MEMBER: That hurts!

Mr. CAOUETTE: No, it is harmful to you.

Mr. BELZILE:

The Church has no objection to Social Credit as a political party, but it is a different story if it contends to be a social doctrine and to create a monetary system. Social Credit is merely a lay organization which has not yet received any commendation from ecclesiastical authorities. There cannot be any question of celebrating mass on the occasion of the Social Credit League's congress.

One of the Social Credit's publicity agents having asked further explanations from His Eminence regarding that statement, his secretary replied as follows. I quote from Le Droit of December 13, 1938:

"Regarding Social Credit, His Eminence sums up his opinion as follows:

(a) Alberta's experience, in itself, is not conclusive.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Blame the Liberal party.

An hon. MEMBER: Try to understand.

Mr. BELZILE:

(b) The Church is not concerned in Social Credit as a political party;

Mr. CAOUETTE: Blame the Liberal party.

Mr. LESAGE: And we are proud of it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order!

Mr. BELZILE:

(c) If Social Credit wishes to bring about social reform, that is of a moral character, His Eminence is of the opinion that it is insufficient and ineffective.

(d) As far as the monetary system is concerned, the Church leaves it to experts to express an opinion. However, the Church feels that it should warn the faithful that Social Credit is not a cure-all for present economic evils.

Mr. LALONDE: Hear, hear!

Mr. CAOUETTE: Which has been advocated by the Liberals.

Mr. BELZILE: I must therefore conclude that the Social Credit doctrine is dangerous in theory, impractical and leads directly to communism.

For the above mentioned reasons, I shall vote against the subamendment.

Mr. CAOUETTE: Here comes the crisis.

(Text):

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Perhaps I shall be able to start, Mr. Speaker, when my friends from "Little Chicago" get through congratulating the last speaker. When the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Caouette), who is the newest member of this house, tried to interject a little question to my friends, there was the usual "Little Chicago" rabble cry. Two can play at that game. If my friends immediately opposite are going to form a "Little Chicago", a gangster club, somewhere over here we might form a "Little New York" and perhaps we shall have a feud some time.

An hon. MEMBER: We will accept the challenge.

Mr. HANSELL: We will accept the challenge, my hon. friend says. I will give my hon. friend the challenge. I listened to the hon. member for Rimouski, but owing to the fact that I do not know the French language, I did not understand very much of what he said. But I will guarantee that I understood as much of what he said as he himself did. My friends opposite have apparently come to life since the hon. member for Pontiac took his seat in the house. Let me say that my hon. friends are not coming to life just for the fun of it. They are not answering the social credit speeches now, after twelve long years, just for the fun of doing it. Social Credit, Mr. Speaker, is on the move.

Mr. LALONDE: Backward.

Mr. HANSELL: I will also say this: my friends opposite too are on the move.

Mr. LALONDE: Forward.

Mr. HANSELL: The difference is that social credit in the province of Quebec is on the move in and my friends opposite are on the move out. The thing which is worrying my friends is not the philosophy of social credit or the monetary technique that is proposed by this group. It is the possibility of losing their seats that is worrying them.

The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Belzile) attempted to explain a few things with respect to social credit. May I say to him that it is not social credit he does not understand, although apparently he assumed that he did when he tried to explain what was wrong with it. What he does not understand is the function of money under the present system. My hon. friend is an intelligent man, or at least he appears to be intelligent; and I take it from the Parliamentary Guide that he is intelligent. But there is one thing I would ask him to tell us. How would he propose to distribute to the people of Canada, Canada's great production? That is all I ask.

An hon. MEMBER: Use the railroad.

Mr. JOHNSTON: That is a good answer.

Mr. HANSELL: That is the kind of answer we get from my friend. He says to use the railroad.

[Mr. Hansell.]

Mr. KNOWLES: And no increase in freight rates.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HANSELL: Mr. Speaker, that is the height of my friend's intelligence.

An hon. MEMBER: What about yours?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask hon. members to be quiet and listen to the hon. member who has the floor. He should be allowed to continue his speech without interruption.

Mr. HANSELL: From 1930 to 1939, Mr. Speaker, this country was plugged tight with all sorts of goods and services the people could not buy. My challenge goes out to my hon. friend: let him prove his intelligence by telling us why his government was not able to distribute those goods to the Canadian people. That is all I ask him to do.

Mr. LALONDE: The Tories were in power from 1930 to 1935.

Mr. HANSELL: I did not intend to start my speech in that tone, Mr. Speaker, because I did not know I was to follow my hon. friend; but I have so started. I desire to be constructive in what I have to say; in fact the amendment that has been proposed by the group sitting in this corner of the house is designed to put forth constructive proposals. I should like to keep our debates on that high plane if possible. I think there is perhaps a little too much of knocking the government without at the same time offering some adequate proposals which they might at least try. I saw a little poem in the Canadian Social Crediter which expresses my view. It is entitled "The Quarrelsome Trio", and goes like this:

> When you hark to the voice of the knocker;
> As you list to his hammer fall.
> Remember the fact that the knocking act
> Requires no brains at all.

The second and third stanzas deal with the growler and the kicker, and since we want to get through by twelve o'clock tonight I shall omit those. The last stanza reads:

> The knocker, the growler, the kicker,
> Fault finders large and small;
> What do they need for each day's deed?
> No brains, no sense—just gall.

I believe the vote on the amendment we have proposed will show where each party in this house stands in respect to the financial position which has developed in Canada over the years. I wonder where the Liberal party stands in respect to a financial policy, or in respect to anything. The other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) made a speech, I think to his own party, in which he said he was going to follow a middle of the road policy. Evidently he stands in the middle of the road. A short time before that I read several times in the press that the Prime Minister had declared himself against third parties. I want you, Mr. Speaker, to put together those two suggestions by the Prime Minister. He wants to stand in the middle of the road, yet he does not believe in third parties. Well, even though he only believes in a second party, where is that second party to stand?

It is all right for the Prime Minister to say he is following a middle of the road policy, but I am certain history will prove that is not the case. Sometimes he is on the left side of the road, and then suddenly he moves to the right side. The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) says he must be tight. Well, I don't know about being tight; all I know is that he wabbles from one side of the road to the other whenever it suits his political convenience. I wish the Liberal party would declare once and for all where they stand. They are either following the proposals of one world philosophy, communism, or they are following the only other world philosophy, democracy. It must be one or the other. There is no middle of the road today; let us not fool ourselves on that; you are on either one side or the other. So let the Liberal party declare openly whether they are for one philosophy or the other, and act accordingly.

Since our amendment was moved, one or two press articles and news dispatches have been sent out concerning it. One news article states that the amendment is rather nebulous, following our nebulous theories. Let us look at it again; surely it cannot be so hard to understand a thing of this kind:

A. The return to parliament of complete and effective control of Canada's financial policy.

There is nothing nebulous or vague about that, and surely it is desirable.

B. The use of the national credit to meet at least some of the financial requirements for essential services . . .

Certainly there is nothing nebulous about that.

. . . and, as a guarantee that this country shall not again be subjected to financial depression...

Surely there is nothing wrong with that, and nothing nebulous about it. It does not take more than a grade 4 or grade 5 standing to understand it.

. . . to make available to each and all Canadian citizens a proper portion of purchasing power which shall not first pass through the usual channels of industry . . .

Nothing hard to understand about that, is there?

. . . this on a basis calculated to maintain a balance between effective purchasing power in the hands of consumers and the aggregate of the prices of goods available for sale.

Is there anything difficult to understand about that? A man comes along with a balance. On one side he places a pound of butter, on the other a pound weight. Is there anything hard to understand about that?

An hon. MEMBER: Where did he get the butter?

Mr. HANSELL: It need not be butter; take something else. There is nothing hard to understand about that. So if we say you put your total production in terms of prices on one side of the scale and the total amount of money required to balance it on the other, is there anything hard to understand about that? That is what the resolution says. What we claim is that there is not sufficient purchasing power coming out of the usual courses of production to buy back all the goods. What we want is an additional amount of purchasing power. There is nothing hard or difficult to understand in that.

Another article suggested that it was our usual pie in the sky amendment. I am not going to say very much about pie in the sky; all I am going to say is that the pie we have is right here on the ground, right here on earth. I challenge that gentleman to write an article proving that our amendment is pie in the sky—

An hon. MEMBER: He was pie-eyed.

Mr. HANSELL: —and that he was not pie-eyed.

I said a little while ago that there is a need for every hon. member of this house to understand a few things in respect to the present system of money. We hear it said quite often that they do not understand social credit. What they do not understand is the present system of money management. The other day when the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) was speaking I listened with a great deal of interest to what he said. It would not have been so alarming if he had confined his remarks to his own responsibility, but he said, and I quote from page 160 of Hansard:

We of this group are convinced that the only way in which we can obtain and maintain a higher standing of living in Canada is by higher production and more equitable distribution. Until we take the necessary steps to obtain that higher production and more equitable distribution we cannot hope to raise our living standards.

I am not finding fault with that, but he went on:

Our whole policy is designed for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is the C.C.F.

Mr. HANSELL: That is the C.C.F. party. The hon. member continued:

Today we see evidence of the failure of free enterprise to do these things. Let me quote to you, sir, from an editorial in the Winnipeg Tribune. "With $3,477 million tied up in savings deposits Canadian bankers are able to get only $1,438 million out at work in the form of current loans."

Apparently our free enterprise system has lost its enterprise. It has come to the point where it is dependent more and more upon government, upon protection, upon other forms of subsidy, to make it not free but very much under control.

What the hon. member was saying is that as there is a certain amount of idle money on deposit in the banks, the banks have not lent that money. He assumes at the outset that the banks lend their depositors' money. He does not know, and apparently that would carry through to his group, the way the present money system works. Evidently they do not know the rudimentary principle that banks do not lend their depositors' money. The money that is lent by banks is freshly created money, money that is created by a stroke of a pen, money which becomes an expansion of credit, which goes out in the form of loans and which becomes the depositors' money. Sometimes even intelligent people get the cart before the horse. Some years ago I was debating here when an hon. member on the Liberal side of the house rose to ask a question. I said to him, "Will my hon. friend tell me where money actually comes from?" The hon. member said, "Oh, well, I earn it". That was his answer to my question as to where money comes from. He was a member of parliament. Of course I know that it does not take brains to become a member of parliament, but I suppose the people of the country think that members of parliament are of average intelligence. Yet this member when I asked him where money actually comes from said, "I earn it". He must still believe what my leader said, that storks drop babies down the chimney.

Not long after that I was talking to a medical doctor. I think it can be assumed that a medical doctor would have considerable intelligence, because he probably went to university for a number of years. My friend who said that railroads distribute our production is a doctor, and he must have some intelligence. I asked this doctor that very same question: "Where does money come from; how does it get into existence? How is it born? Where does it come from?—because you do not pick it out of the air." He said, "Oh, well, I have a wheat field out here; that is money." I said, "Do you mean that dollar bills grow on the ends of the stalks?" "Oh, no," he said, "of course not; I sell my wheat and the grain buyer gives me the money." I said, "Where would the grain buyer get the money?" He replied, "Oh, well, well, well, well." That was his answer.

I remember asking another man this same question. He was not a member of parliament and he was not a doctor; he was just a farmer who was reaching the old age pension age. He used to say that he did not know very much because he had gone only to grade four, that all he had ever learned was learned when he was ploughing behind the horses or sitting on the tractor. I said to that old gentleman, "Where would you say money comes from?" The old fellow closed his eyes and said, "Well, let me see; I guess the banks must make it." That farmer was closer to the truth than was the member of parliament or the doctor.

Coming down on the train the other day I met a man in the parlour car. We introduced ourselves and I discovered that he was the head of a million dollar corporation. He asked me about social credit in Alberta, and it was not long before I found that he thought that the banks lent their depositors' money. One of the first principles we have to know is that money is a creature of law. The law permits the merchant or chartered banks to issue that money from the end of a fountain pen. Some hon. members may still think that this is just so much nonsense. I refer them to the report of the proceedings of the banking and commerce committee of 1939, when Mr. Graham Towers, governor of the Bank of Canada, was on the stand and being questioned by Mr. Landeryou. Mr. Towers replied to a question—I shall not read the whole thing—by saying:

A government can find money in three ways: By taxation, or they might find it by borrowing the savings of the people—

As was done by way of victory loans, raising money that was already in existence.

—or they might find it by action which is allied with an expansive monetary policy, that is, borrowing which creates additional money in the process.

The only way in which money can possibly go out is by way of loans from the bank, which is a fresh creation; and conversely, when a bank loan is paid, the money is destroyed, wiped out of existence—believe me. Now I turn to page 238 of the same report. Again Mr. Towers is giving evidence, and I quote him because surely he should know what he is talking about, and he does. I have listened to him.

Q. Now, if the government went to the bank with $1,000,000 in bonds there would be an increase of $1,000,000 in the amount of money in the hands of the people in the form of deposits? A. Assuming that no other change had taken place in the bank's position at that time, yes.

Q. In other words, when the $1,000,000 worth of bonds is presented to the bank a million dollars of new money or the equivalent is created? A. Again assuming that there is no decrease in its other investments or loans.

Q. I mean at the time, at the moment. A. Yes.

Q. It is a fact that a million dollars of new money is created? A. That is right. Of course, governments should not always go to banks in that connection; they should sell their bonds to investors.

Q. Yes. Now, the same thing holds true when the municipality or the province goes to a bank?

A. Or an individual borrower.

I skip some for the sake of brevity, and quote from a little further down on the same page:

Q. What is the proper way? Is the proper way this, that when I borrow $100 from the bank as a private citizen the bank makes a bookkeeping entry and there is a $100 increase in the deposits of that bank, in the total deposits of that bank? A. Yes.

I will give just one other quotation, from page 287 of the same report. Mr. Towers is being questioned by Mr. McGeer:

Q. But there is no question about it that the banks do create that medium of exchange? A. That is right. That is what they are there for.

Q. That is what they are there for and that is what they do. A. Yes, they do.

Q. And they issue that form of medium of exchange when they purchase securities or make loans? A. That is banking business, just in the same way that a steel plant makes steel.

Q. So that we are clear on this point that our merchant banks do create and issue 88 per cent of the money medium of exchange in common use in Canada today? That is correct, is it? A. Roughly.

"Roughly" does not apply to whether the practice is right or not, but to the figure 88 per cent. It is well for us to understand that one thing or we shall never understand the present financial system, let alone social credit proposals. When I go to the bank to borrow $100, I give my signed note to the banker, the teller puts $100 in figures in my bank pass book, I walk out of the bank and there is $100 more in existence than there was when I walked in. We cannot solve the problems of the day if we do not understand the function and operation of money.

We have heard a great deal in this debate about the need for a planned economy, and I want to deal with that for a moment. My gorge always rises a little when I hear that term "planned economy." I should like to know in the first place who is going to do the planning.

Mr. KNOWLES: Who does it now?

Mr. HANSELL: The point I am trying to make is that in a free society the less planning we have the better. I am saying something more. When we talk about planners making plans, the principle carries with it the absolute necessity of people having to fit into those plans. Suppose for instance, that a section of our country says: We are not going to have the planners tell us what to do; we do not agree with this plan. What would happen then? I heard a prominent speaker, the leader of the C.C.F. in Alberta, in a radio broadcast in that province, attack the premier of Alberta simply because he was not in accord with this constant eager clamour for planning. The leader of the C.C.F. in Alberta said: Look at General Montgomery, look at Churchill, look at General Eisenhower—they had to plan to win the war—how would we ever win a war if we did not plan? That was an excellent illustration, but it was a dead give-away. The only reason why Montgomery and Churchill and Eisenhower and the rest were successful when they planned was that they had armies, air forces and navies at their command, made up of men who had to obey their orders.

Mr. IRVINE: And the only reason why we never won the peace is that we never had anyone to plan that.

Mr. HANSELL: What we are saying is this, that individuals in the aggregate will do their own planning. They do their own planning now by having sufficient money to buy our goods. I had a school teacher come to me once and say: We have to plan production. I said, "What do you mean, plan production?" I said, "Here is a furniture manufacturer; does ne have to plan anything?" Does he? In a free society he would not; in a free society he simply offers his goods for sale, and people with money buy them. If they do not like one kind of chesterfield, they will buy another. That is the planning. Therefore the manufacturer says, "I will have to manufacture certain types of goods, because that is what the people want."

An hon. MEMBER: That is planning.

Mr. HANSELL: It is the money tokens which determine our production. I say, Mr. Speaker, that planning becomes effective only in so far as the people are willing to submit to the plan. But I might say that some of these planners are not only clamouring to plan our own country and our own lives, but they talk in terms of world planning.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not take in the universe?

Mr. HANSELL: Yes, and rule the Almighty. The greatest plan under heaven is found in the natural order of things, as they were created. Each individual is created a free moral agent. Let the individual plan his own life in peace, in security, and in freedom. This is the difference between social credit and other types of philosophy. Social credit is interested in people, in life and in the individual. The less law, the less control, the less regulation—

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. I would remind the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. HANSELL: Thank you very much. You did not need to remind me; I was going to resume my seat. The less law, the less regulation, the less control, the less planning we have, and the more money we have, the better it will be for the people.

(Translation):

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains): Mr. Chairman, the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) includes excellent practical suggestions. The hon. member stresses the importance of Parliament's supremacy over boards that are not responsible to the people. He condemns bureaucracy which, owing to the war, has substituted itself for the representatives of the people. Controls over the production of raw materials required for the development of our home and foreign trades have been imposed by bureaucracy. I wish to be fair and to recognize the useful features of the amendment to the amendment moved by the leader of the Social Credit group. However, like many others, I fear "the redefining and clarifying of the constitutional rights and responsibilities of dominion and provincial governments" as expressed in subparagraph D. of the amendment to the amendment. Indeed, Canada's constitution clearly defines the respective jurisdiction of the provinces and of the Dominion government. Personally, I consider that any amendment to the constitution of the country, in contempt of provincial jurisdiction, would violate rights which have been established and recognized for eighty years. This question of national importance offers more than a financial angle. It must be borne in mind that provinces have the exclusive right to legislate in matters of education.

Vainly have I scanned this amendment to the amendment for some reservation of this sacred prerogative. Provinces also have the right to legislate when it comes to safeguarding social welfare and, especially in the province of Quebec, when it comes to maintaining our French civil legislation. Let us not forget that confederation itself established autonomous legislature, each with its own jurisdiction which they may exercise within the limits of the constitutional laws governing them. This very law states in what matters provinces may legislate independently from the federal government. Unless some specific reservation is made regarding provincial autonomy, and I find none in this amendment to the amendment, I greatly fear that a new delimitation of powers, without consulting the provinces, or seeking their consent will lead us straight to legislative union. That is a principle I am not prepared to accept. Still less do I agree with the views expressed in this connection by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix). Speaking in this house on March 4 last, he did indeed recommend that provincial governments surrender the collection of succession duties to the federal authorities. Despite all my regard for my hon. colleague's opinions, I say that such a surrender would be a glaring infringement of provincial rights. Furthermore, it would mean relinquishing into the hands of the federal government a jurisdiction which the provinces have assumed since confederation. Besides, the province of Quebec civil code contains a whole chapter on estates and the revised statutes of the same province comprise several chapters on the collection of succession duties. I am opposed to our French civil laws being superseded by federal government jurisdiction. It is supremely unfair to make the provincial premiers responsible for the abuses that might be perpetrated in connection with the estates of rich people. If the safety deposit boxes of the banks hide any degree of dishonesty, the federal government, who have collected income tax since the first world war, should discharge their duty. Indeed, my good friend, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr LaCroix) admits that the federal government has the exclusive right of supervision over the Canadian banking system. It is therefore the duty of the central government to open these safety deposit boxes to collect any unpaid income tax. Why blame the provincial premiers for an existing evil for which they are not in the least responsible? I am sorry that extremely unfair statements have been levelled, in this house, at the leaders of the provinces forming the Canadian confederation. What is to result from such conduct? The old proverb still holds true: He who sows the wind shall reap the whirlwind.

Canada participated in the last war in order to protect Christianity, the rights of minorities, freedom and justice. Any government willing to trample on the rights of minorities through the violation of provincial autonomy would ignore the heroism of our soldiers and the war aims of the united nations. Let us not add to the affront that is now directed against us by the Moscow conference, in showing contempt for Canada. That was to be expected. During five years, I have constantly told the government that if we relied on the gratitude of Soviet Russia in the preparation of peace treaties, we would be sure to be disappointed. That is the result of our numerous sacrifices on behalf of a country which has showed its gratitude by conducting espionage activities and creating communist cells in Canada. A few hours ago, a priest and a member of a religious order who were on the staff of one of the leading educational institutions in my constituency, the Laval College in St. Vincent de Paul, were stabbed in the very city of Montreal. It is said that the man guilty of that double crime is 30 years old and that he believes in a doctrine which he expounds as follows: "I wanted to take vengeance on all those who practise the Catholic religion".

How can we not dread the election of a communist member in Montreal-Cartier on March 31 next? Drastic measures should have been taken to prevent such an election. The only legal course to follow was to outlaw the communist party in Canada.

Mr. GAGNON: Hear, hear.

Mr. LACOMBE: The government did not hesitate to take such a stand at the beginning of the war. I then supported them most heartily. Let them outlaw that party. The government will thus render a very great service to honest people, in protecting them against scoundrels of every description. There is a limit to tolerance, especially when it works to the detriment of religion and the nation. Since the amendment to the amendment deals with constitutional rights and the responsibilities of the dominion and provincial governments, I must say that there is another aspect of the rights of minorities which I wish to discuss briefly. Redistribution of electoral divisions was only possible through an amendment to the constitution. In that redistribution we should, in none of the provinces of confederation, take any action likely to reduce to insignificant proportions the representation of minorities, whatever their origin may be. In no province of Canada are there no minority rights to protect. Finally, I wish that my province may increase its representation in the House of Commons, but on the distinct condition that its influence should always be based on truth and justice.

(Text):

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am another member of this house who felt that he must rise to speak in the interests of people and of freedom in the same way that my hon. friend from the Social Credit party (Mr. Hansell) has just done. But before I turn to the three questions which I believe concern Canada most, those of taxes, controls and security, may I take the house back to 1945 just to clear up one small point which was left hanging in the air at that time. It is a question that has been before the Canadian people for upwards of two years now. I refer to the manner in which Canada's war assets have been dealt with, and I wish to quote first the words of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe) spoken on March 20, 1946, as reported at page 114 of Hansard. Speaking in the debate on the speech from the throne, he said:

> Rather a significant thing has happened recently. The United States government has tried several methods of disposing of war assets. About three months ago they scrapped all their disposal procedures and set up the exact machinery which we are using in Canada, stating quite frankly that they did so because they thought our machinery worked where theirs did not.

The minister went on to say:

> Therefore the disposal agency in the United States is now the war assets corporation, exactly the same name and exactly the same type of organization that we are using here in Canada.

My reason for bringing up that point is that I happened to pick up a United States newspaper a few months ago and I found in it a detailed explanation of how the American people are allowed to buy their surplus war products. This, I believe, is an accurate report of how their surplus products are disposed of in the United States. An advertisement is placed in the press; the goods to be sold are detailed in this advertisement, and their location is given. Then a date is set, allocating a first period of three or four days. During this first period, the first priority, veterans, men and women, of the armed forces, on presentation of their discharge certificates can enter this dump and have first choice, at the price set, of goods of the United States war assets corporation. Then, when the veterans are disposed of, another date is fixed later than the first when schools, educational institutions, state and municipal bodies can go to the same dump and purchase war assets. A third date is then set on which the general public are allowed to purchase back from the state the goods which they have paid for in taxation.

I should like to contrast that for a moment with what happens in Canada. I suppose every member of this house and many members of the general public as well as businessmen in the country have had the unfortunate and frustrating experience of trying to buy something from War Assets Corporation in Canada. They will know what trouble they must go to and what little they will find in some cases in return, because they find that in this country war assets have sold back to some business organization, or secondary corporation, the goods that the taxpayers have purchased for the use of our military forces. These organizations can then take a second profit from the country on the surplus goods purchased from War Assets.

I wish here today to refute absolutely the statement of the minister of reconstruction as to the similarity between the United States method of dealing with war assets and that of the Canadian government.

I should now like to turn to the three questions of taxes, controls and security. As I see these three, they are to a large extent inter-related. I see them for the most part as a fight between the government and the individual as to who shall spend the individual's money, as to who shall control the individual's destiny, and as a fight by the individual to secure his economic future in this country. If I may give the house one or two illustrations of this, I should like to turn first to taxation.

When the budget was presented last year, as members of the house will remember, there were words in it to the effect that the purchasing power of the people must be siphoned off because there were insufficient goods and high incomes. At that time, Mr. Speaker, you will remember that we endeavoured to modify the government's taxation policy, because we believed that a less drastic taxation policy would allow corporations and individuals to stimulate business by both production and purchasing. As we have now seen, from the surpluses produced by the budget last year, it was a crushing burden for the Canadian people to bear. With regard to taxation this year, we find that women are no longer seeking employment in business such as confectionery manufacture, laundries, bakeries, cleaning establishments and any number of other businesses, which are hard pressed to maintain their services and their output of goods because the government has seen fit to pronounce only a $250 exemption for married women. These women who have worked through the war years, who are required now to increase Canada's production, to combat inflation, to help the needy in Britain and Europe, find that their husbands are penalized by the fact that they are at work. I wish to say with all the force at my command that this one clause in the budget of last year must be changed. It is injurious to the economic life of Canada. The taxation exemption of married women must be increased.

This excessive taxation has in other ways made the lot of the white-collar worker exceptionally hard. He has been faced with a fixed income, rising prices and rising costs and is beset by many difficulties. It has also affected the wage-earner in that he has lost much of his incentive because, as soon as the taxation deductions begin to come out of his weekly pay envelope, he begins to wonder whom he is working for—his wife, his family, himself or the federal government.

We have seen many cases where difficulties arose from controls. I am going to quote only one today and I acknowledge that I tread upon dangerous political ground when I speak of rent control; but I would speak especially for one part of our population, namely, the aged people who own property and are unable to obtain possession of it. I know of cases in the city from which I come, in which older people who had rented property at the time of the freezing of rents have for many years been unable to obtain possession of this property. Some of them are approaching the pensionable age. They are living perhaps in one room, cooking over a gas burner, and the small amount of security of a home which they had provided for themselves in their old age is being denied them. I would plead with this government especially for some relaxation of the property controls in the way in which they affect old people and prevent them from occupying the homes they have purchased for their old age.

As an example of what can be done, I should like to cite to the house the case of the compulsory war savings certificates, which were undertaken by the British government during the war in order to obtain the necessary revenue. As a matter of fact, I myself hold compulsory war savings certificates for a few pounds and I do not expect they will be paid within the next twenty years. But the British government has seen fit to pay compulsory savings certificates to people over sixty-five years of age, because they realize that those are the people who need help. Those are the people who are coming to the time in life when their physical strength is perhaps failing them a little. They want help; they want shelter, and they want to enjoy some of the fruits of their savings. I would say to this government that they must revise their rent controls in some way to take care of special cases. I know it is true that the landlord has been beset by rising costs, heavy maintenance and repair work as well as heavy taxation, and at times he has been saddled with inconsiderate tenants; but that condition we must consider to some extent as an offshoot of the war and one which I hope will soon correct itself.

I should now like to turn to price control for a moment, and deal with one phase of it only. I wish to quote from the headlines of the Globe and Mail of last fall; under dateline of October 29, we have a report, presumably official, from the wartime prices and trade board. The heading is:

Moderate ceiling rises seen for some goods; may not hit foodstuffs

Farther down in the article we find these words:

Only to a slight extent, if at all, however, will any adjustments affect food prices.

Then just four or five days later, Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, speaking on the national network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, said exactly the opposite. The headline reads:

Food price rise certain once controls lifted, Reminder from Gordon

So we have a considerable amount of confusion in the mind of the general public, as is illustrated by just these two quotations. In one case they are told that prices will not rise; then the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board goes on the air and tells them that prices will rise. I recall plainly hearing the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) in this house last summer, tired and harassed as he was by the industrial relations committee, saying time and again that you could not have price control without a measure of wage control. He practically opened and closed that committee with those very words. Well, we have had wage control lifted, and now we are wondering just how long the government will continue to try to fool the people into believing they can actually control prices, because the housewives of Canada know the government have failed in what they tried to do. Yet they maintain an expensive inspection and enforcement body all across the country. If you talk to the people who spend the money, the women, in spite of Mr. Gordon spending five hours on the air, or whatever time it was, they know that he has failed in his mission. It is about time the government admitted it and did something about it.

I need not read any more quotations in that connection. I feel that this price control farce is one of the worst things that has ever been foisted on the Canadian people. To go for a moment into the realm of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), one bad feature about it is this. The announcements made by the government are confusing and frightening to the marginal people of this country, the men and women who are struggling along trying to raise families, with perhaps a few dollars over one week and a few dollars short the next week. Every time the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board or one of his minions goes on the air or makes these announcements these people become more and more fearful at these repressive measures. I am sure the people of Canada would prefer the facts.

There is only one other matter I should like to mention, and I shall do so briefly; that is security. The men and women of Canada who are being taxed so heavily and controlled and decontrolled by the government in this frenzied fashion, all have in mind their own personal security. If the majority were to pass judgment on this government I believe they would say, "We prefer to keep a larger part of our income and be the arbiters as to how we shall spend it." I think they feel they would rather make provision for their own future security than trust it to the government. One way in which this could be done would be to have started a national contributory pension plan, so that young men who entered an industry which perhaps did not have a pension plan of its own would be able to contribute to a government scheme of this kind. That would relieve the state of the necessity of caring for them in later years as old age pensioners and give them a feeling of security for the future. Further in that connection I should like to quote again, because I desire to have it appear in what I have said today, what was said by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) on March 7 of this year, appearing at page 1114 of Hansard. There the hon. member spoke in support of Canadian businessmen. I have been dealing with these matters on an individual basis, but the hon. member dealt with the case of the businessman much better than I could have done. He said:

. . . the businessmen of this country have been pushed around, not only during the war but since, as though they were enemies of the state. Success on the part of the individual is becoming a subject of deprecation. To many bureaucrats a businessman, however honest he may be, is an object of suspicion and in many cases a parasite to be denounced. The honest businessman—

Here I would add the employer of labour, the man who risks his capital, the man who uses his initiative, his brains and his scientific genius.

—no less than the farmer and the worker and other citizens, should be entitled to fair and equitable treatment.

When I began, Mr. Speaker, I took as my main approach the fight by the individual against the government for control of his own life, as long as he does not trespass against his neighbour. I have endeavoured to show that the individual has been denied security because of excessive taxation and hobbling controls. I conclude with the remark with which I opened: that I as an individual, and I know we as a party, stand for the people and their freedom from control by government.

Mr. W. A. TUCKER (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to follow the hon. member who has just spoken, except to this extent. He said that, in his opinion, price control was the greatest farce ever imposed on the Canadian people.

Mr. SKEY: If I may interrupt, I mean at the present time; since the war.

Mr. TUCKER: If it was necessary during the war I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in the period immediately following the war, while there are many scarcities due to the war, it is necessary to keep controls in force and not remove them until a reasonable supply of goods is available to the consumer. Otherwise you are going to have a sudden rise in prices and the consumers, particularly the poorer people who cannot afford to pay higher prices, will be penalized. Surely when the hon. member speaks like that and suggests there must be immediate decontrol of all prices without regard to scarcities, he is not—

Mr. SKEY: I did not say that.

Mr. TUCKER: —speaking for the Conservative party.

Mr. GRAYDON: You are just putting up the usual straw man.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Oh, keep quiet.

Mr. SKEY: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I said that the government should take some action to protect the individual, because the government knows these controls have failed.

Mr. TUCKER: I took down the hon. member's words, and I understood him to say that price control was the greatest farce ever imposed upon the Canadian people. Then the hon. gentleman said he meant present price controls. I suggested that if price controls were removed there would be tremendous increases in the prices of certain commodities, and that these controls could be removed only in an orderly way. That is the policy of the government, and I take it that is what he is finding fault with. If all controls were removed the result, of course, would bear heavily on the person of low income, and I said I hoped the hon. member was not speaking for his party, which he said wished to be known as friendly to the common person, and so on, because I do not believe that could be regarded as very helpful to the common man.

I do not wish to go into the Veterans Land Act at any great length because this matter was covered very well and completely by the right hon. minister in his presentation to the house. However, some things have been said and, although I have not the time to deal with them in full, I should like to say a few words in regard to the general picture of the small holdings programme.

The part of this programme that has come under criticism in this house comprises something over 2,600 houses which were built by the Veterans Land Act administration pursuant to a request that they make some contribution to the building shortage. In order to try to help out, they negotiated to build a certain number of houses. They have built between 2,600 and 2,700 houses, but that is only a small part of the whole programme. Up to the end of January, 1947, there were settled by the Veterans Land Act administration 12,023 veterans in full-time farming; 10,308 on small holdings; 417 in commercial fishing; 994 in full-time farming on provincial projects, making a total of 23,742 who have been settled by the Veterans Land Act administration up to the end of last January. Of course it will be seen by the house that 2,600 is only slightly over ten per cent of the total.

I think it will be admitted by all hon. members who have visited these small holdings that the majority of the men on them are well satisfied with the homes they have. At least that expression has been used to me in connection with the ones I have visited. These men realize that they are getting homes that cost them much less than they would have paid if they had got them themselves outside of the Veterans Land Act and spent their reestablishment credit. Under V.L.A. there has been a write-off of $1,400, and in some cases they have had the benefit of the write-off of part of a million dollars which was appropriated to cut down costs where they have been raised by unusual conditions. Then they are getting their money at three and a half per cent. Most of them are very well satisfied with the deal they have made.

I fancy that if a careful examination were made of the situation it would be found that no more than four or five per cent of those who got these homes are really dissatisfied which, if correct, indicates that over ninety-nine per cent of the people settled under the Veterans Land Act are apparently well satisfied.

Mr. BROOKS: Your arithmetic is a little off.

Mr. TUCKER: I said about four or five per cent of ten per cent, which is less than one per cent; it is about one-half per cent.

Mr. HARKNESS: That is all supposition.

Mr. TUCKER: It is based upon observations which I have made and I am as much entitled to my own opinion as anyone of the opposition.

There has been some criticism of the delay in regard to the Veterans Land Act administration. One reason for the delay was a desire to avoid the mistakes which marked the administration of the soldier settlement department after the first war.

An hon. MEMBER: You did not avoid the mistakes.

Mr. TUCKER: We have gone a long way toward avoiding them. Again that is my own opinion. I think most people who have studied the situation will agree that the government have gone a long way toward avoiding these mistakes. Another reason for some delay was the feeling that the boys overseas should have a chance to get back before settlement was started on a large scale. Therefore it was impossible really to start settling on a large scale until the late fall of 1945. As hon. members know, safe settlement cannot be indulged in during the winter when the ground is covered with snow, so that meant it was really the spring of 1946 before work could be started on any scale. It meant also that so far there has been only one season in which to do this work. As I say, there have been almost 24,000 settled already, which I think is not a bad record thus far.

There has been some criticism of the houses, but I would say that one of the reasons for the difficulty is that which has faced anyone who has tried to build a house, the shortage of proper materials. Builders working for the Veterans Land Act administration in many cases had to work with inferior building materials. It was never thought that ultimately these houses would not be brought up to specifications, but it was felt that it was better to have houses completed and roofs over the heads of a large number of veterans than to stand upon red tape and refuse to let them go ahead with the building.

Mr. HOMUTH: That excuse is just as leaky as the roofs of the houses.

Mr. TUCKER: I wonder that the hon. gentleman says anything in view of his remarks a few minutes ago. That was the attitude in regard to this matter, that it was better to go ahead. It was impossible in some cases to finish the houses to specifications and representations were made that the houses should be opened so that veterans would be able to get shelter. In many cases veterans were permitted to take possession of houses before they were finished and, therefore, before there was any chance to decide what the final cost would be.

I do not know whether my hon. friends would have said that we should have prevented these veterans from taking possession until the houses were fully finished, even though they were habitable and would provide roofs over their heads. I sometimes think they are quite reckless with their criticism.

Mr. HOMUTH: Nonsense.

Mr. TUCKER: It may be nonsense to my hon. friend; he may be an expert in nonsense, but in any event the effect of that criticism was that the contractors who had agreed to their houses being taken possession of before they were finished found themselves advertised all over the country as having done a poor job when it was understood that they would have to go back and finish the job. They now do not want to give possession of houses until fully finished because they will be held up all over the country as having done a poor job. The result is the department is having difficulty in getting possession of houses before they are fully finished. There is a feeling now that, in view of the criticism which has been indulged in, the only safe policy is to wait until the houses are absolutely finished before possession is granted.

Mr. HOMUTH: Will my hon. friend permit a question? Will he say that there was nothing wrong with the houses built for the veterans of this country?

Mr. TUCKER: The government has never said that. If my hon. friend will just contain himself a moment he will hear what I have to say. We had to use inferior materials and surely that fact will penetrate into my hon. friend's head. I just finished saying that at no time was there any thought that this obligation should not be accepted and these houses be finished according to specifications. But I said it was felt that it was important to give these boys roofs over their heads as quickly as possible, and I think that should have been taken into consideration. As soon as materials can be got to bring these houses up to specifications, they will be brought up to specifications. There has been no attempt to avoid full responsibility in regard to bringing these houses up to specifications and doing a good job.

Mr. MILLER: Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. TUCKER: I do not mind questions as long as I am given enough time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I cannot allow any time for questions being asked. An hon. member is allowed to speak the allotted time of forty minutes, which includes questions.

Mr. MILLER: Do you think you should not be criticized because of your remissions?

Mr. TUCKER: I said that this criticism should have taken account of what was being done. I said that the effect of criticism which did not take that fact into account, which did not give credit to the contractors for having let people into their houses before they were finished, was making them afraid to do that now. Had hon. members risen in their places and said that they realized the houses were not finished, that they realized the government had let people take possession before the houses were ready; had they asked for assurance that ultimately the houses would be brought up to specifications as soon as materials could be obtained, nobody would have found any fault whatever.

Mr. LOCKHART: What about the sites?

Mr. TUCKER: I do not intend to take up a whole lot of time to deal with the question of sites. The very basis of this plan was that it should be agricultural land from which a part of the veteran settler's income would come to sustain himself. It was a land settlement scheme, not an urban housing scheme. It was never intended in the first place that it should be an urban housing scheme. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt) complained of the drainage on Lulu island. To complain because some water runs onto the land of a man who is supposed to be going into farming is not fair criticism. The drainage there was also under the control of one of the most competent drainage authorities in Canada.

Mr. PEARKES: Was the same authority responsible for the drainage at Braefoot?

Mr. HOMUTH: Ducks in the cellar.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. There are too many interruptions. There cannot be intelligent discussion with so many interruptions. Questions can be asked only with the permission of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. TUCKER: In reply to the interjection in regard to Braefoot, in spite of the fact that this administration went somewhat beyond the original intention of the act and engaged in building which was very close to an urban character and actually built at Braefoot, it has not sought to evade responsibility even in that regard. We have said that drainage will be put in as quickly as it can be put in. I am sure hon. members realize that a good job really has been done in providing these 2,700 homes and giving possession as quickly as possible to the veteran. There have been a few defects in workmanship and in materials in some cases, but these defects will be made good at the expense of the public as quickly as possible, and where the contractor is to blame he will be expected to make good. Certainly if that is all hon. members wished to say, they could have said it without suggesting that in some way there had been some terrible breakdown of this whole plan of settlement. There is nothing in the whole plan of which this administration needs to be ashamed. It is wide open to inspection. This administration believes that it has done a good job for a veteran. The veteran who has a house under this scheme knows he is much better off than he would have been had he had to go out like the forty thousand other veterans who have done so and buy a house with his own resources.

I wish to deal for a moment with the question of immigration. I think most of us feel that we are in possession of one of the richest areas on the earth's surface. We are in possession of half of a rich continent, and it is not the proper attitude for us to take, in the present state of world affairs, to say that we are going to bar out of that area large numbers of homeless people who would like to come and make their homes here, particularly the relatives of those who came here and laid the foundations for our country, pioneered it and helped to build it up to the country it is today. They now see their relatives in the old lands from which they came in danger of losing their lives, and they say to us that they would like to be able to give them protection and asylum in this dominion. I would say this to the government in that regard. There has been an extension of the terms upon which people can enter this country, and I appreciate that very much, but some of these extensions should, I think, be much further extended. From amongst the refugees and displaced persons in Europe anybody in this country should be free to bring in a relative and that relative's family. For example, a man might be willing to come to Canada and work as a farm labourer, or he may be needed in mining, lumbering or the logging industry in this country. To say to such a man, you can come here but you must leave your wife and your family over in Europe with its present unsettled conditions, I say that it is not right to offer to take a man in but ask him to leave his wife and family over there. Our government should not be a party to any policy that is based on such a separation of families, particularly the relatives of those who have laid the foundations of our country, pioneered and built it up to what it is today.

In regard to this whole question of immigration it is generally admitted that we shall need immigrants and the we should let them in, but some say that we should go about this in a slow and careful manner. There seems to be the idea that if we go about it very slowly and take in only a few immigrants each year we shall always be able to get the numbers we want, but with conditions as they are in Europe today I venture to suggest that several of these countries from whom in past years we drew some of our best immigrants will not permit their people to leave their shores. I doubt whether the Scandinavian countries will permit their people to leave their shores in any great numbers, and I believe the same is true of Great Britain herself. I am satisfied from past experience that the nations behind the iron curtain, no matter how much those people may want to leave the control of the Soviet, will not be allowed to leave those countries, and let it not be forgotten that we got some of our best settlers from the Ukraine, Poland and some other countries that are now wholly or partly under the control of the Soviet.

So that the situation today is this. There are about 800,000 people, exactly the kind of people who have helped to build up this country, living in camps in Europe today under terrible conditions and they do not want to go back under the control of the Soviet. They are asking for a chance to find a home in the new world, and we urge that when they have relatives here, they should be permitted to come here, even if we have at one time to take in more than we would take in on an ordinary immigration basis. It is a question of either taking them now and saving their lives or they will be lost to us and be forced back where they fear to go. If we take these people in we shall be taking in settlers who have already demonstrated their loyalty and devotion to the cause of freedom. They have picked themselves as desirable immigrants for Canada by virtue of the fact that they are in these camps. The fact they are there shows they are against totalitarianism, against communism, and so on. I urge the government, with all the strength I have, to adopt a policy which will permit a reasonable number of these people to come in as soon as possible. The first step which I urge should be taken is that relatives of those in this country should be admitted at once.

I should like to tell this house about one thing that has pleased me more than anything else since I came to Ottawa to attend this parliament. A delegation waited on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) in regard to this question of immigration. It showed the good will and the unity which prevails in this country in regard to this matter, which is not only an economic matter and a political matter but a matter of Christianity and humanity. On that delegation on which I had the honour of accompanying the Prime Minister there were represented all the Lutheran churches in Canada. A representative of the Roman Catholics of the prairies, a representative of all the Mennonites, a representative of all the Sudeten refugees, a representative of all the Ukrainians, both Greek Catholics and Greek Orthodox, a representative of the Poles went there in one combined delegation and said to the Prime Minister: "Our relatives are over there in danger. We ask you, without regard to racial origin or religious creed, to allow them to come here to their relatives and find a refuge in this great free country." One of these men said to the Prime Minister: "I never cease to remember that but for the action of your government back in 1938 in admitting us I would not be alive today." Another man said: "I never go to bed at night but what I thank God for the privilege of living in this great free country and I want the chance of bringing my relatives here to enjoy the privileges that I have enjoyed."

Mr. BROOKS: What did the Prime Minister say?

Mr. TUCKER: The Prime Minister said that he would give very careful consideration to the matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. TUCKER: That may amuse my hon. friends. There is apparently some thought in the minds of my hon. friends that I am trying somehow, as they now indicate by their question and attitude—and the question was by a good friend of mine—to put some political bent to it. This is a national question; it is a question of humanity; a question of Christianity; a question on which all parties should join together, and I am making my appeal for the support which all hon. members might care to give to my suggestion.

Mr. KNOWLES: You have that. What about the Prime Minister?

Mr. GARDINER: He will go a great deal farther than any of my hon. friends will go.

Mr. TUCKER: When he did open the doors in 1923 some of my hon. friends found fault with him for doing so.

I come to another matter which is of interest to us, particularly in Saskatchewan. I am sorry that I shall not have time to run over all these subjects with which I wish to deal; therefore I shall do little more than mention some of the points. In regard to the crop failure bonus on the prairies, I would suggest to the government that every possible consideration be given to making the act more flexible. At the present time, if a township has not the requisite yield to bring it within the act a rectangular block of not less than nine sections may be brought into it if it is lying alongside an eligible township. I suggest that that section should be amended to make it more flexible so that it should not necessarily be a rectangular block, or lie alongside an adjacent township, so long as it is within an adjacent township, and that nine sections are too much. If that were made more flexible it would improve the administration of the act.

In regard to prairie farm rehabilitation, I urge most strongly upon the government its extension to the whole province. It should indeed be extended to the whole Dominion of Canada with advantage to the development of the country.

I also wish to commend the government for getting plans ready to spend $110 million to bring under cultivation a million and a half acres of land which cannot be cultivated today because of lack of water. I urge the government to press ahead with its plans as fast as available labour and supplies will permit. This programme which will bring under cultivation a million and a half acres is not an expenditure of money in the ordinary sense; it is an investment in the future development of the country which will pay real dividends in the development of the human resources of our country. As an example of the extent to which it will make a contribution, may I cite the yield in an area in Alberta of 30,000 acres of irrigated land. On these 30,000 acres the sugar beet growers in 1946 received an average return of $150 per acre. This yield was from land which formerly was practically worthless. On all the crops in that area the average yield was $75 an acre.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Gross?

Mr. TUCKER: Gross return. In regard to that, all I shall take time to do is to urge the government to proceed with the programme just as fast as available labour and material will permit.

I have already stated my stand in regard to grain marketing. We of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan are behind—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The eight ball.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. TUCKER: —the wheat board as the best method of marketing wheat. I do not see what is so funny about that. I should like to deal with the laughter but I have not time. I think my hon. friends are masters of that.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It looks like it.

Mr. TUCKER: Perhaps they are. I ask any one of them to tell us whether or not he is against it. If there is a Tory over there I should like him to rise in his place and say that he is against it today. I will challenge him to do so.

Mr. FERGUSON: I am against it.

Mr. TUCKER: You are against it because you are in an area where there is no wheat growing as in the west. I should like to see a western Tory get up and say that he is opposed to it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): We do not have western Tories.

Mr. TUCKER: Are you against Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Mr. FERGUSON: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think they are inefficient.

Mr. TUCKER: You are against them.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): They are inefficient.

Mr. TUCKER: I will not take time to go into that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You cannot.

Mr. TUCKER: I could do it very easily but my time is running out.

We should like to see the wheat board have control of the marketing of all grains. We are glad to see that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, representing all the farmers of Canada, in its last submission to the government endorsed the present wheat board and the way they are handling their job. Do I understand that some Conservatives representing farming districts are not in line with the representations of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I answer the hon. member's question? He wanted a westerner to say something. I am against the wheat board having complete and absolute charge of the marketing of all grains. Is that a straight answer, or is it not?

Mr. TUCKER: Yes, that is fine. I am glad the hon. member said that, because it helps to put his party a little more on the record, but his hon. friend alongside him has not said that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Stay with me; do not leave me.

Mr. TUCKER: I do not want to stay with the hon. member, much as I like him. Charming as he is, he does not represent his whole party.

With regard to barley, the representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture indicated that they would like to see at least $5 paid upon land sown to barley. There have been many arguments about that but I have not time to go into them this afternoon.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Tell us what you are going to do about it. Your constituents would like to know now.

Mr. TUCKER: I am not a member of the government. All I can do is to make my representations.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. TUCKER: That may amuse my hon. friends but what is so funny about that?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You have no sense of humour.

Mr. TUCKER: I should like to say to the government that I hope it will accept the recommendation. I must say I am doubtful whether $5 an acre will be enough to bring out the production of barley which should be brought out to provide the necessary feed not only for the west but for the eastern part of Canada and British Columbia but it will help.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Why accept it?

Mr. TUCKER: I notice they also suggested that the freight policy be continued. Under that policy, as hon. members know, $79 million were paid out to January 31, 1947, to subsidize cost of freight on feed grain shipped east and to British Columbia, and $25 million was paid on subsidizing feed grain. Of course that has meant that we could grow more feed grains for live stock and a policy of feeding live stock could be built up in the other parts of Canada.

That brings me to another question, the question of freight rates. It is interesting to note that the assistance given to the cost of shipping of feed grain to British Columbia and to the eastern part of Canada has had such a tremendously beneficial influence upon the building up of the agricultural industry in Ontario. It shows what effect high freight rates have on stultifying and holding back the development of the country. One of the things that holds back the development of our country is the large stretch, the unproductive spread between west of the lakes and east of Winnipeg. There is very little production there and our produce has to be hauled both ways over that stretch. Someone has made a suggestion which might do much more good than studying how to raise rates, and that is to treat that area much as you would treat a river to be crossed, where you provide a bridge at public expense, or perhaps where you provide a canal on which you can haul goods, and do so at the expense of the public. The suggestion is made that if the cost of hauling goods across that unproductive area were paid by the state it would increase development not only in western Canada but in eastern Canada as well. It would increase national development amazingly.

I was pleased at the last meeting of the national Liberal federation that they were definitely opposed to any increase in freight rates. They said that if the railroads had to have more money to carry on, some other method should be adopted than raising the rates. I suggest that the question of paying the cost of hauling goods back and forth across that unproductive stretch might be considered.

It operates very much like a tariff. It costs money for us to fetch goods from eastern Canada and it costs the people in eastern Canada money to have goods taken to them from the west. In other words, it operates as a tariff does, and our party should give consideration, I submit, to the elimination of that brake upon the development of the country. That would be much better than increasing freight rates.

In regard to cooperatives, we know some are doing business in various parts of Canada. Our party in Saskatchewan has suggested that the federal government enact a dominion cooperative act as a necessary step in the complete functioning of the cooperative movement in Canada, as it is being carried on throughout the country. There should be provision for them to get incorporation from the dominion parliament.

As to the Hudson Bay railway, the western provinces set up a technical committee to study this problem and they recommend that, to give this route a fair trial, at least 16,000,000 bushels should be exported through that port this year. If 16,000,000 bushels were exported through that port it would eliminate all the deficits on the Hudson Bay railway; it would eliminate all deficits on the terminals, and it would give a real test to that port. Incidentally, it would save a great deal of extra money to the wheat growers of the country through the saving of over four cents a bushel freight on wheat exported through the port.

I urge the government, with all the emphasis I can exert, to bring pressure to bear upon the wheat board and everyone else involved to see to it that that great port, built, after all, with the money realized from the sale of western lands, shall be given the trial which it deserves and which we in the west believe will demonstrate that it is a workable means of communication not only between ourselves and Europe but between us and the maritime provinces of Canada. I would urge that upon the government.

I am aware that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in his trip overseas a year ago explored means whereby the Scotish cooperatives might take over some of our merchant ships to start trading out of and into Hudson bay. What they feel it possible to do in that regard I do not know, but I hope that everything will be done that can be done in developing that route.

In regard to floor prices, we have, as hon. members know, an Agricultural Prices Support Act. That is designed to put a floor price under farm products to ensure to the farmer an adequate and stable price for his products and to give him a return which will bear a fair relationship to that enjoyed by other members of the community. We of the Saskatchewan Liberal party say that that should be adopted not only for the transition period from war to peace. We suggest that there should be a floor under farm prices as a permanent part of the economic set-up. There should be stability in the income of the farmer, who has to raise, care for and educate his family just as other people have to. He is as much entitled to stability in income as any other part of society, and we ask that consideration be given to making the Agricultural Prices Support Act a permanent part of the economic set-up.

In regard to income tax, everyone knows how hardly in recent years it has borne on the various parts of the country. Everyone knows it has had the effect of discouraging initiative and has made different people say that they do not want to work such long hours, while others say that they do not care to produce because they are afraid of the effect which the income tax might have on their net income. They think their efforts might not be worthwhile. The same is true throughout our whole economy. The farmer however has felt that the income tax act is one that has borne extraordinarily upon him.

I would point out two ways in which it has done so. Unfortunately there is a tendency on the part of some people, not farmers, to say that the farmer is taking an unreasonable attitude in this matter, but here are two ways in which he feels that the income tax has been unfair to him, and in these respects he would like to see a change made. In the first place, the family on a farm, the wife and children, make a real contribution to the income of the farmer, and yet that is not taken into consideration properly when he makes up his income tax returns. At the end of, say, ten years his financial standing is compared with that of what it was ten years previously and he is considered to have made all the money himself during that time. The farmer is certainly entitled to say that in the making of this money there were others who helped. Several people may help him to make the money because, while he may not pay it out at once to his children when they help him around the farm, he has in mind ultimately paying them by assisting them when they start on a farm of their own. Something definite should be done to take that situation into account and correct it.

The other point is this. In Saskatchewan we had sometimes as many as eight or nine years of crop failure. Men had worked for ten and fifteen years building up an estate for themselves and then had a succession of crop failures. Then they began to go into debt.

They put mortgages on their farms and sometimes lost everything they had made during a period of ten or fifteen years. Then with better crops they began to make money again and they want to pay off these mortgages and get into the same position they were in ten or fifteen years ago. But the income tax department says to them, as it does to other people in other lines of work, "We are not concerned about what you lost ten years ago; we are concerned only with what you are making today."

I give the government credit for being willing to average farm income over three years but I still say that something further should be done to take care of that particular situation of the man in western Canada who lost sometimes as many as nine or ten crops.

These are only some of the items that I wished to put before the house in the time at my disposal. I am sorry I could not cover all that I should like to have touched upon, but I thank the house for the indulgence it has shown me.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I am sure the house now regrets that it did not allow the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) to make from the very beginning the kind of speech he ended up with. I hope he will not take it amiss when I congratulate him on the excellent speech he has made in support of the programme which the C.C.F. has been advocating in Saskatchewan for so many years.

The debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne has done at least one thing. It has demonstrated that the war is over and that we are now face to face with all these problems which we failed to solve in the period between the two wars. The debate has also brought into clear focus the difference in policies as between the parties in this house dealing with our social and economic affairs. From observing the government's administration of affairs, and from listening to the speeches by the official opposition, it must be clear to anyone that there is no fundamental disagreement between them in the matter of policy. The chief difference that I see between the policies of the government and those of the official opposition is that the government wants to make an orderly retreat to the pre-war economy and the official opposition wants to make a disorderly retreat to the same ground. Neither party, it appears, has learned anything from the lessons of the twenty years of uneasy peace between the two wars nor, does it seem, have they learned anything from what happened during the six years of war itself, and a great deal happened during those years.

The other party, the Social Credit party, as far as I have been able to observe, believes in nearly all the fallacies and misconceptions on which the policies of the Liberals and Conservatives are based, and it has quite a number of its own fallacies besides. I do not think I am doing the Social Credit party any injustice when I say that it holds to the theory—this is good, orthodox, old-fashioned Liberal theory and I understand my hon. friends over to the right have adopted it—that the welfare of all is best served when each is concerned only with enhancing his own welfare. This philosophy is usually referred to as private enterprise, and my hon. friends have put themselves on record a dozen times during the present session that they are in favour of it. But to be completely fair with the Social Credit party, I must say that, although it adheres to the principle of capitalism—that is, private enterprise—as the best way of life, it also believes that there is a means by which we can avoid and overcome the evils associated with private ownership, namely, by the issue of a liberal supply of greenbacks.

Mr. BLACKMORE: "Liberal" is not the word; suitable and adequate.

Mr. MacINNIS: Imagine that, to be suitable and adequate, it would have to be liberal; and I am afraid that the more liberal it would be, the more inadequate it would be. The Social Credit party not only believes that one can have his cake and eat it too, but also believes that one can eat the other fellow's cake and that he can still have it. That is the fundamental basis of their policy.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Nonsense.

Mr. MacINNIS: For the first time during the session I agree with the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), that it is nonsense. The C.C.F. believes that the people should own, control and operate the means by which they must live. Not only that; we say that the masses of the people who do not own, control and operate the means by which they live, are not free.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Farms, too. Put them in also.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes; and I put a donkey in the barn.

Mr. BLACKMORE: You are afraid of that one.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MacINNIS: Any people who do not own the means by which they live must go hat in hand to the people who do own those things and ask for the right to live or the right to work in order that they may live. I should like to point out now that the policy we believe in, that of social ownership of the means of life, is becoming increasingly accepted throughout the world, so that today any man capable of reasoning who will look at the present world situation can come to only one conclusion, and that is that it is no longer a question of capitalism versus collectivism; it is a question today of what kind of collectivism the world is going to have. Shall it be totalitarian or democratic collectivism? The group with which I am associated believe in democratic collectivism; in other words, democratic socialism.

I wish to take a little time, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). I shall also, if I have time, deal with the Social Credit philosophy on which the amendment is based. Before dealing specifically with the subamendment, I wish to refer briefly to certain statements made by the leader of the Social Credit party when he spoke in this debate on February 3. At page 75 of Hansard, he is reported as saying:

> Furthermore, I say to you, sir, that it is my belief and the belief of those in this group in the house, that any time the government sets out to achieve as its major conscious objective full employment, social security, or a planned economy, that government is going straight down the road to slavery of the people in the country.

I quoted that short paragraph because I wish to compare it with some other quotations from the hon. gentleman's speech. On page 76 of Hansard, just half a column distant from the quotation which I have just read, I find this:

> I was very much disappointed that the speech from the throne made no mention of the government's intention to enter upon a bold, progressive and systematic programme of development in the north, and its colonization as well.

Put the passage I have just read along with the passage that I read first, and this is what you will find. The hon. member for Peace River told the house that any government that set out to achieve as its major conscious objective, full employment, social security or a planned economy, was leading the people down the path of slavery. The next moment he is criticizing the government for not planning in order to improve the standard of living of the people of this country.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Two entirely different things.

Mr. MacINNIS: The only difference is that they were said at different times. I imagine that any government that was going to enter on a bold, progressive and systematic programme would have to plan that programme. However, perhaps I am wrong.

I should like to quote another sentence from the same speech, on the same page of Hansard. I quote a sentence only, but it is long enough and there is enough in it to prove the point I desire to make. That point is that no matter what the Social Credit party says, or for what purpose it says it, that party believes in planning. This is the quotation:

> Among their concrete achievements the Alberta government has recently commenced a vast scheme of clearing and colonization of lands in the Peace River country which in five years' time will result in 200,000 acres of new farms being brought under cultivation and production.

There again you have the hon. member for Peace River, who was criticizing the C.C.F. for advocating planning, who was telling the house that any government engaged in planning was taking the people down the path of slavery, congratulating the government of Alberta upon having done a little planning, a five-year plan if you like, in northern Alberta. So now what can we say of either the sincerity or the integrity of a party leader who condemns government planning when it is advocated by one party, who criticizes another party for not doing it, but who praises his own party for having done it? The C.C.F. believe that in our complex society production and distribution must be planned. What is more, we know it will be planned, for not to plan would be anarchy. The only question to be decided, then, is, will it be planned for the benefit of the country as a whole by the democratically elected representatives of the people, or will it be planned by a few individuals for their own profit? That is the situation confronting us today; those are the alternatives. Plan we must, and we must also accept the economic and social consequences of the kind of planning we do.

I now come to the Social Credit amendment, which would delete the Progressive Conservative amendment of no confidence and substitute four proposals. I am going to read only one of those four, and I shall state my purpose in reading it. The first proposal asks for the return to parliament of complete and effective control of Canada's financial policy. I am under the impression that this parliament now has and always has had full and complete control of Canada's financial policy. Of course it is open to question whether parliament has always exercised the power to make and control a financial policy in the interests of Canada. It is quite likely it has allowed other people to make the policy; but there is no doubt where the power to make such policies lies. In that connection, however, the first prerequisite to the complete and effective control of a financial policy is complete and effective control of the financial institutions through which financial policies are carried out. In the opinion of this party, that implies the public ownership of our financial institutions; for instance, the public ownership of the chartered banks. The Social Credit party, however, is opposed to the public ownership of banks. They believe our financial institutions, along with all the other means of production, distribution and exchange, should be operated for private gain. This is a beautiful example of the contradiction between what the Social Credit party believes in and the results the Social Credit party wants to achieve.

I shall try to put the point briefly and, I hope, correctly. First, they say our financial institutions should be privately owned and, I believe it logically follows, operated for the private profit of the owners. Second, they want them operated for the social benefit of the community as well. I do not believe you can get those two things under those conditions. They fail to see, as so many other hon. members fail to see, that most of the time of this house is taken up in trying to harmonize the welfare of the community with the demands of an economic system that has for its purpose the exploitation of the community.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose for the dinner recess I was about to read section B of the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River. This is the section of the subamendment which contains the meat, if I may apply that term to a fallacy, of the social credit economic philosophy. It reads:

> B. The use of the national credit to meet at least some of the financial requirements for essential services; and, as a guarantee that this country shall not again be subjected to financial depression, to make available to each and all Canadian citizens a proper portion of purchasing power which shall not first pass through the usual channels of industry, this on a basis calculated to maintain a balance between effective purchasing power in the hands of consumers and the aggregate of the prices of goods available for sale.

As I said, that is the meat of the social credit programme, the issuing of what they call debt-free money, with the suggestion or the assertion that it will neither add to prices nor diminish the amount of income that any section of the community may receive. I claim that cannot be done.

I want you to note the phrase, "as a guarantee that this country shall not again be subjected to financial depression." The assumption of that phrase, an absolutely erroneous assumption, is that our depressions are financial. I wish to make the assertion, which I do not believe can be contradicted, that we have never had a financial depression in this country. The financial resources of the country, that is the currency and credit of the country, have always been adequate to distribute the goods and services produced. That is not to say that the goods and services produced have always been distributed to the people who needed them. They have not. But when that was not the case there was always sufficient money to do it. People may be in want when there is a shortage of the things they need because under the capitalist system, which the social crediters support, goods are not produced to fulfil needs; they are produced to make a profit for the owners of the capital employed in producing them. That is the so-called private enterprise to which my hon. friends referred. If they serve the needs of the country, that is incidental. That is not the primary purpose of capitalist production.

The proof of that assertion lies in the fact that if you want anyone to invest in a project or undertaking the question you will be asked is, not what social good will accrue from it, but what profit will it make? If it will not make a profit you will not find investors for it. As long as it makes a profit, it will keep going; when it does not make a profit, the government has to take it over if it is an industry essential to the life of the community.

Prosperity and the amount of money in circulation are not necessarily dependent upon one another. The total amount of money and bank credit in circulation in Canada in 1938 was almost double that in circulation in 1929; yet 1929 was the peak year of our prosperity and 1938 was a year of relative depression. I have the figures and I shall give them. The total money in circulation and the total bank deposits for 1929 were $2,934 million, while in 1938, as I said a year of relative depression when unemployment was five or six times what it was in 1929, the amount of money in circulation was $4,865 million, or nearly twice as much. Yet we are told that depressions are caused through our not having enough money.

At the present time everyone is predicting a depression, but our bank deposits and the money in circulation are increasing all the time. Just before coming into the chamber I made a note of the savings deposits in our banks on January 31, 1946, and on January 31, 1947, and I found that in the period of one year the savings deposits in the chartered banks of Canada had increased by approximately $570 million. Yet, as I said, everyone is predicting a depression.

I should like to read a short paragraph from a book that came into my hands only yesterday entitled "A Tax Programme for a Solvent America", by the committee on post-war tax policy. This is as recent as February, 1947, and in regard to money it says:

> Incidentally it should be noted that there is nowhere a lack of money. Even the stricken countries of Europe and the Orient have plenty of purchasing power, as the term goes. We have been provided with an impressive demonstration of the comparative sterility of money, as such. The great famine has demonstrated that people can starve, regardless of the quantity of money in circulation. Money is worthless in exchange unless there are goods to be exchanged. Whether it be paper money in Hungary, or bank deposits in Japan, the mere existence of purchasing power will not create bread and shoes.

Then they go on to say that what is required today is not money, but goods and the means to produce goods. After we have acquired those, the next thing to do is to provide a means of distributing those goods and services to the people who need them. Then we shall not need to worry about depressions, financial or otherwise.

Mr. KUHL: Where will you get the money?

Mr. MacINNIS: We have the money here, but the people who need the money do not have it and the people who have it, cannot use it.

Mr. KUHL: Then you want more taxation.

Mr. MacINNIS: There is no other way in which it can be done except by taxation, to take from those who have to give to those who have not, of course, unless we increase our total production. You cannot increase your total production as long as you are operating under the profit motive, because production is continually being restricted in order to increase prices. Read your cartels report.

Mr. KUHL: And then we had overproduction in 1939.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is what somebody told you. I never told you that.

Mr. KUHL: There were plenty of goods then.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes, there were plenty of goods; that is what I am saying, but under the system which you support the people who produced those goods and needed them could not get them. That is what is wrong.

Let me give the house an idea of the amount of money that is available in savings deposits in our chartered banks. As of October 31, 1946, there were savings deposits in our chartered banks to an amount of over $3,476,000,000. The number of separate deposit accounts was 6,063,457, which works out at approximately one account for every two people in Canada. But when you come to classify these accounts you find that a great many people had very little money on deposit and that a very few people had a great deal. Of the 6,063,457 accounts, 5,290,728 were deposits of $1,000 or less, or an average deposit of $170. But when you come down to deposits in excess of $100,000, there were 971 accounts with an average deposit of $376,633.

Those who believe that they can remedy the situation by creating money are just deceiving simple people. I would say again that the struggle for survival in Britain today is another proof of the fact that it is not a scarcity of money that is the trouble. Monetary reform, of course, is an essential part of any programme designed to expand production for a higher standard of living, but as long as you leave the ownership, control and the direction and purpose of industry in private hands you will not accomplish much. For this reason alone, and there are plenty of others, this group cannot support the subamendment.

The hon. member for Peace River, speaking in the house the other night, made the statement that there was a feeling abroad that the Social Crediters had forsaken their monetary reform policy. Their amendment is sufficient proof that that is not the case, and I need not say anything more about it. But although they claim that they have not forsaken their monetary reform policy, I do claim that they have forsaken the basis on which William Aberhart's brand of social credit in Alberta was built up. Mr. Aberhart built up social credit in Alberta, not by extolling the virtues of free enterprise and big business, but by doing just the very opposite namely, attacking big business. I have in my hand a booklet with which my social credit friends, no doubt, used to be quite familiar but with which they have not been so familiar lately. It is the "Social Credit Manual," with the subtitle, "Social Credit as applied to the province of Alberta", written by William Aberhart, B.A., and with the further subtitle, "Puzzling questions and their answers"; and let me say that the answers are just as puzzling as the questions. In stating the basic premise of social credit, this is what Mr. Aberhart says on page 5 of the manual:

> It is the duty of the state through its government to organize its economic structure in such a way that no bona fide citizen, man, woman, or child, shall be allowed to suffer for lack of the bare necessities of food, clothing, and shelter, in the midst of plenty or abundance.

But listen to what the leader of the Social Credit party in this house said, speaking in this debate on February 3 last, as reported at page 75 of Hansard:

> Furthermore, I say to you, sir, that it is my belief and the belief of those in this group in the house, that any time the government sets out to achieve as its major conscious objective full employment, social security, or a planned economy, that government is going straight down the road to slavery of the people in the country.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There is no contradiction there.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Aberhart said that it was the duty of the state to see that the people were provided for, but the hon. member for Peace River says that any government which attempts that is taking the people of the country down the road to slavery.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is not right.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have read the actual words and I think I understand English. There is a peculiar phrase used by the hon. member for Peace River to which I would draw attention. He said that any time the government sets out to achieve "as its major conscious objective" full employment, social security and so on. I imagine that if a government only made that a minor unconscious objective it would not be too bad. My social credit friends accuse the present government of socialistic or national planning, but let me tell them that if the government is doing anything of that kind it is of a minor nature and is done absolutely unconsciously.

Mr. MITCHELL: Not a bad job at that.

Mr. MacINNIS: My time is nearly up, but I wish to quote just a few more phrases from this little manual on social credit. If social credit were possible it would involve so much control that any control which might take place under the planned economy advocated by this group would be absolute freedom in comparison. The Social Crediters are to have no taxes but they are to have a levy. William Aberhart said in this manual:

> Thus the province will be able to collect a levy that will provide the basic dividends to distribute to the various citizens.

The citizens were to get dividends, and then they would pay for them, of course, by a levy, not a tax. Mr. Aberhart goes on to say:

> To illustrate this let us take a bushel of wheat say at a just price of sixty cents. Fifty-five cents of this is to go to the farmer and will provide a fair commission on his turnover. Five cents will be set aside for the government levy. The wheat is sold to the miller who grinds it into flour. The cost of grinding will be covered by the shorts and bran and other by-products of the process. This will produce about forty pounds of flour. We will suppose that the flour sells for $1.10, ten cents of which is again given to the government as its levy. The flour is next turned to the baker who makes it into bread which he sells at seven cents a loaf. The forty pounds of flour with the water and other ingredients would make fifty loaves of bread. Suppose the government levy on this bread was a cent a loaf. That would give an additional fifty cents levy. Thus from a bushel of wheat, processing it to flour, the government would be able to collect possibly sixty-five cents.

The original price of the bushel of wheat was only sixty cents! And they tell you that there would be no taxes under social credit. They may say that they have changed their policy and that things would be different, but in reply to one of the questions asked in this little manual, "How long would it take to put social credit into effect in Alberta?" the answer is, "Eighteen months." Well, Mr. Speaker, they have been in power in Alberta for twelve years now and any idea of putting social credit into effect has absolutely disappeared. Indeed, they are so far away from social credit now that the people who were once afraid of the Social Credit government are now the people who are financing it.

Mr. H. R. JACKMAN (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I shall not trespass very long on the time of the house tonight, and I was not minded to take part in this debate had it not been for the fact that I must always be conscious of the housing conditions in my own riding of Rosedale, which is very much in the centre of the city of Toronto, a little bit to the east toward the river Don. This morning I received the report of the building commissioner of our city, Mr. K. S. Gillies, which gives the total amount spent on construction during 1946 and divides it into the various classes. Before giving the house the figures which the commissioner has outlined, may I say that I am amazed at the complacency of the Canadian people in regard to housing. I was also amazed at the complacency of our people during the depression years and at the way in which they stood the hard times they were up against and their inability to find work during the period when the Liberal government was in power, even though they were able and willing to work. May I recall to you, sir, that at that time the chief occupations of many of those who were unable to find work were bricklaying, plastering, carpentering and other house-building activities. There was just no substantial housing, if any at all, being carried on in Toronto at that time.

When I visit some of the people in the areas where housing conditions are bad, see the overcrowding and the number of families living in a single dwelling unit I cannot help avoid feeling that the Indians in Central America and in other countries are better housed than are some of our own people.

Last year I mentioned that I had visited one large old house which had no fewer than fifty-three people living in it. This house had practically no facilities in it. As I remember it, there was one bath with a cold-water tap, and that was all. What has happened to that place? It has been torn down to make room for a moving-picture house. I inquired where the people were. For the most part they have been moved to Stanley barracks which, as many hon. members will know, is a very old stone barracks near the Toronto exhibition. I recall that some thirty or thirty-five years ago it was so old that it was being used as a prison centre for Austrian prisoners of war. Yet that is where we are quartering our own Canadian people.

May I recall here, as my colleague, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) did recently, the words of Brigadier Douglas H. Storms, building manager of housing enterprises, dated October 10. He said:

> Plant extensions, theatres, garages, stores, summer cottages, dance halls and hot-dog stands are under construction. At the same time people are living in the worst distress for lack of housing. On one street of small houses in New Toronto—

That is in one of our newer districts.

> —we found each house was occupied on the average by nineteen people.

Last November I made an inquiry of the emergency housing centre where people file their appeals for some kind of shelter, and I found that there were 7,300 unfilled applications for any kind of shelter whatsoever. It was reported to me then that that very night an R.C.A.F. veteran of sixteen months' overseas service, his wife, his daughter of thirteen and his boy of twelve had been picked up in a public park because they had no place to go, and were endeavouring to stay there for the night. Apparently the man had been staying at a hotel but a veteran's gratuity does not last long at hotel rates.

I would feel that I was trespassing on the time of the house in pointing out the need for housing, but if all hon. members could be taken in the congested areas of some of our larger cities and see the picture as it actually is I am convinced that something more would be done than has been attempted by this government. In 1944—I put this on the record merely to refresh the memories of hon. members—the advisory committee on housing estimated Canada's shortage of housing units at 600,000. At least 300,000 families are doubled up; but what cares this government as long as it can let sleeping dogs lie? What amazes me is the complacency of our people. Why they stand for it when they see so much building of other kinds going on all about them, I do not know. Did the Curtis report not show that there are over 300,000 substandard dwellings? According to the figures of the minister, 60,000 housing units were constructed last year, or not much more than enough to take care of the annual growth plus the wastage, because even houses, particularly temporary ones, wear out in time.

Judged by its actions and its lack of planning, there is good ground for believing that the government does not take the housing shortage seriously. Certainly it does not consider that there is any real emergency but just a comfortable shortage of houses which can be made up when employment is not so plentiful as it is today. Is it possible that the government believes that because the population of Canada is little if any greater than it was in the pre-war years, and since there are certainly no fewer housing units than there were before the war, conditions cannot be very bad? These are true facts which may seem to give rise to the specious conclusion that there is no dire distress as far as housing is concerned. Our population has not grown and we have not had houses bombed, so where is the housing shortage? What the people will put up with, if one would investigate the actual conditions in our city in the way of unhealthy housing conditions, is something which staggers the imagination. Is the government even conscious of the problem? If so, its pain must be so great that it has taken a sleeping potion to lull itself into self-satisfaction and utter complacency.

Let me now come to the figures in the annual report of the building commissioner,

Mr. K. S. Gillies of the city of Toronto. He says in his little foreword:

> Commercial and industrial building formed the larger portion of the year's work while housing took second place.

That was a masterpiece of understatement. The facts as shown in the booklet are as follows: In 1946—these are actual construction—the total value of all buildings erected was $22,232,000, while the total value of housing units, including apartments, was $3,291,000. In other words, fifteen per cent of all the money spent on construction in the city of Toronto in 1946 was devoted to housing units and the other eighty-five per cent to a variety of construction projects which had nothing whatsoever to do with housing our people or looking after our veterans who had been away from Canada for five or six years while other people may have been getting a roof over their heads, but who had nothing to go to when they came back. During the year there were 843 permits issued for housing out of a total of 11,242 permits for building and alterations of one sort and another. Therefore we may see what we have to look forward to in 1947. Out of 11,242 permits, 843 permits were issued for housing. What other construction was there in the city of Toronto last year? Commercial and industrial buildings amounted to $17,090,000, or 77 per cent; schools and churches, $399,000, or 1·5 per cent and, miscellaneous, $1,511,000, or 6·5 per cent. With a score of fifteen per cent for housing, that category certainly came a very poor second to commercial and industrial buildings, with seventy-seven per cent of the total amount of money going into that class. May I point out that in the construction of four movie theatres, two garages and three warehouses, taking a total of $2,181,000, that amount for this very small number of units of large commercial projects took up as much as two-thirds of the total that went into housing units in Toronto. The number of new housing units was only 636, probably sufficient to house about 2,400 people; but the number of applications for emergency shelter of any kind was, as I have mentioned, at the first of November, 7,300, and this may be compared with 636 housing units constructed last year.

How are we facing the problem? We are not even nibbling at it at the present time. Is the fifteen per cent for residential construction out of the total building construction in Toronto to be considered normal? After the last war, in 1922, which is as far as the figures in the little book I had at my disposal went, the percentage of housing construction to total construction in the city was 62 per cent. Last year it was 15 per cent. For several years following 1922 the percentage hovered around 60 per cent. In 1928-29 it was 30 per cent and from there it continued around 40 per cent until 1939 when it dropped to 28 per cent. Since then, the percentages of residential construction to total construction have been 40, 26, 38, 35, 23 per cent, and in 1947, under the present iniquitous system, 15 per cent, an all-time record low.

The dollar value is pretty much the same. In 1922 and following, residential construction was $22 million; in 1946 it was $3,291,000, or about one-seventh last year of what it was in 1922, as far as housing units were concerned.

The government may well wonder why any member or party who is for freeing business and production from their chains, and who is against controls in general, would advocate building controls. In the first place, the housing situation in Canada, particularly in city ridings such as my own, was never good. This government did nothing about building houses in the depression years. No houses could be built in the war years, for good reasons, and there has been an influx of population. The demand for housing so far exceeds supply that rental controls and, perhaps even more so, building controls are necessary. The result of no building control has already been shown. Commercial enterprises have plenty of money and the cost of building is therefore but a small item in their budget. They are not very much concerned with how much they pay for building. The ordinary citizen, however, and particularly the veteran, is very much concerned, because his pocketbook is limited and housing is one of the main expenses in his budget.

Even under proper government supervision the acuteness of the housing shortage cannot be relieved overnight. At the present rate of progress it will take many years to overcome it, and until it is overcome I presume we shall be under the necessity of rental control, which has many bad features as well as some good ones. The Liberal government has refused to accept responsibility for priorities. It has told the municipalities that they can put on their own building restrictions. This was entirely unsatisfactory and is entirely unsatisfactory today, because the problem has always been a national one. The reason for that is that if an industry wanted to expand or a new movie was to be set up, it would go to that place or that city where there were no restrictions, and no municipality was willing—and again this is the effect of politics; it is quite natural—to lose the chance of having a new industry established within the confines of its own borders, so it took down the bars and allowed any commercial or industrial project to go ahead.

The question of priorities is one which, if it is to be effective at all, must be exercised from Ottawa where a balance can be maintained betwen various competing muncipalities for industrial projects which are vital and necessary in some cases and for housing which we know is extremely urgent. The Liberal government refuses to be responsible for the welfare of the people and to control the type of buildings to be erected. It is left to the men or the businesses who can pay the most. As Mayor Robert Saunders of Toronto said:

> Our city fathers tried desperately to have the federal government maintain a strict control over all building and see that the many materials in short supply were directed first to home building. It was a problem that only the federal government have the power to control and direct.

Last evening we were given the lumberman's point of view on timber controls when my colleague the hon. member for Victoria, Ontario, (Mr. Hodgson) spoke. If we accept the suggestion that forty per cent of Canada's increased timber cut should be allowed for export—and I use that figure of forty per cent as a rough one because I understand that on the west coats two-thirds of the volume of lumber may be exported and in the central provinces only one-third, and here I may remark it is no wonder that the western lumber people feel that controls are not too unsatisfactory when they can export two-thirds of the output at the rather attractive prices which they get in the export market—if, I repeat, we say that forty per cent of our lumber is to be exported in order to maintain our trade channels and be fair to other countries, so that sixty per cent is left for domestic allocation, then we must make sure that the sixty per cent is fairly allocated among those who are entitled to lumber for building purposes.

If it is left to the present system those who have the longest purse—and that is certainly not the ordinary prospective home owner—are the ones who are to get the lion's share of this lumber. If we had a system of priorities from Ottawa it would mean that sixty per cent would be available to those who had a priority for housing, and for veterans housing in particular. Then, if there were no price controls and more lumber were brought to the domestic market, sixty per cent or greater, we would find that too large a percentage of it or too great an amount would not be used in building, because the amount of lumber consumed must be limited by the capacity of the building industry and the number of trained building workers.

Furthermore, I do not think that if controls were taken off lumber—not export control but price control—we would find that lumber would go up much in price. The minister suggested that if it went sky-high—I do not know what figure he had in mind, but no doubt a substantial amount—it might add $200 or $300 to each house. Already builders have found price resistance developing in respect of smaller houses which are being built at the present time. The people do have some respect for the purchasing power of the dollar; if they do not get good value they will refuse to invest, and it will be found that, instead of its being a seller's market, it will become a buyer's market. At least the scales would be held in balance. So long as we have controls, the controllers will find reasons for continuing their own existence. It is only natural that they should think that way.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that even now if moving picture theatres, dance halls, hotels and bowling alleys were eliminated, the shortage in lumber and many other building supplies and also of labour would be pretty well done away with as far as sufficient to put on a real house-building programme is concerned. The only effect of lumber controls is that the short purse of the veteran and the prospective home builder cannot acquire very much lumber, but the long purses of these moving picture magnates and those who are putting up the other forms of commercial or industrial enterprises get the lumber and get it at a cheap price. Certainly the lumber is not going to the builder of homes. I mention those four classes, moving-picture theatres, dance halls, hotels and bowling alleys, because they are commercial undertakings and not because of any lofty sentiments. I believe that none of those forms of commercial activity creates jobs for any great number of our people. One cannot make the excuse that, by allowing dance halls and moving-picture theatres to be erected, we are providing places where employment will be given to a substantial number of our people in less prosperous times.

May I mention here that I do not know how weighty the consideration is which the minister gave to this vexed problem of housing, which certainly is not being met in the riding of Rosedale. But on February 7, when he announced a new plan for rental housing, whereby if a man built houses for rent and gave priority to the veteran he would be allowed double depreciation, I asked the minister just how much the depreciation was now, so that I could form some estimate of what the double depreciation would be. His words were, "I have not the figures at my fingertips, but my impression is that the present rate is four per cent; if so, the new rate will be eight per cent." I began to figure out just what this might mean to the housing industry and whether or not new rental houses might be constructed. When I checked the figures in Hansard the next day, I found that the four per cent had become two and a half per cent, and double that is five per cent. I am not complaining about the minister's memory, but I feel that when a major policy is announced in this house, some thought should be given to it by the minister, because the difference between being able to write off five per cent over the next few years as against being able to write off eight per cent, is substantial. Of course the five per cent does go for the whole life of the building, until the whole investment is written off.

But the point I am making is this. Everyone feels that if you put up a house today for rental, you are probably putting it up at inflated values; and you are a little bit concerned that, if you have to get rid of it over the next five or ten years, you cannot get your money back. However, if the minister had put forward a real programme of depreciation—not of five per cent but double four per cent, or eight per cent, let us say—it would be found that over the next five or eight years the man who might put up that house for rental would be able to write off enough of his depreciation that he would not have to worry about getting out of it whatever value he still had left in it; whereas at the present time he has to carry it perhaps for ten years or longer, before he may be able to get his money back, because he may have to sell in a market which is not as buoyant as the present one.

I believe that if the government will take the controls off building supplies and put the control on permits for the class of building undertaking which is most needed from the social point of view, and most needed by our veterans, the housing shortage in this country would be ended much more quickly than it will be under the present system.

Mr. HOWE: May I ask my hon. friend one question? Will he tell us where in the city of Toronto residential property can be bought in acreage sufficient to put up, say, 1,000 houses?

Mr. JACKMAN: I am glad the minister asked that question, because I had meant to cover it. I was a little concerned, after I got the report from the building commissioner, about where all the building was to be done in the city of Toronto, because the report itself confined itself to the actual geographical limits of the city. Within 150 yards of where I happen to live there are two very large spaces where apartment houses could be built. I have consulted with at least half a dozen of my colleagues, and while I do not know where one could put up 1,000 houses as a unit in Toronto, or even 250 houses, nevertheless there are a number of spaces where houses can be put up, particularly apartment houses.

I think the real answer to the question is this. Where these warehouses and moving-picture theatres are being put up one could no doubt put up apartment houses. But more strongly, I think, the answer to my main charge of misdirection of building materials and building labour is the fact that on the outskirts of the city there is considerable housing activity, in the construction of workmen's houses particularly. I am interested in some of them myself. I know the struggle which the manager of the company I am interested in is forced to carry on in order to get bricks, lumber, foremen, boss carpenters and whatnot. The only reason that we are able to put up houses at all is that the company is able to buy and pay cash for materials in the winter time when some other builders are not able to acquire them. We have done a reasonably good job, but it is a struggle all the time. The reason that materials and labour cannot be obtained is that so much goes into buildings which, I shall not say are non-essential, but which, to my mind, have less social priority than housing in the city of Toronto. That is the reason why we are not getting on with the house-building programme as fast as we otherwise might. If anyone takes on a project of 100 houses on the outskirts of Toronto, he will find that it is a tooth-and-nail job—nail in the literal sense as well as the metaphorical one—to get any progress at all. Only the most skilful manager is able to erect houses, because of the misdirection and the lack of control on the part of the federal government.

Mr. HOWE: I have one more question and this is the last. Am I right in saying that my hon. friend, in giving his statistics for the city of Toronto, left out all the house-building in the surrounding areas to which he is now referring?

Mr. JACKMAN: I just said that the book I have is confined to the geographical area of Toronto.

Mr. HOWE: Exactly.

Mr. JACKMAN: I forget the total figure for the Dominion of Canada, which is not too pleasant anyway, although it is certainly better than fifteen per cent. I am concerned about my own riding and about conditions there, and I should like to take the minister there. The total for the Dominion of Canada, as given in answer to the question of my colleague the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) was $383 million of total construction last year, of which $200 million, or fifty-two per cent, was for housing units. But even that is not good enough. When I know the situation locally in my own town, I think I have the right to come here and ask the government to do more for the people, who, to my mind, are much too complacent.

Mr. F. D. SHAW (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, prior to 5.40 o'clock this afternoon it was my intention to speak for only twenty minutes and to adhere strictly to certain previously prepared notes. Thanks to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), I shall be obliged to extend my time and to move away from that previously charted course. This afternoon and again this evening the hon. member for Vancouver East indulged in one of his usual pastimes, that of jerking from their context words, phrases, clauses and paragraphs, endeavouring to convey to this house a definitely erroneous impression. In so doing, he managed to work himself into the usual lather. Before the dinner recess, in referring to social credit he indulged in such expressions or partial expressions as "concerned only with personal welfare," and, as I say, endeavoured to create the impression that the members of this group were concerned only about their personal welfare.

Mr. MacINNIS: I never said anything of the kind, that any member of this house or any member of any other party was concerned only with his personal welfare. I referred to it as a system; and I do not want to have any implications of that kind.

Mr. SHAW: The hon. gentleman wasted his forty minutes this afternoon and evening; I hope he will permit me to utilize mine. I said the hon. gentleman sought to create an impression, and I stick to what I said. He referred to "an old-fashioned theory." Goodness knows what he had in the back of his mind! He referred to "a liberal supply of greenbacks." He must have been in the pond with the frogs. He made statements like these: "eat his cake and have it, too"; "eat the other fellow's cake, and still let him have it"—such utter nonsense!

Mr. MacINNIS: I know it is nonsense, but that is what you are advocating.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. SHAW: It was manufactured by the hon. gentleman himself, and the expression is certainly nonsense. Because certain hon. gentlemen opposite laughed at him—and certain hon. gentlemen opposite will laugh at almost anything—he waxed even more eloquent. He went on to ridicule the assertion, I presume of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), with respect to the effective control of monetary policy. He asserted in all his dignity that we at present exercise full and complete control of monetary policy; then he proceeded to talk about contradictions, and said the only possible way we could have effective control was to nationalize the Bank of Canada.

Mr. MacINNIS: I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. SHAW: Or rather the chartered banks.

Mr. MacINNIS: Do not misquote me and I will not interrupt you.

Mr. SHAW: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacINNIS: Every time you misquote you are going to be interrupted.

Mr. SHAW: Mr. Speaker, will you please ask the hon. member to sit down and stay down?

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Speaker, will you tell the hon. gentleman not to misquote me, and I will not interrupt him.

Mr. SHAW: The hon. gentleman used the words "financial institutions" and I take that to include the Bank of Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES: He said the chartered banks.

Mr. MacINNIS: It includes more than the Bank of Canada.

Mr. SHAW: Let us say it includes them all; it is still a contradiction.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member who has the floor to address himself to the Chair.

Mr. SHAW: I apologize, Mr. Speaker; I thought I was doing so. I noticed that in speaking of nationalization the hon. gentleman did not proceed to give us the excellent illustration that could have been given by dealing with the British policy with respect to the nationalization of their bank. I noticed, too, he did not go out of his way to tell us why the Labour government of Australia and the Labour government of New Zealand have not nationalized their banks. Members of the C.C.F. party usually refer to those governments as being counterparts of the C.C.F. party, but at times it is convenient to forget that expression. I noticed, too, that he did not go on and tell us about all the virtues of the Russian system of financial nationalization. There I believe he would find the only existing institution of the nature he describes and the virtues of which it would seem he extols. He also went on to indulge in the expression "socialization of the means of life," but I noticed he did not go out of his way to enlarge upon that expression. I believe he realizes as well as I do that it includes agriculture, which is one of the basic means of life in this country. When he was asked by an hon. member in this group whether it included the farms, he made some ridiculous comment about a donkey. Well, I do not think the hon. member for Vancouver East could even convince a donkey that nationalization is essential. Then the hon. gentleman went on to refer to democratic socialism. I say there is no such animal; and he has said nothing in this house today or at any other time that would serve to convince me and my colleagues that there is. As he spoke this afternoon, an expression came to my mind, a statement which is credited to Lenin; for all I know these may be his exact words: "Social democracy is a politically preposterous term. Under socialism, democracy withers away," and I agree with Lenin in that statement.

Mrs. STRUM: You and Lenin!

Mr. SHAW: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) has interjected an observation which brings me to a question I should like to direct to the hon. member for Vancouver East. Does that peculiar type of democratic socialism go by another name, that of Marxian socialism?

Mr. MacINNIS: No.

Mr. SHAW: To the best of my knowledge that question has never been answered by my hon. friend.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is answered now to my hon. friend's knowledge, if he has any. It does not.

Mr. SHAW: I did not hear what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. MacINNIS: I said, "no".

Mr. SHAW: Fine.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Nobody ever spoke better for Marx than the hon. member does.

Mr. SHAW: I am sure the hon. member will have some interesting words for the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Archibald), who not so long ago extolled the virtues of Karl Marx right on the floor of this house and, I would almost assume, in the name of his party.

I should now like to call certain witnesses in connection with the hon. gentleman's observations respecting social credit. I wish to direct my remarks and my quotations expressly to the backbenchers of the C.C.F. party, since probably some have not had their attention directed to the debates which took place in this house about 1935. I propose now to take them back to that period. I have before me Hansard of March 26, 1935. Those were the days when the skids were under the Bennett government. An election was in the offing. Many people, and especially politicians, may have had numerous nightmares about that time. I hope the hon. gentleman will not attribute these words to a nightmare, because if he was not under the influence of a nightmare at that time he must be under the influence of a nightmare today. At page 2138 of Hansard for that date I find an amendment moved by Mr. George Coote, who, I understand, is now a director of the Bank of Canada, and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East. This is the amendment:

> That the amendment be amended by striking out all the words after the word "Canada" and adding thereto the following: "and would appear to be based upon the assumption that poverty and debt are inevitable conditions within the country; > and whereas the real and potential wealth of the nation, based upon our natural resources and our capacity to produce, is such as to make possible an abundant provision for all the requirements of our people;
> Therefore, this house is of the opinion that the government should take immediate action to ensure the fullest and most equitable distribution possible of our socially-created wealth and that, as a first step in this direction, the measures which may be necessary to meet the pressing needs of the farmers and the unemployed should be financed by the social credit of Canada, thus avoiding a further increase in the debt burden of the country."

The present hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) spoke in support of that amendment to the budget of 1935. I call the hon. member for Cariboo as a witness against the hon. member for Vancouver East, and I should like to quote from page 2323 of Hansard, April 2, 1935, where the hon. member for Cariboo—I do not know what his constituency was then; he has changed quite a number of times—is reported as having said:

> I submit at the outset that that remedy is one which will very soon have to be accepted not only by this government but by all governments in the world.

He is referring to social credit.

I make that prediction because in my opinion there is only one alternative to that, and that is to witness the complete collapse of civilization itself.

Those are the application of the social credit principles set out by the present hon. member for Cariboo. He went on to say:

We make this suggestion then to the government, and we solicit the support also of the opposition for a policy applied to the only problem in Canada, the problem of distributing the abundance which our natural resources, our skilled mechanics and our technical equipment make possible to our people.

In other words, the only problem is that of distribution.

This proposal assumes that there is enough and to spare of every commodity essential to life, to supply every person indefinitely; but that there is too little money in the hands of the consumers to permit the proper distribution of these essential commodities to be made.

I move on to page 2324, the same speaker:

So much, then, for the assumption that there is an abundance of supplies. As to the other assumption contained in our amendment, that there is too little money, I think the fact that there has been a shortage of money for purchasing power has been very adequately and emphatically demonstrated. I direct the attention of this house once more to the analyses and the mathematical demonstration of Major Hugh Douglas, of London, who I think has shown more completely and more thoroughly than any other economist of his time the scarcity of money and the causes of that scarcity. But he is by no means the only one who has demonstrated that fact. Foster and Catching have demonstrated it in the United States; Kitson, Keynes, Right Hon. Reginald McKenna and numerous others have proved beyond the shadow of a doubt to every intelligent student of the question that there is not sufficient money in circulation at a given time to buy the goods on the shelves at the prices at which those goods are marked, and that while that is so those goods cannot be distributed.

I have just one more short quotation I should like to make. I agree with what he said; I have no grievance with the hon. member for Cariboo.

Mr. IRVINE: Keep on; you are making a good speech.

Mr. SHAW: I hope the hon. member can convince the hon. member for Vancouver East. I quote again from page 2325:

To make the situation worse machinery is becoming more and more automatic as the industrial process goes on, and the use of solar power, steam, oil, gas, electricity has not only made it possible to produce sufficient goods with a very much reduced number of workers, but has vastly increased production, in some instances far beyond the capacity of the people to consume even if they had the money to buy the goods, which they have not. Moreover the tendency is towards further mechanical progress, which will still further reduce the number of workers required and further increase output.

And then again:

Being unable to find markets at home through lack of purchasing power as I have described, the producers of all nations enter into keener competition for whatever foreign market there may be, thus the economic basis of war.

I should like to be able to read all the hon. member's speech because I think it was an excellent one. I think he delivered that speech only after the most careful study. I am sure that when he made the speech he was absolutely convinced, because I am satisfied that he would not have made it unless he were. I come now to the vote on that amendment. Here are the yeas:

Messrs. Coote, Gardiner, Garland (Bow River), Heaps, Irvine, Lucas, MacInnis, Miss MacPhail, Mitchell—

I will refer to that in just a moment.

Speakman, Spencer, Woodsworth.

The Gardiner mentioned is not the present Minister of Agriculture, but the Mitchell referred to is the present Minister of Labour. I say that he, by virtue of having supported that amendment, has declared along with the hon. member for Cariboo that this is the alternative to the collapse of civilization. I should like to go on quoting because I want to show the hon. member for Vancouver East that when it comes to going back into the archives and digging out dusty books we are ready to engage in such a contest with him at any time. I am sure that we shall be able to bring forward assertions and things which are more embarrassing to him than anything he can direct at us.

Mr. MacINNIS: There is nothing embarrassing yet as far as I am concerned.

Mr. SHAW: Was he having a nightmare, or is he having a political nightmare now?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Political jitters now.

Mr. SHAW: Things of this kind remind me that in one of the states of the United States—I do not remember which one at the moment—a professor of pharmacy is working on what I think they call a system of odoriferous advertising, and with a considerable amount of success. After listening to the hon. member for Vancouver East tonight and after watching the developments of their organization over the years, if we apply that newly determined practice of odoriferous advertising, then their programme or platform will smell to high heaven.

I should like to deal now with things more pleasant. During this debate, repeated reference has been made to our war veterans and their general rehabilitation. I listened with dismay the other day to the frank and honest admission by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) that things were not all right with all veterans houses. I think it was the honest thing for the minister to do to make that statement on the floor of this house, but I would submit that the defence which I have noticed already in the papers, namely, that there was a lack of suitable materials and competent workmen, does not stand up very well.

If we go outside the activities of certain of these contractors we shall find that, with the same materials and with the same so-called incompetent workmen, houses have been built which are a credit to the builders. I am thinking for the moment of the small holdings set up near the city of Red Deer. Those houses were constructed in an excellent fashion and they are a credit to those responsible for their erection and for the supervision. I say, therefore, that the contractors cannot take refuge in the assertions that they are now making.

I regret that all the people of Canada—I believe that was the expression used by the Minister of Veterans Affairs—will have to pay the seven or eight hundred thousand dollars needed to put these houses in a state of repair. Possibly that cannot be avoided, but personally I wish to say that the taxpayers of this country are not going to look with any degree of happiness upon that prospect. As I have said, the houses on the small holdings at Red Deer were well constructed. Unless we are extremely careful I am fearful that those veterans will encounter difficulties in paying for these homes. Unless we establish guarantees essential to the economic welfare of these boys, they will find the handling of a $7,000 or $8,000 debt a colossal undertaking.

With respect to land settlement under the Veterans Land Act, at first there was a good deal of criticism with regard to the slowness of the inspections of land which these veterans had applied for, and there were a certain number of complaints with regard to the rejections. But I wish to pay a compliment to those persons in the soldier settlement board office in Red Deer. We live in an exceptionally fine part of Canada. It is one of the finest mixed farming areas between the two coasts, and consequently we have had a tremendous number of applications from ex-service men for settlement in that area. Considering all handicaps I think the responsible officials have done an admirable job in handling their inspections and everything else relating to these applications.

We should have learned something from world war I, and I think we did. It is no kindness to put a man on a piece of land that is not agriculturally productive. We saw that happen all through my part of the country after the last war. I think it is wise to guard against a thing of that kind happening again, and generally speaking I believe they are guarding against it in that part of the country. On the other hand, however, unless we are prepared to do something to guarantee a stable price structure for agricultural products, I fear that the majority of these boys will lose their title to their properties after they have fully paid for them and that many of them will never be in a position to pay for them fully. These veterans can certainly be crushed under their debt load just as thousands of veterans were crushed under their debt load after world war 1. The realization of this fact impresses upon one more and more the importance of sections 1 and 2 of the social credit amendment to the amendment.

Finally, with respect to these veterans, may I say that I am pleased with the exceptionally good work done in most of these vocational schools across the country. We have one of them in Red Deer and it is functioning admirably. The results that are obtained from the type of instruction given there will never be fully known.

I have spoken favourably about those things of which I could speak favourably. I now have two criticisms to make and I hope they will prove to be constructive. The first has to do with veterans' education, and the second has to do with the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act.

We all know that students, following high school graduation, during the war enlisted in great numbers in the Canadian armed forces. Some of these boys spent five or six years in our armed services and, upon their return, many of them made application for university entrance. After months of delay, many of them were advised that they would have to take certain brush-up tests, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that they were not given an adequate opportunity of preparing properly for these tests. As a matter of fact, some of them had only two or three weeks in which to prepare to write tests for three days upon all they were presumed to have learned while attending school. That was not fair. A great many of them failed, or at least the results indicated that they would have to proceed to take a course in the veterans high school in the spring. Many of these lads are now in these veterans high schools, where a cramming, jamming process is going on which I say it is not fair to many of these ex-service men. You cannot expect them to absorb the great masses of material which they are asked to absorb in such a short period of time in order to qualify to enter our universities.

Moreover, our universities are demanding a higher standard from our ex-service personnel than they are demanding from civilians. I ask, why? I am not complaining if these veterans are forced to attain the same standard in their examinations as the non-veteran, but they are required to attain a higher standing to remain in the universities. That is the rankest type of discrimination. These boys have benefited in many ways through being in the armed services. They have travelled and associated with their fellow men, which in itself is one of the finest forms of education, and they go into these universities better qualified to take these courses than many civilian boys and girls who are just leaving high school and going into the universities.

Overseas the Canadian army educational services functioned. I do not want to be too critical, but I must draw this to the attention of the minister and ask for an explanation. Many of these boys left high school to go into the armed services, and many of them lacked one or two credits for university entrance. While overseas, they took through the Canadian army educational services what they believed to be qualifying courses to enter a university. Many of them came back as late as last summer and made application for university entrance and were told point-blank that the courses they had taken were not courses which qualified them for university entrance. I wonder how widespread that condition was. I have several personal cases I can bring to the minister's attention.

Mr. TUCKER: Has the hon. member addressed any of these questions to the department?

Mr. SHAW: I shall not presume to answer that question offhand. I am usually in the habit of directing my problems to the appropriate ministers. Anyway we shall talk that over. I wonder if some of our universities were deliberately endeavouring to keep some of these boys out. I hope they will answer that question. Some of these boys wanted to take medical courses. They are now in veterans high schools and they are being told by the universities, "Why don't you take a B.A.?" A B.A. is, in my opinion, as useful as an O.B.E. when it comes to earning a living The universities should not be endeavouring to put pressure on these boys to take the B.A. course when the boys I think of particularly, are anxious to take a medical course and will make good doctors, and surely Canada is in need of more doctors. I hope the minister will give this matter some consideration.

I should now like to turn to the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act. I am glad the minister is here because this is another example of discrimination. I understand that this act was passed last year but did not become operative until this year; on January 15, someone suggests. Most of our boys came back before 1947. They were anxious to become reestablished and had to grab business opportunities as they came to their attention. Many of them went into business and put all their personal capital into an enterprise. Some of them borrowed from the banks and other lending institutions on very short terms. Now these lads have come forward and made application to secure a loan under the act to spread what they have borrowed from the lending institution over a longer period of time. They have been told: No, there is no provision in the act for that purpose. One of the minister's officials—I do not believe in quoting from letters I have received—did indicate to me that, while certain amendments might be made to the act later on, there was no possibility of the government looking upon such an amendment with favour. Personally I think he stepped just a little bit out of his proper sphere. After all, I think we should be the ones to determine that as a parliament of Canada operating in conjunction with the government.

Let me just suggest one case, Mr. Speaker. Here are some lads who put $10,000 of their own money into a newspaper business. This business had functioned successfully for years and years. These boys had to step out and borrow $10,000, which has to be repaid in five years. Naturally that will prove extremely burdensome to them, but they cannot secure relief under this act. I say to the minister that unless there is some extremely good reason for not doing so, the act should be amended to make provision for such cases. The rate of interest would likely not be any lower. The rate of interest under this act is, I believe, five per cent. They are paying the lending institutions five per cent. Let me go on record as asserting that that is altogether too high beause many veterans and non-veterans are borrowing from certain institutions and individuals at rates of interest considerably less than that and the government is also offering lower rates of interest on certain of its own transactions as a government.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I should move on. I hate to be accused of having taken up my full time just because I am allowed forty minutes. I have enough notes here to go on for possibly four hours, and therefore I believe I would be justified in proceeding for the other seven or eight minutes. I wish to say a word or two about the amendment, not the amendment to the amendment but the amendment itself. We feel that our social credit amendment to the Conservative amendment is necessary in the light of the negative character of the Conservative amendment. We are offering no argument against the Progressive Conservatives' right to offer such an amendment, but I am convinced that a concise alternative to government policy should have been presented.

Since the amendment does not contain an alternative proposal, it must be assumed that I am being asked to vote want of confidence with the suggestion that if the house and the country have no confidence in the government, then they must have confidence in the Progressive Conservative party. I say that that is a wrong assumption. I am not going to vote in such a way as to put myself in a position of being accused of that because, in the light of their declared policy, I for one cannot accept the Progressive Conservatives as an alternative to the Liberal government. My constituents are not prepared to accept them as an alternative, and I am convinced that the people of Canada are not prepared to accept them as an alternative unless they are prepared to add to the policy as we see it, by giving their support, not to a negative amendment, but to a positive one which we have when we take the Conservative amendment amended by ours.

I am satisfied—and I know hon. members across the way will not like this—that this government does not enjoy the confidence of the people. In fact, I would not have to spend much time looking into the crystal ball to satisfy myself that a 1947 election could well result in the virtual annihilation of the Liberal party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SHAW: I said that was my personal conviction, and any interjections that come from the political wilderness on the opposite side of the house will not change that personal conviction at all. Everywhere in the country the government is being accused of being unable to shake off the war complex. Personally I think that is a legitimate charge. While most Canadians, in my opinion, recognize the continuing necessity of certain controls, they are charging the government with the maintenance of certain ridiculous controls and regulations which are stifling production and distribution. I believe there is ample reason for arriving at that conclusion. For example, it reminds me of something that took place back home. Here is a great locker system with over 300 lockers. The farmers own these lockers. A farmer butchers his own animals. In the first place, he cannot get all of his meat into his locker. I presume he has to get rid of it by bootlegging it or selling it on the black market. I am not saying he does that, but I am saying it may happen. The boards will not grant to that institution a slaughtering permit in order that one farmer who butchers more than he requires may sell part of it to another fellow who owns a locker. It reminds me of something I read the other day. It was said that inspectors from the wartime prices and trade board swooped down on the farmer's house and they said to him, "Where in the world did you get all the meat?" He said, "Well, I found it necessary to butcher the whole animal at one time." There is a lesson in that.

It is asserted by many people in this country that the financial policy of this government has resulted in a national debt of staggering proportions. It takes no imagination to know that. This debt commands an annual interest tribute almost equal to our total national expenditures of ten years ago, and they look upon it as being a tragic situation. That is the reason they will, I was going to say—this is a bit crude—boot you fellows just about as far as you can go unless you mend your ways. I say it is a rather crude expression. I do not like to use it, but I think hon. members will agree with me that it is highly descriptive.

My next reason may be called a subsection of the previous one. The tax burden which has been allowed to pyramid until today it threatens the economic structure of Canada stands as the greatest single guarantee, in my estimation, that more and more Canadians will sooner or later become serfs in what we commonly boast of as a free democratic Canada. All you have to do is to see what is happening. All across the country taxes are going up and up until today property becomes virtually a liability. I should like to give two more reasons why these people across the way will likely be defeated.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Do not boot us too far.

Mr. SHAW: I just have two more points which I think are essential to my argument. Canadians have resented the reluctance on the part of the Canadian government to assist more substantially, or let us say substantially, because there is not much assistance, in the field of public education in order that we may ensure equality of opportunity and the maintenance and development of our public educational services in the country. Do not let anyone say that I am advocating that we take from the provinces control of their educational system. No; these are grants, we say, and that is what the Canadian people are asking for. Canadians resent the fact that this government has failed to establish old age pensions at a level designed to guarantee a decent standard of living and security for our pioneer citizens. In conclusion, is it any wonder that more and more rank and file Liberals across the country are crying, "Let us return to true Liberalism." Is it any wonder that so many of the Liberal leaders are crying for a return to true Liberalism. I come from a Liberal family.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Why did you leave?

Mr. SHAW: I could probably devote another forty minutes to that.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. SHAW: I wish to close with this one sentence. Liberalism, as I knew it once upon a time, was presumed to stand in defence of the individual against the state. Today it is the reverse.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) on his fine speech, and I agree entirely with the last sentence he used. There is something which worries me a lot, namely, the number of people who did not vote at the last by-elections. If we take for instance the constituency of Parkdale we find that out of a total of 41,087 electors on the list there were 17,118 who did not vote, and the elected member secured 8,212 votes; meaning by that, that the number of those who did not vote exceeded the total vote cast for him by 8,906.

It was the same thing in Pontiac, where the total number of electors was 49,435 and those who voted numbered 32,124; meaning by that, if I count the rejected ballots, that 17,002 did not vote, and the elected member secured 11,412 votes, which means that the excess of those who did not vote was 5,590.

In Richelieu-Vercheres the situation was different. The total number of electors was 25,718; the votes cast, 20,263, and the difference was 5,455, while the elected member secured 11,984 votes.

In Portage la Prairie the total number of electors was 16,535 and the total vote was 11,941, including rejected ballots; meaning by that, that those who did not vote numbered 4,594, while the elected member secured 4,805 votes.

To summarize, in Parkdale 17,118 did not vote, or approximately two-fifths; in Pontiac 17,002 did not vote, or more than one-third; in Richelieu-Vercheres 5,455 did not vote, or one-fifth; and in Portage la Prairie 4,594 did not vote, which meant more than one-fourth. The total of those who did not vote in the four by-elections was 44,169.

It is all the worse because these lists were made immediately before the election, which means that these people were not interested in any of the candidates although all the parties had candidates in the field. It is pitiful to consider that, because this indifference to dominion politics is quite alarming. It is as bad as what happened in France. In France the people were saying, "I don't care; it is the business of the politicians. Je m'en fous". "I don't care". The result was communism, social trouble, ruin, famine and despair.

It is important that the Canadian people be informed about dominion politics. They can get information in Hansard, but unfortunately the English press is lacking in that respect. The French press in this country is much more informative about dominion politics than the English press. The night before last I had a conversation with a big newspaperman who told me that the people did not care. Of course the people do not care, for a very good reason. They have no information, and they look at the funny sections of the press and read sensational reports about murders and other things like that.

The house has done a very good job since the beginning of the session. The members have worked hard and those who have spoken have done so very well. Some legislation has been passed and I give credit to my colleagues for that, but I find that very often the discussion is purely academic. There are some interruptions at times and some members express loudly their views, which are different from those of the speaker. It is natural. It is just a way of expressing oneself and telling the speaker that one does not agree with him. Although I do not indulge in those practices, I understand them and am quite tolerant of them, and I try to be as kind to the house as the house is to me.

But the Canadian people, even those who are not informed by the press, read Hansard and know to some extent what is being done here, and they have respect for members of parliament individually. But I do not know whether they have great respect for our parliamentary institutions, and it is a question of great concern. One thing that is of great concern is that when they abandon their former political affiliations they try new groups and new parties. I understand that, because when they are not satisfied with the leadership of their party they do, like my hon. friend the member for Red Deer, join another party and try to make the best of it. But I will tell him that the main thing is to try to reform the Liberal party from within or from without, because the Liberal party has a background that is still popular, and the Liberal party can do something for the future of the country if we get rid of the obnoxious elements within it.

I have been very patient for fifteen years, but I cannot understand the idea of being more conservative than the Progressive Conservative party, more socialistic than the C.C.F., and more optimistic than the Social Credit party.

Mr. LOW: Peptimistic.

Mr. POULIOT: Optimistic. You know, Mr. Speaker, there are strange things at times. Is it possible to have a government composed of men who have not the same ideals to govern this country? When that is the case, those who represent the real Liberal tradition have to make concessions to those belonging to another faith. Liberalism has been excellently defined by my hon. friend who has just spoken. Liberalism is the friend of the individual, the promoter of private initiative, and the defender of decentralization. These are all principles of the Liberal party, and, besides that, the policy of the Liberal party is supposed to be 100 per cent Canadian policy. It has not always been so, just because the party was catering to hon. gentlemen who lead the opposition. I fought them since Mr. Arthur Meighen was leader of the Conservative party. I fought them all. I fought Ferdinand the Bull. I was very well received by the house but I had no success. Why not? Because in this country there is a propaganda which is just as bad as the one in other parts of the British empire. In India, the Indians do not have the right to vote as citizens of India. They vote as Moslems or as Hindus. They vote according to their religion. In Palestine they vote according to their race. Here in Canada we have a racial problem. On one side we have those who say that they are British, and of course they see everything from the British point of view; there are others who are like the negroes of the south. No question is considered objectively, and I regret that very much.

What did we gain in the international policies of the world? There were promises made to us. We had the promise that Mr. Pearson, who apparently is an able man, would be secretary of the united nations organization. He was not. But we had compensation. We were told that we would be on the security council. But we were not there. That was another disillusionment. Afterwards we were told we were to dictate the peace to Germany. We were not invited there any more than we were invited to Teheran. As Mr. Cardin so well said, we should not be sorry about it because we had no reason to be there since we were not invited to Moscow. But still we go on, and some members on all sides of the house are offended because we are not invited. We are invited when we have gifts, but when we have no gifts we are not invited.

During the war, and even last year I was often alone in standing against the financial policies of the government; they were absurd policies, destructive of the wealth of the nation. You know very well, Mr. Speaker, that when the tap on the lower floor is wide open, the tap upstairs does not run so freely. We were giving money freely to all the nations of the world—Great Britain, France and other nations—while our own people were still suffering. In front of my office today I saw notice of a meeting of the world health conference. Think of that! Yet in this country there are poor people who are sick and who have no help at all; but they are Canadians. We will look after those from other countries first. I am sorry about that, but there is a ray of hope everywhere and the ray of hope is that in the near future I trust the burden of taxation will be so heavy that those who have racial differences of opinion in prosperity will come close together in adversity to oppose that burden. Perhaps that will be the only good effect of the heavy taxation which is being imposed on this country. If it brings good understanding amongst good Canadians it will have served a good purpose. But I am not in favour of high taxation.

Something which does not exist in this house but which exists in this country is a strong Canadian feeling, the desire to promote Canada and to raise it from the small country that it is now to one of the biggest countries in the world. That will be done by trade. It will not be done by ambassadors some of whom are just the butlers of the British ambassadors. It will be done by true Canadian ambassadors who are promoting Canadian interests throughout the world, ambassadors of good will to promote trade; and I do not mean the trade of Santa Claus, exports that we pay for ourselves from the taxes that we collect from the Canadian people, but real bargaining, real trading and perhaps real bartering if the money scheme we have under the Bank of Canada or the one which my hon. friends of the Social Credit party are expounding is without any good results. We must have trade. We must have economic independence; and if it is impossible to have economic independence without political independence, let us have them both and let Canada go forward while Great Britain is on her decline.

We had a sad performance with regard to the Canadian flag. In 1945 I said that it was too soon to have a flag of our own and that if we were a colonial country, as Canada is now, instead of a truly Canadian flag, we should have a union jack larger than the one of standard size. But times have changed during the last year or two, since that was said in the house, precisely on account of the burden of taxation. We see important bodies like the chamber of commerce, boards of trade and other institutions coming to the government and insisting on a reduction in taxes. As I once said to the leader of the C.C.F. party, those who voted for the loan-gifts cannot complain about taxes, but I can. Those who voted against the gift can complain against taxation, but those who voted for it cannot, without being called illogical.

What we need in this country is a truly Canadian flag. We need a Canadian anthem. I am very sorry to see that somewhere in the west some men were arrested by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police precisely because they were calling for "O Canada" as the national anthem. There was some protest by some friends of mine. I have one here in my hand. How is it that in this country men are put in gaol by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police because they insist on singing "O Canada?"

I still have hope for the future, but my mind is not satisfied; and I have been fighting for a long time to try to awaken the government, to try to open their eyes, telling them that the more Canadian the government is, the more popular it will be because of the response of the Canadian people who are eager to see this country the greatest in the whole world.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. POULIOT: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Where was it that the people were put in gaol by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police because they sang "O Canada"?

Mr. POULIOT: I will read the letter which was sent by a friend of mine, Mr. John R. Spendlove, addressed to the R.C.M.P., "C" division, Place d'Armes, P.O. building, Montreal. The letter refers to civil investigation bureau, divisional file No. 41M269-3518, HQ file No. 41D 269-3D178. I intended to make a shorter speech, but if hon. members desire to have this letter read I will put it on record.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I merely asked where it was.

Mr. POULIOT: The letter reads:

Dear Sir:

(Inspector N. Courtois)

Your letter of March 7 received, and I was favourably impressed by the way your Constable Racine carried out orders which impress me most unfavourably.

If it is wrong to express a preference for "O Canada" as our national anthem, why do you not investigate and start a file on our world champion skaters, for whom "O Canada" was played by bands in foreign cities as our national anthem?

In many cases the mere fact of the R.C.M.P. calling on a person and starting a file on him, would hurt him greatly. In my case, living at home, it has not injured me.

I am a war veteran, volunteer, and I resent being investigated and having a file started on me for expressing my admiration for two courageous persons who had the audacity, the impertinence, to state that they were Canadian citizens, not British subjects, and that their national anthem was "O Canada."

I suggest that the person responsible for this crazy order come to Montreal and investigate the theatre managers who play "O Canada" as our national anthem in their theatres.

In his covering letter to me this gentleman also says:

I had written the R.C.M.P. officer in charge "K" division, Edmonton, asking the address of and expressing admiration for two men, Messrs. Boreen and Henry, who insisted forcibly, that since "O Canada" was our anthem and that they were Canadian citizens, a certain orchestra must play "O Canada." They were sentenced to a fine and jail. This was some months ago.

You know, sir, this is pitiful. I understand that it did not happen in the city represented by my hon. friend who interrupted me, but this is a disgrace to our country.

I shall explain why I intend to vote against the two amendments. In the first place, I cannot understand the meaning and purpose of the Social Credit amendment at this time, any more than I could on other occasions. That may be a deficiency on my part. I see a lot about production; I see a lot about purchasing, but I do not see anything about distribution, which is the link between production and purchasing. I would say to my hon. friends of the Social Credit party with all due respect that they remind me of newlyweds who, on the day of their marriage, are given a beautiful car by their parents. Some friends attach old cans and old shoes to the back of the car, which make a lot of noise and stir up a lot of dust. These are the theories of the Social Credit party. It is unfortunate, but that is my belief.

If I may be permitted to say a word about the amendment of the official opposition, my point of view is that, while I have a soft spot in my heart for my Liberal colleagues, the policies of all parties are alike and they all vote together on the main issues. Therefore I do not understand why any opposition group should run an opposition candidate against a supporter of the government in any by-election or even at the next general election, because they all vote together. I warned them time and again that such policies were dangerous; they all voted for them. They all voted together; they all shook hands. I suffered a personal insult when the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), held out an olive branch to the Liberal party and said we should all come together. Has the Liberal party fallen so low as to be asked to unite with the Tory party? It is an insult, to me; it is a slap in the face, and I am greatly surprised that the matter has not been referred to by anyone before this time. Since all parties have voted together, and since the Liberal party has been wrong in following the advice, the wrong advice, the pernicious advice given by Mr. Hanson and all the leaders of the Tory party, I do not see how the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) can rise in his place in this house and say, "We do not have confidence in you. We have no confidence because you have promoted our policies." This is the reason I have voted against the policies of the government; because they were Tory policies, policies to appease the Tory leader of the opposition. As a Liberal I stood against them, and I am still against them. It would be absurd for me to support the amendment of the leader of the opposition, any more than I could support the subamendment of the Social Credit party.

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate, but in view of certain articles appearing in a New Brunswick newspaper which reached me yesterday, one of which I intend to quote to the house, I deem it my duty to bring to the attention of the government a situation which has recently developed at the port of Saint John, and which may adversely affect its welfare and is of deep concern to its citizens. I believe this matter is also of importance to the port of Halifax, since it may affect shipping through both these Atlantic ports when the seaports of the St. Lawrence river are locked in ice.

The matter to which I refer is the diversion of cargo ships from Canadian ports, either Saint John or Halifax, to the United States port of Portland to load grain for shipment overseas. A press dispatch from Portland last week announced the diversion of these ships. I know of no better or more succinct way of bringing this matter to the attention of the government than by quoting from an editorial which appeared in the Telegraph-Journal, published in the city of Saint John, under date of last Saturday, In passing, I may say that this newspaper does not support his Majesty's loyal opposition but is independent in politics. The editorial is headed, "Canadian ports must fight this threat", and reads as follows:

> The chairman of the port committee of Portland, Maine, announced yesterday that 1,000,000 bushels of Canadian grain would be shipped through his city in the next month.
> A dispatch quotes him as saying that he and the Portland chamber of commerce had offered "to assist Canada in a shipping emergency caused by the box car shortage" and had approached the dominion government, which had promptly assigned three ships to Portland to load for Europe.
> Now, nobody can blame this gentleman and his associates for trying to drum up business for their own port, but the federal government is to be condemned in the strongest terms for accepting this "kind assistance." The grain that is sent through Portland obviously won't be sent through Saint John or Halifax. That means that Canadians will lose work and wages to which they are entitled—and lose them to the labourers of a foreign country.
> We have been through all this before—the rivalry between Canadian ports and those of the United States. In central Canada there seems to have been a long-time conspiracy to deprive our waterfront workmen of a livelihood.

Our people fought this once, and beat it, and they must stand ready to fight it now and in future if the ports of Saint John and Halifax are to survive. The Portland shipments, transparently disguised as an emergency, must be viewed in their true light as an underhand effort again to divert to United States competitors the trade on which our existence depends.

The threat is serious and real.

If there are box cars to carry grain to Portland, there are box cars to carry it to Saint John and Halifax. The saving in mileage as between Portland and Saint John is too trifling to be considered and certainly does not constitute a valid excuse for the double-dealing aimed in our direction.

At the very hour when the announcement was being made in Portland, we had ships waiting in our harbour, unable to get grain. They were losing time and money—a situation not calculated to promote increased traffic for this port—and the official explanation was that box cars weren't available to bring grain here.

No box cars to bring grain here! But box cars to carry 1,000,000 bushels to Portland, where the first of three ships is to start taking on Canadian grain cargo Monday! No situation could be more ridiculous or unfair, and if Ottawa expects us to put up mildly with treatment of this kind it gravely misjudges the temper of this part of Canada.

Back in 1931, the famous English port authority, Sir Alexander Gibb, was brought to the dominion by the federal government to make a survey of national ports. He found that Saint John and Halifax had suffered heavily from "the actual diversion of great quantities of Canadian grain to United States ports."

Sir Alexander said in his report:

"Apart from sentiment and patriotism, there are moral and national, as well as some sound business grounds, for the maritimes claim that the grain trade, which is already in many ways subsidized by dominion funds, should utilize to a greater extent the facilities that have been established for it at a considerable expenditure of dominion money."

The sentimental, patriotic, moral, national and business grounds are the same today as in 1931.

And the dominion government must be compelled to recognize them!

During the war years, when our transportation systems were taxed to the limit no situation of this kind arose, and an explanation is called for as to why such a situation should develop nearly two years after the war in Europe has ended.

When the war was on we heard no complaint of a lack of box cars. Evidently there were enough cars to do the job, and a big job it was. An explanation is needed as to why there is a car shortage at the present time. Box cars must have been built during the war years and in increasing numbers since the war has ended to replace those that were worn out and to increase the number in use. It is not unreasonable to ask how those cars are being used.

[Mr. Hazen.]

If the coal strike in the United States last summer or the seamen's strike on the great lakes was the cause of a lack of grain coming to our elevators on the Atlantic coast this winter, a complete explanation of the matter should be furnished by the government.

The government should give a satisfactory explanation, if it has one to give, of how grain could be moved from the prairies to Portland, Maine, when it could not be moved from the prairies to the port of Saint John or the port of Halifax. What the people of my constituency want to know is this: Does the dominion government intend to divert trade permanently from Canadian Atlantic ports during the winter season to United States ports? The editorial from the Telegraph-Journal which I have quoted says:

> The Portland shipments, transparently disguised as an emergency, must be viewed in their true light as an underhand effort again to divert to United States competitors the trade on which our existence depends.

Is it the policy of the government to divert Canadian trade to United States ports, or is there merely a transfer of three ships to Portland, Maine, to meet an unusual and temporary situation? If this is the start of a new policy, it will have to be fought. Canadians must see to it that Canadian goods are shipped through Canadian ports.

Mr. W. F. KUHL (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) stated, at the conclusion of his remarks, that the reason he was going to vote against the social credit amendment was that he was still unable to understand what was involved in the amendment as well as in the social credit proposals. He claimed that he did not understand them any better today than he did ten years ago. The only remark I would care to make with regard to what he alleges as his reason is that "a man persuaded against his will is of the same opinion still."

I feel that the situation in this chamber as at present constituted is not conducive to the acceptance of new ideas. I think it has been quite evident for many years that, regardless of how sound the proposals are that may be advanced in opposition quarters, it is rarely the case that they are accepted by the government in power. All of which leads me to the conclusion that our political system is due for a change if democracy is to function more effectively. My personal feeling is that, so far as the results to the Canadian people are concerned, what we witness here from year to year is largely a farce. It makes no difference what the government brings down in the way of legislation, we know beforehand the government supporters are going to support it. It makes very little difference how many arguments are advanced by the opposition with respect to what they consider defects or improvements, for very few changes are made. So the conduct of the business of this house resolves itself largely into one of jockeying for political advantage. Consequently I feel that the time has arrived when some radical changes will have to be made before the people of Canada enjoy a genuine democracy. I am gratified personally to observe that there is a movement on foot in this country which, when it reaches full fruition, will, I think, bring about the necessary parliamentary reform. I do not believe that the people of any country can obtain the results which they unitedly desire under a political party system. I feel that the political party system has outlived its usefulness and must be supplanted by a new system.

Mr. MacNICOL: What would you suggest?

Mr. KUHL: I intend to suggest an alternative before I conclude my remarks. What I am saying now is in criticism and comment on the remark provoked by a statement by the hon. member for Temiscouata.

It is my purpose to confine my remarks largely to the last section of the amendment moved by the leader of my group, but, before I do so, there are one or two general remarks which I should like to make with respect to the first sections of that amendment. I feel that these sections have been adequately and ably dealt with by my colleagues who have preceded me and anything I wish to say upon them is merely for emphasis and for personal gratification.

I believe that my colleagues have diagnosed the economic ills of this country correctly, and that the remedy which they have proposed is the proper one. Notwithstanding everything that is said to the contrary, I believe that the debate has definitely indicated that our troubles are largely if not entirely confined to monetary policy. All reforms I believe wait on monetary reform. I am quite convinced that the only manner in which the trend toward centralization of power and control not only in this country but throughout the entire world can be halted and eliminated is through monetary reform. The first section of the social credit amendment I believe indicates this fact when it urges "the return to parliament of complete and effective control of Canada's financial policy".

Section 91 of the British North America Act gives the dominion parliament exclusive authority over the matter of money, all money, in the nation. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) argued that we had complete control at the present time, or at least that the control was vested in parliament but that it was not exercising that control in the interests of the people. On that point I quite agree with him. I consider that the piecemeal surrender of the crown's highest prerogative, that of creating and issuing all the money of the nation, is one of the most wicked deeds that has been perpetrated in this nation of ours. I have previously quoted that great American statesman, Abraham Lincoln, upon the significance of the crown's prerogative of creating and issuing the money of the nation. I wish to repeat what he said, because I feel that it is the most important aspect of our national economy that can be considered. I am positively amazed, I am shocked, to observe the attitude not only of members of this house but of many people outside when one refers to the fact that the government should be the sole issuer of the money of the nation, or that it is advisable or desirable for the government to be the issuer of the money of the nation. Immediately that is suggested, you hear people on every side make remarks about funny money, rubber money, printing press money, and kindred remarks. That is a tragedy to me, because it indicates that we have drifted so far away from what constitutes the rights of the people that we are calling that which is wrong right. Today there are many who look upon the state issuing of money with suspicion, whereas actually the state should be the only authority to issue in the original instance all the money of the nation. But we have descended to the point where today the vast majority of the money, one might as well say all the money of the nation, is created and issued in the original instance by private individuals. I consider that one of the grossest crimes which have been committed in this nation. Abraham Lincoln said this:

> The government should create, issue, and circulate all the currency and credit needed to satisfy the spending power of the government and the buying power of consumers. The privilege of creating and issuing money is not only the supreme prerogative of the government, but it is the government's greatest creative opportunity. The people can and will be furnished with a currency as safe as their own government. Money will cease to be the master, and will become the servant of humanity. Democracy will rise superior to the money power.

Surely that is of great importance. I do not think there should be any question whatsoever of the desirability of the government being the creator and the issuer of the money of the nation. It should be taken for granted that the creating and the issuing of all money in the original instance is the prerogative of the crown. But that prerogative has been surrendered piecemeal over a long period of time to private individuals, and that should never have been permitted to come about. As a consequence of this betrayal, and I consider it a betrayal, of public trust we have reached the position referred by my colleague the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw), where the people of this country are almost submerged in public debt, public debt which is absolutely inexcusable and unnecessary. I say, sir, that a national debt in this country is a national lie. It should never have been permitted to arise in the first place. If successive governments of the past had been faithful to the sacred trust reposed in them we would never have had to submit to a national debt; for a country, any country, whether it be Canada, the United States or any other which is rich in resources, rich in skill and knowledge on the part of its people to process those resources into finished products, does not require a national debt. The alarming feature in this situation for the future is that some day this inexcusable situation will be made the excuse for depriving the people of this country of what little liberty they still enjoy.

We saw what happened in the old dominion of Newfoundland as a consequence of that debt-creating policy. At one time they enjoyed the privilege of electing their own parliament. Today they are without a parliament. Their parliament was dismissed and substituted for it was a financial dictatorship. The reason given was that the people were unable to manage their own affairs. We had an argument similar to that in Canada prior to the war, and no doubt within a few years it will be raised again. There was an argument abroad that we had too much government in Canada. Ten governments were too much, too expensive, a luxury that we could not afford, and there was an agitation to attempt to eliminate the provincial governments and concentrate all control in the central government. That is certainly a totalitarian trend and I am fearful that, if this debt-creating policy is allowed to continue, before long we shall again be confronted with such an agitation.

If the governments of the past had been faithful to their trust and had not surrendered to the private banking institutions the crown's highest prerogative we would not today be witnessing the dominion-provincial controversy which has been going on for some considerable time. I believe that the difficulties which the dominion and the provinces are now involved in would have been largely obviated, if not completely, if the central government had remained faithful to its trust. So far as the controversy itself is concerned, I wish to make this comment. I believe that the dominion government is completely in the wrong and that the provinces are completely in the right. I feel that the dominion is adopting a dog-in-the-manger attitude in the controversy. The dominion government refused to eat the hay which they have themselves; they will not allow the provinces to eat it, and they are seeking to filch from the provinces what little hay they have. That certainly can be characterized as a dog in the manger attitude.

So far as any solution is concerned, with respect to rearranging tax fields, I am sure it must occur to any person who reasons logically that there can be no solution by merely rearranging the tax field, because in the final analysis it is the same set of taxpayers who foot the bill whether the provinces collect the taxes or the dominion collects them. I am not going to make any comments concerning the nature of the tax agreements. I think there are more vital issues involved. What I object to mostly in the arrangements that are being made is the trend toward centralization in the central government, which certainly means the loss of freedom to the provinces. It is the duty of the dominion government to exercise the crown's highest prerogative not only in the interests of governing the country from the point of view of the dominion government but also in the interests of the provinces themselves.

If the dominion exercised its prerogative the provinces could be kept continuously supplied with all the financial assistance they need to enable their people to enjoy the standard of living which is physically possible. I know that when we speak of the need of national money or the advisability of national money there are those who immediately consider that we are advocating something for nothing. That is totally wrong. We are aware of the fact that our government can no more give something for nothing than the individual can. When the national government or any other government issues money for public services it is doing nothing less than monetizing the wealth of the country. That should be done to the extent that wealth is not monetized through the regular channels of business. That raises the basic contention that we of this group have constantly made, namely that industry does not monetize the whole of the production. There is always a shortage of money with respect to the price value of goods and, consequently, when the national government steps in and uses national money to finance old age pensions or pensions for the blind, or uses it to finance public works it is doing nothing less than monetizing the unmonetized portion of national wealth. As a consequence of so doing, taxation could be reduced; in fact it could be reduced to the point where taxation was absolutely unnecessary.

The last section of the social credit amendment calls for redefining and clarifying the constitutional rights and responsibilities of dominion and provincial governments, together with the adoption of scientific formulae for alloting to the provinces sufficient revenues to enable them fully to discharge their responsibilities without increasing the tax burden already borne by their people. If the dominion government were to exercise its right of creating and issuing all the money of the nation I do not think there would be very much of a problem with respect to redefining and clarifying the constitutional rights of the provinces and the dominion. Nevertheless there are doubtless some things which will have to receive attention; certainly it may involve constitutional amendment. I am not suggesting that they will or that they will not. One thing I am sure of is that if the provinces are to be left with the financial resources that they have under the British North America Act they will be unable to meet the obligations which they are in duty bound to carry out under the terms of that act. It will be impossible for the provinces to discharge their respective responsibilities without some additional aid. That may involve constitutional amendments, and should steps be taken in future, through a conference either of the provinces, or a combination of the provinces, and the dominion to redefine the constitutional position of the country, there are some things which I should like to say about that situation.

I believe that the constitutional circumstances of this country are such that they demand to be dealt with in a far broader manner than is generally suggested by students of constitutional affairs in Canada. I am not at this time going to enter into all the arguments I have presented on past occasions in this house on this particular subject. I do not wish to repeat, but because this subject is coming more to the fore all the time, and will become more important as time goes on, I must once again record my decided disapproval of the present circumstances and indicate what I believe must be done to rectify them.

I think it is quite inconsistent of us to go abroad in the world and preach from the housetops our faith in democratic principles and then come back home and ignore and ride roughshod over the rights of citizens, as has been done for some considerable time in this country. I wish to say, with respect to any clarifying or redefining of constitutional powers in Canada, that the only alteration to which I will give my approval and consent is one which involves a completely new constitution. I believe that the people of the country must be consulted where their fundamental rights are concerned, and in this question I feel that their fundamental rights are being ignored, disregarded and overlooked.

As I said, I do not wish to repeat all the arguments I have presented in the past as to the reasons why I advocate and urge a completely new constitution, but this I must say and repeat, that it is my firm belief that Canada has no constitution. I know that statement is always received with much scoffing, but it is true. I have argued in the past, with much evidence to substantiate the contention, that the people of Canada did not have the privilege, until December 11, 1931, of creating a constitution of their own.

I believe that adequate evidence can be brought to bear to substantiate the fact that the British North America Act was never a constitution but merely an imperial statute used to govern a colony, and it was not until December 11, 1931, through the statute of Westminster, that the control over the Canadian people was relinquished by the British people so that Canadians might establish their own constitution. That was done, I firmly believe, through the statute of Westminster. The provinces of Canada must essentially enjoy their sovereignty before they can consummate a federal union. They were not sovereign prior to 1931 and the statute of Westminster made them sovereign in order that they might federate in the manner that the fathers of confederation intended but were not permitted to do.

Since December 11, 1931, no steps have been taken to consummate an agreement in this country between the provinces, to be ratified by the people later; and, since a federal union is a union of sovereign states mutually agreeing to adopt a constitution, I assert that there is no federal union and can be no federal union. There is no constitution in this country and cannot be until the provinces sign an agreement which is submitted to the people of Canada for ratification.

I challenge anyone in Canada to produce anything in the nature of an agreement between the provinces, which was ratified by the people of Canada, and therefore I ask, how can anyone assert that the Canadian people have a constitution when they have agreed to none?

I have had the right and privilege, along with my fellow Canadians, since December 11, 1931, to be consulted on the matter of a constitution. I have not been consulted, and I assert therefore, as I have asserted before, that as a citizen of this country, until I along with the majority of my fellow citizens have the right to mark a ballot either in favour of or against the constitution of the country, there can be no constitution.

I am not in favour of a state of anarchy continuing, which I contend is the position legally in this country. I want to see the circumstances rectified in the interests of all the people, and I want to see it done democratically. I have on previous occasions read evidence of the special committee on the British North America Act, in 1935, in which I quoted authorities who indicated how this constitutional position could be rectified. I say that, unless some action is taken, serious circumstances may presently develop in this country.

I have asserted that the only governing authorities with any legal power in this country are the nine provinces, and they have not thus far surrendered their authority. As a consequence of that position, there is developing in western Canada a new movement known as the western Canada federation, which has for its object the setting up of a federation of western provinces. I have here the prospectus which they issued. The president of the organization is John Evans, a resident of Saskatchewan since 1892, honorary president of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, who was at one time a member of this house for the constituency of Rosetown-Biggar, from 1921 to 1930. This western Canada federation proposes extending the boundary lines of the four western provinces up to the arctic circle. Personally, I do not think it is necessary to go to that extent to get justice on this question in Canada. I do not want to see this country Balkanized or divided up any more than anyone else does; but unless those who are responsible are going to do something to endeavour to straighten out this situation, such a thing will come about. I wish to say right here that if the people of western Canada as a majority desire to do this thing, if they wish to set up a western federation and create their own constitution, make their own laws and operate as a separate entity in this dominion, there is absolutely no legal power in the world, in this country or anywhere else which can stop the people of western Canada from doing that. In my opinion they have the absolute legal right to consummate a western Canada federation if they wish to do so.

Again I am not saying that I am in favour of dividing the west from the east, but this constitutional controversy is a burning issue in this country. I have done my level best to suggest ways and means by which it can be settled in the interest of all sections of Canada, but thus far there has been very little support in this house. I am satisfied that, as more of the people of Canada become acquainted with the constitutional position in this country, they will demand that appropriate action be taken. As I indicated at the commencement of my remarks, the only clarification and redefining of the constitutional issue to which I will lend my support is that which involves a completely new constitution. Whether that will be along the lines of the British North America Act or any other act is for the constituent assembly to say. One thing is imperative, and that is that the people shall have a voice in creating that constitution and shall be consulted personally and individually. Until such time as such an agreement is reached between the provinces and ratified by the people of Canada I assert, sir, that our constitutional position is a disgrace to an intelligent people.

In conclusion, I merely wish to say this. We have gone abroad in the world to proclaim our faith in democracy, in the freedom of the individual, in the rights of the individual citizen. That is good. But I suggest that, before we attempt to run the rest of the world, before we seek to tell other nations how to conduct themselves, we first put our own house completely in order. Before we complain about the violation of the rights of other people in the world, let us make sure that the rights of our own people are observed. In short, let us remove the beams from our own eyes before we seek to remove the motes from the eyes of others.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO SIT AFTER ELEVEN O'CLOCK—PRECEDENCE OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS ON MARCH 12

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I should like to ask the indulgence of the house in order to deal with two questions of procedure. The suggestion has been made, which I think met a favourable reception that we might not adjourn at eleven o'clock but might carry on until not later than midnight. Accordingly, with the expectation that we would very nearly but not quite conclude this debate this evening, and with the expectation of having the debate finished very early tomorrow afternoon and, immediately after that, having the division taken as early as possible, with your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, under standing order 45 I move:

That the house do not adjourn at eleven o'clock p.m. today.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the minister if it is understood that there is to be no vote this evening, in any event?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes. It will be impossible to have a vote, because it could only be taken after twelve o'clock, at which time we run into the terms of the resolution passed on March 7. Therefore we cannot have the vote this evening.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE: With the unanimous consent of the house, in order to allow us to terminate the debate on the address tomorrow —and this is for tomorrow only—I move:

That on Wednesday, March 12 instant, the debate on the reply to the speech from the throne shall take precedence over government notices of motion and government orders, notwithstanding the resolution passed on March 7 in relation thereto.

This means that the debate on the address will have precedence tomorrow and, when the debate is disposed of, we shall revert to the terms of the resolution passed in this house on March 7.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I had prepared a modest address in which I intended to express my views in regard to the condition of the country and to advise the government what they should do about it. I had no intention whatsoever of entering into an acrimonious discussion with the Social Crediters until I was dragged into it by the references made to a speech of my own by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw).

Mr. BLACKMORE: And a very fine speech it was.

Mr. IRVINE: It was an excellent speech; and if the hon. member for Red Deer had read it all, he would have made a better speech. I hope I do not have to apologize to the house for having spoken to a resolution in 1935 in which the phrase "social credit" was used. Of course at that time it did not have the same opprobrium it now has. I wish to first explain to the house that when we used the phrase "social credit" we meant something; and what we meant was not a nostrum for everything which might happen to modern civilization. We used it as a social fact, and this is that fact, the credit which accrues as a result of the association of the people working together, or as a result of collective production, is as sound a basis for credit as the capital equipment of a capitalist which he hypothecates at the bank for assistance to carry on his business.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is entirely right.

Mr. IRVINE: That was the meaning we had in using it. Now, sir, in order to justify the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), and in order also to show that the views I expressed on the occasion referred to by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) are the views I shall express tonight and the views I have expressed as long as I can remember, here are some quotations from the same speech which my hon. friend omitted to give. I refer to page 2325 of Hansard for April 2, 1935:

Let me turn now, sir, to a brief summary of the economic situation in relation to purchasing power. Goods manufactured and sold at a profit cannot be bought back with the wages paid those who have produced them.

And further:

The fact that those who are employed do not receive and never have received sufficient income under the profit system to buy even the necessities of life, much less the entire output, together with the additional fact that machinery is displacing thousands from every industry, thus depriving a large percentage of the population of any income at all, has resulted in vast amounts of goods going to waste unused while millions are in want.

It was not because there was not enough money in existence, but because there was not enough money in the pockets of the consumers who would use the goods that had piled up, because the profits they should have used to buy the goods had gone into the pockets of those who operated the industry. I now turn to another section:

I am as firmly convinced as that I am in this house at this moment that if we are to attain prosperity we must plan our way, that our plans must be based upon economic truths and facts of the present time, and that such plans must be worked out by the application of established scientific principles.

I have one more quotation which will indicate to the house the circumstance and reason why we thought it would be of value if the social credit, in our interpretation of it, were loosened up at a moment when those who had money were afraid to invest it, and people were starving. We thought that, since they were starving and since they could produce goods, it was the business of the government to provide the necessary funds to put them to work at profitable industry. So we said:

We regard the problem chiefly as one of making available to the consumer enough purchasing power to equal the total prices of all commodities that are for sale, and we regard provision of the required amount of purchasing power as the most advisable next step, since it will bring about the immediate distribution of the goods required to satisfy the wants of the community and thus prevent revolution and give us time to think out succeeding steps in a fundamental economic and social reconstruction.

That was the reason we had such a motion, not by any means to follow the most extraordinary will-o'-the-wisp that has ever been projected into political discussion in this country, which has been advocated by my hon. friends to my left.

Now, sir, I turn to the speech I wish to deliver, and I may have to make a reference to the Social Credit party as I go along. I believe that the criticism or advice hon. members offer this administration should be based upon the actual situation, social, economic and political, which confronts us at the present moment. My first remark in that regard is that in my opinion, the morale of the Canadian people is extraordinarily low for a nation which has just emerged victorious in a great world war. That lower morale is not due to economic distress, because despite the fact that the cost of living is going up and unemployment is beginning to grow, the economic condition is still reasonably good in a comparative way.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. IRVINE: Well, note the qualifications. A nation needs an inspiration to achieve its utmost, whether in war or in peace, and when war broke out the Canadian people needed a rallying point. I say to you, sir, that capitalism was bankrupt in providing that rallying point. I question very much whether the youth of Canada would have voluntarily responded to an appeal to fight for the capitalism which produced the conditions of 1932. So it was necessary for us to find a rallying cry that would call the nation, and "democracy" was that cry. Democracy was the rallying cry, and capitalism accepted it as an expedient. Capitalist leadership, I am convinced, when it adopted the rallying cry of democracy had no intention whatever of implementing democratic policies on the heels of victory. But the public still remembers, though it is not supposed to have a long memory. The public remembers the rallying cry; it remembers the sacrifices made in order that democracy might be made safe. So today the morale of our people is low because they are suffering from deep disappointment. They find that the steps necessary for launching out toward a democratic system of society have not been undertaken; thus they are disappointed.

Capitalist economics is void of the elements of the democratic principle. My hon. friends of the Social Credit party have often argued that we have democracy in industry because the ballots of our consumers, which is the money with which they buy their needs, determine the nature of the market and the kind of goods the system will produce. Well, all you have to notice is the number of ballots some people have as compared with the number of ballots other people have. If in this house we were to suggest that a few hon. gentlemen should have a hundred votes while those of the common herd have one vote each, not very many of us would stand for that sort of thing. Yet in the economic world there are privileged individuals who can mark a thousand ballots in the economic market for every one the ordinary man can afford to use.

I wish to point out briefly what economic democracy means to me as the thing that Canada needs most at the moment and that her people are expecting, because, as I have said, we fought for that ideal. We would not have fought for capitalism; yet now we are seeing capital institutions reconstructed and reinvigorated, without any real effort to establish the principles of democracy.

Economic democracy implies, first of all, the collective ownership of such means of life as must be used by everybody but which it is not possible for everyone privately to own. However, when the essential means of life of a community are owned by an individual or a corporation, the position of that community is one of dependence upon such individual or corporation for its very life. It may be the case that the corporation, without regard for the needs of the community and in order to maintain its profit rate, may deliberately choose to curtail the volume of production. The community then must necessarily suffer. That is the situation today, and that is undemocratic.

Second, economic democracy implies a common purpose to which every basic industry as well as every part of the industrial mechanism must be geared in order that we may utilize the natural resources, man-power, plant and equipment, science and technical skill to the end of achieving full production for peace as we did in war.

Third, economic democracy implies social planning to achieve a collective purpose. Shall we undertake democratically to plan, that is, as a community, just as a corporation now plans for its profits under an economic dictatorship, disguised under the attractive dress of so-called political democracy?

Fourth, economic democracy also implies the finding of the ways and means of distributing the national income more equitably in keeping with the demands of the farmers for parity prices and those of organized labour in terms of a living wage.

Fifth, it implies devising and working out the technique of democratic management so that workers in industry will be permitted to participate in the direction and operations of industry, thus promoting harmonious relations and the exercise of democratic cooperation.

Such a programme is not only one which fits the times in which we live, but also one which is designed to implement the democratic objectives which we hold out for our people. If such a programme were to be seriously considered it would mean that we could solve such problems as housing, as the extension of our railroad building, as the building of highways, as the undertaking of irrigation and reforestation projects, town planning and all other things necessary for a higher type of life. But of course the question will be raised by the government, as it has been in all my experience, as to there not being sufficient money for any such projects as I have been suggesting would be implied in instituting real economic democracy.

I am suggesting that we must finance peace in a manner similar to that which we used to finance war. The object of financing war was to get the greatest amount of war materials into the front line with the least possible waste of time. The objects of peace are equally as clear; that is, to get into the stomachs of our people and on to the backs of our people the essentials of life as they are required both in time and in quantity. I know there are big industrialists who oppose financing peace as we financed war, and that is not difficult to understand. In financing war they were doing it at a very good profit. Our war materials were destroyed on the battle lines and nothing was left as a backlog to interfere with the consuming market. Indeed I believe it is right to say that War Assets Corporation has spent much of its time in trying to steer some of these surplus goods away from the consumer market into the hands of the dealers or the trade, as it is called.

The capitalists of our time welcome large loans by this country to other countries which will enable them to buy Canadian made goods because such loans increase or maintain prices at home. But if they were asked how they would feel if we were to finance great industrial projects in Canada by the use of our national credit without interest charges in order to supply our own consuming public at home, they would oppose that because such a process might interfere with their rate of profit.

If the policy which I have suggested were to be adopted we would have to find ways and means of distributing the abundance which would result to the consumers of Canada. We would have to devise a financial mecahnism to be used within our own borders comparable with the lend-lease system which was used internationally during the war to distribute war materials to various nations of the world. That financial mechanism would mean that an adequate income would have to be provided to the Canadian people to buy the output of industry. That income would have to be provided by increased wages and increased prices to farmers. It would have to be brought about by increasing pensions to the old people, to the blind, to the disabled and to the sick, and providing allowances to those who are not in a position to earn their own living. By taking them all together, we might be able to equate our consuming programme with our producing programme and thus carry on a constructive economic system.

To the extent to which the government is implementing such policies, it will be judged to be a failure or a success. Some say that our government is an entire failure. I would not go that far because I do not think any government was ever a failure in everything. I think this government has done many things very well, but I think it has failed to do the big things which, in turn, affect all the little things that go to make up the democratic way of life.

I think the present task of the government is pretty nearly impossible so long as it proceeds on its present course. It is following the same course that it followed toward the last depression in 1932.

Let me illustrate. Supposing you board the Canadian National transcontinental at Montreal on the way to Vancouver. You go where the track goes because the train does not go anywhere except where the track goes, unless it goes in the ditch. If you made this trip yesterday or last week you would pass through the same towns and you would reach the same destination as you would have if you had taken the trip in 1932. The government is telling the Canadian people that it is going to take a trip to a town called Prosperity, but it is starting on the same train that went to the town of Depression in 1932. This train will pass through the same towns. At the present time it is just coming into the town of Inflation. Pretty soon it will enter that more dismal city called Deflation. Then it will enter the village of Unemployment and finally land up at the town of Depression. This town of Prosperity, prosperity for all the people, is a new town. It has been mapped out only in the imagination. There are no rails put down to take the people to it. My criticism of the government is that it has made no attempt to build that prosperity for the people of Canada, and I say to the government that when it arrives at Depression it will be beaten, although God forbid that it be beaten by those who sit opposite it and believe the same thing.

I invite the government and the opposition to look this fact squarely in the eyes, and that is that no capitalist country in the history of the world has ever been able to stabilize prosperity. Put that right down into your pipe and smoke it before you go to bed. No capitalist country in the world has so far been able to avoid booms and slumps which provide a mixture of one teaspoonful of booms to two gallons of slumps, to be taken, not after meals, not before meals, but by the proletariat without any meals at all. In the face of that fact I wonder how the government and the official opposition expect to rally the people of Canada once more for another round. How can any party have the effrontery, if you like, to go on the hustings and offer to the people policies that are worn threadbare through generations of repeated failure? The only hope they have of doing it is this, that capitalism, with its wealth and with its control of the avenues of public opinion, may be able once more to fool the people of Canada.

I believe in freedom of speech, and much has been said about that. I believe in freedom of speech, but there is one thing which I think is equal to that, and that is freedom to think. It greatly enhances the enjoyment of hearing one speak freely when, in the exercise of that freedom, he says something so worth while that it makes us proud that he had the freedom to say it. There can be no real freedom to think in a capitalist society where the avenues of public opinion, the very elements of which thoughts are made, are controlled and directed to a definite conclusion by those who have a particular interest in that conclusion. The capitalist press has perfected its high-pressure methods of salesmanship and its high pressure methods of advertising which practically compel the common man to buy what he does not want. It is using that technique now to bolster up the weakening faith, a faith that is weakening in the face of the actual facts of life and in the face of the growing common sense of the common man. I consider it therefore the duty of this government to bring down measures at this session which might be regarded as competent to form the basis upon which an economic democracy may be founded. I say that it must do this if it is to keep faith with itself. It must do this if it is to keep faith with the nations of the world that heard our protestations about democracy during nearly six years of war. It must do this if it respects the courage and heroism of our fighting forces, and, above all, it must do it if it will be true to the memory of those who gave their lives that democracy might be real.

But instead of that, I find that the government is beginning to prepare a retreat. It finds itself, I think, conscious of the tendency toward collectivism. I think the government and the Liberal party have at least an emotional respect for democracy, but on the other hand the government finds itself pretty much the prey of the capitalist press, and it is beginning to weaken under the pressure, especially when the press is joined by the opposition.

I wish to refer to a broadside from the Ottawa Journal. Here is an editorial which says:

> The government is in everything; in transportation on land and sea; in the business of buying and selling wheat; in the business of fixing prices and wages; in the business of managing currency and credit; in the business of subsidizing these and other things; in the business of practically everything from providing people with radio programmes to the bonusing of babies. In this vast and varied field of activity it is not possible for any combination of ministers, no matter what their talents, to know what is going on everywhere about everything all the time. As a consequence, and inevitably, they accept the words and plans and appropriations of their agencies, abdicate responsibility, surrender their task of governing to non-responsible bodies.

The Journal surely cannot be so stupid as not to know that something is going on everywhere about everyting all the time, and I should like to know, if the government does not know what is going on all the time everywhere, who the Journal thinks would know what is going on all the time and everywhere. Surely it is clear that if the government has no time to observe what is going on in all these matters which are enumerated by the Journal and which are under the government's own eyes, it would know much less about them and do much less about them were they left to the caprice of private enterprise as the Journal desires. In the same editorial the Journal goes on to give the remedy:

> There is but one thing to do. The public must say, after decision by vote that it wants the government to get out of business, that it wants retreat before socialism and collectivism stopped and that many of the things now being done by government boards and bureaux should be done by private enterprise and initiative.

Thus spake Zarathustra!

In appreciation of the position in which the Liberal government finds itself, faced on the one hand with the necessity of moving toward the collective will of the people, and feeling at the same time the loaded revolver of economic power at its back, I want here to pay a tribute to liberalism, with a small "l", and I want to pay that tribute because I recognize in that my own heritage of thinking as well as that of every hon. member. That school of thought gave emphasis to civil liberties as a basis for the highest type of democratic culture. It respected and advanced the principle of tolerance in religious belief and political policy; it elevated the dignity of human personality and supported the idea of the sacredness of human life with its influence; in its spirit of tolerance it encouraged diversity of thought and found a place even for heresies in the progressive march of ideas; in its view of the supremacy of human personality it saw the need for providing each individual with an opportunity to develop his own potentialities; and it glowed with confidence in the progressive course of the race, and saw an endless horizon of advance for man.

It is pathetic that a party which adopted the name of Liberal should now appear to be afraid to go the way that Liberals ought to go. There is a splendid tradition of creative imagination. What does the Liberal party, expect—a return to the old middle age laissez-faire? Free private enterprise worked very well in the days following the industrial revolution; but remember that free private enterprise and competition became the parents of trusts, combines, monopolies and cartels. These are the unruly children of that private enterprise and competition which are at once the fundamental principles of Liberalism, of Social Credit and of the hon. gentlemen who sit to the left of Mr. Speaker. Nobody will try to break up these monopolies because it is not possible to do that. You cannot reverse history as you can a cinema reel; and, if you could do so, competition and free enterprise would take you back the same road and establish the same monopolies that they did before. These robust children of free private enterprise and of the private motive and so forth have become little states within the state. Their power is so great that those who have been democratically appointed to manage the affairs of the state find that they are infrequently interfered with in that regard.

Here is another fact which I wish to bring to the attention of the government and of the opposition. Every capitalist country in the world has been compelled under capitalist governments, mind you, to abandon laissez-faire, to contrive some means of standing between the public good and the avarice of monopoly. Were I to produce the list tonight of government in industry, of social services, of government controlled business, it would be a far more amazing list than the one I have quoted, as mentioned by the Ottawa Journal. I should like to say more about that; but let me say that while the Ottawa Journal, the capitalist press generally, the opposition and the Social Credit party are calling for retreat, I wish to remind the house that the great dynamic forces of history are calling for advance.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The Social Credit party is doing that too.

Mr. IRVINE: There is no government that will survive this period unless it can meet the demands of the times; no government will survive this period which has indecision as a method and middle-of-the-roadism as a policy. The times call for definite affirmation and for militancy. There is no future for any government which will condone or encourage capitalist government irresponsibility and cling to policies of privilege rather than to serving the common interests of the masses of the people.

What is the attitude of the other parties? The Social Credit party has committed itself to the profit motive, to free enterprise, to competition. In doing so, it is protecting the very sources of the evils which it is trying to get rid of. It has become the evangelical fundamentalist of economic reaction, and by its rampant militancy in this respect has placed itself to the right of the Progressive Conservative party. It agrees, however, that something is needed. It thinks that something is the single simple expediency of monetary reform. I do not believe, of course, that the prosperity and abundance of which they speak are so easily come by as that. The leader of the party owes it to himself; he owes it to his cause; he owes it to the country to bring down a bill setting forth what that particular reform is that he is talking so much about. I want to see nailed down in legislation the extravagant claims of this propaganda; I want to see it nailed down to specific proposals.

I listened to the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) today. He utters aphorisms about money as if he alone had received the Divine revelation with respect to that. He advocates the simplest self-evident truth with the ponderosity of a hippopotamus climbing a Christmas tree. Just because every loan creates a deposit, which everybody who knows anything about banking or money knows and has known for a long time that by no means proves that all the other tripe which he talked about is true.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. IRVINE: I think you ought to give me five minutes more.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member unanimous consent?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: There must be unanimous consent. I will give my permission if the hon. member will speak and not read every solitary word.

Mr. IRVINE: I have not read my speech.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The hon. member has read every word he has spoken tonight.

Mr. IRVINE: Here are my notes if the hon. member wishes to see them.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You have read every word.

Mr. IRVINE: I want to give a few minutes to the Conservative party.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I object.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to be kind enough to conclude.

Mr. IRVINE: I am going to conclude, but I must mention what I am going to conclude about. The Conservative party, as the official opposition, should do something more than bark at the heels of the government. It is overwhelming itself by displaying its own weakness, a fatal weakness indeed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. IRVINE: One which is apparent in its lack of a political philosophy upon which might reasonably be based a counter proposal to that which the government is making.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. IRVINE: Basically the policy of hon. gentlemen to your left, sir, is the same as that of the political party which governs the country.

I should like to turn for a moment to the—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Time; I am not going to sit here all night and listen to the hon. member.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry, but apparently the hon. gentleman has not the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker, I shall take the opportunity to do this on the main motion or on the amendment of the official opposition.

Mr. HANSELL: Mr. Speaker, I happen to be the hippopotamus that is high enough up the tree to see that my hon. friend has sparse notes and that he is not reading his speech.

Mr. BENTLEY: Leave it at that.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I do not read mine.

Some hon. MEMBERS: You do not make one either.

On motion of Mr. Cruickshank the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie the house adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 12, 1947

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SMITH (CALGARY WEST)—EASTER RECESS

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege. I hope, sir, that you will regard it kindly and that some of the gentlemen from the "amen" corner will regard it even generously.

Yesterday the Prime Minister announced that the Easter recess would extend from April 2 until April 14. I am asking that this matter be given further consideration. I am in this position. I must rent my house, which I have done, and the member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) is in the same position. The housing shortage being what it is, we could not selfishly close those houses. Last year we were in the same position. We were away from home just one day less than six months, attending the last session of parliament. On the other side of the picture it seems to me that the business of parliament perhaps requires that we should make this Easter vacation as short as possible. I am asking the government to reconsider the matter, because it does seem to me that with all the work we have in front of us we shall be occupied for another full six months and that we can serve our time a little better down here.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend may or may not have noticed that I had asked the Clerk to place in Votes and Proceedings a motion with respect to the Easter vacation in order that the matter might come before the house again before a final decision was reached. The motion appears in today's Votes and Proceedings and will be on the order paper tomorrow, when there will be an opportunity for the house to discuss the resolution. May I say to my hon. friend that the whole purpose my colleagues and I had in mind was to seek to meet the wishes of the great majority of the members of the house. It was, accordingly, suggested that the whips confer with the members of the different parties and it was understood that the government would be guided by their decision.

So far as the government is concerned let me make it perfectly clear that we are quite prepared to take either the shorter or the longer period, but what we are seeking to do, in leaving it to hon. members themselves to decide, is to oblige hon. members of this house so far as we can in the matter.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I appreciate that fully, and I was not suggesting for a moment that anything was being forced on us, but some of us are in a difficult position. I was in the same position last year. I did not get any expenses—not a nickel.

MR. GIBSON (COMOX-ALBERNI)—REFERENCE TO REPORT IN VANCOUVER "DAILY PROVINCE"

Mr. J. L. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege arising out of a reference to myself made in the Vancouver Daily Province of February 27 last, in which I was referred to as "J. L. Gibson, Liberal, Comox-Alberni". I do not say, sir, that this is the most libellous thing that has ever been said about myself, but it is probably the most untrue. I do not intend to take the same action that the premier of Ontario took against the Toronto Daily Star because I do not believe the courts would hold that it constitutes defamation of character. There is only one thing I will say. I am probably the unique member sitting to your right in that of all hon. members who sit over here I have no hope of ever being in your position, sir; of being a parliamentary assistant, a member of His Majesty's privy council, or in the other place. I will even go so far as to promise the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that if the electors of Comox-Alberni withhold from me their support at the next election I will not even ask him for a messenger's job.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): I wish to table a statement with respect to translations of Hansard, Orders of the Day, Votes and Proceedings, Reports of Committees and Proceedings of Committees. With the unanimous consent of the house I would ask that it be printed in Votes and Proceedings.

SUGAR

POSITION AS TO SUPPLY—INCREASE IN CONSUMER RATION

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement on the prospective supply of sugar during the current year.

Sugar has been a commodity in short supply since 1942, when the Japanese forces overran and subsequently destroyed some of the greatest sugar producing areas of the world, and since that year the available world supplies of sugar have been subject to international allocations. The sugar committee of the international emergency food council, of which Canada is a member, has recently completed its review for 1947, and its recommendations on the 1947 allocations have been unanimously approved by the executive committee of that council.

The total available supply of sugar in 1947 shows an encouraging improvement over 1946, but still falls considerably short of meeting current world requirements.

Statistics of 1947 supply must necessarily be estimates, since the greater part of the 1947 crops is not yet harvested or manufactured. Within certain limits, however, we are now able to project our 1947 position.

On the most optimistic assumption relating to crop out-turns, the 1947 allocation to Canada—which for statistical purposes includes our domestic beet sugar production—will provide us with 93 pounds of raw sugar per capita, which is equal to 87 pounds of refined sugar. If, on the other hand, we take a conservative view of crop prospects, we will have about 86 pounds of raw sugar, or about 80 pounds in terms of refined. These figures may be compared with actual supplies of 71 pounds refined in 1946, 95 pounds as our average pre-war consumption, and 103 pounds per capita in the peak year of 1941.

In other words, we can expect an improvement in 1947 of not less than 12 per cent and probably not more than 20 per cent in comparison with 1946. But even this improved rate of supply will be at least 20 to 25 per cent below what I might call the unrestricted or unrationed demand. It will, therefore, be obvious that we cannot anticipate the elimination of sugar-rationing for at least another twelve months.

The wartime prices and trade board reports to me that current stocks and prospective supply justify an increase in the ration, and an increase of one-seventh or about 14 per cent, will be put into effect at the beginning of the next rationing period which is April 1.

In 1946 the standard consumer ration under the combined sugar-preserves ration was 7 coupons per quarter. This will now be increased to 8 coupons per quarter. Similarly, the industrial sugar ration which is now at 70 per cent of 1941 usage, will be raised to 80 per cent of 1941 usage. Biscuit and cereal manufacturers will also get a 10 point increase to 85 per cent, and bakers the same increase to 90 per cent of 1941 usage. Equivalent increases will be extended to "quota users" —that is to say, hotels, restaurants, etc. The home canning allowance of 10 pounds of sugar per person will remain unchanged for the present, though without holding out any firm promise I may say that if nothing untoward happens, the prices board hopes to be able to validate two or three extra coupons during the fruit harvesting season.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will the minister permit a question? Has consideration been given to increasing the present subsidies with a view to assuring a material increase in beet sugar production, and also to permitting factories to operate to capacity instead of the way they are operating at present?

Mr. ABBOTT: As my hon. friend knows, the increase to $1.25 was authorized by the sugar administrator through the wartime prices and trade board. So far as I am aware, no consideration has been given to increasing that amount.

[Mr. Abbott.]

BUTTER AND MEAT

PRESS REPORT OF EFFECT OF RISING PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance? Has the minister's attention been called to a press report to the effect that certain government officials believe that to permit rising prices would result in decreased consumption of butter and meat, as has happened in respect to milk? Will the government accept or reject this advice?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I have not seen the article and I have no particular comment to make on it. The government sometimes accepts the advice of newspapers, and sometimes it does not.

Mr. KNOWLES: This is the advice of government officials, not of newspapers.

UNITED NATIONS

UNRRA—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN ORGANIZED ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What steps are being taken by the Canadian government to replace our contributions under the arrangements of the united nations relief and rehabilitation administration by some other form of organized assistance?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): At the last meeting of the general assembly of the united nations a resolution was adopted to set up a committee of experts to assess the needs for further relief in devastated countries. That committee made its investigation and recently made its report to the secretary general who communicated it to the member nations of the organization. The report was recently received by the Canadian government and has been under active consideration since its receipt, but no decision has yet been reached.

COAL

STATUS OF SUBSIDY TO MARITIME OPERATORS AFTER MARCH 31

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, based on a telegram which I have received from certain coal operators in the maritime provinces with reference to the withdrawal of coal subsidies. Will the minister inform the house whether it is the intention on March 31 of this year to withdraw the subsidy paid on the production of coal?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): The government have not reached a decision on that point; therefore I am unable to give the information.

Mr. BROOKS: Will the minister inform the house? March 31 is not very far away, and he knows that a serious situation has developed in the maritime provinces. The operators would like to know.

Mr. HOWE: For reasons which my hon. friend will appreciate, it is not customary to announce changes in subsidy arrangements in advance of the changes taking effect. Since this is a special circumstance I shall investigate and endeavour to get an early decision.

CHEESE

PRICE UNDER AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH FOOD MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MARK C. SENN (Haldimand): About a month ago the Minister of Agriculture, in reply to a question by the leader of the opposition stated that the price of cheese under the agreement with the British food ministry was the subject of negotiation. Can he say whether the matter has been decided yet?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): A decision has not yet been reached on that question. It is associated more or less with the decision that will be taken with regard to feed grain, and the matter will all be decided at the same time.

BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE

WORLD WAR II

On the orders of the day:

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Some time ago I was asked a question by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Lennard) as to the government's intention regarding a book of remembrance. Numerous representations have been made that we should have a book to record the names of all the members of Canada's armed forces who gave their lives in the last war, in order that we might have a permanent record of those who gave their lives in order that freedom might live. I should tell the house it has been decided that work on such a book will be commenced. The location and form will be announced later.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WAGES OF CREWS AT LIFE SAVING STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I wish to direct a question to the minister of transport. I gave him notice of it. Will he state why lifeboat crews have not received raises of wages as have all crew members of lighthouse tenders on the Pacific coast, who have received substantial increases retroactive from August last.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Increased wages for crews of life saving stations are being actively considered at the moment by the Department of Transport. A submission is now before the Department of Labour and it may be some little time before a decision is arrived at. Just as soon as one has been reached it will be put into effect.

POULTRY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY WITH REGARD TO FEED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): In view of the peace and harmony prevailing this afternoon, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture? When will the minister be able to make a statement regarding feed grain for poultrymen in British Columbia?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): As announced yesterday, I hope to be able to make a statement before the end of the week. That should be the day after tomorrow.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 11, consideration of the motion of Mr J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): The amendment proposed by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) states in terms that the mover, and the party which he leads, have not confidence in the administration of the day. I need not say to you, Mr. Speaker, that confidence in the present administration does not ooze from the soles of my shoes. If I have until this late moment refrained from taking part in the debate it is because I had hoped that some of the gentlemen opposite, whose constituencies are in the province from which I come and who for many reasons are better qualified than I to speak for the people of that province, would have stated the views of the people of Quebec. So far I have heard from the opposing benches nothing which would indicate that in Quebec there is any dissatisfaction with the present regime or with the policies that it is pursuing.

One hesitates to make himself the interpreter of others' wishes and of others' thoughts, but the time does come when one is so strongly impressed by the unanimity of public opinion that he feels it his duty to speak even though his voice be but a faint echo of that opinion. I entertain the view that the people of Quebec are opposed as a whole to controls; that they tolerated them during the period of the war; that for the purposes of the war they were willing that such controls should weigh upon them; but that, the war being over, they regard these controls as no longer reasonable but on the contrary harmful to them.

An hon. MEMBER: Louder, please.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask hon. members to moderate their voices. So many conversations are going on in the chamber that it is difficult to follow the hon. member who is trying to make himself heard.

Mr. HACKETT: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am not unaccustomed to speaking in places where my words do not always fall on attentive ears; that is sometimes a sign that those who should hear refuse to do so. I was going to deal with two or three of the controls that seem to be particularly irksome.

I do not know of anyone who does not find that some control in some way is agreeable to him. Everybody can find in this or that control something that is beneficial to him, and to that extent the burden of the system as a whole is less troublesome to him. But I am opposed to the general principle of control. Many controls imposed upon the people grow largely out of the policies of the government.

We have learned from the apostles, the avowed apostles—I was going to say the honest apostles—of socialism who sit to our immediate left, that last year, only something over thirty per cent of the total building which went on in the dominion was the building of dwellings. We are aware that it is because of the restrictions imposed by government upon the materials which are essential to house construction, and because of its policy of exporting those things which are essential to the construction of dwellings, that there has been such a lag in this most important undertaking, that of building houses for the people. It was interesting to hear a socialistic programme such as that undertaken by the government—the programme of providing houses—criticized by the socialists because the government had not carried out its programme as effectively as the socialists think they could have carried it out had they been in office.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this failure is merely evidence of the inability of a government to perform functions that are in their very nature the business of private enterprise. Houses are needed, and they are not being provided, because the people who could provide them, the agencies that are necessary to bring them into existence, are cramped and curbed by government controls.

Let us leave dwellings—and consider office buildings, of which there is a shortage in all the cities, a shortage again attributable to government policy. We find these buildings filled with commissions, boards, and crown companies, and their employees. We find hordes of these government employees occupying useful space in most of the large buildings of all the principal centres of the country. Therefore I say that the shortage of dwellings as well as of office and factory space is largely due to the failure of the government to make it possible for the ordinary enterprise of the people to overcome this particular difficulty which confronts them.

We are told at times, and we know it is true, that it is impossible to find young men or young women to undertake tasks in the business world. The reason is that they have some kind of job with the government. They are in a crown company, a board, or a commission; and they occupy, if in Ottawa, some of these temporary buildings. I sometimes think that if a cleansing flame could wipe out the temporary buildings which have been put up here, it would render a great service to the people of Canada. They are filled with people who were congregated there for the purposes of the war and who have remained for no purpose other than to increase the burden on the taxpayers.

Another form of control which is particularly burdensome is the wartime prices and trade board. I ask any of my hon. friends who sit opposite, and who represent constituencies in the province of Quebec, how much enthusiasm is there in their constituencies for these wartime controls? They are not only burdensome; in many instances they are highly detrimental to the welfare of our people. I come from a part of the province where dairying is engaged in; and there, because of the control of the price of butterfat, herds are being sold. Let me say here, because I do not wish to be misunderstood, that there has been no serious drop in the production of butter, but there has been a very serious drop in the production of cheese, and there has been an immense increase in the demand for milk products. Yet we find that the herds are being dissolved; they are being sold, they are going across the line where price restrictions no longer exist.

In the year 1944, 53,804 pure bred and dairy cattle were exported from Canada to the United States. Last year 92,013 head of these cattle were exported to that country. Of this very substantial figure more than half came from the province of Quebec. In the year 1944, 28,457 head of pure bred and dairy cattle were exported from Quebec, and last year 47,666 were exported. When I say from the province of Quebec, that means that a very large percentage of them came from the area known as the eastern townships, which is the dairying area of Quebec. The dairying industry there has been dealt a mortal blow by the controls which have been placed upon it by the present administration.

Just a moment ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) mentioned sugar. I should like to say a word about that. The international food council is a body which controls the sugar output of the world. It is composed of representatives of Great Britain, the United States and Canada. The United States produces 65 per cent of its sugar requirements, Britain 30 per cent, and Canada 18 per cent. Out of this world pool last year we were allotted 504,000 short tons of sugar. That included 90,000 tons of Canadian grown sugar. That meant that we needed to import into Canada 414,000 tons of sugar. Where did it come from? Forty per cent of it came from Cuba and San Domingo; the balance came from the British West Indies. That brings me to a point which I will develop a little later. But owing to the way in which prices have been manipulated, the greatest source of sugar beet supply in Canada, southwestern Ontario, has been hit so hard that its production fell at one time to less than 20 per cent of what it was before the war. In the great factory at Wallaceburg, which is capable of producing something like 2,500 tons of sugar a day, not a wheel is turning.

Mr. REID: Did the lack of labour not have something to do with that?

Mr. HACKETT: The lack of labour had absolutely nothing to do with it. Government policy made the price of sugar such that the farmers who were growing onions, beans and other subsidized products, just could not afford to grow beet sugar. We find this great industry hamstrung and throttled by a policy of the government. The situation became so terrible that, in order to prevent the annihilation of this great industry, the government of Ontario contributed one dollar per ton per year for beets, in the hope that remedial legislation would come.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We contributed some Japs.

Mr. HACKETT: I should prefer to talk to the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) in private. He is more interesting there and easier to follow.

I was going to say that there were some Poles brought in last year to help garner the beet crop; but the fact is that the policy of the government has ruthlessly smitten in this area in Ontario an industry which is indigenous to that province. It is being sacrificed for reasons which nobody can explain. At one time something was said by somebody about not a nickel for a Tory province. One does not like to suggest that this might have had something to do with the policy here, but the fact remains that this industry in the province of Ontario is being very greatly hampered and is threatened with extinction, just as is the dairying industry in the province of Quebec.

What is the reason for all this? We are told we are imposing these restrictions because we fear inflation. Let us examine that for just a moment. I suppose inflation means, among other things, a rise in price, a drop in the value of our money; that is on the lips of everyone. We hear that the housewife is fearful lest the prices of dairy commodities and sugar go up. But does the housewife understand, has it been explained to her, that because of the taxes under which her household labours, the take-home money of her husband is diminished, in order that these controls may be continued?

Let us consider the amounts paid last year in bonuses and subsidies on butter and cheese and compare them with the total of the two or three cents increase in the cost of milk. Then we shall see how much more that milk costs the people of Canada. Let us go further and take this matter of sugar about which we were speaking. The price has been fixed. The refinery in Montreal receives $5.89 per hundred pounds. The cost of refining is fixed at $1.57. But here is a little item which no one seems to have spoken of. Sugar is in the general tariff at $1.29 per hundred pounds, with an imperial preference of $1 per 100 pounds. This means that every hundred pounds of sugar imported into Canada pays $1.29 at the port of entry. Moreover there is an excise tax of $1 per hundred pounds. In order to maintain this control the excise tax and import duty have been obliterated. So right away we have a concealed bonus or tax upon sugar amounting to $2.29 per hundred pounds, subject to the slight modification that the $1.29 applies only to the general tariff, which would mean sugar coming from sources other than British. At the present time that preference is not allowed, but if you wish to indulge in the fiction of considering that preference to be in effect, we must remember that we get 40 per cent of our importations of sugar from Cuba and San Domingo and the remainder from the British West Indies. The result is that there is a concealed benefit or subsidy being paid by the taxpayer, amounting to something over $18,000,000 a year. So when the housewife begins to understand that the fact she is getting sugar for a little less means that a great deal more is taken out of her husband's wages in order to pay taxes, she is not going to be as enthusiastic about wartime controls as she may be at the present time.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the whole story. When you add to these hidden bonuses and subsidies, which are not declared, the cost of administration; when you add the cost of paying and maintaining the hordes who are checking up on all manner of dealers in sugar and other commodities all over the country; when you add the cost of the detectives, the snoopers, the people following up one another to see that the government employees themselves are honest, the people who are endeavouring to ascertain whether or not these controls are being respected in their minutest details; when you take all that, plus the cost of prosecutions, and compare that cost to the price that would normally prevail if there were complete freedom, I venture to suggest that we are paying more per pound for sugar and more per quart for milk with the controls on than if they were off—and controls are still on milk, to the extent that it is affected by the sale to Britain of quantities of cheese, which sales are controlled and subsidized.

Mr. GLADSTONE: We still have a long way to go to reach the 25 cents a pound for sugar we paid after the first war.

Mr. HACKETT: I did not understand the hon. gentleman, and I hope he will pardon me if I do not answer him, because I have a limited time and I wish to get on.

Mr. GLADSTONE: I say we paid 25 cents a pound for sugar after the first war, and present prices are still a long way from that.

Mr. HACKETT: We have heard a great deal about what happened after the last war. We did go through a short period of turbulence, but we escaped the clutches of all these controls and got back on our feet again. What are we doing now? Last year we passed the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act which continued these controls, and this session we are asked to pass legislation continuing other controls. We find the spirit of control creeping in and popping up in most unexpected places. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) was here a moment ago. Only the other day, in a committee of this house, this same cloven-footed animal, control, popped up and a provision was inserted in the Patent Act giving the government the right to expropriate at any time anyone in the department felt it wise to do so. This simply means that anybody with a patent which is worth while, which might be used for defence purposes, would never bring it to Canada. By these controls we are shutting the door on inventions and denying ourselves the benefit of the genius of our people.

Again let us talk about prices. I should like so much to see this brought into the light. Let me tell hon. gentlemen of a practice that is going on in my constituency. Merchants are driving their trucks into neighbouring villages in New England, and there they are buying from retail merchants, at retail prices, certain kinds of goods such as paper products, originating in Canada, and others, such as coffee and other products, originating outside the United States, and bringing these goods to our ports, declaring them to customs at the retail prices which they paid for them, and putting them on the shelves duty paid in their stores at prices lower than those at which they could buy them wholesale in Canada.

When one encounters a condition of this kind one feels there is something terribly wrong in this whole system of controls. We have put up with it for a long time. We are paying taxes, higher probably than those paid by any other people, taxes which are driving our young folks away from home. We are paying taxes which are making it difficult to get into the production of controlled goods, with the result that our manufacturers are turning their efforts to the production of goods which are not required or which have not come under control, in the hope of getting some return on their invested capital.

And why do we proceed in this way? The people of Quebec are utterly dissatisfied with this type of control. They resent it; they have no respect for it; they feel that it is so unnecessary that any means of evading, avoiding or getting away from it is lawful. The result is that our courts are filled with prosecutions of those evading the law. But these people feel they are doing no wrong, because they have no respect for the law in its present form.

Why do we follow the programme of the socialists? Their programme was clearly stated at Regina, and I took occasion to read it only a short time ago. If the hon. and capable gentleman who leads that party had been called upon to form a government I do not believe he could have hoped to make more rapid progress, along the lines of socialization of the great industries and great undertakings of this country, than has the present government.

We find all these theories indulged in, and we ask: Where have they ever succeeded? What is there to lead one to believe that socialism can give any relief to anyone? Name a country which has profited or benefited under socialism. Name a country which has not lost in prestige, lost in liberty, lost in everything we hold dear, when it yielded itself up to that form of government, a form of government which inevitably culminates in—

Mr. IRVINE: Good living.

Mr. HACKETT: I was going to say serfdom: but I hesitate to use that word because I have heard it used so often in the house.

Let us turn to England. There is no one in the house who does not admire the effort England made in the last war. Yet today we see her under a socialist government, listless, her hands paralyzed, as it were, and her heart no longer responding to the thrill of the anthem that Britons never shall be slaves. Today they are not producing enough to keep themselves alive; and there does not seem to be any intent or wish on the part of those who are in key industries to make the effort necessary to redeem themselves from the difficult position in which they find themselves.

I felt that in this debate it was well that at least one person coming from a province which is traditionally individualistic, a province which speaks for itself in most matters and which, as I believe all hon. members opposite know, is opposed to these controls en bloc and in detail, should raise his voice in protest. It seemed to me the government should be given this information from the opposition, if not from its own members.

We are gradually slithering into a position from which it will be very difficult to emerge. And so long as the people have no confidence in socialism—and I still think the people of Quebec are hostile to its doctrines, believe that it is detrimental to the general welfare of the country and will ultimately cause them great grief—I believe the people of that province should have at least one spokesman in the House of Commons, even though he may represent a feeble minority, to say that Quebec does not want socialism; does not want controls.

After all, on this continent there is no place for two social philosophies. The great nation to the south of us has been the determining factor in most of the important decisions Canada has taken. That may be our misfortune, but it is a fact. A socialistic Canada cannot hope to live in harmony beside a free-enterprise United States. And when we enact legislation such as the foreign exchange control bill, which impounds dollars which Americans brought here in good faith, in the belief that they had a good investment and could take it home with them when they saw fit, we are breaking faith with a friend.

It is well that we should understand that we are not merely slipping or slithering down the Gadarene slope; we are rushing down it. The amazing thing to me—and this is one of the peculiar aspects of my situation in parliament—is that most of my intimates who sit opposite say nothing. I wish my friends would find it in their hearts to say what their constituents tell them about controls. I wish they would find it in their hearts to vote as their constituents suggest to them they should vote concerning these matters which effect us so vitally.

Mr. FREDERIC DORION (Charlevoix-Saguenay) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) has just given us an exact picture of the feeling which now prevails in the province of Quebec, particularly with reference to controls; personally, I hope to have the opportunity, when this bill is introduced in the house of stating what the electors of my riding think of the wartime prices and trade board and of controls. Since the opening of the session, the following excerpt from the throne speech has given rise to a great deal of commentary:

> Since the last session of parliament, negotiations for tax agreements have been carried on with certain of the provinces.

And further:

> Tax agreements have now been reached with several of the provinces.

We know of course that several provinces have still not deemed fit to enter into an agreement with the Dominion government. I maintain, therefore, that the present rift between the federal authorities and several provincial legislatures threatens to widen to the point of upsetting the structure of confederation.

It is not my duty to uphold the position taken by provinces such as Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec. The spokesmen of those provinces have expressed their opinions much more clearly than I could have done myself. On several occasions they have asserted their rights and they are in a better position than anyone else to defend the interests of their respective provinces.

As federal representative of one of the most important constituencies, I contend—and I am sure that I express the opinion of my electors—that the dominion government's attitude in dealing with the provinces constitutes a tremendous threat to our country's unity.

By deciding to sign separate agreements with certain provinces, the federal government dangerously aggravates the few dissensions which may have existed between certain provinces owing to the differences of interests which naturally have always existed.

Those separate agreements tend to rouse the provinces one against the other and favour the annexation movement in the western provinces and the separatist movement of Quebec, all this to the detriment of the Canadian nation.

I hope that I may be wrong, but I maintain that the present attitude of the government in this matter may have disastrous consequences.

My constituents have asked me to seize the first opportunity afforded me to express, on their behalf, the strong resentment which they have felt upon hearing that strangers holding important posts in our country took upon themselves to teach us lessons in morality or to insult what we hold as our dearest and most precious heritage.

Since the beginning of the session, we have heard from all sections of the house justified grievances against the treatment meted out to our country by the so-called "Big Four."

I was particularly impressed by the speech of the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Gauthier) who uttered hard but true statements. I remember, Mr. Speaker, that in March, 1945, along with a few other colleagues, I shocked the house when I stated that I had little faith in the united nations organization, as contemplated. I said among other things:

> This resolution deals with the safeguard of mankind and the important part Canada is called upon to play in the organization of a new world.

Obviously it was not anticipated at the time in what position Canada would be placed by the great powers. And I added:

> If the powers that will control the conference were all democratic powers, we might perhaps entertain some hope; but when we know that the one which exerts the greatest influence upon others is a dictatorial power, just as the one we are now fighting, we cannot expect very efficient results.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the fears I then felt on the score of international relations were not so senseless or unfounded, especially when we consider that our country, one of the few in the whole world that fought with the greatest unselfishness, is disdainfully, I would even say contemptuously kept out of international conferences.

We had not possessions to defend; we did not need to wage war to extend foreign markets. We believed or rather imagined that we were being commanded to take part in the war by the desire to rid the world of subversive forces, especially of elements undermining civilization and Christendom.

What a disillusion, what a brutal awakening to realities, when, today, we see the countries that we have specially helped, under the rule of reactionary opportunists who are attempting to deprive a suffering, an almost dying people, of the only particle of ideal that may help them to some extent, to endure the sufferings which are their lot.

Indeed, every one knows that, through iniquitous and numberless prosecutions, by open persecution even, launched against religious authorities, both Catholic and Protestant, an attempt is made to do away with all thoughts of religion, in these people.

We have not rationed our help to France, either during or after the war; we thought that, on the day of deliverance, we would recognize her as we had known her in the past, and especially in the light of memories she had left among us, in Canada. But what a change we have noticed. Of course, I am not referring to the real France, which still exists in the hearts of all French patriots and which, sooner or later, will come to light again, I am sure, for that France, true France, can never die.

I am speaking of what is commonly known as official France, which we know through her government and her foreign representatives.

After having tendered our help with so much generosity, we had the right to expect that, in view of her present situation, her representatives would not attempt to give us lessons in domestic government and so-called culture, as they have done quite recently.

If there is one country from which we would never have expected insults, it is certainly Yugoslavia. We did not hesitate to contribute most generously to the assistance intended for the people of that nation. We might perhaps have asked ourselves whether the government forced on that country after the war was one which we could trust, but we overlooked all such considerations and our only thought was to relieve the distress of the people. We did more than our share and we could reasonably expect some gratitude instead of insults such as those which the consul general of Yugoslavia in Canada has just directed to one half of this country's population. We could not expect the recipient of our food gifts to bite the hand of his benefactor and to spit in his face by insulting His Holiness the Pope. I have here an article in which Mr. Emile Benoist reports, in Le Devoir of March 10, an interview given by the consul general of Yugoslavia in Montreal. Here is what Mr. Benoist has to say:

We shall translate as literally as possible the first part of that interview:

The consul general of Yugoslavia, recently appointed in Montreal, Mr. Zaco Popovitch, lays on the Roman Catholic church the blame for "the highly coloured reports" of the trial of Yugoslav Archbishop Stepinac, on charges of collaboration with the enemy.

Much has been written about Stepinac, said Popovitch in an interview, but most of the information is misleading.

We allowed Stepinac to defend himself, but the crimes he had committed were so great that he could not do so. He said that he knew nothing about the slaughter of those Serbians who had refused to become Roman Catholics, but the evidence against him was overwhelming. Neither the Pope nor Stepinac protested against those outrages, but the Pope now claims that the Catholics are persecuted in Yugoslavia.

That statement is absolutely untrue.

In my opinion, the time has come for Canada to prepare a manual of etiquette for the benefit of certain foreign representatives. Moreover, we are somewhat to blame for this unpardonable audacity of the Yugoslav representative in Canada. Indeed, had the Canadian government given effect to the request of hundreds of organizations and of thousands of individuals; had it picked up enough courage and protested against the unjust and despicable way the Yugoslav government treated Archbishop Stepinac, because he was a Catholic, it is quite probable that this new consul would not have dared vent the way he did his ill-humour, upon his arrival in this country. And again today, if the Canadian government accept, without sounding a protest, the insults of this individual, it thereby encourages this man and others like him, to go on insulting us in our own house.

The people insist that the government take a firm and courageous attitude and I hope it will not fail in its duty. There is but one solution to this problem, namely that the Canadian government make the necessary representations to the Yugoslav government to the effect that this representative be called back as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word concerning the amendment to the amendment now before the house. The hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Lacombe) clearly stated what he thought of it, and as far as I am concerned, I fully endorse his remarks.

Mr. PHILEAS COTE (Matapedia-Matane) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to congratulate my deskmate in this house (Mr. Cournoyer) on his splendid victory in the constituency of Richelieu-Vercheres. I also congratulate him on his maiden speech.

(Text):

I should also like to congratulate my honoured colleague from "Little Chicago", the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacNaught) on his address. He has proven once more that the crown prince of Prince Edward Island is good timber for the King's cabinet.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker may I now call to the attention of this honourable house the demise of my two predecessors as federal representatives of the constituency of Matapedia-Matane, Mr. F. J. Pelletier and notary J. L. Dionne. The former was member of the house from 1917 to 1925, the latter from 1925 to 1930. Both passed away in the year just ended, after having, in their own way, admirably served their constituents and their fellow-citizens.

Both served the Liberal party and their country equally well. I again extend my sympathy to both families.

(Text):

I had no intention of participating in this in this sort of academic debate, but since the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) lifted the lid on the chicken, cooked, stuffed and dressed by the financial bigwigs, I consider it an elementary courtesy to thank him briefly for his helping. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is well known throughout the country as the former president of the National Trust Company of Toronto, and as the financial critic of the Tory opposition. Therefore nobody would dare connect him with anything but big business, financial interests and trust corporations, which, of course, is in perfect harmony with Toryism and reactionary political concepts. So when, the other day, namely on February 7, he took the stand taken by the Tory premiers of Ontario and Quebec with regard to federal-provincial relations, he was in good company and vice versa; for the old saying is always true: "Dis-moi qui tu fréquentes et je te dirai qui tu es." But that union of the bigwigs of finance with the premiers of Ontario and Quebec gave us more than a flavour of what was cooked in the oven of Toryism in this country. It also gave us a taste of the real meat they are serving us as well as the gravy with which they are covering it.

Yes, indeed; at long last the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, with his unbiased frankness, told us that the people he represents fully share the views of Messrs. Duplessis and Drew, although he let pass a wonderful opportunity to tell us why their sharing the views was not altogether in harmony with sharing the wealth; or maybe it was simply because he was trusting that we would analyse it. Well, let us do so. Why is it, then, that the Tories and the financiers in this country get together aboard this political bogey of provincial autonomy? Would it by any chance be for the same reason that they got together against family allowances? Let us see, and let us see, first, what is the federal proposal to the provinces and, second, what is the aim of the federal government with regard to these proposals. After that, we shall see why the Tories and the trustards are once more like "larrons en foire" on this issue.

The federal proposal for the provinces can be brought down to this: allow us to levy taxes, part of which you could yourself levy according to the constitution; for we want to assume the cost of social security legislation so as to make it uniform across the country, to say nothing of the financial help we could give you in return for the opportunity of coordinating on a nation-wide basis the reconstruction programme of our streamlined period of the atomic age. In other words, the Mackenzie King government says to the provinces: "We need to exercise a right to taxation to go on with our programme for sharing the wealth. We need that right to draw revenues from those who have so as to give to those who have not." The Mackenzie King government goes on saying to the provinces: "Look. You ought to know why we do ask from you these rights, and there should be no suspicion in your minds about what use we are going to make of them, because you ought to know, by now, what we have done with them while you let us use them."

And for the sake of those who have eyes and see not, let us repeat here what was actually done by the Mackenzie King government with the use of the provincial rights on one hand and the money of those who had ability to pay on the other. The provincial rights temporarily lend-leased to the federal government served first the purpose of implementing a policy of sharing the wealth through social legislation, as for instance, the family allowance, old age pensions, unemployment insurance, et cetera, et cetera; and secondly served the purpose of implementing a policy of asking those who have ability to pay, to do so, for the benefit of those who cannot.

The family allowances, for instance, since established by the Liberal government, have taken from the pockets of those who had, the sum of approximately $800,000,000 which was devoted to those who unfortunately had not. But with the provincial rights of taxation given under terms safeguarding the minority rights and the provincial rights—and here there is nothing to impair the provincial governments for the purpose of safeguarding these principles to collect a small proportion of these taxes—this government, I am sure, would soon find occasion to implement a national system of state medicine for the benefit of all instead of letting medicine service the few. I feel certain that this government would put into effect very soon a better system of employment insurance. I am also sure that this government would soon find ways and means of assisting the crippled, as I believe that shelter, food and clothing could be made available to all at a much higher standard of living than the present.

Let us not forget either the reconstruction programme of the very able right hon. minister, who only waits for the green lights from the provinces to proceed with his loaded vehicle. May I briefly point out here some of the public works badly and urgently needed and which cannot be undertaken before the federal government secures from the provinces the right to proceed with them, and may I venture to list some of these projects: civic centres, public markets, sewage systems, water mains, exhibition grounds, railway crossings, tunnels, viaducts, sidewalks, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

All that involves, of course, a great deal of expenditure which cannot but come from taxation. And as the Liberal government's fiscal policy is to get the money from those who have the ability to pay, in other words the rich people, the latter, through their representatives who are always the reactionary-minded people, the Tories, here in this House of Commons, the financial critic of the opposition and in the Tory provincial houses, Messrs. Drew and Duplessis, the bigwigs of finance, I say, fight and fight like "diables dans l'eau bénite" to quash the costly welfare programme and reconstruction scheme of the Mackenzie King government. Afraid of openly, directly and squarely opposing social security legislation and the government's programme of reconstruction, the Tories and the bigwigs of finance—today in span, tomorrow in tandem, but always pulling together in the reactionary direction—fear the potential costly resentment to their unpatriotic egocentricism and are only too glad to hide behind the smoke-screen of so-called autonomy.

Mr. McMASTER: Has any member of the government seen and approved the speech which the hon. member is now reading?

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): I can answer my hon. friend without hesitation that the Liberal party is a house of many mansions and we do not need to submit our speeches to anyone, as members of other parties apparently must do. Once more, I wish to thank the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario for his debunking.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Throughout the debate on the speech from the throne the social crediters have maintained that the government should have indicated that change of policy which would make for the removal of the causes of depression. Social crediters have contended that the government has evinced no signs of any awareness of such a change being necessary. Apparently they think that all is well. There has been no hint of any knowledge of the nature of such a change and no disposition to discover the character of such a change if it were needed, or to make such a change if the discovery were made. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the stand which seems to be taken by the members of the government and of the official opposition is simply this, that all is well, that we can go forward forever with the system we are using right now. Our financial system is perfect they assume; our economic system is perfect; all we need is more international trade. That seems to be the attitude of Liberal members and it seems to be the attitude of Progressive Conservative members.

Social credit has maintained from the beginning that government members have no justification for assuming that complacent attitude; that there is every indication on the contrary that we are hastening to a collapse, and that wise members and a wise administration would be looking into the possibilities of finding ways and means of heading off a collapse and avoiding depression. This has been the contention of social crediters ever since this parliament was elected in 1945. It is their contention today, and that is why social crediters are opposed to the financial policy of the present government.

Social crediters are not arguing that the government is not doing wisely in many respects. We are not finding any particular fault with the government, since it is operating under the present financial system; but we are warning that the present financial system has run its course and must be changed, and we are holding the government responsible for recognizing that fact and devising the change necessary and taking measures to implement that change.

Social crediters, through an amendment, have endeavoured to direct the attention of parliament to what they believe is the nature of the change which is essential to avoid depression, and we invite and urge the members of the house to support our amendment. In the years to come, if all goes well, men who take the trouble to read the record of these times will be astounded that the members of this house have sat through twelve years or more of sessions completely disregarding reforms so earnestly advocated and so obviously necessary as the reforms which social crediters have advised since coming into this house.

We once more present these reforms in the form of an amendment. It is the sacred responsibility of the members of the present parliament to discover the cause of depression and of debt. It is also our sacred duty to discover the cure for depression and debt. Finally, it is our solemn obligation to cause to be introduced those measures which will apply the cure for depression and debt. The cause of coming depression and the cause of debt can be found; the cure can be found, and the corrective measures can be devised and applied within the life of the present parliament. It all depends on how open-minded, progressive, public-spirited and earnest the members of this house are.

There is no time to lose. The situation is urgent. For the assistance of such members as are studying this matter—and I am sure there are a good many in this house and in the country—may I read a statement which is found in a most interesting and instructive book called, "The Principles of Currency, Credit and Exchange," written by Doctor William A. Shaw. I believe it would be well to give an idea who this William A. Shaw is. He is the secretary of His Majesty's treasury in England, or was when the book was written. He is the author of "History of Currency", "The Theory and Principles of Central Banking" and so on. He is editor of the "Calendar of the Treasury Records". He has done those things in his career and has had those opportunities to investigate and learn, which, I believe, entitle him to the greatest of respect by all people who desire to learn the facts about banking and moneys. The date of publication of the book was 1934. On page 5 of the preface there appear these words:

> There is no inherent or scientific necessity for an ever-recurring cycle of over-trading followed by disaster and depression. The cause of that recurrent phenomenon lies hidden in the financial structure of the modern world and it is removable. If our civilization is to survive it is imperative that such cause be removed without delay.

I ask hon. members of the Liberal party, of whom a great number are sitting opposite to me and listening courteously to what I have to say, if words as solemn and as portentous as those can be safely disregarded.

Mr. BRUNELLE: Was the system ever tried in England?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I will give some discussion on that. That is a very fine question. Of course there are some light-minded laughs, based on the assumption which many people make that Social Crediters do not know what they are talking about. No more serious error can be committed by members of this house than to assume that Social Crediters do not know what they are talking about, because they have the best authorities in the world behind them, and they have the facts of the present situation behind them. All that is necessary is that attention be given to the things we urge, and hon. members will all begin to get a grasp of the situation.

The hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle) has asked me if the Social Credit system has been applied in England. Before I finish my talk here, I am going to point out to the hon. member that when the British government began to use the Bradburys, the treasury notes, in world war I, the British government began to use debt-free money backed by the social credit of England. It was not called social credit, but the principle was there. It was the state creation of debt-free money in the form of Bradburys. The British government saved the British banking system, the Bank of England, and all the other banks of Britain, with the Bradburys. This is a fact beyond all possibility of controversion. How did it work that way? Well, it worked. That is the significant thing. The Bradbury took Britain through the war successfully. It took her through the inflationary period which was likely to follow the war, and was carrying Britain safely into the waters of peace when Winston Churchill, through one of the most colossal blunders ever committed, I suppose, by a statesman in the British commonwealth, allowed the principle of the Bradbury to be discarded and permitted the Bank of England to regain control of the financial policy of Britain. He confessed in 1932 that it was a colossal error.

The hon. member asks me if the principle of social credit has ever been applied. The first fundamental principle of social credit, which is debt-free money created by the state, independent of a bank, was applied in the Bradburys in Britain in the first world war. There will be other examples of debt-free money which I will give the hon. member before I finish my speech. May I thank the hon. member for that question.

It is, of course, important indeed that we find out whether or not social credit has ever been tried. Social credit, as a whole system of technique, has not been applied anywhere in the world. Otherwise I do not suppose it would ever have been discarded. But the principle of the aeroplane was never applied, nor was that of radar applied until someone invented it. Then it was used. The principles of the telephone were not applied up until a certain time. So it is with every invention. Parliamentary government had never been used up until a certain time.

Mr. LOW: And there were unthinking people who said it would not work.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Certainly. The fundamental principle upon which the perfected structure is based had been tried exactly as was the case with the automobile, for example, or any other great invention. The discovery of the principles upon which the construction was based had been made, were known and were put together by those who were sufficiently skilful to put them together and who saw the possibilities. Do I answer the hon. member's first question? I thank him once more for it.

May I now revert to the quotation which I read, and may I most earnestly urge the members of the Liberal party and of the Progressive Conservative party that they give this matter the most solemn consideration. I wish the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) who, I suppose, is one of the financial authorities of the Progressive Conservative party, were in the chamber now. I should like to talk to that hon. gentleman in a very straight manner this afternoon. I hope his friends will tell him that I have talked to him, and I regret that he is not here at the moment.

Let me read another quotation to show how serious is the situation we face and how convinced Doctor Shaw is that a solution can be found. On page 8 of the preface of the same book which I have just quoted, we find these words:

What hope is there—

He is thinking now of the possibility of applying debt-free money in the United States and he sees that debt-free money would solve the problem of the United States and would prevent war. He had this to say:

What hope is there for such reform in the United States? To this we simply reply. It is no longer a question of hope. It is now a case of reform or death—death to our civilization. The world cannot stand another crash.

You cannot disregard words like that, Mr. Speaker; you cannot disregard a man of Doctor Shaw's quality.

Social Crediters attacked the C.C.F. amendment and voted against it, because the C.C.F. proposals of government ownership more or less of Canadian industry and government ownership of Canada's financial institutions contained no germ of a solution of our economic problems. I reaffirm that and will defend that stand against anyone who may rise and oppose me in this house or outside this house. I repeat: in the two fundamental socialist proposals there is not even the germ of a solution of our problems. That solution is to be found somewhere else. As I said the other day, the C.C.F. proposals merely confuse the minds of the people. Application of the C.C.F. proposals would do no good and would probably, and almost certainly, do Canada great and perhaps irreparable harm.

I do not want to be anything but kindly, but I must be straightforward and frank. I wish to congratulate the C.C.F. members who have participated in this debate up to the present time upon the high standard of the speeches they have made. That is what I desire to see. There is no need for us to make nasty insinuations and remarks against each other. We are, all of us, looking for the truth. Now let us discuss matters until we find the truth. I should like to commend the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) for the high quality of the speeches they contributed to this debate yesterday. In my judgment there were some respects in which they were inaccurate, but in many respects they were accurate.

Why do I say government ownership of industry could not do any good? Well, I put the argument before the house the other day. Our problems are two. First, we must have in Canada ample production; second, we must have in Canada ample consumption to consume the goods we produce. If a proposal is to be of any value to us it must either increase production or increase consumption. I argued, I believe quite successfully and beyond contradiction, that government ownership of the industry of this country will not materially increase production, and it cannot increase consumption, for reasons I have set forth and need not repeat. The cause of our troubles does not lie in industry. May I read one more passage from the same book, which I still hold in my hand. I am not saying this man is an authority whom the C.C.F. should accept; nevertheless consider his qualities; he is a man worthy of respect. This is what Doctor Shaw says at page 12 of his preface:

For the hidden main spring of all the cyclical movements and evils of the past has lain in finance and not in industry.

That is a matter of really serious concern, is it not? It shows the kind of thing on which we should be concentrating our attention as something which might give us a solution. The C.C.F. propose to nationalize or socialize our financial institutions. I can imagine that some hon. members of the C.C.F. who are sitting here so courteously today giving me a hearing, for which I greatly thank them, may say, "Well, we propose to nationalize the financial institutions; we recognize that the trouble lies in finance." My answer is that the nationalization of the financial institutions is not the solution; it is the use you are going to make of those financial institutions that will decide whether or not they can solve your problem. If you should have government ownership of your financial institutions before you had any policy that was satisfactory to meet the situation, you would probably only increase the difficulties confronting you. I believe, and I think I could successfully establish, that the C.C.F. have completely missed the point once more in this respect, in advocating the nationalization of the financial institutions instead of the introduction of a policy.

Now, with the indulgence of the house I should like to read a short passage from my previous speech so that I may fit in a remark made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), which I appreciated very much. I want to go on and give him the answer which at that time I promised I would give. At page 1129 of Hansard for March 7 I said:

> It is not necessary for the government to have ownership of any of the financial institutions in order to bring about fundamental changes in the financial policy of the country which would enable the country to finance consumption. Let that clearly be remembered.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South said, "Explain." I replied:

> I can explain it. However, I have not the time to do so now.

Considering the amount of time it took me to develop my talk the other night, I think hon. members will recognize that I did not have time to deal with that matter then. May I now proceed to keep my promise to the hon. member for Cape Breton South and other members of the C.C.F. who may be interested in my answer to the question. First of all, may I direct the attention of the house to the Canadian mint. It is not part of any Canadian bank. However the Canadian mint creates money. It will take a certain amount of silver, stamp it, make it legal tender, and probably double its value. In other words, in a twenty-five cent piece, we will say, it creates probably twelve cents of new money, debt free. No bank is needed to create that money; no bank needs to stamp it.

Now suppose you had a government agency functioning as the mint functions, only that instead of stamping twenty-five cent pieces of silver it stamped twenty-five cent bills or dollar bills. It must be obvious to every hon. member that by stamping those bills the government would obtain new money which did not have to be collected by taxation and did not have to be borrowed, but would be just as good as any other money in the world. Surely no one ever questions the value of a twenty-five cent piece stamped by the Canadian mint. It is just as good as any money to be had in the world. Then, if we need new money for consumption purposes, obviously the government can create that new money through a facility which is not part of any bank or banking system.

That was the idea I would have developed for the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I would have gone on to point out to him one or two cases in history where such a thing had been done.

Once more I return to the most interesting and earnest question asked by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle).

Mr. BRUNELLE: But please be as short as possible; we want a vote.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is right, but we are here to do serious business for this country.

Mr. BRUNELLE: I am convinced; go ahead.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I submit to hon. members of the Liberal party that if they could get and apply the idea this man, Doctor William A. Shaw, has in mind, they would win immortal distinction and honour in this country's history, and would accomplish something many times more valuable than getting a vote this afternoon. I wish to make my humble contribution to the knowledge and understanding of those who will read Hansard.

May I turn again to this question of new money, to find out whether or not any nation has ever created and used it. If hon. members will go to the library and get a book called "The Story of Money" by Sir Norman Angell, published in 1929, and turn to the index and look up "Guernsey Island", then turn to the pages of the book which deal with Guernsey island, they will be greatly interested in an experiment which was carried on in that island about 1815.

The Guernsey island people wanted to build a market house; that is, the government of that island wanted to build it. There were three places from which they could get money. They could tax the people; they could borrow the money, or they could create it; that is, they could print £1 notes. The record tells us that they actually did print 3,000 £1 notes. With those notes they bought stone from the quarries in Guernsey island and hired the Guernsey island people to build their market house, and to build that market house without a cost of one cent by way of increased taxation, or one cent of increased debt.

The question is immediately asked: "How did they manage to do it? Did that not cause inflation? Did it not cause a depreciation of money or a rise in prices?" If hon. members would like to examine that matter with thorough care—and I am sure many of them will—they could go to the library and get a little book called "An Example of Communal Currency" by J. Theodore Harris. This book was printed in 1911. They may read that small book, right through and find where an account is given of the Guernsey island experiment, as taken directly from the archives of Guernsey island. They will find that throughout all this record there is no indication at all that there was any rise in prices. In other words, the Guernsey island people got access to a source of revenue which they could not have had, except by the creation of money.

Then the question arises: How did they "get away" with it? May I submit an explanation. In Guernsey island at the time, there were goods such as milk, cream, butter, cheese, fruit and a good many other things which they were producing. They were available in considerable abundance on the markets of Guernsey island, but they were not all being bought by the money in circulation. In other words, there was more production on the island than there was money in the hands of the people to buy.

What the government actually did was to create 3,000 £1 notes which went out into the hands of the people, and enabled them to buy some of those goods which before they had not been able to buy. And because there were still more goods than they could buy, even with these 3,000 £1 notes, there was no inflation, because you never have inflation unless there is a rise in price. And you do not have a rise in price unless there is a scarcity of goods.

How well our experience during the war taught us that. I am sure many more members in the house have learned that, from bitter experience, than knew it ten years ago when I began to discuss this subject before the house. It is obvious to any hon. member today that the cause of inflation is a scarcity of goods. If you do not have a scarcity of goods, then an increase in the amount of money in the hands of the people will not cause a rise in prices, and therefore will not cause inflation.

So what the Guernsey island government actually did was to monetize the surplus goods and services in the markets of the island, which were not being monetized by industry. With the money they so created they were able to build their market house, without financial cost.

I submit to hon. members of the C.C.F., and to other parties in the house, that if the principles involved in the Guernsey island experiment were worked out scientifically, and applied here in Canada, we would have something simply astonishing in the way of increased prosperity. There was the first principle of social credit in operation: the creation of debt-free money, as it was done on Guernsey island.

I should now like to turn to one or two other matters, but I shall hasten along, because I have no desire to delay the house. I believe, however, it is my duty to place some of these facts before hon. members, so that all together we may find our way out of this wilderness. I draw the attention of hon. members in the Progressive Conservative party to the fact that between 1914 and 1917, at a time when there was a Conservative government in power in this country, that the government's treasury used its power, under the Finance Act of 1914, to create $26 million in new money, debt-free, and spent it in connection with the conduct of the war. Hon. members may doubt my word; if they do, they will find verification of what I am saying in the royal commission's report on banking and currency in Canada, in 1933. They will find the reference in paragraph 47 at page 22. I shall not now take the time of the house to read it, but I suggest to hon. members that they do so.

Then may I suggest that the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario ask himself, in the quiet of his room, whether, if he had been a member of the administration of Sir Robert Borden, he would have voted for the issuance of that $26 million to be spent in the conduct of the war, or whether he would not. That is what Social Crediters want to know. And if the hon. member would not have done that, then he simply would not have been in harmony with his Conservative friends of 1914 and 1917.

Let hon. members of the Liberal party, too, consider this matter with the greatest of care. I have heard it argued that, because the Borden government created $26 million and spent it, it caused inflation. That argument is utterly fallacious. Every member in the house knows today that the cause of inflation is a shortage of goods; we have proved that over and over again. It is not alone the amount of money in circulation that is the cause of inflation.

May I refer again to the Bradbury experiment, and I shall give it to the house briefly.

The British had to use this monetary device between 1914 and 1920; and I believe I shall explain it to hon. members, or to those of them who have not studied this particular point.

In England, when the war broke out in 1914, they were on the gold standard. Consequently all the money in circulation, as a result of all the activities of all the banks in England, was backed by gold. Just as soon as people began drawing their gold out of the banks and sending it out of the country, immediately the money of Britain lost its backing and had to be withdrawn. The Bank of England and the banking system of Great Britain told the government they would have to close their doors within two or three days after war broke out, because gold had been withdrawn from the banks and sent abroad.

This was a crisis of the first magnitude. What did the British government of those days do? Did they say, "We will have to lose this war because we have not gold"? No. They said, "We have goods and services; we have the ability to produce them. We will go ahead, and have money that is not based upon gold." Then they created treasury notes, and said to the Bank of England, in effect, "People will come to you asking for gold. Tell them you have not got it, but you have treasury notes. These treasury notes are backed by the whole power of the British nation; consequently they are better than any gold. And if people say they will not accept them, let them wait until they will accept them."

But the people accepted them. The government went on creating, until in 1920 they had 354 million of them in circulation. The British government bought all the gold coin circulating in Great Britain, using to do so paper Bradburys. They then used the gold to trade for goods from the United States. They financed the war on that paper currency, government created and debt-free. That was a remarkable experience. I commend the record to hon. members who are interested in this, and I can tell by the way they are reacting that a great many of them will wish to read it.

There are several books they might want to read. I have in my hand a most excellent one called "Currency, Credit and the Exchanges", published in 1927 by William A. Shaw. This book will give a simple and straightforward account of the facts of the whole experiment. I submit that it contains information of the greatest importance to hon. members and to the country. Then, another good book which they will want to read is "The Theory and Principles of Central Banking." This, too, was published by William A. Shaw—in 1930. He uses a great deal of the information obtained during the Bradbury experiment.

I submit that if hon. members will read these books they will find them most comprehensive and dependable, and most enlightening treatises on money and banking.

So now I turn from the examples we have had of state-created debt-free money, where it has worked successfully. These examples, Mr. Speaker, illustrate the first fundamental principle of social credit. The next question which I should like to discuss for a moment or two, before I take my seat, is as to how the money should be used. It is quite obvious that if the government went on creating money, and just spent it right and left, disaster would result. The money would have to be used in the right way, just as water in an irrigation system has to be used in the right way. You just cannot turn irrigation water so that it will run willy-nilly over the land. It will cause havoc if you do that. Neither must you allow the water to collect in two or three places. You have to distribute it evenly and scientifically over the whole area to be watered, in a way which will make it do the greatest amount of good. Similarly with money you must distribute it over the whole economy, in a way which will enable the people to consume most fully the goods produced. How is that to be done?

In the first place, new money would be used in large measure for compensating discounts on prices. I shall have to spend a minute or two on that. I believe that the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) was just a little forgetful when he indicated that he had not been able to get any clear comprehension of the proposals of this group. Let me state them again as I have stated them twenty times already on the floor of the house. In the first place, social credit maintains that debt-free money can be created to the extent that there is a surplus of goods and services in the country not being purchased by the money which people are earning through wages and salaries and dividends from industry. That is the first thing.

Then social credit proposes to use that money, first of all, to discount the prices of manufactured goods. Take a binder, for example—and the farmers will be interested in this. Suppose a binder is offered for sale at $350 and the government decides that that is too high a price. The government undertakes to pay sixty dollars of the price. The government pays that amount to the manufacturer, enabling the manufacturer to make a $60 discount and compensates him for making that discount. If that same principle, the compensated discount be applied to all manufactured goods in the markets, the prices of manufactured goods will be brought down substantially, and the first step will be made toward a just price—a compensated discount to bring down the prices of manufactured goods. That is just the opposite to inflation.

The next thing is to raise the prices of primary products, such as wheat, potatoes, apples and all the other products raised on the farm, the prices of which are notoriously low in bad times. The government can put a floor under these prices using debt-free money, and the floor can be raised to such a point that the primary producers can obtain a return for their products that will enable them to buy a fair amount of the secondary products with the returns from their efforts. Thus is established, through compensated discount and subsidy, the second great principle of social credit—the just price.

Along with that go just wages. The hon. member for Cariboo mentioned last night that there should be an increase in wages. Every member of this house knows full well that if wages are raised to the people who are working in a plant, if the plant has to pay those increased wages, the costs of the plant will increase and its product will be sold at a higher price.

Mr. IRVINE: Unless profits are lowered.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Even if profits are lowered, a good many people will not be able to buy the goods at those higher prices, will not be able to buy the goods they ought to have. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and I have contended that no working man should receive less than $1,800 a year under any circumstances. But suppose a man is working in a plant which finds it impossible to pay a wage of $1,800 and carry on; what is to be done? The wages the plant pays out could be supplemented by a government bonus similar to the cost-of-living bonus that was granted during the war. This bonus would not be paid with money raised by taxation or by borrowing, but with debt-free money created in accordance with the amount of surplus goods and services to be found in the state. If this were done, hon. members can see that the money would be put right out into circulation where the people would use it for consumption, which is just what we want. This money could be put out into circulation without the government going into debt to the banks. It could be created and put out by what we call in our social credit terminology the monetary authority.

This is important to bear in mind. There are and will be a number of our C.C.F. friends and other members who will ask: How are you to make sure that the banks will lend money to producers to produce goods? Well, I have never yet seen a bank refuse to lend money to a producer when there was a good market for his goods. The banker will always say to a producer who comes in to borrow money: Are you going to be able to sell these goods at a good price? If you can, all right; I will lend you the money.

If the purchasing power is put into the hands of the people, as I have indicated, by the devices of a just price and fair wages, there will be no difficulty in having the banks lend the money; and if there should be any difficulty the government can use the device we used in Alberta. In Alberta we did not have power over our banking system. That power resided in Ottawa. But we felt that the banks were not lending as much money as they ought to. They were following the policy that was dictated throughout the dominion. So we set up our treasury branches and cut down the interest rate and lent money on more generous terms. Within a surprisingly short time the ordinary chartered banks were lending just as freely as the treasury branch was and at as low a rate of interest.

That indicates how the government can control a monopoly, which is something which troubles our C.C.F. friends tremendously. The government can control a monopoly simply by financing an organization to come into competition with a monopoly and by giving the competing organization those favours which are necessary to enable it successfully to compete. We tried that in Alberta with the slight power we possessed and it was successful. So I submit that we need have no fear of the banks not lending money when we have sufficient purchasing power in consumers' hands. The banks would lend generously for production. Thus we would have a free flow of credit. The loans for production would be repaid or cancelled partly with debt-free money. May I pause there a moment or two.

Up to the present time there has been the danger, when banks have lent money, that they could not get their money back. It is obvious that with debt-free money going into circulation among the people the banks would have a far better chance of having their loans repaid. In many cases the loans would be partly if not wholly repaid with debt-free money. That is one way in which the debt-free money would be cancelled out of circulation. So there would not be the danger of too much of it being in circulation.

The banks lend money for production purposes but not to pay interest. But interest is necessary to encourage the banks to lend money. The banks also never lend money to pay a profit. If we are to continue under our system of interest and profits the finest way to enable us to carry it on is to have debt-free money which can supply means for the payment of interest and profits. That is another way to cancel debt-free money out of circulation.

There are people in this country who have expressed great concern lest a certain kind of abuse occur. They say: If you ever let the government—our Conservative friends will say, if you ever let these Liberals get control of the power to create money—they will create so much that we shall never be able to turn them out, because they will establish a fascist dictatorship in this country. I do not believe that, but to overcome that difficulty there are these safeguards. In the first place, in the Bradbury experiment the money was automatic, just as automatic as the money which is created in the mint, and no one ever suggests that the government is going to go into the mint and print or stamp so much money that it will be able to corrupt the population. Why? Because they never print or stamp money at the mint unless the banking system says that it wants this money, unless business wants the money to do business with. That makes it automatic.

There are several devices of making automatic the issue of debt-free money for consumption. The amount of surplus goods and services would limit the amount of money to be created. Parliament would supervise all the aspects of the process of creation and disbursement of created money much as it now does the raising and expenditure of money by taxation or borrowing. My time is exhausted, Mr. Speaker, I thank the house for its courteous attention.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the immediate question before the house is the subamendment to the amendment to the main motion on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I am rising at this time not to supplement anything that I have said or that anyone else has said but rather to try to make clear, as briefly as I can, our position on the immediate question before us, namely, the subamendment. In what I shall have to say I shall offer neither criticism nor commendation of the remarks of any hon.

member who has taken part in this debate. I wish to say that on the whole the debate has, in my opinion, been conducted on a high level. I think those who have spoken from every section of the house have given their best judgment to the consideration of the questions before us.

In moving his subamendment on Friday last, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) asked four questions, I believe, and proposed certain principles or policies, seven or eight in number. He then moved his amendment which is expressed in four sections. Then the hon. member asked that we express our opinions with respect to the questions asked and that we state whether or not we concurred in the principles which he enunciated. I would not have risen at this time except that failure to say something might be interpreted as meaning that we were opposed to all of these things or that we supported them all, or some other incorrect interpretation might be put upon it. Briefly, I wish to deal with the questions now before us and I am glad to be able to say to the house that, as far as we are concerned at this time, this will be the last we shall have to say in the debate.

Speaking generally, I favour and we favour much the greater part of what the hon. member had to say. We approve the objectives he sought; and we agree with most of the means which he suggested for achieving those objectives. On the practicability and the utility of one or two of his suggestions I have some honest doubts. When I say that, I want the hon. members who represent the Social Credit party to feel that we are not in any way impugning their sincerity, or the faith they have in the principles they hold. If we do not agree with them in every proposal they advance we ask only that they give us credit for the same intellectual honesty that we give to them.

Let me refer first to the four questions raised by the hon member for Peace River. The hon. member asked whether the party I represent claims that under this government centralization has been intensified, taxes increased, the national debt increased to staggering proportions and bureaucracy carried to unusual levels. I do not need to make another speech to let the house know that the answer to each of these would have to be, yes. On several occasions I have said that taxes are five times as high as they were before the war and probably will remain four times as high. Our debt is four times as high or more, and our civil service twice or more times as numerous as it was before the war.

With respect to the second point, the hon. member asked whether we claimed that the present government has in certain of its policies been introducing socialism while at the same time preaching a different doctrine. The nature of the debate I think answers that question. There is no doubt in our minds about it. Some of the legislation brought down, even at this session, leans toward totalitarianism.

The third question—and the house will pardon me if I deal with these briefly because I wish to get through by half-past five o'clock if I can—the hon. member asked is whether we believe that the government has been guilty of flagrant violation of its promises with respect to the men of the fighting forces. I shall only refer to one of the government's policies in order to answer that question. One has only to observe the housing situation to which these men returned to realize that the answer must be, yes. The inflated prices which young couples have to pay for houses will keep many of them poor for half of their lives.

The fourth question of the hon. member was as follows. He asked if, in our opinion, the government had failed to preserve and vitalize true democracy in Canada, and if it had allowed conditions to develop which encourage the growth of communism and other forms of totalitarianism. One has only to recall two incidents in the recent history of the country to answer that question. One is the extent to which the cooperation of the communists was given to the government in the recent election and the infiltration of communists into the government service, resulting in the spy probe.

With these four criticisms of the general direction in which the government is going we are in entire agreement.

I come now to certain policies or principles, upon which the hon. member sought an expression of opinion, upon which he sought either concurrence or non-concurrence. I do not feel that we have always to answer every question that every debater raises in the house; but, as I said before, in view of the fact that failure to do so might be interpreted either one way or the other and not leave the correct impression as to where we stand, I shall take a few minutes of the time of the house to make that clear. He asked if we concurred in these principles. Let me summarize them as briefly as I can and comment upon them as I proceed.

The first was that full and unfettered freedom shall be restored to the people of Canada. We agree with that, and I think by far the greater proportion of hon. members of nearly every section of the house agrees. We agree with it to the fullest extent possible, short of infringement upon the rights of others.

The second principle was that all unnecessary controls, domination by state democracy, and centralization of power by a multitude of regulations shall be brought to an end. Mr. Speaker, the nature of the debate so far indicates where we stand on these matters. The answer is, yes. I have expressed similar views so often that there is no need of repetition here. I said so at an earlier stage of the debate.

The third principle upon which he asked for concurrence or non-concurrence was that crushing taxation shall be reduced by at least 30 per cent immediately. I have already said that on the basis of the government's own figures such a reduction should be expected. The hon. member went on to say that crushing taxation shall be reduced by at least sixty per cent within reasonable time. I am sure that we would all like to hope that that would be possible, but I am afraid I could not hold out such a hope and expect anyone to believe me, if the heavy commitments already made by the government and to which practically every hon. member is committed are to be carried out.

The fourth principle was that every Canadian shall be entitled to a social security income in addition to his earned income. This is being done now indirectly through the many social services provided by this country and, so far as I know, every hon. member has supported them.

Let me go on. He said that every Canadian should be entitled to a social security income in addition to his earned income, which would render him independent of state charity. I do not know that I understand the full implication of this statement. Certainly the purpose of our whole economy must be to enable everyone to have the opportunity of earning such an income, and the economy must provide it in cases where childhood, old age, accident, sickness or unemployment prevents it from being earned. But the hon. member's statement may contain implications beyond what I have suggested. Since that is probable, I shall refer to it again in just a moment.

The fifth statement of policy upon which he asked comment was this, that the paralysing restrictions on agriculture and industry shall be removed in order that the country's productive efforts may be free to enable adequate housing and other national requirements to proceed. I have been saying that for a long time. The fact is that all such controls as hinder production are a limitation on our standard of living and such controls should therefore be discontinued at the earliest time practicable.

The sixth principle upon which he asks us to comment is that farmers and other primary producers shall be assured a fair return for their services, and purchasing power sufficient to buy available goods. If I have said that once I have said it a thousand times in the last ten years. It is a basic part of our political creed. Practically every section of the house preaches that doctrine, though the extent to which it is practised by the government may be a matter upon which we would disagree.

The seventh point was that there should be brought about greater stabilization of wage scales and incomes. I know of no political party that does not agree with that objective. It must be obvious to all that this should be the purpose of any responsible government to the full extent that it is practicable in our complex economy. I am sure this government is endeavouring to reach that objective. But the test of government administration is in the results they secure. Certainly we must strive for these ends.

His eighth and last point was this, that parliament shall be made responsible to the will of the Canadian people. That is the principle upon which parliament was supposed to be established, and we must not depart from it. Then he added the statement that constitutional changes should be made to establish the legitimate rights of every Canadian.

If this means, to make the state the servant of the people and not their master, I am in entire agreement with it. I am in accord with the intent of my colleague, the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), in seeking a bill of rights making this a basic feature of the constitution of the country.

I come now to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). It consists of four clauses, three of which I can support and one of which I do not comprehend sufficiently to have confidence in it. The first part of the subamendment would return to parliament complete control of Canada's financial policy. I do not see how anybody could disagree with that. The second part I shall refer to in a moment.

The third part would remove present discouragements to the production and availability of building materials and encourage the construction of houses. Well, we have had a long debate on housing here and it will not avail us much to say anything more now on the question; but that is what we here have all been trying to say for many months past.

[Mr. Bracken.]

The fourth part of the subamendment would clarify the relative rights and responsibilities of the dominion and the provinces in our federal system of government. That is one of the things that I have sought for ten years or more to have achieved—the correction of the errors of the present relationship—errors which I believe every thinking person in Canada admits—correcting them with the minimum of centralization and the maximum of provincial autonomy. It was only upon the acceptance of these principles that this confederation was formed; it will be only with their maintenance that it will stand against the adversities of the future.

With respect to the second part of the hon. member's amendment, I have some doubt; and in expressing that doubt, as I said before, I ask that he give to us credit for the same degree of intellectual honesty in holding our views as we give to him in holding his. That part reads as follows:

> The use of the national credit to meet at least some of the financial requirements for essential services—

That is not the most important part of it; the most important part follows:

> —and, as a guarantee that this country shall not again be subjected to financial depression, to make available to each and all Canadian citizens a proper portion of purchasing power which shall not first pass through the usual channels of industry, etc. . . .

And so on. Mr. Speaker, if society generally had sufficient faith that such a financial policy would prevent depressions—and if it will I am sure we all wish success to hon. members of the Social Credit party in propagating that doctrine—if that is so, I feel sure that parliamentary bodies would, before now, have given wide support to it. Since, so far as I know, they have not done so, it must be because society as a whole has not confidence in it. It may be the fault is in our society; it may be the fault of those who are promoting the doctrine; it may be that we are too obtuse to understand it. At any rate, so far the doctrine has not been widely accepted.

It is a fact, nevertheless, that in some degree such a guarantee is given now; and to the extent that such a fiscal policy has been or may be used for the support of definite public services such as old age pensions, unemployment insurance, family allowances, floor prices and so on, services that are regarded as being essential to the public good, to that degree I support it and I am sure practically everyone in this house supports it.

But, Mr. Speaker, if this part means, as I suspect it is intended to mean, the issuance of money or credit indiscriminately, apart from definite public services, and for no service rendered, then frankness requires that I say I am not convinced of its effectiveness or its practicability. I have tried to keep my mind open on this matter, but so far I have not been convinced of the soundness of such a policy. At the moment I cannot see it in any other light than that it would be giving, indiscriminately, to some people, the earnings of others. I can subscribe even to that for certain purposes, such as for the aged, for children, for the disabled, for the unemployed and for public measures of social and economic justice. But I cannot bring myself to support an indiscriminate policy—I emphasize an indiscriminate policy—which in my present view would have the effect, even though indirectly, of taking from those who work and giving to those who can work but might not choose to do so.

Let me summarize what I have tried to say. I agree wholly with the hon. member for Peace River in his indictment of centralization, extravagance, and high taxation. I agree with him when he says that the government is guilty of flagrant violation of the promises it made to the men of the fighting forces with respect particularly to housing. I agree with him in his indictment of bureaucracy, communism and totalitarianism in every form. Generally speaking, I agree with the objectives outlined by the hon. member and for the most part with the proposals by which he hopes such objectives will be realized. But with regard to the particular proposal, namely clause B of the subamendment relating to the use of the national credit, I have very grave doubts as to its practicability and its utility. I therefore find myself unable to vote for that portion of the subamendment since it might leave the false impression that I am in favour of this particular fiscal policy, when such is not the case.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so as to enable us to proceed to have the next division forthwith, I would move:

That Mr. Speaker do not leave the chair at six o'clock this day.

Mr. BRACKEN: May I be permitted to second that motion?

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. J. W. MacNaught for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken.

[Mr. Bracken.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay the house for more than a minute. May I explain that this is a vote of no confidence in the government. If we vote, as we shall, with the official opposition, it does not indicate confidence in the official opposition any more than the vote we have just recorded on the Social Credit amendment to the amendment indicated confidence in the government.

Mr. GRAYDON: Have you any confidence in yourselves?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PINARD—AMENDMENT TO MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DIVISION LIST

Mr. ROCH PINARD (Chambly-Rouville): I rise to a question of personal privilege. As a matter of fact, sir, I consider it the most precious privilege any hon. member can have, the right of exercising his vote in the house. Although I voted yesterday afternoon against the amendment proposed by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Bracken) my name is not recorded in the report which may be found at page 1315 of Hansard. I should like this omission to be corrected.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CANTEEN FUNDS—BANKING AND COMMERCE—CHANGES IN PERSONNEL

Right Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That the name of Mr. Wright be substituted for that of Mr. Castleden on the special committee on canteen funds.

That the name of Mr. Smith (York North) be substituted for that of Mr. McIlraith on the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Motion agreed to.

FISH

CANNED AND SALTED—DISCONTINUANCE OF INTERNATIONAL ALLOCATION

Hon. H. F. G. BRIDGES (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that after March 31, 1947, no Canadian canned fish will be subject to international allocation. Similarly, allocation of salted cod and other salted groundfish of 1946 production will come to an end on June 30 of this year, and there will be no allocation of salted fish from 1947 production. Examination of the world situation by the international food emergency council at Washington this week has shown the world supply is coming into approximate balance with effective demand, when all fish products are taken into consideration; hence this decision has been made to discontinue the allocation schemes relating to canned and salted fish.

Most Canadian canned fish has been subject to international allocation since the mid-war years. Chief among the products concerned have been canned salmon and canned herring, but the list has also included such others as canned sardines, mackerel, groundfish and pilchards. All of them will come out from under this control at the close of the present month.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

COMPENSATION FOR DISEASE, DISABILITY OR DEATH ARISING OUT OF EMPLOYMENT

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to provide compensation to government employees who have suffered death or disability by accident arising out of or in the course of employment or by reason of an industrial disease due to the nature of the employment and to the dependents of such employees; such compensation and costs as may be awarded and the costs of administration to be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund. With provision also empowering the Minister of Finance to require employers to pay the compensation awarded their employees together with expenses of administration.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER RECESS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That when the house adjourns on Wednesday, April 2, it stand adjourned until Monday, April 14 next.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): I will not detain "Little Chicago" very long. I spoke to this question yesterday as a matter of privilege. I do not intend to move an amendment, because clearly if the house is not in favour of this motion it will be in favour of the alternative which the Prime Minister suggested, namely, from the 2nd until the 8th.

An hon. MEMBER: The 14th.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I still think I am right.

An hon. MEMBER: I think you are, too.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That settles it—the 2nd until the 8th. I am not putting this on any personal basis, because if there is anything one dislikes it is discussions in the House of Commons which are sectional. I put it on the ground that we can do the country's business much better with a short adjournment than we can with a long time. I am sure hon. members will agree that last year after we left here the casualties among people who were simply worn out were greater than any of us knew, if a census could have been taken. There is a further reason. We have here a hard-working civil service and many of them are quite unable to get away for a natural and proper holiday until the house adjourns. Vacation time for these people is in the months of July and August. Last year they were unable to have any proper holiday at the proper time. I may add one other section of our people, the press gallery. They must stay here as long as we do.

I have been told by senior members that it does not matter how long vacations are, the session will be just as long. I do not agree with them, but if they are right it is a sad commentary on our way of doing business, and there should be a change.

I suppose the financial aspect of it is neither here nor there, but I am quite sure that many of us will come back fully revived after a week's vacation. We shall have been sitting for only two months when we leave here on the second. I am asking the consideration of the house for my suggestion; in fact I am inviting hon. members to vote against the resolution, knowing, as the Prime Minister assured us, that there are two alternatives, and that the other would then be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, if I were moving an amendment to this motion, I would move one entirely different from the suggestion of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith). It is a well-known fact that of all the members of parliament none make greater sacrifices with respect to business and family life than the members from the far-off Pacific coast. They are here sometimes as long as six and a half or seven months. If I had my way I would move for an adjournment of a week-end, or for the period from Thursday until Tuesday. If any hon. members think that those from distant places like to sit around Ottawa until members from Ontario and Quebec return, they had better give a little more consideration to members from British Columbia coming back on the fourteenth. I ask the hon. member for Calgary West to consider those of us who come from the Pacific coast. The time he is suggesting will not be sufficient to enable us to go home.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, it is not very often that I differ from my good friend the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith). I am not yet one of those who have become full-time parliamentarians, and I think there are many others like me. I agree with the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I suggest that these recesses be arranged so that members from great distances may do their travelling over the week-ends. That is an important point to those who come from a distance. Many hon. members in the east are privileged to be able to go home on week-ends and look after their businesses. Recently special arrangements have been made to get them home on week-ends so that they can stay here the full week.

I am very serious about this. I think we should have at least a reasonable recess for Easter so that those who are farmers or business people can go home. Farms or business undertakings do not just run themselves throughout the year without some little supervision at times. In the last parliament the Prime Minister spoke about the difficulty of getting candidates for this House of Commons. If persons who retain an interest in business of one kind or another are to run for parliament they must be given some consideration so that they can look after their businesses or farms as well as attend to the business of the country here. Over the last seven years since I have been a member of the house we have been spending the greater part of the year in Ottawa. In arranging these recesses in the future, consideration should be given to the matters I have mentioned, with particular reference to members who live a long way from the capital. Another suggestion I might make is this. In view of the transportation arrangements which have been made for members from the two great central provinces, consideration might be given to those who come from great distances, both east and west, to the extent of permitting travel by air every so often throughout the year.

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said yesterday that his desire was to have the adjournment to suit the convenience of the general membership of the house. I am sure he meant that. The adjournment which is proposed, from Wednesday, April 2, until Monday, April 14, is an adjournment of eleven days. That is not a long enough time to allow those who live a long distance from Ottawa to make the trip home, spend any time there and come back. They would be travelling most of the time. I think all members will agree that it is the desire to get through the business of the session as early as possible. I suggest, with all due respect to the Prime Minister, that the adjournment begin on Thursday, April 3, and extend until Tuesday, April 8. That would be five days. No one who has to stay in a boarding house or hotel wants to spend a long adjournment in Ottawa at this season of the year, when the ground is covered with several feet of snow. There is nothing attractive about it. I suggest that five days is ample.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest the quickest and at the same time the most certain method of settling this question; if a sufficient number of members rise to have a division, let us have a division at once and the government will abide by the will of the majority. A standing vote might be taken. I do not think names need be recorded. However, I should like to have it understood that all hon. members, including members of the government, are free to vote as they please. I know some of my colleagues would prefer the shorter holiday, while others would prefer the longer one as proposed. As I say, everyone would be perfectly free to vote as he pleases. There must be this further understanding, however, that if the government should not get a majority on this particular motion, it would not be regarded by any means as an expression of want of confidence in the government, but rather as a further recognition of the fact that the government is always willing to follow that well-known democratic principle of being prepared to abide by the will of the majority of the House of Commons.

Mr. BRACKEN: If the Prime Minister will advise us whether or not the government favours this resolution, we shall then be in a position to help him save the life of the government.

Mr. BURTON: I was going to ask the Prime Minister whether the statement he made last year with respect to travelling by air still stands.

[Mr. G. Black.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thought by speaking, I had closed the debate, and nothing further can be said until after we have voted.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the house be satisfied with a standing vote?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

And a standing vote having been taken:

Mr. SPEAKER: Yeas, 144; nays, 35. I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS AND ESTIMATES OF GOVERNMENT OWNED TRANSPORTATION LINES

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved:

That a sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government be appointed to consider the accounts and estimates and bills relating thereto of the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, and Trans-Canada Air Lines, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys; and that the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time, and that, notwithstanding standing order 65, in the relation to the limitation of the number of members, the said committee consist of Messrs: Belzile, Bourget, Chevrier, Clark, Emmerson, Gibson (Comox-Alberni), Harkness, Hatfield, Hazen, Jackman, Kuhl, LaCroix, Lockhart, Maybank, McCulloch (Pictou), McLure, Moore, Mutch, Nicholson, Picard, Pouliot, Reid, Warren.

He said: The object of this motion, Mr. Speaker, is to establish the special committee on railways and shipping, to which are referred the annual reports of the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, and Trans-Canada Air Lines. To the committee are also referred certain items of supply, taken from the committee of supply, and the motion is in the same form as last year.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to ask the minister one or two questions about the functions of this committee. When it was first appointed, about fifteen years ago, the understanding was that it would make an examination along certain lines, not only of accounts but of matters of policy. It is contended that the committee of supply loses all its functions through the appointment of this committee. How many meetings did the committee hold last year? Very few. They sat around a table and discussed certain features, but forgot all about improvements to the system. They discussed the spending of money on subsidiaries in the United States, while the Canadian service was neglected. It seems to me that in connection with the Canadian National Railways, charity begins at home. Is this the best system we can devise for administering a property worth hundreds of millions of dollars, and ocean services, hotel services, and last but not least the work of Trans-Canada Air Lines? As far as I know the members of this committee have very little knowledge of transportation or financial matters; and through the appointment of this committee we are losing the whole jurisdiction of parliament over the administration and financing of this great corporation, which gave such splendid service in Canada and on the oceans all during war.

Last year this committee forgot one important matter, that is, the work done during the war by employees of the railway of all ranks. Some of the conductors and others engaged in handling the trains worked eighteen hours a day and the great success enjoyed by the Canadian National and our other transportation system all during the war, their efficiency and the safe manner in which they operated in all kinds of weather, handling the demobilization of troops and transporting them from the seaboard right across Canada, was due in no small part to the work of these men. It seems to me the committee forgot all about that last session, and about a war bonus for them, too.

I believe the time has come when some further examination of this system should be carried out. If it is a public ownership venture let us have real public ownership, not the brand we are getting at the present moment. They have moved their offices from the province of Ontario, where they make most of their money, to another place. The auditor general, I might add, has nothing to say about this system, though he does have something to do with some other public ownership ventures. Now we are removing this system from the control of the committee of supply; and parliament, which came into being to exercise jurisdiction over the tax rate and the expenditure of money, has practically ceased to function in this regard. This system has its own auditors, who are changed practically only when the government changes. I have read the reports of these auditors, but have failed to find any improvements recommended in connection with this great public utility. I believe the time has come when the minister should give some explanation as to the functions of this committee, and what it does; what changes it has advocated, and whether the minister thinks this is a proper policy. I believe some experts should be engaged to find out what is going on in that system. These committees do not know what is going on, but when their report is presented it will be too late the last day of the session for us to do anything but concur in it. It seems to me the committee of supply has ceased to function, and I believe a better policy should be recommended by the system itself to the minister.

Motion agreed to.

PRICES

EFFECT OF REMOVAL OF CEILINGS ON GASOLINE—BINDER TWINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what consideration has been given to the serious effect on the production of essential food of the action of the wartime prices and trade board, first in removing the ceiling on gasoline and tractor distillate, effective April 1, and second in allowing an immediate increase of $7.50 per hundredweight in the manufacturers' list prices on binder twine.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The usual careful consideration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. KNOWLES: Why all the frivolity?

ELDORADO MINES

DISPOSITION OF CHARGES AGAINST OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply arising out of a report in yesterday's press that proceedings had been dropped against two men charged with conspiracy in connection with Eldorado Mines Limited. In view of the extraordinary nature of the investigation into the matter and the statements made in the house during the fall session of 1945, will the minister advise whether or not those charges were withdrawn on his instructions?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I was advised by the Department of Justice that the counsel who has been handling the investigation advised that the proceedings should be in the nature of a civil action rather than a criminal prosecution, and action was accordingly entered in the civil courts of the state of New York. That action is proceeding. The Department of Justice concurred in the opinion of their counsel that after thorough investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, by the officials of the department and by the special investigator, the charges brought in the criminal courts could not be sustained.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to thank the minister for the statement he has made, and to ask a further question. What is the amount of the claim for damages against these parties?

Mr. HOWE: While I cannot say to the cent, I believe it is in the vicinity of $2,000,000. That would be a general approximation of the amount.

Mr. SKEY: May I ask the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply whether he has had a report from the investigators in the Eldorado Mine incident?

Mr. HOWE: I have not received the report. My understanding is that it has been held for the verification of certain information essential to it. I expect however that it will be sent forward shortly, and when it reaches me I shall be glad to table it.

Mr. SKEY: Will it be made public at that time?

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to table it.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR DEFINITION OF "FARM LABOURER"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALISTAIR STEWART (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Mines and Resources. In view of the many requests for information many of us have received concerning the new immigration regulations, can the minister give a full interpretation of the term "farm labourer"?

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources): The hon. member sent me a copy of his question. I do not know that I can add much to the interpretation. "Farm labourer" is interpreted by the farmer as a person who is experienced in farm labour work.

Mr. GRAYDON: A man might be a farm labourer and still be inexperienced.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): And often is.

ALASKA HIGHWAY

INQUIRY RESPECTING HAINES CUT-OFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence, of which I have given notice. A telegram from Prince Rupert states that General Eisenhower has a letter in the press with regard to Canada's proposed closing of the Haines road to the Alaska highway. Can the minister give us any information on this subject?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the letter said to have been written by General Eisenhower, and therefore I cannot tell what he said. Any reference to the "proposed closing" of the Haines road would not be a correct way of putting it, as my understanding is that the road was never completed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

EMERGENCY POWERS—GUARANTEE OF LOANS, ETC.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the third reading of Bill No. 23, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the house may find it a bit strange that I should want to take part in this debate. But if I do, it is first of all to approve the principle of the bill as set out, and secondly because I am keenly interested in the method of transportation of wheat and other grains.

Since the bill has been under discussion some criticism has been levelled at the government, with reference to the movement of grain and this criticism has been of such a nature that I believe a reply should be made at this stage. If in Canada there has been some difficulty with reference to the transportation of grain, it is, as the house knows, due particularly to the acute shortage of box cars. I believe hon. members will be interested in the position with reference to box cars generally, because the matter has been discussed in the press on more than one occasion, and again in the house.

The present box car situation in Canada is acute. Summing up as briefly as I can, I believe the situation can best be stated by saying that at this time there are some 117,000 box cars in Canada. Of that number 26,000 are in the United States, about 44,000 in western Canada and approximately 47,000 in eastern Canada. Of the 44,000 in western Canada about 11,000 are used for the transportation of grain, and the balance for other commodities. However, for the transportation of wheat and other grains there are required a far larger number than 11,000. In fact there are required some 8,000 or 9,000 more box cars for this purpose than is available at present in western Canada.

The situation in eastern Canada is substantially the same. About 47,000 box cars are used for the transportation of various commodities, including feeds, from lake ports and bay ports to Atlantic seaboard ports. There is an acute shortage here, as well, of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 15,000.

Mr. HACKETT: To what extent is the shortage, arising from cars being in the United States, compensated by United States cars which are in Canada?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I was going to deal with that in a moment, but to answer the hon. member immediately—and of course I am speaking only from memory on the point—while I stated there were some 26,000 Canadian box cars in the United States, there are approximately 18,000 United States box cars in Canada. So that there is an adverse balance against Canada on this score of 8,000 box cars. This, however, is offset by the large number of hoppers and refrigerator cars which belong to United States companies, but which are in Canada.

I return now to the general position respecting the shortage of box cars. Why is there a shortage? I have said that there is an acute shortage in eastern Canada, to the extent of some 15,000 cars. Dealing now more directly with wheat, let me say that early in January of this year an understanding was reached as to the number of box cars required for the wheat movement. Had it not been for the extreme weather conditions in western Canada I do not think the situation in that part of the country would have been as serious as it was for a time, and as perhaps it is now to some extent.

The position was fairly satisfactory until about the middle of January, when, because of storms in western Canada, it became more acute. At that juncture, in conjunction with the railways, the transport controller issued a priority order in favour of grain, and that order had the effect of diverting from eastern to western Canada some 2,400 to 3,000 box cars. This procedure met with a large measure of success in meeting the situation for the time being. Industries in eastern Canada, however, felt the shortage, and many of them pointed to the fact that unless something were done to give them assistance they might have to close their doors. After further consideration of the whole picture, again in conjunction with the railways, the transport controller decided to do away with the priority order for grains, and the position today is that the matter is placed squarely on the shoulders of the railways.

Another reason for the shortage points to the coal strike in the United States. One effect of that strike was that most of the canalers used for the transportation of grain were commandeered during the navigation season for the purpose of transporting coal. Every one knows how serious the coal situation was at one time. Had it not been for the measures taken by the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe) and the coal control, which existed at that time, I do not think the position with reference to coal during the winter season 1946-47 would have been nearly as good as it was.

Over and above that the railways had the added burden of having to move grain as they normally do during the winter season. They had the additional task of transporting grain from the lakehead and the bay ports during the winter season. This added greatly to their problems and brought about a position which has led to some complaints. It has been stated in a certain editorial that grain is being diverted from Canadian to American ports. That is not so; it is not an accurate statement. Grain has not been diverted from any Canadian port to an American port. Grain has always been moved through American ports. For instance, in normal times grain moves through Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Portland, Buffalo, and Erie. Canadian grain has always moved via the Erie canal and down the Hudson river. During 1946-47 the movement of Canadian grain through American ports has been fifty per cent lower than in any other season.

Some charges have been made with reference to the port of Saint John, and it has been said that grain was diverted from Saint John to Portland. I was aware of the editorial which appeared in a certain Saint John paper on March 8; it came to my attention on March 11. I have read it carefully, and there are many inaccuracies in it. I should like to deal briefly with that for a moment in connection with the situation generally. There has never been a tie-up of ships in the port of Saint John because of a lack of grain. Take March 11, for instance, the day on which this editorial came to my attention. That is a typical day because the position on March 11 is the position which has obtained in that port during the whole season.

On March 11 there were 31 ships in the port of Saint John. Four ships were unloading; fourteen were loading other commodities; five were ready to take on grain; six were fitting and awaiting berths, and two were being repaired. Here is the position with reference to grain in that port on that particular day. There were 348,000 bushels loaded on two steamers, and as I say there were five ready to take on grain. There were 608,980 bushels in the elevators and there were 502,000 bushels loading in the three steamers at the berths. That left a favourable balance of wheat in the elevators of 96,980 bushels. Over and above that there were in transit east of Monk 1,200,000 bushels of wheat, making a total of 1,297,180 bushels. For the six steamers which were waiting berths, there were required 1,024,000 bushels, which left a favourable balance of wheat of 273,180 bushels in the port of Saint John.

It has been stated that at the very hour when wheat was being diverted from Canadian ports to American ports there were ships in the harbour of Saint John unable to get grain. May I reply to that by saying that at no time were there ships in the harbour of Saint John unable to get grain. On the contrary the ships there were ships unable to get berths because there was too much business. Business was so good at the port of Saint John that certain American companies, becoming tired of waiting for berths, transferred their ships to the port of Halifax.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member for St. John-Albert stated that the press report to which he referred was one week prior to March 11, which would be March 4. I do not see how the minister's remarks would apply.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have not the details for March 4, but I am informed by the transport controller that conditions on that day were practically the same as on March 11. If the house will permit me I should like to deal with the port of Halifax, and I am sure the hon. member who has just interrupted me will be interested in the position there. On the same day, March 11, there were 110,000 bushels of grain in the elevators at Halifax, There were 82,000 bushels in box cars. This made a total of 192,000 bushels. There were required for the steamers in the port ready to load a total of 197,000 bushels. The house will note therefore a deficit of some 5,000 bushels, but there were in transit east of Monk a total of 204,000 bushels of wheat in some 120 box cars and west of Monk there were 174 box cars in transit carrying wheat to that port.

Mr. ISNOR: Is that the same wheat the minister referred to as being en route to Saint John?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Oh, no.

Mr. ISNOR: The minister said east of Monk.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: One was via Canadian National and the other was via Canadian Pacific. I thank the hon. member for the correction. It follows that so far as the port of Halifax is concerned there was an ample supply of grain for incoming steamers.

Mr. HAZEN: May I interrupt the minister to ask one question? Were ships diverted to the port of Portland as the editorial states?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The editorial I have before me refers to the diversion of ships from the port of Saint John, and from what my hon. friend has said I take it it refers to a diversion from the port of Halifax as well, although I do not recall reading that. Ships were not diverted from the port of Saint John or the port of Halifax to Portland. I repeat that grain moves normally to United States ports and ships were diverted from one American port to another. Instead of going via Buffalo or via Erie, it went via Portland. Why? Because the haul to Portland is much shorter. I am informed that the distance from Montreal to Portland is 295 miles and that it takes from twelve to sixteen hours for a box car movement to that port. The distance from Montreal to Saint John is 488 miles, and it takes three days for a box car movement to that port. The distance from Montreal to Halifax is 800 miles, and it takes four days for a box car movement to that port. The Canadian National Railways have a line operating directly from Montreal to Portland. When they make the movement to Portland they use their own box cars all the way. They can be earmarked so that they come back the next day, whereas if they go by other ports they may be lost and held up for some weeks.

As I said to the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) a moment ago, there are a large number of United States box cars in Canada, but there are a larger number of Canadian box cars in the United States owing to the fact that it is often almost impossible to earmark them once they get south of the border.

To the charge that workers were being deprived of work and wages because of this diversion, I say that is not so, because in the first place there has been no diversion from a Canadian port to a United States port. That is not so because the operation took place on the lines of the Canadian National Railways. Many of the workers who were employed on these lines are Canadians, and all of the profit and money derived therefrom enures to the general benefit of Canada.

I should have said that the normal cycle for a box car is twelve days—that is, from the time it leaves its point of departure until it returns equals a period of twelve days. The average movement from Montreal to Portland is four days; therefore the saving so far as box cars themselves are concerned was a great one in that instance.

With reference to the movement of box cars generally the transport controller, in conjunction with the railways, has a most difficult task to perform. I can assure the house that because of the storms, because of the position which I outlined at the beginning of my remarks, it is difficult to satisfy all the requirements. There is grain from the country to Vancouver which must be moved; there is grain from the lakehead; there is feed from the lake and the bay ports down to Ontario and Quebec; there are other commodities such as pulpwood and newsprint which must be moved south of the border, and there are commodities of industries which require attention as well. My colleague points out to me that feed to the maritimes is also an important matter which I should not have overlooked.

Mr. REID: Has the minister any information as to Pacific coast ports?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am sorry, I have not. The editorial dealt only with the ports of Saint John and Halifax, but I shall be glad to get the Vancouver figures for my hon. friend.

I think the house will agree with me when I say that the railways have a most difficult task with reference to the movement of grain. I believe they have done a good job under all the circumstances. They feel that if all priorities are removed they will be in a better position to handle the grain than if there are priorities. I have figures for the movement of wheat in western Canada. I do not want to put these on Hansard because I have them not to March 13 but only to March 7. They indicate that there has been a movement all along the line from March 1 to March 7, on the average of 752 cars to 800 cars a day, which under all the circumstances is pretty fair. I therefore submit to the house that the railways have done a good job under the circumstances, and if the matter is left to them with the assistance of the transport controller, I think grain will move freely throughout the country.

Mr. BRACKEN: Before the minister takes his seat, will he answer one question if he has the information? Can he give the house the relative amount of freight in the form of western grain which passes through the Canadian ports, say at Montreal, Saint John and Halifax, as compared with United States ports such as Portland, Boston, New York, and others? Has the minister those figures?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am sorry; I have not that.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will the minister permit one more question? Has he any record of the amount of demurrage which the British government had to pay or was charged on shipments of wheat, caused by the hold-up of ships at our ports in Canada during the past fall?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I would not have the information to reply to that question in any event, because the transport controller has nothing to do with demurrage. But my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) has drawn to my attention the fact that generally speaking we do not pay demurrage—at least the wheat board does not pay it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is not my question. I want to know how much the British government had to pay.

Mr. MacKINNON: We have no information on that point.

Mr. GARDINER: A more important question is why they had to pay.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the house has listened with interest to the statement of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) as to the shortage of box cars and its effect on slowing up the shipment of grain. In my remarks at this time I do not propose to deal with that matter. I am rising to do two or three things. I wish to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to answer certain questions which we asked in previous stages of the debate on this bill, and to ask certain other questions with respect to the negotiation of the prices to be paid on next year's crop, and before I sit down I propose to move an amendment, that this bill be not now read a third time but be referred to the committee of the whole to reconsider sections 20, 21 and 22 for the purpose of trying to have the government pay the participation payments on the 1945 crop.

At previous stages in the consideration of this bill certain questions were asked. I think I am correct in saying that these particular ones were not answered: First, how much of the farmers' money the government is holding on the 1943 crop, the 1944 crop and the 1945 crop. It is not so important about 1943; I imagine that is largely paid out by this time.

I do not think the minister answered these questions when I asked them; he did not at that moment have the information available.

Then I asked the minister what was the average rate of interest to the government or the wheat board on these moneys which are being held back and not paid out to the farmers.

I want to know the balance in the government's hands for the 1945 crop particularly, because the crop of that year was sown and harvested and nearly all sold before the British wheat agreement was signed. The British wheat agreement was signed early in July of 1946 and applied to the four following years, 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949 crops. When the government came to making the pooling arrangement they included with these four years the balances held for farmers on the 1945 crop. I do not know that the house fully appreciated that fact in earlier stages of the debate. The wheat agreement applied particularly to the crops of 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949, but when the government came to make the pooling arrangement they said they would take in the balances due on the 1945 crop and add them to any balances in the other four years; then if there was any left at the end of 1950 they would pay it out at that time.

I want to know what these balances are, because, whatever certain growers or organizations may have had in mind with respect to the balances due on the 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949 crops, it was never in their minds that any balance due on the 1945 crop should be included in that pooling arrangement. I want to know the amount held back for that year because the organized farmers desire to have that balance particularly paid back to them without waiting until the year 1950.

Hon. members will recall that in committee of the whole I moved that, instead of keeping all these balances until 1950 and paying out whatever may be left at the end of 1950, the balance should be paid each year. The committee did not accept that amendment. By a vote of 88 to 31, if I remember correctly, that amendment was turned down. I do not therefore intend to waste the time of the house by asking for further consideration of that particular proposal now. I expect that, since the government members and certain other sections of the house opposed it, it would be turned down again. But I wish to raise the question with regard to the payment of the balance for the 1945 participation certificates. In that connection I wish to read from the representations by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in its presentation to the dominion cabinet on February 28 with respect to agricultural matters in general.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) read certain sections of that report in support of certain aspects of the bill before us, but I want to read what that organization, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, had to say with respect to this particular matter of the payment of the balance on the 1945 crop. This crop, as I said, was sown and harvested and nearly all sold before this agreement was entered into. This is what the federation had to say to the government in its presentation for this year:

> . . . We protest the action of the government in not retiring participation certificates on wheat delivered to the Canadian wheat board during the crop year 1945-46. We cannot but regard the withholding of these payments as contrary to the understanding which wheat growers had with the government during the whole of that crop year. We strongly urge that any surplus on hand resulting from the operations of the crop year, 1945-46, be paid to producers now and not pooled with the operations of subsequent years.

That is the one thing I urge particularly in asking that the government permit this measure to go back to the committee of the whole in order to reconsider the matter.

There are also some other questions which I wish to ask the minister. These have to do with the price to be paid under the British agreement for the 1948 crop, next year's crop. Under the British agreement, the British government undertakes to pay not less than $1.25 for next year's crop. But in that agreement there is also an undertaking that the actual price to be paid on next year's crop shall be negotiated before the end of December of this year. It is with respect to the attitude of the Canadian government on the price which will be set before this house meets again. It is the attitude of this government towards the price to be negotiated on that 1948 crop, that I wish now to direct some questions to the government.

In order to make clear my position let me read first of all section 2(a) of the British wheat agreement:

> The actual prices to be paid for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1948-49 shall be negotiated and settled between the United Kingdom government and the Canadian government not later than the 31st December, 1947.

It is clearly set out in a previous section of the agreement that the price shall not be less than $1.25. In this section it is set out that the actual price shall be negotiated before December 31 of this year. I think this house and the Canadian people should know something of the attitude of the government toward the price which the government will attempt to secure when they negotiate the matter some time before December 31.

I would like the government to answer these questions as specifically as they can. Does the government propose to sell the 1948 crop below the world price? That was done for this year's crop. We know something of what the world price is today. We know what the quotations are for September next, though we do not know what they will be in December. The September price quoted now in Chicago is $2.25 per bushel. Does this government propose to sell the 1948 crop below the world price as it did the present crop? If so, how much below the present world price does it propose to get in that agreement? It is now known that this year's crop was sold at a figure that is probably $100 million less than if the world market price had been obtained. Does the government propose to sell the 1948 crop at any such reduction below the world price?

In that connection I want to refer to another section in this British wheat agreement; as a matter of fact it is part of the same section I have read. It is section 2(b), the latter part of it:

In determining the prices for these two crop years—

Namely, the 1948 crop and the 1949 crop.

—the United Kingdom government will have regard—

I hope hon. members will note these words carefully.

—the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years and the world prices for wheat in those years.

I should like the government to tell me what the clause means. Does it mean that in negotiating these prices before December 31, the British government is expected to pay more than world prices at that time because of the fact that it has gotten this year's crop at, say, $100 million less than the world price? Does it mean that? If not, what does it mean?

In answering that question I suggest the minister have in mind an answer given by the British Minister of Food, Hon. Mr. Strachey, to a question in the House of Commons at Westminster on December 11 last. It can be found in the Parliamentary Debates of the United Kingdom. The question was:

Can the right hon. gentleman explain how this policy of buying agricultural products below cost of production in the country of origin, squares with the Hot Springs resolution which this government supported?

This is Mr. Strachey's answer:

We buy agricultural products at the lowest prices we can get them in the world, and if we deviated from that policy I am sure the house would censure us very severely indeed.

I have read the section of the British wheat agreement which says that, as to any advantage the British government now has with respect to this year's crop, the British government will have regard to it in negotiating the price to be paid for the 1948 crop. I have also read the answer made by the British minister, who, I understand, negotiated or helped to negotiate this agreement. I want now to make a brief quotation from an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press with respect to this particular matter. The editorial is from the issue of February 27, referring to an address made by Mr. Strachey to the Canadian club in that city. I quote:

"We (the British government) do not feel that the long term interests of the United Kingdom and the British people will be served by once again seeing the prices of wheat drop to almost nothing and the wheat farmers of the world go bankrupt, one after another."

The editorial goes on:

It is hard to reconcile this with the same Mr. Strachey speaking in the British House of Commons on December 11 last (Hansard, column 1156):

"We buy agricultural products at the lowest prices we can get them in the world, and if we deviated from that policy I am sure the house would censure us very severely indeed."

And in London he proceeded to argue—which should interest the farmers of the west—that bulk of state purchase—which is exemplified in the wheat agreement—is the best method of obtaining low prices.

The editorial ends with this comment:

The facts in the present case support Mr. Strachey's position at London, but not in Winnipeg.

Let me put my questions again. Does this government intend to ask the British government to pay more than the world price for the 1948 wheat crop, in view of the fact it has sold a large part of this year's crop to Britain at scores of millions of dollars less than the world price? If not, what does that section 2 (b) in the British wheat agreement mean? And what does it mean having regard to the answer given in the British House of Commons by the Hon. Mr. Strachey?

I have one other aspect of this matter to deal with, and then I shall be through. I refer to the general policy of vesting in government-appointed boards practically all the powers possessed by parliament. Under wartime powers and under the transitional powers act this government was given power to possess the farmer's wheat, power to sell it, power to do everything necessary to commandeer it and to direct it into certain channels. These were very wide powers. We granted them fully during the war. But in peace time parliament is placed in an invidious position. The Minister of Trade and Commerce made a long-term agreement covering wheat not yet grown. He made it nearly a year ago, for four crops. The Minister of Agriculture makes various long-term agreements about other agricultural products that are not yet produced. They are agreements to deliver farm commodities in specified amounts, and at prices fixed by the government in the agreements. The government makes the agreements and then comes to parliament and says in effect, "You must either repudiate these agreements or else give us the wide powers of compulsion that we ask for in order to carry them out."

If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) had been in his seat today, I should have asked him if as a general principle he subscribes to legislation of that kind. I should like to have asked him, whether if he sat in the opposition instead of over there, if he were sitting here he would have let legislation of that kind be passed without protest. Almost any day now—perhaps today—we shall be discussing another bill in which similar powers will be asked for with respect to other farm products.

I should like in this connection to make our position clear. We do not recommend that any agreement already made be dishonoured. I stated that the other day. There can be no respect for governments if an international agreement entered into by one government is going to be kicked over by another, or even by itself. We do not recommend that any agreement already made be dishonoured, but we are opposed to what is rapidly becoming a general practice, namely, a minister of the crown committing this country to agreements without the approval of parliament. We are opposed to granting to a minister or to the government the power to make agreements that may change the whole face of our agriculture—that are in fact doing that—agreements which make it necessary to come to parliament and ask that unheard-of bureaucratic powers of compulsion be vested in government boards in order to carry them out. The least the government should do is to follow the practice which is followed in trade agreements, namely, to bring the agreement to parliament before it is finally ratified by any board or by any minister.

I want to read just three lines from a newspaper which, whether we agree with it or not in all matters, has had definite views and, I think, very good views with respect to trade. On this particular matter, the Winnipeg Free Press of March 7 says:

> In years to come, when Liberals recover from this kind of power madness, defacements of our statute law, like this one, will rise up to shame them.

That is all I had intended to say, Mr. Speaker, at this time. The amendment I desire to move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) is as follows:

> That the said bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 20, 21 and 22 thereof.

My main purpose in referring to these particular sections is to have consideration given this one point: That the balance due on the 1945 crop, which was sown and harvested and largely sold before this agreement was entered into, be paid out now rather than included in the pool for the whole five years. I am assured that the resolution is in order. In case it should not carry, however, I should like to ask the minister or someone on the government benches to give all the information he can with respect to the balances held on the 1944 and 1945 crops, and such information as can be given with respect to the attitude of the government in negotiating the price for next year's crop. I ask that because this session will be prorogued in midsummer and this particular business will be completed before we come back.

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): While I do not agree with the latter portion of the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), I find myself pretty much in agreement with respect to the clause he wishes to have amended. As a matter of fact that was the position taken by this group in the discussion of the bill. We felt that the 1945-46 crop had been included in the agreement without the consent of the wheat producers, and that because of the rising production costs the government have permitted, which are creating a hardship at this time, the government should give serious consideration to paying out the 1945-46 participation certificates.

With regard to this matter of rising costs, we in this group have supported this bill largely because we believed the government were sincere in their intention to maintain the ceilings on the costs of production in this country. That was the undertaking the government gave this house and the country when this agreement was initiated. But we do not find that being done today. Only recently we saw the ceiling taken off gasoline and the ceiling on binder twine raised to permit the wholesalers to increase their prices on binder twine to the trade in western Canada by $7.50 a hundredweight. Today when the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) a question in this regard he was given a flippant answer, which shows the extent of the minister's anxiety as far as the farmers are concerned. We certainly did not appreciate that answer, and I do not think it should have been made. I do not believe he gave very much consideration to his words at that time. An increase of $7.50 a hundredweight in the price of binder twine to the western farmer means an increase of 33⅓ per cent. That is an additional cost in the production of grain in the west, and I must say we in this group are very much disappointed in the actions of the government over the last six months, in allowing agricultural costs to increase at the rate they have increased. If this continues it will destroy the value of the whole stabilization programme as far as grains are concerned. Unless some attempt is made by the government to maintain present costs of production it is going to become a serious matter.

With regard to the amendment that has been moved, as I have said already during the discussion of the bill we suggested that this matter should be given consideration. Therefore we intend to support the amendment.

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): I do not consider it necessary to make a long statement at this time; I did not kiss the blarney stone when I left Ireland, so my remarks this afternoon will be brief. I simply want to say that this bill will not entirely meet with our approval, particularly in the matter of the failure of the government to give an undertaking that the wheat board will accept, at the guaranteed minimum price of $1.35, all wheat offered to it during the pool period to July 31, 1950. We feel that such a definite undertaking, expressed in plain English in this bill, should be given to the Canadian farmers. They were asked to make great sacrifices during the war. These they made with no protest whatever. They are now being asked to make further sacrifices to make possible the fulfilment of the government's agreement with Britain. It is only right, therefore, that they should be made to feel secure in the knowledge that what wheat they do raise and offer for sale during the period to July 31, 1950, will be accepted, and that at no time during the period will they be left with quantities they themselves cannot store, nor at the end of the period with substantial quantities they may have to sell at greatly reduced prices. I listened carefully to all the arguments both for and against the proposition made from this corner of the house, and I must say I was not much impressed by the arguments of the members of the government, all of whom failed to make a valid case for their failure to give in the bill the undertaking requested by us.

Had I been a little nearer Mr. Speaker, or had his eyesight been a little better, I might have had an opportunity of moving an amendment in the following words:

> That bill 23 be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for consideration of amendments designed to commit the government to the acceptance of all wheat offered for sale during the period to July 31, 1950, to settle for the 1945 crop when sold, and to raise the initial payment to $1.55 per bushel on the four remaining crops.

Those things are what we had in mind; they are the points that were emphasized continuously during the debate, both on second reading and in committee. I hope the house will see fit to support the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) and send this bill back to committee, in order to help the farmers get a square deal even if only on this one point.

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a word or two in connection with this bill I wish to make it clear that I am not doing so in order to support the amendment, but rather because of the remarks made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier). I listened carefully to the discussion of this bill both in the house and in committee of the whole. Hon. members advanced arguments for and against it, and coming as I do from the east, where perhaps we are more particularly interested in fish than in wheat, it seemed to me the government was to be congratulated on having made such an agreement as this.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): You probably know a lot more about fish than you do about wheat.

Mr. ISNOR: It is probably true that I know more about fish than I do about wheat. But after listening to the hon. member discourse for hours about wheat, I must confess I am more than ever confused as to what policy would meet his wishes, and at the same time meet those of the rest of the country.

However, after listening to arguments on all sides, it is my belief that the government has made an exceptionally good contract. I would associate myself with what was said by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Hazen) who, the day before yesterday, brought to the government's attention the fact that wheat was being shipped through United States ports. We in the east were conscious of this as early as last October. As a result, at that time the Halifax board of trade, acting in conjunction with the board of trade of the city of Saint John, brought to the attention of the government, and particularly the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon), their fear of a shortage of wheat on the Atlantic coast, thereby making it almost impossible for the government to carry out its commitment.

I would repeat that it was as early as last October that we brought this matter to the attention of the government, and particularly to the attention of the Department of Transport and the Department of Trade and Commerce. Today the Minister of Transport has given figures showing the number of box cars which were in the United States, and also in eastern and western Canada. I shall not deal with this in detail, more than to say that had the railways been alive to the situation, as it was brought to their attention last October, and in the following months of November and December, the shortage of 8,000 box cars in Canada today would not exist.

In support of his contention the minister has urged that it was necessary to ship through the United States port of Portland, and has stated that, while the box car turn-back from Portland was four days, it was eight days from Halifax. In stating that, however, he forgot an important fact in his picture of the transportation system. I refer to the shipping distance from Halifax.

At this point I should like to place some figures on record. The sailing time of a 16-knot vessel from London to Montreal is 203 hours, while to Saint John it is 182 hours and, to Halifax, 172 hours. Halifax is thus ten hours shorter than Saint John and thirty-one hours shorter than Montreal. Then, it need not be repeated that Halifax is open all the year round, so far as shipping is concerned, and at all times is entirely free of ice.

Mr. MacNICOL: Can the hon. member tell us the number of hours from Portland?

Mr. ISNOR: There is no question in my mind that grain shipped through Halifax would reach London much faster than if it were shipped through Portland.

Mr. HACKETT: About six hours.

Mr. ISNOR: Thank you. In addition to that I have in mind the additional employment resulting from shipment through Canadian ports. Last year, when export-import legislation was before the house I pointed out that at the port of Halifax we have 1,600 longshoremen, 1,000 freight handlers and 1,400 others more or less directly connected with the handling of cargo at our port.

Then, it is not only grain with which we are concerned. The bringing of ships to our ports to handle grain has the effect of creating other cargoes, thus adding to the number of ships entering our ports, and to the amount of business derived from those ships by way of repairs and other employment in connection therewith. Every time a ship of 5,000 tons is loaded or unloaded at Halifax it means that an average of $12,500 is paid out in wages.

I now come to the question of the shipment of grain through the port of Halifax. In 1942 there were 32,844,580 bushels shipped through that port. In 1945 that figure had dropped to 15,051,638, and this year it is estimated that no more than 7,000,000 bushels will be shipped through Halifax.

One can understand my concern with respect to the failure to make arrangements for the transportation of grain through Canadian ports, and my further concern that no consideration, so far as I know, has been given to including in the wheat agreement a provision which would definitely guarantee that all grain for export should be shipped through Canadian ports. When I refer to Canadian ports I am referring not only to that great port of Halifax, but to all ports of Canada.

It will be recalled that the late Right Hon. W. S. Fielding made a special provision to the extent of ten per cent in favour of goods entering through Canadian ports, and I should like to see a provision something along that line in this agreement. Therefore I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), through you, Mr. Speaker, that, in addition to the sections already appearing in the bill, he add another stating:

> And it is further agreed that all goods under this contract or agreement must be shipped through Canadian ports.

I do not wish unnecessarily to take up the time of the house in the discussion of this measure. I felt, however, that I must say a word in connection with transportation, particularly in view of the fact that some of us in the east recognized away back as early as October, 1946, that a situation such as has arisen might develop. It is because of the present condition that I urge the government today to consider the views I have expressed, and to see that no further shipments pass through United States ports, but rather that in future they pass through our own Canadian ports, thus adding to employment at those points.

The hon. member for St. John-Albert stated that a million bushels of wheat had been shipped through Portland. I think the figure of one million bushels is used for that particular period, and I am concerned over the possibility of there being further shipments of a similar quantity. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will take these views of mine into consideration and pass them along to the Minister of Transport in order to make sure that we do not have to put up with this sort of thing.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the amendment of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) because he is right and he is honourable. I think this bill should go back to the committee of the whole house for further consideration in view of the statement made yesterday in the British House of Commons by a former leader of the government, Mr. Churchill, that Britain is actually starving. It is stated that the people of Britain have actually less food than most Germans and that their health is suffering. Sir Earl Page, leader of the Country party in the Australian house said yesterday that if relief were delayed much longer it would sound the death-knell of imperial preference. The same could be said with reference to Canada and the six cents a bushel preference on grain we had started by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to Britain, our most reliable and best customer.

I am one of those who have always supported the grain growing industry. I consider it is the key industry of Canada because it means so much for the prosperity of the whole country. But we should not forget our best customer, the mother country. She stood by us in days of stress and strain six years ago when, save for the dominions, she stood alone against the axis powers. So far as supplying wheat and other commodities until 1950 is concerned, that is a matter for other agencies, but I really believe it would be better for us to give the necessary food to the mother country, where they are now having to ration bread and starving for food. Australia has just voted to give her £20,000,000 toward aiding Britain to meet expenses.

It is said that 100,000 bushels of grain is to be purchased by Britain from Argentina. We should not lose this great British market for this great industry. The agreement we have signed provides for prices ranging from $1.35 to $1.50 a bushel over a period of three or four years, or the market price, but I think it would be far better for us to abandon that policy altogether and adopt some form of lease-lend, similar to that adopted by the Minister of Finance in connection with lending money. For six or seven years Great Britain was all that stood between us and the loss of civilization and freedom. Compared with Britain, we have not suffered at all in this country.

I do not object to ministers from Britain and from other dominions coming here and talking about imperial affairs as they have. We do not object to Americans doing so here. We are part and parcel of the empire and I see nothing wrong with ministers from other places coming here and expressing their opinions without being criticized in this house. I do not approve that; I never have and I never shall. Reports were given yesterday in the British House of Commons of the awful suffering for food, coal and electricity that country is going through. We have not before us as yet the debates in the British house and must rely upon the newspapers for our information. The people of that country have given away much of their food to feed Germany and other invaded countries in Europe. The British starved themselves during the war to do so and suffered terribly. Australia and other parts of the empire have discussed this matter. I would rather apply a system of bonuses, subventions and subsidies to make up what the grain grower might lose under this bill by adopting this agreement with Britain to make up any out-of-pocket expenses herein.

After all is said and done, you have to consider the place of the middleman in the grain industry. I remember debates in this house over the years when it was shown that the farmer, the man who actually grows the grain, was fleeced out of large sums of money by middlemen who handle the grain. While I appreciate that this is a great industry, I believe the time has come when we should hearken to the handwriting on the wall. Are we to throw away preferences? That is where you are heading. According to the statement made by a leader of a party in Australia yesterday, that is where it is heading. He said Australia is going to sound the death-knell of imperial preference by its food policy there, and I am not a supporter of the sounding of the death-knell of that great principle after all it did for us between the two world wars.

We should be ready to lend money to Britain and provide all the food they need. In that way we could have avoided the terrible mistakes that were made in connection with the United States loan. I support the motion made by the leader of the opposition to refer this bill back to the committee. I believe it should be referred back and considered very carefully. Great Britain did so much for us during the war, and we should not fail to support the mother country in the great food, coal and electricity crises which face her today.

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to restate the position of the C.C.F. in connection with this bill or to point out what we consider are the inadequacies of the legislation. This has been done very well by my colleagues who spoke on the second reading, but there are some observations which I should like to make. I agree in principle with the bill; but, as has been mentioned, it is not adequate. In the past we have seen great fluctuations in farm prices, and in this connection I wish to refer to a newspaper report as follows:

> Mr. Hannam quoted Fiorello LaGuardia, New York, as saying: "You know and I know that the farmers of the world have been exploited and are still being exploited."

> We want stability not for purely selfish reasons. We want it if the people of the world are going to have more and better food to eat.

That is one of the great considerations at this time. It has been said that this bill affects only Canada, but I maintain that it affects all the world and, because of that, it is one of the most important bills coming up in this house.

We attempted to give some sort of stability to agriculture during the war, but the government permitted a break in the stability when they allowed an increase in prices of farm machinery. That was nearly the straw which breaks the camel's back, because, for the first time, we had farmers organizing to put on a non-delivery strike. If this sort of thing continues and the government does not accept the responsibility for giving parity prices to agriculture, rather than stability in the basement, we shall have a situation in Canada which will be a reflection on democracy in this country.

The farmers of western Canada are not satisfied with this agreement. We feel that we should have parity; that we should have a decent standard of living; that we should have prices above the cost of production which will guarantee us a decent standard of living. The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) was quoted in the press and he can correct me if I am wrong; before the opening of the session he was reported as having said that he was coming here to ask for $1.85 wheat. I wish to say—and I intend to say it to my farmers and constituents—I do not think you can have your cake and eat it. If you want stability you must be ready to accept a price of parity. In other words, at the moment you cannot demand the world price which is perhaps enhanced by world conditions, and immediately afterwards demand parity. But I do say that, unless we go back to the 1900 economics and administration of government, today the government should take the responsibility to see that agriculture gets parity.

What has happened is that during the war the farmers have taken losses on their wheat. In most cases our prices have been steady and stabilized. As was indicated by one hon. member, the farmers have lost money which they could have received. If our farm products, chiefly wheat, were sold on world markets we could have received around $400 million. However the farmers were not kicking so much until the cost of production started to go up. As was intimated in the house today by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden), the restrictions on the ceiling price of gasoline will be removed the last of the month. We find that the price of binder twine is going up. In the face of that, we find that the responsible minister has the audacity to rise in his place and say, without any show of seriousness, that these matters are being given the usual consideration, or something to that effect. If that is the usual consideration which is being given to the difficult problems in this country I want to say that we are headed for another depression which will be as bad as the one we had in 1930 when the Tories were in power.

I believe we have come farther than that. I should like to indicate to the government that, although we have had in the west a degree of prosperity, yet this situation prevails. I hold in my hand statistics which were furnished me by the bureau of statistics. These statistics show that the total farm debt, including mortgages and agreements of sale of land for the year 1941, stood at $799 million, and further that the institutional holdings of farm debt by insurance companies, trust loans on mortgages, government agencies, municipalities, railways and so forth in 1938 stood at $418 million. By 1945 when we had been getting decent prices and good crops we had reduced that debt to $263 million. But I wish to point out that, until that debt is practically cleared up and the farmers get out of the red, we want fair prices for the farmers. This indicates that our whole economy is going out of gear and we are headed for a position where we shall have decreased consumption. What we farmers want is everyone to have all they want to eat.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said that, until beef was rationed in this country, we had not shipped any considerable amount of beef out and that we had to continue rationing because we had put 750,000 of our boys and girls in the services. They were starting to have some money in their pockets and our farmers were starting to get decent prices and putting beef on their tables as they had not done before. This indicates that there is a potential market in Canada. Only when the people get a fair share of the national income, good wages and fair prices will they buy that stuff.

I was talking to a friend of mine in this city the other day. He was in a butcher shop where he usually does his buying, and the butcher said to him as a lady came in—they were speaking about the business trends which were taking place—"Watch what that lady buys." He said: "Formerly, three weeks ago she would have bought a Saturday night order of around $12 worth of the best cuts of meat in my shop." She bought bologna and some of the cheaper cuts of meat. That is what is going on. She bought only $2 worth. That is what is taking place all over the country today.

The "Economic Annalist" of February, 1946, states this:

> The cash income from the sale of farm products for 1945 is estimated by the bureau of statistics at $1,654 million. This total is about 8 per cent less than the record high of 1944.

I hold in my hand a press report of the remarks of George Bickerton, publicity director of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, which says:

> Saskatchewan farmers' income dropped $137,573,000 in 1945 with a further drop of $50,485,000, in the first six months of 1946.

That is the situation which faces us today. We of this group have asked for the inclusion in this bill of all coarse grains, but we have been unable to have that done. I might point out that flax, which I think all hon. members will recognize is one of the crops which we should have produced on a stable basis over the years and not on a fluctuating production basis, in 1941 brought an average price per bushel, No. 1, at Fort William and Port Arthur of $1.615. By 1945 it was $2.75 a bushel. This shows that in many parts of agricultural production there is no stability whatsoever.

We are not completely satisfied with this bill. In the first place, I believe that all participation dividends and sales coming from the 1945 crop should be paid out for that year. It is the responsibility of this government how they do it. That is their business, but we should have from year to year calculated parity prices for the farmers. I support the motion of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) that sections 20, 21 and 22 be referred back to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): I shall be brief. I have taken it for granted that the responsible minister for the department and the responsible minister for the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement would have endeavoured to answer the questions which were put so frankly and forthrightly by my leader in his discussion this afternoon. I just wish to say—

Mr. GARDINER: May I just suggest that if the minister spoke he would close the debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. May I remind the house that we are on third reading, not on second reading.

Mr. GARDINER: On a point of order, is it not true that if the minister speaks a second time he will close the debate? He has moved third reading and has therefore spoken once. If he speaks again will he not be speaking twice?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would remind the house that we are now discussing the amendment. There is no closing of the debate on an amendment.

Mr. GARDINER: Then the minister has spoken.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The leader of the opposition moved an amendment. The minister has not spoken on the amendment.

Mr. GARDINER: That is so.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): As I said, I had contemplated waiting until the two responsible ministers had endeavoured to answer the questions put by my leader. Since they sat silent and Your Honour was prepared to put the motion, I thought I should make a few brief remarks.

Referring to the amendment which was moved by my leader, I wish to say that when the producers of Canada planned their operations for the production of wheat during 1945 they were distinctly led to believe by the government of the day that they would receive an initial payment and participation certificates when they delivered the wheat for that year. They were led to believe that when the handling and sale for that crop year 1945 should be completed by the Canadian wheat board, whatever profits there might be would be distributed on the basis of the business done for that crop year. That was distinctly their understanding, and I certainly believe that those producers are entitled to feel that the government, in this proposed bill No. 23, are breaking faith with them. The government is breaking faith with the wheat producers in proposing to pay into this five-year pool the proceeds over the initial payment of the 1945 crop. They will be distinctly disappointed in that and will have every reason for saying that the government of the day is breaking faith with the producers in the handling of the 1945 crop. That is distinctly the policy of the government.

As previous speakers have said, as a direct result of the policies of this government the wheat producers in the past few years have lost in the marketing of their wheat many hundreds of millions of dollars which they cannot now in any way retrieve, and that is an irreparable loss. There is no way in which it can be made good to them.

Reference has been made by my leader, in one of the questions asked, to the basis on which negotiations will take place this fall for next year's crop under the United Kingdom-Canadian agreement. Many people may not realize it, but on March 10 of this week Canadian No. 2 wheat, that is export wheat by the Canadian wheat board, was quoted, No. 1 basis Fort William, at $2.90 a bushel; durum wheat, at $3 a bushel, an all-time high for the past thirty years. That is acknowledged by the Canadian wheat board, which is taking full control to commandeer and handle all wheat produced in Canada through a permit. If some mistake is made, or if something is done under the regulations that should not be done, the producer will be in danger of losing his permit. On that same day wheat was quoted in Chicago at $2.80, and even wheat for next September's delivery is over $2.25 a bushel. When we realize that $2.90 a bushel is $1.70 a bushel higher than the price of $1.20, or less, that is paid by the wheat board to the farmer at the country elevator, and that there is no guarantee whatever that he may ever receive more, hon. members will agree that that is a very great difference in price.

As has been pointed out before, under this United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement, Canada undertakes in the next four years to deliver 600,000,000 bushels of wheat for slightly over $800,000,000, or an average of $1.35 a bushel for these four years, basis Fort William, or less than $1.20 to the producer; and there is no guarantee that he may ever receive any more.

Many Canadians may not realize what that amounts to, but for the five-year period prior to the signing of this agreement the average annual wheat production in Canada was 375,000,000 bushels, and in those five years there was one year when the production was the greatest that there had ever been in this country. Out of those 375,000,000 bushels of wheat we consumed an average annually of 175,000,000 bushels for flour, seed and feed, for domestic use in Canada. That left for export to some sixty countries an average of 200,000,000 bushels. We have contracted to the people of Britain, on the price I have quoted, three-quarters of that quantity, or 150,000,000 bushels, leaving, all told, a remainder of 50,000,000 bushels on an average for export to all the other importing countries of the world. That is the situation and on that basis you can calculate what payments if any may be made on the participation certificates after the five years.

I say, and I think I am right in the assertion, that these producers will be quite dissatisfied. The information was given the other day that the British farmers will be paid $2.40 a bushel for wheat grown in the old country in 1947; for milling barley, $2.40 a bushel; for malting barley, $3.15 a bushel, and for oats, $2.07 a bushel. Those are the prices which the farmers over there will receive for cereal production.

I was interested in the past few minutes to hear two hon. gentlemen, whom I have always spoken of highly as farmers and who sit in the group to my left, advance the very arguments I have used for the past two years and more especially since signing of the wheat agreement. They said that the agreement would not give stability to the wheat producer of Canada. I have said that nothing has been done in Canada to hold down the cost of production, and both hon. gentlemen referred to the ceilings that are going off on the 1st of April, which will allow the cost of tractor fuel to rise. The price of binder twine will also go up. Indeed, the press carries an announcement that binder twine, which a year ago cost the farmers in my part of the country from $11 to $12 per 100 pounds, will be increased $9 per 100 pounds. That is an increase of approximately eighty per cent for those people who have grain to thresh.

In the course of the discussion in the past few days, a statement was given by two ministers, who ought to know what they are talking about, with regard to exports of lumber. One statement will be found at page 901 of Hansard. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) stated that a certain type of lumber under the Canadian ceiling sold for $26, the export price, United States, being $70, or a difference of $44; and the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe), speaking since then, as reported at page 1233 of Hansard, said that on another type of lumber the ceiling was $29 and the export price to the United States, $81, or a difference of $52.

When these various things find their own level hon. members will have some idea of the rapidly rising cost of cereal production in Canada. There are no controls whatever, but the farmer is distinctly tied down for these five years.

Coming back to the principle of the amendment, I say that there is a breach of contract with the producers on the part of the government of the day. The producers are entitled to have profits, if any, distributed to them for the year 1945-46 on their wheat crop, and I hope that all members will give careful consideration to the amendment and support it so that this matter may be referred back to the committee for consideration on that basis.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): I wish to make a comment or two on the question before the house. It seems to me that the field has narrowed down considerably since the question of the wheat board act first came up. It appears now that we are in disagreement with the bill because it does not provide certain benefits for the farmer. This afternoon the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) repeated what he has said before in this house, that is, that he is not opposed to living up to the terms of the British wheat agreement. In other words, we are now assured that, regardless of who the government shall be in the next few succeeding years, the wheat agreement will hold.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): The leader of the opposition has always said that.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: That is what I am saying. Furthermore, we find that the leader of the opposition has moved an amendment which would refer the bill back to the committee for reconsideration of sections 20, 21 and 22, and by implication this means that he is in complete agreement with the bill except for those sections. That now narrows the field down considerably to the question of what is contained in these three sections. I think the biggest bone of contention now is not the principle of the bill as a whole but whether the farmer, under the bill, is getting all the benefits he should get out of it and getting them at the right time. The two things under discussion at the present time appear to be the payment of participation benefits and the initial price of the wheat itself. I think both those problems can be combined and can be easily solved if the proper minister would rise in his place in this house and say today that the initial price of wheat shall be $1.55 instead of $1.35. By making that announcement he would be doing two things. First, he would be guaranteeing the farmer a greater immediate income on his grain; and, second, he would be leaving far less money in the wheat board fund, over which the argument seems to be developing; that is to say, there would be less left for distribution at the end of the pool period and more money would be made available immediately to the farmers.

I do not think any argument has been brought forward in this house to prove that the government could not pay $1.55 as an initial price; and the trend of events in the last few months alone is such that we are being forced to the conclusion that, unless the government is willing to pay more for the grain or else to hold the price of other commodities down, the very basis on which this British wheat agreement could have been successful will be completely destroyed. The farmers who accepted the agreement did so because they felt that there was a real need overseas for as much food as possible at prices as reasonable as possible in this period of time. What we see happening around us now is that the government is permitting price ceilings to be lifted and washed out entirely, and the price is jumping, as the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) just quoted, as high as eighty per cent on binder twine. We do not know what the new price will be on gasoline, but we know it will not be less; it is going to be more. In the face of that, the government is now put in the position of responsibility of having to do one of two things, either make a real effort to hold prices down—in fact, it would be necessary now to roll them back—or else to increase the benefits the farmer is to receive under this bill. If one of those two things is not done, the farmers have a legitimate complaint and the government will get a rude awakening in a very short period of time.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the amendment which has been moved would have to be changed in its wording, I think, before it would really mean anything at all in connection with the bill itself. The amendment says that the said bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 20, 21 and 22 thereof. There are only six sections of this bill. There are no sections 20, 21 and 22. Therefore there would have to be added to the amendment, in order to make it mean what it is intended to mean, "included in clause 5 thereof". That is, these sections referred to are sections of the wheat board act which are included in clause 5 of this particular bill, and the wording would have to be changed in order to provide for that.

But before the vote is taken, there are a number of things which I should like to say with regard to the discussion which has taken place. We have had a long discussion on the three points which have been raised: the question as to whether we should increase the initial payment; whether the participation for 1945 should be paid out at once rather than be made part of the five-year pool, and, further, whether the government should announce definitely that all the wheat would be taken by July 31, 1950; that is, all the wheat that is presented to the government would be taken or would be paid for at $1.35 a bushel as an initial price.

As I was saying a moment ago, those three questions I think took up most of the time of the discussion in committee. There was very little discussion on anything else. We discussed those questions continuously, first, under section 17 of the wheat board act and, later, under sections 20, 21 and 22 of the act which, as I said a moment ago, are included in clause 5 of this bill. In discussing those matters, I think every point of view which could be expressed in the committee, if it were referred back again, was expressed then; and the committee finally gave its consent to the provisions of those three sections.

I do not know whether I should repeat very much of what was said or of what I myself said on that occasion; but in view of some of the remarks which have been made, I think that certain arguments should be repeated. In the first place, if we were to follow to its logical conclusion the action which is now proposed, and if the bill itself were not acceptable to the government on the terms that are suggested, and the bill were defeated, then of course the whole principle of the bill would be defeated just as effectively on third reading as it would be on second reading; particularly if the bill had gone back to the committee, had been reported again for third reading with terms the same as they are now, and were defeated in the house. If we went on with that to its logical conclusion we would succeed in defeating the principle of the bill and defeating the bill itself.

Those who belong to the official opposition have been insisting, ever since this session opened, that controls should be got rid of. Some have even gone so far as to suggest that it should not be in any orderly manner. Some controls have been got rid of. Some ceilings have been taken off. I should like to suggest that I believe the farm organizations of this country meant what they said when they said they were in favour of stabilization. I believe, too, if we are not satisfied, as farm organizations, to give sufficient time for the carrying out of any orderly changes which must be made in connection with price levels, there is only one thing which can result, and that is that action finally will have to be taken in a disorderly manner.

Just by way of illustration, may I remind hon. members that a week or ten days ago, after strong pressure over a long period of time, action was taken to remove what I think was at least an inconvenience—and perhaps one could use an even stronger term—resulting from the fact that wheat was supplied to the people of this country at a lower price than that at which it was supplied to Britain, and this at the expense of the farmer. Action was taken in regard to that matter, and along with it action was taken which resulted in an increase in the price of feed wheat. This, of course, had two results, one being to give the producer of wheat a higher return, and the other to increase the cost to farmers in certain sections of Canada using that wheat for feed. Immediately exception was taken to the fact that an increased cost had been caused the poultry and egg producers, and it was therefore argued that there should be an increase in the price of eggs. As a matter of fact, a few months earlier the floor price of eggs had been increased by one cent a dozen over about half the year and by two cents a dozen over the other half, while no change was made in the price of feed. That was done by increasing the price under the British agreement by that amount. Now it is argued that when the cost of feed is put up again there must be a further increase in the price of eggs. Probably within certain limits that contention is justifiable, but certainly it is not reasonable to suggest that no consideration whatever should be given the fact that the price of eggs was increased at a time when the price of feed was not increased.

On the other hand, today we had the fact brought up that the ceiling has been raised on binder twine. Some have said this represents an increase of eighty per cent in the price of that commodity. I am not in a position to say just what the increase will be in the price of binder twine, but I know that, with the situation existing in the world in relation to the material from which binder twine is made, if we were to have any binder twine at all some decision with respect to that matter had to be made in March. If we are to have binder twine in July and August to harvest the crops across this country, then a decision in the matter had to be made by March at least, and very early in the month. That is one reason the decision has been made at this time.

For the last two or three weeks hon. members have been quite properly pressing for a statement in the house in regard to the returns that are to be provided, under control, on feed grains. At the time of the conference last December it was suggested that if all the controls relating to food products and feed were to be retained through the crop year 1947-48, a certain procedure should be followed. There are present today a few who were also present at the conference of last December between representatives of the provinces, the farm organizations and the federal Department of Agriculture. They will remember that before Mr. Wesson proceeded to present his idea that an acreage payment of $5 might be made, he asked the definite question of the chair as to whether it was the intention of the government to continue those controls throughout the crop year 1947-48. That question was referred to me, as a member of the government. At that time I stated I was not in a position to say definitely what would be done with regard to prices throughout the year 1947-48, but that if we were to continue to attempt to fulfil our agreements with Great Britain to deliver farm products at the prices set out in those agreements, leaving out the question of quantities altogether, it would be necessary to have some form of control throughout the crop year 1947-48. In the discussions which followed it was stated definitely that the subsidy of $5 per acre would or could be decided upon only if an attempt was to be made to hold prices at the levels then existing, because immediately you allowed them to change, the whole situation would change. So the proposal itself was based upon the idea that price levels were to be maintained.

Since that time, as has been indicated by some of the steps taken, the government has concluded that prices cannot be maintained throughout the whole crop year 1947-48 at the levels in existence at the time those discussions took place; and because they cannot be maintained, certain actions have to be taken from time to time. If we are to handle the situation in an orderly fashion I believe we must expect that those who are presumed to benefit by the controls which are being retained should at least have sufficient patience to permit the action taken to progress to the point where all sides of the question may be examined. In connection with binder twine, I said a moment ago that if we did not act early in March we would not have any binder twine. From remarks which have been made I assume that when the minister this afternoon made the short reply that this question had been given the usual careful consideration before a decision was reached, it was not considered by many hon. members to be a sufficient explanation under the circumstances.

Mr. WRIGHT: Not in view of the manner in which it was said.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, I am simply discussing the facts which I know are apparent to farmers. Every farmer knows that the substance from which binder twine is made must come a great distance, and that there has been some difficulty in obtaining quantities of that material for the purpose of providing binder twine both during and since the war. So action had to be taken early.

Mr. BENTLEY: May I ask if any British companies supply us with large amounts of sisal?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not in a position to answer that question offhand, though perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) might be able to do so. In any event, arrangements have to be made to obtain certain quantities of this material, and whether they are made with the government or with a company they must be made well in advance.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is it not true there are large supplies of binder twine already in Canada upon which subsidy has been paid?

Mr. GARDINER: There would be some; I do not know how much. However the figure can be obtained. There would be some here. But whether there is some here, and no matter how much there is here, there will have to be more binder twine supplied before the harvest season.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The price has been maintained because of the subsidy paid by the government; is that not true?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, that is right, up to the present time. And I should say that two ministers have said, prior to discussion in committee—and I referred to it while we were in committee—that subsidies were on the way out, and that the tendency was to try to incorporate subsidies into prices; a procedure which I think a great many people would desire to have followed, and to have completed at as early a date as possible.

And in doing that, of course, in connection with farm products movement has to be taken at the time it is wise to do so. Let me go back to the illustration with respect to eggs. We were making our agreement with Great Britain last fall. That was the time we had to consider rising prices of eggs. Then we were considering the matter of giving the farmer of western Canada the treatment to which he was entitled in connection with flour supplied here, and we decided that the time to deal with that was in the latter part of January.

I suppose the two things could have been done at one time, but there are reasons why it was difficult to do them at one time. Probably the proper time to deal with eggs, so far as future treatment is concerned, would be in April or May; and until we have reached that time it is difficult to make changes in the situation which now exists. Those changes will come about in the proper course of events.

The feed grain decision was something I was not able to announce prior to today, and I am sorry to say I am not in a position to announce it today. As I said yesterday, I had hoped I would be able to announce it at the end of the week, and I pointed out that the end of the week was Friday. But I find, after discussion which took place today, that there is a desire on the part of some of those who have to put these changes into effect, to have the week-end in which to discuss them with some of their men, who are in Winnipeg, rather than Ottawa. That is, they are men connected with the wheat board itself. Therefore it may be necessary to hold over the announcement until Monday.

I am sure, however, that if I could make that announcement now, and compare it with what has been done in connection with binder twine, every farmer in this country would agree that far more has been done to increase returns on grain than has been taken from him by anything that has been done in connection with binder twine.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Does the minister include gasoline and tractor distillate, also?

Mr. GARDINER: One would want to know what will happen in connection with tractor oil and distillate. But I am told this, that at least in some parts of Canada gasoline has not been selling up to the ceiling recently. And if it has not been selling up to the ceiling recently, I do not know any reason why it would sell over the ceiling, at least in those parts of Canada, if the ceiling were taken off.

That is one of the facts which was before the government at the time the matter was discussed; and I venture to say there are many members in the house who will agree that when a shift is being made from one position to another, the time to make it is when it is least likely to impose any additional cost on those who have to buy the commodity.

I know no individual can guess these things accurately, and be able to say that there is no chance in the world of prices going up. I would not attempt to say that at this time. But one has to decide on the time to make these decisions, and to make them in a manner which will at least give the least possibility of costs going where they are not intended to go.

I bring out these facts in order to say this, again, that if we are to be able to hold the line at all, in the stabilization of prices, either by the action of this house or in any other way, then we cannot be changing our minds every few days or every few hours with regard to whether we support the principle behind a piece of legislation, or whether by our action or our words we support the views and the desires of those who are out to kill this legislation, by every means that is available to them to do it. And as regards any means which result in switching this legislation backwards and forwards from this house to a committee, and from the committee to the house, and then over to the senate, and back into the committee, and then out of the committee and into the senate, and then back to this house, with changes made; if this legislation or any other legislation to establish stabilized prices for farmers has to go through all that kind of thing, then I say that there will not be very much in the way of stabilization that will ever get past this parliament.

If we are to establish stabilized prices for farmers at all, then I think we must decide upon the principle we intend to drive for, and then we must continue to drive for it. We should not depart from that principle simply because those who have been fighting the legislation from the beginning, those who have opposed the wheat agreement from the time it was first announced, now suggest that we should do something about the matter; rather we should continue to support those who have fought for the principle throughout and have attempted to put it on the statute books of this country.

Something was said with regard to the action of Mr. Strachey while he was speaking in the House of Commons in Great Britain, and while he was in Winnipeg. Some suggestion has been made to the effect that Mr. Strachey could not have been right both times. Well, when Mr. Strachey was speaking on the floor of the House of Commons in Great Britain he was answering a general question put to him with regard to food products.

Mr. COLDWELL: Danish, particularly.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. And in answering that question dealing, as has been suggested, largely with Danish food products, products coming from a country with which considerations such as those existing between Great Britain and Canada have not been entered into at all, he gave a certain answer. But when he was in the city of Winnipeg he was dealing with a specific question, namely the question of wheat, as covered by this bill. And in everything he said at Winnipeg he gave the impression to the people of this country that the undertakings given in the wheat agreement would be carried out in spirit, as well as in the letter. I think we should accept those opinions as those of the minister who signed the contract, or at least was here just prior to its being signed—one of his officials signed it—and the minister who took part in the discussions.

The Winnipeg Free Press has been quoted. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not taken time out during these discussions to say very much about the Winnipeg Free Press, because I am not worried at all about whether the Free Press wants to put itself in the position of being a local newspaper instead of a national one. If that is what they desire to have themselves considered, then that is quite all right with me. They are speaking, or have been speaking, in connection with this matter, for a group for whom I do not blame them for speaking. That is their own choice. But I have in my hand some articles which appeared in another paper owned and published by the same people in the city of Saskatoon, the Star-Phoenix. These four articles deal with the wheat agreement. One could take not only the articles which appeared on the editorial page, but the editorials of the editorial writer who is answering the editor of the Winnipeg Free Press, who is also answering the assistant associate editor of the Winnipeg Free Press, and answering them most effectively.

Mr. COLDWELL: Who is the author of those articles?

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Richardson is the editor of the paper, and I have no doubt he takes responsibility for what appears on the editorial page. His name is not on the articles, but he writes the editorials.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What is their date?

Mr. GARDINER: The first one is dated January 20, 1947. It reads:

> The Canadian wheat agreement with Great Britain cannot be judged fairly aside from the general trade outlook and the problems of restoring international trade.

And farther down:

> A simple test, which may be applied with profit to other proposals, practices and policies affecting trade, is whether it facilitates or retards the reopening of trade channels that were closed or impaired by the war. One further test might be applied: Does it prejudice the future expansion of international trade? Plainly it does not prejudice the future. Section 7 of the agreement says that "its terms and conditions shall be subject to any modification or amendment which may be necessary to bring it into conformity with any international agreements or arrangements hereafter entered into to which both governments are parties."

Then he goes on:

> The merit of lending funds to overseas customers in order to stimulate our trade requires no explanation. The alternative is to shut down our production to the narrow limits required to export only to those who have Canadian dollars.

He goes on to support that action, and then he says:

> The Canadian wheat agreement has stood the test, as we may now see it in the perspective of several months experience with it. It has given economic and psychological assurance to our best wheat customer.

May I say that the editor of this paper spent a considerable part of the war years in London. He continues:

> Without it, the series of crises which were inevitable in the economic rehabilitation of Britain would have been deepened undoubtedly by an unbearable austerity in the British diet, which has been almost unbearable as it is. Without it, the opportunity of leadership in the economic reconstruction of western Europe, which only Britain can exercise, would have been denied at a time when default could leave only chaos and invite the commercial isolationism which serves as the economic policy of communism. The door was half open, in any case. Discussions of the wheat agreement without taking account of these vital aspects of the world trade situation in the present transition will serve only to obscure the purpose and definition of all our future hopes. The agreement has been a main bridge between two worlds which can be integrated permanently by the reconstruction of world trading facilities. Without such bridges, even now all talk of an international trade convention would be little more than idle speculation within the rigid walls of an isolated dollar area in which Canada's destiny would steadily darken.

As I say, that is another paper published by the same people who publish the Winnipeg Free Press. It gives me the idea that the editorial policy of their papers is the editorial policy of the individual who writes the editorials. That was always so when the late John Dafoe was editor of the Winnipeg Free Press. No one during that period of time ever considered that he was expressing the opinions of anyone but John Dafoe. I venture to say that the time will come when no one will consider that this young editor is expressing the opinion of anyone but himself when he is writing views which affect all the people of this country. He goes on to say:

Since the Canadian wheat agreement with Great Britain was announced last July, the main criticisms made against it have become clear. On the one hand, the charge that Canada had broken its pledged word to the United States to work for the removal of discrimination in trade was quickly exploded.

He goes on to answer that charge. May I say again, that the editor of this paper spent the latter part of the war in Britain and that he spent part of it in Washington, and the part which he did not spend in either Washington or London was spent in Ottawa. He has some knowledge as to what these questions mean.

Mr. BLACKMORE: A moment ago the minister spoke of "this young editor." Does he refer to the editor of the Winnipeg Free Press?

Mr. GARDINER: No; the editor of the Star-Phoenix, Mr. Richardson. He ends with these words:

It is now said in Britain that the worst is over, though it is not all fine sailing yet. The Canadian wheat agreement has made an incalculable contribution to this result, which is in Canada's own best interests as a wheat exporter. It is serving to bridge the transition. It has stimulated the revival of world trade under new and strange conditions. Even more happily, it has brought us nearer the goal which we will reach only by going forward with the Americans and the British into an era of freer trade.

That sums up the opinion which the writer of the articles in the Star-Phoenix has with regard to the Winnipeg Free Press. This man writing in the Star-Phoenix takes the view that the opinions held by the Winnipeg Free Press are not correct. He has the courage to state what his views are with regard to the matter.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GARDINER: Before the house took recess, I was placing on Hansard the opinion of the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix on the wheat agreement, as expressed in four articles appearing on the editorial page of that paper. I had quoted from the first two articles and I shall now proceed to quote from the last two. The third article which was published on January 22, under the title, "The Wheat Agreement No. 3," opens with these words:

A newspaper of considerable influence which often attracts substantial support to its views, the Winnipeg Free Press, does not like the Canadian wheat agreement with Great Britain. It is waging a campaign against the agreement in splendid isolation.

The article goes on to say:

The Free Press recently offered the assurance of a special correspondent in Washington that "the United States government regards the Canadian-British wheat deal as prejudicial to the whole project of restoring maximum multilateral trade throughout the world." This correspondent evidently reads the omens of the brave new world under the desk in President Truman's study. He finds that Canada has "handed a convenient weapon" to American protectionists who, we judge, are so barren of plans to frustrate the brave new world that they have had to wait until they could draw an example of wickedness from their Canadian neighbours.

The article continues:

The spine-chilling repercussions of the wheat deal, as seen from beneath Mr. Truman's desk, are products of the imagination. The central problem of world trade is not to bolster American capacity to buy abroad, which is already an embarrassment; but to bolster the power of Britain and almost every other country in the world to purchase in the United States.

The British viewpoint on the wheat agreement is common sense; it is that the agreement assures Britain of a basic food supply during a difficult period in which Britain's stock of American dollars, is required to buy essential equipment for coal mines, cotton mills and such enterprises on which British recovery depends.

The writer goes on to argue the opposite side of the question to the Winnipeg Free Press. Then the last of the four articles has this to say:

While prairie production is becoming more diversified, the price of wheat is still the governing factor in prosperity. The foundation of exceeding good times in prairie Canada is the domestic guarantee of $1.35 a bushel for No. 1 northern wheat at Fort William for five crops from 1945 to 1949 inclusive. This, in turn, is closely related to the Canadian wheat agreement with Great Britain to sell 600,000,000 bushels in the four years after August 1, 1946.

The editorial writer then asks this question:

Is there a world price for wheat?

He says this with regard to it:

Export demand for wheat and other commodities is largely a demand created by dollar loans furnished by the United States and Canada to Britain and other buying countries. Without these loans we would have few overseas customers with dollars to pay a higher price for wheat. Still some people think we should charge all the traffic will bear. This rugged and destructive policy, like compelling a convalescent patient to run a foot race, might destroy the chance of reestablishing overseas markets for wheat. We would, as the saying is, make a killing. It would be in more ways than one, none of them to our advantage in the long run.

He then goes on to say:

That world depression starts in agricultural commodities is, unhappily, the bitter truth of history. To recapitulate: the wheat agreement serves the present transition and it closes no doors upon the new freedom of trade. The so-called "free" or world price of wheat is a fiction, having no genuine world market behind. The institutions of freer trade are being created, and it is not too soon to consider the probable situation when the wheat contract ends. On the one hand, the world scarcity of dollars may be rectified by the international programme of credit, currency and commerce now under way. On the other hand we may be opened to an international agreement that would provide regulation without restriction to assist an expanding world demand for cereals. Meanwhile, the prosperity of western Canada is so closely linked with the wheat agreement that it deserves our best effort to understand how it offers a course through a chaotic postwar world, and how it links our major export industry with the promise of an expanding future.

I again submit, Mr. Speaker, that we have there the answer of one of the Sifton-owned papers in western Canada to another of the Sifton-owned papers in western Canada; and in order to complete the argument, I would read into Hansard an editorial published in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix under date of March 7, 1947. It is headed "The Big Breeze." It reads:

Wheat farmers in the west will be interested to appraise the kind of campaign being carried on against the wheat board policy of the federal government in other parts of Canada. It seems that the policy of establishing a five-year pool of Canadian wheat under the administration of the wheat board "threatens to touch off the biggest political time-bomb since conscription. It may not explode until the next election; but sooner or later it may blow hundreds of thousands of western farm votes in one direction or another; may even unseat the King government between now and 1950."

Then the writer goes on to say with regard to that quotation:

So writes Mr. Kenneth R. Wilson, the Ottawa correspondent of the Financial Post in Toronto. The idea that thousands of western farm votes are wavering one way or another over the government's wheat policy is one of the strangest phantasies of current politics. One reads on to discover who is going to benefit from this sensational course of self-destruction on which the government has embarked. The C.C.F.? No. The Financial Post may spare its shudders. The P.C.'s? You guessed it. Mr. Bracken is leading "the immediate struggle." His political future "may be more closely tied to this piece of legislation than to anything else."

As Mr. Wilson waits in Ottawa for the big breeze that is going to blow the federal government to pieces and launch Mr. Bracken as the saviour of the wheat farmers, we are content to observe that the latter's prospects are dim indeed in the west. Our guess is that he has picked the wrong horse, just like the Winnipeg Free Press. Want to make a bet, Kenneth?

That is the opinion of one of the Sifton papers with regard to the wheat agreement, and I would prophesy that it is the opinion that will prevail in western Canada in spite of what the Winnipeg Free Press says, or in spite of what the leader of the Conservative party says on the floor of the house.

The arguments which are presented there are very much along the same line as, although very much more expressive than, those which have been used on the floor of the house by speakers on this side to indicate that we are in the midst of a battle with regard to a group of policies. The leader of the opposition this afternoon did not content himself with dealing with the wheat agreement. He said we may have later today another set of agreements presented to this house in the form of another piece of legislation to be handled by the Minister of Agriculture, which deals with the sale of other farm commodities to Britain. What I want to say tonight with regard to the sale of farm products is this. The Canadian farmer, in so far as he produces surpluses, has one good market in the world and only one, namely the British market. We have had some experience in the selling of farm products in other markets of the world during other times and even during recent years. The present position is that this country has in the United Kingdom a market for all our surplus farm commodities, with the exception of our surplus wheat. That is one product all of which we cannot sell in Great Britain. We are growing more than she requires even if she were prepared to take all the wheat we could offer. But so far as cheese, milk, bacon, ham and eggs are concerned, and even so far as beef is concerned, Britain is prepared to take all the surplus that the Canadian farmer has to sell, and to pay us a reasonable price for them.

I say tonight that, in the discussions we have had with Britain, Britain has not tried to beat the Canadian farmer down in price. Britain has at no time contended that she should get our food products at low prices Britain has always agreed that over a period of time our prices should be stabilized in a reasonable relationship to the prices which the farmers receive for food to be consumed in Britain off the farms of Britain, and I am confident that, as we go along, the answer to the question asked by the leader of the opposition with regard to 1948 will be made apparent to everyone in this house.

The leader of the opposition asked, what is the government to ask for in 1948; what is the government to ask for in 1949. Hon. members know what has been stated on previous occasions, namely that the British have agreed that there shall be no ceiling on what we may ask for in the last two years; and the fact that there is no ceiling on what we may ask for in those last two years should be an answer to the question that has been posed: Are you going to ask as much as the world market offers at that time for wheat? Obviously, if the world market remains as high as it is now, which very few expect, there will be no reason for asking less than the world price in the third year of the contract. If the world price is lower than $1.55, obviously there will be reason for asking a higher price than the world price is at that time. The question as to how much will be obtained as a result of what is asked is something no one in this house can answer at the present time. We simply rely on the fact that in all dealings we have had with Britain throughout the war, prior to the war, and since the war, the indications have been that we can depend upon the letter and spirit of the agreement that we have with them, not only with regard to wheat but as respects other products.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the right hon. gentleman but his time has expired.

Mr. COLDWELL: This is an important matter, Mr. Speaker, and the minister should be allowed to proceed.

Mr. GARDINER: I have no desire to continue if my time is up. At any rate, there is only one further argument that I care to make on the subject. An appeal has been made for a statement of the position in relation to payments which are already made and which are to be made on the different years, and the suggestion has been made that there was an understanding with the farmers that participation would be paid annually throughout the period. I am not going to argue the question again as to whether the period was intended to be five years or four years. I think it is well understood by every farm organization in Canada and all leaders of farm organizations, and by everyone else who has ever discussed the matter, that the five-year period existed before the British wheat contract existed at all. It was suggested this afternoon that, after the wheat contract had been entered into, the decision was reached to make the term a five-year one. The five-year term was presented in this house in September, 1945, and it always was a five-year term. There never was any suggestion that it be otherwise until all the terms of the British agreement were known; and then, as I stated the other night, that suggestion in the first instance came from the government and not from farm organizations. But after the discussion was completed, it was concluded that the 1945 crop would be retained in the pool.

I said something the other day which apparently did not register with the committee, when we were discussing this same question in committee. I stated that I did not see how this or any other government could retain in the treasury of Canada two or three hundred million dollars which belonged to some group of citizens in this country, mentioning particularly the farmers. If we had in the treasury of Canada in, let us say, 1948, as a result of the fact that prices remained high, two, three or four hundred million dollars, no government in Canada could carry that money through until the end of the contract. There would be a constant demand for the money to be paid out to the people to whom it belonged, and there would be an inclination on the part of any government that was in office under those circumstances to make an interim payment, just as an interim payment was made under similar circumstances when the wheat pools were in existence. But to say at this stage that, no matter what happens to be in the treasury, interim payment will be made, would be to take an impossible position in relation to the whole matter.

Mr. WRIGHT: Will the minister state that he will not make that payment before an election?

Mr. GARDINER: Of course, if my hon. friends all get together some time, they can determine that payment is not made until after an election. I should like to suggest that if they want an election on an issue of that kind, it is not a bad thing from our point of view to have it on.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): The Minister of Agriculture had one try-out on it.

Mr. GARDINER: No, we did not have a try-out on it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The hon. member had a try-out last night.

Mr. GARDINER: May I suggest to members of the house that when the hon. gentleman who was fortunate enough to win that election to which reference is made, came into this house and made his first speech, he did not even mention the British wheat contract. He knew what he won the election on. I, too, know what he won the election on. He is too good a campaigner to think he won the election on the British wheat contract or anything related to it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): How much money have you? That is a simple question.

Mr. GARDINER: I shall leave it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon), whose bill this is, to state how much we have.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Will he do that?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, he will state how much we have. But what I want to point out to members of the house is this. If we had a large amount, no government could retain it in the treasury. It would require to be paid out as we went along. But if we were down in the position where there was some question as to whether we were going to take losses, then it would be absolutely impossible to make a payment. I think it would be inadvisable to make a payment from the point of view of the farmer himself, and the farmer would realize that.

Coming to the question which was in the mind of the leader of the opposition this afternoon and apparently is still in the mind of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), as to how much money we have, all I am going to say at this moment is that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce gives the amount I venture to say that every member of this house will be surprised at how small it is, not at how big it is. The payment of ten cents a bushel, which is already paid on 1945 or is being paid, reduces the amount to a figure which I think will be found by this house to be surprisingly low. I am not going to attempt to give that offhand. It is on record and will be given a little later.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Oh, come on; tell us.

Mr. GARDINER: The position in relation to the matter and in relation to the whole principle underlying not only this bill but the other agreements which will come down under the farm products bill, is being battled in Canada at the present time. The battle against that principle is being led, naturally, by the leader of the opposition in this house. Those who support the opposite view with regard to this principle will, of course, vote against a measure of this kind or will vote against the agreements that are covered in the other bill. But I venture to say that when the vote is taken—as it will be shortly—on this question, it will again be found that the government has the support of the majority of the members upon the policy which is now before the house.

The vote on the third reading is just as much a vote for or against the policy or principle of a bill as the vote on the second reading. I venture to say that the whole principle of this bill is bound up in the three sections which we are being asked to refer back to the committee. While there may be some things that individual members disagree about with regard to the details of what is contained in those sections, I am quite satisfied that a vote for the third reading of the bill at this time will strengthen the idea in the minds of the people of Canada that this principle of stabilizing prices for farmers at a reasonable level, with a guarantee that any profit which is made over and above that reasonable level will be turned over to the farmer in due course, is a principle which the farmers of this country desire to have and which this house ought to express itself decisively upon.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that everybody in this house knows perfectly well where this party stands regarding matters of this description. I do not think I need reiterate what we have so often said in this house, that we desire to see proper, orderly marketing and proper price stability at a proper level for the producers of this country. We do not wish to go back again to the days before the war, when prices went sky-high, as they did some years ago, and which were followed by a period of low prices when, as the British minister of food put it the other day, wheat was the value of chaff. However I must say this. When the British agreement which is connected with this bill was before the house last August, we made it perfectly clear that our support for that agreement and the method adopted by the government to implement the agreement through the wheat board was in no small measure connected with a continuance of the policy of the government as it was being carried out regarding controls and price ceilings. In the past six months costs of production have risen and the cost of living has risen. In the month of January of this year, according to the index—which of course does not comprise a very wide field of commodities—the cost of living increase was eight-tenths of one per cent in one month; or, put on the basis of the year, approximately 9½ per cent for one month. If the government removes controls and lifts price ceilings to the extent that the cost of living rises and costs of production rise, then of course the basis of the British wheat agreement and the payments that are now being made to our farming community are neither fair nor just.

I would remind the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that on August 15 last, speaking on the British wheat agreements, as reported at page 4825 of Hansard for that day, I said:

> . . . at the present time the wheat agreement calls for the payment of $1.55 a bushel for the wheat that is sold to Britain, and I believe that is nearer what we sometimes call a parity price. I believe the government would be well advised to consider the suggestion that, in the event of the costs of production rising for the next few years, as they will do largely because of the government's failure to maintain the ceilings, any difference there may be between what the farmer receives for his wheat and the increased costs of production should be made up out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Not even out of the five-year pool that was being established. I went on to develop that a little, and the Minister of Agriculture admitted in reply that at that time—and I use his own words—parity would probably be about $1.41 or $1.42, and that the farmers' organizations had argued for $1.40 as the basic price. Then there was some discussion between the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), the Minister of Agriculture and myself, and the minister went on to say, dealing with the matter of the compensatory fund which I had suggested:

> What I want to point out is that under the floor price measure—that is not the proper name, but it will do—we stated to the house that $200,000,000 was being provided for the purpose of taking care of any adjustments in connection with what might be known as parity on other farm products. At the same time we stated to the house that similar arrangements would be made if necessary, through the wheat board, in connection with grain.

The point I am making is that if the government allows price ceilings to be lifted and costs of production to rise as they have risen, then it is the obligation of the government to provide compensation to the farmers who have accepted this wheat agreement and the prices that go with it. I know the minister is perfectly correct when he says that in this country at the present time there is a group of people who want to upset this wheat agreement and every other agreement of this description because they have an economic interest in doing so. I have stated several times in this house that I believe the policy of the government in regard to stabilized prices and negotiated agreements, under the conditions that exist at the present time, is the best policy for Canada and the farmers of Canada. No one who attended the food and agriculture meeting at Copenhagen—I did not attend, but I have read the record of proceedings—or who sat in, as I did, at commission No. 2 of the united nations organization and heard the discussion regarding food, can be under any illusion for a moment but that this is the only kind of agreement which at this moment will adequately protect the producers of this country. The Monetary Times makes it very clear that this campaign is being carried on. If you look at the issue for February, 1947, under the heading, "Wheat Agreement," on page 42 you will find:

> Speaking of the west recalls the wheat agreement with the U.K. Usually, after an arrangement like this is sanctioned by parliament for a term of years, the opposition lets up and those protesting become resigned to "taking" it. Not so in this case. The opposition of the grain trade is as tenacious today as if the agreement were before parliament. The opposition of the Progressive Conservative leader, Mr. Bracken, is equally so.

That is quite true. We are interested in one point especially in particular regarding this agreement. When this bill was before the house and in committee, on numerous occasions my colleagues raised this point, and I myself raised it just before the vote was taken, that I did not think it was proper or is proper to put the proceeds of the 1945 crop into this pool. That is the main point at issue, which we feel needs to be dealt with by the government. We realize what the minister says, that if a very large accumulation of funds is to be found in this pool within the next two or three years, no government in Canada could hold back those funds from the real owners, but I suggest that the 1945 crop payment should not have been connected with the British agreement. If we could get a satisfactory promise that this matter would be reconsidered we have otherwise very little criticism of the bill, though, as I have indicated in what I have said already, we would have liked to see the initial payment higher because of the increased costs of production.

Even in this connection a doubt has been raised in the minds of farmers. Within the last week I have received one or two letters, one in particular, suggesting that before we support this agreement we should secure a pledge from the government that every dollar in that fund will be distributed to the farmers in 1950. I have taken it upon myself to write back and say I am convinced that no government could withhold money which was properly due the producers of this country. That formed a part of the agreement, and is written into the statutes of this country.

I do not want, nor as you may well understand, Mr. Speaker, do my colleagues want to jeopardize this bill. Certainly we do not want to play into the hands of the people who, for economic reasons, are desirous of destroying this measure which is so important to western Canada. I have lived in the west long enough to recollect the struggle which has gone on since 1919 for the establishment of a wheat board. Election after election was fought in western Canada on that issue; in 1921, 1925, 1926, 1930 and even 1935. In each of those elections the wheat board method of marketing figured, and I am convinced that the people who sent us here want this legislation. They do not like some features of it. We do not like some features of it, but if the administration would indicate rather more clearly than they have the situation regarding the 1945 crop and, if possible, pay the participation certificates on that crop year, to a large extent they would satisfy the farmers.

Mr. GARDINER: If I may say a word, the position is that the 1943 payments are not quite out. The 1944 payments will start shortly, as the minister will indicate. It would be a physical impossibility to begin to make the 1945 payments earlier than late in 1948. The question is, how much advantage is to be gained; and when hon. members see the figure as to what the amount is, I think they will pretty well agree that is not an important factor.

Mr. COLDWELL: When I hear the figure as to what the amount is, it may make a difference. I want it to be clearly understood that we are not opposing this measure, that indeed we are firmly in support of the principle of this bill. We are merely trying to emphasize the point of view we expressed when this legislation was in committee. We want, however, to see this system of orderly marketing not only carried into wheat but, as we said when this was being discussed, into coarse grains as well. When the bill following this one comes in, dealing with commodity marketing, we hope we may not only be able to give it our support but be able to suggest that it be strengthened and extended in scope and time as we would like to see it extended.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak again in this debate, but in view of some of the statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) I feel obliged to make a few comments.

The minister has suggested that if those who believe in the wheat board start pushing a measure of this kind around it may have a disastrous effect on the legislation. We appreciate that fact. But I assure the minister that we do not like being put in a position where we have to criticize a measure of this kind for this group has time and again made it perfectly clear that they believe in the principle of the wheat board taking delivery of all the wheat produced and also in the principle of a long-term international agreement on wheat. But just because we believe in that, we cannot be put in the position of having to remain silent when we consider that certain injustices are included in the bill. We dealt with those injustices when the bill was in committee.

There are three things to which the Minister of Agriculture referred. First of all, we believe that the year 1945 should be taken out of the pool altogether; second, we believe that the price of $1.35 should be raised to $1.55, and, third, we believe that the government should definitely commit itself to buy all the wheat produced within the pool period at the designated price, whether it be $1.35 or raised to $1.55. When discussing in committee whether it would be possible to invest these moneys in securities the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) said:

> I do not know whether I should get into this controversy too deeply because no doubt this matter has been debated a great deal. The principles of this contract are, I think, these: for the protection of floors throughout the later years of the contract, the part of the contract beyond the period we can foresee; for the protection of the United Kingdom government's agreement to have regard to the fact that in the early years of the contract less than world market prices were paid; in return for the protection of those two factors the farmer is accepting less in the earlier year or years of the contract than the world market price.

The Minister of Justice did not seem to know whether it would be possible to make a payment. Now the Minister of Agriculture says that he cannot possibly visualize a situation where a surplus would be allowed to accrue and remain unpaid. The Minister of Justice refused to state whether the payment would be made. He could not say that it would be paid because the surplus might be required to meet losses in the latter part of the agreement.

Just what is likely to be the situation in the latter part of the agreement? The Minister of Justice states that there may be a very large crop and very low prices and that therefore the surplus may be required to meet the losses. But what is the price that we are to get in the latter stage of the agreement? The agreement calls for $1.25 and then for $1.

The Minister of Agriculture has stated it is unthinkable that the United Kingdom will not carry out her part of the bargain; that is to say, that when arriving at a price at that stage they will take into consideration the fact that we were willing to let the United Kingdom have our wheat in the earlier stage of the agreement at prices considerably below the market price. But we have no guarantee that the present government in the United Kingdom will be in power then. Public opinion in Great Britain is being aroused to such an extent against this agreement that it is very hard for us to say what might happen. I mention that because in the mail yesterday I received a pamphlet, as no doubt other hon. members did, from Britain. It shows the kind of propaganda which is being carried on there against this agreement, and it makes one wonder what the attitude of the British people will be two or three years from now on this wheat question. One of the people connected with this pamphlet is a prominent Canadian who has played a big part in the marketing of wheat from this country. First, I quote from the last part of the article to show the man to whom I am referring to. The article is headed "The Wheat Racket". It is published in the Liberator Council, a monthly publication. I quote from the end of the article:

> We are fortunate in having as a member of the Liberator Council a gentleman whose name is widely known in the international grain trade of pre-war days. He has had 40 years' experience of that trade, and for a number of years was the official London representative of the Canadian wheat pools, when they were selling wheat at half the present inflated price. He writes that the world wheat situation is now on the easy side since the Canadian crop started moving freely in November, and says: "There is every possibility, with urgent needs satisfied, of a world glut in the late spring or early summer of 1947, when Australia and Argentine crops, moving in December, will be in free competition with the U.S.A.

I have quoted from the last of the article to show the individual connected with this organization.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not heard the name of the individual, but I venture to say from the description that it is clear to whom the hon. gentleman points. I think it was the individual who proposed the floor prices that are now in this contract.

Mr. QUELCH: I have not the slightest idea who he is.

Mr. GARDINER: I have a pretty good idea.

Mr. QUELCH: I think the minister might do well to give us his name. I should like to know who it was.

Mr. GARDINER: The individual who suggested the floor prices in the agreement for the last two years was Mr. James Rank, one of the chief milling industry men in Britain. He bought all the wheat for the Conservative government there when they were in power and I think he is still buying wheat for the present government.

Mr. QUELCH: Was he the selling agent for the pools in this period?

Mr. GARDINER: He was the man who proposed the floors in the last two years. He is one of the outstanding supporters of the other party, not the party in power in Britain now. But I do not think there is any danger of any government in Britain going back on a contract made by another British government.

Mr. QUELCH: It makes this article all the worse if that type of individual is connected with the organization that wrote this article.

Mr. GARDINER: He is not connected with this organization. He is buying wheat for the British government because he knows how to buy wheat.

Mr. QUELCH: I was hoping to hear that he was an irresponsible individual, but apparently he is not, and he is a member of this organization. I have quoted from the article to emphasize that if that type of propaganda is continued it will be very hard for any British government to pay us a high price for our wheat in the latter stage of the agreement if the world price should fall to sixty-five cents as it did in 1921. I quote further from this article "The Wheat Racket":

> It is well worth considering a few comparative figures when trying to see through the fog of false and contradictory statements that arise on all sides.
> Before the war the average cost of Canadian wheat, on rail, was 80 cents per bushel.
> In the depression of the 1930's it fell to between 30 cents and 40 cents per bushel, on rail.
>
> In September, 1939, a few days before the outbreak of war, it was selling at 55½ cents per bushel, including shipping to England.
> Now this country has signed an agreement with Canada to take approximately two-thirds of her wheat over a period of years, at the all-in high price of $1.55 per bushel, with freight and insurance additional. It is estimated by experts, that after allowing for increased costs of production this figure will give the Canadian farmer the nice profit of over 50 per cent.

What is not generally known in this country, because it has not been publicized in the British press, is that in December, 1945, a conference of Canadian farmers was convened in Ottawa, at which Mr. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, stated that wheat acreages must be reduced, in order to maintain the artificially high prices. In other words, the Canadian government is guilty of perpetrating the scandal of planned scarcity of wheat—the old, old tale. To give actual figures, the wheat area for 1946 was fixed at 23,400,000 acres, as against an average of 25,600,000 acres, a purposeful reduction of ten per cent.

The whole article goes along in the same vein and I shall not read it all, but it continues later on:

Had the government told the people of this country the truth in December, 1945, that the Ottawa agricultural conference accepted a reduction of 1,200,000 acres in the Canadian wheat growing areas, in order to keep up high prices, and that bread in Great Britain would be rationed and impoverished as a consequence, there would have been such an outcry as would have sent the government hurtling to an inevitable crash, for even eighty per cent of its own M.P.'s have been kept in purposeful ignorance of the real facts.

The minister must agree that if that kind of false propaganda—I can only call it absolutely false—is circulated throughout England and a new government comes into power, it may be very hard for any government to maintain a price considerably above the world market price when the people have been told that there was a deliberate curtailment of acreage in order to maintain the price above the market level.

Mr. GARDINER: Having heard the article read, may I say that in mentioning the name of the person who had suggested the idea of floor prices for the last two years under the wheat contract, my idea was to emphasize the fact that both those who support the present government and those who supported the last government were in on the discussions, first under the first government and then later under this government. They expressed agreement with the principles underlying this agreement. Having heard what was said by some individual, I would say that Rank was not the individual.

Mr. QUELCH: I should like to quote this again:

We are fortunate in having as a member of the liberator council a gentleman whose name is widely known in the international grain trade of pre-war days.

The liberator council there referred to is the organization that is circulating this pamphlet.

He has had forty years' experience of that trade, and for a number of years was the official London representative of the Canadian wheat pools.

It does not say that he wrote this article, but it says more or less that he is a member of the organization circulating the pamphlet.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a different gentleman.

Mr. COLDWELL: Who are the people who signed it? Does it give any names?

Mr. QUELCH: There is Sir Charles Morgan-Webb.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is he?

Mr. QUELCH: Probably the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) knows who he is.

Mr. MITCHELL: It sounds like a fortune-teller.

Mr. QUELCH: I do not think the Minister of Labour had better betray his ignorance by making a statement of that kind. Then there is Mr. William Brown, Mr. G. H. Stock and Mr. Eric Troward. I think Sir Charles Morgan-Webb is fairly well known and it is absurd of the Minister of Labour to refer to him as a fortune-teller. I read that to point out the difficult position any government in England is bound to be in if that kind of propaganda is circulated now and the people of Britain told that they are having to pay us fifty per cent more than they should for our wheat when actually we are under-selling the world market by more than fifty per cent. How much more difficult will it be for us to obtain from Great Britain a price that is fifty per cent above the world market price, as may be the case in 1948 or 1949 should the world market price of wheat fall to seventy-five cents a bushel and we are to get $1.25. Then take into consideration the fact that we are taking less than the market price now. What will the reaction be at that time if this kind of propaganda is going on now when we are making a sacrifice of from seventy-five cents to ninety cents a bushel? The minister must realize the difficulty the government will be in.

In view of the fact that our farmers are making considerable sacrifice, the least thing the government can do is to guarantee to them that it will buy at the stipulated price all the wheat produced during the pool period. Surely it is not asking the government to go very far to do such a thing. The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) accused me of not having faith in the government in this matter, but I say that he is not being fair with the people. The Minister of Agriculture says to wait until 1950, and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested that we can wait until 1950 to decide this question, but the farmers are now being asked to go into an agreement and to make a sacrifice in the first part of that agreement, in return for which they are to get a certain guarantee during the latter part.

What right has the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Agriculture to suggest that the farmers should have to wait until 1950 to know what they will get in return for making a sacrifice today? They should know that now. They should be told definitely that the government will take all wheat, not merely the wheat they will have room for. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) said that there might be a tremendous crop in 1949, with consequent low prices. If that is the situation, then in all probability the elevators will be plugged and the farmers will not be able to deliver their wheat. That is the time they will need a guarantee.

When you talk about faith I think the very least the government can do is to keep faith with the farmers and make that unconditional guarantee that it will take all the wheat produced during that period. The fact that the government refuses to give that understanding can only give the farmers the idea that it does not intend to keep faith with them.

On behalf of our group, I wish to say that we believe in the wheat board. We want to support it. However we feel obliged to support the amendment to refer this bill back unless we have a definite guarantee from the government that it will buy all the wheat produced within that period of time.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to follow the various arguments that have been advanced here this afternoon and evening, but I do intend to try to return the mind of the house to the subject matter of the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken). The amendment is:

> That the said bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 20, 21 and 22 thereof.

Those three sections deal with the questions of the pool period and the holding of surplus moneys secured or earned during the five-year period. As was explained by the leader of the opposition, the purpose of the amendment is to make provision by statute and not by political promise for the payment of participation certificates for the crop year 1945-46. That is the purpose of this amendment which represents the demands of farmers all over western Canada. That is admitted by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) when he said that there was only the one point at issue, that, that they believe that the 1945 crop should not be put in the pool.

There have been many matters raised and smoke-screens produced; but, to come back to the amendment, let it be perfectly clear that reconsideration by the committee is for one purpose only, to assure the farmers and producers throughout this country that they shall in fact have carried out by the government the promise, whether made directly or not, certainly the contract promised that they should be entitled to secure whatever is earned on the 1945 crop. So far as this amendment is concerned, every hon. member who votes against it votes in favour of refusing to the farmers of this country, as soon as the necessary financial computations have been made, the right to participation certificates for the 1945 crop. There is the issue; there is no other. It is not a question of defeating any act; it is not a question of holding up any act. The smoke-screen that is raised is the usual one; it is that of always ascribing motives to those who are desirous of assuring that in this case the farmer shall receive what is his due instead of it being left to a nebulous promise which may or may not be carried out.

There is no denial by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that the farmers demand this. There is no denial that, as recently as the end of February, in its submission to the government the federation of agriculture used these words:

> We protest the action of the government in not retiring participation certificates on wheat delivered to the Canadian wheat board during the crop year 1945-46. We cannot but regard the withholding of these payments as contrary to the understanding which wheat growers had with the government during the whole of that crop year.

There is the essence of this motion, namely, to carry into effect what the federation of agriculture has asked for and what farmers everywhere are demanding. What is the government's attitude? We have not had any reply yet from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon). He is persistently silent when it comes to answering questions.

Mr. MacKINNON: I will answer them pretty soon.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: At last he is being pried loose and will be answering questions asked the other day by the leader of the opposition and repeated today. How much is there to the credit of the 1944 and 1945 crop years? How much interest is paid in respect of the surpluses held? These are questions which were asked ten days ago. These are questions that as yet remain unanswered and would have remained unanswered but for the fact that today the leader of the opposition moved this amendment.

I ask my hon. friends to the left, did they not suggest this afternoon, and during the debate the payment of participation certificates on the 1945 crop? They are given the opportunity to vote in favour of what they contended for. What is the reply of the government? The government produces a bill which will become a statute and which will deny the payment of participation certificates during the five-year period, on the 1945 crop. This is one of these bills, sir, which when it becomes law, cannot be amended by order in council with the facility with which statutes were amended during the period of the War Measures Act and the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, because the other day the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) said that, so far as this bill is concerned, it does not derive its powers from the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act. That being so, no order in council can be made in 1948 which will make provision for payment of participation certificates on the 1945 crop.

Mr. GARDINER: The house will be meeting.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The house is meeting now; and if the government intends to carry out the political promise, if I may call it that, which was made by the Minister of Agriculture, let us do it tonight so that the farmers will know what they are to get. I remember promises regarding the payment of participation certificates which were made before—

An hon. MEMBER: R. B.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Not in 1939.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There were no participation certificates at any time under R.B. because the act did not come into effect until 1935.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There were a lot of other promises.

Mr. KNOWLES: There was a depression then.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I remember the Minister of Agriculture in the campaign of 1940 promising the farmers of western Canada how much they would get on the 1938 and 1939 crops in participation certificates. It started at nine cents; the farther west he went, the larger it got. When he finally got to Calgary, was it not fifteen cents that he promised, and the farmers got nothing?

Mr. GARDINER: That is not correct.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That was the promise, but—

Mr. GARDINER: The farmers did get something.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Misquoted again.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not correct. It is a misquotation on the part of my hon. friend.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Ask the farmers what they got and the degree to which the promise was carried out.

Mr. GARDINER: They know what they got.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: They certainly do know what they got; they got a promise which was not carried out.

Mr. GARDINER: They got $60 million covering three years.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What we are asking is the payment of these participation certificates. The government did not even consider the payment of the participation certificates on the 1945 crop until the leader of the opposition made this motion. They did not consider it in any way. They were going to refuse it. We on this side of the house, and we were joined by hon. members to our left, all on this side of the house demanded this thing. Now we have an opportunity of getting what we have all spoken in favour of. The only answer the government has is this: Just leave this thing alone; pass the bill as it is with no such provision, and next year maybe we shall come back and we may amend it to provide for the payment of the participation certificates on the 1945 crop. This is the appointed time, tonight, not next year.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I thought it was last night.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes, it was last night, but we did not have the opportunity last night; we have the opportunity tonight.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You tried hard.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Now is the time for those who averred their belief in the necessity of the farmers receiving what is fair, in the interests of the demands of the federation of agriculture, to vote in favour of this motion. In no way does it defeat the bill in the slightest; in no way does it interfere with it. All it does is to assure that justice will be done to those who have the right to ask us who represent them in parliament to see that justice shall be done.

The suggestion that by voting for this amendment you vote against the principle of the bill is entirely removed from the facts. The principle has been established. This is but one item; this is but one clause. Instead of postponing the matter for one or more years hence, I suggest that we complete this matter tonight.

I am glad that we are to get some information tonight from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) in reference to the amount of money on hand to the credit of the farmers, because up to the present, so far as the wheat board is concerned, it has shown a cavalier disregard of the rights of parliament. We have never been able to get any information. The attitude has been the attitude of the government under order in council denying the farmers of western Canada the right to an accounting of the moneys that rightfully belong to them.

I am not going to say any more on this occasion. I return to what I started with. This amendment is definite and to the point. It covers three paragraphs which have to do with the mechanics of operation, payment of participation certificates and the like, and it will give hon. members an opportunity of carrying out the wishes of Canadian agriculture and its representative, the federation of agriculture.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), in the course of a speech earlier in this debate, asked a number of questions, some of which were answered at the time, and others of which were repeated tonight and answers requested. In the meantime I have been able to get the answers from authoritative sources, headquarters at Winnipeg, the Canadian wheat board. I purpose answering these questions and possibly adding slightly to some of the information, which will be of interest to hon. members, in connection with the funds on hand with the Canadian wheat board, the property of the producers of grain in western Canada.

The question was asked: What money is being held on hand today from the 1943 crop account? Before giving the answer, I should like to state that there is on hand today with the Canadian wheat board, from the 1940, 1941 and 1942 crop accounts, the sum of $5,000,000. Let me point out whose property that money is. I may make this statement in connection with other crop years because for some members of this house it is quite unnecessary for me to make any explanation, though I believe there are members, who, hearing these figures quoted, may feel that these moneys have some relation to the funds for which distribution is asked for the 1945 crop.

As I say, from the 1940, 1941 and 1942 crop accounts there is on hand a total of $5,000,000. That is, producers' money is being paid out as the participation certificates are turned in and payments applied for. In this connection I may say that every effort is being made by the wheat board to get this money out into the hands of the rightful owners. Numerous letters have been written and follow-ups sent, and everything possible has been done to have the real owners of the money to apply for it and to have it paid.

From the 1943 crop account there is a balance of $6,000,000 on hand today, or there was a day or two ago. That money is also going out as it is being applied for by holders of participation certificates for the crop year of 1943. That money is not wheat board money; it is the property of the grain producers.

From the 1944 crop account, subject to final accounting, although these are definite, authoritative figures, there is the sum of $61 million, again farmers' money on hand, distribution of which to the individual farmer will commence as early as possible this summer.

In the 1945 crop account, subject to final accounting, though the figures are relatively accurate, after allowing for the adjustment payment of ten cents a bushel which has been provided for by government policy this year, there is left on hand a total of $36 million. These are authoritative figures.

I was asked by the leader of the opposition for the investment return to the wheat board on securities that they hold representing investments of surplus producers funds. That investment return is 2·89 per cent, and in addition on cash on hand in the banks the wheat board gets one-half of one per cent.

There are other questions and other comments made by the leader of the opposition, which—

Mr. BURTON: The minister will remember that during the years the wheat pool was operating as a wheat pool they were able to get interim and final payments out to the producers in a very short time. Could the minister explain why it takes the wheat board so much longer to make these final payments than it did the wheat pool?

Mr. MacKINNON: Without attempting in any way to give an all-inclusive answer, I know that the activities of the board are very much greater today. The same man is today in charge of distribution as was in charge then. We have had great practical, physical difficulties in having these cheques issued. The matter of accommodation in Winnipeg, the matter of staff, our inability to get possession of premises that were owned so that we could increase our staff to enable us to take care of the work—all these factors are receiving the best possible attention.

As I was about to say, there were other matters raised by the leader of the opposition, but they have been for the most part carefully and exhaustively, and, to me, satisfactorily, answered by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner).

The leader of the opposition referred to a statement made by the Hon. Mr. Strachey in the British House of Commons. The leader of the opposition knows, as do the rest of us, that Mr. Strachey made another statement in Canada which has been referred to already in this house, and that was that it would be monstrous for anyone to question the good faith of any British government as regards living up to the letter of the agreement that they have made with the government of Canada.

I was going to refer to some of the newspaper criticisms of the wheat board, not only in a Winnipeg paper but in an Ottawa paper, but I do not think it is necessary to go into that very fully. A great deal of the criticism was incorrectly levelled on the assumption that certain clauses were in this bill as it finally passed the house and without the realization that amendments had been made in committee which removed the objections upon which the editorials were based.

The leader of the opposition referred to a smoke-screen. I think of a smoke-screen as something indefinite and intangible, but I am prepared to come down to more particular matters in reference to opposition to this legislation. I believe that this legislation is absolutely necessary—and I think most of us agree with that—to carry out the provisions of the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement. I do know that certain estimable and amiable gentlemen from the city of Winnipeg came to Ottawa—some of them I think are still here and are likely in this building tonight—with the objective of ruining this legislation, of killing this legislation one way or another. There is no doubt in the world that their first objective was to try to injure it and kill it if possible in the agriculture committee of this house. That opportunity was lost when the members on this side of the house, the members of the C.C.F. party and the members of the Social Credit party announced that they were opposed to this legislation, under all the circumstances, going to the committee on agriculture and colonization. Now it is my opinion—and possibly I might be blamed for imputing motives—that this attempt to send this legislation back to the committee of the whole is merely another attempt, coming from the same quarter, to embarrass the government with this legislation.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman is suggesting improper motives.

An hon. MEMBER: He is not.

An hon. MEMBER: Yes, he is.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Withdraw.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Why should he withdraw? He has not said anything he should not say.

Mr. MacKINNON: Mr. Speaker, I very carefully stated that I was not imputing any motives to anybody.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am glad to have the minister's re-statement of the position in regard to what he originally stated.

Mr. GARDINER: That is what he said.

Mr. CASSELMAN: It is totally different.

Mr. STIRLING: We shall read Hansard.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is the leader of the opposition who calls the motive an improper one.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Why does the hon. member not go across the floor of the house?

Mr. COLDWELL: We are very comfortable here.

Mr. MacKINNON: Mr. Speaker, I want to be just as careful as I can possibly be not to say anything that is improper, and to avoid saying anything at which any member opposite might take offence.

Mr. FULTON: Why do you not say what you mean?

Mr. GARDINER: You would not understand it anyway.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MacKINNON: Mr. Speaker, I am a bit surprised at the interruptions coming from the portion of the house occupied by the official opposition. I made no charges or no representations against any one of them. They do seem to be taking to themselves—

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the words of the minister were definitely that this was another attempt by an outside body to bring this matter before the house. The point of order is that no outside body using this vehicle, His Majesty's loyal opposition, is making any attempt to voice the sentiments or the minds of those people whom we know not, who came from Winnipeg, in the minister's own words, to attempt to wreck this legislation. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister should remove from the record the statement made by him that this is another attempt to wreck the legislation.

Mr. GARDINER: Are you not trying to wreck it?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Try again.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The only gentleman I met was one the minister introduced me to.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That has added a great deal to the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MacKINNON: Mr. Speaker, I do not remember the occasion referred to by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), but I am quite sure that if he has said what I understood he has said, he means it.

This legislation, as I have said, is necessary to carry out the wheat agreement.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Open the door, Richard.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The fair inference of what the minister said was that the leader of this party was operating as a tool for some gentleman from Winnipeg.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He said no such thing.

Mr. GARDINER: You ought to withdraw that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is a fair inference.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I listened very carefully to the minister when he was speaking and I listened to the hon. member who rose on a point of order. I do not believe that the minister imputed to the leader of the official opposition any improper motives.

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

I understood that the motives were attributed to outsiders, not members of the house. Therefore, since he did not impute motives to any member of parliament, I do not think I could ask him to withdraw.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I bow to your ruling, with all due deference; but I say, in fairness to this house that the record ought to be read. I would ask the minister to agree to having the record read, inasmuch as, with the confusion in this house, Mr. Speaker, you may not have heard as well as I did the word "attempt" being used, referring to an outside body and then being used referring to His Majesty's loyal opposition. It is not often that I disturb the chamber, but within the rules of the chamber I would ask you, sir, to ask that the record be read.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MacKINNON: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to set at rest the mind of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris). I certainly made no imputation against the leader of the official opposition.

Mr. COCKERAM: Withdraw.

Mr. MacKINNON: Just a minute. Neither did I make any imputation against any member of this house. I will possibly make it clearer by saying this.

Mr. COCKERAM: Withdraw the accusation you made before.

Mr. MacKINNON: If, by referring this matter back to a committee of the whole, it might have the effect of destroying this legislation, then those people, referring to the special interests here, would be very happy. That is what I wish to indicate.

Mr. BRACKEN: There is no suggestion in this amendment that the bill would be destroyed by referring it back for the consideration of one item.

Mr. MacKINNON: I have only another sentence or two. I want to impress upon this house and upon anyone interested in western agriculture that this legislation is necessary for the successful carrying out of the agreement with the United Kingdom. It is an attempt to give the grain producer stability of prices over a term of years. If anything should happen to defeat the legislation I believe the wheat producers of western Canada would wait some considerable time for another opportunity to obtain stability of prices.

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I should like to say a few words before the vote is taken. I wish to assure the minister that there are at least some in this house who do not desire to have this legislation defeated. However, if it is defeated I should say it would be the fault of the government, because they have refused to make the very minor yet important changes that some of us in this house have desired. It is not the proper thing, I take it, for the government to endeavour to use the big stick on members of this house in order to force this legislation through, when I believe they could easily have it passed unanimously.

As the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) has said, we are agreeable to legislation of this type covering long-term payments to the farmers and stabilized prices. There is no question about that. We are also satisfied that the contract with Great Britain should be carried out. I may say quite frankly that we do not agree with some aspects of it, but in the main we are quite agreeable to seeing it fulfilled. However, as far as may be possible we are determined to have the government declare themselves on one thing. If they are as sincere as they try to make out they should not be so hesitant about saying they will pay the farmers the stipulated price for all wheat produced and offered for sale within the pool period. Certainly there can be no objection to that, and in that regard the government cannot hold any stick over my head and influence my vote. I tell them right now that if they do not agree to this I shall vote against them; that is, if they do not agree to take all the wheat produced within that pool period and pay the farmers the stipulated price.

Mr. MacKINNON: If I may say just a sentence or two—

Mr. JOHNSTON: I wish you would clear that up, and you can take a dozen sentences.

Mr. MacKINNON: While the bill was in committee, I took occasion to speak on behalf of the government on that very point. I can repeat now, and I wish to repeat, that the government anticipates there will be storage in western Canada to take every bushel of grain grown during this pool period. The government intends to take every bushel of grain grown and offered for sale by the farmers, to the extent of every available bushel of storage space. If I were able to go farther now I should like to do so, but you cannot project yourself into the future and know what the situation will be three years from now. It is not practical to say what we can do under certain circumstances that we do not expect to exist. It is the intention of the government to take every bushel of wheat the farmers offer for sale during the pool period, and to distribute to the holders of participation certificates all the surplus money made during that period.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am sure we appreciated hearing the Minister of Trade and Commerce reiterate that which he has said already, but he was very careful to point out that the government anticipated no trouble in future in accepting this grain. If the minister is so sincere and so much concerned about that, then I say the proper thing to do is put it in the bill. We do not know what will happen in the future. Whoever heard of a contract being consummated on the assumption that something will take place? When this matter is being dealt with in future, those responsible for carrying out the legislation will go only as far as the wording of the contract and the statute. That is a foregone conclusion, and should not require any argument. If the government will put that in the bill I can assure them I shall vote for this measure. I am not going to take it on the word of a minister who may not be here in 1950, and I do not say that in any unkindly way. If this matter is to be carried into the future, to 1950, it is the honest responsibility of the government to have the contract and legislation so worded. If the government are so convinced that on July 31, 1950, there will be storage space for all this wheat, and that they will be able to take it all, why in heaven's name do they not put it in the bill? That will remove any need for all this argument.

The hon. member for Acadia particularly emphasized two other points that we should like to see dealt with in the bill; that is, payment of the 1945 participation money, and the increase of the initial payment to $1.55. We should like to see these two matters dealt with, but we are most concerned about seeing that the farmer who is taking this loss at the present time is protected in the future, toward the end of this contract. If the government will give us that assurance by putting it in the bill, not merely verbally, that will be enough. Surely the Minister of Trade and Commerce would not expect any businessman to take the simple word of another man on a deal like this. The contract and the bill must be worded in that way. I can assure the government that if they will put that in the contract I shall vote against this amendment, but if they do not I am going to vote for it.

Mr. W. A. TUCKER (Rosthern): In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I should like to observe that if the amendment were to carry and the bill were to go back to committee I am satisfied that, unless the government were ready to move an amendment along the lines suggested by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), no such change could be made, because it might mean a charge upon the crown. So this amendment can be only one thing, a delaying or dilatory amendment, because it could not bring about the result he desires without the approval of the crown.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): This is not the money of the government. Who said it was?

Mr. TUCKER: I submit that, on the face of it, the observation by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) was well justified; that this is a dilatory and delaying motion which clearly indicates where the official opposition stands on this important measure.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): More imputing of motives.

Mr. TUCKER: If you have a guilty conscience, of course attribute the motives to yourself.

In regard to the general principle of this bill I am one of those who are in thorough agreement with the idea that we should have a certain measure of stability over a reasonable period of years. I am one of those, too, who think five years is not too long. In fact, many of the farmers in my constituency feel they would like to be guaranteed a reasonable price and reasonable stability for more than five years at a time. If the principle is once written into the law that we should have a five-year pool and stability for five years it would be very hard, it seems to me, if it works out well, for any future government to depart from that principle. In other words, in this agreement and bill we have established the principle of a period of stability for five years at a time.

The attitude of hon. members opposite is this. They are attributing to themselves a great deal of friendship for the farmer because they say: We would like to cut down this period from five to four years in order that there may be distributed at once, or when it can be distributed, probably within the next three years, the sum of $36 million. I think myself that when this whole situation comes to be reviewed in the years ahead the friends of the farmers will say that it was well to leave that less than ten cents a bushel with the wheat board for perhaps an extra two years for the sake of having a five-year period of stability established instead of a four-year period. In other words, we say that we want to have a five-year wheat pool period established as a minimum, and we say that, even if this money be paid out perhaps two years later than it otherwise would be paid out, that is a small price to pay for establishing the principle of stability for a period of five years at a time.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The hon. member said, two years later. If it will take two years to make the 1945 payment it will be 1952 before we make the 1950 payment. Get your mathematics straight.

Mr. TUCKER: I did not think I would have to go into such details as that with my able friend the hon. member for Calgary West. We are perhaps three years behind now in making payments on a yearly basis. If it is all put in a five-year pool, presumably, instead of the money being paid out one year at a time and having five years to look after separately, it will be paid out at once, and it will not take nearly as long to pay it out in one payment as it would in five.

In regard to these attacks on the ground of delay in payments, I point out to the members of this house through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in their submission to the government, unreservedly endorse the present wheat board and its present personnel. If they had thought that the wheat board was not doing a good job I submit that they would not have endorsed the present personnel of the board. I think that is clear.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): So what?

Mr. TUCKER: "So what," my hon. friend says. The suggestion is made that the wheat board is not doing a good job, that it is pushing the farmer around.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Who said so?

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) accused the board of being bureaucrats.

Mr. TUCKER: All I go by is this. I took part in the Portage la Prairie by-election and I saw the attacks made by the official opposition on this wheat agreement.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Made by whom?

Mr. TUCKER: By the official opposition.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Name them.

Mr. TUCKER: Well, yourself.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making a misstatement of fact. I never once criticized the wheat board in that by-election. I criticized the agreement and said it was wrong.

Mr. TUCKER: That is what I said. That just shows again the desire of the official opposition to find fault. I said that the hon. member criticized the wheat agreement.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): You said the board.

Mr. TUCKER: After all, if we cannot agree on a simple matter like that it will be hard for us to agree on some of these other matters. I do say this. I took part in the Portage la Prairie by-election. It is all very well for the leader of the opposition and members to come into this house and say that they are in favour of the principle of the agreement and then proceed to find fault with it in every conceivable manner in order to break down confidence in the agreement throughout the country. They are trying to have it both ways, and when that is suggested to them and they get up and protest, it shows nothing more or less than a guilty conscience. They cannot have it both ways. They cannot go into a by-election like Portage la Prairie and attack this agreement as not being a good one and say that the arrangements made are not good, and then come into this house and pretend that they are in favour of the agreement.

Mr. FULTON: We did not do that at all. We said that it was a bad agreement.

Mr. TUCKER: There we have it. Are you speaking for your leader? I understood him to say that it was a good agreement?

Mr. FULTON: No, he did not.

Mr. TUCKER: Let him deny it. I do not think the esteemed leader of the opposition needs the young man from Kamloops to speak for him. He has been long enough in public life to speak for himself and I do not think he would wish my hon. friend to speak for him.

I think I should pay a passing reference to my friends of the C.C.F. party. I am not unmindful of the fact that they brought the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan into that Portage la Prairie by-election, and the Hon. Mr. Nollet in that by-election said that a child could have made a better agreement than this one, and asked the people to vote against the government candidate because the government had made such a poor agreement. There is the situation, and I say again to my friends of the C.C.F., let them say the same thing in the house as they say out in the west. Let them not talk one way out there and another way in the house.

Mrs. STRUM: Mr. Speaker, I think the house should know that I had the honour of sharing a platform with the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) in the city hall at Regina before the present session opened. I would ask him whether I was there and whether I did not tell the truth about that agreement.

Mr. TUCKER: You were charming as usual.

Mrs. STRUM: Mr. Speaker, I asked for a statement of truth, not an evasion like that.

Mr. TUCKER: It is very hard for me to admit that the C.C.F. are fair-minded in everything they say because I cannot admit that they are.

Mrs. STRUM: Mr. Speaker, the charge has been made by the member for Rosthern that we have one story in the west and another story in the house. I had the pleasure of appearing on the same platform with the hon. member for Rosthern and I ask him, did I or did I not quote the terms of the agreement?

Mr. TUCKER: In reply to the question asked me by the charming lady member for Qu'Appelle I would say this. On that occasion, as I heard her speech, I found no fault with what she said. In what I suggested I was particularly referring to Mr. Nollet, minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan, whom the C.C.F. brought in to take part in that federal by-election. I was not referring to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mrs. STRUM: Did the hon. member hear Mr. Nollet make the statement he has quoted?

Mr. TUCKER: It was reported in the newspapers and not denied.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must remind the house that we are not in committee. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. member for Rosthern has imputed something to the movement which I have the honour to lead in this house, and I wish to tell him that no group in this house has been so consistent in support of the wheat agreement, both in and out of the house, as the C.C.F. group.

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) in connection with what he has said: if he felt that Mr. Nollet, Minister of Agriculture in the Saskatchewan government, had ever said anything outside the legislature that he would not say inside the legislature, he had an opportunity to become a member of that legislature and to make his charges in that house when Mr. Nollet could have defended himself.

Mr. J. W. BURTON (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate, because on more than one occasion since the question has been before the house I have spoken not only for myself but on behalf of this group. But when the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) rises in his place in his usual blustering bull-dozing way and makes statements such as he has just made, I want to remind him of what he has been reminded of by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley), namely, that he has not seen fit to accept the offer which was honestly and truly made by the C.C.F. in Saskatchewan.

I also want to tell him that I had an invitation to speak in the Rosthern constituency after the close of the last session. I appeared on a number of platforms there and I defended the wheat agreement to the constituents of Rosthern. I told them that no doubt their member was so busy chasing around other parts of the province that he would not have an opportunity to get into all parts of his own constituency before returning to Ottawa and that I was defending the wheat agreement on his behalf and on behalf of all those who believed in it. When the hon. member for Rosthern gets up on the floor of the house and for his own purposes, not for the sake of helping to put this bill through, makes the statements and assertions that he has made, I do not think he is doing himself or his party any good.

Mr. TUCKER: I ask the hon. member to withdraw. The hon. member has suggested that I did not get up in this debate to make a point, that I got up for my own purposes. I suggest that that is imputing motives. After all, if that is the way he feels about it, I will say to him that if the wheat agreement did not get a better defence than it has received from most C.C.F'ers out west who found fault with almost everything in it and then say that they are in favour of it—

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. member knows better than that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Doubtless there has been considerable heat during this argument and I suggest that some of the statements made have almost been unparliamentary. May I ask hon. members to restrain themselves as much as possible and endeavour to discuss the bill which is now before the house for third reading.

Mr. BURTON: Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to comply with your request as long as you keep certain members on the other side in order. When the hon. member for Rosthern gets pinned down to certain incidents, he shifts over to another scene and another part of Saskatchewan.

Mr. TUCKER: The hon. member has no right to say that. That is entirely out of order.

Mr. BURTON: What is the point of order? Eventually I shall have an opportunity to deal with the question before the house.

Mr. TUCKER: Why don't you?

Mr. BURTON: Because there are so many foolish statements being made and, if a person does not answer them, they will go out unchallenged.

I just wanted to make one observation before getting down to business which is far too important to the farmers of this country to have side-tracked by some people trying to make a little political capital for themselves. There is no group in the political field in Saskatchewan that has been as consistent and persistent in working for the interests of the farmers as has the group to which I have the honour and privilege to belong.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. BURTON: I hope the ones who want to call "time" will not call too soon. When we were discussing the various stages of this bill we tried to impress upon the government the necessity of doing certain things in order to provide legislation that would give the farmers the benefits to which they are entitled. As has been mentioned on more than one occasion, the farmers of western Canada believe—so far there has been no satisfactory answer to the contrary—that there was no justification for taking the 1945 crop and placing it in the pool period. There are many farmers who have taken the attitude that the government, by doing that, has violated the agreement. When those farmers started to deliver grain from the 1945 crop it was understood that the wheat board was operating and would continue to operate on its previous basis, namely, a one-year pool. Later on, that crop year was incorporated in the five-year pool, and consequently many farmers believe that, although there may not have been a written undertaking between them and the government, the government has violated the spirit of the agreement between them.

I suggest to the government that there is a way out by which they can continue to carry out the greater portion of the plan they have in mind and satisfy the farmers that they are prepared to do the right thing. They should adopt the suggestions that we have made on a number of occasions when this question was before the house; that is, make provision to pay interim payments during the pool period at the end of the crop year and make those interim payments on the basis of providing parity to the farmers. I left my notes on the other desk so that I cannot state exactly how many millions of dollars the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) told the house was in the hands of the government being held on behalf of the farmers. I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce why it should take the government so much longer to distribute money due to the farmers than it used to take the pools when they were operating on the pooling basis. I thank him for the answer he gave, but it is not as complete as I should like to have. I hope that the government will be able to make a better working arrangement.

However the suggestion I wish to make to the government is that in making these interim payments they take the money out of the fund which belongs to the farmers. Make the interim payment to bring the payment for that year up to parity. If that is done you will be using only the farmers' money. There will still be a considerable amount of money left over which will be used in the pool and which you will distribute at the end of the pool period. I make that suggestion because I believe it can be done. I believe it is possible to do it. If that is done it will solve the problem in so far as the farmers are concerned. It is because they are keenly concerned that I am taking up the time of the house to make this one final plea. Let the government cooperate with us and we shall be prepared to cooperate in helping to do something for the farmers.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not intend to look around to find this blustering bulldozer because I have examined all the seats on the other side and I do not find anyone who would be in that frame of mind. In my opinion they all have their tails down and are hunting a little shelter. They are not the kind of person that was described a moment ago.

What I wish to make plain, if I can, to those of us who sit on this side of the house and with a pious hope perhaps that what I am saying may penetrate the conscience of one or two over there—that is the most that I can expect—

Mr. FOURNIER (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Presumptuous.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am very happy to know that. I thought I had missed something. Now that I have learned where the remark came from, compared with the minister, I am presumptuous. His modesty is something that we all know about.

What does this amendment seek to do? It asks that the proceeds of that crop shall be distributed. That is all. There is nothing else in it. When we are accused of acting for the Winnipeg grain exchange and trying to destroy what the government is doing, may I say that I think this is a more apt comparison. Let us assume that in his younger days the minister, who is in charge of this bill, went wooing a young and beautiful woman, and he had secured a beautiful corsage of roses. We all know that roses have thorns in them, but when we give a corsage to a woman whom we are trying to influence in our favour we have the thorns clipped off. What the government are doing here is saying to the farmers of the country, here is a bill. Certain features of it are good for you but you are going to take it with the thorns in it and like it. That is exactly what the government are doing at the present time by the refusal to distribute the proceeds of the 1945 crop.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): In view of the representation made from this side of the house when the bill was before the committee, the government might be well advised to take into consideration the representations made. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) has intimated that there is a matter of $36 million involved which belongs to the producers of wheat.

It is not unreasonable to ask the administration to consider the matter overnight and bring in a recommendation along the lines which have been suggested. I cannot see that it would require any appropriation of government funds to carry out the terms of the suggestion. So far as the members of this group are concerned, if the government reconsiders the matter and refuses to make any compromise whatever we shall support the government on the third reading. I think the matter might be considered by the government overnight and a decision given tomorrow.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

PROVISION FOR PURCHASE, SALE AND EXPORT—COMMODITY AND PROVINCIAL MARKETING BOARDS

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 25, to provide for the sale and export of agricultural products.

Mr. STIRLING: Does the minister propose to make a statement at this stage?

Mr. GARDINER: I made quite an extended statement on the resolution, and I do not consider it necessary to make a similar statement at this time. However, I do want to make available to the opposition an amendment I hope to have moved when we are in committee, and I think the information should be given at this time, while we are on second reading.

Some questions bearing on the marketing of apples were asked me on the resolution. I stated at that time that there had been discussions between the provincial apple board and representatives of the British government, as well as between the special products board and the British government, and that the members of the apple board were anxious to be put in a position where they could, during at least the transitional period, have an agreement with Britain for the marketing of apples. I also stated that it was not our intention at the moment to enter into other agreements except the apple agreement under the powers which are being asked for. I was asked definitely whether there was provision in the bill which made it possible for such an agreement to be entered into. I looked into that question carefully between then and now and, after submitting it to the officials of the Department of Justice, I was satisfied that there was no provision in the bill which made it certain that an agreement of that kind could be entered into. So I intend, when we are in committee, to move an amendment to section 5 which, I am assured, will make it possible for that agreement to be entered into. I should like to make copies of this amendment available to the leaders of the different parties tonight in order that they may be able to give it consideration.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): May I ask if the minister proposes to put forward any amendments to take care of that other portion of the request, namely, that the existing board should be permitted to carry on with interprovincial trade?

Mr. GARDINER: That is the intention.

Mr. STIRLING: Does this cover both export and interprovincial trade?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, both.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Speaker, under these circumstances I wonder whether it would not be a reasonable request that I should be permitted to adjourn the debate. There has been made at the time of second reading an important suggestion which will have a direct bearing on the debate that will ensue on the motion for second reading.

On motion of Mr. Stirling the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie the house adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

Friday, March 14, 1947

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BRACKEN—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF REMARKS MADE IN DEBATE ON MARCH 13

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. On page 1355 of Hansard of yesterday the following words are credited to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon):

I do know that certain estimable and amiable gentlemen from the city of Winnipeg came to Ottawa—some of them I think are still here and are likely in this building tonight—with the objective of ruining this legislation, of killing this legislation one way or another. There is no doubt in the world that their first objective was to try to injure it and kill it if possible in the agriculture committee of this house. That opportunity was lost when the members on this side of the house, the members of the C.C.F. party and the members of the Social Credit party announced that they were opposed to this legislation, under all the circumstances, going to the committee on agriculture and colonization.

The minister continued:

Now it is my opinion—and possibly I might be blamed for imputing motives — that this attempt—

The amendment I moved.

—that this attempt to send this legislation back to the committee of the whole is merely another attempt, coming from the same quarter,—

The "estimable and amiable gentlemen" to whom he referred.

—to embarrass the government with this legislation.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

At that point, Mr. Speaker, I rose and spoke as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman is suggesting improper motives.

A moment or two later the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I very carefully stated that I was not imputing any motives to anybody.

I suggest, sir, that the words just quoted from yesterday's Hansard do impute motives, and do impute them to me. In any event the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) raised a point of order, and Your Honour made a ruling. When I refer to that ruling I do so with all respect, Mr. Speaker. I have confidence that the rulings you make are your best judgment in the light of matters as you see them. This is what you said:

I listened very carefully to the minister when he was speaking and I listened to the hon. member who rose on a point of order. I do not believe that the minister imputed to the leader of the official opposition any improper motives. I understood that the motives were attributed to outsiders, not members of the house. Therefore, since he did not impute motives to any member of parliament, I do not think I could ask him to withdraw.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if you had had before you the words of the minister as they appear in Hansard today you would have given a different ruling.

In any event I need no defence in the province of Manitoba against insinuations such as those carried in the words used by the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BRACKEN: For twenty-five years friends of these so-called "estimable and amiable gentlemen" have done they very best to defeat me in provincial and dominion elections.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BRACKEN: Sir, I do not propose to sit still in this house and allow these words of the minister to remain on record without protest. I respectfully suggest that if you had had those words before you last night you would have made a different ruling. But I understand the rules of the house are such that when a statement of this kind is not required to be withdrawn at the time it is made it cannot be ordered to be done later. Under these circumstances my only recourse is to present to the minister the actual words he used and then to ask him, as the honourable gentleman we have known him to be, to withdraw them.

Mr. MacKINNON: The words I used are on Hansard.

Mr. BRACKEN: The words are:

Now it is my opinion—and possibly I might be blamed for imputing motives—that this attempt—

That is the amendment I moved.

—to send this legislation back to the committee of the whole is merely another attempt, coming from the same quarter—

That is, the estimable gentlemen the minister referred to.

—to embarrass the government with this legislation.

Mr. CHEVRIER: What is the matter with that?

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker, I present those actual words to the minister and ask him to withdraw them. If he is the honourable gentleman we all know him to be, he will withdraw them now.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On the question of privilege, may I suggest very briefly this to Your Honour. It is not the interpretation which may have been placed by the leader of the opposition upon the words uttered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that is of significance in this issue. I refer Your Honour now to the actual words uttered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as recorded in Hansard, on two different occasions. He could not possibly have made it more explicit that he was not imputing any motives. At page 1355:

Mr. MacKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I am a bit surprised at the interruptions coming from the portion of the house occupied by the official opposition. I made no charges or no representations against any one of them. They do seem to be taking to themselves—

And again on the same page:

Mr. MacKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to set at rest the mind of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris). I certainly made no imputation against the leader of the official opposition. . . Neither did I make any imputation against any member of this house.

That was made very clear.

Mr. BRACKEN: His words do not bear that out.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Speaker, I make the point with you as a point of order, apart altogether from the question of privilege, that you are governed by the words actually uttered by the speaker at the time and not by any interpretation of those words made by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. HOMUTH: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to allow the minister to finish.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): No. That is entirely out of order.

Mr. HOMUTH: I am rising to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat and wait until the minister has finished his explanation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I was speaking to a point of order.

Mr. HOMUTH: No, you were not. You did not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend is too much of a dullard to understand what I was speaking about.

Mr. HOMUTH: Withdraw.

Mr. MACKENZIE: If it gives my hon. friend any pleasure, if it is the will of the house that I withdraw, I certainly will.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask all members of the house to be kind enough to assist the Speaker in maintaining discipline and order in the house. I have given all the latitude possible to the leader of the opposition to speak on his question of privilege. At the moment the leader of the government has the floor, and I would ask hon. members to listen to him. Then if any other hon. member wishes to speak on the question of order, he will have the privilege of doing so. I would ask hon. members to maintain discipline and order.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just raising a very important point and I am not disturbed in the slightest degree by the question of privilege raised by the hon. member. I think it should have been raised at the moment the words were uttered.

Mr. BRACKEN: It was.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Later on.

Mr. BRACKEN: No, immediately.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I will quote to you what was said after the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon). The speakers noted are: Mr. MacKinnon, Mr. Cockeram, Mr. MacKinnon, and then Mr. Bracken.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I think this whole discussion is entirely out of order. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) last night had the opportunity of bringing this matter of privilege to the attention of the house, which he did; and there is no rule which permits this kind of discussion now. I would therefore suggest that you rule it out of order, sir, and that we go on with the business of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: As hon. members know, when any member is not satisfied with the words or expressions used by other members of the house, if he seeks to have the words withdrawn, he is supposed to make the request immediately after the words have been uttered. The hon. leader of the opposition has said that he asked the minister to withdraw his remarks. I understand the leader of the opposition has raised a question of privilege to explain the situation which arose last night. He had the opportunity to do so and he should be satisfied with that. I would not permit the house to discuss a ruling which was made by the Speaker last night. I suggest to hon. members that we now proceed with the business of the house.

MR. KNOWLES—PRESS REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS OF MARCH 13

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In today's Ottawa Citizen under the by-line of Reginald Hardy there is a report of last night's proceedings which contains this sentence:

> Particularly singled out for the "oh's" and "ah's" of the Liberal members were Progressive Leader John Bracken, A. L. Smith (PC Calgary West), John Diefenbaker (PC Lake Centre), C.C.F. Leader M. J. Coldwell, Stanley Knowles (CCF Winnipeg North Centre) and J. A. Ross (PC Souris). All had fought bitterly against the government's wheat policy during the debate.

This is entirely erroneous, both as applied to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and myself. I was at one with my colleagues in support of the measure. I even defended it out on the hustings at Portage la Prairie, and I was one of those who called for a vote last night, so that my vote could be recorded in Hansard and in Votes and Proceedings.

MR. ROSS—PRESS REPORT WITH RESPECT TO REDISTRIBUTION

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I wish to call attention to an article appearing the Winnipeg Free Press of March 12, on page 1, entitled, "Manitoba M.P.'s Favour Redistribution Plan", and reading as follows:

[Mr. Coldwell.]

> Manitoba's M.P.'s have agreed on all major boundary changes of constituencies under the new redistribution requiring elimination of one Manitoba seat. This has been done by throwing Lisgar and Macdonald constituencies together and Neepawa and Portage la Prairie together and creating a new rural seat circling the four Winnipeg city seats on the north and taking east half of Portage and the northeast corner of Macdonald.

As a member of this federal parliament from Manitoba, and a member of the redistribution committee, I have not agreed to this proposal; in fact the Manitoba subcommittee has not met as yet as a committee to discuss the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is why it should not be brought up now.

MR. ARCHIBALD—HAINES CUT-OFF—MINISTERIAL REPLY TO QUESTION ON MARCH 13

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I rise to a question of privilege. Yesterday I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) a question regarding the Haines road. His reply on the floor of this house concluded with this sentence:

> My understanding is that the road was never completed, and it is not intended that it should be closed in the ordinary sense.

I wired this statement to the interested parties. Hansard as it appears today contains no record of the latter part of the sentence, which I repeat: "and it is not intended that it should be closed in the ordinary sense." I am at a loss as to what the minister does mean.

CONSUMER ORGANIZATIONS

SUBSIDIES AND PRICE CONTROL—REPRESENTATIONS TO GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): Has a request been received by the Minister of Finance from or on behalf of the housewives' consumers league or other interested consumer organizations in western Canada that the minister or the government meet a delegation to receive a brief on the subject of the restoration of subsidies on milk and other necessities of life, and on the restoration of price control?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I have not received such a request, Mr. Speaker, but a copy of a letter from the acting secretary of the housewives' consumers league in Regina, addressed to the Prime Minister, was sent to my office on March 3. In that letter the consumers league asked whether a delegation could wait on the government, and according to a copy of a letter from the Prime Minister's secretary they were advised to get in touch with the Minister of Finance as the minister directly concerned with the administration of price control, in order to attempt to arrange an interview at a suitable time. I have not yet heard from the league, but when I do I shall deal promptly with their request.

Mr. PROBE: It is not correct to say that they have been refused an opportunity to meet the government?

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MARITIME COAL STRIKE—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING IN OTTAWA TO RECONCILE DIFFERENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. C. BLACK (Cumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply with respect to the coal mining dispute in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Has the Minister of Labour any statement to make as to any progress being made in the settlement of that dispute? If not, has the government taken any steps to have representatives of the labour organizations, the operators and the government meet and endeavour to reconcile the differences between the parties? I am sure practically everyone in Nova Scotia wants this strike brought to an end. I know there is hardly a person in my county who does not want to see it concluded.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Just before I came into the house practically this same question was asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. MacLean) and the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McCulloch).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am not raising a question of privilege. If I did that sort of thing I would be on my feet twenty-four hours a day. Don't take yourselves too seriously. This morning I met a delegation of the Canadian congress of labour, who made the suggestion that I call a conference of the parties concerned. I want to say, with all the emphasis at my command, that the Department of Labour is ready to conciliate this dispute at any time, if given an opportunity to do so. Might I say further that not only the people of the maritimes but I believe the people of the whole dominion wish to see this dispute brought to a successful conclusion.

As hon. members know, I appointed Mr. Justice Carroll as a commissioner, and he made certain recommendations. The position taken by the company was that unless they were guaranteed increased production they were not in a financial position to grant the increases requested by the men. The men took the view that an increase in pay should not be tied to guaranteed production. That is how the matter stands at the moment. Neither side has receded from its position. If at any time there is a spirit of conciliation, of willingness at least to give and take in the dispute, you may rest assured that I and my department will use every effort to bring it to an end. In my judgment, however—and of course this is a matter of judgment—there must be a spirit of compromise on both sides. To ask these people to come up here from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would be a waste of time, unless there were a joint request by both parties to the dispute.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Does not the minister agree that the initiative should be taken by his department, where there is a general desire on the part of the workmen and the public that this dispute be brought to a conclusion?

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not know whether my hon. friend suggests compulsory arbitration, but I am not going in where angels fear to tread, in that business. I have had some experience, and I know something about the background of the settlement of industrial disputes. My hon. friend can rest assured that the same sincerity and, may I say, ability, in the settlement of disputes will be exemplified by my department if we are given the opportunity by both sides.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): But, if you will permit me, the initiative must be taken by somebody. I think it should be taken by the minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: I cannot permit debate between the hon. member and the minister.

Mr. GILLIS: May I follow that up? Was the minister's department asked recently by either party to the dispute for the holding of a conference? Was such a request made either by the mine workers or by the operators?

Mr. MITCHELL: Just prior to my coming to the house the suggestion was made by a delegation representing the Canadian congress of labour, and it was made on the basis I outlined a moment ago. While I have had no direct request from the mine workers organization of Nova Scotia as such, yet on what might be called a confidential level, if I may put it that way, I have had requests from other sources that a conference be held.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): If you will permit me, again, I make this appeal to the minister and I ask him if he will not take the initiative and call these disputing parties together.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

ROUTE BETWEEN WINNIPEG AND EDMONTON VIA SASKATOON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. The press contains reference to the fact that a new Trans-Canada Air Lines short route is being established between Ottawa and Winnipeg. I have a telegram today asking whether the minister is in a position to advise when operations are to begin on T.C.A. route between Winnipeg and Edmonton by way of Saskatoon.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I have stated to the house several times that the operation of the route depends upon the completion of the airport at Saskatoon. I believe the engineers in my department expect to have the airport completed on July 1. If so, the service will begin at that time. The beginning of the service, as my hon. friend knows, will depend upon one or two things; but the answer I have given is approximately correct.

INDIANS

HOSPITALIZATION—FEDERAL PER DIEM RATE FOR TREATY INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that the hospital at Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, is refusing to admit treaty Indians as patients because the federal government will pay only $2 per day per patient? Will the government consider increasing this amount, in view of the urgent need of many Indians in central Manitoba for hospitalization?

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Weir) yesterday made representations somewhat along the same line. I told him, and I now tell the hon. member, that the per diem rate is higher than $2 a day in that particular hospital.

Mr. KNOWLES: What is the rate?

Mr. MARTIN: $2.50.

ENEMY PROPERTY

REQUEST FOR PRINTING OF CUSTODIAN'S REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State, arising out of the report of the custodian of enemy property, which the minister tabled this afternoon. Is it the government's intention to have this report printed, or at least to have copies of it made available to the various parties before the bill dealing with this matter is again discussed in the house?

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): There has not been any arrangement made for printing, but consideration can be given to the printing of the report. As the legislation is of an urgent nature, I do not want to delay proceedings by waiting to have the printing done.

Mr. FLEMING: Could carbon copies of the report be made available?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I am not sure if they are immediately available; I shall make inquiries and let my hon. friend know.

COAL

PRESS REPORT OF SUBSIDY PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to inquire if the attention of the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply has been directed to an item in the Halifax Herald on Thursday, March 13, which carries the heading "Reveal coal subsidy plan"? I have been endeavouring to get information on this point for ten days, and I now wish to ask whether either minister is aware of the fact that the mayor of Halifax, according to this report, has announced in that city the government's policy in the matter of subsidies on imported American coal. If this is a correct report, then I say the matter should have been announced in the house rather than by the mayor of Halifax.

I am not going to displease Your Honour by attempting to read the article, but it is one which is of importance to every member in the house, in that government policy has been announced outside.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GILLIS: And secondly—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member knows that the purpose of a question is that of getting information rather than giving it. The hon. member's question should be direct and to the point.

Mr. GILLIS: Well, I could have made a speech on a question of privilege, but I thought you had enough of that for the afternoon. If either minister has not seen this, I shall send it to them, and at the first opportunity I believe some statement should be made in the matter.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I shall read in Hansard what the hon. member has said, and try to give an answer early next week.

FISH

CANNED AND SALTED—DISCONTINUANCE OF INTERNATIONAL ALLOCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries, arising out of a statement he made in the house yesterday. His statement was:

> Similarly, allocation of salted cod and other salted groundfish of 1946 production will come to an end on June 30 of this year, and there will be no allocation of salted fish from 1947 production.

Does that mean all salted fish, of all types, or does it mean only salted groundfish? I wish to know whether the restriction regarding the salting of herring will be removed by this provision.

Hon. H. F. G. BRIDGES (Minister of Fisheries): I shall take the hon. member's question as notice and give an answer later.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN DEALING WITH EMERGENCY LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated earlier in the week that I would be making a statement as to the probable course in respect of the so-called emergency legislation. I have been waiting to see what the probable progress of the house would be during the month of March, and I have come to the conclusion that in all probability it will be impossible for us to finish the emergency legislation on the order paper on or before March 28.

The National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, 1945, as amended, will expire on March 29—not March 31, as is the general impression. It expires sixty days after the opening day of parliament. There is a substantial body of legislation which must be enacted before March 29, unless many important measures are permitted to lapse, thus causing a condition of great confusion, amounting almost to chaos, in the country. Therefore the government has come to the conclusion that it must ask parliament for an extension for a limited period of the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, 1945, as amended. There is a proviso in the appropriate section of that act which states:

> Provided that, if at any time while this act is in force, addresses are presented to the Governor General by the Senate and House of Commons respectively, praying that this act should be continued in force for a further period, not in any case exceeding one year, from the time at which it would otherwise expire and the governor in council so orders, this act shall continue in force for that further period.

It was decided yesterday that there should be an Easter recess of nearly two weeks. That means that legislation which is uncompleted before the Easter recess will not be reconsidered before the fourteenth or fifteenth day of April. I think it would be unsafe for the government to plan for the completion of that legislation within a period of less than approximately thirty days after we reassemble. Therefore I propose today to give notice that an address will be moved on Tuesday next praying for the extension of the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act until the fifteenth day of May. The government will be prepared at the time that address is moved in the house to give appropriate undertakings for the repeal of outstanding orders in council in the event of the new legislation being assented to before the fifteenth day of May. I should hope that this legislation would be passed long before that time, but some is of a serious character and judging by the experience we have had with the legislation before the house—I think the progress has been reasonably satisfactory—it would be unsafe for the address to specify a date earlier than the fifteenth day of May. However, that is a matter that can be dealt with when the address is moved. Addresses will be moved in the House of Commons and in the Senate for this limited extension of the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act. I am making a statement now rather than next Tuesday so that the house will understand what the government has in mind.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will the minister permit a suggestion? It is most difficult to know what particular orders in council are in effect under the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act. Can the minister lay on the table of the house a list of the orders in council now in effect, in addition to those appearing in the appendix to the omnibus bill? The great difficulty is to ferret out which orders in council are in effect and which have been revoked or repealed during the last few months.

Mr. ILSLEY: That information is all before the house; the orders in council passed under that act have been tabled. I can understand that it is drudgery to read all the orders in council that have been tabled, but the information is all before the house. There is just this qualification of the statement I have made: Some of the orders in council are spent, that is, they have ceased to have effect because the circumstances to which they originally applied have ceased to exist. It would take a great deal of work to compile the list that the hon. gentleman wants, but I will see whether it can be done and advise the house later.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I trust the minister can do that, because if it is difficult for the government to furnish the information, it is just that much more difficult for the people to know what laws are in effect.

Mr. ILSLEY: I object to a political speech on an interchange such as this. The hon. gentleman has the same access to the orders in council as the government has. They have all been placed before the house.

POSTAL SERVICE

MAIL CONTRACTS—PROVISION FOR SUPPLEMENTAL PAYMENTS

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General) moved the third reading of Bill No. 17, respecting supplemental payments on mail contracts.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, a list of the mail contracts in respect to which bonuses have been paid has just been laid on the table of the house. Through the courtesy of the Postmaster General I have that list before me now. It is manifestly impossible for anyone to discuss the import or the purport of what has been done in this connection, and I should like to suggest to the minister that this matter be held over until a later date.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am one minister who likes to say yes whenever possible. I can understand that it would be impossible for an hon. member to go through this long list of contracts today. The hon. member is asking for a postponement until Monday?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I think that is fair. I want the hon. member to have time to convince himself that all the bonuses have been given in good faith. I agree to his request.

Motion stands.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the debate was adjourned.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

PROVISION FOR PURCHASE, SALE AND EXPORT—COMMODITY AND PROVINCIAL MARKETING BOARD

The house resumed from Thursday, March 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gardiner for the second reading of Bill No. 25, to provide for the sale and export of agricultural products.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, last evening the minister spoke briefly after introducing this bill because, as he explained, he had taken the opportunity when the resolution preceding the bill was before the house to speak at some greater length as to the purposes of the measure. However, he did take the opportunity to explain that it was his intention when we reached the committee stage to move an amendment which, as we understood, would have considerable effect on the measure itself. After asking him a couple of questions, which he answered, I sought and obtained the permission of the house to adjourn the debate a few minutes before eleven o'clock, in order that we might have an opportunity of considering what that amendment amounted to. The minister handed around slips describing it, but I must not discuss the amendment on the second reading. I should like to observe, however, that the effect of it will be to permit the distribution of apples, and apples only, whenever the distribution is undertaken by a board set up under a provincial marketing act. Further discussion of the matter will take place when the bill is in committee and we reach the section indicated.

The purpose of this bill is to empower the minister to lay his hand on certain agricultural products required for the purposes of international or other agreements which may be made. The methods by which that object may be attained are set forth in the bill, for the bill will empower the minister to establish a board or boards which will have very wide powers. Those boards will act under the direction of the minister and will be able to acquire agricultural products designated by the governor in council, deliver them, store them, and besides that, set the price which the farmer will receive for those products. That method of arriving at the object of the bill carries with it a principle with which we are not in accord. My mind goes back to the discussions which took place in this house in 1934 on the natural products marketing bill, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) fulminated violently against that bill from its first section to its last, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) expressed his strong opposition to its terms despite the fact that the farmers in the Annapolis valley had unanimously indicated their support of the measure. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, what the situation would have been if that bill had contained these wide powers! Is it surprising that the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) yearns for the day when the Liberal party may return to those principles which he alleges they once followed?

I say that we are not in accord with the principle involved in this bill. We do not consider it right that the farmer who produces the product should have no say in its disposition or in the price he shall receive for it, and in that regard we are on all fours with the representations made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture a fortnight ago today. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture met the government in the early hours of the day on which the minister moved the resolution which resulted in the introduction of this bill. The view of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is that the proper basis on which to proceed in such a matter as this is a recognition of those boards at present in existence or to come into existence under the marketing acts which have been passed in every province.

I want to point out to hon. members that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture speaks with no sectional voice in Canada. It neither speaks with the voice of one part of Canada nor speaks with the voice of farmers producing any one particular product. It is the collective voice of the farmers. There are branches of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in eight of the nine provinces. These branches meet annually and discuss their problems. They arrive at policies. Their delegates assemble here in the city of Ottawa and in open meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture they put forward their views, and the views of the federation are there hammered out, so that it is feasible for the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to meet the dominion government and set forth the policies which it advocates.

The main reason why I am so strongly in favour of recognition of the boards at present in existence under the provincial marketing acts is that they are producer boards. The basis of those nine acts is just this, that in any stipulated area, if there be a majority of producers of certain commodities who desire to form themselves into a board, they may receive permission to do so. They elect their board, and that board carries out the control and the regulating of the marketing of those crops in an orderly fashion for the benefit of the producer, the benefit of the consumer and the benefit of the trade, and it is only reasonable to my mind in a matter of this kind that the government should recognize the fact that such boards are in existence and that they are efficient. The minister himself has had opportunities of working with at least some of these boards.

I would draw attention by way of illustration to two things which have happened since the war began. When the war broke out, shipping disappeared so far as commercial produce was concerned. That was an extremely serious matter for the province of Nova Scotia because their habit for generations has been to barrel their apples and to send them across the seas to the United Kingdom, to Scandinavian countries, to Newfoundland, Iceland, and the West Indies. It was not such a serious matter for the apple producers in British Columbia because for some years past from twenty-five to thirty per cent of their product had been sold in the export market, but it was sufficiently serious to deal a blow to that industry in British Columbia.

The only reason I am using the apple as an illustration is that I come from the centre of the Okanagan valley and I personally am more conversant with the conditions of the British Columbia fruit trade than I am with those of the other boards which exist in that province. I would not like it to be thought, as has been alleged in times past, that the whole strength of the movement of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is based on the fruit industry, for that is very far from true. The fruit industry is merely one of those bodies which support the Canadian Federation of Agriculture both in its provincial branches and in the federation itself.

When that export was entirely cut off, the federal government saw fit to make financial arrangements under which the farmers might be enabled to remain on their farms and to produce this food. That was a very considerable assistance in Nova Scotia. The method adopted was largely that of turning the apples over to the processors. In British Columbia it was necessary to a far lesser degree to make use of that financial assistance because as the war developed and as employment increased consequent on the spread of industry for the war effort, the domestic market reached such proportions that it was possible for the British Columbia fruit board to sell practically all its produce in the domestic market. But in that instance it is interesting to note that when the dominion government, having set up this financial arrangement, required some body of people to deal with it at the other end, it was to these fruit boards that they turned, and they made use of them in applying this financial arrangement.

May I give an illustration. Not long ago when shipping was again possible the United Kingdom indicated that it desired to purchase Canadian apples. The question arose as to where these apples could be obtained, in what quantity and what the price should be. The head of the British mission was directed to the two boards, the one in Nova Scotia and the one in British Columbia. He went to see the Nova Scotia board and the British Columbia board and carried out a dicker by the ordinary methods of trade with the one and the other as to quantity and the price that should be paid. Barrels of apples in Nova Scotia and boxes of apples in British Columbia when converted into barrels, turned out to be at very much the same price, and that price was the one which was adopted in the agreement with the United Kingdom. Therefore in these two matters the minister is not without knowledge and experience of what these boards are capable of doing. I would venture to suggest that he appreciates the assistance which those boards were able to afford in time of need.

We are not in accord with the principle behind this bill, because we believe that there should be recognition by the government of the existing boards, and it should be so stated in the bill. I intend to make that the subject of an amendment which I propose to move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Charlton), and which I shall now read. It is as follows:

That the said bill be not now read the second time, but that it be resolved that an Agricultural Products Act should be based on the principle that producer boards, set up under provincial marketing acts, where such boards exist or as they may from time to time come into existence, be used for the purposes of such Agricultural Products Act, instead of commodity boards established by the minister under section four of the said bill.

The phraseology adopted in the amendment is the phraseology set forth in our rules of procedure for an amendment on second reading, but I should be extremely glad if the minister would see the force of the contention and incorporate that principle in the bill.

Under these nine provincial acts as they exist today there are a score or more of these boards dealing with all sorts of different agricultural products. Where there is a board dealing with a commodity which the minister desires to acquire it surely is but reasonable to give the producer of that commodity the opportunity to have a say in the disposition of the product as well as the price it will bring.

Now, an observation or two with regard to what the minister was good enough to divulge last evening in the matter of an amendment which he had in mind. I know that we must not discuss it at this stage, and I do not propose to do so; but I should like to make an observation or two with regard to it to show how it came about. When the minister spoke on the resolution which preceded the introduction of the bill it was getting pretty late in the evening and the house was good enough to assist him to the extent of passing rapidly through the resolution stage and reaching the introduction of the bill, because the following week the house would revert to the debate on the address and if we had not succeeded in getting the bill into our hands that night we should probably have had to wait a couple of weeks to see it.

As the minister drew to the end of his remarks I asked him the following questions as reported on page 930 of Hansard:

Did I understand the minister to say that the existing boards will be empowered only to carry out transactions connected with agreements which the government has entered into with other countries, or will this bill enable the boards to carry out other undertakings which they have taken on with regard to shipments out of one province into another province?

Mr. Gardiner: The bill will cover interprovincial and international shipments.

Mr. Stirling: Not only connected with the agreement?

Mr. Gardiner: Not only connected with the agreement. It does provide authority to deal with interprovincial transactions.

When we received the bill and were able to read it we could find nothing whatever in it to warrant the minister in giving these answers; and in consequence the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, with three of his colleagues, called on the minister and asked him to be good enough to explain what the answers to me meant. On that occasion he told them that he had certain amendments in contemplation which he might move when the bill reached committee stage. He indicated that it would still be possible for the existing boards to carry on under the powers granted by the order in council under the War Measures Act, in the regulatory work which they had been doing outside the provinces in which these boards were set up. Again last night when the minister told us of the amendment that he proposed to move but did not indicate its character, he said that it would be possible for these existing boards to carry out regulatory work both in export and in interprovincial trade.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to apples.

Mr. STIRLING: Yes. The minister has restricted this amendment to apples, and although a small slice of bread is better than a whole loaf if you cannot get the whole loaf, it scarcely comports with what the minister is stated to have said to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture when they met the government. I read these few words from the report got out by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture on what took place during the discussion with the cabinet:

> Mr. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, announced that he was introducing into the commons, an act which would carry on the powers and functions of various marketing boards which had been functioning during the war and up to the present. He indicated also that the act would convey powers which would make it possible for the government to meet part of the wishes of the delegation with respect to federal marketing legislation. However, he stated the act would only be in force for one year, to be reenacted again at that time if desired.

When we see the restrictions contained in the amendment, in that they refer to apples only and it is not by any means clear that they cover export trade as well as interprovincial trade, it leaves us with the doubt which we must carry in our minds until we reach the committee stage of the bill and can discuss them at greater length.

I therefore sum up in this way, Mr. Speaker. We quite realize that it is necessary for the government to obtain the commodities required for certain international agreements which they have arrived at, but we contend that before the disposition of the farmers' produce should be made, and particularly before the price is arbitrarily set by the minister, the farmers should have an opportunity of indicating their wishes with regard to what they have produced and the price at which they are able to sell it.

Mr. J. W. BURTON (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), but I regret that the acoustics of the house are such that I am seldom able to hear all that he says. I regret especially that I was unable to follow his entire argument in support of the amendment that he moved, but I hope that as I proceed I shall be able to gather the ends together where they may be somewhat apart. While he and I may deal with this question from different angles, I am certain we both have the sincere desire of doing something worthwhile for agriculture.

I should like to deal briefly with the general principles of the bill as they are outlined in the preamble. I shall read only that part of it which sets out what is really the main reason why the government considers it necessary to have this piece of legislation. I quote:

> And whereas certain orders and regulations were made by the governor in council under the authority of the War Measures Act and the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, 1945, for the purpose of enabling Canada to carry out the said agreements;—

I might interject there, Mr. Speaker, that previously they were dealing with the agreements which the government had signed.

> —And whereas the said orders and regulations will expire on March 31, 1947, and it is necessary by reason of the existing national emergency that parliament confer authority to enable the government of Canada to fulfil its obligations under the said agreements and to continue to sell and export food supplies to distressed countries for the relief of suffering and the distribution of essential food supplies, in order to maintain economic stability and to ensure an orderly transition from war to peace.

I should just like to emphasize that last part:

—"in order to maintain economic stability and to ensure an orderly transition from war to peace." I ask the government what period of time they would set as the transitional period. I think that is important. While the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) tabled some agreements today, I regret that we did not have them soon enough to get a little insight as to how long some of these agreements are to carry on. As I understand it, they are all for different periods of time, with the result that this act will be applicable for the purposes of one agreement which may be for two years and another which may be for a longer period. I should like to know what the government consider to be a reasonable length of time for the transitional period.

This bill is not what the organized farmers wanted or asked for. We had handed to us last evening a slip of paper which has quite a bit of typing on it, and which the Minister of Agriculture submitted for our consideration as an amendment to the bill which is before us. I shall not read the entire amendment; all those who are interested have no doubt read it. I consider it an improvement over what the minister had in the bill before, but if already he finds it necessary to submit an amendment to the bill, surely the bill in its original form did not receive all the consideration it should have received.

There is just the one point that I wish to emphasize. In paragraph (b) of subsection 5(1) of the proposed amendment of the Minister of Agriculture there are these words:

> For the purpose of regulating the movement of apples from one province to another and requiring that any such movement be made only by or under the authority of a provincial marketing board.

That is all very good; but surely the organized apple growers of British Columbia and Nova Scotia and other parts of the dominion are in a much better position to make their wants known to the government than almost any other branch of agriculture which may be dealt with under this act. Yet apparently this was overlooked until just the last moment.

This bill does not go as far as the organized farmers want it to go. I would remind the house that some time ago we were discussing another related matter to which I hope I may refer without transgressing the rules of the house. While this matter was under discussion we were informed that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture was holding a conference in the city of Ottawa, and we were told we should wait with the proposals being advanced at that time until we found out what the organized farmers wanted. Well, Mr. Speaker, other hon. members as well as I attended that conference, for at least part of the time, and I was pleased and more than surprised to hear the almost unanimous demand for legislation along the lines advocated by members of this group for quite a number of years. In their discussions they emphasized in no uncertain terms the fact that no longer should conditions be tolerated under which a small minority, for selfish reasons or otherwise, could upset orderly marketing for the great majority of the producers of certain commodities. In that connection I should like to quote briefly from an editorial appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of March 11, in reference to this conference. Here are the final sentences of the editorial:

> The request for compulsory marketing agencies is not restricted to grains. The federation has presented the government with a draft of a dominion farm products marketing act. This bill calls for establishment of marketing boards to handle interprovincial and export trade in all agricultural products. And it has asked that the government bring it before parliament this session.
> The federation's action indicates that the farmers have not the horror of planned marketing which some attribute to them. Rather they appear to believe that uncontrolled marketing holds greater dangers. No doubt they remember the confusion and starvation prices of prewar days. And they do not desire to have their livelihood again dependent upon the whims of market speculators.

Just to give an idea of what they think should be in a bill of this kind I am going to draw to the attention of hon. members, through you, Mr. Speaker, three portions of the draft bill presented by the federation. I need not bother with the sections or details, but will refer first to the short title. There they want the name to be "The Farm Products Marketing Act". May I mention in passing that the bill now before us makes no mention of being a marketing act. Furthermore, the federation specify this draft as—

> An act to improve the methods and practices of the marketing of farm products in interprovincial trade within Canada, and in export trade, and to make provision for the regulation and control of trade and commerce therein, and to make further provision in connection therewith.

Then under "Purpose and intent" they say:

> The purpose and intent of this act is to provide in respect to interprovincial trade in Canada and in export trade, for the improvement of the methods and practices of marketing of farm products, in any or all respects and in whole or lation or prohibition of the marketing of farm products, in any or all respects and in whole or in part.

I submit that originally the legislation now under consideration did not contain provision for anything in respect to interprovincial trade, until the minister brought in his proposed amendment last evening. I should like to say a few words about the stand taken by the C.C.F. group in respect to orderly marketing during all these years. Time after time spokesmen for this group have placed before parliament our belief that, as I mentioned a few moments before, we should not have a condition under which a few, for selfish or other reasons, could upset orderly marketing for the great majority of the producers. That belief dates right back to the time we first formed our political association. In that connection I refer to a document known as the Regina manifesto, drawn up at the first national convention held at Regina in July, 1933, setting out the policies and principles of this organization. I need not take time to quote from that document except that portion pertaining to the matter under consideration today, but I can assure hon. members that it contains some interesting proposals. Item No. 4 of the plank concerning agriculture deals with this very question. It says:

The substitution for the present system of foreign trade, of a system of import and export boards to improve the efficiency of overseas marketing, to control prices, and to integrate the foreign trade policy with the requirements of the national economic plan.

During all the years since 1933 we have been advocating this very thing; and as is pointed out in the editorial in the Ottawa Citizen which I quoted a short time ago, the organized farmers in more places than just the prairie provinces have come to lose their fear of orderly marketing. In that connection I might repeat something I have stated on more than one occasion, something which has been stated by many hon. members of this group. I refer to the urgent need for stability in the marketing of our farm products. I contend that this bill does not give the farmers the required stability. In the first place, I can foresee the possibility that this bill may expire a year from now, while some provisions, dealing with certain agricultural products, may run for a number of years longer. In the different branches of agriculture we need a much longer range view than that. We need long-range planning to give the stability I mentioned a moment ago. Take the dairy branch of agriculture, and see the position the dairy people will be in if they must plan only from hand to mouth, so to speak, or from one year to another. We all know that those engaged in dairying must be able to plan their work for some years in advance. Hog production does not need quite as long a time as dairying. Yet this bill does not give those who are connected with hog production any assurance that they will have a long-range policy, or that it will afford them any stability. Beef cattle require a longer period. It takes from two and a half to three years for producers of beef cattle to cash in on their work.

In the matter of fruit, we have a type of farming in which a number of years are required before the farmer begins to realize any advantage from the work he has put in; therefore he needs a longer time in which to plan. Even vegetable growers require stability and planning in their markets. I am happy to say that they too are beginning to realize the necessity for controls and regulations. The great need is for coordination and control of interprovincial as well as export trade, and above all the desirability of as great a degree as possible of democratic control by the producers themselves. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright):

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"This bill be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the re-drafting of this bill to make provision for:

(a) A dominion marketing board to have control over the orderly marketing of any farm product in interprovincial trade within Canada and in export trade;

(b) Authority to confer on any existing local marketing board or agency established under law of a province, power to administer any scheme of the dominion marketing board in respect of interprovincial trade and export trade;

(c) The establishment where any provincial local marketing board or agency does not exist, of local marketing boards to administer any scheme of the dominion marketing board in respect of interprovincial trade and export trade, providing the establishment of such a board, is favoured by a majority of the producers in the area concerned, the membership of such a board to consist of producers of the regulated product in the area to which this scheme relates."

Mr. GARDINER: Rising to a point of order, I was going to deal with the amendment—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I understand the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Burton) has almost completed his observations.

Mr. GARDINER: I thought he had finished.

Mr. BURTON: I am interested in hearing what the minister's point of order is, but—

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the hon. member explain the difference between his amendment and that moved by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling)? I understand they are much alike, except that there is greater detail in the one offered by the hon. member for Humboldt. Will the hon. member elaborate upon it?

Mr. BURTON: I should be glad to, but there may be one or two other speakers to follow me, and they will do that. I admit that there is some similarity, yet my amendment covers a wider range of the subject matter under discussion. I am satisfied that there is enough difference to warrant the moving of the amendment to the amendment.

In the limited time I have to read the newspapers, I was astounded at an editorial in the Ottawa Journal of March 11, commenting on the editorials in the Winnipeg Free Press to which reference was made in the house yesterday. I shall not deal with the editorial in the Journal, more than to say that it appears to have taken it upon itself to consolidate the arguments advanced by the Winnipeg Free Press. The editorial in the Journal is entitled "Twilight of Freedom." The editor of the Ottawa Journal and others of like mind have been asleep so long they do not realize that instead of controlled and planned marketing as advocated by organized farmers being the "twilight of freedom," it is in fact the breaking of the dawn ushering in a new day when no longer the tillers of the soil will be exploited by those who would use a few in the industry for their own selfish ends.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: May I point out to the house that already we have an amendment before the house, and that the one offered by the hon. member for Humboldt is in the nature of an amendment to the amendment, or what is commonly called a subamendment. It is proposed in this subamendment that all the words in the amendment be stricken out. In my opinion it is not in order to do so. In such circumstances I believe the proper procedure would be to wait until the amendment itself is negatived, at which time the present amendment to the amendment could be offered as an amendment to the main motion.

In this connection I would refer hon. members to May, 12th edition, at page 266, where we find this statement:

> An amendment to a proposed amendment cannot be moved, if it proposes to leave out all the words of such proposed amendment, but in such a case the first amendment must be negatived before the second can be offered.

Therefore I must rule—

Mr. COLDWELL: Just before you rule, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that it does not strike out all the words in the amendment; it strikes out all the words in the amendment after the word "that". Therefore the whole amendment is not struck out. May I suggest that the procedure permits a member to move something which may vary the proposal or is declaratory of another principle. I may say that if that point is raised it may well be that this is the same as the motion moved by the hon. member for Yale, but there is an essential difference. If you read clauses (a) and (b) of the amendment to the amendment you will find there principles other than those included in the amendment moved by the hon. member. I suggest that it has been the custom in this house to accept subamendments in the term of the subamendment now before you and that the amendment has not been stricken out in its entirety since the word "that" is left in.

Mr. BRACKEN: If I may be permitted to do so, I should like to compliment the leader of the C.C.F. upon the ingenuity he has shown in supporting his subamendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: As the leader of the C.C.F. group has said, the words are not struck out, but all the effective words of the amendment are struck out.

Mr. COLDWELL: It does ont say "effective" in the book.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must rule that the subamendment is out of order.

Mr. COLDWELL: I will move it later on.

Mr. GARDINER: The point of order which I intended to raise was not in regard to the amendment to the amendment; it was in regard to the amendment. Citation 755 of Beauchesne's, second edition, reads:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill.

The amendment reads as follows:

> That the said bill be not now read the second time, but that it be resolved that an Agricultural Products Act should be based on the principle that producer boards, set up under provincial marketing acts, where such boards exist or as they may from time to time come into existence, be used for the purposes of such Agricultural Products Act, instead of commodity boards established by the minister under section four of the said bill.

Reference is made to section 4 of the bill. If an amendment in these terms is to be moved to the bill the proper place to move it would be when that section is before the committee, not on the second reading. I suggest that section 4 provides for exactly what is suggested in the amendment. Action may be taken not only under the bill but under another act, and I refer to chapter 29 of the statutes of 1944-45, which is the Agricultural Prices Support Act. There is, under that act, the possibility of setting up boards which would do identically the same thing as is provided for in the bill we are discussing.

In other words, there are two different ways of dealing with the transition. We may deal with the transition under the Agricultural Prices Support Act, as we are doing in the case of potatoes, or we may deal with other products in other ways. That act provides in paragraph (i) of section 9:

> The minister under regulation passed by order in council has power

(i) to appoint commodity boards or other agents to undertake the purchase and the disposition of agricultural products.

Under that section we can appoint any agency that has been set up by any organization to undertake the purchase and sale of farm products. In the section referred to in the amendment it is provided that we may utilize the section of the other act for the purpose of setting up boards. If I am permitted to do so under the rules of the house, I should like to read the last part of section 4 which states:

The minister may direct that any agricultural product designated by him may be purchased for the purpose of this act or the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, only from a provincial marketing board.

In other words, where those boards do exist for the handling of products it is possible for us to do exactly what the hon. member for Yale thinks we ought to do. The bill provides for that. There are products dealt with in agreements for which no provincial boards exist. Apples happen to be the only product where there is a complete organization set up right across Canada by the producers to deal with the situation. I submit that the amendment does not change the legislation; it simply advocates something already provided for in the legislation. Second, it is an attempt to amend a section of the bill which can be amended in committee if we so desire. Such an amendment should not be considered on second reading as an amendment to the motion for second reading of the bill.

Mr. STIRLING: On the point of order, it would appear to me that the minister's case really turns on what is the principle of the bill. It is quite clear to me that the principle of the bill is that the minister shall be empowered to establish boards which can take and sell, at whatever prices he chooses to set, certain agricultural products.

Mr. GARDINER: There may be other boards.

Mr. STIRLING: The principle of the bill is to acquire, deliver, store and set the price. My contention is that that principle is not a good one. I submit that the man who produces the goods should have an opportunity of expressing his opinion with regard to the disposal of his goods and with regard to the price he shall receive for them. I would point out that, so far as the voice of agriculture is concerned, it would seem to indicate that the principle of this bill is not acceptable, but that this other principle is acceptable.

Mr. GARDINER: That raises another question which I do not think is open for discussion at the moment, the question as to whether we are to submit another piece of legislation to this house. The farm organization did not at any time make any representation with regard to this legislation except to the effect that it was acceptable. I have here the submission made to the government asking for a national marketing act. In reply to the hon. member for Humboldt, who brought up the point, I would say that this legislation is not entitled "a marketing act."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would ask the minister to confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. GARDINER: I am going to confine myself to the point of order if the speech of the hon. member for Yale is in order. I said at the beginning that I doubted whether either of our speeches were in order.

Mr. COLDWELL: I submit that these are not effective words on the point of order.

Mr. GARDINER: This submission states that a dominion farm products marketing act is essential to the economic welfare of agriculture, the basic industry of Canada. It states further, in effect, the authority and control which would be provided if such legislation were established and employed by the dominion government during the war years and subsequently as emergency measures in order to secure maximum production and efficient distribution for the purpose of fulfilling overseas commitments and contracts.

In other words, the suggestion is that we should have a marketing act which would contain the same provisions for doing with regard to the marketing of all farm products what was provided for with regard to some products in the orders in council during the war. This bill—and this was embodied in the reply quoted a few moments ago which I gave to the farm movement—does continue in existence the orders in council which were brought into effect during the war to set up boards to secure commodities under agreement to Britain. The only additional power contained in this bill, and purposely so, is the power which we had under another order in council to deal with apples. That power has been brought into the bill to enable us to deal under this measure with everything with which we were dealing in war time. I submit that it would be impossible to deal with them in any other way, because there are not set up in the provinces boards through which we could proceed immediately to get the commodities we must necessarily obtain to fulfil our contracts.

Mr. STIRLING: The federation at that time had not seen this bill, had they?

Mr. GARDINER: I should not like to answer that question.

Mr. STIRLING: Then, Mr. Speaker, I must ask the minister a further question. Had the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at the time to which he is referring seen Bill No. 25, which only appeared before us on the evening of the day of the interview to which I think the minister is now referring. The minister is referring to the first of the interviews that were had, to what he described as the submission.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Are we discussing your ruling, or are we in committee?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the point of order raised by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) is well taken, but I would point out that there cannot be a point of order raised on a point of order. The hon. member has drawn my attention to the fact that we should be discussing the point of order. The question which concerned me was whether or not the amendment declares a principle which is adverse to the principle of the bill. I noted the remarks of the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) as to his opposition to the principle of the bill, but I am not so sure that his amendment sets forth a different principle. Before the Minister of Agriculture rose I was giving consideration to the question which the hon. member has brought before the house, and it did occur to me that the amendment affected only one clause of the bill, clause 4, and that the bill could be amended in committee by an amendment to clause 4.

Mr. SENN: Mr. Speaker, the chief difference I see between the bill and the amendment is that the amendment would make the use of producer boards obligatory, while the bill itself makes it optional with the minister whether they shall be used or not.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Perhaps the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) is right and, if he is right, it again occurs to me that the amendment could be made when the bill is in committee.

Mr. FULTON: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that if that is the case it would mean that an amendment to be moved in committee would affect the very principle of the bill itself, because the amendment would practically involve the elimination of clause 3, which is half the principle of the bill. Clause 3 makes the minister the sole one to determine price and quantity. Under clause 4 there is the possibility that he may use the boards for certain purposes. But the resolution embodied the principle that producer boards should be used for all these purposes, including the setting of prices and dealing with quantities. Therefore it seems to me that the amendment involves a definite departure in principle when it says that producer boards shall be used, for in clause 3 of the bill the minister is made the sole agent to determine these matters. It seems to me to be clearly a question of principle.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not what clause 3 says. It says the governor in council.

Mr. FULTON: My reading of clause 3 is that the minister sells on behalf of the Canadian government and buys on behalf of foreign governments and enters into contracts for the storing and processing of agricultural products.

Mr. GARDINER: Subject to any regulations made by the governor in council.

Mr. FULTON: Well, the minister or the governor in council; at all events it is the cabinet authority, and certainly not producer boards. That is one-half of the main principle of the bill and it is diametrically opposed to the principle of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Yale.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have listened attentively to what has been said both for and against the amendment being in order. I would refer hon. members to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Third Edition, paragraph 755, which says in part:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill to move as an amendment . . . a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill.

The amendment before the house does not, in my opinion, set forth a principle adverse to the principle set forth in the bill but sets forth a different method of putting the principle of the bill into effect. The object of the amendment could be obtained just as well by amending a certain clause in committee.

Mr. FULTON: You would have to amend two clauses.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Perhaps two or more clauses. For these reasons I declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago it is clearly a question of opinion as to what is the principle of the bill. We differ so much from Your Honour's view as to what the principle of the bill is that I must respectfully appeal from your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER put the question as follows: The question before the house is an appeal from the ruling given by the Speaker. Bill No. 25, to provide for the sale and export of agricultural products was before the house for second reading. Mr. Stirling moved, seconded by Mr. Charlton:

That the said bill be not now read the second time, but that it be resolved that an Agricultural Products Act should be based on the principle that producer boards, set up under provincial marketing acts, where such boards exist or as they may from time to time come into existence, be used for the purposes of such agricultural products act, instead of commodity boards established by the minister under section four of the said bill.

This amendment was declared out of order on the ground that it was not declaratory of any principle adverse to the principle of the bill, and further that it dealt with a matter which could be considered when the bill is in committee of the whole.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the chair was sustained on the following division:

(Text):

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, on the second reading of this bill I should like to quote a few words written by a member of the wheat pool and found in the Agricultural Institute Review of September, 1945, at page 28:

> With the floor price legislation proposed we now have two opposing policies offered to Canadian agriculture for the post war years. The first policy is the laissez-faire, do nothing, take it on the chin, rugged individualistic stupidity we have experienced in the past, and under which, when the depression becomes too severe, we unfortunately have a war to pull us out of the economic mess.

I think, after the vote that was taken last night, we can take it for granted that there are only seven members of this house who believe in that type of policy. In considering this bill which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has placed before the house today, I think hon. members are anxious to try to get the best bill they can for agriculture in this transitional period and for the years to come.

Therefore I think anything said in this discussion can be taken as an honest effort on the part of hon. members to create better conditions for the industry of agriculture in this country.

As to the principle of the bill, I do not think much exception can be taken to it; at least we in this group take no exception to it. However, we believe that principle cannot be carried into effect by the bill in its present form, since it is merely to cover a transitional period. As yet no one has been able to define what that transitional period is. I can remember quite well coming back after the first war and taking up land under the soldier settlement board. I remember the drop in prices of agricultural products which took place in 1921, and then the gradual rise from 1924 to 1928. We thought we were through with the transitional period by that time; we thought we had got over the effects of that war. In the latter part of 1928 and in 1929, however, we found we had only begun to feel the effects of the war. Today how can we judge what will be the transitional period? Is this bill constitutional? If a case is taken to the courts in a year or two from now, will the courts decide that we are still in a transitional period? I do not know, and I do not believe the minister knows. Therefore I believe this bill should do more than just carry on certain orders in council during the transitional period. It should give some stability to agriculture in this country. I know of cooperatives in the old country who wish to establish purchasing agencies in this country, who would like to start to build up business contacts here, but who are doubtful, under this transitional form of legislation that has been introduced in Canada with respect to the marketing of agricultural products, whether it would be advisable for them to make the necessary investments here, not knowing just how long we might carry on under our present forms of marketing. Therefore, instead of bringing in this order in council legislation, which is about what it amounts to, I think the government should have brought in something more definite and more permanent, which would give the necessary assurance of stability to our agricultural industry at the present time.

As to our floor price legislation, we do not know where the floor prices are to be set. They may be fixed at a level which will give a reasonable return to agriculture, and again they may not. When the floor price legislation was introduced the Minister of Agriculture had this to say, as reported at page 5612 of Hansard for 1944:

> Then I should say it would be unfair to the farmer immediately to require him to sell at the cost of production, without considering at all any losses he sustained because of the war or any returns he was denied through the controls established during the war. The suggestion was made that farmers had been denied returns in the earlier part of the war and that just at the time when in the ordinary course of events, according to the experiences of the last war, he would have reaped some returns which would have been helpful to him, ceilings were placed upon prices, as a result of which he was denied as great a return as otherwise he might have received. All those matters would have to be taken into consideration during the transition period along the lines I have suggested.

In this legislation there is no indication that this will be done; that is why I feel the bill should be more definite. That is why the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Burton) moved his amendment, which did add certain new principles to the bill. That amendment was ruled out of order because it deleted the Conservative amendment. Now that the Conservative amendment has been ruled out of order, I believe our amendment will be in order. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum):

> That this bill be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the redrafting of this bill to make provision for:

(a) A dominion marketing board to have control over the orderly marketing of any farm product in interprovincial trade within Canada and in export trade;

(b) Authority to confer on any existing local marketing board or agency established under law of a province, power to administer any scheme of the dominion marketing board in respect of interprovincial trade and export trade;

(c) The establishment where any provincial local marketing board or agency does not exist, of local marketing boards to administer any scheme of the dominion marketing board in respect of interprovincial trade and export trade, providing the establishment of such a board, is favoured by a majority of the producers in the area concerned, the membership of such a board to consist of producers of the regulated product in the area to which this scheme relates.

This amendment has two purposes, the first of which is to see that the bill covers interprovincial trade. The bill, as it was presented by the minister, contained no reference to interprovincial trade, except in the amendment he tabled last evening. That amendment refers to one specific product, but that is not sufficient to meet the needs of agriculture in Canada at the present time. That was the statement made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at their recent meeting in Ottawa. I have in my hand, their brief, in which they say this interprovincial provision is necessary in connection with beans, peas, milk and a great many other agricultural products where small groups of growers, perhaps not more than five or ten per cent of the total number, were marketing their products outside the province and thereby spoiling the work of the commodity board controlling the product within the province. So I believe that provision should be extended, by concurrent legislation or, if the dominion has the power, by the dominion transferring that power to the provincial board in some way, to prevent this interference with the work of provincial boards in the marketing of their products. I am not a lawyer; I do not know where the constitutional authority lies, but I know that either the province or the dominion must have it, because the dominion has any residue of powers not given to the provinces. Therefore the federal government should be able to eliminate this difficulty which the provincial boards are meeting at this time. If it can be done with regard to apples, which from the amendment introduced by the minister I judge it is proposed to do, I see no reason why it cannot be done in connection with other products as well, and I believe the act should say so clearly.

The other point in which this amendment differs from the bill is that we state definitely that the boards set up under this legislation will be producer boards, that the growers of the product within the area in which the board is set up shall compose the board. That can be varied; if a majority of the producers wish to elect someone else to the board, well and good, but certainly the producers themselves should have control over the local marketing boards. That is a democratic principle which we cannot get away from, and something which should be included in the legislation. This legislation can never work successfully until it has the full cooperation of the producers of the product to be controlled. It goes without saying that a thousand ways would be found of getting away from the regulations and orders of the board, if the producers themselves are not behind it.

We think the only way the producer can or will be 100 per cent, or to any appreciable percentage, behind the scheme, is by seeing that the local boards are under their control. That has been the policy of this group for many years. We say that the producers themselves should have the domestic control of their product. When it comes to a matter of exporting, where the producers themselves go into the export market; and where products are being produced in different provinces, that is the place where the dominion government should step in, coordinate the work and see that the exporting is done on the basis of the Canadian economy, and not on the basis of provincial economy.

Those are the reasons why we move the amendments. We think they are good amendments, and we say they should have the support of the house. I say the Minister of Agriculture on behalf of the government should be prepared to accept such a reasonable proposal, which is in the interests of agriculture in Canada.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I ask a question? Does the amendment coincide or agree with that offered by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture? It will be understood I am not speaking against it. I ask this question because I am particularly in favour of marketing legislation. But I do not think that by your amendment or by any other amendment we can gain the point you and I wish to gain for our farmers, if it is to be declared ultra vires, as it has been in the past. Has the hon. member's amendment been submitted to someone?

Mr. WRIGHT: Our amendment has not been submitted to anyone, except our own group.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Does it conform with the suggestion of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture?

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Their suggestion has been submitted?

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes; it conforms closely to what is stated in the draft bill submitted by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I believe all hon. members have copies of that draft bill, and these amendments of ours follow pretty much along the same line. Of course the bill suggested by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture goes much further. They want a natural products marketing act. We are trying to amend this measure. We have no indication from the government that they have any intention of bringing in a natural products marketing act. But we are trying to see that this measure is amended at least to the point where it will permit orderly marketing interprovincially and in export trade.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to ask another question. Unfortunately, because of an appointment with a doctor I was not able to be here this afternoon, and I did not hear the discussion. I am particularly interested in the orderly marketing of milk. The only way we can attain that in British Columbia is by pooling. Therefore I am interested in learning if the suggested amendment embraces that feature. I do not think the hon. member would expect me to take in, in a minute. the full meaning of the amendment. That is why I have asked particularly how it compares with the bill offered by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Mr. WRIGHT: It would apply to any agricultural products which under the bill were declared to be products which they wish to control.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The majority of them.

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call the attention of hon. members to standing order 75, and to citation 755 which states:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill to move as an amendment to the question a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill.

I am sorry, but I have to declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. COLDWELL: Just a minute; before Your Honour rules, may I point out that the amendment now moved is in a position somewhat different from that moved by the hon. member for Yale, although I believed at the time that his amendment was in order.

It seems to me that this amendment does exactly what the rule provides, where it states:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill.

If we look at the bill before us, which relates to the marketing of certain agricultural products, it will be seen that it relates to the marketing of those products under, as the title indicates, an act to provide for the sale and export of agricultural products. Then, when we look further into the bill we find that the reason for bringing it before the house at the present time is that there are certain agreements which make it necessary for us to have a measure of this description.

We want to see something wider and more comprehensive, because we consider it imperative that there be a measure of that kind. We should like to see a natural products marketing act, one which would be entirely comprehensive and along the lines of the draft submitted by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Consequently, because we cannot introduce such a bill, we are endeavouring to state our position in regard to this matter in a manner which we believe is permitted by the rules, and entirely consistent with them. We have suggested a federal act providing for interprovincial trade and for export trade, all under the control of the producers of a given commodity in the area where that commodity is produced. And if a majority of the producers agree to that, we suggest that such a plan shall go into effect. That principle, I submit, is entirely in conformity with the rules, in that it declares some principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of the bill now before us. For these reasons I submit the amendment is in order.

Mr. WRIGHT: On the point of order, Your Honour has said it is permissible to amend where an addition is made. The bill states definitely that apples shall be controlled interprovincially. My amendment enlarges that so as to include all agricultural products. Therefore it is an addition.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry, but the hon. member is out of order. There is no point of order before the house. I must declare the amendment out of order, and for the same reasons as I gave in respect of the one moved by the official opposition, namely that it was not declaratory of any principle adverse to the principle of the bill. Further it deals with a matter which could be considered when the bill is in committee of the whole. I would draw the attention of the house to the fact that this ruling is similar to the one which I gave in connection with a previous amendment and which was sustained by the house a few minutes ago.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that your ruling?

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. COLDWELL: I hesitate to do so, but with all due respect I must challenge that ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER put the question as follows:

The house was considering the second reading of Bill No. 25, to provide for the sale and export of agricultural products. The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright), seconded by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum), moved in amendment:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the redrafting of this bill to make provision for:

(a) A dominion marketing board to have control over the orderly marketing of any farm product in interprovincial trade within Canada and in export trade;

(b) Authority to confer on any existing local marketing board or agency established under law of a province, power to administer any scheme of the dominion marketing board in respect of interprovincial trade and export trade;

(c) The establishment where any provincial local marketing board or agency does not exist, of local marketing boards to administer any scheme of the dominion marketing board in respect of interprovincial trade and export trade, providing the establishment of such a board, is favoured by a majority of the producers in the area concerned, the membership of such a board to consist of producers of the regulated product in the area to which this scheme relates.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the chair was sustained on the following division:

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. A. CHARLTON (Brant): At this stage of the discussion it is difficult for me to understand the attitude taken by the C.C.F. party toward this bill, particularly in view of the statements which were made in the house two weeks ago and which I shall quote. I said that my interpretation of what the Canadian Federation of Agriculture wanted was not government control of marketing but enabling legislation by which they could control their own markets. That was the statement I made two weeks ago. The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) both took me seriously to task on that statement. I do not think it is necessary for me to quote very much, but I wish to quote some of the remarks of the hon. member for Melfort.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CHARLTON: The hon. member for Melfort said, as reported at page 869 of Hansard:

> Having listened to the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Charlton), may I say I think he will find, when the recommendations are presented to the government—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must remind the hon. member that he is not permitted to discuss a bill which has already been passed by the house.

Mr. CHARLTON: Then, in my own words, both the hon. member for Melfort and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said I was wrong in my statement. In spite of that, they moved an amendment which is practically identical to ours, saying, in effect, that they do not want the government to control the Agricultural Products Marketing Act. They say that they want the same thing as we do, practically, namely, that the farmers should be permitted to control the sale of their own products. I do not know when this change came about, but apparently it has been quite recent. Whether or not it is a case of their trying to follow the demands of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, I do not know and I should not like to say. Nobody can accuse me of changing my mind in the house in that regard. I have been definite at any time that I have said anything on it. I am not in favour of government control. If there has to be any control, then the farmers should be allowed to control their own destiny.

So far as this bill is concerned, there is no doubt in my mind, although I may not be able to read into it what the minister can read in it, that it is purely and simply government control of farm products. Evidently the minister himself can read into the bill what was asked for in the amendment which we moved; but it is not there for me to see. There are too many "mays" in the thing for me to take it at its face value. Surely the minister does not think the farmers of Canada are so helpless that they cannot run their own business. At least I hope he does not think so. When given half a chance they have done not a bad job in the past, except during the depression, which was not their fault.

Contrary to the statement of the minister as recorded on page 937 of Hansard, this bill does not give the Canadian Federation of Agriculture what they have asked for; hence by our amendment today we endeavoured to point out to the government that the producer boards as set up under the provincial marketing acts should be allowed to conduct their own business, instead of having it done for them by government controlled commodities boards, as set forth in the bill.

I should like to quote a portion of Mr. Hannam's address which has been referred to often in the house. The meeting was held in Ottawa at the Chateau Laurier on February 26 of this year. This is just part of what he said, in speaking of the type of marketing for which they were asking:

> This type of marketing is midway between state marketing such as the Canadian wheat board, and purely voluntary associations of farmers for marketing purposes. Instead of state marketing with state regulations, state financing and state management, we are asking the state to give groups of producers a chance to do their own marketing. It is essentially a self-help procedure.

The minister may say that the farmers of Ontario may not want this. To prove that the farmers of Ontario do want it, they have set up the following schemes under the provincial marketing act: cheese; asparagus growers; pear, plum and cheery growers; peach growers; vegetable growers; including tomatoes, green peas, sweet corn and green or waxed beans. They have a seed corn growers association; a sugar beet growers marketing scheme; a berry growers marketing scheme, and the last, a hog producers marketing scheme. During the next month or so I believe there are three or more to be voted on, which include cream producers, grape and soya bean producers. I contend that the producer himself as represented by the producers boards should have some consideration when prices are being fixed by contract for the products which he produces, under this bill. As it stands, the minister seeks the authority to make contracts either with government or government agencies or agencies of any kind to fix the prices and actually to confiscate, seize or, in any way he so desires, to get hold of that product to fulfil such contracts at a price fixed by the minister himself.

As I said before, the minister may be able to read into this bill certain things that are not clear to us. I hope he can; I hope he does that, but it is not satisfactory to us. He says, it is there and he can use it if he wants to. We want to make it definite that it will be used and not left to the discretion of the minister as to whether he will use it or not.

During the war years the farmers accepted controls as part of their war effort; but now that controls are being lifted on many of the articles the farmers buy, they are being asked to accept the maintenance of controls by the government on the produce they have to sell. As I said before, if we must have controls, let the farmers themselves do the controlling. I think they are the people who should do the controlling, if there is to be any control. I can assure you, sir, that it would be much more conducive to good will and understanding among governments, producers and consumers if this were done. If this bill is an indication of what the government's agricultural policy might be, it is only fair to warn the government that there will be a greater number of farm sales in the country and a good many more acres of good soil lying idle in the next few years.

The producers of Canada are now being asked to produce and deliver to Great Britain many products at prices which are less than the English farmer himself is obtaining for those products. I am not saying that we should not supply those products to England at the prices at which we are supplying them, for the sake of the British people. But if Canada wants to do that—and it is a wonderful gesture on the part of Canada—let the Canadian people as a whole bear the burden and not the farmers alone. I believe the farmers have always accepted their share of responsibilities without receiving a fair share of the returns from their product. I believe this bill discounts the ability of the organized farmers to bargain for themselves. It obviously does that. It is easy enough for government officials to sit back and say what is best for us; but I believe the producers themselves, if given the opportunity, are quite capable of doing a worth-while job for themselves, for the consumers of this country and for the world at large. I would therefore strongly urge that the government give every consideration to the wishes of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and allow them the privilege of doing their own marketing.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, after having listened to the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Charlton) speaking earlier this session, I am rather at a loss to understand why he voted as he did last night. When the vote was taken on the wheat board bill there were seven members who rose in their places in this house and expressed opinions along lines similar to those expressed by the hon. member who has just spoken. But I notice that the hon. member for Brant was one of those who voted with the 171 C.C.F. and other members of this chamber, indicating that they felt that this bill which has been before the house for some time was a step in the right direction.

I think it is well recognized that the farmers are not asking for any special consideration when they seek legislation of this sort. The hon. member for Brant comes from a part of Canada which has benefited for a great number of years from class legislation which was imposed by this parliament. I happened to look up the Saskatchewan brief which was presented to the Sirois-Rowell commission a few years ago, which tells the story of what the tariffs in Canada have meant to my friend, the hon. member for Brant, and what they have meant to the people I represent. Over a period of years the people of Saskatchewan, according to the statistical work done by the late Norman Rogers, who was a professor at Queen's, the tariffs have cost the people of Saskatchewan approximately $29,000,000 a year; the people of Manitoba, $29,000,000, and the people of Alberta, $27,000,000. Two provinces in Canada have benefited from those tariffs. The province of Quebec has benefited to the tune of $11.03 per person per year and Ontario to the tune of $15 per person per year.

An hon. MEMBER: I did not get my share.

Mr. NICHOLSON: You probably represent people who have had a great deal more than that. I think there was justification in the early days in Canadian history for deciding that it was important that we establish industries in Canada; and we have taken a great deal of money from the rank and file of the people to bolster up the poor manufacturers in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. HOMUTH: How are your socialized industries in Saskatchewan doing?

Mr. NICHOLSON: They are doing very well, thank you. The situation in which Canadians now find themselves is that we are bound to play an important part in supplying food to countries which have been ravaged by war and countries which have been denied the technical and industrial achievements which have been ours for many years. I am sure we are all very proud of the fact that Canada is recognizing that we have a responsibility to see that the great resources of this country are not regarded as the sole right of the eleven and a half million people who are here and to see that the people in Great Britain are able to get foods at the present time when they probably would not be able to buy if we insisted on a gold settlement or cash on the barrel-head. In view of the position in which Canadians find themselves as a result of the war, and the position in which the British people find themselves, I think it ill becomes us to complain about the terms on which we have supplied food to Great Britain. As a member of the food and agriculture organization, we are committed to go along with other nations in trying to solve this important problem of having enough food so that there will be no one anywhere in the world who is compelled to go day after day without having enough food to eat. In the proposals for a world food board as suggested in Washington in July of last year, mention is made that the farmers themselves who produce the foods in most countries find themselves in the position where they have not been able to realize enough from the sale of the foodstuffs so that they can consume enough; and it was agreed that some techniques must be discovered so that those disabilities might disappear. One of the paragraphs in this publication "Proposals for a World Food Board", on page 4, reads as follows:

[Mr. Nicholson.]

While many farmers of exceptional ability, including foresight in predicting price changes, are prosperous over a series of years, the vast majority of food producers have a lower net income and a lower standard of living than men of equal skill in other industries. It has long been recognized that the primary producer does not get a share of the world's total wealth commensurate with the proportion he creates. This is not only a social injustice; it is an economic problem because the low purchasing power of food producers is a limiting factor in the market for industrial products. In turn, limitation of industrial prosperity and hence of the purchasing power of industrial producers limits the market for agricultural products . . .

In the United States of America in the first year after world war I industrial production was seventeen per cent above the level of the last pre-war year. When the shortage caused by the war was made good, markets could not absorb output, and within two years thirty-one per cent of the factory workers were unemployed. The economic demand for foodstuffs fell and brought about a drastic fall in prices. The average annual income per farm fell in two years from $1,360 to $466. Other highly industrialized countries found themselves in the same position . . .

Canada is in even a worse position.

If I might refer again to the evidence given before the Rowell-Sirois commission, agricultural income in 1926 was $728,000,000, and by 1932 it had dropped to $144,000,000. Picture yourself as a farmer in Canada. You find that through no fault of your own, as a result of world conditions and a so-called depression, your cash income has slumped from $728 to $144. Of course the area which suffered the worst impact of the depression was the prairie provinces. In Saskatchewan, for example, the net income dropped from $203,000,000 to $31,800,000, and the farmers were in a difficult position.

Therefore I think it is only reasonable to argue that the citizens of the country as a whole should be prepared to take a long view of the problem of marketing. There is no good reason why a bushel of wheat should be worth $2 this year and fifty cents next year. There is no reason why it should be worth $1 today, $1.25 tomorrow, and seventy-five cents the day after. As long as I can remember, producers of farm products in all parts of Canada have been at the mercy of fluctuating prices, so that from one year to another they could never be sure what their income would be. While the farmers have made a great deal of progress in solving their own problems, and while they are a capable group, I believe they are not unreasonable in asking that the state as a whole set up machinery to guarantee that prices will not fall below certain levels and that speculators will not be able to come between producer and consumer and skim off the cream. All Saskatchewan members are familiar with one of the strongest cooperative farm organizations in Canada, and indeed on this continent; that is, the wheat pool. We made a great deal of progress; but when the collapse in prices came in 1928 and 1929 both Liberal and Conservative governments recognized that the consequences of the collapse affected the whole people, and dominion and provincial governments did interest themselves to the extent of stepping into the picture. It is true that they came in late, and were not very generous, but they recognized that it was a national problem.

So I believe we are on sound ground now as we look forward to the transitional period. This afternoon the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) correctly mentioned that it is difficult to say just how long this transitional period may last. Following the war of 1914-18, Great Britain passed certain legislation dealing with rent control and housing, for the transitional period. That transitional period is not yet over. Many of those regulations have never been repealed; they are still in the transitional period which followed the war of 1914-18. So I believe the government should be coming to parliament with proposals for long-range marketing plans. It is obvious that you cannot go into dairying or wheat or potato growing on a week's notice, a month's notice, or even a year's notice.

If I would not be out of order I should like to quote from a speech made by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Michaud) during the debate on the speech from the throne. The hon. gentleman was speaking for the potato growers in his constituency. It sounded like a C.C.F. speech, but it was not. He merely said there was something wrong with the set-up when the more potatoes you produced, the hungrier people were. Surely the eleven and a half million people of Canada can make plans that will assure us a marketing programme so that those who produce desirable foodstuffs can be assured that there will be a market; that apples will not be dumped in the beautiful valleys of the constituency represented by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), when the people I represent cannot buy apples because the price of wheat is around nineteen or twenty cents a bushel at the elevator. We should be able to work out our own salvation in regard to these problems; but the apple producers, the wheat producers or the potato producers in any part of Canada do not have the facilities to determine the possible consumption at home and the demand abroad.

The fact that we are going to do it through the federal authorities does not make it less democratic. The potato producers are represented here in parliament. If at any time the Department of Agriculture or any boards created by this department try to impose improper regulations or conditions on the potato producers, they can get rid of the Minister of Agriculture or any government that fails to carry out a programme in the best interests of the people. I say we must keep in step with people in other countries throughout the world, who are looking to the future with a view to having different and better conditions than prevailed in the years before the war. During the meeting of the food and agriculture organization in Quebec, comments were made by some visitors to Canada which I think we might keep in mind. For example, Sir John Boyd Orr said that we were passing through the greatest crisis in the history of our civilization. This crisis has been brought about by the advance of science. These forces cannot be bottled up; either they must be harnessed to serve the ends of mankind, or they will break loose in a riot of destruction. He pointed out that, in FAO, governments have agreed to cooperate in a great world food scheme to bring freedom from want to all men regardless of race or colour. He believed that disease, misery and premature death can be replaced by health, happiness and life. Increased production of foods and prosperity for agriculture should follow. He thought that by cooperation in a world food scheme based upon the needs of mankind an atmosphere of international good will would develop. I suggest that legislation such as we have before us, if amended along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Melfort, would be a step in the right direction.

It is obvious that in its present form the bill has certain defects which should be remedied. The fact that the minister brought in an important amendment last evening suggests that some of the other producers in Canada who might be affected by this bill should be given an opportunity to come here and discuss the matter. So I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce):

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"this bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the committee on agriculture and colonization with instructions that they have power to recommend provision for

(1) The regulation of interprovincial trading;

(2) more democratic control by the producers of the proposed board or boards;

(3) a long-range marketing programme instead of a transitional programme."

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Speaking to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to point out some of the inconsistencies that are apparent in connection with the discussion which has been going on since this afternoon. Earlier in the session, when the provisions of other bills were before this house dealing with the orders in council which were utilized throughout the war for the purpose of doing things which neither this government nor any other government would desire to do in peace time, the position was strongly taken, particularly by the official opposition, that nothing new should be introduced into any of these bills. That is, we had orders in council which were passed for certain purposes under the War Measures Act, without in some instances having received first the assent of parliament to their being brought into effect. It was stated—and persistently—that in any legislation which was introduced, in order to make for a limited period of time those orders in council applicable to the transition period between war and peace, it was to be taken for granted that this house—and particularly members of the official opposition, in so far as they could prevent it, would not permit any new legislation being tacked on to any of the bills which were brought to the house in order to carry out the intent of making these orders in council applicable to the transition period.

Now we come to the House of Commons on this occasion, when the government has hesitated to put anything into this bill whatsoever which would be new legislation; we hesitated to the extent of not even providing for the marketing of apples under the agreements, through the fruit boards which have been set up by the provinces and organized nationally right across this country.

But in the discussions which took place in connection with the resolution, members in different parts of the house, and more particularly those of the official opposition, raised questions with regard to the fact that full provision was not made for that purpose in the bill. This warranted us in believing that the house would agree that to that extent we could depart from the general principle which was insisted upon in connection with all this legislation, and that we might bring into the legislation something which had not previously been provided for in the marketing of apples.

We have gone that far. I would say that the bill has introduced, in the slightest degree possible, some new ideas into the application of orders in council, for a limited period after the war is over.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. SENN: May I ask a question?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. SENN: Is it not so that rulings made this afternoon were to the effect that there was no new principle involved in the amendments?

Mr. GARDINER: I will come to that; but that is not the point I am referring to at the moment.

Now, members in speaking—and more particularly the hon. member who spoke first this evening—have taken the position that we should introduce into this legislation the whole marketing act which has been proposed by farm organizations. This afternoon the amendment which was proposed by the C.C.F. party could have been thrown out on a ground other than that stated by Mr. Speaker. That amendment provided for the setting up of a marketing board, such as is proposed in the model legislation which was presented to the government, and of which every member has a copy. It proposed the setting up of a model board to handle the marketing of farm products across Canada. That board is to be financed by the federal government. Of course it is obvious to hon. members that an amendment based upon that premise could not be introduced by a private member.

In other words, the proposals have been made to the house, from different parts of it, for the first time in this session, that in a type of legislation which has no other intent but that of providing for the application of orders in council for a period beyond the war, we should introduce all kinds of new things, and that we should apply it in any way that we see fit.

I do not think it would be proper to do that—even if the government desired to do so, any more than members of the official opposition thought at the beginning of this session it would be proper to do so. If and when legislation is brought down to deal with marketing on the basis suggested by the farm organizations, it should not be legislation which has in it provisions to deal with orders in council which were brought in during war time, which were applied during war time, and which are still being applied.

Why were these orders in council brought in, in the first instance? They were brought in so as to make it possible for the government, by compulsion, to take farm products and to send them to Great Britain for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, for the feeding of our own soldiers, for the feeding of the British people; indeed, for the feeding of any of the allied forces wherever they might be fighting.

To indicate what we did do under that legislation, let me point out that we went into Ontario and into Quebec and took all the cheese produced between May and October, in two different years of the war; we took all of it, and shipped it to Great Britain. We did not leave any of it here, at all. And at other times we used the authority we had under the act to go into packing plants and take the bacon, and to say to our own people, "You can have in this country only fifty per cent of what you were buying in 1940. The remainder of it is going to Great Britain."

In other words, the orders in council covered by this legislation have in them powers which I doubt very much even members of the socialist party would desire to have in legislation which is to be passed for the purpose of dealing with a situation which will arise in peace time.

We are suggesting in this legislation that for one year we be given authority to continue to do what we were doing in war time. We are not saying that everything we did during war time will be done; but we are saying, or suggesting, that the authority we had during war time should be allowed to us for one more year.

Then I suggested, on the resolution, that in all probability because of the fact that our contract extends through 1947 and 1948—two of them at least through 1949—we shall be coming back to parliament at the end of each one of those years asking for a continuation of the powers as they are related to any of the contracts still in existence. I said, we presumed that, at the end of each of those years, if circumstances warranted it, parliament would give us that authority.

There are persons belonging to the same group who, in this house, ever since the session began, have been saying that these compulsory powers ought to be taken away from the government, and that we should not have them. Then we have the suggestion made tonight that this bill, which is intended to continue only for one year. with authority to come back here and remodel it in order to take care of anything still to be taken care of, should at this time provide for a permanent marketing organization. If it is to satisfy the farm organizations it could not be anything other than a permanent bill.

Mr. CHARLTON: But not by order in council.

Mr. GARDINER: You will find that most of these bills are put into effect by order in council. There is very little legislation put on the statute books at any time that any government has any authority over that is not put into effect by order in council. In every bill that goes through this house provision is made for the government to make regulations and to do certain things by order in council. And the same would be true of any bill that may be passed with relation to the marketing of farm products.

The point I wish to make at the present time is this. There are persons who have been talking against compulsion being put into any of these measures or authority given to the government to compel, and who at the same time are talking in favour of a bill which goes much farther in the direction of compulsion—I am not saying whether I am in favour of it or otherwise—than most of the measures that have been before this house. What does this proposed bill provide for? It provides that if the majority of the farmers producing any farm product decide that they want to market their product a certain way, then everyone else in that community must market his product in that way.

These orders in council have given the government authority to go into the market at Montreal and take cheese and send it to Great Britain. They give the government authority to go to the packing plants and take the bacon and send it to Britain and agree to pay what it is worth. We have had that authority throughout the war; we have had that authority in connection with practically all farm products, and that is provided under the orders in council. We are suggesting putting that into a bill.

But the proposed legislation says that wherever the majority of a group of farmers, locally if the organization is a local one, provincially if it is a provincial one, and nationally if it is a national one, vote in favour of marketing a product in a certain way, then everyone else may be compelled to market his product in that way. I do not know how you could carry compulsion much farther than that, or compulsion that strikes at the individual to a greater extent. Again I say that I am not arguing—it has nothing to do with this bill—whether that is a good thing or a bad thing, but I wish to point out that if this last amendment, which I have not had time to read, is in order and carries, and if the legislation is sent to a committee to be changed in the manner suggested in the amendment, then this legislation passes out altogether and we get a new bill.

That new bill will deal with the situation for all time to come until some other parliament changes it. It will not deal with the situation with which this bill proposes to deal. This bill merely proposes to give us authority to go and get the food that is necessary to fulfil our obligations to Britain under the agreements which we have made during the last few years.

Mr. FULTON: And to set the price for all time.

Mr. GARDINER: Not for all time to come; for one year; to set the prices for those commodities in connection with which we have had agreements during the period of the war.

Mr. FULTON: And make new ones.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend says, "and make new ones." He says that we shall have the power to make new ones. I have told the members of this house on a number of occasions that the government has no intention of making new ones—

Mr. REID: We need a new one for eggs.

Mr. GARDINER: Take eggs, which have just been mentioned. The hon. member for Kamloops has been saying in the house that we should have new terms in the agreement with regard to eggs.

Mr. FULTON: Or a subsidy; one or the other.

Mr. GARDINER: Either case would require new terms. He says that we should have new terms with regard to eggs, and to that extent it may be a new arrangement. We have an agreement with Britain to supply her with some millions of dozens of eggs. Hon. members have been getting up in different parts of the house, some of them supporters of the government and some of them opposing the government, and saying that because of the changes which have occurred in the cost of feed with which the eggs are fed we must have higher prices for eggs.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): With which the hens are fed.

Mr. GARDINER: With which the eggs are fed. If you have eaten some of them which have been fed by grasshoppers you will know what I mean. Eggs are fed with feed that has gone up in price; therefore they contend that eggs must also go up in price. They say that we must meet the British and discuss with them the possibility of getting a higher price for our eggs. To the extent that we get that higher price, of course the agreement which was made will be changed.

Then we are discovering from time to time that the production of one product is going up and that the production of another product is coming down, and we must adjust the quantities which we are supplying under our agreements and let the British know what we shall have for them in the months ahead. To the extent that those things are necessary, it will be necessary to change the agreements and to carry out the changes which are made.

The discussion this evening has been most interesting to me because it has taken a form which I never expected to have the privilege of listening to in this house, particularly as it comes from the sources from which it does. There are some advantages as well as some disadvantages in having been in politics in this country for a long time. It is now thirty-three years since I entered a legislature of this country. It just happens that I entered the legislature of a province which has led the Dominion of Canada in the kind of legislation which hon. members directly opposite from me were advocating a few moments ago.

An hon. MEMBER: It is doing so yet.

Mr. GARDINER: It led Canada to such an extent that my socialist friends claim credit for having done things which were done thirty years ago.

Mr. COLDWELL: No, we do not.

Mr. GARDINER: I attended a dinner recently—I cannot say where it was because that would give the individual away—and this particular individual told me that he had had a most interesting trip to Regina last summer. I said, "Yes, we have a fine city and a fine province; I am glad you liked it." He said, "I had the advantage of having a letter of introduction from the leader of the C.C.F. party to the premier of Saskatchewan and the premier introduced me to one of his ministers who took me out to show me all the things done by the socialist government in Saskatchewan." I was getting more and more interested all the time but I kept quiet.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that possible?

Mr. WRIGHT: On a point of order—

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member will have plenty to talk about when I get through. This gentleman went on to say, "The minister took me out and showed me that fine building which the wheat pool has on Albert street in Regina. Then he took me over and showed me the fine headquarters which the cooperative creameries have two or three blocks down the same street. Then he took me out to one of those things—what is it you call it, a distillery?" I said, "No, there is no distillery in Regina that I know of; was it a brewery?" First he said, "A distillery." I said, "No, there is not a distillery in Regina that I know of. Is it a brewery?" He said, "No." Finally he said that it was a refinery. I said, "Do you mean the farmers' cooperative oil refinery half a mile out of the city of Regina?" He said, "Yes." He went on to say, "Those are some very fine industries, very fine commercial organizations." When he had gone that far I thought it was time for me to say something, so I asked him, "Do you know how long they have had a socialist government in Saskatchewan?" He said, "No, I really do not." I said, "They have had one for two years, and do you know how long ago it was that the refinery was started?" He said, "No," and I said, "It was about twelve years ago." I went on to say, "Do you know how long ago it was that the cooperative elevator system in Saskatchewan was started?" He said, "No." I said, "It was almost thirty years ago." I went on to say, "Do you know how long ago it was that the cooperative creamery was started?" He said, "No." I said, "I have forgotten the exact year myself, but when I was first premier of Saskatchewan between 1926 and 1929 I had all the creameries in Saskatchewan amalgamated under that organization prior to 1929."

What I wish to emphasize is that the organization of the farmers to run their own business was never a part of Conservative policy, either federally or provincially. At the time we were advocating that the farmers run their own business and set up cooperatives with which to do so, the Conservative party in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta was advocating government ownership of elevators in the provinces.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): When and where?

Mr. GARDINER: My friend was a Liberal at that time, and so he would not remember.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Thank heaven someone saw the light.

Mr. GARDINER: The Conservative party today may be surprised to learn that their forebears in the western provinces were advocates of government ownership, and they advocated government ownership because such a remarkable success had been made of government ownership of hydro electric power in Ontario. I was not at all surprised when Chancellor of the Exchequer Dalton, speaking at the Canadian club before Liberals and Conservatives a short time ago, said that he did not see why Conservatives in Great Britain should object to their government nationalizing the black power of Great Britain since the Conservatives had nationalized white power in the province of Ontario.

These are, of course, matters of political history. All I wish to point out is that when my hon. friends opposite set themselves up in this house as the advocates of a policy under which the farmers organized themselves to do their own business, they are advocating something which has been Liberal policy for at least the last thirty years and will continue to be Liberal policy as long as there is a Liberal party in this country.

On the other hand, our hon. friends of the socialist party are putting forth the best effort I have ever seen put forth by any party in any legislative body anywhere in Canada to do what? To kill this bill. Both amendments moved today would kill the bill. One was ruled out of order and the other, if it will be declared out of order—

Mr. COLDWELL: Did the minister say, "as it will be"?

Mr. GARDINER: If it will be. Let me say to my hon. friend that we did not suggest that the other amendment be declared out of order, but the fact is that either one of these amendments if put into effect would do away with this bill altogether and mean the bringing in of a new and entirely different bill.

Mr. COLDWELL: And a better bill.

Mr. GARDINER: It might be. But you should not do away with this bill while you are doing that. The better bill my hon. friend speaks of will not deal with the present situation and could not. I will explain why. There is only one board in this country which is organized on the basis that is suggested by the farmers across Canada, and that is the fruit board. The fruit board is organized provincially in Nova Scotia; it is organized provincially in British Columba; it is organized provincially in Ontario and elsewhere. It has a central organization which meets from time to time to discuss the problems of the industry and to submit its views on the apple industry to those concerned. There is no such organization as that in relation to bacon; there is no such organization as that in relation to cheese; there is no such organization as that in relation to eggs; and there is no such organization as that with regard to any farm product affected by the orders in council other than apples.

Therefore, if we were put in the position tomorrow of not having this bill so that we could go out and get farm products to supply the British contracts, of course we would not be able to continue to supply those contracts. If we came to the middle of May, as has been suggested, or, as it stands now, if we come to the 29th of this month without the enactment of this legislation, we would have no authority to go out and obtain the products that are necessary to supply the British contracts in any of those commodities referred to in the orders in council. So I say, Mr. Speaker, the house seems to have got away from discussing what is involved in the second reading of this legislation and to have been discussing something that is not involved here at all. Hon. members have been discussing whether we should have a marketing bill for all time in the Dominion of Canada. I submit that that is not the question which is before the house and that all the discussion in regard to it is entirely out of order. There is no motion before the house with regard to a marketing bill for farm products. There is no possibility of changing this bill into a marketing bill without destroying the results which must be obtained if we are to supply the British contracts. There is no possibility of doing the one thing without destroying the other. Consequently, if we are to have both things done, they must be done in two separate bills, and an attempt should not be made to put the other project into this bill. The farm organization realized that when they brought their representations before the government. This afternoon I quoted from the representations which they had made. It was this:

(1) A dominion farm products marketing act is essential to the economic welfare of agriculture, the basic industry of Canada.

(2) In effect the authority and control which would be provided by such legislation were established and employed by the dominion government during the war years and subsequently as emergency measures in order to secure maximum production and efficient distribution for the purpose of fulfilling overseas commitments and contracts which had to be honoured.

They said that we had most if not all of the authorities under the orders in council passed during the war with regard to a certain number of products, but they applied only to a certain number; and they said that they wanted legislation which would apply the same authorities or the greater part of them to all farm commodities in Canada. Then they said they had a method to suggest by which that might be done.

(3) Such legislation will be a major factor in providing stability for agriculture through the medium of orderly marketing, domestic and export.

(4) Such legislation will conduce to proper planning by agriculturists over the time or period of years which their particular branch of primary production demands.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Therefore be it resolved:

That this conference convened by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture with representatives of major agricultural organizations in attendance from all sections of the dominion ask that the directors of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture convey to the dominion cabinet the unanimous request of this meeting that legislation in line with the attached draft of a farm products marketing act, be introduced at the present session of parliament.

That is the submission made to the government. Attached to it is a model bill which provides for the authorities that I mentioned a few moments ago. It provides that this government set up a dominion marketing board; that we pay the costs of operating that board; that through the operation of the board we direct the activities of export and interprovincial trade in farm products along certain lines.

What was the answer given to that request? In 1939, the first month or so, of the war, the farm federation came to us with the same request. If I remember correctly, in 1939 there were only three or four provinces—I have forgotten the exact number—which had provincial marketing legislation. Since that time, all the provinces have adopted provincial marketing legislation. Nine provinces have set up legislation under which provincial marketing boards can be established. As every hon. member knows, the activities of the provincial marketing boards are confined to marketing within their own province. What is suggested is that we should set up a board which would take over the control of interprovincial and international marketing of farm products. When that suggestion was made in 1939 I made a statement to the farm federation at that time. The man who is president now was the president then. I said, "I am not prepared at this time, and the government is not prepared, to discuss with you the pros and cons of marketing legislation. We have just entered upon a war and that war makes it necessary for the government of Canada itself to set up boards to take control of the marketing of the farm products of Canada in order to ensure that our own people as well as our allies have the proper proportions of the food which is produced in this country and in order to induce greater production so that we may be able to feed greater numbers during this war period."

Of course the logic of that was agreed to by the farm organizations. From 1939 down to this year the organizations have not asked for that legislation. They have kept continuously reminding us of the fact that provincial legislation has been passed first by one province and then by another, and that eventually they would be coming to Ottawa to ask for legislation. Personally I think this was the right year for them to come. This is the first year that we have been entirely away from the war in so far as shooting is concerned, but we have not yet got through the transitional period. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Burton) wants to know when we are to get through it. Well, I will give him the same reply that I gave when the same question was asked—I am not too sure that it was not by the same hon. member—in 1944 when we brought in the legislation which is intended to take care of the transitional period. On that occasion I said that the transitional period of the first war did not really end until 1930, 1932 or 1933; that nobody could be absolutely certain when the transitional period will end. I went on to say that many people contended that it did end in five years; others contended that it did not end for twenty years, but someone will have to make a decision some time as to when the transitional period ends. We cannot do it now.

Some people have suggested that we put four years in the bill; some have suggested that we put five. We finally decided not to put a term of years in it at all. But I want to say quite candidly that if we can so regulate the marketing of farm products in this country as to give a proper deal to the farmers and to the consumers without applying the terms of the floor prices bill to too many products, then we hope to be able to do that. One of the ways in which we hope to be able to do it, is to retain, so long as it is essential to do so, the agreements with Britain which we have covering the marketing of farm products which we can see will be surplus for the years that are ahead of us that will assure to us the British market for the surplus production of farms in this country. Therefore we are asking at this time for authority to continue these agreements under this special legislation for at least one more year. At the end of that year we can come back and state what the conditions are and we shall probably ask for the continuance of it for another year. But if the times ever comes—and we hope it will not—when agreements such as we are now utilizing for the purpose of assisting farmers over the transitional period are not available to us at levels which make it possible for us to carry out our obligations to the farmers, then it will probably be necessary for us to make the floor prices legislation more widely applicable, and make those effective throughout the remainder of whatever the transitional period is.

I am not going to attempt to answer the question of the hon. member for Humboldt tonight as to how long the transitional period will last. I only know that it is still with us and, if I read correctly the discussions which took place not later than either this morning or yesterday, and which are reported in the papers tonight, on the floor of the House of Commons in Great Britain, then I am inclined to think the transitional period is still with us with a vengeance; because there are some people in the House of Commons in Great Britain who think the farmers of this country are making great profits at the expense of people who live in Great Britain. We have not realized that. We do not believe it. As a matter of fact, we think the farmers of this country are making a real contribution to the feeding of the British people, to the feeding of the European people and to the feeding of others who are short of food in different parts of the world. We feel that we are doing this at a less cost to the people concerned than they are being supplied from any other part of the world. That being so, I think it is time for someone to say that when a man stands up anywhere in the world and says that Canada is trying to make profits at the expense of someone else, either he is talking about something he does not know anything about or he is speaking with some intent other than that of serving the people of his own country.

This legislation is to deal, not necessarily with the whole transitional period but for a part of it; and the only part that we can say with definiteness at the moment that we hope it will continue in existence to deal with, is to take us through the bacon contracts which run to the end of 1949, to take us through the beef contracts which also run to the end of 1949; to take us through the contract on dairy products, which up to date runs us down to the end of the 1947-48 period, and which we expect will carry us on through a period similar to the other two contracts. We hope that a similar arrangement will be made with regard to apples; that by a cooperative arrangement between Great Britain and this country we shall be able to get reasonable returns, not necessarily as high returns as the farmer in Britain receives unit for unit of the different products produced in that country because their costs of production are not necessarily the same as ours—there are reasons why they are not—but will give us returns which bear a reasonable relationship to the prices which are being paid by the British to their own people and a reasonable relationship to the prices which are being received by people in some of the other parts of the world.

May I say again that we have been carrying out that idea, that we have been supplying food to Britain at a lower cost—as every member in this house has been saying, some of them agreeing with it and some of them disagreeing—than other people in the world have been supplying it up to the present time. And I say quite candidly that we expect that over the entire period of the three or four years during which these contracts last we shall have a reasonable return as compared with other peoples in the world from that market which we believe to be our best market, our most secure market, and the one in which we have the best chance over a long period of time of being paid for our commodities.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Does the minister include cattle in that?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The other night the minister said that the United States was our natural and best market.

Mr. GARDINER: Although I did not mention it at the time, in view of the question which has been asked, I will mention it now: for five years we are told that we can have a market in Britain for all the beef we desire to send them.

Those facts being the case, all we are asking the house to do at this time is to pass this legislation to give us authority to go on with the provisions made in the orders in council, over a sufficient period of time to permit of our carrying out the contracts which we have with Britain. We are asking for nothing more than that. We believed that in bringing the bill down in its present form we were asking for what this house wanted us to ask for, particularly the opposition, namely, only the authority to do under this special legislation what we had been doing under the War Measures Act. We are asking no authority to do anything else. Therefore I object to any attempt being made by the house now to put into this act terms which never were intended to be in legislation of this kind; terms which, if they are to be enacted at all, ought to be enacted under separate legislation brought into the house, discussed on its merits and if this is the proper time to pass it, if it must be passed, then it should be passed. But if it is not the proper time to consider it, in view of the fact that organizations are not yet prepared to do the job that is required to be done, then it could be brought in at some other time by whatever government is then in power.

But we submitted this argument to the farm organizations, and so far as I know the farm organizations accepted the argument and did not expect legislation this year. However, I would submit that they do expect legislation as soon as they can get it and would take it this year if they did get it. I am quite certain that they do not expect it this year but rather that they expect that with these powers under this bill, and with the extra power which has been asked for in connection with apples, we could go through this season without bringing any great hardship upon any one, even to the extent of not doing injury to the views which they hold with regard to compulsory marketing of farm products. So I would suggest that we discuss the bill on its merits and not discuss all kinds of amendments which would put this bill completely out of existence and call upon us to bring in some other form of legislation to deal with the permanent situation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly to a point of order and just leave the matter with Your Honour. On looking into the amendment of my hon. friend, I suggest to you that, with regard to clauses 1, 2 and 3, there is at least the possibility of there being an impost upon the public revenue. I just bring that to your attention, sir, and leave it there. Second, I refer you to paragraph 668 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, which reads as follows:

> On the second reading of a bill, the house may decide to refer the subject matter thereof to a commission although the bill—

I wish to emphasize this point particularly:

> —could not be referred to a committee of the house before its second reading.

Again on page 604, the assertion of Mr. Meighen, who was then in the house, that it was not so with regard to a bill but with regard to a resolution; he said that it could not be directly referred to a committee. I just leave this point with Your Honour.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, we have listened for some considerable time to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) criticize other members in the house for straying from the bill; but probably because of the portfolio he holds, he has himself led us into pretty far and green fields. I shall try to answer some of the arguments which he put forward with such violence and vehemence. He first criticized the official opposition because he said there was inconsistency in our attitude. He criticized us because, as he said, we now asked him to import into this particular bill matters which are foreign to the purpose of the bill, which is merely to place in statutory form those things which previously have been done by order in council. He went on to say that it would be improper to do anything more at this time or to import any other matter into the bill.

I take some issue with the minister in that respect. It is true that we in the official opposition have pressed for the cessation of legislation by order in council. I make the distinction again between administration and legislation. We have pressed for the end of the practice of doing by order in council what should properly be done by act of parliament, and of giving to ministers, or boards set up under ministerial authority, power to make rules having the force of law perhaps contrary to some existing statute. We had hoped to see introduced legislation to replace the orders in council passed under the War Measures Act. That is the type of legislation which we had hope to see in Bill No. 25. But what we find, Mr. Speaker, is not an act putting into statutory form what has hitherto been done by order in council, but an act giving authority to continue to do by order in council what we say should be done by statute.

That is the first distinction I would make, that this bill gives to the minister just as wide powers as he ever had under the War Measures Act or under the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act; and there is no point therefore in his objection to our criticizing the bill and saying that we wish to see this thing put on a regular and permanent basis. We desire to see a proper marketing act and enabling legislation brought in, not legislation simply under the guise of a regularizing act to continue placing in the hands of the minister power to do those things which should be done by parliament or some duly constituted authority subject to the control of parliament.

In support of my contention I would refer to section 3 of the bill. Without reading it in detail, I may say it gives the minister power to sell, to buy and to store; it gives him sole control over the price level, and control over the quantities to be marketed, in connection with all agricultural products in the Dominion of Canada with the exception of wheat. The producers are given no voice in setting the price, in the quantity to be bought or in the marketing of their product. That is why I say, instead of regularizing powers or giving powers back to parliament, this bill simply continues a situation to which we have objected in the past; that is, it gives the minister and the governor in council power to do things which should be done by and subject to the control of the House of Commons. That is the answer I would make to the minister's first objection. There is no inconsistency in saying we should have a marketing act that is a marketing act and not an act which simply makes the minister the buyer, the seller and the sole authority over markets in Canada.

Second, the minister said he was not taking any very great powers under this bill, and that therefore the charge that he was seeking to set himself up in sole control of agriculture was not well founded. I asked him, what about the power to continue the contracts or make new contracts? He said, "What we are going to do under section 3 is to continue the contracts already made. We are giving ourselves wide powers under that section, but we will not be exercising them. We do not really need them, and we do not intend to exercise them." When taxed with this again, however, he went on to say, "Well, we are not exercising very wide powers, except occasionally the power to negotiate new prices." Some hon. members, he pointed out, were pressing for new prices under some of the contracts; and he said some of the contracts would be going on until 1949.

Mr. GARDINER: If you want to quote me you would be much closer to the facts if you waited till you got and read Hansard tomorrow morning.

Mr. FULTON: In important matters of this type I sometimes prefer my own notes, which I make at the time, because sometimes Hansard bears remarkably little resemblance to those things which most hon. members heard fall from the lips of the ministers.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I hope the hon. member is not reflecting on Hansard. If there are inaccuracies or mistakes in Hansard they should be brought to the attention of the house as soon as they are discovered, but at no time should an hon. member reflect upon Hansard.

Mr. FULTON: I hasten to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that my reflection, if there was any, was not directed at Hansard. I thought I was stating a fact, that occasionally the things we hear and the things which appear in Hansard do not resemble one another, and I was leaving it at that; I believe that is a mere statement of fact. I did hear the minister say in effect that there would be no substantial creation of new contracts. He went on to say, however, that there were contracts which took us up to 1949, and I suggest that, as situations change, these contracts will require to be revised, and under the terms of this bill the person to revise them will be the minister, without reference to the producers or to parliament. He comes in here with an agreement already signed, brings this legislation before us and says, "We have to have it in order to carry out these contracts. If you oppose it you will be besmirching the good name of Canada, because without it we cannot live up to our obligations to another country."

With regard to the question of giving powers which it is said are not intended to be exercised, this whole question was up in the house as long ago as 1934, when the Bennett government introduced its marketing act. It is significant to note the extremely violent, vitriolic attacks which were made, not only upon the legislation but upon the ministers introducing and supporting it. They were represented as villians and rascals of the first order, who were seeking only to abuse their power and to grind the country under their heel. One of the hon. gentlemen in the opposition at that time who made an attack on the legislation upon these grounds is the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley). I should like to read what he had to say at that time in regard to giving these wide powers to ministers and ministerial boards. I quote from page 2210 of Hansard for March 16, 1934:

> We cannot assume that the drastic powers which are conferred upon the government by this measure will not be exercised. Some of those in my constituency who urged that I support this bill have said: "Yes, these powers are exceedingly drastic, and we can understand how in their working out great injustice might be done or great inconvenience suffered, but we must not assume that the government will misuse the powers granted under the bill or need not assume that the government will invoke those powers."

Then he went on:

> I do not think a member of parliament should vote to confer powers the exercise of which he disapproves. For this reason I am afraid that I shall have to oppose the bill as it stands.

The minister is in his place in the house at the moment, and I would be very glad to hear from him as to whether he still feels the same way about conferring powers the exercise of which we do not approve, even though we have the assurance from the minister that it is not intended to exercise these very wide powers. I for one agree entirely with the remarks of the right hon. Minister of Justice at that time, and I hope he still feels the same way.

The Minister of Agriculture ended up with the point at which he started, and said that in introducing a measure of this sort to regularize the emergency powers exercised under the War Measures Act and the transitional powers act it would not be proper to seek to introduce a full-fledged marketing act. He gave as one reason that this is a transitional measure, that these conditions may be entirely transitory, and that what he is seeking to do is take care of these transitory conditions. However, in almost the same breath with which he was saying this was only a temporary measure he went on to say that he could not give any assurance that he would bring in a marketing act because, he said, after the last war these transitional conditions continued for ten years or more, and they might go on this time for four or five years. The minister seems to envisage a pretty permanent transitional measure, and if it is to endure for as long as he forecast tonight, then instead of constantly continuing emergency powers I think he should do now what the farmers of this country are pressing for, and bring in a proper marketing act which would give the producers of this country control over their produce and their processes, instead of leaving it exclusively in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture.

One other point in the minister's speech was significant, and I should like to comment on it now, and shall refer to it again later in my remarks. We saw him make once more an effort to hold over the head of the official opposition the big stick of the contracts with Great Britain. The minister said, "If you oppose this bill you will be denying to us the powers necessary to carry out our contracts." For my own part, Mr. Speaker, I object strongly to what I think is cheap legislation; legislation which, under the guise of giving powers necessary to carry out contracts signed by the government of Canada, introduces provisions for all sorts of extra and additional powers which in our view should not be given; powers which certainly are not necessary for the carrying out of these contracts; and in connection with which we are then told, "If you oppose the bill, if you oppose it in its entirety or in part you are taking away from us the power to carry out these contracts", and therefore holding us up in the light of being anxious to besmirch the good name of Canada, and to jeopardize the discharge of responsibilities undertaken by the government of Canada.

It is cheap on two grounds. It is a cheap way of getting excessive powers which the government wants, and it is a cheap effort to place those who conscientiously oppose many of the things done by this bill in the light of being opposed to the preservation of the good name of Canada.

Well now, having said that, in so far as the minister's speech is concerned—because I felt many of the things which he said should be answered—I should like to speak with regard to the bill itself now before the house. It is difficult to discuss this bill on second reading, because its very principle is so difficult to find. I think that was illustrated this afternoon in the rulings which were given with respect to the two amendments which at various times were before the house.

An effort was made to find the principle of the bill, and to introduce amendments which would be contrary to the principle, or to suggest opposed principles. Each time Your Honour found in the amendments no sufficiently clear distinction between the amendments and the principle of the bill to bring the amendments within the rule, and on that ground they were ruled out of order.

It seems to me that that is a proper criticism to make of the bill, and it arises from the fact that under the guise of seeking to carry out a contract with Great Britain a great deal more is introduced than is necessary to bring about that purpose. After careful examination, however, we cannot say that the principle of the bill is only to carry out the agricultural agreement made with the United Kingdom. If it were that, no one would oppose it. There is a great deal more than that.

Mr. GARDINER: There is nothing more than that.

Mr. FULTON: The principle is not to be found in the title. The title gives the purpose; it is to provide for the sale and export of agricultural products. I am following here a distinction made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself in 1934, when he was discussing the Natural Products Marketing Act introduced by the Bennett government of that day. At that time the Prime Minister carefully distinguished between the purpose of the bill and the principle of the bill, and no one questioned his distinction. The Prime Minister of that day agreed with it, and all hon. members in the house agreed with and accepted it.

The principle is not to be found in the preamble; again that seems to define the purpose. Then, it is not to be found in the title, or in section 1, nor is it found in section 2, the definitions section.

I suggest it is not until we come to section 3 that we get any inkling as to the principle behind the bill. And when we study section 3 carefully we find the principle of the bill is to enable the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to control the marketing and sale of all Canadian agricultural products, with the exception of wheat. That is the first principle of the bill—to give that control to the minister. A secondary principle is found in section 4, which enables the minister to establish one or more commodity boards. This being so, I suggest that we have to examine section 3 closely to understand the full import of the principle of the bill.

Paragraph (a) of section 3 gives the minister power to sell all agricultural products in Canada. Paragraph (b) of that section gives him power to buy on behalf of foreign countries any agricultural products in Canada. Paragraph (d) gives him power to store any or all agricultural products in Canada.

So we find the minister in the extraordinary and preferred position of being both buyer and seller. He is the czar of all agriculture in Canada—not the producers, themselves; they have no say in the prices or quantities of their produce sold—the Minister of Agriculture is to have the whole say in this sphere. That is my main objection to the bill, namely, that the producers of Canada will have no control over their produce, or their activities in selling them or marketing them. The Minister of Agriculture alone controls those features.

The second provision which I find objectionable is the one which gives the minister power to conclude new treaties and new agreements with other countries without reference to parliament. One of the features to which we have already taken objection is the fact that this parliament is thus placed in the position of having to accept the whole of these measures, because included in them is one particular power, namely the power to carry out agreements already made. That was the position we were in with respect to the wheat board act, and the position we are now in with respect to this bill, because there is meat; there is beef; there are bacon, and eggs which are already the subjects of agreements with Great Britain. And I object to that principle wherever it is found.

I object to parliament's becoming nothing more than a rubber-stamp to carry out the predetermined policies of the Minister of Agriculture. He goes to these countries and makes agreements with them as to prices and quantities. Then he comes back to parliament and says, "I have made this agreement; this is the price level, and there can be no question about the agreement. You must accept this legislation in order to enable me to carry it out."

I can just hear what would have happened if this party had been in office and had introduced similar legislation, and the same hon. gentlemen who sat on these benches in 1934 had been facing the government which was trying to get this legislation through. I can just hear the minister who comes from Vancouver Centre; the hon. member for Quebec South; the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) and the Prime Minister, who excelled themselves then; and I somehow feel they would have done even better tonight in their attack on this bill, had it included these powers.

I want to read what the Minister of Justice, who was perhaps the most reasonable, being a lawyer, of those who made the attack in 1934, had to say. Let me read what he said with regard to taking away the powers of parliament in this matter. Speaking on April 16, 1934, he is reported at page 2212 of Hansard in this way:

> One by one measures are introduced which take away the powers and authority of parliament. I certainly cannot approve, nor do I think my constituents or the producers of this country will approve, of the taking away from parliament of its time-honoured rights and privileges, its function of legislating for and protecting the interests of all classes in the community.

Well, what is the provision under the bill now before us? Have producers any say in the marketing of their commodities? They have only such say as the Minister of Agriculture, in his goodness, may give them. He buys; he sells; he stores; he sets prices— and he sets the prices before the consumer and before the producer knows what is going on. Then he comes back to parliament and says, "I have made an agreement; I have set the price, and you will have to ratify it." And parliament not only is in a position where it cannot hold the minister responsible, but cannot take any step it wishes to take on behalf of the producer, if he thinks his price is too low; because we have seen in the last week that, if we make any effort to remedy the situation, deliberately we are held up as being those who are trying to make it impossible for the government to carry out its sacred word. So I say that is another of the principles of the bill, another feature in it, which is most objectionable. I think it should be provided that in future no agreement made by the Minister of Agriculture with any other country shall be valid until it is ratified by parliament. I think the proper way to proceed would be to have the producer boards control this thing, not the minister. We have introduced an amendment which would serve that purpose but it has been ruled out of order. Nevertheless, our view is that the producer boards should have this power and then there would probably be no objection.

Mr. ILSLEY: Shall have what power? Shall have the sole power of negotiating with the British government?

Mr. FULTON: Yes, exactly as was done in the case of apples, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Yale. When the British government wanted to buy apples Sir Arthur Jones—this is what the boards tell us—went out there and made a deal with them as to prices and quantity. They found those details satisfactory. He then came back here and signed on behalf of the British government, and I understand the Minister of Agriculture signed on behalf of the Canadian government.

Mr. ILSLEY: The government made the contract.

Mr. FULTON: I shall be interested in hearing an explanation as to how it was concluded, because that was the explanation given to us by the boards in British Columbia which were concerned with the agreement.

Mr. GARDINER: We can tell you how it started, but it has not yet concluded.

Mr. FULTON: That is the way in which they desire these agreements to be made. The producer should be able to have a say in the price and the quantity before the agreement is signed. That principle is not being carried into effect in this bill. Therefore we should like to see provision for the second safeguard; that is, that no agreement shall be valid until ratified by parliament. That would give the duly elected representatives of the people a chance to consult with those who had elected them and find out whether the price is indeed a proper price and whether the quantity is a feasible quantity. The country would no longer be in a position where the Minister of Agriculture can sell it short and make a bad guess and tie it up for the next four or five years without any possibility of a change.

I can imagine what would be said if a private broker were in a position to go out and sell the country short. He might make a good deal when he would make a profit, but if he made a bad deal he would not be the one to go broke; the people of the country would pay for it, particularly the agricultural producers. That is what we want to prevent. If they are to be asked to pay for it we want them to have some say in the making of the deal. That is why we object to this bill.

There are many other features of the bill which are objectionable but they can be dealt with in committee. Section 7 gives the minister, with the approval of the governor in council, the power to hire and fire and set salaries with no reference to the Civil Service Act. Section 9 gives the minister the power to create new offences and impose fines up to $5,000 for offences which are not yet established. After having read the debate which took place in 1934, to which I have referred, one is forced to wonder what change of heart has come over those who at that time sat in these benches.

The Prime Minister then delivered a speech of two hours—some said it was two hours and twenty minutes—and he criticized every single aspect of that bill. None did he criticize more severely than the power to create new offences and to impose fines. The section against which he thundred most vehemently was a one which provided for a penalty of $500 for a breach of the regulations. Here we find exactly the same section providing that the penalty shall be $5,000. That is ten times as much as it was in 1934.

An hon. MEMBER: Inflation.

Mr. FULTON: Somebody remarks that that is inflation, which is perhaps another thing for which the government are responsible. I wonder if they are now ten times more socialistic than they were in 1934. In 1934 they opposed the bill introduced then as being a socialistic measure. They now do some things in this bill that are ten times as bad, and they still refuse to introduce a proper marketing act which will give the producers control over their own products.

In conclusion, I wish to summarize my own views with regard to this bill. I know the producers, particularly the fruit producers in my constituency, have been pressing for many years—the minister has admitted this—for marketing legislation. They have wanted an act which will enable the boards which they have set up after a long struggle and have now got going on a successful and proper basis to continue the orderly marketing of their products, not an act which will enable the minister to set up some over-all board or to step in himself and control every single feature of their production. Not only that, they want some assurance that they will have some say as to price and quantities in connection with any deal made in the future. That is what they want and they are not getting it in this bill.

In addition, they want a further safeguard which we will ask for in committee. As members of parliament, I think we should ask for an assurance that the minister will not continue the practice of concluding treaties on his own and then coming to parliament and saying, "You have to give us these powers because we have already signed." We will press in committee for a provision that in future no agreement shall be valid until it has been ratified by parliament.

Mr. ILSLEY: As a practical matter, if we can sell 500,000 barrels of apples to the United Kingdom within the next two weeks, does the hon. gentleman suggest that we should not complete the deal without bringing it back to parliament for ratification?

Mr. FULTON: If it is desirable that 500,000 barrels of apples should be sold, you could sign whatever is necessary in the way of a preliminary agreement, but you should say, "This cannot be official and binding until the parliament of Canada has given approval".

Mr. ILSLEY: Does the hon. gentleman realize that the apple growers have to borrow money and make arrangements for growing their crop and they have to know what is to become of that crop? Does the hon. gentleman seriously suggest that they should be kept in a position of uncertainty for months to come?

Mr. FULTON: There is no necessity for keeping them in a state of uncertainty for months. I have suggested that none of these deals should be concluded without the producer boards being consulted. If the producer boards are consulted, then we would have reasonable grounds for assuming that there will be a fair price and a reasonable quantity. If a deal is concluded on that basis and is brought into this parliament, there is no reason to assume that it will not be ratified. I am simply saying that, with this bill as it stands, there is no provision for consultation with the producers. The minister can do the thing on his own hook.

Mr. GARDINER: The statements that are being made are absolutely false. There is provision in the bill for an advisory committee to be appointed.

Mr. FULTON: If the minister wishes to appoint one.

Mr. GARDINER: There has never been an agreement reached without its being referred to any board that happened to be in position to give advice.

Mr. FULTON: If the minister desires to do so, he may appoint an advisory committee, but there is no provision that he shall appoint an advisory committee.

Mr. GARDINER: Under the orders in council there are advisory boards. The chairman of one is in the gallery now.

Mr. FULTON: I am sure he is very much edified by the minister's comments.

Mr. GARDINER: He would be with your speech.

Mr. FULTON: I am inclined to think the minister should withdraw his remark that my statements are completely false. I take serious issue with him there. They are not inaccurate. There is in this bill no provision that there shall be an advisory board. There may be one if the minister wants it.

Mr. GARDINER: There is one.

Mr. FULTON: And the minister does not have to consult the producers.

Mr. GARDINER: I do consult.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Are we in committee? The hon. member for Kamloops has the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FULTON: There is no point in carrying on the present altercation across the floor, but if the minister feels the way he does I think he should show us where in the bill provision is made that producers must be and shall be consulted and shall have a say as to the price.

Mr. GARDINER: I thought you were not in favour of compulsion.

Mr. FULTON: There is a provision that they may be consulted but that is not sufficient and there is no provision for the prior submission to this parliament of the deals made by the minister. I have made my position clear on that. Those deficiencies in the bill would incline one at first sight to vote against the second reading, but in the hope that those weaknesses may be rectified in committee I personally do not intend to vote against the second reading of the bill, because we intend to move amendments in committee to correct these weaknesses and we still have an opportunity to exercise our decision on the third reading of the bill. I would not like to make any forecast of what my attitude would be then. I do know that the producers in my constituency, who, I believe, are typical of producers all across Canada, would wish to see the provisions put in the bill which I have suggested. They would like to have the assurance that they will be consulted before any deal is made which binds up their future production for the next four or five years.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, is there any objection to my getting in on this? I have heard so many statements on wheat and a few other things in the past few days that I can well understand a letter which I got, and which I presume every member got, from which I quote:

> We did inform Mr. King, Mr. Coldwell, Mr. Bracken and Mr. Low to hand us the full administration of Indian Affairs, which is the only wish the Indian nation has to be governed and administered by a national Indian government.

After listening to similar speeches I have heard during the past week, I say, let us give them the whole government and make a good job of it. I want to explain my vote and incidentally I warn the C.C.F. that I am not going to vote for their new amendment. If people keep on moving amendments for the next few weeks we shall get nowhere.

I have no hesitation in telling the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that I do not like his bill, and I voted for the two amendments to demonstrate that we in western Canada do not like the bill. It does not properly cover the issues. At the same time I am going to support the bill. I appreciate the fact that if we did not have this bill we could not carry out our contracts which affect the poultry men and berry growers in my riding, and for that reason I am going to support the bill as being in the best interests of many farmers in my constituency. I told the people of my riding—and I only wish they were listening—before I left the far west, which is the real Canada, that I did not expect that we westerners would get support from the east on a real marketing act, and I still do not think we shall. I think my hon. friends from Saskatchewan will agree with me on that.

The only good thing I know of that ever came out of a Conservative administration in Canada was the Bennett marketing act, which unfortunately was declared ultra vires. I am not sure just what that means, but probably the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), who never interrupts at all, knows what it means. What I do know is that the act did not hold good in British Columbia, except for the lawyers. I wish the minister would consult, not some of these technical experts that he has in some of the buildings, but some of the men who really know marketing and really know production in agriculture.

I have read the bill; I heard the minister's remarks on the resolution, and I air-mailed them to the province of British Columbia, to the man who knows more about marketing dairy products than any other man in Canada, Mr. W. L. Macken. Today I got his reply. I know he does not object to my using his name. He is president of the largest dairy cooperative in the Dominion of Canada. This bill is not all-embracing. It is of no protection to our dairy farmers in British Columbia at all. That is the reason I voted for the two amendments, to impress on the government, this government or some other government—perhaps under a later redistribution, in 1951, we shall get the number of members we ought to have—that we in western Canada are going to persist until we get a marketing act that will be for the benefit of all our farmers.

I realize that we cannot amend the bill that is before the house. I want to be fair and say that I believe this bill will benefit the poultry men and the small fruit growers in my riding and to a certain extent the dairy men, in so far as the contracts for the ensuing year are concerned. I disagree with the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), because the minister or some official or some agent must have the authority to carry out the contracts. If my hon. friend lived in such a delightful spot as the Fraser valley he would not want to come back here every two or three weeks in order to have some contract approved by parliament before the products could be secured to fill those contracts. The minister and his officials must have that authority.

A word of warning to my hon. friends of the C.C.F. I think the Minister of Agriculture said that the marketing act was socialism.

Mr. GARDINER: Not I.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Then it must have been somebody else. Let me say that if an all-out, all-embracing democratic compulsory marketing act is socialism I am a socialist. I agree with the hon. member for Kamloops and one other member over there who said this afternoon that a marketing act should be under the control of the producers themselves and that they are the ones who should set the price and the regulations. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association sets the prices of the products they are going to sell, and why should not we farmers set our prices?

Mrs. STRUM: Move over here.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I would never be elected again. I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Kamloops that they should settle their disputes the way the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Burton) and I settle ours.

I wish to say in conclusion—and I say this in all seriousness—the people of the Fraser Valley riding and, I believe, the entire farm population of British Columbia—although I have no authority to speak for other than my own riding—the dairymen of the province, the poultrymen of the province and ninety per cent of the berrygrowers, who incidentally last year in my riding alone produced 11,475,428 pounds of raspberries, are not requesting that this government; they are demanding that this government put into effect an all-embracing marketing act which will protect both the producer and the consumer.

Mr. SPEAKER: I should like to say to the house that, having studied the amendment very carefully and after having considered the remarks made by the leader of the house, I have come to the conclusion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): I rise to speak briefly in support of the amendment and to express my disappointment with this bill. Before going on to give expression to the things I wish to say, first of all, I should congratulate the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) on his courageous stand in expressing the views of the farmers whom he represents. I hope his example is followed by more hon. members of the party with whom he sits.

Before proceeding, may I say that I do not discuss this matter from the legal angle, as a lawyer, as a broker, as a grocer, or as a doctor. I discuss this matter this evening as one who has tramped the highways and byways of my own constituency trying to get signatures for our contracts in the early days in British Columbia, and as one who has done considerable speaking in support of this legislation. I am very happy on that account to be able to continue to support it in this house.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), to his definition of certain difficulties and to his explanations. I am not going to deal at length with what the minister had to say, but shall simply say that, after listening carefully, I am of the opinion that the minister clearly reflected the policy of this government, which is to delay again and not to respond to the demands of a large section of the people of this country at this time. You have delayed again, apparently, the enactment of a national products marketing act; you have delayed a national labour code; you have delayed an old age pension amendment to satisfy the people of this country; you have delayed health insurance. In my opinion that correctly reflects the attitude of the government here at this time to the situation as it exists in Canada at the present time, and is the cause of, shall I say, the uncertain morale which exists in the country.

On May 28 of last year I spoke at some length on the question of national farm marketing. I do not intend this evening to repeat my arguments or illustrations, except to say that I think the decision of the conference of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which was held in Ottawa recently proves the validity of the arguments I put forward at that time and the illustrations I gave, as to the stand of the farmers of this country behind this legislation.

With other hon. members I had the opportunity to attend one morning session of that conference, and I must say that it was even surprising to me to see the unanimity which was expressed regarding this question of national farm marketing legislation. It was not sectional, although this idea, I am proud to say, originated in British Columbia. The idea was supported from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. I do not think I have ever attended a farmers' convention in which there was expressed such general agreement on a principle. I am not going to quote the resolution carried by that conference. The minister has already read it to the house and it is on our records, which I think is a good thing because we shall want to refer to it in the future. But I wish to refer briefly to three or four points. I think the action of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture conference, which shows that there is unanimous support across Canada for this type of legislation, proves that the people who are directly concerned with this legislation support it and desire it, and desire it and demand it now.

Second, it is definitely democratic. While we use the words "compulsory marketing legislation", I personally do not like that term; I think it is democratic marketing legislation because it is the decision of the majority of the industry concerned.

This conference in Ottawa was not produced as a result of short-term action on the part of the people. What happened in Ottawa recently was the result of this matter being discussed for years by the small local organizations of farmers throughout the country. The decision of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture conference in Ottawa was a decision which was arrived at as a result of the work, the will and the activity of the rank and file; it was a decision produced from the bottom up and not from the top down.
